ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HUMAN SETTLEMENTS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF HOLDING OF UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE AND EXPOSITION AT VANCOUVER IN JUNE, 1976

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last June I reported that Canada had extended an invitation to the United Nations Conference on Human Environment in Stockholm to host a major United Nations Conference and Exposition on Human Settlements. This invitation was very well received by the United Nations and it has been agreed to stage the conference-exposition in Vancouver. I am pleased to report that the province of British Columbia and the city of Vancouver have agreed to accommodate and support this major world forum as host province and host city. It will be the largest international conference ever held in Canada, bringing between 4,000 and 5,000 participants from 130 countries.

Originally the General Assembly had agreed that the conference exposition should be in 1975. At the request of the United Nations, they have obtained agreement of member states to shift the date to June, 1976.

The conference-exposition will be the first United Nations meeting devoted exclusively to the subject of human settlements and human habitation. Instead of identifying problems and determining directions for future research, the point will be to present, in various forms, answers that have been found. Policies will be discussed; resolutions for action will be proposed. But, most important, will be the demonstration of solutions. Much of the action will be in the form of demonstration projects. Some of these will have a national focus; others will have regional significance; and those of more universal interest will be exhibited in Vancouver. Canadian demonstration projects will be especially important since conference participants will be able to see them, both before and after the meetings take place, at different locations across the country.

The provinces have been consulted on this matter since our initiative in Stockholm last June and we will be working in close co-operation with them in preparing for the conference and in selecting Canadian demonstration projects. I have sent letters to all the provincial premiers, inviting them to designate a minister and officials to join us in planning Canada's participation.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all Canadians will enthusiastically support this major effort to confront these important issues that affect all of mankind.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I received the outline of the minister's comments just as I entered the House. I think it is very appropriate that this announcement should be made by the minister today when the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities is meeting in Ottawa. No one can disagree with the efforts of all countries of the world to face the question of proper settlement and planning for the future.

It is an excellent idea that this United Nations Conference on Human Settlements should meet in Canada, particularly in Vancouver in that setting which speaks for itself so far as the environment is concerned. Those in this House who are concerned welcome the statement by the minister that the conference is to take place in Canada. As a nation with a particularly large land mass and with particularly crowded settlements lying close to the American border, the questions of settlement, planning and population redirection are important to us as they are to all nations of the world.

I am glad that the minister has sent letters to the provincial premiers so that joint planning can take place with regard to participation in the conference. I would hope, too, that the minister might see fit to involve all the urban centres and municipalities in some of the planning for the conference. It has been the lack of their participation in the past that has so seriously limited the scope of national policies in reference to urban affairs and housing.

I hope the minister will use the coincidence of his announcement today, and the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities in Ottawa to consider further municipal participation. I say, as I have said before, that at this stage of our development there should be a particular agenda whereby the municipalities can meet with the federal government and the provinces not as observers but as spokesmen to set out the problems they face. As I pointed out last week, only 4 per cent of wage earners in certain urban centres of Canada can afford to buy new homes, and if you take into account the whole nation the figure is an estimated 10 per cent. I hope that by the time the conference meets that figure will have improved. If it should go the other way, we will reach the point where very few wage earners in Canada will be able to afford a new home in our urban centres. I trust I have been brief enough, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, our group welcomes the statement by the minister that the United Nations Conference and Exposition on Human Settlements will be held in the city of Vancouver in 1976. A conference of this type is long overdue. For a number of years, environmental groups, groups interested in housing and others have been pressing the government to take some action on the human settlement problems that face us in Canada. We are very fortunate to live in a nation with a tremendous amount of territory and without the excess population that some other nations have.

To bring the problem into focus, Mr. Speaker, I point out that, from all indications, urbanization of areas in this country and throughout the world by the year 2000, only 27 years away, will mean that approximately nine out of ten people will be living in urban centres. We have noted the increasing number of problems that have arisen in Canada and in other countries because of the urbanization that is taking place. Some of the problems facing us concern housing, urban renewal, pollution, rapid transit and the pollution problems associated with it. There is also the problem of citizen participation. I urge the minister to co-ordinate a number of research projects prior to 1976 in an effort to get as wide participation as possible by interested groups throughout Canada to make certain that the Canadian contribution to the conference will be sound and solid.

Much remains to be done. Despite a lot of lip service to a national urban policy, we have done relatively little. Problems face us in the northern part of Canada, for example, where there is talk of settlements being established. We find that we do not have the expertise nor the amount of experimentation necessary to ensure that we can build these settlements with any degree of safety. I again urge the minister that action be taken.

Our party heartily welcomes this move by the government. We not only hope that the conference will be a success but that it will also help to lead Canada and the world to a solution of the very grievous human settlement problems that now face us.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we of the Social Credit party welcome the announcement made today by the hon. minister. We again regret only having the English version, and we trust that next time the minister will let us have the French translation in time.

The conference on urban problems will be held in Vancouver in 1976, and will bring together delegates from 130 countries. It will be an extremely important conference for Canada, and for the rest of the word.

I wholeheartedly support the statement by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to the effect that there should be consultations throughout Canada prior to the conference, especially at the municipal level. Indeed, it is municipalities that have to deal with urban problems, and we should give municipal authorities a chance to draw up a concise program and a summary that they could submit to the conference, as well as suggested solutions to Canada's problems.

At the conference, Canada should not only suggest to other countries valid solutions to urban problems, but also report on our specific achievements as of that date.

Rather than coming to the conference with just theories, Canada should prove that she has made concrete achievements in that field, and found realistic financial solutions that other countries could adopt in solving their own urban problems.

The Canadian government has three years in which to put forward financial solutions to offer to the other countries, not just to the technical problems of urbanization and overpopulation, but also to the financial problems, such as those pointed out over the week-end at the meeting of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, where they deplored the fact that the federal government does not appear to have established a policy of aid to municipalities, which are for the moment the only ones to suffer the effects of the basic problems of urbanization.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Mather: The purpose of this bill is to assist in combatting the ever-increasing toll of fatal motor vehicle accidents, over 50 per cent of which involve alcohol. Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-163, respecting the signing and implementation of International Labour Conference Convention 96 concerning fee-charging employment agencies.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, this bill aims at having the federal government negotiate with the provinces to ensure their implementation of International Labour Conference Convention 96 concerning fee-charging employment agencies. The federal government would then become a signatory to that convention and the provinces would pass legislation in accordance with the intent of the convention to regulate private employment agencies and to prevent some of them from charging exorbitant fees for the placement of unemployed workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

(ii) 17 per cent of male heads and 6 per cent of female heads (or 15 per cent of all low income family heads) reported more than 10 weeks of unemployment for 1971. (iii) 13 per cent of male heads and 5 per cent of female heads (or 11 per cent of all low income family heads) reported 20 or more weeks of unemployment in 1971.

Part 2. And low income unattached individuals (individuals not in families, living alone without any other relatives[2] (i) 53 per cent of males and 46 per cent of females (or 49 per cent of all low income unattached individuals) had grade 8 or less education. (ii) 16 per cent of males and 6 per cent of females (or 10 per cent of all low income unattached individuals) reported more than

4. No data available in respect to earned income.

Notes: [1]Number of low-income families was estimated at 814,000 in 1971. POLLUTION CONTROL REGULATIONS

Question No. 744—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is it the intention of the government to re-institute the requirement formerly contained in the Pollution Control Regulations governing the use of the Arctic area that there be a competent ice pilot or ice-trained officer on board and, if not, for what reason?

2. Does the government consider that the safety and effectiveness of any shipping in that area depends on the capability of the Master to a large degree?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Section 26 of the Arctic Shipping Pollution Prevention Regulations requires, and has always required, that a qualified ice navigator be on board; (a) every tanker navigated in any zone; (b) every ship that is not a tanker, when navigated in any zone except during the normal open water period.

2. Yes.

ICEBREAKER FOR ARCTIC SERVICE

Question No. 746—Mr. Forrestall:

1. (a) What steps have been taken to determine the size and power of the most suitable icebreaker for Arctic service (b) what were the results?

2. What decision has been reached as to the numbers of such vessels required?

3. Is it the intention of the government to use such vessels for search and rescue functions?

4. Is it the intention of the government to provide that a charge will be levied against the rescued owner of a vessel beset in Arctic waters and, if so, on what basis will such a charge be levied?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. There really is no such thing as the most suitable icebreaker for Arctic service. The size and class depend on the type and duration of services to be provided. When the Louis S. St. Laurent was designed, it was determined that she was the best design for the over-all use required of her. The design of a particular class will depend on a combination of the zone in which it will operate and, as said previously, the type of service she will be expected to provide.

2. No decision has been reached for it will depend on the increases or decreases in numbers and types of vessels to be served.

3. All government ships are used for search and rescue operations as the situation dictates. Icebreakers are no exception.

4. The question of charges to be levied is being considered but it is in the very early stages. We do not anticipate there would be any distinction between Arctic and other ice-infested waters.

TRAINING PROGRAM FOR SEAMEN ON ARCTIC ICEBREAKER SERVICE

Question No. 747—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What action has the government taken toward the establishment of a training program for seamen on Arctic icebreaker service?

2. Has the government any plans for the establishment of a special institution for such a purpose and, if so (a) what are they (b) where will it be located?

3. Is it the intention of the government to ensure that no effort is spared to ensure the recruitment of Northerners, particularly Eskimos, in both officer and seaman roles for such icebreaker service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Ships' officers receive training at the Canadian Coast Guard College in North Sydney with practical experience being obtained on board the icebreakers. Unlicensed personnel receive practical experience and training during icebreaking operations.

2. A more comprehensive program for the training of unlicensed personnel is presently being considered. It is anticipated that it would probably take place at the same location as officers are presently being trained.

3. There is no restriction on the recruitment of northerners in both the officer and unlicensed roles for services on any of our icebreakers. They would be recruited into positions compatible with their experience and would be given additional training if necessary.

COAST GUARD

Question No. 748—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to establish the Coast Guard as a distinct service, with its powers, duties and terms of reference defined by an Act of Parliament and, if so, will special efforts be made to recruit residents of Northern Canada, particularly Eskimos, for both officer and seaman roles and training?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, not at the present time. There is no restriction on the recruitment of northerners in both the officer and unlicensed roles.

POLAR ICEBREAKER

Question No. 750—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What action has been taken towards funding research into the design of a polar icebreaker with 100,000 or more horsepower, with a capability of 10 to 12-month operation in the Canadian Archipelago?

2. Does the government consider research into such a vessel in the highest Canadian interest?

3. At what date does the government estimate that the need for such a vessel would render its construction imperative?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Studies have been carried out on the form that icebreaking hulls should take. Presently a contract is being let to carry out studies on gas turbines and other types of power sources for propulsion of icebreakers. We are also providing, for instrumentation, some of our icebreaker hulls to determine actual ice pressures to which they are subjected. Additional studies will be entered into as the requirement arises.

2. Yes.

3. This date would relate to some degree to the date that the natural resources are likely to be exploited in the north. It is presently estimated as being in the late seventies.

INSURANCE FOR COMMERCIAL VESSELS

Question No. 754—Mr. Forrestall:

What arrangements, if any, have been made by the government to ensure the availability to commercial vessels in the Arctic waters of insurance at a reasonable or acceptable rate?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The government is not involved in the insurance business for commercial vessels. It has however a great interest and has provided voyages on our icebreakers, both in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and in the north, for representatives of the underwriters to allow them to observe firsthand the services which are available to ships operating in ice. By this and other means we are endeavouring to bring about rate reductions within the insurance industry.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Food as a percentage of total family expenditure is available from the 1969 national family expenditure survey. 3. The cause of the foundering could not be ascertained but it was conjectured that the tug sprang a leak.

4. Where particular operational requirements apply, and/or in the interests of attracting qualified personnel unavailable for full-time employment, the Public Service has undertaken programs for recruitment of part-time employees. TOTAL AMOUNT OF PURCHASES AND CONTRACTS PLACED IN CANADA IN 1972

Question No. 1,040—Mr. Mather:

1. What, in dollars, was the total amount of Services and Supply purchases and the total number of contracts for such purchases placed in Canada in 1972?

2. (a) What, in dollars, was the total amount of such purchases placed by contract in British Columbia (b) what was the total number of such contracts placed in that Province?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The following figures relate only to the year in which contracts were placed and not to the year or years in which the work was performed or payments made. Therefore, care must be taken not to infer trends or make conclusions on the basis of performance in one year. Further, the location of a company is often that of its administrative office rather than the location where the work or service was actually performed or rendered. The figures cover only DSS contracts and do not include contracting by other government departments or agencies under delegation by DSS. The statistics for the Department are kept on a fiscal year basis. 1. Number of contracts, 193,161; Value, $793,797,000.

2. Number of contracts, 22,118; Value, $32,168,000.

Those female candidates not qualified to follow the course in English will receive language training this summer. Action is being taken to complete a French version of the female officers' basic course as soon as possible.

2. (a) The linguistic requirements are that the candidate speak either of the official languages; (b) the education requirements vary from junior matriculation to university degree, depending upon plan of entry.

2. The plan will be announced to the public at least 60 days ahead of the public hearing.

[Editor's note: During the announcement of order paper questions to be answered.]

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to ask when I may expect from the parliamentary secretary answers to some of the questions I have put on the order paper. Many of them are very straightforward, requiring simple, factual information. I am particularly interested in getting answers to questions Nos. 853 and 841 which deal with related matters. At the speed we are going at the moment, which is about that of a glacier going backward, most of the questions will not be answered until mid-summer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might wait until we have reached the end of this order of business as other questions may be answered later. There is, of course, no way of knowing that, but the parliamentary secretary might be allowed to proceed at this point.

[Editor's note: Following order paper questions.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I dislike having to rise again concerning questions that are not being answered, but it seems obvious there is a concerted effort not to answer questions that may prove embarrassing to the government. One of the reasons so many questions are being asked during the oral question period is the fact that it is almost impossible to get answers to order paper questions when the government finds it advantageous to conceal.

I refer to question No. 52, a very simple question. It asks what is the amount, since July, 1971, by province, that has been expended by all departments of government in grants or other assistance to corporations, partnerships, and so on. There can be no excuse for not answering that question which has been on the order paper now for two and a half months.

I would also refer to questions Nos. 1,004 and 1,080 having to do with my own province. They concern the removal of a government department from the London building to another building after the expenditure of more than $1 million to put the London building in shape. The first of these questions has been on the order paper since February 16. It is very simple. It asks whether the federal income tax office in Saskatoon is being moved. There is just no excuse whatever for the egregious contempt being shown to parliament by the degree to which this government refuses to answer very simple questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Unless we are able to secure some assurance from the government that it is either negligent in securing information available to it or that it has some other reason, we can only conclude that the idea behind not answering is concealment of facts that the government realizes would not be advantageous to it to reveal.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order raised by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), I should like to draw his attention to the fact that the question about which he has complained, No. 52, requires a very extensive search involving many departments of the government. It would seem to me that merely looking at the question would be ample indication to any hon. member that to answer it accurately and deal with its many aspects would require more than a day or two.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But two and a half months?

Mr. MacEachen: I assure the right hon. gentleman that, while we appreciate his regular interventions on these occasions condemning the government, we are making a very serious effort to answer questions as rapidly as possible.

There are on the order paper at present more questions than have ever appeared on any order paper, and there have been more answers given up to the present time during this session than at the same point in any other previous session of the House of Commons, including that period when the right hon. gentleman was Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McEachen: The hon. gentleman ought to refresh his memory about recent history. He ought to compare the performance of the present time because it is a very good performance. I should like to see it better, but it is reasonably good.

• (1430)

I would draw to the attention of Your Honour and hon. members that it is possible to abuse the practice of placing questions on the order paper. I do not accuse my right hon. friend of that. However, I wish to draw to the attention of the House the fact that over the weekend one hon. member placed on the order paper 98 questions. Surely that is not in accordance with the intent or purpose of questions on the order paper. If hon. members want to abuse the practice by loading up the order paper with a multitude of questions, we will be confronted with legitimate grievances as presented by the right hon. gentleman. I suggest, if we are to use the order paper properly, that the number of questions should be reduced, and we will do our level best to get answers for hon. members.

I will make another effort to see that the request of the right hon. gentleman is met as quickly as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, having regard to the interest the hon. gentleman is taking in the period during which I was Prime Minister regarding questions, the smokescreen he has raised pleases himself and those surrounding him. The total number of questions I have on the order paper is nine. How transparently deceptive his remarks are. He is a good debater and he makes the best of a bad case. Question 1,004 reads as follows:

1. Is the federal Income Tax Office in Saskatoon being moved from the federally-owned London building to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce building?

2. What has been the cost of operating the London building during each of the past five years?

3. Under the lease of the said bank building (a) what is the annual rental and for how long (b) is there a further rental period provided at the option of the lessee?

That question has been on the order paper since February 16. The hon. gentleman's attempt to explain the unexplainable is answered by the fact that that question under no circumstances comes within the ambit of the imaginary hypothesis he has advanced.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I also rise on the point of order. I can only echo the remarks of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I should like to refer to four specific questions. I admit it is often difficult to follow the smokescreens cast by the government House leader. I believe there are more questions on the order paper for the very good reason that there are so many things wrong that need inquiring into. The four questions I should like to refer to are as follows: Nos. 443 and 444, which require simple yes or no answers, have been on the order paper for a little over two months. Question No. 819 concerns the new income tax forms, the cost of advertising and the fee paid to that great outstanding tax expert, Mr. Davis. I do not see why that should take hours of research. I would think it could be replied to quickly. Then there is one final question, No. 990, concerning the imitation letters from the Prime Minister mailed during the election campaign. I would think that information could also be available in a hurry.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I think it lies ill in the mouth of the government House leader to berate members on this side of the House for asking questions, particularly a House leader of a government that tries so manfully to conceal so many things. Of the many hundreds of questions on the order paper, one stands in my name. It could be answered if one of the multiplicity of ministers and their satellites and secretary's secretaries would pick up the phone and call the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. I suggest to the House leader and his accomplices over there that they would do well, instead of complaining about all the questions from this side of the House, to attempt to answer some.

Mr. Speaker: Oral question period. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hees: Let us get an answer to this one right off the bat.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ALLEGED ISSUANCE OF INCORRECT TP4U SLIPS BY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION AND INABILITY TO DELIVER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with regard to some 2,000 employees about whom I questioned him last week in connection with the Delorimier office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Montreal. Can he give the House a firm assurance that there is no discrepancy with regard to those 2,000 cases, or most of them, between the TP4U forms sent out from Ottawa and the records of the Delorimier office with regard to benefits paid and income tax deducted?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition the other day, my information was that errors that were discovered early in the year had been corrected before the TP4U slips had been sent out, and that information has been confirmed to me. In light of the press reports that came forward today and over the weekend I have asked for a second investigation of that situation. I would say that none of the people who alleged there were errors made have yet been identified. I understand there is an allegation that there is to be a meeting on Wednesday next about this matter, and I would certainly appreciate it if any of those people who have concrete or specific information which might be to the contrary would let me know so that we can take measures to correct the situation. As it stands now, my information is that any errors that were made earlier were corrected before the slips went out.

Mr. Stanfield: Arising from the minister's statement that microfilm records standing behind these cases are kept in the regional offices, can the minister give the House assurance that there are microfilm records with regard to these cases available in Ottawa or in the Montreal office?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that information I gave the hon. member the other day stands. As I say, unless there is specific new information as a result of next Wednesday's meeting or the investigation I have caused to be undertaken, I would stand with that answer.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct that there are 100,000 instances in which TP4U forms cannot be delivered with regard to benefits paid or tax deducted because the commission has no address for the recipients where the forms can be delivered? If this is the case, is there any way in which the minister or the commission intends to help these people to be able to complete their income tax forms correctly or to assist them in claiming rebates where these are due?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, no such situation involving those numbers has been brought to my attention. I will investigate and let the hon. gentleman know.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—APPEALS ALLOWED—INVESTIGATIVE PROCEDURES—INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether in fact the minister can inform the House if the advisory committee, which is inquiring into the investigative procedures, has looked into the specific matter that has been brought up by the Leader of the Opposition? Further, in light of the fact that over 50 per cent of the appeals that have been heard have been allowed, and in light of the fact that the committee has been out for a week and was supposed to report today, has the minister any information as to the report? Has it been submitted and are there any recommendations in this respect?

• (1440)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There are two or three sections to that question. During January and February in Hamilton there were 351 appeals to the board of referees, and of those 39 were allowed. During January and February in Toronto there were 964 appeals to the board of referrees, and of those 121 were allowed. Thus, the total during January and February in the Toronto-Hamilton area was 1,315 appeals to the board of referees, and of those 160 or 12 per cent of the appeals were allowed. This is similar to the experience of the past few years. These figures include all appeals regardless of their reasons. I would say that the figure of 2,000 which appeared in the newspaper the other day, with 1,000 supposedly successful in the Toronto-Hamilton area, may include reinstatements of non-eligibility decisions where people did begin to search for work. I do not know, but unless they went through the appeal system those are not considered to be appeals.

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps I should not have phrased my question in three parts. Is that the report of the advisory committee that the minister has given, or does he intend to bring in their report for tabling so we may know what their investigations have revealed and whether in fact there were any recommendations in that regard?

Mr. Andras: Those figures are not based on the advisory committee's report, but I will be getting a report from the advisory committee shortly. I cannot give the precise day or date, although I have been in touch with the chairman and the committee seems to be proceeding satisfactorily.

Mr. Alexander: I have one last supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a further supplementary question but perhaps we should try to get on with other supplementary questions.

BENEFIT CONTROL—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY REFEREES INDICATING WITCH HUNT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact that three referees in the Toronto area, I believe, by the name of Murray Tate, William Baker and Henry Weisbach have indicated that there is evidence to the effect that there is in fact a witch hunt being proceeded with which is, in their words and as reported, "terrifying innocent people". Is the minister aware of this particular set of circumstances and has he investigated or will he cause the advisory committee, if it is not ready to submit a report, to investigate the allegation of these three persons in order that its findings can be included in that report?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be most certainly willing to do that if the three gentlemen in question or any member of any other citizen in this country would give me specific information with date, place, time and names. Allegations and innuendoes make it almost impossible for me to carry on an investigation, but the members of the advisory committee were asked to do exactly what the hon. member is suggesting.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I first follow up the question that the hon. member for Hamilton West has just asked. The three gentlemen to whom he referred were members of boards of referees. Perhaps the minister was not aware of that and of the fact that their statements were made on the basis or information they obtained from appellants to the board of referees. Would the minister therefore undertake, instead of waiting for someone to tell him, to contact these three gentleman and perhaps even some of the appellants to make certain that the control officers are behaving in the way in which he has said he wants them to behave?

Mr. Andras: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. I would only add that I have made that invitation before and I would have been very pleased if those gentlemen had sent that specific allegation to the commission or to me. We would have been able to act on it and give precise answers to the House.

POSSIBILITY OF DISQUALIFICATION OF RECIPIENTS AS A RESULT OF COMPUTER PRINT-OUTS AND WITHOUT INTERVIEWS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the minister undertook last week on one or two occasions to inquire into the information given to me, which I gave to the House and to him, and ascertain whether or not disqualification has taken place by computer in any number of cases or whether applicants were personally interviewed before they were disqualified. Has he completed that inquiry now?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am advised that the disqualifications followed individual personal interviews by the benefit control officers prior to the disentitlement. Again, if there are any specific instances or examples where this appears not to have been the case, I would be appreciative of the evidence so that I could act upon it. That is the information I have been given now.

Mr. Lewis: I think this matter is of such importance, and I am sure the minister would agree, for me to ask him where he got the information. I now have copies of several disqualifying letters obtained by claimants and in every case the claimant has stated that he or she was not interviewed and then received his or her disqualifying letter. May I ask the minister from whom he has obtained the information that there are personal interviews and how that information was gathered by the person who gave it to him?

Mr. Andras: This matter is before the advisory committee. I am not treating it lightly in any way, but I would be very grateful if the hon. member would give me that evidence so I can investigate these cases where necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I notice six hon. members to my left are seeking the floor on supplementary questions. Before continuing these supplementary questions the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Shefford.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE BOYCOTT OF INTERNATIONAL TRANSPORT SYSTEMS BY WORLD FEDERATION OF WORKERS—DISCUSSION WITH CANADIAN AMBASSADOR IN BRUSSELS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the House whether steps have been taken to ensure that our international transportation system by sea and by air will not be paralyzed or boycotted by the World Federation of Labour whose head office is in Brussels?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not taken any special steps.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford on a supplementary question.

Mr. Rondeau: Does the minister intend to communicate with the Canadian ambassador in Brussels in order to avoid reprisals by the World Federation of Labour which is asking for the liberation of the three union leaders who are imprisoned in Quebec, failing which there will be boycotting of our international transportation system?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that if the hon. member knew about the organization of the labour movement, both on the national and international levels, he would not be asking this question.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS FOR PERSONS WHO ALLEGEDLY RECEIVED INCORRECT TP4U SLIPS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, mine is a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Now that it is apparent that thousands of unemployment insurance claimants will be late in filing their income tax returns through no fault of their own but because of incorrect TP4U forms, is it the intention of the minister to speak with his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, so that these people will not be fined for late filing?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I think the premise of the hon. member's question is quite incorrect.

PLACEMENT PRIORITIES—DIRECTIVE OF MARCH 9—REQUEST THAT DEPUTY MINISTER BE ABSOLVED

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether, in light of the many statements of a conflicting nature made both in the House and outside concerning the affair since March 9 last, he now wishes to take this opportunity to publicly clear the name of his deputy minister in connection with that sorry affair?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I think the Prime Minister made a statement on Friday which meets the case. I think any statement I have made which is on the record in Hansard also meets the case.

ALLEGATION THAT BENEFIT CONTROL OFFICERS WORK ON QUOTA SYSTEM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is with reference to the question I put to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration last week. Has the minister discovered yet whether the unemployment insurance benefit control officers are being forced to work under a quota system?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have inquired into this matter and, as I told the hon. gentleman the other day, if I found such a system to exist I would be the first to take disciplinary action or cause it to be taken, but I have not found that to be the case.

FEDERAL TRAINING ALLOWANCES TO STUDENTS—PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will it continue to be the policy of the government to make jobless students from vocational training programs pay income tax on federal training allowances in the same manner that unemployment insurance benefits are taxed, and will the minister tell the House why students were not warned that this practice would be introduced this year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the law required payment of income tax on such training allowances beginning January 1, 1972. Again my information is that students were advised of this during interviews preceding authorization of such training and in pamphlets and in letters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a last supplementary question on this subject, and then recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

Oral Questions

NUMBER OF JOB INQUIRIES TO BE MADE TO AVOID CUTTING OFF OF BENEFITS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether the large number of people who are now being cut off unemployment insurance because they have not satisfied the officials of the commission that they have been active enough in looking for work have been given any information, any details, as to the number of job inquiries they are to make per week or per month so their unemployment insurance benefits will not be cut off?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that assistance and advice is contained in the interviews and information conveyed to the claimants being disentitled for that reason. They vary according to the community and according to the availability of jobs in particular categories, but in a simple precise way the answer is yes, they are told that.

Mr. Orlikow: Could claimants be given the same kind of directive as must have been given to the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission who are enforcing this new policy so they will have some idea of what is expected from them before they are cut off?

Mr. Andras: I think I just answered that, Mr. Speaker, but I shall examine the question again when Hansard is printed.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Lotbinière who seems to have one or more supplementaries, I will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

TRANSPORT

PENDING STRIKE OF WEST COAST MARINE PILOTS—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF PILOTAGE AUTHORITY TO MEET DEMANDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister met with representatives of the west coast pilots in view of the threat of a pending strike of British Columbia pilots with its national implications, and is he prepared to discuss with them changes in the terms of reference or guidelines for the west coast pilotage authority so that it will be able to meet the demands of the B.C. pilots?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received this morning a request from the pilots' association asking me to meet them. My hon. colleague was kind enough to give me notice of his question. I can only review the whole case to ensure whether my intervention at this time really "unbalances" the bargaining power of the interested parties. If not, I will happily receive not only the pilots but also the British Columbia Pilotage Authority.

[Mr. Speaker.]

"IRISH STARDUST" INCIDENT AT ALERT BAY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether the Irish Stardust was under the control of a Canadian pilot at the time of the accident near Alert Bay at the end of January? If so, why did the captain allow him to proceed to Victoria, given the condition of the hull?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot remember whether the vessel was in the area where the services of a Canadian pilot are required. I am going to check and advise the hon. member tomorrow morning or tomorrow afternoon, if he agrees.

As for the ship, it could hardly be left where it stood. It had to be taken somewhere and that was to be Victoria. I believe damages were reduced to a minimum and I doubt that anyone can complain about the behaviour of the department in that instance.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Will the minister be in a position to report soon on the accident which occurred about two months ago?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have received just about all the details. We know exactly how much cleaning operations will cost. It is simply a matter of knowing what the company in question and what the government will pay and that I can tell the hon. member when I answer his question about the pilot.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the question of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is really supplementary to his previous question. Still, in a way, it could be related to the first question.

[English]

Before going to the next member, I believe the hon. member for Calgary Centre has a supplementary. I hope it will be a supplementary to the one or the other of the questions just asked.

PENDING STRIKE OF WEST COAST MARINE PILOTS—INVESTIGATION OF STATUS OF PILOTS' ASSOCIATION BY COMBINES BRANCH

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East. In view of the indication by the Minister of Transport and I believe by the Minister of Labour a short time ago that the B.C. Pilots Association is in fact a corporation and therefore not subject to federal labour regulations and for this reason the minister felt he could not intervene in the discussions, and in view of the fact this is apparently a monopolistic situation, can the minister indicate whether officials of his department have investigated this situation to see whether it is within the Canadian law dealing with these matters?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that our existing combines law does not apply to services. Perhaps in due course the hon. member will support new legislation that will help cover the supply of services within Canada.

ENERGY

BRITISH COLUMBIA PROPOSAL TO USE RAIL TRANSPORTATION FOR ALASKAN OIL—STUDY BY FEDERAL DEPARTMENT—PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of his appearance on the television program, "Question Period". Since the minister has stated that the Canadian government would be inclined to refuse the United States access to the Mackenzie Valley route were it not for the danger of oil spills on the west coast, may I ask if he is having a thorough study made of the proposal of the government of British Columbia for a partial railroad and partial underground pipeline to transport oil from Prudhoe Bay to the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has some reservations about the way the question was asked. The minister will be allowed to reply on the assumption that the question was asked directly rather than on the basis of a statement made outside the House.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear that the remark was with regard to an oil pipeline rather than a gas pipeline specifically because at the moment the oil reserves have not been identified to the same degree in the Mackenzie Delta. I can confirm to the hon. gentleman that it is the intention of my department along with the others affected, the Department of Transport and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to examine Premier Barrett's proposal very closely. I believe as a first step a group will be contacting the provincial government at an early date to see on what advance studies of the ecology, engineering and economics the Barrett proposal was based.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that in answer to a question I asked last week the minister and the Prime Minister seemed to have some preference for the Mackenzie Valley route pipeline because it would carry Canadian oil as well as American oil, I want to ask the minister if there are any proven reserves in the Mackenzie Valley or whether it is correct, as the chairman of the National Energy Board has said, that this pipeline would be used exclusively for American oil, certainly for some time to come?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The suggestion, Mr. Speaker, was the development of the Mackenzie corridor. Given the fact that it would only be possible to develop one such corridor in this current decade, it seemed to us to make more sense to develop one which would serve Canadian resources, in this case natural gas, as well as American oil and natural gas, than one which would serve the United States alone.

Mr. Douglas: As the government seems to have pretty well made up its mind, provided the Americans are agreeable, to proceed with the Mackenzie Valley project, may I ask the minister if the government has completed its ecological studies of such a pipeline and whether these will be prepared and made public prior to an application being entertained by the National Energy Board?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should correct the hon. gentleman. In my remarks on television I said that the government would be prepared to entertain an application. Since the jurisdiction rests with the board it would, of course, have to decide in the first instance whether an application could go ahead. A great many of the studies have been completed and have been published. My recollection is that my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, provided a very lengthy list of those already published and an even longer one of those to be published, along with the publication dates, to the standing committee to which he was reporting.

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—PRESENTATION OF CANADIAN POSITION TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary in reference to the national interest of Canada only. In light of the fact that there is a congressional hearing which will decide whether the United States will transport crude petroleum down the west coast in international waters off Canada from Alaska to the west coast of the United States, has the Canadian government set out a firm position to the United States so that before a decision is taken in the next month they will at least know where we stand in reference to the ecology and economics of that situation? I ask this question particularly in view of the minister's statement on "Question Period" yesterday as to a Mackenzie pipeline for either crude petroleum or natural gas.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon gentleman on that supplementary that the statement of that position was provided in correspondence between myself and Secretary Morton which was laid upon the table of the House during the last session. We have continued to make it evident through diplomatic channels that that position is clear. President Nixon has made it quite clear, to borrow his phrase, that in no way is the present United States administration interested in the Canadian route. All the information on the Canadian route has been made available to the American authorities. The United States administration is obviously determined on its own route.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact, as disclosed in a recent Financial Post article, that the Liberal leader, Mr. Anderson, who has taken a firm position with respect to this matter, has stated that if the Canadian position is not made known and if it is not firm with respect to whether we intend to entertain or endorse a pipeline the United States will make the decision within 30 days despite Canada—I am thinking of the national interests of Canada—what is the minister's answer to that?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I repeated on the weekend—I am glad I had the hon. member as an audience—to all Canadians, as I have repeatedly said in the last year or so, that we would indeed entertain such an application. However, because of the National Energy Board Act and the jurisdiction of the board, of course no government of Canada is in the position to give an advance commitment that such pipeline may be built. We would, however, entertain such an application.

BENEFIT CONTROL—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY REFEREES INDICATING WITCH HUNT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a queestion for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Is he aware of the very serious charge laid by three referees of the Toronto board of appeals, Mr. Murray Tate, Mr. William Baker and Mr. Henry Weisbach, to the effect that several persons were deprived of their unemployment insurance benefits and were the victims of a real witch hunt and, if so, can he check those facts and report to the House on the appeals procedure to the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Mr. Speaker: I am under the impression that the question has already been put to the minister. In any case, if the minister has something to add to the answer he gave he could be recognized for that purpose.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm that I answered that question earlier in the question period.

DAMAGE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN ASSESSING PROPERTY LOSS AND IN RECONSTRUCTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment, but in his absence and because the concern is shared by the Minister of Agriculture as well I direct this question to him. In view of the second major catastrophe in southwestern Ontario, particularly in Essex and Kent counties, caused by the combination of high water and violent storms on the Great Lakes, can the minister say if federal engineers are today working with provincial engineers in assessing the tremendous property loss, and will he say if consideration is now being given to increasing federal aid and accelerating the repair and reconstruction there in view of the continuing danger in the face of spring storms?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I spent most of the weekend talking to the people in the area and talking to my provincial counterpart, Mr. Stewart, several times. I do hope that both provincial and federal people are in the area today. It is my understanding that this is the fact, although I have not had time to check and find out if they are there. I met with several municipal leaders on Saturday night, and I think there is another meeting scheduled for this coming Saturday afternoon to assess what the damage was and where they should go from here. All I can say is that I am trying to keep in close touch with what is going on and with what we can do to assist those people in their present plight.

DAMAGE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—POSSIBILITY OF FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In the absence of the Minister of the Environment, perhaps I can direct my supplementary to the acting minister. In view of the fact that further floods are likely, is the federal government now prepared to establish a program of flood insurance for land owners in southwestern Ontario?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will bring that question to the attention of the Minister of the Environment.

[English]

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—SUGGESTED FEDERAL INITIATIVE IN FLOOD CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that not only in the Windsor area alone, not only in the Lake Erie area alone but right through the lower Great Lakes this year there is a tragedy forthcoming of gigantic proportions, would the Prime Minister please impress upon his ministers that they should not leave most of the responsibility to the provincial government and, as this is an international waterway and a navigable waterway, will the federal government show more initiative and leadership in the whole flood control program in the lower Great Lakes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the problem of flood control and meeting natural disasters the government has a position. It has explained this position. The essence of it is that we do not like to intervene in provincial jurisdictions or in provincial territory or in areas off that territory except at the request of the province. In fact, in previous years at the flood season there have been many instances in which the House has heard ministers announce federal assistance to alleviate or repair flood damage in any cases where the province had so requested. Last year there was a case in British Columbia where the federal government supplied funds to the tune of several millions of dollars. This happens all the time. There is a federal policy. It is important that the provinces and the provincial governments themselves realize the extent of the occurrences.

Mr. Lawrence: Is the Prime Minister then indicating that if the province of Ontario indicated some desire for the federal government to intervene in this matter, in respect of the lower Great Lakes this year, that federal assistance would be forthcoming?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is hypothetical.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO PREVENT SUGGESTED INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of widespread reports from financial circles that Canadian chartered banks are planning in the near future to raise their interest rate structures, and as, of course, this would greatly slow down industrial expansion and job opportunities, has the minister been in touch with the presidents of these institutions or, if not, will he point out this important fact and request that interest rates not be raised at this important time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the representation of the hon. gentleman into consideration.

BRIEF OF CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE ON CAPITAL GAINS TAX—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

A paragraph of the brief submitted to the cabinet last week by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture reads as follows:

The capital gains tax concession on the transfer of farms within a family is so designed that it makes any serious planning of operations almost impossible; it does not even include property other than land.

Can the minister tell the House if he examined the paragraph and what answer he intends to give concerning that request?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I even attended the submission of that brief and answered the federation. For a more final answer, the House will have to wait for the text of the bill.

CLOSING OF RAILWAY STATIONS IN WESTERN CANADA—SUGGESTION TRANSPORT COMMISSION WILL ONLY HEAR BRIEFS FROM LAWYERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in connection with the proposal to close railway stations in western Canada. As Canadian National is holding at many points and as a representative of the Saskatchewan government is on hand to inform the public that briefs to the Canadian Transport Commission will only be heard after there has been consultation with lawyers, has the Canadian Transport Commission removed itself so much from the public that people have to resort to lawyers, or will briefs presented by the public generally be heard by the commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire of the commission and give an answer to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the minister whether the meeting that he suggested early in January he will hold with provincial representatives is any closer today than it was in January?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it is closer today that it was in January.

MANPOWER

POSSIBLE ACTION TO HAVE EMPLOYERS LIST ALL AVAILABLE JOBS WITH LOCAL OFFICES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister and Immigration. In view of the fact that those who are applying for unemployment insurance benefits must first register with local manpower offices, and in view of the fact it was revealed by the Swadron committee report that only 23 per cent of available jobs in Canada are registered with manpower offices across the country, is the minister considering any action to have employers list all jobs available with local manpower offices?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are not considering any compulsory action, of course, because that would not be in our jurisdiction, nor proper. We are appealing to all employers across this country on every possible occasion to do so. I might say that we have indicated to unemployment insurance claimants that we would prefer that they do not use the services of manpower offices only but to search for jobs beyond that, which is part of the statement I made the other day.

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the minister think it is fair that people who are unemployed . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Oral Questions

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

PURPOSE OF MR. HEAD'S VISITS TO COUNTRIES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONFERENCE WILL NOT BE POSTPONED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister what purpose his personal envoy, Mr. Head, has in visiting various Commonwealth countries at this time?

• (1510)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Head is attempting to meet as many as possible of the heads of government who plan to attend the Commonwealth Conference to be held next summer in Canada in order to discuss matters of the agenda and various other arrangements with them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, what particular message was to be conveyed to General M'boto of undistinguished notoriety, the head of Uganda? What was the message to him?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, President M'boto is no longer president of Uganda.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that just indicates one should not accept everything one reads in the newspapers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I now ask the Prime Minister this: Is Mr. Head carrying a message to these various countries of the possibility of having to postpone the Prime Ministers' conference in Ottawa in August because of an intervening event? Will the Prime Minister give assurance that, regardless of the eventualities of the next few weeks, the conference will be held on the date fixed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, no guarantee that political events will not intervene between now and the month of August. However, there is no suggestion being made by this government that this should prevent us from going ahead with plans for the conference or, indeed, with plans for the Queen's visit. I would be curious to know whether the right hon. gentleman would support an endeavour to cancel the Queen's visit and the Commonwealth Conference just because there might be some political events that would be distasteful to him and his party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, realizing the tremendous intense affection that the Prime Minister has always evidenced for the Crown—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —may I express to him deep appreciation for his change of heart and his conversion. However, I wish to ask him, in the event that an election should take place—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: —even though the Prime Minister will not occupy that position after the election—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —have there been any tentative plans made or has he transmitted such to any of the countries within the Commonwealth that, on the basis of previous experience, an adjournment might be necessary in so far as Canada is concerned?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question is entirely hypothetical, but I must point out to the right hon. member that the premises on which it is based are just a continuation of the type of innuendo that the right hon. member has been speaking quite often in this matter.

FISHERIES

PRESENCE OF FOREIGN DRAGGERS WITHIN 12 MILES OF NEWFOUNDLAND COAST—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is prompted by an emergency telephone call I just received. In view of the fact there is evidence of foreign draggers off the northern coast of Newfoundland that are fishing within the 12-mile limit, will the Prime Minister direct that this emergency be corrected and that the Minister of Fisheries be delegated to act at once?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I am replacing the Minister of the Environment I will report immediately the hon. member's representation to him.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact the patrol vessels of the Department of Fisheries are ineffecive in this emergency, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marshall: Will the minister take note of this emergency and direct the air-sea rescue squadron to look into this dangerous activity by foreign draggers?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will consult with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the government prepared to give consideration to supplementing the inadequate fisheries patrol fleet by Canadian naval vessels to protect Canadian nationals fishing in Canadian waters?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, we will have to find out what the state of the emergency is before we can make any decision in this regard.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO DEAL WITH BACKLOG OF PENSION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the numerous inquiries about the backlog of just over 9,000 applications for new and increased veterans' and dependents' pensions as indicated about two weeks ago, has the minister arranged for or is he considering a further increase in the number of new commissioners to help deal with this backlog of applications?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, answering the hon. member's question, as I indicated to the House before, considerable progress has been made in this regard. We have appointed new commissioners. For the information of the House, applications are being received and applications are being processed. In the month of February alone we received 700 additional applications. At the same time, I wish to inform the hon. member that I am reasonably satisfied with the progress being made. We know the matter is of an urgent nature and we are doing our very best to deal with it.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling Orders of the Day, the Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition and try tomorrow to recognize some of the members in the third, fourth and fifth rows.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it will be their turn tomorrow.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR BREAKDOWN OF ESTIMATED CASH REQUIREMENTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1973-74

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance the same question I asked him twice before. When is he going to be able to give me the breakdown of the cash requirements of the government of Canada for the next fiscal year? I find it difficult to understand his problem. I would have thought he would have to have a breakdown before he could compile a total.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I am having difficulty with is putting the answer in a form that can be accommodated during orders of the day. I am looking for another way to respond to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

National Housing Act

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It relates to four answers to four questions received today from the ministry which I find to be insulting in the extreme. The four questions are Nos. 1,034, 1,035, 1,036 and 1,037. Briefly, they relate to the question of what persons, companies or groups in two counties in southern Ontario received printing contracts during 1971 and 1972. The answer I received from the Minister of Supply and Services in each case is very brief. I quote it:

> The records of the department are not kept in such a manner to readily provide information about contracts awarded to business firms in counties or constituencies.

In all fairness, I find these so-called answers to perfectly legitimate questions, and we have every right to have this information placed before us, insulting in the extreme. That is my question of privilege.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT, REHABILITATION, OWNERSHIP, NEW COMMUNITIES, ETC.

The House resumed, from Friday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-133, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I did not conclude my remarks on Friday afternoon. As Your Honour is aware, shortly after you called private members' hour, the fireworks started. However, it is a privilege to again speak on housing and to try to put before the House the position of the people in the small municipalities and rural Canada. Those in rural Canada must look into every possible angle for new housing, no matter under what department it comes. I think they could be assisted further through the Ministry of Veterans Affairs.

A few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) a question concerning the number of late applications for assistance received from veterans under the terms of the Veterans Land Act. I had in mind those who had failed to file certificates before the expiration of the deadline. I also asked whether the minister planned to take action to have the deadline extended to accommodate veterans who would now like to acquire small holdings but who had failed to apply. A great many veterans did not take advantage of this generous plan when it was available, and I would commend the government of the day for having introduced this scheme. If this offer could be re-opened, much needed housing could be started at most attractive interest rates and rates of payment. Such housing could be restricted to "have-not" areas where ordinary subdivisions have not been developed.

At this point I might be permitted to make an aside—I do not know whether or not it could be classed as a question of privilege. I know it is customary, on occasion, for hon. members to quote from newspapers. In the Globe and Mail this morning I saw an editorial which started off very nicely with the words "Hi, there . . . ". Then, it went on to berate two members of this House—for which, more power to it. But, at the end the article states:

Still, this reduction of minority government parliament to its lowest common denigrator—

I understand this is a very insulting way in which to say "denominator"— —is curiously casual in a House to which the halt and lame and seedy have lately hauled their feverish bodies.

I can defend myself very well, and so can a good many members of this House. But when it comes to words such as these, I think of two outstanding members. One of them is the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who despite a handicap is an outstanding member of the House and an outstanding servant of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: Another is the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Morgan), again an outstanding member, despite the fact that he is almost blind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: These hon. members are certainly to be commended much more highly than those of us who enjoy reasonably good health. I think some smart-Aleck reporter for the Globe and Mail should be taken to task. He may have a strong back but it is my impression he has a very weak mind. A good many of these people seem to think they have the answers to all questions—that the hon. members on the government front bench, and on the front benches of the opposition parties, know nothing compared to these smart-Aleck reporters who have answers to everything. I am very well aware of the saying "If you can't take the heat get out of the kitchen". I am here and I like the heat. There is no signature beneath this article—it was probably written by some cub reporter. But when accusations of this kind are made, I think it is time someone in this House spoke in defence of the members concerned and took these writers to task.

There is one other area with which I should like to deal. It brings up the whole question of subdivision control and the long delays which occur in approving land for building. I listened to one farmer, now retired, telling me in very strong terms, to put it mildly—I could not repeat in this chamber the language he used—that the government had kicked him off his farm. He wanted to take an acre of land off his farm and build a small modern house on it. He would then turn the farm over to his son to operate—his plan was to help his son and, probably, to keep a few chickens himself. Well, he was unable to get permission to build the house and, as a result he sold the farm to someone from the city who paid, I suppose, a reasonable price for it. The point is, though, that the farm is now out of production and the barns are falling into decay. This, to me, represents a step backwards.

I am well aware of the powers available to provincial planning boards to determine where buildings can be placed. But in this case the farm was located close to a highway on a year-round road. No additional services were required, and the school bus already passes the lot the farmer had chosen. All that has happend is this: the township in question has lost the additional taxes which would have been paid, and the farmer has moved into town, where he was obliged to pay almost the total price of his farm for a house—a house in which he is not nearly as happy, and probably not as healthy either.

I know of a great many other cases, such as the one I have just mentioned, involving farmers who wished to retain one building lot on their farms upon which to build a home for their retirement. This story has been repeated many times across the province of Ontario. Homes could have been built on these lots without any worry whatever about additional services. No new sewers or water systems would have been needed because the lots chosen were, naturally, by the side of existing roads. I do not think these farmers intended to raise second families but in any event the school buses were going by their doors.

I believe it has been established that the federal government's explicit role in the housing field is to ensure that all Canadians are adequately housed in viable communities at prices they can afford. That is certainly an ambitious undertaking. It means that at the federal level, at least, and only partly through cost-sharing there has to be a concentration of effort on housing needs of low income families. It means a wider search for new and cheaper building techniques. It means assistance to the less well-off among us to enable them to rehabilitate their homes and their communities. Among other things, it moves Ottawa into a field of direct income subsidies in connection with housing, where required, as a new wrinkle in its income support programs.

As an example of the savings which can be brought about through alternative building techniques, about $2,000 could be saved on smaller homes if basements were dispensed with and the homes were simply built on solid concrete slabs. Then again, the building code presently demands that all lumber used in house construction must be stamped. This discriminates against many of our small sawmills which are unable to provide stamped lumber. Yet their lumber is graded—it is just as good as the stamped materials and, sometimes, it is better. Relaxation of this rule should lead to a saving amounting to a minimum of $200 a house—the exact amount would depend, of course, on the quantity used. That damned stamp costs an additional $20 per thousand. For many applications, second grade plywood could be used, sometimes available at half price. Again, of course, the total saving would depend on the quantity used. I would point out that in many of the homes built in our smaller centres plywood is used a great deal for finishing rather that gyproc or plaster.

I am pleading for a place in the sun for the rural areas of Canada. These are the areas in which attempts should be made to build more houses and develop more industry. I firmly believe that, given a reasonable opportunity to choose, people will place quality of life ahead of economic gain, and would be only too happy to move to, or remain in, rural areas of Canada, provided they could make a reasonable living there.

I note that the bill proposes to make money available for the renovation of older homes. The maximum amount of $2,000 available certainly does not go very far, however, and I hope the minister will agree to increase this sum considerably. I also hope the provinces will be willing to provide matching grants. It seems to me only common sense, or business, that a thorough restoration job costing $6,000 or $7,000 is far preferable to a patch-up job costing $2,000 or even $4,000. With additional financing some of these older homes could probably be made into duplexes to provide good living accommodation for two families. I would hope also that this type of a loan would be available to families anywhere in Canada.

I am pleased to note that housing is to be made available for our native people on the reserves. If money for much needed housing can be made available in these areas where there certainly are no sewers or water systems, then so that there will be no discrimination, I feel that loans should also be made available in other rural areas and small villages which do not have these facilities but could meet the other criteria, such as available land, good soil, independent water supply and satisfactory soil for weeping beds.

This points up what I have been endeavouring to say, which is that no area should be barred from applying for and receiving national housing money and loans. Housing in rural Canada, therefore, will require the combined help of all three levels of government and their many departments. Again let me emphasize that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Finance should be providing money and working together to promote the build-up of the economy in smaller centres.

The one provincial department which is the greatest culprit in restricting building is the department of municipal affairs, and certainly the province of Ontario is far from guiltless. They say that we chastise those we love for their own good, Mr. Speaker, and a good example of this occurred last Thursday in two provincial by-elections. I am hoping this provincial government will take to heart the strong feelings of the rural people in Ontario and make an about face. I would strongly recommend that they start putting their stamp of approval on a lot of land which is ready to be developed and provide additional housing at low prices.

In my own little area people are begging for a lot on which to build a house. All of them say that they want to get out of the city. Believe it or not, I can look out of my own office window and see enough land on which to build 50 or 100 houses, but none of it is available because of subdivision control and crazy delaying laws from the department of health, whose inspectors take their own good time approving property and time and again turn it down. I might say that local people have a different name for these inspectors; they are called "sewer sniffers".

I should like to commend the speech given last Monday at noon in Ottawa by the Ontario minister for housing in which he outlined many forward looking plans. Then, we heard on Monday evening one of the directors in the department, and I am glad to know that both governments are working together in co-operation and will give every assistance.

One of the areas in my riding, the district municipality of Muskoka, has just prepared a submission to the Ontario advisory task force in housing policy. They have gone into great detail stressing shortages of certain types of housing, the great difficulty in getting new housing underway, and emphasizing diversification of the economy in selected locations within the district as a prerequisite to a substantial increase in the standard of living of the present permanent population of the area. Land ownership in this particular area by residents is continuing to decline; now less than 50 per cent of the area is privately owned. The proportion of land owned by residents of metropolitan Toronto has been increasing; they presently hold 33 per cent of the privately owned land. The influence of residents of metropolitan Toronto in the district has therefore become very significant and is continuing to increase.

Provincial and federal measures to encourage employment have had a direct effect upon industrial growth and the need for permanent residential housing. The brief goes on to recommend that residential development should be permitted on a limited number of sites where partial services can be provided, but agrees that indiscriminate urban development throughout rural areas is not desirable. It is the feeling of this particular area in Muskoka that a limited amount of residential development in rural areas could be permitted, and such a policy would ease housing problems.

They also recommend that the province should consider entering into the financing market to the extent required to assist lower and middle income groups to obtain mortgage money in rural and recreational areas of the country. These areas are not adequately serviced by existing financial institutions; mortgages are refused many potential buyers in the absence of full services in small communities and in rural areas. They also recommend, as I have many times, that there should be ways and means of assisting municipalities to provide fully serviced residential lots in small urban communities. This should apply particularly to communities in areas of difficult terrain where the cost of servicing is often prohibitively high. This type of assistance should aid in maintaining real estate prices at a reasonable level.

It is recognized that indiscriminate urban development throughout rural areas is not desirable, but it is the feeling of the people in the district of Muskoka that a limited amount of residential development in rural areas could be permitted. Such a policy would ease certain problems. It is highly unlikely that development could approach urban density other than on the most suitable sites, but steps could be taken within the framework of planning policies to ensure that development in rural areas is strictly regulated and directed to sites best suited to residential uses on partial services. The province should review ways and means of assisting municipalities to provide fully serviced, residential lots in small urban communities.

The objectives of Bill C-133 still look like noble gestures, with the purpose of bringing good housing within the reach of more Canadians. However, I would point out that the government's duty to rural dwellers is non-specific in the bill. The only possible attention given to these persons would lie in a small "l" liberal interpretation of the new communities, neighbourhood improvement and rehabilitation of existing housing proposals. However, it must certainly be assumed that money will not be poured into these districts in view of great pressure from the urban areas and, of course, the trend to urban living.

I would also point out that a beneficial housing policy cannot be developed in isolation from other programs. The government still has no full strategy for urban growth. For example, the failure of the government to develop an effective transportation policy will ultimately result in the failure of its housing strategy. This is one more argument in favour of transferring a good deal of new housing activity to the rural areas where roads are already built but the same services are not demanded. Many of the communities are situated along railroad lines, where rapid transit could be utilized if only the railways would provide it, rather than discontinuing trains and doing their best to tear up the railway lines so they can never be forced to go back to transporting people. Urban developers are told that in their price of land must be included the cost of recreation facilities, park lands, arenas, recreation centres and so on. These facilities are already available in many small communities crying for housing.

If I have one priority as a backbencher in this House of Commons it is this, that I will endeavour to be a voice for rural Canada. I have said this before and I will continue to say it. I served as the head of a municipality for a quarter of a century and certainly know what is required in small towns and villages. I get a little weary of hearing about "urban this and urban that". Again I stress that a special department of rural affairs should be set up, or an ombudsman appointed to speak on behalf of the rest of Canada. As I look around this chamber, I wonder if it would not be an excellent idea to have a large map of Canada available to let some of these urban Members of Parliament see just how much of Canada they represent. Take for example the map of Ontario. It reminds me somewhat of a chicken. The chicken's head and part of its neck comprises southern Ontario, and the rest is the great rural area and northern Ontario.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), our housing critic, when speaking most eloquently on Thursday night, stated that the metropolitan Toronto area would require at least $73 million of the 100 million dollars allocated for any one year for land assembly. He went on to state that this would leave only $27 million for the other cities, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton and Halifax. This certainly is dividing it like a Christian, Mr. Speaker, and you know what it leaves for the rest of rural Canada, about three-eighths of five-eighths of you can guess what.

[Mr. Darling.]

I understand, from what I read in the paper this past weekend, that Toronto is now demanding 100,000 lots, and the price is at least $20,000 a lot. I am not very good at multiplying, but I thought the total cost came to $200 million. However, I had it checked by one of my colleagues and he said it is $2 billion. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a hell of a lot of money. If you read the Toronto Star, every weekend you will see houses advertised at $41,000 to $80,000 in Oakville's Charmwood, and so on, and a Mississauga townhouse at $30,000. This is decentralization says the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). My gosh, we could build I don't know how many thousands of homes in rural Canada with that amount of money and let the development of Toronto stop where it is. I get sick and tired of seeing all these advertisements.

Mr. Speaker, again I am hoping that hon. members on this side here, as well as hon. members on the government side, will say that Toronto and Montreal have grown too damn big, period, and, therefore, we will have to look to other areas to decentralize. By "decentralize", I do not mean moving out to Mississauga or up as far as Thornhill. I am not quite so familiar with that great octopus, Montreal, but I understand it extends for 20 or 30 miles. I intend to stretch our sights a great deal farther in order to try to get industry into this area and then housing along with it. Again, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much and I hope that my few remarks will be given consideration by this House.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): If I may at the outset, while the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) is still with us in this Chamber, make brief reference to the fact that I had hoped, when I came here as a new member only a few months ago, that perhaps Toronto would no longer be the favourite whipping dog of all other parts of Canada. As I say, I had hoped that practice had faded, and I am sad to see that it has not. Indeed, we have problems and I hope I can convince you, and the other members through you Mr. Speaker, that members from Toronto also share a concern and responsibility for rural Canada, and a very genuine concern. I had made a note, before the hon. member made reference to what seemingly was an unfair proportion of assistance being given to Toronto—at least that is what I gathered from his comments, Mr. Speaker—to make sure that I refer to the fact that I come from rural Ontario roots so I share the great concern of the member for Parry Sound-Muskoka about the condition of housing in rural Ontario.

Borderline poverty people and lower middle-income people in our cities are doing much better in housing in finding accommodation, if it is not housing of their own, despite the fact there remain many very critical problems. Meanwhile, many of our farmers working very hard to earn a minimum wage find themselves in housing that would never be accepted within an urban area in Canada. Certainly, a great deal more has to be done in that area and I want to make that very clear as someone from Toronto, Mr. Speaker.

Now, in referring to Bill C-133, I want to cover, if I can first, two or three basic points and then go into some detail, if I may. First, after going over all the material that was made available to me, as well as my own awareness of the housing problems in a suburban riding such as my own which has a population of 140,000 and all the hell and dilemma of suburban sprawl, I was very pleased to learn that the federal ministry of urban affairs and housing had made a very real effort to discuss with the provincial and municipal levels of government just what kind of assistance was needed at this level. There was a real tri-level input I believe, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly think that is the way you start out to really help those other two levels of government.

If I can refer to the particular areas that I think are the very essence of the intent of this bill, having said that getting together and creating understanding at all levels before presenting this bill is important, I want to say these areas of real change from the original legislation brought down a year or so ago are the result of this getting together. I think the land banking to which the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka referred a few moments ago is one example of something basic and urgent, which the government has recognized and upon which it certainly has not taken piecemeal action, but very strong and decisive action. As I add it up, over the next five years about half a billion dollars will be provided to try to put back into shape the housing in our urban areas.

It is very true we need development in rural Canada. Areas which have been neglected need help, but there is now a crisis—right now—in our urban areas and that must be met. One of those crises, certainly, in my area in suburban metropolitan Toronto, is the cost of land and the way that influences the cost of housing. Now we have the impossible task for many even in the middle-class, much less the lower middle-class, of finding themselves homes.

Finally, when I talk about the basics of recognize in this bill, I think very much of, and am extremely encouraged about, the inclusion in the neighbourhood improvement program of improvements to commercial properties. I am not referring to Eaton's, Simpsons, Steinbergs or Safeway. I am referring to the little fellow who has built up a small community store and has seen his neighbour's home deteriorate. Perhaps his store has become run down as a result of urban sprawl, and general physical deterioration in an aging community. We must include business, as well as the other factors in the community program, and provide some incentive to improve. I believe this is a very positive step indeed, at a time when small business in this country should be encouraged.

Now, perhaps I might turn to the particular reforms. First, I wish to talk about the new community program. In the address the minister gave to this House a few weeks ago I noted that the objective of the legislation is to help accommodate urban growth other than by urban sprawl and to promote the development of regional growth centres. In my own riding of York West in northwestern metropolitan Toronto, I have seen what urban sprawl can do, not only in respect of the misuse of land not built on previously but also in terms of engulfing a small town with a proud community caught up in the problem of trying to maintain that community. We have seen high rises move next door to a family home which has existed for a period of 40 or 50 years. We have seen the problem confronting people who must move to suburbia to even find apartment accommodation which they hopefully can afford, and where they can find available within their budget recreational facilities for their children included which cannot be found at a reasonable price in the heart of a densely settled area. They move out to the far suburbs which includes, in part, my riding. They move into high rises and suddenly find that they are not welcome because other people who have also moved out of the city core, who could afford land previously, now do not want the imposition of density resulting from the construction of high rises. It seems terribly important to me that this new community program will help develop regional growth centres and help fight that kind of urban sprawl which causes very unnecessarily, I believe, confrontation between people seeking a decent place to live.

I am also very pleased that the new community program does not involve merely land and buildings. This legislation provides that loans will be available and will take into account the need for open space, planning and services. It is no good just to throw a chunk of land at the public and throw up a lot of units with the kind of mistakes I believe the Ontario Housing Corporation has made in the province of Ontario, thereby creating terrible ghettos. The problem is to provide the open space and the atmosphere so that a citizen of any income group will know he can find housing where he can live with respect and dignity.

I would like also to say that in that particular program of new communities the expression of the desire to co-ordinate the various federal departments involved is extremely important. A lack of co-ordination, as a matter of fact, has occurred too often in the past at all levels of government and, unfortunately, has brought suffering to one group, namely, the people who seek government assisted housing in their search for a decent place to live. So, interrelation and co-ordination should play a part in that program and allow for certain community experiments in such fields as urban transportation, communication and in the mixed use of land as a concept in contrast to traditional zoning practices. His pledged co-ordination will also help to reduce urban pollution and introduce new models in community development.

I also think it is very promising that this very young and fresh department is willing to say it has learned a lesson in the area of urban affairs, has considered the needs expressed by all levels of government, and now intends to take the initiative. It is also saying it wants to learn, will experiment, and within a short period of time will find out how it can positively and quickly bring forth the most effective measures. On the issue of the land bank, the amount of $100 million is a major assist in metropolitan Toronto. For instance, in order to obtain land of any kind one must be a very large developer with large financial resources. The end result has been that a very few people have control of the only land available for development. As the private control by a few develops, we find soaring prices and inability for anybody except the very well-to-do to purchase homes. We want to move into our urban communities and drive down the prices the speculators are demanding and also provide, through competition, to them, a lot more housing. This seems to me to be very crucial.

My concern would be that if the experience of the government over the next year or two is that $100 million is not enough, then it should be prepared to try to find the funds to expand that to an even greater amount. I also want to say in relation to the land bank program that I believe it is extremely important in cases where a loan is taken out and land acquired and retained in public hands, whether by the province or by the municipality, that the term of the loan is doubled so that it will not be a period of 25 years, but a period of 50 years repayment, thereby providing a real opportunity for the public sector to take a piece of the action in this area with the feeling that they do not have to worry about the short-range situation; they then know they can control long range development without a heavy short-range burden on local taxpayers.

I want to speak for a moment about the assisted home ownership program. I think there are three major factors which show the positive direction of this legislation as proposed by the government. The first is that if you are to assist people buying homes you must realize that today even with the kind of land bank program I have discussed, it will take a lot more time for lower income people to pay off a mortgage because prices have gone up tremendously. Many people, not just the upper middle-class and the wealthy, but the great broad strength of this country, the group below that level, still want an opportunity to have homes and the extension of the mortgage period to 40 years will be of a real assistance. I hope, indeed that we will get to a point where we can actually bring down prices in respect of houses because 40 years is a long time to have a mortgage hanging around one's neck.

The second positive point I find in the assisted home ownership program is the fact that we have the pledge the government will make money available at the lowest rate of interest possible for these people. The government finally has shown its concern by lengthening the period of mortgaging, lowering interest rates, and by saying that, in many instances, it will even go further in order to allow people to get a start and will take action to help many with partial grants to assist home ownership without any strings. I think I spoke briefly about the non-profit housing assistance and how it will help churches in the city core as well as help service clubs and other groups develop in the community to do the kind of thing the government has tried to do alone with limited funds over a number of years. Perhaps it could have accomplished a lot more if it had decided sooner to encourage the private sector by taking the kind of measures proposed in this bill.

I want to go on from there, if I can, to talk about the fact that in the non-profit housing assistance program there is provision for an increase from 95 per cent to 100 per cent of the loan value. I have heard several members in this debate in the early stages pooh-pooh this provision. I believe it is very important. If you take a piece of land occupied by a large church in downtown Toronto where the congregation has fallen off to 150 to 200 people, they can move and join up with another congregation nearby. They can now take the acre and a half or two acres of land they hold including the manse, the church itself, the parking area and so on and the government can say: we will lend you the total amount and are even willing to give you as much as a 10 per cent grant of the capital cost; away you go, build it and participate with the public sector in developing this kind of housing which would be of tremendous assistance.

Now, perhaps I might touch in some detail on the neighbourhood improvement program. This is something very close to my heart and particularly important to one area of my riding, the old community of Weston, where as I say, through being engulfed by suburban sprawl and by the confrontation between high rises and single family homes, a great disruption has been brought on in what was a proud and positive community. This is a very important point. I stressed earlier that the government, in some cases, was taking the initiative and, in other cases, was allowing the other levels of government to become involved.

I think it is very important that when you go to the assistance of a particular community, you must leave them with the steering of the project. That is very much what has been done in this part of the legislation. Municipalities, in conjunction with the province, will decide what they want to do, but we will set down what we will make available to them. I am not just referring to the chance to fix up the plumbing in a house but to find out whether, for example, there is need for more parks, whether a small businessman in the area needs his corner store improved so that it may remain structurally sound in the years ahead, or whether there is need for more social facilities or day care centres. It is done as an entire project rather than street by street. The whole community works together to refurbish itself and regain the community pride which has been lost through urban sprawl and the development of the great megalopolis around.

In conclusion I should like, if I may, to sum up the areas in which I have found encouragement. When you tie together the various facets of Bill C-133 you find massive new directions, hundreds of millions of dollars being spent. There is experimentation in areas where we must admit we do not have much experience. We are saying that in urban areas we will do something about the high cost of land and at last try to take a large step toward bringing down the price which speculators have brought about in our urban communities. We are also saying that our established communities and old neighbourhoods will no longer be faced with the kind of blight and decay they have faced until now because of the greed of developers in recent years. They will have a chance to pull themselves together and, once more, be what they were 15, 20, 30 or even 40 years ago. We will assist people in home ownership and be of assistance—in fact there will even be grants in some cases—to people in the lower middle class and working class to make it possible for them to get a real chance to buy a place of their own.

We will also develop new communities, not ghettos but communities where transportation, communications and other services will be interrelated. We will direct our efforts toward delaying urban communities as well as troubled suburbia, the poor residents as well as the poor small businessmen. We will tie it all together and say: here is a new approach to the housing problem in Canada. Initially, we will spend money for the assembly of land, in bringing down prices and for the protection of neighbourhoods. Later, having experimented our next step will be to go beyond that point and bring together a modern community which will reflect many of the profitable and beneficial things we had in the past and have lost because of the growing housing crisis.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the minister who moved second reading of the bill before us today, and having read the bill itself, I wish I could have the confidence of the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) that this bill will indeed bring down land prices in urban centres in Canada. On first reading, I must admit that I found the bill quite interesting. In many ways it seemed to be helpful in providing the tremendous relief which is needed in our urban centres with respect to housing. However, on second, third and fourth reading, and particularly having read the address given by the minister to the House when he introduced the bill, I must now admit that my optimism with respect to the bill has fallen off tremendously.

I feel that the bill does little more than fiddle with a huge problem in this country. The problem is the lack of available serviced lots in most urban centres, and in particular in the centre which I come from, namely, the Toronto region. Lot prices in our Toronto area have jumped almost fourfold since 1961, and home prices have approximately doubled in the same 12 year period. As a result of this unprecedented rise, Toronto house prices are now the highest on the continent, and I would emphasize "the continent", in that if we review house prices in cities such as St. Louis, Philadelphia, Dallas, Pittsburgh, New York, Houston, San Francisco, Detroit, Boston, Minneapolis, Washington, Chicago and Los Angeles, we will not find one average area that has house prices higher than at present in the Toronto area. In fact, there are two other areas that are ahead of all of those cities that I have listed. I am referring to Ottawa and Hamilton.

I feel that the federal government must take a tremendous responsibility for the plight of the average house owner in this country. For example, in 1961 the most expensive detached home that you could find on average in North America was in Los Angeles where the average price for a house was $19,247. The comparable average NHA financed Toronto price in that year was $17,368. In 1971, however, as I have stated, Toronto prices became the highest on the continent. In Toronto, the local price for a house at present—and I emphasize that I am referring now to the NHA financed houses—is $32,567. Ottawa comes second with $30,955; Hamilton third with $28,429, and Los Angeles is in the fourth spot with $27,950.

Mr. Stanbury: In what provinces are all the cities?

Mr. Stevens: Having pointed that out, it is important to remember that while those in charge of administering NHA and officials of CMHC like to create the impression that they are taking a tremendous amount of the mortgage financing in this country, the fact is that it is not that big a figure when you relate it to the entire mortgage financing in Canada. I do not have the 1972 figures but I refer to the fact that mortgage financing of a residential nature in Canada was $3.17 billion in 1971, and of that amount CMHC was responsible for $701 million. What I find most disappointing when you review the figures is the tremendous trend that there has been in the Canadian urban centres away from detached single owner houses to apartment dwelling. Certainly, this shows more vividly than perhaps anything else that land prices, soaring as they are, are virtually prohibiting the average person in Canada from the right, which I feel he should have, to own his own house.

Looking at those figures, for example, we find that in 1961 roughly the same number of single detached dwellings was financed as multiple dwellings in our urban centres. In 1971, however, the figure was more than two to one in favour of multiple dwellings.

But let me come back to the Toronto region, if I may. I have referred to the average NHA prices in that area, but that is only part of the story. Land prices in the last year in Toronto have jumped so sensationally that the average lot price in Toronto today is $22,000 and the average single detached house sells for $45,000 in the Toronto fringe area. I would again emphasize that the bulk of the houses in the Toronto area is not being financed by NHA but is being financed through the conventional lenders. For example, in the northern fringe, which includes the towns of Markham, Richmond Hill, Stouffville and Vaughan, of 989 deals only 155 were financed by NHA in 1971. The reason for this is that land prices and the cost of houses have risen so much in these urban areas that NHA financing is virtually ineffective in financing the home into which people want to move.

To be specific, until a few months ago the maximum loan you could get under NHA was $25,000; that has recently been raised to $30,000. There are few in the Toronto area who can afford to pay $45,000 for a house and put $15,000 down in cash. As a result, it is left mainly to conventional lenders to put out the mortgage funds that are required. As most members in this House, and certainly the minister, realize, the conventional lending rate is approximately one per cent higher than the NHA rate. That means that today, most home owners who are buying properties in the Toronto area are being committed to a 10 per cent rate on their mortgages unless they are able to get an NHA rate of about 9 per cent.

This sensational rise in home prices, and in serviced land in particular, affects my riding of York Simcoe which includes such towns as Aurora and Newmarket. For example, last weekend a realtor in the town of Aurora told me that local prices had jumped at least $5,000 in the past six to 12 months and he gave me an example. Last October he acted as agent when a 75 year old home in Aurora sold for $24,000. He said that frankly the house was overpriced when he sold it, but last week he sold the same house for $31,000, a $7,000 jump or 29 per cent in five months.

A Newmarket real estate agent told me that he bought a new home for himself in Newmarket last September for $29,800, which was NHA financed and today he is selling the same house for $37,900. He told me, "land price is the reason; as prices move up in Toronto they move up in Newmarket. A lot in town is now worth $15,000. That is still much lower than in Toronto." It is becoming more and more evident that such price increases are the result of an inadequate supply of serviced land, not only in my area and not only in the Toronto centred region but in most of the urban areas across Canada.

The time has come, Mr. Speaker, for an all-out attack on such rising land costs. I believe every Canadian should be able to realistically anticipate that he will own his own home some day. Under the present Trudeau government, however, in the last ten years it has become harder and harder for Canadians to have this anticipation. When the hon. member for York West referred to a massive attack on this problem, I think he should have told the House where the massive attack is in Bill C-133.

I have mentioned that housing prices have risen by approximately 100 per cent in 12 years since 1961. As we know, every month we get new cost of living figures which indicate that the actual cost of living has increased by about 50 per cent since 1961. House prices in my area are double that. This rising price of housing, however, is only part of the tragedy and this is what I should like to emphasize today.

In 1961, the NHA mortgage on the average home in my area was $13,125 and in that year it carried a 6¾ per cent interest rate on a 25 year amortization; a man could anticipate paying off his entire debt and having a debt free home with a total outlay of $26,970. Today, however, his average mortgage principle would be nearly $30,000 with a current NHA interest rate of 9 per cent. Based on a 25 year amortization he would now be required to pay $74,000 to get a debt free home under the Trudeau government.

In 1961, a person could buy the home that I have referred to with a down payment of $4,243; today his down payment would be something in the neighbourhood of $7,000. Including financing, to own a home today which you hope to pay off within 25 years, requires an outlay of $81,000 compared to $31,000 in 1961. That is a $50,000 jump in 12 years, Mr. Speaker, a 260 per cent increase. There has to be a better answer, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest to this House that Bill C-133 is not that better answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: When the hon. minister introduced his bill I was dismayed to read his references to the problems that we have been touching upon, that is, serviced land. Obviously the minister is well aware that it is a problem but if we refer to Hansard we will find that virtually all he is saying is; "It is a problem. We intend to study it. We are going to have conferences and trilevel meetings and we hope that we can come up with solutions." That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. This government has had ten years to come up with some concrete plans on what it intends to do to relieve the situation. For the hon. Minister to stand in this House with this fiddling bill and suggest that it is something that he hopes to get passed and in the meantime there will be conferences and studies in the future to solve the bigger problem, is the wrong order in my view.

We know, for example, that there will be approximately 13 million more people living in this country by the year 2000. In the United States there have been various proposals for coping with the new population that they expect to have in the same period. An interesting article by Robert S. DeVoy appears in the winter 1973 issue of Real Estate Review. The writer is an adviser to the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the United States and I would strongly recommend that the minister and his staff read this article. It discusses new communities and how they may be profitable. Interestingly, it points out:

> Capital investment in new community development probably approximates $15,000 per person for land, land improvements, utilities, streets, public facilities, housing, commercial and industrial facilities and related appliances, machinery, furniture and equipment (exclusive of automobiles and other vehicles). Land and buildings account for at least $10,000 of this total investment.

The remaining $5,000 is taken up literally by getting the land to a point where it may be built upon. If you relate that to the Canadian situation, it is not hard to see that, on average, between now and the year 2000, if we are to house properly the 13 million people by which our population will increase, it will be necessary to spend approximately $5,000 per person. This amount will simply look after the various transportation services and other services necessary to put people into the position where they can build on their lots. In Canada that means that we are contemplating an annual expenditure for such services of approximately $2.5 billion. I think it is high time that the federal government accepted this large responsibility and told the provincial and municipal governments how it will help them finance the $2.5 billion outlay which will be needed, on average, every year up to the year 2000 if we are to provide the various services needed to put lots in Canada in a serviced condition.

In this bill there is only one reference to the type of thing to which I refer. Amounts available for sewage treatment plants will be increased from $200 million to $300 million. That is an increase of $100 million. What a drop in the bucket, compared with the total needs of this country for solving this problem. We should bear in mind that the government, through its inactivity, has been creating a pressure on land values in this country that is resulting in virtually unbearable mortgage loads for most people. It is interesting to note that a psychiatrist from the University of Washington in Seattle has drawn up what he calls a stress scale. He has listed various items of stress that people must meet, and has devised an index which shows how the various stress components affect people. One of the lowest forms of stress, he points out, is having a mortgage of under $10,000. At that point in the hundred point stress scale the stress factor is 17. It is interesting to note that if the mortgage goes up to $30,000, the stress factor increases by more than three times. A mortgage that is greater than $30,000 represents one of the highest stresses that any man must cope with in his day-to-day life. Now we have $30,000 NHA mortgages on average houses.

The minister's speech on this bill, I feel, is perhaps more interesting in what he did not say than in what he said. You will find in the bill that there is reference to increasing the amount of mortgages that may be insured by the corporation and also to the amount of money the corporation may borrow. It is intended to increase the amount that the corporation may borrow to $10 billion, and the amount of insurance to $19 billion.

Let the House consider why those two ceilings are being raised to those two figures. We have not been given the benefit of an up-to-date audited report with respect to CMHC. The last audited report that we have is for 1971. At that time the total amount borrowed from the government to finance CMHC operations was $5.6 billion. The total amount of insurance issued by the corporation was only $9.22 billion. I think it is relevant to note that this House is being asked to agree in principle to a bill, yet no one has shown us the courtesy of making an audited statement available with respect to the corporation with which this bill is concerned. I point out that the auditor's report for the corporation last year is dated February 17, 1972. Yet here we are, more than one year later, considering a bill of tremendous magnitude without an auditor's report. Bear in mind that CMHC is the largest Crown corporation with which parliament is concerned. Here, we are being asked to consider tremendous changes affecting this corporation, and we have not even been given an up-to-date statement.

Mr. Basford: That is why committee hearings are held.

Mr. Stevens: I hope the minister will provide some answers.

Mr. Basford: Well, that is why we hold committee hearings.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may continue, or does the minister wish to make a new speech?

I should like now to touch on the suggestion raised in the bill to the effect that new communities are to be created. To that end, the government proposes to go into land banking. What I did not notice on my first reading of the minister's speech, but what I noticed subsequently and found most interesting, was this: the corporation now wishes to have the right to lease land, in addition to selling land. It was not until the minister spoke in the House that I realized the government's true intent. In introducing the bill he said, as recorded at page 2259 of Hansard for March 15:

> Measures will ensure that the public retains the benefit resulting from subsequent appreciation in value of land acquired for the communities. Hon. members will note that that is provided in the bill by leasing of the public land rather than by its sale which has invariably been the practice under land assembly schemes of the past.

We can see what is intended. The minister really intends to set up "Basford fiefdoms." He anticipates having people pay land rent for an indefinite period to the public treasury. It is not enough that the government has worked out the most devilish taxation process that the world has ever seen in recent times and inflicted it on Canadians; this government now proposes to cut the ground from under our feet. I suggest that this is a deliberate move, and one members of this House ought to look into, especially in committee. Why does the government feel it is necessary to take away the right to own land that people may wish to live on in a new community? Is this being done solely for the reasons stated by the minister? It is unfortunate that people are put into the position of debating the ancient question of leased property as opposed to freehold property.

Touching on the question of new communities, it is interesting to note that the bill anticipates land acquisition for transportation corridors. Yet, nowhere in the bill is there any reference to the transportation problems that face the urban areas of our country and will, presumably, face the new communities that may be created in future. There is no mystery about our transportation problems in urban centres. Everybody knows what ought to be done. Yet, for reasons totally unexplainable, the federal government in the one area where there is clearly no problem over jurisdiction and where it has real jurisdiction has failed to provide urban transit services in our urban centres.

In Toronto, and I refer to my area again, after months and months of studies, the federal government was finally presented with what was called a Toronto commuter rail study. That has been in their hands, certainly in the hands of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), since November of last year. The study comes to various conclusions. It points out that it is quite feasible to utilize the railroads that go in and out of Toronto for urban transit services. It sets out the costs of utilizing those services. It points out, for example, that in terms of capital requirements, to inaugurate new services on the lines running north, northwest and northeast from Toronto, it would cost for limited services, approximately $80 million and, for full services, $130 million. In terms of the estimated daily patronage of the full service, they point out that some 32,000 people would use those services, yet the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) is introducing a bill in this House without tackling the important matter of transportation. It is a subject that is of particular relevance to the federal authorities because it is one that is squarely under their jurisdiction.

I raise this question because sometimes we in Canada forget that we have one of the lowest per capita ratios with respect to land of any nation in the world. This country has tremendous land available, but it has to be serviced, because we must get people to the development. It is lack of foresight that puts us in the uncomfortable position where we find, that in an area such as Toronto, house prices and certainly lot prices are the highest on this continent. It need not be so. The federal government must truly attack this matter with a massive approach. They must go to the municipalities and provinces and indicate in terms of hundreds of millions of dollars the funds they will commit annually for the next 15 to 20 years to help service land then land, as it is serviced and, in particular, lot prices in urban centres would tumble tremendously. That is the most effective thing this federal government can do.

Second, the federal government must accept the responsibility of providing urban commuter services. They must go to the various municipal and provincial governments and offer to at least pay the capital cost of bringing such services into regular activity. That would open up a tremendous amount of land for servicing and development in areas such as Toronto and other urban areas of Canada. It would certainly reduce the degree of lot price increases that have been taking place.

Third, the federal government must get rid of the red tape. It is high time that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation stopped having requirements that they universally expect to be met from sea unto sea. Municipalities have different needs. If CMHC would accept the basic principle of financing, be it on the servicing side or the home ownership side, homes that are acceptable to the local community and stop drawing up their hard and fast rules as to what the house must have in terms of square footage, sewage, water facilities and so on, there would be a tremendous relief in the backlog of demand that now exists in this country.

It is time that CMHC got down to the grassroots, began diversifying and stopped this eternal centralization that seems to be the Ottawa answer to Canada's problems. Surely, when I can show the impact of 12 years, 1961 to 1973, of house prices in urban centres in Canada—

Mr. Stanbury: Ontario.

Mr. Stevens: —there can be no question but that CMHC is not doing the job it should be doing.

Mr. Basford: Twelve years of Conservative government in Ontario.

Mr. Stevens: It is 10 years that your government has been here, Mr. Minister. If the minister, his department and CMHC would simply trust the private sector a little more to produce, we would start getting some results.

I suggest that CMHC is an interesting contrast to the comparable company in the United States. There, the bulk of the financing is from the private sector and the corporation is owned by the private sector. The tendency in Ottawa is to have Crown corporations 100 per cent owned by the federal government and 100 per cent financed by the federal treasury, and that is bad. It should not be allowed to continue indiscriminately and indefinitely as the Trudeau government has allowed. Surely, the nation should expect more than Basford fiefdom's and Trudeau government fiddling with this whole question of housing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, the act to amend the National Housing Act now under consideration is part of the lengthy progress of the Canadian society to carry out a housing policy consistent not only with the needs but also with the aspirations of our people.

A housing policy throws a lot of light on the government which promotes it. Is it a reforming government? Is it a government which is responsive to the various needs of the people? Is it a government which has drawn up its policy based on needs which could vary from an area to the other in that huge country? Is it a government which has secured the support as well as the willingness to act of other levels of government and the private sector, without which only a measure of success could be achieved?

[Mr. Stevens.]

[English]

The government's achievements in the field of housing and urban affairs since 1968 indicate the extent of the efforts made to achieve these objectives: From mid-1968 to the end of 1971, almost 750,000 housing starts were recorded. Forty per cent, or 315,000, were financed under the National Housing Act and 160,000 of these were, in turn, homes built for low income families thereby exceeding the total produced in all previous Canadian history. Nearly $11 billion was invested in housing during this period. Of this amount, $6.6 billion was injected under the NHA and 2.7 billion of that was direct federal funds loaned by CMHC.

Federal-provincial meetings about urban and housing matters were also quite successful. This has to be pointed our, however, since usually, only contentious cases in federal-provincial relations are referred to in his country.

Being aware as well of the gaps of the previous legislation, which failed to meet the ever growing needs of the Canadian society, the government has proposed the new measures which are now before us. The minister responsible for this legislation pointed out that these measures had earned the support of the provinces at the federal-provincial conference in January.

If we analyze the text that was put forward in the House, use can find that the minister proposes ten new measures or programs which will enable people to get a decent dwelling at a reasonable price.

Let us look briefly at these measures. The new communities program is designed to secure urban growth in ways that the unregulated spread of cities. We are all aware of what such growth of their urban centres has cost our American neighbours, and it is important to avoid their mistakes.

What about the land assembly program? Land prices undoubtedly represent one of the most costly features of housing. The government proposes an overall strategy designed to encourage provincial and municipal governments to become more active in getting land in order to meet future housing needs. The federal government is ready to spend some $100 million each year, for the next five years, towards public land assembly, including land for new communities.

Moreover, the government is thinking about the development of an assistance program for homeownership. I wish to speak at some length, Mr. Speaker, about this part of the amendments to the act. I suggest that it is difficult nowadays to state as principle that one should rather be a tenant than an owner. Some people may prefer, for worthwhile reasons, to be tenants rather than owners, or vice versa. The important thing is that our society make this choice a little more real, and insures to a larger number of people a choice in fact rather than in theory in this regard. And the bill which is now before the House represents a big step in that direction.

In his March 15 speech, the minister gave as an example that a wage-earner with two children and an annual income of some $7,500 would be able to purchase a $19,000 house by monthly payments of $137. It means that houses of $14,000 to $15,000 would be accessible to families with incomes lower than those the minister mentioned.

There are also programs for assistance to non-profit organizations, for co-operative housing assistance for neighbourhood improvement for rehabilitation of existing family housing for Indians living in reserves and a research and development program.

• (1640)

[English]

The last feature of these amendments, as outlined by the minister, covered the question of purchaser protection of homes. The amendments proposed will protect purchasers from the insolvency or bankruptcy of the contractor. In such cases, funds for the completion of houses would be advanced to the buyer through the mortgage insurance fund. The minister has stated that he expects to announce a national system of warranties for house buyers "before many months". Recent experience indicates that this is indeed a field parliament must look at closely. While I believe that protection against insolvency and bankruptcy are important I would like to see the federal government make strides to improve purchaser protection in areas which are clearly within its jurisdiction.

I realize that only 40 per cent of housing is financed through the National Housing Act and that housing is also subject to provincial legislation. The fact remains that builders are hungry for CMHC loans and that with its leverage CMHC ought to be in the forefront of exacting high building standards and eliminating shoddy workmanship which so often entails high maintenance costs and, at its worst, turns a dream house into a house of financial horror for the purchaser.

I recently read a booklet put out by CMHC called "What you should know about the inspection of your House". According to the booklet, and I quote:

> The inspection routines are designed to make sure that the complete house will be adequate security for the NHA mortgage loan. They are not intended to police builders or to provide comprehensive supervision of construction.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this kind of statement is not in keeping with the spirit of the legislation presently before this House. What we are interested in providing is decent housing at a reasonable cost. That is the prime objective, and if we reach that objective, NHA loans will be adequately protected. It is sufficient to say that the homeowner who has agreed to meet payments on a mortgage over a number of years, must be confident that a CMHC-inspected house means much more than that CMHC has looked after itself.

The question of purchaser protection can only be solved through interaction of provincial and federal governments. I am delighted that the minister proposes to pursue this matter with speed. But let me say that while additional legal safeguards for the purchaser will be most welcome, we all know the burden which legal action to enfore rights of this nature may place on low and middle income families. Strict enforcement through inspection by the appropriate authorities which would permit the identification of defects at an early stage would be a more satisfactory way of attacking this problem.

Which is to say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's initiative in taking the first steps to protect the purchaser is a most laudable one.

It is easy to see how far our concept of a housing policy has evolved since 1968. Not so long ago, the role of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was that of a banker. It was thought then that the way to solve Canada's housing problem was to build up a stock of available housing, rather haphazardly and without reference to specific needs. In the light of the changes that have taken place since 1968, it is hardly surprising that our total stock of new houses at reasonable prices for low income families is far bigger than similar stocks in the past. The initiatives that the minister has announced show how much progress the present government has made in this field.

A housing policy must offer stability, so that private enterprise, whose job is to build quality housing, can work in close collaboration with the three levels of government, whose job is to ensure that the new buildings go up in a healthy environment where Canadian families will be able to live the sort of life they want.

A housing policy must also have flexibility, if it is to adapt to our society's evolution. The measures that have been applied by the government since 1968 show that it has succeeded in combining these two essential elements of a sound housing policy.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in rising to add my comments to the debate this afternoon. I shall again draw from my experience in the municipal field as I relate the act governing national housing, as well as the proposed amendments and the requirements of the National Building Code, to the needs of those in the care of municipal governments. In particular, I intend to refer to those areas which are sometimes deprived of special attention due to their geographic location. I am thinking of areas and municipalities, relatively small in size, located in the central and northern regions of our land.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker—and this may shock the hon. minister—I wish to say that even though the proposed amendments do not go nearly far enough to meet the needs and demands of Canada's population, they are most certainly a step in the right direction. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the minister and his department. They have certainly recognized the need, and they have certainly been very imaginative in designing policies to fill that need.

However, there remain two areas of grave concern to me. Again, it is because of my involvement in municipal politics that I have learned to recognize certain shortcomings—the result of being frustrated so often in attempting to implement the national policies, such as they are. My first concern, then, is that we have not invented a workable solution to communicating to people in need of such programs and services the criteria for applying and qualifying.

I am particularly concerned with some of the programs designed for people of moderate means, and programs geared to people with no income of their own, people who are living on social assistance, old age pensioners and the physically handicapped. If it is ever our intention to find a solution to Canada's social crisis and to the problem of our poor, we must first of all find ways by which those people can provide for themselves a proper and comfortable home environment. So, I look to the minister of housing and urban affairs to take the first step. I make him responsible, in the first instance, for finding a solution to this problem which is crippling our nation—a situation where more than one-third of our people are living in huts or shacks, or at least in substandard conditions. Almost all of their other problems would solve themselves once a family who has lived on social assistance for two or three generations experiences the pleasure and satisfaction that comes with modern living. This is particularly true of the problems faced by children and young people who are being moved to a new environment.

Again I wish to say that the minister has in some areas taken this first step, but because of a breakdown in communications the services provided by his department do not find implementation. Now, why would that be, Mr. Speaker? At first glance it would seem that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the National Housing Act are just other government services wherein all ink is used to print red tape and the bureaucrats' first concern is self-perpetuation. However, this is only partly true in the department of housing and urban affairs. This department has actually gone a long way to decentralize its services by making sure that its regional offices are made available to serve the need. It is, however, not enough just to maintain regional offices, because if we examine the work these offices are doing, we find that almost all effort is directed toward accommodating the construction industry, not people who are in need of housing.

I wonder whether or not as a result of this the cost of the average home has gone up by 100 per cent in the last 10 years. Price is usually the last thing the contractor discusses with his client. The builder makes all the financial arrangements with the corporation and charges whatever the traffic will bear, and as a result the corporation serves the demand of the greedy instead of the needy.

My solution to this problem is that the corporation must first of all find ways to convey to the people I referred to earlier what services are available, and must establish facilities and services that would help people in filling out and filing their application. Furthermore, it should become the department's responsibility to motivate people to improve their position by actually telling them in plain and simple language, and showing them with pictures if necessary, the benefits of better living.

We all know, of course, that those benefits would bring with them a vast improvement in areas where we face the dilemma of only 3 per cent of the type of people I have referred to earlier achieving full utilization of our school system. We would find a vast improvement in health care and in the infant mortality rate, since people would have a chance to practice better body hygiene in their homes. The benefits I am referring to would have a profound effect on the character building of our young people, who would not have to be ashamed any more of their social background. They would be given at best an equal chance because they would be experiencing, for the first time, pride of ownership and the satisfaction of personal achievement.

I realize that it would be physically impossible for the minister and his staff to fill this role without creating yet another bureaucratic monster which would eat up all the benefits, but I know from experience that there is a way by which we could achieve what I have talked about. To illustrate this, I wish to elaborate and explain to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, what I mean. As mayor of a small municipality in northern British Columbia, I set out to find a solution to the problems that were facing not only the native but also the poor white people in and within the fringe area of our town. That was also the dilemma facing the municipality that people living in unbelievable substandard conditions not only identified with our town and used all the services and social amenities, our schools and hospitals, but did not contribute anything to help us pay for these services. I organized a social improvement committee and set out to build some homes for these people on land which the provincial government had made available for the purpose.

In order to achieve maximum benefits—the minister knows the project I am talking about; he has contributed immensely to it—it was decided that the people for whom the homes were to be built should be involved during the planning and construction stages and that they should end up owning the homes. We took a survey of services and loans available from the two senior governments and found that there were actually sufficient services available not only to put all the applicants into new homes but to assist the town financially by broadening its tax base and by increasing the per capita contribution by the province. But the greatest benefits gained by this experiment, as it was called by CMHC, was not the dollar value, of course, but the fact that for some participating families the chain that kept them on welfare for three generations will be broken.

The project is only two years old and already we know that most of the children will not follow in their parents' footsteps. Teachers are telling me that there is already a profound change in their attitude towards school. The doctors are telling me that there is already a marked difference in these families health care, and some of the young men and women are making contributions to service clubs and community services so essential to the way of life in the north. We must consider that almost all of the participants in this project were on welfare, and most of them had a deplorable social background. We must further consider that the only special service employed was a direct liaison between senior officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the people themselves, through the municipal council.

We asked the question why so many Canadians do not avail themselves of a proper home, a question I have asked many times. I asked that same question about a year ago while speaking to the annual conference of the Native Council of Canada in Ottawa. I asked why I was honoured to come to Ottawa to talk about what I thought was just a practical solution to a complex problem. Why was I honoured to represent the municipal view in this very critical question? I asked what was going on in other areas of Canada, and the answer, of course, Mr. Speaker, was that nothing was happening. Or, at least, let me say not enough was happening.

I do not wish to imply that innovations are necessary in the National Housing Act. We must examine the possibility that no innovations are necessary. We must—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps I should now call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Social security—Suggested financial assistance to low income families to provide proper nutrition—Provision of guaranteed minimum income; the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse)—Penitentiaries—Failure of John Charron to return to Collins Bay following release on one day pass—Reconsideration of parole policy; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Penitentiaries—William Head—Possible conversion to medium security institution—Request for consultation.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, following the usual consultations I think there would be unanimous agreement to proceed directly to private members' notice of motion No. 15, standing in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the house proceed to the consideration of notice of motion No. 15, standing in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT REGARDING CONTRIBUTIONS BY FARMERS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Pension Plan Act so as to allow farmers the option to make Canada Pension Plan contributions regardless of their net income.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon of speaking on a motion I submitted to the House on January 12. The motion reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canada Pension Plan Act so as to allow farmers the option to make Canada Pension Plan contributions regardless of their net income.

The subject matter of this motion is of vital concern not only to the farmers of western Canada but to farmers throughout the whole country, and anyone who is involved in the preparation of farmers' income tax returns, particularly in western Canada, will tell you that it is almost an annual point of discussion when taking instructions for the preparation of their income tax returns. Farmers' incomes are subject to many variables. They are at the complete mercy of mother nature, drought, hail, frost and floods can minimize or eliminate farm production in any given year. On the other hand, mother nature can be kind, with production unbelievably high.

A farmer's income depends on the international market, and in years of plenty in other grain producing countries he finds the price of his product very low, whereas if other grain producing countries have experienced reduction in production the farmer finds the price of his product very high. Whether he receives the high price for his product, of course, is dependent on the policy of the government or the wheat board in entering into contracts, either short or long-term, with importing countries throughout the world. The result is that a farmer does not know from year to year what his income will be, and he has many years with no net income and other years in which his net income is very high.

For many years under the Income Tax Act there has been a provision allowing a farmer to average his income over a five-year period. I would suggest that this is a very sound policy, one which has the effect of modifying the tax inequity which exists where there is a wide fluctuation in income. I do not know how many members are familiar with the method employed in determining the average income, but I should like to give a brief explanation. The averaging period consists of the year of averaging and the four immediately preceding years for which the farmer has filed income tax returns on time. The averaging period cannot include a year that was included in a previous averaging period and, if the farmer did not file his return on time for a particular year, or if he was not involved actively in farming or fishing in one of the years of averaging, he can use five of the six years, including the years of averaging to determine his average net income.

Having determined the five years which can be used for the averaging of income, the result is divided by five. By deducting the personal exemptions for the year, the result becomes the average taxable income, and the tax for each year is determined by using the tables for each of the particular years. Quite often, with the wide variation in income, you find a situation in which a farmer has for three or four years had no net income, and for one or two years has had a very high net income. The result is, of course, that he pays no tax in the no net income years, and there is no Canadian Pension Plan contribution made at that time. In the year or years when the farmer has a taxable income, usually that income has been very high and he pays tax at a high rate. Of course, he pays Canada Pension Plan contributions at the maximum rate in those years.

By the process of averaging, it quite frequently turns out that the taxpayer is taxable in each of the five years and, on the averaging form, the tax for each of the five years is based on the rates in existence for that particular taxation year. This results in a refund of tax. However, there is no provision under the regulations or the act whereby the taxpayer is allowed to make a Canada Pension contribution for the three or four years in which he was not initially taxable, but in which, under the averaging provision, he becomes taxable. As a consequence, many farmers over the years have been making Canada Pension contributions in maximum amounts in those years when they were taxable and no contributions in the years when they had no taxable income, despite the fact that their average annual income would require them to make contributions. This has had a drastic effect on the amount of Canada Pension Plan for which the farmer will be eligible on retirement.

The Canada Pension Plan was adopted in the 1964-65 session of parliament, and my understanding is that the purpose of the act was and is to provide an actuarially sound plan for citizens of Canada. Most employees in Canada who are working today for wages and salaries have been making regular contributions over the years to this plan and will, on retirement, be eligible for the maximum, or near maximum, benefit under the plan. In addition, the large majority of employees on salaries and wages participate in private pension plans contributed to by both the employee and the employer. This will give them a monthly pension on retirement in addition to the Canada Pension Plan benefits.

It might be argued that a farmer is entitled to provide for his old age by contributing to a registered retirement savings plan on his own, and that he is entitled to deduct the amount of the contributions, within limits, from his income in order to determine the amount of tax payable. I would suggest, however, that the farmer is in a very unusual situation in that, in those years when he has no net income he does not have the necessary cash to take advantage of the registered retirement pension plan scheme and, therefore, his contributions are of an erratic nature. This does not permit him to provide a stabilized retirement plan. It should be pointed out as well that a farmer, as well as other self-employed persons, contributes double to the Canada Pension Plan what a person on wages or salary contributes, because as the plan exists at the present time an employee pays one-half of the necessary contributions while his employer pays the other half.

There are two means of solving the problem; one would be for a farmer who averages his income to make contributions to the Canada Pension Plan based on his average net income for each year. This would be a retroactive payment and could be adjusted by charging, in addition to the amount calculated, interest for the period from the time when he should have made the contribution to the date of making same at the rates that the plan investments are earning during the period. The result, however, of basing the contribution on the average net income would mean that a farmer would not necessarily be able to make the maximum contribution.

The more reasonable, and I would suggest acceptable method, would be to allow a farmer, regardless of his net income, to elect to pay at his discretion, any portion of or the maximum amount allowed under the act as a contribution in any year. The effect of this would be that the farmer would be able on retirement, to receive Canada Pension Plan benefits at the maximum rate. If as has been stated in previous debates, the Canada Pension Plan is actuarially sound, then I would submit that the farmer is not being subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer, but in effect is on his own, participating in a pension plan which will enable him to live in dignity upon retirement.

Mr. Speaker, we have been moving over the years towards a welfare state, and this has caused me a great deal of anxiety and concern. Our great country was built on the concept of free enterprise and hard work. The right of an individual through ambition and initiative to provide not only for his old age but to make provision for his wife and family is a basic right. Once this initiative and ambition is destroyed—and I am suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is what is happening—we will end up in a situation where there will be a slowing down of our economy, for if the state is to take care of a person from the cradle to the grave, and if there is a penalty for initiative and hard work, we will destroy the very thing upon which our great country was built. I am not suggesting that welfare schemes are not necessary; they are necessary, but only for the aged and for the physically handicapped and as a temporary measure for those who are unable to find employment. It is the responsibility of government to develop policies and institute programs which will enable all able-bodied persons to be gainfully employed, to encourage our citizens and to teach them that the work ethic is important.

The farmer of Canada does not want something for nothing. He wants to be able to take care of himself and his family on his own initiative. By allowing a farmer to elect to make contributions to the Canada Pension Plan regardless of his net income—and this applies, I would suggest, equally to all other self-employed persons, although I have not included them in my motion—he is making a contribution to an actuarially sound plan and providing a pension of his own which will assist him in his twilight years, which should be years of comfort, satisfaction and enjoyment. Mr. Speaker, I would ask this House to give full support to my motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise on the motion cf the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). This motion is not new since several official representations have been made in the past to the government in this connection by agricultural associations. The Canada Pension Plan advisory board has examined a proposition of this nature at the time of its semi-annual meeting, at the beginning of October 1972, and will study it again when it will meet in April or May 1973. Moreover, some people have approached the government about the possibility of voluntary payments, an aspect which the government studied in depth. It will also be noted that Bill C-115 introduced on January 12, 1973 seeks to amend the Canada Pension Plan so as to permit housewives to make voluntary contributions.

As for fair treatment of farmers and other workers I would be glad to see the farmers meet this new challenge to its maximum.

Although the motion is partly worded "so as to allow farmers the option to make Canada Pension Plan contributions regardless of their net income" it is directly connected to two further basic questions: the right of people to contribute voluntarily to the Canada Pension Plan and the right of those people to determine their average earnings for the purpose of calculating their annual earnings which are the basis of the contributions to the Canada Pension Plan.

I deliberately use the word "people" in this context because it would be unfair if some provisions of the plan covered only farmers and excluded self-employed people or people whose only earnings are wages or salaries.

Il farmers are allowed to pay voluntary contributions for years during which they earn no income, why should the same right not be granted to restaurant owners and other businessmen? If this right is granted to farmers and other self-employed people, what about salaried people who are unemployed all year round and get no earnings? If these groups are given the right to pay voluntary contributions, what about the housewife who left the work force for many years to devote her whole time to the very important task of raising children?

In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, if any group is given the right to pay voluntary contributions, this right should certainly be granted to all Canadians. The same considerations apply to the principle of averaging earnings in computing contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. Many self-employed and salaried people earned income that varied as much over the years as farm incomes. If we allowed farmers to establish their average earnings for the purpose of the Canada Pension Plan, we should honestly entitle all Canadians to do the same.

Having examined those concepts of basic justice, we can now consider the two basic principles deriving from that motion: the right to pay voluntary contributions to the Canada Pension Plan and the right to establish the average earnings for the purpose of that Plan. However, before dealing with the principle concerning voluntary contributions, it would be suitable I believe to summarize the purpose of the Canada Pension Plan and the relationship between that plan and other plans designed to ensure retired people income security. The Canada Pension Plan's first object is to provide all Canadians with retirement benefits and survivor's benefits related to earnings. The plan is especially designed so that Canadians who are unable to benefit from private plans may, during their working years, pay their contributions in order to get a retirement pension based on their earnings during those working years.

The plan's basic principle is that benefits and contributions should be based on annual earnings up to a certain yearly maximum.

As regards the link between the plan and other income security programs, let us not forget that the Canada Pension Plan is but one of the numerous retirement income security plans and should be considered as such. The universal old age pension plan provides for a basic income to all Canadians over 65. The guaranteed income supplement also provides an income for people over 65 who were unable to contribute to a retirement fund, either because of inadequate earnings during their working years or because there was no private pension plan to which they could contribute. The Canada Assistance Plan provides for additional assistance to people whose needs are such that old age pension and guaranteed income supplement are inadequate. It should be noted that benefits paid under these three programs are not related to the income earned by an individual during his working life. The Canada Pension Plan is one of the components of the overall retired persons income security program particularly designed to ensure pension benefits based on the income earned by an individual during his working life.

Since the Canada Pension Plan has been explicitly designed to be related to gains and considering the role it plays in the overall system of retired persons income security, allowing payment of voluntary contributions would constitute a considerable deviation, not only from the fundmental principle of the Canada Pension Plan but also from the general program of income security for older people.

As for voluntary contributions, it is important to understand that the Canada Pension Plan is not an "entirely financed" retirement savings plan. The precise formula used for determining the pensions is somewhat complicated but essentially pensions are linked to maximum income giving a right to a pension at the time of retirement by the average ratio between an individual's annual earnings and his maximum annual income giving a right to a pension. In general the projected value of the life pension under the Canada Pension Plan for an individual at the time of retirement exceeds the value of his contributions plus the compound interest. In fact, the present labour force continually subsidizes the pensions of former members of the labour force who are retired. The amount of these subsidies depends essentially on the time during which a retired person was part of the labour force and on the amount of his earnings up to the annual maximum. To allow voluntary contributions would mean authorizing people who never belonged to the labour force or did so for a short time during their active life to receive, on reaching 65 years, a pension subsidized by those who are working today. For instance, the older person whose support during life was an income derived from an inherited fortune could pay contributions and receive at 65 a pension subsidized by those who work. In other words, those who have enough revenues to pay voluntary contributions would benefit from the subsidy, whereas those with a very low income and unable to pay such contributions would not benefit from that subsidy. This would be contrary to all recognized standards of justice and to the intention of the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Speaker, let us note that the arguments put forward against the averaging principle are weak. If it is not allowed at the present time, it is above all for administrative reasons.

As I said before, the possiblility of allowing gains averaging for the purpose of the Canada Pension Plan has always been and is still being looked into by the government. However, it would be fairer to grant all Canadians having earned an income the right to averaging; that right can be only granted to an individual group.

We have just reviewed the Income Tax Act in order to allow all Canadian taxpayers to apply some kind of averaging of income for income tax purposes. Should the Canada Pension Plan be amended to allow some kind of averaging, the same right should also be granted to all Canadians with earnings eligible for pension purposes.

Mr. Speaker, some people have thoroughly examined the Canada Pension Plan, especially the question of averaging. Although a certain form of averaging would seem possible it could not be implemented today without multiplying the red tape and costs of the plan. In addition, after a thorough examination it is not evident that such a provision would benefit people, including farmers, on low or medium incomes.

Farmers, for example, are already averaging their incomes in their books of earnings. The level of benefits is based for all contributors on 85 per cent of the highest earnings received during the years during which they paid contributions. Allowing a new averaging of earnings for pension purposes would be equivalent to averaging an average, which could have adverse effects on pensions which will be paid out to many contributors on low or medium incomes.

In fact, the provision concerning averaging would be likely to benefit only those who receive a relatively high and fluctuating income. For example, it would allow people who stay in the labour force for a limited number of years and receive very high earnings during those years to pay contributions for those years during which they are not working. Not only would averaging benefit the rich but it would violate the principle under which pensions are related to annual earnings up to a certain ceiling.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, contributions to the Canada Pension Plan are calculated on wages and salaries or business income under the Income Tax Act.

Under the Income Tax Act a farmer can average his income for tax purposes. If he does, his total average income is calculated, not only from the annual gains and losses of his farm, but also any wage or salary he has earned, the profits and losses of any other enterprises of his as well as income from rent and investments. The whole legislative context would have to be changed and special regulations made for the purposes of the Canada Pension Plan to establish what part of the average income, for each year of the period from which the average was calculated, was income for which contributions were payable under the plan, since the gains record for the calculation of benefits is based on gains in respect of which contributions are paid.

Neither this nor the many other administrative considerations mean that the government has rejected the idea of calculating averages. The matter will be looked into again within the next two years, during the second stage of revisions to the Canada Pension Plan. If detailed study should show some form of calculating averages to be both fair and administratively feasible, then of course the government would do all in its power, after consultation with the provinces, to amend the act accordingly and give farmers the possibility of paying contributions.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member entertain a question?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the hon. parliamentary secretary agree to answer a question?

Mr. Corriveau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): The hon. member mentioned subsidization. Could he advise me whether the Canada Pension Plan is actuarially sound?

[Translation]

Mr. Corriveau: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, referring to the answer given to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), I assume there is more money in that plan than they would ever get around to using, according to the last reports I saw. I will not pursue that matter with the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that the motion of my hon. friend is of some significance, I wish to deal with it though my professional instincts give me an answer contrary to the one given by the parliamentary secretary. There is considerable merit in the motion, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary secretary mentioned a conference to be held in April, 1973, when this particular matter and others relative to the Canada Pension Plan will be discussed. I think the House should support the motion and pass it on to that conference.

I receive many letters from producers relating to the instability of their income and their problems in trying to contribute to this plan and use it as a retirement plan. Those of us who represent prairie areas often say that the only thing a producer has for his retirement is the investment in his land. The options are extremely restrictive in terms of other means of contributing toward his retirement.

The bill to establish the Canada Pension Plan was passed in 1965 and came into force on January 1, 1966. Since then, in the years, 1966, 1967 and 1968 western producers were in a position to contribute to the plan, but in the years 1969, 1970 and 1971 many who would normally have contributed while they were still working would have been cut off because they would not have had sufficient net income to necessitate filing a tax return. The parliamentary secretary pointed out the problem common to many groups who wish to contribute to the plan voluntarily whether or not they have sufficient income. The hon. member for Moose Jaw suggested a method by which the producer may be able to get around this problem by averaging his net income between the years 1965 and 1972.

If there is difficulty not only for the producer who wishes to contribute voluntarily to the Canada Pension Plan but for other groups such as housewives, there may be a need to consider revising it entirely to enable such people to participate. The Royal Commission on the Status of Women recommended that the housewife should be allowed to contribute. We know that the farm housewife is often actively engaged in the labour of the farm. I hope that the departments concerned, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Agriculture, can come up with a plan so that farmers and housewives—just taking these two examples—can contribute voluntarily to the Canada Pension Plan in order to obtain its benefits in their retirement years.

I was somewhat disturbed by the fears expressed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw concerning the onslaught of a welfare state. This program was established to protect producers and others in their retirement years. I do not consider it welfare; I consider it part of the type of scheme available to a person in a welfare state. The hon. member's motion would make the plan available to the producers of western Canada. However, somewhere between his philosophy and the motion, his logic has gone astray when he deals with the free enterprise system and all that goes with it.

If we are to go back to the free enterprise system we should abolish the Canada Pension Plan, the medicare plan such as we have in Saskatchewan, hospitalization, some equalization payments, unemployment insurance, etc., and go back to the dog eat dog attitude of Tory conservatism. I support the motion but I point out my concern regarding the very weak defence of the free enterprise system which no longer exists.

I am sure other hon. members wish to speak to the motion, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that before six o'clock the government will allow it to come to a vote and pass. The subject could then be brought before the conference in April which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) mentioned, where it could be discussed along with other changes to the Canada Pension Plan as they relate to housewives and other groups and the possibility that they could take part in the plan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the hon. parliamentary secretary wish to ask a question?

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, could I answer the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) because a moment ago I did not understand his question? I do not insist on answering his question but I would like to tell him, with reference to the question he asked, that some studies may have been done in this field but I did not examine them. That is what I wanted to tell the hon. member a moment ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I think the hon. parliamentary secretary gave the answer he could have given had he had the unanimous consent. Now I think we will listen to the next speaker, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[English]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in my view, motion No. 15 proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) is important and touches upon a subject of great concern not only to farmers but to many groups in our society, those working in small businesses, the self-employed, and so on. As the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) so ably pointed out, the principle underlying the motion before the House is one that would have to be carried through to cover all these other people if we intend equity to prevail.

Speaking as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is to some degree involved in the question even though the Canada Pension Plan comes more under the responsibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) than under the responsibility of my minister. Let me say that our department has certain responsibilities as they affect health and welfare and is concerned about this particular problem. The matter is being taken under active consideration.

May I point out to hon. members that this question cannot be resolved by the House alone. The Canada Pension Plan was entered into by agreement with the provinces and cannot be adjusted unless there is agreement by two-thirds of the provinces representing two-thirds of the population of Canada. That means that if there is to be a change along lines suggested by the hon. member—and apparently this kind of suggestion has come forward on previous occasions and has affected the involvement in the plan—of various groups in our society it would be necessary for agreement to be reached with the provinces.

As hon. members may recall, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has indicated in this House on previous occasions that a federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers is to take place in Ottawa in April, and at that time the provincial ministers and federal Minister of National Health and Welfare will look at the entire problem of social security in Canada with the intention of relating these programs one to another in such a way that we shall obtain in an organized way maximum benefits for Canadians.

The provinces have been asked to come forward with model proposals for consideration by the federal government, and the federal government has indicated that it will come forward with model proposals on the matter of social security for consideration by the provinces. I understand that the whole question of the Canada Pension Plan will be discussed at that federal-provincial conference. If agreement is reached by all levels of government, then I believe and hope that some action will be forthcoming.

I should like to touch on one or two points which have been raised with respect to this question. They relate to assistance given by the federal government, sometimes independently and at other times in concert with the provinces. There is a whole series of programs involving not only the aged but also other Canadians. I should like to talk about this for a moment.

One cannot consider the Canada Pension Plan in isolation; it is not the only piece of legislation that affects the elderly in Canada. As we know, the government's proposal for a universal pension of $100 per month is at the report stage and will soon be brought forward for third reading. In addition, there is the guaranteed income supplement. When you combine these two programs you will see that there is a minimum guaranteed income of $170 a month for single persons aged 65 and over, and $325 a month for married couples. That does not take into consideration the Canada Pension Plan. Those amounts are by no means small. The figure may be somewhat less than our elderly would like; it may be less than they deserve in view of their contribution to the well-being of Canada through the work they have done during their lives, but it is none the less significant and the benefit is valuable. Also, as far as I can ascertain from statistics, our benefits cannot be matched by those of any other country in the western world.

In our over-all review we will take into consideration not only the Canada Pension Plan, the old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement but the family allowance program or the FISP proposal that was brought forward in the last parliament under which we would pay allowances for children. As well, we shall consider youth allowances and welfare, which is administered by the municipalities but to which the federal government contributes 50 per cent, disability pensions, the Canada Assistance Plan and, as I mentioned before, the Canada Pension Plan. If we are to come up with a comprehensive program all these matters must be looked into and rationalized to make sure that every segment of our society is properly treated.

One comment in the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw alarmed me. He suggested that no one in Canada should be on welfare except the aged, the temporarily unemployed and the handicapped. I do not want to put words into the hon. member's mouth, but that is how I understood his remarks and I think Hansard will substantiate the correctness of my interpretation. In my view, that is an oversimplication and does not cover many areas of serious concern inasmuch as the government must provide assistance to those in need.

Let me give a significant example that was not mentioned by the hon. member. Unmarried mothers need assistance from public revenues. Also, one could give the examples of widows and orphans. You could go on and on speaking about areas in which the government must enter the field in order to give assistance. We have given assistance in these fields in the past and will continue to do so despite anything the hon. member may have said about welfare programs. I think it is true that no one really wants to see a welfare state, in the sense that there may be abuses of welfare programs. Perhaps welfare is really not the right word to use. Nevertheless, it is clear that the government must accept its social responsibilities and for the common good intervene to help those in need. Regardless of the category the people concerned may fall into, this must be done.

Also, there are other programs which simply redistribute wealth. These are required so that wealth does not become overly centralized in the hands of a few. Anyone who looks at the question rationally will realize that this is really what income tax is all about. The government takes money in and redistributes it sometimes in a way that is better than that in which the money would have been distributed originally. The result is that larger numbers of citizens benefit from the over-all increase in the gross national product and in the wealth of the nation.

In conclusion, may I say that my department, as well as all departments of government, is concerned about the anomalies which have been created within social program structures. One of those anomalies affects the person who is self-employed, such as the farmer. Problems of averaging, and so on, must be considered. It is sometimes easy to state a problem but it is not so easy to find an equitable solution. The government is concerned about this problem and will be bringing it before the federal-provincial conference in April. I hope that the deliberations of that body will result in a better kind of program which will involve the whole social structure in Canada, so that we will minimize red tape and maximize benefits as well as cut down the excessive costs that might be involved in some of these programs which are often duplicates of others. This will require much co-operation and good will, not only on the part of members of this House but also by the provinces which must act in co-operation and in concert with the federal government.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) who proposed this motion is to be commended for bringing it before us. However, I would take issue with the narrow way in which he has framed the problem. Its implications are far broader than he suggested. What he is really dealing with is not just a program involving farmers whose incomes fluctuate; he is also suggesting that people in other trades and occupations whose incomes fluctuate should come under the ambit of a motion such as this.

In addition, the matter is of concern to me inasmuch as it touches on the question brought forward by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) which deals with the possibility of women who are not in the labour force also participating in the Canada Pension Plan. In addition, another group experiences difficulty with respect to the Canada Pension Plan, our native Indians. Under the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan legislation it is not possible for an Indian earning income on a reserve to pay into the Canada Pension Plan. If an Indian earns income other than on a reservation, he is permitted to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan from that income.

At the present time there is a distinction in the Income tax Act as to the way in which the income of an Indian is treated depending upon where it is earned. As collections for the Canada Pension Plan are basically administratively controlled by the Department of National Revenue, it was determined at the time of passage of the Canada

Pension Plan that Indians would remain outside the ambit of the plan for the purpose of benefit in respect of income earned on a reserve. This was not a conscious decision taken by the government alone; there were consultations with the various Indian organizations. It was determined that since the moneys were to be collected by the Department of National Revenue, the Indians paid no tax on income earned on an Indian reserve and therefore had no direct contact with the department on that matter; and since the Indians had come to no definite conclusion at that time, the decision was taken to eliminate from payment into the Canada Pension Plan fund contributions based on income earned on Indian reserves.

That situation is now in a phase of flux; the Indians are now beginning to re-examine their payments into various funds of this nature. I have received from band administrators in my constituency requests as to the possibility of having the act amended or the regulations changed to permit Indians in some cases, where they determine to make such contributions, to pay into the Canada Pension Plan fund the same as anybody else; that is, on income earned on a reserve. This problem is a glaring anomaly in the way in which the system has evolved over the past few years.

The matter specifically raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw has been dealt with somewhat extensively in the proceedings of the advisory board which, as members know, deals with both the federal and provincial governments. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) said that he thought there was in the fund a considerable amount of money now, without there having to be any increase in the amount payable by those who now pay into it. In point of fact, the Canada Pension Plan as passed by the House of Commons is distinct from the plan that was originally proposed to the House of Commons by the government. The consequence is that the plan we now have is largely designed to finance the ongoing activities of the provincial governments and to provide a pension plan for those who have paid into it.

The Canada Pension Plan as currently set up by legislation is based upon those who are now in the labour force providing a portion of that pension regardless of the amount which people have paid into it in the past. In essence, the current labour force is perpetually subsidizing the pension of members of the labour force who are now retired and collecting pensions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Only because the provinces and municipalities want cheap money.

Mr. Reid: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says it is only because the provinces and municipalities want cheap money. I think that is a very legitimate point. However, I remind the hon. member that during the debate when the Canada Pension Plan was being set up the government made tremendous change to the original plan in order to accomplish this very end. It is an integral part of the Canada Pension Plan to provide the provinces with this kind of cheap money.

Since that principle was accepted by the House of Commons at that time and it was a minority House of Commons—we ended up with the situation where the Canada Pension Plan at the present time is not self-funding. It is basically used to do two things—I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that in some respects they are mutually exclusive—that is, to provide a source of funds to the municipalities and the provinces as well as to pay pensions to those who have paid into the plan. In order to make it work, a portion of the moneys which people in the work force pay into the Canada Pension Plan subsidizes the pensions of those who are retired and are now collecting benefits.

The amount of this subsidy depends, essentially, upon the degree of labour force attachment that a pensioner had during his working life and upon his level of contribution up to the yearly maximum. This principle is embedded in the pension plan. However, over the past few years there have been a number of projections as to when the Canada Pension Plan will run into difficulty because of the way in which the funds are administered by the provinces and the commitment of the fund to provide pensions for persons now in the labour force. The expectation is that some time in the 1980s the amount of money paid into the fund by those in the labour force will be insufficient to meet the obligations which the fund will have contracted.

With regard to the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, providing for increases to permit people to average their incomes has been discussed by the advisory committee, particularly during its last meeting from September 29 to October 1, 1972. The matter was extensively discussed at that time. I have before me the minutes of that meeting. It goes into some detail, with pros and cons in respect of the matter.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT, REHABILITATION, OWNERSHIP, NEW COMMUNITIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-133, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before five o'clock I was encouraging the minister by telling him about the projects and services which he and his department had innovated which were adequate to solve the problems of many Canadians today in the field of housing. I told him of a wonderful experience to which he and I contributed in developing a project leading to the rehabilitation of a great many people, thanks to our success in placing them in proper homes. I do not wish to imply that innovations to the National Housing Act are unnecessary. We must examine the possibility of lower interest rates or of loans without interest in particular cases. Such policies would repay our investment in human resources one hundred times over.

What I am saying is that the minister and his department must find a way to enter into direct partnership with municipal officials and regional governments. They must decentralize to a greater extent and become more flexible so as to meet local needs which are so different as one travels from one area of our land to another. I do not find the solution to this challenge in the amendments now before us. Nor do the amendments make it easier for people living outside organized municipalities, on farms or small country holdings, and motivate such people to improve their position.

There is another area of concern to me. It is that because of antiquated regulations imposed by the national building code no significant changes or innovations have been made in conventional construction methods, particularly in the private home sector. I know personally of a number of projects carried out by companies which have concerned themselves with this task and have invented new methods of constructing private homes or family dwellings making use of new materials. While I am not proposing that CMHC find ways in which to finance the construction of igloos in the Arctic, I suggest that in some areas which are particularly remote or where climatic conditions are especially severe, we depart from conventional plans to allow the utilization of materials which may be more readily available than others, and that we relax the somewhat stringent regulations presently governing loans. This would allow people living in substandard housing to improve their situation in a simpler, perhaps, but yet more practical way than is presently possible. The amendments provide for funds being made available to carry out research and experimentation. This, one might think, would constitute a partial solution to the present unwillingness to depart from conventional housing methods. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the very fact that these funds are to be provided reminds us that existing programs such as ARDA and or PAIT have failed to produce the desired effect.

How can the minister be sure that this time Canadian industry, firms in the private sector, will take advantage of the new situation? Can he assure them of access to the fund? problem may be unchanged. The minister and his staff will continue to experience frustration because it will be impossible for them to communicate with the very people who could really propose meaningful innovations. They might, after all, live in Flin Flon, or Taylor, B.C., or Fort Nelson, 500 miles from the nearest CMHC office; and the officer who visits them from the office in Prince George is likely to be an inspector who is already three weeks late and two weeks behind time in his schedule of visits to other places. He has no authority to examine new ideas which someone might wish to incorporate in the building of his house, and no interest in facilitating an application for a loan.

I wonder whether this is not the real reason why 85 per cent of our population is living in concrete jungles instead of participating in a life style almost unique, now, in Canada. It would be interesting to examine what our neighbours to the west are doing; how they are developing their northland and what incentives are provided for people who share in the excitement of a developing frontier. In Canada, there are no incentives for people living up north. There are only penalties.

Particularly in the field of housing one must pay a severe penalty for a pioneer since programs are designed to solve the problems of urban centres and cannot be applied to rural situations. In addition, of course, there are special needs and requirements in the north, and conventional construction methods leave much to be desired. The answer is simple. The minister already knows the answer because he has made it his business to talk to municipal leaders and exchange ideas with them. We had an opportunity today to talk to mayors and reeves from all across Canada. They certainly expressed the ideas which are contained in my speech today, though the speech was written long before I met the mayors. Surely someone must have expressed to the minister the frustrations that we in the municipal field have suffered in trying to implement services, such as they are.

The answer is the establishment of a direct link or partnership between the corporation and the municipal council. Every municipal or regional council in Canada must make housing its top priority. The size of the municipality does not matter. Even though the problems are different, the priority nevertheless exists. Every council in Canada has a housing committee, and every council in Canada would be prepared to establish a housing authority under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, may I say at no cost to CMHC. This housing authority would deal with local problems, implement the act to serve local needs, engage pre-existing services to complement the services established by CMHC, such as the homeowners assistance plan, the community development program, land assembly, public housing, and so on. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we would be involving local people in order to solve local problems and meet the needs in the areas I have described. This is the only way we could do this. People just do not have the time to discover how to slice through all the red tape, particularly if they have two bureaucratic monsters to deal with.

Why, then, are we not implementing what is truly a national housing act? Certainly it is not one now. Provincial governments have found ways and means to keep civil servants busy inventing all kinds of stupid changes in regulations. A perfect example of this is now being demonstrated in British Columbia, where a provincial administration has misinterpreted the word "socialism" to the point where their legislation is in conflict with the Canadian Bill of Rights. They are planning a freeze on all land development in the province because they know best how it should be developed. Would the minister ever find his way through that mess in trying to implement a community development program, a land bank or land assembly program?

If, Mr. Speaker, we are seriously concerned to implement what is truly a national housing act, it will only be possible to do so by involving people in front of the firing line, municipal governments and, if need be, even service organizations—those for whom the act was designed in the first place. I know all the great arguments that are made about the rights of provincial governments to deal with municipalities and about how they are in conflict with the law that prevails throughout the land. But we must accept a challenge to change the laws if they are not consonant with what we are trying to do. I suggest we could do away with cumbersome regional administration and set up an administration that instead of dealing with contractors would deal with all people through their elected representatives.

I must admit, however, Mr. Speaker, that there are two hitches in my plan which would have to be overcome. Firstly, we would have to make the act even more flexible so it could be implemented to meet an even greater variety of regional and local needs. Secondly, the minister will be challenged to find four times the amount of money that his budget now calls for. If he is to implement his housing policies, the money allotted to him through the budget will not be nearly enough.

It almost seems to me that this is the real reason the act is so cumbersome and the mountains of red tape are so high. If we are to find a practical solution to Canada's housing crisis, the minister's budget is going to look like the estimates for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. This is why I believe we are not really serious about having a national housing act. With all the other luxuries to which we are accustomed, we simply cannot afford to have all Canadians living in decent homes.

I suggest this is also a reason why the government has not removed the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. We do not have the guts to face the challenge that this would present. Meanwhile, social and human costs remain staggering. Yet another generation of people will walk in the footsteps of their parents, having been born in the gutter or under a stump, wasting their lives by being a burden to our society before dying in the same place.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I share with my colleague the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) the view that the housing crisis facing many Canadians today, both as individuals and as members of families, is due to many years of accumulated neglect. This crisis is based on the fact that financial aid has been available through legislation to assist in providing housing for those who need it the least—the upper 10 per cent or perhaps, at best, the upper 25 per cent of the income brackets in Canada.

Canadian housing performance as it affects average and low-income Canadians has lagged behind that of many other industrial countries throughout the world during years of both Liberal and Conservative administrations. I appreciate and would underline the point made by my colleagues the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) that the success of the various programs included in Bill C-133 will depend upon the government making adequate funds available to finance these various programs, the passage of adequate regulations filling in the details of the act, which, as so often, are vague, and lastly upon vigorous administration.

Nevertheless, I want to speak primarily about two aspects of this bill which I welcome and commend, a bill which I will not only support on second reading but, subject to suitable amendments, will seek to get enacted into law as soon as possible. I refer to the provisions relating to the rehabilitation of existing housing as distinct from the building of new housing. Both the rehabilitation of existing housing and the building of new houses are important, but the former has been neglected for a long time, as is well documented in the so-called Dennis report. I notice that in its submission to the government today, the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, representing as it does many municipalities across Canada, said that very little money has been made available for the purchase, rehabilitation or repair of existing housing, or for the extension of services to raw land.

Secondly, I wish to refer to the provisions for assisting the financing of co-operative housing, which I welcome. As far as the rehabilitation of existing housing is concerned, perhaps I may be permitted to say that ever since I was elected to this House this has been a cause I have had very much at heart and have urged in the House from time to time, partly because it is common sense to preserve an existing stock of housing and to spend, say, $3,000 or $4,000 on preserving an existing unit adequately serviced rather than spend $15,000 to $20,000 building a new house in an area where you must also provide additional services. Another reason I have always supported the financing of the rehabilitation of existing housing is that it fits in with the needs of those in my own constituency, which I shall discuss more fully later.

My constituency is a built-up residential area. It has many attractions and very good existing services. It is not an area fit for the bulldozer or for residential programs such as have been conceived in the past. However, the moderate and low-income people who live in the area need assistance in financing the maintenance and development as well as the renewal of their present housing.

Public funds available for grants and loans for the rehabilitation and improvement of housing are a most necessary addition to any improvement program. If we are to achieve the goal of access to decent housing for all Canadians which the minister and all of us proclaim, we cannot leave existing poor housing—and it is estimated there are at least one million houses which can be defined in this way—until this housing has become intolerable and must be totally replaced at very great expense. I join with the metro Toronto housing task force which recently made a submission to the minister in expressing my pleasure that the federal contribution is not contingent upon a matching provincial contribution, as was the case in the previous legislation introduced in this House. This is a highly desirable aspect.

I presume this change was made as a result of consultation with the provinces and other bodies concerned with housing. However, I agree with the task force of metro Toronto that the level of funding will be insufficient for the purpose which must be accomplished. I urge an early review and evaluation of the effectiveness of the program. Along with the task force, I suggest that the amount of a loan for rehabilitation which can be made should be increased from $2,000 to $4,000 for low-income families.

I also commend to the minister the view of the task force that to achieve residential rehabilitation, traditional contracting arrangements are inappropriate. I join in their recommendations that funding be provided for the development of neighbourhood work groups which can work on a salaried basis. I also strongly urge upon the minister the recommendation that landlords benefiting from the grants and loans program be subject to rent restraint agreements for a stated minimum period of time.

I hope that the neighbourhood improvement program will be applicable in certain situations where the property is beyond designated areas. It has been suggested that the very fact of the designation tends to cast a blot on the area so designated. I also call to the minister's attention the recommendation in the task force report that there be provision for grants and loans for conversion of larger residences for multiple use. Conversions frequently represent the most economical use of larger buildings; therefore, this is an oversight in the legislation which should be remedied.

I would also call attention to the brief of the Co-operative Housing Foundation of Ottawa, and the Ontario Habitat Foundation with its headquarters in Toronto to which the minister has already referred. I must in fairness repeat what the minister has said, that the experienced authors of that submission believe the bill to be an enormous advance over the present National Housing Act provisions so far as they affect co-operatives. I agree with that. Nevertheless, let me remind the minister that the brief proposes further amendments and I support the amendments they propose.

Dealing with rehabilitation, the brief says that the rehabilitation program will be of significant assistance in many Canadian municipalities. It goes on to urge that two shortcomings should be overcome. The first is that the program should be extended to include rehabilitation which provides housing for single persons. Secondly, the program should provide explicitly, as I have mentioned already, for the conversion of larger houses to a number of smaller dwelling units. I hope the minister will introduce amendments to this effect.

I now turn to the question of co-operative housing. As the co-operative housing brief puts it, the co-operative process would do more than simply provide housing. It would, as well, strengthen the participatory fabric of our urban centres. The legislation, subject to certain amendments and improvements, would put co-operatives and many other non-profit organizations into a position where they could provide significant amounts of housing to Canadian families and individuals. To put the matter in the language of the metro task force submission to which I have already referred, an important new direction in housing policy in the present legislation is the encouragement of non-profit and co-operative housing associations. This thrust should be welcomed because the non-profit sector can make a significant contribution to easing the housing situation for many individuals and families.

Co-operative housing provides a form of participation and management that has been proven to be most productive in motivating people to plan for and paarticipate in programs and services. The wording of the act must be carefully reviewed to ensure that non-profit co-operatives or par value co-operatives will be eligible for non-profit funding. Those who have followed housing policies in other countries will know the enormous contribution made to housing and indeed to the whole social fabric by co-operative housing. It is high time Canada sought to catch up with other developed and civilized countries in this field. The housing co-operatives must, therefore, expand and multiply and the legislation should be clear that it includes so-called par value continuing housing co-operatives.

As stated in the Ontario Habitat Foundation brief, par value co-operatives are an extremely important vehicle for meeting the housing needs of a broad spectrum of low and moderate-income families and individuals. This housing stock provides the only housing accommodation for families which is not operated for private profit or whose cost is not built up by successive changes in occupancy. Over the long term this could have a significant impact upon Canadian housing. The provisions of the present act provide that a non-profit corporation must be constituted exclusively for charitable purposes. I say to the minister that, surely, as a lawyer he knows the extreme difficulties in respect of what are charitable purposes. I suggest that provision should be changed in order to ensure that all non-profit co-operatives are included in the definition.

Mr. Basford: I made that clear in my speech.

Mr. Brewin: Then I missed it. I am glad to hear this. We welcome, as do others interested in this field, the provision of start-up grants to enable non-profit organizations to undertake preliminary development work on a project. Many groups which have not had access to such funds are being severely handicapped. There should be express provision in the legislation for the subsidization of residents of non-profit and co-operative housing. This, of course, would expand the area in which co-operatives could serve the housing needs of the people of Canada.

I would now like to refer to a housing development in my own constituency which can benefit from the proposed legislation and which illustrates the value of individual and co-operative enterprise. I do not wish to sound as if I were speaking in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, but what I am saying is relevant to this subject. My constituency of Greenwood corresponds roughly to ward 9 in the city of Toronto. It is a residential area with beautiful, tree-lined streets providing a fine setting for a variety of homes. There is a real diversity of incomes, rentals, age groups and family size.

The people in my constituency have shown an initiative in developing local organizations to meet their needs. They have formed an organization called ForWard 9 Citizens' Association. They publish a ward 9 community news sheet. They established a waterfront task force which produced a people's guide to the waterfront. The set up a housing task force comprised of architects, businessmen, university professors and contractors from the area which evolved into the ForWard 9 Community Development Co-operative. During the summer of 1971 Opportunities for Youth funding was made available to ForWard 9. Nine students carried out research for the task forces which had been established in the spring.

The housing task force indicated trends which could seriously alter the economic and social character of the entire area. I am mentioning this because I am sure there are many other constituencies in exactly the same situation. It is estimated that some 50 per cent of the families in ward 9, or in Greenwood earn between $6,000 and $9,000 a year. The cost of housing has been below the average. In the last year pressure to redevelop has been felt. The most noticeable trend is the rapid rise in rents over the last five years. Houses have changed hands at higher and higher prices and the rents which must be charged to the tenants have been raised.

I would point out that the tenants are the people who suffer when speculators drive up the price of land. Increasing numbers of houses are owned by absentee landlords. The number of owner-occupied housing units is decreasing. The upward rent spiral is evident in all parts of the area. Indeed, rents are increasing one and a half to two times as fast as those in the rest of the city. Contacts have been made with people whose rents have jumped as much as $60 over the past two years. When it is recalled that many of these people are old age pensioners, we see that sometimes the increases in pensions approved by the House have turned out to be a mockery as the left hand of the landlord grasps what has been granted by the right hand of increased pensions.

The ForWard 9 Community Development Co-operative has been incorporated in an attempt to counteract these trends which I have described. The co-operative plans to purchase and renovate existing houses in the area which would then be let to ward residents on a non-profit basis. The co-ops are controlled by the people living in the co-op owned houses. Rents will be stabilized and security of tenure ensured. Increases in rent would be made only when there is an increase in taxes or an increase in operating expenses.

The project was designed to provide housing for families with incomes falling within the $6,000 to $10,000 range. This economic group is caught in the middle. They are too affluent for public housing, yet their earnings are insufficient for them to be able to purchase a house. The families whose incomes were above $10,000 would not be excluded, but they would be charged an additional monthly charge to be used to subsidize families with incomes of less than $6,000 and who would otherwise not meet CMHC requirements for the minimum increase.

Already in November, 1972, a mortgage commitment for $1.5 million was obtained from CMHC. The loan was granted under section 15 of the NHA on ForWard 9 Community Development Co-operative providing between 80 and 100 housing units. This will involve the purchase of some 40 to 50 houses and their rehabilitation. As in all cases, they will be dealing with multiple unit dwellings either existing or through conversion. The CMHC loan covers only 95 per cent of the total cost to be amortized over a period of 50 years. The remaining 5 per cent equity is being raised from local churches, individuals and other organizations. This emphasizes the importance of an amendment to provide that loans available for such projects be up to 100 per cent. The lack of 5 per cent equity could cause a serious and unnecessary slowdown in the progress of this project and other projects, despite the fact that they have strong community support.

I have recited this story of ForWard 9 in my own constituency so as to stimulate, I hope, the interest of other hon. members in similar developments in their communities. Such developments are in my view essential to the healthy maintenance of strong residential communities in the urban and built up areas of this country. In so far as the present legislation recognizes this need—suitable amendments could recognize it in an even more clear and satisfactory manner—I welcome the legislation and, as I have said before, will support it on second reading in the hope that in committee further improvements to the legislation will be introduced and accepted.

I hope that as soon as possible the legislation will be passed, that it will be vigorously administered and that the worthy purposes proposed in the legislation and mentioned by the minister will be executed with directness and vigour.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in this debate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) gave us in his own inimitable style a wide-ranging speech which was pretty strong on rhetoric but not very strong on substance. The substantive issues raised by the hon. member, as far as I could discern, were that there should be a national development policy which would enable all Canadians to become home owners or build up an equity position to become home owners.

The bill does enunciate a clear national objective, which is to provide the conditions by which all Canadians will have access to decent accommodation whatever their income. To this end the bill, through its assisted home ownership program, will enable low and moderate-income Canadians to acquire home ownership with federal support. The bill also provides for 100 per cent loans and 10 per cent grants to be made available to non-profit corporations for the purpose of providing low-rental housing projects to meet the needs of the lower income groups.

The assistance provided in the bill for the rehabilitation of existing houses will also enable more of the lower income groups to assume home ownership and rehabilitate these houses in neighbourhood improvement program areas. Thus, the bill does not purport to make available only home ownership assistance to the exclusion of other forms of assistance for low-rental housing. I can, therefore, categorically assure the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) that these new programs of housing assistance are in addition to the public housing program and are not intended to replace that program.

These programs, as the minister said, are intended to widen the choices of housing available to the lower income groups, and I share the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby that it would be a tragedy if the public housing program was discontinued. That is not to say that there are not some imperfections in this program. There are, and these are being corrected, with emphasis being placed on lower density and scattered developments to prevent ghetto situations arising of the kind to which the hon. member for Calgary North referred. The emphasis given to the rent supplement program announced recently by the minister is another forward step to improve the living conditions of Canadians and will do much to prevent the isolation of the lower income groups and the attendant difficulties which so often arise on that account.

The hon. member for Calgary North drew attention to the high cost of housing, particularly in Toronto. This is certainly a situation that none of us can accept as being satisfactory. It is true in Toronto especially, but it is true also in many other urban centres. The hon. member mentioned that only 4 per cent of metro Toronto residents could afford housing and he quoted from the UDI brief to substantiate this. In fact, the UDI brief states that while in 1961 approximately 28 per cent of all income earners in the Toronto area could be said to have been able to buy a new, detached house, in 1971 only 11 per cent fell into that category, using the NHA average price statistic, or 4 per cent using a more realistic average.

These figures are based entirely on new housing costs and the perception of UDI officials of what is the average new house cost. I might mention that in Toronto, in 1971, the average cost of new, single family NHA houses was $30,939, which required an annual income of $12,700. On the other hand, the average cost of existing single family NHA houses there was $22,489, with new condominium apartments costing an average of $20,267. To support these costs required an annual income of $9,630 and $9,100, respectively. The latest figures available from Statistics Canada are for 1969 and show that 50 per cent of all families in Toronto earned over $10,000 and, therefore, qualified for a single family NHA existing dwelling or a new NHA condominium apartment. About 30 per cent of all Toronto families earned over $13,000 and, therefore, could qualify for a new single family NHA financed dwelling. I do not want to minimize the difficulties faced by the lower income groups in regard to home ownership, particularly in the urban areas. Toronto is the highest cost urban centre and I mention these figures to show that half the families there are in a position to assume home ownership in one form or another.

As the minister said, the bill is designed to meet the housing needs of the other income groups who would otherwise not be able to compete for housing on the open market. I think most members of this House would agree that the cost of land in Toronto is scandalous. There is no question about that. I have heard of some serviced land as far as 30 miles from the centre of Toronto where a lot costs $22,000. In Montreal, a similar type of lot would sell for perhaps $4,000 or $5,000. The difference in the price of these lots is perhaps to a small degree the difference in the cost of the services, but most of the difference is purely speculative profit.

[Mr. Watson.]

It is interesting to assess the blame for all this and I should like to put on the record tonight how we got into the business of land assembly. In my view, the only long-range solution to high land prices that makes any sense are the steps announced by the minister in this bill concerning land assembly and the new communities concept. The minister has gone beyond that in his speeches in this House. He has said that he intends to use Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as an instrument of social policy. If you combine what we have here in this bill with the expressed intention of the minister, then you have the makings of a policy with the potential to force land prices down.

In 1950 a law was passed in this parliament which allowed for land assembly with the provinces and the federal government in partnership. Since that time the federal government has been willing to pay 75 per cent of the cost of land assembly programs in partnership with the provinces. As a matter of fact, in 1954 land was so acquired in Toronto and the Malvern development resulted from that assembly. It would be interesting to speculate what the price of Toronto area land would be today had the province taken advantage of the provisions available since 1950.

In 1958 or 1959 a further carrot was held out to the provinces to enable them to get into land assembly programs when the federal government made provision for assistance for trunk sewers as part of the sewage disposal plant and trunk sewer program. However, this did not prove very successful in encouraging the municipalities to get into land assembly, although that was one of the raisons d'être for the program. In 1964 further amendments to section 42 of the act were passed which permitted the provinces to borrow up to 90 per cent of the cost of the land to be acquired for land assembly purposes. This lending apparatus was first used by the provinces in 1966 or 1967. It finally got under way in 1970 when in all the provinces of Canada a total of $15 million was spent on the acquisition of 2,500 acres of land. It is regrettable and tragic that many of our urban areas did not take advantage of these provisions in the law. Of course, there is blame on all levels including the federal level and all previous governments must take the blame.

I believe that the attitude toward CMHC and the National Housing Act is a reflection of our constitutional problem. For too long we tended to assume, since it was their basic domain, that the provinces should take the initiative. We left the field open to them, but they did not take action and we have ended up in the present situation. I wish now to turn to another issue raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. He made the point that the funds allocated for the new communities and land assembly program were insufficient, since out of the $100 million earmarked for these programs $93 million would be required for the Pickering development alone, which left only $7 million to meet the rest of the country's land needs. I must admit that I am somewhat at a loss to understand what the official opposition party's position is in this respect. On the one hand, the hon. member for Calgary North takes the position that the $100 million a year that we propose be set aside for land banking over the next five years is insufficient, yet on the other hand the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) takes the following position as stated in an article in the Globe and Mail of May 31, 1972:

A federal Progressive Conservative government would make a priority of a revolving fund of $100 million which could be used on a regional basis to set up residential land banking agencies according to opposition leader Robert Stanfield.

These remarks were made to the delegates of the Urban Development Institute at their annual meeting. This apparent ambivalence on the part of the official opposition party, where their leader takes the position that a total of $100 million will be the panacea to the land problem, is at variance with the hon. member for Calgary North who maintains that $100 million a year over the next five years is insufficient.

The funding allocation of $500 million over the next five years is a lot more than has ever been used in the past in the context of comprehensive provincial and local development plans which are directed explicitly to the principle of serviced land at reasonable cost. In the past, the provinces have used the funds allocated for this purpose in the capital budget of CMHC. The $100 million per annum is to be supported by a larger flow of funds for the extension of sewage trunk lines and sewage treatment plants, so that the federal commitment in regard to the development of land amounts to over $1 billion for the next five years.

If this is not enough, hon. members may be assured that the minister will come back here and ask for more. In view of the experience of the last few years, in which not a single province or number of provinces asked for nearly as much money as we are making available, that $100 million is certainly more than adequate, to start with anyway. It is not so much the money, however, that is important as the intent and determination to spend the money in the context of a type of development policy that until now we have not had in this country. We cannot simply buy our way out of difficulties that beset the land development process. We have, rather, to see it as an essential requirement of public policy to look to the orderly and harmonious growth of our cities and to develop strategies and programs at all three levels of government as a matter of continuous consultation and co-operation.

With respect to Pickering, the hon. member for Calgary North was correct when talking of the cost to the federal government, in acquiring these 25,000 acres, as being in the order of $94 million. However, what he fails to appreciate is that this development will take place over a three-year period starting in 1972. In fact, provision has already been made in the 1972 capital budget of CMHC for an initial allocation of $40 million toward the federal share of the cost of this project. This leaves a balance of some $54 million to be funded in 1973 and 1974 for this purpose which will be met out of the land assembly fund allocation to Ontario in these years. This, then, leaves a substantial balance, in the order of $73 million, for each of the next two years to meet needs elsewhere.

Another point that the hon. member for Calgary North raised was that the recommendations made by the Hellyer task force had not been acted upon and that this report was gathering dust. I am not sure where the hon. member was in 1969, but he may recall the amendments to the National Housing Act in that year which incorporated nearly all the recommendations made by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) subsequent to his resignation from cabinet.

Mr. Woolliams: Why did he resign?

Mr. Watson: Thus, in the 1969 amendments legislative effect was given to such recommendations as freeing the interest rate for NHA loans, permitting five-year, roll-over mortgages, increasing loan ratios, extending amortization terms, reducing insurance fees, making loans for land assembly purposes, streamlining procedures by removing the necessity for order in council approval under a number of programs, and so forth. Other recommendations, particularly those governing public housing, did not require legislative amendment and were implemented as a result of policy changes. The discontinuance of the urban renewal program also largely resulted from these recommendations. Thus, nearly all the recommendations in one form or another were implemented by the federal government. However, we must admit that many of those recommendations fell under the jurisdiction of other levels of government and in most cases those recommendations have not been acted upon.

The other issue raised by the hon. member is that there should be municipal representation in the tri-level consultative process. This is the whole purpose of the consultative process, namely, to provide a forum whereby the three levels of government can sit down as equal partners and review urban problems which are a cause of common concern. A meaningful beginning has been made in this direction, as evidenced by the consultations held last fall, and this is to be followed up with further sessions taking place later this year. Negotiations are going forward with a view to the setting up of these meetings later this year. It was the expressed intention of the minister, as soon as he was appointed to his portfolio, to act with respect to these tri-level meetings and to increase the number of times that they could be held each year.

