At the second reading stage, it is the privilege of this House to refer the bill to the committee. What are the stages of a bill? First reading is a formality. During the second reading stage, Mr. Speaker, we freely and rapidly express ourselves and there comes the privilege of the House to refer the bill to the committee. Then the committee brings back its report. This is what we call the report stage. Once the report stage is done with, the bill is before the House for third reading, the present stage. When the House honestly and competently is of the opinion that the bill is more or less acceptable or that the committee report is satisfactory, it is its strict privilege to call for a vote, with a motion such as that brought forward by the hon. member for Shefford, to the effect that the bill be referred back to the committee for further study.

Mr. Speaker, I could give many examples to convince you that it is important to refer the bill back to the committee to enable hon. members further to study the recommendation of the governor in council concerning the eligibility requirements. We want a report, in 48 hours, to the effect that the pension will be paid as of April 1, 1973 and this time, Mr. Speaker, I hope the bill will be acceptable.

[English]

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. There are basically two grounds on which this amendment fails. First, it seeks to amend, not the bill before us but the act that the bill before us seeks to amend. Therefore, it must fail on that ground. Second, if the amendment were carried it would in effect go beyond the royal recommendation; therefore it would increase the expenditure which the Crown would have to make for this particular program. On these two fundamental points, Mr. Speaker, the amendment must fail.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like to refute the two arguments that the hon. parliamentary secretary has just raised since at no time—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We have tried to establish the practice that members do not speak more than once on a point of order. However, I must say that some of the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Lotbinière have given the Chair some concern. If no other hon. member wishes to speak on the point of order, I will recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and at the start of tomorrow's proceedings deal with the question of the admissibility of the proposed amendment. If this is agreeable, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I had some hesitation in taking part in this debate for the same reasons that have been expressed with eloquence and competence by my colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), because it was not my intention to follow the example set by the members of the Social Credit Party and unduly postpone the payment of pensions which must be granted to older citizens.

But I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that when I heard the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) talk about the development of the endocrine functions, I thought the time had come to say that in parliament all Quebecers do not sing the same tune.

When I heard the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) express concern about what the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe was doing, seek his assistance and his support, I must admit that I was flattered. I was flattered by this remark which was expressed many times by the hon. member for Lotbinière and the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) as well as by some other hon. members.

I thank them for their solicitude. As for their concern, I would say to them that this is only the beginning, and that, as the weeks go by, as the next election campaign gets nearer, my Social Credit friends will have excellent reasons for being more and more concerned; concerned about what will happen in the province of Quebec when the provincial government decides to go to the people.

An hon. Member: It will be of great concern to Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why that should concern my friends opposite, since I have not yet spoken about the present government. I have been speaking only of those who once claimed to hold the balance of power and who realized after the election that they held neither balance nor power.

Mr. Speaker, I can but smile at what I see here this evening, because we still have ringing in our ears the speeches that Social Credit members delivered to us yesterday, the day before and during the last few weeks, while the official opposition was expressive what Canadians are thinking, in the form of non-confidence motions, while we were letting all members know that we had had enough of an impotent government that deserves to be thrown out.

Mr. Fortin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, we listened to what the hon. member for Lotbinière was saying about the Polymer Corporation, and to his frequent jibes at the official opposition; the member for Lotbinière, Mr. Speaker, called us—

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, as a member I think I have a question of privilege since I have been given, like my colleagues, a nonequivocal mandate to represent my fellow citizens in the House of Commons, whether they live in Quebec or elsewhere. The Social Credit Party of Canada is not bound to defeat the government but to get further benefits for senior citizens.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish to offend the hon. member for Lotbinière. I would not like to hurt his feelings if I remind him that, for several hours and several days, through a useless exercise in "proceduritis", the Social Credit Party of Canada is delaying the payment of money due to senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, tonight we are snowed under a series of motions, amendments and procedural arguments of all kinds—

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege on an extremely serious matter.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has just charged the Social Credit party of Canada of "petty proceduritis", but at least we do rise and make proposals in the House. At any rate, I suggest that according to our rules, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has no right to comment on rulings made by the Speaker, nor on the quality or the introduction of motions. The standing rule also provides that we do not have the right to determine or reflect on a member's behaviour with respect to a vote.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, instead of wasting the time of the House as he is doing now, instead of accusing others of doing nothing, should rise in his place and say courageously, on behalf of the people of Saint-Hyacinthe, that he is in favour of old age security pension at age 60 and then, he will be doing the same as we are, that is he will have made a positive contribution toward improving the conditions of older people.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that my privileges and the privileges of my colleagues, not only on this side of the House but on the other side also, have been infringed upon because we had to put up Monday with a ridiculous motion concerning a past sale, a motion introduced by the Progressive Conservative party to delay the business of the House. Not a single word was uttered this afternoon and tonight we are being accused because five members have introduced motions on old age security pensions.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member goes beyond the question of privilege originally raised. He is referring to a matter which was dealt with yesterday. I must say that the Chair has been preoccupied with the motion presented by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau). I have not heard all that has been said, but I gather from what I have heard that the blows are about equal.

I hope hon. members will not consistently rise on questions of privilege which are really matters of debate. I will recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Though I want to respect the privileges of the hon. member for Lotbinière, I would like to go on and say, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wagner: —I would like to go on and say, Mr. Speaker, that our friends of the Social Credit party have certainly not been guilty of benign "proceduritis" but I would say malignant "proceduritis" because when they were putting forward this shower of motions and amendments, and rising on points of order of all kinds, I wondered whether they were being ingenuous, unaware of the standing Orders or knowingly delaying the passage of this legislation.

And when I read through similar amendments, practically word for word, which were moved in this House on December 17, 1970 and which one can read on page 2162 of Hansard, when I find that the decisions of the Speaker were known by our colleagues of the Social Credit party, I wonder—though the Standing Orders prevent me from questioning faith—to what extent one may consider that they were earnest in the way they acted here. I will tell them of course that we have been ashamed by the way they have acted, but we are used to it.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lotbinière was asking us a moment ago what is our position as regards the elderly. I will send him the text of the statement I made in this House on March 2, a copy of which has been distributed to all my constituents in the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe. I will send a copy to the hon. member for Lotbinière so that he be well aware of the fact that we, on this side of the House, are concerned about the welfare of elder people; we want the government to treat them with utmost justice; we want the government—

[English]

Mr. Lalonde: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that all those who have spoken tonight have expressed concern for the aged and a desire to see this bill pass as soon as possible, I wonder, since everyone has had a good opportunity to express their views on the subject, whether we might not agree to put the question now.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I would like, with the support of my colleagues, to propose that the House continue to sit until the passage of this bill which is extremely important. We are willing to co-operate.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I for one would like to suggest, on behalf of my colleagues, that the question be put if need be, at ten o'clock, for in two minutes I will be through with my remarks.

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe would—

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe would follow the debate, he would know that the House has not before it the motion of the hon. member for Shefford, concerning which the Chair has held up its decision and that consequently he cannot propose that the question be put at ten o'clock.

We agree unanimously to continue the proceedings to allow Mr. Speaker to rule whether our motion is in order; we agree that the vote be taken tonight in order to ensure that all parties in the House do like the Social Credit and work in favour of old people so that this problem may be settled once and for all.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If it will help hon. members to feel better, I can advise the House that I shall be ready to render my decision in another five or ten minutes. I have the names of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) as wishing to take part in the debate. I see more hands raised. I am not obliged to see the clock until somebody tells me what time it is. Did an hon. member say it was ten o'clock?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Lotbinière for this lesson in procedure and moreover I recognize that I am not as good as him in "procedurology."

Mr. Speaker, I was saying a few moments ago that although my colleagues and myself find that the increases proposed by the government are quite inadequate, we recognize that they constitute nevertheless a progress by which senior citizens will be able to profit as soon as possible. Along with all the other members, I think that it is desirable that one day we will be able to lower the age of eligibility to the old age security pension to 60. This is the direction in which we want to work and we will support the bill which is now before us.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, procedural subtleties should not be an obstacle to legitimate rights. Unfortunalely—I said it at the beginning and I shall conclude my remarks by repeating it, the show which our colleagues of the Social Credit gave us is one that older persons did not deserve. I agree with my friends of the Social Credit on the increase in pensions. I agree that the age of eligibility should be lowered, but I cannot agree with their tactics which only too often use human hardship to promote their own interests.

• (2200)

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate, but in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), the last person in the Conservative party caucus from whom I would have expected to hear such remarks, I think I should reply.

If the hon. member for Hillsborough and his colleagues consider the amount of money that the senior citizens of Canada are entitled to, and should be receiving, a political option, then we now know for certain where the Conservative party stands on this issue. Had the Conservative party made some definitive statement in terms of dollars and cents per month since the first of September last and the end of December, it probably would not have been a political option; indeed, they could now be occupying the treasury benches. Refusal to specify the exact sum, except in vague terms of cost of living index which would have brought the old age pension to something around $95 a month, meant that they lost what the hon. member for Hillsborough called the political option.

At least the Liberal party did not say anything during the election campaign about how much the pension should be raised. Then they came forward with something definite, the $100 figure. The hon. member for Hillsborough is now curling behind the glass. They can do better, he says, and he mumbles vaguely about a figure of $106. I remember in 1956 the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was wagging his finger at the Liberal benches and talking about the "six bucks boys". Who are the "six bucks boys" now? Those who are going up from $100 to $106.

In addition to that, they have the gall to accuse the members of the Creditiste Party of delaying the passage of this bill when had their efforts succeeded on three or four previous occasions since January 4 this parliament would not have been sitting and there would not have been any increase in old age pensions. They have the gall to continue this kind of hypocrisy in respect of a debate on old age pensions. This shows them up, Mr. Speaker. Normally, I am very kind, quiet and benign in respect of my good friends in the Conservative Party, but tonight they have reached a low or a high, whichever way one looks at it. Certainly, we have some concrete evidence that the official opposition, the Conservative Party, has no policy and refuses to recognize the legitimate needs of the senior citizens of Canada in terms of the amount of dollars they should receive per month.

Where were they last October and last November? Had they responded in some positive manner to the proposals made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) on November 15, they could have been sitting on that side of the House by January 15. They sat and would not speak up. Now, the curling game is over. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is out behind the curtain. He never misses a shot. He regards us as being inadequate. What about last night? We do not consider this to be trafficking in political options. We consider this a golden opportunity. I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), even at this eleventh hour, would propose that this bill be sent back to the committee for one day or if it is not in order for him to do so I would hope that right now he would make a significant gesture to the senior citizens by stating that this increase will be retroactive to the first of January so that they will receive some modest recognition.

He could also call upon his colleagues in the cabinet to implement a rent freeze to prevent the erosion of this increase in the old age pension. In some housing projects in some cities, already the entire increase has been eaten up through rent increases. The least the Minister of National Health and Welfare could do now at this eleventh hour would be to introduce a three-months retroactivity in respect of the pension increase to enable the old age pensioners to pay the unconscionable rent increases.

The hon. member for Hillsborough calls this a political auction. Who does he think he is kidding? In my opinion that is an unconscionable thing for him to say. He is the last member from whom I would expect to hear this. He has colleagues who are political dinosaurs from whom I would expect such things, but I would not expect them from him. If he, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) or the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) had any compassion back in November, December or January they would have said that a Conservative government would implement an old age pension increase to not less than $110 or $120 a month. They cannot have it both ways. Yet now they say they would do better.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would allow a question?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Alexander: Heavens no, Mr. Speaker. I just want to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Alexander: I wonder whether I have agreement to ask the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a heavenly point of order.

• (2210)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I thought that when you rose you were going to recognize me inasmuch as I indicated during his speech that I wanted to ask the hon. member a question. I thought at that time you were going to allow me to ask the question. I then saw that I would not be recognized, and now I hope Your Honour will have some consideration in this respect and will allow me to ask the hon. member one simple question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's point is extremely well taken, and I recognize from the smile on the face of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) that he would welcome the question of the hon. member.

[Translation]

I apologize to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who will have to be patient a little longer.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: This will not take very long, Mr. Speaker. I was very impressed with the hon. member's speech. I think we are all concerned about the plight of our senior citizens who, as I have often said, are the forgotten people of this country. But when we speak of principle, if I recall correctly the hon. member's party had submitted, without any hesitation or reservation, their recommendation for a pension of $150 a month and had said they would press for it and there would be no withdrawing. I would ask the hon. member how, in heaven's name, anyone can expect credibility after having sold out for a pension of $100 a month.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. It gives me an opportunity to take a couple of minutes more to refresh the hon. member's memory on the policy of the NDP, which is that an NDP government would immediately implement an old age pension of $150 a month. In the course of the minority parliament the NDP took the position that we were going to get the most we could possibly get out of whoever was governing. It so happens, unfortunately for the senior citizens, that the most we could get out of anybody in this parliament was $100 a month from the Liberals. Had the hon. member's party been prepared to go to $106 a month back in October, by the middle of January they could well have been where the government is.

Mr. Alexander: All I can say is, shame.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the time has come to hear the words of wisdom from the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your kind words regarding myself and if wisdom has not touched a person at my age, it never will.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to all the comments made in this House tonight. This does not mean that I accept all the arguments brought forward but, at any rate, I listened to them. I hope that, in turn, my colleagues will listen with patience to the few comments I wish to make on third reading of the bill.

What amazes me is that nearly all members in this House seem to agree that persons aged 60 have rights to increased pensions in order to allow them to live decently and in full security as they so richly deserve. However, we are presently prevented by the Standing Orders from implementing our good ideas.

So I am rather astounded that the Standing Orders should prevent us from reaching the objective we all want to reach. Since our rules in fact prevent us from increasing the credits to meet our senior citizens' needs, I think that this House should at least be left with one role, namely that of drawing the people's needs to the attention of the government, of the Governor General so that the rights of the aged be recognized as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a simple remark to my colleague for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who earlier—injust I think—stated that the Créditiste members wanted to exploit human misery for petty political gains.

I think he did not mean what he said because I have here a report of the recommendations of a senate committee which conducted an investigation throughout the country to see whether there was poverty in Canada and what should be done to alleviate this poverty and establish a better degree of distribution of our wealth to meet the needs of the whole population and not only of two-fifths of it. I think that the senators were not being demagogic; they have found a fact and made recommendations.

I have also here a report published in a newspaper when the Liberal Party said that if they were elected they would establish a just society in Canada. If he wanted to establish a just society, it is because he was aware of some injustice in Canada.

It is precisely to perpetuate injustice when many individuals are left to live in inhuman economic conditions, while Canada can do better. I have also in hand a statement—and not the least—of Mr. Alfred Rouleau of the Desjardins credit unions to the effect that the eradication of poverty is a collective responsibility.

We are here to work together at finding a way to improve those conditions and in order to comply with the standing orders and procedure, we must restrict ourselves to make known, as I said a moment ago, the needs of the people.

If I take part in the debate on the bill concerning old age security, it is to convey the message of the senior citizens who do not have the means to lead a decent life. I suggest that it is inconceivable that in 1973, when the gross national production beats all records, in spite of thousands of unemployed, our country tolerates so much poverty. I am not ashamed of saying it because those are the facts.

Someone said one day that he who robs a man of his clothes shall be called a thief. He who does not cover a man who is naked when he can do so, does he deserve another name? It is not I who said that, but somebody else and I think that he was right.

Thousands of older people really suffer from this inhuman life, put up with a hard life and there is no law to guarantee them a fair and truly social minimum income.

• (2220)

Everybody wants it, we want it, but the procedure is stopping us, and I am anxious to see this elephantine procedure dealt with.

It so happens that there are thousands of couples who have to live on the pension of one spouse. How can one imagine that it is possible for two people to feed themselves, clothe themselves, get the required drugs, maintain a house, pay their fuel, taxes, electricity, telephone and sometimes a little trip to go and visit the children, which is quite normal and human, on such a small pension?

I know provincial governments have passed welfare legislation to help people in need and the government of Canada pays 50 per cent of those expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan.

In Quebec, since the revision of welfare legislation the rules are too stringent. When a person or a couple ask for help because they cannot support themselves, if they own a house, in most cases they have to part with it as a prerequisite for eligibility for assistance, which I consider inhuman.

I cannot bring myself to accept that after 40 or 45 years of hard work and often under difficult conditions to participate in the development of this country our people over 60 cannot be provided with better living conditions. The scandal of poverty and insufficient income of people 60 and over is obvious. Canada despite its immense resources is far from showing a comforting image to those who are hungry for human justice and dignity.

One Canadian out of three lives socially, economically, politically and culturally on the fringe of society. The living conditions imposed upon a great number of people over 60 are an insult to justice and an evil in one of the richest countries in the world.

We all bear collectively the responsibility for that situation. I accept readily that in the field of social security this country is one of the more advanced in the world but we can do even better and it is for that reason that I say we should take immediate action.

However fascinating because of horizons opened to us, the times which we are living are nevertheless often, alas, the source of many disappointments, particularly for those who are no longer admitted on the labour market and cannot receive a guaranteed income while awaiting the old age security pension.

The Christian message is clear: God is calling upon us by the signs of the time, by daily events. "Feed your starving brothren, clothe those who are cold, give a roof to the homeless." In concrete terms, Mr. Speaker, today that means there should be a minimum guaranteed annual income for each and everyone, and more specifically for people of 60 and over.

In a message released on the occasion of 1972 Labour Day, Canadian bishops expressed serious concern about the problem of distribution. It was called the "sharing message". And the problem of inadequate sharing is a real challenge for the bishops.

The message read as follows, and I quote:

PROSPERITY, FOR WHOM?

—FOR THE "SYSTEM"?

—FOR MAN?

Let us not be deluded by the theory that says that general economic prosperity ends up by being of benefit to all. Despite the increase in the GNP, unemployment remains a real plague just about everywhere throughout the world: the rich grow richer, the poor, poorer.

That is why we must talk about it and without delay.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Finally, I should like to quote you a last paragraph of that message on which we should meditate as legislators:

Over forty years go, Pope Pius XI reminded us that, on their own, profit and economic growth ill-serve the people. "In the final analysis, any program intended to increase production has no object unless it serves man. Its purpose is to reduce disparities, fight against discrimination, free man of his bonds, enable him to be the master of his own material well-being, his moral progress and his spiritual fulfilment."

Like the so-called underdeveloped countries Canada needs new criteria of prosperity which will give priority to human fulfilment, co-operation and a sense of community. In the search for a new social approach, Christians must not stand on the sidelines. The values we live by dictate that we do. By withdrawing, we sin grievously against our social duty.

That is why we worked so hard, to try and help the government to get Parliament to pass legislation that corresponds to the ideas and principles that I have just mentioned. I quote again:

If Christians in Canada wish to contribute to building our society, they cannot fail to take note of new policies that aim at subordinating economic growth to a fairer distribution of the national income. And this objective can be achieved by applying a modern policy that established a guaranteed minimum yearly income based on the material potential of our country, and sufficient to enable people in these categories to lead a well-deserved normal life during their final years.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with that message and this is why I consider that the spouse should be eligible for the old age security pension, whatever his or her age, provided the other is eligible under the act.

I know in advance that I will be told that the most generous party in legislation concerning older citizens was the Liberal party. I do not question it, but I should like to add that this has been materially possible through the labour of the generations that preceded us and of the people now aged 50 or over.

The government only legislated in order that the benefits of a life within society be truly available to its members. I sometimes wonder about those people who, in their early life and even in the best year of their lives, have toiled for very long hours each day in return for very low salaries, and also about those who were in business, as merchants or farmers, who earned net incomes that were sometimes ridiculous and had to assume the whole cost of their children's education, and I compare to theirs the easy life of our young people today who reap the result of the endeavours of those who have today reached the sixties, and I submit that the legislators' duty is to adopt legislation guaranteeing those persons at least an honest subsistence, without their being compelled to crawl on their knees to beg their daily bread.

Many of those aged people who have weathered extremely difficult years have not made the count of their hours of labour, and it is thanks to their industriousness which spurred them that today's young people can benefit from numerous advantages in all respects, which the people aged 60 or over could never enjoy.

Is there a more noble deed for a couple, besides contributing to the development of their country, than having also provided it generously with the most lavish gift, that is human capital, making it the richer for the many children they bore and which are today its glory.

Who, Mr. Speaker, built these towns and villages that are the pride of our land? Who built our beautiful country parishes, not with the modern tools we have now, but, on the contrary, with makeshift means, by dint of ingenuity which I would call heroic? It is to elderly people, 60 years old or over, that we are indebted and should pay our debt with love and pride for the development of Canada an unprecedented record in the GNP, which enable us to increase substantially the old age security pension.

I received, not so long ago, a letter which read as follows:

Due to the precarious position of the federal government, the latter seems more willing to finally increase the old age pension. Mr. Lalonde talks about substantial increases, and we elderly people wonder if at last the old people will be able to receive at least the minimum recommended by the Royal Inquiry Commission on Poverty.

It is not possible, you will understand, for three persons, namely the father and the mother and a 17-year old student to get along with $170 per month. Besides this amount, there is a monthly allowance of $26 which is being paid by the Social Welfare which is far from being assured and which may be withdrawn at any time.

Mr. Lambert, you are aware that human beings need to have their needs satisfied adequately before wondering whether the money controllers will agree. If money is scarce, bread should be provided first and then games which have no priority. We, the aged citizens with family obligations, are asking why we are rationed because, indeed, getting these meagre pensions is actually like being rationed and if there is to be rationing, then everybody should be and not only the elderly persons. If you could, Mr. Lambert, you should require that the bill on old age pensions be introduced in priority and if Mr. Barrett, Premier of British Columbia is in a position to give $200 per month to his older citizens, why could we not do the same in Ottawa?

And it is signed: A lady from Sainte-Justine, Mrs. Antoine Blanchette.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote scores of other letters which are saying the same things, requesting their representatives to pass their message on to Parliament. If we receive such letters, discard them and fail to draw the attention of the government on them, people will come to detest their politicians even more and will say: We pay them for nothing; they cannot render justice where it is due.

That is the reason why I kept those letters and I used my privileges today, those that I still have, to give those examples and to ask once again the government to take action before it is too late.

So, Mr. Speaker, I shall not bother the house with all these letters, but at all events I wanted to show and prove that people aged 60 and more need the old age security pension, and this is not a whim, it is an acquired right. I know however that young couples with children tell us: You only talk about old age pension. There are young people who study. There are young people in the province, there are young people in our constituencies. What about family allowances? Of course, everything will be looked after in due course. They speak this way, however. They are the couples with children or couples who would like to have some. They tell us rightfully that family allowances should be increased substantially.

I am keeping in mind the statement made by the minister before the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that he will in the near future, after consultations with the provinces, bring in legislation to this effect.

I very much hope that at that time the government will bring in legislation that will be generous enough to spare us the need to propose amendments to try and have the rights of these Canadian families better recognized.

It is disturbing, Mr. Speaker, to note that in our country and more particularly in the province of Quebec, which has always had the highest birth rate, the province has had the lowest rate for the past two years.

And when the family allowance plan was established under legislation in 1945, there were people from the English provinces who said that this legislation would be profitable to the province of Quebec. Now, according to the budget tabled in the House a few days ago, it is seen that the largest estimates for family allowances will go to the province of Ontario during the next fiscal year. That goes to show the importance of adjusting our social measures to current needs and actual requirements, so as to further encourage our young people to fulfill their mission, as the people of 60 years old and over have done in the past. Therefore I wish that this legislation will soon be presented to the House.

In concluding my remarks, I say that I am already convinced that certain government members will say that the proposal I just made would cost hundreds of millions of dollars to the federal Treasury. We know that, we are not stupid; we know that it is going to cost a lot. The important thing is to know that with that money, older people and young couples will be able to get the things they need.

But the problem does not lie there. If old age security pensions and family allowances were to be increased as I just proposed, will older people and young couples with children have enough money to buy whatever is required, to satisfy the needs of their family?

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, I should like to invite the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)—even if our standing orders do not allow it, he can take the liberty to do so since he is a minister of the Crown—to give his opinion on that question. A few minutes ago, I heard the words "Crown" and "Governor General". At least, I know the hon. minister of National Health and Welfare very well. I trust him and I hope that, during this session, he will be able to introduce a new bill to improve the lot of senior citizens, so that in 1973 the fact may be recognized that our old age security pensioners will become eligible at age 60 as well as their spouses even if they have not yet reached that age. This would still be more beneficial.

Therefore, I thank the House for listening to my comments. I have tried in a very objective way to thouroughly examine the problem and I have tried to avoid political partisanship, even though I wanted to make a few points at the beginning of my remarks. Therefore, I am convinced that, in the future, whenever somebody speaks about human misery and poverty in this House nobody will be accused of harboring any wrong intention and that we will all work together in order to find a solution to this problem and establish a just society in Canada.

Old Age Security Act

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we have all been sitting here tonight in the hope that this piece of legislation will pass. I think there are thousands of Canadians who are as interested in the passage of this legislation as in anything else we might do. The fact is, we propose to give to each of the elderly persons in this country an extra $13.39 every month. Our great interest in this sum of money, and the necessity for this increase, is an indication of the plight in which the aged find themselves.

Our rules do not allow us to do some quite ordinary things. It would seem to me there are a number of things we should collectively be able to do but which we have not been able to do tonight because of the rules governing this House. Every member who has been here for any length of time is aware that if we increase the old age pension by $13.39 we are really providing very little of substance on which a family may live. Everyone is aware of the difficulty which arises when a husband is two or three years older than his wife, and dependent entirely upon the old age pension plus the guaranteed income supplement for sustenance. That means we will now give them a total sum of $170.14.

The Creditistes have at least tried their best but have been ruled out of order, and I have no complaint about that. But in this House tonight is the minister responsible for this department. He could easily get into his car and go through the archaic procedure of making a journey to the Governor General and getting the recommendation changed so as to add one or two simple provisions to the bill, provisions that would be of immense benefit to the senior citizens of this country. But he sits there asking that the bill be passed.

Are not the elderly people of this country in a pitiful state when whether they get along or do not get along depends upon keeping this government in power in order to provide them with a measly $13.39, be they single or married? It seems to me that one of the things we could have done was to make an allowance for women who are 61, 62 or 63 and obviously are not capable of earning additional income. We have already established that they would be unable to earn very much anyway because of the ceiling. They have to get along on $170.14, and we call ourselves civilized. We hide behind the Governor General's recommendation. I think this is a disgrace and the government should not be the least bit proud.

Some hon. member asked what we would do. I am not very good at arithmetic, but we said that we would give $150 to the senior citizens of this country. If you add to that the guaranteed income supplement, this will bring them up to about $240. Multiplied by 12 this produces a yearly income of $2,880. Many of our senior citizens are now trying to get by on that income. The government has not suggested that it will place a freeze on the rents and shelter costs of these elderly people; nothing of that sort has been done, though it is within our power to do it.

We have agreed to sit extra hours tonight since no one knows whether this parliament will exist two or three days from now. We are making an extreme effort, and for what? For $13.39, an amount which quite often is divided between two people. Already the minister, who has some potential, is playing the game of "How cheaply can we get votes? How much do we have to spend? Let us divide this $13.39 between two people, and perhaps we will get both their votes".

I agree with another of the amendments which was proposed but ruled out of order because it did not meet the recommendation of the Governor General. Let us not kid ourselves about this; the Governor General has given no particular input to this resolution. This is a cabinet decision made out in the open, and it is strictly a question of: "How much can we get away with? What is the least that we can provide?" I say we should reduce the pensionable age to 60, and I suggest that this be done one year at a time, as we did in reducing the eligible age from 70 to 65. I also suggest 55 as the age of voluntary retirement.

I am also aware that the minister must give consideration to another matter. Although the proposal will cost the Canadian people money, it will be of considerable benefit to every citizen. The minister will either have to pay some attention to it, or he will find that the elderly people of this country, who now receive a small pittance through the Horizons for the Aged program, will have to investigate this problem of retirement. It seems to me that if we do not retire people at a younger age, that is, if we do not move the age down to 60 and then down to 55, we will not be able to provide jobs for people in the 25 to 30 age bracket. If we do this, we will pretty soon have to commence an educational program for retired people that will encourage them by the knowledge that when they retire they will not be placed on the shelf waiting to die. They will know there are things they can do in retirement, for themselves and for the country, which will not interfere with the economic structure of our nation.

We must be in very bad shape in this country; frankly, I believe we must be in very bad shape in this parliament if we cannot implement the ideas of, I am sure, all members of this House in respect of reducing the age at which people may retire. We must be in pretty bad shape if we cannot provide for the person who quite often is forced to depend upon the breadwinner who merely has a pension on which to live. We have not been able to come up with a solution to that problem.

The minister can sit there and talk to his colleagues or do whatever he likes, but it seems to me that we should be able to do something about some of these questions which have been ruled out of order tonight. If we do not do something about these matters pretty soon, we will not be fulfilling our duty. I do not intend to make a long speech. We seem to have been playing politics year after year in respect of the treatment of old age pensioners. This year they are to receive an increase of $13.39 a month. I have seen the figure at $6. I saw it at $10 in another election. At one period I saw it at $2 odd. I believe at another time they received $15 in a roundabout way. I do not think we should use the old age pensioners as an election tool. We should consciously face up to these problems which all members recognize.

I have a problem. I would like to know what other members tell a man who says he will have to leave his wife because they cannot get along on his old age pension. I am speaking of a man who says that he must leave his wife so that she can apply for assistance from either the municipality or the provincial government. This reminds me of a story about a gentleman whose wife was terminally ill. He did not have enough money to pay the hospital bill or to buy drugs. But if she were living on welfare the drugs and hospital bills would be looked after. While she is dying of a terminal disease, he has to go to court to obtain special permission to divorce her so that she can be looked after in hospital. I do not know whether this happened in Canada, but the situation here is almost that bad.

I suggest that all hon. members know this problem. It is a problem which affects all of us. We receive letters from people saying they are trying to get along on one old age pension and one guaranteed income supplement. These people have no other income. Something should be done about this problem. We in this House should be ashamed of ourselves when we become involved in passing a bill to provide an old age pensioner with an additional $13.39 without considering some of the other problems which are immediate and affect a large number of our senior citizens.

We have not given any consideration to the question of rent control or shelter control for the elderly people. Many of them will find that the $13.39 will never accrue to them but will in fact go to the landlords who are collecting the rent. We have not given consideration to rent control or shelter control for the elderly people and many of them will find that the $13.39 will never accrue to them but will, in fact, go to the landlords who collect the rent.

Finally, I presume you, Mr. Speaker, will have to rule the amendment that is now before us out of order because of our rules. I do not intend to delay this bill, Mr. Speaker, because I am aware that the needs of our senior citizens are great and that this House must give consideration to the problem that is now developing. We are finding that more and more people working in our factories are living in a world of fantasy. They work every day thinking of the tourist camp they are going to buy or of the boat they are going to build in order to travel around the world. Their fantasy about retirement, however, never materializes. I think it is our responsibility to assist those who are about to retire and we should start fairly early, prior to their retirement. We should build for them an educational system which will enable them to cope with unemployment rather than to live in the fantasy which will obviously never materialize. The fact that so many of the people who retire live only a short period of time thereafter indicates their great need.

I hope that this House does continue sitting for some time, especially if I were sure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would give some consideration to these serious problems that have been raised tonight and that have met with obstacles from our rules. There are immediate problems that are known to each member here and I doubt if any of us, in all conscience, can accept the pittance that is being offered without giving some consideration in the near future to the other problems that are just as immediate and just as important for a large segment of our senior citizen population in this nation.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, apparently there is disposition to finish this important item, and I am wondering if we could make a deal with those who feel they have to make a contribution at this late hour to cut their speeches to a bare minimum. We are worrying about the old people, but we should show some concern for our staff also.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should have allowed the hon. member to make his point of order after I had read my decision on the point raised earlier this evening, otherwise I might fall into the category which draws his concern.

Earlier this evening the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) presented an amendment, and I will now make my ruling upon it. I wish to thank the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) for their assistance to the Chair on the question that has given me considerable difficulty.

The bill before us contains a simple provision. It deals with the basic amount of pension under the provisions of the Old Age Security Act. It does seem to me that little in the bill goes beyond that point. I ask myself: what would the amendment do? I suggest that it proposes that a committee of the House consider the qualifications for a pension payable under the Old Age Security Act. The motion does not say that the amount of the pension should be altered. But the hon. member for Shefford in his amendment does propose the study of the conditions by which a person becomes eligible for the pension. It does seem to me that he is endeavouring to reach in behind the bill now before us for the purpose of amending the enabling legislation. Otherwise, for what purpose would the committee consider the formula? In doing so, his proposal is not really relevant to the provision in the bill before us, and it is a fundamental rule that the amendment must be relevant to the question.

I can understand his zeal in endeavouring to make a change in an important measure. However, as a servant of the House I can only deal with any question in accordance with what I believe to be the strictures laid down for the guidance of the Chair.

May I draw the attention of hon. members to part of citation 418 in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. I read the second sentence which is as follows:

> All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

I re-emphasize that in my opinion the amendment is not relevant, but it is close to the line, and that has given me difficulty in deciding. With regret, I cannot put the amendment to the House.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I wish to express my opinion which is shared by almost all Canadians as regards the bill before us, Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is mainly designed to increase the basic old age security pension to a maximum of $100 a month.

We, in the Social Credit Party of Canada, have asked the government on several occasions to take steps in this direction. The answer that has been given to us for many years was that this measure might ruin Canada, bring about inflation, and so on.

It is strange to see that a minority government is less afraid of inflation and all this nonsense than a majority government, even if it is run by almost the same people.

On May 4, 1970, the majority Liberal government voted against an increase in old age security pensions. On October 21, 1971, we, in the Social Credit Party, introduced a motion with a view to lowering the eligibility age to 60 and increasing pensions. The Liberals recognized at that time that this motion was justified, but they did not do anything. They were a majority government and I believe that this was the main reason.

It is obvious that all members will vote for this bill. But I regret deeply that the government has not deemed advisable to include in this bill an overall reform of the present system in this area, a reform which was, in a way, underlined in today's order paper under notices of motions, pursuant to Standing Order 75(5).

Mr. Speaker, three members of the Social Credit Party have asked the government to consider today increasing the pension from $100 to $200, allowing every person of 60 or over to become eligible for the old age pension if desired, and every person whose spouse has reached 60 to get automatically a monthly $200 pension.

I am convinced that within a few years or within some time, if we of the Social Credit Party continue to apply pressure on the government on the matter, and if the population is aware of what is going on here, we will obtain the increase in the old age security pensions and the lowering of the eligibility age to 60. I greatly regret that the government goes for small doses, quietly, while trying to create for itself a small political capital each time it takes a turtle's step forward in this field.

Why wait, Mr. Speaker? Canadians at age 60 have paid enough taxes and have worked hard enough to get this inalienable right.

Many people aged 60 must now seek their living from provincial social welfare offices. It is a shame in a country as rich as ours.

Why increase old age pensions to only $100? Is Canada so poor? Are we short of wheat in Canada? No, Mr. Speaker, because western farmers are paid not to produce. Are we short of milk in Canada? No, Mr. Speaker, the farmers who exceed their milk quota are penalized. Are we short of manpower? No, Mr. Speaker, our unemployed have become legions. Are we short of natural resources? There are so many that the government thinks it should subsidize these resources, especially the companies exploiting them, to maintain prices.

For many years, at all levels of government, remedies to unemployment have been sought as well as solutions to reach a certain justice in distribution. At this stage of my speech, I would like to quote an extract from an editorial dealing with the subject as follows:

For the last five years, all levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal have done their utmost to find remedies to two evils which seem to be here to stay: inflation and unemployment.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

In spite of the efforts of the authorities, the results are quite relative, particularly as far as unemployment is concerned: it is not unreasonable to think that the situation is not getting better because the means used are for the most part very short term ones.

However there is a suggestion that governments might do well to examine to alleviate unemployment, and it is to set the retirement age at 60 and to grant at that time all the social benefits presently linked to the pension at 65, that is to say, the full old age pension, the complete payment of the pension fund benefits and the pension the retired person contributed to when he was at an employer's service.

I guess some people will object that not all workers would accept with pleasure to retire at 60 because they are still able to work and the situation does not enable them to envisage a reduction of income.

To this serious objection, it must be answered that possible legislation in this direction could provide that retirement at 60 would be optional and not compulsory.

It is of course impossible to go into the particulars that such legislation could include, but it is certain that several jobs could be held by young workers who are only waiting for an opening to enter the labour market and on the other hand, those who would voluntarily retire at 60 could enjoy a much longer period of rest and leisure—

Mr. Speaker, like the editorial writer, I agree that a peson of 60, who has worked hard all his life and who wants to retire, should have the choice to get his old age security pension in order to leave his job and to rest while travelling or doing odd jobs in order to enjoy the last years of his life.

Mr. Speaker, I think we lack nothing in Canada or, rather, we lack a government which will one day succeed in establishing greater distributive justice. I think it's the only thing lacking, and I hope that the people will soon have had enough of those governments with temporary and inefficient solutions, of those governments that give sparingly to the little men, and that give generously to the big men, of those governments that force the older citizens to beg at the provincial welfare offices, and to beg day after day for a small allowance.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was an understanding, not the kind that is signed, sealed and delivered, but a kind of understanding that this debate would not go beyond eleven o'clock. I wonder whether there could not now be a formal understanding that the question be put at 11.15. I am prepared to sit all night to get this bill through, but—

An hon. Member: We should vote before twelve.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are still keeping to the agreement reached by the representatives of the four parties. As to us, we would like one of our colleagues to have the floor for five minutes. I know that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has expressed his desire to speak; consequently, I suggest that around 11.15 or 11.20 the question could be put.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to the effect that the House agree to a definite time.

[English]

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has raised a very valid point, that there was an apparent understanding that the House would extend its sitting from ten o'clock until eleven o'clock. We have now gone beyond that time.

[Translation]

In other words, the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is to the effect that the House agree on the exact time at which the question will be put.

Does the House agree to proceed until 11.20?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement. But I would attach to that agreement, and I hope this does not confuse Your Honour, the condition that if there is a vote by any strange circumstance, it be deferred until tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John Lancaster (Mr. Bell) suggests that, if there is to be a vote, it be held tomorrow, or at some other time than tonight.

[English]

Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière and all other hon. members agree that at 11:20 the debate be interrupted by the Chair to put the question and if, by any chance, there should be a vote, that this vote be deferred.

For the time being, we shall have the pleasure of hearing the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I should like to remind the house leaders of each party that when there is a proposed agreement between the parties on a time limit, the independent members should be called and advised accordingly.

The hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin), I think, reminds me that a party is useful, but people forget that I nevertheless have been sent here by the electors of a riding, and this in a very definite and clear way. In view of this mandate, I fully intend to take advantage of my privileges to state that agreements are always reached among parties without my being advised.

I should like to remark, Mr. Speaker, that I for one cannot accept that business be adjourned at 11:20 or 11:21. Any way, I have a few words to say and so perhaps have other hon. members, but I remind those responsible in the various parties that when there is a discussion about agreeing on a time limit, they must not forget to contact the present speaker, because there are 18,000 voters who have asked him to come here and express their feelings.

Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the hon. member should be reminded that there are two independent members in this House.

Mr. Speaker: It was assumed that the hon. member was speaking on behalf of both independent members.

• (2310)

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: In my turn, I would say to the hon. member that I did say: the independents.

I want to make it clear that I have no trouble getting information from my colleague.

I would like to take advantage of this debate which, according to certain people, is going too far but which, to me, is a most serious and important debate. Contrary to those who blamed the Creditiste members for wasting the House's time, I commend them for fighting this battle today in the House and for emphasizing more than ever the importance of retirement at 60.

Even though it might be thought that there are few advantages outside a party, I have the advantage of being able to speak objectively and tonight I can congratulate my friends to my right, while others will only criticize them, because tonight they deserve it. They are raising an important question. They have decided to make the minister and this government aware of the importance of old age security at 60.

Besides, we all know that a great majority of hon. members would be in favour of old age security at 60 were it not for party lines. We should not go beyond that even though the principle is quite valid and justified.

Therefore, I would like also to commend the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who admitted—

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Joliette but the hon. member for Longueuil is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, the member for Joliette suggests that members who belong to a party have their arms twisted so that they will remain silent or represent their constituents unsatisfactorily. I wish to point out to the hon. member for Joliette that even those who belong to a party can speak and do so without creating a commotion.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I heard the remark of the hon. member for Longueuil and when he says that he can express his views as member of a party, I hope that he will do it on the very important bill now under consideration.

I would like to congratulate the member for Timiskaming who readily acknowledged the validity of the proposals made by the Social Credit Party of Canada today but which were rejected. I was pleased just the same to note that those suggestions were discussed as they contain some opinions which I have personally upheld in this house for two or three years. Those are proposals which truly affect the day-to-day reality.

However, I should like to urge the hon. member for Timiskaming—I do not know if he can succeed—to convince his colleagues to act in the same direction. We did not get the same version from all the members of the New Democrat party and I must say that during the debate on the budget, I was very disappointed to see that the New Democratic party did not see fit to move an amendment that would have taken into account the feelings shown earlier by the member for Timiskaming. We must ask ourselves several questions. I think that all those who are in this House now know the answer.

Mr. Speaker, let us think a little about the 60-year-old people who, of course, are certainly interested to know the results of today's debate and want the bill to be passed. We know perfectly well that thousands of individuals in Canada look forward to old age security at 60. In my riding, on 12,000 letters which were sent out, I received about 6,000 answers 98 per cent of which were in favour of the implementation of old age security at 60.

Finally, a resolution of the central council of the Confederation of National Trade Unions also recommended to give the necessary support to the implementation of old age security at 60. However, I know that the minister recently announced that the operation of the policy on old age security at 60 could cost Canadians $1 billion.

It is easy to say what such a proposal can cost. It would perhaps be interesting, for example, to ask the minister how much the 550,000 unemployed are costing the country.

In view of the total cost of unemployment it is reasonable to hope that greater access to old age security pensions would create jobs for younger people who would occupy the positions left vacant by pensioners, and consequently the new measure would not cost Canadians $1 billion.

We recognize readily that a government has the responsibility to restore or create a suitable social climate. So the amendments which were moved and the discussions which took place in this House today call for old age pensions at 60. We have also discussed the possibility for someone who is not yet 60 to qualify for old age security if his spouse is eligible.

Finally, I think that those measures are pressing at this time. We know that such a policy would result in a decrease in unemployment because granting old age security pensions at the age of 64 would affect some 140,000 people.

It is reasonable to assume that the in the neighbourhood of 100,000 new jobs would be created if those people retired, and they could do it with a suitable pension. That would be a good solution in view of the failures we witnessed in the last five years in trying to curb unemployment. In fact, in spite of all the efforts that were made, including the capital injected in the economy, the rate of unemployment has tripled. I do not say that the government has done nothing. On the contrary, it has spent a lot of money and has tried to think up all kinds of ways of reducing the unemployment rate, but with totally unsatisfactory results.

[Mr. La Salle.]

I therefore think that a great many Canadians are demanding legislation aimed at giving the old age security pension at 60. Before proceeding to third reading of the bill before us, we should make a thorough study of this.

The effect of such a policy would be to restore the social climate, and I do not think I am exaggerating. Those pensioned at 60 would without a doubt be much happier people. That would be preferable by far to paying welfare allowances to young people, which is to give one's blessing to the decadence of a whole generation. I also believe workers would willingly contribute a part of their taxes to obtain old age security at 60. The security this would mean for the individual when he reaches the age 60 is, in my opinion, something which must definitely be taken into consideration.

This would also do away with the necessity for the worker's contribution to a pension fund because of the present lack of security. The 60-year old worker, because of technological changes, of modern machines, would welcome being given security at 60. We are quite aware of the fact that from 60 to 65 that individual works himself to death and often is incapacitated when he ceases to work. Therefore, I believe we have much to gain by supporting this policy and I am grateful to all those who were kind enough to encourage it and who brought up arguments to convince the minister that granting the old age security pension at 60 is a pressing matter.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is therefore decidedly inadequate. Of course, there is an increase for those who are 65, but the Speech from the Throne had led us to believe, unless I am mistaken, that many more Canadians would get the old age security pension in view of the amendments that would be introduced in the House. There will be more pensioners, naturally, because more Canadians will be 65 this year, but that is the only change. The Speech from the Throne had stirred hope amongst poeple of 60 and more. How many of them, in my riding and elsewhere, I am sure, fret and worry, asking: Is it possible, is it true that we will at long last get the old age security pension at 60?

So I take the liberty of asking again the minister to consider seriously providing old age security at 60 and also of blaming the opposition parties, because they could have forced the government to take action in that connection. I remember that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) had made much of old age security at 60 during the last election campaign and I said that I would be very pleased to support him to the extent—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member. I was under the impression that there was an agreement to put the question at 11.20. If there is no such agreement, we should adjourn the debate until tomorrow, and this is what I suggest to the hon. members. First, we agreed to proceed until 11 o'clock, and then until 11.20. If there is no agreement to that effect, the hon. member for Joliette having indicated earlier that he does not feel bound by the commitment made by the spokesmen for the various parties, I suggest that it would be suitable at this time to adjourn our proceedings.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to hon. members that if the hon. member for Joliette wants to move an amendment, the debate of course will continue and it would be appropriate therefore that we adjourn proceedings.

[English]

Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 11.22 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FINANCE

TABLING OF COMMUNIQUÉ OF COMMITTEE OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND ON MONETARY REFORM AND RELATED ISSUES

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table, in English and in French, the communiqué of the committee of the board of governors of the International Monetary Fund on international monetary reform and related issues.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which I would say almost affects the privileges of the House. This is the second occasion within a week's time that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance, who have represented Canada at a series of the most important international monetary conferences, have resorted to the use of Standing Order 41(2) to table communiqués that are very important so far as Canada is concerned rather than having the decency or, one might almost say, the courage to make a statement in the House with regard to Canada's attitude in these discussions so that representatives of the opposition parties could comment on these matters as they affect Canada. We now have to go to the Parliamentary Returns office to get a copy. I believe, Sir, that the least that should be done is for the communiqué to be printed as an appendix to Hansard so that all hon. members will have the text and the general public will be informed of it.

Mr. Speaker: I gather that this is a rather brief document and that there would be no technical difficulty in having it appended to Hansard. Is this the wish of the House?

*COST OF 1972 INCOME TAX FORMS

Question No. 1,420—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What has been the total cost of printing the 1972 income tax forms and the materials sent out therewith?

2. What has been the total cost of advertising, publicity and promotion in connection with the 1972 income tax forms?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is concerned the answer is: 1. The estimated total cost is $1,798,000.

2. $1,205,146.10.

*PHARMACEUTICAL EXPERIMENTS WITH PENITENTIARY INMATES

Question No. 1,490—Mr. Howard:

1. Have penitentiary inmates ever been used to test newly developed pharmaceuticals or for any other medical experimentation and, if so, what are the details thereof?

2. Are penitentiary inmates currently used to test newly developed pharmaceuticals or for any other medical experimentation and, if so, what are the details thereof?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. The following medical experiments have, in the past, been carried out in Canadian penitentiaries: (a) In 1968 a study of the "Absorption of Aspirin" was carried out as a joint project by the Food and Drug Directorate and by a professor of pharmacology from Queens' University at Collins Bay Institution. (b) A trial of "Mogodon versus Placebo" was carried out at Joyceville Institution in December 1967. (c) A study on "Chromosonal Abnormalities" was conducted by Dr. G. D. Scott, Regional Psychiatrist, Ontario, in association with the Faculty of Medicine at Queen's University. (d) A study in "Psychopathy and Its Physiological Correlates" was conducted by Dr. D. Craigen, Director, Medical Services, in association with the Department of Psychology at the University of British Columbia. (e) A number of brief trials of various drugs were carried out in Archambault Institution by the Institute of Bio-Endocrinology in August 1971 and on six occasions during 1972. The number of inmates involved ranged from ten to 18. (f) In 1968 and again in 1972, Hoffman-La Roche, in co-operation with Dr. Harris, a physician employed by the penitentiary service, conducted studies on the blood levels of Valium and penicillin. On both occasions 20 inmates were involved. (g) A study on "Chromosonal Abnormalities" was conducted by Dr. Welch of Dalhousie University in 1969. In all of the above cases, the inmates' participation was on a completely voluntary basis and they were free to withdraw from the research at any time they wished. The inmates were well informed of the nature of the research in advance. Under no circumstances would authority be given for a procedure to be employed which would, in any way, be hazardous or detrimental to an inmate.

2. The only medical research currently being conducted is a study on "Chromosonal Abnormalities" in the Ontario region.

Question No. 1,659—Mr. Knight:

1. What were the annual revenues of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation from television advertising for the years 1965 to 1972 inclusive?

2. In each year 1965 to 1972 inclusive, what percentage of that amount was spent by Kraft Foods from CBC television advertising?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. 1964-65, $30,537,000; 1965-66, $31,145,000; 1966-67, $32,939,000; 1967-68, $36,265,000; 1968-69, $37,548,000; 1969-70, $44,881,000; 1970-71, $42,851,000; 1971-72, $46,710,000.

2. It has not been customary to require the CBC to disclose amounts spent by individual advertisers since such information could adversely affect the Corporation in its business relationships.

LIST OF CANADIAN FORCES AND PUBLIC SERVICE ELECTORS

Question No. 1,684—Mr. Nesdoly:

Is a Member of Parliament entitled to obtain a list of the names and addresses of persons who were registered in his constituency and voted overseas in the last Federal Election and (a) if so (i) in what manner may the information be obtained (ii) to whom must the request be made (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: It is assumed that the list referred to is the list of Canadian Forces and Public Service electors forwarded by the respective co-ordinating officers of the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs to the Chief Electoral Officer pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 37(5)(c) of the Special Voting Rules for onward transmission to returning officers during a federal election on accordance with the provisions of subsection 28(2) of the Canada Elections Act. The provisions of subsection 28(2) of the Act limit the availability of these lists to the period of a federal general election.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FEDERAL PENAL INSTITUTIONS SPECIAL LEAVE PROGRAM

Question No. 30—Mr. Coates:

1. How many inmates in federal penal institutions have participated in special leave programs in 1972 and what is the breakdown by institution across Canada?

2. Of those inmates involved in special leave programs how many have not honoured the conditions of the special leave and how many of those who broke the conditions of special leave also committed crimes?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—EXPENDITURE FOR RESEARCH AND CONSULTING SERVICES

Question No. 137—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What was the total amount of money spent in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72 by the Department of Agriculture on contracts to outside persons and organizations for research, development and other consulting services?

2. What are the names and addresses of these outside persons and organizations and what amounts of money were involved in each contract?

3. What was the purpose of each contract and title of each report submitted?

4. What are the names and addresses of outside persons and organizations who were awarded contracts for research, development and other consulting services in the current fiscal year, what are the amounts of money involved in each case and what is the purpose of each contract?

Return tabled.

PAPER MILLS

Question No. 641—Mr. Fortin:

1. How many paper plants are there in Canada and where are they located?

2. Since 1968, has the government paid any subsidies for (a) the expansion (b) the operation of paper mills in Canada?

3. How many plants have closed down (a) completely (b) partially?

4. How many workers have been laid off by paper mills in Canada since 1968 because (a) the plant was closed (b) production had diminished?

Return tabled.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—SUBCONTRACT OF FILMS

Question No. 995—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. (a) What volume of government film contracts was subcontracted to private film companies by the National Film Board for each of the past five years (b) what percentage of total NFB government contracts did this represent each year?

2. (a) Which were the ten largest private film companies who received these NFB subcontracts (b) what was the total amount of contracts they received in each year, and what percentage was this of the total?

3. Which of these subcontractors was not Canadian-owned?

4. (a) How many film projects does NFB currently have subcontracted to non-Canadian companies (b) what is the value of each of these contracts (c) on which of these contracts were there competitive bids from Canadian-owned companies?

Return tabled.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to expedite personally the answer to question No. 1,392. I must now inform you, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is the subject of very serious charges that are being dealt with on the two national television networks and on radio. The charges are in all the papers of Canada and the facts cannot be brought out to meet these charges against the government on the selling off our oil and gas lands in the north and on the continental shelf until this question is answered and we have the facts. I should like to impress on the minister very strongly, that it is the duty of this government to give this factual information immediately so that we can see what the facts are in respect of these very serious charges.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I too, would like to raise a point of order with respect to a number of questions standing in my name that have been on the order paper since January 16, two and a half months ago. Each asks for information about the action the government has taken with respect to specific recommendations in the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, but not one question has been answered to date. Surely there should be a little more interest on the part of the government than to let these questions remain in limbo with no response whatever being given on the very important matter of the report of that royal commission. One can only conclude that the government has not done anything about of those recommendations.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a point of order. On January 12 I asked the government for a complete analysis of the opportunities for youth programs conducted during 1972 in my riding. The government has had all sorts of opportunity to provide an answer. When the government is spending the money that it is on these programs, surely it should be able to supply members with an analysis of the results of the projects during 1972. This is a very serious matter, and I think it is important that the Minister do something about answering this question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I placed question No. 110 on the order paper on January 4 regarding contracts to outside persons and organizations for research and development for the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. I seek your guidance, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the answer has been prepared, has been in the minister's office for more than two weeks and that he is sitting on it for political reasons.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 202 is acceptable to the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that notice of motion No. 202 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Mr. Speaker: The motion stands.

ROSS REPORT ON INTERNAL OPERATIONS OF THE EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Motion No. 134—Mr. Stevens:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Ross Report on the internal operations of the Export Development Corporation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I move the motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no Ross Report on the internal operations of the Export Development Corporation. I would therefore ask the hon. member to kindly withdraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX INCREASE—INQUIRY AS TO NEW MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the escalating wholesale price increase, up nearly 2 per cent for the month of February alone and up 13.6 per cent in February, 1973, compared with February, 1972. Does the Prime Minister propose to take any new measures with regard to the control of inflation or does he simply intend to let these wholesale index increases work their way through to the consumer price index without any further action on his part?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no policy statement to announce today on that matter.

TELECOMMUNICATION RATE INCREASES—REVIEW OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION DECISION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a more specific question that relates to the increase in rates granted to CN-CP telecommunications, in one instance as high as 50 per cent. Does the Prime Minister intend to review this decision under the powers vested in the government under the National Transportation Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will have to consult with the Minister of Communications to establish whether the decision has been received by him and what action he recommends.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact the Canadian Transport Commission presumably is related to the Department of Transport and the Minister of Transport, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he will consult with the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Communications and the Minister of Transport to see who has the responsibility in this matter and whether any action is going to be taken?

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE TIGHT MONEY POLICY WILL NOT BE ADOPTED AND MEETING WITH PREMIERS TO DISCUSS PRICE CONTROLS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the warnings expressed in the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the government will not resort to the type of tight money policy that has created the unacceptably high level of unemployment we now have? Also, because of the expectation of increased prices, as expressed by the governor of the bank, will the Prime Minister agree to meet with the premiers of the provinces to discuss ways and means of holding down prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first question, I will ensure that the representations of the hon. member are communicated to the governor of the bank. On the second question, I would answer that the meeting of federal and provincial first ministers is being scheduled now and the items for discussion are being negotiated between the parties.

Mr. McGrath: My question was not for the governor of the Bank of Canada but for the Prime Minister. I ask the Prime Minister if he will reassure the House and the country, especially because of the failure of the government's regional development policy to operate in the framework of a tight money policy and because of the importance of this question, that notwithstanding the warnings of the governor of the Bank of Canada the government will not resort to a tight money policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member appreciates that the governor of the bank has the primary responsibility for establishing monetary policy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Not so, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: —and the recommendation of the hon. member has been noted.

Mr. Hees: The governor is responsible to the government, and you know it.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF MAC'S MILK LIMITED TO PASS ALONG TAX CUTS TO CONSUMERS—MONITORING MECHANISM

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister's department now investigated the alleged refusal by Mac's Milk Limited to pass on tax cut savings to consumers? Will he report to the House on the findings of this investigation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a complete report from my officials on the matter, but I noted that the report in one of the Toronto daily newspapers on which this question was based yesterday indicated that an official of the chain in question said that the directive to its stores had been countermanded. I will check to see if this is correct. After all, one would not want to see the Easter Bunny hampered in carrying out his appointed rounds.

Mr. Grier: Will the minister indicate to the House whether the bureau in his department to monitor whether tax cut savings are being passed on to consumers is now functioning and, if not, when it is expected to be?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I said in the House yesterday that we were developing methods of ascertaining the effect of the tax cuts announced in the budget on prices of the goods in question. I am not yet in a position to give further information to the House on this matter.

Mr. Grier: In view of the fact that some details as to this bureau are already in the public domain, as reported in one Toronto paper yesterday, can the minister inform the House as to the bureau's proposed terms of reference, what steps will be taken to publicize violations, and what administrative or legislative action is contemplated by the minister to deal with violations?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the press report in question appears to be based on some misunderstanding of the information the reporter in question was given. Therefore I do not think a further reply by me to the hon. member's question would be relevant.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

NEW QUEBEC—ALLEGED POISONING OF CERTAIN INDIANS BY MERCURY CONTAMINATED FISH—REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSULT WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Can he tell us if he has communicated with the Quebec authorities to find out the circumstances surrounding the death of one Indian and the sickness of several others recently in New Quebec?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what incident the hon. member is referring to, but I will inquire and report to him and to the House tomorrow or the following day.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the hon. Minister of the Environment. Could he inquire, at the same time as his colleague from Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with the Quebec authorities involved to find out if the poisoning of this person was due to fish poisoned by mercury?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

STEEL PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that, according to the Steel Company of Canada, steel prices will rise on April 2 by $6 a ton, the third increase in six months, is the minister prepared to investigate this price rise to determine if it is really justified?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that the report in question may have some relevance to the existing combines law, I am certainly happy to draw this fact to the attention of the officials who administer that law.

Mr. Blenkarn: The industry is saying that the real reason for the price increase is the rise in scrap metal prices.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Blenkarn: Will the minister investigate scrap metal prices to determine if that is the true cause?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will draw this further comment of the hon. member to the attention of the officials administering the Combines Investigation Act.

TARIFF AND SALES TAX REDUCTIONS—MONITORING SYSTEM TO ENSURE CONSUMERS GET BENEFIT

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On February 27, over a month ago, the minister indicated to me in the House that the government was setting up a monitoring system to ensure that tariff and sales tax reductions in the budget would be passed on to consumers. Would the minister tell the House whether the monitoring system to which he was referring is the same as the one to which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has referred and, if so, can he give us more information than the other minister was prepared to give us today?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The monitoring system to which my colleague referred is the monitoring system to which I referred.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—ALLEGED STATEMENT BY REFEREES AS TO WITCH HUNT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On Monday, March 19, I asked the minister whether he would investigate a charge by Murray Tate in connection with the government's crackdown on recipients of unemployment insurance benefits. He, along with others who incidentally are on the appeal board, said there was a witch hunt in progress and that the tactics used were terrifying people. Has the minister had an opportunity to investigate this matter through his officials and, if so, what report has he received?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There were three such instances, I believe, referred to by the hon. member. The three gentlemen named have been contacted. The files have been brought to Ottawa, are under examination now and are being referred to the advisory committee which I mentioned in my earlier reply, but the report is not complete.

Mr. Alexander: Apparently Mr. Tate has stated that the crackdown has resulted in a rotten situation, since those who belong to unions and who report to their unions have been automatically disqualified. This point was brought home to the unemployment insurance officials so that it might be rectified immediately. Is the minister aware of this situation and, if so, what action does he contemplate in order to rectify it?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, all the comments made are being investigated. I would prefer to wait for the report of the advisory committee.

Mr. Alexander: I was under the impression that the advisory committee would have reported before this. Can the minister tell us when he expects to receive the report of the advisory committee and when it will subsequently be made available to the House?

Mr. Andras: I do not yet have a precise date but we are pressing for this information to be supplied as quickly as it can be done completely.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

STATUS OF TEMBEC APPLICATION TO REOPEN MILL IN TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion arising out of the application by TEMBEC in Témiscamingue for a DREE grant to restart the plant that CIP closed down in that town. The application was made some five or six months ago. May I ask the minister what the present status of that application is?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this has been, and continues to be, a very complex subject, but I can advise the hon. member and the House that I have now completed an evaluation and that a series of recommendations by me will be considered by appropriate ministers within a matter of days. I am hopeful I shall have a positive announcement to make before the end of next week.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact, according to information which has been sent to me, that the employees concerned have now exhausted their unemployment insurance entitlement and families are entirely without income, would the minister assure the House that a favourable decision on this application will be made and announced within days and that there will be no long delay such as we have experienced until now?

Mr. Jamieson: I am sure the hon. member will understand that I cannot give him an ironclad assurance that, in his words, a favourable decision will be made. I can assure him I will suggest that something along those lines be done. As to the second part of the question, yes, we will have an answer next week.

EXCHANGE RATES—INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND COMMITTEE MEETING—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the communiqué which he tabled on motions. On page two this statement appears:

> Members of the committee recognized that exchange rates must be a matter for international concern and consultation and that in the reformed system the exchange rate regime should remain based on stable but adjustable par values.

Would the minister advise the House as to the nature of Canada's proposal with regard to a fixed rate on a rather more flexible basis? Is this the so-called creeping peg? Would the minister also tell us whether Canada was the country that insisted upon the advisability of periodic floating rates?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the communiqué goes on to say in the next sentence: "It was also recognized that floating rates could provide a useful technique in particular situations." Canada's position is that the ultimate objective of a new international monetary system should be stable but adjustable fixed rates but that in the meantime we should not ignore the recent situation in the world with a good part of the industrial complexes on a series of floats, and that we have to build up this system before achieving a new monetary order.

• (1430)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I will refrain from saying that that is a mugwump position. However, there is the further statement that "there should be a strong presumption against the use of trade controls for balance of payments purposes." Would the minister advise the House whether United States Secretary of the Treasury Shultz subscribed to that statement, and did he give any assurances to the minister about the impact of the rumoured legislation that is being brought forward by the U.S. administration regarding trade restrictions?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think it was the general view of the committee of 20, including the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, that resort to trading controls would be an extreme measure to be used only in the event that currency controls did not work. So that is the position that the secretary must be presumed to have taken if he subscribed to the communiqué, which he did.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to ask any more supplementary questions, but the answers that the minister has given give rise to a whole series of supplementary questions and point up the bankruptcy of the gesture made by the minister at the beginning of the session this afternoon. We should have had an explanation by the minister and been given the opportunity to comment on so important a subject.

IMMIGRATION

IMPENDING DEPORTATION OF TARA SINGH GILL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY MINISTER

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I sent notice of this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration because of the important principle at stake. In view of the fact that Tara Singh Gill, a visitor from East India, faces a deportation order tomorrow because he is being treated by immigration officials in Edmonton in a manner that does not reflect the compassionate policy the minister said would be followed with respect to visitors who came to Canada prior to November 3, will the minister personally examine the facts of this case and rule that this man become eligible for landed immigrant status?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. I have not had an opportunity to review the case but I will do so. I will ask for a report forthwith. I cannot, of course give any guarantee or indication of the outcome of the review, but I will be pleased to inform the hon. member of the result as soon as I can determine it.

Mr. Roche: On March 1 I asked the minister whether he would assure the House that his compassionate policy was being communicated to his regional officials. Today I sent the minister conclusive evidence that that compassionate policy has not been communicated or is certainly not being followed. I ask this question since this man is facing a deportation order tomorrow, and I do not know how many others who may similarly qualify under this compassionate policy are facing deportation orders. Canada may very well be in the process of losing people who might make a positive contribution to the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is, of course, a representation rather than a question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO WHEN SECOND READING OF BILL TO AMEND BROADCASTING ACT WILL BE CALLED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Can the minister give any indication when my Bill C-143, an act to amend the Broadcasting Act, will receive second reading, as school boards across Canada have been patiently waiting for some action on this problem? REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC CANADA—REQUEST FOR MASSIVE CAPITAL INVESTMENT IN LARGE INFRASTRUCTURES

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad I wore my red suit. My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that present infrastructures and incentive grants to Atlantic Canada have failed to solve the chronic problem of regional disparity, would the minister consider bringing before the House a program of massive capital investment in large infrastructures, such as the Prince Edward Island causeway or the proposal regarding a corridor road from McAdam, New Brunswick, to Sherbrooke, Quebec, as one measure to deal with this problem?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think it is perfectly obvious that I cannot answer the question in detail now. However, I understand that the committee was established last night and I shall be appearing before it within the next two or three weeks. I would be glad to give the hon. member an answer at that time.

INCOME TAX

INCORRECT RETURNS PREPARED BY PRIVATE TAX CONSULTANT OFFICES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact a recent study showed that 11 tax offices offering assistance to taxpayers for a fee in filing their income tax returns produced 11 different results from the same facts, would the minister inform the House whether his department is carrying out an investigation into this situation or has he any proposals to make to the House?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to tax consultants' services. Returns coming from such services are watched to try to ensure that there is not a pattern of inaccuracy or unfairness to the taxpayer. We shall continue to watch these returns and take such action as we can in order to make sure that taxpayers receive every benefit from the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of consumer affairs. In view of the national presence of some of these outfits like H. & R. Block, can the minister say whether his department is investigating the situation I have referred to in view of the fees charged taxpayers for the assistance that is given?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is something that perhaps could be looked into under the misleading advertising provisions. I would be happy to take note of the hon. member's question and pursue the matter further.

SUGGESTED SENDING OF ADVERTISING MATERIAL TO PRIVATE TAX CONSULTANT FIRMS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. If 11 different opinions can be given by various officials across Canada appointed for the purpose of simplifying income tax forms and ensuring that ordinary Canadians understand them, in view of the fact that the minister's department has an advertising program costing $1,200,000 concerning income tax forms for 1972 entitled "It's new and easier than it looks", would he send copies of this advertising to those officials?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman has misunderstood the previous question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I have not.

Mr. Stanbury: It was not officials but private tax consulting services which were the subject of the previous question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if these people who are versed in income tax forms can give 11 different opinions and ideas, does the minister not think that something more should be done to let the Canadian people know for 1972 that "it's easier than it looks"?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, we have already extended the advertising program along the lines suggested by the right hon. gentleman, and I was glad to have his endorsation of the program and his suggestion that it be extended to the weekly newspapers as I had already asked my officials to do. We will see whether there is any additional aid we can give the tax consulting services, but I do not think we can vouch for their services, particularly when some seem to have hired a good many extra people who perhaps have not received as good a training as they might have been given. Nevertheless, I am glad to see in the article, cited by the hon. member who asked the previous question that the district taxation office was able to confirm the calculation pretty much as the reporter had made it, and the reporter concluded that is someone followed the guide he could do it quite well by himself.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking an opportunity to ask supplementary questions. I wonder if we might not try to go to a different subject for a few minutes and return to the matter later.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, of which I have given him notice.

Further to my representations to the minister concerning the serious problem of the Saint-Hyacinthe College of Veterinary Medicine, would the minister have an encouraging report to bring forward here today so that the desirable progress of that school may become financially possible?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If the minister can reply briefly to the question he will be allowed to do so, but generally speaking I have the impression this is the kind of question that could be considered at the time of adjournment. Certainly the minister may reply briefly to the hon. member's question.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been authorized by the government to enter into deliberations with my provincial counterparts in Quebec, Ontario and Saskatchewan to discuss the enlargement of veterinary colleges.

RESERVE FUND HOLDINGS OF UNITED STATES DOLLARS—POSSIBILITY OF GUARANTEED EXCHANGE RATE OR DIVERSIFICATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West of the Minister of Finance. Two or three weeks ago before the minister went to Paris he said he would be talking to Secretary of the Treasury Shultz about many things, including exchange guarantees. I wonder whether in Paris or Washington the minister had conservations with Secretary Shultz on either exchange guarantees or a policy of diversification in respect of our unusually high holdings of U.S. dollars?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had several conversations with Secretary Shultz, as the hon. member can appreciate, but at no time did we get into specifics on exchange guarantees because neither of us at the moment perceives that to be necessary.

INDUSTRY

LUMBER—POSSIBILITY OF RESTRICTIONS ON PRICES AND EXPORTS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the great shortage of lumber in Canada with resulting high prices and the impact on young Canadian families trying to build homes, is the minister considering the application of the same restrictions on prices and exports that he applied in respect of the copper industry in 1969 in order to meet a similar situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a rather similar question asked last week I mentioned that the government has put on export controls under the Export and Import Permits Act in respect of the export of logs and that in fact we are not an exporter of logs but a net importer. In that sense we have been helping to build the supply side for the use of lumber and plywood in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton, but the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain rises on a point of order. The hon. member will be recognized in a moment.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that I asked a question about lumber and I got an answer about logs, and while there is a relationship—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I know that under the rules the minister does not have to answer, but perhaps I might be allowed to ask the question again in respect of lumber. Has he considered applying the same restrictions on prices and on exports of lumber as he did in respect of the copper industry in 1969?

Mr. Gillespie: No, Mr. Speaker, but the question of building materials in Canada is one that we have under constant review.

BILINGUALISM

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF FUNDS TO ASSIST ONTARIO FRENCH-SPEAKING STUDENTS

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question, you will be interested to know, is prompted by the plight of French-speaking students in Cornwall and the unhappy situation there. In view of the funds to be made available to enable English-speaking students to learn the French language, is there any likelihood that the Secretary of State will make available to areas in Ontario like Cornwall funds to enable French-speaking students to learn and improve upon their knowledge of the French language?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am very sympathetic toward this problem.

Mr. Hees: Otherwise he wouldn't have asked you the question.

Mr. Faulkner: I would point out to the hon. member that, if my memory serves me correctly, between January, 1970, and March, 1972, the federal government has made available to the province of Ontario something like $18 million in support of French language instruction, plus another $5 million in support of administration.

Mr. Cullen: In view of that response, Mr. Speaker, are representations being made to the Minister of Education of Ontario to ensure that federal funds are in fact used to encourage bilingual education in areas like Cornwall?

Some hon. Members: Order paper!

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF USE OF FEDERAL GRANTS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Is the Secretary of State satisfied with the use that the provinces are making of subsidies from the federal government for promoting and developing the teaching of the minority's official language in the provinces? If not, does he intend to make a thorough investigation of the use that is made of this money, especially in New Brunswick, where it is difficult to find out to what use these millions of dollars are put?

[English]

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might respond to the two questions. I am not sure that the difficulty in Cornwall is at the level of the Minister of Education of Ontario. On the question of the use of funds, although it is difficult to generalize in this regard, we do plan to meet shortly with the provinces to go over the whole bilingualism support program. Because I have received representations of this kind, I plan to discuss this matter with the ministers of education from the provinces. I know they are concerned about it as well.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN IN FORCES TO UPGRADE EDUCATION BY ATTENDING SERVICE COLLEGES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of National Defence. He announced very recently in a press release that men serving in the armed forces would in future be able to enroll at our service colleges under the university training plan to provide academic upgrading to degree standing. Will this same opportunity also be available to women serving in our armed forces and, if not, will he explain this discrimination?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question from the hon. member a few weeks ago. The answer is no.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is not at all the same question I asked the minister some time ago. At that time I asked whether the service colleges would be opened up to provide the same opportunities to young women as to young men. This is a different question which relates to a press release issued last week. It has nothing to do with my former question. Would the minister answer this question now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: May I then direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a supplementary question and then we will attempt to go to the next subject.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as it is obvious this government has decided to follow a practice of discrimination, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he sent forward a nomination for an Academy Award for the hon. member for York South as best supporting actor?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL—SECURITY CHECK-OUT OF AIR CANADA PASSENGERS AND NOT OTHERS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. I should like him to explain to the House why at the Ottawa International Airport passengers boarding Air Canada planes must go through a security check-out while just 15 feet away passengers boarding another commercial airline are not required to go through the same kind of security check-out?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a couple of months ago I met with all the airlines and asked them to implement some security measures while we were amending the Aeronautics Act. It is on a voluntary basis at the moment and that is why some do and others do not. As soon as the act is amended by the House it will be compulsory for all airlines.

An hon. Member: Bring it forward.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL NEGOTIATING TEAM TO MEET YUKON NATIVE BROTHERHOOD REPRESENTATIVES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

An hon. Member: Sock it to him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I would like to ask him this question.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Since it has already been made an order of the House, can the minister say if the federal negotiating team has been set up to meet with the negotiating team of the Yukon Native Brotherhood with respect to their brief submitted to the Prime Minister on February 14?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet completed the formation of the federal group that will meet the representatives of the Yukon Indians. I hope to be able to announce the names of the group's members at the beginning of next week, for I do not think I shall be able to do so by the end of this week.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Since the minister mentioned next week, does he recall that the order requires that this negotiating team should commence its work before March 31 of this year?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I agree that there is a resolution of the House to that effect, but the House will understand that it is important to make up the best group possible. I apologize to the House for having to take a few extra days to do it, but I prefer to do my job as well as I can.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary question to the previous question.

AIR CANADA

RESERVATION SERVICE FOR OTTAWA RESIDENTS—TRANSFER TO OTTAWA AIRPORT FROM MONTREAL

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and concerns Air Canada. Can the minister confirm that Air Canada has plans to transfer part of the company's information service to the Ottawa international airport and, if so, when will this take place?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I have not been personally informed, Mr. Speaker. I spoke to the president of Air Canada on this matter but I do not know whether they have immediate plans for relocating the service.

AIRPORTS

PROVISION OF SUFFICIENT SPACE AND PROPER ORGANIZATION FOR SECURITY CHECK-OUTS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Brant. What plans are in hand to establish space and proper organization within airports so that security inspections can be properly carried out with some comfort for passengers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered the question just a few minutes ago. As the hon. member knows, the bill to amend the Aeronautics Act will be before the House very soon. At that time we will have to work out with the airport authorities and the airline companies how we are going to implement the new act. The only authority there is now rests with the airlines themselves and not with the airport authority. We have no legal authority to carry out these inspections. In the meantime we have to rely on the right of the airlines to accept or refuse passengers on the basis of the private contracts they have with passengers. This is why there is this kind of confusion.

[Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands).]

TRANSPORT

ESTABLISHMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Transport.

Will the minister soon take appropriate measures to establish a truly Canadian merchant navy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, according to the Menzies report, in order for Canada to have a merchant navy, not only would huge subsidies have to be granted but we would have to have our ships built abroad. This does not exclude the creation of a merchant navy, but it means that other ways will have to be found to achieve this aim, which I would like to make possible, if ever it is indicated it is profitable.

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I give the floor to the hon. member for Drummond for a supplementary question.

Mr. Boisvert: Could the Minister of Transport tell us the impact on present unemployment rate of the establishment of a merchant navy?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this question is hypothetical.

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN MAKING REFUNDS TO THOSE OVER 65, THE BLIND, DISABLED AND STUDENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Now that the government has given a good deal of advice to Canadians on how to fill out their 1972 tax returns, has the Prime Minister any advice to give to those Canadians over 65, to students, the blind and the disabled who have applied for refunds in respect of 1972 income but whose applications cannot be processed because the legislation which was supposed to be retroactive to January 1, 1972, has not been passed? Has the Prime Minister any advice to give to those poor unfortunate Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that they will be obtaining relief when the tax measure is passed with the support, I am sure, of all parties in the House. That poor, unfortunate condition described by the Leader of the Opposition will then be relieved thanks to the government's measure.

Mr. Stanfield: It's a poor way to run the country.

[Later:]

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the Leader of the Opposition. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not these people who have paid their taxes on time and are being denied a refund because the appropriate legislation has not been brought before us by the present government will be penalized, and would he consider paying them interest on the money the government is using?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope that question will become academic soon.

POST OFFICE

ACTION TO IMPROVE SERVICE IN LIGHT OF ALLEGED COMPLAINTS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In view of complaints expressed across Canada concerning the handling of mail and resulting breakages and other damage, and with reference to the editorial that was sent to the Postmaster General by the Sylvan Lake News, what action does the Postmaster General intend to take to ensure that the people who pay the postage receive the service to which they are entitled?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. member's remarks, in such general terms. If he has a definite complaint, I will be glad to inquire. But I want to assure him that our utmost efforts are aimed at improving the postal service and the implementation of the new postal code will be a great step in that direction.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONSULTATIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND NOVA SCOTIA COUNTERPART ON CONSIDERATIONS INVOLVED IN PROPOSED CANSO PETROLEUM OR PETROCHEMICAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Have recent consultations taken place between the minister and his Nova Scotia counterpart on the environmental considerations implicit in the proposed petroleum or petrochemical development in the Strait of Canso area in Nova Scotia so as to avoid perhaps some of the difficulties that plagued this administration in the Come-By-Chance situation last year in Newfoundland?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations and we expect the results will be the same, namely, that our national standards will apply not only in Come-By-Chance but in the Strait of Canso area also.

FISHERIES

PROVISION OF AUDITED FINANCIAL STATEMENT FOR FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the time limit on this matter, has the minister as yet received the certified audited financial statement from the Auditor General or his staff covering the past year's operations of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there have been some communications between the Auditor General's office and my deputy minister. I have not personally seen any of these communications.

Mr. Crouse: When the minister does receive this audited statement, will he table it according to the requirements of Standing Order 82(1)?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NATURAL RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO INCREASE CANADIAN OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL OF PROJECTS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the government House leader. In view of the promise made in the Speech from the Throne that the government would introduce measures to increase Canadian participation in ownership and control of resource projects, would the minister inform the House how soon we can expect such measures?

• (1500)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be introducing a related measure this afternoon and probably he will have more to say on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a supplementary and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot for the last question.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the seriousness of conditions concerning our natural resources, is the government considering measures to place all the resources of Canada under the ownership of the people of Canada?

TAXATION

INCORPORATED FAMILY FARMS—SUGGESTED PROVISION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX RELIEF

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Having regard to the years of encouragement given by this government, and indeed by governments at all levels, to the incorporation of Canadian family farms, and in view of the fact that the budget has provided no capital gains tax relief for this particular type of family farm, what steps has the minister taken to correct this inequality?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I do not agree with the premise of the question. I do not think there is the inequality that the hon. member says there is.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE BASIC PENSION AND TO CLARIFY BASE YEAR IN ESCALATION FORMULA

The House resumed, from Tuesday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-147, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I would invite hon. members who want to hold conversations to leave the chamber. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue my remarks in the same vein as last night while overlooking, if possible, the jarring notes we heard towards the end of the sitting. May I point out to the House that my contribution is certainly not intended to waste the time of the House.

I believe that this law should take into account the importance of the problems, and I think it is normal and logical for any member to claim the maximum of services it can ensure to elderly people.

Therefore, if some people wanted to claim that yesterday some members tried to waste the time of the House, maybe they should think that other members or other political bodies have done the same in the past. A simple glance at Hansard for 1971-72, containing debates over Bill C-176, will reveal enough.

I say this without spite, Mr. Speaker, and further to what I said yesterday in the House I would like to add at once that I do not intend to repeat my arguments of yesterday about the age of eligibility for the old age security pension at age 60.

As I was saying when we adjourned, I intend to propose an amendment, and this is what I will do in a few moments.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say why I shall introduce this amendment.

First, because I believe the legislation now before us is entirely inadequate since the proposed increase in the old age security pension does not even correspond to the increase in food prices which the aged had to face last year, not to mention the cost of housing and several other essential services.

Second, on behalf of thousands of Canadians, it is my duty to severely condemn this government for its refusal to grant the old age security pension at 60, at least to spread it over a five year period.

Finally, I could move my amendment as a last effort to enable the opposition parties to force the government to introduce a legislation which would significantly the rate of reduce unemployment in Canada.

Yesterday I spoke about the effects that old age pensions at 60 would have, as other hon. members have done for several years. It is important that the people of Canada know the attitude of hon. members on that issue. I would also like, with this amendment, to allow the opposition parties to make their attitude known to the people of Canada.

We know the position of this government. They will perhaps be content with saying that this bill contains a sufficient number of interesting proposals in view of the amounts of money required. The proposed increases are valid but do not go far enough for the reasons I gave a while ago.

What is the position of the Progressive Conservative party? I think my amendment will allow it to express its views freely on the possibility of greatly improving that bill. I know for sure that some Progressive Conservative members are in favour of old age pensions at 60. I see the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who has already made his views known and I would like to say to him while he is here that I was very pleased to hear him advocate old age security at 60 during the election campaign. As far as I am concerned, I promised my electors that I would support the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe when the occasion would arise and I will do so with great pleasure at any time.

I indeed hope that my amendment will be put to the vote and thus enable us to know the NDP's position. We are aware of the respect they have always shown for the aged, and we know what principles they have always upheld in the House. So I consider that I am giving the New Democrats an excellent opportunity today to support their principles and to honour their commitments. If they should fail to do so today, I should be most surprised, although they have changed their mind on some principles since the start of the session; I leave it to the people to judge their sincerity on this, the sincerity of those who, not so long ago, were so bravely making lists of all the things we ought to do for people in this category.

As for the Social Credit Party, I shall not speak for long about their position, since I think they demonstrated it very brilliantly yesterday. In fact, everything points to their supporting old age pensions at 60.

In conclusion, I will repeat certain words that my liberal friends know very well: Together, we can do something for society. Are we going to let such an opportunity escape us? I hope not. I for one am convinced that the request that I submit to the minister in favour of paying the old age security pension at 60 is the perfect answer to an objective that not only the Liberals but all Canadians have at heart, that is a just society. So if we really aim at achieving this just society, I think that today is the time to improve the bill now before us.

Before introducing my amendment, in case this is necessary, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call immediately on the procedure experts of the opposition parties in order that it may be put. But, above all, let them not tell me that this would be delaying the implementation of this bill. It is common knowledge that the minister will always be able to make the bill effective as of April 1.

I believe that the argument brought forward by some hon. members last night that delaying passage of the bill means depriving senior citizens of an increase in benefits is absurd. We are quite aware that we can review the bill, that we should review it, and that providing old age security at age 60 would have tremendous consequences in our society, restoring a favourable social climate. Everyone knows that, the majority of hon. members are certain of it. Yet, it is a matter of a billion dollars.

I said last night and I repeat for the benefit of those who were not here, this billion dollars required for the provision of old age security at 60 would be compensated by the thousands of job opportunities for the young unemployed whom we are spoiling rotten by way of an ever increasing number of social measures.

Let us put things straight, let us give holidays to those who deserve them, and a job to those who are able to work in order to build up a much more flourishing Canada.

Once more, I suggest that this solution is much better than all the inventions the government has been trying over the last five years. We are well aware of the numerous injections which have been made in the economy, of the efforts which have been made. All these efforts have resulted in failure as regards unemployment and inflation. We suggest today—and I say "we" because I know that I will be seconded and have support—an amendment in order to reach a solution which might greatly reduce unemployment, which is the plague of this country. This solution might bring happiness for thousands of Canadians to whom we are responsible.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain, that Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in order that the minister responsible may appear again before the said committee for the purpose of amending the bill in such a way that it may better meet the needs of the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I might make a few comments before reading the motion moved by the hon. member.

Of course, I understand that the Chair is not supposed to determine the steps that might be taken by the committee, but it still experiences some difficulty to determine what action the committee might take, in view of the recommendation tacked on to the motion and also in view of the very specific proposals included in the bill.

However, with regard to the amendment, the Chair can hardly refuse it even if from a procedural point of view it seems to be a nonentity, knowing in advance that it must be difficult, even if the House decided to accept the motion of the hon. member, despite the presence of the minister in committee, to allow the committee to amend the bill one way or another, unless this were to reduce the amount of the pensions.

At any rate, I intend to accept the amendment in its present form and I will put it to the House.

Mr. La Salle, seconded by Mr. Matte, moves:

That Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in order that the minister responsible may appear again before the said committee for the purpose of amending the bill in such a way that it may better meet the needs of the people of Canada.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, do you accept my amendment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Yes.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-147 may be considered as an interesting measure because it concerns quite a number of Canadians who have proved their eagerness at work and who have helped to make our country what it is today.

It must be recognized that the people concerned in Bill C-147 are not responsible for the increase in the cost of living. I also feel that it would be proper for them to benefit from a larger part of the Canadian production which increases each year.

Referring to the figures quoted by the Senate committee of inquiry on poverty, one finds that those who made $1,944 or less a year in 1970 lived in deprivation and poverty.

Today, by moving and passing Bill C-147 we will spare the old people hardships and we will place them on the threshold of poverty, on condition, however, that the two spouses are eligible for the pension and the guaranteed income supplement. Otherwise, married couples with only one eligible spouse or ineligible on account of their age will have to go on living in anguish, torment and hardships of all kinds.

As for couples with only one eligible spouse, as I have said, they will keep on depriving themselves since the social allowances doled out by Quebec are governed by quite unrealistic criteria.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I am raising a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Lafontaine is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the hon. member speaking on this bill. However, it seems to me that a motion has been moved and that it should now be discussed. And if nobody has anything to say about it, I think it should be put to the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I understand the concern of the hon. member for Lafontaine, but I really think that the hon. member for Portneuf was not straying too far from the subject of the bill, or at any rate was coming back to it. I do not think hon. members can be restricted to the matter of the bill's referral to committee.

The Chair may not, in my opinion, make this restriction as it would severely handicap members who might have comments or suggestions for the committee concerning the bill.

Mr. Godin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has proposed a motion for the bill to be sent back to committee so that the minister find ways of making it acceptable.

I do not wish to boast, but I have the impression that the advice I am about to give is calculated to help the minister in his work.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker, I received yesterday a letter from a 61-year-old head of a family, disabled for 10 years, whose disability allowance was cut out when his wife became eligible for the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement. The same thing happens to disabled wives when the husband becomes eligible for the old age security pension.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) was most honest, because it applied to that group of individuals.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has introduced a motion to enable anyone reaching age 60 to receive the old age security pension. I congratulate the hon. member and tell him that his motion was very relevant since it dealt with people 60 and over. And there is a lot of people, Mr. Speaker, who have to live on the crumbs of the welfare plan. How many of those people are tired and incapable of any continued effort? How many are now out of a job and unable to get one because of their age? How many feel oppressed by the system because manpower is abundant and there is generally no room for people of 60 and over in the labour force?

There are people who have to leave their jobs because of exhaustion or fatigue and are further oppressed by another body of the government, the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In fact, if a worker leaves his job without reason he is not eligible for unemployment benefits. So, for the Unemployment Insurance Commission fatigue is not a valid reason. If someone loses his benefits because he left without a serious reason, he cannot even qualify for unemployment insurance by reason of illness because in the minds of the doctors of the Unemployment Insurance Commission fatigue is not an illness.

Mr. Speaker, it is with all that in mind that the hon. member for Lotbinière proposed his motion.

Every day I receive letters from people in my riding who tell me about their hardship. As recently as yesterday a lady who is 60 and whose husband is 62 wrote me that because they owned a small house the Quebec social welfare service was giving them only $119 a month. How can two people clothe themselves, feed themselves, heat a house, pay for taxes, power and telephone and all other bare necessities of life with such an allocation? The lady who wrote me lists all they have to pay every month. In their case, they have only $35 left each month to buy food.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

I admit these people have not yet reached the eligible age, as indicated in the bill, but they have the same requirements as those who are 65 years old and over.

The handicapped in Quebec are another group of people who are having a rough time. They include persons of both sexes and of all ages. There are those who were born with a handicap and others who have been disabled by illness or accident. No matter how old they were when disaster struck they are up against serious problems. Besides being disabled or handicapped, they often have to cope with poverty.

I have been informed of two rather unfortunate cases—involving two disabled people aged 45 and 52, living with their mothers. The older women having no income, the other two were granted a small disability allowance. But that allowance is now going to be reduced because their mothers, respectively aged 70 and 72, had an increase in pension last spring. Mr. Speaker, to my mind it is ridiculous for a handicapped person of 52 to have no other means of subsistence than what he can get from his 72-year old mother's pension.

That is why I moved, under the terms of Standing Order 75(5) the following motion:

> That Bill C-147, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act be amended by adding the following subclause to Clause 1 immediately after line 9:
> "(2) Under the provisions of the present Act and regulations, a monthly pension may be paid to every handicapped person who has reached age 50.".

Mr. Speaker, the passage of this motion would be somewhat a harbinger of joy in the families afflicted with illness. A while ago, I referred to cases of disabled people who had to be supported by their parents, but we also know of cases of disabled persons who live at their children's expense.

Let us assume the case of a 60-year old disabled father, receiving social benefits and having one or two daughters who are working; every time his daughters get a weekly $5 increase, the father's allowance is proportionately reduced.

Mr. Speaker, strange things happen in the province of Quebec every time the Liberals come back to power.

I will give you another example. It is about a disabled family man, father of five living children. One of his children is working the year round while the other four go to school. Two of the latter find a job following the summer holidays. Therefore the investigator comes to the house with the result that the father loses his disability pension because there are three boys who can provide for the family's living.

Once back to school in September, the oldest of the boys, who is 20 years old, applies for a scholarship and a loan. And the Department of Education tells this student that he is not eligible either for the scholarship or for the loan because he worked during the summer months. He earned $750. This student appeals giving the reasons why he is broken: He was forced by the welfare bureau to earn a living for his parents. The Department of Education turns down those arguments, saying that the department cannot hold the young man responsible for the money he gave to his parents.

Mr. Speaker, to refuse a pension to the father of a family, the money earned by his children is taken into account. To refuse to one of these children a scholarship or a student's loan, the money he gives to his parents is not taken into account.

Mr. Speaker, I claim for all these reasons that it would seem fit that the age of eligibility for the old age security pension be lowered to age 50 for the handicapped.

Canadian production exceeds all our needs, so much so that the government has experts roaming the world to find markets for our surpluses. Before looking abroad and making gifts to strangers, Mr. Speaker, even if I am not formally opposed to that, I think it would be appropriate for the Canadian government to think first of the home market. And at that level, the handicapped and elderly persons of 60 or more could help us as consumers.

Mr. Speaker, if we establish measures generous enough for all these persons, the effects will soon be felt. In the end, if Canadian consumers, whatever their age, whatever their social position, have money to buy and obtain the necessities of life, the Canadian economy will fare that much better.

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is proposing a minimum guaranteed income. I suggest that what is guaranteed in the minimum guaranteed income is that it will be a minimum. It's a small income, a tiny allowance, to allow older people to nibble for the rest of their lives.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that granting a minimum income of that sort is to show ingratitude towards the senior citizens of the country, towards those who have built our country, towards those who have made Canada the country we know today.

According to me, hon. members, particularly those on the government's side, feel no pride in presenting a bill like that one. I believe it is a shame for a country as rich as Canada, a country were opulence is overwhelming. It is a disgrace to see our senior citizens treated in this manner.

Mr. Speaker, a minimum monthly income of $100. means $3 a day. Can anyone live today on $3 a day taking into account the cost of living? The Committee on Food Prices is studying why the cost of living keeps on increasing. That committee is trying to determine why it costs so much to live. It seems that the government is unaware of the existence of such a committee and that inflation is rampant in Canada.

Recently I read in Le Consommateur that fish paid 17c/a pound to the fisherman was sold $1.70. Our senior citizens are now on a fish diet because it is all they can buy. We should consider the frightening increase of prices.

Other aspects should also be considered because, to speak as Yvon Deschamps, old people do think. You get the impression that because they are retired they have gone dead. They still have aspirations and ambitions even in retirement. They still make plans and have leisure time. It is impossible to have any recreation with $3 a day after you have paid for food and clothing. You stay home in the living room.

An hon. Member: You don't have a living.

Mr. Boisvert: Another aspect should be considered. In view of the proposed minimum income, which is truly a minimum, many old people will get an increase, if it can be called that, of $13 per month. Let us try to suggest to a union, an increase of $13 per month for the employees, and we shall see what happens.

Many older people, I say, will see their increase cancelled by the increases in prices or the deductions made by the people who run the homes. That means that they will not have one dollar more left by the end of the month.

An hon. Member: The provincial government is responsible for that state of affairs!

Mr. Boisvert: No matter whether it has to do with the provincial or the federal government, those people will have nothing left in their pockets. Whether the provincial or the federal level of government is responsible, the problem remains the same if one is poor.

There is also another side of the question to be considered: many older people have to pay about $3 per day for drugs. Perhaps the government party has forgotten it, but when one gets older, one is more prone to illness. On getting older, one is liable to be sick, has to be looked after by doctors, and thus incur extra expenses. It should not be forgotten that those people do not derive as many advantages from the medicare plans as the young people working in factories or in offices. They are left to their own devices; they have to pay for all the drugs prescribed by their doctors. Perhaps the government is learning it through me, for probably it did not know. I cannot see how, if it had been aware of it, it could have given such a pittance.

Now, it gives $100 a month; when one is dying, it is a little late. That is often the problem with those who retire. You sometimes see them, which is most unfortunate, retire and die shortly after. The government should not wait till they have died to give them a decent pension. The government must not be so mean, so greedy, as to wait till the old people die to start paying them a pension.

That is why the government will have to consider the possibility of reducing the age of eligibility for a pension while at the same time reducing unemployment. Yesterday, when the amendment was introduced, we were told that it would entail expenditures. It has never been proved that those expenditures would exceed the cost of unemployment insurance, because thousands of senior citizens of 60 to 65 get unemployment insurance benefits.

We find thousands who benefit from the guaranteed income of unemployment insurance for a few months. As for those who do not draw unemployment benefits, we find quite a few at welfare offices because with the present cost of living the scanty savings which they made while earning $30 or $40 weekly are not sufficient to meet their needs.

Looking over this House, I see several here who belong to that category; they do not seem to realize it, Mr. Speaker. A great many people between 60 and 65 years of age are ill, unable to earn their living and compelled to retire.

Evidently, some voluntarily retire for one reason or another, because their work was too strenuous or exacting. Every day we meet persons between 60 and 65 who have stopped working because they are unable to do a full day's work.

Those aged between 60 and 65 might benefit from a universal income plan, which would mean that one would not have to go down on one's knees for a small supplement. At present, rather than giving a reasonable pension, the government grants a supplement that tends to encourage laziness; if a person earns the slightest income, he loses as much in deductions. If a person receives income other than from his work, he loses the supplement. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the government is going to have to realize that there are people in difficulty in our society, there are people who have no help but themselves. Government members are going to have to pay a visit to their constituencies from time to time, to see what is happening there, to see that poverty exists and that there are poor people, that solutions must be found, that high finance and industry are not the only ones that need money, and, lastly, to see that there are human beings in Canada.

The government is soon going to have to grant a minimum survival income, the more so in view of the fast-rising cost of living, not a minimum income such as it now proposes, for that is just pulling the wool. It is misrepresenting its aims.

The guaranteed minimum income is a Social Credit term that the present government has borrowed and twisted into its own interpretation.

When the Social Credit Party speaks about the minimum guaranteed income, this is not what it is talking about, because this does not mean the same thing at all.

The government will have to come to the conclusion that the spouse will have to be considered as retired. The government imagines, it would seem, that when a person reaches age 65, his or her spouse did not age, that he or she has no right to live and that a person who receives $100 or more than his or her spouse will have the other one in continuous dependence. The government will have to lower the pension age—it has no choice—to reach a real system of minimum guaranteed income.

Maybe we will not win today, maybe the government members do not see clearly enough, but better late than never; better wait a year, if need be. But there is one thing I want to say to the elderly: we will never quit, we will never become discouraged and we will stop only when we have won.

[English]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that I do not propose to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) despite the long and enduring friendship which has existed between us. I take this position mainly because I do not see how reference of the bill back to committee at this point would bring any advantage to the old age pensioners or achieve anything of benefit to them.

[Mr. Boisvert.]

I have noted the pleas of one or two of the previous speakers for a larger old age pension. I can endorse their suggestion without question. Indeed, the objective of out party was a pension much higher than is proposed in this measure. But I do not know how it would be possible to obtain a larger amount by referring the matter back to committee. Motions would be required calling for the government to spend more money, and this does not usually happen in committee. Unless those who support this amendment can convince me that they can get more money by the reference they ask for, I will not support the motion. They have advanced no such arguments to this point.

I go back and forth to my constituency with some regularity—about every two weeks since the House came into session—and I know there are many senior cetizens who want this bill to pass and who want the extra benefits it will bring them. That is the situation. During the election, all candidates met with the senior citizens' organization in the city of Saskatoon. I do not know whether similar organizations exist in other towns and cities in constituencies whose members have already spoken on this amendment, but in Saskatoon there is an organization of considerable importance. The president is Mr. J. L. Phelps, a very capable man. Officers of that organization met with all the candidates and put forward, point by point, the desires and needs of their members. Those of us who attended came away with a good working knowledge of their objectives and needs.

Among those aims was a pension payable at age 60. I believe this should be a major objective of parliament, and I regret that so far we have been unable to attain it. There are some in my constituency, and indeed in Canada generally, who say it should be possible to provide a voluntary pension at age 55. Saskatoon and Biggar are both what we call CNR towns. The men who work on these railroads want the option of a pension at 55. We should be working toward this end.

Under the Local Initiatives Program, and so on, we are spending a great deal of money keeping our young people out of the labour force, or at least trying to provide for them since they cannot become full-time members of the labour force. I believe we should be placing the emphasis at the other end of the scale, so that those who have made a lifetime contribution to the wealth and well-being of this country can enjoy well earned retirement on the basis of the provision of adequate financial resources.

There are other areas of our pension program which urgently require consideration. Take the case of a breadwinner who is pensionable, but whose wife who is a few years younger that him cannot draw a pension since she has never been a member of the work force. In cases like this, real hardship is encountered. Then, again, an amendment is needed to make it possible for housewives to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan if they wish to do so, making it possible for them to receive the pension in their own right. As it is, only those who work and earn can contribute.

A further consideration is the position of farmers and self-employed businessmen who find that in a particular year their income falls below the $5,000 necessary before they can contribute to the plan to the maximum extent. As a result, they find themselves unable to build up their pensions to the extent they wish. Progress is needed in all these areas, and I do not think it can be achieved by sending the bill back to committee. Rather, a complete program of revision is needed. At this point, the most we can do for our senior citizens is to pass the bill, such as it is, and make its benefits available as soon as possible.

I tell the House again that a great many senior citizens are waiting for the benefits of this legislation to become available in April. Anyone in this House who feels this is not the case has only to go home and talk to the people who are waiting for this additional money. I therefore urge the House to expedite passage of the bill and to make this additional money available to the senior citizens.

• (1550)

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take too much of the time of the House. I am also aware of the fact that it is necessary to have this bill passed.

In the Speech from the Throne, the government gave many hopes to the people aged 60 to 65. With the introduction of Bill C-147, 98 per cent of those hopes have vanished along with the fine promises in the Speech from the Throne.

I will not delay the adoption of the bill because crumbs are better than nothing. I would like to point out that the proposed increase amounts only to 42.8c/ a day for the richest. For those who will receive the guaranteed income supplement, the increase works out to 65.75c/ a day.

We have 830,000 people between 60 and 65; 320,000 other people are married to people in their sixties, which, in all, accounts for over one million people.

Our currency is said to have devaluated by over 31 per cent since 1961. Considering the slight increase in the old age security pension and the lesser value of our dollar, I suggest that this increase is tantamount to crumbs and quite inadequate to meet the current and future needs of senior citizens. I also contend that this bill should take into account the spouse and eligibility for retirement at 60.

It is strange that when you meet hon. members outside the House they all seem in favour of retirement at 60 and substantially higher pensions, but as soon as they have stepped into the House, there is such a change in them that I have to assume that many intrigues are going on within the parties.

Mr. Speaker, I would conclude by expressing the hope that the government will meet our requests.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, having had the opportunity to co-operate with the member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) in the presentation of this amendment, I take the liberty of refuting certain arguments brought forth by the NPD member who spoke a while ago.

I do not think that this amendment can in any way delay the passing of the bill, which could become effective on April 2, at the discretion of the minister. Indeed, in the next 24 hours, the committee could meet, the minister could be heard and simply bring all the changes we all consider as essential to improve the condition of the senior citizens, especially those aged 60 to 65.

Such is the purpose of this amendment, and here I do not want to depreciate my colleague from Joliette, but I wish to point out that, having suggested that amendment to him, I thought it was an excellent means to obtain what we could not get yesterday, since we tried for a good part of the day to propose amendments that could have been in order. Now, we have realized that it would have a better chance if it come from outside our party.

In any event, we hope it will go as well with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). And why? Simply in order to bring this debate to an end, to give satisfaction to all hon. members and to demonstrate that while co-operating with the independent member of the House, we indulge in no kind of partisanship whatsoever. And as we do know that all hon. members are in favour of lowering the age of eligibility to the old age security pension, why does not the minister simply decide to advise us right away that he will introduce within one or two months another bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, to take effect retroactively as from April 1, 1973? The thing is as simple as that!

Consequently, in order to make it impossible for my colleagues of the New Democratic Party, when called upon to vote, to say, if they vote against the amendment, that they do so not to delay the passing of this legislation, I should like to disprove in advance such an argument, because, in my opinion, those who accept to vote for this amendment will simply suggest that they are in favour of granting the pension to any citizen at 60 and automatically to any spouse as soon as the other one reaches the age of 60. A vote against this amendment is a vote against that possibility. That is the purpose we had in mind when we helped the hon. member for Joliette move this amendment.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I think that all hon. members have an excellent opportunity to show that it is possible to reach an understanding, to work hand in hand and accept the most legitimate and sincere wishes of the people. There is no doubt that people want the pension at 60 for all the reasons given since this debate started. I think we have to be responsible and I should like very much to see the minister assume his own responsibility. If he could tell us right now exactly what his intentions are we could pass this motion. The minister could explain to us how he could amend the bill since this motion bids him to do so.

I conclude my remarks by saying that I hope all hon. members will vote in favour of this amendment for the greatest benefit of the people.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I will not make a speech but I want to give the minister the opportunity to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte). Is he prepared to make a statement in the House right now to the effect that he will introduce another bill before the end of 1973 to lower the retirement age and to grant the old age security pension at 60, so that the hon. members will know where matters stand and will be in a better position to support that bill. Thus, the minister would himself help accelerate the passage of the bill and could assure the hon. members that he will introduce a new bill in a few days, after consultation with the provinces.

If I recall correctly the remarks he made in the House a short time ago, the minister had said that the provincial ministers of Health did not think it was possible to lower to 60 the age for eligibility to the old age security pension.

I do not question what the hon. minister said but I would like to know, if he is agreable, whether the provincial ministers of Health have changed their minds so that the minister will be able to have this bill passed today.

I would therefore be pleased to listen to the minister's comments in that regard.

• (1600)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been waiting patiently for the minister to speak, but perhaps he is not going to do so. I wonder if he would mind answering a question at this time. Is the minister going to speak? I will be glad to defer to him, both from the point of view of seniority and of interest, in order to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer a few points to the minister. It is not my purpose to add to the length of this debate. As a matter of fact, I waited until members of the Social Credit party indicated that they had completed their remarks before rising. The minister has indicated that he will reply, and I am sure we all look forward to his remarks. In view of that, I decided to put a few thoughts on the record because I did not speak on second reading of the bill although I am intensely interested in this matter, as is everyone in the House.

I am inclined to agree, and I am sure this will be confirmed that as a result of representations made with regard to lowering the age of eligibility to 60, some provinces have made moves in this direction. There has been concern about the means test aspect of pensions and I believe some provinces would prefer to provide relief by way of supplementary pension, leaving the old age security base where it is.

I am not really concerned about my friends in the Social Credit party suggesting that the NDP will be criticized no matter how members vote on this amendment. There is the suggestion that we will be accused of opposing the lowering of the pensionable age. However, I think our point of view is well known across this country. As a matter of fact, many of our critics from all parties have accused us of having dewy-eyed feelings about pensions, or having a pension paranoia. I think the Social Credit party has put itself in an excellent position to blame other parties for not lowering the pensionable age at this time. This is why I hope the minister will enlighten us on this matter.

Let me tell hon. members in the Social Credit party that if I thought we could get the pension age lowered, without delaying the pension increase to $100 and the increase in the supplement, by having this matter sent back to the committee where the whole exercise would be gone through again, I would vote with them. But I am not convinced that is the case. I have no secret line of communication with the minister, even though we share the same first name, but I think that by supporting this referral motion we will be accused of delaying and frustrating the immediate implementation of the increase. No matter what the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) has said, the Social Credit party will bear the brunt of the blame for holding up this measure, whatever their reasoning.

I have read the amendment very carefully and I see in it no refence whatsoever to the lowering of the age of eligibility. If it contained such a provision, it would be out of order. That party has simply proposed an amendement for the purpose of political gain. That is all right, because that is what we are here for—to make political points. We are politicians, we play political games and we might as well admit it. That party does not have a monopoly on political games: we are all fairly skilled in these games or we would not be here.

An hon. Member: You should worry about your own party.

Mr. Rose: I know that some members sitting close to me would say they are not politicians but are, rather, statesmen. The amendment before us is very general, and no matter how the NDP votes, our record is very clear on the matter of pensions. We are not going to be concerned by parliamentary devices of this kind.

On March 1 we had the opportunity to listen to the very thorough, impressive and interesting speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in respect of social questions and old age security, although I thought he was almost defensive. I think it is important that we discuss old age security, and we have done so on many occasions. Old age is a time of great uncertainty. Legislators can do something about certain areas but there are others in which we can do nothing. People like my mother, for instance, have a great deal about which to be insecure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: That is because of her age. The minister dragged in his relatives during his speech, so I do not see why I should not be able to drag in mine.

Mr. Baldwin: The only thing you have made secure is the government.

Mr. Rose: I am not involved in the question of old age security just on an altruistic basis. I am very interested in senior citizens and how we look after them, because I hope to be one some day. Great adjustments have to be made by the elderly because of a new life style. Perhaps they have suffered a recent bereavement or they wander around in their homes because their children have left. Perhaps because of the great mobility in this country, their families are spread across the land. There is the probability of loneliness, perhaps failing health or other discomforts. Legislators can do something to assist in this period of adjustment, euphemistically known as the golden years, but there are many things about which legislators can do nothing. Some problems just happen to be a natural part of the aging process.

I say in all seriousness that one thing we can do as legislators is to see that senior citizens are not short of money. We have failed in this regard for a number of years and are only now beginning to catch up. Incidentally, I think this is the result of leadership by some provincial legislatures. Several provincial governments have put forward a minimum income package, not just for senior citizens but for the disabled and the blind. Such initiatives have not been forthcoming from the federal government, although the federal government does contribute.

We have not made sure that people on old age pensions are not short of money. Many of them are too sick or too old to look after themselves, yet we have ignored thousands of them in this country. We force them to live out their lives in a grubby little room somewhere because that is all they can afford. We are to blame for this and there is no way we can escape that blame. No last-minute program increasing pensions to $100, or anything like that, will free us from guilt, and I feel as guilty as anybody else in this regard.

I admit that we have made some progress in respect of senior citizens' housing. We have made loans under NHA to erect vertical ghettos in some of our towns and villages, but we have doubled the cost of these buildings and made it necessary for landlords to raise rents to the point where there is little left to provide the other necessities of a decent living for senior citizens fortunate enough to be able to occupy these housing structures. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to risk your ire and to be called to order, so I will say only that on the matter of housing my province makes grants for senior citizens' accommodation. I think the federal government should do it instead of giving loans, which only puts up the rent and doubles the cost of a building over a period of about 50 years.

In the little time at my disposal I would like to speak about two main points. The first concerns a serious approach to lowering the age of eligibility for pensions and the second is the related matter of private pension plans. If there were amendments in federal legislation covering private pension plans, so that employees could have more say in them, we would not need so much public funding. At the moment, some of these pension plans are a rip-off—I hesitate to use the cliché—so far as employees are concerned.

All three opposition parties have insisted that a basic pension of $100 is still too low. I think most people would agree with that. But I also think that we are realistic enough to know that this is about all we will get this time around. We can wring our hands and decry this, but it is being realistic to accept it—unless the minister pops up with a surprise for us right now; and if he will, I will sit down and that will be the end of my speech.

Some hon. Members: Pop up.

Mr. Rose: I would like to speak for a moment about persons under 65 years of age who need the government's help. The minister made quite a point in his speech on second reading and said, as I recall, that there are groups in society other than old age pensioners who need government assistance. I think he mentioned the disabled, the blind, some ethnic groups and the poverty groups. I agree with him. However, that matter is not before us now. He mentioned, also, that he is considering a comprehensive social security package designed to eliminate about 20 different overlapping programs dealing with general human welfare. I agree with him there, too. But that is not before us either.

What is before us is the matter of old age pensions and whether the minister will ever get around to a comprehensive scheme to look after the human needs of those who are not able to compete in our society. This is a matter of conjecture and we do not know when he is going to do this. I hope he will shed some light on the matter when he rises to speak in a moment. However, in his speech earlier he suggested that there are 830,000 Canadians between 60 and 64 years of age, and there are 320,000 spouses under 60 who are married to people over 60.

About two or three weeks ago, when I was holding interviews in my constituency and dealing with various problems associated with my constituents, three couples came to see me—spouses and pensioner husbands who were 10 to 15 years older than the wives. What is the situation, so far as they are concerned, when the husband is retired and cannot continue working, he gets $175—in British Columbia, $200—and his wife is, let us say, 12 years younger and cannot work? What it boils down to is that such a couple is living on a maximum of $175 or $200 a month. If this is not enough to satisfy their needs—and we all know it is not—then the local municipality must pick up the balance through welfare. I know that it is federally and provincially shared, but many people resist welfare.

The minister has obviously looked into this problem because he admitted in his speech that the financial difficulties facing these people are immense. He estimated that to include under OAS all the people between the age of 60 and 64, and all the people who are under 60 and married to people over 60, would cost $1.38 billion annually. But what are the alternatives? We know there is a cost. But what are the benefits? In an affluent and humane kind of society, what are the alternatives? The alternative is to have people get along on less than they need to maintain a decent standard of living equivalent to the rest of us, at a time when we are able to fight for ours but these people cannot.

I hope the minister will give serious consideration to this matter because I think it is also extremely important from another point of view. What alternative is there but to work or to go on welfare for a wife in her fifties who is married to a 65-year old pensioner whose only income is $175 in some provinces and $200 in British Columbia? There is no other alternative. As figures reveal, these cases are far from rare, and there are families in this category which are additionally burdened by the presence of teenage children in the home. In what position does this put the wives of pensioners who have predeceased them, as they so often do? A pensioner dies, leaving a wife perhaps 10 or 15 years under the age of 65: how can she get along?

I think what we should do is introduce the dependency concept into old age security. In this way, benefits would be permitted to pensioners' wives who are under 65 years of age. This, perhaps, will be needed if the government continues to resist the attempts made by my party and by other hon. members, including, I think, some members of the Social Credit party, to lower the pensionable age across the board. Surely, if the government is not prepared to lower the pensionable age across the board, it should show its intention to introduce this dependency concept. It would not apply across the board but it would provide pensions to persons who desperately need them.

My point is that 250,000 young people under 24 have been out of work for the last two or three years, at a cost which is probably a great deal higher than that of the old age security plan. Then we must include lost production and the cost of various bandaid programs such as LIP and OFY. If we look at the comprehensive picture, we find it is far more costly, in terms of a person's self-esteem, to be constantly unemployed. We have the wrong people pensioned off. We pension off kids at the age of 21, and at the same time we keep the old man on the treadmill until he is 65. We have approached the problem backwards in this society.

I know this is the subject of an amendment to the Canada Pension Plan, but we must start looking at these aspects of the problem. It seems to me that if in Germany, for instance, railroad workers—in a country so seriously devastated at the end of World War II—now have a pension which provides them with 75 per cent of their earnings in the best five years, after they have worked 25 years, that is what voluntary early retirement is all about. We could do that in Canada. I can only speculate that we have not done it in this country because the two old-line parties are afraid of treading on the toes of the financial institutions which enjoy a very good market and supplement the pension scheme of those who wish, perhaps, to have more than the minimum provided by old age security.

I think there is a real need for us to provide for earlier retirement in this country. I do not know why we did not do it long ago. The minister says, "After all, it won't provide the kind of job openings we had hoped it would." I am not so certain, because I do not know what he bases his assumption on. But I am certain that jobs for young people would be found if people retired earlier.

I do not know how I stand with regard to time, Mr. Speaker, but you seem to be getting a little restless. Am I over my time? I would not want to disappoint any of my colleagues, who are obviously fascinated with my speech. I did not have time to prepare a short speech and that is why I am making a long one.

Let me deal with another area which I touched on earlier. This has to do with the need for close government scrutiny of private and company pension schemes. Approximately $11 billion of the money of Canadian employees is resting in various private pension schemes. They are contributory schemes and the contributions of employees and employers go into a fund which, by and large, is managed by the employers. In general, the funds are managed for the benefit of the employers, because each company has complete control over the investment policies of its pension scheme. This means that it can invest pension funds in itself at 1 per cent or 2 per cent interest. Therefore, the plans do not mature and provide the benefits that they should if the schemes were opened up and representatives of the employees were allowed to make some decisions on investment policies. Since it is their money, I think that they should be running the schemes. Far too many pension schemes have been terminally funded. This was the case with the railways. However, a number of these schemes have been changed.

Recently I talked to a man on a picket line in front of Seagram's in New Westminster. He is a retired employee of that company. He was an employee for 20 years. His pension, under the contributory pension plan, is a miserable $84 a month. Seagram's have a company plan and it refuses to divulge even a copy of its trust agreement to its employees. In fact, companies are not required to do this by Canadian law. In other words, a company receives contributions from its employees and the employees cannot see the trust agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I was given to understand that I was allowed 40 minutes for this peroration. If that nod of your head denotes agreement, I will continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I can reply to the hon. member: yes, and he did have that time.

Mr. Rose: No, I did not.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I would never quarrel with your ability to read the clock, but I promise to conclude my remarks in about two minutes. I wonder if I might have that much time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member asks for a few minutes to complete his remarks. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with the utmost patience and interest to the speeches that have been made yesterday and today during the debate on third reading of this bill.

Although there have been very interesting contributions to this debate, I must say however that some were purely demagogic rather than constructive contributions to the consideration of such an important bill as that now before the House.

This bill has been considered by all parties, passed the first and second reading stages and been considered by a committee of the House which reported on it. During the examination of this bill in committee, we secured consent from all parties to proceed quickly and have it back before the House as early as possible.

The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) stated before the committee, and I quote:

[English]

It is my disposition and suggestion that we proceed to pass the bill.

[Translation]

He indicated that he had some reservations, but he also said, and I quote:

[English]

So far as I am concerned, if there is a general disposition to move this bill forward it would be a useful suggestion. Despite the literal interpretation of the word "parliament," there are times when, perhaps, we serve the over-all constituency best by expediting legislation; although it is not first-class, it is the best we have at the present time. Some day we hope to have something better. So far as I am concerned, I suggest that we are prepared to vote for it.

His party considered the legislation, discussed it in committee and supported it in committee. The same thing applies to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who spoke on behalf of his party. He declared in committee:

I want the report to go back to the House as soon as possible.

Then we had the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), representing the Social Credit party, saying, as reported at page 1:37 of the committee proceedings:

We want the report to be submitted to the House as soon as possible to meet the wish expressed by the hon. minister.

What was said then? We heard the views of the representatives of the other three parties expressed here in the house. They all stated: We would rather have a better, more generous bill, but for the time being this is the best we can get. Let us proceed as quickly as possible, let us pass the bill so that senior citizens may obtain their pension increases as soon as possible.

What has happened in the interval? Several amendments were moved by the Social Credit Party and were all ruled out of order.

What were the remarks? We came back to the House, for third reading and resumed the game that had been played in committee. The same kind of amendments were introduced, and I would even say amendments still more irresponsible than those which were put forward in committee. These amendments, Mr. Speaker, have all been negatived for the same obvious reasons.

In desperation, it would seem—according to what the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) said—that the Social Credit Party of Canada found a non official spokesman to introduce in this House an amendment which reads as follows:

That Bill C-147, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in order that the minister responsible may appear again before the said committee for the purpose of amending the bill in such a way that it may better meet the needs of the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, what was done in committee when the bill was introduced? These matters have been considered and discussions have taken place in this regard. What will the committee be able to do if the bill is referred to it?

I have appeared as witness before the committee. At present, the estimates of the department are being considered. I shall appear and I made a commitment before all hon. members and all members of the committee to appear again before the committee to discuss lowering the eligibility age and the increase in pensions. All this has been considered by the committee and we have reached an agreement which is the record of the committee and under which I will appear and we will spend some time to review and discuss the whole matter.

At this stage, all that can only delay the passage of this bill. If the passage of this legislation is put off and results in withholding payment of pensions to elder people, I hope that the country will know who is responsible for this delay: the Creditistes, the Social Credit Party of Canada and in particular the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I did not record the dates, but I know that the committee's report was submitted to the House and that the government waited for a week before tabling it.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, that seems to the Chair to be more a point which one could argue or debate rather than a point of order. I think the Chair is in the position more and more each day of having to ask that when hon. members have a point to make because they disagree with another hon. member, instead of seizing the eye of the Chair on a point of order they should ask to be recognized in their turn and then make their argument. The Chair commends this procedure to the House if we are to have orderly debate. The hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: I do not think I shall waste my time, Mr. Speaker, answering the hon. member's point of order. I will simply point out that we are examining a bill, that time is flying by and that an amendment has been introduced which is not only demagogic but, even worse, futile. Nothing will be achieved through this amendment.

As to the hon. member who introduced this amendment, where was he when this bill was considered in committee? He did not show up in committee; we examined this bill on Tuesday, March 13, 1973. The hon. member for Joliette did not attend the committee meetings. And what is he asking for now? He is asking that the minister return before the committee, while he would perhaps be there himself. We hope he would! In any case, one thing is certain: he did not find this bill important enough at that time to take the trouble to go to the committee.

The hon. member claims that he was in the House when the bill was examined by the committee. If I remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, the House was not sitting and he had ample time to go to committee.

We are considering a bill which requires quick passage if we want our senior citizens to benefit from it. Now, what are we going to do in committee? We are no doubt going to hear for the hundredth time the series of Créditistes proposals and amendments.

The New Democratic Party proposed $150 as the amount of the basic pension. Now, the Social Credit Party of Canada talks about $200. I am sure that in committee, they will talk about $250. Some talked about reducing the pension eligibility age to 60. Some also thought of something else. Yesterday, amendments were moved, according to which the pension would be paid to any 50-year old handicapped person. What is special about being 50 years old? Why not look after the 49, 48 or 45-year old handicapped persons? Why grant a pension at 60? Why not at 55 or as I said myself in the committee, at 43 or at 42? It could be optional. And all that without any computation of the costs. Of course, with the Créditistes, there is never any problem as to costs. They just set off the press and there is no problem: the money will go out.

That is of course a completely irresponsible attitude concerning that question, a completely demagogic attitude, that has nothing to do with the real problems of poverty in Canada at the present time.

If this bill is sent back to the committee, what is going to be done to it? They will merely try to reintroduce in committee the amendments that were ruled out of order. And the only result will be a general loss of time for the House and for the committee, and it seems to me that the hon. Créditistes members have already wasted enough the time of the house during yesterday's debate.

Mr. Speaker, I say once more that this amendment is absolutely futile.

[English]

The only thing this amendment can do is delay adoption of the bill. The government has declared its intention and there is a recommendation by the governor in council on this measure: it has been before the House and we have clearly stated our position. The House has pronounced itself on first reading, on second reading and in committee. As I said before the committee, the questions raised by members, of reducing the age for receipt of the pension or increasing the amount, deserve discussion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Members can applaud as much as they want to. I hope we will have a more responsible discussion than the speeches they have been delivering for the last two days in this House. I hope these hon. members will be in the committee where they can discuss this question. I hope the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) will take the trouble of coming to the committee.

We have an agreement in the committee to consider this whole question but, once more, it has to be looked at in the context of poverty in Canada. We have not only the problem of people aged 60 and 65 in this country, or of the handicapped above 50 as the Créditistes were talking about; we have the problem of all handicapped from birth to death. We have the problem of the single-parent family, the problem of the handicapped and the blind, the problem of the people who are on welfare in this country. All these people also need to be looked after. It is not a question of just the piecemeal approach that the Créditistes are putting before this House.

I heard an unbelievable statement this afternoon by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert) who said, "Maybe it will be a year before we can give what we want to give to the old people." Mr. Speaker, they are ready to say, "Forget about this" and not face our senior citizens' needs now. Then we will have a year in which the Créditistes will have time to make more propaganda across the country and not achieve anything because, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) said yesterday, they have "ni la balance ni le pouvoir".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Boisvert) rise on a point of order?

Mr. Boisvert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I feel my words are being deliberately misinterpreted. I said that even if we had to wait for a year to win our argument, we would do so but we do not want to delay passage of this bill.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Bell: Let's get on, and find out how the NDP is going to vote.

Mr. Lalonde: On this whole matter the government has announced firm measures. I said I would appear before the committee, as this amendment proposes. We do not need an amendment for that: I will appear before the committee; there is an agreement to that effect. We are going to review the problems that would be raised with the lowering of the pensionable age and the increase in pensions.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Lalonde: Any time. I am in the hands of the committee in this respect. When the estimates are under consideration, we will consider the matter. This question has been discussed with my provincial colleagues and they have expressed reservations about changing the structure of the old age security program at the present time. They want a general review and want to discuss the whole problem of welfare.

• (1640)

One hon. member who said that British Columbia was paying $200 to senior citizens suggested that we might give this amount to everybody, everywhere. There is nothing to prevent the provinces increasing old age pensions if they want to do so. They are welcome to do so if they feel they have the funds.

Is the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) rising to ask me a question?

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make something clear. I did say that British Columbia was now paying a basic income of $200 per month to people of 65 and over and to the disabled and the blind. I think this measure came into effect just before Christmas; in fact I am sure it did. I agree with the minister that there is nothing to prevent other provinces doing the same.

Mr. Lalonde: My point is this: I do not want to stop the provinces from doing this. I think they deserve to be congratulated if they do it. According to the figures of January 3 that I have, a couple on social assistance in the province of which the hon. member spoke are paid $169, while if they are 65 or over they can get over $400. In Saskatchewan, a couple are paid $176 if they are 64 or 59 years old—choose your age—while a couple in receipt of the federal old age pension will get $325. In Ontario, they are getting $235; in Quebec, $158; in New Brunswick, $180; in Manitoba, $179; in Nova Scotia and P.E.I., $200; in Newfoundland, $195. That is the situation with regard to people who are on welfare. Hon. members should compare those figures with the $325 that will be available to couples under our old age pension. The Créditistes have proposed an amendment that will permit an amount greater than $400 to be paid to a couple. If you take $400 plus the GIS, the amount would come up to around $525 per couple. That is very nice. Why not bring it up to $600 while you are at it, or $700 while the auction is under way?

We must think about all the other people who are on welfare. There are many people on welfare in the ridings represented by members of the Créditiste party, as they may well know. They should consider what they are doing. We will embark, with the provinces, on the consideration of all these aspects of poverty. This is not the time to push ahead with large increases of the sort recommended by the Créditistes or with lowering the eligibility age and thus using a large amount of our resources for that purpose. I have already given the figures to the House. If money is used in one way, it will not be available for abandoned mothers, for the handicapped or those below 65 or 60 who experience difficulties in life for a variety of reasons.

We will meet with the provinces, and the House and the committee of the House will have the opportunity to consider the social security review. I hope that this House and the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare will have the opportunity of considering this matter in a broad context, instead of entering into an auction between various parties who want to see which one will bid highest for the votes of senior citizens.

I repeat, my appearance before a committee of the House at this juncture on this particular amendment will achieve nothing except the further delay of the adoption of this bill. If this bill is delayed further, we will know where to place the blame. Second, I am committed to make known to parliament as soon as possible before the conference—I hope to be able to do this—our various proposals in the field of social security review. I hope the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare will have the time and opportunity to consider these proposals, as well as the provinces with whom we will meet at the end of April.

In conclusion, not wanting to take up any more of the time of the House, may I say that all parties have agreed that we should speed up the consideration of this legislation so that the senior citizens of this country may receive the increases that are due to them. We should proceed to the adoption of this particular bill immediately, Mr. Speaker. We will have plenty of time to consider the other arguments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as far as the question of privilege is concerned, I just want to reply to the minister's question as to where the hon. member for Joliette was, if he was not in committee. I should be very smart if I said that last week I was sitting on the Agriculture committee and did not see the minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) there. I know he has other duties to carry out and that effectively he cannot be everywhere at the same time. However, I should remind the minister that I have never missed an opportunity in the House to inform him of my opinion about the bill. He has received copy of my correspondence and also a resolution prepared by the Conseil central des syndicats catholiques, and I feel that he cannot truthfully say he is not aware of my views.

Therefore, the argument I am supporting is one I consider to be valid, although the minister stressed his great willingness to do more and better. I appreciate that very much, but we do feel immediate action is important.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member really has not stated a question of privilege. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie).

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). I will be the only spokesman for my party on this item because, as the minister rightly said, throughout this entire debate we have endeavoured to suggest that we should expedite the measure. Puny though the measure is, it should be given birth. I wonder how much the cost of living has increased during the month in which this matter has been debated.

Mr. Hees: Quite a bit.

Mr. Macquarrie: On the other hand, I think it would be well, after the minister's outburst, to adopt a somewhat more reasonable tone. I will not use that tone which he used when replying to members of the Social Credit party. I am not given to making long speeches, nor am I very fond of our having a series of long speeches although I admit the right of hon. members to speak. If we were to hear all members of my party who have concern for the older citizens of the country, Santa Claus himself would deliver their cheques. However, we must refrain from expressing our views and we must expedite this measure.

The minister was good enough to quote the remarks I made in committee. Although I am a man of the utmost modesty, I am always pleased when somebody quotes my words and enables them to adorn Hansard for a second day. I should remind the minister, however, that at the time that I said we must move on this matter, I also said that if we could find any way that was procedurally proper, whereby we could bring about an improvement in the situation, I would support anyone who would bring forward such a suggestion. On the other hand, I would not think of gumming-up any parliamentary procedure with an amendment which I do not think to be proper.

Mr. Baldwin: Me, too.

Mr. Macquarrie: The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has brought forward an amendment which has been found acceptable by the Chair. I therefore think it is incumbent on the minister, rather than threatening the Social Credit party and denouncing them for being delayers—if I may be alliterative—to reflect for a moment and consider that if this motion goes through it would surely be an indication that the House of Commons does not view favourably, at this stage, the measure which is brought forward. It seems to me that the minister is not in the position where he can denigrate the members of the party that brought forward this motion, but I am not so sure that he is on strong ground in saying the committee cannot do anything. If the committee gets the sense of its parent body, this House, then indeed it strikes me that it is a very much different consideration that the minister should be putting forward. This is another situation altogether.

• (1650)

The fact that we have an amendment before us which is in order should have evoked a little more moderation and humility from the minister. We are in a minority parliament situation. I do not think it is incumbent upon any minister to say that this measure, having passed one or two hurdles, must now go through—or else! This is the body over which the minister and his colleagues preside. It is the competence of this body which must be their sustenance as the executive. We are in an entirely new situation.

The minister is misreading what this matter is all about. This is not the time for vituperation. It is a time for reasonableness. It is up to all of us to see how we can best serve this sector of Canadian society. This is the kind of sweet reasonableness that I would endeavour, even at this eleventh hour, to breathe into—I hope—the receptive ear of the minister.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister a question. The minister has already spoken, but I hope the House will give unanimous consent to allow him to respond to my question if he wishes to do so. I have been prompted to ask it by the very eloquent speech of my colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie). If, in its wisdom, this House sees fit to pass the motion which contains the amendment now before the House, which would in fact give a mandate or directive to the government to review its position on the contents of this bill, would the minister take that as a directive and in fact review the bill and its contents, or would he ignore the wishes of this House?

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I think I said in my speech that the government had put forward a proposal, that this proposal was the government's policy and that there was a recommendation of the Governor General on this particular proposal. I also said that another return of this bill to the committee could not achieve anything, as far as I could see, in terms of changing the substance of the bill as it stands.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my position and the position of my party is that the basic amount of the old age security pension should now be $150 a month and that the pension should be payable at age 60. We are disappointed that the bill now before us does not achieve these two goals. It is our determination to continue to press for these goals until we win them. We believe that we shall do so.

My correspondence includes letters from a good many people who express the hope that we will continue to fight for $150 a month pension at age 60. To those who support us in that endeavour, we give our assurance that this battle will continue. But another message has been coming in today, for during the very few minutes that I was able to spend in my office this morning I received three telephone calls, one from Ottawa and two from Winnipeg. They expressed great concern about the news reports carried over CBC radio this morning. Hon. members probably heard those reports. They were to the effect that although the war veterans allowance bill was passed yesterday, the bill to increase the old age pension was blocked at 11.20 last night. I was able to explain to those people who telephoned me what had happened. I told them not to worry, the bill would soon be passed.