The hon. member for Calgary North suggested that CMHC, being a Crown corporation, is not accountable to the minister and should therefore be made a department so that the minister could control its operations. I point out to the hon. member that the enabling legislation for CMHC, namely, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, does provide in section 5(5) that the corporation shall comply with any directive from time to time given to it by the governor in council or the minister respecting the exercise or performance of its powers, duties and functions.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question. I am well aware of the section to which he referred. Is it not possible that the president of CMHC or other members of the organization could say, "We will not carry out this order in council. We will not abide by it"? Would it not be better if the corporation were like any other government department? In the carrying out of government policy, it would be responsible to the minister. He would have greater control over it and there would be more liaison between that department and the minister. Would that not be better, instead of permitting it to exist as an independent agency like the CBC or Air Canada?

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I urge the member to read again section 5(5), even though he says he has read it. Unfortunately, judging by past action or inaction, ministers over the years who have been responsible for CMHC apparently did not read that section, either. There was a laissez-faire, hands-off approach to the administration of CMHC. That is not the case with the present minister. I do not think that will be the case with future ministers occupying his position. As this minister has announced, he considers that organization to be an instrument of social policy. Section 5(5) gives the minister clear powers to intervene and to direct the actions of CMHC.

In respect of the budgetary allocations to support these new programs which have been announced, it is axiomatic that the programs will not be fully effective if, indeed, they are curtailed. I should like to endorse the minister's position that this is a matter to which the committee should address itself in reviewing this legislation, and I am confident that in so doing members will assure that adequate funding is provided for this purpose.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to deal with one aspect of the bill which will be, I hope, of special interest to the province of Quebec. I mean the provision for making loans available for rehabilitation, since the province of Quebec now has a restoration program in Montreal which has been extended to the whole province. Under the provincial program, only 25 per cent of the cost is given the owner for basic restoration work; he is expected to contribute the other 75 per cent out of his own pocket. The maximum amount provided for by this program is $8,000 and the minimum $1,000. The maximum provincial-municipal contribution is thus $2,000. Because of the relatively high contribution required of the owner, and because low income individuals are involved—they usually live in housing of inferior quality—and also for other reasons, the present program does not deal with the income of the occupants, nor with the resale value.

• (2100)

In order to reconcile differences between the Quebec program and the federal program planned, consultations at the official level took place between the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation and Quebec authorities for the purpose of developing a viable federal program which could be integrated in the provincial program according to needs. Following these consultations, the CHMC indicated its willingness to support the creation of a program calling for contribution of homeowners involved and offering federal assistance in the form of grants. It would be understood that federal participation would bring the total available grant assistance up to 40 per cent of renovation costs, or a maximum of $3,200, made available to the owner as a grant from the three levels of government.

Furthermore, it was understood that because of legislation concerning rent control in the province of Quebec no problem would arise in connection with assistance given to homeowners without definite rent control requirements under the federal program. Most residents of urban centres would therefore be protected.

With regard to the federal government's concern in connection with owner-occupants, namely that aid should be proportional to income and that there might be no profit on the resale of an improved unit, it was agreed, subject to further consultation to settle the form of these regulations, that an income ceiling would be set for a trial period, for eligibility for federal grants. It was also agreed that a promissory note would be required to ensure that the grant can be earned over a given period, to prevent quick resale profits.

Upon termination of the trial period, the two governments would carry out a further study to assess the program's efficacity, taking account of provincial needs. That is how the two programs will be co-ordinated in Quebec, so as to guarantee maximum impact in dealing with these needs.

[English]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, my feeling is that this is the most effective—I should not say effective because we have not yet seen it in action, but the most significant housing legislation that has been introduced into parliament since the 1954 National Housing Act. It provides us with an opportunity to improve the living conditions of all Canadians. It will enable them to exercise their legitimate right to decent accommodation in a stimulating environment. We still have a way to go, Mr. Speaker, but this is a strong step in the right direction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, since the field of housing is one of the most important in this country, I have much pleasure in speaking briefly on the second reading of Bill C-133, entitled "An Act to amend the National Housing Act".

This is a bill that reveals good intentions, and we should be very happy to see it. However, my limited experience of the implementation of the former act leads me to reserve judgment. Some of our many laws are good, in my opinion, because they are easy to implement, but we also have some that are not so good.

Besides, there are other acts whose administration can become a problem. Mr. Speaker, in that category I would place, for instance, the Canada Elections Act; in fact, one could imagine that what can be done, what can be controlled by the Chief Electoral Officer has nothing to do with what can be decided upon and what can be built following the personal endeavours of some organizers.

At any rate, this is more or less what happens as concerns the previous National Housing Act. On several occasions, I referred to the minister representations made by some of my constituents declaring themselves unsatisfied with the house they had bought through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and which had been built, supervised and financed by that same corporation.

I am still receiving letters from various constituencies in the province of Quebec, and among these, I should like to quote one that was sent from Vanier City on January 28, 1973:

The problems are the following: cracked foundation, which causes water damages in our basement; broken ceiling due to water leakage inside the rooms, and in one particular room, eight containers were needed to collect the water. Therefore, the ceilings have to be done over; the floor is loose; outside, broken perma-glaze; the walls are half insulated, and so one and so on.

This is the case of a young couple who bought a house. Having no child, the wife feels free to work outside. A storm occurs and there is nobody at home. It rains all day long and, in the evening, they find damages quite hard to evaluate. Some things can be repaired; there are others that can be dried, whereas, for others still, they had to call the insurer and claim damages. The insurance company refused to pay and the law supports it, because the damages to the property of these newlyweds and their furniture are simply due to faulty construction of the house.

This apartment is in a six-unit building which has of course a flat roof. Now, it was discovered that the drainage of the roof was set up at the highest point of the roof and this is an inexplicable defect.

But the most ridiculous thing of the entire matter is that it is absolutely necessary to catch the water seeping through the roof in tubs or pails, because if it falls in the basement it cannot run off. Indeed there is a screen on the floor of the basement but the water cannot go through, unless of course the drain, if any, is plugged.

So the owner asks to see the plans and specifications used to build that house to know where to make a hole and check the pipes, if any. However, it is impossible to see the plans since apparently the builder of such a house is not compelled under the legislation to produce them.

In this letter which I received, another paragraph read as follows:

We have been contacting the CMHC since June 1971, to no avail. It seems that the contractor, who is from Vanier City, is bankrupt. We have had no results with him either.

Mr. Speaker, this is a case from Vanier City. In my collection, I have a letter from Notre-Dame-des-Laurentides. The owner paid $1,150 for his lot. He signed a $14,000 contract for the building of a 25′ by 37′ house. That contract provided the following: landscaping, hot water heating system, oil water-heater, exterior and interior painting, screens, exterior door for the basement, that is an exit in the basement.

So the man takes possession of his house without any landscaping and no screens. He finds that he has to make a monthly payment to Imperial Oil which owns the water heater.

What he finds most amazing, Mr. Speaker, is that though he has paid $200 for the basement door, there is none. So he calls for an expert who tests all basement walls in order to find a spot which would sound hollow. To no avail, everything sounds solid. There is no door, visible or hidden. And when he took possession of his house, he had to pay additional costs for the double water mains needed to feed the heating system, he was told.

As this is a bungalow there is but one heating system which requires one pipe only. So the owner discussed the situation with a heating engineer who told him that in order to permit circulation a feeding pipe and a retaining pipe are needed.

An hon. Member: Ridiculous!

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, according to invoices, such things are accepted by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

At the present time Americans are concerned about the financial return of a pipeline for the shipment of oil from Alaska. So, I avail myself of this opportunity to suggest to the minister concerned to send to the United States a representative from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Probably this official could find a way of carrying oil from the North down to California, and using the same pipe to deliver molasses to the Eskimos. I am convinced that this system would be profitable!

Mr. Speaker, during the negotiations between the contractor, the Corporation and the purchaser, the notary had asked for $125 in cash, in order to get him the 3 per cent rebate paid by the province of Quebec.

We know that this form is available from the CMHC, Caisses populaires and banks. It may be filled up by a clerk within 10 or 15 minutes. However, to do this work, the notary had asked for $125. Unhappily, the new owner was not eligible to the rebate since his annual earnings were $100 more than the maximum amount allowed under the act. Then, this is another $125 lost!

Mr. Speaker, except for all I have just referred to, the owner is satisfied. Apparently, his house is quite comfortable. It is well located, the surroundings are fantastic in that area and his neighbours are very pleasant people.

He kept in touch with the CMHC for one year in order to get advice and guidance in his claims.

Considering the fact that he had to do himself the outside paint work, that he had not obtained the screens, that he had to do the landscaping himself and that he had not found the door yet, he met with officials of the CMHC to tell them that he was willing to pay at least for what he had received.

As the bargaining was not successful, after another year, he really got depressed. In the first place, he had to pay $200 to have a lawyer handle his problem but, unhappily, this lawyer died. After that, he managed to get his file and gave it to another lawyer who took up the matter seriously.

However, Mr. Speaker, the door has not been found yet. But it has been discovered that the contractor once went bankrupt and is now in business under a new name; his wife has been elected president of the company while he, being insolvent, became the treasurer manager.

Mr. Speaker, what are the criteria used by the CMHC to deal with contractors?

The building of the house just referred to took place three years ago. But the most ridiculous thing is that this small company is still doing business with the CMHC. The case is definitely filed and the owner just paid $1,750 for legal fees plus $1,300 for things he never received.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give another distressing example. It is the case of a house built in 1963, pretty well built at a high cost, but which had shortcomings because during winter months, water kept running down a wall and freezing in the cupboards.

The buyer had the wall examined by an expert who said that apparently the builders had failed to insulate the wall. And because they had to pull down one side of the wall to lay the insulation, the owner negotiated with his contractor for three years and a half without obtaining any result.

And as he loses his rights after five years he made haste to take legal action. During that time the owner had to change lawyers twice. The verdict has not yet been brought in and it is obvious that that house which was built 10 years ago does not have very strong walls.

Mr. Speaker, those who are dissatisfied with CMHC come by the dozen. Some bite their fingers—they would bite their forehead if they could—and there are even some who feel like phoning one another. Among those who admitted their mistake and regret having bought a house, some even admitted it publicly.

As a matter of fact, about one customer of Central Morgage and Housing Corporation, one can read in the newspaper Le Soleil of March 16, 1973, and I quote:

Mr. X was found in "contempt of Court" for refusing to remove a sign in front of his house saying: "Be more careful than we were before buying—

This is a customer of Central Morgage and Housing Corporation and the article is signed by Jean-Claude Rivard and Michel Truchon. They met the condemned man before he went to jail, and he stated, and I quote:

The jail house is certainly going to be more comfortable than my house—

Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that such things should happen. CHMC should take its responsibilities, advise and help families with which it deals.

I am convinced that there are still honest people in the employ of CMHC but so many things have happened in recent years that one cannot help wonder. How many are there and who are those at Central Morgage and Housing Corporation who refuse to provide regular services?

Therefore, I feel it is my duty to second the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) who is proposing that representatives of unsatisfied owners who dealt with the CMHC be called upon to appear before the appropriate committee. I think the time has come for these people to be heard.

In my opinion, if small investigations have been negative up to now, it is merely because they have not been made at the proper level. If the committee were in a position to meet unsatisfied owners, I am sure the truth would be known and that the necessary recommendations would be made.

I think there are enough honest people in our country so that a more equitable policy can be established for Canadian families looking forward to have their own house. A desire to own a parcel of land and a house is a natural thing which deserves fulfilment.

I suggest that a measure such as Bill C-133 can help Canadian workers get a good house provided the legislation is applied literally and the regulations are really humane.

[Mr. Godin.]

The government sends delegates throughout the world for the purpose of promoting peace. I think this is great, but I think that if we first do at home all that is needed so that our people can get a house without having to worry, this will be the beginning of responsible action. If we are sincere when we talk about peace, let us first act in such a way as to avoid everything that could give rise to revolt at home.

[English]

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I join this debate to determine the direction of Canada's national housing policy. As a city-dweller, representing many thousands of people in the middle of Toronto who have been unable to obtain adequate accommodation at reasonable prices or who have had to fight for the preservation of their neighbourhoods against the incursion of unwanted high-rise development, I welcome the opportunity to examine why the federal government has allowed this sorry situation to occur and what the legislation before us might do to help alleviate the problems.

Let me say at the outset that my comments will be directed primarily to the residential rehabilitation and neighbourhood improvement aspects of this bill, and that I welcome these new programs. I was happy to hear the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) express like sentiments a few minutes ago. At long last the federal government appears to have overcome at least some of its bias against providing assistance for existing rather than new housing. For years this government has followed a policy decidedly favouring new construction. Rehabilitation funds have been virtually non-existent, and in our large cities this has tended to encourage the tearing down of older family housing and its replacement with non-family high-rises. With this has come the destruction of the very soul of many fine residential neighbourhoods throughout Canada.

Why did this happen? First, one might trace the blame all the way back to the highly centralized and irresponsible assumptions upon which the federal government proceeded historically in the making of national housing policy. The first assumption was that housing could be used as an economic lever to adjust the economy in periods of high unemployment and declining growth. There was no attempt to view housing as an important social policy in its own right. The construction of new housing was seen as a more flexible economic tool than the fixing up of old housing.

Second, the federal government tended to follow the bulldozer approach to urban renewal, emphasizing demolition in the city core and replacement with gleaming high rises of steel, glass and concrete surrounded by parking lots and unused green space. Until at least the mid-sixties this is what the federal government thought the people in the cities really wanted. Besides, it was easier and meant that the government really did not have to consult the people.

Third, there was the assumption that all aspects of housing policy, including the exact mix of the various programs, should be determined only in Ottawa. The provincial governments were seen as incompetent to determine their own program priorities or to responsibly allocate public moneys to the various agencies or corporations who would actually provide the housing.

There was an even greater unwillingness to see the municipalities determine housing policies at the local level. Instead, we had the highly bureaucratized Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Ottawa attempting through the approval process to control every aspect of housing right down to the quality of individual projects. This was paternalism run rampant, with a highly centralized machine purporting to cover the needs of an entire country with a single set of standards and regulations. What this led to was a general insensitivity to the fact that the different regions of Canada required different housing policies. Programs for new housing may indeed have been desirable in certain parts of Canada, but there are other parts of this country where a more appropriate mix would have been in order in view of the relatively large inventory of existing housing stock which was slowly deteriorating.

For a number of years there were home improvement loans under section 28 of the National Housing Act. However, this provision was not for direct loans by the corporation but merely the guaranteeing of loans made by a bank or an approved instalment credit agency. If the bank or credit agency said no, then the home owner was out of luck. Had the federal government been interested in conserving and upgrading existing housing stock, it would have been a simple matter for the minister to introduce legislation which would transfer section 28 to part I of the act so that direct loans could have been granted. But this government sat on its hands.

Indeed, this lack of federal action has been accentuated by a drastic reduction in activity under section 28 providing for home improvement loans. In the period 1955 to 1959, approximately 31,000 home improvement loans were granted per year. In the last three years the number of loans has gone down from 10,000 in 1970 to 9,000 in 1971, and in 1972 the number of home improvement loans for the whole of the country was down to 7,000. There has been no federal concern regarding this decline and no attempt has been made to investigate its causes.

I would submit that this failure to pay sufficient attention to rehabilitation of existing housing in the large cities of Canada can be traced back to excessive centralization of policy-making and administration. The government has failed effectively to involve the provinces and the municipalities in the determination of the program mix. Indeed, when some provinces in January requested block funding on a three or five-year basis in order to give them the sort of flexibility required to pursue, together with the municipalities, innovative programs in core areas, Ottawa said no. Similarly, when some of the provinces demanded flexibility in order that they might take into account their particular urban or rural needs, Ottawa still resisted. The old rigidity is to continue. This government is denying to the provinces and the municipalities the opportunity to set their own priorities. You either do it Ottawa's way or not at all. I would suggest that as long as the federal government persists in dominating the program mix to the extent that they have in the past, we will continue to have situations in Canada where programs lag behind public need. The top-down approach is inflexible, inhuman and out of date.

Now, no one doubts that the central government in Ottawa has an obligation to determine the dimension of housing problems throughout the country and to set national goals. This clearly is a federal function. I think this was clearly explained by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) in his address last Thursday. But these goals must form the context and framework for the development of provincial and municipal housing programs best suited to the needs of each community in each part of Canada.

But here we are in 1973 with an expanded bill with a variety of patchwork programs to be rigidly administered from the centre. It is not that programs such as assisted home ownership, land assembly, new communities, neighbourhood improvement and residential rehabilitation are necessarily bad or undesirable. The problem is that the mix and balance of these programs will still be in the hands of CMHC. Too often that body is insensitive to local needs.

Let us examine the contemplated level of expenditures for each of these programs on a national basis. Let us try to find out what the minister had in mind when he conceived the program mix. The minister indicated to us, on Thursday that he will reveal the anticipated expenditures for each program during committee stage. But last June he gave some hint of the sort of plans he had when he was introducing an earlier version of this bill. He outlined the amounts to be spent in the first year of operation.

At that time he stated that there would be some $155 million allotted to assisted home ownership, some $70 million to land assembly and only $6 million to residential rehabilitation. Out of the total first-year expenditure of $457 million anticipated at that time, residential rehabilitation would make-up only 1.3 per cent, which gives some indication of the priority that this government is giving to existing housing. Even if one were to throw in the $80 million anticipated for the neighbourhood improvement program, this would bring the total commitment to existing residential areas up to only 18.8 per cent of the total federal funds to be committed in the first year of operation. Obviously, then, residential rehabilitation is going to get short shrift in the implementation of this bill. There are going to be thousands of lower and middle-income home owners anxious to fix up their houses to a minimum maintenance standard who are not going to qualify simply because there will not be enough money in the program.

This program purports to be an improvement on the old one introduced last June because it does not necessarily restrict residential rehabilitation loans to houses located in neighbourhood improvement areas. However, to go outside these areas there must be a designation by the governor in council, with the concurrence of the province, meaning that the built-in institutional restraints on these rehabilitation loans will be substantial. The program is still area-oriented. This is yet another example of paternalism. It will be almost impossible to get rehabilitation loans or grants into spot situations outside of the inner city and into the older suburban or even rural areas which in many cases are equally deserving of attention.

Another weakness of the program is that it is only available for family housing units. Older people living alone, students requiring hostel accommodation and handicapped people requiring special accommodation all would appear to be precluded from participating. Also, there is some doubt as to whether the loans will be available for conversion of larger residences to multiple family use on the basis of a loan for each dwelling unit created as a result of the conversion.

Perhaps the greatest weakness of the rehabilitation program, however, is the limitation of $2,000 as the maximum amount of loan that can be forgiven. Even if this amount were to be matched by the provincial government—which happily is no longer a condition of the federal loan as under last year's bill—the sum of $4,000 is totally inadequate to bring most older houses up to even the most minimum housing standards, considering that this amount must cover plumbing, heating and electrical systems as well as any structural work that must be done.

In my view, it would not be unreasonable for the maximum federal loan to be set at $8,000 to be made available at a beneficial rate of interest with up to $4,000 to be forgiven in repayment over the life of the loan, depending on the occupier's income. With this sort of maximum, the loan and grant ceilings could vary, depending on the condition and size of the dwelling and the number of people it was capable of housing.

Finally, I am concerned about some of the after effects of the rehabilitation program which do not appear to have been considered by the draftsmen of this bill. For example, would it not have been a feasible proposition to include as part of the federal-provincial agreements, where they exist at least, that the provinces and municipalities must implement five or ten-year tax moratoriums on properties which have been rehabilitated? Otherwise, substantial property tax increases in the future may well be a strong psychological hindrance to low or medium-income families becoming involved in the program. Also, in cases where rehabilitation loans go to landlords, the bill might have been more specific about a minimum period of rent control and restrictions on resale, rather than leaving these matters to be determined by way of individual contract with CMHC.

Turning now to a related program, the neighbourhood improvement scheme is a welcome replacement for the old bulldozer-type urban renewal schemes of the past, as the minister noted last Thursday. There is a new emphasis on citizen participation, and the development and enforcement of occupancy and building maintenance standards is a most desirable feature, although the definition of these terms may cause some confusion. I am quite sure the minister is aware of the confusion he has caused by the lack of definition of these occupancy and maintenance standards.

One deficiency of the program is that the federal share of improving municipal and public utility services and relocating noxious uses is limited to 25 per cent, which in my view is a derogation from the general 50 per cent cost-sharing formula which otherwise forms the basis of the program. Also, there is no apparent reason residential buildings outside the neighbourhood improvement areas which are slated for acquisition and demolition should be subject only to a 25 rather than 50 per cent federal contribution. It is also significant that for demolition of buildings outside a neighbourhood improvement area, the government did not think it necessary to require the province or the municipality to have citizen participation. Regrettably, it is not in the bill before us.

A note of caution should be injected here concerning the pervasive and paternalistic role envisaged for CMHC under clause 27 of the bill. It would appear from this clause that the corporation will be asserting a right to have a major say in local planning decisions since the agreements between the corporation and the province will set out the criteria upon the basis of which neighbourhood improvement areas may be selected and prescribe the manner in which the selection of such areas shall be made. Moreover, such agreements envisage a federal contribution of 50 per cent to the formulation and selection of plans to be implemented in the neighbourhood, which in my experience implies direct CMHC control of the formulation and selection process. If any decision-making function should belong to the people at the local level, surely neighbourhood planning is the prime example. Yet this program will virtually guarantee federal intervention. The omniscient presence and controlling sanctions of big brother CMHC will only be too evident. Potentially, this is the top-down approach taken to the extreme.

On a more positive note, I welcome the provision of loans of up to $10,000 for the improvement of commercial premises in the neighbourhood. This will help many small businessmen who are obliged to relocate as a result of demolition or who wish to expand in an area undergoing rehabilitation. This is a very sound and sane approach to neighbourhood improvement generally.

Now let me ask a few questions about the government's crown jewel in all of its housing programs, the land baking scheme. Let me ask the minister what portion, if any, of the $100 million per year will be loaned out for acquiring and servicing land for housing in the middle of the cities. Will the government approve in-city land banking of underused industrial properties which are capable of conversion to residential use? Is the government prepared to recognize that in the larger cities it may be possible in some cases to create new neighbourhoods close to the downtown jobs rather than to overburden our transportation facilities by placing all the new housing in the suburbs?

In the downtown area of my home city of Toronto, for example, the development of the new Metro Centre will accommodate 50,000 jobs; the new Bank of Montreal building will accommodate 15,000 jobs; the new Royal Bank building will accommodate 10,000 jobs, and the Eaton Centre will accommodate 15,000 jobs. There will be 90,000 workers in these four projects alone. Yet the only project that has a housing element is Metro Centre, and for only 7,000 families. Where are we to get housing for the people working in all these jobs?

As the minister may or may not be aware, there is a substantial amount of underused industrial land close to the downtown area of Toronto. With conversion this could accommodate the type of neighbourhoods people want. But the government must be prepared to allocate a significant portion of its land banking funds for this purpose. However, if the previous record of this government and CMHC is any indication, virtually all of the $100 million per year will go into suburban areas for the acquisition of raw, unserviced land. This, of course, will do little to alleviate the immediate housing shortage and the high prices.

Also, let me ask the minister what happened to the throne speech proposal to relocate downtown railway tracks to the edge of the cities. Surely, if this were anything but an empty promise the minister would have mentioned it last Thursday in the context of his remarks on neighbourhood improvement and land banking schemes. There is a great potential here since much of the land that would be freed from the railways could be easily converted to residential or recreational use.

I would hope that in the near future the minister could indicate publicly what downtown railway tracks in what cities are to be moved, and in each case the extent to which the land will be made available for residential and recreational purposes acceptable, of course, to the residents of adjoining neighbourhoods. I would suggest to him that he look at the CPR freight line running across midtown Toronto which goes through much of the residential heartland of that city and which should be a prime candidate for this relocation program.

Finally, to the opponents of neighbourhood improvement and rehabilitation who argue that it is too expensive as opposed to new development let me say this: Be careful how you determine basic costs. There are so many social costs involved in living a long distance from your job or in seeing your neighbourhood destroyed and being forced to relocate that accurate comparisons in human terms are virtually impossible. There is a very delicate social balance at stake here which involves something more than the determination of how many dollars per square foot. In my view, if the character and vitality of our inner cities are to be preserved, then we simply cannot afford not to rehabilitate and improve existing neighbourhoods. This is surely one of the keys to promoting and maintaining a stable urban society in Canada.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few observations on this very fine bill that really attempts to come to grips with the complex problem on how to make housing and community facilities available to every Canadian. This afternoon it was rather refreshing to hear positive remarks made by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) which were so much in contrast with the erratic performance the other night by his colleague in the Conservative party, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). It is good that these remarks are put on the record for everyone to see how polarized can be views on the same subject within the Conservative party.

It seems to me that the success of the housing policy, namely, how houses can be made available at a cost which is within the reach of all members of society, depends on three aspects at least. One is the supply of land in locations that are conveniently connected with a man's working, educational and recreational facilities. Second, it depends on the rate of demolitions which we have witnessed over past decades which were required for the construction of urban expressways. Third, it depends on the incentives that are offered for the improvement of existing housing facilities and neighbourhoods, particularly now in our metropolises.

Tremendous and interesting opportunities are offered by this bill with respect to home improvements and construction by co-operatives, and I welcome the support of the minister's program. But to be successful with the other two aspects of the reasonably successful housing policy of the minister needs a change in our methods of transportation which rely so heavily at present on the car. We need a considerable switch in emphasis in favour of public transportation.

We should move away from the construction of urban expressways, which had been the method adopted in our cities, and move toward an urban rapid transit policy such as we are beginning to witness in the 1970s in the movement of people between towns and cities. We need a policy that would far better utilize existing railway rights of way. When they are built, traditional urban expressways eat up thousands of urban dwellings and increase levels of pollution in built-up areas. They cause congestion in downtown areas. They demand space to park cars downtown where space is least available, and they cause the decay of our downtown neighbourhoods.

Clearly, that is not the way to develop a sound urban policy and with it a sound housing policy. The federal government needs the help of the municipalities and provincial governments because a change in favour of a vigorous public transportation policy in our cities will mean the reduction or elimination of house demolitions, the rapid movement of large numbers of people and less damage to the environment. This process would be accelerated if the federal government were to help municipalities and provincial governments interested in the development of modern urban transportation systems, as was hinted at by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a few months ago when he spoke in Edmonton and mentioned this very aspect of federal intervention.

The understanding of urban Canada by the federal government and, in particular, by the Department of Transport is essential. In most parts of Canada we have very valuable and costly railway lines. They lie idle, or almost so, in many of our cities. These lines could provide relatively inexpensive commuter services within a city. How about the potential offered by the underused lines between cities and towns from Windsor to Ottawa, just to mention one region? This is why some of us were so enthusiastic about the content of the Soberman report last November when it was published, and about its recommendations. If our small towns are to provide the housing that is needed, if they are to attract industries and people and if the land around them is to be developed for housing so as to reduce pressure on the large metropolises, they must be linked with the rest of the country with fast and frequent transportation services. They should not be made into satellite centres or dormitory towns, a sterile and unnatural kind of concept, but into centres with a character of their own.

Land is cheaper in the rural areas of Canada, and so are houses built there. There is no point in raising the question of the cost of land in Toronto. It is obvious that when millions of people congregate in one area, the cost of land will rise there. I do not know what spokesmen for the opposition are really suggesting, as did the hon. member for Calgary North the other day, when they ask, "what would you do with this amount of money in Toronto alone?" Toronto alone could utilize fantastic sums of money and yet produce, in proportion, a small number of housing units which would not meet our needs. It seems to me that the answer is, rather, in reducing the pressures on metropolitan centres and providing incentives for people to settle in fully developed communities away from metropolitan centres and in the surrounding regions.

The other factor that strikes me as important in reducing the pressure on the metropolises, besides urban and inter-urban public transportation, is the success of our agricultural policies and whether we will be able to arrest or even slow down the process of urbanization because we will have been successful, through a set of federal and provincial agricultural policies, in permitting Canadians to live decent lives on the farms. This is why it seems to me that we Members of Parliament from urban Canada have a vital interest in the success of Canada's agricultural policies when we look at Canada as a whole.

Now I would like to make a few brief observations on the details of the legislation. First of all, I congratulate the minister on the fact that considerable adjustments have been made to the housing programs proposed last June. It seems most desirable that when it comes to the formulation of the regulations, the widest possible public discussion and consultation take place. We all know from experience how powerful and important regulations can be under any act, and this one is no exception.

It seems to me that a 25 per cent federal contribution toward the acquisition and clearing of land for the purposes indicated in section 27 does not appear to be sufficient to encourage the relocation of noxious, non-conformist uses in residential areas; and we have many of them in our downtown urban districts. Frequently, in older areas of the city, noxious uses present serious blighting influences the removal of which is essential to the success of an improvement program. Land thus released may afford the only opportunity to build new housing, an important component in the struggle to increase the housing stock.

The apparent confusion which arises from the use of the terms "occupancy and maintenance standard" and "minimum standard" is another concern. It would seem useful here to suggest that these two terms should be clarified in the definitions section. With regard to rehabilitation of existing family housing units, it is good that the federal contribution is not contingent upon it matching the provincial contribution. However, the amount of the loan that can be forgiven ought to be increased from $2,000 to $4,000 for the lowest income families. The experience of groups has been that estimates are extremely difficult to obtain for residential rehabilitation. It is impossible to establish the extent of the work until the job is undertaken. It is therefore recommended that the minister consider that funding be provided for the development of neighbourhood work groups which would work on a salaried basis. It would also stand to reason that landlords benefiting from the grants and loans program should be subject to rent restraint agreements for a stated minimum period of time. Then comes the question of the multiple use of larger and older dwellings, which is a useful way to increase housing for individuals and families. There does not seem to be provision for grants and loans for conversion of larger residences for multiple use, yet the conversion of this kind of house is frequently a good economic use. Therefore, perhaps this is a serious oversight.

In the case of co-operative housing, the wording should be very carefully reviewed to ensure that non-profit funding is available for par value or non-profit housing co-operatives such as Alexander Park and Ashworth Square projects in Toronto. A percentage of the units produced through the non-profit program should be made available through a rent supplement program to individuals and families who are most seriously disadvantaged in the housing market. Supplements associated with non-profit neighbourhood corporations would ensure that no part of the supplement would add to the profit margin of a private landlord. It would seem also, Mr. Speaker, that any rigid requirement that a fixed percentage of residents must be committed to the co-op housing project before a loan commitment could be executed would be a roadblock to this program.

Finally, on the question of land assembly, long-term leases at rates below market to non-profit corporations would facilitate the production of non-profit and co-operative housing. Fifty-year Central Mortgage and Housing loans for the purpose of land assembly will enable leasehold arrangements over an extended period of time. The assembly of underused urban land in intercity areas, available through leasehold, would encourage the development of moderate density housing where it is most needed. The disposal of this land should be at the discretion of the local planning group and municipal authority. This is the point that I believe was made by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). He noted that such criteria made for harmony in planned programs. Any requirement that land thus acquired must be disposed of by public tender would seriously interfere with the program.

In closing, may I say that two sections of this bill are very promising and exciting. The first is section 27.2 which, if adopted and implemented, would permit the construction and acquisition of day nurseries and neighbourhood recreation or social facilities. I believe this is a "first" in federal legislation. The second is sections 45.1 which deals with new communities and the acquisition of land to be used for transportation corridors linking communities. I believe this is a tremendous step toward emphasizing the importance of transportation in relation to a successful housing policy for Canada.

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) rises to ask a question.

Mr. Caccia: Yes.

Mr. Atkey: I wonder where the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) finds the provision for day nurseries in the bill before us. That is the term he used in his speech. I would be very interested to know where such provision is to be found in the bill or in the statement of the minister.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it is on page 7, clause 27.2(a)(iv), "constructing, or acquiring and improving, neighbourhood recreation or social facilities.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I only have two or three minutes, but I wish to speak of some very important matters which should be brought to the attention of the people in Ottawa who make housing policies for the Northwest Territories. Up there we suffer from a very high cost of construction and an extremely high cost of land, serviced or otherwise; indeed, there are times when land is not available, serviced or otherwise, or even surveyed. This is creating hardship for the population of the Northwest Territories.

I should like also to comment on housing generally in the larger centres of the Northwest Territories where young people come from the outlying communities to find jobs only to find that there is no housing available, or very little at very high cost. You can pay up to $250 a month for an apartment, if you can find it. The cost of heating oil and electricity is $20 to $30 for a private home. Things like this are causing hardship to the people in those areas.

There is also what I consider to be a policy of planned legislative discrimination against northerners. This should be changed as soon as possible. People hired locally are not allowed to be housed in government housing even though they work for the government. I consider that to be planned legislative discrimination. If a person were hired for a similar job in the south he would be provided with housing, but if he is hired locally he is not. That is a disgrace to the Canadian government and should be changed as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Andras: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could have permission of the House to revert to motions in order to table a letter which my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and I sent to provincial welfare ministers. I referred to it in my recent remarks to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there consent that the hon. minister has permission to revert to motions for the purpose stated?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TABLING OF LETTER FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO PROVINCIAL WELFARE MINISTERS

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table a copy of a letter which my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and I sent to the provincial welfare ministers as referred to in my recent remarks in the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the acting House leader would confirm what we are going to do the day after tomorrow. It is my assumption that we will return to this legislation on Wednesday.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that is as I understand it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SOCIAL SECURITY—SUGGESTED FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO LOW-INCOME FAMILIES TO PROVIDE PROPER NUTRITION—PROVISION OF GUARANTEED MINIMUM INCOME

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the nutrition survey which was originally promised for this early spring is not ready at this time and will not be available until October. For many reasons it would have been desirable if we had had the results of it now. According to certain indications, when the Canada nutrition survey is brought in it will show that nutrition of Canadians generally is very far from what it should be, particularly among people of low income. Their standard of nutrition is disgraceful and their health condition is dangerous in many respects. Because there has been delay in the finishing and tabling of this survey, a very important report has come to hand. The National Council of Welfare, on March 8, released findings regarding the nutrition of people on low incomes, specifically people below the poverty line. It is disgraceful that a great many people must bring up children who are undersized, sick, disabled, mentally retarded and prone to disease. These conditions result from lack of money for food, for proper nutrition.

On March 9, following the tabling of the report of the National Council of Welfare, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) if he would be prepared, through Canada assistance, to make moneys available specifically for the nutrition of these families in order to make it possible for poor parents to bring up their children on a proper standard of diet. His reply was that already, through the Canada Assistance Plan, the provinces are able to ask for half of their budgets for such purposes. This was a proper reply and I do not find fault with it. But, Mr. Speaker, most of us, I think, want more than that—I certainly do—from the minister.

The minister is to meet the provincial ministers in April. I urge him to go to the meeting prepared to give leadership to the provinces and prepared to do more than simply say that Canada Assistance Plan aid is available. I hope he will sell the provinces two important programs, both recommended by the National Council of Welfare in the report. According to the National Council of Welfare, the most important thing that could be done is introducing a program of guaranteed annual income for the whole of Canada. As a more immediate program they propose that there should be more food dollars, that more money should be devoted to helping poor people including, specifically, pregnant women, very young children, school children and elderly people.

The facts brought out by the report are startling. One Canadian in four lives below the poverty line. One of these four Canadians gets welfare, the other three do not. Families on welfare across Canada, if they are to spend an average of 30 cents per person per meal, must spend half their entire welfare allowance for food, clothing, shelter, utilities and fuel. That is what they must spend just to be able to afford an average of 30 cents a meal per person. Do you think it is possible to obtain good nutrition for 30 cents a meal? Just try it and see how far you get, with prices the way they are today.

Someone said to me that surely it would not be practical to boost the food dollar allowances of people on welfare so as to enable them to obtain proper nutrition. Practical, Mr. Speaker! Is it practical to spend an average of $100,000 to keep a defective child in an institution for its entire life? Is that a practical way to spend the taxpayers' dollars. I doubt, it. To my mind it would be sheer lunacy if we were to allow things to go in that direction. I think the practical thing is to see that the nutrition of the pregnant mother and the young child is such that it is not born defective, disabled and having to become a burden on taxpayers for the rest of its life. The outlook is bleak indeed for the child who through no fault of its own is born disabled mentally, physically or both.

When the minister goes to the meeting with the provinces in April, I urge that he not only goes with the idea of what is available through Canada Assistance but goes prepared to urge that Canadians from coast to coast get behind the idea of a guaranteed annual income. Pending the implementation of that in full, we should be prepared to spend money on programs to get away from this penny-pinching attitude that we have which means dumping dollars down the drain. We should be prepared to look after the nutrition and good health of our people from their very beginning.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). One cannot do anything but agree with the sentiments she has expressed indicating her concern for those people in Canada who are undernourished. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) shares that concern with the same degree of sincerity.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

I wish to point out, as the minister has already done, that under the Canada Assistance Plan, as the hon. member indicated in her remarks tonight, we do in fact provide funds to the provinces to the tune of 50 cents for every dollar that they spend on welfare programs. The provinces determine the rules under which that money is spent and the municipalities in turn administer the program. The division of responsibility is quite clear and the division of dollars is quite clear. We pay 50 cents, the province pays 30 cents and the municipality pays 20 cents. As the hon. member stated, any province is free to increase the food allowance section of any welfare payments and the federal government is committed under the Canada Assistance Plan to match that money in the way I have described.

With regard to a guaranteed income for low-income families, we can turn to the Speech from the Throne for this session of the twenty-ninth parliament in which it was indicated that a guaranteed income would indeed be forthcoming for those who are unable to work. In addition, we have indicated that there will be an over-all review of the social security structure in Canada. We all share the hon. member's views that steps be taken in this over-all review to see that the kind of problem she has brought to our attention is indeed solved. It is the intention of the government in the over-all review that will be conducted in April to review the whole picture to try to do everything we can, in concert with the provinces, to ensure that those people in this country who are in need are properly looked after.

PENITENTIARIES—FAILURE OF JOHN CHARRON TO RETURN TO COLLINS BAY FOLLOWING RELEASE ON ONE-DAY PASS—RECONSIDERATION OF PAROLE POLICY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this debate is to focus attention on the way in which abuses of the temporary leave and day parole programs are a danger to the public. The issue is not "Shall these programs continue or not?" but, rather, "Can they be administered so that public safety is not endangered?"

A man is permitted unescorted leave to visit a relative. He is in prison for armed robbery. He carried a sawed-off shotgun. But he is deemed suitable for unescorted leave. He goes his way. He does not return until, after some weeks, he surrenders. The point's stress here is not that he is back in custody. The point to stress is that a man capable of violent crime and capable of abusing leave should not have been allowed to threaten public safety.

Another inmate is under sentence for the murder of a police officer. He is allowed to attend university classes on his own. One night he stops for a drink. He has too many and is arrested for driving while impaired. The point to stress here is that a man capable of murder and capable of abusing leave should not have been allowed to threaten public safety.

In making this assertion, I am not unaware of the statistics the minister can cite in support of his programs. But I would ask that he give some attention to the statement of an expert before the committee on legal and constitutional affairs in the other place who recommended that day parole and temporary absence programs be studied by an independent, non-government research group with particular attention to five aspects of the program. Among the task of this group would be:

Measuring the offences, both as to number and type, committed while on temporary absences and day paroles. The figures given by the Canadian penitentiary system should be questioned as to accuracy since it has no research capability to provide adequate answers.

The minister should appreciate the need to give greater priority to public safety. In the desire of some people to give all the priority to rehabilitation lies the danger of these programs becoming discredited. The abuse of these programs must be understood in the whole context of growing public rejection of what impresses many as a "soft on crime" policy. People are stirred up about the way men can commit crimes, be freed on bail and then go on to commit worse crimes, such as the murder of an Ottawa shopkeeper this weekend. Three men were charged, all of them on bail on former charges of armed robbery and, in the case of one of them, attempted murder. People are becoming aroused about abuses of the parole program, too.

The need to take this matter more seriously was recognized by the minister's predecessor when the outcry following the release of a sex offender on temporary leave compelled him to toughen the criteria. He should have gone further, though, and I hope the present minister will.

What the hon. gentleman needs to do is to make further changes in the way these programs are being administered. He should give a greater priority to public safety and make unescorted temporary leaves and day paroles more difficult to obtain by anyone convicted of a crime of violence. He should consider making these privileges unavailable to offenders serving life sentences. In addition, he should recognize the need for the co-ordination of these two programs presently administered under different legislation by different authorities. This situation, too, is leading to abuse, as one expert informed the committee in the other place. I quote his words:

It is not unusual to observe a person denied parole one day walk out of the institution the very next day without escort with a temporary pass in his pocket.

The Speech from the Throne indicated the government intends to give the need for public safety greater recognition than it has during the past few years. It needs to. I respect a compassionate desire to rehabilitate offenders, but prudence is also a virtue and it is a virtue no government can justifiably lack. Let the minister bring more common sense into these programs. Good intentions cannot justify putting a single citizen in danger.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on February 12 the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) asked me what we were doing to apprehend John Charron who failed to return to Collins Bay penitentiary after being allowed out on a temporary pass, and whether we were reconsidering our policy to give temporary passes to parole offenders. First of all, Mr. Charron has been returned to custody at Collins Bay penitentiary. Second, the criteria for granting temporary absence passes to persons who have previously broken parole are under consideration at the present time.

As I told the hon. member on February 12, Mr. John Charron, who was an inmate at the Collins Bay farm annex, a minimum security institution, was granted a pass on February 4 in order to meet relatives. Although he was scheduled to return by eleven o'clock in the evening, he failed to go back to the institution. However, 12 days later he surrendered himself to the Kingston police and was returned to Collins Bay, where he was placed in the medium security institution there. I might add that the Kingston police levelled no charges against him, aside from being unlawfully at large.

There has been a great deal of misunderstanding surrounding the temporary absence program and I should like to take a few moments to provide the House with an outline of this most important feature of our rehabilitation system. Temporary absences are authorized under section 26 of Penitentiary Act for medical, rehabilitative or humanitarian reasons for three or 15 days, with or without escort. No inmate is eligible for a temporary absence unless at least six months of his sentence has been served. Moreover, there are certain classes of inmates which are never eligible for absences—dangerous sexual offenders, for example, mentioned by the hon. member.

Before an inmate is granted such a leave of absence, however, he goes through a carefull screening process in which decisions are made as to his suitability for such a rehabilitative measure. Once officials have decided that the candidate's rehabilitation will be assisted by the granting of a temporary absence, which incidentally is issued only when there is a specific purpose, such as a visit to parents or to members of the inmate's family, the inmate is then released, under escort. At the beginning those on temporary absences are always accompanied by escort. Subsequent absences, if merited, may be without escort.

Let me reiterate that there is an important initial screening process in which the collective experience of the institutional officers with the candidate is assessed before an absence is granted. Secondly, there are criteria which must be met before an inmate receives a pass, including a community assessment in the area which the inmate intends to visit. Thirdly, there is close supervision of the inmate during his initial absence. Fourthly, his conduct during the course of the first and each subsequent absence is assessed carefully by prison officials.

This does not mean that I am satisfied with the temporary absence system. As long as there are failures, I will not be satisfied; and as the speech from the throne indicated, we are studying improvements that could be made in parole and the temporary absence system. I also want to point out that my predecessor had appointed a task force under the chairmanship of Justice Huggesson of Montreal. This was an independent task force which presented a report which I am presently studying. We hope we will submit some changes to the House shortly. I might also say that that report will be made public as soon as it is translated and printed.

PENITENTIARIES—WILLIAM HEAD—POSSIBLE CONVERSION TO MEDIUM SECURITY INSTITUTION—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish also to thank the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) for being in the House tonight to hear my representation. On March 5 and March 13 I directed two questions to the Solicitor General concerning the change in grading of William Head prison from a minimum to a medium security prison. I will not take up the time of the House by reading the questions and answers. In brief, I requested the minister for assurance that this action would not be instituted without prior concurrence of the people of that area, and he replied that he could not give that assurance.

I would now like to tell some of the history of William Head prison and particularly some of the implicit conditions under which it was accepted by the local residents in the first instance. William Head prison was formerly a quarantine station. It is some 12 miles from Victoria, in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. It comprises 85 acres of beautiful waterfront property, bounded on one side by Weir beach, a public beach, and on the other by Pedder Bay, where the newly named Pearson College of the Pacific has acquired some 74 acres.

In 1958 a three man committee on correctional planning recommended that a trial project be started at William Head quarantine station. The aim of the project was to segregate first offenders and those with an evident desire to reform from hardened criminals. This was the major consideration, to separate the curable from the incurable. There was a certain amount of unease among the local residents of Metchosin and a petition was started. Their fears were allayed by government assurances. For example, the RCMP Quarterly, volume 26 of 1960, in recording the transition remarked:

Assurance was voiced that all inmates chosen were not dangerous criminals, that each and every man is carefully selected. Most of them will be tradesmen who are nearing the end of their sentences, and the object of the establishment is to serve as a pre-release centre, where the final and intensive effort is made to prepare inmates for re-entry into society.

On July 27, 1969, Superintendent Grant stated:

There is no intention of putting any kind of fence around William Head minimum security prison.

The final assurance to the citizenry was given when a minister of the Crown stated in 1959:

William Head is only temporary and will be discontinued when overcrowding at the main penitentiary at New Westminster has been relieved.

The institute started off rather well and there has been much favourable comment about it over the years. However, during the last couple of years there has been a change in the type of inmate. The drug culture product has been showing up in larger and larger numbers. While everyone can agree that rehabilitation is necessary for them, it is not the same kind of rehabilitation required or envisaged for the inmate which authorities had in mind when this prison without bars was instituted. As a result, escapes or walkaways increased from three in the first year to 35 last year.

To compound the problem, the Solicitor General now proposes to introduce medium security risks to this rehabilitation centre. This will, I predict, have two deleterious effects. First, it will increase the number of escapes, and the escapee will not necessarily be the innocuous type of the past. Second, the security arrangements will need to be considerably strengthened, which will destroy the rehabilitation attitude of the institution.

A good part of the rehabilitative climate of this institution is engendered by the feeling of mutual trust and respect between inmates and staff. I visited the institution a week ago and was impressed with this helpful attitude on the part of the officials. The officials, and indeed many of the local residents, feel a certain amount of pride in the rehabilitative work being done and wish it to have the best possible chance of continuing its success.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in order, first, to give the institution and staff clear support to continue their rehabilitative work, second, to continue to receive the tacit support of the community and guarantee their security and, third, to try to maintain William Head as an institution that physically blends with its beautiful surroundings, I respectfully request that the Solicitor General not proceed with his plans to increase the security status of William Head prison but, rather, conform to the original pledge made to the people of that area. If William Head must remain the location for a penal institution, then it should be a rehabilitation-oriented minimum security installation with minimum risk inmates. It should remain as defined by a solicitor general's report:

An institution where those inmates are sentenced who require neither fence nor wall to keep them confined, who will respect the invisible boundary that surrounds them and who, in any event, are not likely to be dangerous in the community if they do walk away.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, since there is a serious problem of overcrowding in our federal penal institutions in the western region, consideration is presently being given for the construction and/or acquisition, either by purchase or by lease, of physical facilities required to accommodate the increasing inmate population. A study of the present inmate population in our institutions indicates that an overpopulation condition exists in the institutions of maximum and medium security degrees. In these types of institutions in the west there is an actual shortage of close to 200 cells. However, the same study reveals that there are still available some 90 cells in minimum security institutions.

Because of the time period required to make maximum and medium security facilities available either by construction or by acquisition, which cannot be made available before the next year at least, it is urgent that consideration be given to the conversion of the William Head institution from a minimum security institution to a medium security institution in order to satisfy the present needs of the Canadian penitentiary service. From experience, minimum security institutions such as community correctional centres and minimum security correctional camps can be made available more rapidly, that is, within a matter of months.

The geographical location and the type of construction of the William Head institution lends itself to the execution of this plan. The conversion from minimum security to medium security will consist in the installation of adequate physical security facilities, such as security perimeter fences and windows, the construction of a gate-house and the raising of an observation post. It is also intended to increase the number of correctional officers by approximately 25. Technical scanning equipment and patrol vehicles, as well as a radio communications system, will also be made available. The necessary upgrading of physical security arrangements, the procurement of technical equipment and the staffing will be completed before any inmate of medium security degree is transferred to the William Head institution.

There will be no increase in the number of inmates accommodated at that institution. The inmates to be transferred to the William Head institution will be of the medium security category, selected on the basis of their willingness and ability to participate in the rehabilitation programs to be developed, and the selection will be in accordance with established criteria specific to the William Head institution.

Finally, may I say in reply to the hon. member, that we have no evidence that the Canadian penitentiary service made any commitment that the William Head institution would remain a minimum security institution. There are no formal documents or informal evidence to this effect in our files. If the hon. member, on behalf of his constituents, has such evidence we would be pleased to examine the question.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—ERROR IN HANSARD RESPECTING NAME OF PRESIDENT OF UGANDA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, at page 2344 of yesterday's Hansard I asked the following question:

Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister what purpose his personal envoy, Mr. Head, has in visiting various Commonwealth countries at this time?

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave me the explanation. The passage then reads:

MR. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, what particular message was to be conveyed to General M'boto of undistinguished notoriety, the head of Uganda? What was the message to him?

The Prime Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, President M'boto is no longer president of Uganda.

As members will recall, yesterday afternoon the House was in a very happy and rather vociferous mood. I like it that way. The result was that what was said was not recorded by the reporter because it was drowned out. The Prime Minister understood me to ask about somebody I did not ask about. I asked about Amin and he thought I referred to General M'boto. He replied as I have already stated. His answer was correct, of course, because M'boto was at one time president of the Congo. Altogether, it was a comedy of errors. So that the record may be complete, I was referring and I did refer to Amin but, as I said, the House was in that feeling of high exhilaration which sometimes interferes with communication, but enjoyably so.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the same point, Mr. Speaker, there may even be more errors than the right hon. member understood because in my answer, and I did not see the blues, I did not say "President M'boto". I said "President Obote", who was indeed the president of Uganda when we had the last Commonwealth Conference, so this makes it even more complicated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for clearing up the whole matter. We all recall that even Homer nodded, so the Prime Minister and I were both in that category.

MR. OBERLE—ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION NO. 984

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I will need Your Honour's advice on the validity of my question. First of all, I would like to have the confirmation of the House that as the representative of the people in my constituency, as the representative of people who put their trust in my office, I am entitled to ask questions of the government. I should also like to have it confirmed that after I have asked these questions the answers that I get to such questions are factual and are answers on which I can base further action.

I placed on the order paper question No. 984 dealing with the Inter-American Indian Institute. It is in three parts and the questions are simple. The first part reads as follows:

Has the government been requested to join the Inter-American Indian Institute and, if so (a) by whom (b) on what date?

The third part reads as follows:

Has any employee of the government, its agencies or Crown corporations ever attended any conference meetings or symposia sponsored by the Inter-American Indian Institute over the past six years and, if so (a) who were these persons (b) on what dates—

The answers I received to these questions are less than factual. I happen to know that there was more than one attempt by the Inter-American Institute to have Canada join. There were many occasions prior to the date indicated in the answer. I also happen to know that many delegations sponsored by the Canadian government attended these meetings.

These facts, Mr. Speaker, are underlined by a secret or confidential document which obviously is no longer confidential because I received it this morning. In it, an official of the government indicates that the answer to question No. 1 is less than factual. Another section outlines the reasons why the government is embarrassed about the Inter-American Indian institute. I quote from the document:

Indian leaders might be tempted on occasion to use the International Indian Institute as a forum in which they could put forward their grievances against the federal government.

Another paragraph in the document reads as follows:

The composition of the International Institute would need to be carefully conceived as it could generate friction among native people in that it would be undesirable and, in any event, virtually impossible to exclude representation from the Métis and non-status Indian groups.

These are the reasons the answers to my questions are not correct. Here is yet another cabinet leak. As a result, I should like to move the following motion, if I may do so, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Taylor):

That this matter dealing with the International Indian Institute be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections or to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members do from time to time bring to the attention of the House and the Chair the complaints or grievances as to the contents of answers given to their questions. It is a long established rule that these grievances, although they may be the subject of a debate, cannot found a question of privilege. I refer the hon. member to citation 113 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in debates or in the proceedings of the House. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament.

And further:

A dispute arising between two members as to allegations of facts does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The hon. member suggests that information conveyed to him in reply to a question on the order paper is incorrect. That may be so. The hon. member said that he was seeking my advice. My advice to him and to the House, and my ruling at the same time, is that I cannot find there is a prima facie question of privilege here which should be put to the House for debate at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the hon. member told us he has a document which he described as "another cabinet leak", and as he quoted from this document, I wonder whether he would be prepared to table it so that it could be before the House in the proper manner. I realize this is a somewhat delicate matter.

Mr. Speaker: The rules do not, of course, provide for the tabling of documents, even official documents or so-called confidential documents, quoted in the House by private members. The rule only applies when such a document is quoted in debate by members of the government. It cannot apply to hon. members generally. The suggestion is very often made in debate, when hon. members refer to or quote from a document, that the document in question be tabled. Certainly we would become involved in a very complicated practice, a practice which could easily lead to abuse, if we made it possible for members generally to table documents. I think that is not the purpose of the rule dealing with the tabling of documents.

Mr. Woolliams: In the light of your ruling, Mr. Speaker—and I must agree with Your Honour that the rule does not apply in this case, which is why I suggested this was a somewhat delicate matter—perhaps the House would give unanimous consent to the document being tabled in the circumstances, bearing in mind the allegation the hon. member has made and that it seems to be a genuine document.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there is not unanimous agreement. In any case I would hesitate to seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow a private member to table a document. I doubt whether this would be a good practice in which to become involved.

Mr. Oberle: May I make one more comment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should resume his seat. He can, perhaps, rise on a point of order but there should certainly be no debate after a ruling has been made. I will hear the hon. member if he has a point of order.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Oberle: The point concerns your reference to my conflict with another member of the House. It is not with another member of the House. It is with the Department of Indian Affairs and the government as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is, of course, doing what I suggested he cannot do once a ruling has been made.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—TABLING OF COMMUNIQUÉ ISSUED FOLLOWING SECOND MEETING IN PARIS OF FINANCE MINISTERS

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, over a week ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) attended the first meeting of the Group of Ten and of the European Economic Community to discuss the exchange crisis, and later tabled the communiqué of that meeting. I should like to table the communiqué of the second meeting held last week in Paris.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order that I must raise because it never occurred to me that the President of the Treasury Board would simply file a statement in the House rather than making one. Therefore, in light of this very unusual procedure in the context of a worldwide emergency I must ask the minister whether he or the Minister of Finance will make a statement on motions in regard to this matter tomorrow in order to enable the House to discuss the question.

Mr. Drury: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was not filing or tabling my statement. I was merely tabling the communiqué that resulted from the meeting last week in Paris which I attended on behalf of the Minister of Finance. Because of the widely publicized information given in the press last week I did not propose to make a statement on motions.

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. The continuing threat to Canada's marine resources in the North Atlantic dictates the need for emergency action by the Canadian government. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the resolution on fisheries problems in the North Atlantic presented by an all-party Canadian delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly in Bonn, Germany, last November and accepted by the assembly comprising 15 nations of the alliance be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for consideration and action.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. This motion is made under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion therefore cannot be put.

FLOODS

CONSTRUCTION OF RETAINING WALL IN BERTHIER AND L'ASSOMPTION COUNTIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43.

In recognition of the emergency situation in which the inhabitants of flooded areas of Berthier and L'Assomption counties now find themselves, and since the appropriate minister had already been requested to build a retaining wall, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Yanakis):

That this matter be referred to a special committee by the Minister of Public Works, so that immediate measures may be taken to build a protective wall in the municipalities affected.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion by the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DECENTRALIZATION OF ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a pressing matter.

This motion is about a problem which is quite urgent in view of the interest shown by the four political parties of the House in the course of our debates.

In view of the serious administrative problems now existing in the Unemployment Insurance Commission which are due to an excessive centralization of services, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau):

That this House do appoint a special committee made up of representatives of the four political parties of the House in order to investigate the serious problems which exist within the Unemployment Insurance Commission, in the best interests of all Canadians. This special committee shall report to the House and present the relevant recommendations resulting from its findings.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion introduced by the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

BRANDON UNIVERSITY CHORALE

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 I would move a motion of appreciation to the Brandon University Chorale for introducing an atmosphere of harmony to Parliament Hill today. As proof of the new entente cordiale, the Chancellor of Brandon University, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), is seconding the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has very serious doubts about the propriety of this motion. I hesitate to say so in view of the circumstances of the event to which the hon. member is referring, but I doubt very much that it would be in order to put the motion. Of course, if this is what hon. members wish me to do I shall, but I think it will be a serious departure from the long established practice of the House if this type of motion is submitted. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE AND VETERANS PENSIONS—PRESENTATION OF PETITION FOR IMMEDIATE INCREASE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 29,880 people in Edmonton, urging all Members of Parliament "to do everything possible to bring about a significant increase in old age and veteran pensions immediately", which petition was personally presented by Mayor Ivor Dent of Edmonton this morning to an all-party delegation of members who welcomed the intention of the petitioners and the initiative of Mayor Dent. On their behalf I pray this House to accept the petition and table it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST THAT HOUSE BE CONSULTED BEFORE DECISION MADE ON CONTINUING CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wagner: In response to my friends on the other side I would say—

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: In French!

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

[English]

In view of the fact that no statement—

[Translation]

In view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made no statement to the House on his trip to Viet Nam, can the Prime Minister assure us that parliament will be consulted officially before any decision is taken concerning our participation in Viet Nam?

Some hon. Members: In English!

Mr. Wagner: Again, at the request of my friends across the way—

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that no statement has been made to the House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether it is necessary for the hon. member to repeat the question in English. I would suggest to hon. members that, as we have only 40 minutes for the question period, if every question and answer are given in both French and English we might get into difficulty. I do not want to cause any difficulty to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

The right hon. Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to tell the hon. member that his off the cuff translation is very good and I shall ask the minister to answer the question personally.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: Now in French.

Mr. Sharp: It is my intention, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: If I may translate, Mr. Speaker, it is my intention tomorrow, if I am asked by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to appear before it, to answer questions and give some account of the visit that my colleagues from the New Democratic Party, the Social Credit party and myself and one member of the Senate made to Viet Nam. It would be my intention to make a statement in the House just as soon as we have reached a decision on whether we are going to continue or withdraw from the commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

Would the minister please let the House know if it is the government's intention to consult the House before a decision is taken by the government on this subject?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the House on a number of occasions, as is customary I think it is the responsibility of the government to make a decision and bring it before parliament. This I intend to do.

VIET NAM—MINISTER'S POSITION ON MEETING OF CONDITIONS FOR CONTINUED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question on the statement which he did make, namely, the one after his return from the Paris conference. As a result of his conversations during his recent Indochina visit, is he in any way reassured now as to the actual conditions which he declared in Paris would be essential to Canada's continued participation in the International Control and Supervisory Commission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. Our visit to Viet Nam tended to confirm the position I expressed in the House that the International Control Commission is not operating very satisfactorily. The conditions that we laid down have been met to some extent, but the overriding question, of course, is whether the International Control Commission itself is making a useful contribution. The difficulty with this proposition, as the hon. gentleman knows, is that, while we may feel we are not making as much of a contribution as we would wish, I have received many requests from countries throughout the world that we should continue because notwithstanding our own doubts we are in fact making a very useful contribution.

REPLY OF NORTH VIET NAM TO INQUIRY RESPECTING LOST CONTROL COMMISSION PLANE AND PASSENGERS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I also address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his reply to a question of mine as recorded at page 1051 of Hansard for February 7, the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated his hope that the establishment of diplomatic relations with North Viet Nam would enable the government to be more effective in pursuing its inquiries relating to the loss in October, 1965, of a civilian International Control Commission aircraft on a scheduled flight from Vientiane to Hanoi. May I now ask the minister if, during his stay in Hanoi, he was able, because of the establishment of diplomatic relations, to make further inquiries about this matter and whether he received satisfactory answers from the North Viet Nam authorities explaining why the search for that civilian aircraft on International Control Commission business was held up for a matter of days, if not weeks?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a result of having recognized North Viet Nam I was, of course, privileged to visit there and while there I raised the matter referred to by the hon. member. I explained the circumstances and asked if they would make further inquiries to discover whether these Canadians are still alive and, if so, where they are. I also took advantage of the occasion to inquire about Mr. Oppel.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Would the minister be prepared to have the International Commission for Control and Supervision asked to make a special inquiry into the fate of that plane and its passengers?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I might consider that, although I doubt whether it would be very useful. This event took place in 1966, I believe, and I think it would be difficult to do more than what I have done, namely, to have the government of North Viet Nam look into the circumstances and see that they can discover for us.

POLITICAL PRISONERS IN SOUTH VIET NAM JAILS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I welcome the Secretary of State for External Affairs back after his very valuable trip.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Brewin: The question I would like to put to him is whether he was able to secure any information or make any representations when he was in Saigon about the plight of the literally tens of thousands of political prisoners in jails in South Viet Nam? Was he able to do that, or will he report to us on that subject later?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am quite sure that when I appear before the committee tomorrow my hon. friend will address inquiries to me. May I just say by way of general information that when I did raise this question with the government of South Viet Nam they claimed there were only 5,000 such prisoners.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Do you buy that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we should try to move to the second question. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Ottawa West on a final supplementary and then see the hon. member for Waterloo.

VIET NAM—ATTITUDE OF LARGE POWERS FOLLOWING CEASE-FIRE AGREEMENT

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact there are few material differences between the current cease-fire agreement and that negotiated in 1954, in view of the fact the United States, by the admission of one of its former, now late, presidents, deliberately and systematically undermined that cease-fire, and in view of the fact President Nixon has recently threatened to resume bombing of the north because of alleged violations of the cease-fire agreement by North Viet Nam, was the Secretary of State for External Affairs able to discern during his trip any evidence of increased good will on the part of the United States, or other large powers that have armed the respective sides in the civil war, which leads him to believe that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech. The minister will be allowed, of course, to reply to the hon. member, but I have some difficulty in respect of the form of the hon. member's question. The preliminaries are perhaps not quite in order. Having said that, the minister should be allowed to reply to the hon. member's question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think it would have been useful if I had had with me a member of the party opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I would be very happy to accept and to answer questions of this kind as best I can in committee when I appear. But the hon. member will have to depend upon my word and not upon the independent judgment he might otherwise have been able to make.

Mr. Reilly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I resent being the subject—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: I will stand down when Mr. Speaker tells me to, not when you lugs tell me to. The question I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs was, to the best of my knowledge and ability, a fair question and fairly placed. I take strong exception to being told that it was not a proper question. I also take strong exception to the Secretary of State for External Affairs' condescending put-down of a perfectly legitimate question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

NEGOTIATIONS WITH GOVERNMENT TO TAKE OVER GOVERNMENT'S SHARE OF PANARCTIC OILS LIMITED

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Are negotiations now going on between the government and the Canada Development Corporation to take over the federal government's 45 per cent share of Panarctic Oils?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice and get an up to date report from the chairman of the Canada Development Corporation.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Considering the almost complete confusion existing within the administration of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the conflicting statements of the minister concerning the application of regulations at the unemployment insurance offices, does the Prime Minister intend to set up a special committee of the House made up of representatives of the four parties to investigate the application of regulations and the procedure used by officials to find out the administrative defects and report to the House making proper recommendations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Since I do not accept the premises of the question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

BENEFIT CONTROL—REQUIREMENT OF PROOF OF EFFORTS TO SECURE EMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INVESTIGATE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

[Mr. Reilly.]

Can he tell this House unequivocally whether any particular instruction has been given to the unemployment insurance offices ordering them to refuse to pay any benefits where there is not enough proof that the beneficiary has actually sought employment and, if so, can the minister say when these instructions have been issued?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise that there have been confusing instructions sent.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the minister cannot accept this since he is not aware of what is going on at the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but I would like to put a supplementary.

Could he honestly inquire from the commission or one of the deputy ministers to find out since when claimants are required to file written proof that they are actively seeking employment and, if so, could he honestly inform this House?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the act requires claimants on unemployment insurance benefits to be actively searching for work and it calls for the commission to enforce that act. In the process of enforcing the act they ask claimants to indicate, sometimes in writing and sometimes verbally, that they are in fact looking for work actively.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be allowed a supplementary and then I shall recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Is the hon. minister aware that when a claimant applies for a job the prospective employer tells him that he deals with manpower centres and that furthermore the Unemployment Insurance Commission demands that each claimant not only registers in manpower centres but also supplies written proof that he is seeking employment, so that if he complies with these requirements he is denied benefits?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there is a requirement that unemployment insurance claimants register with manpower, but there is not a requirement that that is the only place where they can seek work. We encourage recipients of unemployment insurance benefits to seek work beyond manpower offices, through union hiring halls or in any way they can because we think that the best way for them to get off the unemployment insurance rolls is to find a job.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED INFILTRATION OF NORTH VIET NAM TROOPS AND TANKS INTO SOUTH VIET NAM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In doing so I suggest that while the committee has its place, questions have to be answered in the House. Having visited South Viet Nam some two years ago I know something of the difficulties of that country and its terrain. My question arises from the fact that the President of the United States has stated, on the basis of information available to him, that thousands of troops are infiltrating from North Viet Nam into South Viet Nam and large numbers of tanks are following into that area. Now that the minister has been over there and has seen at first hand, did anyone bring to his attention when he was there that this was going on, and is he in a position to say, because of his first hand knowledge gained through personal observation, whether there is in fact that infiltration not only of manpower but of munitions into the south?

• (1440)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the problems that is causing us concern with relation to the International Control Commission is just the kind of question raised by the right hon. gentleman. There have been thousands and thousands of incidents—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of what?

Mr. Sharp: —thousands and thousands of incidents of breaches of the truce, which have been admitted on all sides, including the kind of breach of the truce represented by the movement of people and supplies down the Ho Chi Min trail into South Viet Nam, but the International Control Commission has never been asked nor permitted to make any investigation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if thousands of North Vietnamese troops are getting into South Viet Nam with tank equipment on such a large scale as stated by the President, that is more than one incident among thousands. It is very serious to the future of a continued interregnum toward peace. Surely the minister is able to tell the House, having consulted with so many, for so long, in so many places—

Mr. Diefenbaker: —whether or not there are in fact thousands and thousands of North Vietnamese getting into South Viet Nam along with military equipment, which can only lead to aggressive war?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, all the information that I gleaned while I was in Viet Nam and in Laos tends to confirm the statement made by the right hon. gentleman now. All I am saying is that Canada is trying to work on an international control commission where these matters would not be charges and countercharges but could be ascertained as a matter of fact. Unfortunately that is not the way the International Control Commission is now working.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How is it working then when a serious situation has arisen such as I have pointed out and which, after two questions, the minister now agrees has actually taken place? What is the Central Commission doing to meet the serious situation that will arise in consequence of such dangerous action on the part of the North Vietnamese?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions in the House, in the committee and elsewhere—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was before the minister went there.

Mr. Sharp: —the International Control Commission cannot keep the peace. That must be done by the parties to the peace agreement. All we can do is observe and report upon alleged breaches of the truce. The problem at the moment is that the commission is neither being asked nor being given the necessary clearance to investigate these breaches of the truce. Otherwise I should not have taken the attitude I have toward our continuation on the commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a frightening admission.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR LIST OF DRUGS THAT FAILED TO MEET TESTS AND NAMES OF COMPANIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that 3 per cent of the drugs that have been tested by his department under the QUAD program have failed to meet the standards set by the department, when does the minister intend to make a statement listing the names of the drugs that have failed to meet the standards, and the names of the companies that produce those drugs?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting yesterday with the Minister of Justice in this regard and I hope to be able to release the names as early as possible. However, I still must have some legal points clarified by the Minister of Justice in this connection.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the fact there cannot be any question about the right of the minister to make a statement in the House, is there any reason that the minister cannot make that statement in the House giving Members of Parliament and the public, who are vitally interested in this question, information to which they are obviously entitled?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the matter that the Minister of Justice and I are studying at the moment is linked to difficulties that might arise from proceedings that might be started in the near future and I should not wish to cause any prejudice to those involved.

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—POSITION OF CANADIAN DOLLAR VIS-À-VIS UNITED STATES DOLLAR FOLLOWING PARIS AGREEMENT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board or the Minister of Finance. In light of the agreement reached in Paris last week that the European currencies would float but would float within some sort of range and would be a sort of dirty float, were any commitments made by the government of Canada with respect to the position of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the United States dollar, that we would move to a range and keep us in parity in that way?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker. The level of the Canadian dollar is to be determined by the market.

Mr. Gillies: Does that mean that Canada did not agree with or participate in the 14-nation agreement?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the hon. gentleman perhaps has not had a chance to read the communiqué. We did participate in the agreement. The agreement provided that while certain European currencies would be kept within a fixed margin of two and a half per cent, the Canadian currency, along with some others, would float.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—PARIS AGREEMENT—ARRANGEMENTS TO CURTAIL EXPANSION OF MONEY SUPPLY IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES AND CURB INFLATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the European currencies of Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, Luxemburg and Denmark are floating jointly in relation to the United States dollar, and as the U.S. dollar is for all practical purposes also afloat, what agreement was reached by the participating countries to apply a break on the expansion in those countries of the money supply in order that currencies that are afloat will not go adrift and so that inflation may be curbed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly the hon. member is asking what device will the European countries use to ensure that inflation does not allow disparities to occur, interrupting this joint arrangement. The answer, I think, is the fiscal mechanisms, the monetary mechanisms, of the European Economic Community. The ministers were conscious of the fact that one of the dangers to be guarded against in every country was the threat of inflation.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a brief supplementary. Was any agreement reached to remould the world monetary system so that there will not be an Atlantic trade war, with the European countries applying import charges on one side and Canada and the United States applying them on the other side?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think it would not be exaggerating too much to say that the main thrust of the previous meeting and of this one was to avoid just such an eventuality, and there is some hope that we have been successful in this respect.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking supplementaries on this topic. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition and then the hon. member for Simcoe North who has a supplementary to the previous question. After that the Chair will attempt to see some of the members in the third, fourth and fifth rows.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—CONSIDERATION AT FINANCE MINISTERS CONFERENCE OF MEASURES TO CONTROL MOVEMENT OF SHORT-TERM MONEY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should ask the President of the Treasury Board whether the government is afloat, adrift or sinking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But I will ask him whether any conclusions were reached at the conference with regard to any measures to control the movement of short-term money, which is being used on such a massive scale to raid various currencies of the world? Was any solution reached with respect to this urgent problem?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. gentleman's search for guidance in his first question, let me say that the government is afloat, and fully afloat.

Mr. Stanfield: A clean float or a dirty float?

Mr. Drury: As to the second question, at the present time there is a lack of precise knowledge as to the sources and effectiveness of these various large capital movements of a speculative nature. The governors of the central banks will do some research into this problem and hopefully come up with a device or series of devices that will restrain these movements. I may also say that there is recognition of the fact that the large overhang of Eurodollars does represent a continuing threat, and steps are contemplated to try to remove this to some degree.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT DRUGS ON MARKET ARE SAFE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the widespread anxiety and fear on the part of many people who are using lifesaving drugs with regard to the threefold increase in the deterioration of drugs over a period of one year, can the minister assure the House that those lifesaving drugs have now been thoroughly checked and that no unsafe drugs are on the market?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to say that it has not been a 3 per cent increase. Under the QUAD program 3 per cent of drugs tested were rejected, while previously, not under the program that we have at the present time, the rate was around 1 per cent. This was a different program carried out in a different way. As far as the testing of drugs that have been found faulty, they have all been withdrawn from the market and destroyed. I cannot give the assurance to the hon. member that all drugs on the market now are safe. That would mean checking every lot of every drug all the time.

Mr. Rynard: May I ask the minister how long it will be before those drugs are checked? The firms that make these drugs are known. He has been asked that question before.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, all the drugs mentioned have been checked and the lots that have been found faulty, as I said, have been withdrawn from the market and destroyed.

Mr. Rynard: Is the minister assuring me that none of these inferior drugs are being sold today?

Mr. Lalonde: None of the drugs that have been found faulty are on the market today.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FUNDS

Mr. Harry Kuntz (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that many worth-while employment creating projects have not been approved under the local initiatives program because of a lack of funds, in view of the fact that there are still approximately 11 weeks left until May 31, the completion date of these projects, and as these weeks are normally a period of good construction weather, would the minister tell the House if he has any plans at this time to place more funds in the local initiatives program?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if such a decision is made I will place it before the House.

INCOME TAX

ISSUING OF T4U AND TP4U SLIPS BY UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wonder, while I am on my feet and to save the Leader of the Opposition the necessity of chasing me, if I could reply to his question of yesterday expressing concern about a possible delay in sending out TP4U slips for unemployment insurance. I have been advised that the commission met its statutory obligation to mail income tax statements by February 28, 1973, in the number of 1,918,717 T4U and TP4U slips. Of these, 55,650 were undeliverable, mainly because of change of address of the recipients. However, as a result of the advertising campaign and other measures launched by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, 38,000 people have contacted the UIC and received duplicate T4U slips for those that were not delivered because of the address problem. We are continuing to do our best to locate these people.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED CONFINEMENT OF TWO ESKIMOS IN MENTAL HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I should like to ask the minister if he is acquainted with recently published reports stating that two Eskimos are more or less being kept prisoners in a Brossard mental hospital, and whether he has asked officials of his department to intervene. If so, what stage has the inquiry reached?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have received no reports of this, but I will make inquiries immediately and report to the hon. member tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I shall break into English now as I wish to quote from an English document and I cannot translate it too well. May I ask the minister if the policy implications that are involved in this report are indeed the policy of his department? The assistant administrator of the hospital said:

> They—
> The Eskimos.
> —were forced on us by the Department of Indian Affairs. We told federal authorities the only space we had was in a basement room, and they agreed.

Is this indeed the policy of the minister's department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is not in order. The question should be asked directly rather than in relation to a statement made outside the House. The minister may reply, after which I shall recognize the hon. member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can say is that it is certainly not the policy of the department, but there are always errors. I will make inquiries and reply tomorrow in French.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF LASALLE ACADEMY BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I should like, through you, to ask a question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Would the minister please tell the House whether or not historic LaSalle Academy, situated in my riding on Sussex Drive, has been purchased by the federal government and, if so, for what purpose the building has been acquired?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to suggest this to the hon. member, but this would be a very good question to consider at the time of adjournment. The hon. member would be entitled, because of the urgency and importance of the matter, to some priority in having the question considered at ten o'clock.

MILLHAVEN—POSSIBILITY OF PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO RIOT

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox-Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and pertains to the recent riot by convicts at Millhaven Institution in which thousands of dollars worth of wilful damage to public property was done by the inmates. Will a public inquiry be held in order that the government and the Canadian people may know the facts concerning this incident?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the situation at Millhaven is almost back to normal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. Allmand: Some aspects of the disturbance are being investigated by prison officials, other aspects by the Ontario Provincial Police, and I expect reports shortly. At this stage a further inquiry does not appear necessary, but I will await the reports referred to before making a final decision.

[Mr. Harney.]

Mr. Alkenbrack: Has the Solicitor General's department laid informations and charges against the rioters in the provincial court at Napanee?

Mr. Allmand: Not yet, Mr. Speaker, but disciplinary action and possibly criminal action are being considered. We are awaiting the reports I referred to.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hastings.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS—STEPS TO PROTECT PASSENGERS—SUGGESTED INQUIRY

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker got the riding right.

Mr. Ellis: That is all right. Mr. Speaker got the riding almost right the last time, and I am happy that he got it right this time. On March 9 I asked the Minister of Transport a question regarding the safety of the travelling public on trains. Yesterday, just ten days later, there was another major train derailment just south of Ottawa in roughly the same area. This was not a passenger train—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question?

Mr. Ellis: Will the minister tell the House what steps he has taken to protect the travelling public and if he is undertaking an inquiry into the frequency and severity of these accidents?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission has an investigation committee composed of representatives of the industry and officials of my department and charged precisely with improving security measures.

As to the accident which has just been referred to, I am told that a railroad car of chemicals was overturned and it will doubtless be necessary to adopt stricter regulations in order better to protect the people and the environment.

AGRICULTURE

TAXATION OF MARKETING QUOTAS—ASSIGNMENT OF VALUATION DAY VALUES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. On March 6 I asked the minister what steps he was taking to place valuation day values on farm marketing quotas because of the criticism of farm organizations of the budget provisions in this regard. At that time the minister advised that it was his opinion that these groups, specifically the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, were not all that dissatisfied. In light of the briefs and other opinions received by the minister in the last two weeks universally condemning this inequity in the budget, would the minister now advise what steps he has taken or intends to take to assign valuation day values to these quotas?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am still of the same opinion as I was before.

Mr. Jarvis: Did the minister hear the brief?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, I certainly did hear the brief and I also met with the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture this morning and discussed it further with him.

FINANCE

RECONVERSION LOAN—REASONS FOR ALLEGED POOR RECEPTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister advise the House what reasons have been reported to him by his officials for the very poor reception the government's $450 million reconversion loan has received on the bond market since it was presented, and does the minister have any steps in mind to improve this situation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the new $450 million refunding issue was brought to the market at a time of great uncertainty in international money markets. This was evidenced by the news on Monday morning of an increase in some United States commercial bank prime rates from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent. While the design of the new issue and its pricing reflected recommendations received from primary distributors and also anticipated difficult market conditions, it did not fully offset the market reaction to developments in the United States market. None the less, the new issue has been largely placed and it is expected that it will soon be fully sold.

POSSIBILITY OF SOME PERSONS PREFERRING TO DRAW BENEFITS RATHER THAN LOOK FOR WORK

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In reply to a question today the minister stated that recipients of unemployment insurance were being disqualified because they were not actively looking for work. While I personally endorse that position, I ask the minister whether he is now stating that jobs are in fact available, and that these jobs are not being filled in some cases because unemployment insurance recipients would rather stay on benefits than look for work?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, an active search for work requirement is exercised in areas where there have been jobs identified. As to the second part of the question, I do not agree with it. I think that nearly all the claimants on benefit are actively searching for work and would prefer to work.

NEW WESTMINSTER—ACTION TO ALLEVIATE OVERCROWDING

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is prompted somewhat by the earlier question dealing with the Millhaven institution. I wish to direct the minister's attention to the British Columbia penitentiary. How long can the B.C. penitentiary be expected to continue with the kind of overcrowding it has and of which the minister is aware? Can the minister give the House some indication when that overcrowding is going to be alleviated?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member an exact date. We have approved new maximum security facilities to be built in New Westminster to take up some of the surplus population at the present New Westminster penitentiary, but I do not know exactly when construction will begin.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is referring primarily to the tariff changes. The Minister of Agriculture and myself have set up a committee to review any adverse effects that may be established or proved under the tariff cuts. If any changes are to be announced they will be announced to the House in due course.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE REFORM OF BAIL AND PAROLE PROCEDURES IN VIEW OF RECENT CRIMES OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of yet another recent murder here in Ottawa my constituents have requested that, on their behalf I demand to know how much longer the government is planning to allow known potential murderers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I interrupted the hon. member too soon. I was trying to recognize as many questioners as possible before calling orders of the day. I had the impression that the hon. member's question asked in those terms was perhaps argumentative. However, I will allow him to complete the question and perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Jelinek: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to rephrase my question. In view of recent murders, including one here in Ottawa, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice how much longer the government is planning to allow known potential murderers, whether on bail or on parole, to roam our streets and endanger the lives of innocent Canadians? Also, are any immediate steps being taken to make the necessary changes in the Bail Reform Act and, if so, when can we expect improvements in this regard and what will they be?

Mr. Speaker: If the minister can reply briefly to all of these questions he will be recognized for that purpose, but I have some reservations about parts of the hon. member's question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, certainly, the doubts are there, but I thank you for the opportunity to say that the question is both illogical and completely improper in suggesting that kind of motivation on the part of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Everyone out of step but Otto.

Is he in a position to indicate when that report will be presented to the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the board recently conducted a seminar in connection with this particular question with other interested parties. I understand they are con-

RAPESEED—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY ON MARKETING

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the speculative marketing of rapeseed is a mint for the private traders and the rapeseed producer is being shafted since price spreads between country elevator points and export position in Vancouver regularly range over 70 cents a bushel, is the minister now prepared to declare official government policy to overcome this situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I think the hon. member knows, rapeseed is sold on the open market and is not subject to direct government control. Even so, I will say that I do not accept the premise of his question. On the other hand, it has been clearly stated many times that we propose to put to producers in the near future a question about their wishes with regard to the marketing of rapeseed and to follow the wishes of the producers.

PROBLEMS OF MUNICIPALITIES IN DEALING WITH PROJECTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, having been informed yesterday by D. G. Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member and others that it is not in order to preface questions by statements or allegations or "whereas" clauses. Questions should be asked as briefly as possible. Hon. members should come to the point in asking their questions.

Mr. MacKay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep it simple. May I ask the minister whether he has found any means or device to ameliorate the problems encountered by municipalities in dealing with DREE projects?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): To the best of my knowledge, the president did not make the reference apparently attributed to him in the newspaper item. In answer to the substantive part of the question, may I say I had a further meeting with the president yesterday afternoon, and with other mayors, and we have been considering a number of alternatives which I shall be glad to discuss with the hon. member or with the committee at any time.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR BREAKDOWN OF ESTIMATED CASH REQUIREMENTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1973-74

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should again like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give me a breakdown of his cash requirements announced for the next fiscal year. I assure him that I am not fussy about the form in which this is done. If he would just send it across the floor to me I would be very happy to receive it.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I have looked into the practice very thoroughly. The practice with regard to both budgetary and non-budgetary items is to present them in a global fashion. I believe there are sound reasons for this practice. In the first place, the non-budgetary forecast contains provisions, the release of which could be prejudicial to the dealings between the Minister of Finance and Crown corporations whose budgets I still have to approve, and discussions between government departments or agencies and the private sector might well be prejudiced were those figures prematurely released. I assure the hon. gentleman that I am relying on the past practice of ministers of finance either from his party or mine.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ESTABLISH A NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That this House, noting that the government has failed to bring about an integrated overall national transportation policy, and further noting the inadequacies of ministerial response to Canada's transportation problems, deplores the government's failure to recognize that Canada's transportation is vital to Canadian unity, regional equality, the encouragement of resource development, the increase of international and domestic trade and the betterment of the urban and rural quality of life and urges that immediate action be taken to establish an over-all national transportation policy to bring about these objectives.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I present this motion to the House this afternoon on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party. I believe the motion bears particular significance inasmuch as the minister responsible for transport has said very little about transportation during the present parliament. I believe, also, it is obvious that the government has failed to recognize the fact that there is, indeed, a transportation problem in this country and that it must be tackled immediately.

Transportation Policy

I am sure there is no one here who doubts that one of the most important issues facing Canada today is the need to develop a sound, co-ordinated, futuristic transportation system. Indeed, it is fair to say that developments in the next 20 years will play a major part in defining that future. On September 1, 1966, when the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill introduced his new policy for transportation, he spoke in glowing terms of what it would mean for the future. According to Mr. Pickersgill, a framework had been created in which transportation would operate not only to serve the public but also to better insure the Canadian treasury and the Canadian taxpayer against unnecessary and undue charges, and, in some cases, duplicated charges for duplicated services. Unfortunately, the government has totally failed to develop a national transportation policy—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: —pursuant to section 3 of the National Transportation Act, and has failed to take measures to revitalize and rebuild Canadian transportation so as to meet present and future needs. As a result of this inaction, we have failed to achieve the two goals of which Mr. Pickersgill spoke. The public is not getting the kind of service to which he referred, nor are taxpayers relieved of what he described as unnecessary and undue charges levied against them.

As a result of the legislation brought down in 1966, the railways have parliament and the minister right where they want them. The companies eliminate services, remove railway stations, close crossings, raise freight rates without any regard for the effects on the people concerned, without any regard for social disruption or the impact on the economy, particularly on the economy of the smaller communities affected. Yet, the people pay. They pay the price in huge subsidies and they pay the price by being deprived of services.

I believe the railways have an obligation not only to provide services. I believe they also have a social and moral responsibility. They grew as this nation grew. They form an integral part of our country. Though now through government hand-outs and their own approach to business they have become stale and stagnant. They have adopted a policy of driving business away, especially in the area of passenger traffic. There is plenty of evidence to support this contention. I am sure every member of the House has received communications from throughout the country critical of railway passenger service. While this is going on, losses climb and taxpayers foot the bill. At the same time, they must suffer discontinuation of services, loss of facilities, confusion and frustration.

One wonders what to expect from the government. The Speech from the Throne contained some reference to transportation but used words like "explore", "examine", and "recognize". Such words can only lead one to conclude that the government is without a policy to deal with transportation issues, though this area is vital to the future of our social and economic fabric. I think it is time we took a bold, new approach toward solving the transportation problems of this country. It is imperative that we do so. The government's inaction is a further manifestation of its bankruptcy of ideas and its total failure to communicate with the provinces and with the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I repeat that bold, positive initiatives must be taken. In the Speech from the Throne the government, as its fourth economic objective, proposed to ensure "that all regions benefit from the prosperity brought about by an expanding economy". No one can argue with that objective. The objective, however commendable, cannot, and I submit will not, be achieved without overcoming some of the gross inequities that are prevalent in our transportation system, particularly as they affect the western provinces and the maritime regions in our country. I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that if he wants to stamp out western alienation let him start with an equitable transportation system and an equitable freight rate structure. No longer is the west interested in simply supplying raw materials and export jobs to the central regions of Canada. If the minister wants the economy of the Atlantic provinces to flourish, let him overhaul the transportation system. For far too long now inept transportation policies have stymied growth and development in this region.

• (1520)

It was just last week that two of our national farm organizations met with Members of Parliament and with the government in the city of Ottawa. Both of these farm organizations used words like "urgent", "critical" and "crucial" with reference to the challenge of overcoming the problems in our transportation system. They advised us that it is vital to overcome some of the inequitable features of our transportation policy if the needs of our agricultural industry are to be met, particularly in the area of fruits and vegetables. If this country is to maintain its leadership role in the supplying of nutritious foods at reasonable cost, it is vital that we take positive steps to overcome transportation inequities as they relate to the maritime provinces. Furthermore, if we are to develop to a greater degree the processing of our agricultural products in the areas where they are produced, then it is imperative too that we institute a more equitable transportation scheme.

What is the government doing about this, Mr. Speaker? In particular, what is the minister doing about this problem? The minister says that he is enjoying his post, but are we getting any leadership from the government or from this minister?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: Of course, the answer is no. Are we getting any answers on important matters of policy which we raise in this House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: Again, the answer is no. Is the minister doing anything about the serious problems that are brought before this House day by day during the question period?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: The answer, of course, is no. What I say is in no way to be construed as a personal attack upon the minister; I know him to be a very personable and amiable chap. He may even be somewhat sympathetic to the needs of transportation. But I am not really sure whether he is interested in transportation, and I am not so sure that he is really happy about his portfolio. Above all, I am not sure that he is really serious about the importance of his portfolio. Perhaps he might enlighten us a little today.

When we review the performance of this minister in this parliament during the period January 4, 1973 to March 12, 1973 the minister is found to have replied inadequately to about 108 questions in this House of Commons. The minister's answers to questions that have been directed to him are punctuated with expressions such as "I think"; "I do not think"; "I believe"; "I do not know"; "I will inquire"; "I will take notice"; "I cannot"; "I am not aware"; "It may be"; "it might"; "it probably"; "I will check"; "when"; "it is very difficult", "in a few weeks"; "as soon as" and "I hope".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am very happy to see the minister checking some of these punctuated expressions, and as I said before this should certainly not be construed as a personal attack upon the minister. I appreciate the fact that he is taking it in good form.

Furthermore, the minister seems to engage in a game of buck-passing, perhaps because of his lack of knowledge, or because of his attitude toward hon. members on this side of the House, or because of the government's lack of policy. I must say that his repertoire of non-commital catch-phrases serves him exceptionally well in warding off any commitments by his department or the government. This non-commital, non-answer philosophy of the minister can only result in further confusion and disservice to Canadians in an area where an effective policy is most essential in combatting regional disparity and promoting national unity.

When the minister spoke in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, he even failed to mention transportation or to elaborate to any degree on the promises which were put forward in the Speech from the Throne. Instead, he harped about the French-English language problem with reference to the election backlash. When he was asked in the House whether he would tell the House what he intends to do about our transportation problems, he simply ignored the question. He engaged in a game of chastising some hon. members for raising certain issues during the election campaign.

In addition, the minister has repeatedly promised in this House to look into such matters as rail line abandonment, rail passenger service, improved airline service, station agency closures, price competition among our airlines. We have not received any answers to these questions. Most of the answers that he has given us are in the form I have just described He and other ministers preceding him have often shrugged off inquiries about increasing travel and freight costs by stating that the Canadian Transport Commission has the authority over such matters. The Canadian Transport Commission itself is an ineffective, misguided and confused authoritative body under the semi-leadership of the Minister of Transport and the direct guidance of Mr. Benson. The latest example is the fiasco of the manner in which it handled the ABC charter regulations, which from time of inception created confusion, and even today we still do not know what is the accurate interpretation of these charter regulations.

The CTC has not carried out the duties assigned to it by Section 3 of the National Transportation Act. It has not concerned itself with the needs of the public and those who use the services of our transportation system; rather it has dedicated itself to the protection and preservation of our airlines and the railways.

Part III of the National Transportation Act which deals with motor vehicle transport is no closer to being implemented today than it was when the act was written, notwithstanding the fact that there have been a number of federal-provincial consultations in this regard. This is most discouraging, Mr. Speaker, and it is unfair to the trucking industry because of the lack of uniformity in highway regulations from province to province. Failure to implement Part III of the act makes it virtually impossible for the Canadian Transport Commission to respond effectively to Section 21 of the act, the object of which is to co-ordinate and harmonize the operations of all carriers engaged in transport by rail, water, aircraft, motor vehicle and pipeline. Truckers, particularly those from western Canada, tell us that it is easier for them to travel the American routes than the trans-Canada route because of the different regulations from province to province. Does that promote national unity Mr. Speaker? Definitely not!

The present minister and his predecessors have persistently said that they have no authority over the Canadian Transport Commission. Whether this is merely passing the buck or a reluctance on their part to become involved in aiding Canadians in the midst of the transportation crisis, I am not sure. However, it appears, according to the ministers, that the Canadian Transport Commission is an autonomous entity and parliament cannot control it. If this is the case, I suggest that the structure should be revamped so that its decisions will not continue to have the detrimental effects they now produce not only on Canadians but on the economy as well.

I want to say to the minister, through you Mr. Speaker, that the answers we have been getting to the transportation problems that effect our country are far from satisfactory. I believe it is fair to say that hon. members on this side of the House are not going to tolerate these non-answers for much longer. I do not believe we are going to tolerate the inexcusable lack of action in various areas of the transportation portfolio. I believe that the time has come when the minister should start levelling with us in the House of Commons and give us some of the information that we so rightly deserve.

However, I am informed that there may be a new era coming. I am informed that a gentleman by the name of Jim Davey has been assigned to the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). According to my information he was previously attached to the Prime Minister's office and was in charge of special projects.

An hon. Member: Where did he run?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Davey has an interesting background as evidenced by his two most recent occupations. He was formerly the vice president of the chartered accountant firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. of Toronto, the firm which was involved in the controversial CNR auditor switch. This was the move that saw the auditor changed via the Benson-Turner formula without parliamentary approval. After this, he was employed as a systems coordinator for Canadian National Railways. His recent assignment to the office of the Minister of Transport may be of significance, since he is considered somewhat of an expert in the transportation field. I am sure that all hon. members on this side of the House will be looking forward to his performance with great interest.

Now, I should like to refer briefly to the matter of freight rates and the discriminatory effect of their structure in the country. That this is so was agreed by many prominent members of the other place when an interesting debate took place there. There is no doubt that freight rates are not only retarding growth in western Canada but are aiding the increased feeling of western alienation toward the rest of Canada. If the Minister of Transport is so concerned about national unity, as was evident in the Speech from the Throne debate, why has he failed to introduce constructive measures to promote this cause in the field of transportation? Shortly after the election the former minister of transport said in Alberta that Alberta must get more industry. According to local newspaper reports, he admitted that Ottawa is to blame for the condition of the economy in the west, and said that a lot of the trouble was due to the fact that we do not have an effective, over-all transportation policy. But what did he do about it? Nothing!

Mr. Woolliams: They moved him out.

Mr. Mazankowski: He realized, after the election, that there was a problem. Western Canada is deeply concerned about discriminatory freight rates, rail line abandonment, station closings, and the reduction of passenger service. It is also concerned about the rationalization taking place in the transportation and handling facilities with respect to grain. We do not know what the government's policy is in this area, but if it does not have a policy perhaps it should delay withdrawing services and closing stations until an adequate and effective review of the situation has been undertaken.

In the Maritimes, the Council of Maritime Premiers has recently condemned the policies of Canada's two major railways. The reasoning behind this is a charge that the railways and the federal government fail to understand the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces. Most maritime businessmen say that high freight rates and federal transportation policies retard industrial development in the region. The situation has become serious enough to induce the three provinces to embark on a joint effort to tackle regional transportation problems.

Obviously, if this is the case, the federal government's ability to combat the regional disparities in its so-called transportation policy is sadly lacking. If the provinces must take the initiative, then what useful purpose does the federal department and the Canadian Transport Commission serve? The same thing is going on in western Canada where the ministers of the three prairie provinces have met to discuss economic objectives, the question of transportation as an instrument of economic policy, railway abandonment and railway structure. The initiative comes from them, Mr. Speaker and not from this minister. Why? This government's approach to federal transportation matters is not good enough. The federal government must develop a policy to co-ordinate all transportation systems or the economic growth of all Canadian regions will suffer. The failure to do so will give rise to further dissatisfaction in the realm of federal-provincial relations, and will create a great deal more alienation and ill-feeling because of regional disparities.

This government has only paid lip service to the demand of the provinces with regard to transportation. Transportation built this country, Mr. Speaker, when the Canadian Pacific Railway linked east and west, and now this link has fallen apart leaving in its wake regional disparities and dissension. There is a lack of planning, a lack of initiative and in view of the inflationary pressures involved, it is urgent that this situation be corrected. As transportation costs increase, so does the price of the goods which must use the transportation systems. The government's inadequacy in this area is severely restricting the economy of the regions. If we were to delve more deeply into the problem, I am sure that we would find one of the root causes to be the failure of the Canadian Transport Commission.

The hold-down policy of the government is interwoven with evidence of a lack of social consciousness of the decisions handed down by the CTC. If the ministry of transport cannot come up with a formula to combat the mismanagement of transportation—and we have some doubt about this because this administration is pretty shaky—then I suggest we should recommend that the Canadian Transport Commission answer to a special parliamentary committee and ensure us that this violation of the public interest will be stopped. If the government and the Minister of Transport cannot come up with an effective transportation policy, then I believe it is time that we had some answers because there is ample evidence outlining the problems. There has been study upon study, and there is no shortage of evidence. I would recommend that a parliamentary committee be struck which would be empowered to study and review this whole matter.

As I say, a great deal of urgency must be attached to this particular question. The government must show a willingness to grapple with the problem and, above all, must show a willingness to accept in a serious way some of the recommendations which may emanate from such a committee study. In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I simply say we are looking for leadership from this government in the area of transportation, and if it cannot supply that leadership we shall.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party welcome the presentation of this motion by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). In fact, I am even a little jealous. I wish we had got there first. However we welcome it. Until some significant changes are made in and about transportation in Canada, it is a matter which should come before this parliament as often as possible. In a country like Canada all aspects of transportation must be treated as essential public services, public services at cost. A national policy and legislation must be designed to effect that objective. I submit that transportation is in the same category so far as Canadian public need is concerned as streets, highways, sewers, water systems, post offices, electric power and telephones. Transportation is an essential public utility. A major revision, and in some ways a reversal, is required in respect of the National Transportation Act. What is required is a major revision of the principles underlying the present archaic approach to transportation which has its roots in the national policy of the 19th century.

In the 1870's, the much subsidized CPR was seen as a vehicle for achieving an integrated national economy from the Atlantic to the Pacific and for joining this country of Canada from sea to sea. In contrast, the National Transportation Act of 1967 states that the national interest is best served by developing an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system, making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest possible cost. With this kind of transportation act, the federal government's foresight, and the foresight of the Canadian Transport Commission, is now restricted to economic efficiency within the transportation system itself. The monopolistic providers of the service can therefore proceed toward their own internal development, and their own objectives, unencumbered by and without regard for any broad national economic or social considerations. This is, in fact, the essence of the hinterland exploitation mentality as it exists today in respect of the whole question of transportation.

The most glaring example of this is the discriminatory setting of freight rates on everything but grain. The railway companies are legally free to maximize revenues where they can. Prairie customers, and to some extent the Maritimes as well, are captives of the railways because of the nature of the goods they have to ship and receive and the length of haul. The west is subject to horizontal freight rate increases and an inequitable transcontinental rate structure. This is an intolerable situation in relation to the development of secondary industry in the west. I should like to give some examples to remind this House again and remind the people of central Canada what is and has been developing in respect of freight rates.

Let us take angles, beams and other steel products. From Contrecoeur, Quebec to Vancouver, the revenue per ton mile is $1.02 while to Regina it is $2.55. In this case, the revenue is more than double. The distance from Contrecoeur to Regina is 1,200 miles less than the distance to Vancouver. The situation with respect of Saskatoon is even worse. The revenue per ton mile is $2.59 compared to $1.02 to Vancouver.

Let us take wire, nails, staples, wire fencing and other steel products. From Sydney, Nova Scotia to Vancouver the revenue per ton mile is 95 cents. To Regina it is $1.77. To Saskatoon it is $1.88. Then, let us take some foodstuffs. I might say that these rates are all taken from the tariffs of the railways which are available to the public. On a 100,000 pound carload the revenue per ton mile from any point in Ontario to Vancouver is $1.41. To Regina it is $2.63, and to Saskatoon $2.73. The tariff on foodstuffs from points in Quebec to Vancouver is $1.35 per ton mile. To Regina it is $2.36 and to Saskatoon it is $2.46.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If you really want to learn about the situation, let us hear about Prince Albert where it is even worse.

Mr. Benjamin: May I say to the right hon. gentleman that the situation in respect of Prince Albert, North Battleford or Swift Current is even worse. Let me emphasize again that Vancouver is 1200 miles farther away than Saskatoon or Regina, and yet the rate per ton mile in this inequitable freight rate structure is almost double to Regina and Saskatoon.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Benjamin: My colleague asks why. It is because of the Canadian geographical situation. Many Canadians are penalized because they happen to live in the far north, in the Maritimes or on the Prairies. I fail to understand why a system of equalized and/or subsidized freight rates cannot be applied all over Canada. The cost of transportation forms a large part of the cost of living in Canada. For example, as I mentioned in the budget debate, Canadian citizens living in Fond du Lac, Saskatchewan have to pay 95 cents a quart for milk. Almost two-thirds of that price is transportation cost.

Because our transportation act of 1967 allows our railways to do what is best for them, the best interests of Canada and Canadians are not being served. Besides discriminatory freight rates of 100 years standing, there has been and is now a continuing downgrading and erosion of railway services in this country. There is a reduced or non-existent passenger service. Secondary and branch rail lines have been allowed to deteriorate to the point of being a disgrace. Rail line abandonments have been announced by the companies which will result in the death of dozens of communities which could and should otherwise be viable. There is an outrageous lack of effort and funds for research and development of modern, faster and safer rail transportation components, particularly in respect of trains and tracks.

I find it passing strange that a national government can allocate $67 million in research and development to private aircraft manufacturers for a short take-off and landing aircraft to haul 15 or 20 people, yet have a dearth of funds in respect of research and development for rail transport or other forms of ground transportation. Canadian National, practically single handed, is carrying on research and development into the turbo train. It gets all the brickbats and this government sits as a patsy for private aircraft manufacturers, most of whom are American owned. Several successive federal governments have been party to and have encouraged the de-emphasizing of rail transportation with a disproportionate priority given to the airlines, most of which are privately owned.

The CNR, as a publicly-owned rail system, is only paid lip service by the government. It is required to operate under financial handicaps and outmoded economic standards that effectively prevent it from adequately serving the Canadian people and the nation. Successive national governments have set up public utilities, such as the CNR and Air Canada, and then have handicapped them with debt structure or limited operational ability to the aid and comfort of the privately owned sectors of transportation. I want to emphasize that, Mr. Speaker, particularly for the benefit of my good friend the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Successive old line party governments do not want, in fact do not dare to have, public utilities such as CNR and Air Canada succeed, as they can and should succeed.

Outmoded theories of competition between our national transportation systems effectively prevent the development of rail and air services to Canadians in all parts of Canada on an equitable basis. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians are discriminated against or ignored in the provision of transportation service which, I repeat, surely is an essential public service and a public utility. The concept of profitability as the main criterion for national transportation systems, inevitably, and by the very nature of transportation, results in inadequate, inefficient and unfair treatment of Canadian transportation needs.

Now, I would like to move to air transportation. Our publicly owned national air transportation system began in 1937. Trans-Canada Air Lines, with the backing of the federal government and of the people of Canada, were given the task of building, operating and gradually extending a national air transport system to serve Canada coast to coast. At a time when the great private, free enterprises could not and would not do it, the people of Canada, through their own public utility, took on the task of establishing a national air transportation system. Again, successive national governments gave lip service to our own publicly-owned system.

As Trans-Canada Air Lines and then Air Canada grew and succeeded, as its prospects, even for profitability and certainly for growth, appeared most attractive, the erosion of their position as a national and international air carrier began. Both old line parties, as governments, followed policies to make available to private enterprise, mostly the CPR, franchises and routes that should have gone to the system that the people of Canada built and own. But no, the CPR was to be again provided for at the expense of our Crown corporation as well as the Canadian public; it was given the gravy. For a number of years we have had an air transportation policy. It is not Orwellian, it is Pickersgillian. That policy is based on a theory which is still held by both the old line parties. The theory is that Air Canada should serve Europe and the Caribbean area, while the CPR should serve the Pacific and Central and South America. What happened?

The next thing we knew the Pickersgillian policy was ignored and CP Air was granted routes to Amsterdam, Lisbon and Madrid. My grade 5 or 6 geography tells me that those cities are in Europe and that particularly Amsterdam is in northern Europe. But CP Air got those routes and all the while our own airline, Air Canada, continued to be excluded from the Pacific countries. Even if one were to live up to this asinine Pickersgillian policy, it is surely not logical, on the one hand, to allow CP Air to intrude into routes into Europe and, on the other, to exclude Air Canada from the Pacific countries. Surely, that situation should not be allowed to continue. In spite of an Air Canada application, CP Air was awarded the routes to Shanghai and Peking. Even while it grows, the government keeps Air Canada on the borderline of success. That whole policy needs to be radically changed, if not completely thrown out.

Similarly, on domestic routes, private regional carriers continue to be granted fat routes that Air Canada developed and that are supported by the Canadian public. The government continues to grant fat routes to private carriers which further prevents Air Canada from prospering as much as it should and prevents it from providing better services on new, isolated routes or on the less lucrative routes. I suppose the classic case of the old line party pork barrel when it comes to airline routes is the granting of a route to Transair from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay to Sault Ste. Marie to Toronto, a route which is in the top ten of the best routes of Air Canada. It is passing strange. Prior to Transair being granted that route they had options on the purchase of two big four motor jets. It is passing strange that an executive assistant of one Jack Pickersgill was on the board of directors of Transair. It is passing strange that the Liberal candidate in the Selkirk by-election, within a matter of weeks after the by-election, became an executive assistant to the president of Transair. As I say, Transair got one of the ten best routes of Air Canada.

An hon. Member: Collusion.

Mr. Peters: That is not honest.

Mr. Benjamin: Air Canada has been placed in such a position that, in another 20 or 30 years, it will be like CNR; it will have a debt load that it can never repay and it will never be allowed to truly function as a national and international carrier representing Canada. The best it will be able to do will be to continue to be eroded and to be ignored in favour of outfits like CPR.

May I say a word about some other areas of transportation. Pipelines are surely public utilities as are other kinds of transportation service. A pipeline is an essential public service and should be publicly owned. It is a common carrier and part and parcel of our entire transportation system. Private enterprise has no relevance, is too inefficient and too costly, to control parts of our national and international transportation systems.

In the area of harbours I would like to ask my good friend, the hon. member for Vegreville, if he really believes that the financial and political powers in his party in central Canada will allow any downgrading or lessening of the importance of ports such as Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto in order to make sure that the port of Churchill is really developed, as well as ports such as Prince Rupert and other ports similar to those two. No way, Mr. Speaker. I have heard a great deal of support expressed by prairie Conservative members for the development of the Port of Churchill. Mr. Speaker, for six years they had an opportunity to do something really imaginative about Churchill and Prince Rupert, and they blew it. The capacity of the Port of Churchill can be doubled and tripled within the next two years. Icebreaking services need to be improved. Wharf facilities, terminal facilities, and other ancillary services required at the port need to be constructed. A sum of $100 million or $200 million needs to be injected into the port, and a further $100 million should be spent on upgrading rail line service into the port. But this government, like all the other old line governments, has the imagination of a doorknob. If something is going to detract from Vancouver, Montreal or Toronto, then it will not do it. That is the government's way. And then members of the government wonder about alienation, and disaffection with it throughout great regions of the country.

I want to submit to the House, Mr. Speaker, what the NDP believes in and supports as part of a national transportation policy. The first and central thrust of such a policy should be that interprovincial and national transportation systems are an essential public services, and should be treated as public utilities which will provide service at cost, with profitability taking second place. An NDP government would bring about public ownership of the CP system, not just of its railway but of its airlines, its ships, pipelines, mineral rights, and various processing plants which it now operates. Everything that the Canadian Pacific system has built up over the years has been derived from the grants of money and land made to it, with the consequent siphoning-off of railway profits into other operations such as high rise office buildings and land speculation. What business the CPR ever had in getting into such things is something I do not know.

An NDP government would bring about a transfer of the balance of the CNR public debt—almost $2 billion—to the government of Canada in exchange for an equivalent value of shares, thus making the people of Canada the sole owners of our railway system. An NDP government would also bring about public ownership of interprovincial and multiprovincial pipelines. We would bring about a combination of equalized and/or subsidized passenger, freight, express and telecommunication rates right across Canada, in order to eliminate discrimination against Canadian citizens and enterprises because of geographical location, and apply such rates to the kinds of goods that people in all areas need to ship and receive.

Immediately needed is a five-year moratorium on railway branch line abandonment and agency closures, and we should halt and reverse the over centralization of customer service centres. Mr. Speaker, I see you are about to get to your feet, and I would like to tell you that I should be able to finish in about two minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Perhaps the best way to do this would be by unanimous consent, in view of the fact that the time allotted to the hon. member has expired. Does the House agree unanimously to let him continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your kindness and that of my colleagues. I shall conclude quickly.

The seventh thing the NDP believes in and would bring about as a government would be the complete integration of rail, air and ground transportation services. Surely, it is nonsensical to waste so much money and investment on trying to improve air service from downtown Ottawa to downtown Montreal, considering that those two cities are so close together. I suspect that even now one can get as quickly by bus or rail from Ottawa to Montreal as one can get by air from downtown Ottawa to downtown Montreal. Surely, the current expenditure on this air service is a waste. Our ground and rail transportation systems suffer as a result. All three modes of transportation should be integrated, particularly rail and bus service for certain short hauls, and rail and air service for long hauls. The equalization of air fares is also essential for the movement of people in Canada. Without equalized air fares, people who live in Inuvik or Yellowknife are discriminated against outrageously simply because they do not happen to live in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto.

The eighth thing an NDP government would do would be to undertake massive public investment into research, development and production of turbo, air cushion and monorail transportation for intercity and city transportation systems. Our metropolitan areas alone cannot cope with the necessary research and development, let alone with the installation and operation of the new kinds of systems that are required.

I close by saying that we must quit handicapping the public transportation utilities, mainly Air Canada and Canadian National Railways. We must quit preventing them from being the kind of success that they can and should be. We must quit stacking the decks against public enterprises in transportation systems. We must quit doing such ridiculous things as having Air Canada go to the New York financial market to issue $26,633,000 worth of securities, none of which were offered for sale to the Canadian public, all of which were offered for sale in the United States, half of which were bought by four U.S. insurance companies and bonding companies, with the rest going to what are called institutional investors in the United States. This is shameful. It should make any Minister of Transport blush. And all of this money went for the leasing of 2 Lockheed aircraft after the government let $50 million go down the drain on a Canadian hydrofoil. Surely the people of Canada would have provided that kind of investment money for Air Canada.

The transportation systems of Canada must become public utilities. They must be publicly owned. The sole basis of their operations must be service to Canadians, moving goods and people at cost, without discrimination against where people live. This means equalization of fares, freight and express costs. Without these things this country cannot stay as united as it should be. Without these, sections of our country will still feel angry and alienated. But with these things we can have the kind of transportation system of which we are capable, a system that can operate in a northern climate over vast distances, and that can serve citizens in any part, and I stress any part, of the Dominion of Canada.

Transportation Policy

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we are very happy to participate in the debate on the motion presented by the Progressive Conservative party and which reads as follows:

That this House, noting that the government has failed to bring about an integrated overall National Transportation Policy, and further noting the inadequacies of ministerial response to Canada's transportation problems, deplores the Government's failure to recognize that Canada's transportation is vital to Canadian unity, regional equality, the encouragement of resource development, the increase of international and domestic trade and the betterment of the urban and rural quality of life—urges that immediate action be taken to establish an overall National Transportation Policy to bring about these objectives.

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker I am very happy to see that the minister is here. I think he is noting our remarks and I hope that this day will be more fruitful than all the speeches we have been making for years.

I recall the period of Mr. Donald Gordon, the years of struggle. We have known difficult years which bore more fruit than all the years we are living now.

At that time at least, the president of the Canadian National reacted but for some years, we seem to be running our head against a wall: the more we talk, the less effect it has. I think that if things keep going as they are now, in my area at least, the Canadian National will disappear.

Today I want to talk a little about the CN and then deal with our air service.

Are we justified in comparing what it costs the country to administer a company like the Canadian National, in return for the services provided? I think any hon. member is shocked when he is made aware of the disbursements of the Canadian National. For example, a bill in favour of the Canadian National that has just been introduced in the House, sets forth the estimated requirements of this company for 1973.

The Canadian National, in spite of all its receipts, says that in 1973 it will have to invest $138,978,000 in railway properties, $13 million in branch lines, $31,897,000 in equipment, $25,946,000 in telecommunications, $5,679,000 in hotels and $8,800,000 in the CN Tower Limited, for a grand total of $225.5. And we are told what to expect for 1974, costs of $75 million and a few $100 million, with an almost unlimited borrowing power.

I wonder when the government will finally realize that perhaps the civil servants do not play their part in an impeccable manner. I do not blame the minister because he just assumed his new responsibilities. I am sure he is not more responsible of that situation than I could be myself, but the CN high ranking officials have full powers and they are those who are responsible for the astronomical administration cost of the services provided by the company.

Quite a few things can be seen in this administration, Mr. Speaker. Really, it is to be wondered whether the administrators want to give more services to the Canadians or if they simply want to break the government of Canada through the CN. The more we go—and they call this evolution—the more the offices are filled with personnel, the more we see people getting annual salaries of $30,000, $35,000, $50,000 or $60,000. What are they doing in those offices? I ask you.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Some hon. Members: They are not doing much.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): As the hon. member said, they are not doing much.

So as to increase this personnel they are reducing the number of men assigned to various services so that now they are getting involved in the construction of hotels.

Some civil servants are convinced that the CN is a hotel system whereas it is a transportation service. They forget that the people needed to fill up these hotels must get there by railways. I warn my dear civil servant friends that if they want their luxury hotels to turn a profit they must first send back a fair number of workmen on the railway to fix it and to make it more accessible to "big transportation" because we have had more derailments over the last few years than ever before.

Let us consider the losses caused these last few years by derailments. There are no more maintenance crews. We now have three foremen for one every maintenance man. I think the government will have to get involved and remove some freedom from all these senior officials who only dream of grandeur.

In my constituency, a servo-centre was established. Mr. Speaker, that is a wonderful thing. I even went to the opening of that centre, about which the following was said and I quote:

The establishment of this centre is a significant step in the CN service improvement program. That program provides for the establishment of a country wide servo-centre network, under which one of the most modern data processing systems will be made available to customers in the most distant areas.

I wonder where the Canadian National gets its customers in our area because the only people using the CN are the Aluminum Company of Canada Limited, Domtar Chemical Limited and four or five big manufacturers. It seems as though everything had been built for their benefit.

However, we read this:

The establishment of these centres in Canada concerns two essential railroad services: full carloads and express transport.

At the end, they say:

Servo-centres will also include passenger services and telecommunications.

Once more I wish to draw the attention of the House on passenger services. I said a while ago that the more progress we made the less service we got. We had two sleeping-cars last year, but today there is only one third of one. As a matter of fact, there are a few berths at the end of the lounge car and they call that the sleeping-car for the whole of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area. Quite an achievement considering all the money the CN is getting in our area. Let us not forget that in Quebec it is from our area that the CN gets most of its freight transport revenue. And I had figures published in this regard.

• (1620)

Not only is there no sleeping car but the coaches are not even clean, which is not likely to attract customers, so that each year their number decreases. When one has travelled by train once, one thinks twice before doing it again.

During my last trip, it took me exactly 20 hours to cover 400 miles. I spent 20 hours on the train—practically a work week—and the 40-hour week on the train is much more difficult than my 40, 60 or 70-hour work week.

Mr. Isabelle: It is less of a strain.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Because it is less shaky.

Once more, I simply wanted to draw the attention of the House to this, because I have also heard that, for many years, senior officials have been willing to eliminate the passenger service, at least between Chambord and Dolbeau, or between Chambord and Chicoutimi.

As far as the servo-centre is concerned, I do not know who carried out the study, but we know that Chambord is the centre of the region since connections for the whole region of the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean are made there. And in Chambord, there is nothing left! A servo-centre was established at the other end of the line, in Jonquière, and another in Saint-Félicien, while had there been only one service in Chambord, the whole region could have been covered. But no, it was deemed useful to spend money and establish two servo-centres. Consequently, the service is quite unsatisfactory.

Before, in Chambord, they used to repair coaches or locomotives. Everything was closed down. When a car or a locomotive breaks down it is hooked onto the back of the train and brought back to Montreal for repair. A valve cannot even be repaired in Chambord. I have even seen passenger cars frozen stiff during winter. They have to be brought back to Montreal for defreezing whereas before mechanics used to repair them on the spot. All that was done away with to modernize and centralize. It is because of problems like that that we no longer have passenger services.

I do not want to take all my time to talk about the Canadian National because I have talked about it on several occasions here and because I am convinced that the result of this debate today will amount to a big zero. But I think that if people decided—

Mr. Isabelle: Are you not confident?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): What?

Mr. Isabelle: Are you not confident?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): No. I have no confidence left. I hope the minister will try and restore confidence. As a matter of fact, he does all he can to restore confidence during election time. He promises the moon and stars but you do not see him afterwards. I like it when he comes to my riding, not when he comes just to make promises but to launch projects.

I hope that this time the minister will listen to us.

Turning to another subject I would like now to say a few words about Roberval airport. It is again an issue that this minister knows very well because he actually walked on the runway at Roberval. He will remember that in the month of June 1972 the city of Roberval sent him a resolution from the minutes of the meeting of the city of Roberval which read as follows:

> The Mayor told the members of the Council about the meeting with Messrs. Beaudry, Coulombe and Taillon of the Department of Transport. The latter announced that major alterations would be carried out at the municipal airport. Only 3,500 feet of the airstrip will be used, closing off a very bumpy section, while still allowing the safe landing of some types of aircrafts.

When a runway is damaged, instead of having it repaired, only part of it is used. Very soon, it will just be long enough for toy airplanes. Let me quote further:

> The landing beacons will be set up accordingly and the existing ones will remain unused along the closed-off section. The 3,500-foot airstrip will be marked with white-painted lines as on the model provided and the costs will be incurred by the city.

The government could not even afford to get the white lines painted: he had the city pay for them. I continue with the question:

> Following this statement, the following resolution was passed: It is moved by councillor Philippe-Auguste Morin, seconded by councillor Léonce Desgagné and unanimously resolved that the council of the City of Roberval make the Department of Transport aware of its disapproval concerning this decision and that it urges the said department to proceed immediately with the repair of the runway so as to make it usable on its whole length. Where minor repairs were involved, the City of Roberval assumed responsibility for them in accordance, as much as possible, with its contract with the Department. In the same contract, it is provided that any major repair is the sole responsibility of the department. It goes without saying that this work should be done at the Department's expense, even though the cost of the repairs are of a sizeable amount. The City of Roberval having invested over $600,000 in the development of the airport, the Department should realize the great extent of its participating and provide immediately for repairs.

Well, many representations have been made, in particular on June 28, 1972 when they acknowledged receipt of a letter I had written to the present minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) who was then Minister of Transport. I will quote another letter that I received from the city of Roberval. It stated:

> To follow up our telephone call, please find herewith a copy of a letter we received from Mr. Baribeau, regional director of Quebec, . . .

And Mr. Baribeau's letter reads as follows:

> Thank you for your letter of December 20, 1971 regarding the runway of your municipal airport which seems to have caused you some trouble in recent years. Before answering your letter I had to wait for my engineers to make a thorough study of the problem and they have just completed their report.
> These studies show that the northern part of the runway (the first 1,500 feet) should be entirely rebuilt, at an approximate cost of $315,000, which would be very difficult to justify at present if one considers that the kind of aircraft flown by Fecteau Transport Aérien, namely the British Islander, may operate in all safety on the other part of the runway which is still in good condition.
> When one of our aircraft used it about one month ago, someone did notice that the northern part of the runway was not in very good condition though quite safe for several types of planes. However, to be on the safe side, we propose to move the threshold of runway 16 southward, making thus a runway 3,500 feet long, which is enough for many aircraft including the DC-3.

And I happened to make a representation in this House about aircraft that are used for bush flights, to fight against forest fires. Such aircraft cannot land on a 3,500 foot runway.

Mr. Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up. Unless he obtains unanimous consent of the House, he will not be able to continue with his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is it agreed that the hon. member should complete his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleagues.

Concerning the Roberval airport, I know the minister is concerned about it, since the project is on his desk. He will have the assistance of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who committed himself during the last election campaign; I sent him a photograph, a photograph of him taken on the Roberval landing strip when he promised that he would personally make sure that the landing strip is rebuilt. I feel the Minister of Finance has made a tremendous commitment. I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) not to hesitate, to go and see the Minister of Finance and have him keep his word.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to another airport now being built. I have delivered to the minister personally the specifications of the Dolbeau airport. A letter was sent to the minister on January 16. I believe that this letter is on file at his office; I do not know who was the incumbent minister at the time. The letter reads as follows:

> Two years ago, a committee was set up by the city of Dolbeau for the purpose of developing the local airport at Saint-Méthode, county of Roberval. That airport is located in the geographic centre of Roberval county and was first built by the Department of National Defence in the forties to be used in emergencies.
> We submitted a request to your departmental officials and those officials paid us a visit to look into the technical merits of our request.
> The purpose of our letter is to acquaint you with the situation and also to ask you to agree to our request when your officials put before you a positive recommendation.

The minister is aware of the situation; I spoke to him briefly concerning that report, which I handed him. That project is worth studying, especially as the city of Dolbeau owns that beautiful flat land. I believe that the minister has gone over the field which it is quite suitable. I do not know whether he has given a final reply to the city of Dolbeau which simply asked that the work be speeded up. It would be a good thing if we could get something by next summer. This field would be used mostly as a stopover for tourist planes, fishermen's and forest protection planes. An asphalt coating for this runway would not be too expensive and I honestly think that this would prove to be a genuine asset for our area. It would complete the air transportation system at Roberval. I am led to believe the minister is willing to look seriously into whatever is wrong with the Roberval airport. I hope, also, that a thorough study will be made in connection with the Dolbeau airport and that the area will get something for next summer.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the outcome of this afternoon's debate will be but surely certain facts will come out which will significantly help us, under whatever government, to follow a transportation policy which will truly meet our general needs.

It is normal and rather easy to criticize the government but if there is a concensus on general objectives it is not a total loss. I have been quite impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who stated a number of truths I will elaborate on later.

But the basic truth which came out of this afternoon's debate—and I would like everyone to remember it—is that this country, which we call Canada and which is ours, probably could not exist without an adequate transportation system, without all the regions being interconnected and, economically speaking, without all the Canadian regions being able to communicate with the rest of the country.

Canada—and this is nothing new—is a large country which spreads from Halifax to Vancouver and into the far north and surely if instead of speaking of unity in abstract terms each of those great regions were interconnected, that would do more for unity than anything else.

Over the weekend—if memory serves me right I left Friday noon—I went to the Arctic region. I stopped over in Calgary; I went to Inuvik and to Yellowknife and by five o'clock Sunday I was back in Ottawa without being unduly tired. This means that with modern transportation it is possible to know physically this country. Besides, I have had the opportunity to say in the North that a country which is not settled, which is not developed is not a country which actually belongs to us. It is a country which stays somewhat alien because it is not integrated, it is not developed. Furthermore it feels very isolated not only from the rest of Canada but from the whole continent.

We have today modern means of making it possible for Canadians to go out of their regional isolation. And this is very important. But at the same time, the fact that these modern means are put at the disposal of the public inevitably creates frictions.

There are things which were not accepted 50 or 100 years ago for the simple reason that what happened in Ontario, in Vancouver or in Nova Scotia was not known. But communications today enable us not only to be informed but also to travel very quickly from one place to another, so that we get the physical impression that this country is really ours and that we have the means not only to exploit it but also to enjoy it.

I think that this is the basic idea, both from the point of view of national unity and from the economic and social points of view. In fact, it is important that we have what my friend the hon. member of Vegreville (M. Mazankowski) called a policy of integrated transport and that, of course, even if we cannot do everything at a moment's notice, we know all the same the short and long term objectives so that Canadians know that in 5, 10, 15 or 20 years this country will really be crisscrossed by adequate transport and communication systems.

Mr. Speaker, I think that transportation in Canada is a tremendous subject and I also think that it is extremely important, even vital. It is probably one of the greatest problems in Canada: a problem of communications and a problem of transport. I simply regret that, especially in the case of the official opposition, no suggestions have been put forward.

I listened very closely to my good friend from Vegreville and I shall do like him, that is, tell him he is a nice fellow and then tell him unpleasant things. That is what he did to me; I am quite willing to play the same little game. I am sure he is sincere, but I told myself while listening to him: surely, at some point or other he will speak of transport, and tell us the Progressive Conservative party has pondered the problem. But no, he took pleasure in counting the times I gave evasive answers in the House. I shall give him the statistics: he will see that even on that score he is wrong. Anyway, it is all very amusing. As the new Minister of Transport, I am quite willing to be made fun of, because I intend to feel free to do so too.

In any event, I am sorry the Progressive Conservative party has nothing to offer with regard to such an important subject. Still the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) honours me by being here this afternoon. He will speak after me; I am therefore taking chances. I checked to see whether between 1958 and 1962 the Progressive Conservative party had really drawn up an integrated transport policy for Canada, but I found nothing. Doubtless he can tell me where I can find it, that we might be able to follow the pillar of light that got lost in the mists of time.

We see that there are problems. The most obvious of these is the problem of transportation costs, especially in western Canada. I am as amazed as anyone in the House when I come across freight rates that are higher for goods transported to Regina than for those transported to Vancouver or elsewhere. I can understand it in the context of the capitalist system, but that does not make it any more sensible; anyone who believes in profits and in the private enterprise system knows that any company tries for the highest yield that the market can absorb. And that is the only valid explanation, because from a rational point of view, there is no other. It is not just surprising, even if an explanation can be found within the context of the present system, but it is also not very rational in my opinion, it is even a provocation, to set up such a system.

That, Mr. Speaker, is why, in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and immediately following it, I said that as soon as I had the time and as soon as the western premiers were free, I would be prepared to meet with them. They postponed the meeting with the representatives of the railway companies, not out of bad faith, Mr. Speaker, but because they wanted to have an opportunity to get together. I believe they are meeting on March 28 or 29; I do not remember the exact date. Then they will be prepared to meet the representatives of the railway companies, upon which they will be ready to meet me to talk about precisely this problem of freight rates and transportation costs in the West. And I trust that, with everyone's co-operation, we will manage to improve the present situation, which is frequently intolerable.

We have been trying for years to do the same thing in the Maritime provinces, with the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act, and also with a Transport Committee with jurisdiction over all the Atlantic provinces, which looks into all their problems. I am meeting the premiers of the Maritime provinces on April 9 to discuss how we can remedy the freight rate situation in that region. Unfortunately, I cannot do more than this; it will be the first chance I have to take action and, since our friends of the official opposition are tying us down and trying to paralyze government action as much as they can, of course, I have to ask the premiers of the Maritimes to come and meet me in Ottawa. Otherwise, I cannot see how I could do it, except on Sunday morning before Mass—for those who attend it. In any case, there is a problem in the Maritimes. There is no doubt about that. And it is a problem to which we are trying to find a solution.

Mr. Speaker, let me get away from regional demagogy for a while; one should not think that the one and only problem in the Maritimes is a transportation problem and that everything else would automatically straighten out if this problem were solved. Unfortunately, this is not true. How I would like it to be so, because the moment a solution would be found to the transportation problems, all the problems in those provinces would be solved, but that is not true. Still, we are going to make an effort in that direction.

Concerning this effort, we want it to be in co-operation with the provinces, with those concerned. If members think that by developing a general policy and applying it to the country in general, they will have solved the problem, they are mistaken, because they will only have given rise to new grievances, since the regions want the solutions we bring to really answer their respective needs.

This is why, when we conducted a study on urban transport in Winnipeg, for example, we worked jointly with the province and the municipality. We paid three quarters of the costs—I think it was $500,000—to determine whether it would be advisable to relocate the railway tracks in a city, whether to put them under or above ground, and what would be the best solution with regard to the impact on urban development. I hope that the example of Winnipeg will be followed in other cities, because the same problem occurs in many Canadian cities with railway tracks running through them and hindering the normal urban development. We are dealing with the matter and are making considerable progress.

I should now like to refer to the Maritime provinces. For example, we are told: "What are you doing about coastal traffic and the findings of the Darling report"? I will tell you what is being done with the Darling report after meeting with the Atlantic premiers who fear that the implementation of that report's recommendations would result in increased transportation costs, because, of course, foreign coasting vessels in the Maritimes often have extremely underpaid crews and do not have to bear the same costs as Canadian ships.

Nevertheless, I believe we should take every possible means in order that coastal shipping be done by Canadian ships and crews. But before we can make such a decision,

I want to be sure that the Maritime provinces concerned are not only consulted but are satisfied, that their position will not be worse than it is now.

That is one of the problems facing us that we are trying to solve under a comprehensive program.

Reference was made to Canada's air policy, it is not an easy thing, to be sure, for this is a vast country and there are grievances against the companies. Certainly we are one of the few countries—apart from the United States—with two great intercontinental companies competing with one another at times, which obviously raises a real problem. How can it be solved? We are looking into the matter. Can they really live side by side and develop harmoniously? Time will tell, but the department is looking into the matter and the least we can do—and I believe that is what the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre said—is to act in such a way that the state-owned company, or even the other one, are not placed in such a competitive position that sooner or later Canadians taxpayers will have to pay the cost of that apparent luxury of having two big companies serving Europe and the whole world.

What is important and fundamental for us in Canada is that we should seek abroad our share of the market, that Canadians should be able to go almost anywhere in the world on Canadian carriers and that foreigners should be able to come to this country with our own airlines, which also applies to air cargo. That is what is important if we want to prosper. In principle, I see no objection to the operation of two air carriers, but I object to their destroying one another, with the taxpayer ending up picking up the tab. But if they are wise they can share the traffic and try to make the most of the dual system. That is worth considering. I tried to understand the policy of the Progressive Conservative party on that matter. I already know that of my hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre. I did not understand that of our Progressive Conservative friends, but I suppose they will tell us what they think sooner or later.

We have tried to reach new agreements with some countries. We recently signed an agreement with West Germany which not only gives us access to two more German cities, but also gives us what is known as the "fifth freedom of the air", in other words the right to leave Germany for destinations in other countries. We have also signed an agreement with China, under which CP Air will serve Peking and—

Mr. Benjamin: Who gets Milan and the other two places?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The next time we make a move, you will know who will get the Milan route.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When will that be?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): In due course, as the right hon. member used to say when he was on this side of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are trying to develop our air transport companies; we are trying to have them serve as many places as possible, and thus get their share of the passenger and freight markets.

All this brings us to discuss the problem of airports in Canada. Ever since it has been my honour and my great pleasure to be the Minister of Transport, I have heard talk of nothing but airports. As I was saying recently, I used to think Canada consisted of ten provinces, with two official languages and various ethnic groups. I had a very naive notion of Canada; when you get down to it, that is not Canada. Our country is split into two groups: those who want airports and those who do not want them. And I am caught between the two.

Aviation has developed during my generation; when I started working several years ago and a friend made a plane trip, we used to go down to his place to hear about his trip, because at that time very few people travelled by plane. When I was a little boy in Champlain and we heard the sound of a plane, we used to run out to see that wonderful thing. It was extraordinary, but that kind of poetry has disappeared.

The plane is no longer a bird, no longer an expression of human intelligence but a monster threatening the lives of people, a kind of cancer, and some people are afraid of it.

When there was talk of building an airport in the province of Quebec, it was not because we were behind or because another approach was being taken, but because people fought for it throughout the province. Some wanted it at Drummondville, others elsewhere.

Toronto no longer wanted it. The people in Pickering want the airport to be built elsewhere—and I understand them—but those are decisions we have to make.

In Vancouver, where they have had an airport for less than 30 years, adding another runway has created a great problem.

Now what does that mean? That means simply—and I accept it readily—that we did not expect those new reactions from people who are not necessarily enthused over the fact that planes will be landing close to their homes. People want reasons; it is true that the sound produced by modern airplanes is a great inconvenience. There will have to be a new approach about people, that is to say that before making such important decisions we undoubtedly need more consultation and information so that people will not consider progress as a threat to their peace, their security and even their life.

Mr. Speaker, we will continue to have airports in Canada as long as I will be Minister of Transport because I would be making a great mistake if, except for very serious reasons, I were to deprive a city such as Vancouver of an adequate airport. I know that the coming generation would not forgive us.

Our territory is becoming more and more settled. This is now the case in the United States; one day soon we will hear about a report presented to the president of the United States which will reveal how shortsighted people were not to set land aside for airports.

There is one thing that we could not do without in 1972 and even less in 1980: the aircraft and especially the jet which is here to stay. Maybe some hon. members still enjoy the poetry of the bus, and so on, but I believe that for practical reasons the great majority of Canadians prefer flying.

Our friend from Regina-Lake Centre spoke about research in the field of transport but he took inconsistent position: he referred to the STOL aircraft. He said that was designed to encourage private enterprise. That is not true.

With the STOL system, we wish to make an experiment not to establish a permanent system between Montreal and Ottawa but to show that this system is possible. If it is, it means that there would be an external market for STOL aircraft which would secure jobs for Canadians and allow our economy to develop in this particular area.

Now, the hon. gentleman bares a grudge against the fact that, very often, our aircraft industry is controlled by Americans. I agree with him. He only needs to ask his friend, Premier Schryer of Manitoba who is facing the same problem with the aircraft companies settling in Winnipeg.

I am not here to change the whole system but to see that development in the aircraft industry meets our needs. So, the STOL experiment is a research investment and we are trying to show that it will serve the travellers while providing an outlet on the international market. Furthermore, I have once again heard about the hydrofoil which cost I do not know how many million dollars. But if our friend from Regina really believes in research and thinks it necessary to find new transportation means, he must not forget that many million dollars will have to be spent and possibly for nothing. The very principle of research itself is that you cannot help but work without knowing exactly what is really going to happen. We know in what direction we are working, but we do not know what the result will be.

We simply have to recall the two scientists of the United States Bell Company, who have discovered the transistor principle. They had carried out research for many years and one day they invented the first transistor which possibly cost many million dollars. But when they found the secret, it revolutionized the world.

In order to deal with almost all subjects, I shall say a word about our maritime policy. What are we doing in this field? We are trying to make our harbours efficient. We know, for instance, that there is a change in the field of maritime transportation where they have started using containers as well as huge tankers. We are endeavouring to equip our ports to cope with these changes. So, it is incorrect to say that we are not considering these things. On the contrary, we do consider them, as we did concerning the Vancouver and St. John harbours.

We are now considering two other harbours, probably in eastern Canada, and more particularly in the Maritimes, because we know that the future of transport is in that field. In fact, we will see before long some huge cargo ships, container ships, or tankers in our harbours. And we have on the east coast an asset which is entirely ours.

There are, in fact, no deep-water harbours in the United States. On our east coast, we have them, namely in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, near the mouth of the St. Lawrence and that is a tremendous resource which we are striving to develop as rationally as possible. To benefit by that advantage, we must not only resort to dredging in certain places but we must also equip ourselves with port facilities geared to the future.

I shall now broach the subject of northern development. At the present time, it is not all just talk; we are extending the highway along the Mackenzie corridor. I have just returned from a visit to that region and I feel there are terrific developments there. They have modern airports. Actually, I officiated at the inauguration of two of them, where there have been extensions. They have been provided with facilities, electronic technology and equipment for the purpose of increasing air security in the region.

For instance, we shall soon be setting up systems called VORDME—Very High Frequency Omnidirectional Range—in Yellowknife, Inuvik, Frobisher Bay, Resolute Bay and Whitehorse, as well as distance-gauging instrument in order that air traffic in the north may offer a maximum of security.

The Northern Transportation Company Limited has met with great success this year; besides everybody wants to buy it.

Then again, Mr. Speaker, we are faced with the problem of the Canadian Transport Commission. I hope that I shall have the opportunity of discussing it further, because often we are told: You claim that Parliament cannot do anything about it. I think that the hon. member for Vegreville has been mistaken because if he checks the blues he will see that nobody ever claimed that Parliament had no jurisdiction over the Canadian Transport Commission. He probably meant "the government" because Parliament has jurisdiction over that commission. There is no doubt that should Parliament decide to change—

• (1700)

[English]

The House of Commons has authority over the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Manzankowski: It does not.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, it has; we can change the law.

[Translation]

However, being the government, we cannot give instructions to the Canadian Transport Commission. Only in a few cases appeals can be directed to the minister, such as the granting of permits. Otherwise, right or wrong, the House of Commons has legislated on the status quo of this body, as for better or for worse there has been legislation on the autonomy of the CBC, the CRTC, the Polymer Corporation Limited and others. This indicates there is some kind of Canadian tradition whereby some activities are safeguarded even against government action. If this concept were to be a matter of doubt, I am quite willing to discuss it very freely, Mr. Speaker, because I have my own opinions on this subject. However, I had the law applied as it is and I have assumed responsibility for the commission as it has been established. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, I do not recall that, between the years 1958 to 1962, under the Progressive Conservative administration, there were important amendments to the National Transportation Act to empower the government to give instructions to this commission.

There have been a few brief comments about charter planes. Naturally every time changes have been made—this is the second time a change has occurred in this field—there has to be a five or six month readjustment period. On the other hand, the opposition members have been really helpful in this area. Cases were submitted to me and I had some changes made. No doubt there will be other matters to look into shortly and hon. members will certainly not hesitate to tell me about them.

At any rate, I have dealt with only part of the department's operations. To say in very broad and vague terms that the department has done nothing, has devised nothing and produced nothing is somewhat exaggerated. To tell us that we have not acted quickly enough, that we have made mistakes, that there are better solutions, that is a bit too thick! The opposition members really are a little too secretive; having once pretended they were robbed of some of their ideas, they seem to put away in a safe their few other remaining ideas, but why do they not sport them in the open? I for one should be happy to hear them state an integrated transport policy as they conceive it, as well as a subsidy policy also the way they see it. Now the spokesman for the official opposition perhaps was not prepared to do it, but the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), former prime minister, for his part, is prepared. No doubt he will be in a position to tell me what I have to do in the department in order to have Canada effectively provided with the best possible transportation system, so that we might be able to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that a sincere effort is being made in the department, which includes the Canadian Marine Transportation Administration, the Canadian Surface Transportation Administration, the Northern Transportation Company Limited, the Arctic Transportation Agency, Air Canada, a Crown corporation, the Canadian National, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, the National Harbours Board. The department is extremely complex and if ever the hon. member for Vegreville becomes Minister of Transport—when he is very old—he will be able to see how easy it is to harass a Minister of Transport since he can never know everything, be aware of everything that may go on in such a complicated and altogether important box.

We must solve the transportation problems of the Maritimes and the west and we must ensure that our air transport companies develop normally. We also have a harbour policy as well as all the necessary elements to further the progress of Canada and I think had this resolution been serious in the least, it would have given rise to a really useful debate on the subject of transportation.

This motion so far has only given the opposition an opportunity to make a few jokes—I thought one of them was funny—and allowed my good friend from the Lake St. John area to speak about the Roberval airport. I think I shall not take up the time of the House to comment on this, but I shall see the hon. member and we shall certainly agree eventually on this question.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell)—Shipbuilding—Extension of subsidies beyond March 31; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Ports—Churchill—Action to achieve greater utilization; the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Gauthier)—Bilingualism—Teaching of French on a trial basis in the national capital.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House, noting that the government has failed to bring about an integrated over-all national transportation policy, and further noting the inadequacies of ministerial response to Canada's transportation problems, deplores the government's failure to recognize that Canada's transportation is vital to Canadian unity, regional equality, the encouragement of resource development, the increase in international and domestic trade and the betterment of the urban and rural quality of life—urges that immediate action be taken to establish an over-all national transportation policy to bring about these objectives.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I like to see parliament live. I enjoy a good debate and a contribution to the debate from whatever quarter it is made. For that reason I am always fond of hearing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) who, with a minimum of argument, makes a maximum of speech. The House lives when he speaks because he is actually debating. However, I think his speech may be well summed up by the words he used earlier when he said: "Whenever we decide to act we will let you know in due course". We found out today that "due course" has not yet arrived. We had a dissertation on the subject of national unity to which I want to make passing reference. The minister claimed that little or nothing has been advanced except by the hon. member from the province of Quebec, who I thought made a quite thoughtful contribution and one which indicated there is indeed a degree of diminuition of morale in respect of the Canadian National Railway that can be attributable only to the fact that there is not now and is apparently not in anticipation a national transportation policy.

Before I go into detail, I must congratulate the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for what I thought was an exceptionally well reasoned speech on a subject which needs to be discussed. The minister touched on no part of the resolution. He did not touch on the suggestion that there should be an integrated over-all national transportation policy. The hon. member noted the inadequacy of the ministerial response to Canada's transportation problems, and the minister's speech has fully established that. He deplored the government's failure to recognize that Canadian transport is vital to Canadian unity, regional equality and resource development. This represents a cogent criticism of the policies of this government, or the lack of policies if I might use a better description.

I have known the minister through the years. I remember when I was Prime Minister he belonged to a party other than the one to which he belongs today. That was before the three horsemen of the Apocalypse found their way into the Liberal party. I admire his capacity for speech. I admire the enthusiasm the minister can work up in making generalities very attractive. However, when you come to finally analyzing what he said, the question becomes a simple one.

For a period of years, he was Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. During that period of years there was no endeavour on the part of the minister or the government to do anything regarding regional development on the Prairies, for instance. They were forgotten. That is one of the reasons the government received such a shellacking on the Prairies in the last federal election. One would have thought there would have been some hope of reformation. The minister spent hundreds of millions of dollars in the area in which it pleased him to spend it, and he forgot western Canada almost completely.

He talked of national unity, but I will not deal with those speeches that he made immediately after the election when overcome by surprise, annoyance and frustration, he dared to suggest that anybody who criticized the government and any of its policies was undermining Canadian unity. That was not in keeping with the fine reputation that I had built around him. Some of the statements that he made were despicable, and there can be no other way to describe them. He intimated that because I disagree with the views he holds, apparently I become somewhat of an enemy of the state. That is not in keeping with the parliamentary tradition, and that is not the kind of argument that one would have expected from him. But he was annoyed, he was exasperated, he was overcome with surprise at the defeat that had hit the government. So, he had to attack.

To begin with, I say to him that I hope the same disregard of the prairie provinces and other parts of Canada, such as the Maritimes, will not become an epidemic with him as he now finds himself in a new portfolio. I do not know why the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) shifts these ministers around. There were the four—the hon. gentleman himself and—but I cannot keep up with the portfolios. There was also the one who was the former secretary of state, and there was the solicitor general.

An hon. Member: Who was that?

An hon. Member: Gogo.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I have to do is to mention them, and you realize what a terrible mess each and all of them made in those portfolios. Now, they are redistributed. I will not go into particulars, but I was glad that the former solicitor general was removed. He is now Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) and I understand he is giving specialized attention to brooms, pails, dustpans, pots, pans and Saniflush.

I say to the minister in all seriousness, when he pictures this great country that he has just crossed on his trip to Inuvik, which took a day and a half but left him untired and still determined to do his part for national unity, that I can suggest one thing which can be done at once. I noticed that in his speech he embraced the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

An hon. Member: Same party.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a great picture. He put out his great arms and he took him unto himself. It is a wonderful study to watch them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We shall take this up in caucus.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So far as the hon. gentleman is concerned, he does not come into the equation. He was the officiating clergyman, apparently. But I was not going to deal with him. I always like to listen to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. He spoke of what could be done and what should be done. I wonder sometimes why the NDP government of Saskatchewan does not do some of the things that he advised today the government of Canada to do. But I do not want to bring about any dissension, I do not want to do anything that will separate the partners in this beautiful marriage. However, it was interesting to watch how the minister, with unusual velocity, found so much to approve in the speech of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I can tell him this: it is not going to hurt the union. "What could be done?" he said.

Number one, when we were in office we refused to allow the development of these horizontal increases in freight rates. The discrimination then was 15 per cent against western Canada. What is it today? Horizontal increases across the board of 15 per cent, 30 per cent, 45 per cent and 50 per cent which have placed western Canada and the Maritimes in the position of being discriminated against three times as much as when this government came into office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I listened to the minister's virtuous exposition on the Canadian Transport Commission, I wondered why it was that he went out of his way to put the responsibility on that commission. He indicates, by a negative turn of the head, that he did not do that. No, the responsibility rests right over there. The first thing that should be done immediately is to put a ceiling on any further horizontal increases until there is a determination of a fair and reasonable transportation cost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is number one, and that could be done tomorrow. I ask the minister, when he wants suggestions, whether he will act in that direction.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre dealt with how successful governments could be in business. That was part of the general picture. I ask the minister not to be misled because I seem to remember that when the CCF government, the progenitor in fact which accepted the nomenclature of NDP, came to office, they said: "we will tell you what we are going to do: the government is going into business. We are going to operate all varieties of business". I do not have a list of them here because I was not expecting to have to deal with that, but I could give a few that I wrote down a moment ago, such as boots, leather, lumber, planing mills. They went into all kinds of business, even printing, and you know what happened? They said that there will be such great profits that they would be able to raise social security to new heights without having to increase taxation. Every one of the businesses they went into went bankrupt, every solitary one. All provinces succeed in one business, that is the liquor business. As long as there is water in the streams of Canada so long will there be profits for government in the operation of the liquor business. But outside of that, there was no success, and I hope that the minister is not giving any consideration, in spite of the close relationship between him and his party and the NDP, to going into any of these operations.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre complained of the erosion of private enterprise, thereby placing before the House the benefits of public ownership. All I have to say is: by our experience in Saskatchewan you shall measure and determine the course. Now, the minister said, "But what did you people do when you were in office?" He did not tell us what he and his government were going to do. What has his government done in connection with transportation costs?

Some hon. Members: They raised the rates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want such a high degree of unanimity, Mr. Speaker, but apparently it covers the whole House. Does the minister forget that it was under that government that expansion of the production of rapeseed in Saskatchewan was made possible, and in the other provinces to a lesser degree, by providing the support of the party as a whole for a private bill introduced by Reynold Rapp, which brought rapeseed under the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, and therefore not only made possible the expansion of rapeseed production but put the profit on every pound of rapeseed into the pockets of western farmers? I mention just those two things. I could mention others as well.

Just by way of example, what is the minister going to do about freight rates? What is the government going to do? It is not enough for him to say that, "Some time, somewhere, some place we will tell you about it in the future." Niddle-noddle is exactly the attitude he displayed today—neither this nor that, but words mounted in great eloquence. There was no answer to the proposition placed before the House by the hon. member for Vegreville in a remarkably astute, able, and well delivered speech.

The minister spoke of northern development. Did he find any when he was up there that was not brought into affect under my administration, or as a result of the policies of this party during our period of office? What did we do for transportation? We provided assistance to every province in Canada, $7½ million over a period of five years either for the building of highways to resources, or in those provinces that did not have mineral resources, for tourist encouragement and the like.

What did we do, Mr. Speaker? Well, I remember all the criticism, I remember the Liberal party going up and down the length of Canada when I spoke of building roads into the north. They said it was a dream, that what I had in mind was to build highways from igloo to igloo. So original was that, that when I looked up the debates of 1874 respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway I found that the Liberal party of that day said "from wigwam to wigwam." That was the only change made in 80 years. There was no consideration given to the north.

I remember when we brought forward legislation to provide the guarantee for the building of the railway from near Grimshaw, Alberta, to Pine Point, how they jeered. You could almost describe it as cynical disregard for the facts. Today that railroad is one of the most lucrative in all Canada, and has opened up northern resources to an extent that was even dreamt of by us, although we realized the great potentialities of the north. We followed that policy in northern Canada, in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. But what did we hear today from the minister? He said, "I am going to build a couple of airport warning signals. We are really thinking about it." Mr. Speaker, no minister ever got an appreciation of northern development by flying to Inuvik and back in 40 hours. Look the situation over up there. There is so much that can be done, so much to do, and so much that will bring new wealth to Canada.

When I rose today, Mr. Speaker, it was not to deal particularly with these matters, but to discuss for a while a matter of very deep concern to me, one that deserves the consideration of the House. It has to do with a subject that is being discussed now all over again. How are we going to transport the oil and the gas of northern Canada to the markets? There have been a number of alternative plans. One is by ship, a most dangerous potentiality to environmental pollution. There have been a number of suggestions that there should be pipelines. Where? There are two different routes.

I suggest to the Minister of Transport that he should fully look into a question that I raised in the House on February 15, and to which I am going to direct my remarks. As recorded at page 1311 of Hansard I asked:

> In view of the fact that one of the most important economic matters facing our country today is the question of the transport of oil, gas and so on from the Yukon and Alaska I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether there is a task force now operating to the end that problems of environmental difficulty and so on will not come into being should the suggestion be accepted to build a railway from the north having its initial terminus in Saskatchewan . . .

But I am not going to argue that, even though with complete objectivity I would like to see Prince Albert in that position. There was not a word on that today. On February 15, the minister said:

So far as other highways or railways in the north are concerned, we are negotiating with the British Columbia and Alberta governments.

There was not a solitary reference to these negotiations in the wide generalities used in the speech which we just heard from the minister. On receiving that reply, I asked him:

I should like to ask him whether or not the most appropriate route would not be through Saskatchewan, and what is the estimate today of the cost of such a railway through British Columbia and Alberta with the terminus I mentioned in Saskatchewan. Have any such estimates been made?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is with regret that I have to remind the right hon. member who has the floor that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): According to the rules, the right hon. member can continue his remarks only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank my colleagues and all hon. members. The answer given by the minister was:

I have not yet met with the Premier of Saskatchewan. I intend to do so.

I would think there would be no more ideal time than the present. This is one of those things that cannot but add cement to the rather uncertain relationship that prevails now. The minister added:

I think we will have to study the whole question of transportation in the north in consultation with the provinces.

What has been done, Mr. Speaker? What has been done in the last month by the government in this connection?

The minister also said:

Whenever those studies are complete I will be happy to make a report to the hon. gentleman.

I do not expect to be here until eternity, Mr. Speaker, and I simply ask: when are we going to get this report? Any time the minister would like, I am prepared to give him my place to enable him to answer that question. What is he doing except talking?

When the oil field in Alaska was discovered some four years ago there was no suggestion of railway transportation. There was silence on the part of railway companies. There was silence as the icebreaker Manhattan chopped its way through the inland passage north of the Arctic circle. Even when Boeing proposed flying the North Slope crude oil out of Alaska there was no response from the railroads. I agree with what has been said today by members on both sides of this House about Canadian railway companies. They do not give a tinker's damn for the average Canadian, or for providing transportation. They have reaped the benefits, taken the cream and now they want to leave ghost towns and provide the kind of service in the Chicoutimi area of the province of Quebec that was referred to earlier today.

In the spring of 1971 the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport initiated an engineering, economic and environmental feasibility study of a railway to carry Arctic oil to market. Later, this study was expanded to include the transportation of liquid natural gas. The study was prompted by an earlier preliminary analysis by the Transportation Research Institute at Carnegie-Mellon University. With the co-operation of Carnegie-Mellon, the CNR, Canadian National Telecommunications, PROCOR Ltd., Canadian Pacific and Catalytic Enterprises Ltd., 16 professionals associated with CIGGT completed the oil transportation feasibility study. The report, which I have read carefully and which is available, concluded that such a railroad is technically and operationally feasible and appears to be financially attractive. There were various proposals. One proposed route would start at Prudhoe Bay, proceed along the Arctic slope to the Mackenzie delta and then southeast along the Mackenzie River valley for a distance of some 1,200 miles.

What is being done? What did the task force decide upon, if anything? What is the government doing today to consider the matter of railway transportation? Such a railroad would, according to estimates, require an average employment of 5,000 people for construction over a 5½-year period. It would do much to open the north; it would mean that thousands of people would establish themselves in the north in the same way as they have already been established by the U.S.S.R. in similar latitudinal areas of that country. It would mean a great increase in population in the north. It would bring about not only direct employment but indirect employment. The economic benefits would be substantial for all of us in this country.

The figures which I have indicate that the railway would require some 360 six-axle locomotive units and 11,000 tank cars of 94-ton capacity. It would require 20 trains per day of 168 cars, towed by five locomotive units, to move the necessary 2 million barrels of oil. The railway would be double-tracked, with advanced communications.

What is being done in that area? There will always be some environmental difficulties. They are inevitable no matter what mode is used to transport this oil to market. The real environmental question is simply, which mode of transportation and which route can permit the required movement of oil at acceptable economic cost within an acceptable time period and with a minimum of environmental cost? That subject deserves attention.

Let me now speak of Arctic pipelines. The great difficulty with oil pipelines in the Arctic is that they must operate at high temperatures, between 150 and 180 degrees. Buried pipelines cannot be insulated to prevent permafrost melting under such conditions. Elevated pipelines are expensive and pose additional environmental problems. A railway does not generate heat to these high temperatures and accordingly need not melt the permafrost: the thick surface layer of crushed rock ballast is good insulation and thus it is easier to prevent ground damage than it is in the case of a pipeline or even a road. As well, wildlife will benefit if there is a careful selection of route.

This could be done, Mr. Speaker. People used to say that the Hudson Bay Railway would never be built. Macdonald predicted the Hudson Bay Railway when he spoke in Regina in July, 1885. He predicted routes into the north. He said that there would be within very few years a railway to Prince Albert, the most northerly place in the territories at that time. He was right: it came in 1891. He had predicted, as well, the Hudson Bay Railway but that did not come about until Sir Wilfrid Laurier launched it in 1908.

Economically, the effects of a railway would be entirely positive, as I have said. One of the major secondary benefits would be peripheral mineral development, that is, resource development and the creation of jobs. These beneficial effects would be felt in every part of our country. We now know that the north is actually the safety deposit box of those things that through the years will assure us that freedom will survive. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to this proposal. For some reason, the bureaucrats do not want anything like this, and when the bureaucrats do not want anything they throw cold water on it. But the time has come for the government to act and follow policies along lines adopted by the administration I had the honour to lead, which effectively opened up the north for the first time.

There is a tremendous challenge in this area. To the minister I say, if he wants to take his place in the history of our country he must challenge the certainties of bureaucrats who, having determined that what they have in mind is best, refuse to face the greater issue of the future of Canada. I ask him to give consideration to my proposal, because I find more and more that parliament does not have the effect it used to have. The bureaucrats prepare the menu and the minister brings it in and says, "Eat." Amendments are denied; legislation is pushed through, even when there is a majority, by closure. In conclusion I say this to the minister, as I said at the beginning: when he speaks, this great institution lives, because he has that infinite capacity, with the knowledge that he has, of being able to speak in such a way that the House of Commons once more becomes a vital place.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) made reference to the minister, who spoke previously. I am wondering, as a backbencher—

Mr. Bell: The hon. member is not a backbencher.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —if it is in order to make comments about the remarks of the right hon. member for Prince Albert in the latter part of his speech. The first thing that comes to my mind is that Your Honour rules questions and statements out of order on the ground that they are contrary to the customs and traditions of this House and these traditions must be maintained. This is what we are told. I say to the right hon. member for Prince Albert that sometimes some of his comments fall into that category. Nevertheless, I believe that sometimes we should ignore customs and traditions if we want to introduce changes. How could men have gone to the moon otherwise? I feel that it is important to bring about these changes.

Speaking to the motion, national transportation objectives must be supportive of society's larger goals. They cannot be overly precise, static or absolute in nature and must be conscientiously and continuously reviewed and revised. Such objectives should be expected to change, to acquire different priorities and to require balancing off against other conflicting or competing objectives. This, of course, is no more true of transportation than of other areas of governmental concern and endeavour.

I am happy that the motion speaks of national unity. I believe the loyal opposition should practise what they preach. They certainly did not try to practise that in the last general election. Some hon. members who speak at various clubs and meetings do not encourage national unity by discouraging some of the policies of this House. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Jean Marchand's—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —experience in DREE will be of great help in the Department of Transport because the problems of regional disparity are closely linked with those of transportation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will work together on a transportation policy. I know they will do this. The sincerity of the minister has been questioned somewhat. The choice of Mr. Marchand—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —to deal with the Department of Transport was a good one, because this is a subject that he likes and in which he is interested. Mr. Marchand—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —is the best choice to deal with the tens of thousands of workers related directly or indirectly to the Department of Transport. This minister is concerned about everyone in this field, from the air controllers to the pensioned workers of the railways. He has made representations to the railroad pertaining to the request of the railroad pensioners. They are asking for equality with Air Canada pensions. The minister has made these representations because these workers come under his department. As a union man, Mr. Marchand—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —fully sympathizes with the needs of the ordinary workers and the ordinary people. That is why he is head of this department, the department of his choice. While he liked the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, because of what he has done since taking over the portfolio of the Department of Transport I sincerely believe that he likes it and wants to study it thoroughly. He wants to be well informed. He wants to be an authority so that not only can he answer the opposition's questions in this House but also the needs of Canadians throughout this country. That is his purpose and dedication to his ministry.

I compliment the minister for not wanting to answer questions of which he is not sure. Instead, he puts the whole department to task, including myself, by continually having meetings in the morning, afternoon and night. He asks the departmental officials to co-operate with us, continually briefing us and informing us in various aspects of the department. He studies all matters pertaining to his department so he can best serve not only the people of the House of Commons but all Canadians. For that I compliment the minister.

An hon. Member: Nice speech.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have not finished. I hope I will be given the same time as some other speakers. Mr. Marchand—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —is quite knowledgeable about the whole of Canada, including Quebec. With his Quebec background, as Minister of Transport he can use various transportation facilities from coast to coast to improve national unity in which he has so frequently demonstrated that he is a strong believer. He is convinced of this. Members of this House should follow his example and be sincere with regard to that particular policy. Mr. Marchand's—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): —whole career as a politician and in private life—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but under the rules when addressing a minister, one should mention his title and not his name.

[English]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased you have brought that to my attention. I know that everyone will recognize that the minister I am speaking about is the Minister of Transport. The minister's whole career as a politician and a labour leader indicates that he is well aware of the little people, small farmers, small businessmen and the forgotten people who must rely so heavily upon transportation and for whom costs are so important.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the parliamentary secretary explain how his remarks are apropos this motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. MacKay: Would the parliamentary secretary accept a question now, or at the end of his remarks?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The minister will do all possible to ensure equitable freight rates and other fair policies pertaining to his department. The minister's open-door policy and his willingness to meet groups who wish to make representations will be conducive to a better understanding of transportation problems across our great country. In the next few weeks, for example, the minister will be discussing transportation matters with each of Canada's premiers and with many other groups.

I wish to continue speaking to the motion and what the minister has done. It is all right for the opposition to criticize; that is their role. However, the loyal opposition has an important responsibility to be constructive in their criticism and not just to criticize for the sake of criticism. Since I have been here they have not been constructive; they do not even say what they would do; they do not really know what they want to suggest.

What has the Minister of Transport done? In the few weeks that he has been Minister of Transport he has not only been to Quebec and Ontario but to Calgary, Yellowknife and Inuvik. That shows how sincere he is in his work. Last weekend he opened some new facilities in the west. At that time he spoke of his concern for national unity. He also spoke of the importance of transportation, enabling Canadians to move about, to meet one another, to earn a living and to help in various ways.

What contributions has the minister made to regional equality? As Minister of Transport he will become involved in the same way as he did in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. For example, during his northern trip he emphasized that to make travel easier, the policies which he mentioned must be put into effect. The minister visited Newfoundland. He will be going to Vancouver. He met with the Atlantic premiers. He will be travelling across the country to become better informed.

Mr. Hellyer: Is he stopping at St. Boniface for gas?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): He has not yet been to St. Boniface, but I extend an invitation to him. The minister has concerned himself about the encouragement of resource development by assisting in the development of airports and authorizing subsidies to transportation companies. I call attention, by way of example, to current plans for the B.C.—Yukon transportation system.

• (1750)

Hon. members will be aware of what my hon. friend said over the weekend in reference to the Northern Transportation Company. It is his intention to study the feasibility of railroads in the north, both as an alternative to pipelines and as a means of encouraging resource development. In addition, he has been active in promoting the greater use of unit trains. By adopting measures aimed at the expansion of port facilities he has contributed to the expansion of domestic and international trade. I draw attention, also, to the studies which are going on with regard to the improvement of our deep water port facilities, the increased use of containers and the greater efficiency of our container ports, already among the best in the world.

Consider what else has been achieved. The Seaway has been improved. The Welland canal bypass is opening this year. Bilateral air agreements have been concluded in Canada's favour. Only last week an agreement with China was announced; Canada is the first country to be granted landing rights in that country. I would remind hon. members, too, of the decision to grant landing rights in West Germany to Canadian aircraft. All these things should be borne in mind when assessing what the minister has done. I could say a great deal more about his contribution to the improvement of the quality of life both in urban and rural areas. However, I do not have time in which to do so because I have a few more notes from which I intend to quote.

There is another area I should like to mention. It concerns the improvement of man's environment in terms of controlling pollution and preserving natural historic and cultural resources. This was an issue dealt with in a study paper published in 1971 and I quote from it briefly as follows:

> Providing for national security and ensuring adequate sources of assistance in the event of national disasters, physical and economic.

The foregoing are in large measure the points at which transportation policy-making begins and to which it must continually refer. They emphasize the need to analyse transportation problems systematically so that their constituent elements can be related to the elements of our objectives and to our broad principles. Determining the implications of these relationships is crucial to the framework for approaching this task.

Patently, it is important that we as a nation identify and articulate our transportation objectives and secure for them a broad degree of public understanding and acceptance. Achieving the necessary degree of acceptance will be no small task, given the large role of the private sector in transportation, the independence of transportation regulatory bodies, the sharing of transportation responsibilities by many levels of government, and the confusing barrage of conflicting information that seers of every description hurl upon an already confused public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Railways have played an important role in the development of Canada and the growth of its urban centres. The increasing need to provide for urban mobility to meet population growth in Canada's urban areas has led, however, to a situation where railway facilities are in many ways a troublesome presence which interferes with urban mobility and safety, occupies valuable sites, presents formidable obstacles to desirable directions and patterns of urban growth, and contributes significantly to the blight of land.

Accordingly, the federal government is presently considering the extension of financial aid toward the solution of railway-highway grade-crossing problems. The whole question has recently been studied in Winnipeg in a project jointly funded by federal, provincial and municipal governments and the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways. It is hoped that legislation will soon be introduced which will provide a mechanism to assist in the development of rail relocation or traffic rerouting schemes. A railway grade-crossing fund with annual expenditures of $15 million to $20 million is presently in existence. It is expected that new legislation will appreciably raise the ceiling of such expenditures over the years.

I would now like to quote from a submission made to the government by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities which met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and members of the cabinet yesterday, March 19. I quote their submission as follows:

> A study undertaken by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities of some 85 transportation plans from some 25 Canadian cities during the last ten years showed that only ten had been completed while others are in some stage of implementation and many have been allowed to die on the drafting boards. In many cases, plans prepared by private consultants could not stand the test of public and political scrutiny. The majority, however, failed because of an inadequate tax base at the municipal level.
> There is no greater challenge facing our age than coping with the surging tide and demands of urbanization as reflected in our transportation requirements.
> There is need for a full partnership, full co-operation, full involvement and a full understanding of the need to reallocate responsibility and resources in a manner which allows each level of government to carry out its share of the responsibility of making our communities the places of hope, opportunity and progress that we wish them to be.
> It is for these reasons that the municipalities of Canada seek the appointment of a municipal representative to the commissioner level of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Speaker, this is in line with the throne speech and with the meeting between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), the provincial premiers and the Western Economic Conference slated to take place on July 15, 1973. The regulatory field of transportation is never one which is popular with all the people or with all facets of the transportation industry. In this area the challenge has been to establish and to maintain, wherever possible, economically viable and competitive transportation systems. More often than not, however, public subsidies have been and will continue to be required for reasons that range from national unity to the basic needs of our people. While the trend has been, in most competitive fields, toward modernization and centralization, this will not be allowed to progress to the point of services being eliminated or reduced on purely economic grounds.

On the other hand, we must continue to look to the needs of the future. In co-operation with other levels of government, progress is being achieved. Municipal transportation systems are being tested on a practical basis using known technology. At the same time, we are actively involved in research programs which in the future could affect all modes of transportation.

While time does not permit a complete discussion of the complex field of transportation, I can assert that our policies in this field are aimed not only at filling the needs of today but they are also looking toward the needs of tomorrow. None of our programs in the field of transportation will be successful if the people they are to serve do not participate in their development. This is an area where elected representatives at all levels of government should openly express the views of the people they represent. This is what the Minister of Transport is attempting to do: he and his department are studying all aspects of their responsibilities. I assure the House and the Canadian people of the sincerity of the minister. Of all the people capable of doing this job, he is the best.

Mr. Bell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand there is some agreement we should limit our speeches tonight to 15 minutes. I do not think an order need be made, but everybody can prepare their speeches with that shorter period in mind and Your Honour might see that this arrangement is carried out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[English]

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the subject this evening is transportation. The problem is the lack of leadership. The answer is common sense. The need is for a completely new, imaginative approach to transportation in Canada—in short, an entirely new transportation policy. Transportation is the one area which affects the lives of all Canadians. Basic legislation in this area is a makeshift, patch job over old ideas that were barely adequate when introduced. Successive ministers of transport over the past ten to 12 years have failed miserably to produce leadership or a cohesive on-going plan of action.

Aware that my colleagues will be dealing with specific regional problems, I intend to cover generally some of the areas of concern to those of us in Ontario. No matter where one looks, the lack of future planning is evident. On water, we find harbours that are as antiquated as the pork-barrel method of appointing commissioners to the harbours boards. Not only are the harbours not integrated into the over-all transportation system, but they frequently fail properly to serve the recreational needs of the community of which they are part. With harbours a blight on many waterfronts, the harbours boards perpetuate a style and system even less adequate than the government which created them.

In the air, we have seen the government play power politics with people over airports, and all at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer. We end up with two airports where one was obviously adequate, with none where one is desperately needed and easily provided, with extensions of airports at terrible cost to people and the environment. Obvious planning just a short time ago would have avoided all these problems. It is my personal opinion that a second airport in the Toronto region is absolutely uncalled for, unnecessary and an affront to common sense. I am proud to belong to a party where I can take this stand, knowing I will be listened to and not forced to hew the party line, in this case a Liberal party line—a line of obvious fiscal and environmental insanity.

Airlines are being forced to service areas other than the highest population density areas where the majority of the travelling public originates. Passengers from some areas frequently have to travel the same airspace twice to a destination because of inadequate service. Foul-ups of all kinds are the order of the day, and passenger service is frequently the last requisite of a change in policy. Canadians are still forced to pay more for travel in their own country, on their own government-owned airline, than they do to leave their country on their own or any other airline. These and the new charter regulations make a mockery out of common sense. Already the new advance booking charter rules are being broken. The ABC rules mean "Any Body Can", and they do.

In the private and industrial flying sector, the situation is worse. Millions of dollars are spent annually on searches for lost aircraft. A portion of that money would provide a network of radio beams which would definitely go a long way toward doing away with the basic cause of accidents. I could not agree more with the many private pilots who claim that the cost of the so-called art at the major airports across Canada would easily pay for a good guidance system.

Truck transport is such a complete shemozzle in Canada that it is hard to know where to start. Lack of uniform licensing codes between provinces puts carriers in this field at a distinct disadvantage to trains. Railways buying out trucking lines with taxpayers' money to compete against other trucking firms owned by those same taxpayers seems to me the height of a ridiculous situation. The lack of leadership in this field is appalling.

Railways are the backbone of this country, both literally and figuratively. One might say that the country was formed to build a railroad and the building of the railroad formed the country. The railroads were built under adverse conditions, with equipment and techniques current then but antiquated in light of present day technology. They were built, however, with vigour by ingenious and daring men, and for one reason only—to serve a growing country.

The Liberal party has an interesting record in the area of railroads, one which continues to this day. In the late 1800s, after 18 years in opposition they denounced the fledgling Canadian Pacific Railway as an insane and ruinous defiance of North America's natural transport routes. Let me quote Mr. Donald Creighton, a Canadian historian of excellent repute, when he spoke of Mr. Laurier presenting the transport phase of the new Liberal nationalism.

> They flung to the winds their old prudent and parsimonious misgivings about trans-continental railway enterprises; and with a swiftness and completeness acquired through frequent practice, they paid the last of the Conservative national policies—the policy of all-Canadian transport—the supreme compliment of adoption. Against all their grave warnings and gloomy predictions, the Canadian Pacific Railway had proved itself a tremendous success.

And the country grew and Mr. Laurier furthered this newly adopted policy.

> —the Prime Minister's control of railway policy was absolute; and his great new railway enterprises moved steadily forward as lavish in execution as they had been grandiose in conception. The supervision of its construction was ostensibly entrusted by Laurier to a special National Trans-continental Railway Commission, composed of commissioners who knew nothing about railways and chaired by an ousted Liberal premier of Quebec—Simon Napoleon Parent, who regarded his appointment as a well-merited opportunity of serving the Liberal party and rewarding its political friends.

Continuing to quote Mr. Creighton when he spoke of Mr. Arthur Meighen who for a short while was Prime Minister of Canada:

He had never assumed that the Conservative policies of the nineteenth century were a sufficient answer to the problems of the twentieth. As a principal author of the Canadian National Railways he was strongly committed to state ownership.

Mr. Speaker, while I would love to go on and read much more of this fine book, I will end with this quote:

The Liberals had always preached a highly decentralized Canadian federalism. They had opposed Macdonald's national policies during the nineteenth century; and they had resisted most Conservative attempts to use the power of the state to carry out the characteristic national purposes of the twentieth.

What is the situation now? Carrying forward debts, not of their own making, the CNR has for a number of years been guilty of providing far less than adequate service, abandoning lines, reducing services, and of behaviour not becoming a well run railroad. A single example might be the much discussed passenger service between Barrie and Toronto. Made an election issue in an attempt to defeat the hon. member from York-Simcoe, $100,000 was promised by the Liberal government to test this service and, sure enough, the day after the election the test period began. Approximately a month later it stopped. Despite the fact that it carried almost exactly the proposed estimated daily number of passengers, it was termed a failure.

The charge supposedly paid by the federal government to the Canadian National Railways per coach was about $450 and yet two years earlier, in October, 1969, a private citizen, Mr. John Medcof of Barrie, rented the same coaches from the CN at $150 per coach and made a profit on his trial run. No attempt was made to tie in the experimental service with interconnecting buses or other existing services. This will give you some indication of the sincerity with which this government approaches the need for train commuter service in Ontario.

I must take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to read into the record again a question which the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) asked in the House of Commons on March 9 of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand):

Last June the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications recommended that all rail passenger services which were discontinued on November 1, 1970, in southwestern Ontario be re-established immediately and, second, that a joint study group of federal, provincial, and municipal officials and railway employees be established to determine a minimum rail passenger network at the lowest possible cost. This unanimous recommendation to parliament was signed by 20 members almost nine months ago. When is the minister going to take action on this matter?

The minister, in an equally long answer which said virtually nothing, blamed the fact that we had no railroads on the provincial government of Ontario and the government of metro Toronto. What the hon. member for Bruce wanted, of course, was service in an area where the federal government, if it wants to, can exercise complete control. The intercity passenger transport study, which the minister referred to as the Sobermann report, is an excellent research document and could well be the basis of future services, if it is ever used. One of the conclusions of this report is that in the 1970s—

The greatest benefit would be derived from improvements in the existing modes, such as on-time reliability (and consequent reduction in waiting time), passenger processing procedures, and rail improvements using existing trackage.

To this I add my own partial list of problems concerning commuter trains: the elimination of decent food service on trains is a cause of much complaint; the lack of adequate baggage handling facilities further discourages the travelling public; the lack of co-ordination of schedules with other services, and even other trains, confuses and further prohibits train travel; and the use of old-fashioned, uncooled, poorly ventilated coaches makes travel distasteful.

Mr. Speaker, may I make it abundantly clear, as I have in other instances of criticism on my part, that I am not condemning the employees of the Canadian National Railways or, for that matter, Air Canada. It is safe to say that I know almost a thousand of these employees personally, coming as I do from Belleville, the Rideau area headquarters of the Canadian National, and I know them to be conscientious, hard working individuals dedicated to their tasks, from the running trades to top management. No, Mr. Speaker, I lay the blame for this dreadful service right at the door of this government, and particularly the Minister of Transport. The Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are operators; they carry out the policy, or lack thereof, to the best of their ability. Where this policy is outdated or completely lacking we cannot possibly blame the operators for the deplorable conditions.

The common sense answer to most of the criticism I have levelled comes in the form of a new transportation policy. Just as Mr. Meighen was not prepared to accept the policies of the nineteenth century as being good enough for the twentieth, so the policies of the first half of the twentieth century are not relevant in the last half and, indeed, in this fast-paced world in which we live the policies of the 1960s are not readily acceptable in the 1970s.

In the field of research and development surely this country, which has a wealth of scientific and engineering talent, could develop a transportation system, if not better than, at least equal to the Japan national railways' system which operates trains at 150 m.p.h., or the French national railways' system which holds a rail speed record of 205 m.p.h. Do we really have to wait on a United States-based firm to spend years developing a train like the Turbo which balks at cold weather? Perhaps the U.S. or the Minister of Transport has not realized we have snow here in the winter.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I find it completely inconsistent that with the inadequacies I have pointed out, and with those outlined by my colleagues, we could possibly need an increase in the estimates for this year. I find, however, that the department has asked for an additional $224,303,000 and before these estimates can be passed we have a request for supplementary estimates of $107,308,580. The Canadian public will not long stand for this kind of extravagance. I am confident I speak for most taxpayers when I say that they are prepared to pay for services rendered, but to have budgets increased as these are, and still be presented with the level of service available today, is unpardonable.

Properly operated, the Department of Transport has, in my opinion, far greater potential for the reduction of regional disparity in the country than the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or any other gerrymandering program developed by this government. The key words are "properly operated". The Trudeau government has not to date demonstrated any ability or inclination to bring this department, or any other for that matter, into the present, never mind the future. My colleagues, under the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), are prepared to use the daring, imagination and initiative, inherently part of our party over the years, to bring about the changes required.

I see I have taken 15 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on the subject of transportation, the issue having been brought before the House on the motion that we need an over-all, integrated national transportation policy. The mover of the motion points out that immediately upon this being found, it will solve the vital Canadian issues of unity, regional equality, the encouragement of resource development, the increase of international and domestic trade and the betterment of the urban and rural quality of life. This is an amazing proposition. Obviously, the search must be on in a very thorough way to find this tremendous national policy which would produce all these fantastic results.

The motion comes forward, in other words, in response to the fact that, in more precise words, the mover thinks there are improvements which could be made to our transportation policy. I do not suppose anyone would deny that. No matter who comes forward with a national transportation policy, there would be those who would suggest improvements to it.

Indeed, in this large country, with its low population, we are very dependent upon a national transportation system. It should not be assumed that some magic theory will suddenly produce a policy which will solve all our problems and create these great good things which the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), has decided would happen if a magic transportation policy were discovered. It is, of course, much easier to point to a specific problems, anomalies and difficulties than it is to establish cures which in fact not only deal with the problem but avoid creating new difficulties and new anomalies. That, of course, is an issue which is before us and will be before us for a long time.

It is rather ironic that a man from western Canada should move this motion at a time when the government, in the Speech from the Throne, has indicated a fundamental awareness of the need to examine transportation issues, to discuss these with the provincial governments and to produce results which will indeed further economic development in those areas of the country where that is the pressing need. It is, I suppose, fairly typical of these opposition motions and attacks that they usually come exactly in the area where a great deal of thinking and activity is going on and where, indeed, they suspect we are likely to be moving toward new solutions and they want to appear to have been pressing for the improvements. That, of course, is nothing new and is not something we should be surprised about or should indeed argue against. That is the role of an opposition. The question is whether it is being performed well or not very well.

The matter of a national transportation policy includes some pretty major questions about what we are doing and how we are doing it. There is also the rather important question of who will pay for what is done. No one should think that simple bookkeeping would change the fundamentals of that. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) seems to think that if we transferred the debts of the CNR from one account to another, that would bring about great gains. I think members should realize that the nature of the accounts, expenditures and the profit and income position, is understood and known. No simple transfer will make any difference at all.

The call for a new national transportation policy reminds one, as the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) has been reminded, of other national policies, particularly the national policy of Macdonald, which have had a part to play in the development of this country. Of course, the problems in respect of that national policy have created some anomalies and inequities such as in the tariff which the Tories built and maintained—which must be overcome by a new dynamic policy—which resulted from that structural development. Not only do we have the Speech from the Throne, but we have what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said when he was in the west, to the effect that he would be seeking a new national policy which would meet the aspirations of western Canada.

Many of us know, when we seek solutions to meet the aspirations of western Canada, they will be the same solutions which will meet the aspirations of other regions of the country, the Maritimes and eastern regions as well as the west. Solutions are the same for them because the transportation problem, the development problem and the population problem are often the same. Then we have hon. members saying that we need improvements. They point to things being done or which will no doubt be done in the next six months or a year and use those as examples. But they have not yet pointed out any co-ordinated and integrated national policy they would suggest be put in place, because when they have to come to specifics it is not that simple a job.

We have some examples of our progress in improving handling in the transportation system and the movement of products. Members opposite frequently have forgotten what has been done. I think, for instance, of the movement of grain in this country. Only a few weeks ago hon. members opposite stood up and asked when we would create a system of control or co-ordination for the movement of grain. They do not seem to realize that with the introduction of the block system in Winnipeg, and the co-operation which resulted from its operation and the introduction of a co-ordinator at the terminal at both ends for the movement of grain, we have in fact put in place an organized, efficient system for handling the movement of this extremely important product.

The only really difficult problems which hon. members can cite against the progress which has been made, against the performance of the handling of grain, comes when circumstances occur over which no one can have any or easy control. Among those which no one can control are weather conditions such as we had last year.

These unusual weather conditions impeded the movement of grain. Those over which one has control only with difficulty include the weapon of the strike, the industrial dispute which leads to a stoppage of work. This is not easy for anyone to solve, as we have seen in jurisdiction after jurisdiction, provincial and federal, in this country. Governments, whether they be Conservative and fail for months to manage to handle an elevator strike, or NDP, as in Saskatchewan, and have one of the worst years in the history of that province in terms of labour disputes, find it impossible to face up to the difficult problem of overcoming the decision of employees and of employers to disagree about how they will settle their arrangements between themselves.

These are examples which members opposite can cite as a temporary problem or failure of the system. But when these do not occur, the system works amazingly well; it works superbly. The system is capable of setting new records. It has allowed the handling of grain at a record level of millions of bushels beyond that forecast as possible with the same system only a short time before. That is a performance which is important and worth remembering.

We have, of course, in the area of the movement of grain the old and traditional friend, the Crowsnest pass rates. The Crowsnest rates have meant that the mover of grain has not been subject to a charge higher than that which existed in 1896, and he is not to this day. There are many people in western Canada who think this is a tremendous benefit to the west. The fact is, of course, that it has not worked out quite that way, because the cost of moving the product must be borne whether it is in freight rates or in some other form. In the system we face now there is the possibility of losses on products moved under those statutory rates being recovered from the rates which are charged on other products in the competitive area. Others very close to those who benefit from the statutory rates often bear the burden of the loss on those rates in the manner of recovery of the costs.

This is a fact which we should bear in mind and should not run away from when looking at the over-all question of how we can make more sensible our rate structure and the way in which it affects the development of the country. No one from the west could possibly ignore the anomalies which exist. Because of competitive conditions which may exist at the west coast or at some similar long distance point from the originating point, rates may be lower than those which are charged on the Prairies for the delivery of goods at an intermediate point.

The costing people can make a case for the fact that if you did not have lower rates, you would not move the goods and that the total cost on shorter hauls would in fact be higher. But it is at that point that we as a government clearly have to examine the question. These are the sort of questions which we are and will be examining as we look at what should be done and can be done to encourage development in regions such as western Canada where so much growth is possible and desirable for the good of the country as a whole.

[Mr. Lang.]

When hon. members worry about the rail system's ability to move grain, they should take note of the fact that it has done an amazingly good job of placing at the required point the grain that is needed for sale by the Canadian Wheat Board. There have been new records every year. The selling and exporting of more grain than has been grown for two years in a row, and this in an orderly fashion, leads our buyers to have more confidence in our system than they have in that of some of our competitors.

The complaints which have existed about our system have paled into insignificance compared with the kind of problems which are being faced even in the United States, where there is lack of co-ordination and lack of knowledge of the amounts of grain which may be moved at any given point in time. They have had difficulties in organizing their system and in trying to get the grain to the port where the buyer wants it. They have had ten times more ships waiting compared with our worst periods, and this without weather problems but as a result of the difference in the nature of the systems.

We try to make sure that our system will carry the grain that ought to be carried. I should say to hon. members that there are some who still seem to think that our view that changes are needed in the handling system is somehow a criticism of its capacity to handle the grain at present. That criticism really misses the point. Capacity is one element, and there are some of us who believe, as I do, that we should have the capacity to move into export even more grain than we have moved in the two previous record years. But it is not the capacity of the system that is of major concern, because that can be added to by some minor modifications in the system. It is not the capacity of the system which is causing the examination of it and raising the question of change; it is the cost of the system.

I say time and time again to people in the prairie region interested in the grain industry that we should look at the money available to them as a total of what they will get for the goods they sell, plus what the treasury may make available for national policy reasons, and out of that sum anything that goes for cost will be their loss. If the cost is higher than necessary, then obviously we have a significant problem.

This is where I come to the interesting comments of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre who thinks that the simple procedure in regard to the grain handling system is to do nothing for five years, to have a five-year delay in the removal of branch lines, without regard to the fact that this is a matter of cost, and it is not just a cost to the rail system but a cost to the elevator system which is served by it which also is significantly higher than it need be if the grain is moved through fewer houses.

We have said repeatedly that in our view these facts relating to cost should be made clearly available to producers—we have been doing a great deal to ensure that this will happen—and the producers should have a chance to choose whether they receive the lower-cost system, with the changes which are required to bring it about, or whether they are willing to pay for the higher-cost system thus avoiding the adjustments which are involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him, unless it is extended by unanimity of the House, has expired under the order passed earlier.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) recently assured western Canada that it is the intention of his government to lend a more attentive ear to problems voiced by western Canadians. He maintained that the difficulties confronting western Canada concerned him and his government as much as did those of any other region of Canada. However, as one who feels he has some understanding of the situation in western Canada, I doubt the government's sincerity, and so do the people. Our scepticism can be attributed to numerous instances in the past where a succession of Liberal governments have failed to honour their commitments to the west. "Credibility" is the word. History has made it hard for us to be very optimistic.

No other single issue in recent years has damaged the government's credibility in Winnipeg and Manitoba as much as the transfer of the Air Canada overhaul base from Winnipeg to Dorval. This House is quite familiar with the circumstances, both past and present, surrounding the transfer. However, let me once again briefly acquaint the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) with the history of the transfer and some of the repercussions which have followed because of it.

To most Air Canada employees who were transferred from Winnipeg to Dorval, the year 1948 is synonymous with the appointment of G. R. McGregor as TCA president. In that year rumours started that the airline was moving out of Manitoba. McGregor, who was born and raised in Montreal, was instrumental in moving the headquarters' staff to Montreal. Over the years he achieved, as the records show, the relocation of most of the TCA operations that were originally started in Winnipeg. While the moves were actually taking place, Mr. McGregor and C. D. Howe, then the minister of transport, denied there was any transfer in progress. For example, in July, 1948, Mr. Howe said that 95 per cent of TCA would remain in Winnipeg. In July, 1949, Mr. McGregor stated:

> TCA's long association with Winnipeg has been a very happy one, and will continue . . . in Winnipeg.

He also said:

> The cost of moving it would be tremendous and TCA would be moving from an area in which it can hire good mechanical help in an apparently abundant supply, to an area where that supply, both as quality and quantity, is not comparable.

This was the case, and still is. When TCA was established in 1937, Winnipeg was chosen as the overhaul centre by a group of unbiased American experts who based their choice on all the pertinent factors, that is, dry climate, clear flying weather, land values, construction costs, taxation, etc. Presumably, these experts had no axe to grind and were solely interested in locating in the most logical area of Canada. This they did. When the facilities were transferred outright in 1969, the base was an extremely efficient and well administered operation with the capacity to handle jet age aircraft and technology.

At any rate, the 1950s saw repeated denials by government officials of a wholesale transfer. Nevertheless, the transfer continued. For example, in 1951 the major portion of the engineer's department and a number of radio technicians were moved. The year 1952 saw the communications laboratory moved to Dorval. In March of 1963, Mr. Pearson stated that it was in the national interest that Winnipeg should be an air centre and TCA operations and services should continue to this end. Mr. Pearson also stated: "The proper location of TCA's facilities and services will be determined in a manner which is fair and equitable to the city of Winnipeg." In December of that year, Manitoba was assured by Mr. Pearson: " . . . it is the policy of the government to do everything possible to maintain employment at the TCA base in Winnipeg, and if possible to increase it."

In a letter dated May 23, 1968, to Premier Weir of Manitoba, the Prime Minister wrote: "You may be assured that the present government will honour the commitment made by my predecessor, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, and that we will, in addition, vigorously search out alternatives aimed at maintaining a viable aircraft support industry in Manitoba." These were merely a few of the promises made to the people of Winnipeg, employees of Air Canada and the aerospace industry in Manitoba. In the end, the Air Canada overhaul operation in Winnipeg was phased out. CAE Aircraft, a division of Northwest Industries of Edmonton, acquired the base and was assured of federal government assistance in establishing itself as a viable substitute for Air Canada in Winnipeg. The firm, however, has been beset with financial difficulties.

Skilled personnel have had to leave Manitoba and seek employment elsewhere. Former Air Canada employees who chose to stay in Winnipeg rather than move to Dorval have finally had to relocate there. Where is the federal government now? What about the promises to maintain a viable aircraft industry in the province? This is what I mean by the term "credibility" that I mentioned earlier. The federal government has none in Manitoba. There is only a credibility gap. The government has failed miserably thus far in honouring its promises.

Rather than cite a surfeit of other promises and agreements in which federal government officials assured us that the future of Air Canada in Winnipeg was secure, I would like to dwell on a vitally important factor which often has been overlooked in this entire fiasco. This is the human factor. For several months I have been studying the events and circumstances surrounding the transfer of this overhaul base to Dorval. I have received great quantities of mail from individuals who were transferred from Winnipeg to Dorval. I have travelled there and talked with the employees, and plan to do so soon again. From all of this I have learned of the tremendous costs being incurred by the operation at Dorval. It is neither efficient nor economical.

But beyond all this is the effect of such a move upon the Air Canada employee, upon the individual's well-being. Worker morale at Dorval is low. Many employees resent having been forced to move because of lack of employment in Winnipeg. They blame the government. Social commentator Vance Packard points out in his book "A Nation of Strangers" that North Americans who are forced to move often encounter psychological problems which are more acute than people realize. Packard says that people who have no roots in the area to which they move often become isolated and indifferent to community problems, while being obsessed with their own difficulties. In studying aerospace communities, Packard discovered that their ever-changing populations are often beset by everything from infidelity to alcoholism. This book is an exhaustive study which attempts to alert people to the hazards of mobility. The problems Packard discusses obviously exist in many communities, and from what I know of the Dorval situation I would not be surprised to discover there pronounced difficulties of this nature.

It is time the government took heed of the situation. As Manitoba's representative in the cabinet, the Minister of National Defence must press for action. The people of Manitoba can no longer depend on the Prime Minister and his promises. It also appears that we can no longer depend upon the hon. member for Winnipeg South, either. Was it not he who said that the transfer was "one of the worst decisions made in Canadian history"? It was also he who said: "No one endorses more strongly than I do the concept of decentralization of industrial activity." Yet the minister is content to acquiesce while the government of which he is part does nothing to act upon its promises to the city of Winnipeg and to the aerospace industry in Manitoba. Instead, the government tries to bribe the people of Manitoba with token gestures announced by a Minister of National Defence whose credibility rating is quickly declining.

The Minister of National Defence has refused to inspect the Dorval situation, and to my knowledge—

An hon. Member: What about the Mint?

Mr. McKenzie: Oh, it will be staffed by people from Quebec. To my knowledge, he has also declined offers from Air Canada employees for a tour of the facilities at Dorval. I hope I am wrong in that statement. Earlier I spoke of credibility. To keep his credibility, the Minister of National Defence must press immediately for generous government assistance to establish a productive aerospace industry in Manitoba. If such measures are not forthcoming, then he should resign from the cabinet so as to demonstrate his sincerity in articulating the western position federally and to save any credibility he might have left with regard to this entire issue.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if there is one subject which has dominated Canadian parliaments ever since this country was put together, it must be the subject of transportation. If there is one thing this country is dependent upon, it is of course transportation. For that reason it has always been dominant in the speeches of parliamentarians and of people outside politics.

Transportation is the vital link which holds, or tries to hold, this country together. Successive governments have attempted to deal with it in order to come up with a policy that will satisfy all aspects of Canada. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this country being the kind of country it is, there has never been a policy which has satisfied all parts of it; and listening to this debate and hearing hon. members from all sides, I must say I have not heard any policy tonight which will satisfy all parts of the country.

In particular, the speech given by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who led off the debate was lacking in any ideas as to changes that might take place. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) was a little more constructive in that he had something to offer, even though he was going to settle the problem by nationalizing it all, thereby sweeping it under the rug, and taxing the Canadian people to provide services that are not necessarily economic, sensible or reasonable.

I come from an area of Canada which I call on the outer fringes. By that I mean it is not an area near or attached directly to any of the metropolitan centres of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Consequently, the problem that the people in my region face is very similar to that faced by those represented by the hon. member for Vegreville and by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, in that our areas have declining population vis-à-vis the metropolitan centres.

The argument, of course, is over whether or not this decline in population, this change in our economic fortunes has been caused by economic policies, by tariff policies, by transportation policies, or whatever. But the point, surely, is that in a dynamic country such as Canada, which is basically still a developing country, there cannot be any policy that is static, that is stable, to deal with a problem which is continually evolving. In other words, anybody who comes to the House of Commons and says, "I have the answer for now and forever" is making the assumption that the country is never going to change, and that of course is ridiculous.

What all this means is that any policies we propose and legislate, we must be prepared to overthrow in a few years as the country develops in ways which are unbeknownst to us. In an area such as northwestern Ontario, its problems are compounded by the fact that the federal government, looking at the over-all statistics as to how Canada operates, regards my area as part of the wealthiest province of all. When you want to talk about a problem that is of legitimate concern to the people of northwestern Ontario, the federal government says, "You must go to the government of Ontario because it has the power and, more important, the money that is necessary for dealing with the problem." In addition, of course, most of the province's population is not distributed around the northwest but is to be found in the golden horseshoe area, in and around Toronto. This means that our transportation problems are never considered as serious as those of eastern Ontario, simply because the population is not in our area. The population is in and around Toronto, not in the north. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, although we have a pretty good idea of what our transportation problems are, we can never find any way of obtaining substantial redress.

Let me indicate some of the frustrations the people of my area have experienced in the fields of national and provincial transportation policies. It seems to us that those policies, hand in hand, discriminate against those who are isolated from the metropolitan centres. Whether this discrimination is deliberate or accidental, I cannot say. Nevertheless, it does happen, probably naturally, because both governments are inclined to pay more attention to the larger centres of population than to the more sparsely settled areas.

The size of the problem was brought home to me when the government announced in the Speech from the Throne that there would be a conference of western provinces to discuss transportation problems. By definition, Mr. Speaker, that eliminated the province of Ontario and eliminated my region which on most issues has more in common with the west than with the province of Ontario.

Mr. Alexander: Are you criticizing your own leader?

Mr. Reid: Northwestern Ontario is the great land bridge between the Prairies and eastern centres such as Hamilton. Our problem is that transportation systems seem to be designed to pass through, around and over our area but not to stop there and participate in the growth of the area. This is frustrating because even though the area from which I come is in the centre of Canada, very little happens there. Whether this is because of transportation circumstances, the nature of the climate or the resources with which we deal, I do not know. However, our birth rate is high.

Mr. Alexander: I was tempted to reply to the hon. member, but I will not.

Mr. Reid: So we face a number of problems in dealing with transportation systems. Part of our problem is that often the needs of our area do not fit into the national pattern or even into the existing provincial pattern. Let me give Your Honour a brief example. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre berated TransAir for obtaining a franchise to run between Winnipeg and Toronto. The route goes from Winnipeg to Dryden, Thunder Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Toronto and back. This franchise was granted so that Trans Air could serve northwestern Ontario adequately. Another service was to operate from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay and to Toronto. The idea was that this service would subsidize jet service to northwestern Ontario and throughout northern Manitoba.

Since there are no subsidies available for tertiary carriers of this nature, the Canadian Transport Commission provided those runs to permit TransAir to upgrade its equipment. When they first began their service throughout northwestern Ontario, they used DC3s. The route went from Winnipeg to Kenora, Dryden, Thunder Bay and Sault Ste. Marie along with another service that used a jet for servicing Winnipeg, Thunder Bay and Toronto. For awhile this was a perfectly acceptable solution. Then the traffic grew so much on the former route that Trans Air replaced the aircraft used with those of greater capacity; more traffic was generated from my section of northwestern Ontario than had been anticipated. Unfortunately, the increase in traffic encouraged Trans Air to put a jet on that service, which eliminated the town of Kenora from the direct service it had enjoyed. The existing service was replaced by one utilizing YS-11A aircraft. That service has since degenerated and a twin-engine Otter aircraft is used.

Although the general transportation system of the area has been improved because of the jet service, made possible by providing Trans Air with a route with which to subsidize the former route, in towns like Kenora there has been a substantial deterioration of service resulting from the improved equipment which Trans Air is using. This, it strikes me, is one of the problems which all such small communities need to face.

As diesels have been introduced, and jet aircraft, the improved equipment can only operate effectively over longer distances, which means that communities lying in between must suffer a deterioration of service which can only be described as substantial. One has only to look at the way in which the railways now treat areas in between major centres. No longer do they have agents in these small communities and no longer do they maintain telegraph service there. Instead, they maintain service centres, which means that one must get in touch with the railway by long distance telephone to reach the appropriate office in one of the larger centres. Nothing except substantially diminishing service is available to the people of these small communities. For example, no longer is it possible at Dryden or Kenora for freight to be dropped off at the station. If a shipment is coming from Toronto, it must go to Winnipeg and be shipped back.

An hon. Member: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Reid: It must come back almost 200 miles.

Mr. Alexander: There is the same problem in Hamilton. The question is, what will the minister do?

Mr. Reid: In talking about transportation we must ask, who is to pay? The difficulty we face is that the railways, airlines and other modes of transportation improve in efficiency, they do not improve the efficiency of service to smaller centres. Rather, they improve the efficiency of service to larger centres. This has put tremendous pressure on smaller communities which need to be served. Whether this has happened as a result of deliberate action on the part of those involved in the transportation system, or whether it is natural evolution of the kind which has taken place on the world market is a question open to debate and it is a point with which I do not intend to deal. What we are talking about is the provision of service to small communities. In any discussion of this nature concerning transportation, we must determine what is a fair and adequate rate structure, then determine who is to bear the extra cost, and then who must bear the cost of the subsidy.

I recall when I was a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that we discussed the elimination of the "Dominion" train which at that time travelled across Canada. We met with both CPR and CNR officials. One statement attributed to the president of the CPR, at that time Mr. Sinclair, was to the effect that even if the "Dominion" train were operating at 100 per cent capacity, and even if a row of seats were to be put on top of the train, open to the elements, enough revenue would still not be generated to pay the expenses. We heard the same story from the CNR. At that time Canadian National was attempting to attract more passenger traffic. The point is, however, that the CPR has deliberately attempted to scuttle its passenger service and has not maintained equipment at a proper level. It is not providing sufficient service.

An hon. Member: Neither is the CNR.

Mr. Reid: You cannot get a reservation even if you try.

An hon. Member: The same applies to the CNR.

Mr. Reid: Let me deal with the CPR. Recently a group of students from Kenora travelled east on an educational tour. Did they travel by CPR? Not on your life, Mr. Speaker. They couldn't afford it. They took the CNR. It seems to me that in the circumstances, since the Canadian government has adopted the formula whereby it picks up 50 per cent of the operating loss on passenger service on both CNR and CPR, the formula is not properly structured. It should be revised to provide that the government would pick up 80 per cent, but only after it had penalized the railways for not filling passenger cars to capacity. In other words, I am suggesting that the obligation should be—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him under the order of the House made earlier has expired.

• (2100)

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I confess that I was somewhat disappointed in the opening remarks of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) this afternoon when he, in true Pavlovian fashion, executed that old knee jerk reaction as he repeated once again the old refrain about the failure of public ownership in his province of Saskatchewan—failure due, alas, to that wicked NDP government. But he did recover somewhat, I thought, as he went on to castigate the failure of the present government to enunciate any kind of intelligible transportation policy.

Things picked up for the government, however, when the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) rose to speak. His eulogistic phrases for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) dropped like the gentle rain from heaven and I listened with rapt attention until he spoke so glowingly of the minister's Herculean efforts in the area of railroad pensions. At that point I shut off my speaker because I realized that the gentle rain had made him all wet. I am not going to attack the Minister of Transport. If anything, I would commiserate with him for he, poor soul, has inherited several generations of bungling from successive Tory and Liberal governments who would not know a transportation policy from a Prince Albert radish, whatever that is.

Canadian transportation policy started with John A. Macdonald who united this country with a band of steel, as the historians put it. Also, at the same time we gave away half of this country to the CPR, an act which gave that company an advantage which it has never yielded: it still owns a great part of Canada, one way or another. In the days of R. B. Bennett and Mackenzie King, the Canadian railway situation was pretty desperate. The public investment in the CNR and CPR, not counting the CNR debts to the government on which no interest was paid, amounted to $2,200,000,000. Railway transportation was such a mess that CNR president Sir Henry Thornton suggested a royal commission to attack the whole problem. The commission was struck, and like most Tory and Grit commissions it achieved nothing but more expense to the taxpayer. Is anyone surprised?

At the time there was a suggestion that the two railways be merged under public ownership, but the commission opposed that idea. So did the other place. In fact, a group of Montreal bankers, throwing up their hands in shocked horror, made a counter proposal that the CPR take over the CNR in the interests of private entrepreneurship. But, fortunately, the Canadian people would have none of it since the majority believed in public ownership. Various other measures were suggested and some tried, but nothing worked, and by 1937 the Canadian people were paying interest charges on a debt of $3 billion, a debt which became a millstone around the necks of the Canadian people.

In 1973 we still have a national railway and a private railway, with the private company still skimming off the goodies and the national railway running a poor second. The Canadian people have long since accepted the principle of public ownership of railways. All that remains, Mr. Speaker, is to persuade the representatives of the people that it is in the best interests of Canada to take over the CPR and to develop one unified transportation system whose main function would be to provide fast, safe and efficient service for the people of Canada.

This brings me to the next matter that I wish to speak of in connection with railways. I would like to speak of the inequities that plague the men and women who work for our own national railway system, the CNR. When referring to the CPR, just multiply by two. One would think that since the CNR is wholly-owned by the people of Canada, it would be concerned to provide much needed jobs at a time when unemployment is one of the social problems of greatest concern to its owners, the Canadian public. In actual fact, according to the information I have, the CNR is busily engaged in reducing the size of its work force on the west coast, is showing a lamentable lack of interest in providing necessary safety precautions in the Fraser canyon, and is doing its best to compete with the CPR in providing the worst possible pension scheme.

Hardly a day goes by that I and my colleagues do not receive letters and phone calls from disgruntled railroad employees. The present work-to-rule situation is only symptomatic of poor working conditions that have accumulated over the years to the point at which major concessions will have to be made to head off widespread disruption of essential rail services. In British Columbia, one of the chief complaints is that CNR yardmen in the greater Vancouver terminal are being forced to reduce switch crews from three men to two men. This reduction is all perfectly legal since the workingmen found themselves in a position of having to sign an agreement or else go to arbitration. Since the box score for arbitration has been nine to one for the employers, there did not seem much point in opposing the arbitration. Already 13 crews have been reduced and 25 more are scheduled to be reduced in the next 11 months. Crews have been reduced in Edmonton as well. And this at a time when the entire nation is concerned about unemployment.

I am a shareholder in the CNR in the same sense that every Canadian citizen is a shareholder. It disturbs me to hear that the CNR is reducing crews at the risk of reducing safety, that longer and longer trains are being coupled, that niggardly pensions are reluctantly granted, all in the name of productivity. Railroad engineers are deeply concerned about hazardous conditions in the Fraser canyon. They speak of the absence of ditch lights and slide fences that have not been reset for a considerable time. They tell of an engineer stuck in a snowslide for just short of 38 hours with no food and no apparent attempt to get it to him, and of another engineer on snow plow duty for over 23 hours without rest or eating facilities.

All of this, Mr. Speaker, is intended to reinforce the point that in the formulation of a national transportation policy, in the operation of a publicly-owned railroad, the prime factors to be considered should be safety and service—safety not only for the men who have got to make their living railroading, but also for the public which depends on these facilities.

The reputation of our railroads for poor treatment of its employees is shameful. The hon. member for Prince Albert has already made reference to the poor morale on our national railway. I will not dwell on the pension aspect at this time because this is a subject that has been brought up in this chamber time and time again and will continue to be brought up until a decent pension allowance is made to men who have given their lives in the service of the people of Canada. I would hope that in the negotiations now under way there will be better treatment of railway employees, because whether we are speaking of an army or an army of workers they will not be effective unless consideration is given to the important question of morale.

Related to the topic of rail transport is the proposal by Premier Barrett to utilize existing railroading trackage for the transport of oil from Alaska through the Yukon and British Columbia and by pipeline to Seattle. On the face of it, his proposal seems eminently sensible. All that would be needed in terms of railroad construction would be a relatively short extension of the Alaska railroad to connect with the B.C. railroad at Lower Post.

Setting aside the economic implications for the moment, one salient point emerges, namely, that this route is the most acceptable one from a "people standpoint". The transport of oil by tanker off the shores of British Columbia has met with continuous opposition from people on both sides of the border and will continue to meet with opposition. How anyone can seriously defend such a route escapes me. When we realize that 70 per cent of the earth's surface consists of ocean, and when we reflect on the disturbing trend to build larger and larger tankers—we are threatened with tankers approaching 500,000 tons in size—we must surely realize that we are ultimately faced with the problem of oceans being incapable of sustaining marine life.

Pipelines such as the proposed Mackenzie valley pipeline threaten to create similar environmental havoc and such proposals are being opposed almost as strenuously as the use of tankers. We hear reports that the people of the north will simply not allow the pipeline to be built; that they will blow it up if necessary. I have never heard any objection expressed to the transportation of oil by railroad. In fact, the concept seems to satisfy people generally as an alternative choice to both sea transport and to pipeline transport. The difficulty seems to be that the decision-makers think in economic terms mainly, while the people most affected think in terms of the effect on their surroundings, on the quality of life in Canada's future.

I do not pretend to be an expert on the transportation of oil or on the building of railways, and for this I make no apology. We all have our areas of competency. Mine lay in the teaching field. Some hon. members on my right are experts on points of order that are not points of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nelson: But what interests me in this question of alternative oil routes is the reaction of the government, as expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), to the proposal of Mr. Barrett. When the plan first became public, the Prime Minister did not indicate approval; the Prime Minister did not indicate disapproval of the plan, but he did manage to indicate by an enthusiastic lack of enthusiasm a completely negative approach to the plan even before details of it were known to members of the House.

I would not for a moment suggest without further study, that this plan is preferable to others, but I do suggest most strenuously that it should be given extremely serious consideration by the government and by all members of the House, as should any plan to transport oil by rail rather than by pipeline through permafrost, or by ship through our oceans. We are not concerned here solely with the economic feasibility of an oil route. We should not be concerned with political gamesmanship.

Mr. Alexander: Heavens, no!

Mr. Nelson: We should not descend to consideration of whether the reigning provincial oil route critic has been included in negotiations or not. We should be concerned mainly with the welfare of future generations and the environment in which we will live. It is this principle that should govern consideration of a national transportation policy, whether of people, goods or oil.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise as a member from a rural riding in the maritime provinces and I trust the House will bear with me if I seem to typify some of the opinions held in that area. In a rural riding we have greater distances to travel than perhaps other Canadians in order to get to various facilities. We have greater distances to ship our goods. One might well assume that in those circumstances the greater distances involved would result in cheaper transportation rates per mile for the carriage of our goods and for the carriage of our people. Instead of having a cheaper mileage rate of such transportation, we in fact pay a higher rate. Instead of getting a break on rates we are, in a sense, kicked by them. It actually costs more per mile to ship goods in the maritime provinces than it does in the wealthier parts of Canada. In fact, it costs 50 per cent more, Mr. Speaker, to travel on the railroad in Nova Scotia than it does to travel between Montreal and Toronto. I am sure you will agree that that is not the way to remove disparities among provinces.

Rural Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a frontier. It begs to be developed. Atlantic Canada is largely rural, and it begs to be developed. Railways were originally considered an instrument of development in this country but they have defaulted in that function. British Columbia Rail, or B.C. Rail as it is called, is an instrument of development in British Columbia and it is performing a fantastic operation there. Go-go transit in Ontario is another illustration of how development can be put into effect by the railways.

Now even the province of New Brunswick is getting into the act with a scheme which I suppose will be called N.B. Rail. They are going to take over the railroad in order to help develop that province. But the fact that these several provinces are getting into the railroad business is indicative of the bankruptcy of the policy of the government which has been in power for so many years in Canada. It is indicative of the bankruptcy of policy to the extent that transportation in this country, which is supposed to be a national responsibility, is being taken over by the provinces.

I was encouraged by the announcement of the minister on December 18 that a northwest transportation plan was being considered. I hope it comes to fruition. But I would earnestly recommend to the minister that he consider not only that great frontier of northern Canada for development by means of better rail transportation, but also the frontier which is epitomized by the Atlantic provinces, a frontier which has yet to be developed. It is an area which should certainly share in the development which will one day be Canada. I express the hope that greater federal and provincial co-operation, as was envisaged in the announcement of the minister in December, can become a reality in the rest of Canada and that such a spirit of development can be applied with regard to Nova Scotia.

Not only should the theory of development be applied in the case of railways, Mr. Speaker; it should also be applied with regard to ferry services. Ferry services are a problem very close to the hearts of those in western Nova Scotia whom I represent. What is the history of the ferry service in western Nova Scotia? It is evidence of the typical lack of concern which has been shown by federal authorities for transportation in that area. We do have two Canadian ferries running across the Bay of Fundy, one of which is owned by the CPR and has, thank goodness, been upgraded in the past few years and provides a fairly efficient service, albeit at a little more expense than the local people feel should be necessary if industry is to be encouraged in the area. However, I am not going to dwell on that ferry. I want to mention in some detail the ferry which runs between Yarmouth and Bar Harbour. That ferry, the Bluenose is now 17 years old. It was built at a time when trucks were a good deal shorter and when trains were a good deal longer. It was built to accommodate traffic of the 1950s and it is no longer adequate to accommodate the traffic of the 1970s.

According to a report appearing in our provincial daily on January 24, senior officials of the Department of Transport, senior officials of the CNR and senior officials of the provincial government were to meet to discuss the possible replacement of that ferry. That news report indicated that the provincial officials expected that after the meeting they would have some concrete answers in approximately two weeks. Well, that was some six weeks ago now and there has been no answer. Although I have diligently sought information from the department in the meantime, I have not been able to ascertain what the future holds in store for this ferry. The only answer I have been able to get is that perhaps a survey will be undertaken.

May I remind the minister, who was not in his present portfolio a few years ago, that in 1967-68 a competent firm, A. D. Margison and Associates, did a study in depth of the type of vessel that ought to be used on that service from the point of view of potential traffic. I suggest it would take only a very short time to update that study and to design the type of ferry that is necessary. In addition, one factor that Margison did not get any input on in their study is that a couple of foreign ferries are plying the waters between Yarmouth and the New England shore. One of them has been operating for a couple of years with very great success, and I suggest a lesson is to be learned from the success of that operation. It is most regrettable that Canadian entrepreneurs or the Canadian government did not have sufficient fortitude to place a vessel on that service long before it became necessary for the traffic to be taken up by a foreign owner.

I have been speaking of the necessity of transportation development and I now want to say a word about industry in the maritime provinces and particularly in my area. I represent an area which is largely a small business area. Very few of these businesses are able to grow into big businesses in the terms we think of big businesses in central Canada. You may ask Mr. Speaker, why that is. Why is it that living standards and incomes in our area tend to be lower than they are in other areas of Canada? Why is it that our successful businesses fail to grow into big businesses? Is it because we are less intelligent as a people than Upper Canadians? Enough maritimers have left their mark on Canadian universities to refute that idea. Are we less ambitious than Upper Canadians? Enough maritimers have achieved success in business in Upper Canada to refute that suggestion. Are we less in tune with the flow of events than Upper Canadians, or are we less shrewd? The Maritimes has produced more prime ministers and perhaps more ministers of finance than any other area in Canada, which I suggest refutes that argument.

So why is it, Mr. Speaker, that we appear to be a little backward? Why is it that even in the cradle of confederation itself the structures of this country are questioned? I suggest to you that, more than any other reason, the answer simply is: transportation. What does it do to us?

What does it do to the small businessman in my constituency? I can give the House some hint. If anybody in my constituency wants to go into the canning business, it will cost him at least two cents more per can to get his products on the shelves of stores owing to the cost of transportation of his cans.

Let me take another example, the fruit business. It cost about $1 per case to get apples to the major markets of Canada, which is enough to wipe out all the profit that is possible, and then some. Potatoes, apples, processed fruits and vegetables, fish products all face that same high tariff; I suggest it cannot be described as anything else. Transportation costs constitute a tariff on our goods entering the great Canadian market.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who is only just getting adjusted to his new portfolio, and very enthusiastically according to his parliamentary secretary, has a great opportunity in his present position to remove a great deal of the disparity in transportation costs in Canada. He has the benefit of his experience gained with DREE in his previous portfolio and he must know the difficulty of attempting to get industry to locate in the maritime provinces, in the west, in eastern Quebec, even in parts of Ontario, largely because of transportation costs. The experience that this minister has derived from DREE, coupled with his new knowledge and enthusiasm in regard to transportation matters, can serve the government in good stead if he will formulate a transportation policy that will assist in solving, rather than perpetuating, the disparities that exist between the have and the have-not regions of this country.

Hon. members may say of the transportation difficulties in the Maritimes, "Ah ha, but you have the advantage in regard to export markets; you do not have to send your products to central Canada". But even here the transportation policies of the major companies play tricks on you. It costs more to send a containerload of apples from Kentville, in the Annapolis valley, to Europe than it does from Hamilton, Ontario. Similarly, it costs more to ship grain from Saskatchewan to Nova Scotia than it does to ship it from Saskatchewan to northern Europe. In those circumstances it is very difficult indeed for the people in our area to compete effectively.

We have a misconception about transportation facilities in Canada, and indeed in North America. We take the approach that transportation facilities should be profit-making enterprises. Why is this so? After all, we do not believe that the streets in our cities should make a profit; these are a necessary part of infrastructure, a necessary means of commerce. We do not believe that our highways should make a profit, even though there are substantial licensing fees, gas taxes, and so on. So why is it that in North America transportation facilities, which are vital in binding the country together and in enabling people in one area to compete effectively with people in another area, should be required to show a profit?

I suggest it is high time that this House and the government recognized that the Canadian transportation system, particularly the railways, is not and should not be thought of as a profit making endeavour only, or even primarily. The primary purpose of railways in Canada is that which was conceived in 1867 by Sir John A. Macdonald and the Fathers of Confederation: the railways are an instrument of development. They should be an instrument of unity, an instrument to remove regional disparities in Canada.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, while other industries in this country show really aggressive approaches, in my opinion the railroads are very, very backward. Situated as I am in mid-Canada, in the area of Thunder Bay, one of Canada's largest harbours, a harbour that on a monthly basis when it is open carries the greatest tonnage of any harbour in Canada—

An hon. Member: Is this your maiden speech?

Mr. McRae: The same speech, and the same railroads too. Situated in the middle of this country, I see the role of the railroads as linking one part of the country with the other part. Yet I see a railroad system that is very weak and unaggressive, one that does not take opportunities when opportunities come along. In many ways the two railroads of this country do not want to run a railroad. I mention their approach to the provision of passenger service as an example. In my area recently 22 operators and other workers were laid off by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

• (2130)

So-called service centres have now been established in most of the places along the route, but they are a disgrace if the one that we found in the old city of Port Arthur is anything to go by, with plaster hanging off the ceiling, and so on. Because the agencies are no longer there, the service falls off and people are not able to buy tickets at the station. A sign on the door tells them to get their ticket at a travel agency. A year or two from now, Mr. Speaker, the CPR will come back to the public asking for larger subsidies because they are losing money, and it is because of the kind of non-aggressive approach that they are taking now.

Where were the railways when the issue of the Pickering airport first arose? Did they present a ground alternative; did they propose rapid ground transportation? No, they were not to be seen. Last week the Premier of British Columbia introduced the idea of a railroad alternative to the Mackenzie valley pipeline. At about the same time I was speaking in the committee on Indian affairs and northern development about the same kind of matter, only I was speaking of a rail pipeline along the east side of the Rockies.

A group working at Queen's University, called the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport, has made some studies on this approach. They suggested that a railroad is a viable alternative to this particular pipeline. The difficulty with the pipeline is that it requires that the oil carried be heated to 150 degrees to 180 degrees in order to move in the Arctic, and therefore a pipeline cannot safely be burried in the ground because it would melt the permafrost.

This group at Quenn's University was lightly funded by the government and given some meagre support by the CNR and other groups. It maintains that 20 trains can move the same amount of oil per day as a 48-inch pipeline, that is, two million barrels. It is commonly accepted today that the pipeline route would cost $5.3 billion. A railroad, on the other hand, could be built for about $2.5 billion, according to this study. The operating cost for the pipeline, including amortization of the $5.3 billion at roughly 8 per cent, would amount to $425 million per year. It is estimated that the operating cost of the railroad would be in the neighbourhood of $400 million per year—it would be higher except for the saving in the amortization cost.

This group has indicated several advantages of the railroad. The first is that the railroad is expandable. Their figures are based on a two-track system and they maintain that a one-track system would carry the 20 trains a day. Secondly, the railroad could carry liquefied gas, minerals, etc., as well as oil. Thirdly, the railroad could go both ways, taking people and goods in both directions. And fourthly, the railroad would employ more people on an annual basis: 4800 is the figure used in the study. Another factor which must be considered, if these figures are correct, is the lower investment which of course could have some meaning in the long-term relative to our monetary position with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I bring up three points to show that the railroads are not aggressive. First, the passenger service which is deteriorating; second, the failure to look at fast ground transportation; third, the failure of the railroads to take a stand and do something about the Mackenzie valley pipeline alternative. The figures that were given at the committee the other night would seem to indicate that the amount of money spent on the Mackenzie valley pipeline study was in the neighbourhood of $40 million and the amount spent on the railroad study was a paltry $80,000. Something has to be done, Mr. Speaker, and the government can help by putting more money into this suggested alternative. However, the railroads in this country must take a stronger position, become more responsive to the needs of the modern Canadian community and develop a far more aggressive stance to problems of the future.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that I should make my maiden speech in the House of Commons on this particular subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): This is a matter which affects the quality of life of all Canadians, particularly those of us who live in rural Canada. It is an honour to have the opportunity to speak tonight in support of the argument made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) earlier today, who was so very kind in welcoming me to this House at the beginning of the session. The right hon. gentleman was born in my constituency, and the problems of transportation which he outlined today continue to plague it. It is also appropriate that I should speak on transportation tonight because my predecessor, Mr. Marvin Howe, was in the forefront of the fight to maintain decent train service for my part of the country. Canadians throughout the country are indebted to him for his service in this House, and I am aware that I have very big shoes to fill.

It was with a great deal of joy that I listened to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) this afternoon when he was eulogizing the minister, discussing the fine job he had done and pointing out how fortunate we are and how good it is of the minister not to answer our questions in the House and not to make definitive statements of policy. He held the minister up for fine praise, Mr. Speaker. Considering the number of ex-Liberal backbenchers we see around here now in various positions, I am wondering whether the parliamentary secretary is trying out for a job as head of public relations in the minister's department. The only reservation I would have to casting him in that role is that in the next government it will not be members on the other side who are being appointed.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should deal briefly with the history of the problem in southwestern Ontario. On October 1, 1970, there was a decision referred to by Southam News Service as "the land mark decision". The Canadian Transport Commission allowed the discontinuation of railway passenger service on 400 miles of track in southwestern Ontario, involving six train lines. The decision followed extensive public hearings held in Owen Sound and Guelph at which more than 70 people presented briefs. Included among these were federal and provincial members of parliament and representatives of municipal councils.

With us tonight, Mr. Speaker, we have the reeve of Elora. Either he or his representative made recommendations at that hearing. There were representatives of other public groups and private individuals who were concerned about this matter. There were representatives from councils for the province of Ontario and from a number of other provinces. Without exception, every brief presented at these hearings, except for the briefs of the railway companies, were in opposition to the discontinuance of those railway lines.

Nevertheless, the Canadian Transport Commission ruled, setting a precedent, that these lines could be allowed to be discontinued. On April 6, 1971, my predecessor, Mr. Howe, moved a motion to the effect that the Commons committee on transport and communications hold public hearings in the affected areas of southwestern Ontario. This motion was passed by the committee despite the fact that the Liberals on the committee, with the exception of the hon. member for London, voted to block the hearings taking place. Hearings were held late last spring in southwestern Ontario, at several centres. There were 55 briefs presented and 68 witnesses heard. I should like to read briefly the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications:

> Therefore your committee recommends that all rail passenger services which were discontinued on November 1, 1970, should be re-established immediately and a moratorium should be placed on all pending passenger train discontinuance applications in Canada, until the study referred to hereafter is completed, as recommended in many briefs and particularly in that brief presented by the government of the province of Ontario.

Beyond that, it recommends that immediately a tri-level study be undertaken to discuss the totality of the problem in Canada to make sure that proper service is provided for all Canadians. That was a committee dominated by the Liberal party. It had a Liberal majority; it had a Liberal chairman and a Liberal co-chairman. The report of the committee came in. It was presented to the government. The government has refused to act on it since that time.

In reply to questions in respect of this service, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has adamantly refused to do anything until he has had consultations with the government of the province of Ontario, despite the fact that the federal government has sole responsibility for passenger services in this country, and despite the fact that the province of Ontario is on record on two occasions, before the Canadian Transport Commission and also before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, as favouring the immediate reinstatement of these railway services.

The minister referred, in supporting his case, to what he erroneously called the Soberland report, which was a study commissioned by the CTC and carried out by Dr. Soberman, on commuter rail services for metropolitan Toronto. The minister seems to feel that nothing could be done in respect of acceptance or rejection of this report until such time as he spoke to the province of Ontario regarding these rail services which are commuter services around Toronto.

This has absolutely nothing to do with the problem of discontinuance of service on those six rail lines in Ontario. If the minister had done his homework, he would be aware of this. The delay is unconscionable. The government knew it had a majority on the committee. Government members supported the report as well as our members. All the local representatives, the local members of parliament, the local members of the provincial parliament who were present, the members of citizens' groups and the members of local municipalities who spoke, were in support of the reinstatement of this service. There is no question about it. There is nothing to study before the minister brings back the service. We need action on this right now.

Today we were asked by members on the other side to be constructive in our criticism. They felt that perhaps we had not been constructive. I say my constructive criticism is that if they seriously want to improve the rail service, they could get to work and accept the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I can promise hon. members opposite that if the government refuses to act, a progressive Conservative government will get those trains moving again.

Let me speak briefly about the question of whether the railways have attempted in good faith to provide adequate service for the people of southwestern Ontario. I think one newspaper article from the London Free Press of Saturday January 5, 1973, illustrates very well the sort of service they have been providing. It goes like this:

> Like most three-year-old boys, Teddy Evans of London loves trains.
> So, on Nov. 17, his mother, Mrs. Edward R. (Donna) Evans of 52 Wellesley Cres., took him for his first train ride.
> It wasn't exactly the kind of ride Mrs. Evans was expecting.
> They boarded a Canadian National Railways train in London for Toronto where they were to meet Mr. Evans. She and her son ended up in the baggage car with about 30 other passengers because the regular coaches were filled.
> They had to sit on suitcases in the dimly-lit rough car amid baggage and other freight.
> Mrs. Evans and some other passengers were startled when a body in a casket was put into the baggage car at Brantford.
> "When they put the corpse on, that was a bit much," Mrs. Evans said.
> The only window was in the door. It was "very dark and not meant for people to travel on," she said.
> "CN didn't even apologize for putting the passengers in the baggage car," Mrs. Evans said.
> "The conductor made a joke about it. He said "it's not everyone who can ride in the baggage car". The woman said: "What really bugged me was a newspaper article saying that train service is adequate but there aren't enough people to ride the trains."
> Mrs. Evans said it was the first time she had travelled in a baggage car, and "I hope it's the last time."
>
> Her son, Teddy, enjoyed the ride because it was his first time on a train, Mrs. Evans said.
> "He was kind of upset because he couldn't see out."

The reporter was unable to get a comment from the passenger riding in the casket. Mr. Speaker, I can deal briefly with the CTC. The CTC asks whether uneconomic lines should be allowed to continue. This is how they define it:

> To include such considerations as the cost of alternative modes of transportation as determinants of "uneconomic" would raise the possibility that highly unprofitable lines could be designated "economic" and therefore ineligible for subisdy only because alternative transportation is either unavailable or more costly. Such a result would be contrary to the national transportation policy—

I was interested to read, also, a quotation from the words of the Minister of Transport when he was president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions in 1961. He said that a transportation policy is closely tied to economic planning, and as such must be linked to the common good and not to the profitability of private enterprise. I hope he continues to think along those lines and gives us some action on this particular situation.

Surely, when the CTC makes these decisions it should take into consideration the cost of pollution in respect of driving people off the trains and into private automobiles, the rights of senior citizens and the rights of people who do not drive, the cost of alternative transportation which must be provided by the provinces, and the effect, most importantly, upon the development of the small communities of rural Canada which count upon decent transportation for their health.

Mr. Speaker, this government has shown a concern for the problems of regional disparity. I am asking tonight that it indicate that it is also concerned about rural Canadians in Ontario. A decent system of transportation is the right of all Canadians. The government could act tonight, show it has good faith and that it respects that right of all citizens in Canada to have the quality of life which they deserve.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that this discussion has taken place. I am pleased, also that the Conservative party, particularly the last speaker, has indicated that it would make transportation work. When we speak of transportation we usually speak of railways. That is what the hon. member was speaking of. If it is to work, obviously some members of the Conservative Party are of the opinion that we must renationalize the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific, because there does not appear to be any other way in which we will get any action on the problem.

The hon. member did not mention that among our studies there are studies which have been done in other areas. We find in northern Ontario also that the Canadian Transport Commission has failed to provide an alternative to subsidy, and we find in the mid-Canada passenger train service that $10 million has been authorized to allow the companies to operate at a loss. Under the policy of the Canadian Transport Commission the railways are subsidized to the tune of 80 per cent. The railways immediately took most of their passenger lines, placed them in an uneconomical position and then asked the government to subsidize them.

The Russians, when they came to Canada on a number of occasions with committees of parliamentarians, indicated that they thought what we were developing better than anyone else was our transportation system. That is high praise, coming from people from a country which can put a Sputnik into space, travel around the moon and land on the moon. They can look at the Canadian transportation facilities and call them good. Obviously, we in this country have created a Canadian Transport Commission which is like the Senate and, like the Senate, I am prepared to abolish it now or at any other time.

We have retired Mr. Pickersgill so he can write his memoirs. I am surprised that with the facilities he had at the CTC he did not write those memoirs while he was the commissioner. Obviously, he did not. Now we have appointed Mr. Benson, a former minister of this government. I thought he would be there for a while, in as ineffective a position as was Mr. Pickersgill, because if I remember correctly Mr. Pickersgill had a certain facility, if nothing else, and a certain versatility of mind which enabled him to solve the machinations of Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway when he set his mind to it. I was surprised to hear that Mr. Benson is thinking of retiring.

Obviously, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is waiting for a call to that place, as was made evident in the eulogy he delivered to his minister. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) must have been embarrassed on a number of occasions in the House, but I think it is safe to say he was embarrassed today and I feel sorry for anyone who has to take that kind of praise while he is still among the living, or certainly in an active position. Obviously, the minister will not be able to live up to the eulogy and for that reason I feel sorry for him.

Some suggestions have been made today, but I think most of them hinge on whether or not the government really wants to improve transportation in Canada. We have a facility which in my opinion can be modernized and made fit for the twentieth century. At present we are operating with broken down equipment, we are operating a major grain trade with cars which the government had to buy and then lend to the railway. I was interested to hear the prairie representative of the Liberal party trying to justify his relationship to the grain trade. He told us that the government will offer a two-price system, one to the people who will accept the big elevators and hopper cars and the other to the other segment of the industry if they do not take advantage of his suggestions.

The whole industry is archaic. Railway transportation in Canada should not be archaic. Transportation by rail is surely the most efficient way of moving many of our basic commodities in this country. You cannot move them under a horse and buggy railroad system, yet that is the kind of system under which we operate. The prairie minister also mentioned that we cannot get rid of the debt of the CNR. Does he not realize that one cannot operate a national railway efficiently if there is a debt on that railway which has existed from the day it was started? We have done nothing since then but pay interest on that debt.

Surely he can see in that situation the same kind of burden as we have when we go to war. We now have a war to develop a transportation facility in this country that will be efficient. If that is so, surely we can add that debt to the rest of the national debt and allow the railway to operate without it. We should look at the tariff structure of the CNR and take away from the CPR that gravy train which they have had for so long at the expense of the Canadian people. If this minister wants to do nothing else, he can make some decision about what we are going to do with the debt of the CNR. Even if he does nothing else, he will have done something for transportation facilities in this country.

It is my opinion, and I think the opinion of many people—certainly one of the last speakers on the Liberal benches indicated that he had done some thinking about rail transportation into the high Arctic, both the east and west regions of the Arctic—that transportation by railway will have a role to play in the north. I agree with my colleague who said that we must be a bunch of idiots to spend the amount of money we are spending on STOL aircraft so that we can fly passengers from Ottawa to Montreal. The ground transportation facility that we have takes twice as long as the flight by air. It seems to me that unless you want to go for a ride, which you can do by going to any private airfield and paying five bucks for which they will take you up for a little look around, there is much better transportation by rail. This minister had better take a look at it, because if he does not I am afraid the Conservatives will not either.

However, I am also concerned that one of these days the Canadian public will take a look at this situation and will tell this government to supply that kind of transportation at a cost which they can pay. They will tell them to get rid of many of the problems which we are facing today in transportation. I suggest that one of the first things we should do is to take back the responsibility which parliament has for the national transportation policy of this nation, to take it away from the new Senate we have created, cease the political appointments that are made to that retirement body and again operate from this House a transportation policy for this nation and find solutions to some of our problems.

This is a very important motion. I think the Conservatives should be given credit for having stolen it from some of my colleagues, I am told, and also for at least bringing it forth because it is by far the best motion they have brought forth for some time. I think it would be profitable for the government to consider it and to do something about it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SHIPBUILDING—EXTENSION OF SUBSIDIES BEYOND MARCH 31

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank hon. members for giving me a hand, but I hope they do not feel they have to stay because I see here the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Breau) who comes from New Brunswick and I know I shall get a very good hearing.

• (2200)

On March 12 I asked a question of the minister with respect to the shipbuilding subsidy program which runs out on March 31. I asked whether in view of the new planned oil refineries in the east the minister would give consideration to an extension of the shipbuilding subsidy beyond that date. The minister gave a reply that was thought to be optimistic. I am not trying to crowd in on the credit, if there is going to be an extension, but I want to put one or two facts on the record about this subsidy.

There is an interesting history to aid to shipbuilding in our country. It has been an ad hoc type of assistance throughout the years. It started in 1947, in the post-World War II period when the Canadian Maritime Commission was set up. As its major responsibility it had the development of a merchant marine and of a shipbuilding and ship repair industry commensurate with Canadian needs. As everyone knows, this move was not very successful.

In 1949, the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act was passed. This provided a fast write-off for owners of ships built in Canada and it had a reasonable amount of success. Then in 1964 the Canada Shipping Act was amended, and hon. members know some of the results of that. It did bring a few vessels under Canadian registration. In 1970 we had the shipbuilding temporary assistance program called STAP. It was brought in by the former minister and it has been reasonably successful. For example, the shipbuilding yard in Saint John, in which I am particularly interested, was able to obtain an order for three 30,000-ton tankers for export, which even though they are now of foreign country registration are being used on our east coast. This was quite profitable in terms of employment and enabled the yard to finish ahead in business. The subsidy was 17 per cent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I should call it assistance rather than a subsidy. As I say it was 17 per cent, with a graduated downward formula.

The significant thing is that there has been a delay in the announcement of this program, and shipyards like to make their plans ahead of time. As I understand it, the international situation is still ripe for orders. The Canadian shipyards are well geared for work. They are reasonably efficient and they could fill some international orders. The companies, and the Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, met with the minister and were given reason for some optimism. They are now asking for 20 per cent assistance on this occasion and they feel that the present is the proper time to make the move. The shipbuilding industry has not levelled off. It is on the downgrade since completing previous orders. Assistance given now would enable the shipyards to plan for the future, to keep up the different trades and it would also provide a future both for domestic and export orders.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is in the chamber, and I know he will be optimistic in his response. I hope he will take this chance to say that the government is really behind the industry for the first time in many years. The previous minister did make some moves and I gave him credit at the time. I know that the new minister is looking for opportunities such as this to help restore his tarnished image with respect to the auto pact.

This is an opportunity for the government to indicate that it is going to do something about an industry that is very important to us in the maritime provinces from an employment standpoint. I know the parliamentary secretary is going to create optimism about this matter. He is almost going to say that it will be acceptable. I hope he will go for the 20 per cent, really be enthusiastic and help his minister by giving us confidence for the future of this industry.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to answer my hon. friend for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). I hope that I will not let him down. I am happy to see that he supports the Shipbuilding Temporary Assistance Program. It is a very good program, brought about, as he says, by a Liberal government.

He talked about the auto pact; I should like to assure him that, like the auto pact, STAP has been successful, even more successful in relative terms. As a matter of fact, it has helped in the export of ships from Canada to the order of $274 million. This represents 24 ships which have been built in several shipyards. I should mention that these ships are built in shipyards mainly in regions that need growth and employment, such as Sorel, Lauzon, Saint John and Halifax. We think it has been a very successful program. It has helped shipyards to modernize their facilities. It has helped them to become aware of export opportunities and to become competent from the marketing point of view. We think this will be good for the future.

The hon. member has mentioned that the shipbuilding industry is concerned. We agree, and I hope that the government will deal expeditiously with this question because of that concern. As the hon. member knows, the date for application for assistance is March 31. The delivery date is October 31, 1975, which means that the shipbuilding industry can apply before March 31. I agree that we need a response, but there is no urgency because they have applied. They have made plans and will have work with respect to all the applications made before March 31, 1973.

I agree with the hon. member that it is a good program. There is no way that we can cut him down, because he promised this in his campaign and we are so happy to see that in his campaign he talked about good Liberal things. That is how he came to be elected so easily. We will try to continue that, Mr. Speaker.

PORTS—CHURCHILL—ACTION TO ACHIEVE GREATER UTILIZATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I see the parliamentary secretary is present and willing to give a positive response to my question tonight regarding greater utilization of the port of Churchill. I first asked on January 11 whether the government was to utilize further the port of Churchill and the minister at that time said in essence that he was studying the proposition. A couple of weeks later I asked the question again and the minister again said that he was studying the proposition. I think that has been the answer of ministers for the last 10, 20 or 30 years on the question of the utilization of the port of Churchill which is so important to us in western Canada.

We in the west have for long said that we have been discriminated against in many ways, basically because of the transport system and the freight rate structure in our country. One of the deals made when western Canada came into confederation was that we would supply the eastern industrial market with a cheap source of raw materials and that these would be the source of finished, manufactured goods which would come from eastern Canada. As a result, today in the west we find that there is still a great deal of unfairness in the freight rate structure, inasmuch as it is more expensive to ship a product from western Canada to the east than from eastern Canada to the west. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to better utilize the port of Churchill we could perhaps equalize some of the unfairness that exists in transportation systems that affect western Canadians. I believe that the port should be utilized much more than it is today.

Consider the city of Yorkton, from which I come. There is a plant there which builds houses. They ship these prefabricated houses to within 200 miles of the port of Churchill, which may mean that they send them 700, 800 or 900 miles from the city of Yorkton. But they do not ship the houses to Churchill by rail and put them on a barge. Instead, they ship them to Montreal, put them on a boat, take them down the St. Lawrence Seaway, around by Newfoundland and through Hudson Bay to their destination which is only a few hundred miles from the port of Churchill. I am told it is about four or five times as far as it would be if they were to ship these prefabricated homes from Yorkton to the port of Churchill and by barge to the destination, whether it is Rankin Inlet or Hudson Bay.

Why do they ship them that way when it is four or five times longer? It is for a simple reason. They do not have the facilities to handle prefabricated homes at the port of Churchill. They do not have any barges. In fact, they carry the prefabricated homes from the port of Churchill to the Indian or Eskimo settlements at Hudson Bay. That points out how stupid our transportation facilities are regarding the port of Churchill, and why the government must stop studying and start acting in order to build needed facilities at the port. There should be worthwhile facilities so that we in western Canada have the inland seaport we deserve.

The provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan are putting pressure on the federal government to act. Last summer there was a study by the premiers of those two provinces. They have now formed a group called the Port of Churchill Board to put pressure on the federal government and other powers that be. The port is closer to Europe, in terms of shipping our grain, by 1,100 miles than if we ship our grain through the Great Lakes, through Montreal and on to Europe. It is about 1,100 miles shorter than going down the St. Lawrence Seaway. I am told that for the farmer this would mean 10 cents to 16 cents a bushel that he would save on his wheat if it were shipped through the port of Churchill, but is not being done in significant volume today.

In 1944, about three million bushels of grain were shipped through the port of Churchill. In 1972, only 25 million bushels of grain were shipped through the port of Churchill, despite the fact we have the technology available that could improve the port at this time. I am told that this year only about half as much grain will be shipped through that port as there was in 1972. I suggest it is time for action to improve the port.

I want to make one more point. The Hudson Bay Route Association has made many splendid recommendations over the years about this port. I think it should be commended for some of the work it has been done in drawing public attention to the reasons why we should increase the facilities there. I wish to read some of the recommendations they made in a letter they sent out in January 1973. They say that some of the following must be done:

1. Deepening of the harbour next to the wharf
2. Deepening of the "turn-around" basin
3. Grain galleries to be lengthened and modernized to suit the larger grain vessels now using the port.
4. More grain storage is needed
5. More import-export storage needed
6. Lengthening of the shipping season
7. Competitive marine insurance rates for entire season
8. Realistic railway rates comparable on a mileage basis with other lines

The next point is important:

9. An all-weather highway from the prairies to Churchill.
10. A concerted effort by all three provincial governments for more trade.

I think that outlines the reasons why we must put more federal money into that port. We must stop talking and start acting right now.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I first wish to congratulate the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on the very good presentation he has made tonight. I believe that what he said pertaining to the port of Churchill and the importance thereof is certainly true. I agree with him.

We have been most interested in the possible future development of the port of Churchill. The National Harbours Board will soon be submitting an economic study on the future of the port of Churchill to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). After reviewing this study, it is expected the government will be in a position around mid-April to state whether it is practical to take any action with respect to further port development in the area.

BILINGUALISM—PILOT PROJECT TO TEACHING FRENCH IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL AREA—TEACHING OF ENGLISH IN FRENCH-SPEAKING SCHOOLS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments about the announcement made last March 16 concerning the encouragement extended to the teaching of the second language in the schools of the Ottawa area, which provide $2 million for that purpose. As that assistance is so important, it certainly will be welcome in the area.

I would like to make some comments on that subject. First, I will say that if Canada is to remain or become bilingual, we must maintain in each province representatives of both official languages so that the two elements of bilingualism always be present in all provinces in Canada.

However, in the provinces where the French-speaking people are in minority, bilingualism will be in jeopardy if they can no longer develop fully in the French language and culture or if, because of difficulties or apathy, they decide to join the English-speaking majority.

All efforts made by the federal government will be of little use if we cannot maintain in all provinces a strong, lively, and dynamic French-speaking group which would lead the way and make a place for itself under the sun thanks to all sorts of provincial and public institutions designed to promote and encourage the French culture.

Without an official structure, without bilingualism or even French-speaking unilingualism in each Canadian province, the amounts provided by the federal government for promoting bilingualism could not stop the tide of English-speaking unilingualism.

The French-speaking people living outside Quebec are responsible for the success or the failure of bilingualism programs established by federal government in each Canadian province, and naturally I exclude the province of Quebec.

Those efforts towards the establishment of bilingualism, Francophones have made them since our country was founded, but under present circumstances, the francophone minority can no longer oppose single-handed the anglophone giant of unilingualism. They must be given specific and efficient help if they are to continue living and fulfilling themselves in French.

The $300 million federal assistance program which is to run over a five-year period must first encourage teaching of the second language, which is French in mostly anglophone provinces and English in Quebec. Secondly, provinces are to be encouraged to maintain an educational system for minorities.

This is a very worthwhile program and if I had the figures—which unfortunately I have not—showing how this money has been spent by the provinces, I might feel easier to express my views.

According to my information, the province of Ontario would have received $14 million last year under this program. Five million dollars were to be spent for teaching the second language and $9 million for the francophone minorities.

On Friday last, the minister announced another grant of $2 million for the national capital area, which is an increase of 40 per cent. I rejoice at the federal government supporting the teaching of French to the English-speaking, especially since it subsidizes that teaching through an experimental program. But the French-speaking minorities have needs that would also benefit from similar programs, even if those minorities must do it by way of an experimental program.

May I mention certain education fields which are in need. For the Francophones who form a minority, there should be first of all a French school. And I recall that from 1955 to 1967 the federal government thought that the magic solution to the unemployment problem was partially in technical education, and justly so. Now, that same federal government did not hesitate to earmark millions of dollars in grants for building composite schools with technical departments.

If in 1973 the federal government feels bilingualism is important, should it not stimulate provinces by granting them subventions for the purpose of creating homogeneous French schools?

Federal grants for the teaching of the second language should be paid out with no ceilings, that is over and above the basic budget. Part of the federal government grants for bilingualism could remain in provincial treasuries for the preparation of manuals and teaching aids, the development of programs, etc. I have in mind audio-visual systems, for instance. Without a concentrated effort at provincial and federal levels, such teaching aids can never be obtained from regional school boards, which are often in a minority situation.

Mr. Speaker, I could discuss experimental programs within the framework of which relatively small grants could encourage francophone teachers to write French school manuals for our minorities. None of the provinces where there are now minorities are able to interest publishers in bringing out such manuals, because of the limited quantities involved.

Federalism could bring about a synthesis of the requirements of Ontario, Manitoba and New Brunswick for school manuals and audio-visual equipment. It is just a matter of regrouping the urgent needs of several minorities on a national basis. The federal government is carrying out experiments in the linguistic field and I agree with that, but I would agree even more if the government also launched a pilot program of assistance in the preparation and publication of school manuals and also in the production and distribution of French-language audio-visual teaching aids.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, one of the foremost principles that the Secretary of State Department is proud to uphold and defend, and one to which I wholeheartedly subscribe, is the learning of a second language in provincial education.

Within the framework of the policy we have announced, which serves the aims of the bilingualism that we wish to foster and to spread, the Secretary of State Department announced a few days ago that it had signed an agreement with the government of Ontario, allowing for a supplementary budget for the teaching of French as a second language. If we wish bilingualism to win respect, it is only fitting, in my opinion, that the national capital should be a prime example. I believe my colleague, the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Gauthier), acknowledges that our English-Canadian friends do not have the opportunity to learn French as they would wish, and it is for the Secretary of State to allocate supplementary funds for this purpose.

I should add that the Secretary of State Department has announced, through the minister, that it is prepared to further a project of similar proportions in Quebec, if the Quebec authorities should request this.

The question that my hon. friend has raised is, as he himself said, first and foremost a provincial one, since the Constitution lays down that the teaching of the first language, English in the case of Ontario, comes under provincial jurisdiction, and I am sure it is able to assume its responsibilities.

I should like to remind my hon. friend that this is a pilot project, which will no doubt lead to the development of new techniques that may help solve the problem he has raised.

I shall end my remarks by saying that the policy of the Secretary of State Department also provides for encouragement to minorities in the form of subsidies; my hon. friend is well aware that the Franco-Ontarions benefit from these advantages, and will continue to do so in future. It seems to me that, as a member of Parliament, my friend is eminently qualified to understand that the Secretary of State Department, through the minister, has a very open mind on the problems he has raised, and that we mean to pull together to try and solve them, at the same time enabling bilingualism to fulfil its true role throughout Canada.

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF 1973 EASTER SEAL "TIMMY"

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of hon. members to the presence in your gallery of a young man from Saskatoon, Danny Musgrove, who is this year's National Easter Seal "Timmy" and a real inspiration to the children he represents. He is, I think, the first national "Timmy" from outside Ontario. Despite a couple of artificial limbs he plays goal and defence. He is able to manage the trombone as he did on the Tommy Banks show a week or so ago, and just last week when the Silver Broom championship curling tournament was being opened in Saskatoon he teamed up in an important way with the Governor General. He held the broom and the Governor General threw the stone which landed on the button. He is accompanying the Prime Minister later today to London, Ontario. I thought I should bring the presence of Danny Musgrove to the attention of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the first report of the Clerk of Petitions.

PENITENTIARIES

MILLHAVEN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the escape record at Millhaven Penitentiary, 16 inmates from the minimum security institution, five of whom are still at large, and 20 from the alleged maximum security institution, in view of the current sit-down strike at Millhaven, and in view of the concern expressed by a spokesman for penitentiary guards with regard to the rehabilitation program at the institution, I ask leave of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

IDENTIFICATION OF MEMBERS OPPOSING STANDING ORDER 43 MOTIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I rise to request the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on an important and urgent matter.

Since it is impossible for members of this House to identify those of their colleagues who oppose the proposing of a motion under Standing Order 43, since this can throw doubt on the integrity of hon. members who are suspected, often wrongly, of having opposed a motion, and given that I am not questioning the courage and convictions of each of my colleagues, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That the member or members who oppose the proposing of a motion under Standing Order 43 be required to identify themselves clearly by standing up when the Chair asks if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I would move the following motion related to the government's failure to honour its promise to set up an independent study group to permit citizen participation in the Pickering airport decision. The motion, seconded by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), reads as follows:

Whereas the Minister of Transport announced on January 30 the government's intention to proceed with expropriation for the new Toronto airport at Pickering but at the same time announced that an independent study group would be set up to permit the public to participate in the question of the airport; and since the minister stated at that time that it was the government's intention that the study group should report within 12 months; and whereas over seven weeks have elapsed since that statement with no announcement of the study group's formation and therefore still no opportunity for the citizens of the Toronto region to participate in this important decision, which by the minister's own admission—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat? The hon. member is making a speech. We can easily get into difficulties if motions under Standing Order 43 are argued. I believe it is well established practice that an hon. member should not argue his case but he should indicate as briefly as possible the subject of his proposed motion and come to the point so that the Chair can seek the views of the House.

Mr. Atkey: I shall put the motion very briefly, Mr. Speaker. It is:

That the matter to which I have just referred be placed immediately before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for consideration and action.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN STORAGE FACILITIES

Question No. 57—Mr. Wise:

Is the present government considering any financial assistance for grain storage facilities to farmers or existing grain elevators?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes.

CANADIAN POVERTY LEVEL

Question No. 61—Mr. Wise:

What does the government consider the poverty level to be and (a) how many Canadians are now living below this level (b) how many Canadians on fixed incomes live below this level?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As far as Statistics Canada is concerned: There is no existing official statistical concept of poverty in Canada. However, Statistics Canada has established low income cut-offs which have been used to delineate low-income families from other units. For the year 1971 the low income cut-offs were as follows: 1 person unit, $2,013; 2 person unit, $3,355; 3 person unit, $4,026; 4 person unit, $4,697; 5 and 5+ person unit, $5,368; (a) Using the above low income cut-offs Statistics Canada estimates that the incidence of low income among unattached individuals was 37.6% and among families of two or more persons 15.9 per cent in 1971. This translates into approximately 3.9 million low income persons. (These data are the revised estimates originally published in Cat. No. 13-206 Income Distributions by Size in Canada, Preliminary Estimates, 1971.); (b) It is not clear how "living on fixed incomes" is being defined. However, the following unpublished estimates are available from the same source as quoted above: In 1971, 53.9 per cent or approximately 351,000 low income unattached individuals received their major source of income from transfer payments; in the same year 49.1 per cent or approximately 400,000 low income families reported government transfer payments as their major source of income.

Assistance also is available to manufacturers who have been injured or threatened with serious injury as a result of Kennedy Round reductions of Canadian tariffs. In addition, manufacturers of textile or clothing goods or footwear may be eligible for financing assistance to adapt efficiently to disruptive import competition which is threatening or causing serious injury. Assistance is also available to manufacturers to enable them to adjust to changes in conditions affecting access to foreign markets, which conditions are attributable to the imposition by a foreign country of a temporary import surtax or other measure having a similar effect.

3. The program is under continuous evaluation and review.

Hon. It must be remembered that the Canada Pension Plan can be amended only with the consent of two-thirds of the provinces with at least two-thirds of the population of Canada. As yet, it has not been possible to obtain the necessary concurrence.

DISTRIBUTION BY STATISTICS CANADA OF SURVEYS TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Question No. 620—Mr. McKenzie:

How many surveys and forms have been distributed by Statistics Canada to small businesses in Canada in each of the past four years (1968-1972)?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Commercial businesses with less than 20 employees, and with relatively small total revenues and sales are classified as "small" business for statistical purposes. To minimize the response burden for them, Statistics Canada provides small businesses with abbreviated survey questionnaires. In addition, the use of sampling in some surveys means that reliable information on all small firms can be obtained by surveying only 5 per cent to 15 per cent of the total, the sample size depending on the particular survey in question. Over the years 1968 to 1972 inclusive, the average number of different surveys designed to collect data from small firms varied from 56 to 59. Most questionnaires are designed for surveys of specific industries and the maximum number of Statistics Canada surveys a small firm engaged in a single activity would be subject to in one year is four. Periodically, Statistics Canada asks some of the smaller firms for information on the nature, location and organization of their business in order to maintain its survey mailing lists and reporting structures up to date.

This type of training, called Basic Training for Skill

According to the latest follow-up results for full-time institutional training, 70.6 per cent of the trainees who completed skill courses in 1971-72 were employed three to four months after graduation. 60.2 per cent of the graduates found employment in occupations for which they were trained, and the remaining 10.4 per cent found employment in occupations not related to their training course. The equivalent figures for 1970-71 are 66.4 per cent employed; 59.1 per cent in occupations related to their training and 7.3 per cent in occupations unrelated to their training.

IMMIGRATION—CHANGE IN IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS

Question No. 849—Mr. Cossitt:

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Government is not prepared to restore Section 34 of the Immigration Regulations nor does it plan to make wholesale exceptions to the withdrawal of the right to apply for landed immigrant status from within Canada. The Department will continue to process those applications submitted before the revocation of Section 34. It will also consider those cases where there is evidence that a person called at an immigration office prior to the revocation to submit an application but where the application could not be dealt with. Sympathetic consideration will also be given to genuine political refugees as well as to cases where there are strong humanitarian and compassionate circumstances.

It has insured under section 34 of the Export Development Act a Canadian investment abroad in respect of one hotel; it has not insured a Canadian investment abroad in respect of a motel; (a) the project is situated in St. Lucia, British West Indies; (b) the principal owner and insured investor is Livingston Holdings Limited, Tillsonburg, Ontario; (c) as to the categories of the foreign investment insurance cover provided for the hotel investment, the insurance is against loss of or in respect of the investment by reason of the three risks of (i) government action that prohibits or restricts the transfer of capital or dividends from the country, (ii) expropriation, and (iii) war, revolution or insurrection; and (d) with regard to part (d) of the question numbered 1, (i) the contract of insurance in question covers 85 per cent of the amount of Canadian investment in the hotel. EDC receives as a matter of trade confidence particulars of the proposed Canadian investments abroad for which its foreign investment insurance is sought, and so as not to break faith with the investor, does not publish specific figures for the amount of each insurance contract or the cost of each project. There is often keen competition between intending investors for the approval of the government of the country concerned; and (ii) for each of the three categories of insurance mentioned above, the premium rate charged is an annual rate of 0.3 per cent, and for each the term of the cover is 15 years.

2. The benefit to exporters in Canada lies in contracts for construction and for Canadian goods and services for the hotel, together worth approximately $1.8 million.

3. There has not been any claim made to date under the contract of investment insurance in question or under any other EDC contract of foreign investment insurance.

4. EDC is prepared to examine all applications for foreign investment cover and accepts those which meet all its criteria with particular emphasis on the benefits of the proposal to both the economy of Canada and the economy of the host government. Question No. 1,080—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. For how long has the London Block in Saskatoon housed the Department of National Revenue?

2. Was it renovated within the past four years and, if so, what was the cost thereof?

3. For what reason has it become necessary now to move the Department offices from the London Block to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce Building?

4. What use is to be made of the vacated premises in the London Block?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. Eighteen years.

2. Yes: 1969-70, $2,176.00 (minor works); 1970-71, $3,-373.00 (minor works); 1970-71, $54,765.00 (tenant alterations); 1972-73, $5,792.00 (minor works).

3. In order to extend further the life of this 60 year old structure, costly renovations would have to be undertaken. This additional expenditure would prove to be economically unfeasible.

4. A decision has not yet been made concerning future use of the property. The Department of Public Works is preparing a study of the options available.

COST OF DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE FAIR IN PEKING

Question No. 1,081—Mr. Stevens:

1. What was the total direct and indirect cost to the government of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce Trade Fair held in Peking in August 1972?

2. (a) How many Canadians visited the fair (b) how many Canadians exhibited at the Fair (c) is it planned to hold any further such functions in the People's Republic of China?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Direct costs of the Canadian Trade Exposition in Peking to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are, as of February 26, 1973, $1,217,759.41. Indirect costs which would include staff time in Canada, at the Embassy in Peking, and the office of the Canadian Commissioner in Hong Kong, in the preparatory phase, during the Exposition and in the follow-up activities cannot be accurately calculated.

2. (a) Visits by 559 Canadians to the Canadian Trade Exposition in Peking were recorded. It is estimated that an additional 25 Canadians either residents of Peking or visitors to China of whose presence there was no official record also attended the Fair. (b) 206 Canadian companies; (c) The only facilities available in China to house a fair of the magnitude of the Canadian Trade Exposition held between August 21 and September 5, 1972 is the Peking Exhibition Centre. These facilities are already reserved for the next four years by other countries conducting trade expositions. A trade exposition of multiple product lines is not planned for China, but it is proposed to hold smaller exhibitions on industry sector lines. In 1973/74 the staging of an exhibition of Canadian Electronic and Scientific Equipment in Shanghai has been proposed and is under consideration by the Government of the People's Republic of China. A series of missions, outgoing and incoming involving Chinese officials and representatives of the Canadian business community interested in oil and gas equipment, power generation and transmission equipment, metals and minerals, apparel and textiles, forest products and related equipment, agriculture and transportation are being negotiated.

CONCESSIONS TO H&R BLOCK (CANADA) LIMITED

Question No. 1,170—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Has H&R Block (Canada) Limited obtained a concession from the Department of National Defence to open up offices at Armed Forces Bases across Canada and, if so, on what basis was such concession awarded to H&R Block (Canada) Limited?

2. Is the government aware that H&R Block is wholly American owned, and was this taken into account when awarding the concession?

3. Is it the policy of the government to award contracts and concessions to American-owned or controlled companies and corporations when other Canadian facilities are available?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No, H&R Block (Canada) has not been granted a concession by the Department of National Defence to open offices at Canadian Forces' Bases across Canada.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

CBC—TELEVISION SERVICE VIA ANIK SATELLITE

Question No. 1,174—Mr. Korchinski:

1. What communities are immediately to receive telephone and television communications in Northern Canada as a result of the setting into orbit of Anik I?

2. Which communities are destined to receive this service in the next two years?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The following communities in Northern Canada, which had been receiving only a recorded CBC television service on a delayed basis for four hours per day, began receiving the full CBC live network service via the ANIK satellite during February, 1973: Whitehorse, Watson Lake, Faro, Dawson and Clinton Creek in the Yukon Territory; Inuvik, Fort Smith, Yellowknife, Pine Point and Frobisher Bay in the Northwest Territories; Fort Nelson and Cassiar, British Columbia; and Uranium City, Saskatchewan. Stations at Churchill, Manitoba and Goose Bay, Labrador also began receiving service by satellite in February.

2. Poste-de-la-Baleine, Fort Chimo and Fort George in Québec; Keno Hill (feeding Elsa and Mayo) in the Yukon Territory; Norman Wells, Fort Simpson and Rankin Inlet in the Northwest Territories; Port au Port, Newfoundland. In addition, during 1974 the CBC expects to file applications with the Canadian Radio-Television Commission for a number of stations to be satellite fed which, if approved, could be operational in 1974-75. These communities are Povungnituk, Inoucdjouac, in Quebec; Eskimo Point. Baker Lake, Cambridge Bay, Cape Dorset, Igloolik, Coppermine and Pangnirtung in the Northwest Territories; and Nain, Newfoundland.

NORTHERN NATURAL GAS PIPELINE STUDY

Question No. 1,207—Mr. Rowland:

Has the government conducted a study to determine the effects upon Canada's economy of the demand for 5 billion dollars for the construction of the Northern natural gas pipeline and, if so, by whom was the study conducted and with what results?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No. However, a study is in progress. It is being carried out by an interdepartmental committee.

AIRCRAFT—REPLACEMENT OF CF 101 AND CF 104

Question No. 1,210—Mr. Rowland:

Is the government currently engaged in evaluating possible replacement aircraft for the CF 101 and the CF 104 and, if so (a) has it yet been determined whether the purchase of one aircraft type or two would be involved in the replacement (b) what aircraft are currently being considered as possible replacements (c) on what date is it anticipated that a replacement will be required for the (i) CF 104 (ii) CF 101 aircraft currently in use?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Evaluating the capability of current and possible new equipment to meet national objectives is a continuous process in the Department but no specific evaluation study of possible replacement aircraft for the CF 101 and CF 104 is currently underway. (a) and (b) not applicable; (c) if retention of a fixed wing tactical fighter defence capability is required it is currently estimated that the replacement of the CF 101 and CF 104 would have to be made about 1980.

PACIFIC REGIONAL LABORATORY

Question No. 1,273—Mr. McKinnon:

Is it the intention of the government to locate the Pacific Region Laboratory, formerly called the Pacific Conservation Centre, in Vancouver, B.C. and, if so what are the reasons for overruling the Pacific Region Advisory Committee of the Canadian Conservation Institute, which recommended unanimously in November 1972 that the laboratory be located in Victoria?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows: No definite decision has been taken as to the ultimate location of the Pacific Regional Laboratory of the Canadian Conservation Institute, a branch of the National Museums of Canada. Acceptance of the offer of modest interim office space in a federally-owned building in Vancouver is for the purpose of accommodating a planning staff which will undertake feasibility surveys, and involves no permanent commitment to Vancouver. While, in November 1972, the Pacific Regional Advisory Committee recommended location of the Pacific Regional Laboratory in Victoria, at the more recent meeting of February 9, 1973, the Committee agreed unanimously to defer final recommendation on location until the necessary feasibility studies had been completed.

MAN AND RESOURCES PROGRAM

Question No. 1,285—Mr. Nielsen:

1. (a) What were the names of those who attended the "Man and Resources" program in the North and where was each individual from (b) did any Native people attend the program and, if so, from where?

2. What communities were visited, for what purpose and at what cost to the federal government?

3. For the 1973 program, what are the names of the individuals, groups, organizations, associations involved and what are the 12 resource issues?

[Mr. Rowland.]

4. Will elected Members be invited to take part in the 1973 program and, if so, from where?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

(a)	(b)
Mr. John Amagualik Frobisher Bay, N.W.T.	Inuit
Miss Pat Carney, Yellowknife, N.W.T.
Miss Susan Huskey, Inuvik, N.W.T.	Indian
Mr. Edward Lennie, Inuvik, N.W.T.	Inuit
Mr. William Lyall, Cambridge Bay, N.W.T.	Inuit
Miss Gina Pryde, Yellowknife, N.W.T.	Indian
Mr. Ronald C. Watson, Haines Junction, Y.T.
Mr. Paul White, Whitehorse, Y.T.

2. It is difficult to estimate the total costs to finance visits to northern communities. The purpose of the visits was to secure input to the "Man and Resources" program in terms of local resource use problems, issues and conflicts. However, the entire northern program was run on a $30,000 budget and in the course of the investigations 15 communities were visited: Whitehorse, Haines Junction, Faro, Inuvik, Yellowknife, Fort Good Hope, Fort McPherson, Fort Norman, Fort Simpson, Pelly Bay, Cambridge Bay, Frobisher Bay, Igloolik, Hall Beach and Pangnirtung.

3. The 1973 program is not yet underway in the North. However, it is expected that the eight northern delegates will continue to take an active part as well as any other interested groups or interested groups or individuals. The twelve resource issues are: citizen participation; population; growth ethic and social values; qualitative and quantative information for decision-making, a dynamic inventory of man and resources; education; long term planning in resource development; integral planning and co-ordination; foreign ownership; ownership; and, energy.

4. Yes, members of the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers will take part. However, the program was designed specifically as a forum for expression of views by the general public.

*COST OF MAINTAINING UNITED NATIONS PEACE KEEPING FORCES IN CYPRUS

Question No. 1,384—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What has been the total cost to Canada, exclusive of pay and allowances, year by year since it began operations, of the United Nations Peace Keeping Forces in Cyprus?

2. What other nations in the said United Nations Forces pay the total costs of maintaining their respective forces?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part I is that from the commencement of operations in 1964 until March 15, 1973, the total cost to Canada of maintaining our contingent in the United Nations Force in Cyprus, not including pay and allowances, amounted to $21,684,000.

The answer to part 2 is that Canada does not have access to the information requested because the arrangements with other participants in the United Nations Force in Cyprus are the subject of confidential agreements between the nations concerned and the United Nations.

The annual breakdown of amounts, in further answer to part 1, are included in the answer I have prepared. However, rather than take the time of the House by reading all the individual figures, I would ask for agreement to table these annual figures and to have them printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The figures above referred to are as follows]: 1964, $3,486,000; 1965, $3,516,000; 1966, $2,948,000; 1967, $2,907,000; 1968, $1,836,000; 1969, $1,476,000; 1970, $1,768,000; 1971, $1,899,000; 1972, $1,575,000; to March, 15 1973, $273,000; Total $21,684,000.

*COMPLIANCE BY STARLAW INVESTMENTS WITH CRTC DIVESTITURE ORDER

Question No. 1,440—Mr. Reilly:

Has Starlaw Investments complied with the divestiture order contained in CRTC Decision 70-284 dated November 3, 1970 and, if not, have CRTC and Starlaw Investments reached agreement on an appropriate time table to complete divestiture transactions?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is concerned the answer is the following: As of this date, Starlaw Investments has not concluded any agreement of sale that would allow them to comply with the divestiture order contained in CRTC decision 70-284. The commission has had discussions with Starlaw Investments and the licensees involved, and expects that an application for divestiture will be filed by mid-year. During the February 1973 public hearing, Mr. Ferguson indicated the more recent measures undertaken by Starlaw Investments to give up all its interests in cablevision operations outside the Montreal area. He explained it thus, and I quote: "In the commission's decision of 1970 involving ownership of Cable Television Limited, a company was specifically required to divest its interest in three subsidiary cable operations outside the Montreal area. We are in the process of complying with that decision. We are in discussion now with several parties and we expect an agreement in the near future. By mid-year, we should have an application filed which we hope will meet the approval of the commission".

*CONSTRUCTION OF NEW LIGHT FRIGATES FOR CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,495—Mr. Rowland:

Has a decision been made to proceed with the construction of a new class of "light frigates" for the Canadian Armed Forces and (a) if so, how many such vessels are contemplated and what is the projected per unit cost (b) if not, is the possibility of embarking upon a new naval construction program currently being examined and, if so (i) what types of vessels are being considered (ii) would such vessels be entirely designated in Canada, a design purchased from abroad and constructed in Canada, or would the vessels in question be purchased from foreign shipyards (iii) on what date may an announcement with respect to the letting of a contract be expected?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to starred question 1495 is that no decision has been made to proceed with the construction of a new class of light frigate for the Canadian armed forces. Part (a) is, therefore, not applicable. The answer to part (b) is that no new naval construction program is currently being examined. However, long-range planning for new equipment requirements is continuing to take place. The answer to (b)(i) is that types of vessels being examined are destroyers, frigates, a general purpose surveillance and control ship capable of operating without icebreaker assistance, and submarines; In reply to (b)(ii) it is our intention to have as much as possible of any future design work and construction work carried out in Canada. The answer to (b)(iii) is that no contracts are currently being negotiated for ships of the type described in part (i) and, therefore, no date has been set for any announcement.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have had a number of questions standing on the order paper since the beginning of this session on January 4. Included in that group are questions Nos. 22, 24, 29, 30, 45 and 47. On Monday of this week I had the good fortune to have the Minister of National Health and Welfare produce for me answers to questions that were placed on the order paper a very short time ago. I congratulate the minister and the members of his department for their efficiency in producing answers to these questions.

I say to the President of the Privy Council that there is no reason that this House should not be made aware of the information I am seeking, especially since the information is factual. It may be embarrassing to the government, but the information is factual. In view of the fact that the government is a minority government, I submit that we have every right to know, for instance, how many Grits have been put on the federal government's payroll since the date of the last election. They have no right to receive income from a government that should not even be in office today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: We are waiting for the information. We want it. I will be on my feet every day until answers to those questions are provided.

Mr. Hees: The government will not be there very long and we want the information quickly.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a question of privilege based upon an order of the House made one month ago in connection with the production of papers involving the status of a third national park in Nova Scotia. As yet, the papers are not available to me from the table. I wonder if we might have some reaction from the minister's departmental people on this matter.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into that question, but I remind the hon. gentleman that production of papers of this kind requires the co-operation of another government and we must get their permission before we can lay them on the table.

[Editor's Note: Following order paper questions.]

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order similar to the one I raised a few days ago with the parliamentary secretary on the same question, No. 819, which has been on the order paper for 43 days. The question concerns the hideous new tax form foisted on the Canadian people by the government. I do not understand why the government cannot answer this simple question with reference to the amount to be spent on advertising to explain this form to the Canadian people through the news media. In other words, how many thousands of dollars of the taxpayer's money are being spent in this manner? I think the people of Canada have a right to know how much this folly is costing. The last part of my question asks how much was paid to Fred Davis, that great tax expert, by the government to explain the impossible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TASK FORCE REPORT TO POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 196—Mr. McKenzie:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the task force report submitted in June, 1969 to the Post Office Department by Samson, Belair, Riddell, Stead Inc.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the transportation study requested in this motion is an internal working document and is therefore considered confidential. Under the circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, may I point out, with leave of the House, that I have a copy of the document and I would be only too pleased to present it to the minister for study and report.

Some hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order pertaining to the whole question of the production of papers through which we have just gone. In view of the fact it became evident that two of the documents requested have already been available to members in spite of the government's assurance that they are confidential and not available, I wonder whether we can have some assurance from the government House leader, having in mind the discussion we had last week with respect to taking a hard look at guidelines respecting the production of papers, that this matter will be considered by the parliamentary committee so that this continued farce will not be allowed to go on indefinitely.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's language is somewhat intemperate this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —but I would like to advise him that I am giving some consideration to having the guidelines referred for examination to a committee of the House. In fact, I have already had a brief conversation with the distinguished chairman of the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, with a view to having this particular set of criteria come under his objective gaze.

Mr. Howard: Mr.Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to notice of motion for the production of papers No. 123, relating to an evaluation report on the 1972 opportunities for youth program, which the parliamentary secretary said was confidential. The point of order I raise is that if that is the case, why was it distributed through the mails to all hon. members?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege as well. It may be a question which should be taken into consideration by the House. It is based on another slick attempt by the government to withhold information. I hold in my hand a list of reports and returns to be made to the House of Commons by public officers and private corporations under Standing Order 82(1). On page 24 of that publication, where one would normally find Polymer Corporation listed as being one of those corporations required to make a return, we find that it has been completely omitted. The Polymer Corporation is still, by virtue of the provisions of Standing Order 82 (1), required to report to parliament.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer), who does not appear to be listening at the moment but who should be, is the minister through whom the Polymer Corporation reports to parliament. The annual return and the financial statements of that corporation should be on the table now. In the absence of an explanation by the Minister of Supply and Services of why that report, that financial information, is being withheld, one can only come to two conclusions: First, the government is deliberately concealing this information from members of the House and, second, that they have deliberately omitted including in a report which is published by the government a Crown corporation that is required by law to report to parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY WHETHER BUDGET NOT MORE EXPANSIONARY BECAUSE OF ADVICE OF GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA—DEMAND EXPANSION AS CAUSE OF INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada and his warning about possible aggregate demand expanding too rapidly, too strongly, and thereby spurring inflation. I would like to ask the minister whether it was because of this sort of advice from the Bank of Canada that his budget was actually less expansionary, on a national accounts basis, than it was in 1972?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I based my budget on all the reasonable advice I could get throughout the country, and of course I took into account the views of the governor of the Bank of Canada. I might say to the hon. gentleman that if I were to take the advice of his two financial critics, or of whichever is the legitimate one for the moment, that deficit would have been doubled this year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is one more than the government has.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the minister was not listening to my question. I was seeking some explanation of why his budget was not more expansionary than it was, and both the financial gentleman to whom the minister referred recommended a more expansionary budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The minister does not seem to be capable of understanding things these days.

Mr. Hees: That's no change from any other days.

Mr. Stanfield: I would like to ask the minister whether the government accepts the view expressed by the governor of the Bank of Canada in this report that expansion in demand constitutes a substantial threat of inflation, and that growth in aggregate demand is likely to be the principal cause of inflation during the ensuing year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear on budget night that the deficit I recommended to the country and to parliament, involving a cash requirement of $2 billion, was about right, that it went to the limits of what I believed was a responsible position, and that if I were to choose between unemployment and the risk of inflation I was willing at that time—I wish the hon. gentleman would refer to my words—to take the risk of inflation.

Mr. Stanfield: I wonder whether the $2 billion in cash requirements that the minister referred to for the next fiscal year is the $2 billion that he was going to give me information about, once he figured out how to do it, on orders of the day two or three days ago, or the $2 billion that he refused to break down in the public interest yesterday?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Don Valley.

INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN GROWTH

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the theme running through the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada that there is a concern about excessive demand creating too much inflation in the economy, is the minister confident that the governor and the bank are going to increase the money supply sufficiently to sustain growth in the economy this coming year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am.

Mr. Gillies: Under those conditions I would like to ask the minister why it is that during the last three months the rate of increase in the money supply has declined?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that the money supply will vary from month to month in accordance with the demand for loans. For instance, at this time last year the money supply was increasing at an annual rate of 24 per cent, and by the end of the year it was at an annual rate of 14 per cent. It varies from month to month, and the hon. gentleman ought to know that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: Is the Minister of Finance aware that at the present time the liquidity position of the banks is at an almost all-time low?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am also aware that the chartered banks tell me they have no difficulty in meeting the demand for loans.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will return to this important matter after completing the first round of questions. There are a number of distinguished frontbench members who want to ask supplementaries, and they will be given that opportunity in a moment.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH GOVERNMENT TO TAKE OVER GOVERNMENT'S SHARE OF PANARCTIC OILS LIMITED

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance relating to the Canada Development Corporation. In view of the fact the minister stated in the House yesterday that he would look into any negotiations between the corporation and the government respecting the sale of the 45 per cent equity the government has in Panarctic Oils Limited, is the minister now ready to tell us whether any negotiations in this area are being proceeded with and what their purpose is?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Canada Development Corporation has, of course, expressed public interest in acquiring shares of Panarctic, and I was talking to the chairman and president of the CDC this morning. The government has yet to give a response to that interest.

Mr. Knight: In view of the minister's statement, can he inform the House if the government is considering increasing its share in Panarctic from 45 per cent to 51 per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the response to that question would more properly come from my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, if, as and when that should happen.

POSSIBILITY OF CANCELLATION OF SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in view of that answer may I ask a related question concerning the Canada Development Corporation. In light of the decision in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee involving Polymer Corporation, would the minister advise the House whether or not it is the intention to cancel the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation is legal under Section 39(1) of the Canada Development Corporation Act, and that the sale cannot be rescinded. What action the government will take in response to that vote in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee is something I would like to discuss with my colleague, the President of the Privy Council.

SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION—PROVISION OF AUDITED STATEMENT FOR POLYMER

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Has he yet received an audited statement of Polymer Corporation from the office of the Auditor General? If he has received that report, why has it not been tabled?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed received the Auditor

General's report, and I have asked my colleague, the Minister of Justice, to indicate what course I should follow if the sale does take place.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question—

Mr. Stanfield: They never do.

Mr. Nielsen: —so I will direct it to the Minister of Finance in the hope we may get a direct answer from him.

Mr. Hees: There's not much hope of that.

Mr. Nielsen: Has the Canada Development Corporation received a copy of the audited statement of Polymer Corporation from the Auditor General and, if so, why has it not been tabled?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows it is very difficult to get indirectly what he was not able to get directly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the privileges of all hon. members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Under Standing Order 82(1) the government is required to table reports of Crown corporations. Polymer is still a Crown corporation, obliged by law to report to the Minister of Supply and Services. That report should be on the table. It is a flagrant breach of the privileges of the members of this House for the government to continue to fly deliberately in the teeth of the law. Surely the minister can at least answer whether he has received the statement and, if he has, tell us why it has not been tabled.

• (1440)

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, concerning the question of privilege, I trust that the legal opinion that the Minister of Justice will be giving me soon will be in line with what the hon. member has just said. If it is not, I think he will have shown that he is a very poor lawyer.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my point of order will be put with as much delicacy as I can summon for the occasion. I am concerned about recognition of some members in this question period. In the past few days, indeed the past few weeks, the party on my right has led off the question period and then Mr. Speaker in his wisdom decided to recognize several supplementaries on their lead-off question. The New Democratic Party has then proceeded with its lead-off question with no supplementaries being recognized from this party and a shifting back to the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to give consideration to that today.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair fully intended to return to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. The hon. member will recognize that on the first question a number of members to my left in the official opposition wanted to ask supplementaries. I thought I would try again this afternoon to reach members in the fourth, fifth and sixth rows where the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby sits. I fully intend to return to him when we get to supplementaries in a moment after we have completed the first round of questions. That is why the Chair thought that at this point we should give an opportunity to the hon. member for Compton to ask his question.

[Translation]

I apologize to the hon. member for Compton, but the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition wishes to speak about the point of order.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that I sympathize with your difficulty because it must be difficult to make up your mind whether the New Democratic Party is an opposition party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I noted this morning that when it came to corporate tax concessions the Leader of the Opposition was in the Minister of Finance's bed with such alacrity that one could hardly see him jump.

Mr. Fairweather: Were you there, David?

An hon. Member: Did he push you out?

An hon. Member: A bedtime "Tory".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the House might allow the hon. member for York South to come to the point of order. I really think we should then make an effort to continue with the question period because time is running out.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comment but you will forgive me if I suggest that it was applicable to others as well. I do not intend to sit here and listen—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —to the Leader of the Opposition make his cracks. He said it was hard for you to make some decisions. The difference between you and the Leader of the Opposition is that you do make them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—IMPLEMENTATION OF COMPENSATED DISCOUNT SYSTEM

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the unprecedented rise in food prices and the great difficulty some families are having in obtaining food products, would the Prime Minister tell us whether the government will introduce legislation to lower prices to the consumer by using compensated discounts on food, especially on meat and milk, which are essential to survival for Canadian families and the prices of which are rising steadily?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question pertains to general policy and cannot be answered during the oral question period. I do, however, undertake to look into it with the ministers concerned.

Mr. Latulippe: I wish to ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell us if he intends to take any other steps likely to help reduce prices and benefit consumers in any way at all?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have no policy to announce today in this field.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO PREVENT SUGGESTED INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On Monday the minister advised the House that he would give very serious consideration to my suggestion that he contact the presidents of the chartered banks and point out to them the urgency of not raising interest rates at this time. Has the minister been in contact with these gentlemen in the last two days since he said that and, if so, what has been the result of those contacts?

Mr. Drury: That was worth waiting for.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been in contact with the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Hees: As the minister in his answer makes it very clear that he is perfectly willing to stand by and do nothing while interest rates rise and the economy suffers, would he please take his portfolio seriously and do something on behalf of the economy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has a supplementary to the first question.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary relating to the report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada yesterday is directed to the Prime Minister, especially in view of his reply a few moments ago to the hon. member for Compton. In view of the very clear warning of the governor of the Bank of Canada in relation to the sharp rise in food prices when he said that "this development poses a serious threat to wage and price behaviour generally", would the Prime Minister reconsider the answer he gave a few moments ago and indicate whether the government has in mind any other specific measures to alleviate the very great concern of those on lower incomes, especially in relation to food prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the two questions asked of me previously referred to the application of the Social Credit theory, but I do take note that the hon. member is asking me to consider them seriously.

Mr. Lawrence: My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is again directed to the right hon. gentleman. I am asking him to take the warning of the governor of the Bank of Canada on this matter seriously. Has he any further suggestions to make to the House today and to the public generally about the prices situation in this country which is really causing concern?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my first answer is I do and my second is no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has a supplementary to the second question asked this afternoon.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER DECISION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister and arises out of the answer given by the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for Assiniboia concerning the decision reached in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee yesterday which was a clear indication that the majority of members of this House oppose the sale of Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation. In view of this clear expression of opposition to this course of action on the part of the government, will the government reconsider its decision to sell Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Minister of Finance dealt with that in quite a satisfactory way. The Canada Development Corporation Act, which was adopted by parliament by a strong majority, authorized this sale and it took place under that authority.

Mr. Broadbent: My supplementary question to the Prime Minister is combined policy and law. Notwithstanding the past decision of this parliament vis-à-vis the Canada Development Corporation and Polymer, is the Prime Minister saying that, if parliament decides that it has now changed its mind, action by the government cannot reflect the current view of parliament?

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister can reply to the hon. member's question, but it appears to me to be seeking a legal opinion. However, I appreciate that hon. members have an interest in this matter. The Prime Minister may reply.

Mr. Trudeau: Within the structure that you mentioned, Mr. Speaker, my opinion, and I believe it is pretty obvious, is that the vote yesterday did not and was not meant to invalidate the sale which legally took place between two entities in Canada.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in view of the remarks of the Prime Minister with respect to the Canada Development Corporation legislation which he stated authorized the sale. The CDC legislation authorizes purchase. How can they sell Polymer when they did not have it in the first place? It is purchase.

BASIS OF SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. If the government, through the Polymer Corporation, has not received an audited statement, on what basis will the sale be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the essence of the sale is that two parties agreed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —to follow a certain line of conduct and they adhered to that. Certain conditions were imposed by both parties. We were in the process last night of trying to carry out one of those conditions. The Minister of Finance has indicated that he will discuss with the House leader whether further steps will be considered in carrying out that condition.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DETAILS OF APPRAISAL OF POLYMER FOR SALE TO CORPORATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the government owns all the shares of the Canada Development Corporation and all the shares of Polymer, in view of the fact the sale was at $42 million less than book value, and as this has just come to the attention of the House, will the Prime Minister table the details of the appraisal indicating that the sale was at fair market value?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into this matter to reply in any detail, but I am informed there was an independent assessment and that was the basis of the sale price.

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS TO CONSIDER IMPLEMENTATION OF CONTINGENCY PLAN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the seriousness of rising food prices, the warning expressed by the governor of the Bank of Canada, and the now apparent failure of the special food prices committee to get to the bottom of the problem, will the minister now undertake, because of the seriousness of the situation, to meet with the provincial finance ministers with a view to implementing the government's contingency plan?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with the provincial finance ministers in mid-April. The subject of prices might well be one of the subjects to come up. As to whether I would reveal any contingency plan, I rather doubt it.

Mr. McGrath: In order to expedite and make meaningful the work of the special committee on food prices, is the minister prepared to meet in camera with the committee to outline exactly the government's contingency plan?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I understand that that question was already dealt with by my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): However, I want to tell the hon. member that any plans are merely contingency plans and would not be revealed by the government unless and until they were brought into effect.

Oral Questions

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—INQUIRY RESPECTING GRANT TO "CENTER EPIC", MONTREAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I believe it is one of importance regarding government policy. Can the minister indicate whether a LIP grant of $128,000 has been awarded to a group of Montreal businessmen to build a health centre called "Center Epic" to fight the unhealthy habits of over-eating, over-drinking, over-smoking and under-exercising? If that is the case, would the minister consider rescinding the grant?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question of this nature should normally be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, it can be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think this is an urgent question since some fat-cat businessmen in Montreal have been given a large grant under LIP. I think the minister owes it to the House to explain whether that grant has actually been made.

Mr. Speaker: That explanation can be given at ten o'clock. The hon. member for Trinity. Is the hon. member rising on a further point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I can ask the minister a slightly different question relating to the same topic?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member immediately after the hon. member for Trinity.

[Later:]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister provide the House with a list of LIP applications from the Montreal area that were turned down which were received from low-income or underprivileged people asking for such things as food distribution centres, job information centres and day-care centers? Were they turned down because these members of society have the unhealthy habit of undereating?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF REPORT OF BANK OF CANADA TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pose a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister agree to refer the report of the Bank of Canada to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in order that the new governor may give the committee and discuss with the committee his views on the effectiveness of monetary and fiscal policies in protecting jobs and employment?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Bank of Canada was tabled in the House yesterday. I understand the governor has been asked by the committee to appear before it and will be appearing before that committee.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On Thursday morning.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO NEW SECTION 58 OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS—SUBMISSION TO COMMITTEE BEFORE PROMULGATION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the importance to Canada of the 50 per cent of all oil and gas that reverts to the Crown under the present Canada oil and gas regulations, is the minister able to inform the House when the new section 58 will be ready?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are currently working on this problem, in collaboration with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and we hope soon to be in a position to announce a new policy or new legislation in this field.

[English]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Will the minister consider in this review that has been going on since 1970 the proposal made by Mr. Charles Dunkley of the Independent Petroleum Association that gas be held by the federal government in kind rather than through royalty payments, and will these new regulations be submitted to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works before promulgation?

• (1500)

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Considering the fact that numerous people are living in poverty, and since the Senate special committee which had been instructed to inquire into poverty in Canada tabled its report several months ago, can the minister tell this House whether he will draw from this report in order to introduce in this House a legislation aimed at establishing a guaranteed annual income scheme and if so, when shall this measure be introduced?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, of course I shall take the Senate report into consideration as well as all the other reports on social security that have been prepared either by parliamentary committees or by voluntary organizations in recent years. The Senate report will be only one of the documents that will be considered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REDISTRIBUTION OF RIDINGS—POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT ACTION—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MEMBERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I presume my questions should be directed to the President of the Privy Council. What is the present position of the government concerning the introduction of a redistribution measure this session? Can he give the House a picture of the present position of affairs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the right hon. gentleman I might mention to him that I have conducted some informal discussions with members of the opposition parties with respect to various approaches that might be commonly agreed upon in dealing with the question of redistribution. I must say that until now there has not been a sufficient consensus upon which to make a solid move. However, the matter is still under consideration by the government and if there is a possibility of reaching some common ground we would consider making a move.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can the hon. gentleman say whether or not, regardless of any consensus with members of the opposition parties, the government intends to proceed with a redistribution measure this session, and whether it also intends to assure a floor on membership for those provinces that are losing their share of membership of this House?

Mr. MacEachen: One of the informal ideas considered was that an approach might be taken which would increase the membership of the House of Commons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To what extent?

Mr. MacEachen: The purpose would be to protect the present representation of provinces within the House of Commons so that no province, including Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Newfoundland, would drop below its present representation. If this were the target, simultaneous adjustment would be required to ensure that the more rapidly growing provinces would be given commensurate representation. According to the original or tentative formula I was looking at, this would mean an increase in the membership of the House of Commons to 299.

I might make one further comment. At one time a member of the House of Commons represented, on the average, about 40,000 persons. Today, if no changes are made, the number of persons represented per member is in excess of 80,000. If the membership of the House were increased to 299, each member would still be representing, on the average, about 72,000 Canadians. Placed in this context, and in view of the rather rapid growth in Canada's population and the slow change in the membership of the House, it is not outlandish to consider some increase in the membership of the House of Commons. It is on this ground that I have conducted the discussions. The government is still receptive to that idea or to variations of it.

REDISTRIBUTION OF RIDINGS—CONTINUATION OF WORK OF PROVINCIAL COMMISSIONS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In view of the apparent uncertainty about arriving at an agreement for the moment, and while there does not seem to be immediate danger of an election, as David and Goliath seem to have gotten together—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time by his gesture the Prime Minister has proven he has a black belt. I would ask the minister in all seriousness whether or not the provincial commissions are to continue their meetings. Or has the government, because of the uncertainty of arriving at an arrangement along the lines the hon. gentleman outlined by which the House would have 299 members—I suggested 285—decided that these various commissions will not sit, because it will be love's labour lost if they continue to sit?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might reply briefly, but we have only a few minutes before the end of the question period.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I will attempt to reply as briefly as possible. I think there is another part of the same question which the House might consider, and that would be to permit the present commissions to conclude their work but to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act in such a way as to provide that the next election might occur on the basis of the present boundaries. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that if I went any further I would have to trespass further upon the time available.

[Later:]

REDISTRIBUTION OF RIDINGS—REQUEST FOR MEMBERSHIP FLOOR FOR NORTHERN ONTARIO AND NORTHERN QUEBEC

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. In giving consideration to the proposal that he outlined, would the minister also give consideration to establishing a floor for northern Ontario and northern Quebec as separate identities?

HARBOURS

LADNER B.C.—DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF DREDGING

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. It relates to Ladner harbour. In his answer to me a couple of weeks ago he said the harbour would be dredged in April. Now the people in my riding are being told that dredging will not start until July. Will the minister please tell the House when this urgent dredging will take place?

Can the minister inform the House whether or not OHC has indicated it will not increase these rents?

POSSIBLE CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN INTER-AMERICAN INDIAN INSTITUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the government's readiness, expressed in a policy statement in 1969, to seek membership in the Inter-American Indian Institute, and in view of the many delegations that have represented Canada as observers at meetings of that institute, when can the native people of Canada expect to be able to participate in an exchange of ideas of common interest with other native people of America?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That is a serious question, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to take it as notice.

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): My impression is that consultation is going on at the present time. However, I should like to check so as to be absolutely sure.

ALLEGED DELAY IN PENSION CHEQUES FOR RETIRING EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. For some months now there have been undue delays in getting pension cheques out to civilian employees of the Department of National Defence. Would the minister undertake to look seriously at the problem of delays, extending up to five or six months, before commencement of legitimate pension payments to retiring employees? I would point out to the minister that many of these people have to resort to welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into this question.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Timiskaming has a supplementary to the previous question.

STATISTICS CANADA

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CALCULATION OF INDICES FOR CONSUMER PRICES, INDUSTRY SELLING PRICES AND WHOLESALE PRICES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Have the minister or any of his officials yet made any contact, formal or informal, with the director of Statistics Canada with a view to modifying the basis of procedures used to calculate the consumer price index, the industry selling price index and the general wholesale price index?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have had no discussion with the chief statistician on that question.

AUDITOR GENERAL

REQUEST THAT OFFICE BE FILLED IMMEDIATELY ON RETIREMENT OF PRESENT HOLDER

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. If my memory serves me right, today marks the date of retirement of the Auditor General, a respected officer responsible to this House. Could the Prime Minister advise what steps are being taken to see that there is no break in continuity in that office, and that the Auditor General is responsible to parliament and not to the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we intend to see that this post is filled by a very honourable and capable person very soon.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ALLEGED ABUSES—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. He will recall that a few days ago he indicated that the subject of reported abuses under the Unemployment Insurance Act would be studied by the unemployment insurance advisory committee. May I ask the minister whether he has yet received the report of that committee. If so, will he now table it? If not, when he does receive it will he table it in the House forthwith?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received the report. I have been in verbal communication with the chairman and I understand that their deliberations are proceeding. It is certainly my intention to reveal the details of their recommendations.

POSSIBLE REFORM OF BAIL AND PAROLE PROCEDURES IN VIEW OF RECENT CRIMES OF VIOLENCE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that yesterday I received no answer to my question regarding an immediate change in the Bail Reform Act I will try to simplify my question, which concerns the safety and well-being of all Canadians. I hope the minister will not feel insulted and will answer. Could the minister tell the House whether, in view of further recent murders of innocent Canadians, he and his department are planning any improvements to the Bail Reform Act in order to assure the Canadian public of improved safety and well-being? If no improvements are being considered at this time, why is this so?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to try to give an answer to the hon. gentleman now that he has asked a question that is really in order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I made it clear before to the House that the government stands ready to make such changes as may be required by the operation of the bail law, which is recognized by the Attorneys General across this land in all provinces as being a distinct improvement over the previous law. We may be bringing forward some small and very technical changes to the law. My problem with the hon. member's question is that there is no relationship between the question of people being at large under the current law as against their being at large under the previous law so far as danger to the public is concerned. The current law very adequately allows for the protection of the public, if that is seen to be necessary. The only alternative which the hon. gentleman might suggest is the detention in prison of everyone suspected of an offence, and I will not go along with any such suggestion.

CONSULTATIONS ON BAIL LAW WITH CROWN ATTORNEYS AND POLICE OFFICERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question. In light of the fact his statement reveals that he thinks the present law serves Canadians better, and there have been statements by the law commission to that effect, would he discuss the matter with the Attorneys General of the various provinces so that proper instructions would go out to the various Crown counsel and police officers to ensure that the discretion that is necessary under the act is properly exercised. This might solve the problem and prevent murders such as occurred over the weekend in Ottawa.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I informed hon. members about, I think, two months ago that I had written to all Attorneys General drawing their attention to the need for appropriate instructions to be given police officers and prosecutors, not with the suggestion that anything was badly handled but simply to reinforce the very valuable portions of the law. I think I have now had replies from all Attorneys General basically thanking me for the suggestion and indicating to me the steps that they are taking to see that the rules are indeed being properly handled.

I think there was only one suggestion regarding a very small technical change, but the consensus was that, with experience, situations can in fact be properly handled. The point that hon. members seem sometimes to miss is that under any law, except one that keeps almost every suspect in prison, people will be on bail, and indeed the hardened criminals would be most likely released under a cash bail system, such as the old bail system. So it is not the changes in the law that have caused the problem, and any suggestion that it is, is really doing a disservice to the continued development of the law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking to ask supplementaries on the subject and we have gone beyond the question period. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Malpeque who has been waiting to ask a question, after which I will call orders of the day.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the target of my question is not here today, so I will hold it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe rising on a point of order?

FISHERIES

PRESENCE OF FOREIGN DRAGGERS WITHIN 12 MILES OF NEWFOUNDLAND COAST—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to delay the proceedings, but in view of the emergency situation in my province where draggers of French, Portuguese and Spanish origin are violating Canadian fishing regulations and fishing off the west coast of Newfoundland, I wonder whether the minister would advise the House what action his department is taking to correct this situation, which is resulting in our fishermen losing their livelihoods?

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate that the matter is urgent, as the hon. member suggests, but I think I have been lenient in allowing, to the extent I can, additional questions. However, if there is agreement certainly the Chair would have no objection to the minister being allowed to reply to the question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the area in which these incidents are alleged to have taken place is relatively small. We have two large patrol vessels there and three Canadian trawlers have in fact been taken in for violating our limits. There are no foreign vessels in that area at the present time, and there is no evidence whatsoever that any foreign vessel has abridged any of our regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

[Mr. Lang.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT, REHABILITATION, OWNERSHIP, NEW COMMUNITIES, ETC.

The House resumed, from Monday, March 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-133, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the hon. member for Calgary North seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was approached a moment ago by the whip of the NDP with reference to speakers. It is true that the hon. member for Northwest Territories was called just at the adjournment and only had a few minutes. In light of this—and we are agreed to this—I was wondering whether you would call the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has, of course, no objection to calling the hon. member for Scarborough West, who seems to be prepared to speak at this point.

• (1520)

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for his generosity in allowing me to speak today.

[English]

There have been, over the past few weeks, questions addressed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) relating to the effects of rent increases in various public and subsidized housing projects. This question has arisen, apparently, as a result of the announced increase in the old age pension, and I should like to pursue this matter briefly this afternoon, particularly since these increases in rents are justified under some of the provisions of the National Housing Act. I have been looking through the act trying to find these provisions. I know they are there, although I have not been able to find them all. I know that section 15 provides for CMHC to approve increases in rents in cases where the cost of maintaining buildings built directly by CMHC or with CMHC approved money have risen.

We, in this corner of the House, have addressed a number of questions to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs relating to this matter, and we have received a number of answers. This afternoon I should like to go into that subject again briefly, to see if we can obtain anything like a complete picture as to what is happening in that sector. Obviously, a considerable number of our senior citizens are being sorely affected by these increases in rents, and others are feeling insecure indeed, because they feel their turn may come at any time. It is important to raise this point, because a good number of people are beginning to question the generosity and, indeed, the integrity of the state, inasmuch as the federal government offers an increase in pensions on the one hand, and provincial or municipal governments take much of these pension increases away in rent increases on the other hand.

As I suggested a moment ago, we have asked the government some questions on this, and have received a fair number of answers. I do not say that those answers are in contradiction to one another; at the same time, they do not give us a complete picture. One answer is to this effect: that the minister has ordered that there be no rent increases in CMHC owned buildings as a result of the increase in the old age pension; in other words, that the rents in CMHC owned buildings will be frozen for a period of time. This is all very good, Mr. Speaker, but we have experienced difficulty in finding out how many buildings are directly owned or controlled by CMHC. Central Mortgage and Housing itself is not directly a landlord in many projects housing senior citizens in this country. So far as I can tell, CMHC is the landlord in those cases where it has received into its hands properties and houses whose owners have fallen into default on mortgage payments. As it has those houses in receivership it is, in effect, the landlord. I do not think many senior citizens inhabit those houses. I also understand that CMHC is either the landlord or in direct control of a number of buildings in the far north, in the Northwest Territories. I also understand that the only project CMHC controls directly as owner is Habitat in Montreal. How many senior citizens live in Habitat? So, it does not appear as if the minister's statement to the effect that rents in CMHC owned or controlled buildings will be frozen amounts to very much.

There is another category of project about which we have asked questions, and so far we have received, truly speaking, no direct and satisfactory answer. I am speaking of what are called limited dividend projects. In several cities of Canada, certainly in the metropolis of Toronto from where I come these days, there are a number of limited dividend projects. The residents of those limited dividend projects have received notices saying that, because their incomes have gone up, the leases which they signed in good faith will be effectively and, I am sorry to say, legally broken by the landlord because CMHC has approved increases in rents. I think we should look at these particular cases, not simply because this is a matter of concern right now in relation to increases in the old age pension, but also because the approach taken to tenants who sign leases in limited dividend projects effectively makes second class citizens of them.

When individuals in this country sign a lease with a landlord for the rental of a piece of property for a period of time, they undertake to pay a certain amount of rent and the landlord undertakes to permit them to use that property for the stated rent. It is, indeed, a rare lease in the private sector which contains a clause saying that at any given time the landlord, if his costs have gone up, may reopen that lease and stipulate another rent. This, effectively, is what is happening in many limited dividend projects in the country. Standard forms of lease are used which contain a clause which says very simply that if CMHC approval is given, the rent stipulated in the previous clause will not apply and rents in the project in question can be raised.

In certain provinces of the country, certain standard forms of lease apply to people who lease in the private sector. Why should we not let the standard form of lease apply to people who live in houses that are financed by the public sector. I appeal to the minister to review those sections of the act under which such practices have been allowed, because I consider them an abuse, if not of the letter, of the spirit of the act. Surely, when we house people in limited dividend projects, and, by the way, we are not doing them any enormous favour since we are not subsidizing their rents massively, we should give them their full rights as citizens of this country. If they sign leases they should be able to live in the premises during the periods of those leases without being harassed by landlords and living under the threat that rents may go up.