The fact that I received three such telephone calls in the short while I was in my office this morning indicates the concern in this country over the possibility of this bill being blocked or delayed. Much as we are determined to get further legislation later this session, or as soon as we can, increasing the pension to what it ought to be, we do not intend to be a party to any sterile or futile move the only effect of which could be to delay this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I commend my friends of the Social Credit party for the vigour with which they press their point of view. I even confess that I envy a bit their freedom to be as irresponsible as they are today. However, the fact of the matter is that the amendment now before the House does not make any reference to lowering the pensionable age or any reference to increasing the amount of the pension. In their speeches, some members across the way said that is what would be voted on when this motion is put to a vote, but that is not the case. The amendment simply asks that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs so that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) can appear before that committee and so we can discuss the bill still further.

If this amendment carries and the bill is referred back, that committee will not have the authority to do anything, during the second round, that it was not able to do during the first round. During the first round in committee seven different amendments were moved to the bill seeking all the possible combinations by way of improving this bill. Every last one was ruled out of order, for all of them involved the expenditure of money and were not permissible as amendments by private members.

If this bill went back to committee, all that would happen would be a repetition of that process. The committee is already slated to meet tomorrow to deal with the housing bill. I do not know when it would get this bill. It could possibly be tomorrow, but more likely Friday or Monday. When one adds up the few days of delay that could occur, the result could well be that this bill would not be through in time for the $13.39 to be added to the April cheque, that being the additional amount that everyone of Canada's 1,800,000 old age pensioners will get if this bill passes. This motion is so empty, sterile and meaningless that this House would be acting in an utterly irresponsible way if it passed it at this time.

I was pleased to hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) confirm this afternoon what I attributed to him when I spoke on a point of order last night, namely, that he has agreed to appear before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to deal with the whole question of lowering the pensionable age and to deal with it in depth. The chairman of that committee was here a few minutes ago. He is probably still within the sound of my voice. The minister also made it clear in committee that as far as he could see, it would be in order if we made a report on the estimates of that department, including a recommendation with respect to the lowering of the pensionable age. Knowing the make-up of that committee, knowing the members, Social Credit, Liberal, Conservative and New Democratic Party, who believe in lowering the eligible age, I am confident that out of that discussion will come a report back to the House calling for legislation to lower the age of eligibility. If I have my way, that report will also call for action to be taken this session and for there to be another bill to amend the act with regard to the amount of the pension.

I agree with the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) that there is need for us to discuss this whole question, to discuss all the aspects of old age security in a reasonable way, to discuss these matters in depth and to come up with long-lasting and satisfying solutions. I do not see how we can possibly do this in one day or two days, meeting under the gun of this bill with the necessity that it be passed so that these increases can go out.

If we did not already have a unanimous understanding in that committee, as well as the approval of the chairman and of the minister, to hold these discussions, some hon. members might say this was only a promise which might not be implemented. But this is our understanding. It is on the record of the committee, and it has been confirmed this afternoon by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that we shall do, in the committee, with time available in which to do it, precisely what this amendment seeks. On the other hand, if the amendment were to carry and we were to send the bill back, we would not even have the authority to add to it or to report recommending anything. We could only return the bill to the House, exactly as it is. In the consideration of the estimates, however, we do have an opportunity to make a report, to make recommendations, and I believe this is precisely what we should do.

There is also something to be said for the fact that conferences among the 11 governments in this country are in prospect for next month on the whole question of old age security, the Canada Pension Plan and other forms of income maintenance and income security. If this session does continue—and one never knows; it is a week-by-week session—I see the possibility of this kind of discussion both in the standing committee and among the 11 governments of Canada resulting in further social security legislation this session. I say to the minister that this is what I want to see. I think I see his head nodding up and down. Yes, it is. In other words, he is hoping to see it too. Well, he is in a position to do something about it, and I suggest that if we are reasonable, if we get this bill passed and these payments into effect, we shall then have an opportunity to discuss further action which ought to be taken.

So, because of concern across Canada today as reports go out that this bill was blocked last night and is still being debated, I suggest we should not postpone a decision any longer. The passing of this amendment could have no worth while effect. The only result would be a few days' delay, which might jeopardize the revised cheques being received in April. This House should do the responsible thing—reject this amendment and pass the motion for third reading and send the bill to the other place so that it can become law right away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment (Mr. La Salle). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. La Salle) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

• (1740)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: the vote was carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the Chair is in some difficulty. Could I be allowed about ten seconds to get this matter straightened away?

Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

An hon. Member: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is it agreed that the members are here?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Bell: How long do this phony politics have to go on with this government? Those bells are going to ring all night, so far as we are concerned.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

At 6:10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX "A"

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Press Release No. 964

For Immediate Release
March 27, 1973

Communiqué of the Committee of the Board of Governors on International Monetary Reform and Related Issues

1. The Committee of the Board of Governors of the International Monetary Fund on Reform of the International Monetary System and Related Issues (the Committee of Twenty) held their second meeting in Washington on March 26 and 27, 1973, under the chairmanship of Mr. Ali Wardhana, Minister of Finance for Indonesia. By the courtesy of the Organisation of American States the meeting was held in the Pan American Union Building. Mr. Pierre-Paul Schweitzer, Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, took part in the meeting which was also attended by Mr. Wilhelm Haferkamp, Vice-President of the E.E.C., Mr. René Larre, General Manager of the B.I.S., Mr. Emile van Lennep, Secretary-General of the O.E.C.D., Mr. Olivier Long, Director-General of the G.A.T.T., Mr. Manuel Pérez-Guerrero, Secretary-General of the U.N.C.T.A.D., and Sir Denis Rickett, Vice-President of the I.B.R.D.

2. The committee received a report in which the chairman of their Deputies, Mr. Jeremy Morse, summarised the deputies' discussions to date on the adjustment process and exchange rate mechanism, reserve assets and convertibility, and capital flows.

3. The members of the committee reaffirmed the need for a world monetary order, based on cooperation and consultation within the framework of a strengthened International Monetary Fund, that will encourage growth of world trade and employment as well as economic development and will support the domestic efforts of monetary authorities throughout the world to counteract inflation.

4. The members of the committee exchanged views on the substance of international monetary reform in the light of recent developments in exchange markets and of countries' policy reactions to these developments, and instructed their deputies to take account of these events and their implications in their continuing work. The members of the committee recognised that the various elements of reform are inter-linked. Their discussion of a reformed system centered on the following points:

(a) There should be a better working of the adjustment process, in which adequate methods to assure timely and effective balance of payments adjustment by both surplus and deficit countries would be assisted by improved international consultation in the fund including the use of objective indicators. It was noted that the deputies are establishing a technical group on indicators. The importance of effective domestic policies for balance of payments adjustment was underlined. Members of the committee recognised that exchange rates must be a matter for international concern and consultation and that in the reformed system the exchange rate regime should remain based on stable but adjustable par values. It was also recognised that floating rates could provide a useful technique in particular situations. There was also general agreement on the need for exchange market stability and on the importance of fund surveillance of exchange rate policies.

(b) There should be better international management of global liquidity. The role of reserve currencies should be reduced and the S.D.R. should become the principal reserve asset of the reformed system. The deputies were asked to study further the conditions for a resumption of general convertibility, including questions relating to consolidation of excess reserve currency balances and to methods of settlement.

(c) An intensive study should be made of effective means to deal with the problem of disequilibrating capital flows by a variety of measures, including controls, to influence them and by arrangements to finance and offset them. It was noted that the deputies are establishing a technical group on disequilibrating capital flows, including those associated with Euro-currency markets.

(d) There should be a strong presumption against the use of trade controls for balance of payments purposes. Developing countries would, however, be exempt wherever possible from trade and capital controls imposed by other countries and their particular circumstances would be taken into account in assessing controls that they themselves felt it necessary to apply.

5. The members of the committee recognised the concerns of developing countries under current conditions and their interests in a reformed system. They affirmed the desirability on the occasion of the reform of promoting economic development and the flow or real resources from developed to developing countries.

6. The committee approved their deputies' program of future work. In directing the attention of the deputies to those aspects of reform which have an important bearing on the current situation, they recognised that procedures are already established for coordinating the work of the executive directors of the fund with that of the deputies. They noted that the deputies plan to expand their meeting schedule and to intensify their work between meetings, and they instructed the deputies to proceed urgently with the preparation of a draft outline of the reform, in which the major issues would be presented to the committee for decision.

7. The committee will meet again at a time to be proposed by the chairman in the light of the progress of the deputies' work.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DAIRY POLICY COMMENCING APRIL 1, 1973

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House of the dairy policy for the year starting April 1.

The government has concluded that in order to ensure an adequate supply of dairy products for Canadian consumers, it is necessary to take steps to help dairy farmers meet the rising cost of production with which they have been faced, costs that have escalated rapidly in recent months due partly to worldwide shortages of feed grains and protein supplements.

It will be appreciated that in deciding on measures to that end, consideration had to be given to the present concern over food prices. The decision, therefore, is that only part of the increase will come from the market, and part from subsidy payments to producers for manufacturing milk and cream.

The Canadian Dairy Commission has been authorized to set its support price on butter, effective April 1, at 71 cents per pound; the level in the year just ending has been 68 cents. This is an increase of just over 4 per cent. It may be noted, however, that the new price is only 9 per cent higher than in 1967, which was the first year of the commission's operations. Over that six year period this works out to an average annual increase of slightly over 1 per cent.

The new support price on skim milk powder will be 35 cents per pound. The present price is 29 cents.

The support price for cheddar cheese, affective April 1 will be 60 cents per pound, up six cents from the level in effect in 1972-73 but below current market price.

The rate of direct subsidy to producers is to be increased by 20 cents per hundred pounds of milk, or 5.71 cents per pound butterfat. The total new rate will then be $1.45 per hundred pounds of milk, or 41.42 cents per pound of butterfat. The new rate will apply to quota deliveries of manufacturing milk and cream on and after April 1. It is considered that the changed relationship between the domestic and the international price for skim milk powder will necessitate the Canadian Dairy Commission increasing the rate of producer levy to 30 cents per hundred pounds of milk.

I should point out that it is not possible to state precisely the impact of these changes in terms of increased returns to producers, since the federal government does not set market prices paid to producers. Any such authority rests with provincial agencies. However, a straight calculation, if all the benefits were reflected in producer prices, equates with approximately 60 cents per hundred pounds of milk.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to thank the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) for his courtesy in making this statement available to our party in ample time to be aware of the announcement to the House today.

I should like to begin by saying that I am rather shocked at the statement that has been made today. This statement represents the government's reaction to the chaotic economic state of the dairy industry in Canada today. It represents for one year all the concentrated action of this government on behalf of an industry which, for many months and in many ways, has made direct representations to this government. It represents the government's action on behalf of an industry which has found that in the past year it has been unable to fully meet the dairy requirements of this country. It is all very well for the minister to intimate that poor weather conditions made it impossible for us to meet our commitments. However, this excuse does not hold true because this is not the first time in the last three or four years that the dairy industry has been put into a position where it could not meet our domestic requirements. What this policy represents to the dairy industry is the very minimum that the government considers necessary for sustaining this industry in Canada in a viable state.

It is unfortunate that the minister, who has a farm background, and this new government did not see fit at this time to change policy to such an extent that we might have had some indication of a long term policy for keeping this industry stable in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: This is a most important industry to a tremendous number of farm families in this country, as well as to every consumer. Providing only minimum sustenance and just keeping this industry alive is not going to keep this industry viable in Canada. At a time when other countries appreciate the value of our cattle and offer fabulous sums to the producers of this country for cattle which are exported, at a time when this government is encouraging the importation of dairy products into this country and at the very time when we need stability as never before if we are to combat high food prices, this is the policy the government has adopted in order to sustain and keep this industry viable.

I should like to say one thing in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, and it is this: The government and the Department of Agriculture cannot solve any of the problems in agriculture today if all they are concerned about is providing from day to day the most minimal assistance to this industry. It must operate on a basis of profit if we are to have the type of industry that Canadians can be proud of and one that will produce the food Canadians need.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the minister some questions about dairy policy and cheese. He said he had been speaking with people in the dairy industry and that he would have answers. At any rate, this is a pretty weak answer, and I do not think it represents the comprehensive approach we need to take at this time to the dairy industry of Canada.

Yesterday, men representing a cheese factory in Ontario came to meet with my party. They asked if there was not some way in which they could get enough raw milk to keep that cheese factory going. At the same time the authorities in Saskatchewan are trying to persuade people to go into cheese production, after having driven farmers out of butter production three or four years ago. The statement that has been made to us in no way answers some of the real needs of the industry.

The minister did not tell us that we will need to import over 20 million pounds of butter this year; yet here we are, one of the largest agricultural producing countries in the world and we cannot produce enough butter for our own needs. We have been driving smaller farmers and smaller cheese factories out of production. Actually, the government gives them a bonus if they get out of production. Yet these same farmers and same cheese producers are begging to be allowed to produce more of their product, because they say there is an unlimited market, as far as they are concerned, for good Canadian Cheddar cheese.

The small amount of money that is being put up will help. I wonder if the minister thinks it will answer the purposes of those people whom he met in Smiths Falls. They told him they could not afford to hire enough help to effectively operate their dairy farm. I wonder if the minister thinks that the 1 per cent increase he is granting for this year under this policy, and about which he probably boasts, is going to meet the increased costs the dairy farmers in Canada have to absorb. I hope the minister has better plans and a better program for the dairy farmers of this country than that set out in the statement which he has made to this House today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to make a suggestion which I hope will cover all departments. Since the offices of the members are not all located in the same building, when a minister is to make a statement, would it be possible to send a copy to each member of the standing committee concerned, which in my opinion would be very helpful to all? I am not blaming the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) because he surely sent a copy of his statement to our leader, but since our offices are in another building we can barely examine the statements before the opening of a sitting.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that we were eagerly waiting the statement of the Minister of Agriculture disclosing the dairy policy of the government for the year beginning on April 1, 1973.

In the statement that has just been made, I wish indeed that the minister had considered the increase in production costs which has occurred, particularly since the fall of 1972, because dairy producers have had to purchase more feed because of the poor crops in 1972.

Considering that production costs have gone up in the fall of 1972, I would have hoped at least that the increase announced today would be retroactive to November 1972. Would it be worse for farm workers to to benefit retroactively from the effects of one decision or the other than for workers of other industries who benefit from the retroactive effects of collective bargaining?

The long term objective of the Canadian Dairy Commission is to guarantee to dairy producers an income and stability comparable with those of other sectors of the economy, otherwise an industry could not today remain prosperous for long. The commission is also expected to maintain and boost the consumption of milk and dairy products in Canada.

If these two aims are not reached, the quality of food will be noticeably reduced, and with it the quality of life of our urban and rural populations.

It is a fact that the returns that industrial milk and cream producers are getting for their products have become totally unacceptable and must be raised further; representations to that effect have been made by the industrial milk producers, the Federation of Industrial Milk Producers and also the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

I do think that all the minister's meetings with these organizations have been profitable, but more notice should have been taken of the representations that have been made.

Not so long ago, Mr. Speaker, the returns from the market, combined with direct subsidies to industrial milk producers, had finally, after years of insufficient income, reached a level sufficiently in excess of the overheads to allow something like a fair degree of remuneration. But in the last few months' costs have risen sharply all along the line, especially those of feed grain and mill feed.

Since November, the price of dairy mill feed with 16 per cent protein content has gone up from $70 to $100 a ton. That is why I claim that the increased subsidy rate should be made retroactive to November 1972, so as to guarantee industrial milk producers a reasonable income for their winter production. It is also urgent to solve the problem of feed grain without delay.

We sometimes hear people saying that the industrial milk producers are asking too much, or that they are incompetent and poor administrators, and that current prices should allow them ample returns. That is what some people say.

Strange, Mr. Speaker, that those people who act as experts in the forum of the dairy industry should not deal themselves in that production to give the example of their knowledge and the secret of their success. That would really help milk producers.

In conclusion, I say that I am always astounded to hear the comments when an increase in the cost of living is announced. It is always the same old story: if the cost of living goes up, the farmers are to blame, which is contrary to the facts. I therefore suggest that, to satisfy both producers and consumers, a discount should be decreed on the cost of dairy products, discount that would lower consumer prices and check rising prices. That discount would be made up to the producers by the Agricultural Stabilization Board through new credits made available to it by the Bank of Canada. In that way, both consumers and producers would be happy.

It is urgent that farm producers get a higher net income if they are to stay in business and if we want to encourage the young to go into farming.

In La Terre de Chez Nous dated March 21, Mr. Speaker, at least 50 auction sales were advertised, of which most were dairy operations.

The danger is serious. Unless more people devote their time to agriculture, there will be a shortage of Canadian farm produce. They will then have to be imported, at higher costs, and when a country depends on others for its food, it loses its freedom and security.

Those, then, Mr. Speaker, were the suggestions and remarks I wanted to make in all honesty, as a conclusion to my criticism. I hope the minister will keep that in mind and that he will recommend to the cabinet that they be adopted as soon as possible.

On concluding, if I may be allowed, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A few minutes ago, I wanted to interrupt the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), but as he indicated then that he was almost finished, I did not interrupt him. But he says again that he is about to conclude, and before he does, may I remind all hon. members about the provisions of Standing Order 15, and I quote:

A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly, subject to the same limitation.

I emphasize the word briefly, and I dare hope that hon. members who offer comments in the future under the provisions of this order will do so as briefly as possible.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I always respect the Chair, but I wish to raise a point of order to point out it is unpleasant for a French-speaking member who has important things to tell the House to hear all kinds of conversation which bother very much the member who has the floor.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like very much in the future—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member again, but he will certainly be able to conclude his remarks. I quite agree with him and I would find it hardly acceptable that the hon. member for Bellechasse and all other members who express themselves in French are not getting as much attention as those who speak in English, according to Standing Order 15.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF MOTIONS RELATING TO INCOME TAX, SALES TAX AND CUSTOMS TARIFF—DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY FOR DEBATE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise to table several notices of ways and means motions relating to income taxes, sales taxes and the customs tariff, pursuant to Standing Order 60, paragraph one. In part they supersede notices tabled at the time of my February budget, and in part they reintroduce proposals which I made to this House in my budget of May 1972. In view of the interest and importance we all attach to these matters, I should like to take a moment to outline the contents of the notices to the House.

Members of the House will be aware of the main income tax measures proposed in the two budgets. All are vitally important to Canadians, but enactment of some is more urgent than others. In particular, I am referring to the measures which affect taxpayers in the taxation year 1972. Many taxpayers who have filed, or will be filing by April 30, 1972 tax returns are affected by measures announced in the May and the February budgets. In respect of these taxpayers, final assessments cannot be made and refunds, where they are due to taxpayers, cannot be paid until parliament has acted. The highest priority therefore attaches to all the measures which affect the 1972 taxation year.

For this reason, the notices of ways and means motions I am tabling today affecting income taxes, and the bill which will be based upon them, will deal with the measures of the May and February budgets affecting taxpayers for the year 1972. These proposals include the increase in the old age exemption, the new education expense deduction, the new provisions in respect of medical expenses, the tax free transfer of the family farm to children upon death, the elimination of the ineligible investment test for small businesses and a number of items arising out of tax reform.

I also wish to table two further notices of ways and means motions covering the sales tax and custom tariff changes proposed in the May budget. In the main, the measures announced in the budget of last May took effect in 1972 and, therefore, should also be given prior consideration.

I would urge the House to deal expeditiously with these 1972 tax measures.

Ways and Means

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): After these have been dealt with, parliament will be asked to consider those tax measures arising out of the May and February budgets which affect 1973 and subsequent taxation years. These will include matters such as the increase in the basic exemptions, the tax cut for individuals, the indexing of the personel income tax system, the tax reductions for manufacturing and processing industries, and the 1973 reductions in customs, excise and sales taxes.

I am confident that members of this House will agree that this is a sensible and orderly way to deal with the tax measures arising out of the May and February budgets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With the permission of the House I would ask that these notices be printed in the notice paper appended to Votes and Proceedings. And, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you, pursuant to Standing Order 60(2), to designate on orders of the day for consideration of these ways and means motions on Tuesday next.

[Editors Note: For Text of Ways and Means Motions referred to, see Todays' Votes and Proceedings]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if these matters that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has dealt with and the way in which he has dealt with them were not so serious for the country, the whole thing would be laughable.

• (1430)

Mr. Stanfield: You will notice of course that, first of all, the minister is replacing the Ways and Means notices that he presented at the time of his budget with some different Ways and Means notices. This is a complete abandonment of the tradition of this House that Ways and Means notices published at the time of a budget mean something. This is a further indication that what this government says one month will be replaced by something quite different the next month.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We will not know, Sir, whether the notices of motions the minister has yet to table will, in fact, vary his budget proposals until we see them and the bills that follow. The minister has proposed that the House should deal, first of all, with taxation matters relating to 1972. I certainly agree about the urgency of those proposals as they affect hundreds of thousands of individual Canadians. Here we are at tax filing time and, for openers, the Canadian taxpayer is faced with a complicated and confusing tax form with which even the experts are having a great deal of difficulty in coping.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If that were not enough in itself, an even more disturbing aspect of the current situation is that Canadians are being required to complete tax returns based on non-existent law. Surely, there cannot be a more damning illustration of the administrative incompetence of the government.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We had proposals put forward nearly 11 months ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) promising higher tax exemptions and deductions for persons 65 years of age and older, for the handicapped, the disabled and the full-time student, to be retroactive to January 1, 1972. When these proposals were made the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were front and centre taking the credit, yet they did not even have the simple decency to enact them into law before calling an election which did not work out quite as well for them as they had hoped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Now, thousands of tax refund cheques are being held up because this government did not take its responsibilities seriously, and these promises were left hanging in the air prior to the election. The government waited two months after the election before asking the House to meet; it waited for three more months before introducing these measures into the House, yet the Minister of Finance, who must rate now as one of the greatest comedians of all times—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —stands up in the House and says: "I would urge the House to deal expeditiously with these measures".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: He is out to bring vaudeville back.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Finance must have a lot of brass to stand up in the House of Commons and say that. I do not think he is likely to tender his resignation very easily. I can assure him that by comparison with the record of the government since May in respect of these proposals, this House will act relatively very expeditiously.

I agree that these 1972 proposals are urgent for the reasons I have given, which are familiar to all. Why can we not have a little frankness and openness from the Minister of Finance? Why can we not have all the Ways and Means proposals before us so that we can look at them all together? We now have the budget proposals of 1972, the budget proposals of 1973 and we have part of the Ways and Means motions relating to both budgets.

Mr. Fairweather: And we also have Lewis's proposals.

Mr. Stanfield: What has happened to the corporate tax proposals for 1972?

An hon. Member: They are gone.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Benson looked pretty good.

An hon. Member: He is chicken.

Mr. Stanfield: Surely, it is a tradition of this parliament that when we have budgets and proposals put before the House we have all those proposals before us so we know that with which we are dealing. Some cynics might say that the Minister of Finance has not yet got the approval of his colleagues to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Some might be inclined to say that the Minister of Finance is not very much concerned with getting the 1972 laws straightened out so that people can file tax forms in conformance with the law and get their tax rebates, while others might say he is not as much concerned about that as he is in buying some time for himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Chew on that one for a while.

Mr. Stanfield: I am a very innocent man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: All I know about relations within the government and between the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, Sir, is what I read in the Globe and Mail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am nearly finished, Mr. Speaker. In view of the slipping and sliding, the assertions one month and the denials the next—

An hon. Member: Suck and blow.

Mr. Stanfield: —surely this House is entitled to have all the Ways and Means notices before it. The government can choose the order in which it wishes to deal with them in the House. Surely, we are entitled to have all these things, Sir, and I simply ask the House, through you, Sir, what kind of way is this to run the country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Hees: Here comes the junior member.

Mr. Nielsen: The deputy prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): You have had your opportunity, and now you should sit still. Mr. Speaker, I am just as innocent as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: My friends who are cynics suggest that one of the reasons the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) may be delaying some of the other proposals he would put before us is that he is anxiously waiting to find out what the policy of the official opposition may be on them.

An hon. Member: We now hear from the political happy hooker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Last Friday's vulture.

Mr. Lewis: It is, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Absolutely useless.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has the floor and should be given an opportunity to be heard.

• (1440)

Mr. Lewis: I have an uneasy feeling, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the Conservative Party feel a little uncomfortable today,—

Some hon. Members: Ho, ho.

Mr. Lewis: —hence their attitude. I was going to say it is perfectly reasonable in a minority parliament for the government to be concerned about what is the position on this issue of the various parties in this House, particularly the second largest party. I sympathize with the Minister of Finance if he is having difficulty ascertaining precisely what the position may be. It is, of course, correct to criticize the minister and the government for the lateness of these particular proposals. It is of course, correct that many thousands of Canadians have been inconvenienced by that fact. However, I want to say that it is a reasonable and sensible proposal at this late date to deal with matters that concern the 1972 taxation year, and the Leader of the Opposition knows it is sensible and reasonable to do that.

My comments will not be long. I have not seen what is in the motions which the minister has tabled, but since these motions are limited to those matters affecting the taxation year 1972 which concern individual taxpayers only, so far as my colleagues and I are concerned we will have no difficulty in giving every assistance to having these measures passed as quickly as possible so that the Canadian people affected will have the laws that they need before making their final decision with regard to what they owe the treasury before April 30, 1973. We will have no difficulty in supporting the bill that will follow that resolution because it deals with relief to individual taxpayers in Canada, although I repeat what we have often said, that we would prefer a tax credit system instead of a system of personal exemptions which necessarily favours those with higher incomes and not those with lower incomes to the same extent. But since these higher exemptions affect, so far as this motion is concerned, the old age pensioners in this country, that is all the more reason this parliament ought quickly to adopt the bill which will follow the resolutions, and so far as my colleagues and I are concerned we shall assist in doing this.

In conclusion, I want to say very simply that I note the minister stated that at some time in this parliament he will bring back other measures. I want merely to repeat what I have already said, that when the concessions to the corporations indicated in the May 1972 budget are before this House we are as firm in our opposition to them now as we have been.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who has just supplied us with the French text of his statement.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat the remarks of the two previous speakers, which were to the point, but certain words cannot go without some comment from our corner of the House, specifically on page 2 of the minister's statement, from which I quote:

I would urge the House to deal expeditiously with these 1972 tax measures.

Dealing expeditiously with 1972 tax measures, when we are in April 1973 is a mockery of the taxpayers, specially those, thousands of them, who have already paid out fees to accountants for preparation of their tax returns on time, because they do not always leave them to the last minute. The minister indeed recognizes this in his statement, saying on page 1, and I quote:

Many taxpayers who have filed, or will be filing by April 30, their 1972 tax returns are affected by measures announced in the May and the February budgets. In respect of these taxpayers, final assessment cannot be made and refunds, where they are due to taxpayers, cannot be paid until parliament has acted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those measures are not yet known to us and we have before us today clear proof that some taxpayers, or most of them, will have to make out new returns, as a result of the new measures. They will have to pay out professional fees again for drawing up this second return, all because of the Minister of Finance's lack of foresight in not announcing at least a month or 60 days in advance the measures he will be introducing next Tuesday.

That shows, Mr. Speaker, that once again politics are being practiced to the detriment of low-income Canadian taxpayers, and also that the present parliament—and because of parliament all of us—do not know where it is headed for in the fiscal field.

The Minister of Finance might announce other measures tomorrow. When will it end? He may announce new measures to amend tax regulations or the May or February budgets.

It is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, to see that the Minister of Finance who, I admit, is a nice fellow, since he has taken part in some very popular contests in Quebec, does not make more "attractive" his tax measures and recommendations, which will clearly not be passed next Tuesday. These new measures will force thousands of taxpayers to revise their tax returns, taxpayers who have already been puzzling over them for months, only to have to start afresh in the light of the minister's statement.

I consider that the Minister of Finance ought to make more "attractive" and clearer, not only his statements and the programs on which he works, but also his financial and fiscal policy.

SUGGESTED REIMPOSITION OF TARIFFS ON LIVESTOCK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to seek unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns every livestock producer in Canada in that hog prices in the United States have dropped $13 in the last two weeks, which is a 24 per cent drop, and live cattle prices have dropped $3 and are still dropping. There is now clear evidence that both hog and cattle prices in Canada are following the same pattern. Canadian hog prices have now dropped 20 per cent in two weeks, no doubt triggered by the Japanese withdrawal from our Canadian pork market.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat? I hesitate, of course, to interrupt the hon. member for Medicine Hat, but I think it is a well recognized practice and precedent in connection with motions under Standing Order 43 that any explanation for the information of the House in support of the motion should be very brief. Members should not argue the case. It is only when a motion is accepted that the hon. member can make a speech in support of the motion that would then be under consideration. I am sure the hon. member would want to be brief.

Mr. Hargrave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will come to my motion.

• (1450)

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth):

That the Ministers of Finance and Agriculture be requested to immediately reimpose the Canadian tariffs, recently removed by the current budget, on livestock and livestock products in order that panic marketing conditions do not become a serious threat to our Canadian livestock industry.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The hon. member's motion cannot be put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION DESIGNATING HOURS OF SITTING FOR FRIDAY MARCH 30, 1973

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move two motions having to do with the visit of the President of Mexico to the House tomorrow. I move, seconded by the Minister of Transport:

That on Friday, March 30, 1973, the House shall meet at 10.00 o'clock a.m. and adjourn at 11.00 o'clock a.m. when the Daily Routine of Business (Standing Order 15(1) and (2)) shall be considered and disposed of; and that a second sitting of the House be held from 2.00 o'clock p.m. to 5.00 o'clock p.m., when the order of business shall be as provided for in section (4) of Standing Order 15.

I may explain that the interruption in the proceeding is necessary in order to arrange the chamber for the address of the President of Mexico, which will take place at noon.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion by the President of the Privy Council. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRINTING OF ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT OF MEXICO AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF MARCH 30, 1973

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I anticipate tomorrow by making a second motion. I move, seconded by the Minister of Transport:

That the Address of the President of Mexico, Mr. Luis Echeverria, to be delivered on March 30 before the Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, in the Chamber of the House of Commons, together with the introductory and related speeches, be appended to that day's Debates and thus form part of the records of this House.

AIR TRANSPORT

FREIGHT TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent matter.

Since the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau has conducted a study on the air transportation of goods and that its report is a matter interesting the entire country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin):

That this House do refer to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the report concerning the Mirabel airport and report to the House in the shortest possible time.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion presented by the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, there must be unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

WAYS AND MEANS

FAILURE TO TABLE ALL WAYS AND MEANS MOTIONS—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Granting the appropriateness of proceeding first with the measures relating to 1972 income, I would like to ask the minister if he has any explanation as to why he has not tabled today the Ways and Means motion relating to the other fiscal measures with which he intends to proceed?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Those will be brought forward in due course, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to examine them.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, because I would not want to criticize him unfairly, if he has any reason for departing from the well established traditions of this House in not tabling these other measures along with the ones that he did table?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I suggested earlier, perhaps the most urgent matter to clarify is the 1972 tax year and the best way to proceed would be to deal first with ways and means for the 1972 tax year. When these are disposed of, the measures I announced in the House relating to the 1973 tax year, as announced in the May and February budgets, will be introduced.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CHANGE WILL BE MADE IN WAYS AND MEANS MOTION RELATING TO 1972 CORPORATION TAX

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give the House an assurance that the notice of the ways and means motion he will introduce relating to the corporation tax cuts will be precisely the same as the notice of ways and means motion that he tabled in 1972, and followed up by the legislative bills?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to cause the hon. gentleman too much concern but the government remains committed to introducing, at an early date, after disposition of the resolutions just introduced today, the budget measures that I announced in the May and February budget addresses, and he will have an opportunity to compare texts at that time.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF STANDING ORDER 60 TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization who was here a few minutes ago—someone may give him notice of this—whether in light of the extraordinary method adopted by the Minister of Finance, he would suggest that his committee review the provisions of Standing Order 60 so that this disgraceful and disorderly way of handling the fiscal and budgetary matters of this country can be brought under control?

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENT IN REFERRAL PROCEDURES—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF PURE SPRING TO HIRE THOSE REFERRED

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of reports that Manpower offices, because of lack of adequate staff, continue to send job seekers to positions that have either been filled or to employers who list jobs with Manpower but who are unwilling to hire those applicants referred by Manpower, could the minister briefly inform the House what measures are being taken to improve the Manpower counselling and referral services, so as to serve better those who are seeking jobs.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the minister that if he replies to this question he should do so briefly. Normally, the information sought should be given by way of a statement on motions. The minister will be recognized for the purpose of replying briefly.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as to the first part of the question and the criticism of Manpower offices, as I have often done in the past, again I say that I would welcome specifics. It is difficult to deal with generalities in a question such as this. Since the second part of the hon. member's question would take a great deal of time to answer. May I say that I intend to make a comprehensive statement to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in the not too distant future when the estimates of my department come up for consideration by it.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Rodriguez: Specifically, Mr. Speaker, would the minister investigate and report to the House why the Ottawa Manpower office continues to send job seekers on a wild goose chase, after more than 20 qualified candidates have been referred to Pure Spring of Canada Ltd. in Ottawa and the company has refused to hire any of them?

Mr. Andras: I will look into the representation, Mr. Speaker.

WELFARE

ALLEGED WITHDRAWAL OF PAMPHLET, "WHEN YOUR UIC BENEFITS RUN OUT, WHAT THEN"—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the recent decisions by the minister who just spoke whose department, when dealing with a number of people who were laid off had then removed from the UIC rolls. In many cases, these people ended up on welfare. The question concerns a pamphlet which until recently was distributed by his department entitled, "When Your UIC Benefits Run Out, What Then?"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question. It seems to me that the preliminaries are a bit long.

Mr. Broadbent: I am coming to it right away. My question is that this pamphlet was widely distributed, and yet it has been recalled in the last few days from circulation, on the grounds—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is being recalled to order.

Mr. Broadbent: The question is, Mr. Speaker: could the minister inform the House why it was withdrawn, and what misstatements of information are in this pamphlet?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the brochure in question must have been widely distributed, because it was not even distributed to the minister! I do not know, therefore, to what the hon. member is referring, and not having seen the brochure before it was distributed I cannot even tell why it was recalled. I have never heard of it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Peel South on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Portneuf.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED COMBINING OF MANPOWER AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): A supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister advise the House if he is proposing to introduce legislation to combine his Manpower offices and his UIC offices, as he suggested in committee some weeks ago?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I ever suggested that I was on the verge of introducing such legislation. I said we were examining the relationship between UIC and Manpower with a view to providing greater co-operation, but there was no suggestion of bringing forward legislation to do that.

Mr. Blenkarn: A further supplementary. Would the minister then give the House the details of the investigation concerning the relationship between manpower and UIC, and could he explain briefly to the House why these two units under his department are not combined?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the decision to separate the two operations was taken some six or seven years ago, I think, after fairly thorough discussion in this House. We are examining the whole issue in the light of current conditions, and situations, and I made such a comment before the committee. I will be glad to discuss it before the committee in detail again when the opportunity arises.

AIR TRANSPORT

CENTRALIZATION OF FREIGHT TRANSPORT AT MIRABEL AIRPORT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Has the minister seen the report commissioned by the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau with reference to the methods for updating air transport? If so, does the minister intend to initiate the project involving the advantages of centralizing air freight at the Mirabel airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have read in La Presse that this report had simply been published before it was due, that is, La Presse found a copy and published it yesterday. I am waiting to have it officially conveyed to me before making some comments.

Mr. Godin: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Since experts claim that carrying out the project would apparently lower transportation costs and that the project cannot be completed without the minister's intervention, can he tell us what steps he intends to take to that effect?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If the hon. member says that it can be done without my intervention, I will let the experts act, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, keeping the two previous questions in mind, I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Transport.

Could the Quebec government take a decision without consulting the federal government?

COMMUNICATIONS

TELECOMMUNICATION RATE INCREASES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of his reply to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday and in the absence of the Minister of Communications, is the Prime Minister now prepared to report to the House on a discussion he may have had with that minister with regard to the large increases granted CN-CP Telecommunications?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have not had time to discuss that matter with the Minister of Communications since I answered the question in the House yesterday or the day before.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, from the way in which the cabinet has handled this matter, can we assume that it has a low priority and they are actually granting approval of this 50 per cent increase?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, but the law provides for a certain delay during which the cabinet can consider these matters. We intend to respect this delay, but we found it more important today to settle the dairy products policy and the tax policy.

AIR CANADA

ELIMINATION OF UNITED STATES CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE FACILITIES AT TORONTO, MONTREAL, WINNIPEG AND VANCOUVER

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise what action he is prepared to take to halt the unfortunate downgrading of airline services by Air Canada through the elimination of United States customs preclearance facilities at Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it has nothing to do with downgrading services. I am told that the United States have refused customs clearance or preclearance at airport No. 2 in Toronto. Such a refusal put Air Canada in an unfavourable position. I know that since then the U.S. government has reacted and we are to meet its representatives to see whether it is possible to solve this extremely delicate problem, as the interests of Air Canada, this important Canadian company, are at stake.

[English]

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. For clarification, could the minister tell the House whether the actual reason for the elimination of preclearance was to save Air Canada money or to put American Airlines operating out of Toronto and Montreal at a competitive disadvantage, or was it because of the inability of the minister and his officials to reach a suitable agreement—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SALARIES PAID TO CERTAIN EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the statement by the President of the Public Service Alliance that 22,000 public servants are living at or near the poverty line, and that there is certain to be a confrontation between the Public Service Alliance and the government, could the minister tell the House whether the government has been looking into this problem and whether he has prepared a defence of the salary system as it applies to a large number of federal employees who are bordering on poverty?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is well aware that the salary levels are arrived at by a process known as collective bargaining, resulting in agreement.

Mr. Baker: A supplementary question. With respect to the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement, will the minister undertake to act with more speed than his colleague the Minister of Finance has demonstrated in this House today?

ENERGY

OIL—SUGGESTED RESTRICTION ON EXPORTS TO BRING INTO BALANCE WITH IMPORTS—PLANS TO ASSURE SECURITY OF SUPPLIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since for the third consecutive year the Alberta crude oil conventional reserves have declined by some 293 million barrels, and for Canada as a whole by 430 million barrels, has the minister given any thought to the advisability of restricting the export of Canadian crude oil at least to a point that will balance with our imports so that Canada might not be a net exporter of crude oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we would not propose a restriction until the public hearings, which as the hon. member knows the National Energy Board will be holding into this question, can provide an opportunity for interested members of the public to comment on the export control system. It may well be that, as a result of those hearings, some lower level of export than that now imposed by the National Energy Board would be deemed advisable. In that event, that would be the system that would be adopted.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the latest figures just published indicate a life index for conventional crude oil supplies of 17 years—Dr. North yesterday gave the standing committee a figure of 15 years—has the minister any long-term plans for guaranteeing security of supplies, such as developing the tar sands of Alberta or any other measures so that Canadians may be assured that the government is dealing with this problem instead of waiting until the crisis is upon us?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member mentioned Dr. North's prediction of a crisis in 15 years. Perhaps he might allow me a month or so until we can hear from the public and he can read the government's study into reserves.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary. In view of the fact that we have been waiting four years for a report on the national energy policy, I would think that the minister has had ample time and so has the government.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN TOLLS

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, this is my first question in the House, but I hope I will have many in the next few years.

An hon. Member: You will—over here.

Mr. Railton: My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Because the riding from which I come, Welland, is bisected by the Welland Canal and in view of the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway yesterday can the minister inform the House whether the Seaway Authority intends to increase tolls this year?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not ready to recommend to the Cabinet any increase in seaway tolls this year.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Edmonton Centre has a supplementary to a previous question.

AIR CANADA

CONSULTATION WITH EXTERNAL AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT ON DECISION TO ELIMINATE U.S. CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE AT CERTAIN AIRPORTS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a previous question asked about United States Customs clearance. It is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did Air Canada consult the Department of External Affairs on its decision respecting U.S. Customs clearance, and was this approved by the Department of External Affairs?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been very close and continuous consultations among the Department of Transport, Air Canada and my department.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. It is supplementary to a question asked on a previous day. I have been trying to get up for the last three of four days. It is a short question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized later for his supplementary dealing with a different question. The hon. member is not the only one who has been seeking the floor.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF LEDAIN COMMISSION FINAL REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As it is a known fact that the increasing incidence in the use of marijuana in Calgary, Edmonton and other cities in Alberta has resulted from its spread from Vancouver, when will the LeDain Commission Report be published or tabled in the House and what are the reasons for its being delayed? May I ask another question. Is there any other report dealing with the incidence of the use of heroin?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the hon. member for asking the question when I am in the House and for not making useless and unfounded charges. As I have said several times in this House, the report of the LeDain Commission is not complete. The Commission expects to complete that report at the end of this month, March. I have not had a recent report from the chairman as to when it is going to be completed. When the report is completed it will take a few weeks, as the chairman advises me, to have it translated and ready for publication. It would probably be June before the report is available to me. At present I do not have that report, and as far as I know it is not even completed. As soon as I receive the report I will be pleased to release it.

As to the other question, there is no other report, so far as I know, on the subject of heroin being prepared for the government.

IMPORTATION OF MARIJUANA—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF CHARGES TO TRAFFICKING OR POSSESSION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary. Since the first report of the LeDain Commission recommended that the penalty upon conviction for an offence involving soft drugs should be a fine, I am asking if the minister will give serious thought to those cases involving young people who, are charged with importing marijuana into Canada, for which the penalty is a minimum of seven years—inasmuch as people charged and convicted of murder get out of penitentiary sooner than that—and use his prerogative as Attorney General of Canada with respect to those charges pending which he knows about, and one in particular, and reduce the charges to simple trafficking or possession?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare could more properly confirm, but would not mind my confirming, that the government position following the first report of the LeDain Commission is as it was stated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare several months ago, and that legislative steps to put that into operation will be taken. I have indicated to the hon. member that, so far as these prosecutions within my jurisdiction are concerned, there are on occasion some difficult questions relating to whether or not the discretion he urges can be exercised. It is considered important, as far as the government is concerned, to restrict the illegal importation into Canada of drugs and the trafficking in those drugs. We, therefore, must take steps which effectively limit the importation and trafficking in marijuana as well as in the harder drugs.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another short question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for his supplementary question, but I seek the co-operation of hon. members in limiting supplementaries.

Mr. Woolliams: I will make the question brief, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister give his assurance, and I am sure this question is of concern to young people at university and other young people charged for the first time with the offence of bringing marijuana or hashish into the country, that first offenders will not be charged with an offence under the Narcotic Control Act, under which the minimum penalty is seven years, a penalty which the judge cannot change? That is the question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, where it is possible to view the possession of marijuana as simple possession we may well, in those circumstances, find it appropriate to lay a possession charge, even if the facts support an importation charge. But I should like to say to the hon. gentleman that I would not encourage anyone to rely on that, particularly if the circumstances are such that the offence appears to have been committed in the course of commercial importation, because the people concerned may face the stiff penalties which exist now for importation.

FINANCE

SUGGESTION BANK OF CANADA BUY WHOLE OF APRIL 1 BOND ISSUE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Since a $480 million Canadian bond issue will be offered on April 1 and that the Bank of Canada has already indicated it would buy $250 million worth of these, has the Minister of Finance not tried to convince the Bank of Canada authorities to buy all these bonds in order that this organization may finance 100 per cent of this issue and thus leave more savings to finance private industry?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the question is detailed enough to prompt me to answer the hon. member in writing.

NATURAL RESOURCES

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION THAT MORE PROCESSING MUST BE DONE IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, if I may. In light of the current statement by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion that Canada must process more of her resources at home and that the federal government should work with the provinces to calculate the best ways to process resources locally—that being a very sensible policy if I may say so—has the government finally decided to take up the call by the governments of Ontario and of other provinces to establish machinery to work out a co-ordinated resource processing and export strategy? If so, has there been any suggestion for a meeting on this matter at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to consult with the minister to see if this particular suggestion has been discussed with Ontario officials; but I would remind the hon. member that if he wants to encourage manufacturing and processing in Canada, he will have occasion to do so when he supports the measure to be put forward by the Minister of Finance in a few days.

Mr. Hees: He has been waiting for 11 months to look at it.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite follow the Prime Minister's logic. May I ask a supplementary question? Does the statement on resource development or on manufacturing and processing in Canada indicate that this government has adopted a more integrated regional development strategy than formerly?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the preamble, I am afraid, alas, that indeed the opposition will not follow our logic on this or any logic at all. On the second question, I will have to look into the matter.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL EXPANSION—REQUEST BY SEA ISLAND RESIDENTS FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has he received a telegram from the residents of Sea Island requesting that he meet with them this weekend when he will be in Vancouver for the tri-level meeting? Also, has he answered that telegram and agreed to have a meeting with those people?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I heard from the department that I had received a telegram. I have not read it. Part of it was read to me over the telephone. I will be glad to meet a group of people who are concerned, of course, but I am not ready to receive a group that could be organized by somebody else. However, I am ready to see the people interested.

Mr. Reynolds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the proposals by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of the Environment regarding the Burkville area of Sea Island be discussed at this meeting the minister will have with those people?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I missed the first part of the question.

Mr. Reynolds: Will the proposals that were promised by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of the Environment regarding the Burkville area of Sea Island be considered at the meeting which the minister will have with the people of Sea Island this weekend?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if promises were made, they will to that extent be upheld by me.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL EXPANSION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON EXPROPRIATION HEARINGS AND STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is on the same subject and is supplementary to the previous question. May I ask the Minister of Public Works when he intends to table in the House a copy of the Wolfe report dealing with the expropriation hearings necessitated by the expansion of Vancouver International Airport? Mr. Wolfe was the hearing officer.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his notice. The tabling of this report is not required by law, but since the hon. member has asked me, I shall be pleased to table it at the next opportunity.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question. According to Section 11 of the Expropriation Act, where effect is not given to expropriation objections, a statement by the minister outlining his reasons for proceeding in spite of the objections must be forthcoming. I ask the minister when the House or the people affected can expect such a statement from the minister.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, normally this statement is to be mailed to the people affected.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RESPONSE BY FRANCE TO CLAIM FOR DAMAGES TO "GREENPEACE III"

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad this is Fraser Valley day. My question is with reference to the claim of Captain David McTaggart against the government of France for damages to his vessel Greenpeace III when rammed by a French warship in the South Seas on June 30, 1972. I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if there has been any recent response from the French government acknowledging responsibility for the damages to Greenpeace III in view of the fact the incident took place in international waters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have been advised that a reply has been prepared by the French government to Captain McTaggart's claim. The delay is apparently being caused by the formation of a new French government. We are in touch and trying to expedite the reply as quickly as possible.

HEALTH

SHORTAGE OF RADIOTHERAPISTS—STEPS TO SOLVE PROBLEM

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In reply to a question regarding the acute shortage of radiotherapists, the minister stated he had already discussed this problem with his provincial colleagues and the solution of it would take some time. I wish to ask the minister if he is aware that over half the radiotherapists now operating in Canada come from other countries and what steps are being taken to explore those other countries for likely candidates to be brought here to treat cancer?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would answer yes to the first part of the question. As to the second part, the hon. member knows the immigration regulations as well as I do and is aware that a great many doctors from all parts of the world emigrate to Canada. My colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, could give a more detailed answer as to the application of these regulations and the possibility of making easier the entry of doctors into our country.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare is a member of the cabinet, will he convey this message to him?

Mr. Lalonde: I have already done so, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COMPLAINTS ABOUT QUALITY OF TELEVISION PROGRAMS WHEN CHILDREN ARE WATCHING

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Has the Secretary of State recently been receiving complaints from concerned parents about the quality of programs over the CBC during hours when children are normally watching television, namely between the hours of four in the afternoon and nine in the evening? The complaints in question concern excessive use of alcohol, violence and obscenities.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this. I will be very pleased to look into it.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF EVALUATION REPORT ON 1972 OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Can the minister inform the House why he is withholding publication of the evaluation report on the Opportunities for Youth program?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That was explained at least two weeks ago. It is an internal document.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the minister. I am afraid I could not hear the minister's answer.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, the explanation was given, I think, a week and a half ago by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. The document is regarded as an internal document.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question. Is the minister now prepared to obtain parliamentary approval and support for this multimillion dollar program which is now becoming permanent and appears to be secret?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, my impression is that it is one of the most open programs we have.

Mr. Grafftey: I would advise the minister it is not really open.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa.

My apologies to the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa. Could the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi resume his seat? I apologize to the hon. member, but I think that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is rising on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is a polite gimmick for ministers to be so quiet in, when giving their answers that we cannot hear them. It is not parliamentary.

IMMIGRATION

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON REGULATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister advise the House whether he or his officials, either directly or through his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, have had negotiations with the United States regarding the immigration regulations between the two countries? Have the Americans been asking Canada to remove some anomalies in our immigration regulations and what representations have we made to the United States with regard to theirs?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, this has not been a subject of ministerial discussion between the two countries. I will make inquiries to see if there have been any talks between officials.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROVISION OF FACILITIES FOR PURCHASING OF TICKETS AND CUSTOMS CLEARANCE

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montreal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

On March 8, as reported at page 2022 of Hansard, I put a question to the Minister of Transport on the possibility of installing centres in cities where international flight passengers could be cleared by customs officials.

Since the minister said he would consider my suggestion I wonder if he had time to do it and possibly give me an answer today?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that question is rather complicated. It is a new method. The department is examining it and I will be glad to submit a report whenever I can.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF INTEREST RATES BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the nine chartered banks in Canada last year enjoyed an increase in profit of over 23 per cent, can the minister say whether it is his intention to express to the banks the necessity of lowering their interest rates to the Canadian public?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public now enjoy the lowest interest rates of any industrial country in the world. Also, our interest rates are about a point and a half below the United States and well below those in Europe.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question. In view of the fact the Canadian banks still made a profit of more than 23 per cent last year over 1971, can the minister say whether it is his intention to consider the creation of a Crown bank to compete with the chartered banks and other financial companies in order to bring down the interest rates for the average citizen?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker. We already have the Bank of Canada.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REASON FOR NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE BEING ANSWERABLE TO MINISTER AND NOT PARLIAMENT—TERMS OF REFERENCE AND PERSONNEL

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. It concerns his decision, which was announced outside the House, to appoint a national advisory committee on the status of women. Will the minister say why he rejected the advice of the National Council of Women and the royal commission and made that committee answerable only to himself, and not to parliament?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that the National Council of Women came here and requested a meeting with the Prime Minister and the government. They wished to carry on a dialogue with us. They expected us to react to various recommendations in their brief. This is the reason we reacted and indicated what we were prepared to do with reference to an advisory council. That is how the announcement was made outside parliament. It was to pay our respect to the National Council for Women that we handled it in that particular manner.

As far as the advisory council is concerned, the council reacted relatively favourably to this suggestion. They indicated they would be pleased to try it on a temporary basis. If it was satisfactory, that would be alright. If not, they would recommend further changes to the government at a later time.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): A supplementary question. I am pleased that the government has respect for the National Council of Women, if not for parliament. I wonder if the minister might table in the House the terms of reference for that committee, and indicate how the members of the committee are going to be appointed and when?

• (1530)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, I shall be pleased to do that at a later stage. We are working on the terms of reference at the present time.

BEEF AND PORK BOYCOTT—STATUS OF STUDY OF LOWER TARIFFS ON CERTAIN PRODUCTS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Agriculture tell us what he intends to do for the farmers in Canada regarding the boycott of beef and pork?

Mr. Speaker: The minister might be allowed to reply briefly, but normally a question of that kind invites a statement on motions. The hon. member might wish to rephrase his question.

Mr. Whittaker: I have a supplementary. Will the minister inform us now whether the committee he said he was setting up to study the lowering of tariffs on agricultural products is operational and, if so, what stage have the discussions reached?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, they certainly are operational. They are working all the time on this matter. We have received some preliminary reports from them. As to the first question, I can only say that this is a free country and people can do what they want.

Mr. Baldwin: Unless they are in the opposition.

Mr. Whelan: I don't think it will hurt the beef producers one bit in the long run.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO OFFSET SUGAR PRICE INCREASES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what steps he has taken to offset price increases announced by a major Canadian sugar refiner which could have the result of offsetting the minister's budgetary proposals reducing the sales tax on chocolate and certain soft drinks, as well as causing a consequential increase in the price of food.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): There is some difficulty here, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the price of sugar was raised pursuant to a world commodity agreement. I would have to determine just what jurisdiction I had over the situation.

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the minister whether he took part in any discussions with the sugar refinery concerned before the announcement of the increase in price was made.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I did not, Sir, no.

TRANSPORT

SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH ONTARIO PREMIER AND TRANSPORT MINISTER

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on March 16 the Minister of Transport told the House, in response to a question from me, that it was his intention to meet with the minister of transportation and communications for the Province of Ontario and with the prime minister of Ontario to discuss train services in southwestern Ontario. Has the minister yet held these meetings? If not, when will they be held? If they have been held, was a decision taken to reinstate railway services in our area of the province?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet met with the premier of Ontario or with Mr. Carton. We are now drafting the terms of reference for the examining board. Once this has been done I will try to meet with Premier Davis, Mr. Carton and the other minister who is responsible for inter-governmental relations.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Can the minister tell us when he will be holding this meeting?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It will certainly not be before the terms of reference have been finalized. After that, it is a matter of knowing when I could go to Toronto and when the other parties will be in a position to meet me. There are some problems in that field.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FORMER CUSTOMS FACILITIES AT SIDNEY, B.C.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have no supplementary to ask, provided I get a straight answer. My question arises from a visit which the Minister of National Revenue made to Sidney in British Columbia recently, and to reports of what he said there about the customs service facilities now available in Sidney. Will the minister assure the House that the facilities, which at one time were provided for in the act, will be continued?

Mr. Speaker: I would think this question should be placed on the order paper. If urgency is attached, it could be considered at the time of adjournment.

Oral Questions

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND—MEMBERSHIP AND TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. Considering that some two months have elapsed since he announced there would be a commission of inquiry set up in relation to the expropriations around the second Toronto international airport, may I ask whether the minister is yet in a position to tell us when the composition of this commission will be announced and what the terms of reference are to be?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think the answer I gave a few minutes ago is applicable to this question. The draft of the terms of reference has not yet been completed. We have a list of persons we should like to submit to the government of Ontario. As to how long this will take, I can only say I hope it will not be long, but I cannot indicate when I shall be in a position to make a statement.

FREIGHT RATE INCREASES ON CONTAINER TRAFFIC BETWEEN HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO MODERATE

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have only a single question to the Minister of Transport, but you may have a problem because I have already promised a supplementary to one of the Halifax members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: In view of the grave concern in eastern Canada over the new, high increases in railway freight rates with respect to container traffic between Halifax and Saint John, would the minister use his well-known powers of persuasion—they have not been very active lately—and consult with the House leader from Nova Scotia, the Minister of Public Works from New Brunswick as well as to the railway companies and make a last-ditch effort to get them to moderate these rates which are going to ruin our business.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. member knows I am going to meet with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces very soon, on April 9.

Mr. Bell: The new rates come into effect on April 1.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, but there is not much I can do. The only thing I can do is try to convince the parties. The purpose of the meeting is to revise the whole policy, the whole structure of freight rates in the Atlantic provinces and I think this meeting will afford the best opportunity of discussing the subject which has been raised today.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS BECAUSE OF SUPPLYING OF ALLEGEDLY IMPROPER FORMS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. In the light of the fact that thousands of Canadians will be forced to review their income tax returns because of an error made by the income tax department in supplying forms which do not indicate in any way that they apply to deceased persons or immigrants—these were handed out by district taxation offices in great numbers as a proper form—I ask the minister whether he will now extend the filing date because of this mistake on the part of the department?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): This is the first I have heard of such an allegation. If it is like many of the others made from the other side of the House it probably is not correct.

Mr. Paproski: I resent that!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Calgary South has been very patient and perhaps he should be given an opportunity to ask a question. I really do not think we should entertain supplementaries on this question now.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I resent the allegation made by the minister. I should like to show him the two forms—I have them here in my hand—which have been distributed by the taxation department. There is nothing here to indicate they are for deceased persons and immigrants, yet they have been distributed to thousands of Canadians in my area and in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order. It is a point of discussion between the minister and the hon. member. Perhaps he would want to pursue the matter after we have called orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader what the business is to be today, tomorrow and next week.

Mr. MacEachen: Today we shall begin by considering the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, followed by the crop insurance measure. Notwithstanding progress made today, we shall begin tomorrow with the foreign investment review bill, after which we will take up the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act, the Aeronautics Act and the Fisheries Development Act. On Tuesday, we shall be seeking concurrence in the ways and means resolutions. If concurrence is granted, we can proceed early the following day with the resolutions, depending upon arrangements which may have to be worked out with respect to absentees from Ottawa.

Mr. Baldwin: The Minister of Finance said he hoped the House would deal expeditiously with the 1972 tax measures, and that when these were dealt with parliament would be asked to consider the tax measures which affect 1973. Are we to assume that not until the House has dealt with all stages of the 1972 tax measures will we see the 1973 proposals, or could there be certain events, such as the composition of differences in cabinet, which might permit us to see them earlier?

• (1540)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, aside from the fictions which my hon. friend is producing on a daily basis, I want to assure him that we will not table the resolutions affecting the later period until we have completed all stages of the present resolutions.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

EXTENSION TO JUNE 30, 1976

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-130, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill the House is now being asked to consider provides for the extension of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for a further period of three years, that is to say, to June 30, 1976. In this period there will be no change in the method of calculating the amount of assistance that will be payable to the operators of gold mines. This is pursuant to an announcement I made on June 21, 1972, indicating the intention of the government to extend the act in order to ensure the stability of the gold mines and the future of the communities dependent upon them.

The prospects of those gold mines which have survived the steady decline in the industry—these hon. members will find in the report on the administration of the act which I tabled in the House at the beginning of the session—are now greatly improved because of the current level of the open market price for gold. Should the current level be maintained in the open market for gold and operators continue to sell their gold on the open market, then the assitance that is available under the act will not be required. With an open market price above $48 per ounce—I shall give a review of the prices to the House in a moment—obviously it is more profitable for the mines to sell gold on the open market than it is to sell to the Royal Canadian Mint and thus become eligible for assistance under the act.

One of the prime questions, I suppose, facing both the mining community and the international community today is what is the prospect for the long-range price of gold. There are really two factors influencing this. First of all, there is the impact of the uncertainty in international monetary relations, an uncertainty which, in the period since about the middle of last year, has brought about a dramatic increase in the price of gold on the open market.

As an example of this, on January 15 of this year gold was at a price of around $65 per ounce on the open market. By February 15 it had moved to between $72 and $73 per ounce. By March 15 it was up to $82, and my information today, March 29, is that it was over $89. It has been higher than that in the last several days.

Therefore this indicates that the instability of the international monetary exchanges has undoubtedly affected the external price of gold. Notable international commentators like Mr. Elliott Janeway have predicted that the price of gold will probably go up to a level of $130 per ounce. I express no opinion on that, but it is that kind of information and feeling that undoubtedly have had some kind of speculative impact on the price of the product itself.

That, however, has not been the only thing. Demand for the commodity on a commercial basis for commercial uses, such as for jewellery, industrial and other uses, has been increasing. In the same period world output of gold has declined. Last year world output of gold declined by about 6.5 per cent. So influencing the price of gold is a combination of speculation in relation to international financial affairs and the ordinary pressures exerted by supply of and demand for gold, not as a monetary commodity but as an industrial commodity.

Therefore it is obviously difficult to predict the future price of gold in the open market. However, it is possible that if there is a lot of fluctuation in gold prices as a result of monetary speculation there will be declines for short periods to the point where continued operation of gold mines that are still in the position to draw assistance would be in jeopardy. It is with this possibility in mind that the government has responded to the requests of the industry and the gold mining communities for assurance that assistance under the act will be available if needed.

The total amount of assistance paid under the act since it came into effect in 1948 is $303,188,031. From this may be deducted the sum of $25.7 million which the Royal Canadian Mint has received as a profit from the sale of gold on the open market during the years 1968 to 1971. Because of the high open market price for gold there were in fact no applications for assistance received from the gold mines with respect to the calendar year 1972.

As I have mentioned, details of assistance paid in total and to individual mine operators may be found in the annual report on the administration of the act which I tabled in the House on January 4. Perhaps some indication of the effectiveness of the program in the period since 1948 may be found in table one of this report, which indicates that 117 mines were drawing assistance in 1948. By 1971 this number had dropped to 28, and there has been a distinct contraction in the Canadian gold mining industry during that period.

I believe it is fair to say that the act has achieved the objective of minimizing the social and economic impact that would have occurred in the dependent communities with the abrupt closure of gold mines through the cushioning effect that may be achieved by slowing the rate of decline in the gold mining industry. This has always been the underlying motive behind the program.

A corollary to this program is, of course, the efforts that have been taken by the federal and provincial governments to develop alternative economic opportunities in the gold mining areas that are most affected. I suppose the classic example of success here has been in the neighbourhood of Timmins, where one saw the gradual decline of the gold mining industry in that area and then the dramatic revival of the community through the discovery of copper by Texas Gulf Sulphur and the subsequent establishment of further processing facilities in that community.

On August 11, 1970, my predecessor, the Hon. J. J. Greene, announced that the government of Canada had decided to extend the application of the statute for a further period of two and a half years, to June 30, 1973. There was no change made in the method of giving assistance. The minister also announced that the government of Canada was prepared to consider a second extension for an additional two and a half years to December 31, 1975, provided that suitable adjustment programs for the gold mining communities involved could be developed in co-operation with the provincial governments, the communities, the companies and the unions concerned.

In pursuance of this goal the minister met in Ottawa with representatives of the mining industry, the provincial governments of Ontario and Quebec and, of course, officials of the department on May 20 and 21, 1971, to identify and recommend scientific and technical programs that might lead to an acceleration in the rate of discovery and development to broaden the economic base of the regions. As a result of this Ottawa workshop the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced on June 30, 1971, that a special scientific and technical effort would be mounted in those areas of his department. The governments of Ontario and Quebec also announced measures to stimulate exploration in the areas concerned.

While the increased price of gold affords new signs of hope for some 14 communities still largely dependent on this industry in Canada, labour unions, the municipalities concerned, mining companies operating in those communities and, of course, provincial governments all have to continue, in the very real initiative shown so far, to expand economic activity in these areas.

The government of Canada, through my department and an interdepartmental committee working with representatives both of the industry and of the two provincial governments, has arrived at a set of priorities for exploration and prospecting programs. It was the choice of the province of Ontario, at its option, to go for the provision of special subsidies for exploration and prospecting. The province of Quebec, on the other hand, decided to launch a large geoscience program, including geochemistry and geophysics, funded jointly with the federal department of Regional Economic Expansion.

It would be comforting, but I think unrealistic, to suggest that the problems of our gold mining communities will vanish overnight because the official gold price has been raised to $38 from $35 as a result of the earlier devaluation. At the moment the United State Congress has not acted on the most recent valuation and it is premature, therefore, to say what the established official price will be. I think we can recognize, however, the destabilizing influences that international markets can have on our resource communities and the need to devise continued policies and programs which will broaden the economic base of Canada's mining communities.

Consequently, the government will pursue its efforts in co-operation with other interested parties to assist the gold mining communities in their adjustment to changing circumstances. As part of that program it is appropriate to provide some assurance of future stability to gold mining operations and to the dependent communities by extending the operation of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to June 30, 1976. What we propose to do in this period of relatively high price is maintain a floor that is established by statute in the event that as a result of the vicissitudes of the international market the price might again change, creating another emergency condition.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the remarks of the minister in support of the bill before us today, and I think it is relevant to again reiterate, as he has, that some 14 communities in Canada are to a large extent dependent upon the maintenance of this industry in a healthy condition. It should also be pointed out that Canada, perhaps inadvertently, has fared very well in respect of its gold holding over the last few years.

As the minister pointed out, the world price of gold has shot up in recent weeks, but it is not yet clear what ultimate price it will attain. At the present time it is well for the House to bear in mind that at the end of February our official international reserves of gold amounted to $834.1 million. That figure is expressed at the prevailing rate of $38 per ounce. As the minister pointed out, it is virtually a certainty that the price will be adjusted to $42.22 per ounce. When that takes place we will find that the value of our gold holdings in our official international reserves in Canada will increase to $926.8 million. If we work back from that adjusted figure of $926.8 million which, if it is not reflected in the March Bank of Canada Review, in all likelihood will be reflected in the April Review, we find that the actual increase in value of our gold holdings in our reserves has been $158.6 million since May of last year. In short, Canada was a real winner as far as monetary holdings of gold are concerned.

A point that is perhaps overlooked is the fact that if the world market for gold is relevant at today's price, which on the London bullion market was $89.25 per ounce, our actual holding of gold are worth $1.9 billion. This is a windfall for Canada of some $1 billion. It is the result of our holding gold in our international reserves, possibly inadvertently, at the right time.

I would also point out, as the minister has stated, that the actual outflow in assistance to the mines since this act was proclaimed is approximately $278 million. The minister did not mention that if we take into account the increase in the value of our international reserve, the $158.6 million I mentioned, the net outlay, taking both things into account, is $120 million. Canada, as a result of having the foresight to institute and keep this act effective, has spent a net of $120 million, yet today it has reaped a $1 billion benefit in terms of world prices, if the market becomes free at some later date and our reserves of gold can be sold into that world market at today's prices.

I am stressing the fact that this act is doubly beneficial in that it has not only helped to preserve a worth while industry in Canada, which employs some 3,000 people directly at the present time and, assuming there are three and a half people indirectly employed to one directly employed, in the neighbourhood of 10,000 to 12,000 jobs, but in addition it has resulted in our having the advantage of holding a large amount of gold in our international reserves. This strengthens our world position tremendously. In that regard, it is often forgotten that while our production in relative terms is small, we are the second largest gold producer in the free world. South Africa is the largest producer and is greatly ahead of us. It produces approximately 70 per cent of the free world gold, but we are the second largest. I should emphasize that our production has been lessening year by year. Canadian production of gold in 1972 was valued at $76 million while in 1971 it was almost $80 million.

I feel, as does my party, that we should maintain our gold industry, and it is desirable that this act be extended in order to allow forward planning in the industry in the future. We believe this is the mechanism through which the government can assure this industry a minimum price at which it can sell its product. This is desirable when you are encouraging people to take advantage of world prices and to capitalize on those prices referred to by the minister.

In reference to how high the price might go the minister said that Mr. Janeway feels it might increase to $130 an ounce. That may be so, but I should like to refer to the 1972 annual bullion report of Samuel Montagu and Company Limited. Samuel Montagu and Company Limited is one of the largest London, England, bullion dealers. After reviewing the uncertainties in the monetary system today Samuel Montagu states:

Under the circumstances it is difficult to imagine a return of confidence and with the probability of recurring crisis prices in excess of $100 may easily be reached.

I feel, therefore, we are fortunate in this country that we do have producing mines in the gold field. I think we are even more fortunate to know there are additional prospects and additional possibilities that mines may be opened up if the industry has the assurance that it in fact will not have the ground cut from under it in its long-range planning. This is where I feel the act is a great help in that it gives them that assurance. While in a moment or so I will have some comments on matters that we feel could be considered by the committee, I want to assure the House that we are in support of having this type of legislation extended.

I would also like to touch on the question of production in the industry. I could give figures—some of them perhaps have already been touched on—concerning Canada's production in relation to world figures. Without delaying this debate, I think it is interesting to note that Canada, mining men inform me, is in a position to be able to increase, percentage wise, its gold production more than is any other country in the free world. Already there is a renewed confidence being shown with regard to gold mining. For example, the gold mining index on the Toronto Stock Exchange today was 231 compared with a low of 140 in 1972. I believe this is due partly to the fact that the industry knows this type of act will likely be passed by parliament. This has helped to renew confidence in the industry itself. Today's price is, of course, the main stimulant.

If I may I should like to come to the points I wish to suggest the committee of parliament should consider when this bill is referred to it. I would mention first that we feel the committee should consider whether June 1976, is a desirable termination date for this bill. It may be that it would be wiser to give the industry a longer term assurance of our intentions. It may be the industry could be assured that until say 1980 this type of assistance will be available to it if it wishes to make plans for the future production of existing mines or the bringing into existence of new mines.

We would like the committee to at least consider the provision put in the act in 1963 which limited the application of the act to what are called established mining communities. As I understand it, at the present time the act does not apply to a gold mine unless it is deemed to provide support in a designated community and unless more than 50 per cent of the persons employed in the mine reside in one of the established mining communities listed in a schedule to the act. We question whether it is desirable to limit this type of act to that extent. It may be—and I certainly suggest it should be—looked into by the committee.

Again, the minister in his opening comments mentioned that the bill does not contemplate the changing of the method of payment in respect of assistance. We feel the committee should review this also in that we must bear in mind that if the assistance is to be meaningful it surely must take into account the inflationary problems this country is living with. If this is to be realistic assistance we feel it is foolish to leave the assistance at too low a level.

At the present time I understand that if gold sells for roughly $50 an ounce or more on world markets it is not necessary for any company or mine in Canada to resort to this act but that, if the price should fall below that figure, in some cases companies might apply for the assistance. I am suggesting the committee should take a look and see whether the $49-$50 figure is a realistic point for this act to become effective.

Again—and the minister has commented on this—we feel greater stress should be put on encouraging exploration and prospecting in the mining industry including the gold mining field. I believe one of the problems in prospecting and exploration at the present time is certain unfavourable provisions in the Income Tax Act. I think this should be reviewed when we consider the bill at the committee level. In short, we feel encouragement should be given to this type of industry in order to ensure that we are and will remain a significant producer in terms of world markets and in terms of our own production.

As my final point I would suggest the committee might consider the name of the bill itself. It is called the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. I feel that is a misnomer at the present time; certainly I hope it is in the sense of the word "emergency". It may be that the committee could consider a more appropriate name for the act to indicate to the industry, to the gold mining companies of the country, that we are serious in our long-range thinking concerning this field and that we will give them not a short-range commitment with regard to a floor price, if you like to call it that, but rather a much longer range commitment with regard to where we stand and also a broader range of assistance in such fields to which I have referred as exploration and prospecting. Let us help to develop any mines that may be capable of development in Canada. We hope this legislation will receive speedy passage and we certainly look forward to being able to go into the matter in greater depth when it reaches the committee.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, since this matter comes up at five-year intervals this is probably the fourth time I have had the opportunity to support this piece of emergency legislation. Over the years I have done so for various reasons which have not always been the same. Originally I came out of the gold mining industry and therefore was aware of the archaic form of management that existed in that industry and the lack of ability management had in dealing with the community or with its employees or in fact with anyone else. This, of course, stems not only from the personnel in the industry but also from the fact that they were rich when everybody else in the country was poor. Not unlike the landed gentry class in other countries, they developed a type of management that was difficult to support under any circumstances. I have changed my mind as the attitude of the industry has changed. Certainly the industry is in dire need of assistance to keep it alive and, in turn, and much more important, to keep the communities alive where it operates.

It was interesting to hear the last speaker, and I hope I am not unkind to him when I say he speaks with the voice of the business entrepreneur. I know his connections in the financial world, and I presume his interest is in the field of economics rather than in the individual mines that have closed and the individual miners who have left the industry. However, he raised a point that should be considered even though I do not think we will do anything about it.

We hold almost $850 million worth of gold in Canada. If we put it on the international market at $100 an ounce, or as that hon. member said, at $70 an ounce, Canada would stand to gain at least $1 billion and possibly $2 billion. I stress that we are not holding a very large quantity of gold in Canada. From 1948 to 1971 we have paid just over $301 million in assistance to gold producers. If we sold our present stock on the international market we could recover all of that and still have twice as much left over. But obviously we will not do that. If we sell the gold we now have it will be at a maximum price of $42 because that is the maximum amount the Americans will agree to pay. Some big deal, Mr. Speaker! Gold is selling on the market in London at $90 an ounce and in other markets at well over $100 an ounce.

The government has paid a fortune to support the American dollar. No doubt the previous speaker could indicate just how much. Just recently I thought we had reached a new low when I noticed a hostess in the parliamentary restaurant open a roll of quarters. Only three of the coins were Canadian; the rest were all American. Obviously we are still selling our coinage to the United States to be melted down, because before 1968 our coins contained 80 per cent silver and as a result they are now worth much more than 25 cents for each quarter.

A number of mine managers have indicated to me that probably a third force will enter the situation and bring some stability to the price of gold. That third force would be a coalition between Russia and South Africa. As a gold producer Canada plays a small role in comparison with those two countries.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) will remember that when he made wheat sales to Russia payment for them was received in gold. That was when gold was $35 an ounce. But we did not keep that gold. We immediately traded it to the United States so we would not upset the money market.

We are penalizing a whole industry by trying to uphold the American dollar and the American way of life. Eventually somebody will make a change, and the price of gold will be stabilized at a reasonable rate. When that stabilization takes place it will probably be at the expense of the United States, which for many years cheated us on the price of gold by maintaining the price at a level that was not compatible with the cost of production.

Over the years we have paid more than $300 million to support some 84 mines that were initially covered by this program in 1948. At present there are 21 mines operating under the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The time may come when the production of gold will be undertaken in other mines, and this act should be applicable to them. At present its provisions do not cover new mines. Two or three new mines have been opened in Ontario and a similar number in Quebec, and they are not covered by this legislation. About 1958 the act was amended to prevent its application to new mines.

I support this legislation for two reasons. It is an insurance policy that from now on will not cost the Canadian people any money. As a result of the last revision of the act, mines must co-operate with Canada Manpower in placing employees, some four months in advance of any closure of operations. In Ontario we operate under the Labour Standards Act, but this does not make any difference. However, I am sure all the provinces do not have the same legislation. Further, the committee set up by a previous minister, the hon. Mr. Greene, has been an asset to the miners in the industry.

This is an old industry. Most of the mines are old. Most of them have a limited foreseeable future, no matter what the price of gold may be, but there are new areas that could be developed if the price of gold can be stabilized in the neighbourhood of $100 an ounce.

The hon. member who preceded me said that tax cuts would also assist the industry. That is not the problem. The problem is that almost all of the ground in Northern Ontario, and I believe the same is true of Quebec, has been staked and restaked. Over the years some of it has been sold for payment of taxes. Transactions have taken place in many ways. But in recent years any worthwhile ground has been tied up by large mining companies which have bought up the patented claims and are sitting on them. I believe they will continue to sit on them for a considerable time to come. There is no worse example than Little Long Lac which came in, closed down the mine, liquidated the treasury and went some place else. Not much better is Noranda which also has very large tracts of ground that it holds almost in perpetuity because of the inability of the province of Ontario to make any real decision about making that land otherwise available.

The hon. member mentioned some assistance to prospectors and there certainly should be some. The minister mentioned the help given to the companies. That information all goes in the company files and the government records in such a form that most of the prospectors I know are not able to get much advantage out of it, particularly when prospecting is done with the modern up-to-date devices that are being used for mineral surveys.

It is surprising to note that most of the gold potential in Ontario was known almost at the beginning of the gold mining industry in Ontario. There have been very few finds that have not been listed on maps issued by the Department of Mines for probably 40 or 50 years. I know of no instance where a mine has been developed in which there was not previous knowledge of gold in that particular area.

The minister is relatively new in a department that has had a great deal of difficulty in justifying the payments it has made. This assistance has been a direct handout to an industry. It was never tied to the wages in the area, was never, until the last amendment, tied to the communities, and was not tied to the national interest in any way. It was a handout to the mines for the purpose of their making a decision whether or not they could carry on.

I agree wholeheartedly that the situation has reversed. Even the small amount of gold we hold can repay the Canadian people two or threefold for the expenditure that they made; certainly it can double the payment on the expenditure they made. This is a fairly tidy sum no matter how you look at it. The member who spoke previously indicated that probably a profit of $1 billion could be made on the $300 million paid out; that is a reasonable estimate and it may even go higher if we hold the gold.

I suggest to the minister that while we are in favour of this legislation not very much has been done by the committee that he mentioned involving the communities, three or four branches of government and the Ontario and Quebec governments in particular for the purpose of finding alternative industries for that area. I suggest that the subsidies paid to those secondary industries are more than worthwhile. The boom taking place in Timmins today is related to the incentive that was developed by the finding of copper and zinc in that area but it is really being assisted by the fact that secondary industry is being developed in the form of processing of raw resources. In the end I believe this will produce a greater incentive for other types of industry.

Those who considered this subject in the initial committee which made reports from the gold mining communities to the minister of the day were well aware that the assistance was necessary to carry on for today but it really did not do anything for tomorrow. In some ways I am unhappy about the fact that the price of gold on the international market, where most of the mines are dealing, has gone up because it has relieved the mining industry of its responsibility to participate with community leaders and the provincial and federal governments in providing the incentive to look for other industries.

In my own area I was pleased the other day to go into a small plant which has nothing to do with the gold mining industry. This plant was given a DREE grant of $250,000 to produce 42 jobs. It has not met the criteria yet so has not received the money, but it has created 20 jobs. The production line has to be in full operation for 30 days in order to qualify for the grant and because it diversified the production line for different products it has not reached the 30 days. With the incentive and assistance that were given the plant was able to produce new products. The president of the company indicated that in the first year of operation they had already been able to show a fairly reasonable profit even though they have not yet received the full assistance promised them. Not only is the company providing a profit directly but it is producing a profit through the taxes paid by every one of its employees. There are 20 employees buying goods in that community.

The situation as to the age of miners in the gold mining industry has not changed. Two and a half years have gone by and they are two and a half years older. The ability to bring new people into the industry is limited because the production of many mines is limited. One of the two mines in the Kirkland area has closed in the last year and I am sure in the other gold mining communities there has been a decline. The number of mines has decreased from 28 to 21 in one year.

When the committee meets, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it should give consideration to redeeming or at least reinvesting the amount of money the government now can make on the gold that it holds. If the government finds that this is not to its advantage, maybe it could be put into the northern mining communities in the form of a new subsidy. I think somewhat the same result would accrue—a greater return on the expenditure.

Some of our problems in Northern Ontario, are problems of the Ontario government. I am told that this has been changed in Quebec to some extent. In my part of Northern Ontario we are interested in reopening a great number of small mines. The town of Cobalt for some years has operated on two or three different mining systems. There is one large company that comes in and plays the stock market; others come in, do the development and actually do some mining. Most of the mining operations, however, are under a lease whereby they do the work underground, contract for the milling and employ eight or ten men. I suggest that this can happen in the gold mining industry.

At present there is an over-capacity of milling facilities in Northern Ontario and there are certainly a great number of mines that have been closed for a long period of time which have shafts for underground workings and would lend themselves to the type of lease operations whereby someone with a reasonably small amount of capital could start mining the ore. A custom mill operation could be set up and the end product could be sold after it had been processed by that custom mill. It seems to me that this would provide a large source of employment for miners. In addition, it would permit our people to enter a field that is exciting and holds out reasonable expectations of profit. That would suit the character and nature of our people who have been pioneers, willing to gamble and willing to engage in ventures that hold out an opportunity of profit provided that the necessary hard work is done. This cannot be done, however, until we do something about the holding rights of large companies that own large blocks of land. The minister and the committee ought to consider that question. It is of interdepartmental importance because it involves relationships between the provinces. I hope that when the two and a half years have expired our gold mining industry will not be in the position we thought it was in two or three years ago. I hope that our gold mining industry will prosper and that Canada again will be among the leading producers of gold ore.

[Translation]

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Bill C-130, an Act to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Mr. Speaker, gold mines are now in a good financial position because the current price of gold on the free market has reached $90 an ounce, but, as a consequence, gold mine operators have had to increase salaries considerably. In 1971, it was nearly impossible to find experienced miners willing to work for $2.43 an hour. But in 1973, the salaries are close to those in other industries. Thanks to plenty of manpower and the new price of gold, many mines would like to invest in operating and expanding the mines, which would create thousands of jobs.

Mr. Speaker, with the instability of the price of gold, it is nearly impossible for the mines to expand. At present, the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act is in force and it does not cost a cent to the government.

I find strange that the government has decided to continue giving subsidies to gold mining until 1976. In the past, delegations from my constituency and from other areas of Canada came to Ottawa every two years with briefs for the minister, asking him to retain the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, yet today the minister appears so generous by wanting the law applied until 1976.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why the minister does not increase the subsidies to $18 or $20 an ounce: it would not cost anything and it would give some guarantee to the gold mines.

Mr. Speaker, I met some gold mine managers to find out what they think about the new bill. As I said a while ago, they are willing to expand, to operate, but they have been given no guarantee. This is what they told me: If we had a guarantee that the price of gold would not go down below $60 an ounce, we could keep on improving the situation in the mines. But now we have no guarantee.

I therefore recommend that the committee urge the minister and the government to increase the subsidies to $18 or $20 an ounce, which would give the gold mines a minimum guarantee of $60 an ounce.

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says he has heard debates like the present one over a long period of time. So have I. I recall his speaking in 1958, and his message still concerns one theme, the interests of the communities and workers in the mining areas.

My opening words in the debate on this amendment are that the name of the act is a misnomer. We call the act the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. It has been in existence for nearly 30 years. Some emergency! As the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) made dramatically clear, Canada has been handed a windfall. To use the crude expression used by the military during the war, we are like someone who fell into an outhouse and came out smelling like roses. We certainly have come out of the situation in wonderful financial shape.

The theme of my remarks will be, what lessons should we learn from this fortuitous happening that has added so greatly to the monetary and financial assets of the people of Canada? I will come around in full circle as I talk about these lessons to some of the remarks I have heard the hon. member for Timiskaming make concerning development during the last 15 years. Before I do that, however, I want to talk about something the minister and the hon. member for York-Simcoe mentioned, stabilization.

The first lesson that the legislators of this country must learn is that the stabilizing of prices of basic world commodities is no longer something to be dreamed about or practised now and then but something to be practised systematically. We should recognize that certain products are inelastic in nature and very necessary to the world, and we should begin to build through legislation a price structure for those products. The value of such stability to producers is obvious. We are now recognizing with brutal clarity that consumers of goods around the world are taking a terrible beating because of the failure not only of the government of Canada but of many governments of the world to stabilize commodity prices through legislation. I am referring to legislation dealing with basic world products. We, in Canada, have had the lesson dramatically brought home to us with regard to food products. Planning has been based on mistaken notions of world demand. As a result, Canada, the United States and other countries are critically short of basic commodities with which to feed their people, not to mention the other peoples of the world.

Every bit as important as food in the provision of a better way of life for the peoples of the world are the basic products which are absolutely vital to the future success of industrialization in newly developing countries. Gold is one of those inelastic commodities to which I referred. Copper is another. Such inelastic commodities are vital to the carrying out of the world's business and the development of the world's industries. When their prices rise too precipitously, the newly developing nations are forced to spend so much of their international exchange in purchasing these products that all the good that has been provided since the war through the over $100 million in bilateral programs by the wealthier nations trying to help these nations has been wiped out two or three times over by the rise in price of these inelastic commodities.

The first principle the committee should work on is the principle enunciated by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Now that we have come through this period of emergency for 30 years, let us take a look at the principle of stabilization and see if we can put this principle into the bill in order to give some assurance to the mining industry on the business side, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe said, and also with regard to the labour component. Because of the precarious position of gold prices these past 30 years, families in these communities have had to eke out an existence at levels of wages far below the minimum standards even available in these northern communities where costs are so much higher. The principle of stabilization would not only benefit the producers in the form of management, the owners, if you like, and the labour component but it would also be in the general interest of bringing some help to people all over the world who need stability with regard to these inelastic commodities. That is a principle we could well adopt. That is the first suggestion, thought or thrust that will come forward in committee if the party on this side of the aisle has its way.

I now want to discuss a point raised by the minister when he spoke about international monetary arrangements having such an impact on the situation in relation to the present gold mining industry in Canada. I think it is a bit beyond the terms of reference of the committee to which this legislation is being sent to discuss this, but it has a bearing and I will raise it in any event. I refer to the fact that by this windfall there has been an increase in the genuine price of the gold in our international reserves to over $1 billion, and it will probably be more before the price levels off. We should be thinking about how we can best utilize this excess or increase of money in trying to increase the whole industrial fabric of our country and at the same time help our neighbours and customers all around the world.

One thought that passed through the minds of some people this past year was that with our tremendous surplus of almost useless American dollars in our reserve fund, now buttressed by the doubling of the value of the gold in our reserve fund, we should begin thinking in terms of previous precedents in this regard. We should put some of these American dollars, which are only yielding us a little over 5 per cent, into the purchase of equities of large multinational companies, mainly those with headquarters in the United States. I say the United States mainly because the health of the gold mining industry and the health of all our exporting industries are dependent on getting our dollar down to a value roughly equivalent to the true balance of trade between our two nations.

We have large investments from the United States, mostly in the form of investments in multinational companies. These bother and concern the Canadian people, and rightfully so. If we were to move $1 billion into the purchase of equities—some people prefer bonds but it makes no difference—this would provide a flow of those almost useless dollars back to the American side. This would have the effect of bringing down our dollar to about 95 cents. We could establish this value by the amount of purchases.

There are other advantages. First, we have the useless American dollar. It is only $4 billion of the $70 or $90 billion available in the reserve funds of many countries, but we could put these assets to work. From the ownership of these equities we would not only get the dividends flowing back into Canada to balance the flow of our dividends to the United States but we would get the appreciation of their capital value. Above all, this would give to the people of Canada a sense of assurance and security by recognizing that the multinational corporation is here to stay.

We recognize the tremendous power, strength and good this can bring to the nations of the world in facilitating trade. Nothing will stop their economic efficiency, but the people of Canada would feel happier if they owned a good chunk of General Motors, XEROX, IBM, machinery companies and so on. Over a period of years we could come very close to a substantial controlling influence over the multinational companies that currently own so much of Canadian industry. I hope this policy will appeal to countries like Japan, West Germany, France and Switzerland which hold so many so-called useless American dollars in their reserve funds. Not only would we be helping Canadians but we would also be helping our friends and customers, the Americans.

There are two well known precedents for this. In 1914, when our comrades in the United Kingdom got into trouble with the Kaiser, it was the Americans who came to their help. They provided them with the dollars. In return, the Americans took the equities that United Kingdom residents owned around the world. As a result, the United Kingdom was able to survive the war of 1914-18. When the war was over the American people owned the bulk of their equities around the world. This formed the basis for the present large proportion of multinational companies that seem to dominate and seem to be able to dominate the ownership and control of products around the world.

I think the clock has now turned full circle. If we would use the excess American dollars in our treasury and utilize the extra value of our gold by buying either equities or bonds, and they are there now, we could not only help ourselves but bring help to the American people in their hour of need. They are going to be in need for, I think, at least another decade. I have references to support this view. One of the better known American bankers in Chicago stated publicly that if the Canadians are not smart enough to do this the American government should buy up equities on the Wall Street market and provide them for our exchange funds in lieu of sending their dollars here.

The United States is desperately short of dollars. Their international liquidity is quite tight. Canadians, for intelligent self-interest, should think in terms of helping the Americans in their hour of difficulty. If, after 20 or 30 years, we end up owning, with our tremendous saving power in Canada, big blocks of these multi-national corporations, with their tremendous earning power we will have moved and moved well for Canada.

This seems a long way from the usual type of debate that we have on the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. I simply wish to say that it is very pleasant to be in the House at a time when our fortunes have turned so much in our favour. I hope we can take advantage of these lessons and use them for good purposes.

The second suggestion I want to make deals with communities. There is no question in my mind that in our efforts to save the gold mining industry we thought just in terms of keeping that industry alive on a bare existence level. The people who have suffered are the families of the workers and those who serviced these workers in remote northern areas of Canada. Another lesson we should learn from this windfall is that we should begin thinking seriously of placing revenues derived from our non-renewable resources into development funds, the principal to be used only for the development of this country; all the Canadian public should have the right to dispose of would be the interest or dividends from its investment. Such is the tremendous volume of wealth that would come from our resource industries in the non-renewable sector that within a very few years a fund amounting to many billions of dollars would have been established and the interest from it would be much greater each year than the annual revenue from the sale of those resources. In other words, we should think of our resources as belonging not only to this generation but to many other succeeding generations. Such a fund as I have suggested could be operated by the government alone, or it could be operated in co-operation with private industry. I would hope that once the program was under way, the government would get out.

When this measure is referred to committee I believe we should look at this legislation not merely as a makeshift to enable us to get by for another three years but as an opportunity to establish something of more permanent value. Consider the name of the legislation. Consider the principle of the legislation—stabilization. Consider its impact on monetary affairs, not only of this country but of the world. We should recognize that sometimes, when we are trying to keep an industry alive, especially when that industry is providing a product that is needed, we end by benefiting not only ourselves but the whole world. If we approach the legislation from this point of view we can introduce a concern for stabilization which can be applied to other products of the resource industry whose supply is inelastic and which are so needed by the people of the world.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part briefly in the debate on Bill C-130. I should like to draw the attention of the minister to one or two aspects which so far have not been raised.

I was here in 1970 and was a member of the committee that dealt with the bill before us at that time. I believe you were a member of that committee, too, Mr. Deputy Speaker. At that time suggestions were put forward not only by members of the committee but by senior civil servants that the government should be moving into these mining communities and endeavouring to lay out programs which would make them less dependent on the gold mining industry. Going through the notes I made at that time I see that an interdepartmental study was proposed early in 1970 along the very lines to which I have drawn attention. It was suggested that the various departments of government concerned get together with the municipalities, mining companies and unions in an effort to devise a plan to diversify industry in these mining communities. One of the witnesses at that committee hearing put on record three recommendations which apparently had been made in a report to the government of the day. They were as follows:

(a) Co-ordinate activities within the federal government, industry and the unions;

(b) Establish a firm federal position and enter into negotiation with other parties; and

(c) Undertake an ongoing appraisal of developments in the communities and the effectiveness of various programs.

He added that an interdepartmental committee had been established but had not yet made any concrete proposals.

I ask the minister what he has done, or what his department has done, or what his predecessor has done to follow up this suggestion which was made in 1970. The committee at that time approved an extension of the legislation to 1975, if necessary, on the basis that the committee to which I have referred would be taking certain action and making recommendations in the hope that something permanent could be achieved in areas where gold mining is the basic industry.

In endorse the bill and intend to vote for it, believing it would be unwise at this time to do anything that might upset areas where gold mining is on the verge of going out of business. We have enough unemployment in Canada as it is and, as the minister said earlier in his speech, the price of gold is so high now that the companies concerned would be foolish to sell to anyone except on the open market. After the $45 per ounce production cost has been met they get no increase in assistance from the fund.

I urge the minister to tell us, either in his closing speech or during the committee stage, what progress, if any, has been made in the effort to bring other industries into gold mining communities. The situation presently is an example of what has happened as a result of Canada's failure over the years to establish basic secondary industries in communities where the raw materials are produced, though I agree that gold mining is somewhat different from other mining operations. But whether in lead, zinc or other fields the need is to set up extensive job-intensive secondary industries in areas where these raw materials are produced. I will close on that note, but during the committee stage I will come back with a number of questions, and I hope to pursue the line on which I have suggested the minister provide information.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House, Ottawa
March 29, 1973

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable D. C. Abbott, P.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 29th day of March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Canadian National Railways—Discussions on amendment of pension plan to provide payments on the basis of 2 per cent per year of service; the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—Government administration—Increase in departments and buildings in Ottawa—Future policy; the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard)—The Canadian economy—Proposed guaranteed annual income to curb unemployment.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers).

Motions for Papers

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BRYDEN REPORT

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the so-called Bryden report concerning the revision of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which was submitted to the then minister of manpower and immigration in June, 1971.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for permitting me to rise on a point of order with respect to this motion. In doing so I think I can clarify the situation and also report an agreement that I believe has been reached.

At the end of this hour on Thursday, March 15, I asked that this motion stand at the top of the list of this category of motions. There was some fear that if that happened the question of tabling the Bryden report would still be under debate. Since the government was in a position to say no to such further debate, I made it clear that my request for the motion to stand at the top of the list was so we could deal with the question of referring the guidelines on the production of papers—the set of guidelines tabled on March 15—to an appropriate committee.

I rise now to confirm that understanding, at least as far as I am concerned, and also to confirm the fact that having this matter debated again is not for the purpose of entering into further argument about the tabling of the Bryden report. Later I understand that a member across the way may seek to move an amendment suggesting that this order be discharged, and that instead of passing this order we refer to the committee on statutory instruments the set of guidelines tabled on March 15 so those guidelines can be studied in that committee.

I hope that that procedure, though it sounds a bit complicated to my hon. friend from Timiskaming, will commend itself to the House. I hope something may yet be done to resolve the impasse that we seem to have reached regarding the Bryden report, but I think that an even more important issue has arisen out of the discussion, namely, the guidelines used by the government in saying no 99 times out of 100 to our requests for the production of papers.

With that explanation I only want to say that if such a motion does come, namely, that this order be discharged and that, in its place, there be a reference of the guidelines to the committee on statutory instruments, I would be quite happy to agree to such motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would Your Honour excuse me? Just as I sat down I thought of something I forgot to say. My agreement to all of this is on the understanding that the decision to refer these guidelines be taken before we go to the other place at a quarter to six.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm that the understanding that my hon. friend has is agreeable to us. I have a draft motion that I might read to the House, and perhaps I could speak to it afterwards. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster):

That the order be discharged;

That the document entitled "Notices of Motion for the Production of Papers", tabled March 15, 1973 be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments;

And that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that the said document has been referred to their committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the motion proposed by the parliamentary secretary be presented?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, before I go further I wonder whether it would be agreeable to the House to have Your Honour interrupt the proceedings at about 20 minutes to six in order to have the opportunity to put the motion to the House. I think that would be agreeable, and if it is perhaps we could have a House order to that effect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will see the clock at 20 minutes to six precisely for the purpose of putting the motion moved by the parliamentary secretary. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) is proceeding to the House to participate in this debate. He is chairman of the committee to which the document is being referred, so we will await his remarks with some interest.

The question of how much information a government should make available to Members of Parliament is one that has bothered many governments and many Members of Parliament. The thirst of private members, both members of the opposition and government members, for information seems to be insatiable when it comes to documents. Of course, the more privileged a document in terms of government understanding, the more that document is required or wanted by members of the opposition. The matter really comes down to a question of balance. It does not matter what kind of regulations, written or unwritten, are in effect; it depends upon the way these regulations are administered and the way they are applied.

The difficulty we have in a parliamentary cabinet type system is that so much of the decision-making takes place in cabinet and other closed circles, and making documents available before a decision is made compounds the work of the government. The basic principle in respect of documents which we are discussing is that all documents shall be made available. This, in Canadian parliamentary terms, is a considerable change from the practice that applied before. Before the practice was that a document being requested, if it was not inconvenient to the government, would be made available. We have reversed that principle and are now saying that any document which is requested ought to be released unless there is some overriding reason it should not be released.

It is quite true, as hon. members pointed out in the previous debate, that the exemptions the government claims are extensive. Nevertheless, if anyone takes a look at the private bills that have been presented to the House by the House leader of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and also by a member of the NDP, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather), he will see that these bills also contain a sizeable number of exemptions.

Why should this be so? I suggest it is so because those gentlemen do realize that not all information can be made available and, even where it can be made available, there ought to be some room for discretion in the interests of security of the state and for other good reasons.

One thing that frequently crops up in debates of this kind is reference to other countries. We are urged to look at other countries and model ourselves and our behaviour upon principles which are unique or acceptable to countries other than our own. So it was in the previous debate when we were urged to look at the system that functions in Sweden, where it is claimed that all documents are made available to the Swedish public with no restriction or with very few restrictions. That, of course, is nonsense.

In the intervening period of time I have had an opportunity of looking into the way in which the Swedish system works and of finding out what kind of restrictions they have and how they are applied. At the same time I have also had an opportunity of looking at the way the United States applies procedures for the release of documents.

Generally speaking, the Swedish principle is that documents should be made available without restraint. However, there are examples of cases where the authorities will decide a document does not have to be released. There are appeal provisions and appeals are heard by a form of administration court. However, I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the refusal to release a document by a cabinet minister is not appealable. Any cabinet minister in Sweden who refuses to release a cabinet document does not have to release it and there is no appeal from his decision. In many respects that is the application of a far more stringent doctrine of secrecy than anything Canada has, and certainly under the proposed guidelines our concept is light years away from the one which applies at the political level in Sweden.

In addition, there is a comment that should be made about secrecy and confidentiality of the workings of the governmental process. It is a well known fact that the effective functioning of government requires the use of confidences between different parts and agencies of the government. It is also a well known fact that if these confidences are not respected the machinery of government begins to break down. The difficulty in putting things on the record on a confidential basis is that if these confidences are violated you reach the point where the government, the cabinet in particular, can no longer be assured of getting the best advice in confidence that it requires to make decisions. This applies to interpretations of what is going on in the government and its agencies and also interpretations of government relationships with other countries and provinces in a federal system. It also applies to interpretation of the ability of individual people and agencies, so there can be on that basis alone a whole host of exemptions.

In Sweden this policy applies in a general way, but as a result of Swedish law where the spirit is to release documentation there has been a development toward a form of oral briefing rather than putting the information on paper. The reason is, of course, that if a briefing is oral the information conveyed is in an oral form and obviously cannot be produced in a meaningful way before a House of Commons or to a citizen who requests it. What this does, in fact, is destroy to some extent the reliability of the information being communicated because there is no way of checking out that information except in so far as the person who is giving it or receiving it is capable in the oral tradition. Fortunately, in our society that does not happen to be the case. It might be said that, as a result of this extensive freedom the Swedish government has accepted and applied, the greater use of personal meetings and oral presentations means that far less information is being presented to the government and the public, and to some extent the quality of decision-making and work going into presentations has been deteriorating.

It would seem that a close look at the Swedish system would indicate basically what the government has proposed in its guidelines is quite close and similar. It would also be fair to say that, just as good law can be ruined by inept application, bad law can be made to seem much better by the application of the law and regulations. So it is the spirit behind the regulations permitting production and release of documents that is more important than any written or agreed upon guidelines.

It is in this sense that the changes and guidelines the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has introduced to the House of Commons are most significant. They take the position of the government of Canada from that of being secretive, releasing documents only at its own whim, to the position that it accepts the principle that documents ought to be and should be released, exempting only those that fall into a limited sort of exemption.

It is possible to look at the way the United States and Sweden have operated their systems to find out what kind of exemptions they have accepted and what kind of exemptions we are proposing in these guidelines to the House of Commons. Perhaps I might run through a brief table of these to indicate to hon. members which are accepted and which are not accepted as between the United States and Sweden.

For example, legal opinions or advice provided for the use of the government are available for release both in Sweden and in the United States. Papers, the release of which would be detrimental to the security of the state, are not released in either the United States or in Sweden. In respect of papers dealing with international relations, again both countries do not permit their release. Concerning papers, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of federal-provincial relations, this is not a problem of course in Sweden. In the United States system, because it is a federation, these are released. In respect of papers containing information the release of which would allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or a group of persons, neither Sweden or the United States releases them. With regard to papers reflecting on the personal competence or character of an individual, neither country releases these. Papers of a voluminous character or which would require an inordinate cost or length of time to produce are released by both the United States and Sweden, but I understand that the person who requests them must pay the cost of producing them, which thereby acts as a very effective check. In respect of papers relating to the business of the Senate, Sweden does not have a senate and the United States has nothing on that.

With regard to papers, the release of which would be personally embarrassing to Her Majesty or the Royal Family or official representatives of Her Majesty, Sweden does have a monarchy and the United States not, but in the case of Sweden they apparently would release these papers if available. Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract, until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded, are refused both in Sweden and the United States. Then we have cabinet documents and those documents which include Privy Council confidence. Sweden would release them and the United States would release them, but again I draw attention to the different nature of government in these cases. The proper example in our case would be to compare our situation with that of Great Britain. In Great Britain these documents are not released either. In respect of any proceedings before a court of justice or a judicial inquiry of any sort, both the United States and Sweden refuse to release these documents. Sweden does release and the United States does not release internal departmental memoranda. In the case of papers requested, submitted or received in confidence by the government from sources outside the government, these are released by Sweden but not by the United States.

The point I am trying to make is that the principle the government has accepted in respect of the release of documents is a new one for Canada. These exemptions that the government claims are those which stand on their own; for example, those which have to do with papers which would come from the Royal Family or from the Governor General or which apply to the particular nature of Canada as a federal country in which the powers are split more or less between two centres. I feel this is a significant step. I think I can assure the House, as I have some responsibility for the application of the guidelines, that every attempt is being made to make as much information available to hon. members as we can within the scope of the guidelines. I think there will be increasing use of the formula that papers will be released subject to the reservation in respect of confidential documents and other matters that are confidential that these not be included in the papers to be released. We are certainly trying to take steps in that way.

As recently as Wednesday last we accepted three motions laid down by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) where some information requested was confidential. The papers have been gone through and the confidential parts have been removed. These papers will be available to the hon. member. Before these guidelines had been made such a motion would have been refused. I think because of the way in which the guidelines read and are being applied the result will be that Members of Parliament and the Canadian people will have access to far more material from the federal government than has been the case previously.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, even on a rainy day I love to hear Liberals argue "ill-Liberal" principles. Of course, my friend's argument was destroyed today a little earlier in our proceedings when the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) was asked to make available to parliament a document which assessed the efficiency and so on of the opportunities for youth program, an important document to those of us who must consider the votes for the plan. The minister hid behind the usual phrase that the document was an internal document. No matter how good the guidelines are, if we have to put up with this it means that the guidelines are not guidelines or that the guidelines enunciated up to this point are much too restrictive. When governments talk about guaranteeing the security of the state in so far as secrecy or accessibility to information is concerned, the truth is that the guarantee and the fear are for the security of the government. This is not a bad objective, I presume, depending on where one sits. As I have said before, sometimes we are captured by our own rhetoric.

I think the United Kingdom really is a very bad example to use when we consider the whole matter of availability of documents and secrecy. They have worshipped far too long at the altar, if I can say that, of secrecy or anonymity. Being from Fundy-Royal, with my background I prefer looking at the French experience. Many senior civil servants in France not only are not anonymous but enunciate public policy quite freely. This is acceptable in the process of giving the public information about various policies. By a curious coincidence I was reading, because this whole matter is very much in the public mind in the United States as a result of the Ellsberg trials—presumably they are not sub judice in this place—that somebody had the good sense to take a look at what Dr. Johnson said. I am sure the minister is interested in Dr. Johnson. In 1756 Dr. Johnson in a book called "Observations on the Present State of Affairs" in so far as accuracy is concerned—and the state of affairs in 1756 was about the same as today—wrote:

> The time is now come in which every Englishman expects to be informed of the national affairs; and in which he has a right to have that expectation gratified. For, whatever may be urged by ministers, or those whom vanity or interest makes the followers of ministers—> —concerning the necessity of confidence in our governours, and the presumption of prying with profane eyes into the recesses of policy, it is evident that this reverence can be claimed only by counsels yet unexecuted, and projects suspended in deliberation.

Presumably that includes parliamentary secretaries.

Dr. Johnson put it pretty grandly. But if we want to come to a contemporary critic of the British scene we find one in Bernard Crick's Essays on Reform 1967. Included in these essays is an excellent comment by Professor J. A. G. Griffith in an article entitled "On Telling People". Professor Griffith says:

• (1730)

> The wish to take the lid off the machinery of government, to see how it works, who says what to whom, at what level decisions are taken, what private criteria are used, how far 'politics' is allowed to override those criteria, on what statistical and other 'facts' the decisions are based: this wish does not derive only from curiosity or from party animosity but also from self-interest, from quis custodiet—

I translate that as a guardianship feeling, guardianship of the public interest.

> —and from a feeling (by some) that governments represent another group interest.

A series of comments on the matter of secrecy was published in the London Times a few years ago in which the author listed various items. First, we should be told much more about the background against which decisions are taken. Second, there is a vast shaded area about which most of us know nothing but generally suspect the worst.

If the Secretary of State had released the report on the OFY program, I suspect the report would have relieved the mind of many people who now have every reason to be suspicious of the program. I believe that probably 98 per cent of the information marked "Restricted", "Secret" and "Confidential" would be so utterly boring that nobody would look at it anyway. In fact, I have met many officials in departments who themselves deplore the overuse of the labels "Restricted" and "Confidential."

In other countries, the passion for secrecy has not abated the cynicism of the public. We all have an obligation, as we try to arrive at ways to reform our procedures, really to believe in what we are doing and let the public have access to documents, with very few exceptions; in fact, a much narrower group of exceptions than the guidelines announced the other day.

Another point I wish to stress is that this year's estimates will show the largest amount ever spent by a government of this country on consultant services contracted outside the regular public service. I am not criticizing that situation particularly at the moment, because others will do so. But all through the estimates examples can be found of sums provided for consultant services, and practically all of them—even under the guidelines recently announced—will result in the information stemming from them being stamped, sealed and put away from public view. The only way to get information will be to wait for the inevitable leaks. There is no mystery about leaks: they occur when things are too watertight. When a government tries to run things in a restricted way, inevitably there are leaks. The way to end the leaks is to throw away the "Restricted" and the "Confidential" stamps except when matters go to the very security of the state or to the privacy of the individual.

Perhaps on another occasion we will have a chance to debate one or two more of the announced guidelines. Recently somebody told me that since the end of the Korean war the United States have amassed 450 billion restricted and confidential documents. I say, God help the United States! What has happened, with the proliferation of confidential and secret documents, is that nobody can find anything anyway. This just shows the preposterous levels we have reached.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure when the knock will come to the door, but I gather that the purpose of putting the limit of 5.40 p.m. on the debate was to make sure we had carried the motion by the time the messenger arrived from the Senate. However, because there are a few minutes left before that deadline, I would like to make a few comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. To enlighten hon. members, perhaps I should point out that the Chair does not expect the messenger from the other place much before five minutes to six o'clock; at the earliest, ten minutes to six o'clock. The minister and other members who wish to contribute could take at least another 10 or 15 minutes, and we could forgo the order to put the motion at 20 minutes to six o'clock. It will take just a few seconds to pass the motion, if hon. members are agreed. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will not repeat the comments I made on another motion some time ago when I tabled the guidelines that are to be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

Probably, when guidelines are tabled indicating several categories of restrictions the immediate reaction is to feel, as one editorial put it, that the object is to tighten the screws and prevent information being made available. Perhaps presentationally, in the circumstances, in view of those categories, it was impossible to avoid that impression. However, in the cabinet, over the past several years, we have grappled with this problem in an effort to determine what basis there is, and ought to be, to withhold documents from publication.

We started with the laudable proposition of attempting as much as possible to run an open government and to make available as much information as could be made available. Because we started with that proposition, we attempted to examine the situation to find out whether we could make public at least the principles upon which our conduct was based. After a great deal of discussion we produced the guidelines and sent them to departments for their direction, and now we are sending them to a standing joint committee for examination to get the views of the committee on whether the guidelines indeed are sound in principle.

Is it sound, for example, to withhold legal opinions that the government receives? Is it sound to withhold information that is given to the government in confidence by an individual or by a corporation? Is it sound to withhold information or papers that might be embarrassing to Her Majesty? Is it sound to release papers, while contracts are being negotiated, that might have the effect of prejudicing one party or the other? On many of these guidelines we reached the conclusion that in themselves they were soundly based. But we want the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments to examine the guidelines and have them fleshed-out by examples that might be produced by witnesses so that the committee may reach some conclusions.

I believe we are fortunate in having the joint committee available to take on this work, because of the status of the joint chairmen, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and the distinguished member of the other place. I am sure that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal is committed, as we all are, to obtaining the greatest possible availability of information and that he will examine the situation objectively with the members of the committee. We will have the benefit of their advice on whether, in certain cases, the guidelines are sound or can be elaborated on or developed in certain ways so that additional information can be made available.

I think the first question is: Are they sound in principle? The second question is: How are they to be administered? After all, an individual in a department, and ultimately the minister or the government, must decide in a particular case whether a document comes under the heading of a particular guideline.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question? This is separate from the matter of the guidelines. Has the minister considered reviving a practice that used to be quite prevalent years ago in this House? When a member wanted a document produced, he was allowed to see it privately on his own good will and honesty that he would not quote directly from it. I recall times when we asked for documents and were allowed to see them privately, provided there were no direct quotes. I am not quarrelling with the government for not doing this, but has any consideration been given to it? I feel that the practice of the British House in this regard, of letting members see documents privately, would get around some of the problem.

Mr. MacEachen: I think that is a good suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I am sure if this were done, hon. members would respect the confidentiality of the document. Possibly the committee could consider it and make some recommendations.

At a certain stage someone has to make the decision whether a document is to be produced. In the past, the decision was sometimes taken on very general grounds. In the guidelines, we are attempting to specify the grounds so that members will know why a document is being refused. I am aware that probably in the government generally, and certainly in departments, there has to be developed a greater awareness of parliament, the requirements of parliament and a much more responsible system of answering the questions of hon. members and their requests for the production of documents.

There was a system in the House by which motions for the production of papers were called during routine proceedings on certain days, and a vote was taken and the decision of the House was final. That procedure was found to be unsatisfactory and changes were made in the rules, so that now if there is a desire on the part of a member or the government to proceed further, the motion is transferred for debate and it is possible to debate the issue. But normally it is not possible to reach a decision, for obvious reasons.

It may be that the committee could take that matter under consideration and determine whether at some point, retrospectively, a committee of the House ought to review the practice and whether refusal by the government in a particular case was justified, so that as we developed the procedure a more open system would be in existence and would be seen to be in existence.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal mentioned consultants' reports. There is no doubt that there has been a growth in the use of consultants, and as a result numerous motions have been put on the order paper asking for consultants' reports. There is no doubt that if you ask an individual in the government or outside for advice, if the advice is to be delivered privately it is couched differently than if the advice is to be delivered publicly. I have no doubt about the validity of that assertion, for obvious reasons.

We have now asked ministers who engage consultants to determine before the work is done whether it is expected that the report will be made public. If it is, the consultant ought to know so that he can defend the document in public. It seems somewhat unfair to ask an individual to make a report or give independent advice which he expects is to be rendered in private, and at a later stage to change the rules of the game and have the document made public. I hope that as a result of this specification in the guidelines, when consultants are engaged greater emphasis will be placed upon the practice of having the reports prepared so they can be made public, and that the consultant will know this when he begins his task.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister permit a question? Having produced these guidelines, I wonder whether he gave any consideration to listing the kinds of documents that would be tabled. He calls this document a set of guidelines, but to me it is more like the Ten Commandments: it tells you all the things you cannot do. This reminds me of the dear old lady who said that all they do is put ideas into one's head.

Why not a list of the kind of documents that would be tabled? It seems to me that we are not getting anywhere in this discussion, and maybe that is an argument in support of the matter going to committee. We all agree that everything possible should be tabled, but the minister gives negative guidelines that in the end say that something can be tabled but an awful lot would not be. Can the minister not produce something more positive than negative guidelines?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, probably it would have been a lot better if we had begun with 60 categories of documents that should be made public, then the 16 categories of exemptions would have appeared less suspicious to my hon. friend. The principle was that we proposed to make public everything that is available, with the exception of these restrictions. Looking at the guidelines, they do not encompass all the areas of government but there are rather specific areas included.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The committee may want to reverse the procedure and make a statement that is more positive, along the lines of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I realize I have mentioned that, presentationally, the conclusion or impression could have been created by the guidelines that the purpose was to tighten the situation. The opposite was the case. We wanted to open the flow of information, but in opening it we wanted to make clear to the House the principle that there ought to be exclusions. That is the point I made earlier and it is the point my parliamentary secretary made.

I had something to say about consultants' reports. I believe we would adopt a sounder approach if we could determine at the beginning what is to be made public, so that the man writing the report and giving advice would not be faced with the knowledge, several months later, that the document was to be made public. If that were the case, he would have a legitimate cause of complaint.

In the case of evaluation reports, it seems to me there is another difficulty and perhaps the committee would want to consider it. Departments are constantly evaluating their programs, either informally or in a formal way, and reports are produced for the use of the deputy minister or the minister. Persons making these reports are bound to be influenced by the knowledge that the reports are for the private use of officials. Are they to be made public for the use of all the people of Canada? I believe that if evaluation reports are to be made, it ought to be with a view to having them made public is such a request is ultimately made; but the request must be made that they be made public. Obviously, the same reasoning applies to other reports. I am sure many evaluations are made with the full knowledge, backed by a promise, that the reports are intended solely for the confidential use of officers within the department concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Reid) agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-31, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 6

Bill C-156, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—Chapter No. 7

Bill C-166, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Chapter No. 4

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CROP INSURANCE ACT

REIMBURSEMENT TO PROVINCES FOR PARTIAL ADVANCES ON CROP INSURANCE PREMIUMS

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-129, to amend the Crop Insurance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne reference was made to the government's intention to amend the Crop Insurance Act so that the cost to farmers of this protection would be reduced.

Bill C-129 provides that when a province agrees to increase its financial contribution to the program by paying all the administration costs, instead of being reimbursed to the extent of 50 per cent of these costs by the federal government, the federal government will increase its contribution to the premiums from 25 per cent to 50 per cent. In this way, both levels of government will increase assistance to farmers so as to reduce farmers' contributions from 75 per cent to 50 per cent of the premiums necessary to cover indemnities.

I have heard from the ministers of agriculture of all provinces which now have agreements with the federal government under the Crop Insurance Act and I am assured that this amendment has the endorsement of their respective governments. In fact, three provincial governments, British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba, have recently made plans for their crop insurance agencies to sell crop insurance to farmers in 1973 using a rate structure based on the increased government contribution set out in this bill. Several other provinces planning to do so are hoping that this legislation will soon become law. It is understood that until this bill is passed, these provincial governments will advance 50 per cent of the premium to the respective crop insurance funds and pay all administration costs.

The Crop Insurance Act was passed in 1959 and has been amended three times to make improvements to the program and to increase its usefulness to the farmers of Canada. Crop insurance was first sold to farmers in Manitoba in 1960 and the program was expanded to include Saskatchewan in 1961, Prince Edward Island in 1962, Alberta in 1965, Ontario in 1966, British Columbia in 1967, Quebec in 1968 and Nova Scotia in 1969.

Farmer participation has increased slowly and in 1972, the year just passed, 49,268 farmers purchased insurance worth $160 million, for a total premium of $11,172,000. Total indemnities which we expect will be paid on last year's insured crops will exceed $13 million, the largest crop losses occurring in Alberta, Ontario and Quebec.

I have said the number of farmers protected by crop insurance in 1972 was 49,000. This represents less than 20 per cent of the number of farmers who are eligible to purchase this protection. There are, I believe, several reasons why many farmers have not used this program, and Bill C-129 before the House is one major step toward meeting farmers' objections, particularly the objection that the level of the guarantee is too low and the premium is too high.

Variation in crop yields is one of the major risks of farming. This variation can be caused by a number of unavoidable actions of nature. The cost of any insurance program that might be designed to compensate a farmer for any crop damage would be prohibitive. Therefore, crop insurance is a program to guarantee a level of production on a farmer's total crop up to 80 per cent of a farmer's previous average yield, so that when a crop is seriously reduced the farmer is assured of a return which will generally cover his investment in the crop. While many farmers prefer the higher guarantee, the premium cost is often prohibitive when added to all the costs that a farmer faces each spring of the year. The most common level of coverage is 60 to 70 per cent of average yield, and the average premium for this coverage has exceeded 7 per cent.

In the 12 years that crop insurance has been sold in Canada, $73,187,000 has been collected in premiums, of which the farmers have paid $52,643,011, and $70,800,000 has been paid to farmers whose crops were less than the guarantee. Thus, for each premium dollar paid by farmers in total, farmers in total have received $1.35. Each year improvements are made in the terms and conditions of crop insurance plans to meet farmers' needs, but this bill will be a big step in permitting improvements in the size of the guarantee in relation to the cost to the farmer.

I expect that the number of farmers who buy crop insurance in the next few years will nearly double. The basic idea of crop insurance, that a farmer decides to purchase protection before he sows a crop, is new to many farmers. Many farmers continue to self-insure, to take a chance, to diversify to reduce risk of crop loss, or to rely on government emergency grants. My experience of this sort of thing is not good. All it amounts to is a lot of buck-passing between the two higher levels of government and the farmer generally ends up holding the empty bucket.

As all provinces step up their efforts to explain the advantages and operation of crop insurance, and particularly with the ever increasing need for higher cash investment in every crop, I can see the majority of farmers using this program in the near future and benefiting from the stability of income that it provides.

I might add that since being appointed Minister of Agriculture I have visited and consulted every one of my provincial counterparts and discussed the changes that we think are desirable in crop insurance for Canadian farmers. I am still receiving suggestions from them. I have done the same thing with all the farm organizations. I have attended many public farm meetings and asked farmers to suggest the changes that they think would be practical to make crop insurance more enticing to the agricultural industry as a whole.

At the first federal-provincial meeting of agricultural ministers this has top place on our agenda, so that new and even better legislation than that which is on the books will be presented to farmers in the crop year 1974-75. Crop insurance, I think, is something they all want. They want an insurance plan that is closer to their idea of what real insurance should be, that is closer to the principle of insurance as we all know it.

I might also add that I know a bit about insurance since I sold casualty insurance part-time for seven and a half years and was director of Co-operators Insurance, the largest casualty insurance company in Ontario. I must say that I think our crop insurance program has a long way to go before it is what many producers and farmers in this nation want it to be, that is, real insurance that guarantees them against loss. I am willing to listen to any reasonable presentation by any member of this House, by any group or by any one of my provincial counterparts, so that we have the most advanced and progressive type of crop insurance in the world.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has taken this opportunity to introduce an amendment to the Crop Insurance Act. Crop insurance is a prime topic among farmers today due, I think, to the terrible experience that farmers in various provinces have had because of weather, flood conditions and so on, all of them acts of God. Not only were farmers unable to cope with these disasters and prevent the tremendous damage that was caused, but farmers found themselves in most instances unable to cope with them financially.

When one thinks of crop insurance from the farmer's point of view, he thinks of an investment in the form of a premium to safeguard against partial or total crop loss which might place the farmer in an economic strait-jacket as far as financing further crops or other farming activities is concerned.

We have had the matter of crop insurance before us for a number of years. As an indication of the fact that something is drastically wrong, let me point out that in 1972, of the hundreds of thousands of farmers in Canada who could take out crop insurance only 46,000 availed themselves of this opportunity. This was a decrease of almost 7,000 farmers from the 1970-71 crop year. This would lead one to believe that the farmers are not satisfied with the present crop insurance plan. They are discouraged to the extent they are not taking advantage of the minor provision available to them at the present time.

What is the basic problem? When you talk to farmers, as most of us have, who have experienced flood, hail, rain, wind or fire damage, you will find that farmers are very blunt. You ask them why they do not take out crop insurance and nine out of ten will say quite bluntly, "Because it is not worth a damn." That is their attitude. I think you will find that their experience has not been happy in respect of crop insurance. You cannot point the finger of blame at any one segment of government or any particular administration.

One of the basic problems which we face is related to the structure of crop insurance. It is initiated by the federal government and administered by the provincial governments in ten different ways; they are not universal in their application or methods. When you have a situation like this you are bound to have disruption, time lapses and maladministration, all of which leads to dissatisfaction.

The minister stated—I was happy to hear this—that the government is going to try to initiate coverage up to 80 per cent of loss. This sounds reasonable on the face of it, but in the actual application so far as the farmer is concerned, it does not work out that way. A farmer may have one field, part of which is on a slope and part of which is on the level; one part may be along a river flat and one part on an incline. Part of this field may suffer 40 per cent crop damage, while the other part is not damaged at all. When this happens the farmer is not eligible for any compensation because in total he has lost only 20 per cent of his crop. This is just one example; there are many.

The decision as to whether a farmer is eligible for compensation is a human one. Let us consider a crop of tomato plants, potato plants or tobacco plants. Such a crop, when hit by hail or a rain deluge, suffers a great deal of damage. The plants sit in water for a week or so and the roots are killed because of lack of oxygen. An inspector comes in to assess the damage. His assessment is never in accord with the damage the farmer believes he has suffered; the farmer feels he has suffered much greater loss than the inspector is willing to admit. We have many instances of crop loss which work severe economic hardship on the farmers involved, yet under the administration of the crop insurance plan they receive absolutely no payment. This is why farmers have lost faith in this particular type of coverage.

I know the minister was earnest and sincere when he said he was willing to hear suggested improvements. He has travelled across the country and talked to provincial ministers of agriculture, and I know he appreciates the difficulties. I am delighted that this bill is to be sent to committee where we can call witnesses and study it in detail, following which we can draw our own conclusions. There is no objection on the part of this party to sending the bill to committee. We believe crop insurance is an absolute necessity for farmers of this nation.

Under the economic situation which faces Canada today, farming is not a simple operation; it is a very complicated and high-investment industry. When this industry was new, $400 would buy all the machinery and equipment necessary to operate a 150-acre farm. But $400 today would hardly pay for the forms of energy required to turn over the machinery on the average farm for a week. That is the problem we face today. When we speak about farming today, we are not speaking about a $3,000 or $5,000 investment; in many instances we are speaking about an investment of $250,000 to $1.5 million. The operators of farms are interested in crop insurance to protect their investment.

We must not approach this matter on the basis of a simple bill relating to a primary industry, but as a measure for the protection of a very complicated business enterprise. Unless this crop insurance program is a businesslike proposition, the farmers will not be interested in it. It is our experience over the past number of years that they are not interested; this is borne out by the small number of farmers who have availed themselves of the plan.

Some 46,000 farmers have taken out crop insurance, 13,000 of whom are located in the western provinces, the birthplace of crop insurance. Therefore the House can understand the hesitation of farmers to participate in this program in other provinces. This is why we look forward to getting the bill before the committee, at which time members of this party will have suggestions to make and perhaps will move some amendments.

Let me go back to the principle I dealt with a moment ago in respect of differences in administration. Today the minister put forward a simple proposition to increase the federal contribution to the administrative costs of the program in an attempt to lower farmers' premiums. The idea is that if a farmer has to pay $1 an acre for a very simple crop insurance plan, the government will pick up, depending upon the province involved, 25 per cent or 50 per cent of the premium.

This is not the only type of insurance required by farmers. When we speak about crop insurance we cannot confine ourselves to small payments for a portion of a crop which may not be harvested. Such an approach has proved to be very unsatisfactory in respect of some segments of farming. If hon. members wish specifics, I will be specific and speak on behalf of the dairy farmers or those who produce beef. It is very difficult to compensate such a producer "X" number of dollars an acre for the amount of hay he was unable to take in because of a deluge of rain.

When such a disaster occurs, it affects not only one farmer but his neighbours in the next concession, those in the next township and often those in the next country. So we have an entire area that has lost the necessary forage. When you compensate the farmer by "X" number of dollars per acre on the basis of the hay he did not take in, you are only paying him on the basis of normal production. When we have a disaster such as this, the farmer is forced to pay for forage at a price which is sometimes tremendously high, not only because of an increase due to scarcity of supply but often due to the necessity to truck forage or take it by rail hundreds of miles into the area. All these things add to the cost, and the only avenue available to farmers is through supplication to the Minister of Agriculture and the federal government for extra grants and loans to take care of the situation.

Is it not more logical or sensible, when we are setting up a crop insurance program, to design it to provide most benefit to farmers? Farmers to whom I have spoken across this nation—I, too, have been across this nation—are not too concerned about the actual insurance premium per acre. Certainly they do not want to pay more than they must pay, but they are not too concerned about the degree of premium, that is, whether it be $1, $1.50 or $2 per acre. They are more interested in what it will buy if they should be faced with a catastrophe. They are more concerned about whether it will help them in the event of flooding of their entire crop, destruction by hail, by early or late frost, or by fire. This is what farmers are interested in.

However, unfortunately it seems that the total emphasis of the government continues to be on providing an extra 25 per cent of the premium per acre or in helping the provincial governments in respect of their administrative costs. It is all right for the minister to tell the House, which either he or his parliamentary secretary probably will, that the administration of these policies comes under provincial jurisdiction and that the province works out the actual mechanics of crop insurance. This no doubt is true, but the fact remains that there is a federal responsibility in the entire scheme. It seems to me the onus is on the government, through the Minister of Agriculture, to work out with the ministers of agriculture of the provinces a plausible, practical, logical crop insurance program which would be universal to the degree that it would be attractive to farmers, that they would have confidence in it and would feel their desires were met.

I am not impressed by the argument of the minister tonight when he told us that for every dollar in the form of premium which farmers invest in crop insurance, they receive $1.30. I am not impressed because many farmers who would receive $1.30 are today working in the towns and cities because they went bankrupt on the farm. They are there because disaster broke their economic backs. This is why we must look at this problem in a little different light. If the federal government is sincere in its plans to develop a viable, economic agricultural industry in this country, it must consider long-range plans.

First of all, this government must decide whether it believes an agricultural industry in Canada is indispensable. Never on this side of the House have we been able to determine, from the actions of the government, whether it feels this industry is indispensable. If the government believes it is, then it is time it started a long-range policy designed to put the business of agriculture on the basis on which it is entitled to be. When I speak of it being on a business basis, this is what I have in mind. All the farmers of this nation wish for an economic climate, not in which they need subsidies, not in which they need hand-outs or small loans from the governments at low interest rates, not all these tools for cripples but, rather, an economic climate in which they can receive the same return for their labour and capital investment as that received by all other segments of the Canadian economy. If they get this, they will be satisfied.

We have an opportunity tonight, through this bill, to take one of the first steps in changing the policy and directing it so that the farmers will know that the Parliament of Canada feels their industry is absolutely necessary and that we are starting to take steps to make it possible for them to survive under the really tough international competition with which they are faced. The way to do it is by starting to lay the basis of an insurance plan that will give them some confidence in their own long-term investments, so that they do not have the absolute dread that one disaster, one act of God, in one year could wipe them out of business.

When we have succeeded in doing this—and I think we can—when we have established an insurance policy for Canadian farmers all across Canada which will fully compensate them for complete crop failure due to an act of God, then this parliament will have begun to do something worth while for the farmers of this nation.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, unless I am mistaken, I think this is the first bill amending an act which has been introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I congratulate him on taking some action in respect of the crop insurance legislation. Part of the question—this was touched on by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) who spoke immediately before me—is whether the changes proposed by the minister will make this program really operative and one that will attract farmers to use it and have the protection they need. I wonder if it will.

We know the experience up to 1971-72. I am referring to the 1971-72 annual report in respect of crop insurance. It states that 46,326 farmers in Canada purchased crop insurance in 1971, and this was 13 per cent fewer than in 1970. So actually crop insurance has been attracting fewer farmers as time goes by. I do not have the figures here for Manitoba, but I have talked to some of the people in that province. Manitoba really tried to use crop insurance, but I think participation in the program is starting to decline.

In this bill the government proposes to increase to some extent the amount of money which it will pay. It will pay up to 50 per cent of the premium and the provinces will cover the administration costs. These are the essential features of the bill. Again I ask: Will this be sufficient to attract the vast majority of farmers into taking out this kind of insurance and paying the premiums? I have spoken to people in my constituency in Saskatchewan. I spoke to a man who is actively selling insurance to farmers in the area. There is a real drive to get farmers to take out crop insurance. If they had coverage, it would be protection against some of the disasters that we have experienced this year.

I would have liked to learn from the minister whether as a result of these new proposals he was expecting to absolve the government from responsibility to meet the kinds of disasters that occurred this year in Ontario, Quebec and the Peace River area of Alberta and British Columbia. I still have my doubts that this type of insurance will be able to compensate for those kinds of disasters, especially if farmers encounter a situation where they suffer drought or flooding for two or three years in succession. Is it the government's belief that, having enacted this kind of crop insurance, it can opt out of giving special assistance in such cases? I think it is taking the wrong attitude, if it believes so. Individualized insurance such as this will not cope with those situations.

I was interested to hear the minister say he wanted to get this scheme on a straight insurance basis. He said that he had sold insurance and that this was the way he was thinking. I am convinced that ordinary, straight-ahead individual insurance will prove to be the answer for the farmers. Some years ago I hoped that in western Canada some minister or some government would be imaginative enough to try to tie in PFAA with a crop insurance program. It could have worked in the three prairie provinces at least. One could take the major crops and make a deduction, at the same time use the individual insurance approach, and by amalgamating the two achieve over-all coverage. It would mean collecting premiums from the farmers. From the deductions you could build up a fund of considerable magnitude which would cope with a disaster when it occurred.

I am sorry to see the principle behind PFAA, which was to make a deduction right across the board in order to provide protection right across the board, being written off in order to go back—the minister may say, go forward—to a simple, straight insurance scheme where each farmer carries his own risk, with a certain amount of contribution for the premium being paid by the federal government or the provincial government as the case may be.