I realize many members of this House know the value of a contract and the value of a lease. It is because they appreciate the value of a lease and of a contract that I wish to bring forward my next example of a matter that concerns me. In the city of Toronto, indeed, I am sure this applies to every city in this country, there are projects which are run by municipal authorities. In Toronto there is, in particular, The Metropolitan Toronto Housing Company Limited. Recently, that company has been sending out notices to its tenants advising them that, because of the increase in old age pensions, their rents will be reviewed. I should like to put on record a sample letter. Many similar copies have been sent. The one in my hand, signed by the Director of Housing, is sent from City Hall, Toronto and dated March, 1973. It reads:

> Owing to announced increases in Old Age Security Pensions effective April 1, 1973, it would appear that your income may require an increase in rent, in accordance with the terms of your lease and in accordance with our agreement with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

• (1530)

So, at least in the view of the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Company, in accordance with the agreement it has with CMHC, it can cause a review and arrive at a decision.

> For your convenience we have arranged for staff to be available in your building to take an up-to-date financial declaration on Monday, March 26th.
> The staff will visit you in your apartment and I would appreciate you arranging to remain home on the above date to complete the statutory declaration.

You know, Mr. Speaker, if these people were living in standard, private housing, in no way would the landlord be able to send them a letter of this kind saying that they should stay home all day on Monday until he comes around to interview them. But, this is customary in what is, in effect, subsidized housing. They are in effect commanded to stay around all day until the interviewers come around. I have a letter from a person who was asked to stay at home for one of these interviews. She states;

> These constant interviews are terribly worrying to the people in these buildings.

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that these instances we are speaking of involve senior citizens.

If we could have say a hard and fast two year lease, it would allow people to settle down with a feeling of more stability. After all, we are not going to live for another 100 years.

That is an extremely important point for anyone, but particularly for senior citizens who feel that because of the nature of the accommodation in which they find themselves they are most insecure. They are simply asking, not for a gift, but for some assurance that the contracts they enter into will be binding for a year or, as she suggests here and which I support, for a period of two years at least.

I am reminded now of another consideration of the same kind. I refer to how we approach people who live in these projects which are geared to income. I have only taken up one type of project so far. There are others which operate more directly under the provincial housing corporations. I, of course, am more familiar with what is going on in respect of the Ontario Housing Corporation. A while ago the minister said that he has not had an official reply from the minister in the province of Ontario to the letter he sent the other day asking for a freeze on rent scales. Mind you, we know there has been an unofficial answer and that Mr. Grossman said last week the Minister of State for Urban Affairs was simply playing politics with housing. It may be that Mr. Grossman knows whereof he speaks, but at any rate he gave an answer which indicates that the OHC had not raised rents and did not even do so the last time there was an increase in old age pensions. It is an interesting shell game we have going on here.

There is in Sault Ste. Marie, for example, an authority called the Sault Ste. Marie Housing Authority which has been sending out notices of rent increases to old age pensioners because their pensions have been increased. We could say this is a project of a limited dividend nature and they are therefore operating under section 15 of the National Housing Act. However, if we look a little further we find that the people in this project who complain about rent increases receive letters from the Ontario Housing Corporation to this effect:

I aknowledge and thank you for your letter of February 3, 1973 concerning the increase in your monthly rent. I have investigated this matter with the Sault Ste. Marie Housing Authority and I find that they have acted in accordance with the procedures set in the provincial rent scale and your rent was computed directly as stated. However, if you are still in doubt I suggest that you contact the manager of the Sault Ste. Marie Housing Authority who will I am sure explain in detail how he arrives at the increase.

This letter is signed by the area manager of the Northern Branch of the Ontario Housing Corporation. So, what exactly is happening here? It is all very well for the minister to say, as if he were reporting a fiat, that we at the federal level have commanded that there shall be no rent increases in CMHC controlled or owned buildings, but in effect this amounts to nothing. It is all very well for the minister to say that he has written to all provincial ministers asking them to freeze all rent scales, but even when the rent scales are frozen people are still being forced to go up within the scales. We have announcements from the various provincial ministers to the effect that the minister at the federal level does not know what he is talking about because their authorities have not increased rents and yet, on the other hand, we have evidence that various aspects of these housing authorities have increased rents.

I understand that some of the municipal housing authorities are, in effect, providing housing subsidies, which bring up another problem. If they do not increase rents their costs go up and, in effect, they will be handing out more subsidies to their tenants because rents will remain at the same level. I have more correspondence from another municipal authority. This is from the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority. It is a letter to one of the Toronto aldermen explaining why there must be an increase in rents. The letter reads:

What is essential to remember, however, is that the geared-to-income basis is part of a formal agreement with CMHC which requires us to make these adjustments.

Note the words, "which requires us to make these adjustments".

We would, therefore, be reporting to the Board of Directors on the consequences of the action which we will take and I would assume the information provided to the Board of Directors would also come to the Social Services and Housing Committee.

The important part of this communication is that this authority, the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority, feels required under the agreements they have with CMHC to make these upward adjustments. It would be appreciated if, first of all, in his response to the very important points made in this House in respect of these amendments to the National Housing Act the minsiter would make a full and complete statement concerning the impact and significance of his interventions on behalf of the senior citizens of this country, interventions which we were led to believe were made about some kind of control and freeze on rents. Secondly, I wonder whether the minister would be willing to countenance further amendments to the act which would clear up the intent of the act, this preventing this kind of abuse because there is no question that there are abuses.

I cite again for his consideration the example of the limited dividend projects which are very faintly subsidized by the public. Hon. members know that the rents in limited dividend projects are not much less than the rents in the private market place. Because of the fact the government has a few dollars involved in this, we insist that these tenants not be treated as second-class citizens. They should have a lease which would give them security for a year or for two years. Surely we can review this aspect of the act and write into it language which will prevent this kind of abuse and distortion.

Third, if the minister is serious about having a rent freeze in respect of projects for which there already exist formal binding agreements between CMHC and the various housing authorities at the municipal level in this country, then he must also be prepared to help in respect of the kind of burden that is involved in the added subsidy. I am sure it will be possible for the minister, under section 44 of the Act, to make funds available under the NHA to compensate the various housing authorities for the increased subsidy these authorities will have to pay if they are to comply with the request of the minister not to increase rents. In my case, I would like to see the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority compensated.

I would like to conclude my remarks by simply reiterating my appeal, first of all, for a full and complete statement of what the effects of the various requests made of the minister with regard to freezing rents would be so that we can get a complete picture of exactly what this involves. When we are told that CMHC has fixed the rents of Habitat in Montreal, in effect, we are being told that virtually nothing has been done for the senior citizens in this country. Second, I will repeat my appeal to look at those aspects of the act under which certain abuses, particularly to senior citizens, have been caused in this country.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on Bill C-133 which puts forward the government's panacea to Canada's housing problems. In fairness, I suppose, I should really call this bill a partial panacea because the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) has said that this bill is just part of some sort of vast, comprehensive plan which, he implies, will end Canada's housing problems once and for all. I for one, and I am sure all Canadians, would like to see this plan and would like to have the minister present this blueprint for urban bliss, or even some tangible evidence that such a blueprint exists because, on the evidence so far available, I think there is good reason to be highly sceptical that such a blueprint or such a plan exists.

Certainly, this bill before us gives me no confidence that its sponsors are aware of the root problems which are causing millions of Canadians to continue to live in less than adequate housing, and certainly there is no evidence that this bill's sponsors have developed a surefire plan, a strategy, let alone some legislation which, when implemented, will ensure that every Canadian, if he desires, will be able, at some time in his life, to purchase a home with a landscape and with room to live, not just to exist or just to sleep and eat. One does not have to be a trained social scientist nor even particularly observant, to see the effects upon an individual or a family of being forced to live in housing which provides just shelter and nothing else.

In my constituency of Calgary Centre, which consists of the central core of a large and rapidly growing urban centre, there are unfortunately thousands of examples of the tragic situation which I am convinced results from improper housing, among other things. It is obvious to me that every social problem conceivable, from alcoholism to child beating and from family breakdown to juvenile delinquency, is exacerbated by improper housing. Here, I include all the factors such as living space, open land, noise, traffic, dirt and population density. That is why my party and I consider the area of housing and urban affairs to be of paramount importance, and that is why we are so dissappointed in this bill.

My colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has accurately described this bill as a "band-aid bill". It will provide some comfort in some areas, and therefore we will support it, but it will not cure the problem any more than a bandaid will cure internal injury or disease. What we have in this bill is a continuation of the practice of this government over far too many years of proposing ad hoc solutions to treat problems affecting a complex system, but perceived by the government as isolated, independent problems.

In September of 1971 the Science Council of Canada published its fourteenth report entitled "Cities for Tomorrow" in which they make several, I believe nine in all, recommendations for ways in which the federal government can make our cities more liveable for people. But the fundamental point made by this report, which the government does not seem to appreciate, is that the city is a system or, in simpler terms, everything relates to everything else. It is on this basis that my colleagues and I form our main criticism of this bill, and indeed of this government.

The problems of housing and of urban affairs must be considered simultaneously, in concert with each other, for they are all part of a system and require a system's approach or, as my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) stated, a massive approach on all sectors of the problems. The ad hoc or bandaid approach in this bill, though completely consistent with the ad hoc approaches of this government to all of our important national problems, will unfortunately not cure Canada's housing problems and, in fact, will not even significantly alter the continuing trend under this Trudeau government of deteriorating housing situations in Canada, let alone alter the deteriorating urban problems in general. With each passing day more and more Canadians are removed from the ranks of those who can afford a house of their own. This bill will not alter that trend significantly. That is the tragedy of this bill and, indeed, of this government. The young people in my riding and throughout Canada will continue to be disappointed and will have to wait that much longer before the Stanfield government takes office and cures this deplorable situation. They have, amongst others, the NDP to thank for that delay.

The main problem in housing today is that costs have risen to such a degree that very few people can afford to buy their own houses. On a national average, less than 10 per cent of Canadian families can afford to buy an NHA home. That compares to nearly 50 per cent 12 years ago. That is the fundamental problem, and this bill will not help.

An hon. Member: Neither will the Tories.

Mr. Andre: In fact, the only portion of this bill that really directs itself toward this fundamental problem is that pertaining to land banking. However, I am afraid this scheme, which is intended to reduce the cost of land, will not have that effect and indeed, in the short term, will probably have the opposite effect. After all, you do not have to be an expert to realize that the introduction of a large scale buyer into an already restricted or short-supply market is bound to increase prices, not decrease them. Perhaps in 10 years municipal governments will be in a position to reduce speculative land increase by releasing publicly held lands for residential dwellings, but in the meantime land prices will continue to skyrocket.

What is needed is great increases in the supply of serviced land, which really means massive increases in servicing. This bill does not provide the municipalities with the inducement or means to construct the large scale transportation and service corridors that are necessary. Raw land is expensive because serviced land is expensive, and serviced land is expensive because developers must build all the roads, services, etc. for their development, plus provide the capacity to handle developments that will take place farther out. Developers must pay for these services because municipalities lack the resources or tax base to put them in themselves. That indicates what the thrust should be to truly reduce land costs now, not some time in the future.

We should supply the funds or help the municipalities through low interest loans to service large tracts of raw land. That will reduce the price of residential lots and of raw land. That will help Canadians buy a house of their own. It will reduce the cost of housing in general now, not some ten years in the future. But the rising cost of land is not the only factor which is causing house prices to rise at the rate they are. In fact, I am not sure it is the main factor. Based on my observations and my discussions with home builders and home buyers, the most expensive aspect of buying a home today is the cost of mortgage money. Since the Trudeau government took office, the cost of mortgage money has risen from less than 7 per cent to more than 9 per cent. As my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe pointed out, since 1961 the cost of the average house has almost doubled, but when you add financing charges, the cost has almost tripled.

This problem, which is clearly the most important item or cause of increased housing costs, is not even alluded to in this bill. You would think the minister might at least have provided a bandaid for this sore if he lacks the wherewithal to devise a cure. Perhaps it is time that long-term mortgage capital was removed from the general money market manipulations so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Bank of Canada can no longer use these interest rates in their inane attempts to cure inflation, recession, or whatever. Most countries of the world do a far better job than Canada in arranging for a ready supply of reasonably priced mortgages for the housing markets.

We, in Canada, not only do nothing to ensure a stable supply of low cost mortgage funds, but in fact use this money supply, and the housing and construction sector in general, as the main tool in accelerating and decelerating the economy. This has led to a very fragmented and inefficient housing industry. Many of the home builders in Calgary are just now recovering from the Trudeau government's tight money policy, that is, those who survived at all. And those who did survive are very apprehensive and concerned about what other inane moves the government might make, and thus are protecting themselves in a way that is itself causing increased housing costs. Who can blame them? With this government in charge no one can be faulted for not being willing to invest heavily in developing extensive land holdings. A large inventory of serviced lots is not an asset in a tight money situation.

That, Sir, is the essence of the measures the government should be introducing to reduce housing costs. It should be working to reduce the interest on mortgage loans, and to remove mortgage financing from the "boom or bust" manipulations of the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada.

Another factor which is a major contributor to the high cost of urban housing, is municipal taxes and municipal financing. There is nothing in this bill, nor in any announced government program, that addresses itself to this problem. Most people, when considering the purchase of a new home are, from a financial point of view, interested in two things, the down payment and the monthly payments, consisting of principal, interest and taxes. The payment on the principal is usually trivial in comparison with the other two. With 80 per cent of our population soon to be dwelling in a few urban centres, it is clear that the responsibilities and financial obligations of the cities will not be decreasing. They require, and will continue to require large amounts of money. If their main source is to remain the revenue that comes from property tax, then these taxes will remain high, and will remain a significant obstacle to home ownership for millions of Canadians.

Notwithstanding constitutional considerations, there are lots of things the federal government could have considered doing to help in this area as well. Here again, we might have expected the government at least to offer a bandaid, or some small relief, if not a cure.

There is of course another very significant factor in the cost of housing which neither the bill nor the government has considered. I refer to the increased cost in building the house itself. Granted that these increased costs may be tied in an integral way to the whole inflationary spiral, with which this inept tragedy of a government has been struggling unsuccessfully for too long, but there are things which could have been done to reduce housing costs. If the Minister of Urban Affairs is truly concerned about the cost of housing, why did he not prevail on his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to adopt even more of the Progressive Conservative platform and remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

If the government was genuinely committed to a policy of good and proper housing for all Canadians, it would have removed this 11 per cent sales tax. A Stanfield government will remove this tax, because a Stanfield government will be committed to a policy of providing Canadians with the opportunity to own their own homes, with a yard, with some room to live, and a neighbourhood that is liveable. We are committed to providing housing at reasonable cost for all Canadians.

I do not think the government holds these types of objectives in very high esteem, and certainly not this minister. On March 6, 1973, I asked the minister whether his department was aware of and was investigating the tremendous increases that are occurring in the cost of lumber, in some cases by as much as 100 per cent in the last year. He referred me to the Minister of Finance. I would think that a minister responsible for housing at least would be aware of the factors or elements contributing to the tremendous increase in housing costs.

There is nothing in this bill, nor in any government policies or actions that could lead one to believe that they will reduce the cost of housing, or even abate the present trends. As I have indicated, the main factors in the increased housing costs are interest rates, shortage of serviced land, municipal taxes, federal taxes and fiscal policies, and building construction and material costs. This bill only addresses itself to one of these factors, and in a way that will have marginal, if any, beneficial effect, and none in the short term.

In the time I have left, I want to mention briefly some other aspects of the bill. By and large these are good measures, although I repeat they are no panacea for the problems they purport to cure. I am especially pleased that the government has decided to support the restoration rather than destruction of old neighbourhoods. Many of the neighbourhoods in my constituency could use this type of assistance. Certainly, the people living there would welcome the relief of no longer having to fear the bulldozer. Too often in the past people living in older neighbourhoods, many of whom have raised their families there, and who wanted to spend the remainder of their lives there, were disregarded, or forcibly moved, or had to witness the destruction of their familiar surroundings under the guise of progress or urban renewal. I hope that these items in the bill reflect a sincere change of heart on the part of the government, and that we can now consider the restoration of neighbourhoods and of houses as the most desirable form of renewal.

On Monday night my colleague, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), directed most of his speech toward this aspect of Bill C-133, and I will not repeat the reasoned arguments he presented, except to re-emphasize the dangers of excessive centralization in the administration of this bill. I hope the minister will consider this point most carefully, since it may well determine the degree to which items like this in the bill have or do not have the desired beneficial consequences.

I would like also to state that the increased protection for home buyers is a welcome item, although it should be extended to more than just NHA secured mortgages. It is my understanding that since private mortgage insuring companies have entered this market, the percentage of NHA insured mortgages has decreased significantly, so much so that CMHC is now considerably over-staffed. Perhaps that is another reason we have not been able to get the CMHC annual report! However, the main point, as it relates to this legislation, is that the majority of new homes will not be covered.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the question of research and development, this item was one of the recommendations in the Science Council's report to which I referred earlier. I am glad to see that this recommendation at least was adopted. Certainly, when considering the technological advances in almost every facet of our society, it can be seen that housing has lagged far behind.

I would like to make one suggestion as to how this item might be further improved. One of the main reasons technological innovation as it pertains to housing has lagged behind other fields is a reflection of the fragmented nature of the housing and construction industries. This fragmentation is due in large part to government policies. However, be that as it may, true technological innovation is enhanced by encouraging experimentation over a broad front, by many people in many areas, and small, or even moderate sized builders lack the base to do much research. They simply cannot afford to take the risk. However, they do generate new ideas, come in contact with new materials and new techniques. There would be far greater utilization of this new technology if the risks could be shared. That is why I would suggest the government might consider an insurance scheme to insure innovative or novel new techniques, and/or materials, and thereby reduce the risk factor. This would greatly broaden the experimental base and lead ultimately to greater progress in developing newer, better and cheaper housing.

In conclusion, may I say that I will support this bill even though it is no panacea for our housing problems. It will not reduce housing costs. It will not cure Canada's housing problems. However, hopefully it will do more good than harm. My main fear is that it may cause the government to be content, thinking it has addressed itself to the real housing problems of Canada, and thus delay the true changes that are necessary. However, this concern is quickly ameliorated when I realize that what we are dealing with is a temporary government which will soon be replaced by a Stanfield government—

Mr. Gilbert: Lord help us!

Mr. Alexander: You won't be here, John.

Mr. Andre: —a Stanfield government that will address itself to the real problems of housing and urban affairs, and the sooner that day comes the sooner Canadians can expect a better future.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, aside from the whole question of unemployment, rising prices and the other domestic and international economic matters that face us, this government, and the government from our party that will follow it, face their greatest challenge in this country in the field of urban affairs. The shortage and inadequacy of urban housing, traffic and transportation problems, air and water pollution, the conflicting jungle of land use and decaying neighbourhoods, urban poverty, social disturbance and the frustrations of municipal administrators are familiar problems to the average Canadian city dweller today. In that litany of urban tragedy, Mr. Speaker, lies the challenge facing all the governments of Canada. There is a general consensus that the problems of urban society have multiplied and intensified so greatly that they endanger, and indeed threaten, the long term vitality of the cities as we know them.

• (1600)

The present methods of dealing with these problems have been judged inadequate by even impartial advisers and comprehensive new approaches have been advocated. I say to this House and to you, Mr. Speaker, that this government has not listened. That is not to say that Bill C-133 is not an improvement on the situation because obviously it is, but in terms of a comprehensive, national urban policy it is not; it falls far short of that category.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, has not been the lack of research, but an apparent unwillingness to make comprehensive decisions and to finance national goals for urban Canada. It is true that for the majority of people the large metropolitan areas are becoming less desirable each year. That includes the area that abuts my own constituency, this city, which is becoming less desirable because of transportation problems. The failure of this government to meet the financial requirements of the regional transit commission quickly, and to develop rapid surface transit within this city, has caused a type of urban decay which is becoming more discernible each day and each month because the action that is required and that members of this House have called for has not been taken.

I do not think it falls upon us in this country to compare ourselves with other places in North America. We have heard the classic comparisons with New York, San Francisco and Chicago and the conclusion that we are not as bad as they are, thank God. With continued neglect and continuing inability to meet real needs, with continued frustration in the whole governmental process, with the wrangling over legislative responsibility, whether it is provincial, municipal or federal, we run the risk in some of our cities, and I believe this is one, of passing the point where anything can be accomplished quickly to improve the quality of life.

The statistical hallmarks of the problems that face us, face this government and will face succeeding governments if action is not taken, are rather frightening. In 1921, less than half our population was urban; by 1966, the proportion was 73 per cent; by 1981, it is expected to reach 85 per cent and in the year 2000 it is projected to rise to 94 per cent. By the year 2000, Mr. Speaker, nine out of every ten Canadians in Quebec, Ontario, the Maritimes, Alberta and British Columbia are expected to be living in the cities and towns. Within 30 years it is expected that more than 50 per cent of Canada's population, some 16 million people, will reside in 21 centres stretching along the St. Lawrence lowlands from Windsor to Quebec City. Mr. Speaker, in light of those statistical hallmarks of the urban problem, we in Canada have no cause for any self-righteous smugness. It is a fact that for many reasons people are leaving rural Canada and are crowding into our cities. This input of people is complicating the problem of urban renewal every day and is making the decision in large cities on urban renewal, low rental housing, senior citizens' housing, and many other fields, the decision that is born out of desperation and pressure rather than reasoned consideration.

Is it not obvious that the availability of serviced land is an important and indeed fundamental need in all our cities? It is so obvious that it hardly bears repeating. It is also obvious that there has been a failure, wherever the blame lies in this country, to provide an adequate supply of serviced land. That, too, hardly bears repeating. The story is contained in the excellent speeches of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) and the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) who spoke before me.

I think it is a wrong concept in every part of our lives, Mr. Speaker, that it has become fashionable to be bigger, as if bigness had some sort of grace attached to it—to have more and to do it all for less. I realize that this ministry or this government cannot stop the clock and it is foolish to say that of any government, but in this country we have the opportunity now to change the pattern of our cities and, I suggest to change the direction of our growth.

[Mr. Baker.]

However, I do not in any way minimize the size of the task that faces any government which wishes to face up to it. We have an opportunity to do something in Canada before it is too late. This will require the co-ordinated recognition of the problem by all levels of government; it will require the leadership of the federal government, not just in money but in ideas and in courage. This bill does not contain these kinds of ideas or the courage that is required.

We have to fight what I call the inevitability syndrome in Canada. People say it is inevitable that Toronto will have a population of six million people by the year 2000; it is inevitable that cities will be filled only with high rise buildings and there will be no room for houses and families. They say it is inevitable that we will have urban sprawl. Mr. Speaker, I suggest these things are not inevitable, and whether they happen depends upon the actions of government backed by an awakening people in these communities that are fighting this pinch in the manner I have suggested.

Our big fight against this inevitability syndrome in urban affairs is the concept of new communities mentioned in this bill and the extension of older communities. Those are older communities divorced from the areas of difficulty that I have described. Perhaps it may prove the most significant part of this bill in terms of its long range impact on the future development of our country.

The new provisions in Bill C-133 are contained in clauses 45.1, 45.2 and 45.3. If these clauses are administered and funded with the leadership and courage that we would expect of a government, but which we have not seen since January 4, 1973, and if there is proper consultation with the provincial governments, particularly those where there is a real urban problem, we can start to acquire or provide for the acquisition of land for new communities. The bill provides for this and it provides for the acquisition of land for transportation corridors, for open space and for essential public facilities. I think the cost-sharing arrangements in the bill are generous; they indicate that Central Mortgage and Housing will share 75 per cent of the cost as well as 75 per cent of the profits or losses.

My suggestion to the minister, Mr. Speaker, is that the new communities program should not be restricted solely to areas removed from existing cities and towns. As I read the clause, it could provide for the incorporation of the development of new communities within urban areas, as well as the development around the cities of extensions to existing communities. In this way, I believe it would be possible in new communities to have not merely dormitories, but mixed urban areas in which the commercial and industrial amenities which are necessary to life, work and function, as well as the assessment based for municipalities, would be present and where there would be at the time of the development around these towns the existing social structure to support them. This social structure would be augmented by these new communities.

If there is an ultimate feeling, it is that a beneficial housing policy cannot be developed in isolation from other programs. Perhaps this is the failing in this bill. The government still has no strategy for urban growth. There is no strategy with regard to rapid transit or the provision in municipalities of other transportation facilities. There is an ad hoc approach to the whole problem of servicing. The bill does not present any specific outline for such a policy with respect to the very excellent program it sets forth for the development of new communities. It shirks the issue by speaking vaguely of transportation corridors.

I have one other matter to which I should like to refer, and that is the whole question of senior citizens' housing. I am going to relate this matter to the whole problem which affects the province of Ontario, particularly eastern Ontario. In eastern Ontario, the populations of many small towns and villages were growing up until 10 years ago. In that area of Ontario, we are now feeling this urban movement of population. As a result, in many small villages and towns in eastern Ontario there is an aging of the population. As this aging process occurs, there is a greater and greater requirement for continuing provision of adequate senior citizens' housing. That is a need.

I have two matters in my constituency in mind. There has never, and will not be in the foresseable future, municipal services of sewer and water to supply not only senior citizens' accommodation but single family accommodation, commercial and other development that takes place. I think a wrong policy has developed at Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which reports to this parliament through the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It seems the policy of that corporation is that there shall be none of these multiple unit projects such as senior citizens' developments until there is a system of municipal sewer and water services. This is very important because we are not going to be able to fulfil a need for these aging populations. I have a case in point.

I wrote to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with regard to a senior citizens' project for the townships of Marlborough and North Gower in my constituency. I also have in mind one in the village of Spencerville which is a police village, a small hamlet. I have not heard from CMHC with regard to the one matter, but I have heard with regard to the proposal in the township of North Gower. In my letter, I asked what was the general policy and whether it was required to have sewer and water when considering multiple units for senior citizens. I received a reply from CMHC dated March 2, 1973, and I quote:

> The absence of municipal sewer and water services could present a real problem inasmuch as it has been Corporation policy for some years now that financing would not be made available for the construction of "multiple-unit" projects in locations not served by piped sewers. This policy reflects our concern with the growing problem of soil and water pollution created in part by the use of septic tanks.

I cannot quarrel with the minister's concern about pollution control. It is a concern of us all. I concede that there is always the possibility of improperly installed or operating septic tanks causing difficulty. However, this lack should not become the basis for automatic rejection of projects. With all the research facilities available in this country, this ministry should be the leader in establishing research projects to develop sewage disposal systems that are not dependent upon the septic system, but can operate in isolation from municipal sewer and water systems.

Mr. Basford: They are.

Mr. Baker: If that is the case, I would like some details on this type of development. If there are such systems, I would like to see this particular project approved. From my own personal knowledge, I can say that this is one area of eastern Ontario where it is needed. There are many others, but I mention only two. There is a need to be fulfilled in areas of aging population. This is true in all parts of Canada, especially in the rural areas.

I would like to see this policy changed so that municipalities in Ontario, in partnership with the Ontario Housing Corporation and, from the financing point of view, CMHC, can have the avenues opened so that they can provide proper accommodation to senior citizens. As the science of geriatrics improves, we are going to have to deal with this problem more and more. When people age, they still have the desire to be independent. I know that from my own family. We ought to provide them with a choice in housing.

The waiting list for low rent housing for senior citizens is inexcusable in a modern society. I think the waiting lists are monuments to the failure of policies. I am not suggesting that the government has not turned itself in that direction. Of course it has, but not soon enough. There are waiting lists in every city. I receive letters from old people who want this kind of accommodation, but it is not available. I suggest to the minister that perhaps there can be some changes in attitude in this area, backed up by proper research. I dare say that if the proper research is made available on a package sewage system, there will be some with administrative courage who will find them suitable and acceptable.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my member of parliament will allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Baker: I wonder if I might finish, Mr. Speaker, and then answer. Many of my colleagues have spoken about the cost of land. The cost of serviced land is the catalyst in pushing prices down. This will apply in the case of the new communities, as well, so a spirit of adventure would have to be shown with respect to the development of trunk services, and so on, in these new communities. In the absence of a strong thrust to provide serviced land at reasonable cost the whole policy with respect to new communities, as set forth in this bill, will fail.

• (1620)

There is a fundamental problem in this regard. It involves the whole relationship between the federal government and the provinces. It has long been the case that the provincial governments possess much of the legislative power but that the taxing power, the power of the purse, is lodged with the federal government. It is on the basis of this conundrum facing Canada that a call for block fund financing was made by the provincial ministers. I am sorry to say that the federal government refused to permit the provinces to assume tax revenues from which to pay for housing programs. If we are to go beyond the bandaid approach to housing, to use a phrase from the speech of the hon. member who preceded me, a wholly new approach will have to be taken vis-à-vis provincial governments. The provinces want to take part in this work as well. There has to be a spirit of co-operation such as is now beginning in the partnership between the senior citizens and CMHC. This has to be extended to all forms of housing and servicing of land.

It is all very well to blame the land developer for making a dollar. We should remember that it is the policies of the government with respect to its housing program which have enabled the land developer to make his profits. The shortage of housing is the result of the failure of the federal government to show initiative. To this day, the government has failed to present a national urban development policy. And because the government has failed to contain inflation, much less diminish it, hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches are again forced to consider this crisis in terms of interim relief; they have no long term plan with respect to housing. The decision in favour of stop-gap measures may be justifiable from a pragmatic point of view. The Liberals have no intention of losing the next federal election.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: I suppose that is as good a justification for the bill before us as one could imagine. But little is done for those who cannot find adequate shelter or for those who cannot afford to buy a home.

Before I sit down, I want to refer to a brief presented to the Executive and Planning Committee of the Council of the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton by the Home Builders' Association of Metropolitan Ottawa which is, as hon. members know, an affiliate of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada. These figures were given to the senior municipal government in this area and they relate specifically to the Ottawa area. They, too, are monuments to the failure of the government's urban policies. I say this with great regret, because I would much prefer to stand up and approve government policy rather than criticize it.

According to table one of this report, the price of the average, single family dwelling lot rose from $5,000 to $12,000 between 1965 and 1972. The average house and lot price as moved from $25,100 to $39,000 in this area between 1965 and 1972. Starts on single and semi-detached housing increased from 1,567 units in 1965 to only 1,803 in 1972. This is an indication that if a person expects to own his own home in the Ottawa area the statistics are stacked against him. The whole economy is stacked against him. With respect to row-housing, on the other hand, starts in 1972 were 1,339 units, compared with 684 in 1965. So, row-housing starts have doubled. In the case of apartment units, starts in 1965 were 2,246 and in 1972 the number had more than tripled to 7,600.

These statistics indicate that there are people in this country who, against their will and because of the inflation that the government has failed to check, are sentenced to live in places other than single family homes. There are some in our community who do not want to live in single family homes. But I suggest there are many who, if the situation with respect to building costs and land costs were stabilized, would choose to accept the single family home with all its amenities. The statistics I have given for the area I have the honour to represent, and which find their counterpart in every province in this country, are monuments to failure whereas they ought to be milestones on the road to the development of a national urban policy, something which this government has shown itself incapable of producing.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not raise it earlier because I did not wish to interrupt my hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton. My point of order arises from the remark of the Minister of State a few minutes ago when he said he wished to ask a question of "his Member of Parliament". I had fondly entertained the idea that I was the minister's Member of Parliament. Could he tell us whether he has changed his residence or whether he was resident in Vancouver-Quadra on election day?

Mr. Basford: On the point of order, I am delighted to see two Tories fighting over my body.

Mr. Bell: It is worth 39 cents, chemically.

Mr. Basford: But, as we know, a Member of Parliament usually has two addresses.

Mr. Baker: On the point of order, I should like to say that if my hon. friend from Vancouver-Quadra wants the minister I would be delighted to ship him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It does not seem to me to be a great point of order.

• (1630)

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think the real reason we were quarrelling over the location of the minister's residence was a natural inquiry by the members of my party as to how many times he and his colleagues have voted.

I want to open my remarks today with some reference to the remarks of the minister when he began this debate, particularly the piety that he exhibited at that time and before when he stated that "good housing at reasonable cost is the social right of every citizen of this country". When good housing at reasonable cost is not available, the minister has been quite adept at finding excuses, usually blaming some other level of government. However, it is my privilege to represent in this House three of the townsites in national parks and in those townsites the housing crisis is a scandal, as it has been for years. They are areas completely within the jurisdiction of the federal government. This is a crisis which is completely the fault of the federal government. When I asked the minister in this House the other day whether that pious principle of his applied to areas within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government, he ducked the question, passing it on to a minister who was not here.

What is important is that the housing crisis which exists in areas within federal jurisdiction does not apply just to national parks and townsites there. It is the shocking fact that the people in Canada whose needs in housing are most acute and least recognized are those who dwell within the exclusive domain of the federal government. I refer to the people trapped in the colonial tentacles of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, native people, northern people and residents of national parks. If the minister is serious in his assertion about a social right to good housing at reasonable cost for every citizen, he presumably regards these Canadians as second class citizens.

These areas are directly within federal jurisdiction and, at least in so far as the parks are concerned, the minister should either reform the practices of his colleagues or refrain from pious declarations of empty principle. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development once told residents of Jasper that if they did not like it there they could leave. He is now making that necessary; they have no houses in which to live. Newspapers in that town are now running advertisements for apartments in adjoining communities because you cannot get any place to live in communities that are administered exclusively by the federal government. The problem will be much more critical this summer with the influx of students and tourists, and despite the repeated assurances of the minister as to the social right of Canadians, the federal government is proposing to do nothing about the situation.

The second reference that I want to make to the minister's statement is drawn from his reference on page 2258 of Hansard to this bill being only part of the total picture. It is quite significant that the minister finds he has to start his contribution to this debate with an apology. As my colleagues have already said in this debate, the major fault with this legislation and with the entire approach to policy of this minister, is that it is an ad hoc approach. Even now we have had no sign of a genuine national policy. I suggest it is misleading to suggest that this is part of a picture, because no picture exists. We have a piecemeal approach. Some of the pieces are good. But we cannot delay much longer the development of an over-all policy. We have to recognize that what we are dealing with here is not just housing policy; we are dealing with social, cultural and economic policy. We are dealing with the people of the country as a whole.

All these matters are inter-related. That was supposed to have been recognized when the Department of Urban Affairs was established, but that mandate has been abandoned. There is now an obvious and continuing conflict between CMHC and the minister's own cadre of advisers. There is no agreement between them as to jurisdiction or as to goals. The minister himself is either unable or unwilling to resolve this conflict and to give any kind of leadership.

We need in Canada an over-all strategy which recognizes the relationship between various aspects of national policy, which treats housing as being not in isolation from the rest of the problems of the country; which treats the CMHC as being not in isolation from the goals or other aspects of the Department of Urban Affairs. What we will be doing in this area will affect the face and the future of the country forever.

We will have to have much more co-ordination than has been the case to date because what we are doing now is stumbling in the dark without goals, without agreement on how to reach goals, with a minister who claims that a major piece of legislation is really only part of a picture, but who admits by his every action and inaction that it is a picture he cannot see, let alone achieve.

I have some sympathy for the minister. He is up against the established practice of treating housing and other policies as though they were in some vacuum. He symbolizes indeed the plight of a party which is listening to advisers and following procedures which are decades out of date. Perhaps the most critical issue in this country is the fact that one party and one group of advisers have been running Canada for most of the last 40 years. The senior advisers did their best during the Diefenbaker administration to frustrate reforms intended and initiated there. They are running the country now in a way that, however appropriate to the 30's or the 40's or the 50's, is dangerously wrong in contemporary Canada.

I want to focus on one feature of this bill. It is a feature referred to by my colleague from Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) as the new communities provision. I am concerned, as he is, that there is not adequate provision in that proposal for application to existing communities. I think that the new communities proposal is a symbol of a policy that, while it might be good on its own, should not stand on its own, and indeed which holds the promise of doing harm precisely because it does stand alone and is not part of an integrated policy towards communities in Canada.

The purposes of that section are self-evident and good. They are going to relieve congestion. They are going to allow experimentation and might even help open resource areas. But by my reading the provision applies only to wholly new communities and things created where nothing was before—the product exclusively of social engineering. There is no provision for expansion around communities that already exist, which have already proven that they are places where people want to live. Perhaps my reading is wrong; perhaps the bill does not preclude that possibility, although to the degree the new communities concept relies upon the instrument of land assembly the concept would seem to preclude additions to towns and small communities that already exist. But even if that possibility does exist, it will obviously be as an afterthought, as an adjunct to the prior purpose of creating wholly new, experimental, engineered communities.

There are a lot of things that are not in this bill. To my mind, coming from where I do, the most serious absence is the absence of any policy at all to develop or to maintain the thousands of towns and small communities which, if they survive, hold the promise of giving modern Canada a style and quality of life without parallel in any other country in the world. I want to suggest that in housing and in other policies, this government has sentenced to death several of the smaller and older communities in Canada which have a lot of natural life left in them if they are given an even break through national policy.

Throughout his long address the other day, the minister devoted fully two sentences to what he called "the deeply satisfying aspects of life in the country and in country towns and villages". He talked about their contribution to what his speechwriters called "the abiding values that have made Canada and her people great". Those words reek of eulogy. The minister and his aides clearly regard these smaller communities as a part of the past—albeit the abiding past—and he pauses in his blind rush towards a future he admits he cannot see only long enough to wish these country towns and villages a decent burial. The minister might deny that. He might claim that he has plans, that this is all part of that elusive, larger picture. But the damage is done by his demonstrated indifference.

My grandfather ran a newspaper in southwestern Alberta in a day and a district where you could not always phone to check your facts. In one issue he reported the death of a merchant in the little town of Longview, a man called Long Tom. The obituary was properly full of praise and respect. The day after the paper appeared so did Long Tom, who said the reports of his death were premature, and while he appreciated all the nice things that had been said, they were certainly hurting business. That is precisely the situation of the smaller communities of Canada. They can appreciate the lofty language of the minister but know that, in the cadence of his words and the thrust of his policy is the sound of a death knell that is not only premature but destructive of the values and the future of this country. The minister can say what he will, but his policies are hurting the business and hurting the life of the smaller communities of Canada.

May I give one small example? The federal funding that will go into these new communities will give them an unfair competitive advantage over neighbourhood communities that already exist and have to get along with the infusion of federal funds and expertise. Indeed, under this bill the only help, potentially, that will be given to existing communities, as I see it, is provided for in the hinterland housing proposal, and that is far too limited.

The problem, Sir, is not so much in what the bill does as in what it fails to do. In fact, in Canada there has been for a long time discrimination against small communities. It is not deliberate. I suggest that they are simply the so-called accidental victims of policies established for other purposes. They are too small and too unorganized to defend themselves against the cumulative, contrary resources of big governments, big cities, big labour and big industry. They are the communities that are overlooked. We see it in housing policy.

The minister talks about housing surveys. Actually, CMHC has made virtually no surveys outside major metropolitan areas. He talks of regional surveys. Regional programs might be planned, but they have not happened. The focus has been on one, two or three of our major cities. As well, most towns in Canada suffer from the so-called red circle policy of CMHC which limits and virtually eliminates CMHC lending in areas which are not considered economically viable and which are slung into that category without any effective power of appeal. This might not be official policy, but it is effective policy. It is discrimination against smaller places which, to a certain mentality, are not viable because they are not big.

Most serious, Sir, is the fact that the department is simply and blindly going along with trends, responding to projections which might very well be wrong and working without targets, without goals, which might recognize and value the strength of smaller places. Instead of targets being aimed at, there is a simple an unquestioning capitulation to figures which show people are moving to metropolitan areas; and there is not any attempt to determine whether they need to or want to move in such numbers. There is a danger, Sir, when making the kind of case I am trying to make today, of being accused of retreating to nostalgia and attempting to maintain artificially communities which time has passed by. That is too easy a response. I appreciate, as all members of the House do, the tremendous importance of urban growth in this country. I appreciate particularly the capacity of our larger cities to provide innovation and excitement in our national fabric. We value such cities. We welcome them. We want them to be as good and as strong as possible. Obviously, there are places in Canada that were thriving once and are empty now. Of course, the place to remember our legitimate rural past is Upper Canada Village, or Heritage Park, or the local museum, or in personal memories that one finds across the country. But, Sir, to say that some small communities will die is not at all the same as saying that all small communities must die. There is too much evidence that the latter assumption guides this government and its advisers, the assumption that the small community, in all its forms, is doomed and that our future lies exclusively in bigger and bigger cities.

I ask you, Sir, to consider what has been happening in Canada. We have a national policy whose purpose is, according to the government, to rationalize small farms; that is a fancy word which means putting them out of business. We have a national policy which acquiesces in rail-line abandonment and thus cuts the cord which might give smaller places the same chance to live that larger places have. It is interesting to note, parenthetically, that when a major change is planned in the transportation patterns serving larger centres, there is immediately something called an impact study. But when a railway proposes to tear up service to a town and do damage far greater in proportion than an airport at Pickering would, we accept the system of Canadian Transport Commission hearings, where corporate experts consistently prevail over the innocent or unsophisticated arguments of small town mayors or reeves.

We have a national industrial policy which continues to concentrate secondary industrial development in a handful of crowded places, even though technology and economics would allow much greater decentralization. We had a national budget brought down last month which will have the effect of drying up even more the moneys available to provinces, which means that when the provinces split their smaller pies the towns and villages which have none of the expertise which cities can hire will suffer disproportionately. Even the National Youth Orchestra, Mr. Speaker, draws disproportionately from larger centres and leaves too many of the children of the towns and villages with their talents untested.

Any one of us privileged to serve an area of towns and smaller places can cite a hundred other instances of unintended discrimination, a hundred other instances of the assumption that the small community is doomed. None of us alleges a conspiracy. No one is out to get the town or village. They are simply being overlooked, and when they raise their voice in protest or proposal, they are too easily dismissed by commentators and public servants to whom the towns went out with Stephen Leacock and whose only picture of the country now is of some cracker-barrel caricature mopping up after Charlotte Gobeil.

Two things are happening. First, we have artificially defined the future, and done so by accident without any real inquiry or research. We do not know that we want massive cities; we simply assume we will have them and shape our policy to achieve our prophecy. The second thing that is happening is simply that national policy is being devised to meet other needs which have more urgent advocates. Too often smaller places suffer as a side effect. Some people assume that the only way to maintain viable smaller communities is by some artificial act, some interference with the natural processes of growth, whatever they are. In fact, the threat to towns and small communities is precisely that the acts of interference or artifice which governments create or condone have been biased against the smaller community. For example, the interference implicit in the new communities provisions of this bill will mean that existing small communities will now face new federally funded competitors for industry and population. The towns do not rely on artifice; they are its victims. The interfering has already been done against the interests of the smaller places and what is needed now is not a special concession but an even break.

I want to return to the question of forecasting, to the prophecies of extravagant urban growth and the actions and assumptions which can make those prophecies self-fulfilling. When Professor Lithwick submitted his report on urban Canada in December 1970, he included a projection that some 73 per cent of Canada's population will live in 12 major cities by the year 2001. There were similar projections painting a similar future and implying the withering away of smaller places. Professor Lithwick is no longer with the government. It is my impression that one of the reasons is that, while he submitted those projections as a warning of what could happen, the government took them as a goal for what should happen. Public servants and private planners took note of the statistics, chewed them over coffee, agreed that indeed cities did seem to be growing and so a sort of unconscious consensus was formed; and every bureaucrat, every businessman and every student planning a career shapes his or her plans in the context of that vision of the future. The question we should be asking as the parliament of all of Canada, as the custodian of the nation's history and quality of life, is whether that is the vision we want to achieve, whether we want a Canada with only 12 major centres or whether we want a country with more balance and variety.

The tragedy of this bill, Sir, and of this government is that those questions are not even being asked. Perhaps there is come cubbyhole in CMHC or in the minister's own private zoo where people are paid to wonder about the future. But it does not show in the bill, it does not show in policy on transportation, as my colleague the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said yesterday, and it does not show in policy on finance or on industrial development. All that shows, instead, is a more or less mindless acceptance of an untested trend.

I am not going to go on at length to celebrate the virtues of small communities. As the minister said in his little eulogy, they are abiding virtues. In fact, we have in the literature and lore of Canada a rural tradition of uncommon strength and influence. Even now, our poets, writers and singers invoke the language of the land when they want to speak to Canadians. But apart from that tradition, apart from our unusual history of settlement and growth in a network of smaller places, apart even from the desire of so many Canadians to go back to smaller places for a weekend or a vacation or, if they can afford it, for a "home in the country", this parliament should consider that the very virtues we seek to achieve by legislation have grown by habit in most of the towns and villages of our countryside.

We try to contrive in cities a sense of neighbourhood; yet that exists in towns. We try to inspire a respect for environment; yet, no one raised, for example, in a prairie town could escape a sense of the wonder and the frailty of nature. We are worried about rootlessness and anomie, yet there are abundant communities in Canada that are still places where people feel at home, where democracy is genuinely participatory, where neighbours are known. Of course, these places have limitations of their own and should be assessed as critically as cities are. The point is that Canada in the 1970's has the chance to draw the best from both the town tradition and the urban fact. Perhaps no other country in the world shares that opportunity. Others have squandered their rural resources, or are necessarily preoccupied with establishing the elements of an urban society. We still have time to strike a balance and, perhaps in so doing we can help define the elusive Canadian identity and develop communities which meet modern human needs. But it will not happen by accident. It will not happen as a result of bills like this, which simply ignore the rich resource we have in the towns and small communities of Canada. And it will not happen unless this government or its replacement, turns around the present attitude toward smaller communities.

The question of small communities is only part of the problem or, as the minister would say, only part of the picture we face in this debate when we deal with this problem. Before we begin to be satisfied that we have a national urban policy or, as I would prefer to call it, a national community policy, we must recognize the danger of a piecemeal approach. Not only does this measure fail to do things we need to have done, but can, as in the case of towns, cause positive harm. We require an integrated policy which recognizes that the goals of different sectors of our society must be set together and sought together, and which recognizes that what we do in transportation and industrial development affects our housing policy. We must remember that what we do to build up cities can cause smaller communities to die.

My own preoccupation today is with towns, and similar smaller communities. That is for two reasons. First, they possess a unique set of values which, if encouraged, can enrich the nation. Second, their plight today, the danger they face, is due to the neglect of national policies, more than to any other factor. Unlike other groups they have few people to present their case.

This bill fails even to recognize the importance of towns. The minister, or his apologists, might say that the provisions concerning consultation allow provinces to establish priorities for towns, if they want them. That is an evasion, a cop-out. The principle is well established in areas where jurisdiction is shared or unclear, that the federal government indicates clearly certain kinds of programs it wants to have proceed. That, indeed, has been done in this bill. One might argue about the adequacy of the reference or the provisions, but there is specific provision for co-operative housing, specific provision for public housing, specific provision for native housing and specific provision for new communities. If the federal government wants to recognize or establish a priority, it can. But it has clearly ignored the towns and small communities of Canada.

If we are to encourage smaller communities—as I believe a balanced nation must—we will need some major changes. We will need changes first in the attitudes of the bureaucrats whose influence on housing and related policy today far exceeds that of anyone in this Chamber. Whether by conscious act or inadvertence, they have contributed directly already to the decline of smaller communities, and either their attitudes must change or they must be changed. Second, we must re-examine the basis and validity of the projections which we are following now. Once we have some clear view of the future options open to us, we must decide whether we will simply become apostles of the trend and go wherever present trends might lead us, or whether instead we will decide what kind of country we want, what balance we want between large cities and small places, and then shape events instead of letting them command us.

If we do decide that we want to retain the unique values that viable smaller communities can offer modern Canada, we will need, in effect, a co-ordinated national policy on towns and small communities. It is not enough simply to change policies of CMHC, or to amend in some insignificant way the new communities provisions. There will need to be a re-orientation of policy in several fields. The key perhaps will be industrial policy and we will have to consciously decentralize, to smaller places, those light and mobile modern industries which can operate as well in a town of 5,000 as they can on the fringes of a megalopolis. There is already evidence, in the United States and elsewhere, that much modern industry which felt itself confined to city sites can, when necessary, relocate successfully in smaller places.

In my own constituency, a cable plant was set up in a mountain pass community instead of in a city, and the people who work there vastly prefer that environment where they are minutes from skiing and fishing and the out-of-doors. The plants can come and the people can come if national and provincial policy direct them toward the towns instead of in the conventional opposite direction. The DREE policy must reflect a confidence in smaller communities. Government departments should establish special programs to ensure that the assistance they offer gets through to communities too small to hire squads of experts whose specialty is getting government grants.

We need to review our processes of public hearings to end the farce that presently characterizes hearings of the Canadian Transport Commission, to name one, when it pits professional corporate experts against the local laiety and calls the process, democratic. I, personally, would like to see some provision that recognizes how few of our influential public servants have any contemporary connection now with the smaller places their decisions affect. Perhaps a special system of sabbaticals could be arranged which would require them to spend two weeks each year in a different small community where they would be available to the people whose lives they affect.

Without becoming lost in specifics, the point is that any effective policy to make the most of our small communities must involve changes on several fronts. It cannot be piecemeal. It must itself be part of a general community program which aims to achieve the best of our city and town potential. The present bill is an era away from that concept. It is a piece of patchwork, brought forward by a government without goals of its own. It provides no direction for Canada. It is just another vessel to drift in, a little more serviceable than what we had, but almost useless in light of what we need. Mr. Speaker, the sad fact is that the government considers this to be reform. There could be no better proof of its incompetence to govern contemporary Canada.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of this House welcome the amendments in respect of the National Housing Act which are before us in this debate. I would certainly like to congratulate the minister for his part in this legislation and also for the very fine address he gave in opening the debate, as well as for the principles he enunciated which I am sure all members of this House will support. We can welcome these measures as an attempt to achieve what must be a fundamental social objective of this parliament and of this government; that is, to put a home of their own within the reach of every family willing to make the effort to buy one. We ought to see this as a basic right of every family in this country. When we think of rights we usually think in terms of political and civil rights, but as well, we must think of those human and social rights that are equally fundamental to a truly human existence.

We should recall the opening words of the Canadian Bill of Rights, one of the most important pieces of legislation passed by the Canadian parliament, and a great testimony to the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was Prime Minister of this country. The preamble to the Canadian Bill of Rights reads that:

> The Parliament of Canada affirming that the Canadian Nation is founded upon principles that acknowledge the supremacy of God, the dignity and worth of the human person and the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions.

• (1700)

I submit that the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions must include the right to obtain a house in which that family can find its own identity and fulfil its own aspirations. The preamble to the Bill of Rights also states that the parliament of Canada acknowledges the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and the enjoyment of property. We certainly must recognize the fact that there are all too few families and individuals in Canada being given the opportunity to enjoy that last right, the right to the possession of property. For most Canadian families, the right to which this great, classical, historical Bill of Rights bears testimony is being denied them. This right is being put, by economic and social forces, beyond their grasp, and we must face the fact that part of the duty laid upon this parliament and upon this government is taking those measures that will bring that right back within their grasp.

For most Canadian families, the kind of right to which the Bill of Rights bears testimony includes having a house of their own. This is not because living in high rise apartments is, in itself, bad in any way. Such accommodation satisfies many Canadian people who find that it meets all their needs and fulfils all their desires. But it does not satisfy the needs and the desires of the majority of families. They want a house of their own. They want some grass around it. They want a garden in which they can grow things. They want a yard where their children can play in freedom and safety. They want a neighbourhood where they can sink down some personal roots and feel that they belong somewhere instead of being just bits of cosmic dust blowing here and there. They want to recognize people by their names and believe themselves members of the community that has identifiable persons within it, instead of being part of that faceless mass that so often populates the great urban centres of the land. Therefore, these families look upon a house as something more than shelter. It is not just so much real estate; it is something that is intrinsic to fulfilling their full life as a family.

We can, therefore, appreciate the great frustration that so many families suffer, the great despair that they have to endure as they measure the gap between their objective and their possibilities, between an objective which they have every right as Canadians to hold and which so very seldom can the average Canadian family fulfill, for the hard economic facts of Canadian life today tell us that the average family cannot satisfy this desire of its heart. Any member of the House who has done as I have, and I am sure the majority of Members of Parliament have, namely, canvassed door to door through many of our high rise apartments where large numbers of families with children are living, knows that so many of these people feel as if they were prisoners serving a life sentence. They are in and they are locked in for life by the hard realities of economic life as it exists in Canada today. They have no chance to obtain the freedom or the kind of life which they as families would like to enjoy. They cannot liberate themselves from the confinement in which they are being constricted by the kind of economy that this government has tolerated, indeed has so often encouraged.

I recognize that part of the problem lies in the fact that so very few apartment buildings have been built with families in mind. Indeed, were more designed to serve the needs of families, very frequently apartment buildings would be more than adequate, but in fact they simply have not been designed for children or for neighbourhood living. So, we must address ourselves quite realistically to the legitimate hopes of those parents and children who are seeking the traditional right which Canadian families have enjoyed through the years and which all too small a proportion of families are now able to obtain. We must as parliament ask ourselves: can we be taken seriously if we believe, and we ask the people of this country to believe, that this country no longer has the resources to make possible the fulfilment of this fundamental human right?

I cannot take that seriously and I do not think that the ordinary people of Canada take it seriously when they estimate the resources that are available to Canada, when they look at the extraordinary expenditures of this government, and when they look at some of the lavish spending on projects that have very limited social value. They cannot believe that there are no resources available which may open to the working people of this country a new life. We have to recognize much more seriously that the policies of the present government simply do not open the door of opportunity to the average family seeking this kind of fulfilment today.

We realize the truth of that statement if, for example, we examine the cost of housing in just one urban area in Canada, namely, metro Toronto. In 1971, the average cost of a house was $30,426. In 1972, it had risen to $32,513. By January, 1973, just a few months ago, it had risen to $33,445, and last month, February 1973, it had risen still further to $34,782. The increase in a period of two years has thus been $4,356 or approximately 14 per cent. That is the average cost of housing. It includes the sale of older and sometimes lower priced housing.

The average cost of new housing is higher still, so that a family seeking a house of its own is frequently priced out of the market unless the father or the father and mother between them, have an income adequate to meet the need, and very few families can provide that kind of income. For most of our families, the rise in income that they have enjoyed over the last few years simply has not kept pace with the rise in the cost of housing. The average family is finding that a house of its own is no longer the right that it has been in the past and that it should be now, but rather it is a dream they can never realize.

We see this more clearly still if we extend into the future the kind of price rise that I have described as taking place over these last two years. If the growth in the cost of housing continues at the rate of the past few years, it will mean that the average house in metro Toronto in 1975 could cost $39,000; in 1977, it could cost $44,500; in 1979, it could cost $51,000, and in 1981, it could cost $58,000. Thus, we would have a growth from 1971 to 1981 from $30,500 to $58,000, a growth of over 90 per cent. We can see, therefore, that unless something is done to bring an end to this spiralling, soaring cost of housing in Canada, we are simply going to put the fulfilment of the fundamental family and human right beyond all hope; instead of offering hope, we are sentencing the ordinary people of this country to despair. This is a disaster, not only for the persons involved, not simply for the families who so often say to their members and to others: we would like to have a house, a home of our own. I think equally we must see as parliament that this is a disaster for the country as a whole. It is, for example, a disaster for the economy of Canada.

A massive expansion of housebuilding could mean more in terms of stimulating the economy and creating jobs than almost anything else that the government could undertake. It certainly would contribute much more to the enrichment of the Canadian economy than the handouts and the schemes with which this government has become identified. This "alphabet soup" approach of the government will not make the difference to employment and economic opportunity that could be obtained if we had a sizeable housing program equal to the needs of our people I suggest there is probably more spin-off from housebuilding in terms of stimulating related industries than from any other sector of the economy. A dollar spent on housing might have more effect in creating job opportunities and stimulating related businesses than a dollar spent on almost any other sector of the economy. So, to continue the kind of limited effort that this legislation, good as it is, represents is simply to spell the continuation of the economic disaster with which this government has been identified.

More importantly, this would mean a disaster socially. There can be no question that home ownership enriches a family's sense of community involvement and sense of personal stability. If in our big cities we want to avoid the tragedies that have overtaken the great cities of the United States, we must preserve our residential neighbourhoods and expand single family home ownership. The best way to preserve our neighbourhoods and with them responsible citizenry is surely by enabling families to have homes of their own. Consequently, we welcome what is contained in this legislation. We can see the merit of the various proposals that are embraced within these amendments, but they are not going to carry us very far along the road that we should be following. Certainly, they are not going to carry us sufficiently close to the objective that should be before parliament.

We must, therefore, deplore the way that these amendments represent such a puny effort, in contrast to what is a great need. Indeed, they represent such a small effort it is like trying to empty the ocean with a bucket. What Canada needs is a giant housing program. Instead, in many ways the government has offered the people a tiny mouse of a program. As is so often the case, this legislation is another example of the way in which the government gives us the impression that it values very highly what must be an enormous supply of scotch tape. It seems to me that the government is using a good supply of scotch tape to patch up this program and that project, to meet this need and to solve that problem, always in an ad hoc way instead of recognizing and measuring accurately needs and governing their objectives accordingly.

The result of all this, the result of too little, too late, is that the average family in this country is being given not hope but despair, despair that might eventually become bitterness. If this is all that the government can do, if this is all that parliament can do, then it is like saying to the average family in Canada "You are locked in and you will have to stay there". At the present time, only a miniscule number of Canadian families can afford to realize what they want so much—a home of their own. We therefore challenge the government's right to let this situation continue. When we speak of rights, we ask what right has the government to continue this kind of policy? We are prepared to recognize that what the government is doing may not be enough, but we have to ask the government whether it can seriously believe that this is good enough. The government has had enough time in office to introduce a program that would bring much more hope to the ordinary people of this country, and if it cannot do better than that, let the government make room for those who can.

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

I should like to suggest some proposals that I believe could make a contribution to an adequate housing program for Canada. This program must begin by recognizing that the housing problem will not be solved until we can do something adequate about the cost of serviced land, the cost of materials, and as well—ironically—the cost of money itself. As is so often pointed out by people in this country, there is no shortage of land in Canada. When the point is made that there is a shortage of land for housing, it seems almost an absurdity to people who see stretched before them great unpopulated regions in Canada. But, of course, the shortage to which reference is made is the shortage of serviced land, the shortage of land that is suitable for housing communities.

If we are serious about doing something to alleviate this shortage of serviced land, we must do something about aiding and encouraging municipalities to develop any serviced land that is available for housing and to embrace new housing as a social opportunity rather than, as is so often the case with expanding municipalities, imposing an economic liability upon them. One of the things we must recognize is that a municipality that is expanding its supply of serviced land and inviting developers to build houses is creating for itself a major economic problem with which it is so often unable to cope. When houses are built there are added to the municipality concerned certain enormous social responsibilities with regard to school construction, park development, recreational facilities and the like. So, we must face the fact that although serviced land may be an asset to the family that wants a home of its own, quite frequently it is almost a liability to the municipality.

We must recognize that what may be to some a solution is to others a problem. Therefore, we will not deal adequately with the challenge of housing unless we deal adequately with the challenge faced by a municipality that wants to develop land for housing purposes and provide services. Therefore, I submit to the House that the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, must take steps to assist municipalities and encourage them to expand serviced land that is available and promote the growth of house building opportunities. While land banks in themselves have much to offer the people of Canada, land banks on their own are not enough. Land banks that are just assemblies of land which will not be adequately serviced for community life are really no answer to the needs of people who want housing here and now.

For example, in the early 1950's the federal government, in co-operation with the province of Ontario, purchased the land for the Malvern development, which is located chiefly in the riding of Scarborough East. There was a land bank acquired 20 years ago, before the term was much in use. That land sat for almost 20 years with nothing happening to it, because the land had to wait for municipal services. I cite that example simply to provide some basis for the claim that we will not offer much hope to the Canadian people if we as a parliament say we are prepared to finance provinces and municipalities in the development of land banks that will become available for housing, but do not establish a time frame to construct houses within the reasonably near future. What we need is some solution now, and simply acquiring land is not enough unless we take the next step of making sure that the municipal services will be provided and that the municipality has an adequate supply of the services required by people. We need the roads, sewers and all the other facilities of urban life, but as well we need the parks, libraries, schools and all the institutions and facilities that contribute something to a truly human existence. All this adds enormously to the expense of municipalities involved.

In the borough of Scarborough in metro Toronto where I live, we are finding that the cost of municipal services has spiralled so that taxation on real estate is almost becoming equal to the cost of carrying the real estate itself. It has become a threat to home ownership. In my own case, ten years ago, taxation on my home represented less than 33 per cent of the amount of mortgage principal and interest, but today taxation is almost 75 per cent of that. In a few years, it can be expected to equal that and then go beyond it. This is not because of waste or extravagance by the municipal council or school board; it is simply due to the impact of inflation on these services.

As an example, the Scarborough Parks and Recreation Department budget has increased by 25 per cent over the past four years. This 15 year program for park acquisition called for a further expenditure of $38 million to which interest will have to be added. The same situation can be reported for schools, libraries, health services, fire, police and so on. This means that municipalities and their leaders are often not sure that they are able to afford an expansion of the housing within their borders, much as they may want to open up undeveloped land and make the areas available for families who want to live there. They are just not sure that they can carry the cost. If we go to neighbouring municipalities that do not have adequate planning, we often find that they are put in serious financial jeopardy because they have more families living within their borders than their assessment can support.

I, therefore, suggest that the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, take a serious look at the cost of the burden of housing that has to be borne by the municipalities and the residential taxpayers supporting the municipalities. I ask that the federal government consider establishing a fund that would make a grant to a municipality for such family dwelling structures within its boundaries as are in excess of the number erected the year before. The purpose would be to help defray the cost of community services that the municipality must undertake to provide for families moving into it.

I do not suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this fund would meet the need over the long run; I suggested it only as an immediate measure to help meet that need within the short run. The real need of our municipalities in terms of the problem I have outlined, and in terms of other problems that municipalities must solve, is for a major review and reform of the way public revenue is distributed amongst the three levels of government.

We still think of Canada as just a country of ten provinces, two territories and the federal government holding everything together. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is an entirely outmoded 19th century concept. It may have been up to date when the British North America Act was written but it is not any longer. Canada is not simply a confederation of ten provinces and two territories; it is to a large extent a league of city states. As far as the largest number of Canadians are concerned, it is becoming that kind of country and will become more so as we approach the end of the century. Therefore, if we today tackle long term planning we must have not only a romantic and understandable desire to preserve our smaller communities and enjoy them to the full, but we must recognize that the largest number of Canadians will live in these massive urban regions which have enormous municipal and social costs laid upon their shoulders.

These municipalities will need a much more sensible share of the public revenue than is available to governments. At the present time, 30 per cent of the expenditures of all three levels of government are by municipal governments. These governments, in turn, can raise only half that amount by their own taxation. We must, therefore, take seriously the need of our municipalities, especially in our massive urban regions, for a greater and more just share of the public revenue that is so often monopolized by the federal government. I would, therefore, ask that consideration be given to this kind of fund which I think would offer immediate and short-term assistance to municipalities and would encourage them to take their full part in the development of housing. In addition such a policy would aid the long term fiscal needs of our municipal governments.

We must recognize that if we are to do something adequate to bring the cost of housing in Canada within the reach of the average family, we must do something about reducing the cost of materials. We could do that by eliminating the sales tax on building materials. This would reduce the cost of the average home, it is estimated, by approximately $1,000. In my judgment, the government has no right to put this kind of tax on materials used in a family home. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) could take the sales tax off candy and pop; we have to ask why he cannot take if it off the family home. Is that a luxury? Is it the privilege of an elite alone? Surely, it must be the right of every Canadian family that will make the effort to obtain one. During the recent election we called for the elimination of the tax, but I did not hear other parties call for it. If they approve of this, I invite them to take their stand with us in trying to bring down the cost of materials used in the family home. If they are really interested in helping the ordinary people, let them join with us in this effort we have been making for years.

Mr. Bell: They can join with us on Monday.

Mr. Stackhouse: We can hardly wait. As well, Mr. Speaker, we cannot expect much progress in home development while interest rates remain so high. We cannot expect progress in family home construction until interest rates are brought within the reach of the average family. Not only must the cost of the house be within the reach of the family, but the cost of the money must be within its reach. The money that must be borrowed and repaid over a long period of time is one of the most important elements in the cost of the family home. We must, therefore, initiate fiscal policies that will bring homes within the grasp of families, not only in terms of the actual selling price, but also in terms of the monthly payments for which the family is responsible. It is often this payment that is the primary concern of the family. The first thing that many people want to know is not how much the house costs, but how much will the family have to pay each month. We must look to fiscal policies so that by a reduction in interest rates, and I think by an extension of the life of the mortgage allowable to families, monthly payments can be reduced.

The difference to monthly payments that an extension of the amortization period can make is shown in this example based on a $25,000 mortgage at an interest rate of 9¼ per cent. For principal and interest, the monthly payment for a 25 year mortgage would be $215.26. For a 35-year mortgage, it would be $201.96. If we extended that to 40 years, of course, the payment would be down proportionately. If we extended it in some instances to 50 years, it would come down still further.

To the objection that a longer amortization means the people pay a larger total, we must reply that most families do not stay in a particular dwelling for the full term of the mortgage. Their aim is not to have a home free and clear as much as it is to move into a home with payments they can carry. Their aim is really to have a home in which they can live. There should be more consideration given to making available mortgages that the average family can carry. There should be more consideration given to the fundamental realities of family life.

In conclusion, I reiterate the commitment of the Progressive Conservative party to the principle of a home of their own within the reach of every Canadian family willing to make the effort to obtain one. We often hear the famous lines quoted that it takes a heap of living to make a house a home, but we have to recognize that the family cannot do it without a house in which to start. We call upon the government to take seriously the implications of the Canadian Bill of Rights, the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions and the declaration that one of the fundamental rights of the Canadian people is the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and the enjoyment of property. Let parliament take action that will restore that right to all families of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-133 gives hon. members the opportunity to deal with a question which is always extremely important not only to them but also to all Canadians in general.

When we are speaking about the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and its importance it seems that all hon. members and especially those from urban ridings have complaints and remarks to make in the House. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has become a gigantic organization and we can judge its value when we analyze the problems which it has not yet settled.

When visiting foreign countries we can see what kind of housing policy they have. If they have only one-family units we can see that the government policy or the policy of the organization in control of housing is family-oriented.

However, when we find that in certain countries housing is more and more oriented towards the construction of high-rise apartment buildings 25, 30 or 40 stories high, we can say that the housing agency of this country is oriented towards the building of non-family units.

This is why I have to conclude, after over 10 years in the House, that as time progresses the further the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation gets away from a family housing policy in favour of a community policy under which families will be piled up one above the other whereas, in my opinion, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been created first to promote construction of single dwelling houses, not 40- or 50-storey buildings, as is being done in all Canadian capital cities.

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should also set for itself the primary goal of ensuring good quality housing. When considering what has happened in that field over the last five years for instance, we unfortunately have to recognize that far from improving the quality of housing is deteriorating from day to day.

In my opinion, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was established with a view to protecting the consumer. Now, with so many complaints being heard from everywhere, we have to admit that the consumer is enjoying less and less protection. This is the reason why I believe that before long the government will have to review entirely the objectives of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, whose purpose should be to promote the development of housing in Canada.

But today, instead, we can readily see that this organization, far from promoting housing in Canada, has become a housing control tool. The president of DOMTAR, Mr. Jack Cochran, in his Construction Manual, an excerpt of which was published in the Canada Month magazine, said that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has become——(the most controlled and regulated business in the country).

[English]

"With relaxation of control as a very real prospect, there is no need for pie-in-the-sky dreaming of futuristic plastic cocoons which will emerge from the scientists' laboratories to somehow solve the 'housing crisis'. Instead, and industry of traditional entrepreneurs will be free to seek out a way to beat out the competition in the market place.

"That to me is a much more efficient way to get more and better housing than for a paternalistic government to step in an take over the responsibility.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to recapitulate the way of thinking of the Domtar chairman, he does not believe in the efficiency of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is using paternalistic methods in the housing field. He would rather have assistance granted to builders to implement a healthy housing policy. Nowadays, the Canadian house building industry is deteriorating instead of improving and owning a house has become an impossible dream for nearly 90 per cent of the Canadian people.

People no longer believe in it because of the policy of this government and previous governments which have not been cautious enough to eliminate the economic causes which have placed us in a situation where the average individual believes that owning a family home has become irrealistic, a dream they no longer think about.

I have here the statement made by the hon. Secretary of State for Urbain Affairs (Mr. Basford) in Ottawa on January 22 or 23 at the federal-provincial conference on housing:

Right to housing—

He was making pious wishes—

—I stated recently in Parliament that every Canadian has a fundamental right to proper housing at a reasonable cost. I said and I repeat here that housing is not merely an economic commodity to be bought and sold according to the whim of the market, but a social right.

The minister himself said that last January. I continue:

I believe that every Canadian can reasonably expect it and that Canadians rely on their national government to be treated with justice and to have an equal chance to enjoy part of the wealth of the nation wherever they live.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse) who spoke before me said that the average house in Canada now costs $31,000 and that according to the forecasts of Canadian builders the same house would be worth over $59,000 in 1981. In other words, at the pace things are going, property in Canada will have nearly doubled over eight years and that is without taking into consideration the rates of interest which are part of the cost of a house but are not included in the original price.

Is this what the minister means by good housing at a reasonable price?

It is all very well to voice pious wishes in this House, but no part of Bill C-133 deals with interest rates and, in my view, this is where the minister is misled and where he will never be able to achieve what he referred to in his speech in January, when he talked of a reasonable price for housing.

Mr. Speaker, interest rates have begun to change; I cannot give the history of interest rates for the past 50 years, but on January 21, 1957, the late hon. Robert Winters said that interest rates for housing had risen from 5½ to 6 per cent, according to the official announcement which he made in the House of Commons, as recorded on page 451 of Hansard.

So, interest rates were raised from 5½ to 6 per cent. Today, Mr. Speaker, these rates are no longer at 6 per cent. This government has allowed interest rates to rise to incredible heights. Here is the gist of Télémédia's editorial of January 8, 1969:

It is not by raising the interest rate on loans from 8½ to 9 per cent, as the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation did on January 1, that the government will encourage Canadians to build. Nor is it by keeping the 12 per cent tax on building materials that the government will encourage contractors to undertake the construction of building complexes.

And on January 4, 1969, the President of the Association des constructeurs d'habitations du district de Montréal, Mr. Albert Gagnon, listed the government's mistakes in the field of housing. As President of the Montreal housebuiders' association, he must know what he is talking about.

Not one of the recommendations he made in January 1969, more than four years ago, is to be found in the bill before us.

• (1740)

For instance, Mr. Gagnon stated, concerning mistakes made by the government, and I quote:

increase in the current rates of all loans agencies. Conventional loans could readily reach 11 per cent and over;

slow-down in the production of new homes, leading to a shortage; spiraling of unemployment, a situation in contradiction with a policy geared to a "just society" rise in rents, which will bring about an increase in the cost of living; increasingly pressing union claims for salary increases, which will contribute to aggravating inflationary trends; citizens will be denied the legitime right to live in a decent home, or to own their own homes.

Mr. Albert Gagnon, a former president of the Home Builders Association, formulated recommendations, which were ignored.

The editorial of Montréal-Matin for May 3, 1969 repeats about the same thing about interest rates.

I could quote several other articles, some of which are signed by economists who dealt with interest rates on mortgages.

I have here a table showing that a loan on a $30,000 house, at 9 per cent interest, over a period of 25 years, requires monthly payments of $248.40. I doubt that most Canadians can afford to pay $248.40 a month.

It was all very well for the minister to express pious wishes in January at the federal-provincial conference on housing, but when a man has to borrow $25,000 or $30,000 to build a house or get it built, and to pay $248.40 a month to back the principal and interest, it must be recognized that 90 per cent of Canadian taxpayers cannot afford to do so.

If a $30,000 loan is financed at a rate of 9 per cent, the owner will have to pay $74,524 in capital and interest, which means that he will have paid $44,524 in addition to $30,000. In view of the current interest rate and the booklet on insured loans published by the minister and in which no figure is provided, it can be assumed that the same principle would apply to the construction of an appartment building.

I am afraid that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would have something better to do than let financiers take advantage of small tenants or owners. Indeed, if a tenant lives in a house whose owner must pay a 10 per cent rate of interest, automatically the tenant will discharge most of the payment.

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has a social role to play and such a role would be much more effective than the part it now plays.

That is why the minister has not concerned himself with the interest rate in his bill. That is why housing in Canada is still only a dream for all citizens because the federal government a few years ago eliminated the ceiling on interest rates, which has been the direct cause of the increase of housing costs to which has contributed the sales tax on building materials.

There is another point the minister does not mention in his bill nor in any of his speeches in the House or elsewhere, that is the opportunity to recommend to the provinces in need of housing and faced with that problem to deduct from taxable income school taxes, municipal taxes and interest paid on mortgages. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) has never been urged to do so either.

Not only is the Canadian being exploited when he spends a large part of his income to pay usurious interests, but the interest paid to housing financiers is not deductible for tax purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest these are not only wishes but recommendations that have already been made by members of the Social Credit party, contractors' associations and other agencies involved in housing. Unhappily, the bill which is now before us does not even mention any of these recommendations. It refers to only loans granted to cooperative associations.

The whole bill is not to be rejected outright, but it proposes only temporary solutions which will not settle our housing problem. I would not like to offend the minister but, unhappily Bill C-133 is not the answer to the housing problem because it does not strike at the root of the problem and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is only trying to stop the advancement of family housing instead of boosting it.

It seems to me that the minister should take another look at the first purpose of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to find to what extent the corporation is getting away from it. I suggest that the minister might render a great service to the people by reviewing the objectives of this agency and putting it back into its original context.

Mr. Speaker, at least Bill C-133—and this is the main thrust of my remarks—could provide for rolling back interest rates to the 1957-58 level. It would be possible for the federal government to do so, as it has the use of the Bank of Canada and CMHC. There is no need to create new agencies, as we have the necessary machinery in the House of Commons. We only have to use it, to put the Bank of Canada at the service of CMHC so that we can get loans at lower interest rates for the benefit of Canadian families.

Indeed, imposing 10 or 11 per cent interest rates on 30-year loans is not doing a service to the Canadian people, and neither is the 12 per cent sales tax on building materials. The government talks about unemployment and at the same time it says that we must put the economy back on the track. However, everything it does, through interest rates and taxes, tends to stifle the economic system, paralyze the housing industry, squeeze the taxpayer and dispossess the tenant and the owner.

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is little proof, judging from recent statements by the minister responsible for housing, or from housing legislation recently introduced in the Commons, that the government understands the current housing situation in Canada. Because the government does not understand the current situation, no concrete steps have been taken to alleviate the housing mess in this country.

For example, the Throne Speech promised amendments to the National Housing Act which would enable a person earning $100 a week to buy a house for $90 a month, and that grants would be made to homeowners to fix up buildings. This plan to subsidize monthly payments for low-income home buyers looks as though it will enable many people, who could not otherwise purchase a home, to do so. But is this really so? After all, when the federal government subsidizes monthly principal, interest and mortgage payments to bring them down to $90 a month for low-income families, that will not enable a person to purchase a $40,000 house, and that is the average price of a new house in metropolitan Toronto today. What type of housing, then, are these persons eligible for? Land is so expensive in Toronto that in 1970 it made up 35 per cent of the cost of a new NHA bungalow.

I would like to suggest that the federal government should proceed with further projects such as were undertaken in Winnipeg. The Housebuilders' Association of Winnipeg and the University of Winnipeg's Institute of Urban Studies have together begun a program to build three houses in areas where only one stood previously. These houses are located in the lower income core of the city. In this area, 20 per cent of the land is vacant, and 20 per cent of the houses are too run down to renovate. The new buildings to which I refer are single family detached houses, with their own entrances and their own small yards, providing the basic shelter that most people desire. The first of these houses was recently offered for sale at $13,000, with a down payment of $600, and monthly payments on a 40-year mortgage of around $84, not including taxes. A similar project is being planned for parts of Toronto by the Ontario Housing Corporation. It appears obvious to me that the federal government should consider the feasibility of encouraging projects such as these in all the large urban centres in Canada.

In dealing with the housing crisis in Canada, the government would be wise to listen more attentively to the demands of the municipal and provincial governments. The minister would also do well to listen to the advice being offered by the people who are building the houses. Many developers feel that single family housing could be provided in many urban areas at half the present price, if only they were given the co-operation of the various governments in place of the many current restrictions they encounter. The project in Winnipeg to which I have just alluded is not subject to a great many other restrictions that are in effect in most Canadian cities. Because of this, it is possible to sell a house for $13,000.

Developers maintain that if the provincial governments financed water and sewer services for privately held land that is ready for development, this would flood the market with serviced land and would drive down the prices on serviced lots. Developers also say that if governments relaxed their long list of restrictions on new subdivisions, such as minimum lot sizes, stipulations as to the type of building materials, and the requirement of elaborate local servicing, prices would go still lower. The federal tax on building materials is also a factor in the high cost of housing. The 11 per cent tax is particularly hard on the small contractors and building companies for it prevents them from competing with the larger developers. In Toronto, contractors say that an over-supply of serviced lots would be created by the implementation of the above-mentioned measures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but it being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

AUDITOR GENERAL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF JAMES JOHNSON MACDONELL

Right Hon. P.E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to announce to the House the appointment by the Governor in Council of Mr. James Johnson Macdonell as Auditor General of Canada, effective July 1, 1973.

Mr. G. R. Long, the present assistant Auditor General, has been appointed as acting Auditor General effective March 25.

[Translation]

Mr. Macdonell will be replacing Mr. Maxwell Henderson who, after 13 years of loyal service reaches on March 24 the compulsory retirement age laid down by the Financial Administration Act.

[English]

Wishing to secure the services of an outstanding member of the accounting profession, the government asked senior partners of accounting firms across the country to suggest the names of persons who would be suitable for appointment as Auditor General.

Mr. Macdonell was one of those who were thus highly recommended and I know that he will fulfil his duties with the required skill and competence.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will reply very briefly to the very interesting statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) simply by saying that I hope the newly appointed Auditor General will be as effective, independent and objective as the previous Auditor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: We trust that in the exercise of his duties he will continue to put the fear of the Lord into this government. When the government changes, in the unlikely event that we do anything that we should not we hope he will do the same to us.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the unusually swift action of the government in dealing with this matter. We are pleased to note the method that the government has used in securing the name of a person for recommendation to this important post. We wish Mr. Macdonell well in the performance of his duties as a servant of this parliament. I am also happy to echo the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). We hope that the new Auditor General will indeed put the fear of the Lord into whatever government sits to Your Honour's right.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good opportunity to thank Mr. Henderson for his services to this country. A number of us have had occasion to appreciate his many contributions of evidence to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

We are confident that his successor will give the same degree of satisfaction to hon. members, both in committee and in his annual reports. We also hope that the new Auditor General will not have cause to complain of a lack of staff to help him fulfil his duties. It is all very well to pick competent people for important jobs, but the checking of public accounts also requires the training of competent personnel in sufficient numbers to enable the Auditor General to do his job properly.

We therefore trust that the new Auditor General, whose competence we do not question, will have at his disposal adequate staff and funds to enable him to carry out his task efficiently.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to seek unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The motion arises from the vote taken two days ago in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on the question of the $1 reduction in the Polymer Corporation estimate, from the subsequent statements by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the effect that the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation cannot be rescinded, and from the fact that the government failed to table the annual report of Polymer.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), that:

> The question of the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation, its legality and its merits, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for investigation and that the committee report its findings and recommendations to the House within two weeks.

Sale of Polymer Corporation

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for Assiniboia is submitted to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. It requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether it ought not to be recorded that the Minister of Finance said no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

TABLING OF GREEN PAPER AND LETTER SENT TO PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table, in the two official languages, the green paper entitled "Proposals for Communications Policy for Canada—A Position Paper of the Government of Canada."

I should also like to table copies of the letter I sent to the provincial ministers in charge of communications, suggesting that a federal-provincial conference be held.

[English]

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill without notice to prevent the government from selling three other Crown corporations, Eldorado, Panarctic and Northern Transportation Company, as listed in the Canada Development Corporation Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that there is already some difficulty about motions under Standing Order 43 without having introduction of bills without notice. If the hon. member wants to introduce a bill, he will have to follow the usual procedures prescribed in the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I say I have noticed on a number of occasions that public bills have been introduced without notice when there is urgency. In view of the urgency in this case, I respectfully request Your Honour to put the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is completely wrong. There is no precedent for what he is suggesting. His notice is obviously blurred in some way because there is no precedent for the procedure he is suggesting at this time. Oral questions.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege that is probably a double-barrelled one. First, I wish to apologize to the Clerk of the House. Upon closer perusal of the list of reports and returns to be made to the House of Commons under Standing Order 82(1), I find after a diligent search that on page 32 the Polymer Corporation Limited annual report is listed. I believe that yesterday I averred that it was not. That only strengthens the question of privilege I now raise with respect to the tabling of that report which is required to be tabled within 15 days after receipt.

I again ask the government to have that report tabled because my information is that it has been received, and we are well beyond 15 days since the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) received it. In addition, Order in Council P.C. 1972-1715, dated July 27, 1972, contains the following as a condition of the sale of Polymer Corporation in sub-paragraph (d):

> The Government shall recommend to Parliament legislative action to delete Polymer Corporation Limited from Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act, thereby terminating the Corporation's status as a Crown Corporation;

That legislative action has not been recommended to the House. There has been no legislative action. The estimate has been defeated. The Crown Corporation is alive and doing well. The minister, by virtue of the law, should now table the accounts of the corporation as audited by the Auditor General.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon has risen on a question of privilege. If I were required to rule at this point I would be inclined to say there is not a prima facie case of privilege that should be debated. Perhaps there is a point of order that should be commented on by the minister. For this purpose the minister might wish to comment, which apparently he does as he sought the floor a moment ago.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supplies and Services): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that under the act, if we were to table Polymer's financial report, we would have to do so before April 15 because the act specifies that the company has up to three months after the end of its financial year to send its financial report to the minister in charge, and that the minister has 15 days to table it in the House.

This having been said, the act also states that the Auditor General's report is part of the annual report of the company. This means therefore that the report of the Auditor General cannot be tabled in the House before I have received Polymer's financial report.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we do not become involved in a debate on this point of order because the Chair had called oral questions a moment ago. The hon. member for Yukon apparently rises on the same point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, to point out very briefly to the minister that I do not know where he obtains his advice but if it is from the same minister who made the decision on the temporary wheat measures I would question the advice. The law clearly indicates that the report should be tabled within 15 days of receipt of it by the minister, not by the corporation. Those 15 days have gone by.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could pursue the debate tomorrow. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

CRITICISM BY UNITED STATES OF DREE PROGRAM AND PROPOSED FOREIGN TAKEOVER LEGISLATION— REPRESENTATIONS TO PROTECT CANADIAN INTERESTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the expressions of criticism that have emanated from the United States with regard to the DREE program, the possible loss of jobs and the effect on United States exports with regard to the proposed foreign takeover legislation, what measures has the right hon. gentleman's government taken to convince the United States government that these are in fact appropriate policies for Canada to pursue in Canada's interest and are not harmful to the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Minister of Trade, Industry and Commerce discuss representations that have been made, but I would refer the Leader of the Opposition to the minister for any details of such encounters.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the criticism that has been made by the United States, has the Prime Minister taken this matter up directly with President Nixon?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact that President Nixon today in an address entitled "First International Economic Report to Congress" seems to have attacked Canada in respect of both the DREE program and by inference at least the proposed legislation and is seeking tariff measures with a view to taking action against Canada and other countries on this basis, would the Prime Minister be good enough to get in touch with President Nixon and protect the interests of this country?

Mr. Trudeau: I certainly appreciate the suggestion. I would perhaps find it advisable first to take cognizance of the statement that the President is alleged to have made.

INCOME TAX

NEED FOR REDUCTION IN CORPORATE TAXES IN LIGHT OF PROFITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of a survey that has been made of 305 companies which shows that their corporation profits after taxes—I repeat after taxes—for 1972 exceeded their profits for 1971 by over 24 per cent. May I ask the minister if this does not obviate the necessity for any reduction in corporate taxes, and is the minister considering revising the tax bill which he proposes to present to the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not looked into the survey referred to by the hon. member. I assume it is the survey that was reported in the Globe and Mail. I should draw to his attention and that of the House that 1971 was a bad year—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and that the increase in 1972 over 1971 therefore is to be expected. I also want to say to him at the same time that year over year we had 250,000 more jobs in 1972 over 1971. In any event, I think that the recent announcement by the President of the United States underlines the necessity for the measures I announced to the House.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that in 1971 corporation profits after taxes showed the highest increase of any year since 1964—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas: —and in view of the fact the survey to which I referred shows that the food processing industries increased their profits by 31.3 per cent for the year 1972 and 37.7 per cent for the last quarter of 1972, which indicates that it is the food processing industry and not the farmers who are getting the benefit of rising food prices, may I ask the minister if he intends to take any steps to stop this unconscionable profiteering out of the food that Canadians have to purchase by way of an excess profits tax or any other measure?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am not going to accept the full tone of the preamble to the hon. member's question, but I would say that that matter is currently under study by a committee of the House.

Mr. Douglas: As a last supplementary question may I ask the minister if he intends to take any steps or if he will outline the reasons why he is not going to take steps to deal with this situation, or is the House to take it for granted that he is perfectly satisfied to see this profiteering by the food processing industry of this country continue?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am no more satisfied than is the hon. gentleman with the price of food in this country. As to the cause, that is an issue that is before a committee of the House. In terms of action, I refer the hon. member to the budget speech of February 19, 1973, which contained a number of measures that have as their ultimate purpose the relief of the cost of living in this country.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOOD PRICES—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Agriculture expressing the policy of the government yesterday in Moncton when he stated that food is a bargain at today's prices which could go up even more and that consumers are making an unnecessary fuss about food prices because they cannot buy on credit or they tend to confuse more expensive non-food items with real food items when they go to the supermarket?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member should realize that these are not statements of policy; they are matters of opinion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What are they, just dreams?

Mr. Atkey: In view of the fact that this whole question is under advisement by a special committee of the House and there appears to be a conflict in the cabinet between the views of the Minister of Finance and the views of the Minister of Agriculture, would the Prime Minister really tell the House what the government's policy is?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government's policy has been stated by the Minister of Finance a moment ago.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON FOR REDUCTION OF NEWS AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS COVERAGE EMANATING FROM OTTAWA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on March 14 I asked a question of the Secretary of State. I asked him whether or not a new policy had been introduced of reducing news and public affairs coverage out of Ottawa, and also why the program "Encounter" had been cut in half. He was kind enough to get in touch with me personally, but I think the House and the country should know the answer to that question.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity afforded by the right hon. gentleman's question to get on the record the answer I gave to him privately by mail. I will paraphrase some of it, if I may.

In reply to the first part of the question, the CBC informs me that it has no intention of reducing its news and public affairs coverage from Ottawa but, rather to the contrary, additional appointments of reporters to the CBC parliamentary news staff will be made within a matter of weeks.

Mr. Woolliams: That will be a help.

An hon. Member: Oh, God!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the answer to the first part of the question was well received. The second part of the question concerns "Encounter". The reduction in the number of "Encounter" programs to be broadcast during the coming year was made in order to accommodate a new reportorial series called "Newsfile" which is being produced by the CBC news department. While the new series will only occasionally originate from Ottawa, its focus will frequently be on the federal political scene. The "Newsfile" program will not interfere with the scheduled summer series of "Encounter" which will be broadcast in July, August and September.

The answer to the third part of the question is that the CBC Ottawa public affairs unit, responsible for the "Tenth Decade" series, continues as a cornerstone.

Finally, so far as the CBC attitude toward the relative importance of Toronto and Ottawa as sources of national news is concerned, it should be noted that the CBC maintains a staff of seven parliamentary reporters in Ottawa, to be expanded in the future as noted above, while Toronto has a complement of two.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise with reasonable certainty that those who participate in "Encounter" from the Press Gallery, including that unusual wit, Charles Lynch, will not be deprived to the Canadian people?

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF NEWS FROM ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND WEST ON NATIONAL BROADCASTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State tell us that the CBC, in considering realignment of its news services, will take into account that the nation is entitled to a national news broadcast concerning Canada and not merely a compendium of international tidbits and crisis situations? How about including some news from the Atlantic provinces and the west on the national network?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

BRITISH COLUMBIA PROPOSAL TO USE RAIL TRANSPORTATION FOR ALASKAN OIL—STUDIES BY FEDERAL DEPARTMENT—QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY STUDY

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It deals with the British Columbia proposal for the transportation of oil by rail from the Alaskan fields. Will the minister tell the House specifically what studies his department is now doing with regard to assessment of that proposal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have examined the publicity documents that Mr. Barrett made available to the United States authorities before he brought them to Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —and we have now dispatched a telegram, after discussions between the relevant departments federally, to the British Columbia government asking if there are any background studies of any kind on the basis of which that proposal was put forward. As of this afternoon, I am afraid I cannot report to the hon. gentleman whether there has been a response.

• (1430)

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the minister's answer would he now tell us what specific assessment his department has done with regard to the Queen's University rail study which has been in his hands for most of 1972? What assessment has his department made with regard to the movement of oil by rail on the basis of the study he has had for nearly a year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, instead of what would be a rather long answer I will attempt to cut it short. While the Queen's University study, which was in part financed by the government of Canada, does indicate some interesting possibilities, it is also clear from discussions with appropriate authorities, including Canadian National Railways, that a great deal more will have to be known about some aspects of the solution proposed by that study. My own department, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport are giving that early and careful attention since this is one possibility that should be focused on before any decision is made on a Mackenzie pipeline.

SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT INITIATIVE TO FORM CONSORTIUM TO BUILD MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from the answer just made by the minister as well as the answer he gave me on March 19 when I pointed out that a Congressional hearing in the United States is to decide whether to transport crude petroleum by supertanker down the west coast of Canada through international waters. The minister said on that occasion that it was in the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board to make the decision on any application. Will the minister bring together a consortium so that an application will be placed before the National Energy Board in light of the fact that the taxpayers have a considerable amount of money invested in Panarctic and the Canada Development Corporation? Does the minister not consider that his department should take the initiative so that the United States will know where we stand in Canada's national interests?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is confusing two points, the question of whether or not the National Energy Board should entertain an application as opposed to measures taken just over a year ago by myself and repeated on a number of occasions since then to the American administration with regard to the facts of the Mackenzie Valley route as a possible route for an oil pipeline. With regard to Panarctic, I point out that their oil assets are not in the Mackenzie Valley but in the high Arctic islands about 1,500 miles farther east of the Mackenzie Valley, so Panarctic does not seem to be an obvious component of such a consortium.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of supplementaries. The hon. member for Calgary North has a supplementary after which I will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse and return to the other supplementaries.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask in clear terms if the minister has made the government's position clear in reference to pipelines down the Mackenzie Valley to carry gas or crude petroleum? Has that position been made clear, or is the minister going to continue to hide under the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board and offer no firm policy in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think that a question asked in those terms is in order. The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Woolliams: May I rephrase—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the hon. member to rephrase the question but we have to try to make some headway.

[Translation]

I was about to recognize the hon. member for Rimouski but he will have to wait. The hon. member for Calgary North has a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I will leave the last part off.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Leave the first part off.

Mr. Woolliams: If my friends want to take more time, that is all right with me. Has the minister made the government's policy on pipelines and Canada's interests clear in light of the fact the United States will decide to use supertankers if we do not move in?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have made quite clear to the United States administration all the work that has been done by this government on the Mackenzie route and indeed on its possibilities as a route for shipping Alaskan oil. With regard to the ultimate decision in this regard, parliament has decreed that on a pipeline application of this kind the facts and proposals should first be put to the National Energy Board and it is only after a positive decision by the board, that the government must then take a decision. I propose to follow parliament's instructions in this regard.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC POLICE BE SUBSIDIZED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Finance.

Has he examined the submission of Quebec Justice Minister Jérôme Choquette, that the Quebec Police Force should be subsidized in the same way as it is done in other provinces for the RCMP and could he tell the House what will be his attitude on that matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I examined it. I must remind the House that according to the February 19 budget, Canadian provinces will receive through equalization payments an amount of $200 million, including approximately $80 or $85 million for the province of Quebec.

FLOODS

ARGENTEUIL-DEUX-MONTAGNES—INQUIRY RESPECTING REQUEST BY QUEBEC FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Environment.

In view of the responsibility of the Quebec Department of Natural Resources as regards flooding in that province, could the minister inform the House whether a request for assistance was received from that department to deal with the flooding in the Deux-Montagnes Lake and Mille-îles river region?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Envifonment): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. However, a request similar to that received from the government of Ontario would certainly be entertained.

VILLE DE LAVAL—SHARED-COST PROGRAM TO COMPENSATE VICTIMS—REQUEST BY QUEBEC FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laval on a supplementary question.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, My question is very important to the 4,000 families which were victims of flooding at Ville de Laval.

Could the minister inform the House whether there are provisions for financial help under the shared cost program between the federal government and the provinces to assist those suffering damages caused by flooding or any other disaster?

[English]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a formula available to any province in which flood damage occurs and where the province has first made settlements in respect of that damage.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lisgar. Order, please. Perhaps before recognizing the hon. member for Lisgar—

[Translation]

I will recognize the hon. member for Laval on a supplementary question and I will then recognize the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if such a request has been submitted by the Quebec government under the shared cost program?

[English]

Mr. Davis: It has not yet made an application for flooding, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

NATIONAL FEED GRAINS POLICY—DISCUSSIONS WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since he has stated at various times that before the end of the current crop year we will have a national feed grains policy for Canada, can he tell the House, first, if he is having negotiations with various farm organizations and, second, if legislation will be introduced so that members of parliament can debate this very important matter?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, to correct the hon. member slightly, what the Speech from the Throne and government policy have indicated is that we will have a proposal in relation to the feed grain situation in Canada to produce equity between different regions and producers. Various possible proposals are being discussed in different ways with different farm organizations. At this time I cannot say definitively whether the proposals that eventually emerge will require legislation.

Mr. Murta: May I ask the minister if in regard to a national feed grains policy a decision has been made to adopt in principle the concept of a feed grains price to be determined in western Canada, and is the government also giving consideration to easing Wheat Board control over the interprovincial movement of feed grain?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member again used the words national feed grains policy" which I commented on in my earlier answer. We are, of course, not at the point of decision, and a great number of things are being considered as possible courses of action. The exact proposals of the government will be made known after our deliberations are complete.

NATIONAL FEED GRAINS POLICY—PRESERVATION OF FREIGHT ASSISTANCE TO EASTERN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA GROWERS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, can the minister assure the House that in considering the proposals nothing adverse will happen to the feed freight assistance to eastern and British Columbia growers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the objective of the policy will be to produce a situation equitable to producers in all parts of the country. This is not an easy objective to meet as has been shown by the struggles toward such a conclusion without success by a number of national farm organizations. But I can assure the hon. member that the government will be doing everything it can to promote the cause of agriculture throughout the country.

• (1440)

Mr. Nowlan: In these discussions are the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and/or the Minister of Transport very directly involved in view of the fact that feed freight assistance is one of the best feeder growth multiplier policies that any government has ever had?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in the course of reaching a conclusion the government as a whole looks at the questions which are at issue and so all the ministers will be involved.

HEALTH

STEPS TO COUNTERACT INCREASE IN CIGARETTE SMOKING

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the increase in cigarette smoking, thought to be taking place mostly among young people, what steps is he proposing to take to counteract this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the minister can reply briefly. It seems to me this is a question of general policy which normally ought to be replied to on motions. If the minister can reply briefly, he will be given the floor for that purpose.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, since my department's budget estimates are now under consideration by the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I think it would be preferable to discuss this matter when my department's budget estimates come before the House.

TRADE

STUDIES ON DESIRABILITY OF ESTABLISHING TRADING COMPANIES—USE BY FORMER DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS NOW WITH INTEREMCO LIMITED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the establishment recently in Ottawa of the first trading company along lines of those functioning in Japan, can the minister advise the House whether or not his department has had a number of studies done on the desirability of establishing such a trading firm in Canada during the past two years? Has the department done that kind of work?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the department has done work in the area of trading companies but I cannot be specific as to the number of particular studies that may have been undertaken. I think it is of some interest, perhaps, to the House to know that a number of trading companies have now been formed in Canada over the past two or three years, and I hope that additional trading companies will be formed.

Mr. Broadbent: Can the minister inform the House whether or not his department maintains formal or informal ties with Interemco Limited, which is headed by the former minister of the department and, if so, what is the nature of the ties between his department and that company?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the relationship between the department and any of the trading companies I have referred to would be of an informal nature.

Mr. Broadbent: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member, but I would hope that there would not be two supplementaries for every question asked between now and the end of the question period. Hon. members will have noticed that we make much better progress and give a chance to more members when we limit the number of supplementaries.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will respect that by asking only one further supplementary. Can the minister provide the names of senior officials who have recently left his department and have joined Interemco Limited, and also inform the House whether or not the same officials took with them the studies that were done by his department on the establishment of such a company, and whether or not these studies have given that particular company an advantage in the Canadian market?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am quite unaware of the representation that the hon. member is making, I think, in his remarks, but I will be pleased to examine that situation, as I would any other situation.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

OIL AND GAS—SCOPE OF HEARINGS UNDER TERRITORIAL LANDS ACT RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to an earlier question regarding transportation methods north of 60 degrees. I would direct it to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder if the minister can say if the public hearings under the Territorial Lands Act which he announced on March 1, 1973, will apply to all methods of transportation for oil and gas north of 60 degrees and not be restricted specifically to a right of way covering any pipeline application?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if there are applications of any other kind for rights of way in the Northwest Territories, I should think the policy that applies to a natural gas or an oil pipeline would also apply to other modes of transportation, including railways.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

TREATMENT OF PRERETIREMENT PAYMENTS TO MINERS AS NOT BEING EARNINGS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that, because of the attitude of hon. members opposite, members on my side of the House will not be deprived of the time that is due them in the question period. My question for the Prime Minister is this: As the Unemployment Insurance Commission must consider preretirement payments paid by Cape Breton Development Corporation as earnings because of a contract of service, will the Prime Minister undertake to correct the situation brought about by the corporation when it treated such payments as non-earnings, thereby contravening the Unemployment Insurance Commission legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard questions along that line before in the House. I believe I drew them to the attention of the responsible ministers. I will do so again.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It arises from the fact that the Prime Minister indicated that he has brought this matter to the attention of the responsible ministers. May I say to the Prime Minister, on the point of order, that, if this is the case, why is it that his ministers, namely, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and others, have failed to answer correspondence sent on this matter since February 4?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): They are not doing their jobs and they are not taking their orders any more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Let them treat the miners the same way they treat some people in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Justice rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I simply think it quite inappropriate for the hon. member to make these comments about correspondence, because I think he has been away from his office and has not seen the reply which went to him. We may have had a little trouble with the letter to me which I think had been addressed a few days before he first complained about not receiving a reply. It was addressed to me as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege, and I think the Prime Minister should pay close attention to it. Would he obtain from the Minister of Justice a letter written to me on March 7 indicating certain actions taken by Cape Breton Development Corporation under section 18 of the act? Would he take that letter, read section 18 of the act, and find out just how wrong the Minister of Justice is about this matter? Section 18 of the act has nothing to do with the letter put forward. He has not even read the legislation and has not paid attention to the complaint in the letter. I suggest that the Minister of Justice—

An hon. Member: Should hire a lawyer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. I should like to hear the hon. member's point of order or question of privilege. Certainly, he should be given the opportunity to express his views and thoughts, after which we will try to use the last few minutes of the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will wait for members opposite to be quiet so I can tell the Minister of Justice the facts. If he is paying any attention, if he has any concern for the miners of Cape Breton, he should know that the Cape Breton Development Corporation has taken the money and put it into its own pocket. Yet the government is providing thousands of dollars to millionaires in Montreal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member has stated his point. He would appear to be asking a question. We have something like five or seven minutes before the end of the question period and I do not think we are proceeding in a very orderly fashion if we spend too much time on points of order or questions of privilege. If the hon. member will state his point clearly and briefly, I will try to rule on it, but in fairness to all members we should try to limit as much as possible points of order. I am quite prepared to listen now to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice seems to think he can forget about certain correspondence. I call it to his attention again. Take the Cape Breton Development Corporation legislation, read section 18 of the act, and you will find it has no application whatsoever to the question put to the minister. The minister has completely disregarded the representations I have made to him and he is doing so to the detriment of many miners in Cape Breton.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again suggest to hon. members including, if I may say so, the right hon. Prime Minister that I really cannot see what advantage there is to the House in pursuing the matter further. The hon. member has raised a point of order. I think it is more a point of debate. The Minister of Justice has replied to it. The hon. member has suggested that some problem be looked into. It is, in a sense, a representation and the House can assume that the matter will be looked into. With respect, I suggest to all hon. members that we should try to return to the question period.

PENSIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL AND CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAYS—POSSIBILITY OF IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister yet in a position to make a statement to the House concerning improvements in railway pensions, both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific? Also, can he tell the House whether he has been able to persuade Canadian National that its pensions should be at least equal to the pension provisions enjoyed by Air Canada employees and by employees of the federal public service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. gentleman knows that negotiations are presently going on between Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and the railway unions and that this subject is being discussed by the parties. I hope this very important problem of pensions will be solved this year, and I am ready to do whatever I can in order to obtain a just solution for the employees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SAMSON-BELAIR REPORT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. In view of the serious implications that have arisen as a result of failure to implement the recommendations contained in the Samson-Belair Post Office study, will the minister undertake to make this report available to hon. members and to the public?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the hon. member who proposed a motion for the production of papers that the document requested is confidential. It is a document concerning the internal running of the department and it is not customary to make such papers public.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. McKenzie: The Postmaster General has said that the Samson-Belair Report is confidential, but the government House leader stated he would table the document. Will it be tabled? I should like to draw attention to the seriousness of this situation. In April, 1972—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, I suggest to hon. members that we are running short of time. The hon. member, as suggested by his distinguished colleague from the Yukon, might wish to have that matter considered at the time of adjournment tonight.

INDUSTRY

ACTION TO OFFSET ADVERSE EFFECT ON CANADIAN COMPANIES OF LOW DUTY ON TELEVISION COMMERCIALS IMPORTED INTO CANADA

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. It makes the last five days of bouncing up and down worth while. Since my question might affect more than one department of government, I wonder whether I could address it to the Prime Minister. In the light of the findings of the Ontario Select Committee on Economic and Cultural Nationalism that the low duty on the importation of television commercials from the United States places Canadian corporations at a distinct disadvantage compared with American corporations, does the government intend to take action either to ban the importation of foreign commercials into Canada or to increase the tariffs upon them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might wish to consider another way of helping those corporations. That would be by adopting the budgetary measures proposed by the Minister of Finance to help manufacturing industries.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE MOVEMENT OF HMCS "TERRA NOVA" FROM SINGAPORE BECAUSE OF CREW SICKNESS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. I am sure we are all sorry to hear of the untimely death of Corporal Nemnook of HMCS Terra Nova due to virus pneumonia. It now appears that other sailors have had to be evacuated from the ship because they are suffering from a contagious disease. Could the minister inform the House whether he plans to have the Terra Nova remain in Singapore to help forestall any repetition of the sad case of Corporal Nemnook?

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The Terra Nova will be staying in Singapore for another five or six days. There are five seamen in hospital with Asian flu. Hong Kong type 3 is the type of disease.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Richardson: They are not suffering from pneumonia as the hon. member suggested. Our medical officers have assured me that these men are not in danger. Two will be rejoining the ship today and the others will recover fully.

Mr. McKinnon: If the Terra Nova remains alongside in Singapore what plans does the minister have for a replacement if an emergency evacuation from Viet Nam becomes necessary?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, that is hypothetical.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY CARS TO SERVE BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): I thought for awhile, Your Honour, that I had lost sufficient weight to become invisible. I do have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the hon. gentleman advise the House whether he has received representations from the Cariboo Lumber Manufacturers' Association and others in the interior of British Columbia regarding the very serious shortage of railway cars to serve the lumber industry and, if so, will he take immediate action to try to rectify this situation in order to prevent any further employee lay-offs?

[Mr. Beatty.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the session I have received many representations on this subject. The hon. members for Kamloops-Cariboo and Skeena have asked me similar questions. I have just received the answer at this very moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is what I call quick service. The answer is that there is indeed a boxcar shortage in northern British Columbia.

"There is a matter about which Burbidge and Macmillan recently wrote to you about. Although CN and CP several months ago placed orders for new cars to meet the projected demand by the lumber industry, the fact is that the actual demand for cars by the lumber industry far exceeded their projected requirements."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF SUSAN ANDREWS

Mr. Speaker: To show that all hon. members are visible, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was beginning to wonder. My question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the inhuman and high-handed treatment accorded to Susan Andrews, will the minister undertake to extend the government's apologies and bring her back at government expense?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the treatment was inhuman. I believe anyone who read the facts of the story would conclude that there was a series of circumstances which left the immigration department no alternative but to take the action it took.

Mr. Paproski: What qualifications did Susan Andrews lack that the Happy Hooker has?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: I do not think either one had an employment visa.

An hon. Member: Shame!

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF SHUTTLE SERVICE BETWEEN TORONTO-MONTREAL AND TORONTO-OTTAWA

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the announcement by Eastern Airlines that it will provide a shuttle service between Montreal and New York, has the minister made representations to Air Canada or other airlines asking them to provide a similar service between Toronto-Montreal and Toronto-Ottawa?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): By Eastern Airlines or Air Canada?

Mr. Stackhouse: By Air Canada or any other air line.

• (1500)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already said in the House that during the last few years we have been negotiating with the United States a bilateral agreement which has not yet been concluded. As soon as it is completed, I will inform the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day, I believe the hon. member for Ottawa West has a point of order.

Mr. Stackhouse: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a point of order, so we will hear the first point of order. I understand the hon. member for Skeena also has a point of order, so we will spend the next few minutes on points of order, beginning with point of order number one.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that I am sure the Minister of Transport answered a question that was not asked. I wonder whether he would direct his answer to the question I put, which was: Has the Minister of Transport made any representations to Air Canada or to any other airline serving Toronto-Montreal or Toronto-Ottawa to provide the kind of shuttle service that an American airline is providing between Montreal and New York? This has nothing to do with international agreements or anything else.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think there were two possible interpretations of this question, and I picked the wrong one. With regard to the other meaning of the question, I shall inquire of Air Canada and CP Air to find out if they do in fact plan to start such a service.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa West.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of a response made yesterday to all hon. members by the Minister of Justice. The minister said with reference to the new bail law, among other things, as reported at page 2459 of Hansard:

> The point that hon. members seem sometimes to miss is that under any law, except one that keeps almost every suspect in prison, people will be on bail, and indeed the hardened criminals would be most likely released under a cash bail system, such as the old bail system. So it is not the changes in the law that have caused the problem, and any suggestion that it is, is really doing a disservice to the continued development of the law.

I say this in all humility but—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the orchestration of these people is really remarkable. There is an increasing number of people in this country who are deeply concerned about, and afraid of the problem posed by the gradual and steady acceptance of violence as a way of life in this community. We have seen that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rose on a point of order and he was given the floor in preference to all other hon. members. His point of order has to be related to the Standing Orders or to precedents. I find it hard at this point to determine whether there is a point of order on which the Chair can make a ruling. The hon. member seems to be raising a point of debate. I would invite him as quickly as possible to indicate why he thinks he should have the floor at this point.

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; that is well taken, I suppose.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: In all humility.

Mr. Reilly: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have to make progress. I thank the hon. member for his kindness to the Chair, but he should indicate what his point of order is.

Mr. Reilly: My point is this, Mr. Speaker. I thought the minister's remarks, whether intentionally or otherwise, tended to leave the wrong impression with the House. I researched the remarks made by the then Minister of Justice when the law was amended in 1971, and in my opinion it was the intention of the government to create a far different climate surrounding the matter of bail than had hitherto existed, a more lenient climate in which persons suspected of or arrested for serious offences would be let go on their own recognizance when it might have been well that they should have remained in jail.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What this has to do with a point of order is really beyond the Chair. This may be a good point of debate. I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member for Ottawa West, but my interpretation of this kind of point is that it is rather a point of debate. There should be opportunities to raise these arguments other than on a point of order. As I say, I want to be fair to the hon. member for Ottawa West and all hon. members, but I have to rule that, although this may be a valid grievance or point of debate, it cannot be considered a point of order. That has to be my ruling, having heard the hon. member.

The hon. member for Skeena has a point of order.

Mr. Howard: I hope so, Mr. Speaker. My point of order relates to the response given by the Minister of Transport to the question put to him by the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay. The point of order I want to make is that I think the minister misunderstood the force of the question. This is a matter affecting all of British Columbia, particularly northern B.C. where I come from. I think the information that we sought to have from the minister was not about the problem the CNR had, but what the minister was going to do to get boxcars into that part of the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I understand the force of the hon. member's question but not the force of his point of order. He might try his question again tomorrow. The hon. member for Wellington has a point of order.

Mr. Hales: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a very brief point of order which is addressed to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as House leader. Now that a new Auditor General for Canada has been appointed, I wonder whether the minister would refer to the public accounts committee the bill regarding the Auditor General which was drafted by a special committee composed of the Law Clerk of the House of Commons, the Law Clerk of the Senate, a member of the Department of Justice and a representative from the Auditor General's office?

Mr. Speaker: Again, this may be a valid question but I doubt that it is a point of order. When we reach the end of the question period, hon. members rise and try to put additional questions in the form of points of order. I think that this would be a very valid, interesting and important question that might be asked tomorrow. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my point is one of privilege which you may eventually consider to be a point for debate. My point of privilege arises from the fact that I have been denied, as a member of parliament, the opportunity properly to represent those people who have sent me here. The justice and legal affairs committee, a committee made up of 20 members mostly from the legal profession, 12 of whom were sitting on the government side of the House, made a report containing a fair and equitable decision which in many ways and some of them most devious, I have been denied the opportunity of bringing about.

The Minister of Justice has referred to a mistake that was made by my office, by myself, when he received one letter from me improperly addressed. However, he did acknowledge the letter, and that being so I wish to point out to the House that all members of the House supported the legislation concerned. A committee of the House stood 100 per cent behind the complaint put forward in the petition that was accepted by the House. Again, I use the word "integrity": I think the House should have the integrity to support the legislation that was passed, which has not been the case.

The minister's letter to me was in reply to one sent to the minister by me on February 21. The letter was received in my office on March 14 and the following statement appears in the letter:

> The decision of the Federal Court was in effect that Parliament had not given the Governor in Council power to make Regulations under the Public Service Superannuation Act, to authorize a Deputy Minister to terminate the employment of a public servant before the normal retirement age of 65.

Then, the minister goes on to say this:

> On the other hand, it is quite clear that Parliament specifically required the Cape Breton Development Corporation, by section 18 of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, to make by-laws, subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, for pension arrangements for the benefit of employees who are laid off or retired before the normal retirement age provided for in the by-law—

I have in my hand section 18 of the legislation, and I can quote from the act for the minister's benefit. The act has nothing to do with the establishment of a bylaw, but is concerned solely with pension arrangements. Therefore, I do not accept the minister's words in this respect. I see no difference between parliament authorizing a statutory body to make bylaws and authorizing a minister of the government to make regulations. The position is really the same; both arise from an enactment that has received the support of parliament, and the approach must be the same.

I have referred to devious methods used by the government, and what I mean is this. I have asked the minister to express an opinion on paragraph 2 of his letter, but I have received no reply. I ask the minister to pay particular attention to my reply. The exception I have taken to paragraphs two and three of the letter has been picked word for word from the judgment handed down by the courts. In other words, the part of the letter I have forwarded to the minister in which I took exception to paragraphs two and three has been picked directly from the judgment handed down by the courts.

This is a devious way of going about things. The minister has definitely contradicted the lawyer who heard the submissions in the first place. If the deviousness of this government is not enough, why would the senior partner of the law firm who represented the miners be made a director of Devco? Why is it that money spent by the miners to get what is rightfully theirs will now find its way into the pockets of the board of directors of the Devco Crown corporation? If that is not deviousness, I would like the minister to give some explanation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that this again is debate. This cannot be considered a question of privilege. I suggest to the House that the hon. member may have a good point for debate. He has made his point, but according to my understanding of the rules and precedents of this House, that cannot be a question of privilege. It ought to be debate. I think there should be an occasion when this very important matter can be considered by the House. I urge hon. members interested in this problem to give some thought to the possibility of reviewing it in one of the committees or on the occasion of another debate. However, it is not a question of privilege.

The Chair called orders of the day a while ago, but I believe the hon. member for Peace River wishes to raise the usual Thursday afternoon point of order at this point.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I certainly do not intend to get into a debate on the subject. My point of order is that, while there is obviously a serious question underlying the issue that the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys continues to raise, he does so in a way—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We cannot have two points of order. The Minister of Justice has risen on a point of order. I will be delighted to hear the hon. member on his point of order, but I remind the House I have called orders of the day. We are now on orders of the day.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I simply think that it is appropriate to object to the use of the rules in this way, particularly when earlier this afternoon the hon. member suggested that he had not received replies to earlier letters. He has now agreed that he has received them. He is now asking for a further legal commentary on certain statements in those letters. While it is easy for the hon. member to come forward with instantaneous legal opinions, in our department we try to come up with considered conclusions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order. I will be pleased to hear the hon. member on his point of order. If hon. members want to rise on points of order until five o'clock this afternoon, obviously that is what they want to discuss and we will hear them.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with regard to my original point of order, I want to once again point out the inability of the Minister of Justice to be accurate. Right off the bat, he referred to me as the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys. He is wrong again. I thought I had made myself sufficiently well known in the House that I would not be misnamed.

With regard to the legal opinion, I was referring to the letter of February 21. How about answering the letter I sent to the minister previous to that? That has not yet been answered. An acknowledgement is not an answer. The following day the Solicitor General, as a law officer of the Crown, wrote a letter stating that the minister wished to acknowledge receipt of my letter but there had been no legal decisions handed down.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a further point of order?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I cannot call the hon. member by constituency, but he sits directly behind the Minister of the Environment. He just made a statement while remaining seated which was out of order. It was to the effect that I have been misleading the House. This is what I want to find out. Why is the government misleading the miners of Cape Breton, and stealing from them in order to provide the millionaires in Montreal with LIP grants? Get up on your feet and debate it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members are enjoying this afternoon. We have further points of order. This is either point of order number seven or number eight. I will be delighted to hear the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to assure Your Honour and the House that some of us are not interested in putting up with a consistent abuse of the rules.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Grier: I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that you have the support of a great many, if not the majority of members of this House, in enforcing the rules as strictly as you wish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Up to this point I thought that hon. members may be interested in having a discussion about housing. I am not sure whether that is very important. Before we do, the hon. member for Peace River is rising on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make the traditional Thursday request of the government House leader to state the business of the House for the balance of this week and next week. Can the hon. gentleman advise the House of the government's realistic assessment of the legislative program that it hopes to have before the House between now and Easter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I hope we can get second reading of the housing bill today. If that is the case, we will proceed to the report stage and third reading of the War Veterans Allowance bill, and then deal with the report stage and third reading of the Old Age Security Act. Tomorrow will be an opposition day as will Monday. Following that, I will probably call the Foreign Investment Review Act.

With regard to the program that might be completed before Easter, that depends a good deal on my hon. friend, but I will accept the challenge in the expectation that we might be able to give at least second reading to the Foreign Investment Review Act, the Criminal Code Amendment, the Crop Insurance Amendment, the Emergency Gold Mining Act extension, the Wildlife Act, the Residential Mortgage Act, the Fisheries Development Act Amendment and complete the report stages of all bills that have been in committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would mind advising the House if there are other legislative items not on the order paper now which the government may contemplate putting on the order paper and dealing with before Easter.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is a real possibility.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT, REHABILITATION, OWNERSHIP, NEW COMMUNITIES, ETC.

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 21, Consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-133, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue my remarks from yesterday. If Toronto contractors say that an oversupply of serviced lots would be created by implementation of the just mentioned measure, this would soon bring the price of a normal lot to half the present $40,000 plus average. Prices could be reduced even more, to say $5,000, if developers were committed to building single family homes on smaller lots with a minimum of services; a good gravel road, open storm sewers and overhead power lines. By eliminating the sales taxes and in some cases substituting cheaper materials such as aluminum siding for brick veneer, the cost of a house, now about $18,000 to $20,000 for a three bedroom bungalow, in most urban areas, could be reduced to about $15,000. These are the views of the developers and all levels of government should listen to them. What is even more important though, is that the federal government listen to the demands of the provinces in relation to housing.

• (1520)

The $1.5 million study launched recently by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) to discover regional housing needs in Canada is a waste of the taxpayers money. Obviously, various regions in Canada have different problems. All this study will tell us is what we already know. In addition, how is parliament to be subjected to government housing studies? My hon. colleague, the former minister responsible for housing, submitted his task force report on housing in January, 1969. Now, after four years, the government is spending $1.5 million to discover that in this country separate approaches are required in dealing with different regional housing needs. This government refuses to accept the fact that the provinces know more about regional housing needs because, together with municipal governments, they have been building houses and controlling housing. Constitutionally as well, land use and housing are within provincial jurisdiction. But the government refuses to listen to the provinces. Several provinces want the federal government to get out of the housing field and let them take over housing programs if they can be granted the tax revenues to pay for them. The federal government, though, refuses to yield. The block financing, which the provinces temporarily accepted and by which the government will hand over all moneys allotted for housing, will allow the provinces to decide how to best spend the money.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Hopefully, the provinces and municipalities will see fit to begin assembling land. The best way to enable a low-income person to become a homeowner may be to take the actual cost of land out of the purchase figure. Cities could begin land banking. They should acquire land for residential development and retain ownership on it. Houses should be built on these lands, and then sold. The land, however, should not be sold. A policy such as this would enable the poor to have a home. It would also prevent the land speculation that keeps pushing up the cost of houses. All this though would be a start, but the federal government must heed not only the advice of the developers but also that of the provincial governments. While it is the job of the provincial government to produce housing stock that people can afford, it is the job of the federal government to give them the power to do so.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, with respect to costs, may I say that the monster inflation has got completely out of hand, especially in the area of housing. Here again, figures can be deceptive. A house which was priced at $16,000 in 1960 and today costs $24,000 is not just 50 per cent higher, but in the end turns out to be more like 150 per cent higher because of interest and other charges. By rough rule of thumb, an increase of one per cent in the interest rate adds 10 per cent to the capital cost of shelter, so that the 4 per cent increase in mortgage rates from the early 1960's added a hefty 40 per cent to the consumers' long-term bill for housing. The cost of buying the average NHA house actually doubled in the 1965-1970 period. Back in 1960, about half of Canadian families could afford to buy the average NHA house; now the percentage is more like 10 per cent and in the Toronto area it is closer to 5 per cent. The availability of single family homes for Canadians has almost become extinct. The minister's bill provides too little too late.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that because of our rigorous climate and the amount of investment involved in housing, politicians in Canada would have tended to escape any obligation to deal with that topic. I am sure hon. members on both sides of this House will agree that Canada's record in respect of housing should be the envy of many nations throughout the world. I would suggest that the difficulties faced by previous generations with regard to housing deserve a great deal of our national attention. One need only be reminded of the sod shanties of the great northwest as well as the log cabins of northern Ontario to realize what tremendous strides we have achieved in relation to housing. There is no doubt that the proposals before us do not offer a complete solution to this particular problem. There are still a number of strides to be made. To indicate that the provisions of the act or the amendments proposed would all prove to be beyond reproach would indeed be to engage in day dreaming in colour panavision.

However, I challenge any member of this House to suggest any previous bills with which this House has had the pleasure of dealing which have contained such imaginative provisions and which have exhibited such serious and concentrated thought. I do not propose to deal with all aspects of the new amendments. I shall content myself with stressing three major aspects. The first is that of co-operative housing and the non-profit association involvement. The second provision with which I propose to deal is that in respect of loans to be made to individuals to facilitate ownership. The third very important topic, to my mind, involves the provisions relating to new communities.

Since World War II, Canada has indeed been favoured by a multiplicity of volunteer organizations which have been engaged, supported by private funds, in assisting individual groups of citizens requiring specialized assistance. This legislation has been inspired by the success of these voluntary associations. The legislation thus inspired is a recognition of the success achieved by these non-profit organizations in the past in providing needed accommodation of good quality. The loans which will be made available to these associations will be in amounts of up to 100 per cent of the lending value of the project with amortization over a period of 50 years. Further, these voluntary organizations will have the advantage of a $10,000 fund which could be employed in planning and preparing their own projects for completion.

[Translation]

The bill before us also provides for similar aid to some co-operatives that wish to build, purchase or improve houses and then sell them to their members or to others that are interested in supplying particular groups, most of which are members, with new or repaired housing they have acquired.

The provisions under clause 34 of the bill entitle them to a low rate of interest, a 40-year mortgage, and to a contribution by the CMHC to payment of the capital, interest and taxes.

We will thus have the authority of a statutory regulation to give the underprivileged assistance in paying the principal and the interest, in addition to which they will have access to public funds when paying municipal taxes.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation also goes to show that this government is inclined towards greater social justice and to giving priority to those with small incomes whose needs are greatest.

Moreover, the second class of co-operatives, those that will be renting accommodation, will be providing homes for those who really need them, through non-profit organizations which try to promote greater social justice for this country. Co-operatives formed with that precise purpose in mind will also be eligible for 10,000—dollar subsidies to help with the planning and execution of their projects. The co-operative associations will obtain up to 100 per cent of the loan value of the project. Public funds will be available to them to meet their immediate commitments, that is the payment of interest or municipal taxes.

• (1530)

This brings me to my second point. We saw, when dealing with co-operatives, that these particular projects make it possible for individual citizens without the necessary income to buy their own houses in accordance with the state of the market. The added benefit of this provision is that public funds can be obtained in order to achieve the same purpose. The National Housing Act as amended does indeed provide for assistance to individuals who are unable to buy their own house. They will be provided with a mortgage through CMHC at a low interest rate, lower than the one which exists in the market. They will also be provided with terms of up to 40 years for amortization, and furthermore, they will be provided with public funds, administered under the regulations, in order to help them meet those payments which as a family unit, they might otherwise not be able to meet.

There are but a few pages to this bill. It may not offer solutions to all the problems but, I suggest, it offers solutions to a considerable degree. I suggest that they are directly in accordance with the principles of social justice that have been advocated, not only by this government but generally by all Canadians whatever their political persuasion might be, because we have attempted to provide low rental housing for individuals with low incomes. We have seen governments interfering with the rights of individuals. We have seen governments erecting the buildings, renting them and administering them, and it has frequently been the experience that individuals residing in those particular buildings have not been of primary importance to the administrator.

I suggest to hon. members that under this bill we will be able to reinstate the individual to the important position which he held. The individual will build his home or arrange for its construction, and then he will be able to obtain the necessary financing. If he is not in receipt of a sufficient income to enable him to provide for himself and his family and to meet all the obligations of the contract that he has undertaken, public funds will be made available to him, not as a charity but on a properly administered basis. I would suggest further that the bill recognizes the necessity for people to exercise initiative and it rejects the concept of paternalism. It foresees the complete integration of low income families into our comfortable middle class neighbourhoods without any aspersions being cast on their participation.

As an example of the wisdom of the particular provisions, I will cite a particularly appropriate case. A group of senior citizens can make an application under the provisions of the act to obtain funding to prepare a plan or project. Having prepared and submitted their plan, they can make an application for the financing of that project. They can then ensure the proper execution of those plans, and upon the completion of the project they can benefit from the fruits of their own creation and have the satisfaction of knowing that in the future others with the same needs will be able to reap the same benefits.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) is to be congratulated for his foresight and inventiveness with reference to the provisions in the bill. Yet, to my mind there are other provisions which are even more startling, and I hope that they are only an indication of things to come. For the first time we have in the House a recognition of the concept of whole community planning, not partial but whole community planning. A fund of $100 million will be set aside and made available, and in conjunction with the provinces, which nevertheless exercise primary jurisdiction with reference to municipal affairs, it can be employed to plan and to erect communities. That is not a brand new idea, although it is the first time it has been introduced in the House. Indeed, an experiment is being conducted in Minnesota in the United States where complete urban is being undertaken from first principles.

I must call the attention of hon. members to a long standing experiment in the U.S.S.R. Until recently, we did not consider the experiences of that country with such a different philosophy to be of much assistance. However, I was guided to a book by Farley Mowat published in 1970 entitled "Sibir" which deals with Siberia and two trips which the Canadian author has taken into that area. Throughout the book he indicates his amazement at the use that has been made of Siberia, a corner of the earth which has not always received a warm reception in our conversations. I should like to quote from pages 26 and 27 of this book. Prior to this quotation he writes of the development of Siberia and the municipalities in that area, and he goes on to say:

> Between Sverdlovsk and the halfway mark at Irkutsk, there's a string of big cities four or five hundred miles apart. Most of them began in the seventeenth century as forts, trading stations and administrative centres and until the 1930's they were backwoods towns with wooden buildings and mud streets. Most of Siberia was one big backwater in those days. Then in the mid 1930's it began to be obvious what Hitler had in mind and our leaders could see there was a good chance much of European Russia might be overrun. If that happened the Urals were going to serve as our last line of defence.
> The government began moving whole factory towns—machines and people—from Western Russia across the Urals. By the time the war ended provincial places like Sverdlovsk and Omsk had turned into industrial cities, and after the war they kept on growing, faster and faster. Siberia came awake with a jump! Within fifteen years the whole western region of the Trans Sib, as far east as Irkutsk, had jumped into modern times. Sverdlovsk, Omsk, Novosibirsk, Krasnoyarsk, Bratsk, Irkutsk, the flame of a new industrial society set each one of them alight in turn. They've got almost four million people between them now, and they'll have double that by 1975 . . .

What does all this have to do with the speech that I am giving, you may ask? I am suggesting that, with the very modest attempt being made now by the Secretary of State for Urban Affairs, we are seeing the concept to city planning in much the same manner as it has occurred in other places. As a northerner who has always advocated greater dispersal of our population into those areas which are apt to be developed in the future by someone else other than ourselves if we do not take the initiative, I welcome the provisions in this particular statute. I think that in the very near future we will see a greater development of this concept.

When I talk about city planning, I do not seek to encourage the concept of satellites to metro Toronto. I am thinking of communities set in virgin lands, where they will become viable. Of course, everything we are dealing with today, such as energy policy, economic policy, cultural policy, is attached to the development of our society. One of the basic concerns now is to try to analyse where we are going, and I suggest that the minister ought to be congratulated for having given us the opportunity to do so.

[Mr. Blais.]

I wish to indicate that I am going to vote for this bill because I think it is a most worthwhile one. I am sure all hon. members would agree that it should be passed without any dissension because hon. members, in conscience, should ensure that their constituents are made aware of all the benificial aspects of this bill so that they will be able to derive the maximum advantage from it. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of these debates is to analyse all these provisions to that end, to benefit from them at the time the bill is approved, which I again suggest should be without undue delay.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in my contribution to this debate I propose not to focus on specific details of the bill before us, but rather to speak about general principles.

I am going to argue that federal housing policies, current or proposed, do more harm than good, and that the best thing the federal government could do to help us Canadians with our housing problems would be to leave us alone. Disband the bureaucracies, cut taxes, and let us solve our own problems, with the interference of our local or provincial governments if we choose, but without federal interference, without federal bureaucrats taking our money from us in taxes and spending it as they want it spent rather than as we want it spent.

In some cases local or provincial governments may foolishly pursue policies which, I would argue, do more harm than good. But if a local or provincial government pursues an unsound policy it clearly does less damage than is done by the federal government's pursuing that same policy. Furthermore, as it is most unlikely that all provincial governments would simultaneously pursue the same unsound policy, unless all provinces were to simultaneously suffer Liberal or NDP governments, divergencies in provincial policies would give Canadians the opportunity to study the effects of different policies pursued simultaneously in the various provinces, an opportunity which the federal government denies when it imposes a uniform policy on all of Canada.

The mayor of my city, Vancouver, Art Phillips, has written of:

> "One basic principle . . . That principle is that government should be as close to the people as possible. In Canada, that means that government should be as decentralized as possible."

I agree with him.

Another basic principle that I would like to talk about is the principle that no one can ever say what would make anyone else happy. No one is in any position to tell me that if I were to spend more of my time or money on some things rather than on other things, I would be happier than I am now. All of our individual preferences are purely subjective. There are no such things as objective standards or preferences which will make a human being happy. For any given preference held by you or me, someone prefers the opposite. For example, some people prefer carrots to spinach, while others prefer spinach to carrots. Consider a more extreme example. Although I attach very great value to sustaining my own life, there are people who prefer the opposite: suicide. Their subjective preferences are such that they are happier to choose death than to choose life.

Even more highly than my life, I value my liberty. Other people care little about their liberty, and history shows that such people usually lose their liberty. Some people, fortunately a minority, are pleased that over the last century the state has been progressively consuming our liberty, taking us back toward the serfdom of the dark ages, "turning back the clock", so to speak. I am not pleased with this loss of liberty. In a free society we respect each other's subjective preferences, and we ask of each other merely that each refrain from forcibly imposing his preferences on others, either directly or through the state's power of legal coercion.

You may ask, what does all this have to do with housing? Simply this: There are some people who have some idea of what sort of housing they like. They call their choice of housing "decent" housing. Then, they want to use the power of the federal government to coerce, directly or indirectly, all the people into living in such housing.

If I prefer to spend some of my money on what they call "sub-standard" housing and the rest of my money on other things, then they want to take my money from me in taxes, and spend it on so-called "urban renewal", tearing down my house and building a concrete ghetto for me to live in. I wish they would leave me alone, and stop taxing me and pushing me around. They cannot prove that their way of life is in any objective way any better than mine. Why, then, should they be able, in a supposedly free country, to use the power of the state to force their personal preferences on me? I am quite willing to leave them alone.

It may be argued that some people are so poor that they cannot afford housing more attractive—in our opinion—than the housing they presently occupy, and that the government should build so-called "decent" housing for these people. For the time being let us leave aside a discussion of the ways in which modern governments impoverish people—for example, compulsory mis-education, oppressive taxation, denial of the right to work, and exorbitant tariffs, especially on things like shoes and shirts—in order that we may focus on the distinction between the question of poverty and the question of housing.

If a particular poor person were very much richer he still might not want to change his housing. He may prefer to do other things with his additional wealth or income rather than buy more expensive housing. But whatever he does with his additional wealth, he does precisely that because that gives him more satisfaction than he would derive from any alternative course of action. Some people enjoy hoarding money. I am sure many hon. members have heard of apparently impoverished people who have died, leaving $50,000 or more tucked in a mattress. Many wealthy people choose to live quite modestly. You or I might spend the money differently—if it were ours to spend—in accordance with our respective preferences, but our preferences are not theirs.

If it is really our desire to raise the material standard of living of poor people, rather than push them around and run their lives, then we should abandon the government policies that impoverish them. In place of the present mess of welfare schemes and housing schemes, we should give the poor people the cash presently spent on these things and let the poor people spend the cash in the ways that give them the greatest satisfaction. To build our preferred type of housing for the poor people and to hire thousands of bureaucrats to oversee them in these ghettos is wasteful. The amount of waste is the amount of satisfaction the poor people would gain if they could spend the money themselves on what they consider to be their most urgent needs, over and above the amount of satisfaction, if any, they get from living in the poor people's ghettos that we have been building for them.

Some people say that the price of land is too high and that the federal government should adopt certain measures, such as land banking, to lower the price of land. I will argue shortly that although lower land prices may be considered a desirable end, land banking is not a means that will in reality achieve that end. Instead, land banking will raise the price of land.

The market price of land is determined by supply and demand; this is a fact of nature which government cannot change. If government were to impose legal controls on the price of land, it still could not change the market price, the price at which the seller is willing to sell and the buyer is willing to buy. If government decrees that a certain piece of land shall not legally sell for more than $10,000, if the owner is not willing to sell for less than $12,000 and if there is a buyer willing to pay $12,000, then the government's law cannot change the reality that the market price is $12,000. To please the government, the buyer and seller may state on a piece of paper that the exchange price was $10,000, and pass $2,000 under the table. But the government's laws cannot change the reality of the market price. The government's laws may drive discussion of market price out of the legal market place and into the free market, sometimes called the "black market", but the government's laws cannot change the realities of the market. For example, rent controls in New York City failed to control actual rents, the difference between the real rent and the legal rent being passed under the table as "key money".

Through expropriation, government may seize land from some people, paying them less than fair market price, and resell the land to its friends at the expropriation price. But here government has no more lowered the market price of land than a bank robber lowers the market interest rate on loans.

Prices of land are higher now than they have been in years. The main reason for the increases in land prices is the paper money inflation that the federal government has been causing through the Bank of Canada. For years the federal government has been behaving in a way that would have put a private company into bankruptcy long ago: its spending has far exceeded its revenues. It has been unwilling to behave responsibly, to do what is unpleasant, to impose taxes high enough to meet its expenditures or, alternatively, to reduce its expenditures. Instead, hoping in the short run to win popularity with the voters, the government has been doing what no private company can do: it has been using the Bank of Canada to issue paper money to cover its deficits.

But now the unruly economic chickens have come home to roost. All that new paper money has caused a terrible inflation. Like all the other governments that have caused paper money inflations over the past 200 years, this government has tried to blame the inflation on supposedly greedy tradesmen, merchants, and landowners. But we are not fooled! We know that the tradesmen, merchants, and landowners are no more or less greedy than they have been at any other time in history, during inflation or deflation. Human nature stays pretty much the same. We know that the price that a man demands for his labour, goods, or land is not going to be the price he actually gets, unless money is available to pay that price. And the greater the supply of money available, the higher the prices that people demand. And who controls the money supply? Tradesmen? Merchants? Landowners? No, the federal government controls the money supply, through the Bank of Canada.

During periods of inflation increases in land prices usually exceed increases in other prices. It is easy to see why. Even though the federal government preaches much nonsense about inflation, my constituents, especially those who have lived through paper money inflations in other countries, know that even though the government can print money, the government cannot print land. So, to protect their savings from the government's inflation, they buy land. Thus, they want to buy more land than they would want to buy in the absence of the paper money inflation. And so the demand for land is increased disproportionately, and this demand pushes prices up disproportionately. What is the remedy to the problem of rapidly rising land prices? Stop the paper money inflation.

A long time ago the economist Henry George pointed out that the supply of land is fixed by nature; the supply of land cannot be increased. Therefore, the price of land is determined by demand. How can government land banking possibly reduce the price of land? If government goes out to buy land, it increases the total demand for land. To everyone else's demand for land is added government's demand for land. Unless the government plans to use expropriation to selectively seize particular pieces of land from particular people, it can buy land only by out-bidding other buyers, that is to say, driving up the price.

Not only will government land banking not do any good, it will do a great deal of harm. It will drive up land prices. It will be a terrible invitation to corruption; politicians and bureaucrats will be tempted to use the taxpayers' money to overpay for land bought from their friends and will be tempted to sell the so-called "banked" land to other friends at prices below fair market price. And it would give politicians and bureaucrats an increased opportunity to injure their enemies through expropriation.

We would do well to note that when government engages in the selective seizure of land through expropriation, paying less than fair market price, it is not the big corporation but rather the little man, often the small farmer, who suffers most. The little man cannot afford to fight back effectively; he cannot afford to hire the best lawyers; he cannot afford to spend time and money on appeals. And the government knows it. The government knows that in expropriation proceedings it has the little man at its mercy, and rarely does the government extend him any mercy.

An observation about the effect of the government's paper money inflation on interest rates is relevant. The observation is very simple: inflation of the supply of paper money causes interest rates to rise. Let me illustrate this point with an example. Suppose that in the absence of inflation the market rate of interest is 3 per cent, because 3 per cent is the price at which the amount of money that people are willing to lend equals the amount which people are willing to borrow. For instance, in 1936 the government was able to sell its issue of 3 per cent perpetual bonds to investors who believed in the stability of the dollar. Suppose the government inflates the money supply at a rate which causes price inflation to reach a rate of 5 per cent per year. On the lending side, people will want at least 8 per cent on their money—in order to get their 3 per cent interest plus 5 per cent compensation for inflation. On the borrowing side, people who in the absence of inflation would be willing to pay only 3 per cent are now on the whole willing to pay 8 per cent, which is the original 3 per cent plus the 5 per cent inflation premium. They are willing to pay this amount because they expect that the prices of the goods, labour, or land that they sell will rise with the general inflation. The remedy to high interest rates is the same as the remedy to high and rising land prices: Stop the paper money inflation.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken about several things: the need for decentralization of government; the wastefulness of government's spending money to buy things like housing for people rather than letting the people spend the money themselves in the ways that give them, not government bureaucrats, the greatest satisfaction. I have spoken about the foolishness of government land banking, the futility of government attempts to fix market prices and, finally, of the great evil that lies at the root of high land prices and high interest rates, the government's paper money inflation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain that government is not the solution of our problems.

Mr. Coates: Especially this government.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Government is the problem, especially this government. When we recognize that basic fact, when we recognize that, as Bastiat said over a century ago, the state is the great fiction by which everyone tries to live at the expense of everyone else; when we recognize that government, which is simply the power of legal coercion, can destroy but not create, can build nothing of itself but can seize only what others have created; when we recognize that it is folly to think that government can solve our problems for us, when the only resources at the government's disposal are our resources; when we recognize that asking the government to solve our problems will simply result in government's telling us how to live our lives, and enforcing its instructions with its police power; only then, Mr. Speaker, will we have a truly free and prosperous society.

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Stollery (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is with very great pleasure that I rise to talk about the amendments to the National Housing Act.

I endorse the efforts of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) of which I am very satisfied. His interventions are very timely since urban concerns are more and more important.

Mr. Speaker, I represent an urban riding of downtown Toronto. I am an old Torontonian of the fourth or fifth generation. I can say proudly, Mr. Speaker, that my family has been living in downtown Toronto for more that one and a half century.

I am very much aware of the problems of that large Canadian city and I am convinced that the minister's efforts will help solve not only today's complex problems but those of the future of urban living in Canada as well.

[English]

I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) with great interest. I was informed, after listening to the hon. gentleman, that possibly we had better all go home, because there is not room for government at all, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. Coates: There is no room for this government.

Mr. Stollery: I compliment the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) for his positive attitude on these amendments to the National Housing Act. This is an enlightened measure and is an alternative to the bulldozer approach, and therefore especially deserving of support. I particularly direct your attention, Sir, to clause 27, to that part called the neighbourhood improvement plan. This is of great importance to areas of downtown Toronto. I believe the most refreshing part is that found in clause 27.1(2)(c). I can imagine the confused consternation of my friends opposite when they learned that the federal government intended to introduce consultation among neighbours who are involved in each urban improvement project.

In the area I represent, Sir, participation has taken on an important aspect. In my riding, Spadina, there is at the moment a conflict over a block called the hydro block. This is an area that was taken over by Ontario Hydro and, because of protests from local residents, the Ontario Housing Corporation took over the block and asked the residents what they would like to have done with it. The residents formed a committee and made exhaustive studies in terms of the physical, social and economic value of the block. They came up with 14 points, most of them reasonable. The provincial minister in charge of Ontario Housing Corporation has yet to respond in a positive way to the neighbours. It is with pleasure that I note the minister has introduced this form of consultation in these amendments to the National Housing Act.

Another important aspect relating to the neighbourhood improvement plan is to be found in other parts of clause 27. There are many excellent implications to this amendment, those involving open space, for example. The federal government will be making a 50 per cent contribution in this regard. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) pointed out the other day that here we have potential funding for day-care centres, so important in our urban areas and so neglected by many provincial governments. Also, under this part of the bill there is room for the establishment of neighbourhood recreation centres.

We have heard, during the past few days, members on the other side of the House speaking of their interest in the decaying centre cores of cities. I really wonder if any of those members have ever been in the downtown area of a city, or if their view has been that obtained from a limousine as it proceeded from Bay Street out of town to the country club. Apparently they have no understanding or conception of what it is like to live in the downtown area of a modern Canadian city.

I have heard concern expressed about building maintenance standards. I suggest to you, Sir, that if the city of Toronto building inspectors applied strictly the building bylaws in the riding of Spadina, the aldermen would be in great difficulty. The proponents of capital punishment would have a field day as they hanged the aldermen from city hall. The bylaws are not strictly applied in the city of Toronto. Anyone who knows the area knows that nobody would be crazy enough to apply building bylaws strictly in the downtown area. One of the reasons for the healthiness of downtown Toronto—and contrary to some statements downtown Toronto is certainly not in a state of urban decay—and one of the reasons the city has become famous in this regard has to do with immigrants. In my riding there are people who speak 33 different languages. Over the past 20 years, they have completed probably the largest urban renewal project in the world. We have street after street of sparkling houses; they are old houses made new, privately, without any government help. The only assistance has been from understanding building inspectors. There were probably 2,000 illegal toilets in Toronto. Cellars have been made over. Attics have been fixed up. Extra families have moved in to help with the expense of renovation. It goes on and on and this, I emphasize, should be encouraged. Toronto building inspectors generally apply bylaws sensibly.

All the same, Mr. Speaker, there must be minimum standards, particularly when you deal with conscienceless landlords, of which we have many. The only defence many people in this country have against living in unheated shacks, without windows and with cracks in the ceilings is minimum standards. The areas of northern Ontario where people live in very cold shacks are areas for which no minimum standards are prescribed. This is an important part of the bill before us.

I believe, too, that the neighbourhood improvement program has great implications for the future. Hon. members may recall that in Britain after the war a system of trust houses was established to preserve so-called stately homes. Such a program has application in cities like Toronto where, because of population pressure, land in the downtown area has become expensive. I am thinking, in particular, of an area in Toronto known as The Annex. My great-grandfather was a small contractor who built many solid houses in that neighbourhood. For the benefit of those who do not know Toronto very well, I might say that The Annexe is an area around Avenue Road and Bloor; it was incorporated into the City of Toronto about 1900. In the 'seventies it was an area of market gardeners. Members of my family still live there in a house built by my great-grandfather in the 'eighties. Land there now has tremendous value. I know of a case where a house with a 25-foot frontage and no great depth sold five years ago for $86,000.

I suggest that the program called the trust system could be applied to downtown areas such as The Annex. These are gracious streets. They contribute to the urban life of those who are obliged through economic circumstances to live in our cities. They are areas which should not be destroyed. Yet who can really say it is wise on economic grounds to continue to live in a house, a modest house when built, a nine-roomed house, which today has a market value of $100,000? There is no economic justification for it. The reason can only be that it contributes to the wellbeing of the citizens generally. So I see in the neighbourhood improvement plan the possibility of freezing some of these areas and preserving some of the amenities for the sake of the wellbeing of the citizens in general. I hope we may come to accept the concept of people living in a house in trust, a house owned, really, by the community as a whole. Whether we like it or not, I believe we are moving in this direction toward the establishment of what I call trust neighbourhoods.

The bill we are considering is not an answer to all the housing needs of Canadians. I agree with the submission of the Metro-Toronto Housing Task Force that the amount of forgiveable loan toward the rehabilitation of older housing stock should be increased from $2,000 to $4,000 in the case of low income families. I am concerned that middle-income groups, professional people, may move into too many improved houses downtown, thereby reducing the number of houses available to lower income groups whose possibility of movement is far less than those with higher incomes.

Some of the hyperbole emanating from the other side of this chamber in the past few days has really been fantastic. If I did not know better I would say it came from people who were engaged in the land speculating business. Last Thursday, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) used excruciatingly exaggerated figures about the cost of a house in Toronto. He said the cheapest house one could buy today cost $35,000. Where did he get that figure? He says he got it from the Urban Development Institute. This, I think, is indicative. The Urban Development Institute is an association of apartment builders who have direct financial interest in overstating the price of the average house because it is in their interest to demolish houses and build apartments. The Metro-Toronto Task force and the Social Planning council list the price of a house in Toronto at $25,000, $10,000 less than the figure quoted by the hon. member for Calgary North.

After giving us the figure provided to him by people in the apartment construction business, the hon. member proceeded to tell us that every Canadian was "entitled to a home with a landscape." I wonder what kind of landscape he would get from the twentieth floor of an apartment building. I would call it an airscape, certainly not a landscape. The phrase reminded me of a speech I have read—was it made in Louisana?—promising "a chicken in every pot". The average Canadian will not buy that kind of nonsense.

I take pleasure in associating myself with the minister in supporting the bill, and in associating myself with the brief that was presented by the Metro Toronto Housing Task Force. The brief states that Bill C-133 indicates a new direction for housing policy in this country. Incidentally, this task force was comprised of a group of 100 people specializing in housing needs in densely populated urban areas. The brief goes on to state that the task force "welcomes these initiatives and considers them a forward step in the provision of adequate housing for all Canadians".

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it is rather amusing to sit in this House and listen to members on the other side pretending to be interested in the housing problems we face in Canada. It is these same people who allowed this situation to develop, refusing to take any concrete action to deal with the various recommendations and reports made to the government during the last five years I have been in this House. These same people are now talking about the need for new housing legislation and decrying the problem being experienced by people of low and middle income. They are pretending to be concerned and to take an interest in what is happening.

I was amused to hear the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) talk a moment ago of the need for more and better housing in his riding. He took issue with the statement of my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), concerning the average cost of a house in Toronto. The hon. member opposite stated that rather than $35,000 being the average price, $25,000 would be a more realistic figure. It seems to me that the hon. member must have his wires crossed, because I am getting signals back, and have been for some time, that to buy a building lot in Toronto would probably set one back as much as $18,000 or more. So I am at a loss to understand where the hon. member gets his figure of $25,000 as being the average cost of a house in Toronto. Indeed, in my own city of St. John's, Newfoundland, this figure would be considered to be very low. I do not have the exact figure here, but I would be willing to bet that the average cost of a home in St. John's, Newfoundland, would exceed the amount of money mentioned by the hon. member for Spadina.