I think it will take some time before we get the vast majority of farmers covered under the scheme as it is now established. Some years ago I went to a meeting in my municipality which was attended by farmers from all around the area. The local ag rep attended, and we discussed this idea at length. We asked the farmers whether they would buy insurance to get this kind of coverage. The answer we received was that they would not. I would point out that the area around Rosetown and Biggar is representative of the central grain growing region of western Canada. If the crop insurance scheme is to be successful, it must appeal to that type of farmer.

The minister says he has gone across the country and spoken to farmers and to governments. I wonder if he really thinks that the farmers in Kindersley, Alsask, Medicine Hat, Maple Creek, Swift Current and all through that area, who farm one or two, or even four or five sections will use this program; or does he think there will still be a significant number of farmers in certain categories who will not use it? This is the question that needs to be answered, because most people would agree that if an insurance program is to be effective it must be universal.

I have my doubts whether the legislation that will emerge as a result of these amendments will achieve that objective. But we will have to wait only three or four years to find the answer. Instead of covering 46,326 farmers, if the scheme that is proposed tonight really is the answer it will cover 300,000 to 400,000 farmers. Does the minister expect this to happen? Quite frankly, I doubt that it will. I do not particularly want to run down the idea, but if we are to have a program, it had better work and we must have good reason to believe that it will.

As I say, there is no special provision for disaster years; or at least the minister has not said there is. I think I am being fair when I say that his predecessor gave a clear indication that his objective was to establish policies which meant we would no longer have to ask the federal government for special assistance for the farmers. I believe that the amendment to the Crop Insurance Act was meant to achieve that major objective. That thread runs through the policies which this government and the one before it have proposed to the House. It ran through the policies in connection with the grains stabilization bill, that is, to have the government move out of any special category and adopt an automatic program that would meet the farmers' needs when incomes dropped.

As well as crop insurance we should look at the income policies of the government. After all, this kind of insurance is meant to maintain income in years of disaster. Over-all income is what the government should be concerned with. As well as this, we should be talking about changes to the Agricultural Prices Support Act. Either deliberately or by accident, some of the policies that we thought would be fairly effective—and were at one time—have become ineffective. I think part of it has happened by design. The Agricultural Prices Support Act has a ten-year average for the main basis of support, and 80 per cent of that is offered to farmers as a support price. Surely the minister and the government know that this act is largely inoperative because of the rise in prices. Just take the example of pork. When the price of hogs went down to $19 and $20 a hundredweight, the amount provided in the act was so low that for shame they dared not offer it to the farmers; they had to use an arbitrary figure, a large figure. How long is the government content to leave this situation as it is?

In his speech the minister said there might be some suggestions from this side. I suggest that he can start by shortening that ten-year average to five year, and by changing the 80 per cent to 100 per cent. He should then get somebody with a slide-rule to find out what the figures show. They might show a price support program that would be worth having on the statute books. Sheep men have come here time after time in the last three years and pleaded with the government for help in this regard.

The farmer is logical enough that he will not pay for insurance unless it will guarantee him an income on which he can live. One of the major reasons the insurance program did not grow, and instead declined in Saskatchewan and Manitoba through 1969, 1970 and 1971, was that the farmer's income was so low that it was not worth insuring, and he could not afford to insure it. The minister knows that; it is in this report. It does nothing for the farmer to offer a program to insure an income which in a year or two from now may not be worth insuring.

I have listened to the minister when he has spoken before the food committee, and I have read some of the speeches he has made across the country. He tells consumers that the farmer is giving them bargains. He is right; this government has helped the farmer to give bargains. The program which he proposes tonight assumes that there will not be disaster years. Of course, disasters are not the minister's fault but if there is not an agricultural prices support program to protect the farmer, it will be his fault; he will be responsible and should be called to account in this House. I see no sign that the government intends to deal with this matter. I see signs that they are proposing to let supply and demand make the decisions in the market.

The minister in charge of the Wheat Board says he is interested in farm income, although he never says what kind or at what level. Someone asked what he is going to do about putting rapeseed under the Wheat Board, and he said: Maybe this year, next year, come day, go day, God send Sunday; I am going to do something—maybe. He comes to this House and tells farmers what is the initial price for barley and wheat, and that he would like them to grow more rapeseed, too; but he does not offer any kind of support or price for rapeseed. Again, the farmer is to take the whole risk; he is to insure a crop when he has no guarantee of its value and no support against a disaster price. He just has to take his chance.

The same minister says he will keep supplying wheat to the millers at $1.95½. Even the farmers of Ontario are starting to plead with him to have the millers pay what the wheat is worth, because this is denying them a fair price for their product. Nothing is being done about it. This is the second time this sort of thing has happened; the first time was during the Second World War. Why not take the necessary action to increase the price of wheat to millers? Speaking of that portion of the wheat payments which comes from the treasury, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board said it is "clearly a consumer subsidy holding the price of bread down instead of letting it reflect world prices for wheat." This must be the biggest laugh in the world. Tell that to the consumers. Tell them the price of bread is held down. Somebody should go through the country and tell the people that, so they will know. That is the kind of irrationality we have been fed from time to time.

Speaking to the bill before us, I am in favour of developing crop insurance protection that the farmer can purchase and that will protect him against flood, hail, drought, and so on. Let me say to the minister, however, that this will only work and be accepted by farmers if they are given the opportunity to realize an income that is adequate for their needs. If farmers find themselves in the position of obtaining an adequate income, they will not run to the minister or anybody else looking for hand-outs: they will carry all the insurance they need and will look after themselves. We do not yet have policies that would place farmers in that position. Let me leave this thought with the minister: if he wants this program to work, he must acquire a better grasp of the situation and look at it in a broader context than he has until now.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words about the suggestions of the government, and especially on Bill C-129 the purpose of which is to give the farmers better crop insurance.

For a few years now, that insurance has certainly helped the farmers, but all are not insured; several were, but when time came for them to claim insurance benefits, they had a very hard time getting their losses assessed.

I know the inspection must be made in co-operation with the provincial governments; I also know that everything does not depend on the federal government, but I ask the minister whether he could—or perhaps has he done so already—consult with the provinces that a body might be appointed in each one to inspect the damages and so enable the farmers to collect their insurance.

In fact, a number of farmers suffered substantial losses and were unable to collect insurance because the damages to their crops could not be evaluated. It often happened that they called on inspectors in due time to look at the crops and the inspectors came around three months later, right in the middle of winter, which is certainly not the right time to evaluate crops. It was therefore decided that a number of farmers could not collect insurance, for the reasons I have given.

I agree with the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) when he says the insurance did not fulfill the required purpose. In my riding, which is semi-rural and semi-urban, a number of farmers declined to take advantage of the insurance. About 25 per cent did use the plan. I wonder why farmers did not take advantage of this insurance. Probably because they thought it did not offer enough advantages or because inspections are not made on schedule when damages are to be assessed. At any rate, only 25 per cent of farmers are insured and 75 per cent are not.

During last summer or fall, because of large losses in crops, caused by too much rain, the government decided to grant $400 to each farmer to help with the damages. About half my constituency was declared a designated area whereas the other half had the same damages and could not obtain these benefits because it was not designated as such.

In the course of the election campaign, this became a political argument and it was said that one area of the constituency was not recognized as designated because of its member sitting in the opposition. Yet, in the other part of the constituency, each farmer was granted $400 because it had been recognized as a designated area.

Mr. Speaker, there is certainly something the matter with this situation. I suggest it is unreasonable to do such things in a constituency. I don't know whether this has occurred elsewhere—I have not inquired, I have not pushed the matter further. In any case, this is what happened.

The $400 grant benefited to some, but others who incurred losses of more than $6,000 received only $400. There is again something that is not entirely fair in this. Many farmers are still dissatisfied that they received only $400, whereas they incurred much heavier losses. So, there is some injustice in this.

The initiative of giving $400 to farmers who suffered rain damage is contrary to the principle of crop insurance. This does not encourage farmers to buy more insurance, because probably they think that if they suffer damage, they need not pay insurance premiums because the government will subsidize damaged crops.

I think, moreover, that the minister should intercede with the provincial authorities so as to clear up this matter. There is definitely something unfair about the present insurance plan, which in no way solves the problem. Under the proposed insurance plan, the federal government undertakes responsibility for half of the insured parties and pays 50 per cent of the premiums, which I am not opposed to.

We shall definitely support this bill, although it will not directly solve the farmers' problems. It is a pretty lame sort of aid, as the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar said just now.

It is true that the provinces are the ones who decide; so the ministers of agriculture of all the provinces ought to negotiate clear agreements with the federal government. What is needed is insurance that would really cover crops that were ruined; if there were such a crop insurance plan, the government would not be obliged, as it has been in the past, to pay out $400 subsidies to help farmers whose crops have been damaged.

And so we need to set up a crop insurance plan that would really be of help to Canadian agriculture; if we did, I think all farmers would want coverage. Something must be wrong if only 25 per cent of farmers buy insurance.

I am no expert on insurance, but I know that there is something wrong since farmers are hesitant about insuring their crops.

As to the establishment of insurance policies, they should really insure crops, and when damage occurs, there should be an organization ready to take the proper steps and inspect where needed so that our farmers could benefit from this insurance which must insure and not only appear to. It should not be an insurance that does not pay when it is time to pay. When damages suffered by farmers must be paid for, this should be done quickly. This organization should operate in such a way that our farmers could really benefit from it and would be truly insured in an adequate manner.

I also doubt that this bill will be satisfactory to the great majority of farmers. I do not think there are that many changes in this bill. The bill should have been better explained. It should be referred to committee for a more thorough examination by agricultural experts who would give their views and bring valid solutions to allow our farmers to really benefit from crop insurance.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this evening to speak about Bill C-129 because it shows that the present government and especially the Department of Agriculture, through the minister, are trying once again to give all Canadian farmers a tool enabling them to live comfortably and above all in security on their land.

As the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) pointed out just now, last year in Quebec—I refer to Quebec because I am a member of that province—some weather problems have inflicted rather heavy losses to farmers. Unfortunately, most of those farmers were not covered by crop insurance, which means that very few were insured.

Thanks to this bill, all Canadian farmers will be happy to find out that the government intends to give them a coverage which will enable them to remain on the farm when facing problems such as those that occurred last year.

Bill C-129 provides for another way of cost sharing between the federal government, the provinces and the farmers. Pursuant to this legislation, the contributions of the federal government, under the terms of a federal-provincial agreement, may reach up to 50 per cent of the total premiums, provided the province pays for all administrative costs. The producers' share would be 50 per cent of the premium. The federal contribution provided for in the bill would be paid by way of refund to the provincial government for the amount paid into the crop insurance fund of each province.

In 1972-73, the farmers of Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario have taken out crop insurance by paying 50 per cent of the premium. In the other provinces where crop insurance schemes are in force, the farmers had to pay 75 per cent of the premium. The cost sharing arrangements provided for in Bill C-129 will allow all Canadian farmers to take out crop insurance by paying 50 per cent of the premium.

Greater federal participation will result in more crop protection at a lesser cost per acre to the farmer. In addition, with the experience gained by the provincial administrations, the protection offered the farmer by guaranteeing that his crop is protected, will be of considerable value to all Canadian farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I trust all hon. members will support this bill which will give every Canadian farmer more security.

Crop insurance schemes have evolved somewhat. The Crop Insurance Act was passed by the federal government in 1959. Afterwards, it was applied in 1960 on a trial basis in Manitoba. Since then, eight provinces have provided crop insurance programs for farmers, namely Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island, Alberta, Ontario, British Columbia, Quebec and Nova Scotia.

Initially the Crop Insurance Act entitled the federal government to enter into agreements with the provinces and to assume 50 per cent of the administrative costs and 20 per cent of the necessary premiums to apply the insurance. It also included provisions enabling the federal government to make loans to the provinces in the years when compensation requests would by far exceed the available reserves to indemnify the claimants.

Amendments have been made to the 1959 act in 1964, 1966 and 1971. The amendments of 1964 did away with loans and the federal government agreed to reinsure part of the risk incurred by the provinces, through an approved crop insurance plan. Then, when provinces decided to join the crop insurance plan, the federal government was willing to do something in this area.

Services offered through crop insurance are numerous. As a matter of fact, services offered by the Department of Agriculture of Canada under the Crop Insurance Act include assistance to provinces in order to promote, improve and change their crop insurance plan; the central co-ordination of programs designed to improve and further expand the insurance of crop losses for Canadian farmers; studies aimed at setting crop insurance plans on sound actuarial footings, and the carrying out of financial commitments involved in cost sharing agreements between the Federal government and the Provinces, as regards the share of premium and administration costs as well as the reinsurance of risk.

In 1971, crops have not been too good in most regions of Canada. Important crop losses were recorded in some regions of Canada, for various causes. In Quebec as in other provinces, bad weather during the sowing season or during crops was responsible for farmers losing considerable amounts of money. As we know the problems of farmers who suffer such important losses, we must support this new bill on crop insurance in order to help them.

The financial contributions of the federal Department of Agriculture to the crop insurance program cover the administration costs of the crop insurance division as well as payment made under the agreements between the federal and provincial governments. The Department of Insurance also offers at no cost continuing advisory services.

If indemnities to be paid exceed premiums collected, funds are advanced by provincial governments or under federal provincial insurance agreements.

The administrators of the crop insurance program are continuously trying to improve the provisions of crop insurance contracts to meet the needs of farmers in various areas. However, it seems administration should be improved so a larger proportion of farmers will understand the program and feel confident enough about it to use it regularly.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should all try to make farmers understand that crop insurance is really intended to help them survive periods as dead as those we knew last year and to prevent the same problems from re-occurring.

Mr. Speaker, it gave me great pleasure to say a few words tonight on Bill C-129 designed to help the farmers of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the crop insurance bill. I wish the minister well with regard to it. It is a small step in the right direction. I have to say, though, that it is late. In my area of Saskatchewan crops are already being seeded and the government of the province has not seen fit to offer lower premium rates to producers. So the sign-up out there is slow.

It seems to me the changes proposed in this bill are administrative rather than anything else. Looking over the annual report on crop insurance, I see there are 18 administrative costs to be borne by the insured farmer, which amounted to 18 per cent of the premium in Saskatchewan in the last three years. It makes one wonder. Really, the amount of money involved, $4 million last year, is so small in relation to the value of the industry as to make the plan almost worthless.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) suggested that crop insurance and PFAA might have been put together. That is a very sensible idea. Surely we need an agricultural insurance policy which covers a farmer's total income, which includes livestock enterprises as well as crops. The sign-up on the Prairies has been very slow for crop insurance, particularly in the province of Saskatchewan. The reason, of course, is that in the spring we are asking farmers to pay a stiff premium. On 200 acres, in the area I represent, the premium is about $476, and on 400 acres it is around $1,000. Admittedly, the government is proposing to take up half of this charge, but the remainder is still a lot of money to ask the farmer to lay out before he seeds a crop.

I should like to deal for a few minutes with the industry we are insuring. Canada is the second largest country in the world and we are rich in resources and opportunities. Yet the policies of the federal Department of Agriculture in the last few years have been inward-looking. We have become preoccupied with regional squabbles. In the west, we realize that our problems and our priorities are not the same as those of other regions of Canada. We know that steps must be taken to equalize standards and opportunities across this land; so once again I welcome this bill.

Our main crop in western Canada is wheat. Only two other countries in the world grow the hard, red spring wheat that we do—the United States, in its northern part, and Australia. We are the only three countries which grow this bread-making wheat for export. No other grain can be substituted for this wheat. This wheat can only be grown to best advantage in semi-arid conditions. This makes us extremely vulnerable to the whims of mother nature. So the Government of Canada has a real responsibility to help protect this wealth-producing industry. We have to carry over a large stock at the end of each crop year in order to be classed as a dependable supplier by the rest of the world.

The importance of grain to the Canadian economy can be considered in a number of ways. The commonest way is to take account of the direct contribution of grain sales to farm income and the amount added to the gross national wealth. But a more revealing way is to take account of the economic activity generated by wheat sales in various industrial sectors, since so many jobs and enterprises depend, direct or indirectly, on agricultural output. The production, distribution and export of 600 million bushels of wheat at the present price of $2.75 a bushel—which amounts to $1.4 billion—generates a total domestic output of $4.4 billion. The Agricultural Economic Research Council has all the figures. Total government revenue from the 600 million bushels exported amounts to $675 million. So the effect generated on the economy corresponds to $4.4 billion, direct income amounts to $2.1 billion and $675 million goes to the federal government. And I would remind hon. members that important though these exports are, western production of other grains used for processing, and so on, has an even more important effect upon the economy. It is now obvious it would have been possible to have sold, at competitive world prices, the production from 10 million acres removed by the government's Lift program. This was a direct loss to the Canadian economy of over $500 million, and to the food system of over $700 million.

We can turn the question around and ask, what could the government afford to pay in the way of market development, export assistance or price subsidization and be no worse off? Several partial analyses have revealed that a government promotion of $1 per bushel could be provided for wheat, and this would result in direct and indirect benefits accruing to all sectors of the Canadian economy. I suggest that the federal government could well afford to be more generous than they have been in the provisions of Bill C-129.

As I have said before, it is now a fact that Canada is a wealthy country. The financial resources of the federal treasury are such that if these moneys were redirected with a greater input toward agriculture, new concepts could be developed. Of primary importance is the realization that the producers in this country are entitled to a satisfactory return for their labour. In other words, they are entitled to prices to ensure their continuation in business and the accepted standard of life and opportunity Canada affords. If the marketplace cannot provide these requirements, then it is my contention that Canada should.

Agriculture is a permanent foundation for economic activity, as contrasted with resource-depleting industries. One thing is important to keep in mind, however. Whatever is done must not be done at the expense of soil deterioration. The land should not be overworked in order to compensate for excessive grain shortages, nor should it be considered worthless in times of overproduction. Our main objective has to be to increase food output. Food is so basic a commodity and so necessary that the federal government must be involved. In effect, only three areas of the world produce more than they consume—Canada, the United States and the European Common Market. New prosperity around the world and new political realities ensure demand for better food.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that a journey of 1,000 miles starts with a single step. I think this is a single step that we are taking tonight, and I look forward to dealing further with the bill when it reaches the committee.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I shall not take too long tonight so we can get this bill through second reading as quickly as possible. I should like, first of all, to say on behalf of my party that we welcome the bill. We feel it is a step in the right direction. At the present time, farmers in my province have been subsidized to the tune of 25 per cent of their premium for crop insurance. Now they will be getting 50 per cent of their premium through the auspices of the federal government.

One thing that does bother me is this. In my province, in fact in the prairie provinces, there was a decrease in participation in the crop insurance plan during the crop year 1971-1972. In Saskatchewan and Alberta I suppose we could put part of the blame on Lift, the Lower Inventory for Tomorrow program—or, as some people in Saskatchewan call it, "lower income for tomorrow"—and the grasslands incentive program.

Saskatchewan has the largest cultivated acreage in Canada. According to a report that I received some time ago, we have the third highest insured acreage. One matter that the committee on agriculture will have to delve into very seriously is how we can get more farmers involved in crop insurance. I suppose we will have to convince the farmers that crop insurance is good for them, and make it so attractive that all of them will want to participate.

This report, the annual report of the minister under the Crop Insurance Act for 1971-72, is not completely up to date since we are now in 1973, but I should like to put on the record what measures have been taken in my home province to extend the crop insurance scheme. What the provincial government of Saskatchewan is doing, together with the proposed amendment in this bill to the Crop Insurance Act, should make crop insurance more worth while for Saskatchewan farmers.

To begin with, in the early phases of crop insurance in Saskatchewan, which commenced in the early 1960s, not too much progress was made during the seven Liberal years that we had. There was a Tory-Grit coalition to keep us out of power. But then we managed to get back in. Since 1971, crop insurance has been extended to include all agricultural areas of the province. Originally it covered only the eastern section of the province; now the entire province of Saskatchewan is covered.

The minister's report for 1971-72 indicates, on page 4, that in Saskatchewan the lands available before 1964 were for wheat, oats and barley only. I should like to inform the House that more crops have now been added and at the present time there are eight crops included under the crop insurance scheme in Saskatchewan. These are spring wheat, Durum wheat, barley, oats, fall rye, flax, sunflowers and rapeseed. Furthermore, coverages in general have been increased with inclusion of the latest yield data. A 70 per cent basic level of coverage is available for all crops included in the plan, in addition to the 60 per cent basic level of coverage. Also, a coverage adjustment feature which is based on individual crop insurance experience for insured crops is included.

A quality guarantee is included in addition to the quantity guarantee, and provides that if production is reduced in quality due to an insured hazard, the grade is also considered in determining the loss in production. Hail losses will also be adjusted on an individual field and on a spot loss basis. This provides protection against partial losses through hail and at the same time maintains an over-all guarantee as provided under the basic crop insurance plan.

In addition, an expanded program of information and promotion is being carried out. This is something the federal government could be doing. We must have a change in the method of selling and servicing so that more farmers in Saskatchewan are involved. In my constituency, and I live in the fringe area of agricultural land in Saskatchewan, about one-third of the farmers suffered heavy frost damage. Farmers who held crop insurance had an advantage over those who did not.

Since this is a federal-provincial program, I should like to indicate that the province of Saskatchewan is considering at the present time how it can better insure the farmer. In the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, insurance is more or less based on the average yield for the last 25 years. One of the problems of determining whether a farmer should be insured on the basis of 5 per cent or 10 per cent of average yield is lack of statistics. At the present time, the government of Saskatchewan is trying to develop a system of establishing coverage for each insured based on the actual yields. This will require collecting yield data on an individual farm basis.

At the present time, risk area boundaries are based on municipal losses, which results in different rates of insurance on almost identical land and even within units. It would appear that rate areas should be segregated with land boundaries in respect of irrigation, soil and such things. It has also been contemplated that other crops should be insured under this new crop insurance scheme in addition to the eight I have already mentioned. One crop being contemplated is mustard seed.

A major concern of the farmers in Saskatchewan is that the crop insurance program by itself will not provide the production protection required if several consecutive disaster years should occur in a particular area. Since crop insurance guarantees only a portion of the long-term average yield, with present markets in respect of farming a farmer cannot survive at this level of production over a period of years. The increased contribution under the proposal should in no way relieve the Government of Canada from responsibility under adverse conditions such as I have mentioned. Once again, I feel that the crop insurance scheme has come a long way in Canada. It has made progress over the last 10 or 15 years, and I believe this is a step in the right direction. But we still have a long way to go.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in hearing what the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Corriveau) had to say when he suggested farmers would be proud of a government that brought in a crop insurance policy of this kind. Let me suggest that Ontario farmers are receiving virtually the same kind of deal this year, under this policy, that they received last year, and they will not find this acceptable. The hon. member is a long way out in left field in this regard, and if he continues to make statements like that he will find that he is not on the ball team at all.

The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly) said the government would be required to convince the farmers to buy insurance. I can only suggest that if he were acquainted with farmers he would know that you do not have to convince farmers about policies.

An hon. Member: He is a farmer.

Mr. Towers: Farmers know what they want, they know when they have a good deal and they will participate without being convinced.

I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-129 because crop insurance is a matter of urgency. I had hoped the government would place before this House a crop insurance policy at an earlier date, in view of the fact that the fruit season in British Columbia commences on October 1, at which time there is danger of a first frost. Nevertheless, Bill C-129 must be considered and forwarded to the committee as quickly as possible. I would urge the government and the committee to accept reasonable and logical amendments such as those which have been suggested. No doubt there will be more. The minister has said he welcomes suggestions by members of this House, and I hope he will make use of them.

I realize the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has problems in attempting to have his proposals accepted by the cabinet. I hope he knew what he was talking about when he said he would accept the ideas of hon. members and use them when bringing forward new crop insurance legislation. Let me quote from the statement he made during the debate on the throne speech. As reported on page 344 of Hansard, the minister said:

> These problems concerning crop insurance are hard to overcome. In view of these difficulties I believe it is time to re-examine the entire crop insurance program, to set out goals firmly in mind, and to develop a better program. During my trip across Canada, there was not one provincial minister of agriculture who did not bring this to my attention. They want the real principle of insurance embodied in crop insurance. They feel it is not in the program at the present time.
> Again, I am open to suggestions from anyone who has any ideas on how we can improve the crop insurance program.

I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture is disappointed with the results of his efforts as exemplified by Bill C-129, having made a statement of that magnitude? Although administrative costs are being shifted to provincial governments, with the federal government assuming responsibility for 50 per cent of the premiums, in most cases the farmer does not receive any greater protection. Bearing in mind the difficulties experienced by the minister in getting his point across to his colleagues, I wonder if he was forced to adopt a third official language which he now refers to as "Whelanese" in order to mesmerize the farmers into believing that his new policy would provide the answer to agricultural problems.

An hon. Member: The farmers understand him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on John; you wouldn't know a soybean from a golf ball.

Mr. Towers: Being a new member, I find there is a great deal to learn about parliamentary rules and procedures. If we also need to learn "Whelanese" to properly understand the Minister of Agriculture, it will be an unexpected addition to the list of parliamentary rules and practices which every newly elected member is endeavouring to master.

In attempting to assess what the Minister of Agriculture has been saying, whether or not in "Whelanese", his phraseology has to be decoded. Once a person has the formula, or code, he has a better opportunity to understand what the minister means. For instance, when he spoke during the budget debate the minister said, as recorded at page 1580 of Hansard:

> This is a budget for little people. They have benefited a great deal from the budget, more than others. Secondly, farmers will benefit from the changes made in the capital gains tax as it applies to transfers of farms from a father to the mother or child. This is a major concession, one that I am very happy to see in the budget.

[Mr. Towers.]

What the minister is saying, in his third language, decoded, is that it was a stupid piece of legislation to begin with, which would eventually have destroyed the agricultural economy of this country; that the federal government admits that its inception was an error and is now trying to rescind the regulation. Actually, all that is being done is allowing transfer of a farm of a deceased to his wife, son or daughter without imposing the capital gains tax. In other words, a farmer, after labouring all his life to develop and maintain a farm for his own and his family's future, has to die to receive his just dues from this government. Apparently this is the way to say it in "Whelanese". Shakespeare put it more aptly, thus, "The good that men do is often interred with their bones".

To continue with the interpretation of "Whelanese" as shown on page 1248 of Hansard, when referring to fertilizer the minister said:

> There is to be no price increase. The price will be the same as it was last August for all Alberta; it will not change in that area . . . They have ample supplies . . . At least that is one good bit of news, Mr. Chairman.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, fertilizer is scarce and the situation will worsen, because many farmers do not have storage facilities, and therefore rely on its availability at seeding time to meet their needs. The price of fertilizer, quoted by one of the major retailers, if not the largest in Alberta, in January, 1972, for ammonium nitrate 34-0-0 was $63 per ton bulk. In January this year the same fertilizer cost $76 per ton. I want to stress the point that the minister either did not know what he was talking about, or he was deliberately trying to imply something which is not the truth, when he stated that the price of fertilizer in January would be the same as it was last August.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am having difficulty because the hon. member seems to be dealing with the price of fertilizer, and Bill C-129 amends the Crop Insurance Act. Perhaps the hon. member would bring the two matters a little closer together.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your guidance. I am guided by what you say, but I wanted to relate the cost of fertilizer and what the minister said to the bill with which we are dealing. Perhaps Your Honour would bear with me for a moment.

Those who purchase fertilizer know that the high price for the year is during July and August, and in the off-season during the months of September to January companies either lower prices generally or give a percentage discount. In the period to which I refer, the crop year 1970-71, there was a 7 per cent discount on fertilizer. During the 1972-73 crop year, the same company allowed a discount of 6 per cent. The minister ought to know that it is not honest to compare the reduced price in January to the high-season price of August. In addition, there has been an increase of $3 per ton right across the board for fertilizer. This is another example of "Whelanese" and of a government giving farmers and Canadians generally a false impression or a direct shafting.

Mr. Whelan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, what has been said is a misinterpretation of the words I used. I said the information given to me was that if there were any increase, it would be reasonable. I asked that if any member of this House had any information otherwise, he should bring it to my attention. It has been brought to my attention just recently by one member, and we are investigating it now. Fertilizer was delivered in my area this January at the same price as last January, and all the other checks in my area show very nominal increases in fertilizer up until this date.

Mr. Towers: Each year, as the farmer's costs of production increase, crop insurance becomes more vital to his operation. Farmers must have a policy of crop insurance which is acceptable under present circumstances; a policy which is related to current problems; a policy of protection against partial or total crop loss; a policy that allows him to remain in production. If a farmer has the opportunity of participating in this type of crop insurance, he will purchase it. Last year only 18 to 24 per cent—this was mentioned by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth)—of those engaged in the production of food were able to afford crop insurance.

Something must be done to place crop insurance within financial reach so that every farmer can have its protection. Although the proposed legislation would be of benefit and will be supported by our party, if there is nothing better forthcoming we would like the minister to live up to his word by including suggested amendments to improve the crop insurance policy. I also hope the minister realizes it will take more than "Whelanese" to establish satisfactory crop insurance.

Last year in Canada the cost of production of agricultural products was approximately three times as much at it was 25 years ago, with grain selling at 10 per cent to 20 per cent less than during that period. These producers must be protected so that they can continue in business. If they do not lose their crops, they can survive. When their crops are destroyed and they do not have the protection of insurance, they are in serious trouble. When the crop insurance bill goes to committee, as was mentioned by my colleague the hon. member for Kent-Essex, we intend to propose an amendment in the hope that the government will accept it.

Some provinces are at present considering the implementation of a spot loss clause. I am convinced that crop insurance will never be a complete success unless this government permits the provinces to establish a spot loss policy on an acceptable maximum market value level above that established by the provincial governments on the basis of the market value of the crop. The federal government has failed to initiate proper leadership in the area of crop insurance. But if the Minister of Agriculture can convince his fellow cabinet members that inclusion of this type of plan into the formula which has been suggested in Bill C-129 is reasonable and practical, I believe it would be acceptable to the majority of farmers.

A successful crop insurance policy would help not only the farmer but every Canadian by their having an opportunity to buy food at lower prices. This would be an excellent way for a government to ensure that farmers are not forced out of production through crop loss. It is to the advantage of everyone to see that farmers continue in business if they so desire. Crop insurance most suitable for farmers can be provided through the federal government working in co-operation with provincial governments. I would suggest that the Minister of Agriculture forget about trying to mislead the Canadian farmers. They are much too smart. What the farmers want is the truth and a crop insurance program that works.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there is a disposition by the House to bring this debate to a close.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House will understand that some of our members who wish to participate in this debate unfortunately had to attend a funeral in the west. In the circumstances, I am sure the government would be disposed to allow the debate to continue on another day.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We understand that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette will be recognized when the debate resumes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DISCUSSIONS ON AMENDMENT OF PENSION PLAN TO PROVIDE PAYMENTS ON BASIS OF 2 PER CENT PER YEAR OF SERVICE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, January 15, 1973, as recorded in Hansard at page 275, I asked this question:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister having discussions with Canadian National Railways concerning the desirability of amending the Canadian National pension plan to provide for pensions on the basis of 2 per cent for each year of service as is the case for Air Canada employees and federal public servants?

This was the reply of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand):

> Mr. Speaker, the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific are now negotiating with the railway employees' unions and this is one of the items to be discussed. When I met the two presidents a few weeks ago, I indicated that I was certainly interested in the issue of the pension fund and I expressed hope that they would find a solution to this problem which has been pending too long already.

That was a good statement. The trouble is that "too long already" can go on until it becomes far too long. Subsequently, on Thursday, March 22, as recorded in Hansard at page 2489, I asked the Minister of Transport a question again on the same subject, using these words:

Adjournment Debate

Is the minister yet in a position to make a statement to the House concerning improvements in railway pensions, both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific? Also, can he tell the House whether he has been able to persuade Canadian National that its pensions should be at least equal to the pension provisions enjoyed by Air Canada employees and by employees of the federal public service?

The minister's answer was as follows:

I think the hon. gentleman knows that negotiations are presently going on between Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and the railway unions and that this subject is being discussed by the parties. I hope this very important problem of pensions will be solved this year, and I am ready to do whatever I can in order to obtain a just solution for the employees.

My purpose in rising tonight and recounting these two questions and answers is to express the hope that the minister is doing something in order to obtain a just solution of this problem. As some hon. members may be aware, reports have been leaking out to the effect that certain matters are being settled between the railway employees and the railway management. I do not have any definitive word as to what the terms of a possible settlement are. As a matter of fact, there is still a fair amount of confusion, but I am disturbed most of all over the fact that it seems some agreement is being reached with respect to the pension plans of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, but that this agreement relates mainly, if not exclusively, to employees still working or, at best, with respect to very recent service.

One report that has come is that there will be pension improvements for those who were in service up to the end of 1972, and that an adjustment may go back as far as 1956. But for those who retired prior to 1956 on either railway there seems to be nothing in prospect so far as these reports are concerned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, because I have admitted that I do not know the details of any settlement that may be in prospect, it would not be proper for me to say much in that respect. However, I do want to impress upon the government, even though we are talking about something that is the subject of collective bargaining, that it has a responsibility to the employees of our major railways who are already retired.

Any settlement that is made that does not take into account the position of the older employees of Canada's railways should be reviewed by the government, and the government should do something about it. One of the railways is owned by the government, so surely the government can have some input into the question with that railway. I do not accept the argument so often advanced, that because the Canadian Pacific Railway is privately owned the government can do nothing about its pension plan. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Pacific lives in the public domain, has public support and has had a great deal of public money. I suggest that the federal government does have authority over that railway as well as over the Canadian National.

What is required in this area, Mr. Speaker, as a very minimum, is a pension plan that provides for a 2 per cent pension for each year of service that an employee has given to the railway. I believe a calculation along those lines should be made for employees already retired. There is also required a formula for the escalating of pensions, after retirement, better than the 2 per cent they now get from the CNR. It should, in fact, be equal at least to the cost of living or, better still, to the rising standard of living.

There also needs to be an improvement in the position of widows of retired employees. At the present time, when a retired employee dies his widow gets a pension of only 50 per cent; most of us think it should be much more. There also should be provision for early retirement without severe penalty, as is now the case.

These are the things that ought to be enshrined in railway pensions. They ought to be at least as good as the best provisions there are for Air Canada and federal public servants. As a matter of fact, I would like to see their pensions as good as pensions provided for members of the House of Commons.

My plea to the government tonight is to recognize the fact that even though this subject is being dealt with at the collective bargaining table, the government has a special responsibility to those already retired. I hope this year will not go by without something substantial and meaningful being done for all retired railway employees.

M. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to date the Canadian National Railways board of directors, who are trustees of the pension fund, have authorized all changes to the pension plan. The plan is administered by a pension board consisting of an equal number of labour and management representatives with whom the company discusses proposed changes in the plan and from whom the company receives proposals for changes.

On the pension issue, I am informed that this year, for the first time, the unions included pension demands in their notices to bargain. The major demand is that the present plan, which provides a pension of 1½ per cent of the average of the best five years' earnings per year of service, be raised to a 2 per cent pension. CNR management and union representatives have agreed, subject to the conclusion of an over-all agreement, to adjust the present pension plan from the 1½ per cent formula to a 2 per cent formula back to 1956.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is that all you have to say?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION—INCREASE IN DEPARTMENTS AND BUILDINGS IN OTTAWA—FUTURE POLICY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, on February 8 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what, if any, are the limits to government growth in Ottawa. That question was sparked by news that the government had bought the Metropolitan Life Insurance building and the Orme building for $15,450,000 and intends to buy more property on Wellington Street for expansion of government departments. The Prime Minister answered by deflecting the question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dubé).

On February 22 I asked the Minister of Public Works how the huge government spending program in Ottawa could be reconciled with "an effort to develop government services throughout western Canada." The minister seemed to treat the question lightly by pointing out that "obviously there are more government services in the capital of the country than elsewhere." However, he added that he agreed with me that "there could be some redistribution of power." It is redistribution of power in a physical and intellectual sense that this country urgently needs.

When I asked these questions, an Ottawa journalist wrote that I was "knifing" the city of my boyhood and forecast that when I rose tonight it would be to make an "anti-Ottawa" speech. This speech, Mr. Speaker, is not anti-Ottawa but pro-Canada. The unlimited growth of the federal bureaucracy in Ottawa is a reflection of the superman philosophy that characterizes this government. With every passing day as a Member of Parliament in Ottawa, I become more convinced that the federal government is too big, too dominant, too expensive and imposes itself too much upon people's lives.

Will this bureaucracy ever be limited? Obviously, it will not this year, Mr. Speaker, for the Department of Public Works is rushing along a spending program for Ottawa that exceeds the total amount of public works spending in the four western provinces and the two northern territories combined. The 1973-74 estimates show that the department is working on 22 major projects in Ottawa at a cost of $26.3 million. In the entire west and north, the department is spending $25.7 million on new projects. Similarly, the full spending budget for all operations in the city of Ottawa is $97.4 million, while the full spending budget in the west and north is $73.1 million.

On March 19, 1973, appearing before the miscellaneous estimates committee, the Minister of Public Works justified this enormous spending program in Ottawa because the number of civil servants is increasing by 5 or 6 per cent a year, "and you do have to find space to house them." Then he went on to make the incredible statement that because Canada is prosperous "it is normal that the capital of our nation does increase; we are all in favour of that."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not in favour of this never ending escalation of civil servants who need ever more office space, and neither are millions of Canadians who do not live in the capital city, however majestic its scenery especially at tulip time. No wonder the federal government's budget has tripled in ten years and that the 1973-74 fiscal year will see a 17 per cent increase in expenditure. Ten years ago there were 197,998 civil servants, and today there are 277,336. Ten years ago the government payroll for civil servants was $852,731,321, and now—hold on to your hat, Mr. Speaker—it is $2,284,666,035. As if the number of permanent civil servants is not high enough, the total projected costs for 1973-74 for professional and outside services are $600 million. This is an increase of $60 million over last year.

So I return to my first and basic question. What are the limits to government growth in Ottawa? Obviously the Minister of Public Works will go on putting up buildings until the philosophy of government changes. We must rank as the most overgoverned nation on earth. The Economic Council of Canada has warned that the federal government is chiefly to blame for the fact that government at all levels occupies 36 per cent of the gross national product. Why do we need 5,000 civil servants in Statistics Canada, many of whom spend their days writing harassing letters to business people in my constituency demanding all sorts of answers to questions? Why do we need 9,000 people in National Health and Welfare? Why do we need the small army working in unemployment insurance offices? Somebody has to blow the whistle and yell, "Stop. The taxpayers have had enough." We are not going to finance this bureaucracy any more, especially when, with all this expertise, the government cannot solve the unemployment and inflation crises.

Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that western Canada feels what I have just expressed, and it is time the government listened to the west. The federal government is now preparing, in conjunction with the four western provinces, a conference on western economic opportunities. I hope this conference is a vehicle to move the country ahead positively and that the federal government will listen to our ideas on taxation, energy, agriculture, distribution of powers, transportation and the development of manufacturing. As a starting point for the conference, I commend to all its participants the excellent series of articles entitled "What Does the West Want?" now appearing in the Edmonton Journal. I want it to be a success, and so do other western MPs. Consider, then, how shocked I was to learn that Members of Parliament will have no part to play, even as observers, in this historic conference.

I want to warn the government that if it holds this conference behind closed doors and excluses western Members of Parliament, this will be the ultimate sham in ignoring that noble phrase of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "participatory democracy." The conference will doubtless import many civil servants from Ottawa, some of whom know nothing of conditions in the modern west, to advise it. The very people who know a lot about the west, who have been elected and have the confidence of westerners—the MPs—will be excluded.

In the case of Alberta, which elected 19 Conservative MPs, which means that there is no MP in Alberta with a direct link to the government, this situation will be ludicrous. In effect, the government will be penalizing Albertans for voting Conservative by keeping out of the conference any federally-elected Alberta voice. This is hardly any way to start a western conference of rediscovery and reconciliation. The west wants to be heard. We want the federal bureaucracy stabilized and decentralized. The Department of Public Works spending program shows that, however beautiful the words, we have a long way to go in this fight.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks which I hope will be pro-Canada. I say to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) that there is no need to be anti-Ottawa or anti-public service to be pro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanbury: I am surprised that a person who grew up in the nation's capital should have so little sensitivity, as has been reflected tonight, for the greatness of this city which belongs to all Canadians, and the quality of our public servants who work here for all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanbury: I ask the hon. member if he would leave the Parliament Hill area to the whims of commercial development, as he implied tonight. Would he make the Government of Canada the prisoner of commercial developers of office buildings in this city, as he implied?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish you would stop the developers now.

Mr. Stanbury: It is easy for the word "bureaucracy" to roll off the tongue of a politician, but it is hardly fair to those people who serve all Canadians in the public service of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanbury: If the hon. member were accurate, his remarks might be forgiven. But he is not. His assertion that the federal public service has increased by 10 per cent over the past year is simply not founded on fact. The latest figures released from Statistics Canada on this subject are for the third quarter of 1972. On September 30 of that year, total federal government employment, which includes employment in all departments, departmental corporations, agency corporations, proprietary corporations and other agencies and corporations, stood at 417,487 persons. This figure compares with 402,079 persons at the end of September, 1971, an increase of 3.8 per cent in that period, far below the 10 per cent figure suggested.

The hon. member also spoke of growth in the public service over what he referred to as a period of "several years". Over the period 1963 to 1971, the latter being the latest year for which data are available for the full year, the record shows that total federal government employment has increased at an average annual rate of just under 2 per cent. This rate of growth compares favourably with the average growth of total employment in the provincial public service of 5.9 per cent, and the 2.7 per cent rate of growth in the total number of employed persons in Canada over the same period.

In terms of manpower strength with regard to the measure of full-time, continuing employment used by the Treasury Board to control manpower authorization in the public service, the average annual increase over the period 1963-72 has been 1.72 per cent, considerably less than the 2.71 per cent average annual rate of increase in total employment in Canada.

The hon. member also called the increase in payroll costs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to complete my question of February 21 which appears on page 1520 of Hansard and which reads:

> Since the minister recognized that it is impossible for him to find a satisfactory solution to the problems of unemployment and that, consequently, the rate of unemployment, already heartbreaking, particularly in the case of the young, will go up unavoidedly, could the minister tell us if he considered setting up a guaranteed annual income as a possible solution to that unfortunate situation?

Mr. Speaker, the necessity for a guaranteed and vital minimum income for all Canadians 18 years old and over is quite obvious. Present programs fail to stimulate the flow of products towards consumers.

In the past, capitalists asserted that salary increases were to be compensated by higher productivity.

According to a Financial Post article which was printed in La Presse of last March 6, productivity has increased by 28 per cent since 1966 but manpower in the manufacturing industries has expanded by only 6.5 per cent.

The financial weekly comments particularly upon the decision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) to revise completely before 1974 the fiscal provisions which allow for the fast write-off of capital expenditures, and all the other tax incentives designed to stimulate investments in the manufacturing sector.

Now, even if the accelerated write-off helps reduce costs, promotes modernization and benefits the economy, such a practice seldom creates new jobs directly and promptly.

If capital cost allowances must continue as part of financing enterprises, the revision ordered by the Minister of Finance could show that at best they serve to prevent losses in jobs.

For, taking into account the huge and universal impact of technological advance on the manufacturing industry, employment in manufacturing plants does not expand significantly in any industrialized countries. What does increase is competition on the markets for disposal of a rapidly rising production.

Therefore, the core of the matter is not so much a race between countries to increase employment as an endeavour aimed at maintaining employment at a stable level.

According to us members of the Social Credit Party, the logical solution, a solution which is gaining currency among a large proportion of our people, would be to grant a compensated discount and a guaranteed vital minimum income to each citizen of this country, which would allow production to reach the consumer, the consumer being the first aim of any production.

Moreover, the guaranteed minimum income would result in levelling regional disparities.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see two hon. members rising. I shall have to exercise the wisdom of Solomon here. Perhaps the two hon. members can make the decision themselves.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just like the Tory party, with its two financial critics.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Comtois).

[Translation]

Mr. J. Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) never said of course that he considered it was impossible for him to solve the unemployment problem. On the contrary, he has always claimed that creating jobs is and has always been his first preoccupation. Besides, statistics confirm that the picture has improved; for instance, more than 350,000 jobs have been created from February 1972 to February 1973. The last estimates of the Minister of Finance give eloquent evidence of his firm will to boost the Canadian economy. In the budget highlights we notice to this effect the following words:

> The rate of expansion this year should provide jobs fast enough to bring about a significant reduction in unemployment. A year from now 300,000 more canadians should be holding jobs.

Expansionist measures have been adopted to create this favourable economic environment. These measures include notably an increase in the basic exemption for all taxpayers from $1,500 to $1,600 as of January 1, 1973; an increase in the exemption for married couples from $2,850 to $4,000 as of January 1, 1973, a reduction of 5 per cent in the basic federal tax, the maximum reduction being $500 and the minimum reduction $100, also as of January 1, 1973.

Moreover, the federal government has set a series of additional employment programs, including the Local Initiatives Program, on the Job Training Program and Winter Capital Projects Fund Program, etc. which are particularly directed to those aspects of the unemployment problem which react very little to the traditional tax mechanisms.

As to the guaranteed income, in the Speech from the Throne, the government clearly enunciated its position on the matter of amending reconsideration of the social security system in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a few excerpts of that speech, which, in my opinion, are quite relevant.

> In the area of social policy, the Government considers that Canada's total social security system—including both federal and provincial elements—must be reconsidered and reorganized, and made more sensitive to the needs of people in different parts of the country.
> The Government intends that this reorganization should be based on five principles which, taken together, comprise a statement of the Government's commitment in respect of social security.
> First, the social security system must assure to people who cannot work, the aged, the blind and disabled, a compassionate and equitable guaranteed annual income.
> Second, the social security system as it applies to people who can work must contain incentives to work and a greater emphasis on the need to get people who are on social aid back to work.
> Third, a fair and just relationship must be maintained between the incomes of people who are working at or near the minimum wage, the guaranteed incomes assured to people who cannot work, and the allowances paid to those who can work but are unemployed.
> Fourth, it must be recognized that Provinces may wish to have the structures of social security vary in accordance with the social needs, income standards and the cost of living in different communities.
> Finally, it must be accepted that the reconsideration of Canada's social security system must be conducted jointly by the Federal Government and the Provinces. It is not that—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX INCREASE—INQUIRY AS TO NEW MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suppose, in the circumstances, my question should be directed to the President of the Treasury Board who I assume is Acting Prime Minister. On Wednesday last I asked the Prime Minister whether, in view of the increase in the wholesale price index in Canada of almost 14 per cent between February, 1972, and February, 1973, the government proposes to take any new initiatives. The Prime Minister said he had nothing to announce that day. Now that the government has had a couple of days to reflect on this alarming statistic, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government intends to adopt any new measure to control inflation in Canada in light of that alarming statistic?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as of today there is nothing further to add to what the Prime Minister said.

FOOD PRICES—PLACING OF CEILING ON MEAT BY PRESIDENT NIXON—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ACTION BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In light of the initiative that President Nixon took yesterday in placing a ceiling on beef prices and in view of the fact that food prices generally in Canada have gone up substantially more between February, 1972, and February, 1973, than they have in the United States, is the government now going to consider any similar or related action with a view to holding down and controlling the retail and wholesale prices of food commodities that have been leading the price increases in Canada?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the House will be aware that the experience in most countries has indicated the inadvisability of imposing price controls on food items. The situation in the United States with respect to meat and meat products, however, has reached the point where Mr. Nixon felt it was necessary to impose a ceiling on those food items alone. I think the hon. member is aware that Canada is a net importer of beef, and as a consequence beef prices in Canada tend to be regulated or controlled by world prices rather than by domestic considerations. The action of the United States in imposing a ceiling on beef and pork hopefully will have a useful controlling effect on beef, pork and lamb prices in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I take it from what the Acting Prime Minister has said that despite this alarming statistic and despite the initiative taken by the President of the United States, the government of Canada does not intend to take any further action?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I was not saying that at all. I was merely saying that as of today—

Mr. Stanfield: As of today.

Mr. Drury: —we will not be doing anything.

Mr. Stanfield: I see.

Mr. Baldwin: Can we count on action on Monday?

ACTION TO ASSURE SUFFICIENT PRODUCTION OF MEAT AND BUTTER TO MEET DEMAND IN LIGHT OF NET IMPORT POSITION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture. As Canada has become a net importer not only of beef but also of dairy products, can the minister give any assurance to the House that he will recommend policies to the government so that this country will produce enough meat and butter to satisfy the needs of its citizens?

• (1010)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we are all concerned about what the hon. member has stated. This is one of the dangers of okaying boycotts or anything of that type. This is what happened in the past and producers were discouraged because they did not receive the right amount for their products. They do not know whether they will be guaranteed the security they need for the costs involved in the production of these products. This is a matter of concern to the government. As far as I am concerned, we are going to ensure that this does not take place. I do not think what President Nixon did in the United States can be done in the same fashion in Canada because, as President of the United States he has a lot more authority than the Prime Minister of Canada has.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: The President of the United States almost has dictatorial authority. The Prime Minister of Canada does not have that authority.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize two or three supplementaries, but we will then try to complete the first round of questioning and return to this subject which obviously is of interest to many hon. members. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, then the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, and then try to complete the first round of questioning.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Minister of Agriculture. May I ask the minister if, in the interest of the Canadian people, both producers and consumers, he will in the very near future make a statement in the House or introduce legislation to meet this situation and make it unnecessary to bring in the kind of price controls that have been established in the United States?

Mr. Whelan: As I stated, Mr. Speaker, we are discussing these topics at the present time. If I feel that a statement in the House is warranted, or legislation, I will certainly recommend it. However, the study that I feel is necessary on this subject is not yet finished.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this morning the Acting Prime Minister laid such great stress on the fact that Canada is a net importer of beef and, as a matter of fact, the Minister of Agriculture made that statement over the media last night, is he by any chance intimating that the United States is not a net importer of beef as well?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should resume his seat. The hon. member's question is obviously out of order. Will the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. What I am really trying to do is give the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture the opportunity to correct an extremely erroneous impression they are leaving with the Canadian people, that conditions in Canada are really different from those in the United States. Our point is that there is no difference. The situation here is worse than it is in the United States.

[Mr. Whelan.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—OBTAINING OF INFORMATION FROM PRESIDENT OF MEXICO ON THAT COUNTRY'S CONTROL POLICIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister on another subject. Is the government taking advantage of the presence in Ottawa of the President of Mexico to discuss with and obtain information from him as to the policies which that government has introduced to control foreign investment in that country, with the effect, for example, that with regard to all mineral reserves there must be at least 75 per cent local capital and no foreign corporation can control any industry in that country?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are discussions now going on between representatives of the government of Mexico and Canadian ministers on a variety of topics particularly the kind mentioned by the hon. member. I may say I was pleased to note a report in the media that the President of Mexico said he rather admired the Canadian model in this respect.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the President made clear the source of his information about the Canadian model, and was that source either the Prime Minister or the present Acting Prime Minister?

Mr. Drury: I would hesitate to question the President's sources.

MIRABEL—POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHMENT AS CENTRE FOR AIR TRANSPORT—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC MINISTER OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the House whether he intends to meet the Quebec Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs to discuss the report requested by the Quebec Planning and Developments Bureau on the feasibility of making Mirabel airport the air transport centre for Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall wait until I am familiar with the report and then I shall decide if I should meet the Quebec minister.

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, does the minister intend to make a statement when he has studied the report?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I already make enough statements as it is! If there is cause to meet the Quebec minister, and if we are able to make a joint statement, then perhaps we will do so, but that is all hypothetical. I am not familiar with the contents of the report, and I do not even know what the province intends to do with it.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): May I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, could the minister say whether there has already been any discussion of this matter between the Quebec government and the federal government?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there has certainly been some discussion about Mirabel airport.

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES BEEF TREATED WITH DIETHYLSTILBESTROL

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. It arises from the action taken by the President of the United States which has resulted in thousands of tons of beef, both live and dressed weight, being directed to Canada, and the fact that Canada has barred the use of stilbestrol as a livestock food additive because of the hazard to human health, though it is not barred in the United States. Is any action contemplated by the government to stop the importation of beef into Canada on those grounds?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that thousands and thousands of tons of beef, live and dressed, are being directed to Canada at this time. I would point out that the President's freeze on beef prices was not at the producer level but at the retail level and the basis was the average price on the last 30 days. We are discussing with the food and drug directorate the course to be followed concerning the importation of beef having a heavy carry-over of DES. A decision has not yet been made on this aspect, but one will have to be made.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): In view of the fact that the President of the United States saw fit to freeze retail prices, which will immediately freeze the price at the farm gate and have the effect of freezing the price at the farm gate in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): —and as the minister in recent weeks has made much of the fact that meat is the best possible buy, will he now, in the absence of the Prime Minister, protest most vigorously to the United States? If you are going to freeze the price of beef, freeze the price of farm machinery and tractors as well.

Mr. Whelan: I do not agree with the hon. member as to how President Nixon's program can work on the basis of freezing only one product in that country. I believe that if this is to be done successfully the freeze has to apply generally in order to control the cost of living in a country.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): You said beef was the best buy, so resign.

An hon. Member: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Whelan: An hon. member asks what I propose to do about it. One of the members over there is a former cabinet minister in a provincial government and he knows darned well that the provinces have the authority to do these things. If they want to segregate the problem and just pick out parts of it, they can do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: Federally, we do not have the authority that the provincial legislatures and governments have.

An hon. Member: Pass the buck.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PRICE INCREASES—SUGGESTED IMMEDIATE TALKS WITH LABOUR AND INDUSTRY ON IMPLEMENTATION OF CONTROLS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the confidence expressed to the Prime Minister Wednesday by the British Chancellor of the Exchequer about the success of wage and price controls and Britain's determination to continue controls, and in light of all the indications that price increases are escalating in Canada, is the government going to hold immediate talks with Canadians, labour and industry, on whether controls should or should not be implemented in this country?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is somewhat similar to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and the answer is the same.

Mr. Hellyer: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that among the seven largest trading nations in the western world Canada experienced the greatest acceleration in prices last year, and at the same time four of our greatest competitors actually experienced reduced rates of inflation, would the minister tell the House whether the government is going to initiate any significant measures to reduce our inflation rate and to abate growing deterioration of our unfavourable price differential with that of our major competitors? If so, when will a statement be made?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is talking about our export competitiveness; at least, that is what I inferred from his question. I can assure him that Canadian export industries are doing very well. In fact, on a competitive basis our exports are up nearly 25 per cent in the first two months of this year.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, without accepting the validity of the information just given to us by the minister, may I direct a further supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this government is more backward and reactionary than the government of either Great Britain or the United States—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hellyer: —will the government now take action to see—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: —that confidence in the Canadian economy is restored?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please I would suggest that perhaps the House should never sit at ten o'clock in the morning. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, I am sure, will have a very non-controversial type of question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POLICY REGARDING RESERVE FORCES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am always non-controversial. I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that under the government's present policy our reserve forces have been reduced from 23,000 to 15,000, or roughly one-third of their strength, within the last two years and at the present rate of attrition these forces will disappear within the next few years, would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House and the country what the government's policy regarding the future of our reserve forces is to be?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will give consideration to that request. However, I should like to say right now that our reserve forces do play a very important part in our whole concept of the work of the armed forces.

Mr. Hees: It is because of the great good the reserve forces provide for the defence of this country, both for the future and at present, that I ask this question and everybody knows that. I therefore ask the minister to give consideration to bringing these forces back to their original strength so they can operate much more effectively, as they wish to do but are being prevented from doing by the present government.

[Later:]

RESERVE FORCES—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN SUMMER TRAINING AS A RESULT OF LARGER BUDGET

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to one asked previously of the Minister of National Defence in respect of the reserve forces. Will the announced unfreezing of the defence budget this year allow for increased summer training for reserves by reason of an increase in our reserve forces and also provision of summer employment for young people?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is yes. The reserves and our summer student program will be enlarged this year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED ARREST OF GREEK LAWYERS ACTING IN DEFENCE OF STUDENTS—REQUEST FOR EXPRESSION OF CONCERN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister or perhaps, if there is one, to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Hees: They are all acting over there and not acting very well.

Mr. Brewin: Has the government received information that six Greek lawyers involved in the defence of students on trial in Athens have themselves been arrested, are being detained in police headquarters there and are reported to have been subjected to torture? If so, will the minister take the appropriate steps to indicate the humanitarian concern of the Canadian government and the Canadian people?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the facts as alleged by the hon. member are correct, obviously we have a concern and will express it, but I am not aware of this report.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister undertake to bring this matter to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and make inquiries in this regard?

Mr. Drury: I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES BRANCH TO ISSUE T4 SLIPS BY FEBRUARY 28

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Will he assure the House that he will impose a penalty or fine on his colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who is responsible for the government annuities branch, in view of the fact this branch failed to issue T4 slips by February 28 as required by rule or regulation of his department?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): I certainly will be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker, but I hope there will not have to be a by-election as a result.

An hon. Member: You would lose it.

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

INVESTIGATION OF LACK OF PROMOTION OF BILINGUALISM AT COLLEGE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Some days ago I posed questions to him in respect of bilingualism at the Canadian Coastguard College with particular reference to the promotion and nourishment of the French language. At the same time I asked him about a complaint that was submitted to the Commissioner of Official Languages Act and what had happened to his recommendation. Is the minister in a position today to answer those questions?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that the director of the college is studying the recommendation of Mr. Spicer, and as soon as he has come to a decision he will inform me on the matters raised by the hon. gentleman.

REQUEST THAT WORD "IMPORTED" APPEAR ON LABELS OF CERTAIN FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that food products are often imported into this country prepackaged and sold under labels such as "Canada No. 1 Grade", and in view of the preference of many shoppers to buy Canadian goods, will the minister indicate whether consideration is being given to requiring a clear imprint of the word "imported" on such products?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NEW QUEBEC—ALLEGED POISONING OF CERTAIN INDIANS BY MERCURY CONTAMINATED FISH—REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSULT WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Two days ago I asked him a question concerning the death, possibly by poisoning, of a New Quebec Indian. Can he tell us whether he got in touch with the Quebec authorities to find out the real cause of that death?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have checked since the hon. member put the question. Indeed an Eskimo died after eating whale meat which had frozen and thawed out several times; six other members of his family were sick. They were hospitalized and are now recovering quite well. A natural phenomenon, that of the meat eaten having become toxic, was the cause of death in the one instance.

INDUSTRY

STE THÉRÈSE—MEASURES TO AVOID LAY-OFFS AT GENERAL MOTORS—DISCUSSIONS WITH MANAGEMENT AND UNION REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Pursuant to the assurance given the House by his parliamentary secretary, would the minister tell us whether he is interested in the matter of dismissal of employees at the Ste Thérèse General Motors plant? If so, could he report his findings to the House?

• (1030)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been in contact with the company in respect of these lay-offs. We have been assured this is not as a result of any diversion of the Vega model to a United states plant, that in fact the reduction in production at Ste Thérèse has been as a result of market forces. However, I would like to make this point to the hon. member if I may. As a result of the recent devaluation of the U.S. dollar and Canadian parity and the commitment we have from the auto companies in Canada in respect of a price freeze on North American made vehicles, there should be a growing market for Canadian made and North American made models as against imports. That is an important consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In view of this critical situation for the workers of Ste Thérèse, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to meet both the management and the union concerned?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have already been in contact with the management. I would be very pleased to meet with representatives of the union if they would like to meet with me. The point I want to emphasize is that because foreign imports will be going up in price, whether that imported car is imported by one of the big three or is imported from a foreign country unrelated to the big three, the competitive advantage of the Vega and other models of that kind should improve.

SHIPBUILDING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF TEMPORARY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM FOR TWO YEARS

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have a very urgent question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the STAP program of assistance to shipbuilding ends on March 31, that is tomorrow, does the minister intend to announce the extension of this program which has ensured the survival of shipbuilding?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to announce—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: —that the shipbuilding temporary assistance program has been extended by the government for a further two years.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay (Lévis): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Will the assistance under the new program be at the same rate as under the former agreement, namely 14 and 17 per cent?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: No, there have been some improvements. We think that the subsidy rate instead of being on a two-part basis will be on a single basis and on the same basis as that of the subsidy for Canadian-made, Canadian-registered and Canadian-owned vessels. So it will be a straight 17 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has a supplementary to the previous question. For the moment I will recognize the hon. member for Lambton-Kent and then the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

ACTION TO STOP IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES BEEF TREATED WITH DIETHYLSTILBESTROL

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is supplementary to a question asked previously. In view of the fact that as recently as yesterday between 800 and 1,000 cattle entered Sarnia from the United States, in view of the fact that diethylstilbestrol has widespread use in finishing cattle in the United States, and in view of the fact that DES was banned from use in finishing cattle in Canada because of potentially hazardous side effects to consumers, will the minister assure the House that immediate action will be taken to stop the importation of beef from the United States which is in direct violation of health regulations recommended by the health protection branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if there are live cattle coming in and being finished here there is nothing wrong with that, but if cattle with DES are being brought in this would be contrary to our laws and regulations and should be stopped.

INDUSTRY

STE THÉRÈSE—MEASURES TO AVOID LAY-OFFS AT GENERAL MOTORS—MEANING OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT REGARDING PRODUCTION SHIFT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and refers to what he said about the production of cars in the plant at Ste Thérèse. In view of the fact that the only other plant that produces Vegas in North America is at Lordstown in the United States and is operating starting this coming Saturday on an overtime basis and there has been a cutback in employment at the Canadian plant at Ste Thérèse by about 60 per cent, could the minister explain to the House what he means when he says there has been no shift in production of that car from Canada to the United States?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the reduction that the hon. member is referring to in employment levels goes back over a very long period.

Mr. Hees: It must be a couple of weeks anyway.

Mr. Gillespie: No, many months. The assurance I have received from the company is simply that there has been no diversion from the Canadian plant to the Lordstown plant. I think it is also worth noting that the Astre, another vehicle, has been added to the Ste Thérèse plant to help provide increased employment at that plant.

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—REPORT ORDERED BY ONTARIO ATTORNEY GENERAL ON ACTIVITIES—ACTION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and stems from the decision taken by the Attorney General of the province of Ontario in ordering a report on the activities of Rochdale College, Toronto. In view of the fact the government of Canada has several hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in Rochdale College plus a tax exemption certificate, what action does the minister intend taking?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the federal interest in Rochdale College comes more properly under the responsibility of the minister responsible for housing. Matters which have to do with the conduct of persons of course properly fall within the jurisdiction of the provincial Attorney General.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED OFFERING BY AIRLINES OF ADDITIONAL PAYMENTS TO TRAVEL AGENTS TO GET CHARTER PASSENGERS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. This is my first question in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I also think there is another first today. This is the first time we have not been bombarded with motions under Standing Order 43, I believe.

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of a report in today's Globe and Mail, the official organ of the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: —is the minister aware that under the table bounties are being offered to travel agents by airlines in the scramble for passengers under Canada's new charter flight rules? Agents and tour operators say they have been promised between $5 and $35 in addition to their 10 per cent commission. I understand this is against the ABC regulations which prohibit airlines offering any incentive whatever.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the Globe and Mail is our official organ they do not send me a copy of it. I do not have a copy of today's paper so I have not read the story. I will read it and answer the hon. gentleman later.

FREIGHT RATE INCREASES ON CONTAINER TRAFFIC BETWEEN HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN—REQUEST FOR FREEZE PENDING MEETING WITH ATLANTIC PREMIERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask a question that is somewhat supplementary to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster of the Minister of Transport. Would the minister urge on his colleagues in the government that they consider putting a freeze on the increase in shipping container rates to take effect tomorrow until such time as he has had an opportunity to meet with the Atlantic premiers on the broader question of rail transportation rates?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I regret, Mr. Speaker, that my answer must be the same as the one I gave yesterday.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

REQUEST THAT AIDS BE CONSTRUCTED TO FACILITATE VISITS BY HANDICAPPED

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that many hundreds of handicapped people visit the Parliament Buildings each year, would the minister now embark on a program to construct such aids as are necessary to facilitate these visitors?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure that this falls under my jurisdiction but it does sound like a marvelous idea and I will give it my most sympathetic attention.

HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATION BY COMMISSIONERS THAT ACT BE AMENDED—REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON MEMBER'S RESOLUTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the fact that a meeting was just held with port authorities and harbour commissioners, was any recommendation made by the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners to the effect that their act should be updated in order to indicate the responsibilities and jurisdiction of the city, the province and the federal government? Was any such recommendation made at that particular meeting?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire before giving the hon. member the answer.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that perhaps this did not occur, would the minister use his good offices in order to see to it that the resolution I have on the order paper can be brought forward for debate as soon as possible as this will cover the entire problem?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not expect the minister to give me an elaborate answer but I do think it would be courteous of him to give me either a yes or a no to my last question.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member speaks about something that is on the order paper. I think he should address his question to the House leader. I am not the House leader.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT TO LAW REFORM COMMISSION FOR STUDY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact the Solicitor General is not introducing or reintroducing the Young Offenders Act at this session, would he refer the subject matter to the Law Reform Commission so that they may study this problem in depth?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a previous question I stated that we were discussing the Young Offenders Act with the provinces in order to improve the penal services for young offenders and that following these discussions we would introduce new legislation. But I will consider the hon. member's suggestion.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO STOP EXPORTING OF PRE-1969 CANADIAN QUARTERS TO UNITED STATES BECAUSE OF SILVER CONTENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that a highly organized immoral, if not illegal, racket has been established in western Canada to collect and export to the United States hundreds of thousands of pre-1969 Canadian quarters and in view of the fact that these quarters are melted down to produce $1.50 worth of silver for each dollar at face value, can the minister indicate whether he is aware of this situation and what steps are to be taken to stop this apparent illegal theft of Canadian silver?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the facts to which the hon. member refers, nor am I completely convinced by the suggestion he makes concerning the significance, but I will be glad to look into the matter.

HEALTH

MEASURES TO COPE WITH VENEREAL DISEASE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. and benign Minister of National Health and Welfare. In one of his multitudinous statements outside the House he was reported as saying that venereal disease in Canada has reached epidemic proportions. I should like to ask him if his department has activated or has in preparation or contemplation any new measures to cope with this serious situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we will have a meeting very soon about that with the provincial representatives at the deputy ministers' level; I intend to discuss this question with my provincial colleagues at the next ministers of health conference. We shall have certain propositions to discuss with them at that time.

URBAN AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT OFFERING FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for my colleague from Vancouver, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I should like to ask him if the government this weekend is going to offer the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia at the tri-level meeting the amount of money they had offered for a second crossing of the First Narrows, which the provincial government has now thrown away, for a rapid transit system in the city of Vancouver?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we will be meeting with representatives of the province and of the greater Vancouver regional district at a rather historic tri-level meeting in which three federal ministers will be participating. Transportation issues of relevance to the lower mainland are on the agenda, but it would be quite improper for me to say now what the various positions will be at the meeting.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA PROPOSAL OF RAILWAY ROUTE TO TRANSPORT ALASKAN OIL AND ACCELERATION OF STUDIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the evidence given by Professor North before the energy committee that there are no known oil reserves in the Mackenzie delta and that there is almost no likelihood that there will be oil in the Mackenzie delta, will the minister now give further attention to the proposal of British Columbia for a rail route to transport Alaskan oil, and will he also accelerate the studies that are supposedly being done on that subject?

Mr. Speaker: The second part of the hon. member's question is more of a representation or suggestion. Perhaps the hon. member would like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Leggatt: I will withdraw the second part of my question so the minister may have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. Speaker: For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

COMMUNICATIONS

DETAILS OF PROPOSED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications. Can he tell the House if the details and plans for the federal-provincial conference on communications have been finalized, how many provinces have accepted his invitation extended on March 16, and when and where it is to be held?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows what our proposition was. The letter was sent to the ministers of communications of the various provinces last week or ten days ago. I have had some tentative reactions from a number of ministers, but I cannot give a final answer to the question of the hon. member. Regarding the last part of his question about the date of the proposed meeting, I might say that from the contacts we have with the provincial ministries it seems that the dates we proposed at the beginning of July would be acceptable to the majority of the provincial ministers.

Mr. Nowlan: Once the invitations and acceptances have been clarified, to try to define how meaningful the conference will be can the minister tell us if the discussions will involve the provincial role in programming in relation to cable rather than just the question of the hardware of cable, because of the silence on the subject in the green paper?

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I do not accept the premise that this is passed over in silence in the green paper. There is certainly an allusion to it and a very clear one. I think my general answer to the hon. member should be that of course we propose to the provincial ministers of communications to take up as the agenda the various questions and issues that are set forth in the green paper but also any question of interest to them that they would like to come up with.

POWER

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE RESPECTING INTERVENTION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell the House whether the Minister of Finance was stating government policy when he said that the federal government could not intervene in the James Bay hydroelectric project unless the Navigable Waters Protection Act were being violated, and does this mean that the federal government has abdicated its constitutional responsibilities to the 7,000 Indian and Inuit people of James Bay whose rights are very clearly defined under the BNA Act and the Quebec Boundaries Extension Act of 1912?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my knowledge of the statement reported by the hon. member is like hers, from a newspaper. I would be glad to talk to the Minister of Finance to find out what he actually did say. As the newspaper report indicated, he was merely stating a basis for intervention. I can assure the hon. member that he was not stating government policy if indeed he did say that we would not intervene in order to protect the rights of the Indians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are reaching the end of the question period. I was hoping that we could have a few rapid questions before calling orders of the day. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris may ask a supplementary question and after that I will recognize the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

• (1050)

SOUTH INDIAN LAKE—WATER REGULATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. He indicated he had a reply on his desk with relation to water regulation at South Indian Lake and Lake Winnipeg. Is he now in a position to give that information to the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am informed that nothing has been built there. Only a few miles of highway were built and a campsite was set up. There is nothing that can paralyse or disrupt transportation by water.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM

POSSIBILITY OF USING PART OF FUNDS TO ENABLE SENIOR CITIZENS TO TRAVEL

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the attention of the usually well informed Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he say whether consideration is being given to the feasibility of employing some part of New Horizons funds to enable senior citizens to travel, perhaps to their home province or homeland? Is such a program still under consideration?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that proposal is still under consideration but I must tell the hon. member that for the time being we are giving priority to using the funds for the transport of senior citizens within the area or city in which they reside. It would seem that the most urgent needs are in that area and that is where top priority goes.

However, the suggestion of the hon. member is still being considered and it has not been rejected.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was about to call orders of the day but the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich rises on a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from your ruling yesterday. I am not questioning your ruling. I seek guidance. It seemed to me, although I do not have Hansard in front of me, that your ruling was given on the ground that there did not appear to be urgency to my question. Unfortunately, it is not possible to determine the urgency without the answer. The minister seemed to be on the point of answering the question. I would be very happy if you would permit him to do so today, or otherwise instruct me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot seek the instructions of the Chair in such a matter. The Chair has to make a decision whether a question appears urgent, and hon. members will appreciate it is very seldom that I intervene in this way. The Standing Order puts the situation clearly. The hon. member says he is seeking my direction. I suggest to him that he read the Standing Order on the point, which says that the matter shall be determined immediately by the Speaker, without appeal or discussion. If the hon. member thinks the matter is urgent, he can give notice to the Chair and have it considered at the time of adjournment, as it could have been considered last night at ten o'clock.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Minister of National Revenue instituted a program of do-it-yourself income tax returning, with Mr. Fred Davis being well paid to look after this. Can the minister confirm or deny that Mr. Davis did not in fact make out his own return but consulted an expert on income tax in Toronto the other day?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the time has come, at this point of disorder, to call orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Rondeau: After reading yesterday's debates I would ask you to check, Mr. Speaker, if what is reported at page 2725, in the left column, is what was actually said when, for instance, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is quoted as saying in reply to a question:

> I am a very innocent man.

A little further down the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) is reported as saying:

> You have had your opportunity, and now you should sit still. Mr. Speaker, I am just as innocent as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

I would point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that if this is what was actually said we are faced with a very serious problem in this House.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour I wonder whether hon. members might be agreeable to calling it eleven o'clock, so that items of business for today might begin to be considered in total at two o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being nearly eleven o'clock, this House stands adjourned and will resume this afternoon at two o'clock.

At 11 a.m. the House took recess, pursuant to special order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Today we had the pleasure of welcoming the President of Mexico, who delivered an excellent speech. I would like to ask that this speech be printed in its original language, i.e. the Spanish language, for the benefit of new Canadians of Spanish origin, and of our Canadian students who want to improve their knowledge of this beautiful language.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian future is not something that just happens. Our future does not need to be merely a response to external factors, however important they may be. We, as Canadians, can determine in large measure what that future will be. That, Mr. Speaker, is the underlying philosophy of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: In introducing the foreign investment review bill for second reading, I wish to remind hon. members that this bill is only one of the measures on foreign investment which this government proposed in the Speech from the Throne. This bill is a major extension of the review process to cover, not only takeovers, but the establishment of new foreign-controlled businesses in Canada.

My department is preparing a bill as well, which I hope to introduce very shortly, to provide for the registration of technology transfer agreements. There will also be legislation providing that a majority of the board of directors of federally incorporated companies be Canadian. Measures to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and control of resource projects are under consideration. Lastly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has proposed that the next meeting of first ministers examine the desirability of restricting sales of land to foreigners. It is against that kind of background that I want to speak this afternoon in introducing what I consider to be one of the most important bills, not only in this parliament, but in other parliaments from the point of view of the development of a distinctive Canada.

The government's purpose in introducing this bill is very simple. It is part of a package of measures designed to build that kind of Canada I have described, a vital and distinctive Canada. We already have in place a number of policies to support Canadian entrepreneurship and initiative. Others are under consideration. But we also need measures to ensure that initiatives inspired by non-Canadians are of significant benefit to Canada. Bill C-132 asks parliament for this power.

Foreign ownership policy is not an end in itself. Together with other measures, this bill will help to generate meaningful and satisfying employment for Canadians and promote economic growth. Moreover, there is a cultural and social as well an economic dimension to this measure. It can be seen I believe as a positive measure to help shape a positive Canadian identity. In this sense, the bill should be unique and distinctive, reflecting the reality of Canada. Canadian identity will be determined to the extent that Canadians acquire or increase their power to decide what their economy shall produce, what markets shall be served, what research and development will be undertaken. We want an economy which gives us power to innovate in response to a changing environment. If we lose this power, we turn control of our future over to those who retain it. In short, we have four objectives: one, to support the development of strong, Canadian-held business enterprises; two, to ensure that future foreign takeovers and the establishment of new foreign-held businesses will be of significant benefit to Canada; three, to help arrest and reverse the increasing degree of foreign control of our economy; four, to contribute to the development of a distinctive Canadian identity.

Surely, no one in this House will dispute the propriety of these objectives at a time when foreign control of our economy is so extensive. Nearly 60 per cent of manufacturing industry in Canada is foreign-controlled, and in some manufacturing industries such as petroleum and rubber products foreign control exceeds 90 per cent. Recent figures for Canadian mining and smelting indicate that 65 per cent is controlled from abroad. Approximately 80 per cent of that foreign control over Canadian manufacturing and natural resources rests in the United States.

In offering these figures, I want in no way to downgrade the important role which foreign capital has played in the economic development of Canada. Foreign direct investment has brought us new products, new technology, managerial skills, access to foreign markets and the economies of scale which this implies, as well as improved productivity. But the benefits of foreign capital are not an issue in bringing forward this bill. It is not my purpose to deprive Canada of the benefits of foreign capital. This is not a bill to close the door to international investment and turn inwards on ourselves. Quite the contrary. The issue the bill faces is that foreign investment, in addition to its benefits, can also involve costs. A branch plant economy tends to lack the capacity for dynamic innovation—lacks an inner dynamism and outward-looking attitude. It is not necessarily efficient for a $100 billion economy to be designed as a minor replica of a trillion dollar economy.

Our foreign controlled sector is subject to some limitations of research and development, restrictions on export and procurement policies which tie it to international sources of supply at the expense of the stimulation of domestic sources.

We are entering a period in which world demand for our resources will accelerate. We possess a rich and diversified resource base. Our social environment is stable. In the resource area we possess considerable management and technological skills of our own. Given these basic strengths, is it wise for us to let decisions taken abroad in response to foreign needs and priorities determine the rate of extraction of our natural resources and the industrial mix which is likely to result? Does the government not have a responsibility to ensure that development takes place in accordance with Canadian needs and objectives?

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Yes, it has, but what are you going to do about it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: If you listen you may learn something.

Mr. Baker: Not very much.

Mr. Gillespie: Foreign direct investment has helped fill a number of gaps in the Canadian economy, including those involving capital, technology, management and markets. It has frequently been the most efficient way of doing so. But I also believe that extensive foreign direct investment in Canada has reduced Canadian entrepreneurial skills and skills and risk-taking by comparison with what might have been developed in the absence of the high degree of foreign initiative within our economy.

Some observers have noted that the foreign-controlled sector performs in more or less the same way as the domestic sector. This comparison tells only part of the story. More interesting to me is a comparison between the way in which the foreign-controlled sector performs today and the way it might perform if maximum benefit and minimum cost were achieved at every opportunity. The existence of restrictions on research and development, exports and procurement, suggests that scope for increasing benefits exists. Some of these restrictions may reflect basic comparative costs but others are arbitrary and should be removed.

The scope for increasing benefits will vary from industry to industry and from case to case. It is probably greatest in the resource-based industries where the advantage, the location of the resource, is in Canadian hands. Although it is unlikely we can change, in the short run, the location of many processing and fabricating facilities, we may in future be in a position to secure expansion in Canada rather than outside Canada. In the manufacturing sector our main advantage lies in a small but affluent market, a skilled labour force, a relative wage advantage over some countries and a stable political environment. While our position in this area is not overwhelmingly strong, there is undoubtedly scope for reducing the restrictions where foreign investors have not taken advantage of basic Canadian strengths. I am not expecting this bill to transform the situation in Canada overnight.

Mr. Andre: Or even in a year.

Mr. Gillespie: I see it as a reasonable and realistic step in line with our needs; a real step toward the achievement of the objectives I have described, and one entirely in line with action other industrialized countries have taken.

Mr. Yewchuk: A timid step.

Mr. Gillespie: We believe it to be a positive and realistic one, and we commend it to the House. Part of the problem in dealing with the position taken by the Official Opposition is that conflicting statements are made by their party spokesmen. I have heard some today which are quite different from their comments on other occasions. When pressed, they retreat behind a smokescreen of vague generalities, scattering the ground around them with pious statements of intent. They call for effective guidelines for foreign corporations. That is one of the phrases they use. But what guidelines, and for what corporations? They stress the need for more key sectors. But which key sectors are key? And how would they be defined? How much should they be protected? Liberal governments have protected key sectors in the past, but we now see that more comprehensive measures are called for.

• (1420)

Let me explain in more detail why this government decided that the delineation of further key sectors was inappropriate as a general policy response at this time to foreign investment—something that I think some Conservative spokesmen have advocated. Many key sectors in the so-called commanding heights of the economy have already been protected in a regulatory way. I refer to our legislation in the fields of financial institutions, banks, life insurance companies, trust and loan companies, broadcasting, newspapers and periodicals.

Think back to the period 1957-62, Mr. Speaker. Was any legislation of this kind put on the books by the Conservative government then?

Some hon. Members: None.

Mr. Lefebvre: They didn't have the guts.

Mr. Nielsen: We didn't have the problems, either.

Mr. Gillespie: The major areas of the economy where foreign direct investment is unregulated are the manufacturing and resource sectors. How are we to determine which industries in these sectors are most important? What criteria should we use to determine the key or critical sectors that should be protected? Should it be the high technology industries? But technology is not restricted to any one sector. Are we to say that a moribund electronics plant is more important to the country than an innovative, profitable and competitive clothing manufacturer?

Even if we were able to develop a set of criteria to identify key sectors, there are difficult questions regarding which businesses should be included. Let me take automobiles as an hypothetical example. This illustrates the problem of definition in a key sector, the manufacturing sector and the resource sector. Automobiles could include buses, trucks, snowmobiles, off-road vehicles, tires, car radios, air conditioners and so on. You can expand it into a whole series of related products. Where precisely does one draw the line?

Let us look at some of the other questions related to this key sector idea. What degree of protection should we give a key sector? There are a number of alternatives. We could allow no foreign investment. Assuming that you have been able to define and identify—two quite different things—a key sector, what do you do? Do you allow no foreign investment? In that case, we risk cutting ourselves off from the benefits of technological developments elsewhere. Is this sensible if we regard the sector as important in terms of the achievement of national goals? Do you wipe it out? I do not think so.

Second, should we restrict foreign control of assets in a particular sector? Take, for example, computers. Do you say that no more than 50 per cent of the computer industry should be foreign controlled? Think about that particular principle for a moment. This would mean allocating arbitrarily a certain maximum proportion of an industry to foreign control, a simply horrendous administrative and economic problem.

Third, look again at the question of the key sector. Do we say that in a key sector 51 per cent of the shares of every foreign company must be held by Canadians? However, when the 51 per cent is widely held, control could still lie with the foreigner. Scarce Canadian savings could be dissipated, then, in a number of non-controlling situations, thereby reducing the availability of capital for genuinely Canadian-controlled enterprises. Most of these same arguments with respect to the key sector question apply to a policy requiring 51 per cent Canadian ownership in all foreign companies irrespective of the particular sector in which they operate.

In summary, the establishment of mandatory Canadian ownership, either across the board or in particular key sectors, as a general policy is arbitrary, protectionist, and potentially very costly economically. It could discourage needed foreign investment in some areas.

To say, however, that a general key sector policy is not appropriate for Canada at this time does not rule out the identification of further key sectors in future where the circumstances are appropriate. For example, it is conceivable that in some resource industries where Canadians have the technology and managerial capability, where foreign demand assures markets, and where capital is available in Canada or can be readily borrowed abroad, the establishment of another key sector may be feasible.

Some Conservative spokesmen seem to think that the only response to the foreign investment issue is to call for measures to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: That is one way.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And it is a good place to start.

Mr. Gillespie: This may be their position and I shall look forward to hearing from them. But I imagine that that is as far as they can go.

Mr. Baker: You are not even prepared to go that far.

Mr. Gillespie: I agree that Canadians should be encouraged to invest in Canadian business. And, indeed, successive Liberal governments have done more than simply talk about it.

Mr. Nielsen: Now then, you are not on the hustings now.

Mr. Gillespie: There are real measures of tax reform already at work to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada. Already there is a high rate of savings by Canadians. This Conservative party approach to foreign investment fails to recognize that foreign control is not occurring in response to a lack of Canadian capital or lack of savings, but rather is occurring as a result of industrial factors that must be dealt with by a foreign investment policy. That is the difference. The stimulation of greater Canadian savings is not, in itself, the answer to the problems of foreign investment. Failure to accept this is simply a non-recognition of the fact that we live beside and are plugged into, the largest generator of technical innovation and the most successful marketing economy in the world.

• (1430)

This is not a challenge which can be met simplistically without a foreign investment policy. Slogans about incentives are attractive but they do not deal with the fundamental question of Canadian public interest in takeovers or the effect of the potential power of multinational corporations proposing a new investment. After all, just think of this for a moment; a profitable Canadian company is a prime takeover target. Incentives to Canadian investors will do nothing to protect the Canadian interest when a takeover offer has been made. That is why a screening mechanism is important.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The NDP voted against the original takeover bill because it did not go far enough. This bill goes farther. At the same time, we are not opting for a public ownership solution to the extensive foreign control of the Canadian economy. We believe that a screening agency is a realistic answer to express the national interest.

We also do not feel that Canadian resources should be directed toward a substantial buy-back of the foreign controlled sector. We do not believe that the future development of Canada should be jeopardized by committing our scarce funds to an enormous repatriation of the past. For instance, the book value of foreign-controlled firms exceeds $30 billion. No estimate of current market value is available. Any kind of program launched in that direction would set us back, not move us forward.

Quite apart from the priorities, there are serious economic problems in buying back foreign-owned enterprises. Let me give you an example or two. Those which most manifest the costs of foreign control, those which are most truncated, least autonomous and self-directing, those where the costs are greatest, should be on top of the list for acquisition because there would be great opportunities for improving their performance. Let us look at the difficulties of buying them back. Who would buy them? Would it be government or private interests, and at what prices? How would the new owners cover the difficult transitional period from acquisition until they could operate as autonomous enterprises? How would the new management deal with the transitional period while building up their innovational capacity, finding Canadian sources of supply and building up their markets? What additional costs would be involved, and who can guarantee their success?

Mr. Hellyer: You have all the questions, but you don't have any of the answers.

Mr. Gillespie: At the bottom of the list for acquisition are those foreign-controlled businesses which do operate here largely as autonomous independent enterprises. For these companies, acquisition by Canadians would provide few increased benefits other than the change of ownership.

The bill I am introducing for second reading is not Conservative policy, nor is it a nationalization policy.

An hon. Member: It is not much of a policy at all.

Mr. Gillespie: It is neither the beginning nor the end of this government's determination to achieve greater Canadian ownership and control of our economy. Liberal policy on foreign investment is based on two pillars.

An hon. Member: One of salt.

Mr. Gillespie: First, positive support for the development of Canadian-owned and controlled corporations. This may not be of any interest to Tories, but we think this question is of vital importance to Canadians. I hope they will have something to say about this issue which is responsible and intelligent rather than this kind of picayune, noisy interjection which indicates they are not serious about this issue. We are serious about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You can't say anything without asking Trudeau first.

Mr. Gillespie: We have a sense of commitment in respect of foreign investment which you as yet do not have. Our sense of commitment is based on two policies. The first is positive support for the development of Canadian-owned and controlled corporations, and the second is positive measures to maximize the benefit to Canada of foreign investment; a balanced program operating as part of a coherent set of industrial policies for the development of Canada.

An hon. Member: Nobody is against that principle.

Mr. Gillespie: The heart of the Liberal thrust has been the introduction of positive measures to support Canadian industry, particularly those which demonstrate the capacity, the self-interest and the will to grow. The last parliament saw a number of measures implemented to stimulate Canadian ownership and control. A reduced corporation tax rate of 25 per cent on the first $50,000 of income is available only to Canadian-controlled corporations and must be repaid if the firm is transferred to non-Canadian control. The government has now proposed that this rate be reduced to 20 per cent.

When capital gains taxes similar to those in the U.S. were introduced a year ago, federal estate taxes were eliminated, thus reducing the pressure to sell controlling interest in private Canadian corporations which controlling interests would pass on death. The Canada Development Corporation was established to help provide, develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled businesses, and the benefits of this approach have already been manifested in the pharmaceutical area.

A number of other programs or measures do not discriminate, in intent or application, between Canadian-owned and controlled or foreign-controlled firms, but do in fact benefit mainly Canadian-controlled firms. These are, for example, the measures to keep savings in Canada; pension funds must retain 90 per cent of their assets in Canada to avoid paying a penalty special tax of 1 per cent per month on the proportion of their assets abroad in excess of that amount. On this point I think it is well worth noting that substantial Canadian ownership in a number of major firms has shifted back into Canadian hands over the last year and a half. In addition, the gross-up provision on Canadian dividends introduced in the last parliament has encouraged investment in Canadian equities.

An hon. Member: You have to be kidding.

Mr. Gillespie: I am not, Mr. Speaker, but hon. members may not know the facts.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

• (1440)

Mr. Gillespie: Canadian corporations are able now to deduct as expense the interest paid on funds borrowed to finance the purchase of shares of other corporations. This was introduced to offset similar United States measures which allegedly made it cheaper for a United States company to finance the takeover of a Canadian business.

There is another thing which I believe is worth mentioning; that is the area of government support and government departmental support. The Department of State for Science and Technology was formed in the last parliament. Its objectives include the promotion of an innovative Canadian economy. There are ongoing programs—I want to emphasize this—such as the general adjustment assistance program, the Industrial Development Bank, the program for advanced industrial technology and the IRDIA program all of which play an important role in promoting the vigour of Canadian-controlled enterprises.

In closing the catalogue, I should like to refer to new proposals which I am preparing in order to provide additional special assistance to small business. This is the sector which employs most of our work force. In my view it is the sector which generates most of our new products and services.

I have referred to the first pillar, the support of Canadian-owned, directed and controlled corporations. The second pillar is designed to protect the public interest by ensuring that foreign investment is of significant benefit to Canada. If one listened to the Tories, in the past at any rate, it would seem that we need not have concerned ourselves about questions other than the stimulation of business growth. If that is still their view I would like to pose two questions to them. Are takeovers not a potential threat? Were they concerned about Home Oil? Were they concerned about Dennison Mines? I am not sure, because the answer has not come through very clearly. The second question I would put to the Tories is this: is it of no importance to the Canadian public interest that the Canadian government have a say in the establishment of foreign-controlled business in Canada or the extension into unrelated fields of existing business.

An hon. Member: Who is going to argue against that?

Mr. Gillespie: Is that now your party's position? If it is, I welcome you to the fold. If it is, I hope it will be stated clearly. I hope they will come up with a commitment because we are looking for a commitment from them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Drummond.

[Translation]

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Drummond on a point of order.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, I have taught school for nine years and in several grades, and it was never as bad as here. Even if I do not agree with all the Minister's statements, I still would like everyone to listen to him with respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I agree with the hon. member. His point of order is quite proper.

[English]

I think the hon. member for Drummond has raised a very good point. Even the Chair has had difficulty in hearing what the minister was saying. I would ask for the co-operation of hon. members. I am sure the subject is very interesting and that we would find it worthwhile to hear what is being said.

Mr. Gillespie: The positive policies that I have discussed earlier all do their part in promoting Canadian ownership and control, but they do not meet the challenge of other far more powerful centres of economic activity abroad. They do not compensate for the attractiveness to foreign capital of our stable political and social environment, of our skilled labour force and substantial resource base, and, in the case of the United States, for our proximity and cultural similarity. They do not compensate for the dynamic power of the multinational corporation whose activities here may be rational from an over-all international perspective but which may impose avoidable costs on Canada.

Finally, our other policies do not compensate for the imperatives of some foreign governments which have intervened to distort market forces in their own national interest threatening to leave Canada holding the short end of the stick. For example, we have the Japanese policies on trade and investment, the new Australian policies and the Mexican policies on foreign investment which we heard so eloquently described in this chamber today by the President of Mexico, and the screening undertaken by the French and British. Even the United States has its DISC, municipal bonds, uranium embargo and countervailing powers requiring no proof of injury.

Canada, no more than others, can rely passively on the operation of market forces alone to protect our interests. For this reason, past Liberal governments have moved to protect the public interest in relationship to foreign investment. I have already referred to the key sectors established in banking, insurance, life insurance, trust and loan companies, broadcasting, newspapers and periodicals. These are still in effect. Other industries and other enterprises already have substantial government participation, for example, the Canadian Broadcasting Commission, Air Canada, Panarctic, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the CNR.

In other sectors where there is already substantial foreign ownership there is one form or another of public regulation, for example, energy development. The combination of provincial regulations and regulation by the National Energy Board tend to ensure Canadian control over the foreign-controlled firms in this sector and performance in accordance with national objectives.

This bill and the positive policies I have described form part of a coherent set of policies designed to foster the achievement of national goals in general and Canadian economic development in particular. They tie in with the proposed reduction in corporate income taxes, the re-examination of competition policy and our effort to promote further trade liberalization. It must not be forgotten that the benefits from investment—both foreign and domestic—are enhanced in a competitive and dynamic economy.

Liberal government policy has been an evolving process. Much has already been done. But we recognize that further steps are needed. We are, therefore, moving forward to the more comprehensive foreign investment policy represented by this bill.

This bill is a major step forward. I regard it as the most important part to date of Canada's developing foreign investment policy. The approach chosen is that of screening. We expect in this way to achieve a foreign investment policy which will give us the benefits of foreign investment and at the same time minimize the costs. This requires flexibility. Screening based on performance criteria gives flexibility. The arbitrary alternative approaches of a discriminatory tax system, or of mandatory Canadian ownership rules either across the board or in numerous key sectors could involve a trade-off of employment, investment and growth, which we want to avoid.

We do not want a foreign investment policy which is a luxury commodity for which other economic benefits are traded off. Our objective is to introduce a policy that will have no adverse impact on employment or investment. On the contrary, we see this policy as a necessity if we are to achieve our long term goals for Canada. We see this as a way of building and creating jobs for Canadians in the years to come.

The government will allow those proposed foreign investments likely to result in significant benefits to Canada. It will be able to negotiate with a foreign investor to up the ante and get a better deal for Canada. But takeovers or the establishment of new foreign-controlled businesses that would not bring significant benefits to Canada will be blocked. The bill will be administered by a separate foreign investment review agency reporting directly to the minister.

In considering whether the foreign investor's proposed investment in a Canadian business brings significant benefits to Canada, five factors will be taken into account. The first factor is the effect of the proposed investment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including employment. The second factor is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise and in any industry or industries in Canada of which it forms a part. The third factor is the effect of the proposed investment on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada. The fourth factor is the effect of the proposed investment on competition within any industry or industries in Canada. The fifth factor is the compatibility of the investment with national industrial and economic policies, including those enunciated by the provinces.

The factors are general. They cover all sectors of the economy, resources and services, as well as manufacturing. They are performance oriented and are designed to increase the efficiency and competitiveness of our economy, while recognizing that we live in a mutually interdependent world.

The government proposes that the review come into effect in two phases. First to be proclaimed will be the review of foreign takeovers of Canadian firms valued at more than $250,000 in terms of their gross assets or with revenues exceeding $3 million. This will be followed by the screening of the establishment of new businesses by foreigners not already doing business in Canada or the opening of a new business by an existing foreign controlled firm in an unrelated line of activity. Because of the possibility of major enterprises being phased into existence from small beginnings over an extended period of time, there would be no thresholds relating to the establishment of new businesses. Expansion of existing foreign-controlled firms through the creation of related businesses would not be screened. When the new business review is introduced, the thresholds applicable to takeovers will be removed except for the important case of an existing foreign-controlled business operating in Canada that proposes to acquire a related business. This step is required to avoid indirect circumvention through the takeover of an unrelated business below the threshold and subsequently expanding it.

The second phase of the bill is delayed to give the government an opportunity to gain some experience operating the review process with takeovers before this second feature comes into force. More important, it will not come into effect until the provinces have been consulted. This is a major feature of the policy. It is a national policy with provincial consultations as an important part. Even more provincial consultation is provided for in the operation of the bill because one of the criteria is a consideration of provincial industrial and economic policy objectives. Machinery will be needed to achieve this consultation.

In connection with the role of provincial priorities, I would like to assure the House that the bill will not have an adverse impact on regional development. Foreign investment needed for the growth and development of a province is likely to be of significant benefit and would be allowed. On the other hand, this bill is not an instrument of regional development policy. It does not contain the bias which is deliberately built into the policy of regional economic expansion. We will not be directing proposed investments from one part of Canada to another under this proposed act. But the economic realities of the region concerned will be emphasized in meeting national economic goals.

One of the criticisms of the bill with which I would like to deal is the fact that it does not cover the expansion of existing foreign-controlled firms unless, of course, they propose to establish unrelated new businesses. We have refrained from proposing this type of review for a number of reasons. Given the large number of firms that are already foreign controlled in Canada, a review of normal expansion would call for an enormous amount of intervention. I am not prepared to argue that the state should have such sweeping authority over normal private decision making. In addition I think there is a difference in kind between the normal growth which takes place as a business prospers and expands its activity on the one hand, and the opening of unrelated businesses on the other. It seems to me that there is almost an element of retroactivity in intervening in the process of normal growth.

We recognize that this bill will not directly roll back the present level of foreign control in Canadian industry, but as a long term policy objective it will help, along with the success of other policies designed to foster the development of strong Canadian controlled companies, to increase the proportion of Canadian industry controlled by Canadians.

The review process itself is not indifferent to Canadian ownership. The criterion of significant benefit indicates that this is an important concern. Canadian ownership and control is preferred unless the foreign investor is in a position to make a significant economic contribution which a Canadian cannot make. If we were indifferent, we would allow foreign investment as long as it did not involve any detriment to Canada. This is a very important distinction.

There is another point which underlies the importance we attach to Canadian ownership. In determining whether a proposed investment is of significant benefit to Canada, consideration will be given to the degree and significance of Canadian participation which includes the question of ownership. I do not think, on the ownership side, we can be more direct than that.

Mr. Speaker, let me summarize the main elements of the policy that underlie this bill. Canada continues to recognize that foreign investment has a role to play in Canadian development. Provided it contributes to the realization of Canadian objectives it is welcome. This bill asks parliament to give the government the means to achieve this purpose—to ensure that to the maximum possible extent foreign takeovers and the establishment of new foreign-controlled businesses are of significant benefit to Canada. If they are not, they are blocked.

The review process is a flexible instrument which recognizes that foreign direct investment is a complex of costs and benefits. The choice of this approach to foreign investment reflects the government's determination to avoid a trade-off between jobs, investment and growth on the one hand and greater ownership and control on the other. In recognizing the potential role of foreign investment in the Canadian economy, the government rejects isolationism and protectionism but it seeks a way to ensure that Canada achieves better balanced interdependence.

The foreign investment review bill will have four effects. First, it will provide one more public lever in promoting national economic development. Second, it will help us to obtain better performance from foreign investment in Canada on the basis of the criteria contained in the bill. Third, taken with the rest of the policies in this area, it will tend to arrest and reverse the unacceptable trend toward foreign control of enterprise in Canada. Finally, it will be seen as a useful step in supporting the development of a distinctive Canadian identity.

I mentioned during my remarks that Liberal governments have adopted a two pillar approach. While I have spent most of my time describing the policy which underlies the review process, this in no sense means that the government does not attach the highest importance to policies to develop Canadian entrepreneurship. That is the first pillar. Indeed, to the extent that Canadians—government, businessmen and labour—are able to develop the ingredients of industrial growth in Canada our need and dependence for foreign direct investment decreases. We shall, therefore, pursue with determination policies supporting the development of Canadian entrepreneurship and business efficiency.

Yet the level of foreign direct investment in Canada—the highest in any industrial country— is of concern to all Canadians. Hence our need for the second pillar to protect the public interest of contemporary Canadians and Canadians yet unborn. This bill contains a reasonable and realistic proposal to help us come to grips with this issue. I hope that members from all parties in this House will give this bill their support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Today is an historic occasion for Canada, Mr. Speaker. It is the first time, and perhaps the only time, in Canadian history when a debate on Canadian economic nationalism has been opened in the House of Commons by the President of Mexico. We appreciate him sharing with us the experience of the people of that great country.

Compared to the contribution made by the President of Mexico this morning, however, the minister's contribution this afternoon has been very disappointing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: It was a disappointing speech—it was almost depressing. The split in the Liberal party on this subject, Mr. Speaker, is obviously much deeper and more serious than was thought. The minister also made it obvious that he, like some other ministers of his government, has not yet read the new Income Tax Act or he would not have made some of the assertions he is making now.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I thought the number of questions the minister asked of the Progressive Conservative party this afternoon gave a clear indication that his pessimism is so deeply rooted that he is practising for his role on this side of the House. Bill C-132, "an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons", appears to represent the government's total response after five years to the growing problem of foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry and resource development. I wish I could say that the mouse had brought forth a mountain or at least an elephant, but after labouring five years all the mouse has managed to bring forth is another mouse. It is a pitifully inadequate response and demonstrates an abject failure in this regard.

The fact that the problem now exists is accepted by most thoughtful people in Canada. Not everyone agrees of course, and there are some strong regional differences of opinion. It is understandable if those areas of Canada where high chronic unemployment exists place a higher priority on the creation of new job opportunities than the nationality of the capital which makes them possible. Consequently, it is a matter of regret to the Conservative party that a bill of this importance to various regions of Canada should be introduced without prior consultation with the provinces. Certainly the provincial governments must now be consulted, and must have an input to the determination of guidelines by which significant benefit is determined. Nothing less will satisfy the diversity of approach which is endemic to Canada.

But on an over-all Canadian basis, some acceptable alternative to the present trend must be found. When we reach the point, as we did in 1968, where 46.9 per cent of our metal fabricating industry, 71.8 per cent of our machinery industry, 86.6 per cent of our transportation equipment industry, 81.5 per cent of our chemical and chemical products industry, and 99.5 per cent of our petroleum and coal products industries, as measured by assets, are owned outside Canada, we are in trouble. Since then the level of foreign ownership has continued to increase. Obviously, something must be done. This leads to agreement with the purpose of Bill C-132 as stated in Clause 2(1) which reads:

> This Act is enacted by the Parliament of Canada in recognition by Parliament that the extent to which control of Canadian industry, trade and commerce has become acquired by persons other than Canadians and the effect thereof on the ability of Canadians to maintain effective control over their economic environment is a matter of national concern,—

It is easier to agree with the purpose of the bill, as just stated, than it is on the efficacy of its provisions to meet the need. Basically, Bill C-132 is totally negative in its approach. The minister tried to persuade us this afternoon that the opposite is the case, but he was not convincing. It is another "thou shalt not" added to the tens of thousands which already exist. It states that takeovers will only be permitted and new investment allowed when it can be demonstrated that significant benefit will result. But the determination of significant benefit will be largely subjective. It will depend to a considerable extent on the attitude and approach of the commissioner, the minister and the governor in council. The latter will reflect the opinion of the key members of cabinet or "in group" in control at the time. The extent of the inevitable subjectivity concerns me. I know people who could, and probably would, find significant benefit in any proposal, while others of my acquaintance would find it difficult, if not impossible, to find significant benefit in any proposal from foreigners. Any law which is so dependent in its application on the personality and attitude of the people who administer it as Bill C-132 is almost certain to be bad law.

While Bill C-132, unlike its predecessor, extends the screening process to include new investment as well as takeovers, it pays no heed to the expansion of existing foreign-owned companies in Canada except in respect of entry into new and unrelated business. As the Gray report cited 1969 Statistics showing that of the three ways in which foreign ownership in Canada had increased the most imporant was the expansion of existing foreign-controlled enterprises, one must conclude that the intent of the bill is largely cosmetic. Nevertheless, we are prepared to refer it to the committee, where we think it should be subject to the most minute examination.

Why have we reached the stage where a bill such as this is considered expedient? It is the recognition that policies that have been pursued in the past, which may have been appropriate then, are no longer appropriate to Canadian needs, and that unless there is a massive change in policy soon Canada will recede into an industrial and technological backwater. A brief review brings us to the crossroad.

Dependence upon external sources of capital for financing in periods of heavy investment activity has been characteristic of Canadian development. During the exceptional growth that occurred before World War I, non-resident investment was very high and the main source of that investment was London. However, during the first part of the inter-war period, the United States became the principal source of external capital, and by 1926 the portion of Canada's international debt owned in that country exceeded that owned in Britain. With some interruption during the 1930's, United States investment in Canada continued to increase, particularly after 1947, when the period of intense activity in the petroleum industry got under way.

This transition from Britain to the United States as the major investing country also involved a shift in the major type of investment. Whereas British investment has been primarily portfolio investment in railway and utilities, American investment has been primarily direct investment in other Canadian industries. More than half of the United States investment in Canada at the end of 1967 was accumulated since 1957. At $28,030 million, United States investments in 1967 continued to represent more than three quarters of all non-resident investments in Canada. The main rise in that period occurred in direct investments in companies controlled in the United States, which almost doubled. In the same period, portfolio investments in Canada owned in the United States more than doubled, due mainly to large sales of new issues of securities in that country.

Since 1968, an increasing proportion of the capital requirements of United States affiliates in Canada is being raised on the domestic Canadian market rather than being drawn from the parent concern. This is partly due to the effect of the United States foreign direct investment program which was made mandatory in 1968. Even if this tendency for foreign-owned firms to raise money on the Canadian market rather than from the parent concern continues or even increases in the future, there will not necessarily be corresponding changes in the amount of total foreign investment, for the definition of foreign investment hinges on the nationality of the owner of the capital and not on the nationality of the capital itself.

Direct foreign investment can be fairly viewed as one of the most crucial and most dynamic elements in the post-war evolution of Canadian industry. Its effects have been greatest in the petroleum, natural gas and mining industries, which have absorbed over half the total. But very substantial amounts have gone into major branches of the manufacturing sector, such as pulp and paper, automobiles, chemicals and electrical apparatus. This large-scale financing, though highly significant, does not tell the whole story. There have been real benefits from the package of technological skills and markets that came with the investment.

While there has been an important positive aspect to direct foreign investment, there has been a negative side as well. Foreign controlled firms undertake little research and development in Canada. A 1970 Industry, Trade and Commerce report on the 1964-67 operations of 326 foreign controlled firms with assets exceeding $5 million each found that many were spending little or nothing on scientific research and development. Their sales had risen a healthy 35 per cent, from about $15.3 billion to $20.7 billion. But research spending rose from $88 million to only $106 million, an increase of just 18 per cent. In the last year of the survey, the average was $325,000 each, a trivial sum for firms of this size. The survey concluded that nowhere in today's industrial world, where science and technology have superseded financial resources as the principal source of corporate power, is the significance of foreign ownership more apparent than in Canada. The report said that the government faces formidable difficulties in devising a program to counteract the bad effects of foreign investment in Canada.

In addition to the sparse expenditures on research and development and the effect of this on career opportunities in Canada, there are other negative aspects of too much foreign control of Canadian industry. Several instances of refusal to sell to countries when sales to those countries would be contrary to U.S. foreign policy have been documented. I will not repeat them here. Far more serious, at this point in time when restrictions on sales to socialist countries are abating, is the tendency of parent organizations to restrict Canadian branch plants and affiliates from aggressively expanding their export sales. While this is not true in all cases, it applies all too frequently and entails a considerable and serious restriction of freedom in so far as Canadian manufacturing industry is concerned. The latest trade statistics released by Statistics Canada bear testimony to the problem.

If Canada had not reached the stage where we are capable of generating the savings necessary for capital expenditures, our options would be more limited. I think that is an essential difference from our position and that of Mexico, as outlined by the president this morning. Fortunately, we have progressed to the point where we can provide, in the aggregate, our own capital requirements. In their first of a series of studies for the Toronto Stock Exchange examining Canada's capital markets, Professors David Shaw and T. Ross Archibald provide statistical documentation of Canada's sources of capital funds since the end of the second world war.

In 1950, domestic savings accounted for 92 per cent of total capital expenditures while foreign sources financed only about 8 per cent. At that time gross domestic savings equalled 20 per cent of GNP. By 1960, domestic sources declined and provided only 83 per cent of capital formation. Similarly, the rate of domestic savings in 1960 had fallen to 16 per cent of GNP. By 1970, Canadian domestic savings amounted to 23 per cent of GNP and exceeded domestic capital formation so that Canada became a net exporter of $1.1 billion. Consequently, Shaw and Archibald were able to conclude, and I quote:

> Canada's historical international position as an importer of funds (had) changed and this country (could now) generate sufficient savings to finance the current level of capital expenditure.

While this is good news, it is necessary to add the caution that a significant proportion of these Canadian savings accrues to foreign controlled companies in Canada. Their retained earnings represent a substantial proportion of the net savings of the corporate sector. One must concur in the conclusion of the Gray report where it states:

> Canada's capacity to finance its own future growth does assume a large savings role by foreign controlled companies in Canada.

While it is encouraging to believe that Canada now has the potential to paddle its own canoe to a much greater extent, it is disappointing to conclude that Bill C-132 will not do the job. Greater economic independence is possible and the reasons for seeking it have never been stronger, but something more than Bill C-132 is required.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: While it may be necessary to provide breathing time, its very appearance before us is an indictment of the government's other policies. If the government had been vigorously pursuing positive policies to encourage Canadian entrepreneurship, to encourage Canadian savings, to encourage Canadians to innovate and invest in the development of Canadian industry and resources, this bill would have been redundant. For years the government has known that it is more advantageous for Americans to explore for oil in Canada than it is for Canadians, but it has not acted to achieve equality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The government is well aware that hundreds of family businesses have been sold because under Canadian law it is often impossible for the business to survive the death of a principal shareholder, yet fails to take action to offset the negative effects of its laws.

In his speech today, the minister stated that incentives to Canadian investors will not prevent a takeover. This just is not true. I can document cases where lack of incentive to Canadians and Canadian law have been the very reasons that Canadians did sell out to Americans against their will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The fateful tight money policy of 1969-70 put hundreds of small Canadian businesses into bankruptcy, unnecessarily. Hundreds more were sold to foreigners when they were unable to get the credit necessary for continuation and expansion. The new Income Tax Act provides less favourable treatment to shareholders of Canadian corporations in many cases. As a matter of fact, the government has done just about everything imaginable through high unemployment, high inflation, high taxes, excessive bureaucratic regulation, etc., to drive Canadian entrepreneurs and risk-takers from their own promised land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The last two Liberal governments have done more to sell Canada down the river than all previous Canadian governments combined. To right the situation will require a new government with a new and positive policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The core problem facing Canada's economy today is the serious lack of Canadian-owned companies. If Canada had its proper share of Canadian-owned companies, the foreign ownership problem would then be seen in its right perspective. Until Canada adopts an effective and creative industrial policy to encourage the establishment and growth of Canadian-owned companies, adoption of a foreign ownership policy will amount only to deluding the public into thinking that action has been taken. A sensible foreign ownership policy is completely impossible without an over all industrial policy to delineate the industrial goals to be achieved.

I should like, in the remaining time available, Mr. Speaker, to put forward a five point plan of positive Canadianism. It will propose to substitute action and innovation for rhetoric. It will be a plan designed to encourage Canadians to participate fully and creatively in the development of their own country and in the design and production of ideas and products useful to others as well.

The first essential point is the vigorous pursuit of a full employment policy for Canada. To accomplish this, it will be necessary to implement the approach of the Progressive Conservative party as outlined in the budget debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: A more expansionary budget, along with a temporary wage and price freeze of 60 to 90 days' duration followed, after discussion with the provinces, labour and industry, by guidelines designed to control inflation while permitting a rapid rate of expansion of the Canadian economy until it reaches its full potential is necessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The objective will be high productivity and maximum growth as long as it is necessary to produce the real wealth to solve our real problems.

As unemployment is reduced, output will rise. It has been estimated that the loss, in real terms, due to excessive unemployment is $5 billion a year. This extra increment of production, over and above what would otherwise be the case, can be used for the elimination of poverty, elimination of slums, the construction of urban transportation systems, the provision of adequate housing, the control of pollution and the development of Canadian industries and resources by Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Even $1 billion to $2 billion a year extra investment in industrial and resource development from this source would help immeasurably.

Step number two would be the introduction of tax and other laws designed to encourage Canadian savings and Canadian entrepreneurship. Imaginative proposals such as allowing individuals to deduct from taxable income investment in new Canadian equities up to a maximum of $1,000 each per year should be considered. Dividend tax credits comparable to those in the previous Income Tax Act might be restored. More important than the precise details is the determination to make it attractive and worthwhile for Canadians to invest in their own future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: The small business investment plan put forward by my leader during the election campaign should be vigorously pursued.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Capital gains tax should only be applied to real capital gains and the present confiscatory practice of taxing inflation should be abandoned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Family farms should be passed from one generation to the next, before the death of the farmer, without deeming the capital gain to be realized. Arrangements should be worked out with the provinces whereby other small and medium-size family businesses could be continued without the necessity of crisis liquidation for purposes of death duties in respect of the shares of a principal shareholder. Other changes in the tax laws would be effected to give Canadians an equal or better opportunity to participate.

• (1530)

Colleagues of mine who will be speaking later in the debate will give examples to demonstrate that in many cases there is not equal opportunity, and that in other cases Canadian businesses have been sold to foreigners as a direct result of the way in which Canadian tax laws apply. The objective of the changes in tax regulations and death duties would be to encourage savings, to encourage investment, to encourage risk-taking and to give Canadians a competitive equality, at least, in the development of their own industries and resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Step number three would be a gradual but massive increase in the extent of research and development undertaken in Canada. Canadians must come to realize that the development of modern technology requires massive public investment and cannot be left entirely to the vagaries of the marketplace. In 1967, only 18 per cent of research and development spending by Canadian firms was financed out of public funds; in the United States 53 per cent of research and development spending by private firms was government-financed, while comparable figures for the United Kingdom and France were 35 per cent and 42 per cent respectively.

The United States government financed the development of the first U.S. computer, the Univac model by Remington-Rand, as a naval fire-control device, and the first IBM models for the DEW line. The formation of International Computers Limited in the United Kingdom was backed by the U.K. government to the extent of an $8.4 million equity position and $32.3 million in research and development funds in 1968.

Canada lost out in this race even though we were at one time on the cutting edge of technology. In the 1950s and early 1960s, British-owned Ferranti-Packard Limited of Toronto developed a series of advanced computers beginning with the Datar, a naval operations control system, and climaxing in the FP 6000 which was a resounding technological and commercial success. But after making four of the units, Ferranti-Packard ran out of funds and, since British capital exports to dollar nations are subject to foreign exchange controls, was unable to draw more financing from the parent firm.

Consequently, the computer designs and technology were sold to another British firm which has since become International Computers Limited. The FP 6000 evolved into the ICL series, of which 1,500 had been sold by the beginning of 1970. With the Canadian development start, ICL gained 43 per cent of the British market for computers, compared to only 30 per cent for IBM, making Britain the only market in the west where IBM is not the major seller of computers. By 1970, ICL had sold 47 installations in the Soviet Union and other eastern bloc nations, for $35 million, making it the largest seller of computers to eastern Europe.

Professor Arthur Porter, head of the team which designed the Datar computer, told the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy:

> Canada made a tremendous breakthrough in information technology . . . I believe Canada was the first nation to set up three individual data-handling systems and to tie them together over radio links

He said Britain's ICL computer series could be said to have been "conceived and designed in Canada".

> We were ahead. We were not only ahead in interactive computer systems, but we were ahead in modular solid state computer technology, which is the basis of the modern computer.

Canada can compete in research and development, but must have the ownership, control and follow-through to capitalize on early advantages. In this, as in so many other cases, that important early lead was lost.

There are, fortunately, some happier examples. One is Northern Electric, a major Canadian producer of telephone equipment. This corporation provides us with an illustration of how a Canadian subsidiary can succeed after its ties with its U.S. parent have been severed. Ironically, the cutting of the umbilical cord was due to American rather than Canadian policy. The abandoned baby survived and thrived. From its inception, in 1895, to 1956 the corporation did very little of its own research and development. Instead, it manufactured products designed in the United States by its parent corporation, Western Electric. In 1956, however, U.S. anti-trust legislation forced the parent to divest itself of its control over the Canadian subsidiary.

Since that time, the Canadian corporation has transformed itself from an importer and purchaser of technology to a producer and exporter of technology. Recent statistics bear this out. In 1960, 90 per cent of its designs came from foreign sources, but by 1970 only 19 per cent of its designs came from foreign sources. In the same period, its own designs rose from 5 per cent to 80 per cent, with about 20 per cent being hybrids of domestic and foreign work. Professional staff rose from three in 1967 to 727 in 1969. Total R and D staff increased from 153 in 1960 to more than 2,000 in 1970. The research and development budget went from $2.6 million in 1960 to $37.7 million in 1970. This represented an increase in research and development, as a percentage of sales, from 1.5 per cent to 8.2 per cent.

Since its Canadianization, Northern Electric has also helped to strengthen Canada's balance of trade by expanding exports and displacing imports. Export sales rose from 2.5 per cent of its total sales in 1963 to 17.9 per cent in 1970. Between 1958 and 1968, the percentage of sophisticated components from Canadian sources rose from 62 per cent to 85 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: As another consequential benefit, it is to be noted that though Northern Electric accounts for only 13 per cent of the output of electrical machinery in Canada, it is responsible for almost 50 per cent of the annual research and development by that industry. The important lesson learned by Northern Electric has been that because of licensing fees for importing designs and the costs of staff to use these imported designs, it is just as expensive to import technology as it is to develop one's own.

A second success example is the Canadian-owned Electrohome Corporation of Kitchener, Ontario. This corporation has had an extensive research and development program since as long ago as 1965 when its research and development budget amounted to 3.3 per cent of its sales, or $940,000. As a result of this extensive program, sales rose from $35 million in 1968 to $69.7 million in 1971. Electrohome files more patents than any other Canadian firm, and exports 25 per cent of its production.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Surely, then, these two success examples of Canadian corporations demonstrate what a manufacturer can achieve through greater research and development and aggressive management and, conversely, what a manufacturer can lose through lack of its own research and development because of non-resident control.

Canadians can do it if given the chance. These two untypical examples should become the norm. Canadian-owned corporations should be given preference in research and development funds, but incentive should also be provided to foreign-owned corporations willing to expand their research and development facilities in Canada and to develop products for export markets. The aim of Canadian research and development policy should be the employment of Canadian scientists, engineers and product planners in the development of a capability which, proportionately to our resources, is second to none on earth.

Step number four is the development of more flexibility in our financial institutions in order to cope with our policy objectives. Although, as I indicated earlier, Canada has sufficient funds to finance current investment requirements, the allocative functions of Canadian capital markets leave much to be desired. This is true both nationally and regionally. We have not yet mastered the technique of matching the entrepreneur and the capital he requires at the proper time.

There is a desperate need in Canada for the creation of new institutions or the expansion of existing ones to supply more venture capital. We must expand, dramatically, our capability to assemble the financing and all the other elements required to establish a new domestic enterprise or to acquire control of an existing foreign-owned enterprise with substantial assets and activities in Canada.

Canadians often feel, with justification, that it is easier for a foreign-owned corporation to get a loan from a Canadian bank than for a Canadian entrepreneur.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Indeed, our banking system has performed a considerable disservice to Canada by financing the take-over of Canadian industries by foreigners. They must change their policies and make Canadian credit readily available to Canadians, even if that involves some small risk. The chartered banks, acting collectively, should be encouraged to form one or more subsidiaries specializing in merchant banking and venture capital. Insurance companies and pension funds should be encouraged to mobilize funds for similar purposes and to form syndicates to permit sufficient diversity to spread the risks associated with venture capital investment. The role of the Industrial Development Bank should also be expanded to increase substantially its capability and, hopefully, its daring. It could play a much more dynamic role, especially in the alleviation of regional disparity.

• (1540)

If anyone doubts the necessity for major change they need only look at the present situation. An oil refinery is to be built in Newfoundland. It will be equipped with British machinery, financed by British capital and, of course, owned in the United States. The Canadian government and Canadian institutions either could not or would not help. Canada can support development for the people of Tanzania, Algeria and Chile, but not for the people of Newfoundland. While the former may be desirable, surely we should also be able to support at the same time our own growth and development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: It is quite obvious that Canadian financial institutions, if the chartered banks are included, have the financial ability to mobilize the vast sums of venture capital required. A very significant reorganization will be required, however, together with a change in outlook in tune with the times and cognizant of Canada's real industrial needs. Canada desperately needs a renaissance of entrepreneurship in its business community. Without the vision and initiative that only gifted entrepreneurs can bring to a nation's economy, Canada will remain locked into the secondary roles offered by the head offices of large, multinational enterprises. However, if the nation's imagination responds to the entrepreneurial instinct latent in Canada, we could develop into an innovative country imbibed with a sense of initiative and achievement.

Step number five, Mr. Speaker, is to combine all of these ingredients into a massive effort to increase Canadian exports. We must remember that success goes to the commercially adept and not just to the technically brilliant. Our managerial skills must be put to work and developed. The objective would be not just a balance of transactions on current account but a substantial surplus. The surplus would not be allowed to accumulate, however, and add to our already swollen reserves of United States' dollars. An equivalent amount would be used to purchase equities and reduce our foreign indebtedness. In other words, we would acquire ownership and control of major companies with substantial assets and activities in Canada.

The objective of this strategy would be a gradual but significant shift in ownership. A 20 per cent reduction in foreign ownership in a ten-year period would not be an unrealistic goal. We would attempt, over a period of years, to achieve Canadian ownership and control of giant, multinational enterprises in such industries as electronics, rubber, chemicals, transport equipment, etc. The list would include each field of endeavour that is important to us and which offered a reward commensurate with the investment we would be required to make. The President of Mexico said this morning that the question is of decisive importance. The future of Canada's independence of action is at stake. These industries would not be government-owned; they would be Canadian-owned, with the widest possible equity participation both directly by individuals and through mutual and pension funds. Their acquisition and development would be a team effort by Canadian entrepreneurs and Canadian financial institutions with the encouragement and assistance of the government and the people of Canada.

This positive, Progressive Conservative strategy represents a positive approach to a serious problem. It recognizes that in a world of giants, the benefits of independence go only to those who are giants. That is not to say that small business will be less important. Quite the contrary; small business will benefit from the extra thrust and by the enlarged requirement for Canadian sourcing of sophisticated components and products of all kinds. The emphasis on giants is merely recognition that Canadians should not be limited to small business but should have access to the major league as well. Only a strong and mature economic and industrial base will give Canada the capacity to retain and expand its position in world markets. To achieve that level of economic competence, Canada must develop internally that pinnacle of technological expertise which is a prerequisite for an innovative and dynamic economic structure.

Can we do it? Of course we can. It is just the kind of challenge young Canadians want and need. In closing, I would like to borrow a phrase I believe to be appropriate: Make no small plans for they hold no fire to stir men's blood.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, my colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party throughout the country have for many years expressed concern about the extent of foreign ownership of the economy in Canada and about the trends that have continued throughout the years. I must begin this afternoon by saying to you, Mr. Speaker, that as I listened to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), and later to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), I continued to feel sad for my country as far as its economic independence is concerned.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

The minister, who really ought not to have done so, boasted about the steps that have been taken by Liberal governments. It is not until now that this government has come to realize that the question of Canadian economic independence is an important one, that Canadian economic independence is being demanded by ever-increasing numbers of Canadians. Only now has the government begun to realize that fact. While the minister boasted about the tiny, mincing steps that have been taken through the years, the situation is really rather shameful since they did not accomplish anything, and could not accomplish anything as far as the major problem of the control of Canada's economy is concerned. Nor should the minister have boasted about his bill, though I detected in his speech the realization that Bill C-132 was merely one step, and perhaps not a very large one, in the direction that he claims we want to go.

We then heard the hon. member for Trinity, who spoke vigorously and held out, he said, promises of a positive and dynamic policy. But analyse that policy, Mr. Speaker, and all it amounts to at every turn is further tax concessions to the corporations, additional tax concessions to the wealthy investors, more tax concessions to those who will build, he says, Canadian entrepreneurship—everything at the expense of the Canadian people. When the hon. member talked of further and massive progress in research and development in this country, what did he really say? He chided the Canadian government for the fact that only 18 per cent—I think that was the figure—of public money has gone into research and development in Canada, whereas 53 per cent has been spent in the United States.

What the hon. member is saying to this parliament and to the people of Canada is that most of the corporations of this country in these fields which are foreign owned should be given millions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money to carry on research and development in Canada. Those were his solution to the problems of Canadian economic independence. He suggested greater tax concessions for the wealthy, the rich and the powerful corporations.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member can say "nonsense" as long as he likes, but that is exactly what the hon. member for Trinity said. He criticized the small capital gains tax we have in this country and all the other little measures we have undertaken to close some of the loopholes. He wants more tax concessions for investors and more tax concessions for corporations. That is one way, he says, in which we are able to carry out research and development in this country. He says the federal treasury should not put in 18 per cent of what is now being spent on research and development, but 53 per cent. That is exactly what the Conservative party is proposing.

In that respect the Liberals and Conservatives are clearly one. The only way they can see of promoting the economy of Canada is to make the wealthy wealthier and the powerful more powerful, all at the expense of the ordinary Canadian worker and the small Canadian businessman. We reject that kind of approach to Canada's economy and Canadian economic independence.

The hon. member for Trinity said—and this is the kind of statement that is so often made by Tories, particularly in this parliament, which lowers my respect for them—that if you have a screening agency, the decisions will be subjective. I should like to know what, in heaven's name, he means. I should like to know what agency, what board, what minister or what other organization you may have for making decisions in other than a subjective way.

My criticism of the bill is very considerable. I will come to that in a moment. I want to add at this point that I reject the dogmatic position of the Conservative party as an alternative to the bill before us, because in my opinion it is not an alternative; it is merely a continuation of the policy which has been followed until now. The minister was right when he said that a successful, profitable Canadian company is obviously a very attractive firm for foreign takeover. That is what has happened in the past and that is what will happen in the future.

We consider the discussion on this bill as being of immense importance to this parliament and this country. I am grateful for the statement by the President of Mexico to the Parliament of Canada this day. As I listened to him, I was both grateful for his eloquence and appreciative of his statements, and at the same time ashamed for my country. Mexico is a country much weaker than Canada, with fewer resources, much more dependent upon the outside world, and with a history of violence. But Mexico has gained its independence. It is a country that had the courage to nationalize the oil industry, taking it out of the hands of foreign corporations and putting it into the hands of the people of Mexico.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It did so despite the history of relations with the United States, which might have involved a great deal of fear about the things that might happen. Mexico has had a history of relations with the United States which has not been as peaceful as ours since 1812. Their history being different. One might have expected the government and the people of Mexico, having had this experience of U.S. forceful intervention, to have hesitated in taking steps against the American-owned oil corporations in Mexico. But that country had the wisdom to recognize the importance of this industry to their economic independence, and the courage to act upon it. They did not stop there: they went on to further measures which have just been introduced and about which His Excellency spoke this morning.

The President of Mexico said last night, and this morning, that his government intends to adopt further measures to reduce holdings of foreign corporations in that country's economy. I said that as I listened to the President I was proud to be associated with him in this House, but at the same time I was ashamed at the timidity which Canada has shown throughout the years. I was ashamed by the fears which Liberals and Conservatives have shown, and particularly about the way Canadian business leaders have been prepared to sell off Canada's wealth to multinational corporations because they could make an easier and faster buck.

We are not concerned about Canadian economic independence on the basis of some arid or negative kind of nationalism. This is not because Canadian corporations are any more thoughtful of workers or consumers than foreign-owned corporations might be. The objectives of a corporation, whatever its ownership, are the same. The interest in profit and power is the same. The public interest takes second place whether the corporation is privately owned by Canadians, owned by Americans or owned by nationals of any other country.

Our concern is not in respect of this question concerning Canadian economic independence. Our concern is in respect of the question regarding the future of this country being decided by forces outside which we cannot even influence. Our concern is for the future of jobs for Canadian workers. We are concerned with the fact that these jobs are often is jeopardy as a result of a branch plant economy. We are concerned about a resource industry which yanks the wealth out of the ground and ships it away as quickly as possible, without taking the trouble to process, refine or develop it by employing Canadian workers in Canada. These are the things that worry us. Above all, we are concerned because history has taught us that a country which does not control its own economic destiny is unable to control its own political and social destiny.

If it is our intention to go on with private members' hour at four o'clock, as is usual on Friday, this might be a good point for me to finish my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY

SUGGESTED GUARANTEED INCOME PAYABLE TO MARRIED COUPLES WHEN EITHER SPOUSE REACHES AGE 65

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to the establishment of a program, in conjunction with the provinces, that would guarantee a basic income to a man and wife, upon one or the other attaining age 65, of not less than that amount they would qualify to receive under present federal legislation, were both to have attained age 65 on the date one or the other attained that age.

Old Age Security

He said: Mr. Speaker, I embark upon the debate of this private members' notice of motion with a degree of optimism that certainly did not exist prior to October 30, 1972. I do so for two reasons. First, there is no doubt that a government, whatever government it might be, which finds itself in a minority position in this chamber indicates a degree of sensitivity for the problems of people which does not exist when a government holds a majority position in the House.

• (1600)

Second, I take this approach because of the activities and the statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). He is new to this House but is not new to this government, bearing in mind that for a number of years he sat in the back room conceiving policy for the government. For a number of years he has made a contribution to one government after another, as a bureaucrat. I may say it has come as a pleasant surprise to me and, I am sure, to many Canadians, especially those who are affected by social justice legislation, that the new minister has grasped, in the way he has, the responsibility associated with his portfolio. My only concern is whether the minister can translate into action the words he has spoken about social justice.

I feel more confident about his ability to do so because he has been a bureaucrat for a very long time. If anyone should be able to cut the red tape associated with federal bureaucracy, it should be him. I say this because I have read very carefully the many statements the minister has made, and I agree with most of them.

There is an unbelievable morass associated with social justice which must be straightened out. I do not know whether the end result should be a guaranteed annual income or some other program that would eliminate the duplication and, I hope, much of the heavy burden of cost associated with many of the problems relating to the minister's department.

The legislation which has been introduced relating to social justice is important. At the same time, however, far too much money is being spent on administration. In too many instances, federally, provincially and municipally, the people affected by social justice programs and the problems associated with them are not receiving sufficient income to maintain themselves with dignity.

I was very pleased to read the minister's comments regarding the social assistance programs which exist in many of the provinces. I agree with him that too many people who must rely on assistance associated with the Canada Assistance Program are not receiving as much money as our old age pensioners. These people face a terrible burden, especially when the breadwinner is disabled and there is a family of anywhere up to ten persons dependent upon a cheque from the provincial government that does not provide them with sufficient income on which to exist. But that is the case. It is the case in the province of Nova Scotia where until recently, when amendments were proposed to the act, a disabled person, his wife and family had to exist on $200 a month. That was a scandalous situation.

My motion relates to another unfortunate situation affecting a great many older Canadians. I refer to a situation in which a man and his wife, or a wife and her husband, endeavour to maintain themselves on what is available to them through one cheque for old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement. I wish to place on record a few of the letters I have received from constituents. These letters bring the point very much to mind. They are all of recent date and come from various areas of my constituency. I am sure this indicates that if people were writing me from all across Canada, the letters would contain the same type of wording. This situation exists wherever there are older people and it is a situation we must eliminate. This letter comes from Oxford, in my constituency, and is from a lady who writes:

> I am writing to state I think the old age pension should be dropped to age 60 years. For instance, my husband gets the old age security pension, and I am not old enough for this by several years. And by the time we pay electricity, fuel, groceries and medicine there just isn't enough to go around. I am also diabetic and should be buying special foods without sugar, etc.
> I wonder if the government thinks that I should starve or do without the necessities of life.

That letter is dated January 25, 1973. The next letter is from Parrsboro, which is quite a distance from Oxford, and is dated January 25, 1973. It reads:

> I am writing to ask if there is anything that can be done to help us. My husband is an old age pensioner, but I am not old enough to get the pension and I am unable to go out to work. What with the cost of living going up, so also the cost of medicines, we just can't have the things which we need. We both have to take some medicine, not as much as some people, thank goodness for that, but even so we can't always get the medicine we need.
> My husband gets a small Canada pension each month, which gives him a total of $174.28 a month, which doesn't go very far with the cost of living so high.

Here we have two people who are trying to live on $174 a month. The position in which these people find themselves is scandalous. It is caused by the situation which exists at the present time. Here is another letter from Springhill:

> If I may take a few minutes of your valuable time and express my views regarding old age pensions and unemployment insurance; in regards to pensions, in the majority of cases the wife is five to ten years younger than her husband, which means he cannot afford to retire at age 65 on one pension due to cost of living, taxes, etc., and due to the fact that older people seem to require more drugs and medicines.
> I will be 67 next birthday and can see no way that I can retire before reaching 69 or 70, due to the fact that my wife is six years younger than me and does require continual medical care. So I think that the wives of older husbands should be given the pension when their husbands reach age 65, instead of putting millions of dollars into unemployment insurance. Let the younger men go to work. Instead, we are building a country of soft young men.

The next letter I wish to quote is from Amherst and reads:

> My family and I have given you support before in elections and will again if you can possibly help me any in receiving a pension. I was 60 years of age on September 13, 1972. My husband receives the 65-year old pension and it is not enough for both of us. He only receives $84 a month and it don't even commence to pay the bills; there is nothing for medicines and clothes.

• (1610)

Here is another letter, from Joggins. It reads:

> I am writing this letter to see if you can help us.

Mr. Brown is 71 years old and I am 64 years old. Mr. Brown is getting the old age pension, $150, and I get a small $46 cheque from the welfare. We have rent to pay, electric bills, coal bills, groceries bills and doctor's bills and medication bills, and have to hire someone to do the housework. At times Mr. Brown has amnesia and I have heart trouble and arthritis.

This is the sad situation in which a great many people of this country find themselves: one of the two spouses qualifies for old age security, and the two of them try to survive together until the other one qualifies for old age security. There is no reason why we cannot work out a scheme whereby when the breadwinner reaches the qualifying age for old age security, the other spouse will qualify for an equivalent amount, so that at least the two people can have a decent amount of money available to them.

A great many of these cases would be eliminated if we were to drop the age of eligibility for old age security benefits from 65 to 60 years of age. I realize the cost would be great. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said it would cost $1.1 billion. First of all, I do not think that that is too high a price to pay to ensure that our elderly people receive a decent amount of money, in a nation as affluent as ours. Second, I think there are systems which would allow us to do it gradually, in the same way as when we reduced the age of eligibility for old age security from 70 to 65.

I am informed that the total number of males in Canada between the age of 60 and 64 is 381,690, and the total number of females in the same age bracket is 395,320. This gives a total of 777,010. I feel that over a five-year period, a program could be implemented that would eliminate the problem that I am bringing to the attention of the House and also reduce the age requirement for old age security. This would do two things: first, it would eliminate this problem, which is a very real and severe one, faced by many Canadians; second, it would allow a great many people to remove themselves from the labour force at a time when we have high unemployment and it would allow younger people to move into the labour force.

This would accomplish two things: it would ensure that people could retire when they desired to do so; and, second, it would provide an income for people which would at least provide them with the necessities of life, which a great many of them do not receive at present under this system. It would also eliminate some of the older people from the labour force by allowing them to retire when they desire to do so, and provide opportunities for younger people to move in and take their place.

In this way the government would achieve two things: first, it would ensure that older citizens who have contributed so much to the building of this nation would receive a decent income on retirement; and, second, it would provide further opportunities for younger people who desire jobs but cannot find them now.

Mr. Francis Fox (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I have read with great interest the motion before the house. The hon. member proposes:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to the establishment of a programme, in conjunction with the provinces, that would guarantee a basic income to a man and wife, upon one or the other attaining age sixty-five, of not less than that amount they would qualify to receive under present federal legislation, were both to have attained age sixty-five on the date one or the other attained that age.

Mr. Speaker, the welfare of our fellow citizens who have reached the golden age is a subject close to my heart. I was reading recently in a Statistics Canada publication that we are happy to number among the people of Canada more than 1,744,000 Canadians aged 65 or over. Among these are men and women who did their share to build this Canada we are proud of, men and women who still contribute to the welfare of the society they live in men and women who face their golden days with confidence, with serenity.

Mr. Speaker, it is undeniable that the recent changes to the Old Age Security Act proposed in the House by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) are a source of great progress, a progress which will allow a greater number of our fellow citizens aged 65 or over to face the future with confidence and serenity.

When we look at the history of this programme, since its implementation, we can notice this progress.

[English]

Twenty-five years ago, the only payment available for senior citizens was the universal old age security benefit, which amounted at that time to $40 a month. In 1957, that payment amounted to $46 a month starting at the age of 70. Between 1957 and 1962, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister of this country, the benefit was increased by $9 during the first part of the Conservative administration and by $10 toward the end of their administration.

Successive Liberal governments have raised the benefits available to pensioners on eight occasions since that time. In 1963, during the stewardship of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, the old age pension was raised to $75 a month. A 2 per cent escalation clause to offset the cost of living was introduced in 1966. In 1970, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the pension was set at $80 a month and became payable to persons aged 65 and over as a result of action taken in 1966. In 1972, the Liberal government introduced an escalation clause to fully adjust the old age pension to increases in the cost of living, and during the budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) announced that as of April 1, 1973, the basic old age pension would be increased to $100 a month.

Ten years ago there was no income supplement for senior citizens who had no other source of revenue aside from the old age pension. The guaranteed income supplement was introduced in 1966 and provided a maximum payment of $30 a month above the old age pension to pensioners with no other income. In 1970, the maximum supplement was increased to $55. In 1972, the government under the present Prime Minister increased the maximum to $67.12 per month and indexed the guaranteed income supplement to fully reflect increased in the cost of living. Canadians over 65 years of age were eligible, before the recent amendments to the Old Age Security Act were introduced, to receive a basic old age pension of $82.88 a month and a maximum supplement of $67.12, depending on the level of their income.

As of April 1, 1973, taking into account the measures enacted under the Old Age Security Act, the basic pension of $100 a month, added to the newly-indexed supplement of $70.14, will mean an income of $170 a month for a single Canadian over 65 who has no other income. In the case of a married couple both of whom are over 65, the maximum benefit payable will be $325.

Mr. Speaker, it is to the credit of the Canadian parliament that it has always taken a keen interest in the problems of those of our citizens who have reached the normal retiring age of 65. I therefore consider that the matter before us today deserves our thorough attention.

Mr. Speaker, I have never been one to oppose reform or progress simply because it is piecemeal rather than universal. There is no shortage of excuses for stagnation. In my opinion, it is better to improve the financial condition of certain groups, when we can afford to, than to do nothing. Nevertheless, we must be aware of what we are doing, and make sure that public funds will be spent in the best way possible. This is an area in which the federal and provincial governments have responsibilities in common, and must act together as far as they can.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial governments have a very special responsibility to those under 65, by virtue of their various social welfare programs. The federal government contributes enormously to the social welfare programs that the provinces devise and administer. Under the Canada Assistance Plan adopted by the federal government, 50 per cent of payments made by provincial governments to people in need are taken from funds voted by parliament.

Some will say—and often rightly—that a couple in which one of the partners reaches 65 may need special assistance. We must not, however, forget that people under 65, whether single or married, may also be in need. The answer of course is not easy. It is true that those people under 65 come under provincial social assistance programs. For those people, particularly those who are incapable of working, there is sometimes a considerable gap between what they can get under the provincial plans and what they could get under the federal old age security plan.

I fully agree, Mr. Speaker, that we must give additional help to those people but I think that the solution to this problem lies in the guidelines contained in the Speech from the Throne and the authoritative speeches made in this House on January 11 and March 1st by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). Those problems can only be resolved through close co-operation with the provinces and the integration of security plans but I think, Mr. Speaker, that a couple where one of the spouses, particularly the spouse who is the breadwinner of the family and who reaches the age of 65, generally faces the same problem as the family where both spouses have reached the age of 65. Nevertheless they come under different plans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the government should look further into that in co-operation with the provinces so that we, as parliamentarians, can know clearly and exactly what is the plight of those families and act with full knowledge of the facts.

The blue book introduced in 1970 by the predecessor of the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, and I quote:

> More than 800,000 aged persons over 65 have such low incomes that they qualify for the income supplement.

Among those, Mr. Speaker, we find of course married people where one of the spouses is under 65. If it is true that the eradication of poverty depends basically on the strength of the private sector of the economy as well as on the efficiency of government measures for growth and stability, nevertheless the fact remains that our fellow citizens aged over 65 can benefit from them only through an act of parliament.

The case of the family whose main provider has reached the age of 65 ought to concern us just as much as that of the family where both spouses have reached that age. The problems are the same and perhaps the solutions should also be the same.

Mr. Speaker, it is too easy to succumb to the temptation of playing politics in that field. Why not bid higher than the other guy? Why not gain temporary popularity by promising favours to certain categories of people? But a government, a parliament that is aware of its responsibilities must study the possibilities of extending them to the other categories as well if it wants to reach enlightened conclusions. To set new priorities without first clearly identifying them with the provincial authorities would not serve the true interests of the Canadian people.

[English]

Speaking in the debate on the throne speech on January 11, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) said there ought to be a review also of the whole of Canada's social security system. The minister also proposed a framework within which this review could be carried out. The five-point framework is built around the following principles. First, the social security plan shall ensure to persons unable to work, the elderly, the blind and the disabled, an annual guaranteed income that is fair and compassionate; second, the social security system applicable to persons able to work shall include incentives and emphasize the need for reinstatement of social welfare recipients into the labour force; third, a just ratio must be maintained between the income of workers who earn only the minimum wage or not much more, the guaranteed income of those unfit to work and the allowances paid to persons able to work but temporarily unemployed; fourth, the provinces may wish to have a social security system modified in accordance with the social needs, the income level and the cost of living within their jurisdiction; fifth, the reappraisal of Canada's social security system must be conducted jointly by the federal government and the provinces.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the best method of fighting poverty in this country is through the creation of meaningful jobs which take people off the welfare rolls. There will always be citizens, however, who for one reason or another, in temporary or special circumstances, are unable to work. To give a few examples, there are in this country 150,000 abandoned mothers who must take care of 350,000 children; 200,000 disabled people between the ages of 18 and 65. Furthermore, some families would certainly welcome increases in the family allowance.

There are some of the reasons why I believe we must undertake a complete review of present social security legislation. Our reserves are not unlimited; therefore, our priorities must be clearly set out. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people and this parliament will follow very closely the discussions between the federal minister and the provincial ministers of health and welfare. Hopefully, a new format will evolve from these meetings which will meet the five-point framework I have outlined which has gained, and is continuing to gain, widespread acceptance.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), as I would commend any member of any party of this House, on raising the question of lowering the pensionable age. The hon. member who has proposed this motion has suggested in it just one means of achieving that object, namely, lowering the pensionable age, and that is by providing the pension to the spouse of a pensioner where that spouse has not yet reached the age of 65. I believe he will agree that this is a step in the direction of what he really wants to achieve, and not only am I completely with him in what he wants to achieve, but I have the same notice of motion on the order paper and I think I have had something to say about it on a number of occasions.

I say to the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) that this is not exactly a time for boasting over what his party has done over the years, all of which has been provided. Some of us could recount the story in our sleep, having heard it so often. Indeed, I have lived through all of it. Nor is it a time to push off the issue by saying it has to be studied in depth in the context of the whole of our social security problem. I do not think there is any question but if that mythical thing, a free vote, could take place in this House so that members could express the views that are being expressed to them by their constituents, there would be wide support in all parts of the House for immediate action to lower the eligible age.

One of the reasons I am glad the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North was in a position to proceed with this motion this afternoon is that this is the very week in which we have given third and final reading to one bill respecting the Old Age Security Act—we passed it a couple of days ago—providing for an increase in the basic amount of the pension to $100 a month. I was disappointed, when that bill was brought in, that it did not do something about lowering the eligible age as well.

I remind hon. members that the general practice around here is to be satisfied if an act is amended once a session, but I hope this House does not feel that way about the Old Age Security Act. It will not be enough just to coast along on the knowledge that the pension was raised in the present session to $100 a month. The issue of people under 65 particularly those who have been referred to this afternoon, namely, spouses of pensioners on a pension—the result being that two people are having to live on a pension for one—is one that must be resolved.

I say to my hon. friend who has sponsored this motion that although I support him in this as an initial step, I am sure he will agree with me that if we provided pensions for younger spouses, we would immediately be faced with the problems of widows below the age of 65 and of spinsters below that age who would say that if certain people are getting the pension, why should they not get it? The real answer to this problem—and I give the hon. member full marks for referring to it in his speech today—is to lower the pensionable age to 60. I urge that this be done, not only with respect to the Old Age Security Act but also with respect to the Canada Pension Plan.

I support those who contend that we would make a significant contribution to our unemployment problem if we could make it possible for people over 60 to retire, because then there would be more jobs for younger people. But there will not be sufficient inducement for people to retire at age 60 if all they will then get is the old age security pension. In addition to the old age security pension, they must also be given the Canada Pension Plan benefit. We must also develop a climate in which industrial pensions are made available at age 60.

I believe that is one of the next important reforms that we must now make in old age security. We have made many reforms over the years, as hon. members know. My connection with old age pensions began in the days when it was $20 a month at age 70, with a means test. Now the age has been reduced to 65, and for the larger part of the pension we have got rid of the means test. We also have an escalation clause in our pension legislation. I think we must improve that escalation clause and provide for an escalation not just equal to the rise in the cost of living, but for one equal to the rise in the standard of living.

The other point that is before us this afternoon, in my view, is an extremely important one and I want to see it resolved in the present session. I want to see a break in the age 65 floor. I know that this view is not held just by members of my party; it is held by members of the Conservative party, and my friends across the way in the Social Credit party also hold this view strongly. To my knowledge, there are scads of members in the Liberal party who feel the same way.

So I hope we will not just have discussions like the one we are having today; that we will not just have a valuable discussion in the Standing Committee on Health, Wealth and Social Affairs and a discussion with the provinces: I hope the government realizes that it will be bombarded with demands on this issue throughout the session and that what we really want is another bill amending the Old Age Security Act in the present session of parliament. That bill must provide for pensions to be made payable to spouses who are below 65 when the breadwinner is a pensioner. Preferably, pensions should be made payable across the board, right now, at age 60.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to congratulate the hon. member for Cumberland-

Colchester North (Mr. Coates) for having introduced a motion which reads in part as follows:

The government should give immediate consideration to the establishment of a program, in conjunction with the provinces, that would guarantee a basic income to a man and wife, upon one or the other attaining age sixty-five—

One could say in the future, I hope, "the pensionable age". I am sorry that this private members' hour does not allow us to achieve positive actions and I have always hated that period which means nothing. We talk during one hour, everybody expresses good wishes, but by the end, the bill is talked out and its study is put off until the twelfth of never. Tonight, I hope we end our remarks before five o'clock in order, at least, to have the motion voted on. However, I am afraid that, as usual, the question will fizzle out.

For years, we have been asking for an equal pension for the spouse having not yet reached the pensionable age when the husband has become eligible.

In fact, in 1966, my colleague from Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) introduced a similar motion; as can be seen, the question is not new but it still took us six years to convince the members of the Conservative party, and we still hope that the Liberals also will finally give their agreement.

Six years is a long period for the older people—and perhaps are they to wait another six months or another year—to get at last a favourable reply to a request that the whole population has put before the governments in all provinces.

What is new today is the progress the idea has made, although a difficult one, but we have scored marks.

In the fight we put up on March 27 and 28, we obtained the support of the New Democratic Party. I have just heard the speech of that party's spokesman and I was happy to note that the New Democratic Party is unanimous on this matter, as could be expected from their statement, as today I feel one cannot rely on the statement of one individual but must know the opinion of each and every one. At any rate, they even congratulated us on putting up this fight, which opened the eyes of many hon. members.

It would now appear that Progressive Conservatives are following suit—oh, with great caution—but let us hope they will have the courage to support us in our efforts to bring the age of eligibility for the old age security pension down to 60.

I am raising this point because I was appalled to note, on March 28 last, barely two days ago, that all Progressive Conservatives voted with the Liberals against an amendment to bring the age of eligibility for the old age pension down to 60 while granting the same pension to the other spouse, of whatever age. The reason why we hoped for Progressive Conservative support on the occasion of the vote on March 28 is that the motion before us today has been on the order paper of the House for several weeks, but some political reversals have no other explanation than opportunism.

I recall that, on the occasion of that vote of March 28, Social Credit members were termed demagogues by the new Minister of National Health and Social Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and also by the spokesman for the official opposition. In fact, we worked to make the government bring forward a bill similar to the motion under study. I have always noticed that such words as "demagogues" and others like it are always the last arguments of a defenceless government.

Being more logical than two old parties and, consequently, not at all demagogues, we heartily congratulate the progressive conservative member and we urge him to be firm in order to convince once and for all his hon. colleagues of the merit of his motion and of our determination to fight to obtain the reform of the old age security plan.

The problem of the wife who is younger than her husband who has reached pensionable age is much more dramatic than some members suspect, particularly in Quebec. If this were an ordinary debate, I would have made a point of bringing letters I have received from my riding. I have hundreds of letters asking for the granting of a pension for a wife who is younger than her husband, because the Quebec Welfare Services are experiencing serious difficulties.

The situation may be better in other provinces. But, as I come from the province of Quebec and know what is happening there, I am specifically speaking about my province. In fact, the Quebec minister, Claude Castonguay, is still convinced that a couple can live on $150 a month.

This is the reason why, when the federal government pays $150 or $156 a month, the wife who is younger cannot get anything from Quebec. The standard amount is a $150 a month. They are being told: whether you die or not, a payment of $150 is enough, so be comforted. Such is the democratic regime in Quebec, which is headed by former technocrats. We are all the more justified in protesting now that the pension has been increased to $170 a month, Mr. Speaker. If the wife is only 55, this means that the couple will have to live for five years on $170 a month. This couple will be lucky if it does not have to pay a special tax on the $20 increase.

I have already exposed in this House all the anti-social measures that the government takes pleasure in bringing before Parliament. The legislation on old age security pensions is a striking example.

When they do introduce a social reform, it is always in driblets, because all those measures are devised, worked out and prepared by technocrats who never came down among the people to learn its needs and because the government never listened closely to the expectations of the people, or if it did, it pretended not to hear anything.

In my opinion, both members of the government and the opposition hear from their constituencies. Surely, they must receive letters asking them for a reform. We can wait six years for a small reform. We have been yelling, asking, begging for six years, by proposing motions and amendments, and always we have been answered by fine words and nothing else. And the wives who are not yet 65 are still waiting for our social reforms, Mr. Speaker.

I said a while ago that all this was caused by a group of technocrats who don't really know the needs of the population, while here they are all-powerful. If all our social reforms originated among the population, one can be sure that we could at last lay the foundations for a true social reform.

As long as the population will be governed by Ottawa mandarins who are very well paid all their life and unafraid of being attacked by the people, it will be impossible to pass the legislation which the population so badly needs.

The only solution is to give back to the member of Parliament full freedom of action and his responsibilities in his riding, that he might truly reflect the opinions and the will of his electors.

The ministers should remain strictly the servants of Parliament, instead of acting as screens, not to say flunkeys, of big financial interests.

Only on that condition will we pass in this House measures as humane as the one before us today.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I will speak only briefly in this debate because it is obvious that all hon. members now in the House strongly support the intent of the motion. With such unanimity, I am sure we all want to see its formal acceptance as one of the serious areas of neglect in our welfare program as it applies to the senior citizens of Canada. In his presentation the hon. member, as others have done, referred to letters he has received from constituents. I am sure all of us in this House could quote innumerable letters of the same kind.

The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Fox) referred to the recent statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in which he outlined the priorities of social welfare legislation. The first priority is to deal adequately and comprehensively with the special needs of the elderly, the physically handicapped and the blind who obviously are not in a position to take care of their own economic and financial needs. I couple this plea, Mr. Speaker, with the suggestion which has been made with respect to senior citizen, married couples. I trust the government will exercise the authority it possesses to bring before the House an adequate legislative program which will implement the criteria which the minister himself has described as of first importance, namely, legislation which will look after the needs of the elderly and the physically handicapped in a satisfactory way.

This is an area in which there need be no hesitancy on the part of the federal government. There is no jurisdictional dispute involved: it is exclusively the territory of the federal government. I trust that before this hour closes we shall have given unanimous consent to the resolution, thereby empowering the government to take necessary action.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult to oppose the spirit of the motion before us, because it recognizes a very real problem in our society. There are cases where a person of pensionable age has a spouse who is slightly below that age. Consequently, they have to live on one person's pension. This is a difficulty which has been considered by the government and is still under active consideration.

The motion before us goes beyond this point, however. It talks about a spouse married to someone of pensionable age being eligible to draw a pension regardless of his or her age. There may be situations in which the person of pensionable age is married to a spouse who is 20 years younger, to someone still a member of the work force. It seems to me that it would be more reasonable to suggest, for example, that spouses between 60 and 65 who are married to someone of pensionable age should be eligible for pension as though they were of pensionable age. It seems to me this would be more acceptable than taking a broad approach and saying that anyone in that category, regardless of age, should be entitled to a pension.

My feeling is that implementing such a program might easily give rise to difficulty and, perhaps, to some abuses. A spouse who received such a pension when she was young might, after the death of his or her partner, continue to be eligible for pension for a very long time. The department has given a good deal of thought to this matter, particularly in light of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference on social security at which it is intended to review the social security system in Canada.

When the original federal-provincial conference on this subject was held a month or so ago, the provinces asked the federal government not to make adjustments to the old age security and related programs by altering the age qualifications and making other adjustments. They felt there were other priorities which should be taken into account in ensuring that justice was done all the way around. They were afraid that if steps were taken of the kind suggested in the motion before us in the absence of consultation with the provinces, there might be no money available to meet other requirements and priorities which might be put forward.

As members know, there are other areas which must be considered in terms of priority; for instance, the family allowances scheme, the situation of the working poor, the needs of the handicapped, touched upon by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), to mention only three. All these needs must be considered in relationship to each other, and it seems to me it would be improper at this time for the government to take a position with respect to one problem, even though it is an important human problem, and say it proposes to deal with it in a particular way, before the provinces have had an opportunity to review the whole question with us and reach a common decision which will take all priorities into consideration. It seems to me that in terms of national unity alone, the federal government ought to give consideration to the views of the provinces when fixing priorities.

As I say, the government is concerned about this problem and is giving it immediate consideration. We shall be attending the conference to be held during Easter week, which is not far away, when all these matters will be brought forward, and we shall be proposing an over-all approach to social security which, hopefully, will establish the right kind of priorities so that not only senior citizens but the working poor and those who are unable to work at all, such as the handicapped, are dealt with fairly. We would then be able to proceed with a plan which would recognize the passage in the Speech from the Throne which spoke about a guaranteed annual income for those who are unable to work, and total reform of social security policies affecting everyone in Canada.

Mr. Coates: Would the hon. member reply to a question?

Mr. Cafik: When I have completed my remarks I will be delighted to entertain a question.

Mr. Coates: If the hon. member does not allow me to ask a question now, he will have talked out the resolution.

Mr. Cafik: As a matter of fact, I have already indicated that in my view this subject is being given adequate, immediate consideration. So in my view it is redundant to pass the resolution before us today. It is after the fact. The government has already stated its position and the importance it attaches to the social problems of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Coates: It is not five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps you will put the question.

Mr. Cafik: Look at the clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. President, Mrs. Echeverria, Madam Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Ladies and Gentlemen Senators and Members of Parliament.

On behalf of the Canadian people and their parliamentary representatives, I have the honour of extending to you, Mr. President, to Mrs. Echeverria and to all the members of your entourage, the most cordial welcome to this joint sitting of both Houses of the Canadian Parliament.

Although we could point to obvious differences between Mexico and Canada, we would like to think of ourselves as similar in many ways. Among the most important similarities for our present and future relations is our common status as intermediate powers on the world scale. Constituye para nosotros un gran honor que Su Excelencia, el Presidente de México, haya aceptado nuestra invitación a dirigir la palabra a esta reunión conjunta del Senado y de la Cámara de los Comunes de Canadá. En nombre de mis colegas de la Cámara de los Comunes y del Senado, quiero invitar al Excmo. Sr. Primer Ministro para que dé la bienvenida y haga la presentación de nuestro distinguido huésped.

El Excmo. Sr. Dn. P. E. Trudeau (Primer Ministro): Señor Presidente, Señora de Echeverría, Señora Presidente del Senado, Sr. Presidente de la Cámara de los Comunes, señoras y señores Senadores y Diputados.

En el nombre del pueblo canadiense y de sus representantes parlamentarios, tengo el honor de desearle a Ud., Señor Presidente, a la Sra. de Echeverría y a todos los miembros de su cortejo, la bienvenida más cordial a esta sesión de las Cámaras reunidas del Parlamento de Canadá.

Aun cuando podríamos señalar las diferencias existentes entre México y Canadá, quiero ahora pensar más bien en lo que nuestros países tienen de semejante. Una de las semejanzas más notables que aceptan nuestras relaciones presentes y futuras es nuestra calidad de potencias intermedias en el mundo. No pretendemos estar a nivel de las super potencias, con poblaciones de varios cientos de millones, mercados domésticos auto-suficientes huge arsenal of military force. But as countries with over one hundred years of political independence, with considerable human and natural resources, and with a strong desire to govern our own destinies and to make our own contribution to world affairs, we can and we do fulfil a useful and constructive role.

I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that this role is likely to grow in importance. Since World War II, Canada has focused considerable attention on its participation in the United Nations and in multinational organizations such as the Commonwealth and La Francophonie. We will continue to do so, but in today's world we must also place renewed emphasis on direct relations between a network of well placed intermediate powers. Among these, for many reasons, Mexico is foremost in our thoughts.

There is the compelling argument of geography. It is the declared policy of our government to draw closer to our friends and partners in the western hemisphere. Over the past year or two we have given evidence of this desire by cementing our links with the institutions of the inter-American system. In particular, we have sought to identify ourselves more closely with the progress of Latin America in the achievement of social and economic goals. In these activities we consider Mexico to play a very useful part. It is special not only because of the important part you play in the deliberations of the hemisphere but also because our understanding of Latin America is necessarily enriched by a close and mutually beneficial relation with Mexico, a country with which we share so many common perceptions and interests.

In our meeting this morning, we and our ministers made much progress, Mr. President. We talked in the very candid and practical way that is characteristic of two North American partners and neighbours. Our discussions have confirmed our common conviction that there is much that our two countries can do together, and now is the time to broaden and strengthen our existing relationship and to add new dimensions to it.

The distance between our countries has long since ceased to be an obstacle. There are many commercial, technical and human links between us that have contributed to the growth of our economies and the fulfilment of our peoples. More than 100,000 Canadians go to Mexico every year, for reasons of leisure, of course, but also to steep themselves in your extraordinary human heritage from advanced civilizations from the Mayas onwards. Places such as Acapulco and Cozumel, Chichén Itzá and Uxmal, artists and musicians such as Rivera, Orozco and Chávez, have become familiar figures, even close companions for us.

Mr. President, since your inauguration in 1970, you have constantly seen to the welfare of your fellow citizens, you have sought to encourage greater participation in the process of government, and you have attempted to keep economic progress inseparable from social justice. You have also tried to obtain world-wide recognition of these principles, these ideals, so that all nations, whatever their power, may have a share in decisions that concern y con un enorme arsenal de fuerza militar. No obstante, como países con más de 100 años de independencia política, recursos naturales y humanos considerables y con un marcado deseo de dirigir nuestro propio destino y contribuir a los asuntos del mundo, podemos desempeñar, y en realidad desempeñamos, un papel útil y constructivo.

Me siento inclinado a pensar, Sr. Presidente, que este papel va a crecer en importancia. Desde la Segunda Guerra Mundial, Canadá ha prestado gran atención a su participación en las Naciones Unidas y en organizaciones multinacionales como la Commonwealth y La Francophonie. Así seguiremos haciéndolo, pero, en el mundo de hoy, debemos prestar una importancia renovada entre una red de potencias intermedias bien situadas. Entre ellas, México ocupa un lugar primerísimo en nuestro pensamiento, por muchas razones.

Existe, evidentemente, la situación geográfica. Existe además la política de nuestro gobierno de acercarnos a nuestros amigos y compañeros del hemisferio occidental. Hemos dado prueba de este deseo a lo largo de los dos últimos años, al hacer más estrechos nuestros vinculos con las instituciones del sistema interamericano. De modo especial, hemos procurado identificarnos más estrechamente con el progreso que realiza Latinoamérica en la consecución de sus metas sociales y económicas. Creemos que México representa un papel muy útil en estas actividades. Y esto es así, no sólo por el importante papel que representan ustedes en las deliberaciones de este hemisferio, sino porque nuestra comprensión de Latinoamérica se enriquece a través de nuestras relaciones estrechas y mutuamente beneficiosas con México, país con el que tantos intereses y puntos de vista tenemos en común.

En la reunión de esta mañana, Sr. Presidente, tanto nosotros como nuestros ministros, hemos realizado notables progresos. Nuestra conversación fue cándida y práctica, como es característico entre dos vecinos y compañeros de América del Norte. Nuestra conversación nos confirmó la convicción común de que existen muchos campos en que nuestros países pueden trabajar juntos y que éste es el momento de hacer más amplias y fuertes las relaciones existentes, y darles un nuevo alcance.

La distancia que nos separa ha dejado de ser una barrera desde hace ya mucho tiempo. Los intercambios comerciales, ténicos y humanos entre nuestros dos países, desde hace varios decenios, han estimulado el crecimiento de nuestras economías y la plenitud de vida de nuestros pueblos. Más de cien mil canadienses se dirijen a México cada año para reposar, naturalmente, pero, sobre todo, para impregnarse de esta herencia humana que, desde el tiempo de los Mayas, les han dejado civilizaciones extraordinarias. Lugares como Acapulco y Cozumel, Chichen Itza y Uxmal, artistas, músicos como Rivera, Orozco y Chávez, nos son ya familiares y, por así decirlo, intimos.

Desde su toma de posesión, en 1970, Sr. Presidente, se ha preocupado por el bienestar de sus conciudadanos, se ha esforzado porque la participación en el proceso gubernamental fuera más intensa y ha procurado de que el progreso económico fuera inseparable de la justicia social. Principios e ideales que Ud. ha querido también hacer reconocer en la escena mundial, a fin de que todas las naciones, cualquiera que sea su potencia, puedan them, and so as to bring about greater equity in the conduct of international affairs. I can assure you, Mr. President, that Canadians are with you in the ardent hope that these aims will be reached.

[Translation from Spanish]

It is with these thoughts for the future of our countries working together in a relationship of new meaning and purpose that we extend to you, Sir, a very warm welcome. This special session of the Parliament of Canada is an historic occasion and it is an honour and a privilege for us to welcome you, Mr. President.

His Excellency Luis Echeverria (President of Mexico):

Madam Speaker of the Senate,

Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons:

First and foremost, I would like to thank you for the opportunity you have given me to express the points of view of the Mexican government on important matters which concern our two nations. Nothing could be more satisfactory than to speak before this House of Commons, symbol and seat of the best democratic traditions of this great country.

The main purpose of my visit to Canada is to propose to you a new stage of wide range and increasing exchanges, mutually beneficial to our two countries.

Up to now, our relations, though insufficient in number, have always been cordial. In a world conditioned by economic and political ambition, expressions of friendship are not enough to resist the pressures of the hegemonic attempts made by the strongest nations. It is necessary for us to come closer together and share experiences, increase our contacts and persevere in the defense of the theses that we both support at multilateral forums.

It is our conviction that the points we have in common in our respective political philosophies, our particular location in the world, and the complementary aspects of our economies will allow us to establish increasingly deeper bonds.

For you, as for us, democracy is a way of life. It implies absolute respect for different forms of thought. It also means respect for self-determination of peoples, coexistence and even cooperation between states with different ideologies.

Freedom is not an abstract capacity to take decisions, but a concrete possibility of implementing these decisions. In the same way in which an unjust society actually annuls all freedoms, unfair relations among peoples condemn the poorest to a virtual loss of autonomy.

The true democratic ideal calls for each man and each nation to have the means to satisfy their needs and develop their personality; to exercise effectively the rights they have as individuals, human groups and nations.

Mexico has been a frequent victim of intervention, abuse and injustice. It has learned that its national identity and sovereignty can only be based on an effort to defend its integrity before others and at the same participar en las decisiones que les atañen, favoreciendo así una mayor equidad en la dirección de los asuntos internacionales. Puedo asegurarle, Sr. Presidente, que los canadienses desean ardientemente como Ud. la realización de estos objetivos esenciales.

[Español]

Con estas ideas sobre el futuro de nuestros dos países colaborando en une relación de intenciones y propósitos nuevos, le damos, Excelencia, nuestra más cordial bienvenida. Esta sesión especial del Parlamento de Canadá constituye una ocasión histórica y es para nosotros un honor y privilegio escuchar sus palabras, Sr. Presidente.

Señora Presidenta del Senado,

Señor Presidente de la Cámara de los Comunes.

Quisiera, ante todo, agradecer cumplidamente la oportunidad que se me ofrece para expresar, ante ustedes, los puntos de vista del gobierno mexicano sobre cuestiones relevantes que conciernen a nuestras dos naciones. Nada más satisfactorio que hacerlo ante esta Cámara de los Comunes, símbolo y sede de las mejores tradiciones democráticas de este gran país.

El objetivo primordial de mi visita consiste en proponerles una nueva etapa, de amplios y crecientes intercambios, mutuamente benéficos para los pueblos de Canadá y México.

Hasta ahora, las relaciones han sido siempre cordiales pero insuficientes. En un mundo condicionado por ambiciones económicas y políticas, las muestras de simpatía no bastan para resistir las presiones y las tentativas hegemónicas de los más fuertes. Es preciso aproximarnos y compartir experiencias, multiplicar contactos y persistir en la defensa de las tesis que nos identifican en los foros multilaterales.

Tenemos la convicción de que las coincidencias de nuestras respectivas filosofías políticas, nuestra peculiar ubicación en el mundo y los aspectos complementarios de nuestras economías, nos permitirán establecer nexos cada vez más profundos.

Para ustedes, como para nosotros, la democracia es un modo de vida. Implica respeto absoluto a las distintas formas de pensamiento. Significa, igualmente, respeto por la autodeterminación de los pueblos, coexistencia y aún cooperación entre Estados de diferente orientación ideológica.

Pero la libertad no es sólo una capacided abstracta para tomar decisiones, sino un poder concreto para realizarlas. Del mismo modo que una sociedad injusta anula de hecho las libertades, las relaciones inequitativas entre les pueblos condenan a los más pobres a la pérdida virtual de su autonomía.

El verdadero ideal democrático pretende que cada hombre y cada pueblo, dispongan de los medios adecuados para satisfacer sus necesidades y desarollar su personalidad; para ejercer, efectivamente, los derechos que tienen como individuos, como grupos humanos y como naciones.

México ha sido víctima frecuente de la intervención, del abuso y de la injusticia. Ha aprendido que su identidad nacional y su soberanía sólo pueden fundarse en un esfuerzo simultáneo por defender su integridad frente time promote within the country progress with equality for all.

We are certain that a new international society is in the process of being built. Small and medium-sized countries must participate in this era of transition by renewing and strengthening their nationalistic attitude; they must also acquire new instruments to make their full development feasible.

If we have overcome the colonial mentality domestically, we should do the same in our relations with other countries. We must weigh with serenity the changes that are taking place on the world scene and act with flexibility and courage in favor of our national objectives.

The end of the cold war and of bipolarism points to a different political structure characterized by the emergence of new centers of power, by the establishment of more flexible alliances and by a greater participation on the part of developing countries in the management of world affairs.

Only dangerous fatalism could lead us to believe that the international community should be structured in the future in accordance with old systems of domination and that the only possible way of change would be to redefine spheres of influence. Such a belief would mean facing the future with a nineteenth century outlook and condemning ourselves irrevocably to dependence.

On the contrary, we believe that countries like ours are called upon to play a more significant role in the field of international relations, not only because of their rate of development, their unexploited wealth or demographic growth, but also because of the enormous possibilities of concerted action and the moral force of a behaviour which adheres to the standards of public international law.

Neither of our countries wants to arouse systematic opposition or enmity with any nation. We hope, from similar positions, to modify hemisphere relations in order to share prosperity in a better way. We realize that this option means not only basic modifications in our relations with other countries of the continent, but also a definite extension of our contacts to other areas of the world.

Canada is in a wonderful position to play a more dynamic role in this hemisphere. I wish to reiterate that my government views with pleasure the Latin American policy of Canada, especially its recent entry into various organizations of the regional system. Although we feel certain that its participation as a full member in the Organization of American States would be more fruitful, we respect its reasons for joining only as a permanent observer at this time.

Moreover, we share many of the doubts that rightly concern Canada with respect to this organization. We realize that its decisions only appeared to be democratic and that ideological intolerance frequently diverted this institution from its objectives. Mexico has invariably fought, and will continue to do so, for our regional organization to be zealously respectful of the sovereignty of a los demás y por obtener, en lo interno, un progreso igualitario.

Tenemos la certidumbre de que en estos años se está gestando una nueva sociedad internacional. Los pequeños y los medianos países, deben actuar en esta época de transición renovando y fortaleciendo su actitud nacionalista; pertrecharse con nuevos instrumentos que hagan viable su pleno desarrollo.

Si hemos superado en lo interno la mentalidad colonial, debemos hacerlo también en nuestras relaciones con el exterior. Tenemos que ponderar, serenamente, los cambios que se están produciendo en el panorama mundial y actuar, con agilidad y valentía, en favor de nuestros objetivos nacionales.

El fin de la Guerra Fría la liquidación del bipolarismo anuncian una distinta composición política caracterizada por el surgimiento de nuevos centros de poder, por el establecimiento de alianzas más flexibles y por la mayor participación de los países en vías de desarrollo en la dirección de los asuntos mundiales.

Sólo un peligroso fatalismo podría hacernos suponer que la comunidad internacional habrá de estructurarse mañana conforme a los antiguos esquemas de dominación y que el único sentido posible del cambio es redefinir las esfras de influencia. Considerarlo así, sería enfrentar el porvenir con mentalidad del siglo pasado y condenarse, irremisiblemente, a la dependencia.

Pensamos, por el contrario, que países como los nuestros están llamados a desempeñar una función de mayor significado en el campo de las relaciones internacionales. No únicamente por razones derivadas de su ritmo de crecimiento, de sus riquezas inexpiotadas o de su crecimiento demográfico, sino también por las enormes perspectivas de una acción concertada y por la fuerza moral de una conducta apegada a las normas del derecho de gentes.

Ninguno de nuestros países pretende suscitar oposiciones sistemáticas ni enemistades con nación alguna. Aspiramos, desde posiciones semejantes, a modificar las relaciones hemisféricas en favor de una prosperidad mejor compartida. Sabemos que esta opción incluye modificaciones sustantivas de nuestras relaciones con los demás países del continente pero, también, una decidida ampliación de nuestros contactos con otras áreas del mundo.

Canadá se encuentra en magnífica situación para desempeñar un papel más dinámico en el hemisferio. Deseo reiterar el beneplácito con que mi gobierno ha seguido la política latinoamericana del Canadá, significada recientemente por su ingreso a diversos órganos del sistema regional. Aunque estamos seguros de que su plena participación en la Organización de los Estados Americanos sería más fecunda, respetamos sus razones para incorporarse, por ahora, sólo con el rango de observador permanente.

Más aún, compartimos muchas dudas que verosímilmente preocupan al Canadá respecto a esa Organización. Estamos conscientes de que, a menudo, sus decisiones sólo en apariencia fueron democráticas y de que la intolerancia ideológica, la desvió frecuentemente de sus propósitos. México ha pugnado invariablemente, y lo seguirá haciendo, porque nuestro organismo regional sea celosamente its Member States and for economic and social cooperation to have a position of priority among its tasks.

Neo-colonial attitudes and international injustice will not decrease substantially over a short period. It will take time to overcome inertia and certain barriers. The best way to do this is by extending exchanges and unifying the positions among countries that have interests which are alike.

For years, Canada and Mexico have had similar attitudes on some of the most important questions of our time. Both our countries are concerned, for instance, about finding formulas to harmonize industrial growth with the conservation of the human environment and natural resources.

Air, water and land pollution becomes a new source of servitude when it is the result of relations with more industrialized countries. Ecological aggressions which cause serious damage to life, health and the economy are an additional load for less developed nations to bear.

Economic sovereignty is one of the expressions of political sovereignty. That is why we affirm the unalienable right of all countries to defend and exploit their basic resources. Therefore we fight for the establishment of a regime of international protection of the environment through regional and international agreements that take into account the legitimate right of States.

The desire on the part of many countries to extend the limits of the territorial sea is a growing and legitimate one. Mexico grants priority to the need to establish a zone of exclusive exploitation for coastal states.

We believe that a new maritime system to establish the rights of coastal states with fairness and precision is indispensable, in view of the present-day needs, and the nature of the conflicts that arise from the possibility that some countries have to exploit their own wealth and that of others.

I would like to give special emphasis, in the presence of this assembly, to the pleasure of my government at the growing affinity of our two countries on these subjects, and on the interest Mexico takes in the valuable precedent Canada has set by establishing a system for the protection and preservation of the maritime species that inhabit the arctic region.

The general and universally compulsory standards that would govern both rights to the sea and the protection of the environment should be included in the Charter of the Economic Rights and Duties of States which is now being drafted by a group of forty countries at the request of the United Nations.

When, at the Third United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, we proposed the adoption of this document by the international community, Mexico outlined the principles of international equity that come from the struggle of the people of the Third World and which are a basic requirement for harmonious coexistence among States.

In an interdependent world, the strategic problem for developing countries is to reorient the trend of their growing trade. We insist that it is necessary for the genrespetuoso de la soberanía de sus Estados miembros y porque, entre sus tareas, ocupe un lugar preponderante la coopération económica y social.

Les actitudes neocolonialistas y la injusticia internacional no se reducirán sensiblemente a corto plazo. Hay inercias y barreras que tardaremos en superar. La mejor manera de hacerlo es ampliando los intercambios y unificando las posiciones entre países con intereses semejantes.

Canadá y México han tenido, durante años actitudes similares en algunas de las cuestiones más importantes de esta época. A nuestros dos países preocupa, por ejemplo, encontrar las fórmulas que permitan armonizar el crecimiento industrial y la preservación del medio humano y de los recursos naturales.

La contaminación de la atmósfera, de las aguas y de la tierra, se convierte en una nueva servidumbre cuando es impuesta por las relaciones con países más industrializados. A las pesadas cargas que soportan los pueblos de menor desarrollo, se suma ahora la agresión ecológica que lesiona gravemente su vida, su salud y su economía.

La soberanía económica es una de las expresiones de la soberanía politica. Por eso afirmamos el derecho inalienable de todos los pueblos a la defensa y a la explotación de sus recursos básicos. Pugnamos, en consecuencia, por el establecimiento de un régimen de protección internacional al medio ambiente, conformado por acuerdos regionales y mundiales que toman en cuenta el legítimo derecho de los Estados.

Es creciente y legítima la pretensión de muchos países por extender los límites del mar territorial. México otorga una atención prioritaria a la necesidad de establecer una zona de explotación exclusiva para el Estado ribereño.

Estimamos indispensable la estructuración de un nuevo régimen marítimo que fije con equidad y precisión los derechos de los Estados ribereños, considerando las necesidades contemporáneas y la naturaleza de los conflictos que suscita la potencialidad de algunas naciones para explotar sus propias riquezas y las ajenas.

Deseo subrayar, ante esta asamblea el beneplácito con que ve mi gobierno la creciente afinidad de nuestros dos países sobre estos temas. Asimismo, el interés con que México contempla el valioso precedente sentado por Canadá al determinar un sistema de protección y preservación de las especies marítimas que habitan la región ártica.

Las normas generales y universalmente obligatorias que regirían, tanto el derecho del mar como el de la protección del medio ambiente, deberán contenerse en la Carta de los Deberes y Derechos Económicos de los Estados que ahora se formula por un grupo de cuarenta países por encomienda de las Naciones Unidas.

Al proponer en la III Conferencia sobre Comercio y Desarrollo la adopción de este documento por la comunidad internacional, México delineó aquellos principios de equidad derivados de la lucha emprendida por los pueblos del Tercer Mundo y que constituyen requisitos básicos para una convivencia armónica entre los Estados.

En un mundo interdependiente, el problema estratégico para los países en vías de desarrollo consiste en reorientar el sentido de sus crecientes intercambios económicos.

eral system of preferences, approved by UNCTAD, after painful negotiations, to be fully enforced.

Advantages in trade proportional to the varying degrees of development, are not only a valuable stimulus for the participation of our countries in the large markets, but also a means to accelerate industrialization throughout vast regions of the world and to promote domestic changes in countries that have lagged behind. That will lead to a fairer international division of labor.

The control of the State over the main economic processes is a necessary condition to maintain the autonomy of its political decisions. That is why there is a general concern to study and regulate the characteristics of foreign investment and of ways to absorb technological resources.

Given the stage of evolution of Canada and Mexico, this subject is of decisive importance. Almost simultaneously, both countries have begun systematic research on the effects of an excessive concentration of foreign capital and technology and have adopted or are about to adopt measures to reorganize the participation of these factors in their economic life.

My country's Congress has recently approved a law that promotes national investment and regulates foreign investment. This legislation reflects the different stages of our nationalistic effort. It retains old provisions under which we do not allow foreign investment in strategic spheres of the national economy. Moreover, it defines the economic activities in which foreign capital must be in the minority. It establishes the technical instruments and powers that permit the restriction, orientation or, if necessary, encouragement of capital flow to adjust it to our own objectives of development. Finally, it prevents the acquisition of Mexican enterprises that are functioning efficiently.

Another law for the registration of the transference of technology and the use and exploitation of patents and trade-marks complements our policy on this subject. Within a framework of independence we shall accept and use technology insofar as it adjusts to the aims of our economic policy. We shall try to eliminate practices or stipulations that limit our exports, prevent the development of our own technology, make production more expensive or hinder our autonomous development. In short, we want technology to be an instrument of progress, not of subjection.

There are numerous corporations in the world market that have accumulated a substantial amount of experience. The importance of the changes and scientific advances that these corporations have brought with them can find no objection. Their size is greater than that of many countries and their intervention in domestic matters is a matter of concern even to the large industrialized nations.

However, we cannot accept their actions when they are not bound by the sovereignty of the nation or when they are harmful to the real needs and aspirations of countries. We want to take advantage of their positive contributions for their own benefit and that of our popu-

Insistimos en que el sistema general de preferencias, aprobado tras penosas negociaciones por la UNCTAD, alcance pleno vigor.

Las ventajas proporcionales en el comercio según los grados de desarrollo no sólo representan un valioso estímulo para la participación de nuestros países en los grandes mercados. Lo es también para acelerar la industrialización en vastas regiones del planeta y para auspiciar cambios internos en los países rezagados que conduzcan a una más justa división internacional del trabajo.

El control del Estado sobre los principales procesos económicos es condición necesaria para mantener la autonomía de sus decisiones políticas. A ello se debe la preocupación generalizada por estudiar y regular las modalidades de la inversión extranjera y de la absorción de conocimientos tecnológicos.

En el grado de evolución de Canadá y México este tema tiene una importancia decisiva. De modo casi simultáneo, ambos países han iniciado investigaciones sistemáticas sobre los efectos de una excesiva concentración de capital y tecnología foránea, y adoptaron o están en vías de adoptar, medidas para reordenar la participación de estos factores en la vida económica.

El Congreso de la Unión de mi país ha aprobado, en días pasados, la Ley que promueve la inversión doméstica y regula las extranjeras. Esta legislación, refleja las distintas etapas de nuestro esfuerzo nacionalista. Recoge antiguas disposiciones, según las cuales no admitimos la participación extranjera en renglones estratégicos de nuestra economía. Define, además, las actividades económicas en que el capital foráneo tiene que ser minoritario. Establece los instrumentos técnicos y las facultades que permitirán restringir, orientar, o en su caso alentar, los flujos financieros para ajustarlos a nuestros propios objetivos de desarrollo. Evita, en fin, que se adquieran empresas mexicanas que estén funcionando eficientemente.

Otra ley para el registro de la transferencia de tecnología y el uso y explotación de patentes y marcas, complementa nuestra política en esta materia. Con un criterio de independencia, utilizaremos y aceptaremos la tecnología en la medida en que se ajuste a las finalidades de nuestra política económica. Procuramos eliminar prácticas o estipulaciones que limiten la exportación, impidan el desenvolvimiento de métodos propios, encarezcan la producción o signifiquen obstáculos a nuestro desarrollo autónomo. Queremos, en suma, que la tecnología sea instrumento de progreso, no método de sujeción.

Existen numerosas corporaciones en el mercado mundial que han acumulado una cuantiosa experiencia. Es inobjetable la importancia de los cambios y avances científicos que su aparición ha llevado consigo. Sus dimensiones superan las de muchos países y su intromisión en asuntos internos preocupa incluso a las grandes naciones industrializadas.

No aceptamos que su actuación quede al margen de la soberanía o vaya en detrimento de las necesidades y aspiraciones de los pueblos. Queremos aprovechar sus aportaciones positivas, en beneficio de ellas mismas y de nuestra población. No nos interesa fomentar un progreso lation. We are not interested in fostering an apparent industrial progress that only benefits large consortiums that are not bound to our national goals.

As a country without sufficient capital resources and technological knowledge, we want foreign companies to cooperate in a process of development that has a social content and to propitiate our dynamic incorporation in world markets.

We struggle to make our progress more than a mere reflection of a metropolitan influence. Decision-making centers must remain within the nation, since to proceed otherwise would be to deny our independence and to deviate from the objectives of development. There are very few countries as well qualified as Canada to comprehend this principle which is so simple and yet so complicated for many to understand.

Mexico will give full support to any initiative that is taken to draw up an obligatory Code of conduct that will regulate the actions of the multinational corporations and establish guidelines for the domestic legislation of the nations concerned. This is a necessary and constructive task in which our two countries might well coordinate their efforts.

In our era a vigorous economic nationalism with characteristics that are different from those of previous stages has been reborn. Then, it was a matter of conquering the effective use of the fundamental rights of soveignty; of recovering ownership of land and of basic resources; of carrying out essential structural reforms that would cancel out our feudal past and open the way to the advent of an industrial society.

The changes I refer to came from popular movements, which were sometimes violent, or from the establishment of domestic policies that caused deep divisions. On implementing these, countries like ours became isolated from the community of nations and had to struggle alone.

Nationalism today, differently from yesterday, is also an internationalism. It means strengthening the bonds among peoples that have similar needs and aspirations. It represents an effort to make the interests of different and heterogeneous countries coincide and to defend them in solidarity on a world scale.

However, we know that a nationalistic stand held only abroad has no real basis. True nationalism, the nationalism that Mexico and Canada practice, is an effort to achieve social integration and coordination. This nationalism can be measured by the internal cohesion of a community, and by the degree of understanding which prevails among its people, the equality of their living conditions and their effective participation in their common tasks.

Honourable Members of Parliament,

Mr. Prime Minister:

The military and economic power of nations is not the only factor that influences the course of history. Moral authority, creative intelligence, the capacity for change, and the political ability of small and medium-sized countries are the source of some of the great transformations of humanity.

industrial aparente que sólo favorezca a grandes consorcios desvinculados de nuestras metas nacionales.

Como país con insuficientes recursos de capital y conocimientos tecnológicos, deseamos que las empresas extranjeras cooperen en un proceso de desarrollo con sentido social y que propicien nuestra incorporación dinámica a los mercados mundiales.

Pugnamos porque nuestro progreso no sea mero reflejo de una influencia metropolitana. Los centros de decisión deben permanecer en el ámbito nacional. Lo opuesto conduce a la negación de la independencia y a la desviación de los objetivos del desarrollo. Pocos países estarán tan capacitados como Canadá para entender este principio tan simple y que, al propio tiempo, resulta tan complicado para muchos.

México apoyaría, resueltamente, cualquier iniciativa para la elaboración de un Código de observancia obligatoria que regule la actuación de las empresas transnacionales y que sirva como pauta a las legislaciones internas de los Estados. He aquí una tarea necesaria y constructiva en la que nuestros dos países podrían colaborar de manera coordinada.

Renace en nuestra época un vigoroso nacionalismo económico con caracteres distintos al de etapas anteriores. Se trataba, entonces, de conquistar el uso efectivo de los derechos fundamentales que derivan de la soberanía; de reivindicar la propiedad de la tierra y de los recursos básicos; de efectuar reformas indispensables de estructura que cancelaran un pasado feudal y abrieran el camino a la sociedad industrial.

Los cambios a que me refiero surgieron de movimientos populares, a menudo violentos, o de definiciones políticas internas que causaron hondas divisiones. Al ejecutarlas, países como el nuestro, se vieron aislados de la comunidad de naciones y hubieron de luchar en la soledad.

El nacionalismo de hoy, a diferencia del de ayer, es también un internacionalismo. Supone un fortalecimiento de vínculos entre pueblos que tienen semejantes necesidades y aspiraciones. Representa un esfuerzo por hacer coincidentes los intereses de diversos y heterogéneos países y por defender los solidariamente a escala mundial.

Sabemos, además, que una afirmación nacionalista formulada exclusivamente hacia el exterior, carece de sustento real. El verdadero nacionalismo; el que México y Canadá practican, es un esfuerzo de integración y de coordinación social. Su medida es el grado de cohesión interna de una comunidad, el entendimiento entre sus integrantes, las condiciones de igualdad en que viven y su incorporación efectiva en las tareas comunes.

Honorables Miembros del Parlamento:

El poderío militar y económico de las naciones no son los únicos factores que influyen en el curso de la historia. La autoridad moral, la inteligencia creadora, la capacidad revolucionaria y la determinación política de pequeños y medianos países están en el origen de algunas de las grandes transformaciones de la humanidad.

Traditional structures give way under the impact of new ideas and new realities. The duty of all nations, but especially of young nations like Canada and Mexico, is to be aware of the direction of the change and fight for the creation of a society that satisfies the universal aspirations of a peace that is the expression of social justice, harmony and cooperation among all the peoples of the world.

In thanking you in the name of Mexico for the hospitality I am enjoying, I express my wishes for the continuation of the friendship that unites our nations and for the preservation of the proud Canadian spirit which served to conquer this enormous territory and allows your country to advance today along the road of democracy and shared well-being.

[Translation from French]

Hon. Lucien Lamoureux (Speaker of the House of Commons): I invite Madam Speaker of the Senate to thank the President of Mexico.

[English]

Hon. Muriel McQueen Fergusson (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, Your Excellencies, Senators, Members of the House of Commons, ladies and gentlemen: It is my privilege to say on behalf of my colleagues in the Parliament of Canada that we warmly appreciate this opportunity of hearing at a joint meeting your thoughtful and thought-provoking address. I assure you that not only the people who have heard it today but many thousands of people throughout Canada will be given an opportunity to read it and will be very much enlightened by it.

Your Excellency, you will be aware that joint meetings of our two Houses are not frequent. It is, in fact, only a most unusual and significant occasion that brings the Senate and the House of Commons together as we are today. However, what occasion could be more appropriate for such a meeting than the visit of the distinguished President of our North American neighbour and friend, Mexico.

In the unsettled world of today an event such as this underlines the importance of friendly exchanges between countries, particularly between countries which are linked so closely as our two countries are by inseparable bonds of history and geography. In spite of the geographical proximity of our countries, it is an unfortunate fact that Canadians generally do not know enough about your country, and I strongly suspect that to most of your fellow countrymen Canada is equally unknown. The expansion of tourism is increasing contacts, however, for I am told that in 1971, the last year for which I could secure figures, 15,000 Mexicans visited Canada and 101,000 Canadians visited Mexico.

Returning Canadians tell us there are a number of excellent reasons why our countrymen are spending more and more time in your country. They say that your people are warm and friendly, your climate is salubrious, your scenery is celestial, your food is fire and your firewater is fuel for the blaze. Just to hear of it makes a woman of my age feel young again.

Let us hope that this memorable occasion of your visit to Canada will be an important step toward pro-

Las estructuras tradicionales ceden bajo el impacto de nuevas ideas y de nuevas realidades. El deber de todas las naciones, pero especialmente de jóvenes naciones como Canadá y Mexico, es advertir el sentido del cambio y propugnar la creación de una sociedad que satisfaga las aspiraciones universales de una paz que sea expresión de la justicia social y de la coopéración entre todos los pueblos de la tierra.

Al agradecer, en nombre de México la hospitalidad de que disfruto, hago votos por la amistad que une a nuestras naciones y porque Canadá mantenga siempre el altivo espiritu con que conquistó su enorme territorio y que le permite, ahora, avanzar por el camino de la democracia y del bienestar compartido.

El Excmo. Sr. Lucien Lamoureux (Presidente de la Cámara de los Comunes): Invito a la Señora Presidente del Senado a que dé las gracias al Presidente de México.

La Excma. Sra. Muriel McQueen Fergusson (Presidente del Senado): Sr. Presidente, Sr. Primer Ministro, Sr. Presidente de la Cámara, Sus Excelencias, Senadores, Miembros de la Cámara de los Comunes, señoras y señores. Es para mí un honor hablar en nombre de mis colegas del Parlamento de Canadá y hacer saber cuán calurosamente apreciamos esta oportunidad de escuchar sus palabras consideradas y reflexivas en esta reunión conjunta. Puedo asegurarle que, no sólo quienes han podido escucharle hoy, sino muchos millares de canadienses, tendrán la oportunidad de leerlas y apreciarlas.

Su Excelencia sabe que las reuniones conjuntas de ambas Cámaras no son frecuentes. Tan sólo en ocasiones muy significativas y poco corrientes, como la de hoy, el Senado y la Cámara de los Comunes se reúnen juntas. En verdad, qué ocasión podría ser máa adecuada para tal reunión que la visita del distinguido Presidente de nuestro vecino y amigo de América del Norte, México.

En un mundo inestable como el de hoy, este hecho subraya la importancia de intercambios amistosos entre los países, especialmente entre países tan estrechamente vinculados como lo están nuestros dos países por lazos históricos y geográficos inseparables. A pesar de la proximidad geográfica de nuestros países, es lamentable el hecho de que, por lo general, los canadienses no conocen bastante el país de ustedes, y tempo que, para la mayoría de sus paisanos, Canadá es también poco conocido. Sin embargo, la expansión del turismo está haciendo mayores estos contactos y las cifras de 1971, año del que pude encontrar estadísticas, muestran que 15.000 mexicanos visitaron Canadá y que 101,000 canadienses visitaron México.

Los canadienses que vuelven de su país nos dicen que existen numerosas y excelentes razones por las que nuestros compatriotas visitan cada vez más su país. Dicen que su pueblo es afectuoso y amistoso, el clima saludable, los paisajes celestiales, la comida de fuego y el aguardiente llama viva. Tan sólo oir esto me hace sentir joven de nuevo.

Esperemos que la memorable ocasión de su visita a Canadá será un paso importante en el fomento de relamoting contacts at all levels between Mexico and Canada and toward developing our mutual understanding and interests.

[Translation from Spanish]

Mr. President, your presence and that of Her Excellency has been a great honor for us.

[English]

We are also honoured on this important occasion by the presence in this chamber of the distinguished members of your official party. May I say to you, Mr. President, and to all members of your party that we are very pleased to have you with us today.

Mr. President, my colleagues in the Senate and the House of Commons also would like to express to you our most sincere thanks for the outstanding address you have just given to us. You have deeply impressed us with the eloquence with which you have spoken of longstanding ties and things that might happen in the future. It is clear to all of us here that, even with diversity of languages, our two countries and peoples have many things in common.

[Translation from French]

Your visit and your words are drawing closer the bonds between our two countries.

[English]

The enthusiastic acclaim with which my colleagues received your message of friendship and good will must surely convince you of the respect and affection we have for you and for your great country. We extend to you our warmest wishes for the continued success of your visit in Canada and for the balance of the extended tour you are taking. When you return home, Mr. President, we would ask you to convey to the members of your Congress the most sincere good wishes from my colleagues in both Houses of the Canadian parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Members of the House and Senators, l'assemblée est levée. We shall now adjourn.

ciones a todos los niveles entre México y Canadá, así como un mejor entendimiento de nuestros intereses mutuos.

[Español]

Senor Presidente, la presencia de Su Excelencia y de la Senora de Echeverria nos hizo un gran honor.

[Traducción del inglés]

En este acontecimiento tan importante nos honra, asimismo, la presencia en esta cámara de los distinguidos miembros de su comitiva oficial. Sr. Presidente, permítame decir a Ud. y a todos los miembros de su comitiva que nos es un gran placer tenerles con nosotros en el día de hoy.

Sr. Presidente, mis colegas en el Senado y en la Cámara de los Comunes quisieran igualmente expresarle a Ud. nuestras gracias más sinceras por el discurso tan sobresaliente que nos acaba de pronunciar. Nos ha impresionado sumamente con la elocuencia con que ha hablado de los vínculos de muchos años y de cosas que pudieran ocurrir en el futuro. Nos es muy claro a todos nosotros que aun con la diferencia de idiomas, nuestros dos países y pueblos tienen muchas cosas en común.

Su visita y sus palabras sirven para hacer más estrechos los vínculos que existen entre nuestros dos países.

[Traducción del inglés]

El aplauso tan caluroso con el que mis colegas han recibido su mensaje de amistad y buena voluntad, debe seguramente convencerle del aprecio y afecto que sentimos por Ud. y su gran país. Le hacemos llegar nuestros más sinceros votos por el éxito continuo de su visita a Canadá y el resto de su largo viaje. A su regreso a su país, Sr. Presidente, le rogamos extienda a los miembros del Congreso los saludos más sinceros de mis colegas de ambas Cámaras del Parlamento Canadiense.