In rising to speak on this bill, I should like to say I have certain reservations about it. The last time that this legislation came before the House, the government called an election before it had a chance of being passed. In speaking on this bill today, I am wondering whether the government will pull the rug out from under my feet, or whether the walls of the building will collapse, or, better still, perhaps the government will be enticed to call a new election. Certainly, they might be tempted to do anything that would stall implementation of the new policy on housing announced by the government, as reflected in these amendments.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) has stated on many occasions that the amendments now being debated by the House represent the most progressive social housing legislation to be undertaken to date by this government. I find it interesting to speculate on what might be happening. Are we so bold as to suspect that the thrust of these amendments may indicate a change in the preoccupation of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with dwelling starts rather than with the actual social implications of the lack of a housing policy? We have all become aware that this financially and architecturally oriented institution appears to be more concerned about the number of houses being started, than about the actual housing problems facing the Canadian people, especially those who unfortunately are in the middle and low income brackets. It is refreshing again to speculate that perhaps this financially and architecturally oriented institution is about to be transformed into a sensitive social agency engaged in the development of new communities, the improvement of existing neighbourhoods, and the rehabilitation of existing substandard housing.

One area where I contend that this government and CMHC have completely fallen down is in the rehabilitation of existing neighbourhoods. We have all observed the effect of the bulldozer technique. We went through a period when the bulldozer seemed to be the answer to all of our housing problems—the answer to the large number of substandard housing units and substandard neighbourhoods that exist in this country. Now, of course, the government has realized that the bulldozer is not the answer, that perhaps rehabilitation does have a part to play in helping to solve the very serious and critical housing problems that exist today.

Again in my city of St. John's, there was a time back in the middle sixties when the government built up great expectations by designating areas for urban renewal schemes and urban renewal studies. Although great things were promised and great studies were undertaken, I am afraid very little action followed. This was because it was obvious then, as it is obvious now, that the bulldozer is not the answer; indeed it is far from the answer. Rehabilitation, a more sensitive attitude, a more humane approach to the problems of people living in older existing neighbourhoods, were what were required, rather than the so-called bulldozer technique and urban renewal studies undertaken during this period by the government and CMHC.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is, of course, the federal government's housing arm. But how can this agency presume to be effective when it continues to classify the Dennis report on low income housing as confidential, with distribution restricted to within CMHC? I have been told—and I hope that the minister will make a note of this—that the library at CMHC does not even have a reference copy of the Dennis report. How can that agency expect its staff to be aware of the social implications of the housing policy? This repressive attitude toward the control of information is unthinkable. This is ridiculous when you consider that the Dennis report is on sale in every bookstore in the country, but there is not even a copy of it in the CMHC library.

It is interesting to note the position with respect to the staff of CMHC. On October 3, 1972, the present minister promised that CMHC senior personnel would be replaced by those possessing skills more compatable to implementing social policy. It is ridiculous when you realize that the present president of CMHC, Mr. Hignett, continues to function in that role two years after his formal resignation. The president of CMHC, whose responsibility it is to give direction to Central Mortgage to implement the government's policy with respect to housing, continues to fill that role two years after he indicated to the government that he wished to retire from his position.

In the past year, there has been no change in the senior personnel of CMHC. Recent vacancies in the middle level have been filled from the present management complement. In other words, there has been absolutely no new blood injected into CMHC. Therefore, how can we expect that agency to operate under a president who has indicated his interest, desire, willingness and anxiety to retire and with no new personnel involved in the policy making or administration of CMHC, where vacancies are filled by people in the lower echelon of the corporation without new personnel or new blood being injected into the corporation? The minister will probably say that such changes are coming. He will probably tell the House that new appointments are to be made.

Perhaps a new president of CMHC will be appointed. Perhaps new personnel on the policy making level will be appointed, but these appointments should have been made before this legislation was introduced. These appointments should have been made prior to the implementation of these proposed amendments to the National Housing Act, especially when they are purported to constitute the government's presence in social housing legislation. I am not aware of any attempt having been made by the government or CMHC to change their attitude with respect to housing or talents. CMHC appears to have failed in its attempt to attract young people who are trained in the social science skills which a person working in that corporation requires.

The open hostility that exists between the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and CMHC's policy development unit has resulted in a sad waste of talent and expertise. This country cannot afford to suffer any longer from the minister's failure to define responsibilities. Either the minister should create a department of housing and urban affairs or he should let CMHC get on with its job. At any rate, this is a very serious problem that exists in Canada with respect to housing.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not make reference to a situation that exists in my constituency. It is relative to CMHC and the government's formal policy of urban renewal. In the west end of my constituency, there is an area that is referred to as Mundy Pond. The government undertook a comprehensive program of urban renewal in this area. The program was announced with a great deal of flurry and fanfare. A great many promises were made to the people who live in that section of St. John's West. When the program was probably a little more than half completed, because of the escalation of costs, prices and contracts, the funds ran out. There was not sufficient money to complete the program as envisaged by the government and promised to the people of that area.

I understand that last year a group known as the Mundy Pond House Owners Association made representations to the minister with a view to acquiring additional funds to enable them to complete the Mundy Pond urban renewal scheme. I also understand that their request for additional funds was refused. This situation is a little ridiculous. The federal government saw fit to spend a large sum of money on this project and then refused to advance sufficient funds to enable the municipal and provincial governments to complete the job. The Mundy Pond area is probably typical of a large number of under-privileged substandard have-not areas in this country. It consists of people who are on the bottom half of the income ladder. Their income is far below the national average. Indeed, it is so low that without direct government assistance from the municipal and provincial governments, they cannot hope to attain the standard to which most Canadians have become accustomed and to which they are entitled.

These people have been forced to live and raise their families under conditions which in most parts of Canada would be looked upon as being far below the normal standard. Indeed, it would be unthinkable to expect these people to live and raise their families under the conditions which prevailed in that area prior to the commencement of the urban renewal scheme, yet this government refused to acknowledge its responsibility to complete the project as promised, to complete it in a manner that is consistent with that which is expected by all Canadians. This would be by providing decent and sanitary conditions under which they can live and raise their families. I would urge the minister to give some serious thought to the request of the people of Mundy Pond who are not asking for anything except the opportunity to complete the job in accordance with the promise of the government in respect of the urban renewal scheme that was started there some years ago.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question for the sake of the record?

Mr. Carter: Yes.

Mr. Basford: I would just ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is clear on the record whether or not the hon. member is aware that on Monday this week I had a meeting raising with the mayor of St. John's and the provincial minister of municipal affairs for Newfoundland in respect of the very problem he is raising. We discussed the matter he is now mentioning and we are considering the requests of the mayor and the provincial minister.

Mr. Carter: I am aware of the fact that the mayor of St. John's and the provincial minister of urban affairs came to Ottawa to talk to the minister. I am aware also that more than a year ago a delegation came to Ottawa, before the minister assumed his present portfolio. This was a delegation from the Mundy Pond Householder's Association. They spoke to officials at CMHC and I believe the former minister. At that time their request was flatly refused. I hope the minister will find it possible to accede to their request and make sure that the scheme started by the government will be realized.

We find, Mr. Speaker, that there are very serious problems in housing in many parts of this country where neighbourhoods are being allowed to deteriorate almost to the point of no return because there is insufficient interest and lack of funds provided by the government and CMHC to enable the neighbourhoods and older properties in our cities to be rehabilitated. While I do not wish to take away from some of the benefits in this new legislation, and while I do not want to downgrade the minister in respect of his efforts to bring about some kind of improvement in the housing legislation, I hope that his obvious interest will be reflected in the attitude of officials at CMHC, at the grassroots level, who will be required to administer the policies presented to the House by the minister.

I hope it will be possible for CMHC to develop a better liaison between its officials and the people whom they represent because I find in my city—and I suppose this may be typical of the situation in most cities—that the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation appear to have adopted an attitude of being holier than thou, sitting in an ivory tower on their high pedestals. They do not get down to the level of the average people in our cities and provinces in respect of housing. I hope a better liaison can be developed between the officials of CMHC and the people in our cities who go to them for advice and help in respect of their housing problems.

With regard to the development of land, we all know that the cost of serviced building lots has reached a point where it is almost unrealistic for a person to endeavour to buy a lot on which to build a home. I contend that this problem has arisen because of the fact that there is an inadequate supply of serviced building lots in our cities. At the present time in the city of St. John's, the price of a building lot is anywhere from $10,000 to $15,000. I can think back to a time in the early and mid-1960's when, because of a land assembly program undertaken by the three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal, building lots were selling at a reasonable price. Less than ten years ago one could buy a building lot in St. John's, Newfoundland for under $5,000. Today, because of the scarcity of serviced building lots, it is impossible to purchase a building lot for less than $10,000. Therefore I urge the minister to be very sympathetic and to be very generous in respect of our provincial and municipal authorities in their efforts to provide land assembly projects, which I contend would have the effect of lowering the over-all cost of building lots.

I would also strongly recommend to the minister and to the government that the minister endeavour to impress upon his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the need to abolish the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This is something which I consider to be overdue. A government which pretends to be interested in the housing problems of our country, a government which pretends to be interested in the lot of the salaried blue-collar Canadians in this country, surely should start putting its money where its mouth is, to use an old cliché. I believe one way to do it is to abolish the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials which would make new home ownership more accessible to the average low salaried person in our country today.

I am impressed by certain aspects of this legislation which I think are good. I believe the idea of encouraging co-operative housing is good. Certainly, the plan in respect of developing and improving neighbourhoods is excellent. It should be pursued and taken advantage of by our cities and municipalities. I am encouraged by the new awareness shown by this government with regard to co-operative housing. This is one way in which people can roll up their shirt sleeves and hopefully solve their own housing problems. I commend the government for the initiative it has taken in this area.

In closing, I would again impress upon the minister and upon the House the need to complete the urban renewal schemes which were undertaken by the government. Particularly, in my case, I would commend to the minister the Mundy Pond renewal scheme. I hope he will be able to convince his colleagues in the cabinet that additional money is necessary to undertake the completion of that scheme as promised by CMHC. I hope they will allocate more funds and make more money available for the development of land, perhaps for the provision of land banks, call it what you want, but certainly I think we should do something to develop more building lots. I think this would have the effect of keeping prices down because the old law of supply and demand will prevail with respect to housing, just as it does to everything else. It is quite obvious that some definite action must be taken, some definite policy adopted, to bring about an end to the cruel and inhuman way in which a large number of our citizens are being treated.

There are certain parts of my riding where the conditions under which some people have to live are quite incredible in this day when we brag about the so-called just society and when we hear such slogans as "the land is strong". In some areas we see people living in substandard houses, and not far away from them we find people living in great luxury, people who can afford to drive expensive motor cars and who live in homes that are beyond the wildest dreams of most people. There is great unfairness and inequity in the fact that some people are forced to live in substandard conditions while others live in the lap of luxury. I contend that it is the responsibility of this government, and indeed of any government, to ensure that our people are given a chance to live and raise their families in decent houses.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill, and in the few moments left to me this afternoon I want to make one or two observations about an aspect of the bill which I think will be of advantage to the preservation of the character of existing neighbourhoods in large urban centres. I see the provisions of this bill respecting loans to facilitate home ownership, the neighbourhood improvement program, and the residential rehabilitation assistance program as providing a bulkward against mindless redevelopment of the kind which has been going on all too frequently in a city like Toronto. Certainly, in my constituency of Lakeshore, which consists in large part of older homes, the provisions of this bill will, I hope, enable residents to maintain and preserve those homes and prevent this part of Toronto from being overrun by, as I say, the mindless redevelopment which is taking place in so many other parts of the city.

Moreover, if that redevelopment can be forestalled and prevented and if the neighbourhoods can be preserved, those younger people who have grown up in that area, in that community, will, I hope, under the provisions of this bill find it somewhat easier to buy older homes in their neighbourhood. This would provide to that neighbourhood and that community another generation of community leadership which will, I fear, be lost if younger families must move farther and farther out of the older parts of the city into the suburbs in order to find housing at prices they can afford.

I hope, therefore, that when this bill gets to committee the minister will be in a position to provide us with more information than has been forthcoming so far. We will then be able to get some assurances that, for example, this bill will apply equally to existing as to new housing stock. Perhaps we can get some more concrete figures as to the income ranges to which the provisions of this bill will apply because I want to put in a word for those modest income families which comprise the great bulk of constituencies like my own and for whom, up to now, there has been not much in the way of assistance to enable them to own and preserve their own homes.

I would like from the minister, when we get into committee, some of the details which are apparently left to regulation at the present time. I would like to have some idea of what kind of assistance will be provided by the government by way of grants to enable families to maintain their monthly payments within tolerable limits. I hope that details of this kind will be tied to the act in such a way as to make sure that families in the modest income range will be able to benefit from its provisions. I do not want for a moment to deny the necessity of providing better housing for families in low income ranges, but I sometimes have the feeling that those in slightly better circumstances in the modest income ranges are overlooked in the drafting of legislation of this kind. I am disturbed at the suggestion—and I have heard it—that housing costs in a city like Toronto might be such as to render this program largely inoperative. Again, when the minister is before the committee I hope he can give us assurances that the kinds of income ranges and levels of assistance envisaged under this act will be such that residents of constituencies like Lakeshore, and there are many similar to it, will be able to benefit from the provisions of the act.

May I say in conclusion that there is in my riding a neighbourhood known as Laburnham which, over the last year and a half, has seen co-operation between the municipality and the residents of the area in designing a redevelopment program which preserves the character of the neighbourhood and which can greatly benefit, I hope, from the provisions of this bill. It is in the hope that not only that neighbourhood but others like it will in the future be preserved that I lend my support at this time to this bill.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BRYDEN COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for the tabling of the Report of the Legislation Review Committee, chaired by John G. Bryden.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the brief 20 minutes I have before me I should like to deal at the outset with perhaps one or two of the historical aspects that have led up to this position of stubbornness on the part of the government with respect to this most important report. A review of the historical aspects of something is important in the context of lapsed time between the acceptance of certain principles and their full implementation. No matter what we create it must be nurtured, fed and tended if it is to grow and expand, to keep pace with the growing demands of its day and environment.

I have ample evidence to suggest that in the immediate post-World War II period, employees of government began to feel strongly the changes of altered circumstances. The two paramount questions facing this House, the government, and indeed the country with respect to public employees were the twin questions of veterans preference, and the need to accommodate a greater linguistic balance within the public service. The Fair Employment Practices Act of some 20 years ago was another area that required change.

These matters preoccupied governments and the old Civil Service Association for a period of seven or eight years. As early as 1953, it was apparent to the then Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, that further changes were absolutely necessary, changes which in his view had to be sweeping and all-embracing. They would encompass major changes in concepts of government-employee relationships, and they were changes which he knew would be vigorously opposed by the Civil Service Commission of those days, indeed it might be said by the entrenched Civil Service Commission of those days. But he knew that changes had to come about if government and its growing civil service staff throughout the country were to function adequately. From this awareness on the part of the Prime Minister came the ground rules for what was to evolve during the next 12 to 14 years, during the days of the so-called 1954 secret committee and the Heeney Report, which will certainly be easily recalled by some distinguished members of this Chamber.

There was a reluctance in the early stages of committee meetings on the part of some members of the Civil Service Commission to look ahead. At that time there was a lukewarm chairman of the commission, and indeed Mr. Bryce expressed the fear that if changes did not come about quickly it might well be many years before sweeping conceptual changes could be brought about with respect to the public service. Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, his fears were well founded. It was some years before anything was accomplished. Indeed, some 14 years went by, and it was not until 1967 that change really came to the fore, although this is not to say that work was not being done during that time. A strong appeal has been made by opposition members during the last two years for the tabling or the release of the Bryden Committee Report. When undue delays occur in connection with something as complex as the rules and guidelines within which the public service operates, then there is great fear of entrenchment, of immobility on the part of governments, and of over-familiarity with known routines. A stance is adopted against making any movement. It is this which concerns us deeply.

As I say, it took 14 years before any basic changes were made. With the experience we have gained over the last five years, we have all the evidence that is necessary for any government, or any parliament, in order for it to institute an extension or a furtherance of the changes that were begun five years ago. There is recognizable merit in moving slowly in such complex areas as the relationships between a government and its employees. You have to be certain of the full consequences of change before making change. But caution should not result in procrastination in bringing about the many changes that are so necessary. What we are simply saying is that what has been done to this point in time has been good, but it is now time to do more with respect to the regulations under which governmental employees function.

The concept of full bargaining rights, although long shunned by the public service, particularly by certain levels within it, is now fully acceptable. Their fears have long since been abandoned. We have accepted that the changes made five years ago were good, and we know that further measures must now be taken. Numerous settlements arrived at over the last five years support that contention. The time in which settlements were arrived at has shortened.

About two years ago, probably in anticipation of the necessity to make further changes, the government asked Mr. John G. Bryden to review the two main legislative acts in this area, not with a view necessarily to making recommendations to the government but in the context of their usefulness. Some of my colleagues will speak about the understandings that existed at that time with respect to what was going to happen to his report.

The point I would like to develop is that, apart from any recommendations it may contain, the report itself is of the greatest importance not only to the members of this House but to the members of the Public Service Alliance, to the Professional Institute of the Public Service, to the Union of National Defence Employees, and to all other public service groups in Canada. To keep the report hidden at this point in time is unreasonable. The government has had it in its possession for a year and a half, or two years. Surely, the government now knows what its position will be. Why does it not release the report so that other concerned people can decide, on the basis of the information it contains, what amendments should be made to the Public Service Staff Relations Act and to the Public Service Employment Act?

I have difficulty in understanding why the government will only go so far as to say that, when it is ready to introduce amendments, it will reconsider its position with respect to the tabling of the report. This makes no sense to anyone who wants the benefit of the informed views of Mr. Bryden. It is clear that at present there are not full collective bargaining rights. I am not necessarily trying to find a reason why the government will not table the report but rather I am trying, in a brief manner and not too casually, to reason why the report should be published.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that there is not full collective bargaining rights for the public service at the present time. Section 7 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act reads:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect the right or authority of the employer to determine the organization of the Public Service and to assign duties to and classify positions therein . . . thus eliminating any right of the employee or an agent of any group from negotiating with the employer standards, procedure and processes governing classification of an assignment of duties to positions, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers, lay-offs, reassignment and releases.

The whole spectrum is removed from the parameters of collective bargaining and collective bargaining cannot be fully enforced unless it is total. If a thing is arbitrable it should be negotiable and vice versa, but that is not the case.

With each new agreement we see the difficulty that various groups are having in choosing the arbitration route over the conciliation and strike route. Anyone who has followed collective bargaining in the public service is aware of the difficulties that seem to be growing. There is the increasing irritant of the absence of relief procedures, and failure to provide for adjudication procedures for classification, grievances. The confusion that arises leads to difficulty and some of this may arise from the fact that we have three quasi-judicial bodies involved in these matters—the PSSRA for adjudication, the Treasury Board for classification and the Public Service Commission for appeal purposes.

It is no wonder that PIPS has called for the establishment of a ministry for the public service. We have a whole area of exclusions which should have been looked at long ago. Indeed, some considerable merit must attach to the thinking of the Alliance in its call for a classification review board within but separate from the Public Service Commission. This could well take the form suggested by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in Montreal a few weeks ago when he referred to areas of discrimination, for example, with respect to language—in any event, identifiable areas of discrimination. Possibly this is a reason we should have an independent national human rights commission in this country.

Government is no longer a unique employer in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and it can no longer set itself apart from the other large employers. The relationships between governments and their employees are so complex, so professional that a minister of the Crown must accept his responsibility to the people of Canada and the people who are employed in his departments, specifically or generally. I suspect that we may find something to this effect in the Bryden report when it comes before us. Government cannot continue as its own judge and jury; as the country's largest employer it must accept responsibility for leadership in the area of human rights and in many other areas. It must allow its employees access to grievance procedures, and, where discrimination is involved, to an independent human rights commission.

Lest I go too far into a rambling, somewhat philosophic dissertation, let me make some reference to the need to consider extension of some form of involvement in the decision-making processes respecting working conditions for the staffs of our own House of Commons, the Senate and the Governor General, for example. Many years ago when this matter was being debated my friend from Winnipeg wondered why this, the epitomé of democracy, denied its employees one of the fundamental rights of a democratic society, the right to collectively form their views and express them to their employer. Perhaps someone in government should at least find out whether our employees would like to be organized. There are ways to do this which would assure the confidentiality of their views as individuals, whilst permitting their collective position to be known.

A lot of things are going to happen shortly which will highlight the necessity for government action. There is a very real belief that some 50,000 public employees in this country have the fundamental right to wage parity. Since 1934, we have been labouring under an archaic unprincipled philosophy of prevailing rates; that is to say, rates paid to government employees are on a par with similar job classifications in the surrounding area. It is difficult to believe that any government would maintain this unfair and unjust treatment of employees in the public service. The public service and Crown corporations ought to pay the same wages in Victoria as in St. John's, Newfoundland, in Halifax as in Winnipeg, Calgary or Toronto. Why is it that 50,000 public servants, 35,000 of whom are civilian employees with the Department of National Defence, can have a job in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia and be paid $1.85 less than the rate in Vancouver for the same type of work? How do we expect to achieve national unity and avoid divisiveness unless government accepts the responsibility for taking the lead? We cannot have national unity when a machinist in the dockyard in Halifax is getting $1.05 less than a machinist in Esquimalt. This condition will persist as long as this government operates in secrecy, behind the screen of confidential reports. If I had my way I would reduce to one dollar every fee paid for consultants reports by every department of government so long as those reports remain confidential and are not made available to Members of Parliament.

Let us get on with the necessary changes in the Public Service of Canada, and let us do this by looking at the Bryden report. What is in it that makes the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) afraid to release it? Neither the President of the Privy Council nor the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is in the chamber, and perhaps this is an indication of their interest in what is going on and a measure of the true interest of the government in this matter. That is how they show their interest in the people who are true and loyal servants of the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak on the question of staff relations in the public service as well as the Public Service Employment Act. This subject is of fundamental importance for a member of this House representing a riding such as mine located in the shadow of the Peace Tower.

Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I think we are in a position of guessing with respect to the Bryden report because I do not know more about it than they do. I feel that the Bryden report has no special status among the many reports that are continuously prepared by officials and others for the benefit of the government in power to help them make enlightened decisions to administer this country with efficiency. Some will suggest that the government has neither the right nor the privilege to commission or have prepared any report liable to throw light on any important question and I am sure that by appointing a three-member committee presided, I was told, by the minister responsible, this government wanted to keep it self up-to-date on the possible amendments to the legislation governing federal civil servants.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the way which I think bargaining could be carried on between employers and employees in the public service. It will be remembered that the government announced in the Speech from the Throne that it would introduce amendments to the Public Service Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Numerous favourable comments have been made in the press since last January 4. I think the public servants' optimism is justified in that field.

Obviously, the government does not intend to bring major amendments to the Public Service Act before having consultations with union leaders, with whom it will have discussions beforehand.

For many months—even many years I am told—since 1971, I think the Bryden report has been prepared; the opposition has asked that it be tabled in the House. Many questions have been put on the order paper, including one by the hon. member for Darmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), namely question No. 148 asking the government if it intends to publish the Bryden report, and if so when, if not why.

I believe that this request is only the last of many others that have been made in this connection in the House.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) replied on that occasion that the drafting of the Bryden report was subject to the condition that the document was internal and confidential and for the exclusive use of the department through which the Public Service Staff Relations Board reports to Parliament. This is why it has not been made public. However, when the bill to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act is introduced in the House, the government will decide, after looking at the situation, whether public interest makes it necessary to publish that report.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) also replied to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, on January 12, 1973, "that the Bryden committee report had been submitted to the government for its advice", adding that "it was not intended upon the setting of the committee that the report would be made a public document".

Mr. Speaker, it should be desired to promote harmonious and productive relations between the employer and employee associations. On the other hand, I believe that the government is entitled to have studies and reports prepared in order to throw light on a situation and to provide for any contingency. Otherwise, people could charge the government with not availing itself of the tools that can be supplied by expert officials.

Nowadays, public men often pay more attention to the patterns of a policy than to the policy itself, and I believe that we should realize it is essential, before setting objectives—and that is the way I do define the word policy—to gather evidence and to avail ourselves of the expertise of the professional people in the public service.

[English]

In 1966, the government undertook to provide for the public servants of Canada a system of collective bargaining. Since public servants did not fall under the jurisdiction of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act administered by the Department of Labour and the Canada Labour Relations Board, nor under the several provincial statutes administered by the respective provincial departments of labour and provincial labour relations boards, it became necessary to introduce legislation to provide for such a system.

On April 25, 1966, the late Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, the then prime minister, moved the following resolution, as recorded on page 4242 of Hansard:

> That is it expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a system of collective bargaining applicable to employees in the public service of Canada and for the resolution of disputes that may arise in the negotiation or conclusion of collective agreements applicable to such employees; to establish a process for the presentation of grievances of employees arising in connection with their employment and to establish a system for the adjudication of grievances of employees; to provide for the establishment of a board, to be known as the Public Service Staff Relations Board, which shall be responsible for the administration of the said measure and to provide further for the constitution and appointment of such other authorities, officers and employees as are required in connection with the administration of the said measure.

The then prime minister went on to say, as recorded at page 4244 of Hansard for April 25, 1966:

In developing this new legislation the government has had certain general objectives in mind: First, to protect the public interest; second, to respond in an understanding and responsible manner to the aims and aspirations of its organized employees; third, to preserve the capacity of the public service to function efficiently in serving the people of Canada and, fourth, to respect the principles underlying industrial relations law and practice in Canada.

[Translation]

It is an acknowledged fact that the passage, in 1967, of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and of the Public Service Employment Act was a real breakthrough in the field of hiring and staff relations practices in the public service. Better still, these acts have been recognized as models of their kind and many other countries have seen fit to copy them and sent representatives here to study them. These pieces of legislation have drawn the world's attention, and I understand that the delegates who have been observing their application in Canada found them in most cases forward-looking, original and progressive.

[English]

In many ways the Public Service Staff Relations Act has achieved the objectives that were expressed in 1966 by the then prime minister. Although the legislation has been in effect for less than six years, over 300 collective agreements have been concluded by direct negotiation. There were at least 300 collective bargaining agreements and only five were settled by the strike route. I think this is a good record. Nevertheless, the government does not take a nonchalant attitude toward strikes in the public service. On the contrary, the government is acutely aware of the impact of public service strikes and is most anxious to assure that every reasonable effort is made to conclude collective agreements with its employees without disruption of service.

• (1730)

Moreover, the government has undertaken a review of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. In announcing the review, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), through whom the Public Service Staff Relations Board reports to parliament, said:

The system of collective bargaining under the Public Service Staff Relations Act has been functioning for almost four years and sufficient experience has been gained to warrant an analysis and assessment of the act at this time. All interested parties including employee organizations and government agencies and departments, will be invited to express their views and recommendations in writing. The intention is to provide a vehicle whereby the views of interested parties can be co-ordinated and assessed in order that the government may clearly identify areas of concern and determine if revision of the act is required.

This was at the beginning of the Bryden committee hearings.

[Translation]

In my opinion, there should be a will to promote harmonious and productive relations between the employer and employee associations. This assumption does not negate in the least any possible conflicts. On the contrary, it should be admitted that disputes and conflicts will arise even under a sound system, but they reflect the positive climate that should prevail between the employer and employee representatives.

The settlement of conflicts between employers and employees depends largely on the spirit which will prevail during the resolution of those disputes. It is important that the legislation governing collective bargaining within the public service make it possible to settle disputes so that both parties involved may reach a satisfactory agreement which, through the solution of those problems, will reflect a responsible attitude.

However, let us not forget the major responsibility of the government and its employees which is to ensure an efficient service that meets the needs adequately. No staff relations system within the public service can be satisfactory if it does not take into account the legitimate and reasonable interests not only of the Canadian public but also those of the public servants.

[English]

On numerous occasions the government has expressed its intentions in regard to personnel relations. For example, on September 21, 1972, in an open letter to Mr. Barnes the executive director of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

In answer to your letter of September 6 setting out a number of questions of concern to the members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, let me assure you that the government is prepared to reconsider any legislation, on the basis of experience. As you know, the government and the Liberal Party have received numerous and varied expressions of opinion on the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act to which you have referred.

In regard to the Public Service Superannuation Act, you request my views relating to a full escalation formula which would maintain the relative value of pensioners' incomes when compared to those of persons continuing in the employ of the public service.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government is open to collective bargaining and intends to consider closely advantages which could result from amendments.

Because my time seems to be nearly up, Mr. Speaker, I should like to go back to one of my hon. colleague's remarks to the effect that there had been an effort to bring about linguistic balance in the public service. I am not aware whether the Bryden report deals with bilingualism; since my colleague mentioned it, I can do so as well. I believe he spoke of historical objectives and linguistic balance. Linguistic balance, Mr. Speaker, is something we must achieve. We are working to that end. It is an important measure, necessarily involving many difficulties, but it is an absolute objective for the public service, which is a bilingual institution.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on a matter that I consider to be of great importance to this country, that of institutional bilingualism. Bilingualism in the public service is recognized to be a deserving cause, and I would remind you that this is stated very clearly in section 2 of the Official Languages Act. To quote:

> The English and French languages are the official languages of Canada for all purposes of the Parliament and Government of Canada . . .

The act also compels every federal department and agency to serve the public in both languages, not only in the national capital but in any area where there is a significant demand for this service.

In my opinion, it follows quite clearly from this that the government and the public service must make sure that the qualifications for some jobs include theoretical and practical knowledge of both official languages, French and English, so as to attain the objective of institutional bilingualism.

It is worth reminding the House, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Languages Act, which all parties supported in 1969, was intended as a tangible and concrete sequel to the original statement by the late right hon. Mr. Pearson in 1966, which was repeated by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

The government and, in my opinion, the public service too, have remained conscious of these objectives and of the principles of justice and equity that must prevail, and have laid down guidelines along which the administration is to be brought to implement the principles I have just mentioned.

There can be no doubt that in such a complex and critical undertaking, these guidelines are open to different interpretations so that very often, unless we use all our goodwill to understand them correctly, they may give rise to misgivings that are not altogether justified.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a short paragraph from an article published in Le Droit on October 27, 1972, signed by Mr. Alain Duhamel and dealing with bilingualism, staff relations and the public service in general, and more particularly with negotiations concerning working conditions. Mr. Duhamel says, and I quote:

> By dealing only or almost exclusively with bilingualism in the public service, area candidates dwelled on the most visible component of the climate of concern among public servants. It is unfortunate that the debate at the constituency level did not cover all the other aspects of the relationship between the government and its employees.

Bilingualism may have been one of the most discussed topics here in the last two years, and with good reason. There were calls for justice and for several other things. I am still wondering whether the complaints were founded. On reading Mr. Spicer's annual report, one would think that the other side should have complained instead of the one which claimed to have cause for alarm. I could read excerpts from Mr. Spicer's report on the matter, but it might be preferable to postpone that till later.

One thing interests me greatly: we must now tackle an important question, that of working conditions in the civil service, labour relations and employment criteria. It would seem that the government wishes to negotiate, review and perhaps change the law with a view to giving civil servants some recognition in the field of employment, vested rights, and the laws they are entitled to, in order to enable them to become first class employees—which they are—to be treated as such in Canada.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa East).]

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I observe there are one or two members who wish to speak so I shall make my remarks very brief. May I say it is not my intention to raise a point of order, but I do wish that we in this House were in order at this time. Because there is a Standing Order about a quorum, I hope that something might be done to make sure that we do have enough members here. It would be a shame to have this House adjourn, in view of the important business that is before us tonight, as I am not formally raising a point of order.

The motion before us is very simple and direct: it calls for the tabling of the Bryden report. I have on the order paper a similar motion which was debated a week ago, and therefore my support for this motion is very clear. I go along with the arguments made this afternoon by the mover of the motion before us today for this report to be tabled.

It seems to me that the public service and also parliament have the right to know what is in the Bryden report, which was made after an examination of the whole question of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. However, the debate this afternoon has only touched on that issue now and then: it has ranged over the whole question of the adequacy of our personnel relations and of the legislation governing the public service, so I want to say a word or two on that matter. Since I did not raise the other point of order to which I referred, I hope that no one will raise a point of order against my straying a little from the precise subject matter of the motion.

I feel that the time has come for the government to take a closer look at some of the grievances and complaints made by public servants. The whole question of how collective bargaining is working needs to be reviewed. In particular, the complaints that public servants have about certain matters relating to pensions should be given much more active consideration than they are receiving at the present time. Many improvements to the Public Service Superannuation Act itself need to be made. Then there is the burning question of the escalation of pensions after retirement which, in the case of public servants, is still limited to an annual increase of 2 per cent whereas in some other categories that limit has been removed. These are matters that ought to be dealt with without delay.

I want also to make a point regarding our employees in this very building. The hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Gauthier) correctly recounted some of the history behind the Public Service Staff Relations Act. He pointed out that under the direction of the late Mr. Pearson a bill was brought in and referred to a special committee. I remind him and the House that when that committee reported on the Public Service Staff Relations Act, it made a recommendation to the effect that something comparable should be established for employees of the House of Commons, the other place and the Library of Parliament.

As the hon. member for Ottawa East pointed out, prior to the passing of the Public Service Staff Relations Act the only collective bargaining that we had in the federal field was that provided by what is now part V of the Canada Labour Code. But that did not cover public servants. Now we have the Public Service Staff Relations Act which does cover public servants—those who are, in effect, engaged by Treasury Board—but no such collective bargaining legislation covers employees of the House of Commons, the other place and the Library of Parliament. Their immediate employers seem to be the Commissioners of Internal Economy. Just as there is a Public Service Staff Relations Act to regulate labour relations between Treasury Board and public servants, in 1966, I believe it was, or perhaps in 1967, our committee felt there should be comparable arrangements for collective bargaining between the Commissioners of Internal Economy and the employees of the three entities that operate here on Parliament Hill.

I regret very much that that recommendation has been treated just as a pious sentiment and has lain dormant in the report all these years. I think the time has come to practise what we ourselves have proclaimed. Here we are, the Parliament of Canada: we say that the people in the private sector should have collective bargaining, that employees in the public sector and employees of the public service should also have collective bargaining, but for our own employees on this Hill no such arrangement exists. All we have is a pious recommendation. I think the time has come for something to be done about this situation.

At least I have enjoyed something this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. Most of us have the experience of getting up to speak and finding other hon. members walking out. Having drawn attention to the fact that a certain Standing Order should be observed, it has been my pleasure to see a few members come in while I was speaking, and I believe that we are now legally constituted.

Mr. Reid: Only under threat, Stanley.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few moments to speak to this matter. I listened with great interest to my colleague and friend, the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Gauthier), make what I thought was a magnificient defence of the status quo, a defence of the posture of inactivity. I think this, from a member who holds a seat in this area, is to be regretted. He said that the Bryden report may not have or did not have any special status but was typically an internal government report, a report to advise government. I want to say to my colleague through you, Mr. Speaker, that it may be that way to the government, because this sometimes characterizes their attitude toward the public service, but it certainly is not an ordinary report to the public servants themselves.

As I recollect the history of this report, having read it—though neither the hon. member nor I were here at the time—according to my understanding the public service staff associations were hurried into preparing their submissions for this particular committee because it was a matter of some urgency at the time for the government to deal with these matters. This urgency, which began some years ago, has now become mired in bureaucratic red tape of the kind that seems to characterize the government. One may suspect that these recommendations by an independent committee, following input from staff associations which speak for thousands and thousands of public servants, represented proposals so far reaching that the government did not have the stomach to face up to them. That is one of the possible reasons. Whatever the reason, the delay cannot be justified merely by saying this is an internal document, because this matter is important to the lives and future of many public servants not only in this area but in the whole of Canada.

At the meeting of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates we had the pleasure of hearing the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) discuss the whole question of appeals when dealing with problems in connection with bilingualism. He said—I think I quote his words correctly—that generally speaking the Public Service Commission is a court of appeal from departmental decisions. He went on to say that the Public Service Commission has contact with people in connection with appeals involving the whole question of merit, but has nothing to do with appeals of cases which involve discipline.

We do not know this, but it may well be that the Bryden committee report recommended to the government that the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission ought to be extended to matters of discipline within departments. It may have recommended that people who are dismissed or dealt with in any way from a disciplinary point of view ought to have the right of appeal to that court. For all we know, the committee report may have gone even further. It may have said that the Public Service Commission ought not to be the tribunal to which public servants look; that perhaps for all matters of appeal, whether they are with respect to discipline or merit, there ought to be an independent tribunal. We do not know that. None the less, these matters are important.

I suggest that not only should justice be done to public servants but it must appear to be done. I am sure that when public servants gather to discuss the relationship of themselves and their staff associations to their employer, they wonder whether justice is being done with respect to withholding something so fundamental, or whether it even appears to be done. I think they can be forgiven if they decide that justice is not being done. The procedure, as mentioned by the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Gauthier), of continually evading or failing to answer questions on the production of the report makes them feel that they are not being looked after.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, the time has come when pensions ought to be dealt with and the whole matter of collective bargaining of public servants, and the parameters within which bargaining and negotiation take place, ought to be looked at. This report may well be an important document containing the views of a dedicated person after hearing the evidence which staff associations submitted in their briefs.

The hon. member for Ottawa East defended the status quo by quoting the Speech from the Throne, the catch-all of promises none of which has seen the light of day to any great extent in legislation. I think it was on January 16 that I asked the President of the Treasury Board when he would bring forward the amendments to the public service acts. He said he would consult the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and advise the House. He hoped it would be this session, but he was not sure. This indicates the rather low priority that the government places on the whole matter of improving the lot of public servants, not only in the national capital, but in all of Canada.

There is no doubt that when parliament passed the Public Service Staff Relations Act in March 1967, it was welcomed by the Public Service Alliance and by many individuals. It was a major step forward. It ought not to have been the last step forward, but to date it is almost the last step forward that has been taken.

I have always hoped that this matter would come forward and that before the public service staff associations were asked to examine the legislation promised in the Speech from the Throne they could examine the recommendations contained in the Bryden committee report. When the promised legislative changes are brought forward, public servants will be in a disadvantageous position. Their position certainly will not be advanced by the fact that the government has seen fit not to bring forward this matter. I think public servants and their associations would have been better served if this report had been made public.

The psychology of the government is not really of justice. With all due respect to the government, its stand on this matter is inexplicable in light of the circumstances and the importance of the government of Canada as the major employer in this country. No amount of soothing, syrupy, empty phrases or empty defences of the status quo by members opposite will justify the failure of the government to release this report.

Questions were asked on May 6, 1972, March 7, 1971, and in April, 1971, concerning the subject matter of the motion we are debating today. All these questions contained the simple request that the government produce the report. The government may or may not rely on the report, depending on its point of view, but in failing to produce it the government has done the public servants of Canada and their staff associations a disservice. I am sorry to have to say that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING NEIGHBOURHOOD IMPROVEMENT, REHABILITATION, OWNERSHIP, NEW COMMUNITIES, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-133, to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the massive participation of my colleagues from all sides of the House to the debate on this bill proves that it bears on a capital problem which unfortunately has been neglected for too many years. To prove may point, may I be allowed to refer to an article published in the magazine Le Consommateur canadien (The Canadian Consumer) for April 1973, which proves that we are ahead of our times, as this is still the month of March. In this article entitled "Les consommateurs et le logement" (The Consumer and Housing), Mr. Speaker, the first paragraph reads as follows:

> The average Canadian does not consider himself as a housing consumer. He certainly does for food, gasoline, clothing and daily services, but not at all for housing. This is something too substantial to be consumed. Furthermore, it is more a matter of investment for those who own a house. Most Canadians are used to capital gains from real estate to think about the cost of housing from a consumer's point of view.

Mr. Speaker, housing has been the exclusive field of builders or developers for too long. In many cases, builders have been incompetent and developers have been unscrupulous.

On Monday last, we heard the excellent speech made by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) who explained to us in revealing details how the poor consumer has to struggle against odds when he is buying land or against developers who are more interested in "making a buck" than in building houses properly. It is an inacceptable fact that he has to face the misunderstanding if not the dishonesty of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation management.

No wonder these housing sharks undertake lawsuits which are as ridiculous as they are enormous. We are aware that my colleague from Portneuf is being sued for $500,000 with both the CBC and the newspaper Le Soleil, by a Quebec area homebuilder.

As it is obvious that the small wage earners are having difficulties in the housing field, and there is also the fact that my colleague from Portneuf is now feeling the consequences.

• (2010)

Why is it so? Let me refer once more to the article I was speaking about a few moments ago. The second paragraph states, and I quote:

> Housing is undoubtedly a consumer item. It is something everybody needs and has to use, under one form or another. It is something which costs money in one way or another. It is also an item which absorbs usually between 25 and 30 per cent of the family income in Canadian cities. As a matter of fact, housing represents one third in the consumer price index. At times, in low income families—

This is, Mr. Speaker, I believe, the important point of the paragraph I am reading.

I continue to quote:

—who do not live in public housing, it may swallow up to half of the family resources. The general rule according to which "the poor is the one who pays more", applies very well to housing, because compared to middle income families, those who are in the 20 per cent bracket at the bottom of the income scale spend twice as much for housing.

The average housewife or head of the family is not as well informed or in as good a position about housing costs as about the prices of cars, groceries, drinks or dry cleaning. Even though a house might be the most important purchase they do during their life, it is the item of their budget on which they have the least degree of control. The same is true when it comes to renting a place to live.

The fact that buying a house or renting a place to live are not everyday occurrencies puts the consumer, either single or married, in a position twice as vulnerable. If we were to buy a house every month or even every year, we would behave more like housing consumers. We would begin to know in what way the dice are loaded against the purchaser: the consumer.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, low income groups are being pushed around. They take for granted that there is nothing they can do about it and let each and everyone meddle in the field of housing, almost without complaining. How could it be otherwise when one sees that even government organizations fail to protect their interests. And in order to support that allegation, Mr. Speaker, I will refer once again to that article, the value of which cannot be put in question since it was written by the senior consultant of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Ottawa.

Thus, I wonder how it is that the senior consultant of the CMHC sees problems just like we do ourselves and that effective programs in that area are still on the drawing board.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, may I quote an important paragraph from the article written by the senior advisor of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation:

For instance, let us simply look at two aspects of the National Housing Act in relation to the consumer. If you buy a new house with a mortgage loan under the Act, an inspector will come and look at the project at least three times during construction. The point is that he does not come to protect you, but to protect the creditor who provides the loan. As a buyer, you have no formal guarantee as to materials and labour, but you may of course hire an inspector or an expert at your own expense. When you buy an automobile, a refrigerator or a television set, you get a guarantee that protects you to a degree, but you get no guarantee when you buy a house that is much more expensive and is paid over a much longer period.

It is almost unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, to find that one of the senior advisers of a corporation which is directly connected to the Department of Urban Affairs gives valuable advice to the minister when saying: Your legislation is not meant for people with a low income; it does not assist the man who earns an average salary or income. The law does not protect them at all. On the contrary, it merely protects the investors, the creditors, the people who have capital and make it profit.

Mr. Speaker, this situation is ridiculous and, again, when we find that some people in the right place are capable of giving appropriate advice, we are truly wondering.

At the risk of being lengthy, I should like to quote another paragraph of Mr. Laidlaw's comments which support my view:

If you obtain a mortgage loan under the same act, you must make a down payment of 1 per cent . . . of the total amount of the loan, to be paid into the Mortgage Insurance Fund controlled by the CMHC. For whose protection? The buyer's? Not at all. The purpose of the fund is to protect the lender if necessary. But, and there is the rub, you make this payment even though the lender is already holding a mortgage on the property. It seems strange that consumers seem never to have wondered about this. It could be thought that if lenders need additional protection over and above the mortgage it would be up to them to finance it. It could also happen that consumers might wonder why they are called upon to pay for protection to lenders. In an editorial in the October 28 issue of the Financial Post, it is pointed out that the MIF has now gone over the impressive figure of $300 million, "whereas" applications for compensation have reached only $10 million. Consumers have shown themselves to be willing contributors to the consolidation of mortgage loan operations.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot overstress, and I hope the minister is paying carefull attention, my astonishment over the fact that a public servant, a senior adviser of the CMHC should make such recommendations without our having had the proper reaction before today.

I sincerely hope the bill we are to consider will correct this. I also hope, Mr. Speaker, that in this field as in all others, policies truly geared to the people will finally be implemented. It is evident that housing is a very vulnerable point for Canadians and that housing is not something you can do without.

Whether we like it or not, Mr. Speaker, we have to have shelter, especially in a country like ours where life is a constant struggle against the elements. That is no doubt what brings, once again, the CMHC's chief adviser to write the following, and I quote:

Housing is a field in which demand is constant, and the average consumer is especially vulnerable. To begin with, it is not something optional, least of all in the Canadian climate. Also, not only is it a highly complex field involving economic, social, legal and regulation factors at various levels, but also the consumer's choice is very limited. An average family can easily find itself caught in a situation from which it is very hard to escape: legal texts tend to be irrevocable, moving is expensive and takes its toll on family life, and social barriers often can not be broken down. Nobody can choose where he is going to live as freely as he can choose a car.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can see from these few paragraphs of the article just how deeply Canada has been affected by the housing question. I might congratulate the minister on having become aware of this very acute problem, in the light of which Bill C-133 now before us deserves our closest attention.

There are in fact economic and social factors to complicate the finest principles a bill can contain. One can therefore come to ask oneself to what extent Bill C-133 can fill in the gaps we have seen.

I should like at this point, Mr. Speaker, to take the case of the province of Quebec, which for years—and nothing was done about it until five or six years ago—has been apart from the other provinces as far as housing and homes are concerned. I remember quite well that even 15 or 20 years ago Central Mortgage and Housing was refusing almost every loan application from potential home owners in the province of Quebec, and it was not because of racial or linguistic discrimination but merely because housing concepts are different in a country where regions are quite different one from the other.

For one loan granted in the province of Quebec, 50 or 100 were granted in Ontario. Why? Simply because those setting out the housing standards and regulations were acting on the basis of an Anglo-Saxon concept. It is as simple as that, Mr. Speaker, and at that time the administration of the act became impossible. How can you justify that?

Today the problem is perhaps less extensive but I think here again that the legislation should take into account the difference between regions in the field of housing. It must be recognized that the French Canadian in Saint-Marc-des-Carrières or Portneuf does not perhaps have exactly the same concept of housing than the man in Edmonton or Vancouver. Then it would not be necessary to legislate and impose regulations which go against his own individual thinking.

The result has been a certain kind of discrimination which was not deliberate, however in the future this will have to be totally remedied.

There is another problem that must also be considered when discussing a question such as this and still in connection with the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker; people are very poorly informed about the benefits of federal legislation.

I wonder, for example, to what extent municipalities in Quebec are aware of the fact that Central Mortgage and Housing can help them solve their sewage disposal problems and all sorts of other problems relating to housing.

Then, I reflect that the minister should have public relations officers whose responsibility would be to explain to the municipalities, in the province of Quebec in particular, all the possibilities contained in the act, and I am anxious that this new act is passed so that it can be used.

This is what occurred in Quebec, I think. The advantages offered in some federal acts, because of continuing constitutional disputes, end up being ignored by Quebecers. There again, the victims are the common people. Therefore, I wonder whether, in such a situation, the minister should not consider having very specific information distributed and see to it that his departmental officials are prepared to inform the municipalities.

Here is another point with which I should like to deal also. The importance of urban centres like Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, among others, is generally acknowledged, but more and more villages and small towns are being forgotten, which is most unfortunate. Many of our current problems, especially housing problems, simply result from excessive centralization, and should the government policy make for even greater centralization, where will that lead us?

We want to control pollution, to preserve our environment, and we keep doing every thing to promote further deterioration of some demographically strategic centres. In fact, any housing policy likely to encourage decentralization should be supported, because such a goal is extremely important. Increased decentralization will result, by the same token, in investors being urged to diversify their investments, which will serve the best interests of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the article I was just quoting is quite important and I would advise the minister to have frequent meetings with his main adviser from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, who will explain to him how to come up with an adequate piece of legislation.

Some will say that as a matter of fact Bill C-133 will remedy all the shortcomings in the housing field. However, we all know that perhaps the most important thing will be the regulations that will follow as everything depends upon them. If they are not drawn up as they should, the legislation might be inadequate and even the best provisions of this bill will be useless.

This is what motivates my being in agreement with the Social Development Council of Canada. In its memorandum to all hon. members, on January 30, 1973, this Council seems to have grasped the problem quite accurately. In fact, its criticisms of Bill C-133, are accompanied with recommendations and general comments with which I am in general agreement.

Let me quote a few excerpts from the brief we received from this organization:

> The housing committee of the CCSD finds that Bill C-133 includes a number of remarkable amendments that will make it a better legislation than the former one.

That is at least something!

And I quote further:

> —We are particularly happy that the compulsory sharing of costs by provinces and municipalities has been removed from most programs, that important and new provisions on co-operative housing and on new communities have been added, that the leasing of land development areas is facilitated and that the development of lands outside neighbourhood improvement areas is provided for.
> We are still wondering how this bill will truly improve housing condition for low income groups. This is a persistent concern because these amounts of the grants—which are determining factor in order to know whether the proposed programs will be beneficial to the low income groups—are not specified generally in the bill and are left for regulations. In the committee's opinion, Parliament rather than this government should determine who will benefit from state-subsidized programs. We, therefore, believe that as far as possible the amounts of the proposed assistance should be stated in the bill.

It will be easily understood therefore, that I make the same reservations as the Canadian Council on Social Development with regard to this bill.

We recognize that the principles stated in Bill C-133 seem to be excellent but we are wondering about its lack of precision. How will it be remedied? As a matter of fact, senior officials of the department will be the ones to enact those regulations. And that is why we are in expectancy and are wondering what will be those regulations exactly.

In concluding my remarks, I also agree with the following remarks in the submission which was presented to us:

> Since the new housing programs are only outlined in this bill and it is obvious that their success or failure will mostly depend on the relevancy of the regulations under the act, we urge the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to conduct extensive consultations on the drafting of the regulations, not only with provincial and municipal housing authorities and the building industry, but also with other segments, the participation of which is essential to achieve the purposes in the field of housing. Namely the sponsors of non-profit housing and co-operatives and groups of citizens of all kinds.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the minister is really aware of the recommandations that were made to him from all sides, and especially if he takes heed of the recommandations of organizations most concerned with the welfare of the small wage earner, of those who dream of owning their home, he should give those people the greatest consideration.

We should have had a long time ago measures for the benefit of all families, especially young couples, because all things are interdependent. And if nowadays, especially in the province of Quebec, there is an alarming drop in the birth rate—when one considers that once our province had the largest families—housing has much to do with it, I believe, and when a couple cannot enjoy a minimum of comfort because it is too hard and too expensive to build a house, the social consequences are disastrous.

That is why when dealing with the housing problem, we are tackling a much more serious and important one; if we solve the housing problem, it will be easier to deal with other social problems.

[English]

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, the average Canadian does not think of himself as a consumer of housing. Food, fuel, clothing and everyday services, yes; but housing, no: it is somehow too substantial to be consumed and, moreover, for those who own a house it is more like an investment. The majority of Canadians are too accustomed to the capital gain attached to home ownership to be much concerned about the cost of housing from the consumer viewpoint. Yet, Mr. Speaker, housing is clearly a consumer item. Quite possibly this could be the reason the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) was switched from the consumers affairs department and put, in fact, in charge of the biggest consumer problem of all.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no; John Young recommended him.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, housing is something that everybody needs and must use in one form or another. It, of course, must be paid for in one way or another. Unfortunately, in this country it is not uncommon to see 25 per cent to 30 per cent, or even more of the family income eaten up by this cost. It is a fact that one-third of the consumer price index is represented by the cost of housing.

It is a sorry state, Mr. Speaker, when statistics verify that compared to the average, people in the lowest 20 per cent of income category in this country spend twice the proportion of their income for shelter as those at the other end of the scale. The exceptions, of course, are the low income families who have been able to secure far too little of the public housing that is available.

No consumer is more vulnerable than the home purchaser. If he had to buy a house every month, or even once a year, he would be much more aware of how great the odds are against him in buying a home. Events in the past few years have indicated a growing awareness and concern about the cost of cars, groceries and various food stuffs. And, Mr. Speaker, when I indicate that the scales are tipped against the buyer, consider for example just two aspects of the present National Housing Act in relation to the consumer. If you are buying a new home with a National Housing Act mortgage loan, an inspector will call at least three times during construction to examine the work in progress. To protect you is not his prime aim; his aim is to protect the lender who is providing the loan. As a purchaser, you get no firm guarantee of the materials and workmanship. You may hire an inspector or examiner on your own, but this is very seldom done. At least when you buy a car or a television set there is some kind of guarantee that gives you a measure of protection, but there is no firm guarantee when you take on the much costlier, long time purchase of a home. In most cases it is the most important purchase made in a person's lifetime.

Now, Mr. Speaker, add to this the fact that presently a 1 per cent premium is charged on the total loan as mortgage insurance held in trust and managed by Central Mortgage and Housing. One has to ask, for whose protection are you paying this 1 per cent? Are you paying for yourself as a buyer? No; the mortgage insurance fund is for the protection of the lender in case of default. But you, the buyer, pay the premium even though the lender already holds your mortgage. Consumers, strangely enough, never seem to question this arrangement. One would imagine that money lenders, if they needed extra protection over and above the mortgages that they hold, would provide it themselves at their own expense, or that consumers would at least question why they must pay so directly for safeguards for the lenders. On October 28 an editorial in the Financial Post pointed out that the mortgage insurance fund is now worth an impressive $300 million, while claims against it are only $10 million. Consumers have certainly paid well to ensure the operation of mortgage lenders.

So badly dealt with has been the consumer of housing or shelter that it is accurate to describe the consumer as a chap with hat in his hand, asking for this consideration or that consideration even though he is the one who is paying at every turn. This kind of ridiculous situation has made the consumer slowly more aware of the collective power that is needed for his own protection. We have seen this already in tenants' associations, where a united front has been presented to bargain with landlords. But, Mr. Speaker, there is still a long way to go to balance the scales as between supplier and seller on one hand and buyer and consumer on the other.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that judging from the statements and actions of the minister responsible for housing, or by any of the legislation provided by or introduced to the House of Commons, the government does not understand the current housing needs and problems of this country. It is not sufficient for the government to listen to only the demands of the provincial governments and to ignore the advice of people who are actually building the houses.

There can be no doubt in anyone's mind that the major contributing factor to over-all costs has been the accompanying spiralling cost of land. However, with all these problems it would be interesting to get an accurate estimate of the number of lots virtually ready for development in this country but for the long, long list of government regulations and red tape involved in clearing them prior to the issuance of construction permits.

• (2040)

It does not take a great amount of intelligence to estimate what would happen to the over-all cost of land if thousands of additional lots were put into the marketplace. And I do not refer to the feeble attempt of the NDP government of British Columbia which has enacted Bill 42 respecting the Land Commission Act. That bill is Marxist in tone, Marxist in ideal and Marxist in implementation.

An hon. Member: You will appreciate the day they passed that bill.

Mr. Reynolds: The NDP was the party of principle in the last election, but it sold out the people of this country and it is now afraid. I cannot wait for the next election in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Neither can we.

Mr. Reynolds: After that election, colleagues to my left will not need to make the long trip back to the province at weekends. Bill 42 is, quite simply, a bill that has no place in Canadian society, has no precedent in Canadian history and is contrary to the rights of every Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reynolds: It is certainly nice to see that my remarks are disturbing members of the NDP, because they do not like going home at weekends as much as they once did.

There was an opportunity to set an example in the make-up of that bill by offering serviced lands to municipalities for the purpose of providing inexpensive lots, but in fact that legislation has increased the value of lots presently available because all lands have been frozen indiscriminately. Every municipality has been relieved of its ability to plan for itself and all lands lie in the hands of appointed commissioners responsible to no one.

The principle of supplying inexpensive, serviced lots, however, does remain the key factor for major reductions in the total cost of a home to the consumer. In addition, a relaxation in the growing list of restrictions on subdivisions, and in the increasing requirements of elaborate local servicing would result in lower prices. Also, Mr. Speaker, let us not forget the federal sales tax on building materials. This must be considered, as well, as a factor in the high cost of housing.

We do not need another $1.5 million study by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to tell us what we already know, that in every region of Canada housing is needed and in every region of Canada there are different housing problems. The $1.5 expenditure is a complete waste of money.

Why, Mr. Speaker, does this government refuse to listen to the provinces? Why does this government refuse to accept the fact that the provinces know more about the needs in their area because, together with municipal governments, they have been building and controlling housing? Why will the federal government not get out of housing and let the provinces take over programs and the accompanying tax revenues to pay for them?

In the last five years, Mr. Speaker, one can examine several significant factors in the housing industry. Let us take some prices of residential building materials. I have picked Vancouver and typical spring selling prices. In the last five years, lumber per thousand board feet has almost doubled in price. The price of siding has doubled per thousand square feet, floor finishing has also almost doubled, and face brick has gone up approximately 50 per cent. Although the increases I have just mentioned sound considerable, I suggest that in many cases they are no greater than increases for products used in other industries. But let me just draw attention to one other particular item. This, Mr. Speaker, I refer to through personal knowledge.

In 1966, a contractor in Delta erected a 1,000-square foot, three-bedroom, no basement bungalow. The cost of the lot was $900. The price to the consumer of the finished product was $11,900. The difference, Mr. Speaker, between land and house was $11,000. The same contractor, in February of 1971 built an identical home in Haney, even farther from Vancouver. Again it was a 1,000-square foot, three-bedroom, no basement home. The lot price was $4,000. The finished price to the consumer was $19,500. The difference between the cost of the lot and that of the finished house was $15,500. The contractor was rewarded approximately the same amount for his efforts, but there was a 400 per cent increase in the price of the same sized lot in a period of five years.

The same contractor, in February of this year, in Aldergrove, British Columbia, 40 some miles from Vancouver, constructed a 1,000-square foot, three-bedroom, no basement home. The price to the consumer was $24,900. The price of the lot was $8,000. The difference between the price of the lot and the price to the consumer was $16,900. But, Mr. Speaker, now we are looking at an 800 per cent change in the price of the lot. Also, I am informed by the same individual that as of this month the cost of a lot of this size has risen another $1,000 because of the land freeze in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Balderdash!

Mr. Reynolds: That is what happens when an NDP government is given responsibility in this country.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I cannot speak for other hon. members, but I know it is difficult for the Chair to follow the speech of the hon. member who has the floor.

An hon. Member: It is illogical, that is why.

Mr. Reynolds: It does not please the NDP to hear comments that hurt them deeply. The conclusion, of course, that one can draw from all this is that the single, greatest contributing cause of the spiralling increase in the price of housing is the cost of land. Add to this, however, the regulatory additions, deletions and amendments that every builder must comply with for every area of every part of Canada and one soon becomes lost in the mess of tangled building restrictions and codes.

For example, the village of Lions Bay announced recently that they had adopted the 1970 National Building Code of Canada. However, for village purposes there were additions and deletions to the code. Those items have to do with changes in plans which refer to technical information, additional powers of building inspectors, building permits, completion dates, applications for permits, the responsibility of the owner, notification of the building inspector to obtain his inspection and approval, forms for footings and foundations completed in cases where the pouring of concrete is prohibited, etc. In addition, other regulations have to do with electrical permits, health inspections and septic tank approvals, all these being items whose over-all effect is to increase greatly the cost of the home without providing any real, additional benefit in the form of safety or guarantee to the home owner.

The question raised by many builders is, why is there a National Building Code at all when every municipality of every region of the country puts in its own amendments, changes, additions and deletions? Certainly the money spent by this administration in travelling across the country to tell us that there are differences in each region could have been more wisely invested in obtaining some kind of true National Building Code. Working with the provinces and municipalities, they could have approved the same items for each region of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment about Bill C-133, far too often referred to as the housekeeping bill. But I suggest that unless Bill C-133 is accompanied by a simultaneous move by the government to extricate itself from activities which can be properly performed by private enterprise, such as mortgage insurance, direct mortgage lending, etc., we face the danger of turning CMHC into an uncontrollable, bureaucratic colossus. I would like to point out that clause 7 of Bill C-133, which amends section 15 of the National Housing Act, will permit a contribution or grant by CMHC to a non-profit corporation of up to 10 per cent of the capital cost of a project. After such grant is received, the non-profit corporation is presumably entitled to obtain a loan equal to the total lending value, which is usually the total cost of the project. Technically, then, it would appear that, for instance, a non-profit organization which builds a $5 million senior citizens' project would initially be able to obtain a $500,000 grant from the government, and subsequently obtain the $5 million in mortgage funds, leaving the erstwhile organization with a net surplus of $500,000 for future worth-while projects in whatever field of endeavour they desire.

Mr. Speaker, in British Columbia we are very familiar with some of the worth-while projects which have been undertaken by organizations with this kind of money at their disposal. One of the most worth-while projects undertaken involved the payment of $10,000 to four drug addicts who were in prison!

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Reynolds: I will. Four convicts in my riding were given a total of $10,000 by this government to do a study on heroin. Of course, their reply was that we should legalize it and also abolish prisons. One of the four convicts on the project then left the country with $3,000 and a 17-year old girl from the neighbourhood. So it concerns me when this government talks about money being left over for erstwhile projects.

• (2050)

Present interest rates triple and often quadruple the actual cost of a home by the time it is paid for. But the government concerns itself more with legislation affecting the number of shirts that may be imported into this country than with the protection of the consumer of housing who has to pay thousands upon thousands of dollars just to provide himself and his family with a roof over their heads. So ridiculously expensive has housing become, Mr. Speaker, that jokes and stories about it are now commonplace.

I should like to close with a comment on the standing committees of the House of Commons. Under the present system, the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs encompasses the Department of Urban Affairs as well as the Department of National Health and Welfare. This committee presently has the departmental estimates as well as the old age pension legislation to consider. Heaven only knows when it will get to the housing bill.

Housing and urban affairs are major areas of concern which this country will face in the coming years. I would strongly recommend to the President of the Queen's Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that the government immediately set up a separate standing committee of the House to deal with housing and urban affairs in order that as members of parliament we can properly, and with haste, deal with the serious problems facing all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes allotted to me, I wish to draw the attention of hon. members on the serious problems which will remain in the housing field as a result of the inadequacies of the bill now under consideration.

The government recognizes the importance not to say the urgency of a speedy intervention to solve that major problem for all citizens, but once again it is unable to carry out the essential steps. Instead of grappling with the basic issue, it merely beats about the bush and amends the existing legislation.

The Canadians were not expecting the misgivings and half-measures in which the government delights. The Canadians are demanding an opportunity to live in decent dwellings at decent prices, which is in no way guaranteed in Bill C-133.

In some countries enjoying a tropical climate with sunshine and hot weather, a house is not a necessity.

In Canada, during the winter months, it is necessary to have not only a roof, but also walls and windows which keep the heat inside and keep the proverbial cold of the Canadian winter from sneaking in.

Of course, some well-to-do people follow migrating birds and, away from the cold, lounge around on the beaches of Florida or somewhere else, but the vast majority of Canadians must put up with the severity of our climate. It is therefore absolutely necessary that all these people may enjoy the protection of a decent house built to withstand wintry cold.

Unfortunately, the current situation falls far short of this need. In the report from the Senate special committee on poverty, one can read as follows:

> Task Force on Housing and Urban Development estimated there were 5,500,000 housing units in existence in Canada in 1968. Half a million of these were substandard.

I insist on this, half a million housing units were substandard. This means therefore that out of the 5,500,000 housing units in existence in Canada, half a million were below standards established on the basis of climate or social environment.

But that is not all. Coming back to the poverty report, and I quote:

> The number of families and individuals requiring housing is 5,700,000. It is as simple as that.
> The Task Force also noted that a minimum of 200,000 housing starts would be required between 1969 and 1973 simply to maintain the existing situation.

And yet, in 1970 alone, 190,528 housing starts have been made. So this means that over 200,000 Canadians are now deprived of housing while over half a million live in dwellings quite inadequate in view of our harsh climate.

This is a real scandal and despite its half measures and patchwork measures the government will fail to hush it up. When we know that over 700,000 Canadians or Canadian families are without a home, the time is long past for amending or patching up legislation which has helped such a situation to continue.

The government must deal with the disastrous housing situation with measures in keeping with the urgency and the seriousness of the problem.

Here are some measures that the government could have taken had it really wanted to get down to the roots of the unrest in the housing sector.

The government must first understand that for the average citizen the building of a house involves the purchase of land. If he must lay out $5,000 or $10,000 to buy the land, how will he then be able to cover the cost of the building and the materials if he does not earn a prime minister's salary? How will he be able to build his house if the cost of the land exceeds the amount he has available?

He never will unless the government undertakes to set up land banks for resale at reasonable prices and on conditions acceptable to citizens who wish to build their home. This first measure would result in bringing home building within closer reach of everyone and contribute to stop this despicable speculation which is flourishing in real estate.

The barons of the industry who "play" with land values and create artificial shortages to gratify their cupidity make exaggerated profits from the population. Real estate profits have gone up by over 54.8 per cent from 1971 to 1972. Such an increase in profits is improper and reflects excesses in this field.

So the government must protect the citizens against speculators, and the setting up of land banks for citizens who wish to build a home despite their limited salary is a solution which immediately comes to mind.

But the citizen who is lucky enough to get a lot for a good price has not overcome all the difficulties yet, far from it. He must buy the materials which will be used to build the house. So, he finds out that he must pay an 11 per cent sales tax on those building materials, a higher tax than the levy on luxury articles. One would imagine that for the government housing is a luxury.

It is true that when one is stretched out on a beach in Florida one does not realize that in winter a house is quite important.

The Créditistes have fought against that 11 per cent tax on building materials for a long time because they know it keeps thousands of Canadians from affording decent housing. The government alone is responsible for that situation. It knows that this tax has an extremely negative effect on all those who would like to build a house but who cannot afford to pay more than one tenth of its value.

The increase in the cost of building materials is also added to the 11 per cent tax. By the way, it might be pointed out that manufacturers and retailers of these materials have seen their profits go up by 35.8 per cent between 1971 and 1972. This considerable increase in their profits also came from the pocket of the average citizen and that is another scandal.

As can be seen, the government and their good friends the building speculators are doing quite well. The government is getting richer through the 11 per cent tax while the large builders increase their annual profits in proportions out of reach of the imagination.

I once again urge the government to eliminate the 11 per cent tax on building materials. Building a house is no luxury and the government must understand it.

In that area again, the problems of the citizen who wishes to build a home are not over. If he is a low or middle income worker, he will have to borrow the money which will allow him to provide his family with a home. He is then confronted by the most absurd stupidity of our present system. Since interest rates are spiralling at a speed which evades governmental control, the citizen will have to pay more than four times the value of his house over the years.

With the present interest rate, a $18,000 house costs between $52,000 and $53,000 to the owner over 25 years, and $75,000 over 40 years. A $20,000 house will cost $58,000 over 25 years and approximately $84,000 over 40 years.

This situation is tearful. Of course, the usurers who shamelessly take advantage of the scarcity of money find it laughable because they benefit from the system.

A man runs into debt for 40 years simply to provide his family with a home for which he will pay three or four times its real value, and some people think this is normal.

But we have not yet reached the utmost degree of stupidity in this area. When a person has to run into debt for 40 years in order to pay for a house that is guaranteed only for a period of 20 years under present standards, we reach the most incredible aspect of the present system.

We grant a 40-year loan to someone so that he can buy a house designed to last 20 years, and some people think this is normal.

The leader of the Social Credit Party (Mr. Caouette) is perfectly right in stating that under the present system, you mortgage tomorrow's salary so that you can buy today products that were made yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that a system which tolerates such absurdities can go on poisoning the lives of millions of citizens who normally should have access to the resources of our country. The government should lend an ear to the thousands of Canadian families which are deprived of the bare necessity, namely, a home.

Here are three measures which the Social Credit Party of Canada has proposed to all Canadians throughout the electoral campaign, and I want to remind the government of them today, so that it may consider the true wishes and needs of the Canadian people. I quote:

First:

(1) Promotion of single family dwelling construction through guaranteed long term loans at a maximum interest rate of 3 per cent . . .

(2) The owners of single family dwelling will also be eligible for an income tax deduction not exceeding the amount of their mortgage interest and the total of their municipal and school taxes, that reduction being limited however to $1,000 a year . . .

The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would limit its role to that of a financial agent for mortgage loans to constructors of single family or multiplex dwellings and to making available to the provinces and municipalities the funds required for public services for those housing units (water, sewage, fire, sewage-water treatment services) through loans covering administration costs, in co-operation with the Bank of Canada and the National Credit Board.

These are the suggestions we put forward many times and in various occasions. The government seems to turn a deaf ear to the measures that we advocate on behalf of all Canadians who suffer from the anti-social policies of this government.

But the government will not make fun of the aspirations of Canadians much longer. It seemed prepared to listen to the voice of the people after the October 30 election, but after the speech from the throne, it has sunk into its usual state of lethargy.

The Canadian people are tired of waiting for legislation that meet their needs. They are fed up with half measures and hesitations. They are fed up with band-aid and patchwork. What they want—and the Creditiste say it again and again to the government—are measures which will enable all Canadians to live in decent and adequate housing suited to our severe climate, and also measures which will not require individuals to go into debt for 40 years and pay four or five times the price of the house he wants to build or buy.

This is what we ask of the government, Mr. Speaker, and we make this request on behalf of half a million homeless people forgotten by the government.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, although there are some good features in this bill it falls short of meeting the real needs of housing and urban development in Canada at the present time. I must, of course, applaud the good features. Most of them—in fact, I think all of them—were recommended in the report of the task force on housing and urban development four years ago. Consequently, I am delighted and would be churlish if I did not congratulate the minister for finally seeing the light and introducing some very necessary amendments that should have been made many years ago.

In order to meet the real needs of the Canadian people, however, we will require a much more comprehensive and effective approach. The housing situation in Canada has deteriorated very considerably since the mid-1950s. In the mid-1950s a working man with a decent wage could aspire to the ownership of a house. Today, in most parts of Canada, that is out of the question. As the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) pointed out last Thursday in his speech on behalf of this party, according to a study released recently by the Urban Development Institute of Canada, in 1961 an annual wage of $5,284 was needed to buy a house. This reflective figure was prepared by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In 1971 an income of $16,623 was needed to buy a house, and only 4 per cent of the population could afford it. This is really a shocking situation, one that is totally unacceptable for Canada. It is a prospect that must really depress the average working person in this country. So rather than making progress since the mid-1950s, we have slipped, and slipped badly, and something must be done about it.

The cheapest new house available in some of our bigger cities today is in the range of $38,000 to $40,000. A front page newspaper article in one of the Ottawa papers tonight indicates that the average single family dwelling in Ottawa costs $39,000. In Toronto, the cheapest row house, or town house as they are called, costs about $38,000. The cheapest single family dwelling in the metropolitan area of Toronto will be of the order of $45,000 minimum, because the latest lot sales in the metropolitan area of Toronto—and this is land well out into the suburbs—were at $24,500 each. That is for a 50-foot minimum lot without a building. It costs $24,500 for a piece of land on which there is nothing except a little bit of pipe in the ground that is necessary for the provision of water and the elimination of sewage.

It would be ridiculous, in fact it would be impossible, under the bylaws of any of the areas around metropolitan Toronto to build a house which cost less than $20,000, so the very minimum price for a new house, a little box on a 50-foot lot, would be $45,000. That would be no great mansion, I can assure you. In my opinion, this constitutes a national tragedy. It is a trend which cannot be allowed to continue. If it is allowed to continue it will constitute a catastrophe for Canada and for the standard of living to which our people aspire.

In a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the other day I said that if the present trend continues, by the year 2000 the cheapest new, single family house in the greater metropolitan Toronto area would be well in excess of $250,000. I hear some "oh's" and "ah's" and expressions of incredulity around the House. All you have to do is take the present prices and multiply them by the present rate of inflation, which is 5.8 per cent on an annual, year-to-year basis, and you find that by the end of the century, which is coming upon us very quickly, the cheapest single family dwelling house in the greater metropolitan Toronto area will be $250,000 or more. This will be well beyond the means of practically all of the citizens of that metropolitan area. In the face of this tragedy I think a radical approach is required and I would like to make some suggestions. The solution is a two-pronged attack. We must get the cost of housing down, and at the same time we must get incomes sufficiently high in order to meet the need of providing adequate housing. Only a simultaneous attack from both directions will bring satisfactory results.

This bill does nothing for the number one cost in housing today; that is, the cost of money. Interest rates have been high for a number of years, and remain high. As a matter of fact, there is an indication in financial circles that they may even go a bit higher later this year. Already they are well beyond the means of the average person. They constitute the number one excess cost factor in the provision of housing for Canadians. The government, with its orthodox approach to finance and economics, has failed to meet this situation. The government, following the same unsatisfactory lines followed by most of the world at the present time, has been unsuccessful in reducing interest rates.

After attending the first meeting of the committee on finance I am depressed to come to the conclusion that no improvement is in sight. If one reads the annual report of the Bank of Canada, one comes very quickly to the conclusion that at best we are only maintaining the status quo. Not only will the present high rates of unemployment continue, but unfortunately and regrettably in so far as housing is concerned, the high rates of interest will also continue. Indeed, the new governor of the Bank of Canada expressed his concern lest demand pushes costs and, consequently, inflation even higher. Therefore, something new and entirely different is required. Certainly an incomes policy of some sort is required, something along the lines proposed by this party during the debate on the budget. I will come back to that kind of policy in a few minutes.

The number two cost in housing, and probably the most readily controllable in the short term at least is the cost of land. The proposals contained in the bill to cope with the cost of land, I must admit, are an improvement over the previous proposals. However, Mr. Speaker, they are still inadequate and in my opinion are totally unsatisfactory. The present proposals will result in a continuation of the red tape which has plagued the development of land for several decades. The present arrangements for land banking will continue to be inadequate to provide the serviced land necessary at the price and in the time frame required to meet the needs of the Canadian people. I am at a loss to understand why after four years the government still has not introduced the proposal that I recommended to it. On February 14, 1969, I recommended to cabinet the following:

(1) It is proposed to include new provisions in the National Housing Act empowering Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make 100 per cent loans to any public body including a municipality, a regional government or Crown corporation for the purpose of acquiring and servicing land required for new urban development. The legislation should provide that such loans shall not exceed the actual cost of such acquisition and servicing and will be for a term not exceeding 15 years. The legislation will require that such loans be secured by debentures or other forms of security acceptable to the corporation at interest rates determined by regulation. It is proposed that under certain circumstances and by agreement that land may be leased particularly to large private users, in which case consideration would be given to extending the proposed 15-year term.

It is proposed that the legislation include a specific requirement that before loans can be made under the proposed section that borrowers, by class or individually, be authorized by provincial legislation to make use of the assistance so that the legislation makes it quite clear that provincial constitutional rights in controlling the actions of municipal bodies are completely respected.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that kind of approach to land banking is the only one that can possibly work. I do not think that anything short of it will ever work satisfactorily. The present method by which most land banking is arranged by partnership with the federal and provincial governments is too slow, too cumbersome, involves too many bureaucrats and too much red tape and in my opinion is unsatisfactory. A much more direct route is required. The direct route should be the federal government making money available at reasonable interest rates upon demand by any of these bodies in order to fulfil the purpose required.

I could never understand why my proposal was not adopted. I know that one of the officials of the Department of Finance asked whether it would not be advisable to reduce the size of the loan to 90 per cent so the municipality would have to borrow 10 per cent elsewhere—"It would make them more honest if they had to borrow from two sources." I could never understand, and still cannot understand the logic of that proposition. To me, it was totally incongruous. I fail to comprehend even today why it was put forward. Still we find that philosophy represented in the bill now before us.

The other problem, of course, was in respect of jurisdiction. There was a feeling that somehow this was interfering with the rights of the provinces. Admittedly, two or three of the provinces expressed their opposition for reasons which, again, I failed to understand completely. I was even suspicious that in one or two cases they were trying to protect the private interests involved in the land business. I felt, and still feel that only a direct means of providing money at low interest rates for the total cost, not only of acquiring the land but also the servicing of it, is the only kind of proposal that will work. This kind of facility is totally within the federal competence. It is the federal aspect of housing which has always been considered constitutional: it is the banking aspect of housing.

As Your Honour knows very well, in many of these areas there are different aspects. There is a federal and provincial aspect. In this case, of course, the development of land is a provincial responsibility. But under our constitution, when the federal government has the responsibility for banking and credit in this country, then the federal aspect is the banking aspect. Consequently, I cannot understand why this would be in any way an infringement of provincial rights. As a matter of fact, there are many precedents dating back 20, 30 or even more years in this country. So I cannot understand why objection is taken. Even the Globe and Mail finds it difficult to get the aspect theory through its corporate head. I do not think it is such a mystery that we should fail to comprehend where the different areas of responsibility lie.

By adopting this direct proposal, the onus is placed on the provinces and municipalities to provide adequate serviced land at reasonable prices. Then the responsibility for getting on with the physical job lies where it belongs, with the provinces and municipalities. At least then the federal government has done its job. One of the things which disturbs me about the present bill is that it reflects a philosophy which has been part of the mentality of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for too long; that is, it tries to keep its fingers in every pie, become involved in the minutia and inject its subjective judgments in the details of planning and urban development. If CMHC would get out of these aspects which are none of its business, and if the federal government would make money available at lower interest rates directly to municipalities to buy land and put in these services, then we would be going a long way toward solving the housing problem in this country.

It is obvious that the mere provision of money to buy land is not enough. The big pipe is required. It is totally useless to have thousands of acres of land in a land bank if the essential services for sewer and water are not provided. Consequently, the proposals before us today are useless in so far as meeting this total problem is concerned. To have invested money in accordance with my proposal would have been the best investment the federal government could have made. I would say this is still true. Failure to act during the four years since my original recommendation has cost Canadian home purchasers hundreds of millions of dollars. A very reasonable calculation at the time indicated that no other investment would yield as high a return to the taxpayers of this country as providing money to the municipalities for land and the servicing of that land for Canadian home owners.

The other area of cost, of course, is in the field of construction. These costs are not as great as the costs in respect of land and money, in so far as their flexibility is concerned, but they are still significant. One of the elements is the cost of labour. I think it is worth pointing out again that the rates of wages for construction workers have been rising faster than the average productivity of Canada. I have an example which I think will illustrate this point. In Hamilton, union labourers and union carpenters had the following rates over the last few years. First of all let us take labourers. In 1965 the rate was $2.44 an hour; in 1966 it was $2.65; in 1967 it was $2.86; in 1968 it was $3.20; in 1969 it was $3.95; in 1970 it was $4.52; in 1971 it was $575. and in 1972 it was $6.80. This is an increase of 180 per cent in that period.

Then we have the rates in respect of carpenters. In 1965 the rate was $3.60; in 1966 it was $3.90; in 1967 it was $4.22; in 1968 it was $4.66; in 1969 it was $5.00; in 1970 it was $5.40; in 1971 it was $7.82 and in 1972 it was $8.51. This represents an increase of 135 per cent over the period. This rate of increase is well in excess of the average increase in productivity in Canada and does raise a problem in that it contributes to the escalating cost and the maintenance of housing.

Then there is a personal example which illustrates the dilemma. Two hours work by a plumber, and just a tiny bit of material, entailed a bill of $50. For many Canadians that would represent the major part of the take-home pay for a whole week. It underlines, I believe, the dilemma of a very large proportion of the Canadian public who not only will be unable to acquire satisfactory housing but, if they should be able to acquire it, will be unable to maintain it in a satisfactory way.

The cost of housing obviously is out of line for people with low incomes. This raises the whole problem of maldistribution of income in Canada. I have a table from the returns of the Department of National Revenue which suggests that there are 4,975,000 Canadians with an income of less than $5,000 a year. In other words, over half of the work force of Canada has an income of less than $5,000. For all these people, the problem of providing adequate housing is very grave. In no case would one of these people be able to acquire a new house at existing prices. If some of them already own a house, they will have the difficulty of maintaining it to an adequate standard because of the high cost to which I have already referred. We must increase these low incomes. In my opinion, this is impossible without wage and price controls. In my opinion, it is inevitable that we will have to face this problem. We cannot sweep it under the rug indefinitely.

I have mentioned some of the experience in so far as incomes are concerned. Let me now indicate what will happen if we project some wage rates from now to the year 2000. Recently, in a speech to the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada I said that the present minimum wage in Prince Edward Island is $1.10 an hour. The present wage of many construction workers is $8.00. If you compound those two rates to the end of the century at 8 per cent annually, by the year 2000 the minimum wage in Prince Edward Island will be $8.80 and the construction worker will be earning $63.91 an hour.

It would be totally impossible for people earning $8, $10 or $12 an hour in the year 2000 to buy or maintain houses built and serviced by people earning $63 or $65 an hour. To refuse to come to grips with this fundamental economic problem is, to my mind, totally irresponsible on the part of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Once a wage and price freeze has been put into effect and the co-operation of the provinces, of labour and of business has been sought and obtained, the mandatory guidelines which would be applied would make it possible to bring up wages from the bottom at an accelerated pace. In no other way will it be possible for people at the bottom end of the scale to survive.

The present approach of the government to housing is to subsidize it. I find, as I go into my riding on weekends, that more and more people come to me for assistance in obtaining subsidized housing. Some of them are paying 30 per cent of their total income for housing, some 40 per cent, some 50 per cent. In some cases it has gone as high as 60 per cent of their total income for housing, when it should not be more than 25 per cent or something of that order. How can people live under these circumstances? How can they be properly nourished, with present food prices, when they pay half of their total income for housing? The answer is that they cannot. The only escape from this dilemma for them is public housing.

When I inquire further, I find that in at least half of the cases their present accommodation is adequate, physically; there is nothing wrong with it. It is lack of income which is the real problem. If their incomes were raised to the point where they could cope, they would be more than content. Of course, the approach of the socialists is to build public housing for everyone. They love public housing. It means more bureaucrats, more big brotherism, more looking over people's shoulders, more interference in people's lives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: They want to tell people what to do, what they can do at weekends, who they can sleep with. Boy, what a system that is, Mr. Speaker! The task force on housing and urban development found that public housing is the most expensive solution of all solutions to the housing dilemma in Canada. Not only is it more expensive, which means that for any given amount of money it provides shelter for the least number of people, but it is the least acceptable socially.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: Not so.

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think the hon. member should open his mouth on this at all, because if the CLC were to allow wage and price controls in this country so that his party would vote for them then we could put them into effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Instead of that, more and more people find themselves disadvantaged in so far as their income is concerned. The strong get more and more and the weak get less and less. The situation is getting worse all the time. Then people like you, my socialist friend—I say this through you, Mr. Speaker—insist on building more and more public housing in order to put people in them so that they can hire more of their friends to run the situation.

People who think otherwise believe that there is another solution, that is, to get those incomes up and to get the cost of housing down to the point where Canadians can choose for themselves where they live. The object of the policy of this party is to get the cost of housing down and to get lower incomes up to the point where Canadians can choose for themselves where they live and how they live. We think that the average Canadian citizen should be able to decide where he wants to live.

Mr. Rondeau: That is Social Credit.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Hellyer: A lot of credit is required, my friend, believe me. We think that the Canadian people should be given the maximum range of choice so that the individual, not some bureaucrat or some politician, can say where he wants to live, in a high-rise or in a low-rise building, whether he wants to live in the suburbs or downtown or whether he wants to rent or to buy. This is what liberal democracy is all about, Mr. Speaker; it is to give individuals a choice to make up their minds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: I note with appreciation the applause from the Liberal benches. I am glad to know there are still some free enterprisers on that side of the House, or at least one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You've had it now, Joe.

Mr. Hellyer: Individual requirements may change during the course of a person's career. Some people might want to start out in an apartment when they get married, move into a larger apartment subsequently when children are born, move into a townhouse or a family house a little later on, if they have income, move to a single family house, and perhaps later on when the children are grown and at university and only come home for Christmas and Easter looking for money, they may want to move back into an apartment again. But at least people are best qualified to judge for themselves what kind of accommodation is in their interest at any particular time in their careers. It is our responsibility, as politicians and as public servants, to try to mould the climate in such a way that individuals can make up their own minds and so they will have the maximum range of choice available to them within their economic limitation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Canada can do it. We have the resources. No new technology is required. All we need is the will and a little more dynamic action on the part of the Canadian government.

An hon. Member: You will never get it out of that government.

Mr. Hellyer: I am afraid not. I am afraid we will have to change the government in order to get the action required.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: We will have to change the government. We are going to put into effect a policy like the one enunciated by my friend, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), and others during the debate on the budget. We must stop this rat race. We must stop the wage-price spiral. We must stop the strong from exploiting the weak, and we must give a decent shake to all Canadians so they can look after their own food, clothing and shelter and make up their own minds as to where they want to live and how they want to live. That is the purpose of our policy, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that the socialists to my left, who are so full of big words and so full of indecision when it comes to backing up those words with action, will when the opportunity occurs in the House follow their good intentions with their votes and put into office a government which will solve the housing problem of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I shall take the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to make some comments on this bill which to my mind is definitely one of the most important for the future of each Canadian, particularly those who want to own a house.

I should like to say at the outset of my remarks that the bill in itself is not necessarily bad; on the contrary, I think it deals with certain very particular and important points. Now I have serious doubts as to whether this bill will fall short of its objective. Several comments have been made on the shortcomings in this bill and certain rather interesting suggestions and proposals have also been made, I think.

We try to make it easier to get a loan and particular attention is given to co-operative organizations.

Such changes have been required for a long time.

We are however aware of the difficulties met by the individual wishing to become an owner, given the economic conditions which are extremely hard in this country.

I shall limit myself to a few comments so that others may have time to express their views but just the same I would like to recall certain matters to the mind of the minister responsible since he is in the House and paying great attention to all the comments and suggestions.

I would like to go one step beyond criticism and invite the minister to consider one specific aspect. I said two years ago, I think, that it was important that the minister responsible for housing meet as soon as possible with all those directly or indirectly connected with the construction industry. At that time things were not going too well in construction. Those difficulties were due in part to strikes. The climate seems to have smoothed off now. The fact still remains that construction costs have increased considerably.

The recommendation I made two years ago is more pressing than ever. I would like to take this opportunity to suggest to the hon. minister that he should meet with labour unions, construction material manufacturers and, finally, with representatives of the whole sector related to construction.

If we are to really give a chance to the man who wants to buy a house it is absolutely essential not to facilitate access to loans with the interest rates we now have. I think this is just prolonging the agony of the individual as was done in the last five years in other fields. It is important to reduce the cost of houses to allow the individual to become a home-owner. The social impact of it is this: the owner becomes more socially active due to the fact that he is more interested in his own municipality and in his country.

Absolutely no mention is made of the repeal of the sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials and yet heaven knows if different parties have asked for it. I for one believe that that would have been a truly positive measure to reduce the cost of houses and made it easier for the individual to acquire ownership.

As I said before it is not with easier loans at present interest rates that we are going to reach that goal and allow those people who wish and are capable of doing so to become home owners. I think the emphasis should be put on reducing the cost of houses. The abolition of the sales tax on building materials would be truly advantageous.

Then the minister would have to have obtain sufficient funds to meet any possible demands. We know perfectly well that a great many applications would reach him.

A meeting should be held with the union representatives and the manufacturers of building materials. Since the minister has shown such interest for the objectives that all members pursue in this House concerning housing, he could in return impose certain requirements. They could discuss with the unions a suspension of the right to strike for perhaps five years. Imagine a five year period during which credits would be almost unlimited; imagine also the abolition of the sales tax on building materials. This would call for the suspension of the right to strike and a freeze on wages and on the price of building materials so that at last the future homeowner might benefit directly from this aid which could be granted by Parliament.

We perfectly know that if no condition were set, the contractor or the building material industry could often take advantage of this reduction which normally should benefit the owner.

We had better consider seriously such a proposal so that the citizen who wants to build a home can benefit from the reduction. The government has been accused of simply having extended the loan repayment period and it is always the same thing. As the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) indicated yesterday, on a loan of $30,000 at an interest rate of 9 per cent, for a period of 25 years, the repayment comes to $74,524. As far as I am concerned, with the legislation as it is now there is no way out.

I should also like that particular consideration be given to those who want to build a house and who, because of the location of their lot cannot benefit from public utilities. In a constituency like mine for instance some heads of families would gladly give a lot to their children but for lack of municipal services, these young couples are not eligible to CMHC loans. I think there would be an advantage in letting these people get loans from CMHC even though the land there is not serviced.

At the moment, the regulation governing that category of people is an encouragement to the municipality to crowd population into the large centres, leading to a centralization that we have paid a high enough price for so far in certain other fields. And a young couple who could get a lot free from their parents would be at an advantage from the start.

I therefore think the minister could increase the effectiveness of his bill by taking this factor into account. He would only have to meet with the builders, set out the standards, and supply the necessary funds. Some will object: Where are these funds to come from? Yet money is always found to free Canada of a serious problem, so I should think that this bill, which aims to remedy a nation-wide problem, ought to be planned in such a way as to be effective.

The present bill is not bad in itself, and I shall support it, although it is totally inadequate to achieve the purpose that it seems to have set itself. It is all right for some members to say that it is a big step forward towards helping the future house-owner, but I think nevertheless that we could have done a lot more to rectify so alarming a situation.

I do not say the government has not tried to rectify the situation. The government has made capital investments which nevertheless ended in failure. You need only remember the problems of unemployment and inflation which were dealt with in all their aspects, with totally inadequate results. Much money was spent, but because it was used improperly, the result was failures.

Now the House has before it a bill on housing, but in order to make it more effective hon. members should join together and force the minister to understand my few suggestions, as well as those made by other hon. members about the 11 percent tax on building materials, and the repeal of this tax would be a great improvement over the present situation.

Of course, the government will lose some revenue; that is always the question we are asked. The government will lose revenue but on the other hand, if housing is doing well, building materials will sell more. That will stimulate the building materials industry. People will work, pay income tax, which is not the case today with the unduly high number of unemployed.

I think that one should not be satisfied with asking where money will be found if the 11 percent sales tax on building materials is removed. It is nevertheless possible to implement a policy which might be profitable to the government and do justice to those who are entitled to become homeowners.

Once again, I will restrict myself to those remarks. I hope they will be taken into consideration by the responsible minister. I hope they will be endorsed by other hon. members. As for me, I will not limit myself to condemning a measure that may be too weak; I say the basic principles of this bill are not bad at all.

Still, I maintain that it is not good enough to achieve the purpose of the government. To do so, we must strike at the root of the evil. The building sector must be contacted as soon as possible. The minister must hold an emergency meeting with his officials, that jointly, with the unions and manufacturers of building materials, all might sit at one table and set up concrete standards and put forward a five-year program to enable building industry to go all out and build at much lower production costs.

Thus, the government would have truly achieved something for those who have the right to own a home in this country. In addition, this would be a truly interesting investment for all Canadians.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) on a point of order.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think that through the usual channels there is agreement that there are only two members left to speak on this bill, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) and the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe). If there could be an agreement that they speak without Your Honour seeing the clock, we could perhaps complete discussion of this stage of Bill C-133. I would suggest that it be part of the order that I forgo the very excellent speech that my staff prepared for me.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, that is the only thing that gives me pause, my reluctance to deprive the House of hearing the minister. But I think we could put up with that and wait until the minister gets into the other place, where he would probably be more at home in any event and could make a speech there. We agree that Your Honour not see the clock, but we hope the two speakers to follow will keep their eyes on the clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the understanding that there are only two more speakers, we are prepared to agree that Your Honour not see the clock. We have looked forward to hearing the minister's speech—

Mr. Alexander: I don't know about that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —but perhaps he can give the gist of it in committee. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, we agree.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, we are agreeable to that.

[Enalish]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the minister. Is there agreement to go beyond ten o'clock and complete second reading discussion of this bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is so ordered. The Chair would also inquire whether this means that hon. members are willing to forgo the "late show," the adjournment proceedings. It is difficult at this time to know how long speakers will take and I want to be fair to hon. members.

Mr. Baldwin: May we let that go, Mr. Speaker, until after this bill is completed and see how long it takes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have only three small points to make. I come from an area where on the whole we have been losing population, so that housing has not been a problem nor has serviced land been a problem. Notwithstanding the static population in two or three areas, this bill may be of value.

The first group of people who do not have adequate housing, and who will have little chance of obtaining adequate housing under existing opportunities, are the Métis and the status Indians who are moving from their traditional settlements into the towns and villages of my riding. Traditionally, these people have lived on the reservations with, generally, surrounding Métis and non-status Indian communities. There has been a rapid increase in the numbers of these people, who are finding their traditional areas are not large enough and do not provide them with the opportunities for the increased standard of living which they desire; nor is there any hope that in these areas a better standard will materialize for them.

Nearly all these people have a low level of skill. They have casual work habits and are generally ill-equipped to carry on in a modern urban centre or even at the village level. Many have large families, and a good many are totally or partially on welfare. Home owners, and there are a few sort of professional rental entrepreneurs in these villages and towns, are reluctant to rent in many cases because of fear that damage will occur to the rented property, and sometimes this does occur. Housing for these people is slow to materialize because, even under the best circumstances, rental returns are low. Yet I believe that in the long run the movement of these people from their rural ghettos to areas where there are more job opportunities will be the only way in which they have a better chance of achieving material progress. In this area there certainly will have to be substantial government assistance for this desirable event to occur, even in the short run of a decade or so, before an impact is made on this problem. I look forward to seeing how the legislation will assist villages and towns to cope with this problem.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two about the low-rental housing projects that have been carried on in my area under the aegis of the provincial government. It is my understanding that 75 per cent of the funds going into low-rental housing is supplied by the federal government. In the beginning it was largely assumed that local housing committees, consisting of interested citizens, would have a large input into the locations, housing standards, etc. Perhaps some towns have functioned better than others, but certainly some towns are showing severe disillusionment with their role. The general feeling is that the towns are largely bypassed by officialdom from the city of Winnipeg and that the input at the local level is seriously reduced.

The idea of a local housing committee seems to be a good one, if it would function properly. It is obvious that even with highly trained experts and information a particular village or town will make serious mistakes. I have noticed that low-rental housing in my town are not in keeping with other houses in the area in which they are situated, although the houses themselves, as far as I know, are reasonably adequate. I believe that the federal government, having so much financial input in these building projects, should be aware of the disillusionment of the local housing committees and should take steps to rectify the situation.

Mr. Speaker, there is a group of house owners who, so far as I can see from the minister's speech, will not benefit from this bill. I refer to the so-called mobile home owners. There are hundreds of thousands of Canadians who fall into this category and who apparently receive no assistance for housing in the form of loans, etc., available to other Canadians. Yet many of these people are the ones working at unpleasant jobs, living on our frontiers and opening up new parts of our country. There are many who live, of necessity, in small communities for a time. All these people in many ways deserve more facilities for mortgages, loans, etc., than their more permanently situated Canadian friends. After all, the present housing act has a considerable element of subsidy about it. It seems likely that the use of mobile and movable homes in small communities will expand in the future. Certainly, they seem especially logical for use in our northern communities. This bill, seemingly, has done nothing for home owners in this category.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the House for the time allotted to me.

• (2200)

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on such an important bill. I wanted to say these few words, because this bill is extremely important and deals with one of the prime factors of our economy.

As the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) has said, we are faced with a basic economic problem and we have to solve it. This bill is far from providing the proper solutions we need to deal with the housing problem.

Mr. Speaker, the National Housing Act is pinning people by the throat; citizens see their names used as security by financial institutions. This is where we stand now, Mr. Speaker.

Homeowners are in a position to realize this. Some 25-, 50- or 100-year old buildings are still mortgaged for more than their actual value; they are so heavily mortgaged that their owners can no longer afford to have them repaired. This is our present situation, Mr. Speaker.

I would now like to elaborate on the human aspect of housing and the right of ownership. Man has requirements that have to be met and he requires a certain degree of freedom to be truly the master of his destiny.

Private property, Mr. Speaker, is one of the most vital needs of man. Every citizen should own a home, a garden, furniture, a regular supply of consumer goods, his car, the tools of his trade, etc. It is man's personal property that enables him to settle on a parcel of land which belongs to him and to organize his own activities as well as those of his family. It is through property that he lives in unison with the physical universe.

Mr. Speaker, if life is a journey, man must be able to come to port as often as his activities permit him to do so. That port must be his own.

Today, Mr. Speaker, what should be every citizen's harbour is owned by somebody else, because houses are over-mortgaged. The loans granted for 40 years to allow individuals to have a house, tend to get them into a 40-year debt and are far from making homeowners of them.

It is then, Mr. Speaker, that a citizen stops and "recharges his physical and moral batteries" and plans for tomorrow if he owns his house. Man can only come to fulfilment if he is deep-rooted in a land of his own which he can use as he sees fit. But man must also be deep-rooted in society.

Mr. Speaker, a citizen who owns a piece of land, who owns a small house, is very much interested in the administration of his municipality, his province and his country. But if he does not own anything at all, how could he be interested? On the other hand, there is no problem for the man who works alone, who has a property, a trade and enjoys the result of his work.

Mr. Speaker, if ownership is a good thing and a true need of man, and if furthermore it is a guarantee of freedom and independence, why take it from the individual to transfer it to a state which will abuse it. The answer is to ensure ownership to everyone without however taking anything away from anyone.

This is where the principles of Social Credit can come into effect. But I will not say more on this matter, for I think I have already said enough. Personal interest is and remains the most powerful motive for human activity. As long as it is limited to a small number of individuals, and condemns the great majority of the others to work, without interest, it becomes absurd and perpetuates a society of masters and slaves and not a well structured society of men.

I have much to say on this subject, but as it is late, I will limit myself to those further comments. I should like to say a few words about the measures we could take to give our citizens the means to get at least the necessities, that is a suitable roof, under normal conditions. Now, we cannot do it today because Canadians are too poor. Why are they so poor? Why do they go without houses of their own? It is so because they were dispossessed by this despicable system under which interest rates are too high. And as a solution, they should be reduced and money should be made available to all Canadians because housing is a basic need.

All this, Mr. Speaker, should be financed at administrative cost. That is what we are asking for, what we could do and, in this way, we could give all Canadians what they are entitled to. Taxes and interest rates should be lowered; municipal taxes and property taxes should be deductible for income tax purposes.

Presently the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building material as well as the 8 per cent provincial tax—that turns out to be 19 per cent—are applicable on property at the expense of those who want to build a house.

Mr. Speaker, this is prohibitive and we should fight to death against these odious taxes which boost the cost of houses and prevent citizens from possessing what they are entitled to.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

People are discouraged by the repayment period. It is cruel to require someone to go into debt for 40 years in order to be able to live in his own house with his family.

Anyone wishing to build a house should be able to pay it over ten years at the most; 20 years, 30 years, 40 years is much too long. People get discouraged. Moreover, the cost of houses is too high.

In view of the present state of technology, the government should ask experts to find other means of building houses at a lesser cost and with cheaper building methods, because there is surely something to be done in the building area. Our building methods are old-fashioned. They are too costly and increase the building costs. We should, therefore, find other methods.

I ask the minister to intervene and to try and convince the government to assign researchers exclusively to the field of housing; so that they may find real solutions, adequate building methods which would result in lower building costs; building costs must be reduced by at least 50 per cent.

If we are to find ways of building houses at reasonable prices, something will certainly have to be done, and we know that there is something to be done at this time.

I listed a few sectors in which we could bring about reductions in building costs, promote research in order to find ways of building cheaply, thus enabling all those who wish to become home owners to do so, because if we really want to have strong, determined and honest citizens, they must own something.

If we want to bind our citizens to our country, to have them love this country, we must create the necessary ties. To bring them closer to their country, we must see to it that they own something, so that they may settle on a piece of land belonging to them and say that that small piece of land is their own. They must also be in a position to become more ambitious citizens, the pride of this country.

I still have many things to say, but as it is getting late, I shall be satisfied with these few remarks.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have already had the floor. I am entitled to a question, I believe, since the Standing Orders allow us two 40-minute periods. I only want two minutes of attention.

A few years ago, in order to complete the program of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the province of Quebec had offered a 3 per cent grant which applied to interest paid to those who borrowed from the corporation. At that time, this 3 per cent premium was all the more valuable as it represented 50 per cent of interests since the interest rate was then 6 per cent. As this premium was based on the wages of new owners, it was paid to a large number of purchasers who could qualify quite easily. However, we find that fewer and fewer new owners can qualify for the 3 per cent premium since the maximum annual earnings allowed to qualify are $7,000. If interest rates have changed, Mr. Speaker, wages paid to workers have also increased.

However studies have been made by various organizations with the co-operation of the caisses populaires, and as these studies have shown that it is impossible—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: I should just like to bring to the attention of the House that I was under the impression, as I thought all hon. members were, that there was all-party agreement that we would have only two speakers, both of whom have now spoken. It comes as a great surprise to me to hear the member of the Creditiste party now attempting to make a speech. I hope that he and other members of his party, one of whom had agreed to the arrangement, will honour the agreement. I thought the hon. member was just raising a question, and I think all hon. members would have allowed a question, but now we are getting into another speech. Perhaps the hon. member was not here, but now he has been advised of the agreement that there would be no more speakers, I hope he will understand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): On the point of order, I agree that there was such an arrangement.

[Translation]

As I understand it, there was an agreement to recognize two members from each party. If the House agrees, as the hon. member asked to speak only for a few minutes, perhaps he should be allowed to keep on. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I had understood that there was an agreement to conclude the debate tonight, but I was not aware of the limit set as to the number of speakers.

As those studies showed that it was impossible to consider home ownership unless a person earned $10,000 a year, one must conclude that the $7,000 maximum required by the government of Quebec for the qualification of new owners has been exceeded. Therefore my question:

Did the hon. minister responsible for urban affairs meet the provincial authorities concerned and directly involved in the program? If so, what will be the results? Can we hope for the early implementation of more flexible provincial regulations, especially by the province of Quebec, to encourage the people who have enough courage to consider buying a home in spite of their $8,000 or $9,000 annual income?

[English]

Motion (Mr. Basford) agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Because of my agreement not to make a speech at this point, hon. members have missed one of the greater parliamentary orations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

OIL—WRECK OF THE "IRVING WHALE"—POSSIBLE SOURCE OF POLLUTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to keep this House late; on the other hand, it is not my fault that we are running over our time. On February 28, in answer to a written question regarding the raising of the Irving Whale, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) advised me that the data which he had on hand favoured the leaving of the barge at the bottom of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The minister also indicated that tenders had been received for the raising of the ship or relieving it of its cargo. The estimates ranged from $1,770,000 to $4,400,000. The minister indicated that the tenders were much higher than estimated. He also went on to point out that there was no guarantee that there would be no risk of pollution as a result of the methods of salvage submitted.

I found the answer disappointing, disheartening and disturbing, Mr. Speaker. We are in this country becoming belatedly more and more conscious of the grave danger to our ecology from massive pollution. We hear daily about the very legitimate anxieties of the people of British Columbia as consideration is given to the transfer of great quantities of oil from Alaska down to other parts of the United States. I share the anxiety of these people and I am frustrated by the government's lack of leadership in this regard. But pollution in any part of the country is important, and the threat that the Irving Whale holds for the people of Prince Edward Island and the other Atlantic provinces is real; it is serious; it is important. I cannot rest content until either the ship or its cargo is taken out of there and our beaches, our fisheries, our tourist industry, our wildfowl are relieved of this constant hazard of the escaping of oil from the hull of that ship.

One thing in the minister's answer which shocked me was the revelation that since 1971 the only kind of inspection made of the hull of the Irving Whale was on the water surface or from aircraft. In other words, no divers have been sent down to examine the state of the ship, to examine the dangers of seepage of serious quantities of oil. Surely a most careful check should be made on the hull of the craft.

The minister in his written reply indicated that there was no guarantee that the tenderers would be able to remove the ship or its cargo without the danger of pollution, and of course I accept this statement. But I also heard from the minister a few days later, in reply to an oral question, that there was in fact no guarantee against pollution if the ship were left where it is. I cannot believe that in our stage of advanced technology it is impossible for the government of Canada, with all its expertise, to handle the job of getting the cargo out of the Irving Whale. If another land can place men on the moon; if our modern science can place instruments precisely on planets, surely to heaven the raising of this ship safely is not beyond our technical competence and our scientific knowledge. I believe the ship can be raised.

I believe there is a good deal of importance attached to the second portion of the minister's reply, namely, the cost. I regret that the cost is so high that it could go up to $4 million. I cannot tell whether these are realistic costs, but I would have to say to the minister and his estimable parliamentary secretary that they must think also of the enormous cost which Prince Edward Island and the Atlantic community would have to pay if there should be, as a result of the ship being left there, an ecolo-catastrophe.

I think of what it would do to our fishing industry, our tourist industry and to the general well-being of our people. I say that an amount of $4 million is not too high a price to pay. I strongly urge the minister to renew his efforts to upgrade his priorities and to call upon the very best minds, the best scientists, the best technicians and to spend money if necessary to the end that this threat which has been hanging over us for so long, since 1970, will be removed.

I cannot rest content while the Irving Whale is sitting at the bottom of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. We know what happens to ships' hulks. I understand that the Norwegians are raising the great battleship Von Tirpitz because they are afraid of pollution. We live in an age when it is now considered technically feasible to go down to get the Titanic. That would be a "Titanic" undertaking. Surely the task is not too great so far as the Gulf of St. Lawrence is concerned. I can tell the minister he need not be sensitive about the cost. Surely no member of the House of Commons or no thoughtful Canadian could begrudge the expenditure of some millions of dollars if it protected the environment of my province and the neighbouring provinces. We talk about being environment conscious. I say that the Irving Whale is a good case in point where we can prove our sincerity in this field. I urge and I plead, I persuade, I enjoin, I implore the minister to move on the matter to move the Irving Whale, and do it safely and just as soon as humanly and technically possible.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) that I shall convey to the minister the message he has given us tonight in such stirring fashion. I think, after the minister reads this particular speech which has been made on behalf of the hon. member's constituents and the people in the area concerned, he may respond in a manner satisfactory to the hon. member.

However, in respect of the answer to the question asked by the hon. member on March 5, I should like to say that there is no guarantee that marine pollution will not take place if the Irving Whale is left where it is. Numerous inquiries in areas of expertise on oil biodegradation and steel corrosion in the environment indicate that where the Irving Whale is, there is little information in respect of the oil which exists. However, it is suggested that the vessel would be safer from a pollution point of view if it were left where it is. It has also been suggested by salvage experts that there is a better than 50 per cent chance, unless conditions are perfect, that the vessel could break up during the removal process, causing a severe pollution problem.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—ACTIVITIES OF PROFESSIONAL DREE COUNSELLORS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, there are many aspects of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion that are of great importance and that concern me a great deal. One of the issues which came to my attention some time ago, and which I brought to the attention of the minister, concerns the practice of professional DREE consultants which appears to me at least as objectionable. I brought this to the minister's attention on February 2. In fact, I asked him two questions that day, one having to do with the apparent confusion, the allegations by a company in Montreal called Alarme de Sureté Inc., that DREE procedures involved them in unnecessary expense and ultimately involved them in litigation.

Subsequent to that I asked the minister about this business of DREE consultants. He replied that he did not see anything different between engaging a consultant of this type and engaging a member of the legal profession to carry on some type of counselling service. I say to the minister and to the House that there is a great difference between acting as a legal counsellor and acting as a consultant if, when acting as a consultant one is acting as a lobbyist or, to put it unkindly, as a fixer. I do not know the extent of what may be the activities of these DREE consultants, but it is a very intriguing subject and it seems to be spreading to other departments.

I see that my colleague from the NDP, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, (Mr. Broadbent), today dealt with the same sort of thing when he asked questions concerning the activities of the former minister of industry, trade and commerce, Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin. In today's Montreal Gazette there are some interesting quotes and references, one of which is that Mr. Pepin does not deny he is taking advantage of his past experience as minister. Part of his staff are former government officials but they would have left the public service anyway, said Mr. Pepin. I do not wish to cast aspersions on the character of this former minister. He was one of my favourite ministers in the House—

Mr. Prud'homme: And mine also.

Mr. MacKay: —and I am sure that he intends nothing wrong in what he is doing, any more perhaps than these consultants intend anything wrong. It is not generally known, but for the record let me say that there are several of these firms functioning in a so-called advisory capacity, mostly in urban centres. There is a prominent firm called Major and Martin which operates from 1440 St. Catherine Street West in Montreal. Here in Ottawa there is a prominent firm called Cam Ure which operates from 2827 Riverside Drive. There is another, a former employee of the Prince Edward Island government, who acts as a DREE consultant.

The need to know your way around government red tape in order to ensure a favourable and quick grant no doubt has prompted these men to leave the government service and set up counselling firms, and also the apparent constipation of DREE at the decision-making level provides a continuous supply of frustrated clients for these people.

This, to my mind, is a fairly serious situation. Surely DREE, with its many hundreds of employees, has people who are qualified and whose duty it should be to take frustrated people in tow and to help them in their search for legitimate assistance from the department and so avoid the trouble and expense that these taxpayers, these would-be industrialists or would be entrepreneurs are encountering.

To the best of my information, the cost to people who are so frustrated that they must resort to consultants is considerable. According to my information, a retainer is charged and perhaps as much as 10 per cent of the grant obtained, or some other fixed charge is made to cover operating expenses and possible loss if they are not successful in getting a grant. Again, I suggest that probably 20 per cent of the total number of applicants are using counselling services. I suggest that is a reasonable estimate and it amounts to a considerable number of people. I would like to know the percentage of applications accepted of those people who are using these consultants, as opposed to those who are "going it" on their own.

Another thing that I do not like to see is a situation which I know sounds ridiculous. The next thing we know is that these firms are continuing to prosper. They apparently are over their frustration and have solved the problems of applicants, and the next thing we will find is that they have applied for a DREE grant themselves. This is a sort of reductio ad absurdum, but the way things have been going it would not surprise me.

I would hope that when the committee meets in the near future, the minister or some of his officials will be prepared to bring an estimate before us of just how widespread this practice has become. I hope they will give us the necessary information and, hopefully, will be able to assure us that the administrative processes have been improved to the point where this kind of nefarious service for applicants is no longer necessary and, according to their best information, has been stamped out as far as possible.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the questions raised by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), I would like to say that I appreciate the opportunity of being able to place on the record facts relating to counselling or guidance which is made available to companies applying for federal funds under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

The minister in his reply on February 2 made it very clear to the hon. member that such assistance is available from his officials and, if any changes are required to make it more effective, that he is willing to make these changes. It is important to note, however, that while the basic responsibility for preparing information required for the analysis of a proposal must rest with the applicant, companies applying for DREE incentive grants have access to various departmental officials who are willing to explain the program at length. Industrial development officers working in Ottawa and the regions are prepared to counsel prospective applicants to make them aware of the various details and benefits under RDIA.

The hon. member also referred to—I quote from his question of February 2—"professional DREE counsellors who are making substantial profits acting on behalf of DREE applicants." Mr. Speaker, I am sure this is a reference to professional consultants in the private sector. These professional consultants do exist and some companies do engage their services to help them in preparing materials and documents. The department is aware that several consultants were formerly employed by DREE, but there is certainly no evidence of any breach of the Official Secrets Act respecting the use of confidential information, or any preferred treatment.

In conclusion, may I say I was glad that the hon. member did not want to cast any shadow on one of our ex-colleagues who in the past held the unanimous respect of this House. I refer to the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin. If the hon. member had made any comments that reflected on that hon. gentleman, whom we all know, I would have devoted my entire three minutes to answering the insinuations that, thank God, he did not make.

Even though what I am about to say may not be part of the answer to his question, I am sure the hon. gentleman will be interested in it, Mr. Speaker. I was just reading a few notes on this subject, and may I say that if we consider it wise, not only for DREE but as a general principle for all other departments, for an officer who will be evaluating a proposal not to be too closely involved in its preparation, I think this could be the subject of future useful discussion and debate.

MANPOWER—LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—INQUIRY RESPECTING GRANT TO "CENTRE EPIC", MONTREAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, because of the lateness of the hour I will try to be as brief as possible and to speak as quickly as I can. Yesterday I put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) about the granting of $128,000 under the Local Initiatives Program to a group of Montreal businessmen, allegedly to start a health centre called Centre Epic, to fight the unhealthy effects of overdrinking, oversmoking and underexercising. I asked the minister if he would consider rescinding that grant, and whether he would list all applications that were turned down in Montreal, because this group of wealthy businessmen had received this grant of $128,000.

The question is whether a government program such as LIP should have funds going out to wealthy business groups, or whether they should be earmarked for those disadvantaged people in society, community groups or other people who need them, need jobs and need to better themselves in our society. I noted that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) said in Montreal that grants for local initiatives programs are for the advantaged as well as the disadvantaged groups in our society, according to an article in one of the newspapers.

This group, Centre Epic-"étude pilote en collaboration avec l'Institut de Cardiologie"—in Montreal received a $128,000 grant. Mr. Speaker, the group was set up in 1968. I notice that on the board of directors we have such distinguished businessmen as Philipe de Gaspé Beaubien, president of Telemedia and Sport Participation Canada; Jean Boulanger, general manager of Banque Canadienne Nationale; Robert Dulude, lawyer and secretary of Montreal-Matin; Pierre Shooner, general manager of the Montreal Chambre de Commerce; and Maurice Bigras, assistant general manager of the Provincial Bank of Canada.

I also understand that about 170 members of this centre have donated $1,000 apiece to get it going. The facilities are open to members only, and the membership fee for the health club is $150 a year. The facilities include a swimming pool, sauna, two gymnasiums, physiotherapy room, track, and equipment room which are at the disposal of the members.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said this centre would benefit more than just the members; it would benefit 10,000 or 15,000 people in the Montreal area. I understand that the yearly dues are $150. It will provide assistance, through health evaluation courses, for health evaluation reports. Again I go to the article in the Montreal Gazette. I find there that use of the health centre facilities will be restricted to dues-paying members, although health evaluations made with federal studies and computers will be available to any Montrealer referred to the centre by a medical doctor. They are not saying they can use the facilities; they are saying they have access to health evaluation reports. I wonder how much health that will bring to many ordinary citizens of Montreal.

Because of the lateness of the hour I would ask the parliamentary secretary to reply to my question, particularly on the point of whether we should be disbursing revenue for a program like this to a group in the city of Montreal, or anywhere, that is made up of business people who are millionaires or presidents of companies.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what the LIP criteria require is that persons employed on LIP projects be unemployed and seeking work prior to their being hired. Consequently, the organization, individual or municipality managing a project may be affluent, which is often the case in many large and reputable charitable organizations. Those who are employed on this project and creating the centre are people who were previously unemployed.

Centre Epic, which is derived from the French term for the Heart Institute Pilot Study, has received provincial concurrence and support of members of the Institute of Cardiology in Montreal. It was assessed and approved as meeting all the criteria of LIP programs, and will create 1,095 man-weeks of employment for those unemployed in construction trades. It will also provide a centre for preventive medicine dealing specifically with cardiac problems in collaboration with the Montreal Institute of Cardiology.

It will provide for recreational and medical research facilities in co-operation with the Montreal Institute of Cardiology and is going to be operated, as I understand it, as a non-profit foundation for the benefit of many Montrealers. Actually, the facilities of the club, which has some 200 members, are being built on a scale to accommodate 4,000 persons. In sum, the program aims both at the creation of jobs and at community benefit, and we think that on both these scores it has rightly been given a LIP grant.

Mr. Speaker: The House will no doubt be disappointed to learn that the motion to adjourn is deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House now stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.42 p.m.

CRITICISM OF DREE PROGRAM BY UNITED STATES—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister regarding the criticism of DREE programs emanating from official United States circles. I should like to ask the Prime Minister who in the government has been responsible for explaining to the United States authorities that the DREE program is simply a legitimate Canadian measure to develop slow-growth areas and is not designed to attract industry to Canada but rather to attract industry to particular parts of Canada and therefore does not conflict with legitimate interests of the United States or of any other country? Who has been in charge of presenting this case on behalf of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This very argument and others have been put to the United States administration by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and by myself. They are very valid arguments which we have tried to explain to the United States authorities in these ways and equally through our embassy in Washington.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact this criticism seems to have grown more acute following the Michelin decision, what has been done in recent times in addition to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce presenting some sort of submission to the United States with regard to Michelin? What procedure has the government followed in an orderly way to get our case across to the United States authorities?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asks, what has been done in addition to what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has done in respect of the particular case of Michelin. Surely this is the most important type of submission that could be made.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he believes his government has discharged its responsibility to the Canadian people with regard to the DREE program and with regard to the whole fight against regional disparity simply by leaving it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, fine gentleman that he is, to make that kind of submission with regard to Michelin? Does the Prime Minister really feel that his government is discharging its responsibility, and what does he propose to do?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that a question asked in those terms is in order.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the apparent lack of success of anything done to date, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what he proposes to do to convince the United States authorities of the legitimacy of our position in Canada with regard to the DREE program?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would not concede what the pessimistic view of the Leader of the Opposition appears to be about the lack of success. We believe our arguments are getting through to the Americans. I must say that the process would not have been as long or as difficult if the opposition parties during the election had supported the DREE program rather than attacked it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister in charge of DREE this question. In view of the various economic irritants that affect this realm of our economic activity—Michelin, DISC and so on—is he going to show leadership in initiating a comprehensive Canadian position to put before the leaders of the United States to uphold Canadian interests vigorously and, if so, when does he intend to do this?

• (1110)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have indicated, the so-called irritants to which the hon. member has referred cut across several different departments and there is at the moment a concerted effort on the part of the government, of which DREE is a very important part, to devise precisely the kind of over-all representation to which he has referred. I might point out to the hon. member and to the House that in so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned there has only been a single case in which any kind of action has been taken or on which we have had any representations at all from the United States, and in that particular case we have taken the various steps that are laid down in the international agreement relating to GATT. Of course, there are many other countries which are as concerned as Canada with regard to getting a clarification of this because virtually every country now has some form of regional economic expansion. It is not simply a bilateral arrangement with regard to Canada and the United States.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On the basis of his position and experience and keeping in mind that there have been other measures taken against Canadian pulp companies such as anti-dumping duties in the not too distant past, does the minister feel that the special relationship between Canada and the United States which has been so noticeable in the past still exists and, if so, when was the last time he spoke directly to his United States counterparts?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is not in order. The hon. member asks for the opinion of the minister, whether the minister believes, feels or thinks something. That is seeking an opinion and in those terms the question is not in order. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. MacKay: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase it briefly. When was the last time the minister had occasion to speak directly with his United States counterpart on matters of mutual interest?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the past, I have had conversations with senior White House officials.

Mr. Hees: You mean the White House janitor.

Mr. Gillespie: I have been in communication with the Secretary of Commerce, and I would hope in the not too distant future to have an opportunity of discussing some of these questions and related multilateral questions with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Hees: You have not answered the question at all.

Mr. MacKay: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will hear the hon. member for Central Nova on a point of order, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Skeena to try to complete the first round of questioning and then return to hon. members who may have supplementary questions.

Mr. MacKay: With respect, may I say that I rephrased the question as simply as I could and I suggest the minister has not answered it. I asked him when he last saw his United States counterpart. Surely he must remember the last time he spoke to such an important official.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order.

ENERGY

OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS APPLICABLE IN NORTHERN CANADA—REMARKS OF PROFESSOR THOMPSON—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister which I would have directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had he been here. Have the remarks of a Professor Thompson at the Arctic Resources Conference being held here in Ottawa regarding oil and gas regulations applicable in the northern parts of Canada been drawn to his attention, namely, that the program of issuing leases and permits under those regulations constitutes a resource give-away unparalleled in any country in modern times? Would the Prime Minister like to enunciate any government policy with respect to those matters?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this question as notice. I know there has been a great deal of discussion on this topic by academics and others, and as soon as the minister comes back I am sure he will be able to give the hon. member a complete answer.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that on a matter of this importance it would not be simply a question of taking notice but that either the minister would have been here or somebody would have been designated to respond for him in a direct way rather than postponing the question. Perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in a position to do so.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should indicate that my responsibility relates to the offshore on Canada's various coasts rather than to the northwest, but the same regulations apply.

Mr. Lewis: The same criticism was made.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, that is quite right. At least the hon. member is right in that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it was just a year and two days ago that I indicated that there would be no further permits issued either north of 60 or in the offshore areas.

In the interval, and in particular with regard to the offshore, we have entered into negotiations with the five eastern provinces looking toward a joint federal-provincial system of regulating and developing the oil and gas possibilities on the continental shelf and other offshore areas. We have made it clear to the licence applicants, as, indeed, to the provincial governments, that no further permits would be issued until the legal regime there is clarified. I would just confirm that this is the kind of question, from the standpoint of my responsibilities and I am sure those of my colleague, that we would be happy to discuss in committee.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, in effect that is the supplementary question I wanted to follow up with, to ask whether any drafts of the regulations would be submitted to an appropriate parliamentary committee so that the development of any changes thereto could take place in full public view.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, because of the division of responsibilities I would like to discuss the best forum in which to deal with this with my colleague. I think it would be useful to discuss the same responsibilities in a single committee rather than in two.

OFFSHORE LEASE REGULATIONS—REQUEST FOR SPEEDING UP OF CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES AND STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made yesterday by the minister of mines, energy and resources of the province of Newfoundland, in which he said that the regulations for offshore leases are a scandal, will the minister speed up the consultations he says he is having with the provinces so that a policy to meet the needs of the Canadian people for the 70's will be developed as soon as possible?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Newfoundland minister has made up his mind on that question. I hope he will persuade his colleagues to make up their minds on the rest of the outstanding questions. We are quite pleased with the discussions to date, and we hope that the province of Newfoundland will reach an early decision on what it would like to do with regard to the offshore.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Vancouver South, but an attempt is going to be made by the Chair to complete the first round of questioning and then move to supplementaries that hon. members may have on the first and second questions. For the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the minister consider making a statement in the House in the very near future, indicating the subjects that are being discussed with the provincial governments concerned, and also in general the principles that the federal government hopes to apply in regard to this very important question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development stated on May 24, 1972, that he would be ready to refer the Canadian oil and gas land regulations to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for study and recommendation so that both governments and the public could have the opportunity to appear before the committee, and since this has not yet taken place, can the minister say whether or not the public will be given this opportunity before the revised regulations are made known?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question.

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—POSITION OF MEMBER COUNTRIES RESPECTING SPECIAL DRAWING RIGHTS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Finance, but since he is absent I shall direct it to the President of the Treasury Board.

In view of the decision by several countries to have a floating currency, would the minister tell the House what is the position of the member countries concerning drawing rights? In the affirmative, are drawing rights considered as incentives for discouraging member countries from devaluating their currency?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I could not answer this immediately, but I shall take it as notice.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—PLANS FOR DISCUSSIONS WITH AMERICANS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the Leader of the Opposition and I wish to direct it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On February 7 I asked the minister if he was "aware of indications in the United States that the United States government may resort to unilateral action to improve its trade position" and, "if so, can the minister tell the House whether the government has taken any direct action to ensure that Canada-United States trade relations will be adjusted by negotiation so that the Michelin case will not be a preview of things to come." The minister replied at that time that my question was hypothetical. Today my question is: in light of the growing momentum in the United-States to resolve their trade problems through unilateral and protectionist policies, has the government prepared plans for either multilateral or bilateral trade talks and, if so, has the government indicated to the United States that we are prepared to hold substantive trade talks with that country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we are well advanced in the preparations for the multilateral talks. As far as bilateral questions are concerned, discussions have been going on and the Prime Minister has already indicated government to government representations with respect to various outstanding matters.

PREPARATION OF POSITION PAPER ON EXPORTS OF MANUFACTURED AND RAW MATERIALS AND ENERGY RESOURCES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister tell the House if the government has prepared a position paper on the relationship of the objectives of Canada in so far as our exports of manufactured and raw materials and energy resources are concerned before the United States makes the decision for us?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. member is referring to when he speaks of a position paper. Is he referring to another white paper? As he must know, the government published a white paper with respect to various options in Canada-United States trade five or six months ago.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister not agree that the time has come for the Prime Minister and himself to make personal representation to their opposite numbers in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Trinity will appreciate that it is a representation or an argument when a question is asked in those terms.

HOUSING

STEPS TO RELIEVE SHORTAGE OF SERVICED BUILDING LOTS AND REDUCE COST OF HOMES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. With house lot prices more than doubling and in some cases quadrupling in the last ten years in such Canadian centres as Toronto, Vancouver, Ottawa, Edmonton and Hamilton and with home prices now the highest on the continent in many of our cities, would the minister tell the House what steps he intends to take to help municipalities and provinces relieve without delay the current shortage of serviced building lots, in addition to any announcement made by himself or the provinces to date or the passage of Bill C-133?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a very general statement from the minister. The minister will be recognized to reply to the hon. member's question briefly, if that can be done.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to pass as quickly as possible the land assembly provisions of Bill C-133 which the hon. member's party has been opposing.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Mr. Stevens: In view of predictions by leading realtors that house prices within the next two years may jump by another $10,000 in such cities as Toronto, has the minister discussed with his colleagues, particularly the right hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, emergency measures that might be taken to avert such increases?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, we have put together a very large budget for the purpose of land assembly in light of the cost of serviced land, particularly in the province of Ontario, which we have discusssed with the provincial governments but judging by the 18 Conservative speakers who spoke in the debate on the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Hamilton West on a supplementary.

COST OF SERVICED LOTS AND HOMES—SUGGESTED TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE TO FIND SOLUTIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Notwithstanding what the minister says, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the cost of serviced lots in the Hamilton area has gone up by 177 per cent in the past ten years and detached homes 81 per cent and as the cost of a detached home is around $28,000 making it the third highest on the North American continent and as this seems to me to be a crisis—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question. It seems to me he is giving information rather than asking a question. The hon. member might come to the question.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I was just giving the basis of the crisis. Would the minister at his earliest convenience convene a tri-level conference of the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government in order to deal with the crisis in housing and come up with solutions that will solve the problem?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are already working on that on a tri-level basis. I have legislation relating to that program before parliament. The legislation will be discussed in committee. But I listened to those 18 Conservative speeches for some ideas and got none.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to rise to tell the House that in the statement of business made by the government House leader yesterday the bill to which the minister referred was placed eighth out of nine bills that he suggested the House should deal with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I should like to inform the House leader of the opposition that the bill he referred to was given second reading last night. I thought he was paying attention to the business of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West on a further supplementary and the hon. member for Broadview on a supplementary.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and I do not want any smart-aleck answers. Is the minister prepared, after having reviewed the effect of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials on housing, to recommend that this tax be either reduced or removed in order to stimulate housing and, incidentally, employment?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, tax policy is formed by the government and announced from time to time by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): And changed from time to time.

RENT INCREASES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS—SUGGESTED REQUEST BY MINISTER TO PROVINCES TO IMPOSE RENT CONTROLS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the minister. In view of the high rents prevailing across the country, especially in the province of Ontario, and in view of recent pension increases for senior citizens, in order to protect senior citizens against rent increases would the minister contact his counterparts in the provinces and request them to impose rent controls in the same way as the province of Quebec has done to protect these people?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, I think, is familiar with the fact that I have written to my provincial colleagues with regard to those public housing units that are under the control of a provincial housing agency. Whether, of course, a province adopts a policy of rent control or not is purely within the jurisdiction of that province. The major Liberal provincial government in the country has already done so.

An hon. Member: Where is that?

Mr. Basford: The Conservative and NDP provincial governments have not done so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister of State to whom my question was to be addressed has left the chamber. I will give up my turn.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER TO UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a previous question addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister advise the House approximately when was the last time he spoke to the United States Secretary of Commerce on any subject?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already dealt with that question in answer to an earlier question.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to hear the hon. member on his point of order, but I would hope that we would not again today spend most of the question period on points of order and questions of privilege. I will, of course, hear the hon. member on his point of order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, this is a genuine point of order, because the minister has tried to imply that he has answered that question. He has made no attempt to answer that question today or any other day. I ask him to answer that question. Approximately when did he last speak to the American Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may not be satisfied with the reply of the minister, or even if no reply is given, but that cannot be raised by way of a point of order.

Mr. Hees: You have not got the guts to talk to your counterpart about anything. This is a gutless government.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO SALE OF POLYMER SHARES OR OTHER ASSETS TO MONSANTO CHEMICAL COMPANY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question might better be directed to the Minister of Finance but in his absence either the Prime Minister or the President of the Treasury Board might respond. Did the Canada Development Corporation, shortly after its acquisition of Polymer last July, sell any Polymer shares or other assets to Monsanto Chemical Company of the United States or to any other corporation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer with certitude, but I would be very surprised if that had happened.

An hon. Member: I would not.

Mr. Drury: I would be prepared to ascertain from the Canada Development Corporation and advise the hon. member.

• (1130)

POSSIBILITY OF SALE OF POLYMER AT LOWER PRICE TO AVOID EXCEEDING GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN CORPORATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I can only assume that the government was not consulted about this. I wish to ask the minister whether the undervalued sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation for $72 million instead of its book value of $108 million was agreed to by the Governor in Council to avoid exceeding the $250 million statutory limit of the government's investment in the Canada Development Corporation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, one cannot accept the premise of the question, namely that it was sold under value. There were a number of independent appraisals made of Polymer Corporation at the time of the sale. Consequently, the question is without foundation.

RECEIPT OF AUDITED STATEMENT FOR POLYMER PRIOR TO SALE TO CORPORATION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Was this sale made before the audited statement of the company was received?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the sale was made in relation to an audited statement covering the period up to the date of sale. It was made prior to the subsequent audited statement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West has a further supplementary, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Yukon.

SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INDEPENDENT APPRAISALS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether the independent appraisals about which he spoke a moment ago are public documents? If not, is the minister prepared to table them in the House?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the normal course of events they are not public documents. I will make inquiries as to the appropriateness of tabling them.

SALE OF POLYMER TO CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF POLYMER ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the living, breathing and still existing Polymer Corporation. Section 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act contains the following requirement:

—the appropriate Minister shall lay the report—

Meaning the annual report of the corporation.

[Mr. Drury.]

—before Parliament within fifteen days after he receives it—

Since the minister received it on February 15 and since there appears to be no reason for concealing the financial information with respect to the operations of Polymer, will he now table that report in compliance with Section 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have already informed the House that I have received the Auditor General's report but not the annual report of the Polymer Corporation, which means that I am unable to answer the question.

In any case, as I was the minister responsible to the House during the period prior to the sale, from January 1 to July 31, 1972, I shall be glad to table the Polymer Corporation report when I receive it.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: In view of the obvious interest in this matter and in view of the fact the minister knows as well as I that he received the audited financial statement of Polymer Corporation on February 15 of this year, will he now table it, giving hon. members full fiscal information in order to allay their fears that Polymer has indeed been thrown to the wolves?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is very well informed, and I congratulate him; but if he will refer again to the act, he will see that section 77(3) does say, and I quote:

The annual report of the auditor shall be included in the annual report of the corporation.

Now, to repeat, I have not received the annual report of the corporation.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Why don't you table the financial statement?

TROIS-RIVIÈRES—ELIGIBILITY OF WABASSO EMPLOYEES FOR BENEFITS UNDER TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD ACT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell the House whether the employees of the Wabasso Company, at Trois-Rivières, will benefit from the Textile and Clothing Board Act provisions following the fire which destroyed the equipment of that company the day before yesterday?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take the question as notice and get an answer for the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON CONTINUING CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION—SAFETY OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether a decision has yet been made by the government with regard to the continuance of the Canadian contingent in the International Commission for Control and Supervision?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have representatives of the United States government or any of them pressed upon Canada the necessity of the force being continued, as reported in the press?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister a question concerning the safety of members of the Canadian contingent in view of shelling very close to them, 100 yards away, and also the setting up of missile bases in the south by the North Vietnamese. Have any directions been given to the commanding officer of this force to remove the members of the force, as they are virtually unarmed, to locations out of range of the very perilous position in which they have found themselves during the past few days?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the United States toward the continuation of the International Control Commission and Canada's participation in it is well known publicly. The Americans have made no secret of their views. They have expressed these views publicly. They have expressed these views to us and, I am sure, to all other members of the International Control Commission. As to the second part of the question about the position of the commission, the Canadian contingent and the Poles, Hungarians and Indonesians are all together in the same place, so it does not only relate to the security of the Canadians. As I understand the position, the Canadian military commander in Viet Nam, General McAlpine, is well aware of the risks but has given no direction for any withdrawals. I have great confidence in his competence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not realize the very dangerous position in which these Canadians are because of the uncertainty that prevails today in Viet Nam? Does he not think that cautious precautions should be taken to remove them from the position they are now in, which apparently is within the ambit of artillery fire and has been for the past two days?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if our military commander in Viet Nam feels that it would be desirable for him to move any members of our team to a more secure place, that is within his discretion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Isn't this a political decision?

Mr. Sharp: If we intend to continue to serve, which I believe is the view of some members of the party on the other side, if not of the right hon. member, then I think we have to serve. If our military commander feels that some risks must be taken, I believe we should go along with his judgment. We certainly have given no instructions to him to continue in any place of risk or danger. This is something we must leave to his discretion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Isn't the decision a political one?

VIET NAM—TIME OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION ON CONTINUING CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION—OPPORTUNITY FOR DEBATE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his answer to the first question of the right hon. member for Prince Albert I understood the minister to say the government was not yet ready to announce its decision about the continuation of our contribution to the control and supervision commission. I should like to ask a twofold supplementary. First, how soon does the government expect to be able to announce its decision? Second, will the minister see that an opportunity is provided for the decision, when announced, to be discussed by parliament as a whole?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Quite clearly we must make our decision early in the week. The matter has already been discussed in cabinet but we have not yet reached a conclusion. I have already said that as soon as the decision is made it will, as usual, be communicated to parliament, and an occasion will be provided for the decision to be debated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not "as usual"; it is unusual.

Mr. Sharp: No, it is not unusual.

TRANSPORT

TRAIN DERAILMENTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORTS ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the concern of the public generally with regard to continuous train derailments and in view of the grave concern expressed by my own constituents as a result of a recent major derailment within a hamlet there, would the Minister of Transport be prepared to table in the House of Commons the reports of investigations which he mentioned in answer to a question on derailments on March 20 to give assurance that required action is being taken to protect people across Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the inquiry was conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission and I will ask the commission whether they will agree to table the report.

EARLY INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH RAILWAY RELOCATION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Would the minister indicate whether he intends to introduce as a matter of urgency the promised measures dealing with railway relocation before accidents or loss of life ensue in some cities, such as my own city of Wetaskiwin?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Transport and I are working on this as a matter of priority. There is a very complicated job of drafting to be done but we do hope to introduce the legislation as soon as possible. Meanwhile, of course, the operations of the Canadian Transport Commission and the grade crossing fund continue within the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Transport.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL OF TARIFF IF COMPANIES FAIL TO REDUCE PRICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of the correspondence that he tabled in the House the day before yesterday. From that correspondence it appears that the minister proposed to the automotive companies in Canada a suggestion made by myself, though it seems his proposal to the companies was earlier, to the effect that unless they agreed to reduce their prices for the 1974 model year, which will be coming along reasonably soon, he would remove the 15 per cent duty that the consumers of Canada must pay if they purchase a car in the United States. The correspondence that the minister tabled indicates that two of the companies, specifically the two which replied, categorically rejected that suggestion. Does he intend to enforce that proposal if the companies do not comply?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker. the two automobile companies gave a commitment with respect to the 1973 year model that there would be a price freeze in Canada on 1973 models regardless of what increase there might be in the United States. I expect them to live up to that commitment and there is every indication that they will. As the correspondence that I tabled indicated, they also gave an undertaking with respect to pursuing the government's objective toward a reduction in the price differential of 1974 models, and I expect to hold them to that too.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary, but I would point out to the House that there are only five minutes left before the end of the question period so we should have as few supplementaries as possible.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that the price freeze the minister referred to on 1973 models came after the companies had already increased their 1973 prices, and thus was rather ludicrous, and in view of the fact that the price differential that Canadians must pay compared with United States consumers is in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent, or about $300, and is totally unwarranted, would the minister assure the House that the suggestion that he himself made to the companies will be adhered to or that otherwise he will take governmental action instead of just talking about enforcing the commitment they made?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think it might be worth reminding the hon. member that this is the first action of this kind that has been taken by the government to bring about a narrowing of the price differential. The increase that the hon. member referred to covered mandatory emission and safety standards and had nothing to do with economics, as I have made clear on a previous occasion. The best evidence that the policy is working is that last week Chrysler announced a price increase in the United States but there was no price increase announced for Canadian models.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the rather dangerous and certainly disturbing implications of the report presented to the Congress of the United States yesterday. In view of the fact—I say this in as non-partisan a way as possible—it is essential that the world know Canada's position in respect of the continuing argumentation that is going on, and that it is essential that even the members of the House of Commons understand the position of the government of Canada on this matter, would the minister expedite production of the papers asked for on March 9 in the House in four separate notices so we would at least know what formal representations have been made and what notes have been sent to the government of the United States regarding the four main continuing arguments or concepts in relation to this situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to look at the particular point the hon. member has referred to, the questions that are outstanding. Again I think it is worth reminding the hon. member that we did table the formal protest note to the United States government respecting the Michelin countervailing duties. I might also take this opportunity of inviting the hon. member and others to read the speech that I gave in Toronto two nights ago, which clearly pointed out—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF LACK OF PROMOTION OF BILINGUALISM AT COLLEGE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who is responsible for the Canadian Coastguard College. In view of the fact that the Canadian Coastguard College is a bilingual college, and in view of the fact it is my understanding that bilingualism is not being promoted at that college as well as it should so far as the French language is concerned, would the minister cause an inquiry to be carried out to ascertain just what problems may exist there in regard to this subject?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): With regard to bilingualism?

Mr. Muir: Yes.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will surely inquire, Mr. Speaker. I do not know exactly to what the hon. member refers, but I will ask what is the status of the languages at the Canadian Coastguard College.

Mr. Muir: Would the minister at the same time ascertain what has been the result of a complaint made to the Commissioner of Official Languages, and what has happened to the recommendations he made regarding the college?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as I have stated in the House, I am going to have a meeting with Mr. Keith Spicer and this is one of the points I will discuss with him.

INDUSTRY

CONSTRUCTION MATERIALS—CONTROLS TO PROTECT CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I would have directed my question to the Minister of Finance but possibly the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would answer it. Since there has been an abrupt increase in the cost of construction materials in Canada and in the export of these products both to the United States and Japanese markets, does the minister intend to implement stringent controls to protect our own industries?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation to which the hon. member is referring. He may be aware that Canadian logs are under export permit and that indeed we are a net importer of logs rather than an exporter. I have met with industry representatives, particularly from the west coast, respecting the supply situation. While I expect the supply situation may remain tight for some months owing to the unprecedented levels of construction activity both in Canada and the United States, they have assured me that every effort will be made to free up the supply side.

HARBOURS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—SUGGESTED ABANDONMENT OF DESIGNATED PORTS MAINTENANCE AND DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the genial and honourable Minister of Public Works. In light of the minister's recent comments about improving harbours in the Atlantic provinces, may I ask him whether he is giving consideration to abandoning the designated ports plan in Prince Edward Island and returning to a policy whereby all of our fishing harbours, and not just a few, will be properly maintained and developed?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to give all the consideration I can to this matter and reply to the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AIR NAVIGATION AND RADIO AIDS—APPLICATION OF UPGRADED REGULATIONS FOR CIVILIAN AIRCRAFT IN THE NORTH TO ARMED FORCES AIRCRAFT

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the $3.7 million the government is spending to upgrade air navigation aids in the north to reduce the incidence of lost aircraft, will the minister tell the House whether the upgraded regulations that are to apply to civilian aircraft in the north will apply also to Canadian Armed Forces aircraft?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Is the hon. member asking about Canadian Armed Forces aircraft? This question will have to be put to the Minister of National Defence. I am in charge only of civil aviation.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware that certain Canadian Armed Forces aircraft operating in the north are seriously under-equipped with navigation and radio aids, particularly modern crash position indicators, thus seriously and unnecessarily risking the lives of Canadian Armed Forces air crews?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, all Canadian forces aircraft are equipped with personnel locator beacons. Most of the aircraft, the Hercules and the Twin Otters operating in the far north, are also equipped with crash position indicators. As I am sure the hon. member knows, there are the two types, but our aircraft are equipped with personnel locator beacons.

Oral Questions

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION TO ASSIST OWNERS OF FIRENZA CARS RESPECTING COMPLAINTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has to do with the large number of Firenza motorcars. I have myself seen this morning 100 such complaints in a file. Are the minister and officials of his department aware of these complaints, and what action is being taken to try to help the people who own these cars which have now been taken off the market by General Motors?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on March 8 the department wrote the president of General Motors to inform him that it had received a substantial number of complaints from Firenza owners and to inform him of the department's concern about the matter and that it would be in touch with the company again once it had completed an analysis of the complaints. On Wednesday I wrote personally to the president of General Motors enclosing this analysis and telling him that I had instructed the staff of my department to be in touch with senior officials of the company to see what could be done to work out solutions to these consumer complaints.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

TAXATION

EFFICACY OF 1971 TAX LEGISLATION IN RELIEVING BURDEN ON LOW INCOME CANADIANS—FURTHER MEASURES TO PROVIDE EQUITY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the findings of a study by the Economic Council of Canada that the so-called tax reform bill of 1971 does not live up to its promise of relieving the tax burden on low income Canadians and leaves low income families paying a disproportionately high share of the country's taxes, does the government intend to introduce further tax measures over and above its proposed 2 per cent reduction to provide genuine equity in the tax system?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we realize that the tax legislation of 1971 did not achieve perfect equity. We are rather proud that it took about one million people off the tax rolls and reduced the income taxes of another five million, which is no mean achievement, but we realize this is an ongoing problem. The other part of the problem, of course, can be solved only by looking at other aspects of taxation, such as indirect taxation. The government is concerned about this now, keeping in mind, of course, that the provinces have a lot of taxing powers themselves. Perhaps the final answer for this time is that the budget measures announced in the speech of the Minister of Finance recognize some of these facts and bring in progressive tax cuts which would be very advantageous to the low income groups.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, since the Economic Council of Canada has said that the budget does not recognize this, I should like to ask a further question. In light of the fact that increasing the exemption is considered least beneficial for low income groups and provides maximum assistance for those in the highest income groups, does the government now intend, as suggested by the province of Ontario and others, to introduce a tax credit system that will provide assistance to those who truly need it most?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, not at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Order, please. Perhaps hon. members would like to pursue their conversations behind the curtains so that the motion can be put.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROMOTE INTERESTS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

That this House regrets the failure of the government to develop policies to create and operate Crown corporations for the benefit of the public, and condemns the government for divesting itself of its holdings and giving preferential treatment to private corporations in the field of public transportation to the detriment of corporations which belong to the people of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the course of the years, this country, whatever may have been the government of the day, has found it necessary in some areas to establish publicly owned industries for the benefit of all the people of Canada. We are raising the subject today because there are ominous signs that successful Crown corporations are being dismantled or deliberately hobbled in respect of their further development. I want to emphasize that I am not placing this motion before the House in any doctrinaire sense or along doctrinaire lines, but because what is happening now to Air Canada and other corporations threatens to distort the development of the Canadian economy in key areas. That is the only reason we raise the matter today.

I wish to deal first with Air Canada. I want to address my remarks particularly to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), if he will do me the honour of paying attention to what I say. Someone had better poke him in the ribs. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) could do that. I say to the Minister of Transport that what his department is doing to Air Canada and the preferences it is giving to CP Air are a scandal and a disservice to the people of Canada as well as to the future of the publicly-owned airline.

I refer first to the fact that he gave the route to Peking to CP Air. I heard someone on the other side say to me the other day that Air Canada was not particularly anxious to get the route to Peking. Let me inform the Minister of Transport that I have spoken to chief executives of Air Canada who have emphatically stated that they wanted and needed the route to Peking. They realized it might have been a losing route for a few years, which is always the case in such development, but they recognize that China and the area around it is an important area of growth, so for Air Canada that route would eventually have become a very important and profitable operation.

• (1200)

But what disturbs me more than I can say is that for a long time now the department has had before it the question of which one of Canada's carriers will be landing in Milan, Italy. I am worried about the length of time which the department is taking in making that decision, because it seems to me obvious that it ought to go without question to Air Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I say to the minister that if he yields to the advice he may be receiving from the privately oriented mandarins in his department and gives the route to Milan to CP Air, that will be a further betrayal of the importance of Air Canada and of its future as a publicly owned airline. The argument is made—at least I have heard it—that to give Air Canada Milan while CP Air has Rome, would create competition between those two airlines in the same country. May I remind the minister and members of the House that CP Air was given Amsterdam in a context to which I will refer in a minute, and although Amsterdam is in a different country from Brussels, or some other very close airport, the fact is that that is competition even closer to Air Canada competition than Milan would be to Rome.

What has happened in the history of our airlines in Canada is to me very significant and very revealing about both old parties in this blessed and great country of ours. We had established a publicly owned airline in line with most countries in the world. There are very few countries which have privately owned airlines, the biggest one among them being the United States. We have followed the Americans in many areas, not all of them beneficial to Canada may I underline.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: I wish the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who eats private enterprise for breakfast, regurgitates it at lunch, and does something even less elegant with it at dinnertime, would hold his seat, Mr. Speaker, and not jump every time we talk about a publicly owned airline.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Your stuff is so sanctimonious anyway.

Mr. Lewis: The thing is, we had a publicly owned airline which the people of Canada established as air transportation became of some importance. Then, the Conservative government in 1959 started the ball rolling for the privately owned CP Air. It said to CP Air that it could have one or more airports in Canada, transcontinental routes. Then, in 1966 or 1967, the then minister of transport, the hon. Mr. Pickersgill, who did a great deal of good for Canada in that department, as he told me, but no matter how carefully I have looked I have not yet been able to find it, decided on a policy of dividing the world. Let us look at this policy and see how indefendable it is.

How did they divide the world between the two airlines? They gave Air Canada northern Europe—that is how Air Canada got Moscow—including the United Kingdom, and the Caribbean, and they allotted to CP Air southern Europe, the growing Pacific area, Mexico and Latin America. That was supposed to be an equal division. To me, it looks more like a rabbit and a horse. CP Air received all the growing areas of the world, with the exception of Africa which has not yet entered the picture. They have the whole of the Asian continent, which is growing and will be an important source for air transportation passengers and cargo, all of Latin America, which will be an important source also. Mexico is already a most profitable source of revenue for CP Air which at first got Mexico city and now has two or three more airports in Mexico. Air Canada cannot go there, yet Mexico is an important tourist country to which many Canadians go at different times in the year.

This scandalous division of the world is now being kept, and if the department continues along this course, CP Air will be the most powerful and most profitable Canadian air carrier while our own carrier, which is owned by the people of Canada, will have its growth stunted. What sense is there in that? Perhaps the ladies and gentlemen in the House may know that every time I think of CP Air I get a little apoplectic. We built the goldarned company with people's money, with people's land. They now have a huge empire, and as if that were not enough, when they are in competition with the publicly owned airline, we want to make certain that this large economic empire will have the opportunity for growth, development and profits while we stunt our own airline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: That is totally indefensible. I hope that the present Minister of Transport is differently oriented from my friend, Mr. Pickersgill. I have said some unkind things about some other friends I had in the Bank of Canada whom I appear to have lost. I do not know whether Mr. Pickersgill will continue to be my friend. I certainly know that Mr. Pickersgill did a disservice to Canada in this policy which he established, and I also know that as chairman of the CTC, he did not do service to Canada by the way in which Bell Telephone got away with whatever it wanted and by the way in which the railways got away with whatever they wanted in rail line abandonment and everything that is contrary to the needs of the Canadian people. I know that the present Minister of Transport used to have a different kind of orientation and I think he still does. I appeal to him to stop this indefensible, conscienceless bending before CP Air and Canadian Pacific and give our own airline the opportunity which it ought to have for future growth and development in an era when transport is becoming daily more important for all the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: They had better improve their service to Ottawa.

Mr. Lewis: Here we go. Those are the usual stories. I have been on CP Air when I could not use Air Canada. I have been on CP Air and I say to these gentleman, and to their friends whose corporate rip-off they are determined to support no matter what their political position may be, that Air Canada is every bit as good as CP Air, if not better—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —except that it is an airline owned by the people of Canada. Therefore, when it progresses, makes profits and has a surplus, it does so on behalf of the people of Canada, whereas CP Air's profits and surpluses are on behalf of the rich investors of Canadian Pacific. God alone knows they have taken enough out of the flesh of the Canadian people, and they are not entitled to any more.

• (1210)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It is really interesting to note some of the directors of CP Air. We have President Ian Sinclair, who is the head of it. They are little people, Mr. Speaker. You have always to remember that the directors of these large economic corporations are modest Canadians like Thomas Bata, the head of Bata shoes; Charles Bronfman, one of the heads of the liquor interests in this country; Hon. E. C. Manning, the modest ex-Premier of Alberta, and H. A. Martin, who is also at the same time a director of the Canada Development Corporation.

When you look at other subsidiaries of Canadian Pacific you find such little people as Duff Roblin, who is President of CP Investments, and J. V. Clyne, a Macmillan-Bloedell executive; W. Earle McLaughlin, the unknown head of the Royal Bank and a director of the Power Corporation of Canada. These are the people who already have directorships in every important industry in this country, and have their hands on every important economic lever in this country. It is to these people that the ministry of transport hands over the best opportunities for development, from the point of view of the future, at the expense of Air Canada and the people of this country. If there are members of this House who are not eaten up by doctrinaire love for so-called private enterprise, which is not private at all any more, then they ought to tell the Minister of Transport that this parliament will not stand for any more erosion of the future prospects of the people's airline of this country.

At the same time, look at what has happened with the Canadian Development Corporation. That was, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, a valuable idea, an idea which, as we have pointed out to parliament on a number of occasions, our party suggested at its founding convention in 1961. We called it a Canadian Development Fund at that time. It was an idea for garnering large amounts of capital for investment so as to make sure that Canadian development is in Canadian hands, and that areas in Canada which cannot attract private capital will have a source of funds for their development. Its purpose as well was to make sure that developments in new areas, in electronics and other new technology and scientific development in this country will not be in the hands of foreign corporations, or even of domestic private corporations, but will be in the hands of the people of Canada through some appropriate organizations.

One of my colleagues, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), will deal with this subject in greater detail later today, but I want to deal with it as a whole for a moment. This was a good idea, an important idea for a country like Canada. It was an important idea for two very significant reasons. One is the extent to which our economy is now owned and controlled from outside. It was necessary to make certain that such a fund of investment capital was not in the hands of private investors who would just as soon, or sooner, sell to an American corporation for a fast buck than be concerned with Canada's economic independence. It was, therefore, important to have a publicly-managed fund of investment capital available for the purpose of retaining, at least in the future, the economic development of this country in Canadian hands. There is only one guaranteed way that anything will remain in Canadian hands, and that is if it is in the hands of the people of Canada instead of in the hands of a private corporation.

The second reason that was an important idea was that this country, like many countries in the world, has large underdeveloped areas that cannot be a place for private investment without public assistance. Those areas have never been profitable for private enterprise and are not likely ever to be profitable for private enterprise. That is recognized in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion where, in a way that I do not agree with but at least it underlines what I am saying, that department spends hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money to build industry in these disadvantaged areas, so that even this government now recognizes these areas cannot develop without public intervention.

This was the other idea behind the Canadian Development Fund which we proposed in 1961. This was an important idea, and important for significant reasons. But what has happened to the Canada Development Corporation, as we foretold at the time would happen, and which was the reason we opposed it and why we moved numerous amendments which were defeated both by the Tories and Liberals in this House, is that it has become a mutual investment fund that takes no account at all of the needs in Canada, that does not appear to be concerned in the slightest with economic development in this country, and that is interested only in making itself into some kind of profitable organization. What other reason could there be for putting its hands on Polymer? In God's name, what other reason could there be for that? Here was an organization set up during the Second World War which has served Canada well, which has been a profitable undertaking, and which has operations outside Canada even now. What reason was there for the Canada Development Corporation to lay its hands on it, except that here was a profitable organization that it wanted to make part of its profit-seeking self?

The Canada Development Corporation has gone into partnership with Venturetek and West Venture—I think that is its name, a similar operation on the west coast. The president of Venturetek is the son of a board member of the Canada Development Corporation, who himself had been head of that same corporation earlier, I think just before he became a member of the board of CDC. And I am informed that the west coast, so-called Venture organization, has hardly had any money put into it by private people. But now they will get part of the profits, if profits there be.

Of what value is this mutual investment fund now? A great important idea for the development of Canada in Canadian hands has been distorted and destroyed by the government, with the assistance and support of the Tory opposition, until it has been turned into a mutual investment fund that serves no purpose other than to try to attach existing investment corporations of this country. Indeed, Sir, the CDC—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We did not support the CDC at all.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend from Edmonton West tells me that he did not support the CDC. That is right. I said that he voted against our amendments, and that also is right. He did not support the CDC because even the aborted idea of the Liberals did not fit him. He did not want anything to do with any kind of Canada Development Corporation. He wanted to be certain that everything was held for his friends in Calgary and Edmonton, as if they did not already have enough of Canada and Canada's resources.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Go on and moan somewhere else. Go and cry elsewhere.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is why he opposed the CDC. He and his colleagues will oppose anything until such time as the corporate tax cuts come before them, and then they will genuflect with great alacrity, just as they have always done in the past. Their hunger for throwing the government out suddenly recedes as their hunger for party campaign funds takes over, Mr. Speaker.

• (1220)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has something important to say I am sure.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very carefully, as I usually do, to the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). From what he has said it seemed that he was condemning the sale of Polymer to the Canadian Development Corporation. Do I understand that he actually condemns that sale?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member understands correctly. I condemn that sale—I condemn that sale with all the vigour I have. There was no excuse for it and there is no logic in CDC doing that. There is no good economic reason and I condemn it, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Development Corporation has $250 million of the people's money to invest and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a waste of that money merely to buy up something that already functions efficiently. That is not using the money properly and the government ought to tell the CDC to cut it out.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) ought to be ashamed of having agreed to the sale of Polymer to CDC. I ask him in all seriousness, what value there is in taking $60-odd million or $70-odd million of the $250 million capital of public money given to the CDC and using it to buy Polymer, an existing corporation, what addition to Canada's wealth does that represent? If that $60 million or $70 million had been used to set up some industry in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Northern Ontario, Saskatchewan, or Quebec, there would have been an addition to the wealth of the country and additional opportunities for jobs for Canadian workers. This action of the CDC is a shameful grabbing along the lines of the usual economic empires which now throttle Canada and should not be permitted.

The CDC has become an extension of Power Corporation of Canada, which I find to be a nest of Liberal birds—

An hon. Member: Vultures.

Mr. Lewis: —or probably vultures, Mr. Speaker. There are people representing Power Corporation or who were earlier associated with it on the board of directors of CDC still acting in the only way they know; they never think in terms of the needs of the people or the needs of the country but think as directors of whichever corporations they headed in private enterprise. This is the kind of distortion which has been made of a good idea, Mr. Speaker.

The idea of CDC taking over Eldorado and the 45 per cent that the government of Canada owns in Panarctic is a shuddering distortion of the needs in this country. The money is being used to take over existing situations without adding to the wealth of the country. It is asking that the government should consider selling the 45 per cent of Panarctic which ought to be at least 51 per cent because this parliament, not the private consortiums, ought to have a controlling interest in that Panarctic and the developments of Northern Canada. If there is wealth in the north it ought to be exploited on behalf of the people of Canada, not on behalf of the private corporations. Only if it is exploited that way will there be some concern with the rights of the native people and the environment of that area.

I want to underline, Mr. Speaker, that it is significant that they should even consider it because, if there is another area of probable growth in the future and probable profitability in the future, instead of coming back into the Treasury of Canada to be used for various programs on behalf of the people of Canada it will be added to the profits to attract investors in what is now a mutual investment fund.

As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, one of my colleagues will deal with the CDC in detail and another will deal with Polymer in detail. I want to conclude on this point, if I may. My colleagues and I do not claim that other members of this parliament and people who do not support us in Canada are any less concerned about the future of the country than we. I do say, however, Mr. Speaker, that there is a feeling in the youth of Canada which parliament ought to share, that this country is being handed over recklessly.

I had the honour of being invited last night by the Student Council of the University of Western Ontario to participate in an exercise which they called "Confidence Canada." The well-known writer and broadcaster, Pierre Berton, and I were honoured in being invited to receive awards from the Student Council in relation to Canadian independence, both economic and cultural. I do not know exactly how many people were there, but I was told that the hall holds more than 2,000 people and it appeared to be full. That is not as important as the fact that the young people, at least 90 per cent of the audience, consisted of university students and some upper grade high school students. That audience of more than 2,000 young Canadians was enthusiastic about this country. The propositions which we put to them about the need for regaining control of Canada's economy and developing a Canadian culture of independence, beauty and strength, was received with warmth and enthusiasm. I told them at the end of the meeting that they moved and inspired me much more than I could possibly have hoped to move and inspire them.

Mr. Speaker, across this country there is a growing appreciation of the fact that our wealth is being exploited for private gain and not for public good; it is being exploited mainly for the gain of large multinational corporations and not for the objectives of this country. There is a growing realization of that and there is a growing demand that the sellout of Canada should stop, and that the riches that this country has be developed in this country for the welfare of its people and, in so far as we can spare them, for the welfare of other peoples in the world who need them and not for those who are already rich and powerful.

What we are saying in this motion is that development of this country requires more and more public involvement and public investment. We are saying that the policies with regard to Air Canada, to the Canadian Development Corporation, to Polymer and to Panarctic on which this government is now embarked is a reversal of progress in this country and must stop. We hope that this government will be persuaded to stop it.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that it is not very often I have the opportunity of following the distinguished member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who always speaks with such eloquence and conviction. We heard again today his usual rhetoric and his exposition of socialist philosophy. He seems to speak with more determination and conviction each day. It seems to me that power has gone to his head. He would sooner promote his own philosophy than meet the challenges inherent in any action that is necessary to meet the transportation needs of the Canadian people. It is obvious, from the drafting of the motion, that he is concerned about the government's failure to develop policies relating to corporations which belong to the people of Canada; yet he did not say anything about the need for improving the transportation network in Canada and overcoming some of the deficiencies. I hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), to whom the hon. member addressed a good portion of his speech, will not be overly concerned with the appraoch taken by the hon. member for York South who preceded me.

Let me give a good example of how a private regional air carrier moved into a vacuum which was left by Air Canada. I am speaking about the service between Edmonton and Calgary. Some years ago, Air Canada gave up the route between Edmonton and Calgary because it was losing money. Pacific Western took on that route and provided an air bus service. On week days there are six flights each way between Calgary and Edmonton. You can fly from Calgary to Edmonton in 35 minutes. There is no waiting time. You walk into the air terminal, buy your ticket, get on the aircraft, and you can travel from Edmonton to Calgary in less than one hour, travelling time to and from the airport included. This has been a very successful venture.

One might ask this question: If that service is so successful and efficient between Edmonton and Calgary, why is it not feasible to set up the same kind of service to serve Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal?

The leader of the NDP referred to the awarding of the route to Milan. I, too, wish that the government would make a decision about the awarding of this particular route, because it seems to me that the delay will only add further confusion and frustration for the air carrier who will eventually be awarded it. It will make it more difficult for that air carrier to capitalize on the summer travel season this year, which will be the annual peak. I hope the government, in making any decision, will not be dictated to, and I hope it will not listen to any threats made by the President of Air Canada, Mr. Pratt, who has suggested that he would quit in disgust if the route is not awarded to Air Canada.

If the government awards that route to Air Canada, it must clarify its policy. Aviation policy was defined in 1965, and under it CP Air was designated to serve the whole Pacific area, including the whole of Asia, Australia, New Zealand, as well as southern and southeastern Europe and Latin America. Air Canada was designated to serve Britain, western, northern and eastern Europe, and the Caribbean, with this exception: CP Air was to continue to serve the Netherlands through Amsterdam. It seems to me that under established policy CP Air should rightfully be awarded access to this route, and I think the government owes it to the House to explain its new policy if it is contemplating a deviation from the existing policy.

When we look at the needs which confront us in transportation in this country, in the air, on land and on water, it will be seen, I think, that there is a need for both private and public investment if we are to be successful in developing a co-ordinated and integrated transport system in this country. Those of us who travel on the airlines know that competition is needed if we are to be given the kind of service to which people are entitled. Certainly, the federal government should encourage a great deal more research into many modes of transportation. I believe there is a great deal of work to be done on tracked air cushioned vehicles and intercity rapid transit. I believe those avenues should be explored. While this is being done, it would be wise to improve and polish some of the facilities which we now possess.

The Canadian Transport Commission Research Branch, in its Intercity Passenger Transport Study of September, 1970, said in part:

—in the 1970's the greatest benefit would be derived from improvements in the existing modes, such as on-time reliability (and consequent reduction in waiting times), passenger processing procedures, and rail improvements using existing trackage.

—access to terminals and processing waiting times in terminals make up a large segment of total trip time and consequently improvements in this area will have significant payoffs.

The travelling public is not so much concerned with the amount of time that is spent in the air as with the frustration and confusion that is created on the ground. I am speaking of methods of handling passengers, of luggage handling methods and of how tickets are processed. The CNR, for example, is a Crown corporation, but I do not think it is a leader or an innovator in this field. I believe that the corporation should be addressing itself to shortcomings in these areas. Advances and improvements in rail passenger service have been few in the past years. I suggest that all this is not only a challenge to the private sector, but a challenge to the public sector as well, including existing Crown corporations. My main concern has not to do with the effect which private enterprise will have on government sponsored bodies. My biggest concern is to see that the Canadian public is given the kind of service it is entitled to, at reasonable prices. My remarks also apply to the transportation of goods.

There was a debate on Tuesday in which it was pointed out by many in this House that inequities and discriminations in the application of railway freight rates have had an unfortunate effect on the various regions of this country. It is imperative that we develop an effective and equitable freight rate structure which will apply to the transportation of goods from region to region. That structure must not work to the detriment of any region of Canada, particularly the Atlantic region and the western region. The CNR is more concerned about sprucing up its corporate image than addressing itself to the needs of transportation. Double page ads in the major magazines throughout Canada do not really refer to transportation, but real estate investment. I have here a double page ad which indicates the huge tracts of land they are utilizing to erect buildings and shopping centres. I notice that even the town of Vegreville is included in this particular ad.

There is an ad in Time magazine which boasts about the CNR operating so efficiently year after year. It asks "Why don't we end up in the black more often?" There are a lot of Canadians asking the same question. Rather than the CNR concerning itself with a public relations campaign, it would do much better to take a look at its rail passenger service and spruce it up a little so that Canadians who are desirous of travelling by rail will have the opportunity to do so comfortably and efficiently.

There is no question that we need improvements in our air service in this country. We have two major air carriers which basically provide trans-continental and international service. These airlines could be complemented to a much greater degree by an effective co-ordinated regional air carrier policy. This whole system should devote itself to serving the passenger needs of all of Canada and particular regions, not when it suits the carrier but when it suits the passenger.

There are a number of regional air carriers in Canada which have done a very good job. However, a clear cut air transportation policy utilizing the two major air carriers, co-ordinated by the regional air carriers, is something we need in this country. Pacific Western Airlines, which filled a vacuum in the western part of Canada, Eastern Pacific Airlines and Transair are indeed carriers that we need in this country. They are efficient and effective. I do not believe they would do a better job if they were nationalized.

There is a lot of talk about the service received from Air Canada, particularly as it relates to western points. Some of the services leave much to be desired. The service between Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal is such that on any given day it is difficult to get a reservation to travel from city to city. If you do not book your flight a week in advance, you will be flying by the seat of your pants. If this national air carrier cannot put on more aircraft to supply the needs of the people, someone else should be allowed to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: You cannot have a monopoly and fail to provide the service which the public needs. Pacific Western Airlines, which serves the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, have filled the void created by Air Canada which felt it was not economical to serve those two cities. This is a profitable operation and renders the kind of service that is needed between those two cities. The carrier is happy and the public are happy.

The frustrations of passengers wanting to fly between Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal is obvious. I have experienced it many times. When I journey westward to Edmonton on a weekend, I must stop off in Toronto. I have waited as long as 10 hours to get my connecting flight. Flight 137 which travels from Saint John to Toronto and on to Edmonton has never been on time on a Friday night for the past two months. These are some of the things which frustrate Canadians.

The airlines and the passengers, particularly the passengers, find that Toronto is a huge bottleneck when travelling to Ottawa. Also, the citizens of Toronto do not appreciate having these extra flights around their city. Why can we not have a direct air link between the capital city of Canada and the capital city of Alberta? Surely, the city of Edmonton has matured to the stage where it deserves a direct link by Canada's national air carrier. You either have to go to Winnipeg and wait for an hour and a half or go to Toronto and wait for an hour and a half. There is a not a direct link by Canada's national airline between the city of Ottawa and the city of Calgary. There again there are stopovers, delays, frustrations and traffic jams in Toronto or an undue wait in Winnipeg.

There is something else that is needed in Alberta. It is high time the city of Edmonton was awarded a bilateral service to the United States. Edmonton is the only city in Canada that does not have a direct link to the United States. Bilateral talks have been going on, but nothing has developed. They have been stalled. We would like to know what the future holds with respect to this application. I have a letter from the Edmonton Business Development Department which puts forth in a nutshell the reasons and the desirability for Edmonton gaining this access. I quote:

> Edmonton is still the only city without bilateral service to the United States. Therefore, it is vital that Edmonton obtain the route from Twin Cities (Winnipeg), Edmonton-Anchorage daily jet service. Northwest Airlines, through president Nyrop, have agreed to fly this route if it is granted. This will give Edmonton connection to the central United States and give Canada its first connection to Alaska.

An air bridge between the state of California and the cities of Edmonton and Calgary is another desirable requirement. Calgary and Edmonton are the fourth and fifth largest sources of air passengers for Los Angeles and San Francisco in Canada. Los Angeles is Calgary's largest U.S. market with San Francisco its fourth largest. Los Angeles is Edmonton's second largest United States market while San Francisco is Edmonton's third largest market in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He can pursue his remarks, of course, with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I also wish to thank the hon. members who have given me this opportunity to conclude my remarks. I reiterate the necessity of upgrading and improving air transportation service, particularly as it relates to western Canada. I also point out at this time that parliament has not had an opportunity of examining the 1971 annual report of Air Canada. I believe there are many areas both the committee and parliament could explore. Many questions remain to be answered, particularly those related to its sales and promotional charges.

• (1250)

I should like also to point out that the approach indicated in the recent policy enunciated by the minister respecting northern development and transportation by land, air and sea is sadly lacking in imagination, particularly with regard to air transport. I believe the policy blatantly disregards the relationship of the province of Alberta to the development of a uniform and effective northwestern transportation policy. The plan advances seven key recommendations. I believe that to disregard the province of Alberta, particularly the city of Edmonton, in this over-all approach to overcoming some of our transportation problems in northern Canada is an error.

I do not think it is expounding any far-fetched dream to say that Edmonton will some day become the gateway to the north, for that is an established fact today. The province of Alberta accounts for about 27 per cent of western Canada's personal income, 28 per cent of its population, 33 per cent of its net value of production, 32 per cent of total private and public investment, and 49 per cent of its mineral production. In terms of future potential of resource development and industrialization, Edmonton is indeed the hub of industrial activity. Edmonton is the fastest growing city in Canada. It is the provincial capital and the largest city in Alberta.

In assessing his transportation policy as it relates to northwestern Canada, I hope the Minister of Transport will reconsider the importance that the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta will play in the development of an over-all policy. I know that we in the west are vitally concerned about the transportation needs of this country. We are very much aware of the need for improving our transportation services to the north. I hope that in the over-all assessment the minister is now undertaking, this matter will be taken into consideration, so that the north will grow in co-ordination with the facilities we presently have in Alberta, and in so doing create a much better system for all modes of transport.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I wonder, with the consent of the House, whether I could call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the Chair call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in rising to respond to this motion I will be directing my remarks principally to the observations made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the mover of the motion. In listening to him, I was interested to hear an exposé of the ultimate almost in pure socialist doctrine. It was pure in the sense that it was theoretically doctrinaire. However, it was inpure in that it was disguised. One heard none of the slogans or none rather of the usual terminology which is employed in putting forward these claims; but nevertheless the underlying philosophy was the same. It appears to be based on the premise that nobody can accomplish anything or more particularly that no one can do anything as well as governments. I shall say a few more words about this later on. But quite clearly, the criticisms as outlined in the motion itself of government policy and its record with regard to Crown corporations can have been made only because of lack of knowledge. The government has, in fact, been most creative in developing new Crown corporations and in modifying the purposes of existing corporations which have both economic and social purposes. If I may, I should like to lay before the House a brief outline of policy developments in recent years. Then, I wish to go on to give a few examples of the very considerable achievements of Crown corporations in recent years.

In part of his peroration the hon. member for York South called for "more public involvement and public investment". One measure of this involvement, of course, is investment itself. Let us take a quick look at the record. The most recent published public accounts, those for the year 1971-72, showed the total of government advances, loans and investments in Crown corporations stood at $11,998 million on March 31, 1972, almost $12 billion in advances, loans and investments in Crown corporations. This compares with an amount of only $4,468 million of $4½ billion ten years before and with about $8 billion as of March 31, 1968.

We thus have seen a 50 per cent increase in the government's net investment—I emphasize net investment—in the last five years and more than a 250 per cent investment in the last ten years. I stress that this is a net investment since each year the government receives repayments on earlier loans and each year makes new loans. Yet, over the years in question the investment has grown after repayment in this very striking way.

Another measure of such involvement is legislative activity. I would like now to spend a few moments on that topic. As hon. members will see, the government has been very active in establishing new corporations and in adapting existing ones to meet a wide range of special needs. In the period from 1963 to 1972, legislation was presented to create among others, the following new Crown corporations: in 1963, the Economic Council of Canada; in 1966, the Company of Young Canadians; in 1966, the National Arts Centre; in 1967, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation; in 1967, the Canadian Film Development Corporation; in 1967, the Cape Breton Development Corporation; in 1967, the National Museum of Canada; in 1969, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; in 1970, the Canadian Salt Fish Corporation; in 1972, the Pilotage Authorities, the Atlantic, Laurentian, Great Lakes and Pacific; and in 1972, Uranium Canada Limited.

I shall have time later to mention only some of the accomplishments of some of these new corporations in their early years, but I ask hon. members at this time to note the names on this list. They will then appreciate, I am sure, that the government has had the insight to see the Crown corporation not just as a device with application in the economic sphere. They will note that this list includes new ventures in the social and cultural spheres as well. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the criticism contained in the resolution alleging a lack of public involvement has no foundation whatsoever in fact.

In addition to legislation establishing new corporations, there has been much legislation to expand and modify the powers of Crown corporations to fill the changing demands of the area they were set up to serve. For instance, in 1964, 1968, 1969 and 1972 legislation was brought in to affect the operations and powers of the Farm Credit Corporation, one of some age and reputation, to allow it to provide credit to groups of three or more farmers. The amendment to provide the Farm Machinery Syndicates Act and to raise the maximum on loans from $20,000 to $40,000 was brought in in 1964, to $80,000 in 1968, and to $100,000 in 1972. The amendment to allow loans to farming corporations and Indians farming on reserves was introduced in 1968.

No one could be unaware of the legislative initiatives which have so greatly increased the capabilities of CMHC in adding to and improving the housing stock available to Canadians. In 1964, long term, low interest loans to non-profit organizations were made possible for the provision of low income rental accommodation, especially for elderly persons. In 1966, the National Housing Act was broadened to provide NHA financing for existing housing generally. In 1967, to stimulate private lenders support for housing, the formula was revised by which the maximum interest rate on NHA loans is established. Together with concurrent amendments to the Bank Act, this change spurred a return to the mortgage market by chartered banks. In 1973, extensive amendments to the NHA were introduced to the House of Commons in Bill C-135. These relate to government goals in the fields of low income housing, neighbourhood improvement, land assembly, new communities, and consumer protection, and also in 1973, the residential mortgage financing act was introduced to create the federal mortgage exchange corporation, a new Crown corporation, in order to provide additional financing mechanisms and institutions for the residential mortgage market in Canada.

The motion sponsored by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), in addition to dealing with Crown corporations in general, made allusions to two specific topics, namely, that the government had given preferential treatment to private corporations in the field of public transportation, and that the government had divested itself of certain holdings. I expect that my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), will examine specifically the alleged criticism in relation to the field of public transportation. I, myself, would like to deal briefly with the complaint made by the hon. member for York South that the government had, if not committed, at least aided and abetted in some general and sinister disservice to the public of Canada by setting up the Canada Development Corporation and then proceeding to encourage its growth and effectiveness.

The hon. member for York South in his peroration exhorted the House to take heed and to avoid a sell-out of Canada. He was rather eloquent on this and indicated that one of the tasks facing Canadians in general and the House in particular was to avoid a sell-out of Canada. He indicated in some way that the establishment of the Canada Development Corporation was such a sell-out. If one has reference to the purpose of the Canada Development Corporation, which does not seem to have been very well understood, it is to:

help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and managed corporations in the private sector of the economy and will give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

So that the purpose for which the Canada Development Corporation was established clearly was to avoid a sell-out of Canada or Canadian resources.

Mr. Knight: You owned Polymer, why did you sell it?

Mr. Drury: If the hon. gentleman would like to hear, let him hold his peace. The Corporation was formed to avoid such a sell-out, and this is not only stated in the articles of incorporation but it is also the way in which it is operating and the purpose for which it is serving. I would suggest that perhaps the complaint cloaked under the guise of avoiding a sell-out of Canada, what the hon. member for York South and some of his vocal supporters object to, is that it is not a sell-out of Canada, it is a sale by the government—

Some hon. Members: It's a sell-out.

Mr. Drury: —to Canadians. What the hon. member is implying is that Canadians cannot be trusted with these matters; it is only the government which must own and control. Canadians as individuals cannot be trusted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: Rubbish.

Mr. Drury: That we, the government, are the sole source of wisdom, the repository of all knowledge and sagacity. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knight: Yes, Mr. Speaker, you are at the right meeting.

Mr. Drury: —we are in a Canada where quite clearly the main engine of progress is private creativity, private initiative and private endeavour.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I don't know why the Tories want to get rid of you.

Mr. Nielsen: Because he does not believe in what he is saying.

• (1420)

Mr. Drury: The task of government is not to take over the private sector and to run it, but to establish a framework in which Canadians as individuals can grow and flourish. The job of the government is to make it possible for Canadians as individuals—and I include as individuals all the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite me—to have the right to develop as individuals. I do not subscribe to the notion that Canadians should have their creativity, and intelligence, and initiative exercised for them by a government, however well intentioned, however benevolent, however high minded.

The purpose of the Canada Development Corporation was to enable Canadians to operate in an environment where, in the private sector, it would be possible for them to compete on more equal terms than has been the case in the past with the colossi known as multinational corporations. I think that in the past Canada has suffered the disadvantage, in corporate terms, of smallness, of lack of large, effective units.

An hon. Member: You believe in big business, too.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman says "too" I assume he is referring to his own party. They believe in only one business, and that is government. That is all the business they want, the only business, and it is big business.

Mr. Nielsen: That's funny business.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Canada Development Corporation their object, as I say, is to create an environment, a framework in which Canadians can operate, can compete in the world of industrial organization in which we live, on more equal terms than has been possible in the past. For this, what is needed is a training ground for organizational and entrepreneurial talent in the private sector.

Hitherto the only training grounds, the only areas in which these kinds of skills could be obtained were the other multinational corporations, foreign owned and consequently foreign controlled. I think most Canadians would agree that the time was overdue when this kind of industrial organization should be not only possible for Canadians but practicable for Canadians. It would seem to be the case that the private sector neither had the resources nor the willingness to do this, so the stimulus was provided and the seeds were sown by the government through the agency of a Crown corporation, incidentally another Crown corporation, known as the Canada Development Corporation.

This is a corporation wholly owned by the Crown. All of its shares are owned by the Crown. All of its funding is derived from the Crown. The Crown already had under its control and ownership another corporation known as Polymer.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Drury: The hon. member for York South—

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Drury: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: Thanks. He will not disagree with me when I suggest to him that the board of directors of Canada Development Corporation intend to offer a share of the CDC for sale to the public, will he?

Mr. Drury: I would not dispute that such an intention may be in the minds of the directors of the corporation.

Mr. Nielsen: It is; they have said so.

Mr. Drury: At the moment, I am discussing the transfer of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation. Polymer is a Crown corporation. CDC is a Crown corporation, and a physical operation of the sale by the Crown of one agency to another Crown agency is obviously entirely neutral in financial terms. And for the hon. member for York South to represent this as an unwise expenditure of money either means that he does not understand public finance at all, which I am quite ready to believe, or else he was endeavouring to mislead people, which is something I do not wish to accept. So, I am driven to the conclusion that he does not understand public finance.

An hon. Member: You don't understand it.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think I do understand it, and I deplore, I regret, and I sympathize with the ignorance opposite.

The object of the CDC is to develop the possibilities for a Canadian-owned, a Canadian-controlled corporation to acquire the size, the expertise, the technical know-how to compete effectively in a world dominated to a large degree by multinational corporations. In order to do this, to create such an instrument, it must have tools. Obviously, one of the tools is the Polymer Corporation. With a view to developing this, and to making it grow, it was transferred to the CDC.

There have been a number of suggestions made by the hon. member for York South that in his mind corporations are basically some form of ecclesiastical benefice which the government hands out to individuals or groups of individuals, with a view to making a profit. Apparently this is his vision of the airlines in Canada. According to the hon. member, one should not allocate an area or a route to Canadian Pacific Airlines rather than Air Canada because what is being allocated, to use the vernacular parlance, is gravy, or the gravy train, and if anybody is going to get the gravy train it should be the publicly owned rather than the privately owned airline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Drury: I gather that this kind of distorted reasoning is held by others of his supporters.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And some of your own.

Mr. Drury: I suggest that the purpose of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines is the provision of air services to the Canadian public, and the question in one's mind should be: How can this service be provided most effectively and most efficiently to the public, not an enquiry into who is being granted a favour?

And by looking at it in terms of regarding all corporate activity as a source of money and nothing else, I think the perception of business organization by some hon. members tends to get a little distorted. One must look at the purposes of the CDC. I have already outlined them. I repeat that the purpose of the CDC is to develop an environment in which Canadians, as Canadians, can acquire the skills and the abilities in a practical way to have Canadian control and ownership of our larger resources, in the form of a multinational corporation operating on the world scene. This is not merely an endeavour, as the hon. member for York South would represent, on the part of the government to confer public benefits on a particular group for their enrichment.

• (1430)

The purpose of the Canada Development Corporation has to be considered and one can question whether it is achieving this. If the sole purpose of the CDC is, as alleged, merely to make a profit, then a lot of confusion will result, as it has, in the mind of the hon. member for York South. If the CDC is successful, as I suggest it will be, then it will be possible for Canadians to participate directly not only in the control, which is perhaps partly more properly a function of government in a regulatory sense, but also in the benefits inherent in ownership in their national resources which all too frequently tend to be in the hands of non-Canadians. One should, therefore, support the growth and the success and the future of the Canadian Development Corporation.

In the field of plastics and synthetics in which Polymer has been engaged with a high degree of success for a number of years, there is now the possibility of expansion with the existence of the larger resources of the Canadian Development Corporation. In order to get into the field of pharmacology, the Canadian Development Corporation has acquired Connaught Laboratories in Toronto, with a view to expanding and making it a Canadian controlled operation in the pharmaceutical field.

In the House this morning, the hon. member for York South raised the question of whether the Canadian Development Corporation was contemplating the acquisition of the government's share of Panarctic Oils. This is an organization which, under Canadian control, is engaged in the development of oil and gas deposits in the high Arctic. I am persuaded that most Canadian resources would be brought to assist in this peculiarly and almost unique Canadian endeavour in oil and gas exploration. Everyone, including the hon. member for York South, takes exception to the fact that the bulk of the exploration and development of oil and gas resources in Canada is being done by large corporations which are, in corporate terms, both owned and controlled by non-Canadians. Here is a possibility of an organization which by its charter is now and will be Canadian owned and controlled, moving into and establishing a unique and entirely Canadian presence in this field. This should be welcomed rather than decried.

I think that the hon. gentleman from York South would welcome a Crown corporation wholly owned by the government doing this, although I am not too sure that members of the other party feel that the government should be in anything, and that perhaps Panarctic should be allowed to continue on its own. I welcome the notion that it is possible to bring greater resources to bear on this development through the mechanism of a Canadian controlled operation such as the Canadian Development Corporation setting out to accomplish the very purpose for which it was set up. The criticism, if any, of this is that it must continue to be owned by the government. The hon. member for York South assumes that the government can run things better than the private sector. This is not a belief which I share, Mr. Speaker. There are some fields in which the government can do things better than private interests, and there are others where the private interests can do better than government.

In most of the fields in which government is involved, and which are peculiar to and appropriate for government, they are generally well looked after. Where, however, governments tend to venture into fields—and I do not see the ex-premier of Saskatchewan here nor the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and I would have liked to recall to them the success some other forms of government have had in fields where the private sector has demonstrated well established ability to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So has he.

Crown Corporations

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, earlier today we heard from the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who was not very complimentary to the CPR. Frankly, many times members of this party are not too complimentary either, but I would say to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that if we did not have Canadian Pacific Airlines flying into Ottawa, transportation to this city would become a horror show. Air Canada does not seem to want to look after people coming to the capital city unless it suits it.

Having talked to many people in the air travel business, I am well aware of the high-handed attitude of Air Canada. This has been brought out in questions addressed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in this House in connection with the price of air charters. In the travel field, it is necessary to have private competition in order to drive down and keep down prices, while at the same time giving the service that Canadians require.

In his speech, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has advised this House that the government now has $11.9 billion invested in Crown corporations. I wonder if any investor ever invested so much money and received so little return. A great deal has been said about Crown corporations, but surely the reason for the Canadian Development Corporation cannot be solely its use as an executive school to train people for executive jobs. If that corporation is to have any validity, surely it should be out developing Canada, making it possible for Canadians to own Canada and helping Canada to go forward as a nation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to you for a question I put to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) two days ago when I asked him whether there was any justification for the sale to the Canadian Development Corporation of Polymer at $42 million less than the book value. Since that time I have had occasion to examine the balance sheets of Polymer Corporation going back for a number of years, and I have determined that in the last balance sheet that is available to the members of the House the difference is not $42 million but $55 million. The book value of Polymer, at the close of business on December 31, was $117,801,000. This corporation was sold for $62 million. I intend to go into that matter later this afternoon.

• (1440)

I want to make it clear that my party is not opposed to Crown corporations or public corporations. Nevertheless, the activities involving CDC and Polymer Corporation are a sorry mess. This must be brought to the attention of the House and of the people of Canada. When I say that my party is not opposed to the development of Crown corporations, let me remind you, Sir, and the members of the House, that it was my party which created the Hydroelectric Power Commission of Ontario, and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is my party that is prepared to examine priorities in Canada and, if necessary, but only if necessary, to create a Crown corporation to do a job that Canadians think should be done. Let me say this, as well. It will be my party that will look every day at Crown corporations and make sure they are doing their jobs. If necessary, we will institute reforms, to make sure that the sorts of things which have happened in the last little while between Polymer and Canadian Development Corporation do not continue to happen in the public service.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I referred earlier to the financial statement of Polymer Corporation and the consolidated balance sheet of December 31, 1971. I say that we should have available the December 31, 1972 statement. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will realize why we have not received it. I intend to comment on that as well.

In the statement of February 11, 1972 for the period ending December 31, 1971, the shareholders' equity in the corporation, that being the value accruing to the people of Canada, as asserted by the Auditor General and by Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co., chartered accounts, was $117,801,000. This corporation, belonging to the people of Canada, was sold to Canada Development Corporation for $62 million. Normally when you look at a balance sheet, you look for the assets of a corporation. This corporation has been operating since the early 1950's.

An hon. Member: It was operating before then.

Mr. Blenkarn: On looking at the corporation's balance sheet, you will find that the corporation owned lands and buildings that cost $254 million odd. The accumulated capital cost allowance or depreciation with respect to that item alone is listed at $92,372,000. Even if one allows for such capital cost allowances, or for depreciation to put it another way, and allows for the fact that this corporation owned land and buildings purchase way back I do not know when, one must be realistic. The market value of those lands and buildings, in view of the inflation that has taken place, must have been considerably more than that set out in the corporate balance sheet.

I am unhappy that the hon. member for York South sometimes referred to as the deputy leader of this government, is not here. He knows quite a bit about corporate balance sheets. Throughout the election campaign he talked about corporate bums, tax surpluses, and that sort of thing. He was looking into balance sheets and saying, "If you really wanted to look into this balance sheet, you would find that there is a big profit there that is not being taxed." In the normal course, if a company such as Polymer were put on the market, it would not be sold for its book value; it would be sold for many times book value. It would be sold on the basis of asset value, its prospects and productivity. But, the corporation in question was sold for $55 million less than its book value on December 31, 1971.

May I refer hon. members of the House to section 39 of the Canada Development Corporation Act, which provides that the governor in council may sell or cause to be sold a corporation at such fair and reasonable price as may be agreed upon. It lists Polymer Corporation and two or three other corporations. When we asked the President of the Treasury Board about this matter which was raised in the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, we learned that a certain amount of departmental analysis had been done with respect to Polymer Corporation, and that the department had brought in a private appraiser. You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that when I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about this the other day, he said that he would look into this private evaluation, and perhaps he would table it but perhaps he would not. We have looked into this question and found that a profit analysis was done. We are wondering about this. What kind of game is being played?

Is this corporation worth only $62 million? Because, if this is all it is worth, then annual report after annual report filed in this House, audited reports, press releases and fancy annual returns which have indicated the great profitability of Polymer Corporation, are not correct. If this corporation, Mr. Speaker, was worth only $62 million, it is clear that this House, this country and all of us have been lied to for years and years. This is what the Prime Minister says; this is what the President of the Treasury Board now says. He says we have been lied to. It was only worth $62 million all along. The $92 million worth of fixed assets in lands and buildings which the corporation owned, according to the audited statement presented to this House, do not mean a thing. The fact that the shareholders' equity was $117,800,000 does not mean a thing. The corporation was only worth $62 million.

One begins to wonder at the figures connected with the alteration in the price of that corporation. This was a cute deal. It provides that the price can go up if the performance of Polymer in 1973 and 1974 is satisfactory. And how do the people involved measure that performance? First, those involved in this deal suggest that companies are now being valued at four times earnings. Everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, that every corporation, even a poorly organized corporation, even Bell Telephone, is valued at about ten times earnings. Corporations that are involved in research and development are usually valued at close to 20 times earnings. But this corporation sold for a fair and reasonable price in accordance with the statutes of this country, is valued at four times earnings. The price may go up $10 million if the company earns $2.5 million after taxes in the years mentioned. Mr. Speaker, there is something rotten here.

• (1450)

I wonder what this government has to hide. We know, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) has had the financial statement of the Polymer Corporation since early February. What does he want to do with it? He wants to hide it. He does not want to show it. He is afraid to bring it forth.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister on a question of privilege.

Mr. Goyer: I informed the House this morning that I have not received the annual report of the Polymer Corporation, and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his allegations.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my allegations when the financial statement, audited by the Auditor General of Canada, is made available to members of this House of commons as required by the Financial Administration Act. Allegations were made while the minister was looking after some penal institutions and other things for this government. Now, they have him looking after properties. This is most interesting.

I said that in 1969 the Polymer corporation made a profit of $13 million. Since then, the profitability of the corporation has declined. According to the financial statement presented for last year, the profitability was not that great. Surely, we on this side of the House and the people of Canada are entitled to know how the government is dealing with our assets. We are entitled to financial statements and reports.

We have to look into the game that is being played with the Canada Development Corporation. It is quite a game. The reason for the Canada Development Corporation is clear. It is a method of having a public corporation that does not have to report to parliament and, therefore, the people of Canada. That can be the only raison d'être for this enormous fiasco.

What happened? We had a member of the board of the Canada Development Corporation buy another company, Venturetek. Did we worry about the price-earning ratios there? Did we worry about the asset values in the Venturetek deal? No. As a matter of fact, we put $4.5 million into Venturetek without any indication of possible profitability. Did we have proper appraisals of fair and reasonable prices for Venturetek or were they the same kind of fair and reasonable prices that were paid for Polymer? It does not appear that way to this side. Of course, the government may have the answers. The government should present those answers to this House. The government has all sorts of opportunities to do that, but they do not because this is a game. There is something hidden here and that is what we are concerned about.

I want to mention the Connaught Laboratory purchase. That was a good purchase, but after all, that lab was owned by the University of Toronto. Perhaps all we should have done was to have made a grant to the university for work. We just have the assimilation of another public corporation which has gone behind the Canada Development Corporation for perhaps no other purpose than to hide the activities of it.

If we are going to have public corporations, they must be accountable to parliament. We have had too much of this hanky-panky; too many buried statements and no answers. Possibly the idea was to sell Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation to sweeten the pot and bury some of their bad mistakes so that when the shares of the Canada Development Corporation are put on the market the corporation will have a balance sheet to talk about. Surely, public corporations must be accountable to parliament and parliament has to see what is there. I am sure my friends to the left will agree with that.

We have to develop a new industrial strategy for this country. That does not necessarily mean that the corporations which are part of that strategy must be public corporations. This party believes in private enterprise. This party believes it is the duty of the government to make the best possible climate for business, the growth of business and the growth of individuality within our nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on the motion introduced by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) with a great deal of pleasure, especially after hearing the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). I had to think of his official title because, when I closed my eyes and listened to him, I thought he was addressing the members as though he was addressing a meeting of the board of directors of the Power Corporation of Canada. I never heard such an outlandish sell-out as we heard from the minister today. It was absolutely incredible the way he talked about what should happen to public corporations in their relations with the Canada Development Corporation. In fact, he said those corporations which are owned by the entire population of Canada would be turned over to the Canada Development Corporation, and a select few investors would then have de facto control over those corporations. That is what I wish to speak on today.

The bill establishing the Canada Development Corporation was discussed in the House in 1971. It was a notoriously bad bill from its inception. The Liberal majority pushed the legislation through. The New Democratic Party was opposed. During the proceedings, NDP members presented several amendments, but to no avail. Some of them were very interesting. For instance, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) wanted the corporation to be a crown corporation directly responsible to parliament through a ministry so that this corporation might serve the Canadian people. Needless to say, when the amendment came to a vote, the Tories joined their Liberal friends on this issue and defeated this sensible amendment. The old line parties again stuck together to make the Canada Development Corporation entirely ineffective.

The hon. member for Waterloo made one final pitch, proposing that the word "company" be replaced by "Canadian nation", signifying that this celebrated corporation should serve the Canadian people. And, of course, again the friends of the corporations, the Liberals and the Tories, joined hands to defeat the amendment. The immense difficulty with the present Canada Development Corporation lies in the fact that it proposes to use public funds without any control by the taxpayers of Canada, through a responsible federal minister to parliament. On top of that, the legislation establishing the corporation allows it to acquire control of already existing crown corporations. In other words, what is in public hands in Canada—and that is not very much—can pass to private profiteers disguised by the glorious name of the Canada Development Corporation. As the best outline of that methodology we had the speech by the President of the Treasury Board to this House today. In terms of the interests of the people of Canada, that speech was outrageous.

• (1500)

Who is running this so-called Canada Development Corporation? Again I refer to the NDP objections made in this House of Commons on December 29, 1971, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who moved a motion that the directors of the CDC divest themselves of their directorships in private corporations. Needless to say the hon. member's motion was defeated. Here are some of the reasons it was defeated. Who are the directors of the Canada Development Corporation? Let us begin with the chairman, Mr. H. A. Hampson, former director of Laurentide Corporation—some people call them "loan sharks"—of Capital Dynamics Management and of the Power Corporation of Canada; I repeat, the Power Corporation of Canada. Of course, Mr. Hampson divested himself of these interests, but let us remember that his friends remained behind to ensure that business would keep booming in case there should be an eventual return to his former position.

Another director is Mr. Louis Desmarais, who is also a director of Canada Steamship Lines, Davie Shipbuilding and Blue Bonnets Raceway. His brother of greater fame if the Desmarais who is a member of the board of directors of the Power Corporation of Canada. Lately little brother has joined big brother on the board of directors of the Power Corporation of Canada. Then we have Mr. F. H. Sherman, well connected with the Bank of Nova Scotia, Dofasco and Polymer. Dofasco is the corporation which lately has been running ads over the radio saying they have a wonderful relationship with the government, that they take one of their employees, show him how government works and then they take him back. I wonder what kind of information he takes back with him. Then there is Mr. H. H. McCain, chief owner of McCain Foods Limited and half a dozen subsidiaries struggling hard to replace the Irving family as the barons of New Brunswick. These are all members of the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation.

There is one more, who may seem a relatively innocent member of the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation, a Mrs. L. Thür, vice-rector of the University of Quebec. You may assume that this is a sort of token representative from the academic community; but if you check into it, Mr. Speaker, you will find that she happens to be a director of Bell Canada, that profit-tapping corporation which profits from operating telephone lines in Canada. Let us not speak of her marital connection with Mr. Thür, who is none other than a former member of the Economic Council of Canada and presently holds a senior position in the Department of Finance.

I will name one more individual, Douglas Kendall. He has had fairly good connections. He was once with Hermes Electronics and de Havilland Aircraft, but more remarkably is a former executive officer with Venturetek, now derected by his impoverished son. Last fall the Canada Development Corporation invested $4.5 million in Vanturetek. Legally speaking it was an investment by the CDC and, I am sure, not a family self-help project from a good father to a delighted son. There may have been some other assistance provided through this great venture by the board of directors of the CDC because Mr. Tony Hampson, chairman of the board, undoubtedly agreed to that transaction. He is a good friend of Mr. Kendall senior and has been from the time they served on the General Adjustment and Assistance Board.

When this issue arose during the election our leader, the hon. member for York South, raised hell, as he should.

Even the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) got into the act and said that CDC operations should be suspended. But he failed to remember that the Tory party joined with the old-line party across the way to defeat every substantive amendment moved by this party to put teeth into the CDC and turn it into a true Crown corporation that would buy Canada back. Hon. members seem to forget that.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the CDC needs capital. The $250 million given to it by the federal government would not go far enough. They need capital to invest in companies in which the CDC directors at least have a sentimental interest. Where do you get the capital that is needed? From the prosperous Crown corporations. CDC has already gulped up Polymer, though I hope parliament will have the last say on that matter, as well as on the CDC's intention to get the 45 per cent federal interest in Panarctic. We heard the President of the Treasury Board outline the method to be used, which I find outrageous. Then from Panarctic we can move to the idea of swallowing up Eldorado Mines and other public corporations. So we have the basic situation that companies are being taken from the people of Canada, turned over to the CDC and passed into the hands of vested interests; let there be no mistake about that.

We in the NDP are not interested in giving away the little public holdings that we do have to a dubious Canada Development Corporation where public interest may be reduced to a mere 10 mer cent of the shares. We want to keep the Crown corporations that we have, and indeed we want to see more of them. Let there be no mistaking where this party stands on that issue.

During my introductory remarks I mentioned several names and several corporations which are linked directly and sometimes indirectly, with the Canada Development Corporation. I wish I had time to establish a more complete picture, but to be brief all I have to say is that in the time of Caesar all roads led to Rome. In the time of Trudeau all roads lead to the Power Corporation of Canada.

What is the Power Corporation of Canada? It is a rather intimate club of Canadian businessmen who obviously decided to get some extra cash from a small investment. It is a holding corporation, so that they do not have to pay income tax. Let me restate that: They have to pay a little income tax. In 1966 they contributed to the welfare of Canada a total of $48,000 in the form of income tax on profits in the previous five years of $62.3 million. Mr. Speaker, if only the ordinary taxpayer of Canada could get such a favourable income tax rate!

There is nothing illegal about this; it is simply the fact that the present tax laws of Canada as passed by the Liberal party and supported by the Tory party as represented by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the former financial critic of that party, allow a corporation such as the Power Corporation of Canada, that great friend of the Liberal party, to get a corporate rip-off the extent of which the Canadian people have never seen before.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker, I assure the House that the corporation is a club of somebody's. It has its claws all over the place. It has related directorships with all kinds of federal bodies such as the Bank of Canada, the DREE advisory board, the advisory board to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, GATT, and of course the Canada Development Corporation. If I had more time I would reconstitute the cobweb in which the spider is the Power Corporation of Canada. Instead, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to bear with me and allow me to table in this House of Commons a little chart which I drew up in my spare time after the general election. It is an outline of the corporate welfare state in Canada and all its complications in respect of that great protector, the Liberal party, with the Power Corporation in the middle and the advisory boards all around it. Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would give a ruling on whether I may table this chart.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I do not think the hon. member really requires a ruling on that matter: he should know that there is no possibility of depositing this document on the table.

Mr. Knight: In view of that ruling, Mr. Speaker, I will ensure that this corporate welfare state map is hung up in the lobby, or at least distributed for the interest of the people of Canada. It is a very interesting map. I want to point out some of the things related to it. The chart contains several rather interesting names of former and not so former politicians, such as the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, Secretary of State for External Affairs, and that very interesting defender of corporations, the Hon. Bud Drury, President of the Treasury Board. And, Mr. Speaker, if we wanted to name Mr. Ross we might even wish to read into the chart the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). We might also name the Hon. Jimmy Sinclair. I shall not draw any conclusions from that name but will leave it to your imagination, Mr. Speaker. There are well known western names, such as the Hon. E. C. Manning, Director of Canadian Pacific Investments and Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. There is also the Hon. Duff Roblin, director of Canadian Pacific Investments and Montreal Trust Company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knight: There they are, applauding: the same old gang. On top of that we have the Hon. John Robarts, who is a director of the Power Corporation of Canada; that good protector of the little man, Bell Canada, and the Imperial Bank of Commerce. Then there is Senator Molson, and many other senators. I could go on down the list of names.

In this chart there are the names of 44 corporations. These corporations, together with their subsidiaries, make a total of 383 corporate entities. This is not very many, I admit: it is less than one-fifth of a per cent of all corporations in Canada. However, in many respects their impor- taxes. for the years 1968-71 represent 13.1 per cent of all parties, is quite remarkable. Their book profits after taxes, for the years 1968-71 represent 13.1 per cent of all corporate profits, a mere $3.1 billion! When it comes to deferred taxes, the select group around the Power Corporation of Canada does even better. By the end of 1971 that group had accumulated $1.1 billion in deferred taxes, which are in fact interest-free loans compliments of the government of Canada, or a gift of the taxpayers of Canada. That is a corporate rip-off. It represents 30.7 per cent of deferred taxes in respect of all corporations in Canada.

This select group pays income tax, some of them more, some of them less and some of them not ar all. On the average they paid, between 1968 and 1971, a pitiful 17.3 per cent of net earnings, whereas the theoretical rate was then slightly over 50 per cent. Finally and more directly, the federal government favours this Power Corporation club by direct grants and subsidies. Between 1965 and 1971 it received a total of $151 million in grants, which represents 13.8 per cent of all federal grants to corporations—this to this cozy little group with its cozy relationship to the Canada Development Corporation which is defended to the bitter end by the President of the Treasury Board. In a strict scientific sense, these statistics do not give absolute proof of causality between being a corporate member of the Power Corporation family and receiving preferential treatment from the federal government. The absolute proof would be possible only if the elite corporations opened their books for public inspection and if the old parties did the same.

What we know for certain is that Mr. R. G. Renkin, Ontario provincial chairman for the Liberal party red carnation fund, said publicly on February 14, 1972, in Ottawa that the Liberal party has operated for many years on the support of 95 major Canadian corporations. That is quite a disclosure and is something we have been saying for a long time. The tie today between all the advisory boards and the Canada Development Corporation with the Power Corporation of Canada is an outline of the kind of tie we see between big business and big government regardless of which of the old-line parties sits to the right of the Speaker.

I do not have a single quote from the Tory bagman, but please not the press statement by the Leader of the Official Opposition a few days ago on the position of the Tory party in respect of the corporate rip-off. A few days ago he made a grandiose speech in Regina saying that those who voted for the New Democrats were sold out by the New Democrats. Then he comes back to Ottawa and makes another grandiose speech saying, "Well, we cannot really hurt our corporate friends, can we, now?" That is why the people of Saskatchewan voted for the New Democrats. I hope the Leader of the Official Opposition remembers that.

The official version of the happy association of the federal government with its corporate masters reads like a dream. It is a gentleman's agreement. On December 29, 1971, the then minister of finance, Mr. Benson, innocently told the House of Commons:

> The fact that the gentlemen who are directors of the CDC have directorships in other corporations, and had them before they became directors of CDC, indicates that they are people of first-class quality and we want them to direct the CDC—

This is outrageous. The CDC ought to be disbanded.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

[Mr. Knight.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am always sorry to see such important matters dealt with so quickly. I am not blaming anyone; I know that we are all under pressure and do not have enough time to prepare speeches that might be of great use in giving a direction to Canadian politics.

Mr. Speaker, the motion of the New Democratic Party reads as follows:

[English]

> That this House regrets the failure of the government to develop policies to create and operate Crown corporations for the benefit of the public, and condemns the government for divesting itself of its holdings and giving preferential treatment to private corporations in the field of public transportation to the detriment of corporations which belong to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

There can be no doubt that this motion involves some extremely serious principles. There is a whole philosophy to be examined, but, unfortunately, I see this problem brought down to a few specific cases or incidents, or to matters that have nothing to do with Crown corporations.

I am sorry to have missed this morning's speech by my hon. colleague, the member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski); unfortunately, I had a delegation in my office and was unable to be in the House. I am sorry because I should have liked to know the points of view of all the parties, although I suppose I shall hear them in due course.

I should therefore like to speak on this subject at a level that will, I hope, clarify the debate, and also to explain at least my position, if not necessarily that of the government on this basic problem of the relations of Crown corporations with the government and with private enterprise.

Why are Crown corporations created, Mr. Speaker? It is not because there were socialist governments in Canada, but simply because one day, for one reason or another, the state felt it had to set up an institution to safeguard the interest of the public at a time when no private corporation was interested in establishing that institution, or the nature or purpose of that institution was so closely related to public interest that we could not leave that institution in private hands.

Why, for example, was Air Canada created? The founder of Air Canada, if my memory serves me well, was the Right Hon. C. D. Howe and his socialist tendencies were very limited. He certainly did not do it because he felt aviation should be controlled by the state but undoubtedly because he saw that aviation was developing at a very rapid pace in the world and no private corporation wanted to run the risks; so a Crown corporation was created which was called Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Let us review the history of Crown corporations. Why was Polymer Corporation created? It is not because C. D. Howe had turned socialist but because nobody wanted to invest large amounts of money in a new product. If I remember well, it was synthetic rubber at the time of the war and that is how the government of Canada created Polymer Corporation.

I think it would be useful at this time to recall what some people had to say to remind us of the principles underlying the establishment of certain Crown corporations as well as some minor but very interesting contradictions in the history of our Crown corporation.

Lord Morrison of Lambeth gave this definition of a Crown corporation:

• (1520)

[English]

If we establish the public corporation, it must be for certain reasons. What are they? They are that we seek to combine the principle of public accountability, of a consciousness on the part of the undertaking that it is working for the nation and not for sectional interests, with the liveliness, initiative, and a considerable degree of the freedom of a quick moving and progressive business enterprise. Either that is the case for the public corporation, or there is no case at all.

A Conservative member said in the House in 1949, and this may be referred to by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House:

The official opposition—

Which was Conservative at that time.

—does not believe in Crown corporations. We think that is one method of getting away from control by parliament.

This member was, a few years later, a member of the Diefenbaker cabinet which was responsible for the creation of an entirely new Crown corporation, the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation, and for a large increase in the operations of a number of Crown corporations, including the one that provoked the speech just quoted and was accused by the now official opposition of frustrating the efforts of parliament to exercise control. The same administration was accused of "doing its best to tear down the Crown corporations of the country".

Although the majority of Crown corporations were set up under Liberal governments, Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Bank of Canada and the Canadian Wheat Board were in origin creations of Conservative governments.

[Translation]

So there was no particular principle underlying the creation of those corporations. Indeed, if we consider their background, we will recognize that they are not based on any given philosophy. Their founders have acknowledged just the same that public interest was at stake and that some institutions had to be created to protect it.

Now, to deal a little closer with the subject which I want to discuss, I will say that if public interest was involved and that a corporation was developed thanks to the money of Canadian citizens who financed it, who made good its deficits and provided some capital, this corporation could not be considered as a private enterprise. It deserves special protection because it specifically exists to uphold and protect the public interest.

People may complain that we are using public funds, but why for example did private enterprise not provide the millions of dollars required when Air Canada was created? Because it was too risky as indeed it was to produce synthetic rubber.

We know that transportation, especially air transportation, is now vitally important for all countries, particularly for Canada. Why? Our country being so big and having so little population, it would be appreciably weakened if we did not have a rapid air transportation system. Furthermore, I think Canada could not exist today without fast communications in the east, west, north and south and the only way to achieve this end is to have aircraft—jet aircraft.

As it happens, there are more than two companies operating in this field, that is CP Air and Air Canada. We also have regional carriers which as private enterprise are operating simultaneously with government corporations.

From the domestic point of view, I would not be against regional carriers. I think we need companies of lesser importance and in a better position to look after the more remote regions, whereas the larger companies are operating on a wider scale on medium and long trips. Therefore, I do not intend to criticize regional carriers.

Can a government monopoly be dangerous on the international level? I would say since it cannot even exist. International competition is between countries and not necessarily between two national companies. For instance, if there were only one intercontinental airline in Canada, it still would have to compete with Air France, BOAC, Sabena, Lufthansa and other companies.

Now, it so happens in Canada, and this is born out by history, that there are two companies: Air Canada and CP Air. CP Air was supposed to serve western Canada, Asia, Australia, Japan, Hong Kong and extend to that part of the world west of the Vancouver coast. Air Canada was supposed to serve the other part of the world; up to 1960, it had absolute monopoly on the main air routes in Canada.

Some guidelines have been established. One of them concerns domestic transport and a good case can be made for it. It is said that Air Canada should have at least 75 per cent of the Canadian market, while CP Air should get no more than 25 per cent of it. Predominance was to be preserved for Air Canada. This is true of the Canadian market, but not of the international market. In fact, from an international point of view, there are no limits, and unless the policy is well defined, the situation could be reversed, that is Air Canada could become eventually less important than CP Air. For instance, if the 800 million people of China were to start travelling tomorrow, the company would become a really important one.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that on this point, we have to be careful. In my opinion, Air Canada should remain the important company in Canada, and not only from a Canadian standpoint, but also from an international standpoint. It should remain our most important company and, on the other hand, it should not tolerate competition from another company on the same routes; CP Air having been given the right to serve Japan and China, if Air Canada is given the right to serve Hong Kong, even if it is claimed that they are not the same countries, this is competition, because CP Air serves Amsterdam and Air Canada serves London and Paris.

Mr. Mazankowski: What are you going to do about Milan?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is not the problem of Milan today. We are now talking about Crown corporations. I do not care about Milan or Peking. What I care about is that the share of the market for Air Canada should be a larger one; this is what is important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We may decide to rationalize all this and change a few things, but I think that Air Canada should remain the main international Canadian airline, just as Air France is the main French airline, just as BOAC is the main airline of Great Britain, just as Alitalia is the main Italian airline, and just as Lufthansa is the main German airline. This is the place that I personally want for Air Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is why, when today we are restricted to Milan or Peking, I think that this is too restrictive. What we should have and what I hope we will have in the not too distant future is a general policy that will make it possible for everybody, even for CP Air, to know exactly where they stand and exactly what their markets are, a policy that will establish once and for all that the most important international airline for Canada is Air Canada. This is not new. We shall attempt to distribute routes according to these general principles.

Several Crown corporations are under my department. Nothing has been said about them at all. Corporate rip offs and representations of large corporations to the government consultative committees have been discussed. I could have mentioned several councils with worker and trade union representation.

[English]

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the minister agree to answer a question?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have only 20 minutes. If the hon. member wants to ask it quickly, I will answer if I can; unless of course he wants me to make a second speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Whatever happens, somebody has to say yes or no.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. This means that the minister has agreed to accept a question.

Mr. Harney: The minister was about to say, or suggest that there were vast numbers of advisory councils in the government on which a vast number of trade unionists sit. Could he enlighten us by giving some enumeration of these advisory councils which contain vast numbers of trade unionists?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There are several, and very important ones at that!

I did not mention any "vast representation"; I referred to trade union representation and the member for Scarborough West should not make me waste one instant because he knows it is true. He knows that the trade unions are represented on the Economic Council of Canada. He also knows that the trade unions are represented on the Unemployment Insurance Commission Advisory Committee. He knows that the trade unions sit on all the advisory committees of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. The trade unions have been represented in all commercial delegations. A former vice-president of the Labour Congress of Canada could supply the list.

I do not mean that capitalists have no influence in Canada, they do have influence and we agree on this but so have the trade unions. This was not my point. The point is to know whether the private sector wields sufficient influence to have the government decide in its favour regardless of the common good and this is the area to be discussed. Everyone knows that private enterprise has the upper hand in Canada. Everyone knows that, including the NDP governments elected in British Columbia, in Manitoba or in Saskatchewan. The premiers of those provinces have stated publicly that they are not against private enterprise. They fear they might lose a vote. The hon. leader of the NDP stated: I do not want to be a doctrinaire. I agree with him and I would have said the same thing. However, let nobody come and tell me that we created the capitalistic private enterprise. It was there! It is there as well for Mr. Schreyer, Mr. Barrett and Mr. Blakeney. Of course, "they play ball with them". However, these governments manage so that private decisions affect government decisions as little as possible. That is where the problem lies.

Instead of telling us that capitalists are represented on committees, perhaps it would be better to find out cases where decisions have been affected by the presence of these people, at the expense of public interest. That is the point which I am concerned about. Everything else is but "electoral chit-chat".

Mr. Speaker, I am not allergic to Crown corporations; I am rather for them. For instance, the Northern Transportation Company Ltd. has developed the Mackenzie area up to the Arctic; not one private business had dared to make investments in northern transportation, because it was not profitable. Therefore, a very efficient corporation was created which assists us in developing the Canadian North. This corporation belongs to the people of Canada and must be protected in order to meet its obligations. Of course, it must be efficient. Certainly it is so. When companies are not efficient, the government is not interested in protecting them and then, there is a very easy procedure: management must be changed.

For instance, the National Harbours Board has played and continues to play a very important part in the growth of our country's economy. Harbours are institutions of public interest. There are private habours but they are of no public importance. Who has taken the necessary steps to move the grain? Who takes care of port facilities for containerized shipping? It's the National Harbours Board.

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is also a Crown corporation. Nobody would have paid hundreds of millions of dollars to open up that seaway, to promote trading with the Great Lakes area and the United States and to link central Canada with the Atlantic.

Mr. Speaker, a company set up in such circumstances deserves to be protected to the extent that it is efficient and performs its duties.

Now there is the whole field of railways: the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. That is probably the main subject of any debate dealing with transport. Here again, I believe the opposition should tell us about its policy positions. Should a company like the Canadian National, for instance, be exclusively profit-oriented? I say no, Mr. Speaker. I say that the Canadian National should be efficient, should conduct research, should try to be forward-looking in railway transportation. Only the Canadian National, like any Canadian railway company, has a public responsibility. Consequently, it often has to provide service at a loss in certain areas. And that is part of our concept of transportation in Canada and gives us an idea of what a Crown corporation should be.

If railway companies keep on abandoning so-called uneconomic services, a day will come when there will be trains only in Montreal and Toronto, because those are the only two cities with enough population to make railways economic, which makes no sense at all. Since certain institutions have a public duty to perform, they must assume directly or through the government financial responsibilities that a private company surely could not take on.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I will run out of time. It is that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I knew that you were going to interrupt me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I must point out to the hon. minister that I gave him two or three more minutes. Does the House agree to allow a few more minutes to the hon. minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If only you had resisted the temptation two minutes more, I could have finished my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

I merely want to add that it is certainly not the opinion of most Canadians that our corporations should be nationalized just for the fun of it, that smoothly running corporations, not state-owned, making normal profits and developing normally should be transformed into Crown corporations. I believe no one, even those who claim to be socialists, would call for nationalization of all our corporations. I have never heard such a contention brought forward, even by NDP members, since the CCC manifesto in Regina.

However, I feel that an economy such as ours calls for a certain number of government corporations, occupying a privileged place and, although they are functioning properly, allowed by the government to perform the tasks they were created for. They must be efficient. Obviously, if a bureaucracy forms in these corporations and cannot be dislodged, there must be means of changing it and renewing the management. We have our philosophy on this, Mr. Speaker. If private enterprise goes in where it thinks it can make money, it does so at its own risk. But in the government sector, we must safeguard the public interest.

There is, however, one slight distinction that remains to be made, and I shall finish on this, Mr. Speaker. I am not saying that private interest automatically and necessarily overlooks the public interest, but simply that that is not its prime concern. Its first concern is to make a profit, after which it can start to take account of other values such as the public interest. It is the other way round for a Crown corporation: its first concern is the public interest, but at the same time it must try to be efficient and economically viable, to show that people can act on motives other than profit. It can also act to be of service to the public. Such, Mr. Speaker, is the aim that I set myself with regard to the Crown corporations under my administration. I shall not try to weaken them. On the contrary, I am going to try to make them stronger and more efficient and to do what I can to make them give better service to the public of Canada.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should have preferred to speak before the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) because I intend to deal with a question on which I should have liked to get some answers, but I bow to the requirements of protocol and ministerial priority.

I am nevertheless encouraged, because the minister has suggested that the Crown corporation I am going to criticize was created expressly to protect the interests of the Canadian public and to serve it.

I simply seek the protection of a certain sector of the public—that which I represent—and I want it to go on getting the service it needs.

[English]

I welcome this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to address parliament about Crown corporations and service to the public because it gives me the means of registering a public protest against the failure of one of our Crown corporations to provide the full service expected by members of the community—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing personal, but I have to leave and I want to be sure the hon. member does not think it is because he is speaking. I have an engagement in my office.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): As I was saying, it gives me the means to protest against the failure of one of our Crown corporations to provide the service expected by members of the community which I have the honour to represent in company with my colleague the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

My argument is to the effect that just by being a public or a Crown corporation does not make the enterprise faultless or white and pure. However, before getting to that matter I should like to say a word or two about the motion itself. The initiators of this motion are taking aim at private corporations and are, I suggest, intent on promoting the notion that all corporate activity and enterprise in this country should be nationalized.

In the same breath that they use to advocate this socializing theory, they protest violently against big, monopolistic corporations. Monopolistic monoliths, Mr. Speaker, are creatures of man that all too readily can become monsters whether they be private or public, nationalized corporations. Nationalized monopolies can be just as great a menace and can disregard the public interest just as conclusively and effectively as a monopolistic private enterprise. They can be just as difficult to move.

It is my personal conviction, after examining all the evidence, that as a general proposition the public interest is best served by competition and that competition can be between private and public companies or between private and socialized companies, although I do not see competition between socialized companies and nationalized companies.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and his colleague in the New Democratic Party suggested that the nationalized corporation is the good guy and the private corporation the bad guy. Let me give the House just one instance of how the good guy can get at the throat of the bad guy, all in the knowledge that any shortfall the good guy may suffer will be made up by a generous parliament, which in the end means the generous public, the public of Canada.

Let me detail what is happening in my area. My colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), has spoken of the dangers of a monopoly public utility failing to give service. Here is an instance. An island people is heavily reliant on transport, not just to receive all it needs and to ship excess goods to market but also to maintain personal touch with the mainland. Our island, Vancouver Island, is no exception. We have our commercial and personal needs to be fulfilled. Developments are in train, however, that cause us grave misgivings. These developments are in the hands of the government, or a government agency, to control. I suggest, in fact, that too little is being done to safeguard the requirements of the population of Vancouver Island.

For over one month I have been trying to get satisfaction from one or other of the articulations of the minister's department. I am referring to a scheme I have heard about to reduce air service facilities between the island and the mainland. Let me give you the following by way of background, Mr. Speaker. The last ferry leaves the Saanich peninsula for the mainland at nine o'clock p.m. Travel time from shore to shore is one hour and 20 minutes. The last flight at present leaves Victoria airport for Vancouver airport at 23.35. Travel time, airport to airport, is 20 minutes. The first ferry leaves the island for the mainland at seven o'clock in the morning. The first air service now leaves Victoria airport for the mainland at five minutes after seven. That is Air Canada flight 170; and I am not making a commercial, as you will soon appreciate.

Thus, as things now stand, between half past eleven at night and seven in the morning there is no way of getting to the mainland. To parody the comment, "the continent is cut off," made in Britain whenever fog closes in and disrupts flights and sailings to France, Belgium and other places, we do not want to isolate the mainland, Mr. Speaker: we like to preserve contact with the mainland. Seriously, however, we may need, early any morning, to get to the mainland for reasons of business, family matters, illness, and so on.

The seven o'clock flight is a good one. It is operated by Air Canada, a publicly-owned corporation, and has been well patronized. I am told by a reliable informant that the flight carries on the average between 35 and 40 passengers daily and the aircraft has a full load seating capacity of about 48 passengers. As I say, it is a well patronized service. Now we hear that Air Canada is threatening to eliminate that service. This is the public utility so highly praised by hon. members to my left. As at the end of April, that service may well disappear, to the detriment of the inhabitants of the island who for one valid reason or another may want to go over early to the mainland.

I have been doing what I can to ensure that this service continues. At first I got in touch with Air Canada. The service is not being eliminated, I was told; it will be supplied by the flight of another airline scheduled to leave at 8.15, one hour and 15 minutes later. That service, moreover, at present is already well booked. However Air Canada might wish to describe it, that existing service will be dropped if present plans are carried through. As Air Canada now sees it, there will be no flight from Victoria to Vancouver until 8.15.

I next appealed to the Canadian Transport Commission. To this plea I have so far had no response, which makes me wonder how the CTC operates as a regulatory body. Is it responsible for ensuring that service to the public is maintained? I regret very much that the minister is no longer present. I hope he will read my questions in Hansard and will in due course reply. Has that commission any regulatory control over schedules? I feel I am entitled to know this and the population of the island is entitled to know it. And if it does not have this regulatory power, where do I turn to ensure that the mainland's isolation is not prolonged unduly each morning and does not extend beyond the present seven and a half to eight hours?

What are some of the other consequences of dropping this service? Many Vancouver islanders have business or even tourist's interests in the east and overseas. What results will they feel from the elimination of flight 170 from Victoria which leaves at seven o'clock? Well may I ask that question. I have looked at the air schedule. At present, if a passenger leaves on that flight from Victoria he can, should he so desire, catch the following eastbound flights from Vancouver to Toronto, Ottawa or Montreal.

There are two CPA flights leaving Vancouver at 8.35 and nine o'clock respectively, and an Air Canada flight leaving at 8.20. By being unable to leave Victoria on that early flight, the passenger would obviously miss the first of these; he could not get away from the island until 8.15 and he would miss the CPA flight leaving Vancouver at 8.35. He might miss the second CPA flight at nine o'clock because of delays involved in transferring from one flight to another, in offloading luggage, and so on. He would miss the Air Canada flight that is most convenient for me, the one that comes straight to Ottawa. Having been made to miss two CPA flights and one Air Canada flight, he would be forced to wait for the Air Canada flight which does not leave until 9.15.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), in fact all ministers and most executives these days, claim that they want to maintain the widest possible range of options. Why should executives, even backbench executives in the opposition, have their options reduced? I say the flight at seven o'clock from the island ought to be maintained. If I, for example, were able to catch the flight at 8.35 operated by CP Air from Vancouver, I could be in Ottawa at half past four. Unless I spend the night, at some cost, in Vancouver waiting for the 8.15 flight from Victoria, I will be forced to catch the 9.15 flight leaving Vancouver and I would not get here until half past six, one hour and a half later. I like the options the way they were. Surely Air Canada should be required to serve the public need: it is a national, public utility as we heard eloquently expressed in this House today and it should not be permitted to eliminate a well patronized scheduled flight from the island.

But that is not all, Mr. Speaker. What about travellers going in other directions? Remember, arrival in Vancouver by the early flight is 7.25 at present. If that service is eliminated, it will not be possible to get to Vancouver until 8.35. As well, there are departures for Mexico in the morning, by that villain CP Air. One flight leaves at 7.45. You might just catch it if you left Victoria at seven o'clock. Or you may have to wait until the next flight at 2.30 in the afternoon. You may wish to go to Hawaii or the South Pacific. If so, departure time is 8.30. If you leave the island at seven o'clock you can catch that flight. If you must wait until 8.15 you would miss it, and there is not another flight until the next day. Of course, the flights to the South Pacific are all operated by Canadian Pacific Air Lines.

I am wondering if it is not possible to draw certain inferences from these considerations. I submit that there is room in all this to infer that Canada's national public carrier is not serving the national interest—I hope the proponents of nationalization are listening—at my end of the country inasmuch as it is not fulfilling the requirement to provide a much needed service. The 8.15 service, incidentally, is not to be provided by a public service but by another private service, Pacific Western, the airline which was mentioned this morning by my colleague from Vegreville. The first Air Canada flight to Vancouver will not be in the air until 10.30. I think this is deplorable. If this is public service, I think I will opt for private service. That sort of performance is unacceptable to those whom I represent on southern Vancouver Island. If Air Canada is a public service in the true sense of the word, it ought to provide the service needed by the public in the area in which it is operating. It will be obvious from the foregoing, Mr. Speaker, that I disagree with the initiators of this motion on certain aspects of the matter which they are putting forward. Nationalized monopolies, as I think I have shown, are not my bag. We are heading for trouble if we head in that direction, as has been suggested.

I share the misgivings that hon. members have expressed with respect to Polymer and with respect to the government's policies affecting that corporation. I am particularly disturbed to see Polymer disappear. I have a soft spot in my heart for Polymer, because Polymer gave me my Master's degree by providing me with an early model of Crown corporations on which I could base my Master's thesis. The concept was a good one, although it could be improved. However, it was an enterprise that ought to have been confined to specific areas of activity and allowed to occupy a monopolistic position only in special circumstances, such as the wartime emergency situation which gave birth to Polymer when the need for rubber was absolutely essential.

• (1600)

Many are the failures of this government which we on this side of the House regret. Many of its policies we condemn. Among them is its failure to bring forward to this House measures that will halt inflation and reduce unemployment. In the context of this motion, we condemn not only the government on these grounds but for having divested itself of its holdings in Polymer. Even more, Mr. Speaker, we condemn the government for the way in which they have done this, by refusing to give a proper accounting to this House which created Polymer in 1940 or 1941 and which was once headed by a frontbencher on the other side of the House. There was no annual report, no profit and loss statement and no statement of assets and liabilities at the time of sale. Talk about questionable practices, Mr. Speaker, when one public corporation ingests another without let or hindrance—by Your Honour's leave, I avoid some forms of language—and without a report after the event except by an entry in the estimates! We have reached the stage of monogopoly, where one monopoly gulps up another. We have come, indeed, to a sorry pass. I sometimes think of that concept of life when I try to work out what happens when a snake consumes itself from its tail. What happens when it starts to swallow its stomach?

I will go along the road of condemnation with the NDP that far, the road which we have been invited to take, the road of condemning the government on the manner of its handling Polymer.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House of events that led to the sale of Polymer Corporation Limited to the Canada Development Corporation and summarize the role played by the Minister of Supply and Services in accordance with his responsibilities as the minister responsible for Polymer Corporation Limited up to the point of sale. Parliament approved in principle the sale of Polymer Corporation Limited to the Canada Development Corporation by virtue of section 39(1) of the Canada Development Corporation Act, which provides:

> The Governor in Council may sell or cause to be sold to the company, at such fair and reasonable price as may be agreed upon by the Governor in Council and the company, the whole or any part of the capital stock of any or all of the following:
> (a) Polymer Corporation Limited;

(b) Eldorado Nuclear Limited;

(c) Panarctic Oils Ltd., and

(d) Northern Transportation Company Limited but subject, in the case of the capital stock of Panarctic Oils Ltd., to any agreements relating to the sale of capital stock held by the Crown.

The Canada Development Corporation Act became effective November 18, 1971. Subsequently, the government authorized the Minister of Supply and Services to undertake negotiations with the Canada Development Corporation for the sale of Polymer Corporation. The following considerations were taken into account in pursuing the sale of the company. The original rationale for the existence of Polymer as a domestic producer of a strategic material in a national defence context no longer existed. We must remember that the government's objective in establishing Polymer Corporation in May of 1942 was to remedy a shortage of natural rubber as a strategic wartime material. However, for some years it has appeared that this need is no longer evident. In fact, Polymer evolved into a multinational producer-marketer. It had been profitable over the years, but profits had been subject to fairly wide swings and at the time of sale were on the decline.

To protect its earnings base, the company sought to diversify into non-rubber lines. This diversification and the large capital requirements that it entailed could best be met by a change in ownership which would provide for access to private financing and freedom of business choice. The vehicle best suited for providing immediate response to its capital needs and ensuring that the benefits of ownership continue to accrue to all Canadians had already been envisaged by parliament when the Canada Development Corporation was created.

On the other hand, if Polymer had not been sold and had continued as essentially a synthetic rubber business rather than allowed to diversify, it would likely have ceased to be a profitable business, being faced with an increasingly competitive situation and higher raw material costs. It would, therefore, have become a charge upon the public treasury, which would not have been in the best interest of Canadian taxpayers. Again, if Polymer had not been sold, but allowed to diversify, Polymer could have been placed in direct competition with a range of Canadian enterprises in the private sector; and the government did not feel that it should become involved in a host of varied enterprises such as building materials, soft drinks, snowmobiles or even underwear, for that matter.

Taking all of these factors into consideration, it then seemed desirable to proceed with the sale. The remaining question was one of arriving at a fair and reasonable price to both parties. The negotiated price which was agreed upon was arrived at with reference to several valuations, one of which had been provided by the firm of Wood Gundy Limited. Terms and conditions of the sale included the payment of $62 million in the form of Canada Development Corporation shares, and a formula whereby the government of Canada will share in 1973 and 1974 earnings over a certain level of rubber, latex and plastics up to an additional payment of $10 million.

The government approved the sale on July 27, 1972, which is contained in the relevant order in council PC 1972-1715 of that date. The sale became effective July 31, 1972, and subsequently the shares held by the Minister of Supply and Services were delivered to the Canada Development Corporation upon payment of $62 million in the form of Canada Development Corporation shares. Accordingly, the responsibilities of the Minister of Supply and Services as minister responsible for Polymer Corporation ceased as of July 31, 1972, the effective date of sale.

It is my considered opinion that the decision to sell Polymer is a valid one, that the price arrived at was fair and reasonable based on the best information available at the time, and that the method of conducting the sale was correct. Furthermore, I am convinced that with the active support of the Canadian Development Corporation, Polymer will be provided with a flexible and businesslike framework in the profitable pursuit of its objectives as a Canadian-based multinational company. It also seems to me that the acquisition of an experienced and reputable organization such as Polymer will provide the Canadian Development Corporation with a cornerstone to pursue its own investment strategy.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by giving the House a little information that I have been able to gather since the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) spoke just a few minutes ago on the question of labour representation on various advisory bodies or boards of directors of Crown corporations in this country. I do not want to try to put words into his mouth by suggesting he was saying that there were large numbers of labour people on these bodies, but at the same time he certainly left the impression that there were considerable numbers of labour people on them. I for one, as well as many other people in this country, would like to challenge this view, because it is very apparent that where there is labour representation it is very much of a token nature. I have before me this afternoon very few documents but I thought by reading from them I might help set part of the record straight. If the Minister of Transport wishes to complete the record at some other time, I invite him to do so.

I have a list of the directors of Polymer Corporation. There are ten directors. Of these ten directors there is one who comes from the labour movement. Indeed, broadly speaking we could say that there is only one person who comes from the community at large; the rest of the directors, of course, are from the corporate community.

With regard to the Canada Development Corporation, the list discloses 21 directors. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) entertained the House a while ago with their background, so I shall not do the same. I simply say that of those 21 directors there is one from the labour movement. If this is representation, I call it token representation.

I have gone back over the list of directors of Polymer Corporation since 1948, and a few years ago the case was not the same at all. There were no representatives from the labour movement or community at large on the board of directors of such corporations, particularly this one. It is nice to know that there has been a change of heart. We realize that there are such things as legitimate labour unions in this country which have the right to be represented on boards of directors and advisory councils of various enterprises run directly or indirectly by this government and parliament.

Where before there were none, we now have one representative out of ten, one out of 20, one out of 18—token representation. It is highly reminiscent of what happened a number of years ago when we in North America watched television ads that in most cases were produced in the United States and failed to see at any time a black person taking part in a television commercial. Over the past three or four years there has been a change of heart and we have come to admit in North America that black people do live here. In order to bend to this change of heart, the commercial interests in this country now every once in a while play black people in commercials in recognition that they form part of our population.

The same approach of tokenism is used on boards of directors of publicly-owned corporations in this country. I am not talking at the moment about privately-owned corporations: I am sure it is a rare case indeed when a privately-owned corporation gets someone from the union to sit on its board. I am talking about publicly-owned corporations and advisory bodies set up by and for this parliament.

These remarks are not going to be the burden of my address this afternoon, if I can call it an address. I want to address myself to the whole question of the motion that is before the House, a motion that can be paraphrased in cruder language as the sell-out of the public of Canada's interests to the private corporate interests of this country.

In the past we have had reason to be proud of our crown corporations. Indeed, if you go back, Mr. Speaker, over the history of reports that have come to this parliament from, for example, Polymer Corporation, there is a note of constant and well deserved pride in the success, prosperity and usefulness of a Crown corporation such as Polymer. I have taken the time to go back over reports across the years but I will not read extensively from them. Let me simply say that we have in the Library of Parliament a bound volume of reports issued by Polymer Corporation.

It touches one's heart a little when one looks at some of the earlier reports. For example, the report to the minister of reconstruction and supply for the 12-month period ending March 31, 1948, is typewritten. How humble, how spartan; but at the same time, how complete! Reading through the report you get more than pictures; you get more than general statements. You get accurate descriptions of the goings on and procedures of the corporation. As a matter of fact, the more you move forward through the history of the corporation, the glossier the documents get and the vaguer they become. I do not want to be very conservative in my attitudes, but it is sometimes worth while to go back to a simpler, more direct world, a world where you can find information that is more complete than is the case now, with all the help and advice our various corporations receive from various PR flaks.

About two and a half years ago there was a sudden creation by fiat of a rather large category of persons in this country. Overnight, a large section of our population became the bleeding hearts of Canada. The bleeding hearts of Canada were said to have very little power, and indeed they have very little power. But they have some power of comment. I am told by the National Association of Bleeding Hearts that some time last year they thought they would state their presence in this country by offering a medal, an order so to speak, which they called the Order of the Lily Liver. They were bound to offer the Order of the Lily Liver to the government of the day. It was awarded for its daring, perhaps what we would call its temerity, its bravery in taking an idea such as the idea of the Canada Development Corporation, which was supposed to be the medium through which the people of Canada would have gained, first of all, some control and power over the corporate processes of this country and begun to regain Canadian control over the industry and economy of Canada.

What is the first thing that the Canada Development Corporation does? It takes over a corporation that is already fully Canadian and fully owned by the people of Canada—Polymer Corporation. As a second step in its temerity and bravery, what does it do? It takes over Connaught Laboratories, another entity completely in the public realm owned by the University of Toronto, in effect owned by the public of Canada. It was a truly Canadian corporation. It was a very valuable corporation which had an international reputation. This laboratory provided a service not only to Canadians but to people throughout the world through its research in drugs and the provision of inexpensive drugs to hospitals and other institutions in this country. So after taking over Connaught Laboratories, the National Association of Bleeding Hearts decided to give the Order of the Lily Liver, with bar, to the Canada Development Corporation. What they were in effect trying to say was that the original idea had been completely reversed and that the Canada Development Corporation as set up in late 1971 was not the ideal which had been held up for the people of this country to watch and to hope for.

We have had some reference this afternoon to the past, to the days of C. D. Howe. I was walking behind the East Block today at noon when I happened to walk behind the bronze statute of our fifteenth prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King. He has his hands stuck behind his back. I would almost swear that his fingers were crossed. I thought they were crossed because he was afraid the great spirit of C. D. Howe would storm this Hill today to tell Liberal members of the front benches that they were completely betraying his ideas and his work. In the past, the CCF were not necessarily the great friend of C. D. Howe, but certainly they admired his forthrightness, his energy and his dedication to building Canada. I am sure that if he were to come back today, Mackenzie King in bronze image would have a great deal of reason to cross his fingers, because there would be some mighty scolding of the people who now sit on the front benches.

The Canada Development Corporation can now extend its bravery and take over Panarctic. Perhaps it could take over Eldorado. But before this happens let us stop to consider what we are up to in the ventures of the Canada Development Corporation. The story behind the Crown corporation is that it was to give to the people of Canada some degree of control over their economic destiny. It was not simply, as has been mentioned in the House this afternoon, to do a job where private interests could not do it: there was something positive in the idea of the Crown corporation which I believe has been completely lost from sight.

Rather than taking over Panarctic and putting it into the hands of CDC which would some day, I am sure, sell it to the private interests of our country, this parliament should take steps to instruct the government to have Panarctic become really and truly controlled by the Canadian people. At the very least we should have 51 per cent control of this enterprise. This enterprise will be a major factor in the exploitation and development of our oil resource in the northland. Surely when it comes to this very scarce and important resource, we want it completely under Canadian control.

When it comes to Eldorado, before we begin handing over Eldorado to the Canada Development Corporation perhaps we should begin by giving it the same treatment that was given to Denison Mines. A few years ago the owner, the president of Denison Mines, threatened to shut down the mine because he could not sell its uranium. An agreement was struck between Denison Mines and the Government of Canada on December 23, 1970, which in effect subsidized Denison Mines to the tune of $29.5 million to cover three-quarters of the cost of uranium stockpiling. The president of Denison Mines, Mr. Roman, had the ingratitude some time afterward to state that he was having a hard time because he had to pay out $6 million or $7 million in losses over the stockpiling. He had the further ingratitude of biting the hand that fed him, or of trying to bite the hand that fed him, by running in the following election.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How much did he spend on that?

Mr. Harney: A mere $90,000, a figure for which C. D. Howe would not have had a measurement. But if we can help Denison Mines to that extent, surely we should pay some concern to Eldorado which has received no such subsidy, is now working below capacity and over the past number of months has been forced to lay off workers.

In the time I have left I should like to talk about Polymer more specifically, because it has been the object of concern over the past few days, as it well ought to be. There is an old Latin saying—I do not know whether Latin is an official language in this House or in this country—caveat emptor, "Let the buyer beware". In this case the saying should be transformed so that it would be caveat vendor, "Let the seller beware". We, the people of Canada, are the people who are selling Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation and we should beware in respect of the details of the transaction.

This House has been informed this afternoon of certain figures relating to the value of Polymer. I would like to give some more figures of that value. We know that over the years the net assets of Polymer have far exceeded, year by year, the paltry sum which is being offered for it by the Canada Development Corporation. Net assets, less liabilities, for the year 1971 were $163 million. For the year 1970 they were $163 million, for 1969 they were $160 million, and for 1968 they were $155 million. Going away back to the year 1962, the value of the net assets, less liabilities, was $90 million. So even in 1962 it was worth more than the sum now being offered for it in CDC shares. Note that it is in shares, and not dollars. Judging from some of the plans which are being put forward for CDC, we might have a right to question the value of these shares in the future. So we as the vendors certainly ought to beware.

Let us look at the book figures. We know that in the world of corporate transactions, book figures are only part of the picture. There are other ways to calculate the value of Polymer. I need not repeat now that the sale price is between $62 million and $72 million, depending upon the profitability and earnings of Polymer in the next while. But let us look at more effective estimates. There could be three methods of calculating the value of Polymer. We might take the estimated consolidated book value on December 31, 1972, which is $128 million. Then we could add to this the estimated excess depreciation because over the years, of course, Polymer has depreciated its machinery, stock, and so on, and some of this machinery in terms of book value has a zero value although the machinery is still working and is still being used. The machinery still has a value. Everybody in the industrial world knows that you can have a piece of machinery which is totally depreciated, in so far as tax purposes are concerned, while the machinery is still operating, still cranking away and still producing and making very good use of itself.

Method A is that you estimate the consolidated book value as at December 31, 1972, add the estimated excess depreciation and arrive at a figure of $163 million—a cool $101 million above the $62 million. Method B is more commonly used to evaluate corporations and companies. You take the company projection of average earnings, after taxes, for 1973-76, which would be about $16 million, and multiply it by the capitalization factor, discounting growth by 100 per cent, which yields roughly 7 per cent after tax. This is a very conservative set of figures and multipliers. Multiply the effect 14 times. I am striking a middle figure here because we know, as the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) said a while ago, that ten times is the minimum factor and we know that in the petroleum and petrochemical industry 22 times is the more reasonable figure. So I will take 14 times. That gives you the method B valuation of $224 million. Subtract $62 million from that and you will see that the people of Canada might be losing.

To be even less conservative and go the full range of valuation as it might be carried on in the petrochemical industry, let us use a factor of 22, which is not common. You will have a figure which certainly skyrockets beyond the 14 times, giving you much more than the $224 million valuation for the company I mentioned earlier. So there is a very real and serious gap between the value of this company and the money that has been paid for it.

If it were the case that it was solely a book transfer between a Crown corporation and the Canada Development Corporation which was totally in public hands, then we could say that this is just a matter of a book entry. But it is not so. The Canada Development Corporation will be putting out shares to the public. And let us not kid ourselves: when we talk about the public we do not talk about Mrs. MacGillivray with a few dollars in her socks; we are talking about people who have the money to invest in the stockmarkets of this country, and that is a limited number of people. We are not talking about people so much as about other corporations, other companies or other institutions. So here we have the possibility of a Canadian Crown corporation being effectively sold for peanuts to the private interests of this country. No wonder that the great spirit of C. D. Howe might shake itself a little on a day like this and come roaring up to this parliament to scold the Liberal frontbenchers.

There are other questions which are involved. They relate to the presentation of the financial report of Polymer. I have gone back over a few years to find out when the financial reports were presented, and I have the dates: 1971, February 11; 1970, February 12; 1965, February 11; 1960, February 21; 1959, February 5. It is now March 23. Indeed, if I may quote the immortal words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "it's spring". Winter has gone by, the winter of our discontent has gone by, and according to the normal pattern we should have a report on this very large and important Crown corporation because there are questions at least, to be asked. Accusations have been made about the Crown corporations which ought to be cleared up fully.

Mr. Nielsen: There are questions to be answered, too.

Mr. Harney: I should like to cite from an Associated Press report which originated in Geneva and reads as follows:

> The International Federation of Chemical and General Workers . . . said Polisar International SA—

That is the international trading company of Polymer.

> —which has an agreement on technology exchange with the Soviet state committee for science and technology, also integrates international cash flows and profits "to minimize taxes and accumulate investment capital for further expansion overseas."

What could be behind this? We all have an idea of how multinational corporations can operate through processes of invoicing so that they can minimize their tax burden. A multinational corporation operating in Canada and producing goods in Canada could be, in effect, selling goods directly to Arkansas through Belgium and therefore, when it invoiced Belgium for a figure less than what they would be invoicing Arkansas, foresaw that the profit made in Canada was small but the profit made in Belgium was large; but it so happens that the tax grab in Belgium is smaller.

It is known that the tax levels in Switzerland are indeed modest; they run at approximately 8 per cent. They even beat us in this country when it comes to letting off the corporations. What we want to see in this parliament is the financial report so we can go into it thoroughly to see what the international trading practices of Polymer have been, because certainly it has been doing business with Polisar, its own subsidiary in Switzerland, and it would be very interesting to know how over the years Polymer has paid taxes effectively to Switzerland which could have been paid to the people of Canada.

Of course, in the past, we did not mind that the directors of Polymer used every legal means at their disposal to reduce the tax burden on Polymer because, after all, we the people of Canada were still the owners of Polymer; so whether we got it in taxes or profits, we still had it. But now the problem is that this company has been sold out and we will be losing out on the back taxes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have been pleased in today's debate to hear the various arguments put forward—most of which, incidentally, I agree with—concerning the contemptuous action taken by the government with respect to the Polymer and CDC deal. The previous speaker stated in his final remarks how deplorable it was that we have not as yet been given the right to look at Polymer's last annual report.

I feel his comments are particularly appropriate when we bear in mind that up until yesterday we were debating in the House Bill C-133. During that debate I pointed out that I found it was strange that this government would come to parliament and request an increase in the ceiling for CMHC so that it could borrow up to $10 billion, and that they would request the ceiling with respect to the amount of mortgage investment they could insure should be increased to $19 billion; yet they had not given the House the courtesy of presenting to the House the most recent annual statement for CMHC which should have been presented for year ended December 31, 1972. I pointed out that in both respects, the amount of mortgage investment that had been insured and the actual amount of loans advanced to that corporation were significantly lower than their existing ceilings.

I am indeed very surprised, startled and annoyed to be now presented, the day after the debate, with the annual statement for CMHC, bearing in mind that that statement, I suggest, had been deliberately withheld from the House until the bill was passed in principle last night. I would call the attention of the House to the fact that a review of the figures with respect to CMHC reveal all too well why the Trudeau government did not dare introduce that statement prior to the passage of the bill in principle. The fact is CMHC profits have again tumbled. This is the third year in a row that that corporation has borrowed more from the treasury, has increased their assets, has increased their number of employees, but has made less money.

Let me give you the figures, Mr. Speaker. Based on borrowings from the Government of Canada which we find total, as of the end of 1972, $6,166,000,000 compared with borrowings the previous year of $5,600,000,000, we now find that the corporation's after-tax income is $3,182,000 compared with $7,432,000 the year before. Surely that is a significant factor that the House should have been aware of prior to our being asked to give second reading to Bill C-133.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when we are considering the desirability of Crown corporations we should keep in mind that, while it may be necessary to have certain Crown corporations for certain services, wherever possible Crown corporations should be divested and put back into the private sector. Let me contrast, for example, the picture in Canada with respect to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the comparable company in the United States which, incidentally, used to be state-owned and which is referred to as the Federal National Mortgage Association. I would point out that that corporation, which is only three times the size of our Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has had a sensational growth in profits, 686 per cent in fact, which is due largely to the fact that the American authorities worked out an ingenious plan for returning that corporation back into the private sector.

At the present time on a board of 15, 10 of the board are nominated by the stockholders at large of the corporation. Those stockholders are made up largely of those who use the services of what is called Fannie Mae. I would point out that the company is, first of all, neither a purely private enterprise nor a purely governmental agency but, rather, is a combination of the two. It is ultimately controlled by the President of the United States and it is also charged with the major responsibilities of implementing U.S. housing policies. It is expected to seek profits for its stockholders—I would emphasize that because to me profit is simply the evidence of efficiency. If you do not make profit, in all likelihood it indicates bad, sloppy management.

Fannie Mae is oriented to make profit for the stockholders. It has been renamed once, it has been restructured three times and its mission has been refined and redefined twice. This is something that is long overdue with respect to CMHC. That is a corporation which was set up for one purpose, and rather than being redefined in order to be able to properly cope with the existing problems in Canada, it has been allowed to stay in a stratified, immobile condition; and judging from the current financial statement it is not even serving the government or the people of Canada properly.

In the United States, Fannie Mae has as a principal goal or mission the provision of money to builders and lenders at the most reasonable terms. It services, in short, the savings and loan associations, the banks and insurance companies in that country. I think it is interesting to note that it not only insures mortgages—and this is a recent diversion—but it has gone into the conventional mortgage field in an extremely aggressive way, becoming in effect a type of mortgage exchange where people can buy and sell mortgages of a conventional nature in the United States.

Fannie Mae has risen to her present pre-eminence among mortgage lenders because she managed, in some respects, to escape from federal authorities. In short, she escaped from Basford-type domination. As a government agency, created in 1938, that corporation naturally found it easy to borrow money in the private market to make mortgage loans. I would point out that in our stultified approach to CMHC our government has never, even to this date, allowed CMHC to go into the private sector and raise money.

It takes the easy way out, and that is simply to go to the Minister of Finance and ask for another $100 million or $1 billion, as we have been requested in this House, or perhaps $2 billion and we give them another $2 billion of loaning authority. I emphasize that the comparable company in the United States does not depend on the federal treasury to the extent that CMHC does in this country. The comparable company there is privately financed both as to equity and as to debt.

I would also mention that in order to keep its funds in the black, it has become completely free of government restraints with respect to debt limits. This has put it in the position where, unlike our CMHC which is included in the gross liabilities of Canada, it does not have to be included in calculating the gross liabilities of that country. I would also like to mention that in May, 1970, control of the company's board of directors moved into the hands of some 14,800 private stockholders. The stock, in fact, is now traded on the New York Stock Exchange and has been one of the sensations on that exchange. Its profit and its growth have been so sensational that the public have bought the stock and it has risen from about $5 in 1968 to a current price of over $20. In fact, at one time it went over $25, a fourfold to fivefold increase with respect to that stock.

The profits in that corporation at the present time are running at about $70 million. Imagine! Here is a corporation, privately oriented, that I would suggest is doing an even better job in its field than the comparable company in Canada. It is only three times the size of our corporation, yet it is earning in the area of $70 million compared with our corporation earning $3 million. This is something that those who have such a fondness for Crown corporations should bear in mind. The fact is, government ownership is not the most efficient way to get the proper efficiency in a corporation.

The stockholders in Fannie Mae elect ten of the directors and the President of the United States appoints the other five. The charter granted to the company by the U.S. Congress gives George Romney, as Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, "general regulatory powers" over Fannie Mae affairs, decisions involving dividends, stock issues, total debt and borrowing of money. But, and I would stress this, at all times the company is geared to a profit-making orientation.

• (1650)

I have drawn attention to these similarities or dissimilarities between the Canadian approach with respect to CMHC and the American approach with respect to Fannie Mae, not because I feel there is any particular merit in the U.S. corporation because it is American, but I am simply stating to this House that in considering the motion before us we should bear in mind that Crown corporations are not to be encouraged in further development or expansion. As this parliament progresses we will be able to demonstrate some completely irresponsible activities with respect to some of the Crown corporations that have been either administered, continued or in some cases spawned by the present government. This growth in Crown corporations is something that should be arrested at the earliest possible opportunity.

When we look at the returns produced by Crown corporations in this country, the results are startling. Their total assets have grown from under $4 billion in 1962 to over $12 billion in 1972. Their earnings, if you pull out debt calculations and the earnings that they can make by the Bank of Canada, which is simply a bookkeeping entry, are something like $70 million. We are talking in some cases about the largest corporations in the land having assets in the aggregate of $12 billion, earning somewhere around $70 million in the aggregate. Some of these corporations in fact have been in a deficit position; yet we find that there is an encouragement, a propensity on the part of the government to inflict still more Crown corporations upon the nation.

Mr. Speaker, I rose only to make a few comments because I feel it is a tragic thing that this country has been so inflicted under the Trudeau government, and I sincerely hope that there will be a trend away from loving Crown corporations.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I see by the clock that I have only five minutes, so I will not be able to go into the details of the speech that I had prepared. I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who preceded me, in regard to the value of Crown corporations. I believe this typifies the mythology about free enterprise and how it has been the great salvation of the country in the past and will be in the future. Perhaps the hon. gentleman should look at Canadian history and realize that it is a myth to say that this country was developed solely by free enterprise. Let us remember that the great economic ventures in this country were joint ventures between government and the private sector. We find something that seems to be typical of the Canadian businessman, that he lacks the financial wherewithal and the audacity or courage to take risk ventures.

I refer the hon. gentleman to the development of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that great band of steel which united this country from east to west. Was that solely a private enterprise undertaking? We find out that the private enterprisers came crying to the government that they could not make it on their own and needed help, so the taxpayers provided the CPR, that private corporation, with $25 million—that was not peanuts in those days—with 25 million acres of land, and a guarantee that they would face no competition for 25 years. We begin, then, to see in the development of the Canadian economy a partnership between government and private enterprise.

The next great venture in the area of communications was Trans-Canada Airlines. No businessman was interested in developing a national airways, so the Canadian government undertook to develop it for the Canadian people. We have been served very well by Air Canada, despite this government's attempts to undermine it by giving lucrative routes to Canadian Pacific Air lines.

Many unprofitable, small railway systems in Canada were going out of business, which would have deprived the people of northern Ontario and other areas of service. The government decided that service should come before profit, so it took over the railways and amalgamated them with the Canadian National Railways' system, incurring a huge debt but not giving up. The CNR is running efficiently today and making a profit, notwithstanding the fact that it has the huge debt of the private system hanging over it.

Let us not be carried away by the myth that free enterprise alone developed this country. Free enterprise has caused a huge amount of foreign investment in this country to the point where over 60 per cent of the manufacturing is foreign-owned, over 82 per cent of oil and gas wells are foreign-owned, and 99.9 per cent of the petroleum industry is foreign-owned. If we rely solely on foreign private investment, this country will cease to exist in the near future. What we need is a Canadian Development Corporation, not of the sort the Liberal party has, but one that is truly owned by the public of Canada and truly designed to develop Canadian industry, to buy back some of the foreign-owned industry and not to buy up profitable public corporations such as Polymer, Eldorado, and so on.

I urge this House not to fall for this mythology propagated by many members of the Conservative party and many, but not all, of the Liberal party. We need a strong publicly-owned business system in this country. I am thinking of examples we have now. We need a very strong Canadian development corporation to keep Canada for the benefit of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 26, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO RIGHT HON. MEMBER FOR PRINCE ALBERT ON THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY AS MEMBER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the House to a very agreeable circumstance in which we find ourselves today. This is, I believe, the thirty-third anniversary of the election to parliament of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: During all these years the right hon. gentleman has played a leading role in the House. In particular, he has been an eloquent spokesman for the rights of the Canadian people and, of course, led the enshrinement of those rights in the Bill of Rights.

I rise today not to speak of the offices the right hon. gentleman has held or the services he has rendered to Canada in those offices but rather to pay my respects to him as a parliamentarian. He is the dean of the House in terms of service. While, of course, he may not speak as rapidly as I speak and while he may not have quite the range of vocabulary of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —nevertheless in terms of forcefulness, clarity, persuasiveness, wit and courage he is certainly the dean of the House not only in terms of service but as a parliamentarian. Earlier in the session, perhaps in a mood of pessimism, he said he did not think he would be here in the year 2030. Sir, he has been here for 33 very fruitful years. On behalf of my colleagues, and I am sure I speak for all members of the House, we congratulate him and extend to him our very best wishes.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I hope I am in order, Mr. Speaker, in rising to second the wishes the Leader of the Opposition has expressed to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. One of the great attributes of our kind of system is that those of us who disagree with each other politically none the less respect each other for what we accomplish in this House and in the country. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the right hon. gentleman, without any reservation or qualification, that this House could not have had throughout the last 33 years a man of greater eloquence and greater kindness than the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It is an immense tribute to him, I suggest to you, Sir, that, even at the present time after 33 years, when he rises to speak members in the House listen. They come in from behind the curtains to listen to him, as do members of the press gallery, because his humour, his eloquence and his humanity are still with him and still with us. He is really a great ornament to the parliament of Canada and the parliamentary system generally.

We honour him for his belief in the system. We honour him for his unfailing kindness to all members of the House, particularly those of us who became members long after he came here. He has always made a point of speaking to us and encouraging us. I believe every member of the House wishes him well and is proud to be associated with him in the House of Commons of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to concur in the highly laudable words expressed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to the dean of this parliament.

I have been interested in the political life of our country since I was very young. I can recall the names of almost all those great Canadians who have been in the political field and who gave their best to serve their country well.

Of course we may hold divergent views on many subjects. Nevertheless, we live in a democratic country and this is what makes the grandeur of our parliamentary institutions. I have always admired what the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has done for the defence of this institution in which we are all working together for the best interests of our country.

I wish to extend to the right hon. member for Prince Albert our best wishes of good health and long life. I hope we may be able to profit from his experience for several more years so that we may better serve our country, if possible.

[English]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as befits the youngest of the four party leaders in the House, I come last.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Prove it.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not even have to invoke a birth certificate to sustain that claim. Personally and humbly, I just want to add my tribute to those expressed by the three previous speakers and, on behalf of the Liberal party and caucus, support the compliments addressed to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert by the spokesmen for the three other parties.

There was another reason why I wanted to speak last. I did want this resolution to be unanimous and I was afraid that had I seconded the Leader of the Opposition it might have given some cause for concern at the other end.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Let me just hope, Sir, that the right hon. gentleman will be with us for a long, long while in this parliament and will be the occasion for many unanimous votes of this and of other kinds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this day starts out with unanimity. I do not know how to express the depth of my feelings. The Prime Minister personally extended to me his good wishes earlier, as did the Leader of the Opposition and members of other parties.

To have been here for 33 years is to have seen something of the greatness of the institution of parliament.

This place, often castigated by cynics, has a mandate for freedom which it has carried out throughout the years in a manner that has done honour to the House of Commons of Canada.

I had not expected that this would have taken place but had it it would have marked an occasion, I would say to the Prime Minister, when I would have spoken in the other official language had he started off in that language, because I have an unusual capacity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I recall the occasion of a state visit to Mexico when in the aircraft on the way down one of the officials asked me, "Have you got a speech ready?" I said, "No". So he got one ready for me. I studied it, I underlined it, I put marks here, there and other places. I delivered it with gusto. Afterwards on the way into the city of Mexico the chief protocol officer said, "That was a very good speech but we do not speak Portuguese here." Then he added a tribute that I will always remember. He said, "But you speak it with such a fine French Canadian accent."

Whenever I sat in the Prime Minister's place in this chamber and was asked questions in French, I endeavoured to answer them in extenso—

[Translation]

"I shall answer this question later".

[English]

I find that the ministers of today, Mr. Speaker, although not having difficulty with both languages, still use that formula.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Speaking in all seriousness, I do not know how to express my thanks adequately. Parliament means so much to me, and with the passing years my feeling has been unchanged in the admiration I have for members in all parts of the House who make their contributions sincerely, desirous of bringing about changes within our country for the better.

I thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for his generous words. No one who heard the eloquence with which the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spoke today, as always, will ever forget that this is parliament, this is where, with only 18 feet of carpet between us, we strive to bring about a better Canada.

To the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), my appreciation and thanks. Again to the Prime Minister, that something which above everything else makes parliament live to me was epitomized in his message.

I saw the House of Commons first following the fire in 1916 when I was on my way overseas and determined, along with two other young men who went through arts and law with me, to come here some day. They did not return. I saw the grandeur of Parliament Hill, the majestic location. Nowhere in the world is there the equal of it. I hope I do not speak out of turn when I say that I am concerned over the fact that more and more as high buildings are going up this magnificent structure is becoming a pygmy, or if I could invent a word, is being pygmatized. Let us do something now before it is too late.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let this House catch something of the tremendous inspiration of Mackenzie King when, having secured the appointment of Jacques Greber, a plan was made that this place would not only exemplify the greatness of freedom but would stand out magnificently.

I walked up Parliament Hill this morning and the thought came to me, how changed it is in more than three decades! I do hope that some action will be taken by parliament before it is too late and that agreement will be reached as a result of the setting up of a committee not only of the Senate and the House of Commons but of the mayor and city of Ottawa to the end that we do not allow this trend that is taking place to continue. If we do, the day will not be far distant when the greatness of the location that Champlain saw will have been obliterated by modern economic change.

I say this to the young members of this House, those who came here with the present parliament. I have seen members come and go throughout the years and in all sincerity I say that I have never witnessed the equal of the group who came here after the last election. They have caught something of what this institution means.

Whatever time is ahead for me, and at my age one realizes it cannot be long, I shall always remember today. Thank you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION PROFITS

Question No. 1—Mr. Mather:

1. Is consideration being given to what was the after-tax profit of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in 1970 and 1971?

2. Is consideration being given to directing the profits into reducing interest rates?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. The net income of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, after payment of income tax, and transferred to the Reserve Fund, was $8.9 million in 1970 and $7.4 million in 1971, resulting in a return of assets of 0.18 per cent in 1970 and 0.13 per cent in 1971. Against this should be offset expenditures on behalf of the Minister of $44.0 million in 1970 and $61.0 million in 1971 for such programs as Housing Research and Community Planning, the forgiveness portion of loans for municipal sewage projects, losses on the operation of public housing projects and arising from federal/provincial agreements, and losses on the sales of mortgages. This resulted in net expenditures by the government of Canada for all these activities of $35.1 million in 1970 and $53.6 million in 1971.

2. The profit position of CMHC is affected by lending at interest rates substantially below market rates, to provinces, non-profit housing associations and others, for such programs as low-rental housing, public housing, land assembly and student housing.

Except for the 28 existing District Taxation Offices no centres will be established in 1973 to assist taxpayers in completing their income tax forms. DEVELOPMENT OF BLAIR RIFLE RANGE, NORTH VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,027—Mr. Nelson:

Are there any plans involving CMHC in the Province of British Columbia for the development of the Blair Rifle Range in North Vancouver?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): The Blair Rifle Range property in North Vancouver was acquired by the federal and provincial governments under the partnership arrangements of Section 40 of the National Housing Act, largely at the suggestion of the municipality. Following its acquisition, the district municipality of North Vancouver commissioned a planning study with the objective of determining the feasibility, timing and form of development for municipally-owned lands adjacent to the Rifle Range and as well the Rifle Range itself. While this study has been completed, firm decisions have not yet been taken by the municipality, particularly with respect to the extension of trunk services which would be required to serve the municipal lands and the Blair Rifle Range.

3. The Federal Crop Insurance Act makes assistance available to producers through provincial crop insurance programs. Additionally, federal assistance has been available to nine provinces in the past ten years where the crop loss has been considered to be beyond the resources of a province. The assistance has been given through joint federal provincial crop loss programs relative to frost, drought or excessive rain fall.

LOBSTER FISHERY EXPERIMENT

Question No. 1,055—Mr. Crouse:

1. What is the present status of the government's fisheries experiment to determine whether a viable lobster fishery could be launched at Fatty Basin at the head of Useless Inlet, B.C., using Atlantic coast lobster?

2. (a) What was the total cost of the six-year program (b) was the program successful?

3. Since this program was planned in two stages, is it the intention of the government to proceed with phase two of the experiment?

4. Is the government planning any similar experiments in the lobster's native habitat off the shores of Atlantic Canada?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. The transplant of Atlantic lobsters to Fatty Basin, B.C. has been a successful experiment. The transferred lobsters grew at the same rate as on the Atlantic coast and there is successful reproduction within confined areas. The lobster larvae survive in satisfactory numbers. It is not certain that this enouraging biological success will establish a viable, continuing self-supporting, economic fishery. This second phase still remains to be demonstrated.

2. (a)

Year	Amount
1972-73	15,600
1971-72	42,117

3. Yes, but phase two will take at least four or five years to complete as considerable oceanographic information, that is not now available, is needed.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): (a) The $2.1 million capital program budget will be used to purchase equipment in order to increase production and improve quality. POLAR BEARS AND SEALS

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Reynolds:

1. In the calendar year 1972, how many polar bears were killed (a) by sportsmen (b) by native peoples (c) by commercial hunters?

2. Is the killing authorized by law without restriction under licence or by exemption from a legal prohibition?

3. In the calendar year 1972, how many seals were killed on the East Coast sealing grounds by (a) Canadians (b) foreigners?

4. Is the killing authorized by law without restriction under licence or by exemption from a legal prohibition?

5. Has the government any plans to stop the slaughter of these animals?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am advised by the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Environment as follows: 1. (a) None. (b) 406 (licence year July 1, 1971 to June 30, 1972). (c) None.

2. The taking of polar bear is authorized only under a strictly enforced quota system by duly licensed persons. Each Eskimo settlement is allotted a yearly quota based on the bear population in that area. The quota preventing an excessive kill is revised annually by the Federal-Provincial Polar Bear Technical Committee. This Committee is composed of biologists actively engaged in polar bear research and surveys. Only Eskimo settlements can decide whether they wish to allow sportsmen to take a portion of the allotted settlement quota.

3. (a) 76,063. (b) 65,478.

4. The seal harvest is authorized by law with restrictions on killing methods, seasons, areas, vessel participation, and conducted under licence and close supervision.

5. The government of the Northwest Territories, which has full responsibility for game in the Territories, does not contemplate any change at this time in the present arrangement for hunting of polar bear. Present take is justified by research and survey data and the program is strictly monitored and enforced additionally by a tag system prohibiting the export of untagged pelts. Should biological research indicate a need to revise the present arrangements, appropriate action would be initiated.

[Mr. Munro.]

No. The seal fishery is managed on a sustainable yield quota system based on scientific assessment.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to Part 1, is that the government does not possess any options to purchase the British Scorpion light tank, and therefore parts (a), (b) and (c) of this question are not applicable.

The answer to Part 2 is that the government is not examining the possibility of purchasing a main battle tank or other heavier armoured equipment. For this reason Parts 4 and 5 are not applicable.

The answer to Part 3 is that we have considered the possibility of extending the service life of the Centurion tank as an alternative to purchasing the Scorpion but no decision concerning such extension has yet been made.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBLE CANCELLATION OF WORK PERMITS OF PERSONS WHO HAVE APPEALED TO BOARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is not for the Minister of Finance but for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister advise whether the requirement effective April 1 next of work permits throughout Canada for all non-Canadians and non-landed immigrants will result in all the 10,000 or more appellants now queued up before the Immigration Appeal Board having their work permits cancelled, and is this the method designed to reduce the number of appeals?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the requirement for work permits is, I think, in line with the practices in other countries. It is intended to provide us with the opportunity to ensure that, wherever possible, Canadians are given preference where jobs are available. Where, however, there is not this conflict, people in Canada legally will be permitted, of course, to find employment.

• (1430)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the minister telling the House that all those people who hitherto had work permits given to them and whose cases have been under appeal for periods of up to three or four years because of the government's indecision with regard to changes in the Immigration Appeal Board are now to be thrown on to the labour market as a result of having their work permits cancelled?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, with regard to those who had work permits as a result of having entered into an appeal before the Immigration Appeal Board, it is not our intention to cancel their work permits.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

ABILITY OF FOREIGN STUDENTS TO CONTINUE EDUCATION IN CANADA UNDER NEW WORK PERMIT POLICY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the government changed its regulations affecting foreign students mid-way through the academic year, thus making it extremely difficult for them to remain in Canada to continue their university education, can the minister tell the House if the government's work permit policy for foreign students will be reconsidered so that Canada's long respected leadership in the field of international education will continue?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have attempted to answer this question in previous question periods, but I will repeat to this degree. Only private foreign students are affected by this regulation. Those who came through CIDA or under exchange arrangements will not be affected. They are precisely and specifically exempted by the regulations. Private foreign students came with the full understanding, based on discussions with them at the time, that they were to be self-supporting. They will be required to seek employment visas if they are in fact seeking summer employment. Nevertheless, where such jobs exist and do not displace Canadian students, they will of course be permitted to take such employment.

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYERS TO DETERMINE WHETHER EMPLOYEES ARE CANADIANS, LANDED IMMIGRANTS OR VISITORS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is related to the first question asked and has to do with the employers involved. Can the minister now advise whether the onus will be on employers as of April 1 to ascertain the status of their employees and determine those who have landed status, those who are Canadians and those who are visitors and whether the former have work permits? Will the onus be on employers as of April 1 to ascertain the status?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to check the exact legality of that. It is my understanding the employer has a responsibility to ascertain whether the applicant is in fact a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant, in which case they do not need work permits. If they are visitors, there is an onus to find out if they have visitors' visas and employment permits.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to ask one last supplementary after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the hardship that will necessarily ensue for those who are presently working, will the minister give some assurance that during his investigation he will press for non-retroactivity of this law, in other words, keeping it intact for April 1 and subsequent days, months or years as the case may be?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, we expect to exercise a very gentle hand in this matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF MILAN ROUTE BEING AWARDED TO CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES—POSITION OF AIR CANADA CHAIRMAN—ROUTE DIVISION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of a report that Mr. Yves Pratt, the chairman of Air Canada, is very unhappy about the possibility of the Milan route being given to Canadian Pacific Airlines and is even threatening to resign if that should happen. Is the minister aware of this position of Mr. Pratt? Also, has a decision with regard to Milan been made or will it be made very soon?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the president of Air Canada has often discussed with me the problem regarding the Milan line and has done so with much energy but in no circumstance whatever did he talk about resigning. I think that this aspect of such news is not founded. As to when will the allocation of the Milan line be announced, it will still take a few weeks before such a project materializes.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact it must be obvious to the minister that any delay will make it impossible for the Canadian carrier to take full advantage of summer tourism and all the other aspects of passenger traffic to Milan, can the minister hasten the decision or else indicate to the House why there is this long delay in making the decision?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member is right in saying that a decision will have to be taken in the very near future about the Milan route because the travel period towards Europe is about to begin and I hope to be able to announce very soon the allocation of the Milan route.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I wish to ask a supplementary question based on the speech the minister made last Friday. I could not be here to listen to him but I have read his speech. I was very glad to read his statement that Air Canada must remain the major international air carrier for Canada and that certain changes are being contemplated in the division of routes between Air Canada and CP Air. May I ask the minister when the House may expect a statement from him as to the changes in policy which he has indicated are now being considered?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will necessarily be a change of policy, but it might be a new division of the world. At least, the whole world will be divided so that each airline will know what exactly is its market.

[Later:]

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the air services policy enunciated in 1965 places the Milan route directly within the area to be serviced by Canadian Pacific Airlines, is the minister now considering a change or deviation from that policy? If so, when might a statement be made to that effect?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I hope that when we announce the new division of the world, Milan will at that time be attributed to one of the main international carriers.

ALLEGED CHANGE IN TIMES OF DIRECT FLIGHTS BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC

Mr. Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us if he has seen the new Air Canada schedule as regards direct flights between Quebec City and Ottawa and, if so, can he tell us why this company has decided to curtail its service?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of this, Mr. Speaker; in fact, I travel regularly between Quebec City and Ottawa and I noticed no schedule changes recently.

HOUSING

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—PROGRESS OF FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and deals with the present status of Rochdale and Pestalozzi Colleges. Will the minister say whether any progress can be reported with regard to foreclosure proceedings on the Rochdale College mortgage?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the solicitors for the corporation have instructions from their client, the corporation, to pursue foreclosure action with all possible diligence. This they are doing. It was also at their suggestion that an application was made to the Supreme Court of Ontario for the appointment of a receiver on behalf of all creditors. That has been done and the building is by court order under the control of Clarkson Gordon and Company.

Oral Questions

TRADE

NEW INITIATIVES TO ASSIST EXPORTERS IN VIEW OF 1972 DECLINE IN MERCHANDISE TRADE SURPLUS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the alarming turnabout in Canada's international balance of payments for 1972, resulting in a deficit of $584 million and resulting almost entirely from a decline of more than $900 million in Canada's merchandise trade surplus, does the minister contemplate any new initiatives to assist Canadian exporters?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I reported on this particular set of relationships on an earlier occasion. I do regard the turndown as serious, as I think all members do, but by no means catastrophic. I think this is to some extent establishing a balance we have seen before. As to the particular measures the government has taken, all I can say and underline is that we believe measures to put the manufacturing industry in Canada on a fully competitive basis with the manufacturing industries of other countries to be of very considerable importance.

• (1440)

Mr. Baldwin: You have been damned slow about it.

Mr. Hellyer: In view of the fact that the shipping rate for Japanese auto parts destined for Canada is only $48.75 per ton weight or measurement, plus a $1.00 surcharge, while Canadian exporters of auto parts to Japan must pay the much higher rate of $63 per ton plus a 4½ per cent currency adjustment, what steps does the minister propose to take to ensure that Canadian exporters will be subject to the same favourable rate as the Japanese now enjoy?

Mr. Gillespie: I am sure the hon. member understands that questions relating to international freight rates and shipping conferences are matters for multilateral negotiations; they cannot be changed overnight. However, they are under study. It is perhaps worth noting with respect to our trade surplus—and the hon. member did recognize we are in a trade surplus position—that in the first two months of this year our trade surplus has increased, not diminished.

INCOME TAX

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO IMPLEMENT HIGHER DEDUCTIONS FOR THOSE OVER 65, THE BLIND, DISABLED AND STUDENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister now that we are once again in the season for filing income tax returns. I should like to ask whether there is any reason the legislation has not been introduced to implement the higher personal income tax deductions indicated for those over the age of 65, for the blind, the disabled, and for students, which were supposed to be effective as of January 1, 1972?

[Mr. Basford.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The reasons up to now are based on the conduct of parliamentary affairs and the necessity of obtaining supply and debating the various other topics that have accounted for our time. We are now only waiting for the return of the Minister of Finance and we expect to introduce those bills this week.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has any advice to give Canadians in the categories I have mentioned who are now filing tax returns on whether they should file tax returns as yet unauthorized by law or should wait? What advice would he give to those who feel they are entitled to rebates but who cannot receive them because of the delay in the passage of this law?

Mr. Trudeau: The government has always taken the position that it would bring these bills forward, as to the particular matters mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, my advice is that taxpayers can go ahead with some assurance because I cannot see the opposition voting against this kind of rebate to deserving taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

EXPENDITURES MADE AT HEADQUARTERS LEVEL DURING MONTH OF MARCH

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works. Since that department engages in a fair amount of expenditure of public funds and inasmuch as we are just a few days away from the end of the present fiscal year, can the minister assure the House that his department is not intensifying expenditures these last few days at the headquarters level merely because there are funds which have not yet been expended during the present fiscal year?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case at all.

Mr. Howard: Would the minister be prepared to table for the month of March the avenues of expenditure by the headquarters office of his department, the contracts that have been entered into and the manner in which that money has been expended during the month of March?

Mr. Dubé: I have no personal objection at all, Mr. Speaker. I will inquire whether this can be done.

Mr. Howard: May I address a further supplementary, this time to the President of the Treasury Board? Will the President of the Treasury Board make a similar commitment to compile information for all the other departments in relation to their headquarters expenditures this month?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I will be glad to consider the size of this task, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

RECOVERY OF INCOME TAX FROM EMPLOYEES STATIONED IN UNITED STATES—REFUSAL BY CORPORATION—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is a follow-up to a question I asked him earlier in the session dealing with the recovery of income tax from CBC employees stationed in the United States. My question is based on a written answer that I received from the minister wherein the hon. gentleman stated that the CBC has refused to collect this income tax as recommended by the Public Accounts Committee. I now ask the minister whether he is accepting the refusal of the CBC to make this collection or whether he is prepared to accept the recommendation of an all-party committee of this House?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my position on this issue is as outlined in the letter to the hon. member. The suggestion I make in the letter is that the committee meet with officials of the CBC who say there is additional evidence they would like to place before the committee. I think this request is perfectly reasonable, and this is the course of action I would recommend.

Mr. Hales: In view of the fact that the minutes of proceedings of the committee for the last parliament have been finalized, and bearing in mind that this was the final decision of the committee, is the minister now prepared to accept the committee's recommendation?

Mr. Faulkner: My position is as I outlined.

MONTREAL NORTH—MEASURES TO PROTECT WAR VETERANS IN CASE OF SALE OF PROJECT

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In view of the great anxiety shown by some 600 veterans from Montreal North, could the minister give the necessary instructions to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order that these veterans will be adequately and humanely protected should this housing project of 636 units built for them be sold.

TRADE

EXPORTS OF SNOWMOBILES TO UNITED STATES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER EXPLAIN DECREASE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Referring to a reply appearing on page 2443 of the March 21 issue of Hansard concerning exports of snowmobiles, I note that 88,000 fewer units were exported to the United States in 1972 than in 1971. Can the minister tell the House whether there is any connection between the American take-over of our snowmobile industries and the decline of exports in that line?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I believe the main reason for the reduction in exports, though I should point out that there is still a very significant balance in Canada's favour, is that there were more manufacturers of snowmobiles in the United States, fewer people are buying them, and this year there was less snow.

TRAIN DERAILMENTS—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ACCIDENTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact there has been yet another accident on the Canadian National system in the area generally south of Ottawa, this being the third in 14 days, will the minister now form a special committee to investigate the frequency and severity of these accidents?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of the question. As he knows, inquiries made by the Canadian Transport Commission are usually public and the reports are of a public nature, but there is a lot of routine investigation which is not made public. I think this is as it should be. I have asked the CTC to publish the results of certain inquiries they have made. I have also asked them, following the hon. member's reference, to attempt to find out whether there is some other way of discovering the chief causes of these accidents which seem to be too numerous these days.

NATIONAL REVENUE

EFFECT OF REVALUATION OF MARK AND YEN ON CUSTOMS DUTIES ON IMPORTS FROM WEST GERMANY AND JAPAN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue.

In view of the fact that present revaluations of the Deutschmark and the yen will not solve our present monetary problems, and since the price pressures in Canada caused by the higher mark and yen will tend to pyramid, will customs duties on imports from these countries be charged at fair value or will they move up with the revalued currencies and thereby increase the cost of food, clothing and other imports from these countries?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not feel competent to answer that question at this time and would in all humility want to get advice before answering it. I think it would be a matter of policy that would be announced in the usual way if there were to be a change.

Following his investigation of the report that CMHC intends to sell this 636 unit building now occupied in the main by veterans, will he assure the House that it will not be sold unless a clear majority of the veterans currently occupying the building as tenants approve of the sale?

EXPLOSION AND FIRE ON FLIGHT 141, TORONTO TO CALGARY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION AND REPORT

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and clearly affects the lives of thousands of Canadians. On Friday night last an explosion and fire occurred on flight 141 from Toronto to Calgary. I was on that flight and it was reported to me that engine trouble had been reported in Montreal. I notice there has been no coverage by the media as they were not informed of the accident. I ask the minister to inquire and report to the House whether there was trouble on that flight that was not corrected, whether news of this accident was withheld from the media, and also indicate the number of in-flight motor failures there have been in the past year?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, considering the importance of the incident because of the presence of our colleague on board, I will inquire immediately and try to get a report.

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN INDUSTRIAL MILK SUBSIDY AND BUTTER SUPPORT PRICE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is he planning to announce an increase in the federal subsidy for industrial milk production and also in respect of the support price for butter? It seems unnecessary to me that in Canada production of milk products should fall below domestic requirements.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to be patient for a little while. No matter how high we raise quotas or increase prices, the cattle must have the right kind of weather in order to be productive.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the minister will probably be making an announcement in this regard in a few days. When he makes that announcement, would he project dairy policy farther than just one year in order that producers can plan their production better?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INSTRUCTIONS TO NARCOTICS SQUAD TO INTENSIFY ENFORCEMENT RESPECTING DRUG TRAFFICKERS—ESTABLISHMENT OF REHABILITATION CENTRES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General. In light of the fact the Minister of National Health and Welfare suppressed a report and statistics in respect of the use of hard drugs, and as there has been an increase in their use in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary emanating from Vancouver—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Woolliams: If you will just wait a moment I will ask the question. Has the minister given special instructions to the RCMP narcotics squad to intensify and step up law enforcement against traffickers to halt this drug flow which has moved from British Columbia into Alberta and other provinces?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there have been no special instructions in respect of one province or another, but law enforcement in respect of drugs has been placed in the highest priority for the coming year by the RCMP in their criminal investigation work.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps I might ask one more question. Has the minister set up a special study on technological clinics in British Columbia, Alberta and other provinces as recommended by the LeDain Commission in its first report in order to publicize the dangers and the irreparable physical, emotional and mental destruction that result from the use of the hard drugs, and have centres been set up to rehabilitate young people in particular who have already become addicted to hard drugs, namely heroin?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I know we have drug rehabilitation programs operating in penitentiaries, but I am not sure they are the ones suggested in the LeDain report. I will check into that.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to draw to your attention that the preface to the question asked by the hon. member for Calgary North was to the effect that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had suppressed some statistics. In the absence of the minister I want to take the strongest exception to that. I wish the hon. member would not make such allegations, particularly when the minister is not in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might just make the point that the Prime Minister is taking strong objection to the article that appeared in the Globe and Mail. If the minister were here and wanted to deny it, that would be fine, as I have always been one of the first to accept a minister's statement.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is sufficient indication of the veracity of a statement for an hon. member to say he read it in a newspaper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Suppression is your middle name over there.

Mr. Woolliams: Take it up with the Globe and Mail.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PROTECT LIVELIHOOD OF FARMERS DELIVERING MILK TO SMALLER CHEESE FACTORIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Huron. In light of the circumstances surrounding cheese production in Ontario, would he initiate talks between the Canadian Dairy Commission and the Ontario Milk Marketing Board in order to protect the livelihood of those farmers who are delivering milk to the smaller cheese factories in Ontario so that both the farmers and the smaller end of that industry can survive?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure whether the minister was paying attention and heard my question, or simply does not choose to answer it. Perhaps he could enlighten the House.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I was reading a letter on my desk from a group of farmers and did not hear the question of the hon. member about another group of farmers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope that if the hon. member repeats his question he will do so in a shorter form as it appeared to the Chair it was rather more like a speech than a question. If the hon. member wishes to repeat his question briefly, the minister will be given the floor for the purpose of replying.

• (1500)

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I did my best and I will again try to be as clear as I can. I asked the minister whether he would instruct the Canadian Dairy Commission to meet with the Ontario Milk Marketing Board in order to consider the problems of those producers in Ontario who are delivering milk to smaller cheese factories for cheese production so that the livelihood of the farmers and the continuing operation of the cheese factories can be assured?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm to the hon. member that we have already had this meeting and have discussed these very problems.

CUBA—SUGGESTED REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF RONALD PATRICK LIPPERT ON COMPASSIONATE GROUNDS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister who I assume must welcome the decision of the Cuban government to permit the daughter of Ronald Patrick Lippert to visit him in prison if she can arrange to go there. My question is: In view of the recent example set by President Nixon of the United States in contacting the head of the government of The People's Republic of China and thus obtaining the release of a CIA agent from a Chinese prison on humanitarian and compassionate grounds because of his mother's health, will the Prime Minister agree to contact his counterpart, Fidel Castro of Cuba, for the purpose of obtaining the release of Canadian citizen Ronald Patrick Lippert of Kitchener, who has now served ten years in a Cuban jail as a confessed CIA employee on the same basis of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: —humanitarian and compassionate grounds because of the health of Mr. Lippert's mother?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression the hon. member has asked this question probably in the same terms a few days ago, but the question having been asked and having taken some time, perhaps the Prime Minister might reply if he wishes to do so.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, like the right hon. member for Prince Albert said: "I shall answer this question later."

Mr. Cossitt: In view of the published reports over the weekend, which I presume were published in Cuba as well, that the Prime Minister intends to resign in favour of the Minister of Finance, would he be prepared to confirm—

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the projected plebiscite in respect of the method of marketing rye, flax and rapeseed, will the minister be placing clearly before the growers the proposed method by which these oilseeds will be marketed if the Canadian Wheat Board is designated to be the marketing agency?

Hon. Otto E. We hope to formulate the question and the information in a way acceptable to virtually everyone.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT SPONSORED BROADCAST EXPLAINING FORMS—NUMBER OF COMPLAINTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I should like to ask him whether the government intends to have further broadcasts on the CBC to explain the unexplainable in connection with the income tax form?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): First, Mr. Speaker, may I thank the right hon. gentleman for the honour of responding to his question on this happy day for him and for all of us. I think the premise of his question is mistaken in that the government has not sponsored any such broadcast. Perhaps he is referring to the CBC "Tax Test" last Friday evening. This is not the first year there has been such a national tax test, and I presume it will not be the last. It was a CBC program not paid for in any way by the Department of National Revenue. I might tell the right hon. gentleman that so far the tax returns are coming in very well and the error rate is about 40 per cent below that of last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there are two kinds of falsehoods, ordinary falsehoods and statistics. The hon. gentleman has established a statistic without telling us how many have sent in their returns. Has he not a multitude of letters of complaint concerning the maelstrom of difficulties in which Canadian taxpayers find themselves by reason of the stupidity of the government in respect of its questions?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I must say there were a number of complaints, particularly before the forms were distributed, stimulated partly by fear tactics on the part of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanbury: However, in recent weeks and days the correspondence has been quite the contrary, and I am glad to say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanbury: —that the return rate is about the same as the year before.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask the co-operation of hon. members to limit the number of supplementaries between now and the end of the question period. Order, please. I believe the Chair cannot allow supplementaries. There are three minutes left before the end of the question period. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to inform the minister in just what bad shape he is. He sent me a request for assistance in respect of his tax form.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East. Order, please. The minister is rising on a point of order. Will the minister resume his seat. I seek the co-operation of hon. members in limiting supplementaries and points of order for the next three or four minutes before the end of the question period.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member, who usually tries to be fair, would not want to imply something that is not correct. I think he knows that I sent every member of the House and every member of the Senate, a letter asking for suggestions for improvements in the forms because I heard representations from the other side that they could be improved. I would very much like to have specific suggestions for the improvement of these forms, and all such suggestions will be considered before the forms for next year are prepared.

INFORMATION

POSSIBILITY OF ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN SERVICES BECAUSE OF DUPLICATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board. I might say that the question is also directed to the minister in his own right. It is in respect of Information Canada. In view of the fact that expenditures on departmental information services for the fiscal year now before us have considerably exceeded the growing expenditures of Information Canada, I wish to ask the minister what the government proposes to do about this excessive waste of public funds?

Mr. Speaker: In those terms the question is not in order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question very briefly.

Mr. Speaker: The member may rephrase his question but after that I think we will have reached the end of the question period.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in view of the growing expenditures on information services and of public funds being used for Information Canada, may I ask the minister whether the government proposes to eliminate one of these two redundant services.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the intention of the government, which I think has been successful, is to provide more information to the public, in response to widespread demand, by a process which is more efficient.

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS BY LEGISLATION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour who I understand is in charge of the affairs of women.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): At the beginning of the session I asked him whether he would be making a statement concerning the kind of legislation the government would introduce in its program to implement the report on the status of women this session. He replied, "soon". Nearly three months have passed now, and I wish to ask him whether it is his intention to leave this session a blank so far as implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women is concerned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Most certainly not, Mr. Speaker. I would point out to the hon. member that many of the recommendations of the royal commission can be implemented without the necessity of legislation. They can be implemented, for instance, by executive order. We are progressing with many of these recommendations each day. So far as legislation is concerned, I would advise that we have committed ourselves to come forward with legislation prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex, marital status or age, and I hope to have that bill before the House fairly shortly I might say again.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We already have the Bill of Rights.

In light of the accommodation crisis in Banff and Jasper and the imminent arrival of at least 1,000 summer employees who will have literally no place to live, will the minister make a statement on motions this week outlining the government's housing policy for the parks' townsites?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am reviewing this matter and if need be I will report to the House or the committee.

HOUSING

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—POSSIBLE USE AFTER FORECLOSURE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and it is supplementary to an earlier question asked about Rochdale College. In light of the letter that has been sent by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Commission, and in light of the opinion given at the coroner's inquest, has the minister any plans for devoting Rochdale College to a more socially constructive purpose after foreclosure than the one for which it is now being used?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said, we are pursuing foreclosure with all the speed that the courts will allow, and that is as fast as it is possible to go. It would be premature to determine any use for the building prior to our gaining possession of it pursuant to the foreclosure action.

FISHERIES

SEALS—ALLEGED ILLEGAL USE OF AIRCRAFT BY BRIAN DAVIES—POSSIBLE CHARGES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of the Environment. Can he indicate whether charges have been laid against Brian Davies for the alleged illegal use of aircraft in the seal fishery off the east coast of Canada and for allegedly harassing seal herds against the law of the nation?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we have a preliminary report on this and we are checking some facts to be absolutely sure of our ground. As soon as the minister receives further information, he will be able to take whatever action is required. I should like to assure the hon. member of my personal concern in this matter and I will follow it up personally.

MONTREAL NORTH—MEASURES TO PROTECT WAR VETERANS IN CASE OF SALE OF PROJECT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the difficulty being experienced by veterans, as expressed in the question directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs previously, and the difficulty of getting answers from that minister, I wonder whether the Minister of Veterans Affairs would look into this problem and help out in this case in his concern for the veterans of Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since those questions were asked previously I have received a further report. It is very clear that if the veterans in this project do not want the building to be sold it will not be sold.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will call on the hon. member for St. Catharines and then call orders of the day.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE BANK OF CANADA WILL NOT RAISE INTEREST RATE

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I attempted to ask this question when the Minister of Finance was here. In view of the answer given by the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings that he had not yet discussed the question of interest rates with the chartered banks, in light of the fact that in this morning's news it was indicated that the United States treasury has convinced U.S. banks to reduce their interest rates, and in view of the fact the Minister of Finance has said he has spoken only to the governor of the Bank of Canada, can the government assure the House that the bank interest rate of the Bank of Canada will not be raised?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of this question on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CONDEMNATION OF SALE OF POLYMER CORPORATION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon) moved:

That this House condemns the sale by the government on July 27, 1972, by Order in Council P.C. 1972-1715 of the whole of the capital stock of Polymer Corporation Limited to Canada Development Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion that we are dealing with today has been deliberately couched in very careful terms so as to confine this debate to a very specific issue, namely, the sale by the government of the whole of the capital stock of Polymer Corporation Limited to the Canada Development Corporation. This whole matter has been shrouded in secrecy because of the almost paranoiac refusal of the government to make the disclosure. The information has been suppressed.

We had the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) before a committee and when he was there the Liberal members on the committee threw up road block after road block to prevent us from getting the information that a committee of the House was set up to inquire into. We had the Auditor General there, and the same process took place, but despite the refusal of the government to come forward with information, despite this deliberate suppression of fiscal information which is necessary for any meaningful inquiry into a matter so important to Canadian people as a whole, we have managed to garner some facts. They are not up to date facts, but we hope that before this debate is over the government will come forward with additional information.

I see here the minister who, I believe is in charge of Information Canada.

Mr. Faulkner: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: He should be here because this is an agency that is supposed to supply Canadians with information. What do we know about the Polymer Corporation?

The Polymer Corporation Limited was incorporated as a Crown corporation in 1942 at the time that C. D. Howe was the wartime minister of munitions and supplies. By the 1960's, the company had grown into what was essentially Canada's only publicly owned multinational company with manufacturing and marketing activities extending into most of the major nations of the world. By 1971, the company's Polysar products, which include rubber, latex and plastics, were being sold in over 90 of these countries.

With a head office at Sarnia,—and I hope to see the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) participating in this debate because I imagine this matter is of importance to him and his constituents—Polymer during its growth established not only a large petrochemical complex there but also established other plants in France, Belgium and in the United States. Although far from being dominant, the company is a significant factor in the world rubber industry, as well as being the world's second largest producer of synthetic rubber supplying 10 per cent of the world's needs for this material. These remarkable achievements were no doubt the result of top-notch industrial expertise coupled to an aggressive development of export markets.

The company's remarkable achievements since its incorporation are also reflected in its contributions to Canada's growth and development. In 1962, Polymer employed 2,972 individuals, and by 1971 this number had grown to over 4,400. Salaries and wages paid out to these employees during this same 10 year period amounted to over $300 million. With net sales increasing from $87.5 million in 1962 to over $174 million in 1971, the company was able to make other positive contributions to this country. Polymer, in the same 10 year period, paid over a total of $33.7 million in income taxes at all levels while at the same time returning a total of over $34 million in dividends to the Crown.

Although perhaps not always a steady performer from year to year, Polymer has in its 30 year history demonstrated a strong and consistent ability to stay viable. The company serves as an example of how important and necessary it is to have the independence and free initiative of a top calibre management team in order to survive in one of the most competitive industries in the world. Witness, for example, the company's ability to withstand the 1971 revaluation of the American dollar which reduced net income by $6 million, while at the same time encouraging competition from imports. While external factors and general world economic conditions have always been important to the company, particularly since more than half its employees are located in Sarnia where manufacturing operations supply over half the corporation's worldwide sales, Polymer has withstood the test of time to become a jewel in the nation's crown.

This then was the situation as at the end of June, and as at July when the sale took place. This was the situation even as of last Friday when the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) got to his feet and tried to leave the pessimistic impression that this company is in some difficulties, with declining profits and inhibited ability to diversify. I could go on and describe the diversification which has taken place over the years in this company's operations, and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) nods his head in agreement. It has been a truly remarkable record for a Crown corporation. There was nothing unhealthy about the operation of that company or about its economic position at the time when the transaction which is under discussion here today took place.

At its July 13, 1972, meeting the cabinet approved the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation. The terms of this attempted back door sale are recorded in an Order in Council which is set forth in the motion, P.C. 1972-1715, dated July 27, 1972. It is interesting to have a look at that Order in Council which followed a letter, which I think could be termed a letter of offer, dated July 6, and a letter of acceptance signed by the then minister of supply and services now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), dated July 14. The interesting part of that exchange is the terms of the Order in Council itself.

First of all, I think we must refer to section 39 of the Canada Development Corporation Act which reads:

> The Governor in Council may sell or cause to be sold to the company, at such fair and reasonable price as may be agreed upon by the Governor in Council and the company, the whole or any part of the capital stock of any or all of the following:

Included in the following was Polymer Corporation. Nowhere in the Order in Council to which I have referred, dated July 27, is there any mention of the price being fair and reasonable. The only reference to the fairness and reasonableness of the price is to be found in the letter of acceptance which was signed by the then minister of supply and services, where there is set forth in the last paragraph of the CDC letter of July 6 the following sentence:

> We believe that this offer is a fair and reasonable one for both sides . . .

Nowhere does the Governor in Council make the statement that the price is a fair and reasonable one. Nowhere does the Governor in Council commit itself to that statement. Perhaps there is a reason behind that. Perhaps I am being overly suspicious when I fear that there might be a reason behind that rather glaring omission.

The other portion of the Order in Council, which is to be found on page 2 of it, sets forth, in addition to the sale being effective on July 31, 1972, the following subparagraph (d):

—the government shall recommend to parliament legislative action to delete Polymer Corporation Limited from Schedule D of the Financial Administration Act, thereby terminating the corporation's status as a Crown corporation;

It is quite evident that the government recognized that until some legislative action was taken to terminate the life of Polymer it would remain a living and viable corporation, required to report to parliament through the Minister of Supply and Services so long as it remains a Crown corporation by virtue of the provisions of the Financial Administration Act.

I am at a loss to know why the government proceeded, in the face of its own Order in Council, in effect to try to smuggle in an amendment to the Financial Administration Act by means of an obscure item in the estimates. The Order in Council clearly sets forth that one of the conditions of sale was that the government shall recommend to parliament legislative action to bring the life of Polymer to an end. But the government did not choose to go that way. Instead, it inserted item 16b, I believe it was, in the estimates, and that item has been defeated.

But there is an even more serious deficiency with respect to what has happened here because section 39 of the CDC Act, while clothing the government with the power to sell, to come to an arrangement at a fair and reasonable price to acquire Polymer, does not deal with the question of how to get rid of Polymer once that transaction has taken place. That was an oversight. The evidence in committee of Mr. Kennett of the Department of Finance, who is responsible for these matters, very frankly admitted it was an oversight at the time that the CDC Act was before parliament.

I would draw to the attention of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), and those who support him, that his party was very active in the debates in March, 1971, when a motion was placed before the House by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), which would have deleted Section 39 of the CDC Act. One of the speakers from his party, speaking in the debate at that time, laid emphasis on the undesirability of the CDC acquiring any existing Crown corporations. That was a perfectly proper stand to take, and in my view certainly in a situation where you have an economically healthy and well managed corporation like Polymer being the subject matter of a transfer, it just simply should not be allowed to happen. I have no doubt that that was their intention at that time.

Here, we have a corporation whose shares have been transferred to the Canada Development Corporation to a total value, which was agreed to between CDC and Polymer, of a maximum of $72 million. Mr. Kennett in his evidence before the committee said that at the time of the transfer the book value of Polymer was $108 million. Book value, in my estimation of common business practice, is not known as fair and reasonable value. To me fair and reasonable value means fair market value, and the fair market value is far in excess of the book value of $108 million. So we come to the point where again I can use a favourite expression of the hon. member for York South and his supporters, that what has happened here is that the Canadian public, who are the owners of Polymer, have been ripped-off by the government in concert with CDC which in essence is going to be, if not yet, a private corporation, with only those participating being those who hold shares in CDC.

• (1530)

This brings me to some remarks that were made in the debate last Friday by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). He tried to leave the impression that this was nothing more or less than the sale of one Crown agency to another Crown agency. That, Sir, is a distortion of the real state of affairs and, what is more, the President of the Treasury Board knew, or must have known or should have known at the time he made the statement that it was in fact a distortion. I would like to quote from Hansard, page 2546 the right hand column where he said:

This is a corporation wholly owned by the Crown. All of its shares are owned by the Crown. All of its funding is derived from the Crown. The Crown already had under its control and ownership another corporation known as Polymer.

And later:

CDC is a Crown corporation, and a physical operation of the sale by the Crown of one agency to another Crown agency is obviously entirely neutral in financial terms.

I do not know what impression the minister was trying to leave in this House at that time, but it is quite clear that he knew when he made those statements that it was fully the intention of the government to make a public offering of the shares of CDC this year if not next. Certainly, the debate put a time on it, such as five years, but that it is a private corporation, or will be eventually, there can be no doubt at all. That is one of the areas where we criticized this transaction.

Mr. Woolliams: He is acting as a marriage counsellor, now.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) is a great expert at concealing information that should rightfully be made available to members of this House. He tried to leave the impression that the corporation was going downhill and that this action was necessary to save it.

Other members took part in the debate on Friday, notably the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney). I listened to him with great care, as I did to all members who spoke on behalf of his party with respect to the sale of Polymer to the CDC. He left no doubt in my mind that he was totally and unalterably opposed to this sale of Polymer to CDC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I see he is in agreement now. It was also evident from the questions asked last Wednesday and Thursday by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). He left no doubt in my mind that he, too, was against this sale.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Then, by his interjections, and I do not see him in the House, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who interjects in such a way that we can all hear when he chooses, left no doubt in my mind that he was against the sale.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Of course, my colleague and cohort and helper, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) on two separate occasions in committee seconded motions which I put forward. One was passed and defeated vote 16b; the other called for the government to produce the financial information that we should have had in committee and the hon. member left no doubt in my mind or in the mind of any member in the committee that he was opposed to the sale of Polymer to CDC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I have before me Bill C-204 and a paper entitled "Toward a Responsive Development Corporation", the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) being the draftsman of both of them. No doubt this paper figured largely in the contribution of members of the New Democratic Party in the debates of 1971. This leaves no doubt in my mind that the hon. member's party does not want Polymer sold to the CDC. Where are we left? We are with you, we are with you 100 per cent in opposing this kind of sale.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear that a little conversation took place between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and someone else while going up in the elevator last Friday after the subject matter of our resolution was known. It is reported in the press that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said "When we defeat the government it will be on our own motion". Now, this is the motion of that party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: This is precisely what they want. To anticipate, they may say "We are not going to vote with those nasty Conservatives on this motion because all they are doing is lusting for power".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I am sure they are going to say, Mr. Speaker, that if they vote with those nasty Tories on this motion it means that the old age pensioners will not get their pensions because that measure is to come before us tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Nielsen: They will say "The veterans' allowances will not be increased if we defeat the government now".

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Nielsen: That is absolute tripe, Sir, because all they are doing is using the old age pensioners and war veterans as political pawns in a game.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: They know, as well as all other members in this House, that governments in our system have a habit of succeeding each other and that these measures will be cared for in due course.

I see that my time is rapidly expiring, Mr. Speaker, and it would not be proper for me to conclude my remarks in the 30 minutes available to me without some reference to the participation by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in the debate last Friday. I know that he is a man of principle; I know that he is a man who has vigorously, aggressively and consistently upheld the philosophy of the New Democratic Party which was so well articulated in the debates of 1971 when the Canada Development Corporation was first being discussed in this House. I would be remiss if I did not support him in the remarks which he made last Friday.

I had been listening very carefully and that is why I interjected, as reported at page 2541 of Hansard, and asked whether he was really condemning the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation. Imagine my surprise, not that he condemned it once but that he condemned it three times. In reply to my question whether he condemned that sale he said:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member understands correctly. I condemn that sale—I condemn that sale with all the vigour I have. There was no excuse for it and there is no logic in CDC doing that. There is no good economic reason and I condemn it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I was very glad to get that reply from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, but when I read the press reports on Friday and Saturday it appeared from the blues that were quoted in the press that the Leader of the New Democratic Party had said in the House "I condemn that sale with all the honour that I have". Well, Mr. Speaker, honour may somehow have disappeared over the weekend, but I do not quarrel with the word used because vigour and honour are synonymous as far as I am concerned in that there was no doubt in his mind that he condemned the sale.

Many of us believe, and I think many people across the country believe, that this is a time of reckoning for the Leader of the New Democratic Party and his followers, to determine whether principle means anything—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: —to determine whether they mean what they say when they stand up in the House and make assertions like the one the Leader of the New Democratic Party made last Friday. I believe that he did mean it, and I believe that all members of his party meant what they said in the debate in 1971 and last Friday.

All they have to do in order to prove to the people of Canada that they really did mean it, and that they really are men of principle, is to stand up and be counted when this matter comes to a vote.

Sale of Polymer

• (1540)

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, speaking on a motion which I had moved that day, a prominent member of the Conservative Party, a financial whiz kid and ex-banker, which eminently qualifies him to be a prominent member of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), had the following to say about Crown corporations as recorded at pages 2561 and 2562 of Hansard:

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that when we are considering the desirability of Crown corporations we should keep in mind that, while it may be necessary to have certain Crown corporations for certain services, whenever possible Crown corporations should be divested and put back into the private sector.

Then the hon. member for York-Simcoe stated:

. . . I am simply stating to this House that in considering the motion before us—

That being the motion which I had moved:

—we should bear in mind that Crown corporations are not to be encouraged in further development or expansion.

A little later he said:

This growth in Crown corporations is something that should be arrested at the earliest possible opportunity.

I now come to that vigorous socialist defender—

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe should make it clear that he was referring to CMHC, not to Polymer.

Mr. Lewis: If that is what the hon. member was referring to, he certainly was obscure last Friday, Mr. Speaker. He talked about Crown corporations in a very general sense.

I now come to that great socialist defender who has just taken his seat. I must tell you, Sir, that I am deeply moved by the way the Conservatives defend socialist principles and appeal to us to do that. It really is moving, Sir. One cannot help but feel that there is still some hope for the redemption of the hon. member for Yukon, but that will happen many years, probably, after he has left this place. On October 15, 1963 this House was debating the affairs of the Northern Transportation Company that operates in the Yukon. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) argued against extending or even continuing the operation of this corporation. During that debate he stated his views in several places. Let me give Your Honour one short example, as recorded at page 3611 of Hansard for 1963. The hon. member for Yukon said:

But it seems to me that when private enterprise reaches the stage where it is ready to take over and maintain services which were not there when the government entered the field, it is then time for government gradually to withdraw. I say this because it is repugnant, to my point of view, for a government openly to be competing with investment capital, . . .

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Those are the words of that great socialist to whom we listened. Let me take you back, Sir, to when Polymer, after the second world war was to be continued as a Crown corporation in this country. The matter was discussed in the House in 1946 when the government companies legislation was before parliament. That legislation affected all Crown corporations and was to continue Polymer as a Crown corporation beyond the second world war. Hon. Howard Greene, speaking for the Conservative Party, said—

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What are you talking about?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about Polymer and am merely citing a few examples to show the hypocrisy of the motion which is before the House and the hypocrisy of the Conservative Party. Speaking in the debate on that legislation which was to continue Polymer as a Crown corporation, Hon. Howard Greene said in part as recorded at page 2130 of Hansard for June 3, 1946:

The sixth objection is that by using these crown companies the government is putting into effect a very fine method of bringing about a socialist state.

A little later he said:

Let that sink in, that the CCF are applauding the fact that this bill makes socialism easy. . . . I warn the government, I warn private members of the Liberal party particularly, that this bill . . . is opening the floodgates of socialism.

He was speaking on the bill that was to continue Polymer as a Crown corporation. I am told that at that point a good many members sank trembling to the floor.

Mr. Reid: All the Conservatives did.

Mr. Lewis: If you look at the debate in this House on the establishment of the Canada Development Corporation, you will find that the Tory party, led by its present leader, opposed the establishment of that corporation, because they opposed the establishment of another Crown corporation. They said that a dozen times.

An hon. Member: So did you; so did you.

Mr. Lewis: We opposed it.

An hon. Member: You were condemning it, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have time—

Mr. Alexander: Not much.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I have lots of time, Mr. Speaker. If those yahoos will sit quietly, perhaps they will hear something. We opposed the establishment of Canada Development Corporation as proposed by the government, precisely because it was not a Crown corporation. We opposed it because it was not under the management of the government and because it was intended to be, as it has become, a private mutual development fund. But the Conservative birds on my right, whatever kind of birds they may be, opposed it for a different reason. They were against it because they are opposed to any government intervention in the market places of this country.

I could go on citing numerous examples of the kinds of things those people have said against Crown corporations.

But today they pose as the guardians of Crown corporations. The hon. member for Yukon has posed as the guardian. I congratulate him for making a good case. I am not unaware that he is good lawyer, and a good lawyer takes a brief, whether he believes in it or not and does his best.

An hon. Member: You are a pretty good lawyer too, David.

Mr. Lewis: That is what the hon. member for Yukon did today. What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker. On the basis of this piece of adolescent hypocrisy, the Conservatives want us to help them bring down the government at a quarter to ten this evening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Let me tell them, Mr. Speaker, that we do not intend to join them in their juvenile parliamentary delinquency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1550)

Mr. Lewis: We do not intend to join them in their juvenile parliamentary delinquency, Mr. Speaker. Let me point out to Your Honour and everyone else that this motion has nothing to do with Polymer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Those blasted hypocrites in the Conservative party know it has nothing to do with Polymer. Polymer was sold to the CDC last July. If this motion passes, the situation will not be changed one iota. Polymer will still be part of the CDC. We condemned it last Friday. We condemned the sale last summer. We condemn it today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: However, that is not what the motion is about.

An hon. Member: That is what it says.

Mr. Lewis: I do not care what hypocritical words the Tories may mouth. What the motion is about is to deny the government's supply and bring down this parliament at a quarter to 10 tonight. That is what the motion is about. The Tories know that. I have said it before and I repeat it; we do not intend to be intimidated by these adolescents to my right. They are playing a high school kind of game. We are concerned about the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: In fact, Mr. Speaker, in my high school days, I saw much more intelligent manoeuvres than the silly manoeuvres the Conservative Party are conducting. On the agenda for tomorrow or the following day is the increase to the old age pension and the war veterans allowance.

An hon. Member: Here comes the crunch.

Mr. Lewis: You bet here comes the crunch. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) says there will be a continuing government and these increases will take place in due course. What he is saying to the aged and the veterans of this country is, you wait for your blessed increase; we, the Tories, have a game to play.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: We do not intend to play that game with them. We believe it is important to produce as soon as possible the final stages of the bills that will give the pensioners and veterans the increases in their allowances. In the next day or so, we expect the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to bring to this House his position on Canada's part in Viet Nam. I urge him to do that before the 60 days, that he took to himself, for having Canadians in Viet Nam expires.

No one in this parliament has been more shrill and more strident in his demands that parliament decide whether Canada continues to participate in the operation in Viet Nam than the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and his colleagues in the Conservative Party. Bring this parliament to an end at a quarter to 10 this evening and the pensionsers will not get their increase, the veterans will not get their increase and the decision about Viet Nam will be solely a decision by this government and no one else.

In the next week or so, we expect a report of the food prices committee. We hope it will present some suggestions for dealing with the increases in food prices. We have sent the housing bill to a committee of the House of Commons. We expect a debate on the bill which will place some control on foreign investment. We expect this bill within the next few days.

Last night the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) appeared on the television program "The Nation's Business". He said to the people of Canada that the government was delaying producing the improvements of the 1972 budget and the income tax cuts of the 1973 budget. That is not a quotation, but I think it is a correct representation. He then said, and I quote:

> They are not mere technicalities. They represent important changes in our tax laws, providing long over-due relief to many people in our society.

He concluded with the following words:

> In the face of this ineptitude, this lack of leadership and the resulting hardship for so many ordinary Canadians, we will continue to press Mr. Turner and Mr. Trudeau to bring these 1972 budget proposals before the House of Commons for prompt consideration.

Having said that over television last night out of one side of his mouth, out of the other side of his mouth, the Leader of the Opposition proposed a motion that would close parliament and make it impossible for that to be done.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lewis: Do they expect any responsible member of this House who does not play their idiotic and unprincipled game to go along with them on that kind of measure? Talk about speaking with a forked tongue. I do not know how many parts there are to a forked tongue, but there are certainly more than two.

We made clear to this parliament and to the people of Canada, and we will continue to stand by it, that as far as we are concerned, we want to make this parliament work. We want this House of Commons to produce worthwhile things such as those referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. We said we would support those things that were worthwhile and would oppose those with which we could not agree. That has been our position; it is our position and will continue to be our position. The loud mouthed, power hungry people to my right have no effect on any responsible member of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: We want this government to act quickly in a number of other fields. I cannot understand why they have been so slow in producing these measures. We want to see the government come forward without delay with its promised guaranteed income for those unable to work. We want the government to produce the increases in family allowances which they have promised. I appreciate that they are discussing these matters with the provinces, but I want them to produce these as soon as these discussions are completed. We want the promised amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act before the House. We want this House to discuss soon the government resolution on bilingualism so that this matter can once and for all be decided by this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The government is long overdue in producing its revised bill on competition. That has a lot to do with the increases in food prices and other things as well. Finally in this list, Mr. Speaker, we want the government to produce a bill to control election expenses. If at all possible, we want to have that before the next election. I do not mind interruptions, Mr. Speaker, but I think the behaviour of the Conservative members during this speech is evidence of a guilty conscience which this House ought to condemn.

• (1600)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: These silly, stupid adolescents—I wish they would shut up!

An hon. Member: Where was the speech?

Mr. Lewis: I repeat. The motion before the House, despite its words, has nothing to do with Polymer. Neither the mover of the motion nor the seconder, nor any member of the Conservative caucus believes for one moment that it has anything to do with Polymer or that it could change the position of Polymer one iota. This is a motion of no-confidence. It is a motion directed against supply. It is, therefore, a motion designed, if it passes, to bring down the government and bring parliament to an end at a quarter to ten. Mr. Speaker, only the most irresponsible people, hungry for office at the expense of the aged and disadvantaged of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Nowlan: Take your jelly beans and go home!

Mr. Lewis: —only such people could present such a motion, a motion which is hypocritical, ill-conceived, ill-considered and ill-timed. I say again to hon. members on my right: stop wasting the time of the House. Stop wasting our time. We are not falling for this kind of irresponsible game. We simply know better, and we do not intend to fall for it. As far as we are concerned, as long as there are useful things for this parliament to do, we shall play our part in making this parliament work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, here we are again today faced with a non-confidence motion introduced on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Here again, we have the official opposition trying to play politics. Instead of discussing a motion to force this government to act positively in a field of interest to the people of Canada, we are again playing games as in committees to lose the time of this House.

It is always the same old game of trying to find a way to irritate the party in power, to have fun, to lose our time. It will be noted again that the mover of that motion offers nothing positive. What did he suggest to the government to replace the sale of Polymer Corporation? Did he suggest anything positive? No. The idea is to complain, to find a reason which would prompt the New Democratic Party to vote against this government, thus hoping to hurl the whole country in an election which Canadians are not interested in having at this time, let alone discussing the Polymer Corporation.

I would like to ask the Progressive Conservative and the New Democrats why in July they did not accept the challenge and did not criticize the party in power? No, they preferred to wait until today to play politics.

I understand to a certain extent the desire to criticize the sale of the corporation which was sold for roughly $72 million. Polymer was a Crown corporation but one notes contrary to suggestions from the New Democratic Party that directors of that corporation in 1971 were the great Canadian financiers and not the government or the Canadian people. Therefore, why should we criticize today? I appreciate that the New Democratic Party complains about the sale of the Polymer Corporation Limited because the vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was one of the directors of the corporation. They complains about that sale, but what do they offer as a solution? Absolutely nothing. What has the New Democratic Party offered or suggested as an alternative to that sale? Nothing. They criticize, or they simply defend themselves.

Although this motion is only a disguise for a non-confidence motion, I do regret that the government should have sold the Polymer Corporation Limited to the Canadian Development Corporation at a loss. When a corporation worth over $250 million is sold for $72 million, it is safe to say that someone is indeed trying to camouflage something. In last year's annual report of the Polymer Corporation Limited, one can readily see the reasons that led the liberal party to accept such a transaction.

On reading the letter addressed to the former minister of Supplies and Services (Mr. Richardson), one notes that the Corporation therein informs the minister that its profits after taxes amount to only half a million dollars as compared with $7,100,000 in 1970.

This is the real reason that included the liberal party to disguise this sale, to answer the Canadian people between its teeth, not to indicate in the annual report the possible deficit that that corporation could show. As it is done generally and as it has been done since the beginning of this session, they wished to act on the sly. In fact, they try to make the people swallow all kinds of little scandals, by manipulating the various groups as we have seen them do with the Polymer Corporation Limited and the Canadian Development Corporation. Here is the reason that prompted the Liberal party to proceed with such a transaction in July but the Progressive Conservatives are awakening today to condemn this step. I would say that they did not condemn it because, during his comments, the member for Yukon nearly begged the New Democratic Party to support his party without making any proposal.

Did the Liberal government act logically when selling a $242 million corporation for $72 million? I do not think so. But if, on the other hand, the intention is to hand such an industry over to the Canadian people, I do not think that it would be the way used by the Liberal party and even less that proposed by the New Democrat Party that claims it was a good thing because it is a Crown corporation.

I think that in July 1972, the government should have, right then, asked the employees of the corporation to try and purchase it, which would have made it possible to respect the workers' right to share the profits of the business.

In this way, the problem would have been solved and over 4,414 employees would have benefited from it. But no such proposition was made.

On the one hand, the Liberal party tries to "make a back door transaction" in order to hide deficits, and, on the other hand, the Progressive Conservative party and the New Democratic Party are complaining about this manoeuvering without, however, putting forward any reasonable proposal.

In so far as we are concerned, we suggest that the government avoid such transactions in the future because nothing can be changed by tonight's vote. Whatever the result of the vote, it will in no way affect the obvious mistake that was made through the sale made in July, 1972.

The government should be more careful in the future and we suggest that, if a corporation is to be sold, it should be sold to the employees themselves.

In a field such as the highly controversial Temiscaming industry, it has been noticed that the government did not provide any assistance and that this manufacture was compelled to end its activities without even realizing that its own employees were themselves in a position to take over the enterprise and develop it with a profit.

Therefore, this is what we ask the government to do in the future. If problems of an administrative nature or other arise in the case of some industries, this is due to their administrators having made mistakes. We suggest that the government have faith in the employees, in such cases, as they will be in a position to overhaul an enterprise and make profits.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to express my comments and I do not think it worthwhile to discuss about such a foolish motion which has been moved by the Progressive Conservative Party. We do not feel it is necessary to further discuss the miserly tactics of the Progressive Conservative and Liberal parties on the subject of the sale of the Polymer Corporation, in July 1972.

[English]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate my first words, of course, should be said in sympathy for Her Majesty's loyal opposition which has been somewhat under attack today, largely on the ground of hypocrisy. I venture to say it has suffered a further disadvantage, and that is once again in respect of an appropriation of ideas. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) made reference to proceedings before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in relation to a discussion on this particular topic.

At that committee, when the representatives of the Conservative party were asked to approve Vote 10b for the development and utilization of manpower contributions, to extend the purposes of the Manpower and Immigration Act under Vote 10, appropriation Act No. 3, 1972, having regard to various programs and requirements for the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the hon. member for Yukon led representatives of the Conservative party in opposing that authorization for sums of money to make mobility possible for those who wished to avail themselves of these manpower programs. The hon. member at that time explained that this opposition was not based on the words of the vote at all but because of the procedure being followed, namely amending the previous Appropriation Act by a one dollar item. We see them following the tactic of not opposing the purpose of the estimates, the grant or the vote because they were opposed to what was explicit in the words of the estimate, but for really quite another reason.

Today, we find the lead off speaker for the opposition charging the NDP with failing to follow blindly the words of the motion we are now debating. It might help in light of all the confusion that exists in relation to the transfer of Polymer through sale to the Canada Development Corporation if I were to give something in the way of the background. In the course of 1971, after much public discussion and thorough consideration by parliament, the Canada Development Corporation was established by a special act of this parliament. The act was proclaimed on November 18, 1971 and the first meeting of the board was held on November 29.

The government established this corporation because it believed there was a substantial role to be played by a new institution backed by substantial sources of Canadian capital and managed by skilled, experienced Canadian entrepreneurs to help make possible fuller Canadian participation in the growth and the development of Canada. Such an institution is able to work closely with other members of the Canadian business and financial community and provide Canadian entrepreneurship with the access to more substantial concentrations of Canadian capital required to ensure a greater, and I emphasize this, Canadian presence in the growth of our economy.

The purposes of the Canada Development Corporation as set out in the act are essentially twofold: First, to help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and Canadian managed corporations in the private sector of the economy and, secondly, to give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

I should like to draw particular attention to the second major purpose; that is, that the corporation should be owned by the Canadian public with as wide a distribution of its shares as possible. It was intended, and it is our expectation, that the CDC will be an attractive investment for Canadians, allowing them to participate directly and share in the profits from the growth of Canadian industry and the development of new industries which are owned and controlled by Canadians. The CDC, therefore, is uniquely Canadian with its voting shares held only by Canadian citizens and residents. Of course, before it can offer shares to the public the CDC should have a strong investment portfolio on which to base the offering. It is now in the process of putting together such a portfolio.

Although the Canada Development Corporation is only a little over one year old it has moved dynamically to meet its objectives. Its board of directors has selected six areas for initial investment. These are: The petrochemical industry and related activities; the petroleum and natural gas industry; northern pipelines and related Arctic transportation; the mining, smelting and refining industry; pharmaceuticals, medical equipment and other manufactured products relating to health care; and the venture capital industry.

The CDC has also established a corporate approach to the development of these areas. It plans and has begun to make its investments in these areas through vehicle companies which will have their own skilled staffs and specialized operating management. This will enable the CDC to keep a small, flexible and creative central staff to direct the general policy of the vehicle companies and to encourage them to remain innovative and growth oriented.

In the venture capital field, recognizing the importance of innovation and small businesses to the Canadian economy, the CDC has invested in a venture capital firm in Toronto, has acted as the catalyst and invested in the formation of a new venture capital firm in Vancouver and will soon be announcing the establishment of another such firm in Montreal.

In the pharmaceuticals and health care field, it has purchased Connaught Laboratories, along with a couple of smaller companies, to form the base for a major Canadian owned and controlled presence in this sector.

[Mr. Drury.]

• (1620)

The CDC is also a participant in the Arctic gas study group which is exploring the construction of a gas pipeline through the MacKenzie River Delta. It is putting itself in a position to play a major ownership role in the development of such a line should it be found to be feasible and desirable from a Canadian point of view.

Finally, and most important for this debate, it has purchased Polymer from the government as the vehicle company on which to build its investments in the petro-chemicals industry and related activities. Polymer Corporation was established as a Crown corporation in February 1942 to meet the threat of a rubber shortage during the war. After 1945, it was transformed from a wartime operation, fulfilling an urgent and strategic need, to a company operating on a normal profit-oriented commercial basis. To meet these objectives, the corporation developed export markets for its rubber and diversified somewhat its operation. By the latter part of the 1960's, following the rebuilding of Europe and Asia after the Second World War, in a highly competitive market and with declining international rubber prices, its rate of return decreased to unsatisfactory levels.

Consequently in 1969, the company diversified into completely new fields: computer time-sharing, housing and the plastics business. Much has been said about the profitability of Polymer and for a number of years it was a very profitable company. However, in 1971, after a number of years of unspectacular performance, its profit was less than $500,000, which as a return on shareholders' equity was only .4 per cent. Polymer was sold to the CDC on July 31, 1972 under Section 39(1) of the CDC Act. This section reads as follow:

> The Governor in Council may sell or cause to be sold to the company, at such fair and reasonable price as may be agreed upon by the Governor in Council and the company, the whole or any part of the capital stock of any or all of the following:
> (a) Polymer Corporation Limited;
> (b) Eldorado Nuclear Limited;
> (c) Panarctic Oils Ltd.; and
> (d) Northern Transportation Company Limited but subject, in the case of the capital stock of Panarctic Oils Ltd., to any agreements relating to the sale of capital stock held by the Crown.

Clear legal authority obviously existed, and there can be no question as to its legality. In accordance with the CDC Act which refers to a "fair and reasonable price", the government sought an independent assessment of Polymer. Wood Gundy made such an independent appraisal based on purely economic and financial factors. The Wood Gundy report suggested a range of values which was found to be in line with internal appraisals prepared in the Department of Finance and the Department of Supply and Services. On the basis of these valuations, the government entered negotiations with the CDC and a price was struck.

Mr. Nielsen: What did Wood Gundy say the price should be?

Mr. Drury: The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) will be saying more about this later in the debate. But I think we were successful in obtaining a fair and reasonable price.

Polymer is an important investment for the CDC because it forms one of the vehicle companies through which the CDC is working to meet its mandate of helping to develop strong Canadian controlled and managed corporations in the private sector of the economy. The CDC, with its significant private sector management experience and with its outstanding board of directors, is in an excellent position to revitalize Polymer and to use it as a vehicle company with which to establish a major Canadian-owned and managed corporation in the petrochemicals industry in Canada.

We are fortunate in having been able to obtain for the board of the CDC an outstanding group of directors. Many of these people represent exceptional success stories themselves, and they have contributed to the development of vigorous Canadian enterprises. They are selected from across Canada. Their participation in the CDC in this formative period is a clear indication of their support for the concept, and of their desire to see it work. The government is represented on the board by the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who serve in an ex officio capacity.

Mr. Stanfield: A couple of great forecasters!

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, you will have noted that Section 39(1) of the CDC Act lists three other corporations in addition to Polymer—Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Panarctic Oils Ltd., and Northern Transportation Company Limited. The section is, of course, permissive and does not require the government to sell these corporations. The government has not taken any decision on the sale of the other three corporations. Each of these decisions will be carefully taken in the light of the government's policies in related areas.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the CDC is one of the important measures the government has taken in order to widen the opportunities for Canadians to participate in their own development. It is anticipated that the shares of the CDC will ultimately be widely held by Canadians. It is also provided in the legislation that the government's participation should not fall below 10 per cent of the voting shares which will make it substantially the largest single shareholder. No other person is permitted to hold more than 3 per cent of the outstanding voting shares. Only Canadian citizens or residents can hold its voting shares.

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you not attach that condition to Polymer?

Mr. Drury: No other corporation in Canada is required by its objects to take into account national interest as well as profitability. With these unique characteristics, the CDC represents a significant partnership between the public and the private sector in the dynamic development of our economy. In the case of Polymer, it will enable that corporation to grow and develop as a full fledged member of the business and industrial community; and the CDC is helping broaden the opportunities for both Canadian skills and Canadian capital to participate in our own development.

Mr. Nielsen: Their shares can be held by foreigners.

Sale of Polymer

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues will be dealing later at greater length with the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). If the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) speaks, and if he has something of value to say contrary to what he said on Friday, that will be dealt with as well. I simply say here and now that our position has been consistent on this matter throughout. We opposed strenuously the conditions under which the Canada Development Corporation was formed. We said it was an economic monstrosity, and it has proven to be such. We took a position at the time of the debate which is consistent with our position today in opposing those provisions in the legislation which permit this sort of a rip-off to be made. We still feel the same way. We see no reason for putting a good, going concern into the hands of the friends of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the friends of the government for a toy and plaything. This is our position. We felt that way in 1971 and we feel that way now.

Let me for a moment deal with the shrill and hysterical remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who I think should consult with his seat mate with regard to the Standing Orders. He must realize—and if not he should be told shortly—that a motion of this kind under supply must be made before supply can be granted. That is according to the rules under which we operate. There may be a choice, although the words of the Standing Order are mandatory, whether or not it should be a matter of confidence. However, such a motion is made and at the expiration of that the government is free to introduce legislation, bring in the bill for interim supply and for the appropriations in respect of supplementary estimates which are then put forward. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Party stands shivering, trembling and shaking, fearful of the consequences to them of this vote without principle and without honour.

• (1630)

I suggest that if I had the time I would find, on examining the record, that members of the NDP have consistently throughout the course of the last parliament moved motions in the form of amendments to the Speech from the Throne when Her Majesty's loyal opposition, acting under the traditional rights which are inherent in the loyal opposition, brought forward amendments in that debate. We have found that our friends to my left without waiting and without being concerned about what legislative proposals would follow, have moved subamendments, and it is on such subamendments that the life of a government is at stake. The same situation applied during the course of the last parliament on each budget debate. Never has there been an occasion that I can recall when the NDP has failed to take advantage of the opportunity which it has to move such an amendment. For the hon. member for York South to take this position now, merely because he feels that he is in a position to put his hand on the hand of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who exercises the levers of power in this country, is, in my opinion, a pretty poor performance.

Our position on this, as I said, has been consistent throughout, and so has the position of the NDP until today. Step by step, stage by stage in the passage of the legislation which brought into effect the Canada Development Corporation, the NDP and our party have marched side by side. There were occasions when we might have had different motives and intents, but when one examines the debate on the legislation—save for some of the rather silly socialist amendments which were moved at the time of the report stage—one finds we were identical in the positions which we took.

Today, we can understand that the hon. member for York South has served clear notice on the House and on the country that he and his party are determined to support the government throughout in their alleged legislative proposals. We now see it quite clearly demonstrated that there is, in fact, a coalition government in this country, and the hon. member for York South has made it quite plain that that is the situation today, that that is what this country and this House has to expect in the days which lie ahead.

An hon. Member: They are stretcher bearers.

Mr. Baldwin: Let us just look very briefly at this matter of consistency. At the time the Canada Development Corporation bill was first before the House I moved on a point of order that the bill be dealt with as a hybrid bill because elements of the public and private sectors were brought together. I was supported on that by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). So amendments were moved at the second reading stage. The NDP moved an amendment and so did we. The amendment which I moved involved a suggestion that the subject matter of the bill be sent to the committee for study. That was rejected by the government. In the debate on second reading, statements were made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) making it quite plain that one of the principal reasons we opposed the legislation was that it did, in fact, provide for the capacity of the Canada Development Corporation to take over Polymer. That was not only our position but the position of the NDP. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), in what I thought was a very good speech on February 23, 1971, at page 3679 of Hansard said precisely this in speaking about the proposal. In the last sentence of the paragraph he summed it up as follows:

> Where is the equity in that kind of situation?

He was speaking about the sale of Polymer by the government to the Canada Development Corporation.

The Social Credit party, which is now quite uncertain of its position—something it has shown throughout this session—also took this position. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), speaking for his party, made it quite plain that he objected to the legislative proposals and that he concurred in what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton West who, speaking for us, indicated one of the reasons for our objection was the right which existed for the Canada Development Corporation to take over Polymer. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who participated in the debate on March 2, 1971, said precisely the same thing in his contribution to the debate, and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) made the same proposition in a very strong speech. As recorded at page 3880 of Hansard of March 2, 1971, he said:

> The second reason why I call this bill a monstrosity is that it proposes to sell out four Crown corporations. It proposes to sell the Polymer Corporation, which produces synthetic rubber and which has been a very successful operation;

This is precisely the position which we have taken consistently, and I am amazed that my friends to my left have now seen fit to depart from this particular position.

In committee, after the Canada Development Corporation bill passed second reading, the same stance was taken. When it came back from the committee, there were some amendments at the report stage. One of the amendments which we supported was the amendment referred to by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) which proposed to delete clause 39 giving the right to the Canada Development Corporation to take over Polymer. All opposition parties voted against the bill on third reading. When this matter came up in the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates a short time ago, the hon. member for Yukon and other hon. members of our party who detected what had been suppressed so far by the government, pursued the issue and said exactly the same things then as they have said since.

This motion, then, is the natural product and the natural corollary of the position which this party took right from the very inception of the Canada Development Corporation proposal, throughout the debates on second and third reading and right until today. It was the natural, logical and inevitable step which we felt compelled to take because of the positions which we had taken in the past. So far as we are concerned, we would have been derelict in our duty if, knowing what the facts were, we had not taken this position. I quite accept the fact that it is not possible for this parliament, or at least for the House, by a motion of this kind to set aside the sale. That will take a new parliament and a new government. I suggest to my friends to my left who say—and I quite agree with the hon. member for York South on this—that this motion would not, in fact, result in the cancellation of the sale that it did result in there being a new government, it would start the process of dealing with this matter fairly adequately.

Mr. Sharp: Would you then cancel the sale?

Mr. Stanfield: You bet your life, on those terms. Don't worry about it.

Mr. Baldwin: Precisely. This has been our position throughout from the very beginning for good and adequate reasons, and I think the hon. member for Yukon and other hon. members who speak will make a very good case to show why this should be done. Certainly, spokesmen on the government side have made no case at all. The burden rests on them. They have failed miserably to discharge that burden. Unless they have some more adequate spokesmen for their side, I suggest that they stand guilty of making a very bad deal for the people of Canada.

• (1640)

On the question raised by the hon. member for York South about the legislation waiting approval, I gather from what he said that he is prepared for this parliament to continue interminably in the faint hope that the government, which has shown itself so lax, so impotent in its parliamentary duties, will bring before this House the legislation which the country so badly needs. So far as we are concerned, with regard to the two proposals which are now in their final stages, the old age security bill and the bill dealing with war veterans allowances, we are prepared right now to make a firm arrangement that should the government be defeated we would still be prepared to pass the final stages of those two bills.

Of course, the hon. member for York South has made it quite plan that he is not going to cross his friends at this stage. But if some of his followers had a change of heart, and decided to do something for the people of Canada rather than something for their leader, it might well be that the government could be defeated. Those two bills should have been passed long ago, but some of our friends in the Creditiste party wanted a debate. That is their right. We do not want to interfere with that right. It was at our insistence that the pensions bill was speeded up initially. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made a suggestion along those lines during the course of the Throne Speech debate. So far as we are concerned, we have stood willing and ready at all times to expedite the passage of that legislation. We stand prepared to do so again, despite the results of the vote on this motion tonight.

What about my hon. friends to my left? I should quote from last Friday's Hansard, but the hon. member for Yukon has done so already. But I note with some interest that the Globe and Mail, in its edition of Saturday last, stated that in the comments to this House of the hon. member for York South he intimated, when he had been questioned by the hon. member for Yukon as to his intentions with regard to this bill, that he would condemn the bill with all his honour. Of course, this appears in Hansard as "with all his vigour." I quite take it that that is what he did say. I am sure that if he did say honour he would have made sure it would not appear in Hansard because, so far as the attitude of the NDP to this legislation is concerned, honour is one characteristic that seems to be singularly lacking.

The hon. member for York South said something about the juvenile attitude of this party. I would like to see a little more juvenility on the part of the NDP. What has happened to them, to their enterprise and interest? I think the hon. member for York South has dragged them rather hurriedly into a form of political menopause, and one must make allowances for them running around like a lot of headless chickens. I would remind the hon. member for York South of the phrase, "Oh, what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive." With respect to this legislation, during the last day or so they have turned, and twisted, and struggled, and gone through such contortions as would break a snake's back if it attempted to follow their course of conduct.

They are only interested in staying as close as they can to the seats of power, to the seats of the mighty, to hold on with their trembling little hands to the few crumbs of power thrown to them by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government. I do not think there has ever been such a case of distorted sharing of power since the days of the early Roman emperors when the tyrant Caligula attempted to make his horse the proconsul.

Mr. Fraser: Which end?

Mr. Baldwin: The result has been that the NDP has been into a state of sputtering inertia, and we all know who does most of the sputtering. I would suggest that a review of the facts in this case would indicate that one party throughout has taken a position consistent with its principles, consistent with the position it took in 1971 on all stages of the legislation, consistent with the position it took in committee.

We have presented this motion in good faith and in honesty. If we did not do it we would be derelict in our duty as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, having once had it brought to our attention as it was last week, that the government had attempted to consumate this sale. And in the light of our previous attitude, in the light of the position we had taken, if we did not move a motion of this kind we would not deserve to be and continue to be Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for the time being, and to be the government after the next election, which I hope may not be too long delayed.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, much comment has been offered in this House by the hon. members of the opposition on the comparison of Polymer's book value as at December 31, 1971, of $118 million and the government's selling price to Canada Development Corporation of $62 million to $72 million. For the information of the House, I would like to describe the approach used in arriving at what is considered to be a fair and reasonable selling price.

First, to touch on a conceptual aspect of investment valuation, as hon. members know the book value of a company is not primarily the basis upon which an investor arrives at a price which he is prepared to pay for a company's shares. Rather, it is the earnings capability of a company as a going concern which generally governs its price. One merely has to look at the recent price actions of company shares listed on the North American exchanges to confirm this.

In recent weeks there has been a substantial decline in the prices of these shares, which is quite unrelated to their book values. The downward share price changes reflect not so much the change in book value but investor concern about the future level of corporate earnings in the face of higher interest rates, inflation and international monetary conditions. It is not unusual for the market value of companies to fall below their book values. The shares of a number of major Canadian companies have sold in recent years, at one time or another, at levels well below their equivalent book values.

I will now deal specifically with the valuation of Polymer for sale purposes. One of the difficulties in establishing a valuation for Polymer is that, not being a company with its shares traded in the market place, there are no share market values, current or past, to which reference can be made. At the time of the sale one might have said that the sale value ranged from $30 million, the government's original investment, to the shareholders' book value equity of $118 million. Neither of these extremes could have been realistically supported.

However, it was possible to approach the valuation in the same manner as would an outside investor. An informed and critical investor would take note of the earnings history of Polymer and its future earnings potential. He would examine the quality of these earnings and he would observe that while the company had been profitable over the years, earnings were on the decline, setting aside the exceptionally good year of 1969 which reflected unusually high product prices and favourable changes in foreign exchange rates.

• (1650)

Mr. Nielsen: Let us have a look at the last financial statement.

Mr. Goyer: I will table it when I receive it, as promised to the hon. member.

This investor will note that while the company was attempting to diversify, it was still dependent upon rubber as the prime source of its earnings, a product area of strong competition and increasingly higher raw material costs. For investment purposes, he would categorize it with other rubber based companies, but would conclude that it seemed more vulnerable and less well diversified than its competitors. On this basis, using a price/earnings method of valuation, he would give Polymer a multiple somewhat below those of other rubber companies which in themselves have relatively low price/earnings ratios in the order of 10 to 12. This is the case with Goodyear. Such was the investment approach taken in establishing the sale price of Polymer. The application of several investment valuation methods based on price/earnings ratios and discounted cash flows were used to arrive at a fair market selling price range of approximately $55 to $70 million. It was within this range that the selling price of $62 million plus was negotiated.

The basic selling price of $62 million can be expressed as a price/earnings ratio of approximately eight in relation to 1972 rubber, latex and plastics profits, as estimated at the time of valuation.

Mr. Nielsen: How can a government negotiate with itself?

Mr. Goyer: The selling price formula provides that the government will participate equally in 1973 and 1974 profits over a base amount, to a maximum of an additional $10 million. Any additional payment will be calculated by multiplying by four, the amount by which the average of 1973 and 1974 profits exceeds a base of $7.5 million. I bring to your attention that this calculation gives the same result as multiplying the one half of the excess profits over the base of $7.5 million by a price/earnings ratio of eight.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Goyer: May I finish and then I will answer. It is worth noting that the selling price falls approximately at the mid-point of the fair market selling price range and any additional payment received under the selling price formula will bring the final price into the upper end of the range.

To conclude, keeping in mind that establishing a market value for a company is not an exact science at any time, it is my opinion that the methods used in evaluating Polymer for sale purposes were consistent with accepted investment valuation concepts and the selling price so arrived at was fair and reasonable.

[Mr. Goyer.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition has a question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether I understood him correctly when he said that the government would receive nothing more than the base price of $60 million unless the earnings of Polymer during the next few years exceed $7½ million in each year. Was the valuation of Polymer made on the basis of an assumed rate of earnings or $7½ million?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, in trying to find out the more exact figure which can really meet with our goal to have a reasonable price, of course we looked into the profits base of Polymer and where they came from. This is why we base our evaluation at $7.5 million for rubber, latex and plastics bearing in mind that the company experienced a very bad year two years ago. It might be unusual because it is a cyclical process in this activity. If you look at the profits of Polymer over a period of ten years you will easily discover that this company has suffered ups and downs and we believe that might be the case in the future.

Mr. Stanfield: One further question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) with a question.

An hon. Member: Make a speech.

Mr. Stanfield: I intend to. In view of the resumé the minister has given us as to the basis on which the valuation was reached will he table in this House the evaluation reports—he eventually got two or three, one from the government and two from outside. Will he table these or if not will he blame us for being suspicious of what is going on?

Mr. Goyer: The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) dealt with this question on Friday and answered that he was going to look into the question. One has to bear in mind that the future of Polymer may be at stake, and if those valuation reports were to be revealed publicly one could expect that the competitive position of the company could be impaired. I do not think this is the intention of the opposite side, to place Polymer in that situation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is patent nonsense.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the explanation given as to how the price of $62 million was arrived at, if the minister has a copy of the report, I wonder if he would agree to quote the paragraph in order to explain the situation a little better to members on this side?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think that would put us in the position of ruling that if a report is quoted from in part, it would have to be tabled. I think the minister has indicated that the report is being withheld for the time being.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate for what is to me a very profound reason. Many years ago I belonged to a group of young men who were very distressed at the way that much of the industry of Canada, particularly on the resources side, was falling into the hands of those who lived outside and whose interests were outside Canada.

In the perusal of the problem the idea of developing a pool of capital controlled by Canadians available to industries, available to resource enterprise at the development stages, came into crystalization in our minds. This idea was not just with the group that I belonged to. A Mr. Ball, at that time the President of the Bank of Montreal, felt so keenly about the lack of institutions in Canada that would pool capital to help Canadians get ownership of their own country that on behalf of his bank he submitted a proposal to the Gordon Royal Commission in 1955. This is the first time that I know of that a national development fund, a national development corporation or, as it is now called, a Canada Development Corporation, was advocated. I give full credit to the late Mr. Ball for putting this forward where it should be put forward, to a Royal Commission looking at Canada's prospects.

I was amazed on reading Hansard for Friday to find out that all this tribulation and concern about the future of our nation, and all the serious efforts to put it in the place where it should be dealt with, by parliament, was ignored by the NDP historians. They only went back to the year 1961 when the world was created by the founding of the NDP. I want to serve notice to those Johnny-come-Lately's who are trying to fight the battle for Canadian participation in the ownership of the economy of this country that many people were doing this for many decades, before we even heard of these pseudo socialists.

Let me put a fact of history on the record. At the convention of the party to which I belong we proposed this legislation in 1956, long before the Gordon Commission Report came down. The resolution respecting the legislation was proposed and the final draft was actually written by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and me. That resolution proposed that if we ever acquired power we would progressively support investment ventures in co-operation with provinces, municipalities, corporations and individuals that were directly self-liquidating or were indirectly self-liquidating.

So, after we formed the government, in the early part of 1958, I think, one of our first proposals was that for setting up some form of national development corporation which would provide the framework for individuals privately and for the banks, insurance companies, mutual funds and pension funds to contribute money to the corporation. The key to success was to have a staff highly skilled at examining proposals involving resources and manufacturing and recommending if action should be taken. That was studied. We employed in that study one of the leading economists of the banks. Currently, he is a civil servant. We also employed leading men from the business world in drawing up those plans. It is my regret as a person, and I believe it is the regret of most Canadians, that other priorities came to the fore in 1961. The productivity council was given priority over this proposal. In 1962, it was the economic council, which was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It had priority over this proposal.

When the government changed in 1963 the head of the commission known as the Gordon Royal Commission moved swiftly to announce that he was in support of this concept. That is why many Liberals give the credit for this concept to Walter Gordon, a very fine Canadian nationalist. But the truth is that even though that brief had been submitted in 1955, even though it was discussed in that volume by Woods, in one of the 20 or so volumes published along with the Gordon Royal Commission Report, the recommendation for the Canada Development Corporation was not mentioned in the preliminary report of the Gordon Royal Commission; nor was it mentioned in the final report. I am sure Walter Gordon rued the day he did not see the value of that recommendation when he wrote the report.

I mention this history to show the background of my concern over the actions of the government. One thing is very clear. Many of us still believe, 20 years later, that Canada lacks a financial institution into which individuals, financial corporations and pension funds can freely put their money with confidence so that, if various proposals are examined and found feasible, our people will be given the chance as a collective group to own a share, or equity, in the development of this country.

That principle is being endangered by the actions of the present government in its dealings involving Polymer. The NDP position is absolutely sound. They say that by selling it, the government will not add one more corporation that will act in the interests of our Canadian wellbeing, because the Polymer corporation is already Canadian. The NDP was against setting up the Canada Development Corporation with the takeover of Crown corporations in the legislation when the bill was introduced in 1971. They were against the takeover setup of the Canada Development Corporation last Friday, and so were the Conservatives. Our reasons may be different. The NDP thinks the country should be run more and more by corporations which are, in essence, socialist corporations; and our view is that individual Canadians should participate in the ownership of this country. We suggest that they should participate through banks and other institutions, provided that their actions benefit the country.

Regardless of the difference between the NDP and Conservatives in the matter of motivation, we both stood up and were counted in 1971. We both share a concern with respect to the deep, fundamental principles underlying the Canada Development Corporation. We do not think it should use its limited amount of money for buying existing Crown corporations. It is on that basis, Mr. Speaker, that I ask NDP supporters across this country if they will stand up for what they believed on Friday last. Will they stand up for what they believed in 1971? Do they still believe what they have always believed, that Canadians are the ones who are guilty in not taking steps to invest more of their own money in their own country.

We know that in the United States, a nation which spends its money more freely than we do, over 40 per cent of the population owns equities in American companies. The figure, in this country, is realistically less than 4 per cent. We know that Canadian tax laws discriminate against Canadians owning resources and owning equities in Canadian companies. Every time we try to get around these difficulties in the way the Gordon Commission was supposed to get around them we end up by frittering away our money in buying up Crown corporations which have nothing to do with the main issue, that of giving an opportunity to Canadians to share in the growing wealth of this nation and giving them a feeling that they control their own future.

The present Canada Development Corporation hardly meets the concept we dreamed about 20 years ago. However, my party and the NDP have this in common: We want Canadians to be given opportunities in their own country, and such a corporation ought to be the vehicle for doing this. I do not think that too many people will be uptight about the spurious argument that we are taking away the old age pension, or veterans' pensions, or anything else if we vote as we see fit and proper on this issue that is important, not only for this generation but for many generations to come.

I think the present leadership of the NDP protests too much. It seems to me they are too fat to fight and too frightened to run, and they want the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to continue in office, even if other NDP supporters do not. So, this party paralyzed with panic is losing its credibility. No longer will they be able to, like unctuous undertakers, lay the body at rest and speak with that deep voice of dignity as they look down on the rest of us humans. No longer will they be the psalm singing sanctimonious types who have disgraced public life in this country for so many years; because they are the same as the Liberals they associate with, who know nothing but keeping power at any cost. Pragmatism is what they call it. Most of them espouse no principles. Their only faith has to do with staying in power.

I want to conclude, but not on this miserably low level, where one talks of the value of a corporation and the percentage points of stock increase. I want to conclude on a note of optimism, because there are opportunities for Canadians. In the next seven or ten years we will need between $75 billion and $100 billion of new investment in Canada, in pipelines, maintaining power developments, creating secondary industry, and so on. We will need millions invested in the petrochemical industry. Anyone who understands dollars and cents knows how important that industry is to Canada. The future of the petrochemical industry ought to be brightest in western Canada. That is where that industry can be most economically developed, because there the industry is close to gas at low cost. Right today, a ton of ammonia, because of rising gas costs, in Texas and Louisiana, the heart of the petrochemical industry of the United States, costs $15. That same ton of ammonia at Sarnia, where we have Dow, CIB and Polymer, costs $14. Ammonia is the lifeblood of the nation. We need it for fertilizer. That same ton of ammonia could be produced in Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan for about $7.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Why should the consumer of fertilizer and people who depend on food that is produced from fertilizer have to pay such high costs? Why should the very limited amount of money of Canada Development Corporation be put into a loser, as the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) suggested today? It is true that Polymer does not have to be a loser. It should be allowed to go out and compete. Why not give lots of opportunities where it can compete, where it can get out into the country where it should be, and where the resources are cheap?

• (1710)

I now want to deal with pipelines. Many pipelines are going to be built in this country in the next few years. Let us look at it on the basis of what we are now looking at, namely, investment. The average rate of return to original investors on pipelines is 27 per cent every year. In Canada, the average rate of return on pipelines is 40 per cent. Why should Canadians not get a chance at the original investment on these pipelines? Why should the Canadian Development Corporation not tell the Canadian people about the opportunity to pool their funds for this big development?

The situation is the same with mining. In exploration, there are too many risks for the Canada Development Corporation. That is what the entrepreneurs will have to do. In the development stage of mining, where the odds are 20 to one against you, there is a place for the Canada Development Corporation to spend a few thousand dollars. When it comes to financing, why not take 15, 20 or 25 per cent? Then, the return on your money is around 20 per cent.

The Canada Development Corporation should not get into an operation once it is fully operational. There is only about 5 per cent return on companies fully operational. The money is made at the development and financing stages, in other words, at the beginning. This is what the CDC should be doing, not using up its money on what seem to be political directives from the government to try to take over a group of Crown corporations that lack energy and directive.

This motion of lack of confidence in the government is more than just an issue of chiding the government for a small mistake. To Canadians, this is a gut issue. They believe that more of Canada should be owned by Canadians, not by negative restrictions against the other person, but by positive action in this way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): This nation has a tremendous future, but we lack the institutions to pool Canadian capital and to invest it. If the Canada Development Corporation gets up off its seat and does this sort of thing, I hope that private enterprise goes out and competes so that Canadians will have many ways of sharing in the great wealth of the future.

I listened to the speech by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). He said that the Canada Development Corporation is for wider opportunities for Canadians. How soon? We owned Polymer. There is no wider opportunity here. Then, we go to the speech by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). He talked about the value of Polymer and what little money it is making. What is he trying to do with this undertaker philosophy? Surely if you are going to try and get people to invest in the Canada Development Corporation, you do not want to tell the House on March 26 that the CDC has bought a "turkey".

I do not know why the ministers are trying to destroy the Canada Development Corporation. If you want to sell the Canada Development Corporation and prove that Polymer was a good buy, speak about all the opportunities that Polymer will have, if they took the finger out and went to work on the petro-chemical industries where they should be and got at the market.

I realize that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I would like to believe that in all parties of this House there is a common desire to try to save the concept of the Canada Development Corporation. We on this side do not approve of what it is doing. We do not approve of what Walter Gordon proposed when he suggested buying back companies owned by foreigners. The Canada Development Corporation should be a place where Canadians can pool their funds and get at the ownership of companies when they are developing. That is where the money is and that is where the control is.

I hope that the New Democratic Party will come back to the principles they used to hold. I hope that in the Liberal party there are many who still believe as Walter Gordon believed, that there is a place for Canadians to invest in Canada. By the government's actions these past two years on the Canada Development Corporation and by shifting Polymer, as well as other things, it is destroying what little chance this institution had to make a useful contribution. I hope that in their conscience all members will vote this administration out and get this country on its way again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the opening remarks of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), he said that upon seeing me in the House he hoped I would rise and participate. I indicated that I would. However, what surprises me is the lack of initiative shown by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor).

When the former member for Halton was in this House, Polymer Corporation was thinking of expanding. He found out that it might be moving into his constituency. He moved heaven and earth by calling management personnel, boards of directors and everyone else and was eventually successful in having Polymer, when it began its diversifying program, develop in the riding of Halton. Today I ask, where is the member for Halton and why is he not participating in this debate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I was prepared to take notes on the comments made by the hon. member who spoke before me. However, after listening to his speech, I gained the impression that too many Conservatives took part in the throne speech debate and the budget debate and since, he did not get an opportunity at that time, he felt this might be a good time to work in a speech. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) had very little to say about the sale of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation.

My first reaction upon reading the motion of the hon. member for Yukon was that it is a little late in the day for such a move. At the time of establishing the Canada Development Corporation, it was made quite clear that it was the intention of the government that the Canada Development Corporation should have the right to purchase crown corporations and, among them, Polymer Corporation. The hon. member for Yukon said it was shrouded in secrecy, it came as a surprise move and nobody knew about it. That is pure, unadulterated nonsense and the hon. member knows it.

One gets the impression that the heart of the Progressive Conservative party is no more in this particular motion than it was in an earlier motion to prohibit members of the Senate from sitting on the special committee on food prices. That motion was a political tactic, as is this one, in the hope of embarrassing the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: What makes this move so weak is the fact that it is so patently obvious. Unhappily, and this is what makes me seethe with anger, it works to the detriment of Polymer Corporation and the effectiveness of the Canada Development Corporation. This really disturbs me. It endangers the jobs held by those who are presently working at Polymer Corporation.

• (1720)

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) says the Conservative party has been consistent. I would agree with him in this: they have been consistently wrong. How short are the memories of members of the Conservative party. We heard the hon. member for Yukon today pay tribute to the calibre of Polymer management and administration. But only a year ago when people were laid off by Polymer the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and others in his party, were damning that same management for the action taken at that time. Is this consistency, Mr. Speaker?

When action was taken to dismiss workers in Polymer Corporation, particularly those in the research and development branch, the suggestion was made that the federal government should do something to preserve these jobs. This, in effect, is what has been done as a result of the sale. The federal government set up a joint chemical committee. The petro-chemical industry is experiencing trouble not only in western Canada. Contrary to what was said by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, it is experiencing trouble all across Canada. Besides, we in Sarnia are not thinking just of eastern Canada. We are thinking of all of Canada. We are not trying to take industry out of western Canada and put it in eastern Canada. We say we want to do what is best for the petrochemical industry generally. If it is better to put it in western Canada, by all means do so. But let us not locate it in one section with the result that eastern Canada suffers.

The hon. member who spoke before me should study the question more deeply. There are 1800 people working for Polymer in the Sarnia area now who are not very happy to hear their plant described as a turkey. When people were laid off by Polymer Corporation I was one of the most vociferous in my representations because it seemed that long-term employees were being sacrificed in order that Polymer might be able to show, once again, a profit on its books, albeit an extremely small one. I expressed the view in this House that Polymer Corporation, like other corporations, could surely sustain a loss in the interest of retaining employees while it looked for reasons behind its loss of profits and took action to remedy the situation. The corporation did take such an initiative and took the lead by diversifying its interests and establishing plants from which profits could be made, thereby bringing new life to operations in Canada—in Halton, Sarnia and other places throughout the world.

We have seen profits of the corporation dwindle from some $15 million to $500,000 in the year the lay-offs took place—that profit came, incidentally, after the lay-offs had taken place. It was obvious, then, that Polymer needed to diversify its operations. The necessary action was taken. It also became apparent that an injection of capital and new ideas were needed if the corporation was to survive. It was for this reason that I welcomed the Canada Development Corporation legislation and the proceedings which resulted in the offer for sale of the shares of Polymer Corporation. I viewed this as a step forward and as an opportunity for Polymer to expand, not only saving jobs already in existence but, hopefully, creating more.

There have been some suggestions that Polymer was sold below its market value. I do not share that view. Much has been made of the book value of the corporation and some hon. members have suggested that this should be the criterion governing the price. Let me remind hon. members, though, and particularly members of the Official Opposition, that there is a heavy water plant in Nova Scotia which has a fantastic book value. But purchasers are not running down there with their cheque books open ready to pay the book value.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And who took credit for that one? What about MacEachen? That was a Liberal decision.

An hon. Member: Stanfield isn't much of a Liberal.

Mr. Cullen: Many formulas are used as bases for arriving at a fair price and, although the public will be treating this particular debate with a yawn, as well they should—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: I know I am right, now. I am getting through to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). There is no way he can sit quietly in his seat when we begin to mention some of the things which should be bothering his conscience, now that his party has brought this silly motion before the House. I said this debate will be treated with a yawn, and so it will be, because we know, now, it was only a political tactic. It is as easy to see through as a pane of glass. The New Democratic Party knows that the hokery-pokery we have seen will not win any votes across the country. There was no question that the arrangements for the sale of this corporation would be subject to public scrutiny. The financial position is, of course, subject to audit by the Auditor General. We have heard about the steps taken prior to this sale, and insofar as possible in a transaction of this kind, I believe what has taken place would be called an arm's length transaction.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It had better be.

Mr. Cullen: The ironical feature of this motion is that it fails to take account of the improved position in which Polymer now finds itself as a result of the sale authorized by the Order-in-Council in 1972. There was a time, particularly before the lay-offs, when it seemed that Polymer had no opportunity to expand. There was a fear that in addition to employees already laid off there would have to be further massive lay-offs. This is no longer the position, and employees can breathe a sigh of relief. Or, at least, they could, until the Official Opposition saw fit at this most preposterous of times to bring down a political motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Not too much enthusiasm over there. Better get together. Only two of you.

Mr. Hopkins: If you are interested in people you should be over here. You are out of context.

Mr. Alexander: History is now being written.

Mr. Cullen: The Sarnia Olefin and Aromatic project was, at the outset, a project proposed by three corporations, Dupont, Dow and Polymer. What is envisaged, now, is a world-scale ethylene plant. This would provide appropriate stocks both to Polymer Corporation and to Dupont and enable them to compete more effectively in the market. Is this project to be jeopardized by a motion which is at best questionable and, at worst, irresponsible? I can assure members of the opposition that the employees of Polymer Corporation will not thank them for bringing this motion forward. I see it as reprehensible in the extreme.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Parish pump politics.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member for Edmonton West says "politics".

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I said "parish pump politics".

Mr. Cullen: Surely there are issues in Canada of far more significance than the sale of one Crown corporation to another government-controlled corporation suitable for discussion as an appropriate motion under the terms of Standing Order 58. One is moved to comment that during the last parliament when the Official Opposition was working in consort with the NDP their motions were better worded. One wonders whether the motions brought forward in the last parliament were not the result of guidance of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Pure buttering up.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some of them, I certainly would not have approved.

Mr. Cullen: I regret that this motion has been brought forward. I can see it having harmful effects on Polymer Corporation at a time when it is once again coming into its own as a result of new ideas and the injection of new capital following its purchases by CDC. If this motion or any other tactic adopted by the Official Opposition has the result of destroying the business effectiveness of Polymer, its employees will not have to look beyond the Conservative Party for the culprit.

I said that this motion came a little late in the day. Appropriately enough, during the last election campaign, the New Democratic party and its candidate in my constituency did challenge the sale of the corporation on two grounds. First, because the sale price was too low and, second, because in the final analysis it would not be the average Canadian who would purchase shares in the Canada Development Corporation, and thus, in the long run the Canadian taxpayer would lose the advantage of profits created by the corporation. These two issues were debated at the right time and in the right place. The address today by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) clearly showed that an appropriate and just purchase price was paid. As to the second argument, it would really be up to the Canadian public to decide whether they derive advantage from the work of the Canada Development Corporation. There are millions of dollars lying about in this country in savings banks and other places which could be invested in Canada. The Canada Development Corporation will provide this opportunity.

It is my hope that the Canadian public will answer the challenge to invest in Canada and that stocks and shares will be purchased by many more Canadians than would have received a dividend on profits from the Polymer Corporation. I understand there are about eight million taxpayers in Canada, and that if Polymer Corporation turned over $8 million to the federal government, each taxpayer would benefit to the extent of $1. I suggest it is well within the investment capacity of Canadians to derive substantially more from investment in the Canada Development Corporation, and I am satisfied that future developments will bear this out if Canadians invest in Canada.

I hope I did not hear the hon. member for Peace River correctly when I thought he said in answer to an interjection, that if his party formed the government they would set aside the sale. I hope that is not right. Surely they have done enough damage to date without making statements such as that. When we are talking about Polymer, we are not only talking about a corporation; we are talking about people. That is why I hope that if the Tories form the government, they will not make good this threat, because they will be attacking innocent people working for the corporation. If they followed such a suggestion, or that of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I suggest it would hurt the employees of Polymer.

In speeches from the Official Opposition we have not yet heard anything in opposition to the sale of Polymer Corporation. The speeches have represented an attack on the NDP and the position it takes. I say to members of the NDP that if they vote in favour of this motion they will be in fact voting against the man working at Polymer Corporation in the city of Sarnia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have known the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) for a considerable time and thought he had a great deal more ability and, I am sorry to say, integrity than displayed in his speech this afternoon. His speech distorts the whole matter we are debating this afternoon. He has alleged that this is an attack on Polymer as such and an attack on the workers of that corporation. If the hon. member persists in that line I will say that it is a public lie, because there is nothing in this motion or in this debate—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —that touches upon the structure of Polymer in any way. There is nothing in this motion that will reduce its capitalization; there is nothing that will change the effectiveness of its marketing organization; there is nothing that will effect its marketing function. And the motion was not designed for that purpose. Because of a paucity of ideas, the hon. member, in trying to reply to this motion, has raised this spectre, this red herring. I repeat, it is a public lie that this is an attack on Polymer or the people of Sarnia.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair does not wish to become involved in the debate, but I wonder if the hon. member is not going a little far. Perhaps there is a way for him to qualify his statement. Hon. members cannot accuse other members of wilfully lying to this House. I just want to warn the hon. member not to go too far in that direction.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at your sensitivity in respect of these words. I used the words "public lie"; I did not say the hon. member was lying to this House. If he persists in that argument, then it is a public lie. I am well aware of the rules in respect of calling an hon. member a liar, and I know the hon. member too well for that. But this argument as put forward is a public lie. I have no doubt that the hon. member wants to show himself as the great champion of the people of Sarnia. That is perfectly all right, and he can engage in all kinds of parish pump politics—and I say he was engaging in parish pump politics in his speech this afternoon—but it is not a fact that this motion is an attack upon Polymer.

Vote 16b is being debated on the basis of the rules. This is an opposition day on which we can discuss the estimates.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Sale of Polymer

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I invite the hon. member to stand on his feet and express his ideas at the appropriate stage. All he does is sit in his seat and heckle like a crow on a fence post. There are a number of questions raised today, first of all having to do with the valuation of Polymer. This question has been discussed back and forth. I am not going to go into detail, but this is an important matter within the portfolio of the Canada Development Corporation. We have been told by judicious press releases from the management of the CDC that there will be shares of the CDC put on the market before too long. We know that Polymer is the flagship of the CDC and is its chief earner.

We want to find out these things on behalf of potential investors in the CDC, and this is where I quarrel with the minister when he says it is not entirely within the public interest to release valuation reports of Polymer as a going concern. Does he not consider that when the CDC does go public it will have to file that information with the securities commissions across the country? They will have to disclose the valuation of the assets of the CDC. I suggest that the CDC does not have one asset of a productive nature. It is a holding operation entirely controlled by the government. Ultimately, some of the shares of the CDC may be sold to the public. At that time there will have to be full disclosure of valuation, and I do not refer to book valuation; we will want asset valuation. Surely the CDC will have to make full disclosure of that information when it puts its shares on the market.

I know that my friends in the NDP, and many others, are critical of the secrecy which surrounds the issuance of the stock of various corporations. This is one corporation that will have to show the whole picture covering the total valuations of Polymer, Venturetek, Raylo Chemicals and R & L Molecular Research Limited. These companies are in Edmonton and are such that very few people have heard of them. I happen to know most of the principals. The point is that if hon. members wish to make a study of these things, they should look at the reports of the committee which considered this matter. Perhaps then they will understand some of the questions raised. We want to know what these companies are and what will be their earning record. Everything of this nature has to be disclosed.

• (1740)

However, when dealing, as we are now, with the sale of a Crown corporation which reported to parliament and which was sold, or passed on in a paper transaction to another Crown corporation, the minister says it is not in the public interest to disclose the valuation to parliament. It is as though the minister and his officials are the only ones, apart from the responsible directors of both concerns, Polymer and the CDC, entitled to this information. That is essentially the position the minister adopted this afternoon. The Parliament of Canada, to which both organizations are responsible, is to be denied, by government decision, this information because it is said not to be in the public interest for us to have it. Is it sufficient to accept what the minister discloses and what was judged to be the value by his predecessor and his officials? No, that is not enough. Parliament has a right to know.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege or on a point of order?

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When I have finished my remarks. That, moreover, is the position the hon. minister took earlier, so I can do likewise. The hon. member will get a chance to ask his question later on.

[English]

The other point I want to bring forward to this House is that debate on vote 16b is the only way in which parliament can comment on the sale of Polymer. This was foreseen in the passage of the CDC bill in 1971. Certainly there were objections. The New Democratic Party opposed the passage of section 39 of the act for its reasons. We opposed it for our reasons. It seems to me that this goes back to the fundamental weakness of the CDC; that is, it is a development corporation, allegedly, in purpose. Therefore, its purpose is to invest funds, to gather funds from the public for the development of Canadian industry. It can do that in various ways so that it can establish the trust that is necessary.

I can tell the minister, although he knows, that a number of previous attempts to do this were unsuccessful. All that has been done for the public is that the public's money has been invested in certain things. La Société Générale de Financement is one example. The Alberta Development Fund is another. That was a real turkey. What must we have? We must have a dividend record company. Investors will want their dividends or they will want an idea of what is the anticipated growth. Of course, this government has brought in a form of capital gains tax which will certainly discourage most people from going after growth stock. Unless these corporations which will be bought into the CDC, or in which the CDC will invest money, provide income to the CDC there will be no way they can pay dividends.

I draw to the attention of the hon. member for Sarnia that this is one of the big difficulties which I foresee. One of the more limiting factors which may apply to the future expansion of Polymer will be what the directors of the CDC decide. Are they going to maintain a good front before the public, utilizing the medium chiefly provided by the profitable operation of Polymer and payable to the CDC, so as to pay dividends on CDC stock; or are they going to withhold the dividends of the CDC in order to leave the moneys available to Polymer for development capital? You can put a company under in many ways. One of the surest ways is to bleed off all its financial resources through dividends, leaving no money whatsoever for expansion and necessary working capital. This is the danger. There will be a conflict of interest in the management of the CDC which will operate to the potential detriment of Polymer.

This is where I have some difficulty in accepting the tie-in of Polymer within the CDC when it is not part of the purpose of CDC. Let us take Venturetek: it is possible. With the other companies in Edmonton, it is possible.

They may be developed. Connaught Laboratories is an existing operation. If this were done for the purpose of preventing the sale or collapse of Connaught Laboratories, there may have been justification. If, on the other hand, it is merely the taking over of Connaught Laboratories because it is a viable operation and will provide revenues, then again we have a potential conflict of interest. That is where it is wrong in so far as a development corporation is concerned. Otherwise let us call it the Canadian "Mutual" or "General Holding" company. This is by way of an invitation to a mutual company through the directors appointed by the government.

Also, somewhere along the line we will want full information in respect of the Venturetek company, where people who were formerly involved in a section of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce seem to have rather interesting, shall we say, parallel knowledge with regard to the CDC and Venturetek. If there is to be absolute public confidence in the CDC, there must be a ventilation of the Venturetek situation. That is why this whole question has come forward. It arises out of the disclosures made before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the other day to the effect that there was something wrong with vote 16b. We have the full explanation of the $1 item that was furnished to the committee after the event. This is a clear case of amending legislation by the use of a $1 item. This is the explanation:

> It is requested that the title "Polymer Corporation Limited" be deleted as of July 31, 1972, from the schedule of Crown Corporations (Provincial Taxes and Fees) Act and from schedule D to the Financial Administration Act since this corporation is now being purchased by the Canada Development Corporation.

• (1750)

Mr. Speaker, that is the sole official explanation for vote 16b of Supplementary Estimates (B). This is the $1 item. We are disapproving the utilization of this particular item, the reasons given, the valuation, the wrongful purpose within the CDC, the lack of information and the use of the $1 item. Those are the reasons this motion has been put forward.

This is not an attack on Polymer, not one bit. We have witnessed the uneasy conscience of one who feels as though he were treading on dangerous ground, who feels that even one word of potential criticism against this transaction which in no way affects Polymer might be dangerous. Even if the sale were to be reversed, would it affect the public? There is no confidence in the shares of Polymer that are affected. It is one government organism which would have to return the corporation to the government; this is all it is. The government controls Polymer. It goes from one set of books to another set of books. The only point is that in the second set of books, ultimately the public will have a right to private ownership of some of the income that formerly belonged to the people of Canada as a whole.

This was a Crown corporation set up during wartime scarcity. It was given a monopoly, it was developed, and it has had good management. It has been aggressive and it has done well. But because it has done well, it had been selected—as I said in June of 1971, in the second reading debate and during the report stage—as the principal milk cow for the Canada Development Corporation. That, to my mind, is the fundamental reason why Polymer should never have been sold to the CDC.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish at the outset to commend the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) for stating quite clearly what it is that is before the House at this time. He made that clear statement, not in the academic portion of his speech but in his last sentence when he called upon the members of this House tonight to vote this administration out. That is a perfectly legitimate objective; it is a perfectly proper goal. But the members of the Official Opposition today, except for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, are trying to make out that they are discussing the fortunes of Polymer.

What is before this House today is the business of supply. This is the final day of this semester. There will come before us tonight, if there is still a government with the confidence of the House, supplementary estimates and an interim supply bill. What we are debating between now and 9.45 tonight is whether or not the government that sits over there has the confidence of the House, at least for this week and maybe a few weeks more.

The last time a government was beaten when the business of supply was before the House was on February 5, 1963. It is an interesting Hansard to read, but I draw attention to the final page of Hansard for that session, page 3463. After the vote had been taken on an amendment as amended, which was carried 142 to 111, Hansard records as follows:

> MR. SPEAKER: I declare the amendment as amended carried.
> MR. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, I shall advise His Excellency the Governor General tomorrow.

There was no proceeding to the main supply motion, there was no point of order, there was no further discussion. The then prime minister simply told the House that he would advise the Governor General the next day, and then he moved, seconded by the Hon. Gordon Churchill, that the House adjourn. According to Hansard, it adjourned at 9.05 p.m. The evening was not even over. The whole question of supply itself had not been resolved. But the government had been beaten on a supply motion. That was it. Then there is a line in Hansard and the following paragraph:

> The twenty-fifth parliament was dissolved on Wednesday, February 6, 1963, by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. Speaker, although the rules have been changed in that instead of having a motion for Mr. Speaker to leave the chair, for the House to resolve itself into committee of supply, and then for there to be an amendment and subamendment, we now have opposition days and motions that are just for discussion and others that are no confidence motions, the fact is that what is before us at this moment is a motion of no confidence attached—and I emphasize this—to the granting of money. Therefore, if this House tonight at 9.45 votes no confidence in the government across the way, it is saying to the government: You cannot have the supplementary estimates tonight; you cannot have interim supply to carry on for the next three months—the game is over.

As I say, that is a perfectly proper objective for an opposition party, but I wish it were stated honestly instead of our being handed all this hypocrisy about a certain concern for public ownership and a certain concern for the principles of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The fact of the matter is that if this motion that is before the House at present were to carry at 9.45 tonight, we would not sit in this chamber tomorrow. True, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would have two options open to him. He could decide tomorrow to resign and to recommend to the Governor General that he invite the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to be prime minister. Somebody says, "The same breed of cats". But he also has a constitutional right, which I suspect he would exercise, of calling an election, and instead of meeting here tomorrow to do certain things that I will talk about at eight o'clock, the game, so far as this parliament is concerned, would be over.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the few minutes before six o'clock that I had the floor I commended the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain for having made clear to the House what this motion is all about. He did so in his concluding sentence when he called on the members of the House tonight to vote this administration out. As I said when I was on my feet before six o'clock, this is a perfectly laudable objective. I wish the people of Canada had done it on October 30 last. But I question very strongly, and I think the people of Canada stand behind us on this, that this is the night to do it.

As I hope I made clear from the references to past history which I made this afternoon, if the motion of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is carried at a quarter to ten tonight, the government will have been denied the confidence of the House, will have been denied the right to proceed with its two supply bills that are on the order paper, and this House will not meet tomorrow. In such a case the Prime Minister will have to make up his mind what to do, whether to turn the reins of office over to the Leader of the Opposition or to ask for dissolution. I suspect that in light of the political facts of the present period, what he would do would be to seek dissolution. So, sir, what we are voting on tonight is the very simple question, and I put it in its simplest terms: What are we going to do tomorrow, Tuesday, March 27?

It has been announced several times that if this House meets tomorrow, the order of business will be the report stage and third reading of the War Veterans Allowance Act amending bill, and the bill to amend the Old Age Security Act. Since both of those bills are thus almost at their concluding stages, it is a fair prospect that they could both be passed by the House by tomorrow night, if the House sits. But if the motion that is before the House tonight is carried by an irresponsible majority, we will not sit tomorrow and those two bills will not be dealt with and will not be passed. What does that mean? Let us look at this in very practical terms. It means that we would go into an election campaign, which presumably would conclude toward the end of May or early in June. It usually takes two or three months after an election is over before parliament is called together again. This means—

An hon. Member: This is all supposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Never mind supposition. History makes clear what would happen. This means that the old age pensioners and the war veterans, who at the moment have the right to expect certain increases in their pensions at the end of the month of April, will not get those increases at best until some time this fall. The passing of this motion denies for several months $13.39 a month to every one of Canada's 1,800,000 old age pensioners, and it also denies increases to the 80,000 or so Canadians who are in receipt of the war veterans allowance. That figure of 80,000 includes veterans, veterans' widows, and other veterans' dependents. In the case of those who are single, it would deny them an increase of $20 a month and in the case of those who are married it would deny them an increase of $30 a month.

That is what this vote is all about tonight, and let not my hon. friends in the Progressive Conservative Party offer their new interest in public ownership as the reason for the motion and try to say that that is what it is all about. And let not those who report the proceedings in this House miss the main and essential feature, that what we are voting on is whether we do business in this place tomorrow or whether we follow the political gamesmanship of today and go into an election campaign.

We in this party do not have continuing confidence in those who form the government. We tried our best to best them last October, and we will try again. But, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada elected the parliament which is here. They sent four different parties to this House. They put us into a minority situation, and we believe they expect us to do business. We believe they expect us to make this parliament work and we are convinced that the people of Canada are sick and tired of the political gamesmanship being carried on, by the official opposition in particular. They have the absolute and constitutional and procedural right to put down the kind of motion they put down today, to move non-confidence in the government and to do so for any reason they want. But don't ask us to swallow it. Don't ask us not to realize it is nothing more or less than a trick, because we are a group of members who feel we have some responsibility, particularly to Canada's 1,800,000 old age pensioners and to the 80,000 Canadians who are in receipt of war veterans allowance in one form or another.

There are other things that are in the offing, Mr. Speaker. My leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr.

Lewis), referred to them this afternoon: the housing legislation, the legislation respecting foreign investment, and so on. However, no one can say how soon they might be dealt with. But the fact of this parliament is that tomorrow, only a matter of hours from now, if we stay in business, we shall be dealing with the third reading of the bill to raise old age pensions and the third reading of the bill to raise the war veterans allowance.

• (2010)

An hon. Member: You have said that already.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend down the way remarks that I have said that. Apparently it has to be said to our friends of the Conservative Party dozens of times to get it through their heads. These people want to play political games. What really counts in this House is the business that we do. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we feel very strongly that this is not the night to bring this parliament to an end. This is not the time.

An hon. Member: How about tomorrow?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Someone asks, how about tomorrow? The time will come when we have got out of this government all we can get, and then it will be time to let the people decide about the future. I submit that at this particular point nothing could be more irresponsible than for this House to vote tonight in such a way that it would be the end of this parliament.

I believe my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, is likely to speak this evening—perhaps even to follow me in this debate. He has not shown me his notes and I do not know what he is going to say, but in light of what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said this afternoon, I suppose he may try to answer my argument by saying that even if this motion were carried tonight he would be willing for the House tomorrow to deal with the Old Age Security Act and the bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act. I say that it will then be too late. If this motion is passed tonight, there is no tomorrow as far as this parliament is concerned.

An hon. Member: For you there isn't.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, these interruptions and catcalls from the Conservatives only prove they are guilty and that there is egg on their face. They have pulled a boner. They know that whatever else this parliament may do, the people of Canada want the old age pension increase and they want the war veterans allowance increase, and a vote tonight for this motion is a vote that denies those increases.

I earnestly hope that at least some of my Tory friends will not vote for it; and there are some that I call my friends—the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and my namesake the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) who are zealous in the fight for veterans. They are aware that the passing of this motion would deny those increases. I hope my friend, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and my hon. friend the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), who a few months ago was so anxious to do something about old age pensions that he wanted to adjourn the House when there was nothing before it, will not vote tonight in such a way as to deny the possibility of dealing with the question of old age pensions tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, when we refer now to increases in old age pensions and war veterans allowances, we are not talking about some distant promise, something that might happen in a week or two or a month from now. We are talking about legislation that has reached the final stages in this House, that has been approved all down the line and needs only third reading tomorrow night to go to the other place and for the final steps to be taken so that the increases provided in the bills can be reflected in the April cheques of 1,800,000 old age pensioners and 80,000 recipients of war veterans allowances. That is what the debate is all about tonight, Mr. Speaker. I hope members will realize that and not try to divert the issue by saying it is a discussion on the effects on Polymer. That is not the issue.

The item in the estimates to which the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) referred this afternoon has already been defeated. It is not in the estimates that will be before this House tonight. Any possibility of rescinding the sale that took place last July is not before us. In fact, so far as Polymer is concerned, if the motion carries nothing happens to Polymer whatsoever, so that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was perfectly right when he said at the end of his speech that the purpose of this motion is to get rid of this administration.

That is a perfectly laudable objective, but I insist that this is not the time to do it and that the people of Canada expect business and action out of this parliament. They know that these two pieces of legislation are available tomorrow, and they would hold this parliament to account if it were so irresponsible tonight as to close up shop and go off into an election campaign.

I agree with the hon. member for Yukon who said this afternoon that the time of reckoning has come, the time to stand by principles is here. I suggest that it comes at a quarter to ten. Are we here in this parliament to play games, to try to shift one party for another, or are we here to get action for the Canadian people? What is the principle that motivates members of this House? Is it just to get power, or to win legislation that the people of Canada expect us to get for them in this session?

I feel, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that we are doing as responsible a thing as we have ever done in saying tonight that this is not the time to turf out the administration; this is not the time to bring parliament to an end: this is the time to give this parliament enough more life, at any rate, to deal with the worth-while legislation that is before us. The issue is, frankly, what do we do tomorrow? Do we go off into the political wars having closed up parliament, or do we vote for third reading of the old age pension increase and the increase in the war veterans allowance? That is the issue. I call upon this parliament tonight to vote in a responsible way, and to oppose the Conservative motion.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like this evening to touch upon a few issues which were raised either tonight, a few days ago or several days before that by hon. members in connection with the status of Polymer Corporation. From time to time there has been the suggestion of doubt or difficulty respecting the legal position. I should simply like to elaborate on the position of Polymer Corporation at the present time as the property of the Canada Development Corporation.

As hon. members know, Mr. Speaker, members of this House of Commons debated the question of the proper status of Polymer Corporation, its ownership and relationship to CDC, when some long time ago they were deliberating the creation of the Canada Development Corporation. They were considering it as an instrument, and an important one, for the development of Canadian equity in companies owned by Canadians, in a positive way, through the development of investment which, through the instrumentality of the Canada Development Corporation, could obtain and hold ownership of many different and varied Canadian enterprises in the years of its future existence.

Members of parliament, in the course of debating that legislation, very specifically gave approval to the transfer of Polymer to the Canada Development Corporation—

Mr. Baldwin: The Liberal members did.

Mr. Lang: —on arriving at a satisfactory agreement about the price at which it should be transferred. Indeed, the legislation itself very consciously and clearly set out the procudures which were to be followed: the approval of the governor in council, the transfer at a fair and reasonable price and, indeed, some financial arrangements that would result in the structure of the Canada Development Corporation upon completion of that sale. Through its interest as a shareholder in the Canada Development Corporation and in Polymer, the government subsequently saw the determination of a fair price, which my colleague the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) referred to this afternoon, and by order in council approved the transfer of Polymer through the Canada Development Corporation Act.

Hon. members have had occasion to raise questions about the impact of the sale pursuant to the statute, and its legal meaning and effect. They did so in connection with other proposals which were before the House in another form dealing with specific aspects of the remaining references to Polymer Corporation in the statute. The point I wish to make is that the sale of Polymer Corporation was complete and perfect within the letter and spirit of the law, and its transfer was approved by governor in council in accordance with the statute which parliament itself had passed, which envisaged the possibility of such procedure.

The sale was perfect and complete. The only question which can be raised is with respect to the total impact and effect of that sale, particularly the impact or effect of the sale on the references to Polymer in the statute and, in one or two cases, in schedules where it had been mentioned because of its former status as a Crown corporation. The proposal was put before the House in another form. It was suggested that the references to Polymer in the Crown Corporations (Provincial Taxes and Fees) Act should be eliminated, and that the references should also be eliminated from the Financial Administration Act where, because of its former nature as a Crown corporation, it had been mentioned along with many corporations of a similar nature.

The purpose of these changes was simply to make clear to anyone who might want to look at the statutes what had happened to Polymer Corporation. I should like to say that the purpose was to make clear what in fact had happened, namely, that the legal effect of the complete and effective transfer of Polymer Corporation to the CDC, as approved according to statute, was that it had effectively extinguished its status as a Crown corporation; that this had been done by the workings of a statute which parliament had passed and the natural consequences which flowed therefrom.

Mr. Baldwin: But you still need another statute.

Mr. Lang: That is to say, the purpose of the removal from the schedules was simply to remove any misunderstanding or misapprehension which could result. It was not in any way to change the legal effect of the transaction which was complete with the sale and which at that point terminated the status of Polymer Corporation as a Crown corporation. Indeed, hon. members may have noticed, if they looked closely at these two proposed changes, that one was designed to extinguish the reference to Polymer with respect to provincial taxes. That reference was specifically to make clear that as a former Crown corporation it was nonetheless liable for taxes. The proposed removal of that language was due to the conclusion that the reference was no longer needed because, that corporation no longer being a Crown corporation as a result of the sale to CDC, there was no longer any requirement to refer to it in the statute. In the other change the status was changed fully, legally and effectively.

As I say, in order that there should be no doubt about it, a change in legislation was sought. The government will no doubt at some point seek to clarify that in some further way, simply to put beyond doubt any question for those who might come along and examine the statutes and wonder, without examining the cross-references to which I have referred, what is the real situation of Polymer Corporation. The sale, therefore, was complete and effective in accordance with the statute. Polymer Corporation moved to ownership by the Canada Development Corporation and ceased thereby to be a crown corporation for the purposes of the operation of the law.

I will not say much more about the principle of the issue. My colleagues have spoken about it and others will also. The change of Polymer Corporation into what we expect to be a dynamic corporation for investment in Canada, which we have structured in such a way that it is protected significantly from mere political interference, really speaks for itself. It is our view that these holdings, in their nature private enterprise but not necessarily held any longer by the government for government purposes and not necessarily any longer instruments of government policy, should indeed be removed from the petty politics which can on occasion affect such a corporation only to its detriment.

Perhaps the comments of hon. members tonight in relation to the situation of Polymer demonstrates the wisdom of removing such corporations from this type of political argument, from this partisan argument and placing them under the control of the Canada Development Corporation, an investment corporation designed, in the spirit of the law, to develop properties owned by Canadians, to develop investments for profit and to be managed by the best possible management with the view that it should invest more and more in Canadian equities and serve the purposes for which it was set up. It is to do something important, namely, acquire Canadian equities for Canadians so that instead of saying negatively, "Do not invest," it will work positively and say, "Yes, we are going to see to it that we have a positive impact in Canada. We will provide an opportunity for Canadians to invest in Canada. We are going to see that more and more of our resources, of our manufacturing and other industries, are owned by Canadians and are not in the hands of people from outside this country." That is an important objective.

The passing of Polymer into ownership by the Canada Development Corporation will, in view of the management of that corporation, lead to further development and is an extremely important step in the attainment of this extremely important objective, the continuation and development of Canadian ownership in Canada by Canadians, for the good of all Canadians. That is why the sale has been completed, Mr. Speaker. That is why the Canada Development Corporation will continue on its way as an important instrument in the development of Canadian interests in our economy.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might begin by talking about the Canada Development Corporation since there has been a good deal of discussion on it. Let me take a minute to remind hon. members of the House who were not here in the last session, or perhaps have forgotten, why I am opposed to the Canada Development Corporation as it was established.

I agree with what has been suggested, I think by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), that if this corporation was simply set up for purposes of profit it is in effect an investment company and we do not need it. If it was not to invest for profit for the purposes of its investors, there must have been some other strategy behind its setting up which the government has never defined. The Canada Development Corporation was established, so far as I can see, without any strategy except the establishment of another investment company in Canada in which the government would have some interest. It is meaningless in this sense, and for that reason I oppose it, Mr. Speaker. For that reason, I see little significance in it, despite the repetition of ministers of the crown that it is a vehicle to enable Canadians to invest in Canada. It might even be that some people will be hurt in the process.

Secondly, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has taken the position that transfer of shares of Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation is just some kind of intergovernmental transaction. I am sorry the President of the Treasury Board is not here at the moment; but that, of course, was not an honest statement as to what the facts are, because the directors, that is, the management of the Canada Development Corporation, have already announced their intention to have a public issue of the shares of the corporation. So it was a very dishonest procedure for any member of this government to stand up in the House and pretend that this is simply another intergovernmental transaction. That may have been technically true at the time of the transaction, but when the transaction was put through, the members of this government knew perfectly well that before long the Canada Development Corporation would not be a government wholly-owned corporation. Indeed, they said the corporation was established for the purposes of disseminating ownership among shareholders. So that was a very dishonest presentation of the situation, Mr. Speaker.

The point has to be made that there is always a conflict of interest. There is obviously a conflict of interest between the government, as the representatives of Canada and the owners of Polymer Corporation, on the one hand, and the government as the owner, for the time being, of the CDC on the other. There is an obvious conflict of interest because the Canada Development Corporation is a creature of the government.

The government wants the Canada Development Corporation to be a success. It wants the CDC to get off to a good start. It wants it to appeal to public investors with something attractive. Nobody should pretend, and nobody can convince me, that this is an arm's length transaction between the government as the owners of Polymer Corporation and the government as owners of the Canada Development Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This circumstance in itself is sufficient ground for requiring every opposition member in this House to examine this transaction with the closest of scrutiny and the keenest of scepticism. We have been given no information about the appraisals. The government says that appraisals were made, a couple within the government service and one outside. Why does the government not table these appraisals upon which the valuation was based, particularly in view of the obvious conflict of interest that exists? The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) said it might not be fair to the future of Polymer Corporation. I wonder whether the government is as much concerned about fairness to the future of Polymer as it is concerned with trying to protect itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What we have here is the government making what has been described as an interest-free loan to the Canada Development Corporation, because the CDC is not paying cash for the shares of Polymer; it is simply turning over to the government CDC shares. It is also reserving the right to buy back these shares in so far as they might represent more than 10 per cent—

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: "Shame" is right. I heard the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: The first honest Liberal this year.

Mr. Stanfield: It is important that members understand this. Under this bill, the Canada Development Corporation is entitled to buy back these shares at the price the government is paying, $10.15, $10.50 or whatever it is a share, or if at the time it wants to buy back those shares the book value of the shares of the Canada Development Corporation is less than that price, the government can authorize CDC to buy back the shares for less than the government of Canada paid for them.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: In other words, the Canada Development Corporation is not only getting an interest-free loan from the government of Canada, but it may turn out that the people of Canada will be paying interest to the CDC over the years as a result of this transaction. In view of this, it is not much wonder that the great majority of members of the House condemn this transaction. In the first place, there is a conflict of interest. There is a refusal to be open and frank and disclose the appraisals upon which the valuation was based. There is a deal that is not fair to the Canadian people. We are using an opposition day to condemn this transaction. The hon. member for York South and others who have spoken since have said that this condemnation is of no effect. I assure hon. members that if I ever have the opportunity to do so, this transaction will be undone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Therefore, a vote of condemnation by this House tonight might do a good deal more than the hon. member for York South was prepared to admit this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In any event, this is an important question. Was the sale a proper sale? The vast majority of the members of this House believe it was not a proper sale; there is no question about that. Should not the House have an opportunity to condemn this sale? Obviously, Mr. Speaker, it should. There is no question that the majority of the members of this House condemn this sale. I do not want to be abusive in the way the hon. member for York South was this afternoon. I simply say to him that he is getting tiresome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: He is misleading. He is intemperate in his language. I could sum it by saying that although generally speaking I have admired the hon. gentleman, he is not really himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In past sessions since the new rules were adopted, members of the New Democratic Party were most anxious to have the right to put forward motions on opposition days which carried with them a vote. We do not hear any more talk about that from my friends to the left. That is the last thing in the world they want to do in this session of parliament. To what is this House of Commons being reduced? Is it being reduced to the position where it refuses to express its views on government policy? Has this House of Commons reached the point where it refuses to be counted as to its view regarding a government transaction or government statement of policy?

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) reiterated his concern about what might happen to old age pension legislation and veterans allowance legislation. He could have added to this, as did the hon. member for York South, legislation relating to increased exemptions for senior citizens and students. I simply say to my hon. friends that the passage of a vote of non-confidence in this House tonight does not mean an election. It does not mean that these measures cannot be proceeded with promptly.

• (2040)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Listen to them.

Mr. Hees: They are scared stiff.

Mr. Stanfield: I say to hon. members to my left that if they vote according to their minds and according to their real beliefs, if they condemn this transaction as they believe it should be condemned, and if as a result this legislation is not brought before the House shortly, it will be because hon. gentlemen opposite made that decision. I assure them, that if I were called upon to form a government, this legislation would be proceeded with with the greatest dispatch.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I say to them, also, that if I were called upon to form a government, I would present the program upon which I would face the Canadian people and I would expect those hon. members to vote non-confidence when they felt my government deserved such a vote; and I would not ask for charity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: So it is very simple.

Mr. Corbin: Your raft is sinking.

Mr. Stanfield: I am afraid that when the hon. member sinks he will be out of sight for a long time, though it is just possible he may be kept afloat a little longer by his friends in the coalition. I say, we condemn this transaction. Hence the motion of condemnation. I say, let others who condemn this action by the government in their hearts reflect that feeling in the House. Let the House vote according to its mind and its beliefs. Let us not make a farce of responsible parliamentary government in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: It is just as clear as that. The government does not enjoy the confidence of the House.

An hon. Member: Wait and see.

Mr. Stanfield: The great majority of the members of the House condemn this transaction. Let us behave as a House of Commons; let us behave as a parliament; let us hold the government accountable when it does something wrong, for the great majority of members of this House believe this transaction should be condemned.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak since our official spokesman, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Caouette), has delivered an excellent speech to define our position on the ridiculous motion now under consideration. But having heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), an opportunity which was denied to me during the election campaign, because he was not seen in Quebec, I realized that I had to take part in the debate.

I remember that when I introduced a motion on Crown corporations—a motion which I put on several occasions during the private members' hour—several members opposite did not support me.

I also remember that one of them blamed me for wanting to throw light on the general administration of Crown corporations and told me that Parliament or myself did not have the authority to demand stricter control over the administration of Crown corporations.

By introducing this motion on Crown corporations, I wanted hon. members to receive not only an annual report, as for any other department or Crown corporation, but also to have a more direct control over the spending of taxpayers money, since Crown corporations are nothing more than creatures of this government which compete with private firms for rubber, rail transportation, air transport or other. The federal government is using billions of dollars through its creatures, the Crown corporations.

To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Progressive party has always supported this set of proposals, but it had fiercely opposed them at the private members hours when I introduced a motion to enable each member to really fulfill his role, that is to exercise control over and get a thorough knowledge on the management of Crown corporations.

Now the hon. Leader of the Opposition is today having one of his sympathisers bring forward a motion whereby the House belatedly blames the government for having, by a Cabinet decision, authorized the sale of Polymer Ltd. to the Canada Development Corporation.

At the time this sale took place, I, like all Canadians, observed that Progressive Conservatives and Neo-Democrats were shuttling the ball back and forth, blaming each other, blaming the government for mismanagement of Polymer Ltd. because of the transfer to a joint stock company of a Crown corporation.

That was during the election campaign. Our friends across the way were entertaining themselves and the population with such recriminations, instead of tackling the real problems experienced by our citizens and daily plaguing them.

Today, instead of talking about its motion, one of these political parties is trying to lay a trap for the NDP in order to make them contradict their former electoral position and to annoy the government at the same time. They do not talk either about their motion or about their reasons for opposing the sale of Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation or give any motive for their position. This seems to us like an astonishing show of petty politics.

The members of our party have been requesting for a long time a specific policy on the management of Crown corporations. By moving today a motion to decry the order in council authorizing the sale of a Crown corporation to the CDC, the Progressive Conservatives neither approve nor disapprove that sale. They blame the government on a political basis only for the sale of that corporation.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been in this House, I have never heard hon. members opposite pay close attention to the administration of Crown corporations. These people do not wonder why we have no authority to ask questions or get specific information about those corporations.

And yet, when an hon. member of this House, not a progressive conservative member nor an NDP member but a Social Credit member rises and asks the government to give every hon. member the authority to control public spending within these corporations, then, Mr. Speaker, probably for political reasons these people are opposed to it.

Well this is a depressing sight for us, something which it is not pleasant to see in this House since we are supposed to deal tomorrow with the matter of the old age security pension. Members of the Social Credit Party have put four motions on the order paper. These were not progressive conservative members but social credit party members who have put forward these four motions to increase the basic pension, to lower the eligibility age to 60 and to give the old age security pension to the spouse of the pensioned person not yet eligible, as the case may be, in order to respect the family unity. And now, rather than dealing with this legislation and working on the order of the day to settle the important issue of the old age security pension, our progressive conservative friends play games with the Polymer Corporation, which is useless since this corporation has already been sold.

And even assuming that this motion will be passed tonight, what would happen? How would it serve the Canadian people? I ask the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), leader of the Quebec wing of the progressive conservative party as well as to the hon. leader of the official opposition to tell the House what effect this motion will have for the Canadian people? Will it put more bread on the table of the poor in our ridings? Will it settle the unemployment problem? The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) finds it funny, probably because he does not know the unemployed in his own riding, but we have some in our constituencies and they do not live off the Polymer Corporation but with unemployment insurance.

Sale of Polymer

Mr. Speaker, it is extremely sad to find out that while thousands of unemployed in Canada are waiting for their cheques to live, while they are called swindlers by this government, while ministers are asked questions and give no answers, the Progressive Conservatives dissent. They accuse the government of selling Polymer Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, while conflicts exist—I hope this will interest the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, if he is still a Quebecer—between the government of Quebec and the government of Canada about the guaranteed minimum income, there was a time, Mr. Speaker, when the NDP, the Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals, Peter, James and just about everybody found it funny when the Creditistes called for a guaranteed annual income. The laughed at the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). They said that the hon. member for Témiscamingue was dreaming in colour. Well, today, these same peanut politicians, under the pretext of getting votes, sponsor measures for a guaranteed minimum income, but none of them has the nerve to come out squarely in favour, even though this is where the problem is for Canadians, and not for Polymer, which is in a good position, with regards to the Canadian Development Corporation, to solve this problem.

Mr. Speaker, I make this speech with a bit of bitterness, because I am tremendously disappointed to see professional peanut politicians waste the time of the House with pointless motions, while unemployed Canadians—in the constituency of Lotbinière and elsewhere—demand positive action, while provinces are confronted with a financing problem and expect the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to propose solutions if he has any, while a piece of legislation on old age security only needs serious members of Parliament to care for it, so that the pensionable age is lowered, so that Parliament can act to give something to the Canadian people.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is time for these things to be stated in this House and to take to task the hon. members opposite to whom I recognize the right to condemn the government. At least they should have the courage to blame the government for not introducing measures earlier on guaranteed income security, unemployment or any other question that really affects our fellow citizens instead of worrying about the sale of the Polymer Corporation Limited.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. leader of the Quebec wing of the former Progressive Conservative Party will wake up, so that he can then wake up this party.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, Webster's dictionary says—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: They would not know what that is.

Mr. Fairweather: It is all right; I have all evening.

An hon. Member: So have we.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Fairweather: Webster's dictionary says that hypocrisy is the false assumption of virtue or the simulation of goodness; pretending, in other words, to be better than we are. Is this because we always want to be better, or only that we want to fool people into thinking we are? Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), as reported at page 2541 of Hansard, said the following:

> The CDC has become an extension of Power Corporation of Canada, which I find to be a nest of Liberal birds—

An hon. member, undoubtedly sitting behind the member, said "Vultures", and the hon. member for York South went on to say "or probably vultures, Mr. Speaker". Well, Friday's vultures have become Monday's mockingbirds. The hon. member for York South went on to say:

> There are people representing Power Corporation or who were earlier associated with it on the board of directors of CDC still acting in the only way they know; they never think in terms of the needs of the people or the needs of the country but think as directors of whichever corporations they headed in private enterprise. This is the kind of distortion which has been made of a good idea, Mr. Speaker.

Well, Friday's good idea becomes Monday's abdication.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: You have had a great deal of time, and I hear your laughter; but the truth is that you mocked on Friday and you become mockable on Monday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: The truth also is, of course, that if this party put forward a resolution to nationalize the Canadian Pacific Railway, the New Democrats would have a catalogue of excuses for running away from that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: They wouldn't let you go that far.

Mr. Fairweather: We built the Canadian National and we might as well build the Canadian Pacific.

On Friday last, the leader of the NDP condemned this sale with what he then called "all the honour" that he had. He has now shifted that "honour" to "vigour."

An hon. Member: To common sense.

Mr. Fairweather: My dictionary defines "honour" as "respect; highly conferred dignity upon," and then, in commercial usage, it says "to accept and pay bills when due." Curiously, and somewhat prophetically, it goes on the describe "honourable" as being a person's intentions in courting a woman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: The courtship is there; the courtship we are witnessing between this government and the New Democrats is public—but it could scarcely be called honourable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: As one who has found it within his heart to occasionally find credit on what the NDP espouses, I myself find this a somewhat disgusting exercise.

Mr. Hees: It is a shady shackup.

• (2100)

Mr. Fairweather: I find myself saddened by the spectacle of repudiation of principle which we are witnessing today. "I condemn the sale of Polymer with all the vigour I have", said the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). Then he added, sotto voce, "provided such condemnation will not result in the resignation of the government". "I condemn the sale of Polymer with all the vigour I have", he said, and then behind his hand added, "except that such condemnation will not be construed as being a lack of confidence in the government". He says, "I condemn the sale of Polymer with all the vigour I have", then whispers to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), "provided such condemnation will not mean that I should hazard my delicate state of health in any general election".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: You see, there is no mystery about the alienation. I hear an interjection. If the hon. member wants to pose a question, he can do so or go back to his seat; or he can make a speech. I have been here almost as long as the hon. member and I have not yet heard a sensible word from him.

Mr. Whicher: I can read, anyway.

Mr. Fairweather: The funny thing about it is that I write and prepare my speeches, which is more than the hon. member is able to say up to this point. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has been transplanted here from another place. I wish he would make another of his memorable speeches tonight. He will have an opportunity in about three minutes, when I have finished.

The fact is that very few hon. members have meant what they have said lately, including the hon. member for Bruce. One member who will vote against this motion asked the government to break off the sale. Another member, who I presume will vote against the motion, said that the committee vote was a clear indication that the majority of this House opposed the sale of Polymer Corporation. Yet another member of parliament who announced, in very extravagant language, that he would vote against the motion, went up and down the country condemning the government with obvious vigour; yet before many months had elapsed the vigour had been transformed into a two-step with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau).

I happen to be a person who thinks that the history and the rules of parliament are important. I think there are too many people here who are prisoners of their own rhetoric. Winston Churchill liked to point out that it was sometimes useful to recognize the obvious. Perhaps if we had recognized the obvious of what has been going on here in the last few months, we would have been a little further ahead. In the third report of the Special Committee on Procedure of this House—the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was a distinguished member of the committee—several statements were made, as follows:

(a) A pattern of regular parliamentary sessions is assumed whereby a session would normally commence in September or October and the House would rise for the summer recess on or about July 1.

(b) For the purpose of supply, the parliamentary session would be divided into three periods ending on December 10, March 26 and June 30, respectively.

Then we find this in paragraph (f)

Interim supply to cover the months of April, May and June would be disposed of by March 26—

Finally there is this statement:

(g) A total of 25 allotted days spaced throughout the session would be placed at the disposal of the opposition.

Now, because the opposition is showing the temerity to use one of its allotted days, and also the courage to vote the way we speak, we are being condemned out of hand by members of the New Democratic Party and the government.

Mr. Speaker, there is of course another aspect of this sorry transaction which I think needs a comment or two. It was touched upon by the Leader of the Opposition. It has to do with the secrecy aspect of the transaction. In an article in the Winnipeg Free Press—I would ask the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) to remember that it is a western newspaper—Maurice Western writes:

C. M. Drury—

The President of the Treasury Board

—states that two departments evaluated the property. Unfortunately the objectivity of departments in such a situation is highly suspect.

I do not think anybody could have disagreed with my leader when he made the very important point of the serious conflict of interest which is inherent in this transaction. I continue quoting what Mr. Western wrote:

There was also a report by the firm of Wood Gundy Ltd. This might be more enlightening. Whether it will enlighten anybody is doubtfull since the government normally declines to produce reports dealing with the internal state of commercial companies.

Mr. Western is not only a rather good writer but an excellent prophet because, of course, the government has not seen fit to let us have the benefit of either the Wood Gundy report or the evaluation of the two departments. I shall go back to the matter of alienation and the cynicism of a large part of the public concerning what we are about in this parliament. There is an interesting article entitled "On Telling People", in Essays on Reform, 1967 edited by Bernard Crick. In the article by Professor J. A. Griffith we find this passage:

The wish to take the lid off the machinery of government, to see how it works, who says what to whom, at what level decisions are taken, what private criteria are used, how far 'politics' is allowed to override those criteria, on what statistical and other 'facts' the decisions are based: this wish does not derive only from curiosity or from party animosity but also from self-interest—

That is, of the public. I think this is really the thrust of our whole presentation today no matter what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who pops into the House to give us the benefit of his legal opinion on this sale, has to say. There is a serious conflict of interest. The sale has been condemned by statesmen—I use the term advisedly—from all corners of this House, but when their statesmanship in measured by votes they are found seriously wanting.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), I did not either intend to speak on this motion but I am obliged to rise because of his few remarks.

It seems that the hon. member for Lotbinière was right to say he did not hear any substantial arguments put forward by the Progressive Conservatives. In fact, when you look at the date of the order in council mentioned in the motion you find that the transaction took place on July 27, 1972.

Why did we not hear any substantial argument today? All this mess we have seen this afternoon is a most opportunistic contortion by an opposition member, namely the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to whom I will not impute motives. I will simply quote a few facts recorded in Hansard and in committee proceedings.

Last Tuesday, when we were debating supplementary estimates, an omission was found by chance. The Progressive Conservatives have been trying for a long time to find a justification to oppose $1 items and here we find a $1 item which was intended to rectify a situation created following the sale of the Polymer Corporation. By chance this progressive conservative member found the support of the committee whose majority were NDP members. The Liberal party was therefore defeated. What a chance! For three months the progressive conservative party waited for an opportunity to defeat the government and they found their chance. They discovered a fault! What happened then? On the next day, during the question period, the hon. member for Yukon requested the Auditor General's financial statement from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer)—

All right, the Auditor General's report, because he asked that the Auditor General table this report.

The minister answered that this matter had some legal aspects and that the report could not be tabled before obtaining some legal advice from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). However, during that same week, a witness appeared before that committee and it was again requested that the report be presented to the committee.

• (2110)

[English]

At this point, Mr. Speaker, again by coincidence and based upon past experience, they obtained the consent of the NDP members who they knew would support this motion to have the report tabled for the committee. By coincidence, that motion was talked out. This was on Thursday. On Friday, we were in the House and we heard an opposition motion presented by the members of the NDP. It was a very fine motion.

An hon. Member: What is new?

Mr. Blais: All of a sudden, who do we notice in the House but the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who listened avidly to every word that was said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). What happened? In the middle of his speech the hon. member for York South heard a question posed very sweetly and succinctly by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Blais: No, Sir. Suddenly we heard the long-awaited reply, sweetly given in all sincerity, by the hon. member for York South; and before six o'clock, by strange coincidence, we heard the motion which is now the subject of this debate put in the House. It is not a very long motion, mind you; it could not wait, so it had to be condensed and recondensed in order not to mislead anyone as to its intent.

Then I could see the hon. member for Yukon persuading other hon. members to support this brilliant strategy to bring down the government. He must have had trouble persuading members of the opposition because every other procedure he had proposed had failed, much to the chagrin of the opposition. But here we have it again. He has won this particular battle because the motion is again before us. I pity the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for York South when they saw their stategy fall apart. Why do I say that this is patently another ploy, a ploy which was classified this afternoon by the hon. member for York South as being a high school ploy? I know such ploys, because I am fresh out of high school.

Mr. Baldwin: Not too fresh, either.

Mr. Blais: I recall all these ploys as if it were yesterday.

Mr. Hees: I don't think you ever made it out of high school.

Mr. Blais: Who led on behalf of the opposition this afternoon? It was the instigator, the perpetrator of this great strategy, the hon. member for Yukon. And who came lobbying some time later, with all the fervour for which he is known, but the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)? He did not start the debate; he did not lead on this motion. He tried to smooth it over by saying: It does not matter whether you are for or against this motion, you people to the left, because it will not be a vote of no confidence at any rate.

Mr. Stanfield: Go on with you!

Mr. Nielsen: Is that a new version of the twist?

Mr. Blais: All I am saying, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Baldwin: Go back to your kindergarten.

Mr. Blais: I was not here when this very progressive bill was voted upon, the Canada Development Corporation bill, and I thought that this afternoon I would be enlightened as to why the bill should not have been voted upon and why the sale of Polymer was not a good thing for the country. I was expecting to hear the answers to those questions as a kindergarten student and as a high school student; but I learned nothing at all. All I heard was the manifestation of a Conservative ploy that was bound to be defeated and will be defeated, as it deserves to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak with considerable interest on this important motion which gives rise to a debate which recalls some important ideas and reservations expressed at the time the Canada Development Corporation bill was first debated.

An opposition day, ended by a confidence vote, is the established practice which enables us to debate the government's handling of a particular problem. If hon. members do not feel that they can vote for the motion, I am sure they have the right to follow their convictions. But I think this motion must be considered in relation to the debate which took place when the CDC was established. We are now witnessing the operation of legislation under which a Crown corporation is being sold to the CDC at a value much less than the market value. We can recall when Polymer was formed to produce rubber. It was at a time of scarcity of that product because it could not be exported from plantations in Malaysia.

When the Canada Development Corporation was set up in 1971, there was much argument as to whether the corporation would become a policy-oriented body for the good of Canada, investing in projects that perhaps were not immediately profitable but would bring benefits in the long run. We have had many similar development funds and corporations set up by the provinces. In the province of Manitoba the dissolving of a similar development fund is suggested. In effect, we are probably coming to the realization that a dollar invested once can only be invested once, whether it is private or public, and if it is invested by the public sector, the same dollar cannot be invested by the private sector.

This motion chastises the government for the sale of Polymer, a highly successful corporation, into the doubtful arms of the Canada Development Corporation which has not yet shown what its management capabilities are. What about this particular sale? In effect, at the present time it is a government-to-government sale. Polymer is an odd duck amongst public corporations because it is making some money. And what about the government? It has sanctioned the sale of Polymer at a time when it has a definite political stake in the Canada Development Corporation. But eventually the government will retain only a 10 per cent interest in the CDC.

Polymer has been sold at the price of $62 million, plus a possible further $10 million to be paid in the future. The CDC has paid the government 6,141,000 shares, so in effect the CDC is getting an interest-free loan. According to Mr. Hampson, president of the CDC, it was hard to arrive at a price because of Polymer's poor showing this past year. But, Mr. Speaker, its record has been good. It certainly seems odd that the government should sell Polymer last year when it was giving such a low return. Why did it not act as a private investor and hold out until better times before making the sale?

During the debate on the bill establishing the CDC, one of the most interesting comments was the following made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) during debate on second reading, as recorded at page 3620 of Hansard for February 22, 1971:

> Therefore, without developing that point any further, Your Honour, I assert that this bill is not a socialist document. It is not even a Walter Gordon document. It is a private outfit, and the passing of this bill establishes special privilege for a limited number of people.
> May I also point out that if this bill is passed and this company is set up it will have certain powers that could be used to the disadvantage of other Canadians, indeed I would say to the disadvantage of all Canadians. We have now in existence in this country the Polymer Corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Panarctic Oils Limited, Northern Transportation Limited, and perhaps one or two other entities of that order, and these entities are either wholly owned by the public or largely owned by the public.
> But under this bill the Canada Development Corporation would be given the right to buy these crown companies, and bring them under what would be partly public and partly private ownership. At the moment they are under public ownership. They belong to us, to the people of Canada, but under this bill they would become largely privately owned.

I cannot agree too much with his comments at that time because it is expected that in the long run the Canada Development Corporation will become largely privately owned, even though it is directed by the government of the day, to devote its energies to seeking out projects that will bring national benefit, although in the short term they may not be economically feasible.

It is generally accepted that Polymer has a book value of about $100 million and that it has been turned over to the Canada Development Corporation for somewhere around $62 million. There seems to be far too great a discrepancy between these two amounts. If Polymer is to become merged with the CDC, it should be at a much more realistic figure. Surely, if the people of Canada had to take a chance in setting up Polymer in the national interest during the war, they should receive full benefit for the company.

As time goes on and the CDC becomes more involved with private investors, albeit the aim is to seek out and encourage small private investors, these private investors should not be getting a gift of some $40 million from the people of Canada. Surely it only makes good, common sense that the CDC should not take over crown corporations at less than the average reasonable market value. I am surprised that the members of the party to my left are not wholeheartedly critical of this move by the government, because I think they made a good point during the debate in this House about the turning over of successful government enterprises to the CDC which, as I say, in the long run is expected to have a large element of private investment.

This aim was clearly set out by the then minister of finance, as recorded at page 3638 of Hansard for February 22, 1971, when he said:

> The corporation will operate within the private sector of the economy with the capabilities and constraints of a private corporation. It will be expected to carry out its objects in the words of the bill, "in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole." Since the shares of the corporation as soon as practicable will be sold to the public in competition with all other investment vehicles, the management of the corporation will at all times be fully aware of the need to earn a competitive rate of return on invested capital fully commensurate with the risks involved. The CDC cannot and must not be expected to make investments which do not meet its criteria for profitability. The national interest and the profit motive are not always compatible, but there is a broad area over which they are or can be in harmony. It is in this area that the corporation's activities and interest will be concentrated. This means that there are limits to what the corporation can be expected to accomplish. It should be regarded as only one of the measures to promote greater ownership and control of our economy by Canadians. But I am confident that the role it can play will make a very important contribution to our efforts to deal positively and constructively with these concerns.

The other major purpose set out in the bill is that the corporation should be owned by the Canadian public, with as wide a distribution of the shares as possible. The corporation will be uniquely Canadian with its voting shares held only by Canadian citizens and residents. Through it a new opportunity will be provided for every Canadian to invest in Canadian industry and to share in the profits of such an investment. It is intended that these shares will, when widely held, be listed on Canadian stock exchanges.

The then minister of finance left no doubt about what he envisaged the CDC would do. I should think the party to my left, which made the general charge during the election that there is extreme corporate rip-off, should be aware that this particular transaction is one of the widest rip-offs anyone could imagine. Here we have a $100-million Crown corporation, owned by the Canadian taxpayers, being sold for $60 million to the CDC, a corporation that eventually will be owned by numerous Canadian investors, but these will not in any way make up the sum total of the present owners of Polymer, the people of Canada. Surely this is a corporate rip-off of the worst kind. The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who went about the country complaining about corporate rip-offs, should be appalled at this happening. Hon. members who feel that this sale is not in the best interest of the Canadian public should make their views known by voting for the motion.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the most progressive thing I have heard in this House since becoming a member three months ago is the suggestion of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) that his party might introduce a motion to nationalize the CPR. But if ever they did that, I am sure it would be just to entice us into their bed, because we know they are really after our bodies.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said that when the bill to set up the CDC was before the House, he did not agree with it. But his party made no amendments on that occasion; they did not propose any amendments to the bill. Is that responsible leadership? He also said that if his party became the government, he would undo the sale of Polymer to the CDC. That differs from what his financial whiz-kids on the backbenches have said, such as the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who is reported in Hansard of last Friday as saying:

I sincerely hope that there will be a trend away from loving crown corporations.

Yes, he would undo the sale of Polymer all right; but he would sell it directly to his corporate friends for even less than the paltry $62 million that the CDC paid for it. Mr. Speaker, the Tories have the feeling that they are embarrassing the New Democratic Party with this motion. With great finesse, the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) finagled his way into this motion. It is a most irresponsible motion. Talking about irresponsibility, I should like to read from the Financial Times. I know it is almost a bible to the Tories. This is what it said in an article entitled "Irresponsible":

• (2130)

The Conservatives now may be right to think that they are on the brink of power. But if they are, they should conduct themselves responsibly, as a party ready to take over the management of the country. It is not responsible to formulate confidence motions such as the ones last week—

And may I add, the one tonight.

—which have no obvious purpose but to make the NDP squirm, amusing as that may be.

Short-term cleverness, verbal sophistry and partisan games are not endearing any of the parties to the voters. One-upmanship is not leadership, and leadership is what the country needs.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the country is getting leadership from my party on this side of the House.

An hon. Member: See what happens in the next election.

Mr. Rodriguez: Don't worry; I am looking for the Conservative drive in Nickel Belt, but you cannot even see it. The motion before us tonight is one full of puffed up hypocrisy and is totally meaningless. What would the passage of this motion do? It is closing the barn door after the horse has bolted. That is what these pretenders to power would accomplish if this motion were passed tonight and the government brought down.

For example, in Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, this motion, if passed, would deny $10.4 million to western farmers, including $1.6 million to farmers in Ontario and Quebec for losses incurred last summer. The farmers should know what the motion will do. For environmental control, $3.2 million. And the Tories are always talking about environmental control. Here is one for members on the east coast—$450,000 contribution to Atlantic salmon fishermen who lost their livelihood, and fishermen in general for losses in income. They would not get that if this motion were passed tonight.

The $4 million for construction of a wharf at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, would go down the drain, and the $14.7 million for the benefit of miners at Devco in Sydney. The hon. member of Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) should explain that. There is $2.5 million to help discharged inmates of federal penitentiaries who suffered physical disabilities, and $104.9 million for transportation subsidies to railroad companies. The Tories are always screaming about railroad subsidies. Seven provincial governments, the poor ones, would be denied $129 million in federal equalization payments.

There is the $2.5 million to British Columbia as compensation for floods in 1972. They are all in the supplementary estimates. Then there is the $3.5 million payment to Indians and Eskimos. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is always talking about Indians and Eskimos. And $10.2 million for northern development. There is the $14 million loan to Canadair Limited to preserve jobs in Montreal. Perhaps the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) should explain that. There is the $3.9 million payment to western wheat farmers for barley subsidy, and the $68 million for producers of wheat outside the designated areas. The Privy Council office would be denied $18.6 million to pay for the last election so that there could be a new election.

Mr. Speaker, we condemned the sale of Polymer last year, we condemned it yesterday, and we condemn it today.

An hon. Member: But you are going to vote for it tonight.

Mr. Rodriguez: These Tories are opposed to the investment of public funds to develop Canada's resources for the benefit of all Canadians. Like their Liberal counterparts, they are friends of the corporate elite and masters of the game of exploitation. As a matter of fact, Tories are experts in exploitation. They have one, Mr. Stephen Roman, owner of Denison Mines—this is what shakes my confidence that they can ever lead the country in terms of what we want—who in a speech to the Kiwanis Club in Toronto, at the Royal York hotel on January 13, 1971, said: "From time immemorial we have had exploiters and exploited." Mr. Speaker, this gentleman owns Denison Mines which paid no income tax between the years 1961 and 1970, despite profits of $63.5 million from 1965 to 1970.

In addition, Denison entered into an agreement with the federal government in December, 1970, by which the federal government agreed to subsidize the company to the tune of $29.5 million, three-quarters of the cost of stockpiling uranium concentrate. This man, who knows exploitation inside out, went on to say that: "exploiters were feudal lords, industrial barons or modern politicians." I guess he meant Tory politicians. He said: "In our capitalistic society the proper approach of capital to the end result will not lead to the exploitation of the human being." Who is he trying to kid with that?

An hon. Member: The voters.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, he was not successful. He went on to say: "Compulsory exploitation of the creative elements of our society by an element unwilling to work creates and produces no less than the nineteenth century exploitation of the poor by capital." He believed: "Every human being needs a certain amount of anxiety to stimulate creativity, and if we do away with anxiety we will produce a human being devoid of emotion and initiative." It is passing strange that the removal of such an anxiety by government subsidy to Denison did not rob Mr. Roman of his ambition. Why did the government not at least get equity for the subsidies the taxpayers gave to Denison? Where were the Tories then? But to get back to the CDC—

An hon. Member: How about Polymer? That's what the debate is about.

Mr. Rodriguez: Obviously, in spite of the power games that they play in this House of Commons, and I wish they could be televised so that the people of Canada could see what happens here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I wish the television cameras could see this performance.

An hon. Member: You would come out a real pinko.

Sale of Polymer

Mr. Rodriguez: It would really shock the public of this country to see how you Tories are shafting them. The Tories are opposed to public ownership in any form, as evidenced by the hon. member for York-Simcoe in his speech last Friday. Just who would be able to buy those shares of the CDC?

An hon. Member: You would never buy any.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would hope that collectively the people of Canada, their taxes, would buy them. The Economic Council of Canada, in a recent study published on March 23, 1973, stated as its main conclusion the following:

> Twenty per cent of family units at the lower end of the income scale received 4 per cent of total incomes, half of it in some form of government transfers. The richest 20 per cent of family units received 45 per cent of total incomes.

• (2140)

So, who will be able to buy the shares of CDC, Mr. Speaker? Who will benefit from their ownership? Certainly it will not be the people of Canada. If the Tories are really serious about Polymer remaining under public ownership, I challenge them to bring forward, at an appropriate time and place, a motion forbidding CDC shares to be put on the market. I do not mind these children wasting their own opposition day with hopeless games, but if they want my party to be an accessory to folly they are barking up the wrong tree. The only responsible way to deal with the motion before us tonight is to vote against it, and then let us get on with the business of providing benefits for the people of Canada.

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I do not have too much time so I will try to be as brief as possible. I am a new member in this House. I notice that this afternoon the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) accused every member in my part of the House of being juvenile. It is true that compared to him, in terms of length of service in this House, and age, I am a young member. I have not yet learned all the twisting and turning and tortuous jiggery-pokery that is necessary if one is to sell one's principles down the river in order to keep a sick government in power.

An hon. Member: You are not so innocent.

Mr. Reilly: I am, in the sense that I assume the people who elected me sent me here to oppose with all my strength, all my vigour and all my honour a government which has demonstrated palpably and painfully to the people of this country that it is unfit to govern. Since nothing that has happened since the election has convinced me that I should not do that, I shall keep on opposing the government. That is precisely what I intend to do. I shall vote against this government every time I get a chance to do so. It has had ten years, four under the current administration, to demonstrate that it cannot run this country. We now have the highest rate of unemployment in ten years, and have had it for the last two years. We have rapidly accelerating, relentless inflation. We have before us all the evidence that any reasonable man would need to assume that the country has had enough. The country cannot stand any more of these children and they should be turfed out of office as soon as possible.

Division

I do not think the people who elected me sent me to here to kiss the government on all four cheeks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: That is what my friends down the way seem intent on doing. And, of course, they are doing it regularly every day. Let me mention a few facts. As I listened to the speech of the hon. member for York South I was reminded of something Leacock once said, to the effect that the only statement worth making is an overstatement. A half truth, like a half brick, is a far better weapon for argument, except that the half brick carries an awful lot farther.

The NDP must accept a few facts. Fact number one is that the majority of members of this House are opposed to the sale in question. Fact number two is that last Friday the NDP leader condemned it in the most scathing terms—those are mild words. Fact number three is that they are afraid to vote against the motion, because if the government is defeated they will be wiped out—and they know it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I invite hon. members to permit the Chair to put the question. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 9 of Standing Order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1973, laid before the House March 6, 1973, except Finance vote 16b, Industry, Trade and Commerce vote 1b, Labour vote 25b, National Revenue vote 1b and Solicitor General vote 1b, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-166, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, be read the first time and printed.

Motion agreed to.

• (2240)

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-166, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The bill which has been placed before us and whose second reading has now been moved contains on page 13 of the schedule item 25(b), Information Canada, $19,000, which item I believe was deleted. It seems to me the bill ought to be amended by striking that out of the schedule.

Mr. MacEachen: It is struck out.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And by striking that amount out of the total.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised by the Clerk that the item has been removed in the copies which have been circulated. It is unfortunate that some may have been circulated without that correction. We shall make sure that only the corrected copies are circulated. Hon. members will appreciate that the officials had to move quickly to make the necessary corrections.

Mr. Baldwin: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is also the question of the totals. The totals are shown here, but I cannot tell whether they have been reduced by the appropriate amount. I submit, with deference, that this emphasizes the point I tried to raise a short while ago, that this government has been defeated on a supply bill—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Baldwin: Out!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am advised by the officials that the required changes have been made in the copies distributed, including the changes in totals.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière, on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, no one in our party has received copies of the amendments. To us this is important and calls for a point of order. In fact, it can be recalled that, on a similar occasion, as I was against the adoption of one vote, the Chair respectfully advise me that there could be no discussion of the subject matter of a bill at that time. Therefore, I would like to be given a copy of the amendments where there is no mention of the Information Canada item for $19,000. Otherwise, the possibility of discussing this bill will be established and we could therefore discuss it in the Committee of the Whole.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Chair as well as the House generally is faced with a problem tonight.

An hon. Member: Yes. It is you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know whose interjection that was. But I am sure Standing Orders require that when this House deals with any bill, the order on first reading is that it shall be printed. The bill which has been distributed contains on page 4 interlineations, probably by the House leader or his staff, which are written in pen and ink. They also appear on page four of the French version. These are not printed at all.

In addition, a translation has purportedly been made. I submit there was no time for this to be done by the official translators, so reliance on that interlineation would be somewhat harzardous. Again, on page 13 there are small black pen marks through the schedule.

I submit the rules call for bills to be printed. This is not printed; it is only partly printed. Of course, as well as that rule, Your Honour is faced with the problem that the Standing Orders require all questions to be put this night on the final estimates. Nevertheless, I submit it is not proper for the government to place before the House a bill which is not printed in accordance with the Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon has put the matter very clearly. The Chair is faced with the obligation, under the Standing Order, to put all questions and this is what the Chair is attempting to do. We all appreciate that in circumstances such as this a special difficulty arises. The order is that the bill be printed. Bills are always, in such circumstances, printed in advance. That is the long-established practice. Otherwise nobody would know when they would become available. Perhaps we would have to wait until five o'clock in the morning until they were returned from the Queen's Printer for submission to the House.

With the hope that time can be saved, knowing that these bills are always printed in advance for the convenience of hon. members, and although the hon. member has suggested that because there are changes we cannot say the bill has been printed, in view of the fact that changes have been made under the direction of the Clerk and his officials to reflect the vote of the House taken earlier this evening, I should think this is the only practical way to proceed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two remarks on this point of order, which I think go to the root of the problem. It seems to me a strange procedure that we get a bill which nobody could have had a chance to study or read, but we have to vote on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I think that is a weakness. My friends can laugh, but my sympathy is with Mr. Speaker in this regard. I think this is one situation which a special committee should consider. It is superfluous tonight to ask us to vote on a bill which nobody in this House has read. Therein lies the problem. To put it the way Dickens might, if a rule of this House permit this procedure, the rule is a ass.

Mr. Speaker: There are three members rising on the point of order. I will, of course, hear them because the matter is an important one. The point made by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), which he has made before and on which the Chair has reflected, would certainly indicate that it is always difficult, in respect of supply, when the House is presented with a bill which is ordered to be printed and circulated immediately with very little time for study by hon. members. At the same time, I think in all fairness it can be said that hon. members have in advance a pretty good idea of what it will contain.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is something I perhaps should have laid before the Chair when I spoke previously, but being involved with the rules I overlooked it. It seems to me that now the bill is before us, trying to reflect, as it does, in a very amateurish way the vote the House took on the Information Canada vote, this government in essence has been defeated on a supply item. Surely that brings the whole procedure in which we are now engaged into serious question. A defeat on a supply item surely represents an expression of non-confidence in the government. Under our system, this puts the matter squarely before the government, that is, the decision to resign; and that is precisely the case here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: This matter arose once before in precisely the same circumstances, Sir, when the government was defeated on a vote in February, 1968. The consequences which followed were not the most desirable in terms of setting precedents in this House. None the less, this is a supply vote and the government has been defeated. If it means nothing to put notices of opposition on the order paper, as we did, and if it means nothing to place those matters before the House, and if the vote means nothing—which apparently is the case—and we go along with the government sitting there after it has been defeated, why vote at all on the notices of opposition?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The government has been defeated on a supply vote and there is only one consequence, that being that the government resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2250)

Mr. Nielsen: With regard to the other point of order, the point of order first made, Sir, concerning the mishmash we have before us now in the form of this bill, it is the suggestion of our House leader that perhaps a recess while House leaders confer on the matter might be acceptable to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear opposition from the Liberal members. There does not appear to be concurrence in that suggestion. If that is the situation, then I represent most vigorously that the point of order I have raised with regard to the resignation of the government, and that this bill is not in front of us at the present time, must be dealt with at once.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I might comment upon the rather absurd proposition that has been put forward by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I think it is worth commenting on because it will appear in Hansard and anyone who is misguided enough to read the debate tonight will have some understanding, at least, of the context in which the suggestion of the hon. member for Yukon has been made.

The first point I want to make is that a very short time ago the House dealt with a formal motion of non-confidence moved by the hon. member for Yukon and—

Mr. Nielsen: Dealing with another matter.

Mr. MacEachen: —after a whole day's debate the House voted, as I recall it, with a very substantial majority to reject the motion of non-confidence moved by the hon. member for Yukon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: That was a formal motion of non-confidence. The hon. member for Yukon rises now and says that because a resolution that was put forward with regard to Information Canada in the amount of $19,000 has been defeated by the House, the government ought to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: That is the proposition. But bear in mind that the total of the supplementary estimates carried was in the amount of $434,835,000, less $19,000, and when Your Honour put that question and the yeas and nays were called, someone said, "On division". Who said, "Not on division; let us make the grant of the supplementaries in the amount of $434 million unanimous"? Who said, "Let us make it unanimous"? The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not the point at all.

Mr. MacEachen: I say to him, spare the House this absurdity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon, that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would have to make a ruling on this point. What the hon. member is proposing now is a motion. At first sight it would appear to go against the Standing Orders which say that the Chair is obliged to put all the questions. The hon. member, in the face of the Standing Order which is quite clear, proposes that the House adjourn. I am pleased to listen to direction from hon. members, but at first glance I would think the proposed motion clearly contravenes the Standing Orders.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the government House leader just now rose in his place to refute the argument of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The main argument that he offered in support of his position was that the House, immediately after the defeat of the government on the second vote which was taken on supply for Information Canada, moved to another motion which was passed by the House. Certainly the House leader is not suggesting that when a government is defeated it should depend for its support on the split second between the announcement of the vote and the decision of the Chair to call another motion.

If this is the argument that has been presented by the government House leader, then I question it; and without reflecting on the Chair, I suggest it is certainly not within the competence of the Chair to decide whether or not a defeat has been sustained. The announcement was made of the defeat of the government on a vote of 137, I believe, to 107. The Chair immediately called another motion, and I seriously question whether the Chair had the right to do so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: Just a second. On that basis, so far as we are concerned the proceedings of the House were terminated as of that moment and I say, Your Honour, that since 10.25 p.m., or for the last 35 minutes, this House had been sitting illegally.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: And the suggestion is that the House adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: We can go on for a long time on points of order. The Chair, of course, heard the suggestion made by the hon. member that the business of the House cannot be continued because the government has been defeated on a vote. I did not think there should even be a debate on this, because it cannot be a point of order; it is a question of constitutional law. Certainly the Chair has enough trouble ruling on points of order without having to rule on constitutional law.

This question is not only on the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon, and I recognize its importance, but I have no intention of deciding whether the government should sit or not sit, by virtue of our constitution, in answer to a point of order. This is why I thought that if hon. members want to fight this out, they cannot fight it through Mr. Speaker. I have no intention of ruling on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As to the point of order, I have to bring to the attention of hon. members Standing Order 6 (4) which is clearly on the point and which confirms the suggestion I put to hon. members a moment ago. It reads:

> When it is provided in any standing or special order of this House that any business specified by such order shall be continued, forthwith disposed of, or concluded in any sitting, the House shall not be adjourned before such proceedings have been completed except pursuant to a motion to adjourn proposed by a minister of the crown.

The Standing Order is very clear. I did not write the Standing Orders; I have nothing to do with writing them. I think in the circumstances I am under instructions given to the Chair by the House, that is, to put the motions and it is up to hon. members to vote against them if they so wish.

• (2300)

Mr. Drury, seconded by Mr. MacEachen, moved that Bill C-166, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1973, be now read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Supply

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 54, I now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the whole on the said bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

On Clause 2.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2, as corrected, carry?

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, all I can say to you with great respect is that the bill before me does not contain any corrections whatsoever.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is up to the Chair to have to tell members of the committee of the whole what the correct meaning is. Since the government has taken the initiative to amend clause 2, I think that it should do it in a formal way. I think that the information should come not from you Sir, but from the government House leader, so that all hon. members will know exactly what we are voting on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it is quite incorrect to say that this bill should be amended. The bill comes before us as a result of earlier votes, altered from the way in which it was printed. So what is before us now is clause 2 with a figure reduced by $19,000. To move an amendment now would be quite out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry that my choice of words—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Yukon has already made his contribution on this particular point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, and with all due respect to the Chair, I think it is incumbent on the Chair to hear members when they rise to make suggestions. I apologize to the House for using the term amendment, but surely the government House leader should tell all hon. members what words are going to be substituted for what words, because some members have blank bills before them, and goodness knows what writing appears on other bills. Surely it is incumbent on the government House leader to tell us what words and what numerals are going to be replaced with what words and what numerals.

The Chairman: Clause 2 is as follows: First, as a side note, there is: $312,877,231 granted for 1972-73. The clause reads:

> 2. From and out of the consolidated revenue fund, there may be paid and applied a sum not exceeding in the whole three hundred and twelve million, eight hundred and seventy-seven thousand, two hundred thirty-one dollars towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the public service from the first day of April, 1972, to the thirty-first day of March, 1973, not otherwise provided for, and being the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1973 (less item 16b of the Department of Finance and item 25b of the Department of Labour which have been withdrawn), as contained in the schedule to this act, $312,877,231.

Shall the clause carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Dealing with the schedule, I understand that there are changes on various pages. We will proceed first to page 4, the first paragraph, which reads:

Based on the Supplementary Estimates (B), 1972-73. The amount hereby granted is $312,877,231 being the total of the amounts of the items in the said estimates (less item 16b of the Department of Finance and item 25b of the Department of Labour which have been withdrawn) as contained in this schedule.

The rest of the schedule on page 4 is unchanged. Shall the schedule as contained on page 4, as corrected, carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule as set forth on pages 5 to 12 inclusive carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: In the schedule as set forth on page 13 some words have been striken from the top of the page, the words "Labour" and "D Information Canada" and the line immediately after "Information Canada", thus deleting the first item at the top of page 13 of the schedule. Shall page 13 of the schedule, with these corrections, carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule as set forth on pages 14 to 21 inclusive carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: On page 22 of the schedule the total on the right-hand side is reduced to $312,877,231. Shall page 22 of the schedule carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule, as corrected, carry?

Schedule agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: Clause No. 1 has a change therein. It now reads:

This act may be cited as the Appropriation Act No. 2, 1973.

Shall clause 1, as read, carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

• (2310)

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[The Chairman.]

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That this House do concur in interim supply, as follows:

That a sum not exceeding $2,722,427,083.92 being the aggregate of—

(a) Three-twelfths of the total of all the Items set forth in the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, laid before the House of Commons on February 20, 1973, $2,526,603,492.25.

(b) An additional seven-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 20 and Transport item L95 (Schedule A) of the said estimates, $17,319,750.00.

(c) An additional five-twelfths of the total amount of Treasury Board item 10 (Schedule B) of the said estimates, $22,692,916.67.

(d) An additional four-twelfths of the total amount of Urban Affairs item 10 (Schedule C) of the said estimates, $25,675,000.00.

(e) An additional three-twelfths of the total amount of Energy, Mines and Resources item 30, Manpower and Immigration item 10, Regional Economic Expansion items 35 and 40, and Transport items 35 and 45 (Schedule D) of the said estimates, $92,333,500.00.

(f) An additional two-twelfths of the total amount of Finance item 5, Transport item 55 and Treasury Board item 5 (Schedule E) of the said estimates, $25,524,000.00.

(g) An additional one-twelfth of the total amount of Indian Affairs and Northern Development item 70, National Health and Welfare item 60, Supply and Services items 1 and 5, and Veterans Affairs item 50 (Schedule F) of the said estimates, $12,278,425.00.

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill No. C-167, for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, be read the first time and printed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I ask the government House leader for the assurance that the bill is in its usual form, and that all rights of members of this House with respect to any of the items listed in the bill are reserved for further consideration.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point of order, I can assure the House that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when they come up for consideration in committee. The undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved that Bill C-167, for granting Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. There is the usual government omission here. It may well be that in the bill Your Honour has called, the number of the act may be set out. However, in the bill given to the Leader of the Opposition and myself on behalf of our party, there is no number. Obviously there will have to be an amendment, because the Chair has received the bill in its present form. If necessary, I imagine the committee will be prepared to give unanimous consent to allowing the government to remedy its error and put in the number of the act.

The Chairman: Order, please. With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River, does the committee give unanimous consent, as the hon. member suggests, to this act being cited as the Appropriation Act No. 3, 1973?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 11:20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONTINUATION OF CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION FOR FURTHER 60 DAYS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been a particular source of gratification to the government that the attitude Canada has adopted toward participation in the International Commission of Control and Supervision in Viet Nam has consistently enjoyed such a wide measure of public support. Our attitude toward a long term commitment and the conditions that we have attached to our service appear to be understood and accepted within this country and indeed to some extent outside it. This has been especially encouraging since the problem of our original participation and now the decision on whether or not to continue has within it the elements of a dilemma. The government was and still is highly conscious of the fact that there is no course of action it can choose which will meet all the demands being made upon us or command universal approval outside of this country. I venture to hope that the government's decision will, however, receive wide approval of this House and of the country and will not be considered unreasonable abroad.

Stated at its starkest, the dilemma lies in the desire of all Canadians to serve the cause of peace in Indo-China as long as, in the words of one hon. member, there is the slightest hope of a peaceful solution to the Viet Nam problem. On the other hand, the government is equally resolved that Canadians should not take part in a charade in which they will be required to supervise not a cease-fire but continuing and possibly escalating hostilities. From the purely Canadian point of view it is important that both aspects of the problem be squarely faced. Canada's reputation is closely associated with our contribution to international efforts to make peacekeeping a reality. Confidence in the feasibility of "peacekeeping" anywhere can only be maintained if activities bearing that description are not only effective but are seen to be effective by world opinion.

During the latter stages of the negotiation of the Paris agreements on Viet Nam, the government therefore informed the negotiating parties that it reserved its position on whether or not Canada would participate as a member in the ICCS until it had seen and studied the agreed arrangements to see if, in the light of our experience, the arrangements were workable. At the same time we presented to the negotiators a set of conditions which, if met, would have in our view made the peacekeeping arrangements for Viet Nam practical and credible. Also at the same time, we offered through the United States government some detailed proposals regarding the organization and practical arrangements of truce supervising in Viet Nam, based on the conclusions drawn from 19 years, experience in Indo-China.

I will not stretch the patience of the House by repeating our conditions which were given in full detail in my speech of January 5. I think it is fair to say that some of our points were accepted and incorporated in the documents that emerged. Nevertheless, when we saw the results of the negotiations as they were signed in Paris it also became clear that, in spite of the best efforts of the negotiators, the truce supervising arrangements left much to be desired. Moreover, one of our most important considerations, the establishment of a continuing political authority to which the ICCS and its members could report, was left for further consideration by an international conference to be held in Paris 30 days after the signature. As the House is already aware, I led the Canadian delegation to Paris at the end of February with proposals that would have given the ICCS the reporting authority which we considered necessary to its success.

• (1410)

In the meantime we had concluded that the other truce supervisory arrangements as laid down in the agreement left some doubt as to whether the Canadian criteria could be met. As I have said before on all possible occasions, this is no criticism of the agreements or of those who negotiated them. It is undoubtedly the best agreement that could have been negotiated in the circumstances and the results have, in spite of all, turned the course of world events in a new and more hopeful direction. Our reservations, therefore, are based simply on a Canadian appreciation that the task as outlined was not one well suited to Canadian methods and the Canadian temperament. In the final analysis we recognized, however, that what mattered most was the element of good faith on the part of all concerned and this could only be judged by trying to make the machinery work. It was for this purpose that we agreed to serve for an initial period of 60 days, to which an additional 30-day grace period was added to enable the parties to find a substitute in the event that we decided not to continue. That 60-day period ends on Thursday.

After returning from Paris I concluded that it would not be possible to reach a well-founded decision without having seen for myself the conditions in which the ICCS, and particularly our delegation, was operating, or having spoken directly with the leaders of the governments most directly concerned. I have had, as the House knows, several contacts with the U.S. Secretary of State on this subject and I was well aware of the views of his government. I wanted to have the views of others as well.

Accordingly, on March 13 a group of representative Canadians, although not unfortunately entirely representative of this House, left for a trip that was to put me in touch with both Vietnamese governments, the government of Laos, as well as some leading personalities in the so-called provisional revolutionary government of South Viet Nam and of the Pathet Lao movement. It was a very intense indoctrination into the facts of life in the ICCS and the attitudes and policies of the governments most directly concerned. I think all those who went came back with at least one impression in common: that is, that the ICCS was not performing the tasks assigned to it under the cease-fire agreement. I am also quite confident that most of my travelling companions would agree that this was in spite of the best efforts of the Canadian delegation to make it work. We have heard it from a sufficiently wide variety of sources to accept it as a matter of fact that had it not been for the energy and ingenuity of the Canadian delegation, even the setting up of the various bodies required by the agreement would not have taken place as soon as it did.

Although our visit left most of us with misgivings on the operation and success of the ICCS in carrying out its assigned tasks, we also had brought home to us that in some quarters this was seen as of very little consequence. We have been well aware for some time that not everybody shares Canada's concept of truce observation and supervision. There are other points of view with which we do not quarrel. We were also well aware that some of the interested parties at least, and many other countries such as Britain and Japan, were of the view that Canada should continue to serve on the ICCS regardless of whether it measured up to our standards. In all honesty, Mr. Speaker, I must say frankly that very few countries believed, in spite of our efforts to make our position known, that there was a real possibility that Canada would opt out of the ICCS.

My trip to Viet Nam has, I am sure, convinced some that we were indeed prepared to take this step if in our judgment the whole arrangement was unworkable and was not serving the cause of peace in Viet Nam. This had at least one salutary result in that we began to hear less about everything being lovely in Viet Nam and that the ICCS had the potential of becoming a really vital force in keeping the peace in Indo-China. Instead, we began to hear somewhat more convincing arguments that there was a totally different but equally vital role that bore no relation to our previous experience and is nowhere hinted at in the text of the agreement and protocols. Roughly stated, this is to provide an international presence as an indication of the continued involvement of the world community in the Viet Nam situation. Although the ICCS may not be necessary for the purposes of carrying out the agreement, its absence would be taken as an indication that the agreement lacked world support and consequently our withdrawal could become a further destabilizing psychological factor in a situation already very unstable.

There are two things I should like to say about this so-called psychological role. The first is that I am not convinced that the ICCS does play such a part in the thinking of the Vietnamese. The second is that I do not believe that Canada and Canadians can be expected over any protracted period to play this part. So far as the North Vietnamese are concerned, I formed a clear impression that they regard the texts of the agreement and protocols as untouchable. They undoubtedly have their own interpretation of precisely what each article means and this interpretation adds up to either a peacefully reunified Viet Nam or one whose reunification by force would be justified on the grounds that the other parties had not "scrupulously adhered to the agreement". Needless to say, some of the other parties do not share this point of view.

To the government of the Republic of Viet Nam the agreements are seen as an opportunity to remove the North Vietnamese, if not from their territory, at least from the negotiating tables, and to give to them an opportunity to deal with their fellow South Vietnamese of the PRG direct and across the table without intervention from the north. The government in South Viet Nam believes that in a relatively short period of time it will know whether this possibility holds any prospect of leading to a negotiated settlement in South Viet Nam. It remains to be seen if this is a realistic aspiration.

It is no part of the responsibility of Canada as a member of the ICCS to judge the relative merits of these two positions. But it is now clear as it was not two months ago that all the Vietnamese parties will need a little time to demonstrate the feasibility of their solutions; not to bring them about, just to demonstrate feasibility. Once confidence has been established and if there has been some movement toward a political solution on either side's terms, the peace will no longer be as fragile as it is and the mere presence of an international commission will no longer be regarded as a vital part of the picture or as necessary to contribute to a solution. On the other hand, if neither side's view of a political solution is making any headway, we can look forward to a resumption of full scale hostilities regardless of the presence of any observer or supervisory body.

It is out of consideration for this new element and for the possibly far-reaching consequences of opting out now for which we would have to accept some responsibility that the government has decided not to exercise its option to withdraw after 60 days, even though it could justify doing so on the basis of the reasonable application of its announced criteria. On the other hand, our experience, both past and present, does not justify moving into acceptance of open-ended or unconditional participation. Consequently, the government proposes to inform the parties to the agreement that Canada would be prepared to continue to serve on the same basis as it does now for a further period of about 60 days, that is, until May 31—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: —after which, unless there has been some substantial improvement or distinct progress has been made toward a political settlement, it will withdraw, giving a further 30-day grace period for the parties to find a successor. This means that Canada, unless there is a substantial improvement in the situation or some signs of an imminent political agreement, will cease to participate in the ICCS by June 30, 1973. All the parties will by then have had adequate time to carry out those provisions which the ICCS was created to supervise, perhaps even the holding of elections on which I will have something to say later. If the South Vietnamese parties now meeting in Paris are able to reach an early accord on internal matters as envisaged and encouraged in the Paris agreement of January 27 our decision will present no obstacle.

One important aspect of the agreement assigns a task to the ICCS, not in the field of truce observing but in contributing to the political settlement which alone can bring about the end of the war. The agreement calls for an election to form a new national government. The ICCS protocol assigns an undefined observer role to the ICCS. The meetings now going on between the two South Vietnamese parties are intended to produce the conditions under which the election should be held. This electoral function is distinct and separate from the other functions assigned to the ICCS and the rules have yet to be elaborated. It could therefore be dealt with separately. So far as Canada is concerned, regardless of our status in respect of other aspects of the agreement, we would remain ready and available to serve, as the parties may wish, in helping to supervise an election provided it was called under the provisions of the agreement. It would not apply to an election called in other circumstances.

Canada will also inform the four parties to the Paris agreement that as Canada neither negotiated nor signed the Paris agreement we do not regard ourselves as bound by its provisions beyond the extent to which those who did sign it consider themselves bound. This was in fact one of our earliest conditions of service. Consequently, we will leave or otherwise regulate our deployment at any time if the parties who signed the agreement show, by their actions, that they no longer regard themselves bound by it. The resumption of large scale hostilities or any action tantamount to a direct denial by the parties of their obligations under the agreement would, in the government's view, relieve Canada of further responsibility to the ICCS. Should this decision be forced upon us, the government will state its reasons for withdrawal publicly.

I am not predicting that the arduous and skilful work involved in reaching this agreement will be nullified by an early escalation of hostilities. Nevertheless, there is a great deal of evidence that the means to resume the war are readily available and there is, unfortunately, also reason to think that this possibility is not excluded from the calculations of some at least of the parties concerned. We shall reassess the situation again before the end of May and give our definitive view at that time.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should state that in the time remaining to us in the commission we will continue to maintain the objective and open approach we have taken until now and endeavour to see that the ICCS fulfils not only the psychological part that has been superimposed on it but also the duties as laid down in the agreements. We will not take part in a charade nor will we tacitly condone inaction when we believe action is required.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, we understand and share the qualms with which the government must have made this decision. This problem is tormenting the hearts of all Canadians, I say this quite objectively; I am aware of the difficulties that the cabinet members have had to consider.

When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) returned home, it was clear to us that what he had seen of the situation over there had him bewildered and perhaps—if it is not too strong a word—pessimistic. We could see immediately that Canada was on the horns of a rather cruel dilemma. On the one hand, the effectiveness of the ICCS and the safety of our observers were at stake. On the other hand, various countries were pressing for us to accept a role that we had, in fact, already agreed to play. So the Secretary of State for External Affairs had the choice of leaving our force over there and working towards peace in that way, or else leaving Viet Nam and refusing to be associated with what seemed to be the illusion of keeping the peace. The hon. minister has chosen to set back the time limit by 60 days. In doing so, he has conceded priority to the higher interests of peace, and is thus displaying his hope that time will heal all.

[English]

Quite apart from the merits of the decision just announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs there remains the issue of why the minister and the government would not and could not consult parliament on this matter. The minister may have assumed that parliament would not have extended the force's mandate at all. It is that type of assumption that continues the tradition of this government in the area of underestimating the compassion and understanding that other parties in this chamber have for Canada's international role.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: For the record, Mr. Speaker, my party continues to protest the way in which this decision was made. Moreover, we pledge to continue to raise those questions both here and in committee to which Canadians who have concerns about this decision have the right to answers. That is our responsibility to the people of Canada. That is our responsibility to those who are serving Canada in Viet Nam.

It is no doubt probable that our options as a nation became more and more limited as every day of our stay in Viet Nam passed. In the debate on the original motion presented by the minister, we raised the futility of considering a withdrawal after 60 days in terms of the effect that withdrawal would have on the over-all arrangement in Viet Nam. Nevertheless, the fact that the final decision has been put off for another 60 days in no way limits the gravity of that decision.

The minister assured us on his return, and he repeated the statement this afternoon, of the degree to which other nations in the world wanted us to remain. I say to him now that this recommitment for 60 days must be accompanied by fresh diplomatic initiatives to gain acceptance of our conditions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: The cautious view of success advanced by the minister indicates the degree to which these initiatives are important. If hostilities increase, there is the issue of the safety of our troops. My party expects the minister to be in daily contact with the field and to have proper contingency plans ready for evacuation, if necessary. We will press for daily assurances, if necessary. These are assurances that all Canadians have a right to receive.

We in this party share the minister's commitment to Canada's role in aiding the achievement of peace in Indo-China. We would have been stricter in the championing of our conditions and less eager to ignore their being watered down. Nevertheless, the goal in Indo-China is something about which the minister and myself have little quarrel.

There are those in this chamber who would call for immediate notification of "a pull-out" now and thereby leave nothing but despair as our legacy in Indo-China. I am proud that my colleagues and I do not share that view.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to devote my time to the last few sentences of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) but my purpose is to reply to the minister's statement.

The minister's final sentence is one which I think everyone in the House can endorse. I think it is worth restating. The minister said: "We will not take part in a charade nor will we passively condone inaction when we believe action is required." That is a position this party can endorse. But I want to express my doubt that the decision made by the government with respect to what Canada should now do is the best possible means of ensuring that this admirable goal is met.

The New Democratic Party endorsed Canada's decision to become a part of the International Commission of Control and Supervision. We did so because all four parties had asked us to participate in that commission and because we thought it important not to do anything at that time which could cause further delays in bringing about a prospective peace in Viet Nam, nothing which could introduce further delays in permitting the Americans to withdraw from a war in which they should never have been involved in the first place.

We also endorsed at that time the government's decision to participate provisionally on a 60-day basis, because we had some severe reservations about the conditions under which the commission would have to operate, reservations about the efficacy of the commission under those conditions, and we agreed that a review should take place at the end of 60 days and then a decision made. What worries me at the moment is that we have had that review and we still in some sense have not made a decision.

It rapidly became apparent to those of us who went to Viet Nam with the minister that, beyond the fact that the initial conditions which he set out, the two key ones, had not been met, that of an international authority to which the commission could report and that the commission should have freedom of access to all parts of South Viet Nam for the purpose of carrying out its investigations, the prospects for the ICCS effectively carrying out its duties remain minimal for some additional reasons, one of which is the make-up of that commission. Canada on one side and Poland and Hungary on the other have very different conceptions of what the commission should be doing and the very difference in those conceptions makes it difficult for the commission to work. Beyond that, none of us who were in Viet Nam, I think it is fair to say, saw any great inclination on the part of any of the former belligerents, and I put the word "former" in quotation marks, to adhere to either the letter or the spirit of the Paris agreement. It was reported to us that since the so-called peace there had been some 14,000 violations of that peace, 7,000 of which had been reported and only 35 of which had been officially presented to the ICCS for investigation. At the time we were there it was only 26, now it is 35.

It became apparent to us during our visit to Viet Nam that the only reason the ICCS was effective even to that minimal extent was the vigorous action taken by the Canadian contingent there, action of the sort which had been referred to by the Department of External Affairs in a wry sort of way as their open-mouth policy, but action of a sort which the minister and other expert witnesses before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence have indicated can only be effective for a very, very brief period of time. On top of this evidence we have heard recently very pessimistic statements from our ambassador in Viet Nam, Mr. Gauvin. In addition, we have seen fresh reports of continued fighting and evidence that the situation may further degenerate and that fighting may accelerate.

Given all these facts, my party decided, and I think it is worth while to state it for the record, that on March 28 Canada should give the 90 days notice provided for in the agreement and make it clear that we are leaving at the end of that 90 days whether or not a replacement is found, whether or not the ICCS is functioning as designed and whether or not there is peace. There should always be the reservation that if the situation dissolves into chaos we shall have the right to remove our people from danger. In so doing we should indicate that we intend to continue, even intensify, for the entire remaining period of our stay our current techniques of operation which the Department of External Affairs refers to as the open-mouth policy. Much greater attention should be devoted to the fate of political prisoners in the remaining period. This solution has the advantage of ensuring that we have done everything possible tactically, technically, administratively and logistically to ensure that the ICCS is capable of operating as designed if by some chance it should be permitted to do so. Moreover, we will have removed ourselves before our abrasive tactics have become ineffective, thus permitting another nation to take up the cudgels. And by making our commitment to withdraw definite we will ensure that the four parties to the Paris agreement will look for someone to take our place, and find someone. In addition, if by some miracle peace is attained, the ICCS will in 90 days have carried out its major and most urgent functions under the terms of the agreement and it would then be a fairly simple matter for another country to move in and carry out the relatively routine duties remaining. Further, that timespan would permit the possibility of finding a replacement, allowing it to brief itself on the situation and to establish the support functions necessary for it to participate effectively.

If, on the other hand, as is more likely, peace is not established, we will be able to leave having made an all-out effort to continue to contribute to peace. We will have done everything possible, everything reasonable in an untenable situation to ensure that it was not our action which contributed to a lack of peace through the collapse of the ICCS. If at that point the ICCS should cease to be able to operate it would not make a lot of difference because at that point there would be no peace to supervise.

Mr. Speaker, I am highly conscious of the difficulties that confronted the government in making its decision and I am highly conscious of the pressures and the multitude of factors it had to take into consideration in making it. The government's position is to stay for a further 60 days, then to review the situation again, and if there is no improvement they will be out in another 30 days. That will bring them to the end of June, which is substantially the same position as our party has taken in terms of time span except that we say we should be out at that point without reservation and let another country take up the task.

The first point I want to make with respect to the minister's final position, that of 60 more days and then a review and then out in 30 if there is no improvement, is this: the minister said that unless there has been some substantial improvement or unless distinct progress has been made toward a political settlement we will withdraw. I want to know what the minister considers substantial improvement to be. What constitutes a substantial improvement and what, in the minister's opinion, constitutes definite progress toward a political settlement? We have twice set conditions in making our commitment to participate in the commission, in making our commitment to stay for 60 days, and now we are making a third set of conditions. At what point do we cease to be believable? What makes the minister think that the four former belligerents will take any more notice of our conditions this time than they did on the last two occasions? What makes the minister believe that those former belligerents, seeing his statement today, will not say, well, perhaps at the end of 60 days a little further arm twisting might persuade Canada to stay on again? These are very relevant considerations.

There is one final point to make. The minister said the resumption of large-scale hostilities or any action tantamount to a direct denial by the parties of their obligations under the agreement would, in the government's view, release Canada from further responsibility to the ICCS. That is a proper position to take, but I want to know whether in the minister's opinion a resumption of bombing by the United States would constitute such a denial by one of the parties of their obligation under the agreement. I believe it should be considered to be such denial by the government in its further actions.

I have one final point. Whatever we decide to do—whether the government successfully persuades the House that this is the position that Canada should take or we ultimately come to the conclusion that we should make a definite commitment to get out of Viet Nam in 90 days—the remaining time in Viet Nam should see Canada devoting much greater attention to, and involving ourselves much more directly in, the problem of political prisoners in that country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rowland: There is no possibility of peace in Viet Nam so long as many of the people who wish to be peacemakers are in prison. That should be a consideration that the government cannot put aside.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks about the statement made to day by the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), I would like to say that the text reached us only in English.

I want to remind the minister, as well as all his colleagues, that these statements must be published in both official languages so that all members can become acquainted with the message delivered by the minister.

If the government intends to continue distributing the text of ministers' statements only in English, it should at least see to it that the message of apology attached to it be in French. We could then find a little good will in the attitude of ministers who too often distribute the text of their statements in only one language.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, despite the lack of a French text, I was able to become acquainted with the minister's statement.

Mr. Speaker, we have already stated the position of our party as regards the maintenance of the Canadian delegation within the ICCS in Viet Nam. We believe that as long as all Vietnamese wish that we remain, we are duty bound to remain as long as there is the slightest hope of an improvement of the situation in Viet Nam.

As a matter of fact, for the past 60 days, the Canadian delegation did not feel it was playing a worthwhile role.

Is is also true that thousands of cease-fire violations have occurred.

Mr. Speaker, people would have to be very naive to believe that a conflict which has been lasting for over 30 years is going to end overnight. Despite the good will of those involved, a spirit of vengence and rivalry remain. Therefore, we have to be patient.

We agree with the government's intentions. We would have preferred a 90-day instead of a 60-day period because we know it is a matter of time and patience before this war is ended. However, if in addition to the 60 days suggested by the government we include the 30 days of grace to allow the ICCS to find a new member, the extension announced by the government corresponds to the one we have proposed.

The Canadian presence in Viet Nam, despite the difficulties and frustrations which result from such a situation, shows the whole world that Canada is not a Pontius Pilate and does not wash its hands of the hardships and conflicts of this world.

Canada shows all the Vietnamese people that it does not hesitate to spend its time and energy to promote world peace.

The Canadian delegation in Viet Nam contributes to the hopes for peace which persist in this region despite a long and cruel war and that is why our delegation must remain there.

However, we believe that if the life of our delegates is threatened by a sudden increase in the cease-fire violations, the government should take the necessary steps to ensure the security of our delegation in Viet Nam.

Such is the position of our party, Mr. Speaker.

COMMUNICATIONS

TELECOMMUNICATION RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask for unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to approve massive increases in rates for private wire, telex and broadband exchange services. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas):

That in the opinion of this House the Canadian Transport Commission be instructed to withdraw its decision today approving increased telecommunications rates and that the government outline specific price guidelines for those areas under direct federal authority.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED ABOLITION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and urgent matter.

As a result of the sustained criticism against the CBC and the fact that this body no longer seems to meet the needs of Canadians generally, and that the members of Parliament exercise no control over its administration, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this Parliament order the closing down of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and its replacement by a body responsible to Parliament whose interests will be suitable to the rights, privileges and wishes of the Canadian people as a whole.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

FINANCE

FREEZING OF BANK INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of this House to move an urgent motion.

In view of the exclusive privileges granted to the chartered banks which, for all practical purposes, control our economy, and their recently expressed intention to raise their interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That this House freeze the present rates of interest of the chartered banks for a minimum period of two years with a possibility of decreasing them and that it demand the gradual increase in the reserve rate of these banks up to 100 per cent and that the privilege of creating our national credit be from now on exclusively reserved to the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of this House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not and the motion cannot therefore be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—CONTINUED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF CONTROL AND SUPERVISION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would clarify a matter for me. Am I correct in understanding that the decision to stay on in Viet Nam for a further period of time is not based on any belief that the original purpose of supervising the truce can be carried out but is rather due to the importance of providing an international presence as an indication of the continued involvement of the world community in Viet Nam, the lack of which would hinder the achievement of a political settlement? Further, will the test concerning whether consideration will be given to our staying on beyond the original 60-day period be answered entirely in terms of the progress toward a political settlement rather than any judgment in terms of supervising the truce?

• (1450)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I think that would be a one-sided interpretation of the situation. We are there in order to help in supervising the truce. That is why we were asked to take part. It has been urged upon us, however, that there are other values to be taken into account. That is the reason we have given only a 60-day extension and not an indefinite extension.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the opinion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the ICCS has a reasonable potential of becoming a really vital force in keeping the peace in Indo-China?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I have said before in the House, the only parties that can keep the peace are the parties to the peace agreement. What the ICCS can do may be to help, if asked to do so, by observing and reporting. However, we have not been given very much freedom of action to perform that function.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I hoped I had understood the statement upon reading it but I must say I do not understand it now. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can reconcile for me what appears to be a contradiction. On one page he says that Canada will continue to serve on the same basis as it does now but not beyond May 31 unless there has been some substantial improvement or distinct progress has been made toward a political settlement. On the previous page the minister said that once confidence has been established and if there has been some movement toward a political solution on either side's terms, the mere presence of an international commission will no longer be regarded as a vital part of the picture. As I understand the minister, on the first page he is saying—

An hon. Member: Will you repeat that?

An hon. Member: You are reading too fast.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sorry if I read it too fast. I understand the minister is saying in one place that an international presence will no longer be necessary if there is some movement toward a political solution on either side's terms, while later he seems to be saying that we will stay on if there is some substantial improvement.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the statement is drawn in very careful terms as I think such a statement should be because it will be read in all parts of the world as an indication of Canada's attitude on this question. We have said, and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would agree, that if there is some evidence of movement toward a political settlement we should stay but if it gets to the point where a political settlement is achieved obviously there is no need for the ICCS.

VIET NAM—DECISION TO CONTINUE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION—REQUEST THAT RESOLUTION BE PLACED BEFORE HOUSE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether it is his intention to place a motion before the House of Commons regarding the decisions made by the government for participation in Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the House leader and he would be quite willing to discuss with the other leaders in the House the idea, for example, of having an adjournment motion on which our decision could be debated.

Mr. Lewis: I do not quite understand. May I ask the minister whether what he is suggesting to the House is that there would be some general adjournment motion but that he is not prepared to place before the House a resolution containing the precise decision the government has made?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I had been talking to the House leader and he thought that perhaps the best way to have a debate, which is what I had promised, would be to have a motion to adjourn the House to discuss this decision. I think this would be suitable, but if the opposition has some other way by which we could bring the matter to debate we would be glad to consider it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, whether or not there should be another method depends on whether or not the minister is prepared to place the decision before this House of Commons for a vote, or is it his suggestion that we would merely have a debate of some hours and that is all?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the difficulty, as has been said by the spokesman for the official opposition and to some extent by the spokesman for the NDP, is that this is just a tentative decision and not a final decision. It seems to me it would be more appropriate to discuss the present situation on an adjournment motion and when we come to making a final decision to present the kind of resolution the leader of the NDP has suggested.

VIET NAM—ARRANGEMENTS TO ASSURE SAFETY OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL ON SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple question I should like to ask in order to allay the fears of Canadians concerning the safety of the members of the Canadian contingent. In the event of a widespread outbreak of hostilities and even open war, what arrangements are being made concerning the Canadians who are there? Will our contingent then be withdrawn immediately irrespective of whether this is before the 31st of May or the end of June?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to that question is yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my statement, if there were large-scale hostilities the Canadian delegation would be withdrawn immediately. My hon. friend, the Minister of National Defence, can deal with the question of the arrangements that have been made for that contingency.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I would direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. Will he let the Canadian people know whether the Canadian forces will be withdrawn immediately for they certainly stand in dreadful peril having regard to the number of incidents that have already taken place and which are apparently expanding in intensity, and to the number of tanks that North Viet Nam has run into South Viet Nam as well as large contingents of men?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the right hon. member and the House that the safety of our personnel has been of the greatest concern to us from the beginning of this operation. Through headquarters we are in daily contact with our commander in South Viet Nam. We have very clearly defined plans for evacuation either by air or, if necessary, by sea. I can assure the House that the safety of our personnel is uppermost in our minds.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a further question, Mr. Speaker. When such a serious incident takes place and Canadians find themselves under attack, will that end the operation of the ICCS? Will it end right there rather than continue until May 31 or the end of June?

• (1500)

Mr. Richardson: I think I would have to say that that is in some degree hypothetical, because it would depend on the degree of hostilities. If there is open warfare, we have all made it very clear and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made it very clear that we would withdraw our personnel. But if there is an isolated incident of some kind or other, we would have to make a judgment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In which Canadians are wounded?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Portneuf and then return for supplementary questions to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and other hon. members who have supplementaries on this subject.

Right now the hon. member for Portneuf is invited to ask his question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—AUTHORITY OF CANADIAN COMMANDER TO WITHDRAW SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL IN EVENT OF HOSTILITIES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask him whether authority has been given to our commander in South Viet Nam to launch any withdrawal movement in the event of hostilities?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): As I said, Mr. Speaker, we are in daily contact. I think our commander would report to the chief of staff and to me before taking that action.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I should like clarification of the minister's answer. In the event of an emergency, does the commander in South Viet Nam have the authority to launch the contingency plan for withdrawal?

Mr. Richardson: In the event that he could not make contact with the chief of staff he would have that authority.

VIET NAM—REQUEST THAT HOUSE HAVE OPPORTUNITY TO DECIDE ON CONTINUATION OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL ON SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that members in all parts of the House have not asked merely for a debate but that parliament should have the power to make the decision about Canadian forces being sent to Viet Nam and the length of time they will remain there, may I ask him if he is prepared now to give the House the opportunity to make that decision in the form of a definitive motion so that the House will have the right, which I think it ought to have, to decide how long Canadian forces will be kept in Viet Nam?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said in reply to the question from the hon. member for York South, this is just a tentative decision. We have not really made a final decision on this question, and it seemed to me that at the time a final decision is made the House should then be faced with a resolution requiring the approval of the House. But this is a tentative decision, and I am quite prepared to say I will introduce a resolution before May 31 for the purpose of getting the approval of the House for the government's action.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Besides the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, there are three other hon. members seeking supplementary questions. We will have to try to go to other subjects and return to these supplementary questions in due course. I do not think hon. members would want to spend the full question period on the one subject, which would make it more a debate than a series of questions and answers. For the moment, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will be recognized for one supplementary question, and in due course we will return to the hon. member for Egmont and others who have supplementary questions.

Mr. Douglas: Despite the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs says that this is a tentative decision, the fact is that this is a decision to commit Canadian forces for 90 more days in Viet Nam. Surely, parliament ought to have the right to make that decision, and I am asking the minister—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government does not trust parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question. He is now making an argument, and I suggest that if we get involved in this there will be debate rather than questions and answers.

Mr. Douglas: I am therefore asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is telling the House that he does not think the parliament of Canada has any right to make the final decision on whether or not the government has the confidence of the House to make a decision committing Canadian forces, Canadian lives and the Canadian treasury in an area that could be potentially dangerous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, the government can only act with the confidence of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Of course, this is the position in which we all stand on this side of the House. The House can at any time defeat the government. But I am very anxious that there should be ample opportunity to debate the decisions that have been made by the government. I have provided a number of occasions for these debates. On the other side of the House I have yet to hear what the views are. I have been asking the Official Opposition to express its views and I have yet to hear them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

INCREASES IN TELECOMMUNICATION RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the approval by the Canadian Transport Commission of increased rates for telecommunication services. In light of the commitment of the Minister of Finance in his budget address to try to achieve reasonable price increases this year, I should like to ask the minister if the government is asking the Canadian Transport Commission to review immediately its decision to allow CN and CP Telecommunications to increase rates for private wire, telex and broadband exchange services, since the increases vary from more than 6 per cent to 50 per cent on various charges and services?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, even if the Canadian Transport Commission comes under my portfolio, telecommunication services are under the Department of Communications.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to ask him if he considers a 12.5 per cent increase in charges for private wire equipment and a 50 per cent increase in charges for relocation of equipment as falling within the government's concept of reasonable price increases and, if not, could he advise the House what the government intends to do about it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have not considered the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Could I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has defined any guidelines on reasonable price increases, at least in those areas that are under the direct authority of the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: As the Minister of Transport just indicated, there is a public board to look into and decide on these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The cabinet also has responsibility.

Oral Questions

WELFARE

LIVING CONDITIONS OF SENIOR CITIZENS AT MAISON DE REPOS—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC MINISTER AS TO POSSIBLE ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of reports on television and in the press of the intolerable conditions under which a number of incapacitated older people are living at the Maison de Repos in Laval, and in view of the minister's concern over the welfare of these people since they are old age pension recipients, may I ask the minister if he is discussing this matter with his counterpart in the province of Quebec in the hope that this and other such situations might be cleared up?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will meet my colleagues from Quebec next weekend and I shall take that opportunity to let him know about the view expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

FLOODS

DAMAGE ON GREAT LAKES—ALLEGED DELAY IN PROVISION OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON REGULATIONS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. Would he indicate what new proposals he has initiated with his counterparts in the provincial governments to cut through what appears to be departmental and jurisdictional red tape that has prevented allocated funds from reaching the local reconstruction level almost four months and two additional disasters since the first chaotic storm and high water damage on the Great Lakes?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries. I am not quite sure what program the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Danforth: When the minister is making his inquiries, will he also initiate with his provincial counterparts a review of the present regulations to seek a means of providing financial aid, at least to some degree, to home owners along the shores and dikes who apparently do not qualify under the present provisions?

Mr. Davis: The provisions are laid down by the province. The province deals directly with the property owners and the federal government backs up the province in this respect.

• (1510)

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, will the minister attempt to ensure that whatever joint funds are agreed upon will be evenly distributed so that all residents of areas adjacent to Lakes St. Clair, Erie and Ontario who have suffered damage, and will continue to suffer damage, are compensated adequately and on an equal basis, rather than compensation being offered only to those residents at the western end of Lake Erie as is presently the situation?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the understanding we have with the provincial authorities is that the compensation will apply to property owners, and in all areas, throughout the calendar year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope hon. members would make an effort to limit the number of supplementaries. The hon. member for Oxford has another supplementary. He will be recognized, and then I will have to go to another subject. If there are too many supplementaries, this makes the question period impossible to manage.

DAMAGE ON GREAT LAKES—PROVISION OF SANDBAGS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Will the minster, as chairman of the cabinet committee dealing with the present emergency on the Great Lakes, make sure that at least sandbags are available should a second emergency situation occur, as is very likely? Apparently in the situation the weekend before last no sandbags were available for emergency diking purposes.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, measures of this kind have been discussed with the province and with the Department of National Defence.

DAMAGE ON GREAT LAKES—SUGGESTED APPEARANCE OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION BEFORE COMMITTEE TO INDICATE ACTION TO LOWER LAKE LEVELS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the Minister of the Environment. Because of the seriousness of the situation, would the minister see if it is possible to have some members or officials of the IJC appear before a committee of the House so that concerned members can find out what action is being taken or what action it might be possible to take to lower the lake levels?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, estimates of my department relating to protective works and to Great Lakes levels will be before the appropriate committee of the House in a few weeks time.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether the Liberal caucus or the cabinet have decided to withdraw or reduce the estimates of the CBC?

Mr. Speaker: The question is obviously out of order.

INDUSTRY

STE-THÉRÈSE—MEASURES TO AVOID LAY-OFFS AT GENERAL MOTORS

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell the House whether he is aware of reports that General Motors has definitely dismissed a great number of workers at the Sainte-Thérèse plant while increasing the production of Vega at its Lordstown plant in Ohio?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for asking that question.

General Motors has told the department that there has been no transfer of its production from Sainte-Thérèse to Lordstown, Ohio.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Would the minister consider the possibility of communicating with the company in that connection, so as to endeavour to improve the employment situation at the Sainte-Thérèse plant?

Mr. Breau: I shall bring that matter to the minister's attention, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF MERCHANTS TO PASS ALONG TAX CUTS TO CONSUMERS—INQUIRY AS TO MONITORING MECHANISM

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the very clear undertaking given by the Minister of Finance to the House that a monitoring system would be set up by the government to make sure that the tax cuts contained in his budget would be passed along to the consumer, and in view of the publication today in Ontario of a directive by a major chain of convenience stores ordering its management not to pass along those cuts to consumers, at least in respect of chocolate Easter eggs, could the minister tell the House what his department or what the government is doing about this revelation today in the Toronto Star?

An hon. Member: He is going to lay another egg.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to help the hon. member lay another egg, as one of his colleagues suggests, but in any event I shall try to get further information about this and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if the minister could tell us what monitoring machinery or apparatus actually exists in his department to monitor these tax cuts?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, we are putting a mechanism in place to gather further information about the results of the budget tax cuts, and I would be happy to give the hon. member further information about this in due course.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL IF BOMBING RESUMED—PROSPECTS FOR PEACE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In relation to his statement today I would like to ask him whether one of the conditions for Canada's immediate withdrawal from Viet Nam would be a resumption of bombing by the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, probably I would have to add a word of caution in advance that we would want to look at the circumstances, but I could not imagine any circumstances under which there would be a resumption of bombing by the United States that would not result in the immediate withdrawal of our force.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, I wish to attempt to elicit a more complete definition of what the minister would consider a substantial improvement in the situation, or a substantial improvement in the prospects for peace. Perhaps I could just put the question to him in those general terms. What specific conditions would he consider to constitute a substantial improvement in the prospects for peace?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend can probably answer the first part of the question himself. These would be better prospects for the operation of the International Control Commission itself, a more co-operative attitude on the part of members of the commission, and more access to the various parts of South Viet Nam than it is now enjoying. These would represent a substantial improvement in the situation. As to the prospects for peace, they would be signs that the discussions that have now opened in Paris seem to be resulting in a greater spirit of reconciliation and concord than now exists.

VIET NAM—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON RESOLUTION ON ORDER PAPER CONCERNING PEACE AGREEMENT AND SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[English]

In view of the open invitation the Secretary of State for External Affairs issued to the House a few moments ago, and in view of his wish to seek the advice and confidence of parliament, will he tell the House if he wishes to bring to a vote his own resolution of February 1, 1973, which appears on the order paper as item No. 18 and which seems to haunt the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the resolution that I brought before the House welcomed the peace agreement, and I am sure that would have commanded the full support of the House. I am equally sure that anybody who has read and examined the amendments that were proposed would agree that they are unworkable and most dangerous. Therefore, I would hope that the House would not proceed, in the interests of the hon. member's own party, to approve them because they are quite unworkable and might result in great harm to Canadians in Viet Nam.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE RELEASE OF LLOYD OPPEL

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I see that we have returned to this round of questions and I, too, would like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he make any comment now on the news reports that are circulating to the effect that the Canadian, Lloyd Oppel, is likely to be released before the end of this week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to report that Mr. Lloyd Oppel is likely to be released today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may ask a supplementary, and then the hon. member for Egmont. After that I will again try to move to another subject.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF CRITERIA FOR CANADA'S CONTINUED PARTICIPATION IN SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a second question of a more general nature to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the multiplicity of the problems revealed in the minister's various statements to the House and in committee, will the minister give an undertaking that during the next 60 days the government will be developing and making public its criteria for Canada's participation as a truce observer, such as greater collaboration with the commission, as well as clear evidence in detail that the parties are really serious in their intent to live up to the commitments that they made to one another in Paris, so that toward the end of May a critical and objective measurement and assessment of the situation can be made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to take exception on a procedural basis to this kind of question. This is really not a question but a statement submitted to the House in the form of a question, and is not in order. The minister may comment on the member's statement if he can do so briefly.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, since he is a member of the committee, I have appeared twice before it. I have laid down these conditions very clearly. I have tried to keep the House, and members of the committee at least, very well informed. My hon. friend from the NDP who was with me added to the information. I regret that my hon. friend was not with me, or some member of his party, so that they might have added to the information, too, but I do not think we can be faulted for having withheld information.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont wishes to ask a supplementary on this subject, after which we will move on the next subject.

SOUTH VIET NAM—ROLE OF SUPERVISORY COMMISSION WITH REGARD TO POLITICAL PRISONERS AND POSSIBLE ELECTIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the particular emphasis the minister placed this afternoon on the importance of achieving some kind of political solution in South Viet Nam and the present difficulties that exist with regard to the very large number of political prisoners in that area, could the minister outline briefly whether our representatives on the ICCS will take any special initiative to see that many of these political prisoners are able to participate freely in such an election process? In view of the frustration and failure of the Red Cross to be effective in this area, will the minister be encouraging the return of the Canadian Red Cross to take a hand in that important function?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, so far there has not been notable co-operation between the Provisional Revolutionary Government and the Republic of Viet Nam Government which would be necessary to the conduct of the work of the ICCS with respect to civilian prisoners. It is laid down in the agreement that there must be some co-operation between them. So far this is one of the main things that is lacking and will become even more important in the next few weeks when the United States and the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam leave the joint military commission. We shall be doing everything we can within the limited powers of the ICCS. As I said in my statement, we will be prepared to return, if necessary, to supervise elections under the agreement which would involve some of the questions raised by my hon. friend.

HEALTH

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF RADIOTHERAPISTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware of the acute shortage of physicians in some of the specialties, particularly radiotherapists whose specialty is treating cancer, which shortage may cause serious delays in treatment, and can the minister assure the House that this grave shortage will be corrected?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is, first of all, obviously a matter of provincial responsibility. There are shortages in various specialities. My provincial colleagues have discussed this matter already with several of my colleagues, but a solution to the problem will take time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN RAILWAYS AND NON-OPERATING UNIONS—AMOUNT OF INCREASE GRANTED TO MANAGEMENT PERSONNEL

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. He may not yet be aware of the situation and may wish to take the question as notice. In view of the fact the railways offered a 5 per cent and 5 per cent increase during their negotiations with the non-operating railway unions, then broke off discussions and are now in the process of going to conciliation while in the last few days the railways have authorized an increase of 7 per cent to management personnel, would the minister inquire if this is correct? If so, what is the dollar and percentage amount that the railways have given to management personnel in view of the fact that this action would constitute bad faith in bargaining?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, I do not like to take questions as notice so I shall answer right away. I am aware of this of course. I have followed the negotiations between the railways and the railway unions. They are now before a conciliation board, or eventually will be before a conciliation board. You know that with management it goes fast, that the board of directors decides what level of salaries management personnel are going to get, but in the field of labour they have to follow the law and under the law they have to go to the board of conciliation.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE APPLICATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport.

As Bell Canada produces dividends and its branches make profits, and the company is requesting an increase in rates, does the minister intend to make a statement in the House concerning the planned increase in the rates of Bell Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I thought it was Air Canada the hon. member was referring to, but if Bell Canada is the subject, I believe I shall make the same reply as I did to the hon. member for Vegreville. As far as rates are concerned, Bell Canada must abide by decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission, which reports to the Minister of Communications and not to the Minister of Transport.

INFORMATION CANADA

DELAY IN TABLING ANNUAL REPORT—POSSIBLE DISBANDMENT OF AGENCY

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. As the purpose of Information Canada is to provide information for the public speedily, could the Minister inform the House why that agency's annual report to parliament is one year late?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will.

An hon. Member: This year or next?

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Now that the House has shown its displeasure with Information Canada and in view of the determination of the Minister of Finance to reduce government expenditures on redundant services, will the government now listen to parliament and make preparations to disband the agency?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Davenport.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the right hon. Prime Minister rising on a point of order or question of privilege? I did not think that the question asked in those terms was in order and that is why I went immediately to the hon. member for Davenport. The hon. member for Davenport.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, surely members are entitled to know what the government's intentions are with respect to policy. The hon. member simply asked whether it is government policy to disband Information Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member argues that the question is asked correctly from a procedural standpoint. The Chair thinks it is not. Hon. members can ask any questions they want, provided they do so within the well accepted practice. A question asked in those terms, according to my understanding of the rules—and I say this very humbly—is clearly out of order. The hon. member for Davenport.

POSSIBILITY OF ACQUIRING RIGHTS TO BROADCAST WORLD SOCCER GAMES

Mr. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this is a question on a more mundane subject directed to the Secretary of State. In recognition of the keen interest in soccer by people throughout Canada will the minister urge the CBC to make a serious bid to acquire the broadcasting rights for the world soccer games scheduled for next year?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on that very important subject I can assure the hon. member that the CBC intends to do just that.

PACKAGING AND LABELLING—DATE OF PROCLAMATION OF REGULATIONS—AVAILABILITY OF DRAFT REGULATIONS TO FOOD PRICES COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the Committee on Trends in Food Prices has today started drafting its report to parliament, which has to be presented before the end of the month, and in view of the fact that the Packaging and Labelling Act was passed by the House some two years ago, would the minister now tell the House when the regulations with regard to the Packaging and Labelling Act will be proclaimed? More particularly, will the minister make these regulations or draft regulations available to the Committee on Trends in Food Prices in order to assist it in preparing its first report?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the second part of the hon. member's question, I would be happy to discuss the matter of the feasibility of this with members of the committee. With respect to the first part of the question, I expect that the draft regulations will be published in the Canada Gazette within the next few months.

Mr. Bell: Yes, if they are Liberal.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes, but I have also said to the House on previous occasions that this is under the co-ordination of my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, and also that we act at the request of the provinces. We are in very close communication with the Emergency Measures Organization of the province of Ontario and are ready to be of any assistance that they request.

POSSIBLE PRESSURE ON UNITED STATES SUBSIDIARIES IN CANADA TO INHIBIT EXPORTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, perhaps I could direct my question to the Prime Minister. With the export of Canadian end products declining on a constant dollar basis to countries of the world other than the United States, and in view of the claim by a representative of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that many Canadian exporters that are United States subsidiaries have been constrained by their parents to sell only through an American export concern, would the minister conduct an inquiry into such falling exports and find out if, in fact, branch plants in Canada are being inhibited from pursuing export opportunities?

• (1530)

Hon. Robert K. Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether it is his position that the ICCS has a reasonable chance of being able to discharge its original responsibility, that of effectively supervising the ceasefire?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I need to add anything to what I said in my statement.

Mr. Stanfield: You do. That point was not clear.

Mr. Sharp: I have been pessimistic about the ICCS for quite some time and have expressed serious misgivings, as would anyone who had gone there to see for himself.

Some time ago it was reported in the Ottawa newspapers that officials in his department had been concerned about the number of abortions that were taking place in this country and that was to be looked into. I want to ask the minister whether he is also having his officials investigate the number of hospitals in this country which have refused to set up abortion committees and the number of areas in which there are no abortion facilities available for Canadian women?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member says is true. Quite a few of the provincial ministers have made representations. Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have not received the report. I will check my desk and perhaps find it there. The hon. member must excuse me, but I will give the answer tomorrow.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the hon. gentleman assure the House that he will take the necessary steps to prevent further action on these projects before a licence is issued?

ALLEGED DETENTION OF TWO ESKIMOS IN PREVILLE HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, as a week has passed since the hon. Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, on two occasions last week I tried to rise and answer the question, but unfortunately I could not get the floor.

I am happy to answer today. A nurse went with an interpreter to the Preville Hospital. The two Eskimo patients who are there are well treated and the report is that the situation should not be changed. However, we will follow all possible developments and if the patients are not comfortable there, they will be moved to another hospital.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will call on the hon. member for Mackenzie, and then call Orders of the Day.

War Veterans Allowance Act

MULTICULTURALISM

POSSIBILITY OF RADIO AND TELEVISION PROGRAMS IN THE ESKIMO AND CREE LANGUAGES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question involves three departments, that of the Minister of Communications, of the minister responsible for multiculturalism and of the minister who answers for the CBC. Out of that troika, I will direct my question to the minister who answers for the CBC. Since Anik I now makes it possible to broadcast to outlying areas of Canada, will telecasting and broadcasting be carried out in the Eskimo and Cree languages in order that the greatest number of Canadians may benefit from this service?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that is not possible at this point, but I think the hon. member will share the view that this is a desirable goal. When, exactly, it will be achieved I am not in a position to answer.

POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO AUTHORIZE PILOT PROJECTS TO DETERMINE NEED FOR BROADCASTS IN OTHER THAN OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the minister who answers for multiculturalism. In line with the suggestion made by the Ukranian Canadian committee, which restated the B & B Commission suggestion that pilot projects be undertaken to determine the need for broadcasting in other languages in certain regions, will the minister take the initiative and introduce legislation, in co-operation with the two other ministers, in order to bring this about and in order to implement some of the proposals set out in the green paper on communications?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to discuss this with the ministers responsible for the CBC and CRTC.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT OF PAYMENT

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-148, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with a mixture of gratitude and pride that I rise to speak at this time. I am grateful for the opportunity I have had to play a part in improving the lot of over 250,000 Canadian men, women and children who are our special responsibility. I am grateful for the co-operation and sincere desire to expedite the passage of this bill which has been demonstrated by all parties in this House. I am grateful to the men and women who served Canada in time of war in order that our democratic institutions could continue.

I am proud of our system of government and the way in which hon. members have acted, both in the House and in Committee, to ensure that no time is lost in bringing about the improvement provided for in Bill C-148. It is apparent from the actions of members of all parties that there is agreement that this is a good bill.

The remarks made by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) were especially appreciated, as were those of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). They indicated very clearly that members of all parties are agreed that we should move quickly to pass this amending legislation.

This bill is unique in that, in addition to proposing increases in rates and ceilings, it provides for the removal of the personal property limitations which at present stand at $1,250 single and $2,500 married. This measure will not only qualify some who are now ineligible, but it will also give present recipients of War Veterans Allowance or Civilian War Allowances a greater sense of freedom and dignity.

• (1540)

The proposed rates are $151.14 single and $257.21 married. The new monthly income ceilings will be $191.14 single and $327.21 married, which provide annual income ceilings of $2,293.68 single and $3,926.52 married. The rates for orphans will also be increased proportionately. In addition the OAS/GIS exemptions of $15 single and $30 married will be continued so that those recipients 65 and over will have an annual income from OAS/GIS and War Veterans Allowance or Civilian War Allowances of $2,473.68 single and $4,286.52 married.

These new rates and ceilings will result in a financial improvement since December 31, 1971 of 24.8 per cent single, 27.8 per cent married, and over 24 per cent for orphans. When we consider the exemptions for both husband and wife who are over 65, the increase since December 31, 1971 is 32 per cent.

These increases, together with the amendments to the regulations concerning casual earnings, which are now $1,000 single and $1,500 married, the removal of the penalty for having a home valued at over $10,000 and the provision for the automatic escalation of the rates and ceilings on the first of January of each year in accordance with the rise in the consumer price index, represent in all a genuine effort to improve the standard of living of this very worthy group of Canadians.

I would like to make it clear that the remarks and suggestions make by some hon. members in the House and in the Veterans Affairs committee concerning other improvements which might be made in the War Veterans Allowance Act have not fallen on deaf ears. These and other matters are receiving our careful study and attention.

There have been many statements made in recent days in this House concerning the men and women who served Canada in her time of need. I do not think I can add anything to that which has already been said, except that I believe this bill is another step forward in honouring the pledge made by the then Prime Minister of Canada when he spoke to the Canadian troops on the eve of their historic attack on Vimy Ridge in April 1917. The then Prime Minister said:

> The government and the country will consider it their first duty to see that a proper appreciation of your effort and of your courage is brought to the notice of the people at home and it will always be our endeavour to so guide the attitude of public opinion that the country will support the government to prove to the returned men its just and due appreciation of the inestimable value of the services rendered to the country and empire and that no man, whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders, will have just cause to reproach the government for having broken faith with the men who won and the men who died.

Actions speak louder than words. Bill C-148 is indicative of this government's intention to live up to that promise made over 50 years ago on behalf of all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the type of comment being bandied back and forth in this House, I hope hon. members will not become too suspicious of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and me. However, it is the result of co-operation and the realization of the job for which we are responsible. I hope hon. members appreciate the fact that one part of our umbrella of legislation is dealt with in a co-operative and statesman-like manner. I think that most comments were made on Bill C-148, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, during the second reading. We want to get this bill through all stages. There is agreement among all parties that we will get it through with the least possible delay.

The minister indicated that the representations we have made will not fall on deaf ears. Therefore, I want to repeat that there are three amendments I would have liked to see. I believe they are necessary to finally resolve the fate of our veterans who qualify for the benefits under this section of the Pension act. Although the amendments under Bill C-148 are most acceptable to my party, as well as to all veterans organizations across this country, the government could very easily have included these other amendments. The three issues of concern to veterans and to which no reference is made in the bill are as follows.

The first would be the removal of the Canadian residence requirement for applicants abroad. This would involve amending Section 3(1) of the War Veterans Allowance Act. Under this section, it is possible for a veteran to qualify for an allowance by returning to Canada and remaining for one year. The benefit is subsequently continued, even though the recipient may take up permanent residence outside the country. This 365 day residence requirement may not cause undue difficulty to veterans residing in the border areas of the United States, but such a procedure is more difficult for veterans residing in far off countries such as the United Kingdom or in Europe.

The benefits became payable out of Canada through an amendment to the act in 1960. This permits continuing payment of the allowance outside Canada, primarily for the benefit of the recipient desirous of leaving Canada for reasons of health or family ties. As of January 31, 1973, there were only 709 persons outside of Canada who were receiving allowances. An amendment to the legislation removing the 12 month residence qualifications would extend the benefit of the allowance to Canadian veterans who are unable to return here in order to qualify. The Department of Veterans Affairs has adequate facilities to administer payments to veterans in the United Kingdom and in western Europe. The removal of the personal and property ceilings under the amendments before us today will further ease these administrative burdens. I again ask the minister, and I know he agrees because he expressed this view at the committee stage of the bill, that every effort be extended to further amend the act to satisfy these veterans.

The second would be an addition to provide for the recognition of a child over 21 years under Section 12(2). This would enable a surviving spouse to receive an allowance for the dependent child attending a recognized educational institution, even though that child may have reached his or her 21st birthday. As I stated on second reading, this allowance should be payable to age 25 or until the child ceases to attend an institute. The Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act provides, through recent amendments, for benefits to continue beyond a child's 21st birthday. The number in this instance would be small. I know the minister feels as I do, that this amendment would provide a good amount of relief to the surviving spouse, in view of the continuing high costs, and to the child to maintain his education, particularly with the high unemployment rate in this age category in the country today.

The third amendment which should be treated with the highest priority is that having to do with service in the United Kingdom in World War I. In spite of efforts by veterans organizations over the years to have the 365 day requirement eliminated and to have the service in the United Kingdom before November 12, 1918 accepted as a qualifying service, for some reason or other no consideration has been given to this suggestion. I note that some years ago the former member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, I think it was, introduced a private member's bill proposing this amendment, but as a result of the passive attention paid to private member's bills in this House, his efforts did not get far. I can only repeat that such a change would not affect many of our veterans, since so many of them are in their late seventies and in receipt of old age security benefits. So, the cost would be small. It would, however, bring them a degree of additional comfort by providing drugs and medical appliances not presently available to them.

Action along these lines would also show recognition for veterans who offered to serve anywhere for their country but who, through no fault of their own, did not do so. The veterans organizations appealed to our committee to consider these amendments. Probably, as I said earlier, I am remiss in not introducing them here today as a means of overcoming inequities in the present bill. However, bearing in mind the interest shown by all parties in speeding the progress of this bill to grant increases in war veterans allowances and in particular to clear up the property clause which has created hardships for so many veterans and their dependants, I shall not do so. It is possible I am a little naïve, but I feel the minister is sincere in his statement that the matter is being studied with a view to implementing these amendments at a later date.

The government House leader has indicated in the past two weeks that he would bring on third reading if agreement could be reached, in co-operation with all parties, to pass the measure quickly. On behalf of my party, Mr. Speaker, and with the agreement of the two other opposition parties, may I say we are prepared to put up only one speaker each. As an indication of the co-operation already shown between all parties, may I remind hon. members that the committee stage of the bill took less than one hour. This probably constitutes something of a record—I think this was confirmed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), whose word must be accepted in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, if we are truly to fulfil our responsibility to the disadvantaged of our country, this is the time to show some human consideration to these citizens, our war veterans. Fifty years ago the government of the day told the veterans that the country owed them "a debt by right" to look after them in return for answering the call to defend Canada. This pledge was reaffirmed after World War II and again after Korea. Today, some fifty years later, we have yet to fulfil all our obligations and nobody on either side of this chamber can be proud that in the year 1973 we have yet to repay this debt completely. Unless we clean up the war Veterans Allowances Act, not only by passing the bill before us today but by implementing these changes I have proposed, the matter should ever rest on our conscience.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there are other items in the overall Pension Act which hold as high a priority as the War Veterans Allowance Act. I refer to the recommendations in the Woods Committee report and, specifically, to the basic rate of pension. In 1968, the Woods Committee spoke of the need to establish a realistic basic rate of pension. Yet here we are, five years later, still waiting for the necessary legislation. I am aware of possible arguments that progress has been made during the years. Indeed, on behalf of my party, I complimented the government as well as the committee which studied the basic rates and produced most excellent recommendations. I can certainly say that since I came to Ottawa in 1968 excellent progress has been made. I say this from my experience as a member of the Veterans Affairs Committee.

All this makes me wonder about what has gone on since 1918. The minister himself has just arrived in Ottawa and I am sure he, too, must be wondering what has gone on in the last 50 years or so. I ask him to ensure that every effort is directed to producing legislation to implement the recommendations of the joint study report on the basic rate of pensions, increasing that rate to $4,529 a year for the single 100 per cent pensioner, with further increments for married pensioners and their dependants. I trust, too, the legislation will approve a formula for annual increases based on the increases in the average wage received by the five lower public service categories. Mr. Speaker, let me say on behalf of my party that we support Bill C-148 wholeheartedly. Let us continue to show that we who sit in the House of Commons can be human in our consideration for a most important part of our society, the deserving war veterans of Canada who are losing their faith in us because we have neglected them for too long.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I once again draw attention to the spirit of co-operation and goodwill which exists among all members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and our desire as members of that committee that this legislation receive its final endorsation in the House this afternoon? As a measure of the spirit of co-operation which obtains among us I can say on behalf of my good friend the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) that he and I are glad the House is in session today so that we can proceed with this bill and get its benefits established as quickly as possible.

As we have made clear at earlier stages, any criticism that we have of this bill does not relate to the things it contains but, rather, to the fact that some most useful measures have been omitted. The bill before us provides for an increase in the amount of the allowance payable under the War Veterans Allowance Act. The precise details have, of course, been put on the record. The increase is good. It is also good that the ceilings on permissible incomes have been raised, and raised to levels which spare us the experience of former years when we saw veterans being given an increase on the one hand only to have it taken away with the other. In this case, veterans, both single and married, will receive at the end of April a larger net increase than civilians in receipt of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement will receive. We welcome this. We are also pleased with the removal of the property qualifications which have been in the War Veterans Allowance Act since it began. As I said on another occasion, one thinks of the many veterans, and of the many veterans' widows, who have suffered over the decades because of the existence of those property qualifications. We are delighted that they are being removed.

As the previous speaker indicated, there are a few things we would still like to see corrected in the War Veterans Allowance Act. The words of the minister today that I liked most were his words when he said he would like to make it clear that suggestions concerning other improvements to the Act had not fallen on deaf ears. Our experience of the new minister, even in these few months, has proven to us that he does not have deaf ears. I hope he realizes he has strong support in any negotiations he may undertake with others in the cabinet, with the officials in his department or, particularly, with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). We hope there will be further improvements in the act this session. I should like to make this point very strongly.

There is a tendency in normal parliaments to take it for granted that if a piece of legislation is improved in a session, that is all that can be expected for the session. Usually the most one can hope for is a further improvement in the next session or the next parliament. But this is not an ordinary parliament. There may be some of us around who will be saying: What have you done for us lately? Frankly, I hope that before this session ends the minister's commitment that there will be further study of the War Veterans Allowance Act will be carried out. I believe it can be said that our general plan in the committee is to keep the first item of the estimates open for a while so that we can discuss this matter again. Thus I hope that after the minister and his officials have studied possible changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act, the minister will come again before the committee to discuss those changes and see whether during the session he can bring in another bill amending the War Veterans Allowance Act.

• (1600)

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe spelt out three areas that certainly require amendment. The first was the residence requirement, which in the main affects a number of Canadian veterans living in the United Kingdom as well as other countries; the second was the change with respect to the age to which children of veterans can be covered, and then there was the change respecting the requirement of 12 months' service in world war I, namely that service in the United Kingdom should count and that the 12 month period be relaxed.

In addition to those changes which should be made, I would press very strongly the point I made on second reading and also in the standing committee, namely that the anomalies with respect to the ceilings on permissible income be straightened out. The minister gave us the figures today, which of course are quite accurate. They show that the new ceiling on the permissible income of a single veteran is $191.14 a month and for a married veteran the new ceiling is $327.21 a month.

The minister also drew attention today to the fact that the extra $15 for a single veteran and $30 for a married veteran which old age and guaranteed income supplement recipients got in 1972 is still to be allowed outside of the permissible income, rather than raising the level. We now have the anomaly that for a single veteran under 65 the ceiling on his permissible income is $191.14, whereas for a single veteran over 65 it is $206.14. There is also an anomaly in the case of a married veteran. If both the veteran and his wife are under 65, the ceiling is $327.21. If one is over 65 the ceiling is $342.21, and if both are over 65 the ceiling is $357.21. It seems to me that this is an unsatisfactory situation and one that certainly ought to be cleared up. Frankly, I do not see why we should be asked to wait until next session or until there is another election. The minister has done a pretty good job of getting things moving, and I hope that we can move on this question during the course of this session.

As a matter of fact, I hope that another look at the means test under the War Veterans Allowance Act will be taken. Although I think we have come a long way in our concepts of pensions, allowances and benefits since the War Veterans Allowance Act was first established in 1930, I should still like to see us begin with the veterans when we explore the idea of a guaranteed annual income. The War Veterans Allowance Act might well be turned into such a piece of legislation for our veterans.

Since we are all anxious to get this legislation through as quickly as we can, the only other comment I want to make is that I hope we will soon see the bill to amend the Pension Act with regard to the basic rate of disability pension. As the minister knows, and as the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe indicated a moment ago, there is in the works that very interesting and useful report of the joint study group that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs endorsed unanimously and quickly, calling for a substantial increase in the basic rate of the disability pension. The report also calls for it to be escalated annually, in accordance not just with the cost of living increase but in accordance with the rise in the wage levels of the five selected categories in the federal public service.

I regard this report as monumental, not only with respect to the formula for arriving at what the basic rate should be, but particularly with respect to the formula for escalating pensions year by year. The Minister of Veterans Affairs will be establishing a first in social legislation in this parliament if he brings in a bill that has in it an escalation formula based on that principle of providing increases related to the rising standard of living. I invite him to aim at that goal of being the first minister to bring in this kind of escalation formula, and I know of no group that deserves better such a progressive approach to this problem than the veterans of this country.

We welcome this bill; we approve of everything that is in it. But that does not mean we are satisfied. By no means do we say that the job is done. There are the further improvements we have pointed out. They really must be made, and we should like to see them made at this session. We also want to see very soon the other bill which will provide for an increase in the basic rate under the Pension Act, and also the very progressive escalation formula which the standing committee has unanimously recommended.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, like the previous speakers, I should like to speed up the passing of this bill as much as possible. But since there are many veterans in my constituency, and since I myself have an elder brother who is a veteran, I consider it my duty to take part in the debate on this bill, for it concerns a class of people of whom our country is justly proud.

I congratulate the new minister on such a senior appointment; the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could not have made a better choice. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) is a very likeable, a most trustworthy man. He has the ability needed to take charge of this department and put through the amendments that veterans have been demanding. There can be no doubt that Bill C-148 was largely inspired by him.

This bill proposes important amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. I am glad to see that more recognition is to be given to the right of veterans and their families to enjoy a standard of living that reflects, as far as possible, the material wealth of our country. But for the restraints in an outdated and inhuman financial system, it would certainly be possible to do more for them without anyone having to suffer for it.

We of the Social Credit Party uphold a principle that we believe must be the cornerstone of any society that is founded on a logical economic basis.

• (1610)

It is the principle of making financially possible all that is physically realizable.

People expect credit like children awaiting Santa Claus. We have the required people, machines and wealth to get our economy moving. Yet, because of the government's belief that credit is the basis of economic activities rather than man, machines and wealth, there is more than half a million unemployed in the country.

The unemployed are aware of the immense wealth of the country and they only want them to be available to everybody. They are justified in asking what the government is waiting for to utilize this wealth.

Mr. Speaker, this is what the Creditistes mean when they ask to make financially possible all that is physically realizable. We have the manpower, the tools and machines which are the basis of our economy. Credit now calls for the achievement of all physically feasible developments.

Let us get off the beaten path. Let us leave the rough and bumpy road of the present financial system which leads us from one economic crisis to another and prevents us from reaching a just society.

As far as veterans are concerned the social and economic security program of the Social Credit party is the ideal long-term solution. Of cousre, in the present circumstances and the present system we approve of the government granting increases to those who have suffered and fought for their country and that is why we support this bill.

However, I wish to remind hon. members of this House that the social and economic security program of the Social Credit party offers and interesting alternative to the numerous weaknesses of all existing social aid systems administered by the government.

We are proposing a guaranteed annual income to be paid to all Canadians—including veterans—of 18 and over, and without exception. Not 18 year old veterans because we know they are older than that.

First of all, any single man would receive $1,200 a year; if he is married, in addition to receiving benefits for both himself and his wife he would receive $250 a year for each child.

Tax exemptions would be set at $2,500 a year for a single man and $5,000 for a married couple, with an additional exemption of $500 for each child.

If a soldier who fought for his country returns disabled, he will receive an additional disability benefit of $200 a month if he is single and $350 if he is married.

It is evident that this system would do away with all the troubles and detours which are found in the present system. Everybody is entitled to social security benefits; it is a right of all individuals. Benefits would be distributed without any inquiry or intrusion into the personal lives of people.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

This is what we advocate for the future as a great improvement on the bill now before us.

If the government is not ready to offer anything better to those who fought for their country, we will feel compelled to support this legislation because we want our veterans to get as much as possible in return for the sacrifices they willingly made with great self-denial.

However, we want to remind the government that Bill C-148 is already obsolete and that the social and economic security program of the Social Credit Party is the solution that all Canadians have been anxiously expecting.

Our veterans are certainly still entitled to more gratitude from the whole population. Most of them gave the best years of their lives and sacrificed the benefits of family life. Others gave up their studies or a trade or profession that would have allowed them to earn a better living while remaining in their environment.

I for one, have always entertained a great deal of respect for those brave men who never feared to risk their lives for the defence of our liberties. We owe them a great deal of gratitude, and merely praying them by service is not enough, we must do something. And how could we better bear testimony to it than by improving the legislation of concern to them, allowing them to enjoy the security and the freedom for which they fought?

Last summer, accompanied by other hon. members, I had the pleasure of visiting the Normandy beaches where thousands of Canadian soldiers landed to liberate old France for the second time in half of century.

One has to visit the cemeteries where thousands of our Canadian brothers were laid to rest, having died on the field of honour, to understand the atrocities of war and the courage the Canadian soldiers have shown.

Going through those cemeteries and looking at the markings on the tombstones, it is with great emotion that we read the names of young Canadians whose ages vary from 19 to 25 years, who, nonetheless, also had the right to live.

Each year, the Remembrance Day ceremonies remind us that our generation has been through two world wars whose victims were many and whose consequences many families are still bearing.

Last fall, I attended the Remembrance Day ceremonies in Montmagny. They started with a religious service at which were present a great number of the Quebec area war veterans, some cadets of the Canadian army, as well as the Royal 22nd Regiment magnificent band, which had been authorized by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) to come to Montmagny for the occasion. And I take this opportunity to thank the Minister of National Defence for that commendable gesture with which all the people were very much pleased.

Also in attendance at the ceremony were the wives, the widows and the children of war veterans as well as members of families of former soldiers killed in the war.

When wreaths were laid in memory of missing soldiers, the assistance saw with great emotion a soldier's sister faint; this proves that the memory of these galant soldiers is still with us even after all those years.

This is why we should do more for stricken families. Canada can do more and I heartily support the suggestions just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (M. Knowles) that nothing prevents the government from introducing, during this session, a new bill to raise the veterans' pensions or to amend the legislation so that our veterans and their families may live in increased security.

I think it is the duty of all hon. members to take into consideration more than once a year such questions which involve a great many people so that, progressively and as fast as possible, these pieces of legislation may be amended to the benefit of the veterans.

This is why I wanted to co-operate with the government and other hon. members participating in this debate. I will now conclude my remarks so that this law may be passed and that increased pensions be granted as fast as possible to our veterans.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I will only make a few comments about this legislation which is certainly a very important one. Like all hon. members, I am sure that no one will hesitate to support this bill designed to provide an increase in war veterans allowances.

Now do I have to add that we will never pay too much attention to this matter and that these increases are certainly not excessive when one considers the responsibilities faced by these veterans, the widows of those who died on the battlefield and their children who are suffering today some hardships because of the death of those soldiers.

I have heard some very interesting comments, made by several hon. members, in particular the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), which I suggest, deserve the attention of the minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). These comments could certainly help the minister to have a better view of the situation and to bring about some improvements which are necessary at present.

I would like to deal with a specific point, that is the Canadian Legion. In my riding as everywhere else, some groups of war veterans still like to meet regularly. However, these veterans need the necessary quarters and certain amounts of money so that they might enjoy the facilities which they need in order to meet together and be motivated. In view of their past and of their responsibilities, I suggest that it is the responsibility of the government, of the minister in charge in particular to see to it that these groups of Legion members enjoy the facilities which will enable their to meet and arrange for some entertainment, and perhaps also to enjoy better days.

I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to consider the possibility of granting aid to legion members. There are a number of them in my constituency, and, as the hon. member for Bellechasse was saying, I always have the privilege and the pleasure to be invited to meet them and take part in Remembrance Day reunions. It was in this way that I became aware of the importance of demanding certain advantages that are not available to them today, so that they can afford to find places in which to meet.

These war veterans, with donations received from the outside and their own contributions make considerable efforts to provide for the upkeep of premises used for their meetings. I may add that those people have often told me about their difficulties, their intentions, their objectives, which are altogether justified.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take this opportunity to ask the Minister concerned to seriously consider the possibility of assisting veterans organizations in each and every Canadian riding. I make these very special representations on behalf of the legionnaires in my riding, since I know them well; I am also aware that they have long expected me to make such representations. Besides, they expect the Minister to say yes to the request I am making on their behalf. Considering all the comments which were made in connection with the bill now before us, which is very good, it does not mean that the government will be expected to sit back and do nothing for a certain number of years. On the contrary, I think that the changes taking place year after year require that the act be amended for the benefit of these people and I think that the government will be absolutely justified—and I think all the members do agree—in reconsidering this matter and in announcing in the near future the granting of special financial assistance to provide for the services which are required and for other benefits which are well deserved, since our veterans have fought to preserve our liberties.

I hope the minister will consider those few remarks which I make at the last minute, before the passing of the bill. And once again, I entirely approve this bill and hope that the recommendation I make concerning the benefits which could profit veterans will be greatly appreciated considering the extent to which they have deserved it well of our country.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE BASIC PENSION AND TO CLARIFY BASE YEAR IN ESCALATION FORMULA

On the order:

Report stage of Bill C-147, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In looking at the notices of motions pursuant to Standing Order 75(5), report stage of government bills, I would like to bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that the five motions which have been put down appear to be out of order. The argument that I would make, and I will not take too much time, is based on a study of Standing Order 62(1) and citation 244 (3) in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads as follows:

Amendments proposing, in a Money Resolution, to substitute a loan for a subsidy; to change the destination, purpose and conditions of a subsidy; attaching a condition to a subsidy; affecting the ends and provisions of a subsidy, must be moved by a Minister with the recommendation of the Crown.

Again, in citation 246(3) of Beauchesne the same point is made. While I can certainly understand the purposes for which the hon. members have put down these motions, I do believe that they go far beyond the royal recommendation and therefore cannot be received by the House at this time.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I would like to ask whether the parliamentary secretary is referring to motion No. 1, or is he considering all five amendments? In looking over the amendments, I find that they do not all fit into the same category and therefore, his argument probably applies only to the first one. Is he prepared to extend the same argument to the other amendments? Perhaps he could clarify his position.

Mr. Reid: I will be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker. I think a careful reading of each of the five notices of motion would indicate that their effect would be to increase the amount of money which the Crown would have to expend on these particular programs. On that basis, an increase in the amount of money to be expended would violate the terms of the royal recommendation and, therefore, would not be receivable by the House. I am prepared to argue each one separately, if you wish, but it does seem to me that the same argument is applicable to all five of the notices of motions.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to discuss the point of order raised by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. (Mr. Reid)?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss notice of motion No. 1 under the name of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) and which reads as follows:

That Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act be amended by deleting the words "one hundred dollars" from Clause 1 at line 9 and substituting therefor the words "two hundred dollars".

Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons governing us and that we wish to follow as closely as possible, although it may sometimes hinder us in our work as members of the House when we want to be effective and consistent with the desires of the people we represent, Standing Order 75 (5) reads as follows:

(5) If, not later than twenty-four hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a bill, it shall be printed on a notice paper.

Consequently, notice of motion No. 1 complies with the practice provided for Standing Order 75 (5) as it was given as required by the standing order. Therefore, the amendment can be declared receivable.

I will now refer to Standing Order 75(8) which is extremely important and which states the following:

When the Order of the Day for the consideration of a report stage is called,

—exactly as in the present situation—

—any amendment

—not only a few—

—of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment.

Standing Order 75(8) is extremely important because it does not establish a category, as the hon. parliamentary secretary seemed to say, concerning money or other motions. It reads and I quote:

—any amendment—

—to a bill, at the report stage—

—of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment.

Finally I shall quote section (10) of the same order concerning the power of the Speaker as regards amendments at the report stage. We shall see that under section (10) the Speaker has some latitude when ruling on the admissibility of amendments, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker shall have power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage and may, if he thinks fit, call upon any member who has given notice of an amendment to give such explanation of the subject of the amendment as may enable Mr. Speaker to form a judgment upon it.

It is exactly what the Chair, allows us to do now that is to plead in favour of this motion which aims at increasing the basic amount of the old age pension from $100 to $200 and, Mr. Speaker, we are grateful for it.

On the other hand, I remind the Chair of its power to select or combine the proposed amendments so as to enable the House to examine these proposals in order that the debate can be more profound, serious and in accordance with the wishes of people. So I think that these references, and particularly section (8), according to which any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment, establish that the notice of motion of the hon. member for Abitibi is in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I thank hon. members for the comments they have so willingly—

[English]

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like you to make a ruling on these separately, and not in bulk.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. To pursue what I was saying, hon. members may comment, but it is up to the Chair to make a decision. I do not think that one can ask the Chair to make the same decision on every motion. We have to follow the rule of relevancy in this House and at the same time we invite members not to be repetitive. In this case, it may be that the Chair would not have to repeat itself. I have had the opportunity over the past two days to look at the motions that have been presented, and to examine the different Standing Orders and the citations from Beauchesne, and I think I am in a position to render a decision at this time on all of the motions. I will not accept the suggestion of the hon. member to limit my decision to one of these motions.

Mr. Peters: I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you can only call one of these motions at a time. I have asked that they be called one at a time. You would need unanimous consent to call all five of them en bloc, and I suggest that you do not have that unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Concerning the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I made some comments and quotations just now about notice of motion No. 1, but if I had known that you were intending to consider a ruling on all five of our party's amendments, I would have brought forward arguments on the other resolutions, since some of them had a bearing on the eligibility age of 60, some are financial motions and others again are strictly administrative ones.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member naturally has a right to comment on each of these motions. The Chair considers that the notices of motions are definitely interrelated, and I think therefore that I can say straight away, on my own initiative, that the reasons behind the ruling that I propose to make concerning the five motions are based on Standing orders, and have precedents in previous rulings and opinions, or in interpretations of Standing orders in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. I do not see why the Chair should have to make a ruling on any one motion in isolation.

[English]

The hon. member for Timiskaming seems to be asking the Chair to render a decision on all of these motions one at a time, because only one motion can be put at a time. The Chair hesitates to accept the suggestion of the hon. member because if these motions are out of order they cannot be put. I do not think the Chair is automatically forced to put a motion and then to make a decision on its acceptability. The Chair has had enough time to make up its mind as to the acceptability of these motions.

[Translation]

—the same applies. I would therefore ask the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) as well as all other hon. members who wish to comment on the relevancy or irrelevancy of the amendments now before the House to do so immediately.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I remember that, in the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, with the co-operation of the members of that committee and its chairman, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), each one of these motions was discussed separately. This is why I find it is more or less fair for the Chair to state emphatically that the five motions are out of order, since they were considered in committee.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I am going to abide by your ruling and I shall regretfully argue about these five notices of motions.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might make a suggestion. I appreciate the problem that faces Your Honour, but I think I can also see the point of view of the hon. members who proposed these motions. It does seem to me it would be quite in order for Your Honour to wait until there has been discussion on the procedural acceptability of all five motions and then make one ruling, or of course you could rule on the first one, and indicate that you are likely to rule the same way on the others. But it does seem to me that the members who put down these motions have the right to express their views on the procedural acceptability of them in the way that they choose, whether on all at once, or on each one at a time. I suggest that you hear argument on each of them seriatim and then Your Honour could make a ruling at the end of that, with possibly one ruling on all five.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair will try to be as fair as it can. For the purpose of facilitating the discussion, perhaps at this time I could put forward some points. The problem is whether the Standing Order or the citation on which I am ready to base my decision will supply enough ground to make my decision on all of these motions.

• (1640)

The hon. parliamentary secretary has referred to Standing Order 62 and he also referred to citation 246 of Beauchesne. I think we have in these two points the crux of the problem with which we are faced as to the acceptability of these motions that are presently suggested to the House.

[Translation]

I should like to point out to hon. members that the five motions now before the House reveal the implicit and obvious intention to increase public expenses beyond the limits set by the the recommendation accompanying the bill, which reads as follows:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure to amend the Old Age Security Act; to increase the basic amount of the monthly old age pension to one hundred dollars effective April 1, 1973 with future escalation to commence April 1, 1974; and under Part II of the Act to clarify which year is the base year in the escalation formula and to simplify the calculation of income.

That obviously concerns especially the first motion now before the House. Nevertheless, the other motions are also contrary to His Excellency's recommendation, as they tend to increase the expense of public funds in addition to going beyond the scope of the bill, but I will get back to that.

Earlier, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) referred to Standing Order 75 and quoted paragraphs (5) and (8) of the Standing Orders of the House and even paragraph (10). In other words, he referred to a Standing Order outlining the procedure for introducing a motion similar to the one he himself introduced, motion No. 1, and the others as to the time allowed. Then he says that in Standing Order 75 (8), it is clearly stated that whenever a motion is introduced under Standing Order 75, it shall be open to debate and amendments.

Finally, referring to Standing Order 75(10), he bases his theory on the Chair's authority to select, combine or amend certain motions presented to the House, but he forgot that Standing Order 75(6) states the following:

(6) When a recommendation of the Governor General is required in relation to any amendment to be proposed at the report stage of a bill, at least twenty-four hours written notice shall be given—

I do not suggest that Standing Order 75(6) provides a full answer to the hon. member's question, but as this provision contained in the Standing Order refers to the requirement, in some cases, of obtaining a recommendation of the Governor General, this means automatically, at least in my opinion, that the above-mentioned Standing Order does not prevail over Standing Order 62 which deals precisely with financial provisions and which reads as follows:

62. (1) This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

(2) The message and recommendation of the Governor General in relation to any bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost shall be printed on the Notice Paper and in the Votes and Proceedings when any such measure is to be introduced and the text of such recommendation shall be printed with or annexed to every such bill.

Now let me refer to Citation 246(3) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 4th Edition, page 207, which reads as follows:

(3) The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the royal demand of recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown, not only if it increases the amount, but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

Hon. members will therefore be able to see that Standing Order 62 and the Citation of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms provide the Chair with enough arguments to enable the Chair to consider at least the 5 motions now before us, and with enough precedents to support a negative decision with regard to the proposals before us.

Of course, if hon. members wish to further enlighten the Chair, I am willing to listen to all arguments but I hope that the points they will make will relate to those matters I have raised.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, might I simply say that we are not taking any part in this debate. After many years of the practice of law I have learned the sound and salutary rule, never get into family fights between husband and wife.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to ask you to refer to May, 18th Edition of 1971, page 507, which states, and I quote:

[English]

Amendments may be made in every part of the bill whether in clauses or the schedules. Clauses may be left out and new clauses and schedules added. Amendments to the preamble and title also admissible where amendments have been made to the bill which render them necessary.

[Translation]

Then, Mr. Speaker, we are referred to page 509 and I shall spare the House my English. It is a citation from Parliamentary Practice of Sir T. Erskine May explaining the procedure regarding inadmissible amendments at the report stage.

I would also refer you to the chapter dealing with inadmissible amendments on page 508 of the same edition, namely to chapter 21 where 11 cases of inadmissible amendments are listed.

It goes without saying that amendments which do not pertain to the bill are out of order. I would point out that this does not apply to the five amendments we are bringing forward. Ours deal directly with Bill C-147 and are not intended to prevent its passage but to improve it and ensure that it meets the needs of our fellow citizens more adequately.

Paragraph (2) on page 508 which deals with inadmissible amendments reads as follows:

• (1650)

[English]

An amendment cannot be admitted, if it is governed by or dependent upon amendments which have already been negatived . . .

[Translation]

That does not apply to our five amendments, Mr. Speaker.

In paragraph (3), it is said that amendment inconsistent with or opposed to the bill or to the committee is decision, are out of order. That does not apply either because, through the contributions of the hon. members for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), Champlain (Mr. Matte) and Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), I succeeded in convincing the committee to pass a resolution to study the possibility of increasing the pension's basic amount, lowering the age of eligibility and paying the pension to the spouse of a pensioner regardless of age.

Mr. Speaker, under the rules, the terms of reference of the committee were to study Bill C-147, that is all. The Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs agreed, thanks to the arguments of my colleagues, to adopt unanimously a resolution to study the matter and to allow the committee to expand his terms of reference on his own account.

Mr. Speaker, that indicates that we would like the House of Commons to take the same position so that we could go further than what is provided in the bill and that the House be authorized to study the substance of those amendments. Notice of motion No 1 moved by the hon. member for Abitibi tends to increase the basic amount; motion No 2, moved by this member tends to lower to 60 the age of eligibility; motion No 3 of the hon. member for Bellechasse tends to give the old age pension to the spouse when one of the two has received it; motion No 4 of the hon. member for Champlain provides an alternative while respecting individual freedom, namely that between 60 and 65, anyone who applies will be eligible to that pension; and motion No 5 moved by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) provides for the payment of the old age security pension to every handicapped person who is 50 years of age.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, all this corresponds to what I have said until now. If one refers to paragraph (4) of chapter XXI of May's 18th edition, one can read, and I quote:

[English]

Amendments are inadmissible if they refer to, or are not intelligible without, subsequent amendments or schedules, of which notice has not been given . . .

[Translation]

I gloss over the remainder, Mr. Speaker, and one will note that again the Standing Orders are respected. According to subsection (5), this would mean the negation of the bill. Far from rejecting the bill, from opposing it, from submitting amendments which would reject it, we want to complete the bill. We want to improve it and that is in conformity with the citations I quoted earlier.

Mr. Speaker, subsection (5) gives two extremely interesting examples which prove the admissibility of our amendments and I will refer you to subsection (6) that I will abstain from reading to save time because we do not want to kill the bill; indeed we want that bill to pass as fast as possible and to really meet the needs of our fellow Canadians. Consequently, I only refer the Chair to subsections 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Subsection 9 provides as follows:

[English]

An amendment is out of order if it is offered at a wrong place in the bill . . .

[Translation]

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is the proper clause, that the right clause is being amended and it goes on up to subsection 12.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up any further time of the House. I still have many other quotations to make, namely the record of the House of Commons proceedings for December 11, 1969 when a debate on procedure has held. Reference is made—the Chair has also spoken about it—to citation 263(2) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition of Parliamentary Rules and Procedures which is found on page 220. I will quote it.

Mr. Speaker, while I do so, I would respectfully ask you to try and see the relation between the citation and the notices of motions which we are introducing. The citation reads as follows:

(2) The principle that the sanction of the Crown must be given to every grant of money drawn from the public revenue, applies equally to the taxation levied to provide that revenue. No motion can therefore be made to impose a tax, save by a Minister of the Crown, unless such tax be in substitution, by way of equivalent, for taxation at that moment submitted to the consideration of Parliament; nor can the amount of a tax proposed on behalf of the Crown be augmented, nor any alteration made in the area of imposition.

Mr. Speaker, I will refer you to the five notices of motions since they have to be dealt with together and I point out that none of those provides for a tax increase or a change in the group of people which would be taxed. Those notices of motions have absolutely nothing to do with taxation. They have to do with the terms of eligibility for old age security pensions. This is something entirely different, Mr. Speaker.

We are not asking the government to vote credits or Parliament to pass an act imposing a tax to finance old age security pensions. We know that this government has no other solution in its crazy system to finance old age pensions than to impose further taxes.

The amendments moved by the hon. member for Abitibi as well as myself and the hon. members for Bellechasse and Champlain and Portneuf deal only with the terms of eligibility for the old age pension.

This is why Citation 263(2) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, do not apply. Citation 276(1) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, do not apply and neither do Citations 268(2) and 276(8).

Citation 276(1) reads as follows:

—the royal initiation in taxation implies the exclusive right to define the incidence as well as the amount of burdens to be placed upon the people, and that an amendment which transfers a burden to taxpayers nor previously liable is an infringement on this initiative.

Mr. Speaker, we do not advocate heavier taxes for the people. We are fighting for fewer taxes. We do not urge either that one class, one category of citizens be taxed to pay for old age security pensions. We simply request that the House of Commons revise its position, revise the conditions of eligibility provided for in Bill C-147, which is before us, in order that these conditions of eligibility be broader and tailored to the needs of our fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, this is our mandate and I figure that it is of outmost importance for each member of this House, whatever parts he belongs to, to be able to present measures for the improvement of bills, if not, we are wasting our time.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being five o'clock, we have to suspend the debate on this point of procedure, and even adjourn the decision until the House resumes at 8 p.m. and at this moment—

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed—

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the attendance of the four House leaders to ask, in view of the great significance of this legislation, whether we ought not to proceed from five to six o'clock with consideration of Bill C-147, since we definitely want this bill to pass but with the amendments which we have introduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

[English]

Is there consent to suspend private members' hour?

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Speaker. There is an important bill which has to be discussed at five o'clock. It may be that after a short speech the government may see fit to give its approval to the principle of the bill. We would be glad at that time to resume the matter we are now discussing.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: I am amazed at the view expressed by my hon. colleague from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), because the other day he "killed" the private members' hour trying to bring about a surprise vote on a Friday, and today he opposes any further consideration of the question of old age security. Now I understand why, yesterday, he moved this stupid motion of his on Polymer—

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Canadian National Railways—Discussions on amendment of pension plan to provide payments on basis of 2 per cent per year of service; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—External Affairs—Representations to United States against proposed flooding of Skagit River Valley in Canada for power project; the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—Government Administration—Increase in departments and buildings in Ottawa—Future policy.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions through the usual channels. I think Your Honour might find there will be agreement to take No. 7 on the Order Paper, a bill standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there unanimous consent to the suggestion made by the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS

Mr. James McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-22, to amend the Broadcasting Act (advertising on children's programs), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest by hon. members in this bill, perhaps hon. members might be prepared to give consideration to placing a 10 minute time limit on speeches in order to permit maximum participation. I hope this will permit the bill to be sufficiently dealt with that it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would be happy to agree to a 10 minute time limit during this hour.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

It might be advisable to agree on five minutes each in order to return immediately to Bill C-147, in view of its importance.

An hon. Member: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that there have been any discussions on this point through the usual channels. I hope that the hon. member will defer his suggestion until that can occur and the member on our side who is responsible for our contribution to this private members' hour can confer with his members to ensure they are agreeable. Perhaps the hon. member could proceed with his speech and there could be some agreement.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there have been some consultations, although not with all parties in the House. However, if there would be agreement, we certainly would agree to that proposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agree to what?

Mr. Reid: Ten minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the Chair to understand that it is 10 minutes for the whole debate or 10 minutes per speech?

Mr. Lefebvre: Per speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that a limit of 10 minutes be imposed on hon. members' contributions to the debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that agreement effectively cuts out half my speech. I am pleased there is consent because I know there is a great deal of interest in this bill and for very good reasons. I am sure these reasons will manifest themselves as the debate proceeds in the very limited time at our disposal.

This bill which I have the privilege to move, seconded by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) and supported by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), was first introduced in the House on April 7, 1971. Hon. members who are interested may want to refer to Hansard for that date. Unfortunately, at that time the bill did not receive sufficient support to be referred to committee or, shall I say, perhaps it was supported to death.

I am hoping for the reasons I will set out in the very brief moments at my disposal that there will be a disposition on the part of the House at this time to allow the bill to go before the committee, not because of any desire on my part to pre-empt the government's responsibility here because I recognize this is an area which is within the government's responsibility. As a matter of fact, I know that the government is interested in this bill.

Since the bill was first introduced, there has been considerable interest all across the country. As a result of the debate in this House and the debate that was generated across the country, a number of groups have become very active in support of the principle of the bill. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that as a result of the bill, which has served as a catalyst for this problem of growing concern, the Canadian Association of Advertisers and the Canadian Association of Broadcasters in the fall of 1971 introduced their code of conduct governing advertising directed at children.

This code became effective January 1, 1972. I am hoping the code will be one area that can be discussed at greater length and in greater depth if the bill is permitted to go before the committee. Indeed, the people responsible for the code can be called upon to give evidence. I think it is fair to say that the code has not proven to be successful. In the first instance, it is a voluntary code. This means the organization sponsoring that code has to depend upon the goodwill of the participating stations to see that the regulations are enforced. The monitoring that has gone on from time to time indicates that the code has not been observed, generally speaking, right across the country. Of course, the principal breaches of the code take place around Christmas time.

Following the introduction of the code, the Quebec government introduced regulations under their consumer protection act. The regulations were designed to protect, within the limited jurisdiction of the province of Quebec, children in that province from advertising emanating within that province. The regulation forbids advertising which incites children to buy or incites them to incite others to buy the product. That is the essential regulation. There are others which also govern the kind of advertising that can be directed toward children. I know there is great interest on the part of the Quebec government to have national legislation in this area because of their limited jurisdiction.

I am also aware that the Canadian Radio and Television Commission, under the distinguished chairmanship of Mr. Juneau, has been conducting studies into this and has been monitoring radio and television stations across the country from time to time. If the bill is permitted to go to the committee, I would expect that the chairman of the CRTC and some of his officials would be called as witnesses. They would be able to tell us exactly what they have found as a result of their studies.

In addition, there are studies underway at the present time at several Canadian universities, including the University of Montreal, McGill University and the University of Toronto. I also understand there are studies underway at Trent University. The United States has been ahead of us in this area, not in the issuing of regulations, but in the emergence of concerned groups reacting to the situation. There is an organization in Boston called Action for Children's Television which was successful in obtaining hearings before the Federal Communications Commission. These hearings are now a matter of public record and could be useful material for the committee to study if this bill is referred to the committee. Then, there are the concerned parents' groups which have been started in a number of cities across Canada, here in Ottawa, in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and others.

• (1710)

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take the time of the House for much longer because I should like to hear from other hon. members. I have already made my views known. I spoke in the debate which took place when the bill was first introduced in April of 1971. Perhaps I could close my brief remarks by saying that historically we protect children. Under the law they receive special protection. Child labour laws recognize the vulnerability of children. There are laws which prohibit children entering into contracts. But the law does not afford protection to children who are the targets of high pressure, subtle television techniques. Statistics Canada made a survey last year which indicated that Canadian children are exposed to more than 20 hours of television every week. These programs contain many high-pressure commercial messages which in many instances distort the child's view of the real world, make the child cynical about what is going on around him and which build up expectations which, very often because of financial circumstances, cannot possibly be fulfilled. Consequently, serious damage is done to the child-parent relationship. I say this with some feeling because I am the father of six children ranging in age from six to 12.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Even the advertizing industry itself is concerned. I will conclude my remarks by quoting from the Vice-Chairman of one of the largest advertizing agencies in the world—John Burghardt of Young and Rubican:

> We advertizers speak to 3, 7 and 12-year olds with the same subtle seductive techniques used in selling to adults. We use warmth and emotion, surprise and excitement, humor and suspense, to create images and auras which have little or nothing to do with the products concerned.

I can put it in no better way than the advertizing people have put it themselves in this quotation. I do hope the House will be disposed to allow this bill to go to committee because there is a large body of evidence to support my contention that children are not a proper target for commercial advertizing. Certainly, there is a case for much stronger regulation to be made to protect our children from these subtle advertising techniques.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity we have to be so brief in speaking to this important bill, but if the House will permit the bill, or even the subject matter of the bill, to go before a committee there will be much more opportunity for a good deal to be said, as well as much to be heard with regard to a matter which is of great concern, I believe, to many people of this country, and particularly to parents.

The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has brought before us a very urgent matter, and although there is at present no extensive body of knowledge on the subject of child-directed advertising, this has not prevented the development of some very definite views ranging from severe criticism to proposals for complete abolition. And that is what we find in Bill C-22. The hon. member for St. John's East has presented the House with a bill which is straightforward, unambiguous, even blunt. He is not endeavouring to regulate, reform or even control advertising directed at children, but to eliminate it. The bill is very clear. It states that no advertisements shall be permitted during the broadcast of a program devoted to children.

How important, really, is a question such as advertising directed at children? How much urgency should be attached to it compared with other national needs? Should this parliament, with so many other pressing concerns before it, spend time worrying about commercials aimed at children?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Penner: I hear a chorus of members saying, yes. Allow me to join that chorus. A report recently prepared for the Canadian Advertising Board and entitled "The Child's World and Television Advertising" states clearly that a sizeable minority of people in Canada are in favour of stringent controls on advertising directed at children, or the abolition of such advertising. While current concern in Canada has not so far resulted in a public hearing, I think that such a public hearing is long overdue. Hearings of this kind have taken place in the United States and it is about time this parliament took a look at all or some of the possible adverse effects of advertising directed at children. There is a need, in my view, for more study and further investigation. It is largely on this basis that I willingly lend my support to Bill C-22, and was pleased to second it in the hope that it will be sent to a committee for closer scrutiny.

The whole question of what to do about child-directed advertising is too extensive a topic to be decided during a brief debate. At the same time, the problem is too crucial to allow us to have this bill talked out and tumbled to the bottom of the order paper. I, therefore, urge all hon. members to allow the measure before us to proceed to a committee where the many aspects of the subject can be duly considered in depth through the hearing of witnesses and through the examination of briefs which will undoubtedly be presented.

The hon. member for St. John's East mentioned that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters has adopted a broadcasting code to govern advertising directed at children. I am sure all hon. members welcome this action toward self-regulation which has been taken by the broadcasting industry. We should not feel, however, that simply because such a code is in existence the problems which may exist as a result of advertising directed at children have been solved or that legislation is not necessary. There is, I believe, a need either to eliminate such advertising or, at least, to mitigate possible adverse effects caused by television advertising directed at children. The broadcast code governing advertising for children presents an interesting example of potential self-regulation by an industry, but has the code been strictly enforced? Is it perhaps necessary to go much further by amending the Broadcasting Act and introducing regulations which would be much more effective in controlling whatever adverse effects may be produced by this kind of advertising? The hon. member for St. John's East has given us the opportunity to make these inquiries and I hope we shall find some answers when this bill goes to the committee.

In the brief time still left to me, I should like to say a little more about my personal concern in relation to advertising directed at children. The hon. member for St. John's East mentioned the amount of time children spend watching television programs. Many of these programs contain commercials which are directed specifically to the younger age groups. What does this do? Certainly, all advertising has the effect of stimulating expectations. I sometimes wonder how many children have been disappointed or disillusioned when what they were led to expect was not fulfilled in reality. We all know that children have little or no purchasing power and so are dependent on their parents to fulfil their desire for advertised products. What happens, particularly in low income families, when their demands cannot be met? Is advertising directed at children responsible for causing frustration and conflict in many Canadian homes? I suspect it is. The code for advertising for children, which has been referred to earlier, does say, of course, that advertising must not urge children to ask their parents to purchase products. That is what it says, but can we seriously believe that such a restriction will effectively eliminate undue pressure on parents? Not likely!

The two products that are chiefly involved in children's television advertising are toys and breakfast cereals. Exposure to these advertisements will almost certainly lead children to influence their parents to make purchases. What do these particular products represent? Recreation and nutrition. These surely are matters of some considerable importance to most parents. We wonder whether children's advertising may seriously undermine the parents' own choice of values for their children, so that instead of deciding what they should do for recreation and what they should eat that is nutritionally valuable, it is decided for them through the television media.

Some people, of course, believe that if you have codes or guidelines you may lessen the evil. But others feel very strongly that what is needed is not a lessening of the evil but that the evil disappear completely. So perhaps nothing short of abolition of advertising aimed at children can be regarded as reasonable. Such is the proposal contained in Bill C-22, and in my view it ought to be carefully examined by a committee. All of the aspects of the problem must be carefully looked at by the members of such a committee. I, therefore, urge once more that members allow this bill to proceed for further examination.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by commending the hon. member for St. John's East for bringing forward this bill which I am pleased to support. I also ask other hon.

members of this House to register their concern for our country's children by allowing this bill to go on further to another stage of consideration, where it can be more carefully scrutinized and examined.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, once again it gives me a great deal of satisfaction to be able to support this bill introduced by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I think he has waged a long fight on this matter and has been doing a very great public service in bringing it increasingly to the attention of people from coast to coast. I am glad to see that there is every prospect this afternoon of moving it one stage further to committee, which represents a definite advance toward the bill becoming legislation.

We are here considering the effect of advertising on children. Last January I was very much interested to read an article that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen written by Charles King. In this article he referred to some United States figures, which I do not think are too much out of line since the United States is Canada writ large. We very often find that we are just a little behind certain trends that have gone a long way in the United States. I sometimes wish we could reverse that situation.

This article reads as follows:

According to Dr. Gerald Looney, a pediatrics professor at the University of Arizona, American children spend more time watching television than doing anything else but sleep.

That gives some idea of the magnitude of the problem.

If this news weren't depressing enough, he went on to estimate that by the age of 14, each American child has watched on his tiny screen the violent assault or destruction of nearly 18,000 human beings.

To me this is a very important reason this bill should be passed and we get rid of advertising, at least on children's programs. These programs continually bring up the subject of violence as though this were something unreal, a fantasy. I think one of these days we will discover that a great deal of violence, which is showing a marked increase on our continent, is due to the fact that from their very early stages little tots became accustomed to seeing people blown up, mutilated and in many other ways destroyed. They think of this merely as a picture rather than transferring it into real life. They see pictures of things happening in Viet Nam and in other parts of the world, and to them it is still only a picture. Finally, those people who are at all abnormal or deranged commit acts of violence in our midst which to them are still unreal and fantasy.

This is one reason that I believe we should eliminate advertising on children's programs. The line between fantasy and reality as far as children are concerned is nonexistent because they have become brainwashed. They see violence in all its forms when they are young and they carry this with them into adult life. It is deeply ingrained in them in their early years. I think earlier speakers have touched on this point.

The Ottawa Citizen article continues:

And to relieve the monotony of mayhem, he's been treated to 5,000 solid hours of commercial messages coaxing him (or her) to put the arm on Mom or Dad to buy 350,000 individual items at the neighbourhood supermarket.

That is another evil of commercial advertising as far as children are concerned. I do not care what the advertising code says about their being opposed to undue pressure being exerted on parents by children. This sort of thing goes on daily. I am sure the hon. member for St. John's East remembers very well, as I do, that during the days of the earlier food prices committee the representatives of the cornflakes and other breakfast food people appeared, and reference was made at that time to commercials that urge children to put pressure on Mom and Dad, because Yogi Bear would get them if they did not buy the particular cereal that was being advertised.

This kind of pressure on parents in wrong, and wrong from every angle. It is wrong that parents in low income families are pressured by their children to buy things that they neither want nor can afford, thus throwing their whole family budget out of alignment. It is wrong that parents are pressured by their children to accumulate a lot of things. Always there is this ethic that we must have more and more, instead of the much better ethic of getting out and doing things and developing ourselves.

If we are to pay any attention to what the Club of Rome and other people tell us about developing a different kind of ethic, instead of always asking for more and more, then we must start with the tiny children of today. We must make them selective and more careful in outlook. We must get them to do things in a practical way instead of letting them sit in front of the idiot box, everlastingly having displayed before their eyes things for which they pressure their parents. This is wrong, and the sooner this bill is passed and we put a stop to it, the better.

In his explanatory note to the bill, the hon. member for St. John's East refers to children's programs having a captive audience. While many of these programs are excellent, he says, they usually contain commercial messages that are directed at a highly impressionable and very susceptible audience. And, I may add, a completely defenceless one. I was interested to read the other day that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) had sent out a letter supporting the annual Child Safety week. He said in this letter:

• (1730)

Children are trusting little souls. From the day they are born they are protected and guided by adults.

Adults, too often, neglect this responsibility. As the tiny ones become more independent, their seniors too frequently relax the protection they have trained the child to expect.

This is true. In our way of living, with fathers and mothers being more and more away from home for a good part of their children's day, the children are defenceless. When the children are alone, what is more natural for them than to sit and watch endless hours of television programs during which they are subjected to endless hours of pressure through advertising. I do not think we should permit our children to be bombarded in this way. We are taking defenceless children who have not yet built up any resources of judgment or discrimination and allowing them to be bombarded with this kind of advertising so that they, in turn, can bombard their parents to buy things which in many cases are quite undesirable, have poor nutritional value or have an exceedingly bad effect on the family purse.

Material explaining the National Code of Advertising speaks of the danger of measures which will take too much out of the public purse. I think there is a need for measures which would prevent too much being taken out of the private purse in the form of training children to bombard their parents to buy things which are not needed.

I have one final note. In the committee on food prices we are beginning to have a great deal of concern about consumer buying habits. There are people who buy things on impulse and there are people who are pressured into buying things through advertising, through promotions, and so on. It seems to me that if we are ever to inculcate good buying habits in consumers, the place to begin is with children of early age. That is why I believe this is an especially valuable bill. So, in turn, I conclude by commending the hon. member for St. John's East for bringing forth this bill. I wish the bill speedy passage through the committee.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, as enthusiastically as I can, I wish to support the introduction of this bill and its speedy treatment by the committee. As the father of five children, I and the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) who introduced this bill, who is the father of six children, perhaps have a little bit of experience with regard to the effect of television advertising in the family living room.

Sometimes my children ask me what a Member of Parliament can accomplish in Ottawa, or what a Member of Parliament does. To tell the truth, sometimes it is a little difficult to answer the question. Today, however, the children of the hon. member for St. John's East have seen with their own eyes what a Member of Parliament can accomplish, indeed directly on their behalf because this bill has been presented before, has been talked about a great deal—one might even say it has been talked out—and now it appears it will be successful in at least being transmitted to a committee with, I may say, the endorsement of three very fine speeches which have preceded my very brief speech in support.

The hon. member for St. John's East has given a lesson today, not only to his children but to new Members of Parliament, in that he did not quit when he first brought in this bill, but reintroduced it and kept at it, until he has now a good deal of public support which I predict will be shown to be increasing as the public begins to examine the implications of the measure the hon. member has introduced. I shall quote a very brief passage to show the importance which so many people attach to the subject of children's advertising on television. This is a quotation from the February issue of Saturday Night. It appears in a column written by Robert Fulford, who puts the case very succinctly:

> Children's advertising is one of the truly grotesque scabs on North American capitalism. Advertisers use it to con children into getting their parents to pay more than they can afford for toys that are almost always close to useless. The toys seldom perform as well as the TV ads say they will, and when they do they tend to last only a few days or at most a few weeks. In the toy business everybody knows it's an axiom that if a thing is advertised on TV it's probably lousy.

As a father who has bought more than his share of toys advertised on television, I say "Amen" to that. The hon. member for St. John's East referred to the idea that society needs measures of protection for children. Indeed, in many areas of life we do have measures specifically for the purpose of protecting children. He says that here is one area where the rights of children and those who protect them are being violated. That leads me to two brief comments on the bill. The hon. member asks, in talking about programs devoted to children, what is a program devoted to children? He answers that question by saying a program devoted to children means programs such as those defined by the commission by regulation.

I think this will open up a whole area of programs which are shown during the time children are customarily expected to be awake. This, of course, takes us right into mid-evening. I suggest there should be an examination of the type of programming available during that time because, as was said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) who spoke so eloquently a few moments ago, the whole question of violence is involved.

When we examine the question of advertising and programs, this leads to a discussion of programs shown during the time which might be said to be children's time, or the time when the family has access to television. When we examine the programs and advertisements which are shown at the time known in family circles as children's time, I suggest the producers of television programs in this country and in the United States, since we import a great deal of programming from there, have a good deal to answer for, because I am appalled by the amount of violence depicted on television.

As a father—and I am proud to speak as a layman and a father on this subject—I think of the effect this type of television viewing has, in my judgment, on the minds of children, rendering them less compassionate toward society. If children grow up exposed day after day to nothing but torn and twisted bodies and various kinds of social abuses, I think this has a tendency to diminish the human qualities in our society. As parents, it is ridiculous that we should sit quietly in our living rooms and watch this. I hope no one will say, why not turn off the set? That is not the proper answer. It is much easier said than done, and it is a cop-out. I think that is the first point that will have to be examined as soon as the committee starts its examination.

• (1740)

The second point concerns advertisements that are shown during what I called a few moments ago children's time. I do not mean only advertisements that are directed at children, such as those telling them to buy this toy or to eat that cereal. Those are advertisements for what might be called adult products which are shown on programs that are accessible to children. I submit that the crassness of much of the advertising to which the whole family is subjected needs to be examined, as well as the advertisements to which children are subjected.

I support entirely the principle, the keystone of this bill, namely, that all advertising in programs defined as children's programs be banned. I suggest that the committee look at the quality of programs available in children's time and at the advertisements to which children are subjected. I have before me—I will not take the time of the House to go through it all—a good deal of material from experts which suggests that family relationships are indeed hurt in many ways by children putting pressure on parents to buy products that they have seen advertised.

When he spoke on a previous occasion, the hon. member for St. John's East concluded his remarks by saying that the committee should have an opportunity to hear witnesses from consumer groups, from the industry, advertising agencies, government and the broadcasting networks. He said:

It would be able to evaluate the evidence and propose to the government a specific set of regulations to be included in the Broadcasting Act.

It is time that we acted on the whole question of protecting our children from television. The hon. member for St. John's East has made a commendable start and the faster we act, the better off we will be.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, looking at Bill C-22, we cannot but congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for his commendable effort in bringing forward such a useful bill, particularly in 1973. We hope it will be studied and also amended by the committee because I feel it should not only prohibit advertising directed to children but also indicate a social policy to be followed by broadcasters in dealing with children.

Previous speakers have deplored, as I myself do the nefarious effects on young Canadians of the broadcasting of commercials directed to children. These are the reasons why purpose of the bill is to amend Section 28 of the Broadcasting Act. The purpose is to prohibit all advertisement during the broadcast of a program devoted to children. That is a good thing, but it is quite insufficient.

The committee should also take good note that, not only should commercial advertising be banned from children's programs, but it should also not be allowed to come before or after such programs.

The government ought to make up its mind, once and for all, to use the CBC and the other media to show only the very best material, where children are concerned.

Everything we see for children on television is negative. We ought, on the contrary, to be using this modern means of education to promote the healthy development of children not yet of school age who might profit from television's audio-visual possibilities, which are also capable of developing adults' educational sense, especially in the fields of sports and food. Television should not be exclusively an advertising medium for companies that want to sell our children their products and then include their advertising costs in the price of their products.

Television could also be used to give young people instruction in citizenship, good manners, patriotism, and even geography, to make them appreciate the natural beauty of Canada.

We could also use television for teaching languages to two-, three- or five-year-olds.

In a word, Mr. Speaker, television, which has so far been a very bad influence on young people, could be a very useful contribution to preparing them for the future.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am 100 per cent for Bill C-22 and I hope that the committee will do all it can to ban advertising on television programs and allow broadcasters to make recommendations so that they can go on the air not with a negative approach toward young people or to use their facilities only as medium for sales and advertising, but to make young people benefit from educational programming in all disciplines.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to kill this bill because I am 100 per cent for it. I am making recommendations and suggestions which I think could be used by the committee which will study the bill to indicate to the broadcasters that broadcasting could be used for something other than advertising, particularly when it is beamed at youngsters who are not intellectually ready to tell the difference between what is wrong and what is good in advertising.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on Bill C-22 which is designed to prevent advertising on children's programs. I congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for again bringing this bill forward. I recall that it was debated about a year and a half ago and I congratulate the hon. member for being persistent and bringing it before the House again this afternoon.

It seems to me that there is increasing concern in the country about consumer protection, and surely those of us who have young families are concerned about the kind of advertising to which our children are exposed. I recall that when the bill was debated previously it was at a time when a code of ethics had just been adopted by the Canadian Association of Advertisers and Broadcasters and it was to be implemented within the following several months. It is my understanding that this code of ethics has been in effect for a little over a year and a half, and I think now would be a very appropriate time for this bill to be sent to committee for study. It would be a very appropriate time to call the advertisers and broadcasters as witnesses before the committee, to see how this voluntary code of ethics has worked out.

It seems to me that while a corporation such as the CBC, where the profit motive is not quite as strong as it is in private broadcasting, may be able to adhere to a voluntary code, the private broadcaster who is trying to make ends meet financially may be under more pressure and may not be able to adhere to that code quite so easily. So, Mr. Speaker, this is an appropriate time for the bill to go to a committee.

It may be argued that a voluntary code is better, from the point of view that we are not imposing something, but many of us are really concerned about the impact of advertising on children. I have received three or four letters concerning this bill, which is more than I would normally receive with respect to a private member's bill. It shows that there is in my constituency definite interest in this measure and, I am sure, in many other constituencies throughout the country.

It seems to me that our young people may watch too much television. Perhaps many of us who are busy in professional life or in business do not watch enough, do not have as much interest in television programs. But to learn that the average child watches some 20 hours a week of television is a startling revelation. That means the child is spending almost as much time watching television as he spends at school, and the learning impact may be as great as at school because the child is in comfortable surroundings when watching television.

Many of us find the idea especially replusive that advertisers beam their messages at the child and the child in turn puts pressure on the parents. Many adults develop a certain sales resistance; we automatically turn off a sales pitch if we are conscious of what is happening. But the mother who is raising three or four children may not be conscious that pressure is being put on her, sort of underhandedly, by her children as a result of television advertising. She may be buying goods in a local supermarket and the children will suggest that she buy certain items which they have seen advertised. As I say, she is not conscious of the sales pitch and may be pressured into buying things that are not necessary for the family. Perhaps they may even be beyond the family budget. They may be food items that are not particularly nutritious. In this connection I would like to read one paragraph from "One Child, One Chance," a report on nutrition published by the National Council of Welfare. At page 5 it reads:

> With the pervasiveness of television and other forms of advertising, the question of nutrition has taken on a new wrinkle. Today everyone, rich and poor, is getting food and nutrition information almost exclusively from high powered mass media advertising—television in particular. And much of that information is misleading. Snack foods and soda pops, sugar-coated cereals and processed foods do not add up to optimal nutrition. For the housewife, wanting to get greater food value for her food dollars, and particularly for the poor who need to get the greatest possible food value for the fewest food dollars, the lack of readily accessible, easily, understood nutrition information represents a serious public disservice.

Children are being pressured to buy food which is not necessarily nutritious, and this pressure is being transferred to the parents. Another matter which is of concern is that parents are being pressured to buy food, toys and other products which are beyond the financial resources of the family.

The hon. member's bill puts forward a solution to this problem. I would like a parliamentary committee to go into greater detail on the exact implementation of such measures, whether through this bill or by some other means, to control television advertising to children. So, Mr. Speaker, I support the proposal that the subject matter of the bill be sent to committee for study, because I believe it has great merit.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the government would have no objection to the subject matter of this bill being referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts at the conclusion of this private members' hour. If there were agreement among hon. members to discharge the bill and to send the subject matter to that committee, we would certainly be prepared to go along with it.

Mr. McGrath: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary, although the bill is so simple and straightforward that I fail to understand why it itself cannot be referred to committee. But under the circumstances, if there is a disposition to send the subject matter to committee, half a loaf is better than none and I thank the parliamentary secretary for his suggestion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid), seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), moves that this bill be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be sent to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE BASIC PENSION AND TO CLARIFY BASE YEAR IN ESCALATION FORMULA

The House resumed consideration of the following order:

> Report stage of Bill C-147, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. When the House went into private members' hour at five o'clock, a point of order had been raised and the Chair was considering a decision on the motions of hon. members.

[Translation]

I would like to know whether hon. members have completed their arguments on this point of order and on the ruling the Chair should render in connection with the five notices of motion now before us.

The hon. member for Lotbinière has the floor.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon before five o'clock, I presented some arguments which I hope underlay the admissibility of the five notices of motion submitted by my colleagues and myself to amend Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

I was quoting a citation from chapter 21 of the 18th edition of May, pages 508, 509 and 510.

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to discuss subsection (12) which is most important. With due respect, Mr. Speaker, I expect that this is the argument you will certainly use to rule all those amendments out of order. However, I think we have valid arguments to present. I am quoting from subsection (12), page 510:

[English]

Amendments or new clauses creating public charges cannot be proposed, if no money resolution or ways and means resolution has been passed, or if the amendment or clause is not covered by the terms of the resolution. This rule, which is of fundamental importance, is fully explained in chapter XXVII and on page 754.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one need only consult page 754 in Chapter 29 on amendments dealing with expenditures of public funds to realize that our five notices of motion do not fall within that category. Some may object that this is negative reasoning. Still, I feel that you cannot judge wholesale the five notices of motion since the first, as moved by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) reads as follows:

That Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act be amended by deleting the words "one hundred dollars" from Clause 1 at line 9 and substituting therefor the words "two hundred dollars".

We may be told, Mr. Speaker, that this involves the spending of public funds. This may be so, but the same does not hold true in the case of the second one which I moved, since it deals with the age of eligibility, that is 60.

Here is the notice of motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

"(2) Under the provisions of the present Act and regulations, a monthly pension may be paid to every person, even though the age is lower than that provided for in the present Act if the spouse receives a monthly pension on attaining the age provided for in the present Act."

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Bellechasse makes no mention of outlays of public moneys; the principle of his resolution bears on the age of eligibility.

The same is true of notice of motion No. 4, introduced by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), which reads as follows:

(2) Under the provisions of the present Act and regulations, a monthly pension may be paid to every person between ages 60 and 65 and who applies for such pension on retirement.

This is another important aspect of the old age security program, and the hon. member for Champlain deals with eligibility criteria rather than expense of public funds.

The same remark applies to the notice of motion of the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), covering handicapped people having reached age 50.

Mr. Speaker, I am familiar enough with the Standing Orders to know that the ordinary member cannot propose measures involving expense of public funds, and this is a matter of course. I do agree with that principle, though with some regret, but I cannot alter in one night what has been established and preserved for 100 years.

However, I consider that basically one should make a distinction between its financial results and the acknowledged intent of a proposed amendment. It being so, Mr. Speaker, one cannot—and this I suggest quite respectfully—presume that some expense is involved when a motion is aimed at lowering the eligibility age to 60. Possibly you can tell me that this will involve some expense, but I would respectfully suggest that establishing what expense is involved is not your duty or your function, nor mine either. I consider that each and every member in the House is entitled to positive participation in the debate, in drafting legislation and in their improvement. While keeping this in mind, we consider that Bill C-147, as proposed, constitutes a short step towards improvement of old age security, but this is not good enough and it is incumbent on each and every member to try and have the eligibility age lowered to 60.

Mr. Speaker, this is the end of the brief comments I had to make. I understand that they do not always agree with the Standing Orders, but I believe that it is our duty as members of the House to say it and claim it.

• (2010)

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether you decided, as of course it is your right to do, to group these amendments together and, under Standing Order 75(10), make one decision. May I suggest that the kind of parliament in which we now operate is totally different from previous parliaments. We are operating under rules which did not apply in previous parliaments. We are operating on a different basis with respect to finances. The way we handle resolutions and amendments is different now.

It is true that the Governor General's recommendation was necessary before we could introduce ways and means resolutions with respect to certain financial matters. But we changed the rules. Of course, our present rules are not reflected in Beauchesne's, May's or any other authority to which members have referred. Our present rules are totally different from those we had previously.

I suggest that the Governor General's recommendation which is necessary if a financial measure is to be enacted represents only one portion of a government bill. It is clear, according to the authorities, that moneys cannot be advanced or spent save by the authority of this House. The House of Commons and the members thereof are supreme. The other place cannot make decisions affecting financial matters. Such decisions must be made by members of this House. Their decision as to how money will be raised and spent is the deciding factor. Therefore, I suggest that the recommendation is merely a tool for governments to use in limited circumstances. They have used it in connection with bills such as Bill C-147. I suggest that if minority governments such as the present one base their position on the recommendation of the Governor General, they will find themselves in all kinds of difficulty.

I do not think these amendments are all in the same category. I think it would be easy to argue that motion No. 1, the first amendment, is contrary to the recommendation. If a ways and means resolution had been moved, probably that also would have been in conflict with the proposed amendment. However, I fail to follow the same kind of argument with respect to the second motion, which says that when a person reaches the age of 60 he "may be paid". Whether he will be paid or not is hypothetical. In this House we use the word "shall" if the entitlement is definite.

Obviously, the word "may" carries a different connotation. A man may do something depending on a number of things. Often the word "may" reflects the intent of regulations much more than of legislation. If this amendment were passed, we would provide that under certain circumstances a person who reaches the age of 60 may be paid a certain pension. I suggest that it need not necessarily be paid. Therefore, it is difficult to say if the recommendation would apply to this amendment. After all, we are to establish that an old age pension of $100 a month shall be payable as of right to every Canadian who reaches the age of 65. That is definite. When you reach that age you will, on application, receive that amount of money. However, motion No. 2 does not make the payment mandatory.

Therefore, in my opinion, it is not possible for the Governor General's recommendation to say how much money is to be involved, because some people may apply and some may not. In any event, I think such procedure is totally archaic, and if minority governments of the present type are to continue for some time—as I suggest they may—we need to change our present procedures. If we follow present procedures, subsequent parliaments may find themselves in difficulty.

Why must we rely on Standing Order 62 which has to do with financial provisions? Why must there be the Governor General's recommendation, which in any event is a lot of malarkey. The Governor General does not know anything about the money we want. The government decides what money it wants and it puts the Governor General's recommendation on the order paper. He does not even present it with his own hand, whatever that may mean. Is is just a stage of a bill. The recommendation is not a ways and means provision. Really, the recommendation merely covers government expenditures. In some ways this is a totally new device. The government discontinued the old ways but has not adopted the new ways. If we as a minority parliament think that in certain circumstances people 60 years of age should be retired, we should say so and not bother about the gobbledygook involving the Governor General.

These remarks also apply to the third motion which suggests that "a monthly pension may be paid to every person, even though the age is lower than that provided for in the present act if the spouse receives a monthly pension on attaining the age provided for in the present act." The Governor General has nothing to do with that. How can one include a recommendation with respect to this provision unless it is an open-ended recommendation—because I do not think even Statistics Canada can tell the government how many spouses are in receipt of the old age pension. A spouse may be male or female. Therefore, this matter is even more "may-ish" and "if-ish" than the previous matter of which I spoke, because we are not sure how many people are involved. We do not know if the man is older than the woman or if the woman is older than the man. I suggest that all these arguments presented on the basis of what is contained in Beauchesne's and the other authorities referred to are hypocritical. No, that is not the right word.

An hon. Member: "Hypothetical."

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Peters: Well, they are a farce and do not mean anything. They do not apply to the circumstances because such arguments do not take into consideration the changes made to our Standing Orders. I hope, Mr. Speaker—I throw in this thought—that the Clerk and the Clerk Assistant will be given sabbatical leave so they can rewrite the rules in order that we can apply our present Standing Orders.

• (2020)

I do not believe that the arguments being made apply to the circumstances. If we accept the argument by the government or other members against allowing the introduction of "if", "may" or permissive clauses that are operative only after the regulations making them operative are passed, we are not doing justice to the changes that were made to the Standing Orders. I am sure many members would be pleased to see these amendments accepted, to vote on them, and if the amendments are passed, the government—which obviously would like to stay in office—would be quite happy to find the money and might even go to the Governor General to ask him to change the recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: This is a minority parliament, and to stand on an archaic rule backed by archaic precedents is not in keeping with the intention of most members of this House. I hope Your Honour will take this into consideration and that you will be lenient and make operative the decision that I am sure most Members of Parliament wish to be implemented. This involves a reduction in the age limit, not necessarily as a right but as a "may". I hope Your Honour will give consideration to this aspect of the matter.

There is no precedent Your Honour can quote that can satisfy me. The precedent is really based on the change in the Standing Orders. When we got rid of ways and means resolutions and the recommendations attached thereto, we substituted the song and dance but retained something that really does not mean anything. I suggest that under the new Standing Orders the Governor General's recommendation has no purpose in this or any other bill. I hope Your Honour will consider the changes that have been made and will assist the members of this House in implementing them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks of my colleague from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I should like to add a few points to show that if we abide by the letter of the interpretation given in Beauchesne, the House would constantly be paralyzed.

Let us consider for instance the case where the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) proposed a motion to display the national flag in the House. The cost of the flag alone entailed an expenditure which should have been refused. There is obviously no motion or legislation that can be passed in this House and entail no expenditure. This means that every one of us is utterly paralyzed and that only the hon. members of the Cabinet would have a right to do something in Parliament.

My second argument, Mr. Speaker, is that it is perfectly possible for us to approve our amendments and lower the eligibility age for the old age security pension to 60, or grant it automatically to the spouse, without necessarily upsetting the budget. One would merely have to find a way of saving somewhere and balancing it. It is not certain that this would mean a raise; my amendment specifies that an elderly person would get a pension if he applied for it. It might well happen that nobody would ask for it, in which case there would be no supplementary expenditure.

And so, in order for all members to have a chance to express their opinions, I wonder if it would not be better if the Chair would declare these amendments in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I thank those hon. members who have sought by all available means to enlighten the Chair as to the decision it must make. With hon. members' permission, I think I will start by dealing with some points that were brought up by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

[English]

In his concluding remarks, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said that the Chair could quote no precedent that would satisfy him. I trust the hon. member will accept the fact that the Speaker is not here to satisfy hon. members, but to apply the rules to the best of his ability. The hon. member also spoke of archaic rules, interpretation of the rules and changes in them. He must realize that as long as we proceed under this kind of parliamentary system where precedents and practices are the basis of the system, the Chair cannot accept his argument.

I wonder whether the hon. member for Timiskaming includes Standing Order 62 in the rules which he says are archaic. At the time of the changes to the Standing Orders, Standing Order 62 was not changed. Also, the hon. member suggested that the Chair apply Standing Order 62 for the first motion before us, but with regard to the other motions he suggested that Standing Order 62 is archaic and does not apply. Therefore, the argument he put forward to change this basic opinion cannot be accepted.

[Translation]

Now, to revert to a point I made in my comments this afternoon, I wish to remind hon. members, as I have just done in English, that the Chair is not supposed to give some leeway or be good-natured, but must apply the Standing Orders and see that the practices and customs are upheld.

I agree with hon. members that it would perhaps be advisable to review the Standing Orders, but this is a matter left at the discretion of hon. members who all know that the Committee on Procedure and Organization is already considering the last changes made in 1968.

In my remarks of a while ago, I referred hon. members to Standing Order 62(1) which states and I quote:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost,—

And subsection (2) states that the message of His Excellency shall be printed on the Notice Paper and presented to Mr. Speaker. I do not have such a recommendation at hand for the time being and even if hon. members wish to claim that the reference to the expense of public funds is perhaps not as clear as some people or as the Chair may claim. Even if the Chair is asked to exercise discretion and not to solve financial questions, I completely disagree with the hon. member for Lotbinière because that is precisely one of the main duties of the Chair, namely to consider the measures presented to this House to know whether they comply with our Standing Orders, practices and precedents.

I also referred hon. members to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. Citation 246 is quite clear. It reads as follows:

> —the royal demand of recommendation . . . must . . . once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced . . .)

—and I do not believe that the recommendation was withdrawn and replaced.

I keep on quoting:

> —not only the amount of a charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

I fail to see how the Chair can admit that the amendments now before the House are not contrary to citation 246. The hon. member said that that citation was written by the author in the light of past Standing Orders, but I think that Beauchesne's is so much quoted in this House that no decision taken in this House has resulted in shelving this interesting and useful book. The Chair can easily use it. I suggest that no hon. member has yet been able to find fault with these two points.

Let me also strengthen my point by referring hon. members to the debate on procedure which took place on May 16, 1972 when the Speaker had to rule on similar amendments concerning a bill on old age security pensions. One can read on page 2326 of Hansard for May 16, 1972, and I quote:

> This type of motion requires the recommendation of His Excellency.

And at the bottom of the same page, on the right hand side, one can read:

> I suggest that it clearly is not possible for an hon. member to present a bill or an amendment involving disbursements, unless such bill or amendment be accompanied by a recommendation of the Crown.

And on page 2327, on the right hand side, one can read:

> I would remind the hon. member for Lotbinière that even if the minister should sponsor the motion before us, it would not be sufficient since it would require the approval of the Crown.

I refer to these statements in an attempt to explain to hon. members that the Chair is not here to change the Standing Orders but to apply them. The hon. member for Lotbinière, in his comments, said that the Chair should go beyond its prerogatives. As stated earlier, he said that it was not the responsibility of the Chair to determine whether a bill or amendment involves public spending and I repeat that on the contrary, it is its duty to do so.

The hon. member for Lotbinière has surely raised during the procedural debate some arguments which offhand seemed quite valid. In the first place, he quoted Standing Order 75 the application of which I tried to refute this afternoon, but I think that it deals rather with the procedure than with acceptability.

I have already discussed the matter this afternoon.

Afterwards, he referred us to the 18th edition of May, pages 507 and 508 where we read that it is possible for hon. members to amend every part of a bill. It is said:

• (2030)

[English]

Amendments may be made in every part of the bill, whether in the clauses or the schedules.

[Translation]

Then he referred us to pages 508, 509 and 512. Tonight I was happy to see he went a little further than this afternoon and had taken the trouble of going to subsection 12, page 510, where we can read—

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: I am sorry to interrupt you, Mr. Speaker.

With all due respect, I would have reached subsection (12) had someone not called it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Agreed. I recognize that the question of privilege is well taken but anyway the Chair has noticed that subsection (12) also applies. The hon. member wants to quote subsections from pages 505, 508, 509 and 510 and, as it happens, subsection (12) states:

[English]

Amendments or new clauses creating public charges cannot be proposed, if no money resolution or ways and means resolution has been passed, or if the amendment or clause is not covered by the terms of the resolution. This rule, which is of fundamental importance, is fully explained in chapter XVII and on page 754.

[Translation]

In his remarks this evening, the hon. member for Lotbinière referred us to page 754 but he went quickly to chapter 29. I would suggest that he look up page 692 of May's 18th edition where there is a paragraph which deals with this royal recommendation and says word for word what can be found in Beauchesne's citation 246. It reads:

[English]

—an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the crown has demanded or recommended the charge.

[Translation]

In another argument, he claimed that the procedure during consideration of the bill by the committee had been restrictive and he would like this House, through the Chair, to be less strict in applying the rule and to allow the members to go even further than the bill, that is discuss the legislation itself and accept all kinds of amendments. I find it very hard to agree with his argument.

Coming back to the notices of motion now before us, the first one proposes to raise to $200 the basic amount of the pension. According to all the sources that can be referred to, it is obvious that this notice of motion is out of order because it imposes a burden on the government and there is no recommendation from His Excellency.

His notices of motion Nos. 2 to 5 which tend to reduce to various levels the pensionable age for certain pensioners constitute an expenditure of public monies and go beyond the object of the bill.

Hon. members have only to consider the recommendation now before us and the bill to see that the proposal under study is a measure aiming at raising the basic old age pension to $100 a month.

• (2040)

The hon. members in submitting their various notices of motions are proposing amendments relating to the eligibility age; surely this question is not relevant and is not currently before the House.

For all these reasons, it is quite impossible for the Chair to accept the five motions in question.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-147, to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would not like at this stage to delay unduly the proceedings or to repeat what I already said at the second reading stage or even on other occasions.

We are now debating a bill which affects an important sector of our population that is faced with a particular problem which is that of not being in a position to live decently for lack of income and this is why we have tried, in moving amendments at the report stage, to eliminate this shortcoming in the law.

In fact, we can see glaring injustices such as two people aged 65 receiving full pensions and the guaranteed income supplement if they have no income whereas a married couple, where one spouse is aged 63 or 64, will only receive half this amount. This amounts to accepting the principle that the necessary products vary in value according to the age of the people concerned. This is obviously a glaring injustice for all those people and particularly when one knows that at 60 it is absolutely impossible for anyone without an income to expect earning one. So this would have been an excellent opportunity for correcting this situation.

And, Mr. Speaker, we remember particularly a speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) after the results of the election were known and in which he stated that in order to remain in power, he was ready to hear suggestions from the various opposition parties.

Now, for this session, this is our suggestion. We are dead set on it, and this is why I am coming back with an amendment.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Caouette):

That Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to consider the lowering of the age for the Old Age Pension from 65 to 60 and the automatic acceptance of the spouse for a pension as soon as one of the couple reaches age 60.

Mr. Speaker, through this amendment, I want everybody to know that we are here to represent the wishes and interests of the people. This is the only reason why we are members of this House and we do not have to muddle up with archaic regulations. If it is not possible to move amendments directly before the House, we would like that this bill be again referred to the committee so that our proposals can be examined once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, other members must realize as well as we do that all Canadians want this done. For example, in the course of the election campaign, we heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) tell everybody in Quebec that he was in favour of granting old age pensions to those aged 60 and we wonder why the Progressive Conservative Party does not side with us now. We had followers on this point at the time of the election campaign, but it seems we are now left alone.

We know quite well that the New Democratic Party had this item on its electoral plank. At least they have always shown that they would not be opposed to this. We even heard ministers discuss this matter during the election campaign. Why? In the end, every one was talking about the possibility of granting old age pension at age 60. It is merely because everybody wants it that way. Therefore, if everybody is in favour of it for very exact and serious motives, why is it that we are not fulfilling this desire expressed by all Canadians?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I have examined the amendment proposed by the hon. member. I can hardly accept it in its present form, but in order to allow hon. members who would want to make comments to enlighten the Chair, I will read the amendment:

That Bill C-147 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to consider the lowering of the age for the Old Age Pension from 65 to 60 and the automatic acceptance of the spouse for a pension as soon as one of the couple reaches age 60.

The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for too long, because of the importance of this bill and of this amendment, in order that the House may discuss them.

I should like to summarize my argument concerning the admissibility of the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Speaker, may I remind the House that in the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) and myself have keenly fought in order to rouse the members of the committee to the necessity of giving their agreement to the extension of the committee's terms of reference, and of studying the possibility of lowering the eligibility age to the old age security pension. And the committee has unanimously adopted a resolution—if I am not mistaken—for a more thorough study of the question, and this not merely on consideration of the votes, but also at any time.

Consequently, I consider that if we do consider the amendment word by word, we might be told that it is not receivable, because the terms of reference it assigns to the committee are too specific, and because in the debate on third reading what the committee has to do cannot be specified.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to respectfully point out to you that this Standing Order is absolutely ridiculous, because this would mean that in the debate on third reading, the House could refer legislation to the committee and assign to it very specific terms of reference.

For the amendment to be receivable, if the letter of the rules is to be adhered to, the bill had, for instance, to be referred to the committee for subsequent debate period. Then, possibly, the amendment could be receivable. But, under these circumstances, what would be the terms of reference of the committee? That is the important thing to know: the committee is prepared, is anxious to study the possibility of lowering to 60 the age of eligibility for the old age security pension thanks to the alertness of Creditistes and we are anxious that the House study this same point. This is why I maintain that, as we are studying Bill C-147, which mentions a basic amount, it would be only normal that this amendment be studied by the House.

Mr. Speaker, one of the amendments we presented read in part as follows:

. . . the lowering of the age for the Old Age Pension from 65 to 60 and the automatic acceptance of the spouse for pension as soon as one of the couple reaches age 60.

This is exactly what the House wants the committee to adopt. This is what the House would like to have recommended by the committee, as it is only studying Bill C-147, which, in reality, only means crumbs for the elderly.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I maintain, with all due respect, that this amendment is receivable.

• (2050)

[English]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief comment on the admissibility of this amendment. There are two arguments against it. First, I think it seeks to amend the Old Age Security Act and tries to do something that is not in the bill before us. Therefore it must fail on that ground. The second ground, specifically, is that this amendment is essentially the same as the notice of motion pursuant to Standing Order 75(5) in the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), that is, it seeks to go beyond the royal recommendation. Therefore it must fail on that ground as well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my hon. friends of the Social Credit party for the vigour with which they are pressing two or three points about which I feel very strongly and concerning which I think this House should take action, namely, the raising of the amount of the old age security pension and the lowering of the eligible age. I confess, however, I would find it very difficult to argue for the procedural admissibility of the motion they have now made. But the reason I rise to say anything at all is the reference my friend, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), made to what has gone on in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in respect of this matter.

There is something more which I think he should have said when he was referring to the activities of this committee. For example, he should have pointed out that this same amendment was moved in the standing committee. The chairman of the committee ruled it was out of order because it sought to amend the act rather than the bill. However, the upshot of that ruling and of that discussion was an agreement which I think was unanimous. Certainly the chairman accepted it and members of all parties agreed to it.

The agreement was that when we are dealing with the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare we will have a full discussion on the question of lowering the eligible age. The chairman agreed that at that point we would find a way to make a report to the House recommending such a change, if that should be the wish of the whole committee. It seems to me there is procedural questionability about the amendment that the hon. member has put forward. However, I do not think the discussion should end without it being known by the House that in the committee there are plans afoot to make a recommendation to the House in respect of this very question of lowering the eligible age which has the support, in terms of substance, I hope, of the majority of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I thank hon. members for their contributions to this very interesting debate.

[Translation]

Again, I must point out to the hon. member that if at first glance I was reluctant to accept the proposed amendment, it is precisely because that amendment goes beyond the scope of the bill now before the House. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) complains that during the committee's proceedings, it was not possible, under our Standing Orders, to amend the bill as certain hon. members would have wanted to amend it. I believe the hon. member wants to refer to Standing Order 75 and if I remember correctly, the procedure that applies to committees is the same that is applied in this House, but less rigidly. Therefore I cannot see, when we must base ourselves on the same Standing Orders, how such an amendment can be allowed in this House, where the Standing Orders are applied a little more strictly.

I would respectfully ask the hon. member to read attentively citation 418 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms where it is clearly stated and I quote:

All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

I believe that if the hon. member takes the trouble to look into Bill C-147, it will be difficult for him to find a provision dealing precisely with the amendment now before us. I also refer the hon. member to citation 415(1) of Beauchesne which reads as follows:

When a bill comes for third reading a member may move that it be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending it in any particular.

And subsection (2) adds the following:

In the latter case, the whole bill is opened to reconsideration, but in the former case, the committee can only consider the clause or amendments or instructions referred to them.

In the amendment now before us, the hon. member moves that the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee. It seems that the hon. member wants to give instructions to the committee for amending the bill according to the motion, and I really cannot see which provision of the bill he wants to amend.

Finally, I must refer to Citation 246(3) of Beauchesne from which I quoted generously in a previous ruling and where, in short, it is stated quite clearly that it is absolutely necessary to obtain a recommendation from His Excellency to introduce a measure that entails the spending public funds.

For all those considerations, I cannot accept the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Champlain.

• (2100)

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, our party wants to see Bill C-147 passed through the House as quickly as possible and I urge upon all members to try to expedite its passage. While several hon. members were apparently rising to participate in the debate, I thought we might be remiss if one or two of us did not become involved in the debate at this time. I must say also at the outset that I and members of my party support the desires and the wishes of the Social Credit party expressed in the amendment that they are trying to move to this bill, and, as one member, I wish there were some way that we could have an amendment of this sort accepted. I believe it reflects the desire of most members of the House to raise the basic pension to $150 a month and to lower the age of eligibility to 60. I think that was obviously the opinion of members when the committee was studying the bill about two weeks ago. Indeed, even the minister said he wished the age were lowered to 43, if I recollect correctly.

So I do believe that all of us could somehow get together and do some of these things which I am sure the people of this country really want. I think I would be fairly objective if I were to say that in the last few years perhaps the greatest defender of the older people of this country has been the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has spoken many times on behalf of the senior citizens of this country. I remember very clearly that on March 1 he spoke in the debate and recalled the time when he was first elected to the House in 1942. At that time old age pensions were $20 a month and he was fighting for an increase to $30 a month. The government at that time, being a typical Liberal government, compromised and raised the pension by $5 a month. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that he rose to his feet and told the House, in essence, that the pension was too little too late. I suppose we can say the same thing about this bill which is before us today.

Our party is saying that the increase to $100 a month basic pension is too little. Our party policy is to increase the pension to $150 a month, and that indeed is the policy of most senior citizen organizations in this country. Indeed, the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation at a recent convention in Prince Edward Island put forward the following resolution:

Be it resolved, that the federal government be requested to increase the basic old age security pension to $150 per month retroactive to April, 1972. Be it further resolved, that the annual increase in said pension be in line immediately with the increase in the cost of living index.

When we talk about increasing the pension to $150 a month we have the support of the Canadian people. Our party also, as I have already said, would like to see a reduction in the age of eligibility to 60. I think we could reach a consensus on that pretty quickly in the House if the minister desired to move in that direction. I know that he commented before the committee that the government was reassessing its social policy and that we may expect a statement some time in April. Indeed, I hope we do have one then and that we do have further legislation to lower the age of eligibility to 60 before this year is out.

I think that our party deserves a great deal of credit for the fact that there is a pension increase, even if it is only to $100 a month. At present the old age pension is $82.88. The automatic increase brought it up to $86.61, and I suggest that if this government had come back after the election as a majority government, the pension would have stayed at that amount. I do not think it had any intention of raising the pension beyond the automatic increase of $86.61, but I believe also that the situation would have been the same if the Conservative party had been in power following the election of October 30. As a matter of fact, during the election campaign I can recall very vividly a Conservative candidate saying that he favoured a pension of $90 a month, while another one said he favoured $95 a month. They could not make up their minds what it should be.

I wonder, if the Conservative party were to come to power in the future, whether they might not go back to the basic pension as it is now because in this area, as in most other areas, the Conservative party is, to say the least, very ambiguous. The Conservative party policies are different depending on which member is making the speech. The Conservatives cannot make up their minds as to what the pension should be. I recall also that, before the last election, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was speaking in the province of British Columbia to a group of older people. When they asked him whether or not the Conservative party would support an increase in the pension to $150 a month he said: "Oh, no, that is too expensive, the country cannot afford a pension of $150 a month". That, I maintain, is the policy of the Conservative party. If they were in power they would do nothing more than the Liberal party is doing at this time to raise pensions for older people in this country.

I believe that we could increase the old age pension and I believe that the country can afford it. One way in which the government can raise pensions immediately to $150 a month would be by withdrawing the bill which they plan to present to provide the corporations of this country with a rip-off or hand-out. If they did that they could provide half a billion dollars a year which could be used to raise old age pensions in this country. The corporations of this country do not need fast writes-offs and a reduction of the corporate income tax from 49 per cent to 40 per cent. If we were to defeat the bill or have it withdrawn, then the old people of this country could indeed have a pension increase of a kind that would provide them with money to buy the proper kinds of food, clothing and the type of housing that they need.

From the statistics I have available here, it appears that if we were to increase pensions immediately to $150 a month, we would need about $1 billion a year more over what is now being spent on old age pensions, half of that could be made up if we were not to pass the corporate tax bill and the other half could easily be obtained from the treasury of this country. If we were to raise pensions to only $120 a month, we would only need $432 million, and more than that would be available if the government decided not to proceed with the handout to the corporate welfare bums, their friends in the Canadian Manufacturers Association and their other corporate friends across this country. I suggest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) that he present this argument to the government and that he bring back another bill which would increase the pension to $150 a month, despite what the Conservative party may think and despite the crocodile tears they might shed over a few losses to their corporate friends in this country.

I also suggest that the pensionable age be reduced to 60. I believe that this country can afford quite easily to reduce the pensionable age. I believe that this is one of the social gaps in our country at this time. I know all of us have received many letters from people between the ages of 60 and 65 who need some assistance and who do not qualify because of the gaps we have in the existing social legislation in this country. This country could well afford to reduce the age of eligibility for old age pensions.

Another thing that could be done immediately, if we do not want to go all the way at one time, would be to reduce the pensionable age for the spouse of someone who has already qualified for the old age pension. This is another gap in our social policy that should not be there, and I believe we could act to correct that immediately.

There are a number of other things that could be said regarding our senior citizens and other benefits that could be provided for them in terms of medical aid and assistance in purchasing prescription drugs. Many of our senior citizens live in poverty, in inadequate housing. These are the people who, after all, laid the foundations of our country. Many of them were pioneers in the western part of our country and deserve a better break than they are receiving today. This is a brief summary of some of the things that our party would like to see done for our senior citizens. We would like to see the basic old age pensions go up to $150 a month, and the age of eligibility reduced to 60 years.

There is one other thing I would like to say in a philosophical vein before I sit down, and that is that we should start treating the older people of this country with a bit more dignity. All too often we tend to be very patronizing towards older people, and to treat them as children. We have a youth cult in this country that we worship. Much advertising is directed towards young people. We say that there is beauty in youth, and all kinds of vigour and goodness. The time has come when we should cut out some of these ideas that have been so ill-conceived, and we should start treating our older people as first class citizens. We can go part way in accomplishing that by accepting some of the recommendations made to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) regarding increased old age pensions and lowering the age of eligibility to 60 years.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat pained that so much of the time on this very important piece of legislation has been spent on proceduralism and partisanship. From the very first introduction of this measure I indicated to the House and to the minister that, while I was well aware, as were my colleagues, of the inadequacy of the measure, and while I demonstrated and documented that had the actual cost of living been added since 1963 when the government took office the pension would be $106.94, I nevertheless believed that this was the best we were going to get, and that because I wanted the senior citizens to get it as quickly as possible, it was our parliamentary duty to do everything we could to expedite the passage of the bill.

This was my stance in the committee, and my colleagues and I, who take second place to none in this chamber for our interest in the senior citizens, adopted a self-denying ordinance and stayed out of the debate. And I would have done so tonight if we did not have the injections of partisanship that we heard from the spokesman for the NDP.

I believe that the senior citizens have had enough of trafficking in political auctions, in bidding for them and their support as to who will promise more. It is very easy for a party that has no chance of taking office to promise $200, $300, $500 or $600. It is a little more difficult for the NDP wing of the NDP-Liberal coalition, which danced with joy over the $100, to say subsequently that they want $150. They have done everything possible to perpetuate in office the party which will give nothing more than $100. Let them live with that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: Neither my leader, myself, nor my colleagues, all of my colleagues—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Lotbinière rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member on a point of order.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) accuses our party of playing politics, but I will say to him that from the start of his speech he has spoken of nothing but the so-called coalition between the NDP and the Liberals, which may be true anyway. He should ask his colleague from Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) what he said during the electoral campaign about the old age security pension being granted to people 60 years of age, and what he is doing tonight by refusing to support our motions to that end.

Those who play politics are the other side, Mr. Speaker. When we need their support on behalf of the old people, not only do they not support us but they in turn play politics.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is not a legitimate question of privilege; it is a question of debate. Members have a right to participate in a debate and give their own points of view, but they should not use a question of privilege as a means of intervening in another member's speech. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) does not need a defender like myself, in view of his eloquence and capacity. I was not thinking of the Social Credit when I was talking about partisanship, as a matter of fact. I think the hon. member was a bit overly sensitive. What I might accuse them of is not partisanship. I wanted to say, before I was interrupted by this important question of privilege, that the party which I have the honour to support, and for which I have stood in this House for 16 years as a champion of a better deal for the senior citizens of this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: —is not going to enter into the auction room of political shenanigans, trying to bamboozle the older people to support us when we quote figures. I will say this—

Mr. Nystrom: What would you give them?

Mr. Macquarrie: —and I will stick by it, that when the times comes—who knows whether it be weeks or months away—

Mr. Béchard: Years?

Mr. Macquarrie: —when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) becomes the Prime Minister of Canada, the senior citizens of this country will have a better deal than they ever had before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: How much?

Mr. Macquarrie: This is a solemn commitment, solemnly stated, and I have no intention of spending hours in arguing with—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that I wonder whether or not the hon. member for Hillsborough would permit a question at this time, which I think is quite important.

Mr. Macquarrie: As a former and still sometimes pedagogue I should be glad to do my best to enlighten the man. I had planned to speak for five minutes, and if I had not been interrupted I would have been through by now. But I would be glad to assist the understanding of any hon. member on these questions. I repeat, Sir, that we regard this measure as inadequate to the needs, but it is the best we have before us. We want the senior citizens of this country to get the cheques in their hands, and we think the thing to do now is to expedite this measure. As Shakespeare might have said, and I am plagarizing him, "Tis a poor thing but their own." So far as this party is concerned we have no desire to field further speakers, except the hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe whose name was brought into the debate, unless we are tempted to do so by certain indiscretions, oratorical or otherwise. I would say let us move on with this measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville with a question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the hon. member for Hillsborough give the House the answer to a question that I posed to him in my speech, and that he completely missed. May I ask the hon. member whether or not he can tell us exactly what is the Conservative party policy? What is the basic pension that the Conservative party believes the senior citizens should get? Can we have a definite and numerically precise answer to that question?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, when preparing that question the hon. member may have missed my peroration. I said we were not entering the auction room and bidding for the senior citizens. We are not going to proclaim a figure and then dance with joy when someone else puts in a figure $50 less.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the floor, after waiting an hour and a half. I did not want this reputedly important Bill C-147 to go through without my having expressed my own comments.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits and merits of Bill C-147 have been generally praised whereas the bill, in my opinion, does not seem to deserve such praise since in fact it will increase only by $13 the amount of old age security pensions, with no consideration—and that, Mr. Speaker, is one of the main points I want to make—in regard to the cost of living index.

Actually, compared to the 1949 dollar, the 1972 dollar was worth only 56.2 cents, and as a result of the increase in the cost of living within the past few months the dollar, compared to the 1949 dollar, is now worth 50 cents. To speak of a $13 increase seems just an absurd mini-reform conceived to dazzle Canadians and particularly senior citizens.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, has to do with persons 60 years old or of the third age. I have consulted several books recently to find out when old age begins, because we are at present considering a bill in connection with the old age pension, and all the books I have consulted, and I have a few here from the Parliamentary Library, establish that old age does not begin at 65, but at 60.

When the liberals and the progressive conservatives claim to offer to the population an adequate old age pension, true to realities, they are completely unscientific and behind the times because they are five years behind all the scientists who prove, from a medical point of view, that the third age or old age begins at 60.

I have here a book written by Mr. Henri Bour and Mrs. Michèle Aumont entitled "Le troisième âge—Prospective de la vie", which belongs to the Parliamentary Library. To establish, from a scientific standpoint, that old age does not begin at 65, but obviously, on the average, at age 60, we can read on page 15:

> Finally the evolution of certain endocrine functions: of hypophysis, such as the growth hormone, of the cortico-surrenals, extends over three stages with a plateau from age 20 to age 60.

And, the authors prove without the shadow of a doubt that, as a general rule, human beings can between ages 20 and 60, display biological characteristics which indicate that they cannot begin to maybe grow old before age 60. But, as a general rule, in Canada, old age does not begin at age 65, but at age 60. I also have here another book entitled "La vie commence à 60 ans". This book on senior citizens has three subtitles: "La sécurité dans la retraite", "L'amour au troisième âge"—a question we shall not deal with tonight—and "Vos avantages sociaux". In connection with social benefits, it is always the question of retirement that comes up and it is said that life begins at 60. And this book is not necessarily aimed at the poor, the unfortunate aged people who have to survive on the daily $8 or $10 paid by the government through an overworked social security plan which is always trying to give less and less. This book is mainly intended for the well-to-do who enjoy a monthly or quarterly pension which is reasonable if not comfortable.

The Creditiste party wants the old age security pension to be paid when old age begins. We do not want old age pension when old age is almost over and saying that old age begins at 65 is tantamount to misleading the population, being regressive or unaware of science and lying to the Canadian people.

This is why this bill will not solve the problems of the 65 year old people with this monthly increase of $13 and even less those of 60 particularly when one considers the working conditions of elderly Canadians, not only of those aged 60 or less but even of those entering the labour market by the thousands every year and of those who just completed their studies.

I have with me a circular which was sent to certain ridings with a view to better inform the Liberals about the needs of Canadians. This circular was sent by a Liberal member seeking information on the advisability of setting the old age security pension at 60.

Mr. Speaker, I had circulars returned to my office by mistake and those circulars suggest even in Liberal circles that the friends of the Liberals want the old age pension at 60, that is at the age when old age begins and not at the age when old age is over by three quarters.

Mr. Speaker, those are the reasons why we find this bill to be more or less important. Some seem to want to use blackmail by saying that the Social Credit wants to delay the passage of the bill. It is clear that we are in favour of this bill to increase pensions by $13 a month, which is not even half the increase in the cost of living in the last ten years.

I have here an editorial of the Quebec Action of December 22, 1964 which looks at the security of nations. One can read that Western countries waste or spend—it is all the same to me—$140 billion on weapons and $4 billion on the hungry.

It is also mentioned in that editorial that old people are neglected because of the considerable amounts of money spent on military expenditures in all countries.

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, it would be preferable to consider human needs rather than the needs of our Canadian Forces. An amount of $2,134 million was spent in 1964-65 on national defence; we could have used only a few millions on national defence to ensure better security for our older people in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope the problem of old age pensions can be brought back before the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs because I think that no scientific book was consulted to define when old age starts and it is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I will be proposing a motion in a few moments.

There should be an emergency meeting of the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs with an order to report to the House within 48 hours and recommending that there be included in Bill C-147 a clause concerning the granting of old age pensions to those aged 60, effective April 1, 1973. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act be not now read a third time but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for further study of the eligibility requirements under the said Act.

I apologize for not having an English version of my motion, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we are not provided the same services as the hon. ministers to have our amendments translated on time.

• (2130)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have been provided with a copy of the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I might tell the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) that my first suspicion is that the amendment he has presented is out of order for several reasons. Of course, I shall hear the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on his point of order. The proposed amendment seems to offend the principle of the bill which has been adopted on second reading. It also seems to go beyond the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General. The argument I should like to hear is whether those two objections can be overcome.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, you have just read the motion of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) in French, and I must congratulate you most sincerely on the impeccable way in which you express yourself in French.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind that amendment is extremely serious for, after having done considerable research in Sir Erskine May's 18th edition of his Parliamentary Practice as well as in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, I feel that this amendment is in order for several reasons.

You maintained a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment did not comply with the provisions regarding second reading or the mandate allowed at second reading stage, and you tied in the amendment with the royal recommendation. That famous royal recommendation having been dinned into our ears, we will read it at least once to see what it is all about:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure to amend the Old Age Security Act; to increase the basic amount of the monthly old age pension to one hundred dollars effective April 1, 1973 with future escalation to commence April 1, 1974; and under Part II of the Act to clarify which year is the base year in the escalation formula and to simplify the calculation of income.

If it is at all possible to dissect the Governor General's recommendation, one will first of all find out that Part II deals with the escalation formula for the calculation of income. This means that for older citizens, for retired people, in some cases, the amount will be "X", and in others, "Y". For what reason? Because the escalation formula referred to in the Governor General's recommendation is such that the pensioners are not all placed on an equal footing, and this is contained in the recommendation. Therefore, the terms of eligibility to an identical pension are not the same for all pensioners.

Mr. Speaker, you stated that the amendment in order to be acceptable should not exceed the formal limits of the bill. Now, what does the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) say? It says, and I quote:

That Bill C-147, and Act to amend the Old Age Security Act be not now read a third time but be referred again to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—

Mr. Speaker, so far you will agree with me that the practice, the Standing Orders of the House, May's Parliamentary Practice and Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms provided that any time in debate on third reading any member can rise from his seat and introduce a motion "that the bill be not now read a third time, but referred to the Standing Committee for further study.

That is the kind of amendment that is always in order, because as your colleague said a moment ago, when he ruled out of order the motion of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), the reason given by the Speaker was that the motion gave specific terms of reference to the committee. I think that this procedure is ridiculous, but I must respectfully abide by the decision of the Chair.

Therefore, if the Chair argues that the House cannot give specific terms of reference to a committee at the third reading stage for a particular bill, I feel that Your Honour could use the same argument to rule that this amendment is in order. What are the terms of reference that we ask for if we are to get any in this amendment? And I quote:

. . . for further study

That means a more thorough study.

. . . of the eligibility requirements under the said act.

We are not talking about eligibility at 60 or 65, even if we hope that the committee will do that as it undertook to do, but that is not stipulated in the amendment. We are asking for a further study of the eligibility requirements under the act. This does by no means involve expenditures or increased taxes, but only a study by the committee of the recommendation of the governor in council with regard to the requirements for eligibility. What was the recommendation of the governor in council? It might be interesting to read again part of it. The Governor in Council specifies in his recommendation first, that the basic amount be raised to such and such an amount and that this provision come into effect on April 1, 1973, with which we entirely agree. Second, a future escalation will commence on April 1, 1974. Third, under Part II of the Act, the base year of the escalation formula will be specified. This is still part of the recommendation to simplify the calculation of income.

When the Governor in Council suggests in his recommendation that the calculation of income be simplified, he agrees that the House of Commons should thoroughly study the conditions of eligibility for the pension under Bill C-147.

• (2140)

Mr. Speaker, this is not legislation "Y", but we want, through the amendment of the hon. member for Shefford, the Committee Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to consider the eligible age concerning Bill C-147.

There, Mr. Speaker, is what we want. This is why we say that this bill must be referred to the committee and that, within 48 hours, it be sent back to us so that pensions may be paid, as the government suggests, effective April 1, 1973. We do not oppose the recommendation of the Governor General to pass the bill; we only request that the committee make a more thorough study of it.

Mr. Speaker, I can only refer you to chapter 21 intitled "Third Reading in Commons", on page 531 of May's Parliamentary Practice, 18th edition.

Mr. Speaker, I wish my English were as good as your French, so that I could quote. I would read out the whole book if necessary readily and convincingly to prove that according to precedents, as indicated on page 531 and those that follow, an amendment at the third reading stage is procedurally in order, provided it does not negate the principle of the bill, which the hon. member for Shefford's motion does not do.

Another condition stipulated on page 531 and those that follow is that no financial obligation be involved, and I shall humbly point out, Mr. Speaker, that no such obligation is involved in the motion. And finally it is stipulated that at the third reading stage immediate reading of a bill can be opposed and the bill can be referred to a committee, provided no very specific terms of reference be given the committee. This is exactly what we are doing when we suggest a further study.

Mr. Speaker, I would have so many arguments to put forward. I know your ability, your respect for private members' initiatives, and I dare hope most sincerely for my colleagues and for myself that in the light of existing precedents which govern the House, this amendment, which complies with those precedents, will be accepted so that the committee may study this bill more thoroughly.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, for your information, this amendment is actually a request of the House to refer the bill back for further study of the conditions of eligibility which were and are, as I said, stipulated in the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if we read bill C-147 and if I listen to the directives and advice that you gave at the beginning before allowing me to speak, I notice that you claimed we were changing the work at the second reading stage. This is absolutely not true.