Sr. Presidente: Miembros de la Cámara y Senadores, se levanta la sesión.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF KAREN MAGNUSSEN, WORLD FIGURE SKATING CHAMPION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to draw to the attention of all hon. members the presence in your gallery of Karen Magnussen, the figure skating champion of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think all Canadians shared the thrill and excitement of Karen's dazzling performance recently in Bratislava where she unquestionably became number one. It was the culmination of 14 years of skilled effort, determination and remarkable courage. While she now may belong to the world, Canadians at home claim her as their newest and most charming goodwill ambassador. With her radiance, her grace and her obvious enjoyment of life, she will leave her mark wherever she goes. We wish her all future success.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

TRANSPORTATION OF ALASKAN OIL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity under Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent of the House to act on a matter of urgency concerning the decision announced today by the United States Supreme Court wherein that court refused to overturn a lower court decision blocking the trans-Alaska pipeline project and because there is known opposition to the tanker route in Congress. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That this House immediately strike a special parliamentary committee consisting of representatives of all parties from the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, the committee on environment, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to determine ways and means to respond to the present situation and to submit its recommendation to this House within 30 sitting days so that the Canadian position will be clarified, both as to opposition and regarding alternatives.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—TABLING OF REPORT OF HEARING OFFICER UNDER EXPROPRIATION ACT CONCERNING CORA BROWN AND McDONALD SUBDIVISIONS

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I would like to lay on the table the report of Mr. Isidor M. Wolfe, the hearing officer in the matter of the Expropriation Act with reference to the Cora Brown and McDonald subdivisions on Sea Island in the municipality of Richmond in the province of British Columbia.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the report is being translated and will be available in French early next week.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent business arising out of the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission last Friday to give Bell Canada almost all that it requested in its application A. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the government to suspend immediately the application of the rate increases granted Bell Canada by the Canadian Transport Commission and to give favourable consideration to rescinding the said decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

END OF UNITED STATES MILITARY INVOLVEMENT IN VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel):

That this House recognize that the United States has ended its military involvement in the long and costly Viet Nam war, that we applaud the conclusion of the Paris agreements that made this possible and that we endorse wholeheartedly the call of President Nixon for unity in the search for world peace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Vaudreuil. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

ENERGY

TRANSPORTATION OF ALASKAN OIL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. The matter deals with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was announced today and which will affect profoundly the future of the Canadian north and the west coast of Canada. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson):

That this House urges the government to enter immediately into meaningful discussion with the U.S. authorities and the government of B.C. on the subject of transporting Alaska oil through Canadian territory in such a way that our social, environmental and economic interests are fully protected.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

STATEMENT BY COMMISSIONER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I have a motion which I consider to be of pressing and urgent necessity. It arises out of an unfortunate statement made on the weekend in Washington, D.C., and reported in the press today, by the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Keith Spicer. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher):

• (1410)

That this House reprimand Mr. Keith Spicer, Commissioner of Official Languages, for his reference to Quebec's English-speaking population as "Westmount Rhodesians" and furthermore, because of such bigotry on the part of Mr. Spicer, that this House request his resignation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has very serious reservations about the motion proposed by the hon. member on the ground that it includes, in my view, language which is not parliamentary in the sense that it contains a serious charge against a senior official of parliament who is not here to defend himself. I should like to hold the motion under advisement before I put it to the House.

These motions are of importance but hon. members cannot simply assume that because they bring a motion before the House it will be accepted automatically from a procedural standpoint.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has to reserve its right to determine whether a motion of this kind ought to be put to the House and hon. members asked to decide whether there should be a debate. For these reasons I should like to hold the matter under advisement.

IMPEACHMENT BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF RIGHT, PROVISION OF RULES OF PROCEDURE AND PENALTY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-168, respecting impeachment.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the incidence of illegal and improper actions by members of the government has made it necessary to bring forward this measure to declare that the right of impeachment to punish those in high places still exists, to establish rules for procedure, and to fix the penalty as dismissal from office and continuing ineligibility for two years, with no pardon.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PENSION FUNDS

Question No. 17—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount of money on the books of the pension funds of the Canadian National Railways as at (a) December 31, 1970 (b) December 31, 1971 (c) December 31, 1972?

2. What rate of interest was earned on these funds during (a) 1970 (b) 1971 (c) 1972?

3. What amount of interest was credited to these funds during the years ending (a) December 31, 1970 (b) December 31, 1971 (c) December 31, 1972?

4. What amount of money was added to these funds from employee contributions during the years ending (a) December 31, 1970 (b) December 31, 1971 (c) December 31, 1972?

5. What amount of money was added to these funds as regular or current contributions by the Canadian National Railways during the years ending (a) December 31, 1970 (b) December 31, 1971 (c) December 31, 1972?

6. What amount of money was added to these funds in any other way by the Canadian National Railways during the years ending (a) December 31, 1970 (b) December 31, 1971 (c) December 31, 1972?

7. Is money owed to the above funds by the Canadian National Railways and, if so, how much and what arrangements are being made to meet such debt?

8. What was the total amount paid out of the above funds in pensions during the years ending (a) Dec. 31, 1970 (b) Dec. 31, 1971 (c) Dec. 31, 1972?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. The total amounts of the investments, cash and other assets in the books of the Pension Trust Funds were: As at December 31, 1970, $818,203,051; As at December 31, 1971, $870,758,014; As at December 31, 1972, $950,613,245.

2. To calculate the yield we have used the Statistics Canada formula and the information requested in Parts (1) and (3). Under this formula, the investment is deemed to be: Opening Investments etc., plus closing Investments, etc. less earnings. On this basis, the yield is: 1970, 3.05 per cent; 1971, 5.55 per cent; 1972, 7.00 per cent.

3. Net earnings on investments of the Pension Trust Funds were: year ended December 31, 1970, $23,984,003; year ended December 31, 1971, $45,103,796; year ended December 31, 1972, $60,803,818.

4. The amount of money added to these funds from employees' contributions was:

Year Ended	Employees' Contributions	Refunds	Net
31 December 1970	29,883,023	4,533,904	25,349,119
31 December 1972	40,344,008	4,597,360	35,746,648

5. The amount added to these funds as regular or current contributions by Canadian National Railways was: year ended December 31, 1970, $32,634,760; year ended December 31, 1971, $39,494,641; year ended December 31, 1972, $49,144,802.

6. Payments by Canadian National Railways against the Unfunded Liabilities in accordance with the Pensions Benefits Standards Act: year ended December 31, 1970, $600,152; year ended December 31, 1971, $2,326,714; year ended December 31, 1972, $4,579,425.

7. As at December 31, 1972 Canadian National Railways owed the fund $2,273,543. This represents the normal monthly clearance paid off in January, 1973 arising from Company and employee contributions less pensions paid and refunds.

8. Total amounts of the pensions paid out of the Pension Trust Fund were: year ended December 31, 1970, $53,714,534; year ended December 31, 1971, $65,022,721; year ended December 31, 1972, $70,419,462.

MARITIME COMMAND—FUNDING DDH-280 PROGRAM

Question No. 206—Mr. Forrestall:

1. To what dollar levels has primary and secondary funding carried the DDH-280 construction programme as of December 31, 1972?

2. What is the current anticipated total cost to the Canadian taxpayer for the four DDH-280 turned over after sea trials with full armament and spares to the Commander, Maritime Command for operational purposes for which they were designed?

3. What accounting does the Minister of Supply and Services give to the Canadian people for the acceleration in total cost of this programme?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Supply and Services as follows: 1. As of 31 December, 1972, $221,900,000 has been expended of the Capital program, and $33,000,000 on the secondary, or related, program.

2. The capital cost of $252,000,000 reported to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on 19 April, 1972, is still valid. The related costs, which were reported at the same time, are now estimated at $43,900,000 instead of $42,270,000. The $1,630,000 increase is attributable to an increase in the development costs of the Sea Sparrow missile. This represents the proportion which is chargeable as a related cost to the DDH-280 program, and it includes the additional costs of evaluating the missile by means of test firings on a suitably instrumented range. This missile trial phase will not occur until well after the ships have been put through normal sea trials and turned over to the Commander, Maritime Command.

3. The Department of Supply and Services in its contracting activities responds to the needs specified by departmental clients.

The Minister of Supply and Services gives an accounting of his responsibilities to the Canadian people when he reports each year to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for the funds requested from Parliament for the next fiscal year.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Question No. 250—Mr. Andre:

1. How many full-time employees of the departments and agencies of the government are now engaged in scientific research and development activities?

2. How many full-time employees of the departments and agencies of the government were engaged in scientific research and development activities on September 1, 1972?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Science and Technology and Statistics Canada as follows: 1. The data for this question is presently being gathered and will be available sometime in September 1973.

2. The following table provides data on the number of full-time employees of the departments and agencies of the federal government engaged in scientific research and development activities as of September 1, 1971. Data for September 1, 1972 are not yet available.

Personnel[1] Engaged in Scientific Activities
Fiscal Year April 1/71 to March 31/72

Category	R & D	Related Scientific Activities	Total

[2]Of the 24,930 full-time employees, 22,947 were permanent staff and 1,983 were term, casual or seasonal employees.

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW TORONTO AIRPORT

Question No. 266—Mr. Stackhouse:

Has the government decided whether or not to proceed with constructing the proposed new Toronto airport, and, if not, on what date can a final decision on this matter be expected?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Government of Canada has confirmed the expropriation of the land for the new Toronto airport at Pickering. The Government has also announced that an Examination Board to advise on the type and timing of the facilities required will be established, to report within twelve months. We have stated. however, that construction will not begin until this Board has reported, and also that arrangements are being made for those residents who wish to continue in occupation to do so at a nominal rent until December 31, 1974.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—HUMAN RIGHTS PROGRAM

Question No. 292—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that a federal Human Rights Commission be set up that would (a) be directly responsible to Parliament, (b) have power to investigate the administration of human rights legislation as well as the power to enforce the law by laying charges and prosecuting offenders, (c) include within the organization for a period of seven to ten years a division dealing specifically with the protection of women's rights, and (d) suggest changes in human rights legislation and promote widespread respect for human rights?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of Justice, together with the Department of the Secretary of State, has been giving serious consideration to the creation of a federal organization that would concern itself with the human rights of all Canadians, not only women.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ASSESSMENT OF VOLUNTEER EXPERIENCES IN EVALUATING JOB QUALIFICATIONS

Question No. 293—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Federal government include in its selection standards for appointment to its positions the assessment of volunteer experience in evaluating the qualifications of applicants?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission. This recommendation has been implemented as follows: 1. On November 4, 1971 a directive was issued by the Public Service Commission to staffing officers in all government departments to include an assessment of relevant volunteer experience in evaluating the qualifications of job applicants.

2. PSC application forms have been amended accordingly to provide ample space for inclusion of a description of volunteer work experience.

3. All PSC selection standards now provide for the assessment of skills and abilities developed through education, training, paid work experience and volunteer work experience. In addition, the subject of voluntary experience has been incoporated as a curriculum item by the Commission on its special training program for personnel administrators. The Commission's new Data Stream guide also reminds employees to include relevant volunteer community affairs and part-time work experience, so that this information can be coded on an individual's data stream record.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—EDUCATIONAL COURSES

Question No. 294—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government (a) provide expanded, comprehensive courses for all public officials and employees and their spouses, working with Indians and Eskimos, to familiarize them with the cultures and traditions of the native people, including training in the native languages; (b) make available to Indian and Eskimo women education courses to provide at least functional literacy in either French or English; (c) encourage native women to participate in school planning and programming, and to serve on school advisory committees; (d) where it is not already being done, train native women as teachers and teachers' aides; (e) provide that teachers' colleges give special training courses in the instruction of English or French as a second language to Indians and Eskimos; (f) make sure that teachers' colleges provide courses in Indian and Eskimo culture, including training in the native languages for teachers planning to work with native people; and (g) make every effort to train Indians and Eskimos to provide the educational services in Indian and Eskimo communities now being performed by non-Indian and non-Eskimo public servants?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) New employees entering the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are given orientation and training concerning native cultures. There are 150 Indian dialects and 25 Eskimo dialects which create obvious difficulties. However, an increase in the number of Indian employees who have fluency in a major Indian language has alleviated the situation. Many courses are now made available through the education departments and universities.

(b) The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development conducts a variety of courses in French and English for both Indian and Eskimo women. Literacy programs for women working outside the home are organized in conjunction with the Canada Manpower Assistance Plan. Courses are also conducted in the evenings on reserve and in the Northern settlements for women in the home.

(c) The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development endorses the recommendation that native women participate in school planning and program. A number of school committees have been appointed to date by Band Councils and both women and men serve on these boards. In many regions, Indian women take an active part in parent/teacher association and home and school work association.

(d) Various programs are available to Indian women interested in becoming teachers' aides. One of the training programs is in Manitoba where Indian women are being trained as aides to Kindergarten teachers. In 1969-70, the last year for which we have accurate figures, 26 Indian women were trained as kindergarten aides in the Manitoba Program. All of the trainees were given appointments. Similar programs are available in other regions and the knowledge of the native language which these people have is extremely valuable in enabling closer communication between the school, the pupils and the community.

While the Department is not a teaching college as such, it has with the assistance of Canadian Universities and the general public, encouraged the development of programs similar to the IMPACTE program at Brandon University.

(e) Various summer courses and training programs are conducted at Universities for teachers who are involved in the instruction of English and French as a second language. In Ontario for example summer courses were held in 1970 at the University of Western Ontario and at Trent University, and full year courses was offered at the University of Alberta and the University of Manitoba in their teaching program.

As teacher colleges come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government, we can endorse this recommendation and encourage special courses in this regard.

(f) Representatives from this Department have made contact with the Canadian Teachers' Federation and Provincial Teachers' Federation with a view to increasing the interest of the teaching profession as a whole in the Native cultures.

Universities right across Canada have developed extension courses in Indian and Eskimo Culture for persons interested in teaching Indian children. In many cases, Indians act as resource persons. These courses include not only aspects of the culture, but also the social and economic background so that the teachers of Indian students become a provincial responsibility.

We will continue to provide an increase in special training for teachers of Indian students in federal schools and, by agreement with the provincial governments, insist that special training and special education be given to the teachers of Indian students who become a provincial responsibility.

(g) In recent years several Indian people have assumed administrative positions in education with the department and it has helped to increase the number of Indian and Eskimo people providing educational services to Indian and Eskimo communities.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—MANAGEMENT TRAINEE PROGRAMS

Question No. 295—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government, in co-operation with the territories ensure that management training programs in the operation of co-operatives and small business enterprises be made available to native women as well as to men and be expanded to fit the growing needs of the northern communities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development: 1) works through provincial agencies for co-operatives, where such are set up, by supporting their services and supplementing such when necessary; 2) arranges for service contracts if provincial services are not available; 3) provides assistance directly when no other source of services are available; 4) provides co-operative education and training facilities where necessary.

In the Northwest Territories management training programs in the operation of co-operatives and small business enterprises are, and always have been, available to native women as well as men and every effort is being made to expand such programs to fit the growing needs of native communities.

In the Yukon Territory the first phase of a small business management course was instituted in February 1972. The course was sponsored by the Yukon Vocational Training Centre and financial assistance received from Manpower and this department. This first 5-month phase consisted of upgrading the candidates to the grade 10 level via group sessions and visits by community members in government, legal and commercial areas. Women as well as men and husband/wife teams participated and 50 percent of the initial course enrolment was native women. A second five-month course began in September 1972 and 60 percent of the people expected to complete the course are women.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PROGRAMS UNDER WHICH ESKIMOS AND INDIANS ARE BROUGHT SOUTH ON LEARNING TRIPS

Question No. 296—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government in co-operation with the territories, include individual native women, as well as couples, in the program under which Eskimos and Indians are brought south on learning trips?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The federal government, in co-operation with the Territories, has always included individual native women as well as couples in the program under which Eskimos and Indians are brought south on learning trips. One of the first was a project entitled "Southern Exposure" under which a married Eskimo couple elected by the people from each of the settlements in Arctic Quebec visited many parts of southern Canada, and this practice has been carried on by the Northwest Territories Government with considerable success. The Northwest Territories has sponsored on several occasions groups of native ladies comprised of representatives from various northern communities to attend the Voice of Native Women conferences in Alberta and included in these projects were special educational tours. They also make a regular grant to the Women's Institute in order that they may retain a person full-time in the Territories. The Northwest Territories will shortly be sponsoring a conference of 20 women from all parts of the north in Yellowknife prior to their going to Vancouver for a Women's Institute meeting and related educational tours.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RESIDENTIAL REQUIREMENTS

Question No. 297—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Canadian Citizenship Act be amended so that there is no difference between the residence requirements for the acquisition of Canadian citizenship by an alien husband and an alien wife of a Canadian citizen?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to the Canadian Citizenship Act so that there is no difference between the residence requirements for the acquisition of Canadian citizenship by an alien husband and an alien wife of a Canadian citizen, has been sympathetically considered and opportunity for discussion will be given members of the House at the time the new citizenship bill or major amendments to the current Act are introduced.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—STATUS OF CHILD BORN OUTSIDE CANADA

Question No. 298—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that sections 4 and 5 of the Canadian Citizenship Act be amended to provide that a child born outside Canada is a natural-born Canadian if either of his parents is a Canadian citizen?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to amend sections 4 and 5 of the Canadian Citizenship Act to provide that a child born outside Canada is a natural-born Canadian if either of his parents is a Canadian citizen, has been sympathetically considered and opportunity for discussion will be given members of the House shortly at the time the new citizenship bill or major amendments to the current Act are introduced.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING CITIZENSHIP ACT

Question No. 299—Mr. Howard:

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Canadian Citizenship Act be amended so that either citizen-parent may apply for the naturalized citizenship of a minor child, has been sympathetically considered and opportunity for discussion will be given Members of the House shortly at the time the new Citizenship Bill or major amendments to the current Act are introduced.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING CITIZENSHIP ACT

Question No. 300—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that section 11(2) of the Canadian Citizenship Act be amended so that, in the case of joint adoption the child may be granted Canadian citizenship if either of the adopting parents is a Canadian citizen.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to amend section 11(2) of the Canadian Citizenship Act so that, in the case of joint adoption, the child may be granted Canadian citizenship if either of the adopting parents is a Canadian citizen, has been sympathetically considered and opportunity for discussion will be given Members of the House at the time the new Citizenship Bill or major amendments to the current Act are introduced.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—SECTION 164(1)(C) OF CRIMINAL CODE

Question No. 301—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that section 164(1)(c) of the Criminal Code be repealed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Paragraph 164(1)(c) (which in the Revised Statutes became paragraph 175(1)(c)) of the Criminal Code was repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, S.C. 1972, chapter 13, section 12 which came into force July 1, 1972.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—SECTION 164(1)(A) OF CRIMINAL CODE

Question No. 302—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that section 164(1)(a) of the Criminal Code be repealed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Paragraph 164(1)(a) (which in the Revised Statutes became paragraph 175(1)(a)) of the Criminal Code was repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, S.C. 1972, chapter 13, section 12 which came into force July 1, 1972.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—DELETION OF WORDS FROM CRIMINAL CODE

Question No. 303—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the words "of previously chaste character" be deleted from all the sections of the Criminal Code?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Minister of Justice agrees in principle that the words "of previously chaste character" should be deleted from the Criminal Code so that the character of the victim would cease to be an element of an offence. However, as the proposal represents a new approach to criminal law, it is essential that it be thoroughly studied by the Law Reform Commission and by the Department of Justice before any specific amendment is proposed.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PROTECTION FROM SEXUAL ABUSE

Question No. 304—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Criminal Code be amended to extend protection from sexual abuse to all young people, male and female, and protection to everyone from sexual exploitation either by false representation, use of force, threat, or the abuse of authority?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Minister of Justice agrees in principle that the Criminal Code should protect all young people from sexual abuse and protect everyone from sexual exploitation. However, as the proposals represent a new approach to criminal law, it is essential that they be thoroughly studied by the Law Reform Commission and by the Department before any specific amendments are proposed.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT OF SUBSECTION (3) OF SECTION 23, CRIMINAL CODE

Question No. 305—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that subsection (3) of section 23 of the Criminal Code be amended to apply to both spouses?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): This proposed amendment was referred to the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Legislation in 1971 who recommended that subsection 23(3) of the Criminal Code be repealed. Accordingly the Minister of Justice is prepared to recommend the repeal of this section the next time that general amendments to the Criminal Code are being considered by the government.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ASSIGNMENT OF FEMALE INSTEAD OF MALE POLICE OFFICERS

Question No. 306—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government whenever possible, assign female instead of male police officers to deal with women taken into custody?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Royal Canadian Mounted Police has traditionally recognized the need for special consideration of females taken into custody as it pertains to their protection, privacy, modesty and hygiene. Accordingly, either professional matrons or women acting in a matron capacity are utilized whenever a female is taken into custody. The only exception to this would be if emergencies or isolation should dictate otherwise. The feasibility of engaging female police officers to perform these and other duties is under active consideration.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ELIMINATION OF ALL PROVISIONS WHICH DISCRIMINATE ON BASIS OF SEX OR RELIGION

Question No. 307—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Prisons and Reformatories Act be revised to eliminate all provisions that discriminate on the basis of sex or religion?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): A thorough revision of the Prisons and Reformatories Act is contemplated. When legislation is drafted it will be proposed to remove the provisions that discriminate on the basis of sex or religion, except for provisions which divide facilities for correctional or humanitarian reasons.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—REHABILITATION OF WOMEN OFFENDERS

Question No. 308—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal, provincial and territorial governments co-operate in order to provide flexible and imaginative programs aimed at the rehabilitation of women offenders which would include (a) a system that provides appropriate living quarters, small "open" institutions where life

follows a normal pattern rather than institutional living and is integrated as much as possible with the life of the neighbouring community; (b) programs and services, such as education and vocational training, adapted to the needs of individual female offenders and taking full advantage of the resources of that district; and (c) personnel specially trained in dealing with female offenders?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): A Special Programs Officer, Miss Johanna Hickey, was appointed by the Canadian Penitentiary Service in 1972. Her responsibility is in the area of minority groups including women. The Department of the Solicitor General is assisting 26 Community Residential Centres for men and women. Of those centres 19 are exclusively for women. Under existing legislation there is authority to arrange for the confinement in appropriate institutions in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory of persons convicted there to serve penitentiary terms. Negotiations are being carried on with a view to enabling persons from those territories to serve penitentiary terms closer to their homes. The role of the federal government in relation to female offenders serving sentences of two years or more is under review. It is expected that arrangements will be made in due course for the purchase of prison services in the various provincial institutions as recommended by the Canadian Committee on Corrections. Such an arrangement would provide greater flexibility in the treatment and placement of female offenders and will assist in the implementation of this recommendation.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT FEDERAL WOMEN'S PRISON, KINGSTON, BE CLOSED

Question No. 309—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Women's Prison at Kingston be closed?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): In keeping with the recommendation of the Ouimet Committee Report 1969, the Canadian Penitentiary Service is planning to eventually phase out the Prison for Women at Kingston, Ontario, and to contract with Provincial Correctional Systems to provide service for female offenders who are sentenced to two years or more, providing that the individual provincial Correctional Systems for female offenders meet acceptable standards of treatment and training comparable with those established by the Canadian Penitentiary Service. The Ministry has recently initiated discussion with the provinces in this regard.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PROVISION FOR PAROLE SUPERVISION IN RURAL AND REMOTE AREAS FOR WOMEN OF INDIAN AND ESKIMO ANCESTRY

Question No. 310—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission of the Status of Women that the National Parole Board make use whenever possible of members of band councils and government personnel, to provide parole supervision especially in rural and remote areas, for women of Indian and Eskimo ancestry?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Ministry of the Solicitor General has entered into a contractual arrangement with three band councils in Saskatchewan to provide for supervision of persons who are released from prison on parole or under mandatory supervision.

The Ministry of the Solicitor General has a contract with the Native Counselling Service of Alberta to undertake community assessments and do supervision of Indian persons released on parole or under mandatory supervision.

Discussions are underway with Indian Chiefs of Alberta and Manitoba to assist in supervision of Native Peoples released from prison.

There are a number of informal arrangements for supervising Native People by the Band Chiefs or Councils.

The policy of the National Parole Board is to increase this type of participation.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ESTABLISHMENT OF HALFWAY HOUSES FOR WOMEN RELEASED FROM CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS BE SET UP

Question No. 311—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that a network of halfway houses for women newly released from correctional institutions be set up in centres across Canada, supported by public and private funds and operated by voluntary groups and agencies, in accordance with approved government standards?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): At the present time, there are in Canada 26 Community Residential Centres or half-way houses which accept both men and women as residents. Nineteen Residential Centres are exclusively for women and provide a maximum bed capacity of 220. Seven of these with a bed capacity of 67 are primarily oriented towards women ex-offenders. The Ministry of the Solicitor General is prepared to write contracts for the already existing half-way houses as the needs arise and they have been advised accordingly. During the current fiscal year, the Ministry has negotiated contracts for residential services, with payments based on services actually provided, with the following:

SELECTIVITY	TOTAL PAID April-Sept. 72
Male and female ex-offenders	$ 7,657.00
Females, ex-offenders	60.00
Females, ex-offenders	7,970.00

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Question No. 312—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government establish an implementation committee, composed of a number of its senior administrators, to (a) plan for, co-ordinate and expedite the implementation of the recommendations made by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to that jurisdiction; and (b) report from time to time to its government on the progress it is making?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Following the tabling of the Report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women the government established the Interdepartmental Committee composed of representatives of departments and agencies whose mandates were directly affected by the recommendations. This Committee was responsible for global examination of the Report and related matters and the recommendation of policy guidelines for the consideration of Cabinet. At year end 1971, the Interdepartmental Committee submitted its strong and favourable report based on departmental reports and reports of the Working Parties.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—FEDERAL STATUS OF WOMEN'S COUNCIL

Question No. 313—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that a federal Status of Women Council, directly responsible to Parliament, be established to (a) advise on matters pertaining to women and report annually to Parliament on the progress being made in improving the status of women in Canada, (b) undertake research on matters relevant to the status of women and suggest research topics that can be carried out by governments, private business, universities, and voluntary associations, (c) establish programs to correct attitudes and prejudices adversely affecting the status of women (d) propose legislation, policies and practices to improve the status of women, and (e) systematically consult with women's bureaux or similar provincial organizations, and with voluntary associations particularly concerned with the problems of women?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The minister responsible for the Status of Women announced recently the government's intention to establish as soon as possible an advisory committee reporting to the minister which would carry out the role envisaged for the Council proposed in the recommendation of the Royal Commission.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ESTABLISHMENT OF MINIMUM AGE FOR MARRIAGE

Question No. 314—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government enact legislation establishing 18 years as the minimum for marriage?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The question of the minimum age for marriage is being studied at the present time by the Department of Justice and the Law Reform Commission. The question was also studied at the last annual meeting of the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Legislation. The Conference recommended on August 22, 1972 that the minimum age for marriage be fixed at 16 for both sexes and that consent be required prior to the marriage of persons under 18 years of age.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CHANGE IN PASSPORT APPLICATION REGULATIONS

Question No. 315—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government change its passport application forms in order to indicate that a married woman may obtain her passport either in her maiden surname or in the surname of her husband?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Passport Office began distributing new passport application forms to the public in September, 1972. The revised form "A" advises that passports are normally issued in a woman's married name, but invites a married woman who wishes to have her passport in her maiden name to write the Passport Office for this service.

Order Paper Questions

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—MODIFICATION IN POLICY CONCERNING ISSUANCE OF PASSPORTS TO MARRIED WOMEN

Question No. 316—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government modify its policy so that a woman need not apply for a new passport after marriage unless she wishes to obtain it in her husband's surname?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): This is existing policy. In addition, a new procedure will be introduced shortly as soon as an amended free schedule has been published to allow a married woman to add her married name to a valid maiden name passport.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RETAINMENT BY INDIAN WOMAN ON MARRIAGE TO NON-INDIAN OF HER INDIAN STATUS

Question No. 317—Mr. Howard:

1. What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Indian Act be amended to allow an Indian woman upon marriage to a non-Indian to (a) retain her Indian status and (b) transmit her Indian status to her children?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. Amendments to the Indian Act would result in fundamental changes in the criteria governing entitlement to Indian status and to membership in Indian bands. Because there is a case before the Supreme Court on this matter the government cannot take any action until a decision has been reached.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT CRIMINAL CODE BE AMENDED SO THAT WIFE MAY BE HELD TO SUPPORT HUSBAND

Question No. 318—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Criminal Code be amended so that the wife may be held to support her husband in the same way that the husband may be held to support his wife?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Minister of Justice is prepared to recommend the repeal of this section the next time that general amendments to the Criminal Code are being considered by the government. He considers that support is properly a civil rather than a criminal matter.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT TO DIVORCE ACT

Question No. 319—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Divorce Act be amended so that the Three-year separation period provided in Section 4(1)(e)(i) be reduced to one year?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Consideration is being given to this recommendation together with other proposed amendments to the Divorce Act. It is probable that amendments to the Divorce Act will not be proposed until after a report on the Act has been received from the Law Reform Commission of Canada.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT TO DIVORCE ACT

Question No. 320—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Divorce Act be amended so that the words "educational needs" be added to the list of exceptions where the maintenance of children over the age of 16 years may be ordered as a charge falling to the parents?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): None. The courts have held that maintenance may be ordered for children over the age of sixteen who are attending school or university. This legal position has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Jackson v. Jackson in a judgment given October 18, 1972.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—DAY CARE CENTRES

Question No. 321—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the National Housing Act be amended to (a) permit the making of loans for the construction, purchase and renovation of buildings for day-care centres, and (b) permit the inclusion of space for day-care centres in housing developments, including university buildings, for which loans are made under the Act?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): With respect (a) the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act (Bill C-133, which was given first reading in Parliament on January 30, 1973), include a provision for grants and loans to municipalities for Neighbourhood Improvement Programmes. These programs to be undertaken through federal-provincial agreement, will have as objectives the conservation and improvement of stable residential areas inhabited by low and moderate income people, the improvement of community planning processes and the promotion of higher quality community environments. It is intended that Day Care Centres will qualify under this proposal. With respect to (b) the National Housing Act already provides that all housing projects financed under the various sections of the Act may include appropriate space for purposes other than housing, such as Day Care Centres, in projects that provide family accomodation. This would include housing for married students.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION OF NATIONAL DAY CARE ACT

Question No. 322—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government immediately take steps to enter into agreement with the provinces leading to the adoption of a national Day-Care Act under which federal funds would be made available on a cost-sharing basis for the building and running of day-care centres meeting specified minimum standards, the federal government to (a) pay half the operating costs; (b) during an initial seven-year period, pay 70 per cent of capital costs; and (c) make similar arrangements for the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The federal government has acted on the intent of this recommendation by providing both the funds necessary to expand the number of day-care centres and by ensuring that certain standards are met. Recent amendments to the Canada Assistance Plan Regulations extend the scope of shareable costs to cover total operating costs, including depreciation on equipment and facilities, as well as purchase of furnishings and equipment. The provisions of the plan apply to all provinces, the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories. In addition, a grant has been approved under the National Welfare Grants program to the Canadian Council on Social Development to conduct a study which has, as its goal, the establishment of national guidelines. Staff of the National Day Care Information Centre are co-operating with the Canadian Council of Social Development in this undertaking.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CHILD CARE SERVICES

Question No. 323—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Department of National Health and Welfare offer an extension of advisory services to the provinces and territories through the establishment of a unit for consultation on child-care services?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Consultative services for child welfare and other related child care services have been available to the provinces and territories under the Canada Assistance Plan since 1966. In addition, a National Day Care Information Centre has been established with a full-time consultant on day care services as well as support staff. The recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women were a major factor in the decision to establish the centre. Furthermore, the Department of Health and Welfare has provided a grant for and is participating in a study by the Canadian Council on Social Development designed to develop guidelines for Day Care Services.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AVAILABILITY OF BIRTH CONTROL INFORMATION

Question No. 324—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that birth control information be available to everyone?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): It was largely in response to recommendations made by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government in July 1970 approved the establishment of a federal family planning program whose mandate includes the dissemination of birth control information to all Canadians who desire it.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—BIRTH CONTROL INFORMATION

Question No. 325—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Department of National Health and Welfare (a) prepare and offer birth control information free of charge to provincial and territorial authorities, associations, organizations and individuals and (b) give financial assistance through National Health grants and National Welfare grants to train health and welfare workers in family planning techniques?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) As part of the federal family planning program, the Department of National Health and Welfare, through its Family Planning Division, provides on request, birth control information free of charge to provincial, territorial and municipal authorities, to voluntary associations and organizations, and to individuals. (b) This program offers financial assistance on a project basis to provincial, territorial, and municipal governments, to voluntary associations and organizations, and to universities for family planning services and demonstration, research and training projects such as the training of health and welfare workers in family planning techniques.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT STERILIZATION SHALL NOT ENGAGE CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY OF PRACTITIONER

Question No. 326—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the criminal law be clarified so that sterilization performed by a qualified medical practitioner at the request of his patient shall not engage the criminal responsibility of the practitioner.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Minister of Justice would take the position that sterilization is a matter for medical discretion and that sterilization performed by a qualified medical practitioner at the request of his patient does not "engage the criminal responsibility of the practitioner". Therefore, it is considered that no action is required to clarify the criminal law in respect of sterilization.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ABORTION

Question No. 327—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Criminal Code be amended to permit abortion by a qualified medical practitioner on the sole request of any woman who has been pregnant for 12 weeks or less?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The government is giving no consideration to amendments relating to abortion beyond those introduced in 1970.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ABORTION

Question No. 328—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Criminal Code be amended to permit abortion by a qualified practitioner at the request of a woman pregnant for more than 12 weeks if the doctor is convinced that the continuation of the pregnancy would endanger the physical or mental health of the woman, or if there is a substantial risk that if the child were born, it would be greatly handicapped, either mentally or physically?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The government is giving no consideration to amendments relating to abortion beyond those introduced in 1970.

Order Paper Questions

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR DEPENDENTS

Question No. 329—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission of the Status of Women that the federal Income Tax Act be amended in order that (a) the extra exemption allowed the taxpayer for the dependent spouse be reduced from the present $1,000 to $600 when the dependent spouse in under 60 years of age, and (b) the extra exemption allowed the taxpayer for a dependent spouse be the same as the individual personal exemption, when a dependent spouse is aged 60 and over?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Since the Report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, the federal Income Tax Act has been amended to provide that the basic exemption to a taxpayer be $1500 and the additional exemption to a taxpayer who supports his spouse be $1350. The recent budget proposed that these amounts be increased to $1600 and $1400 respectively. The amount of the additional exemption is not dependent of the age of the dependent spouse.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—TAX ALLOWANCE FOR EACH CHILD UNDER 16

Question No. 330—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that a federal annual taxable cash allowance in the order of $500 be provided for each child under 16 to be paid in monthly instalments to the mother as under the present Family Allowance system?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Action has already been taken in relation to this proposal. Bill C-170 before the last Parliament proposed to pay a federal annual taxable cash allowance in the order of $180 or $240 for each child under 18 in monthly instalments (of $15 and $20) to the mother. These allowances would be taxable in the hands of families with incomes above $4,500 at a special tax rate to be applied in advance of payment. This Bill did not receive third reading.

Further plans to improve the family allowances program are now being considered and will be presented to parliament in the near future.

An allowance of $500 a year ($41.67 a month) would entail a gross expenditure (before taxes) of $3.4 billion a year in place of the $640 million allocated for this purpose.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT TO INCOME TAX ACT PERMITTING HUSBAND AND WIFE TO FORM A TAXATION UNIT

Question No. 331—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Income Tax Act be amended in order that husband and wife form a taxation unit and be permitted to aggregate their incomes, under a special tax rate schedule, in a joint return signed by both spouses with the option to file separately if they so desire?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): This is a matter of tax policy. If the Government should decide to recommend an amendment to this portion of the Income Tax Act it would be announced in the usual way.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME BE PAID TO HEADS OF ONE-PARENT FAMILIES

Question No. 332—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that a guaranteed annual income be paid by the federal government to the heads of all one-parent families with dependent children?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of National Health and Welfare is giving serious consideration to ways and means of improving social benefits to people other than those in the age group of 65 and over, who already benefit through a guaranteed income supplement to the Old Age Security pension. Various low income populations are being looked at including one-parent families with dependent children. Various alternatives are being considered which will provide economic security without limiting the freedom of option for heads of one-parent families with dependent children. These will be discussed with the provinces during the course of the over-all review of the social security system commencing with the federal-provincial conference of Welfare Ministers in April. In addition, federal-provincial co-operation will be necessary to develop appropriate programs so that specific groups such as one-parent families will receive the requisite social as well as economic supports. There is growing impetus to the development of day care services; children of one-parent families have priority access to publicly supported centers.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT OF OLD AGE SECURITY BENEFITS

Question No. 333—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) the Guaranteed Income Supplement of the Old Age Security benefits be increased so that the annual income of the recipients is maintained above the poverty level, and (b) the Supplement be adjusted to the cost of living index?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): This recommendation has been effectively implemented. Following the budget of May 1972, the OAS/GIS was raised to $150 monthly for a single pensioner, and $285 monthly for a married couple. Bill C-147, presently before the House, would again raise the level to $170 for a single person ($2,042 annually) and $325 monthly for a married couple ($3,515 annually). Although there is no existing statistical concept of poverty in Canada, Statistics Canada has established low-income cut-offs which have been used to delineated low-income families from other units. For the year 1972, these were set at $2,110 for a single person and $3,516 for a couple. It should be noted that the above annual income of $3,895 is greater than that of a family where the breadwinner earns the provincial minimum wage, (the exception to this case exists in British Columbia where a provincial supplement has raised the total pension to $4,800 for a couple over 65.) It is also significantly higher than what a two unit family, whose members are under 65 years of age, would receive in direct social assistance payments in all provinces. In May of 1972 parliament revised the Old Age Security Act so as to adjust both the Old Age Security pension and the Guaranteed Income Supplement according to annual changes in the consumer price index.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ESTABLISHMENT OF FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Question No. 334—Mr. Howard:

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Upon the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, the Citizenship Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State instituted a five year program to establish, support and develop friendship centres for native people. This program includes core funding of friendship centres for the first two years of operation, a capital fund to improve the present facilities of friendship centres, and a personnel training fund to secure development opportunities for friendship centre staff. Native people are encouraged to participate in all levels of administration and are, in fact, very active in the entire movement. At present forty one (41) friendship centres have been funded under this program and are located in Quebec, Ontario, the western provinces and the Territories.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT APPOINT MORE WOMEN JUDGES

Question No. 335—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government name more women judges to all courts within their jurisdiction?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Since the publication of the report of the Royal Commission three women have been appointed as judges. Madam Justice Mable VanCamp was appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario in November 1972, Judge Janet Boland was appointed a County Court Judge of Ontario on January 27, 1972 and Madame Justice Claire l'Heureux-Dubé was appointed a Judge of the Superior Court of Quebec on February 8, 1973.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RIGHT OF WIVES TO BE INDEPENDENT APPLICANTS FOR ADMISSION TO CANADA

Question No. 336—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Immigration Division of the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration review its policies and practices to ensure that the right of a wife to be an independent applicant for admission to Canada is always respected and that wives are made fully aware of this right?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The right of a wife to be an independent applicant is inherent in the Immigration Act and Regulations. The term presently used "head of family" does not mean the husband but that spouse who is financially responsible for providing the necessities of life for the family on a continuing basis. All immigration counselling officers apply this definition and in those cases where the husband cannot meet the selection criteria, the wife is being examined as "head of family". The possibility of making this fact known to all independent applicants by an explanatory note on the Application for Permanent Admission to Canada is being investigated.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO IMMIGRATION ACT CONCERNING HEAD OF FAMILY

Question No. 337—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Immigration Act and Regulations be amended by the elimination of the term "head of a family" wherever it appears in the legislation and by the substitution of the exact meaning which is intended in each case?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Immigration Act defines "head of family" as that person in the family upon whom the other members are mainly dependent for support. Operational instructions to Departmental staff clearly indicate that this may be either the husband or the wife. The recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women with regard to this point have been accepted in principle and as soon as the Government's legislative timetable permits, appropriate amendments will be introduced containing more precise terminology which will in no way denote the sex of the individual.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION OF AUTOMATIC RESUMPTION OF CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

Question No. 338—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Canadian Citizenship Act be amended to provide for the automatic resumption of Canadian citizenship by women who lost it because they married aliens before January 1, 1947?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act to provide for the automatic resumption of Canadian citizenship by women who lost it because they married aliens before January 1, 1947, has been sympathetically considered and opportunity for discussion will be given members of the House at the time the new citizenship bill or major amendments to the current Act are introduced.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 339—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) a Women's Programme Secretariat be established in the Privy Council Office for promoting a programme for equality of opportunity for women in the federal Government Service and the greater use of their skills and abilities; (b) a Women's Programme Co-ordinator be appointed to each federal government department, Crown Corporation and agency, to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian Forces, and to the staff of the Senate and the House of Commons to promote within the organization the objectives of the Women's Programme and to maintain liaison with the Secretariat; (c) the federal government organizations referred to above be required to give periodic progress reports to the Women's Programme Secretariat of objectives undertaken; and (d) an annual report be tabled in Parliament on the progress being made in the federal Government Service toward the objectives of the Women's Programme?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): This recommendation has been effectively implemented by the following actions: (a) the establishment in the Public Service Commission of the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women whose responsibility it is to stimulate and facilitate career opportunities for women in the Public Service and to maintain a watching brief on equal opportunities for women in the employment policies, practices and procedures of the service. (b) A number of departments and agencies have appointed officers with the responsibility of promoting equal opportunity for women within their departments or agencies. In addition an interdepartmental committee has been established with representatives from 30 departments to co-ordinate activities in this regard. (c) Departmental representatives on the Interdepartmental Committee present quarterly reports on activities within their departments; (d) The annual report of the Public Service Commission includes a section on the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women outlining the progress being made by that office.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—SURVEY OF USE OF HOMEWORKERS

Question No. 340—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Canada Department of Labour conduct a survey of the use of homeworkers, including handicraft workers, their wages and their other conditions of employment.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of Labour in its 1972 Survey of Wages and Working Conditions in Canadian Industry asked two questions concerning the use of homeworkers by Canadian industry. Preliminary tabulations of data on these questions are expected about the end of March 1973.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ADMITTANCE TO MILITARY COLLEGES

Question No. 341—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that women as well as men be admitted to the military colleges operated by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): It is assumed that the intent of this recommendation is to ensure equality of opportunity for young female applicants who wish to become officers in the Canadian Armed Forces, and that they should have the same opportunity for subsidized training as the cadets at military colleges. Although the military colleges are considered to be a prime source of combat ready career officers, their graduates in fact comprise less than 20 per cent of the annual officer production. Students attending civilian universities under the Regular Officer Training Plan (ROTP) are subsidized to the same degree as are students at the military colleges. Due to the lack of facilities and unsuitability of the type of training available at the military colleges, women are now given equal consideration for subsidized training at civilian universities under the Regular Officers Training Program, the Medical Officers Training Program, the Dental Officers Program, the University Training Plan for Men and the University Training Plan for Officers. The opening of these plans to female applicants is viewed as a means of providing equality in terms of career development.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE SPECIAL FUNDS FOR UNIVERSITY EDUCATION

Question No. 342—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government provide special funds for young women and men to acquire university education, such as is provided for young men who attend military college, leading to a degree in fields designated to be of special interest for aid to developing areas, the terms to include commitment to some specified national or inter-national service?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No special program of this type has been established.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—SEX-TYPING OF OCCUPATIONS

Question No. 343—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government set up committees to review all government publications concerned with the choice of occupations and careers in order to select and use only publications that encourage women to consider all occupations, including those which have been traditionally restricted to men?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Although no committees have been established, all positions are now advertised as open to both men and women. In addition see answer to question 390.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CAREER INFORMATION SERVICES AT CANADA MANPOWER CENTRES

Question No. 344—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) the federal government in co-operation with the provinces and territories set up a career information service in each local Canada Manpower Centre which would (i) include personnel specially trained to give information to women on occupations, training requirements, financial help available, and labour market conditions and needs, and (ii) insist on the importance of a broad field of occupational choice for girls; and (b) subject to consultation and agreement with the educational authorities, this career information service be offered to all schools of the area?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) Canada Manpower Centres provide a career information service through manpower counsellors who are qualified to give information on occupations, training requirements and labour market conditions to all clients, male and female. Where other forms of assistance are indicated to enhance an individual's capability to seek and retain employment, liaison is established with appropriate agencies for the provision of such services. (b) Regarding the provision of a career information service to female students, CMC staff over the years have been visiting schools to provide labour market and other occupational information to students and school guidance teachers. In their visits, the counsellors encourage female students to think in terms of a broad range of occupations. In the school year 1971-72, over 1400 secondary schools were visited by manpower counsellors for the purpose of occupational counselling, participation in "Career Days", distribution of literature or the provision of other forms of assistance. Discussions with provinces are planned early in 1973 to improve career counselling of Canadian youth, male and female.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RESEARCH INTO SPORTS PROGRAMS

Question No. 345—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that, pursuant to section 3(d) of the federal Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, a research project be undertaken to (a) determine why fewer girls than boys participate in sports programs at the school level and (b) recommend remedial action?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Since July 1972, the Fitness and Amateur Sport Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare has had on staff a women's consultant whose duties include, among other things, defining the problems facing women in sport, and establishing programs to alleviate these problems. Since that time the women's program has developed to the point of proposing various needed programs dealing with women in sport in the following areas: (1) Educational programs to ascertain the reasons behind the lack of female participation and programs to alleviate the problem areas; (2) Coaching programs for increasing the quality and quantity of women coaches; (3) Promotional programs such as symposias, films and printed materials on women in sport; (4) Establishment of an information retrieval center collecting and distributing needed materials on women in sport; (5) Development of women officials for the 1976 Olympics and beyond. With reference to this particular recommendation of the Royal Commission, the above Educational Program will contract the services of physical education experts to: (a) research the present situation and ascertain the reasons why girls do not actively participate in sports; (b) make necessary recommendations to educational boards, physical education departments, and Sport Canada; (c) work through the appropriate channels in the school system to implement recommended programs; (d) establish effective evaluation procedures for the new programs. Implementation of this program is expected to begin in the new fiscal year.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—INFORMATION ON OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING FOR ADULTS PROGRAM

Question No. 346—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government in co-operation with the provinces and territories ensure that information on the federal Occupational Training for Adults Programme reaches women outside the labour force as well as those employed or actively seeking employment?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of Manpower and Immigration continually reviews its information program, and attention is being paid to whether the information being presented, and the media used are such as to reach women both within and outside the labour force. More specifically, the following action has been taken: Manpower training courses are being advertised nation-wide on the CBC network; arrangements have been made with a market research agency to carry out an attitude and awareness survey of manpower services and programs among women, one of the objectives being the determination of the most appropriate media to be utilized for reaching women.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PART-TIME TRAINING PROGRAMS

Question No. 347—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government in co-operation with the provinces and territories expand and widely advertise the part-time training programmes offered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of Manpower and Immigration recognizes the importance of part-time training as a means of enabling many women to enter or re-enter the labour force. Part-time training courses are advertised in the local press. The assessment of priority to be given to part-time training under the Canada Manpower Training Program is based on the recommendations of the federal-provincial Manpower Needs Committees in each province and territory.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING ACT

Question No. 348—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that section 3(b) of the federal Adult Occupational Training Act be amended so that full-time household responsibility be equivalent to participation in the labour force in so far as eligibility for training allowances is concerned?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Amendments to the AOT Act have been passed and the new eligibility criterion for training allowances has been implemented effective July 1, 1972. Under the new rules individuals become eligible for training allowances when they become eligible for training. In the July-December 1972 period the number of females entering training courses (under the new eligibility rules) increased by 35 per cent compared to the same period of 1971.

Order Paper Questions

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CAREER UPGRADING PROGRAMS

Question No. 349—Mr. Howard:

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): A number of steps have been taken by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to implement a policy of encouraging women to consider occupations outside the traditional female ones, and to refer such clients to a broader range of occupations for training and for employment. These steps include the following: A career information service in Canada Manpower Centres is being strengthened by an extensive program to produce reliable and detailed data on current and future manpower requirements and supply, by an automated client information system, by the development of a computer-assisted career counselling system, and by other measures. A position has been established at the Department's Headquarters to provide advice and functional guidance in the matter of employment problems of women. Regarding the sex-typing of occupations, the Department issued instructions to the field to consider female clients for a wider range of courses and to bring these courses to the attention of clients. Further action planned on this matter includes the advising of CMC counsellors to encourage female clients to consider occupations outside traditional female ones; to refer such clients to a broader range of occupations for employment; to ensure that sex-typing of occupations does not occur in its publications or advertising messages; to ensure that its publications will encourage women to consider a broad range of occupations in keeping with the individual's interests and abilities.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—EXPANSION OF CANADA STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Question No. 350—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government, in cooperation with the provinces and territories, extend the present system of student loans to include part-time students?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The subject of assistance to part-time students is under active consideration by the federal government in close consultation with all provincial governments.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 351—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces, provide through the Occupational Training for Adults programme (a) training courses which will lead to a diploma for visiting homemakers for emergency assistance, the planning of which will be in conjunction with local welfare agencies, and (b) training courses leading to a diploma for household workers other than visiting homemakers?

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Courses for various categories of household workers, including homemakers have been purchased under the CMTP. Because of the generally poor economic and social status of these occupations, the Department of Manpower and Immigration feels that further expansion of training depends on such factors as the improvement of labour standards and working conditions, market demand and earnings. The Department is prepared to enter into discussions with voluntary organizations and provincial agencies with a view to establishing a plan of action for improving conditions in these occupations.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RETRAINING OF RURAL PEOPLE

Question No. 352—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that women be given the same opportunity as men to participate in any programmes at present or in the future, that are sponsored by government for the retraining and rehabilitation of rural people, such as those begun under the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (ARDA)?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Adult Occupational Training Act, as amended July 1, 1972 provides that an adult who has not attended school on a regular basis for any period of at least twelve months, at any time since attaining provincial school leaving age, may apply to a manpower officer for occupational training, and the manpower officer may arrange training suitable for that adult, that will increase his or her earning capacity or opportunities for employment.

Further, the Canada Agricultural Manpower Committee, a federal-provincial body, has accepted the task of informing and encouraging rural Canadians, particularly farmers, vis-à-vis the availability and value of agricultural training courses which may be undertaken within the Canada Manpower Training Program, in co-operation with the respective Provincial departments of agriculture and education. The principles this committee has accepted include the need to re-structure courses to meet the needs of women, and to offer training priority to the farm-family partner who has primary responsibilities for the functions covered by the training undertaken. Moreover all women, both rural and urban dwellers, may apply for training under the Canada Manpower Training Program and be considered for training that is commensurate with their abilities and aspirations.

As concerns the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, it has been and will continue to be the policy and practice of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to attempt to ensure that women are given the same opportunity as men in relation to retraining and rehabilitation available under ARDA and other programs affecting rural people. ARDA cost-sharing agreements signed with the various provinces contain specific clauses to safeguard against discrimination in employment by reason of race, sex, religion, national origin, color, or political affiliation, as well as other provisions designed to ensure the equitable application of the agreements to all eligible people. While these agreements assign to the provinces, not the federal government, the direct responsibility for the implementation of the various programs, it should be emphasized that no complaint has been received by the Department of any discrimination in their application.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—EDUCATIONAL NEEDS OF IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 353—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Department of the Secretary of State, through its Citizenship Branch, in co-operation with the provinces and territories, (a) conduct surveys in all areas of Canada where immigrants are settling to ascertain the special educational needs of immigrant women, (b) suggest programs by which these needs could be met, (c) make these needs and programs known to voluntary workers in the community, and (d) assist volunteers in the implementation of these training programs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) The Citizenship Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State has made recent studies of the needs of immigrants, including immigrant women, in all areas of Canada where immigrants are settling. (b) Programs by which these needs could be met are under study. (c) and (d) The regional liaison officers of the Citizenship Branch work closely with voluntary organizations in the community assisting in the adjustment of immigrants. As studies are completed and programs are developed regional liaison officers employ them in their work with the voluntary sector.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—LANGUAGE TRAINING PROGRAMS

Question No. 354—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government, in co-operation with provinces and territories, review language training programs in order to ensure that the needs of immigrant women are being met?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of the Secretary of State is reviewing its language training agreements with the provinces to ensure that they adequately meet the needs of immigrants, including immigrant women. Preliminary discussions have been with most provinces on this matter.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CONTINUATION OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM IN RELATION TO HOUSING

Question No. 355—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government, in co-operation with the Northwest Territories, make sure that the education program in relation to housing is continued?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Home management supervisors have been working in the Baffin and Keewatin regions for several years for that express purpose and in both areas Eskimo women trainees work closely with the Supervisors with a view to taking over this responsibility as sufficient training is completed. Similar positions have now been established in the Fort Smith region and five trainee positions approved, all native northern women, to undergo training which will qualify them to take over senior positions in this field.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGE ESKIMO AND INDIAN WOMEN TO TRAIN IN ADULT EDUCATION

Question No. 356—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal commission on the Status of Women that the federal government encourage Eskimo and Indian women to take training in adult education for work in the northern communities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been successful in attaining the support of a number of agencies for adult basic education and up-grading programs. Band councils, social committees, local school boards, provincial Departments of Education, Canada Manpower and others share in the planning, organization, administration and financing of these programs. More programs involving more women are being developed at present and it is hoped that the number of native women participating in such programs will increase substantially in the near future.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT WOMEN BE CONSULTED IN THE USE OF CANADIAN SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEMS

Question No. 357—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Governments and organizations which plan to use the Canadian satellite telecommunications system (a) consult knowledgeable women as to the types and quality of programs and the hours of scheduling in order to meet the needs and convenience of women in Canada and (b) include women professionals and specialists in all branches of program production and broadcasting so that women will have equal opportunities with men in the development, operation and use of this new medium?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Representatives of the English Services Division, the French Services Division and of Engineering Headquarters have been designed to study means of implementing applicable recommendations of the Report of the Royal Commission. Additionally, qualitative and quantitative assessments of the present situation within the CBC have gone forward to the Co-Ordinator, Status of Women. Measures to give effect to the above mentioned recommendation are part of the objectives for CBC personnel relations for 1973/74.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENTS PROVIDE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CITIZENS' INFORMATION CENTRES

Question No. 358—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal, provincial, territorial and municipal governments provide financial assistance to citizens' committees operating Citizen's Information Centres?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Following the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, the Citizenship Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State has provided financial assistance in the amount of $97,942 to citizens' committees operating citizens' information and referral centres. The money has been distributed as follows:

Fiscal year 1971-1972: Hamilton & District Central Information Centre, Ontario, $15,000; Community Information Service of Ottawa/Carleton, Ontario, $10,000; Community Information Service, Russell, Manitoba, $8,000; Centre de référence et d'Information de Sherbrooke, Quebec, $8,000; Information London, Ontario, $6,000; Total, $47,000.

Fiscal year 1972-1973: Thorncliffe Information Post-Toronto, Ontario, $1,500; Weston Information & Referral Centre-Toronto, Ontario, $6,500; Rexdale Community Information Directory, Toronto, Ontario, $5,000; Bloor-Bathurst Information, Toronto, Ontario, $8,942; Information Orillia, Orillia, Ontario, $3,000; Information Scarborough, Toronto, Ontario, $2,500; Sudbury and District, Sudbury, Ontario, $2,000; Agincourt Community Services, Agincourt-Toronto, Ontario, $2,000; Community Information Service, Minnedosa, Manitoba, $2,500; Chimo Help Centre, Fredericton, New Brunswick, $6,000; Information Abitibi-Témis, Rouyn, Quebec, $5,000; Community Integration, Montreal, Quebec, $6,000; Total, $50,942; Grand Total, $97,942.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—NUMBER OF WOMEN ENROLLED IN CAREER ASSIGNMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 359—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that, for the next 10 years, the number of women enrolled in each course in the Career Assignment Program of the federal Public Service be no less than 10 per cent of the total number of people enrolled in the course?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission: There are approximately 120, or 3.5 per cent, of the women throughout the service, compared with 3,437 men, who currently meet the CAP eligibility criteria. Consequently, it appeared that the 10 per cent female participation target referred to in the recommendation would not be attainable. However, through continued special efforts, the 10 per cent level was attained in 1972, with 10 women out of a total of 94 persons participating in the CAP program during the year. This compares with a total of eight women out of 350 persons who had participated from 1968, when the program began, up to 1972. The Commission is continuing its efforts to ensure that all qualified women in the service are considered for nomination to this executive development program and in its efforts to raise the proportion of women eligible for participation in the CAP Program through increased training and development opportunities for women in the lower and middle management levels in the service.

[Mr. Howard.]

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT REGULATIONS

Question No. 360—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) the federal Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations be amended so that part-time employees will receive pay increases on the same basis as full-time employees, and (b) collective agreements for the federal Public Service contain this provision?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) The application of the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations to managerial and confidential employees excluded from collective agreements, has been modified to permit pay increments for part-time employees within salary ranges negotiated for employees of the applicable bargaining unit. If the collective agreement for the bargaining unit involved is silent on the subject, part-time employees are granted pay increments in accordance with the provisions of the Clerical and Regulatory Agreement. Generally, an excluded employee whose hours of work, on an annual basis, average 18 hours or more per week, receives pay increments. The increment period is determined through a formula which requires that a part-time employee work a longer period between increments in order to gain the same amount of experience as the full-time employee. (b) A number of collective agreements provide for pay increases for part-time employees, generally if their scheduled hours of work, on an annual basis, average 18 hours or more per week. The general formula for determining the date on which the part-time employee receives the increase is the same as for the excluded employees described above and results in the part-time employee obtaining an increase in pay when he has worked the same number of hours as the full-time employee is required to work in order to receive a pay increment.

Because it is a negotiable matter, any extension or modification of this provision will be determined by collective bargaining between the Employer and the Bargaining Agent.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—STATUS OF WOMEN SCIENTISTS AND TECHNOLOGISTS

Question No. 361—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal Crown Corporations and agencies (a) ensure that women scientists and technologists receive equal consideration with men for appointment, and (b) make a special effort to give graduate women employees a chance to take post-graduate degrees?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) Crown Corporations and agencies now afford equal consideration to women as to men for appointments in the fields of science and technology as in all other fields. (b) Where educational assistance programs are available generally speaking these are now available to both men and women and every effort is made to ensure that female employees are not overlooked.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—EMPLOYMENT IN CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 362—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal Crown Corporations and agencies (a) develop transfer and promotion measures that will encourage women to move out of the traditionally female occupations into other occupations, and (b) emphasize in recruitment programs that all occupations are open equally to women and men?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) Generally speaking, Crown Corporations and agencies continue to encourage women to seek transfers and promotions to all available positions for which they have the qualifications and aptitudes. In some cases, (where applicable), those not qualified are given on-the-job training and formal training opportunities and encouragement. (b) In recruiting programs, it is emphasized that all jobs are open equally to men and women.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PLAN TO BETTER USE OF WOMANPOWER WITHIN ITS ORGANIZATION

Question No. 363—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that each federal Crown Corporation and agency devise a long-term plan for the better use of womanpower within its organization?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Generally speaking, no special provision has been made in long term development plans since women are considered on an equal basis with men.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF PERSONNEL IN CROWN CORPORATIONS TO TRAIN WOMEN

Question No. 364—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that, where the size of staff warrants it, federal Crown Corporations and agencies appoint one or more qualified people whose primary duty for the next five to eight years will be to provide for the training and development of women in their organizations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): In most Crown Corporations and agencies, the size of the staff does not warrant the appointment of a special person for the training and development of women in their organizations. Where applicable, some corporations have appointed special persons for this function; others have assigned the responsibility to the relevant branches of the personnel department.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CONSIDERATION OF WOMEN FOR ROTATION IN CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 365—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal Crown Corporations and agencies with rotational programs between field and head offices ensure that women are considered for rotation on the same basis as men and are not judged in advance on their freedom to rotate?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Generally speaking, the policy of Crown Corporations and agencies, which have rotational programs, has been to consider women for rotation on the same basis as men.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CROWN CORPORATIONS EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN RECRUITMENT AND SELECTION PROGRAMS

Question No. 366—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal Crown Corporations and agencies (a) review their selection procedures to ensure that women are used in recruitment and selection programs, and (b) have senior women officers on their personnel administration staffs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) Generally speaking, selection procedures have been reviewed and where necessary more women are being used in recruitment and selection procedures. (b) Many Crown Corporations and agencies now have senior women officers on their personnel administration staffs.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ELIMINATION OF DIFFERENT PROVISIONS ON BASIS OF SEX FROM SUPERANNUATION AND INSURANCE PLANS

Question No. 367—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that different provisions on the basis of sex be eliminated from superannuation and insurance plans for federal Crown Corporations and agencies?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Employees of many Crown Corporations and agencies are under the Public Service Superrannuation Act and Regulations. As indicated in the answer to question no. 397 the Act has been studied by the Advisory Committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act and a report has been made to the Minister. The Government's decision will be announced in due course. With respect to other Crown Corporations and agencies, where such provisions are still included in superannuation and insurance plans, changes in the plans are under consideration.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CAREER OPPORTUNITIES IN CROWN CORPORATIONS AND EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 368—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal Crown Corporations and agencies (a) make clear to educational institutions, and to the public, that career opportunities within their organizations are open to women and that they are encouraging women to prepare themselves for such careers; and (b) require each private organization with which they do business to include in each contract, a clause that prohibits discrimination in employment on the basis of sex?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) Generally speaking, the Crown Corporations and agencies make clear to educational institutions and to the public that career opportunities within their organizations are open to women. (b) Generally speaking, no such stipulation is included in contracts with private organizations, although some corporations do make provision for safeguards in this respect.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE SUPERANNUATION ACT TO INCLUDE FEMALE AND MALE CONTRIBUTORS

Question No. 369—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act be amended so that its provisions will be the same for both female and male contributors?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Appropriate legislative amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act are under active review respecting benefits to female contributors. Consequently changes affecting the Public Service Superannuation Act will, where appropriate, result in similar amendments being made to the R.C.M. Police Superannuation Act.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—FEMALE ENLISTMENT IN ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Question No. 370—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that enlistment in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police be open to women?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): For many years the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has engaged females for certain functions within the Force. Presently, a study is being conducted into force requirements to determine where females, if engaged as regular members, could be used to best advantage.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—TRADES OPEN TO WOMEN IN CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 371—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that all trades in the Canadian Forces be open to women?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): A study was conducted to ascertain which trades and classifications in the Canadian Armed Forces could be opened to women. Women will be excluded from those classifications and trades which call for service in primary combat roles, sea-going duty and duty in isolated areas. However, the following trades and classifications are now open to women and this new policy could over a period of time increase the number of women in the Forces to some 2,000 officers and about 5,000 other ranks: Officer Classification—Open to Women: Aerospace Engineer; Communications/Electronics Engineer; Dental; Medical; Medical Associate; Nursing; Air Traffic Controller; Air Weapons Controller; Legal; Meteorology; Musician; Personnel Development; Personnel Support. Other Ranks Trades—Open to Women: Meteorological Technician; Photographic Technician; Air Traffic Controller; Air Traffic Control Assistant; Operation Plotter; Teletype Operator; Communications Operator; Terminal Equipment Technician; Teletype and Cipher Technician; Communication Technician; Safety Systems Technician; Metals Technician; Machinist; Refinisher Technician; Medical Assistant; Operating Room Assistant; Laboratory Technician; X-Ray Technician; Hygiene Technician; Biosciences Technician; Dental Clinical Assistant; Dental Laboratory Technician; Dental Equipment Maintenance Technician; Dental Therapist; Administrative Clerk; Accounting and Finance Clerk; Physical Education and Recreation Instructor; Musician; Draughtsman; Supply Technician.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ELIMINATION OF PROHIBITION ON ENLISTMENT OF MARRIED WOMEN IN CANADIAN FORCES

Question No. 372—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the prohibition on the enlistment of married women in the Canadian Forces be eliminated?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Marital status is not one of the enrolment criteria for enlistment in the Canadian Armed Forces for either men or women.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—INITIAL ENGAGEMENT IN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 373—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the length of the initial engagement for which personnel are required to enlist in the Canadian Forces be the same for women and men?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Both men and women are enrolled as other ranks in the Canadian Forces for an initial five year period. Officers, however, are enrolled for indefinite service or for a fixed period depending on the plan under which they receive their commission.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CANADIAN ARMED FORCES MATERNITY BENEFITS

Question No. 374—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that release of a woman from the Canadian Forces because she has a child be prohibited?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The present policy concerning a woman who has a child while serving in the Canadian Forces is that release will only occur where the individual woman so requests it, or where there is a clear indication that her retention will conflict with service requirements. Maternity benefits available to the serving woman now include leave entitlement and medical care.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACT

Question No. 375—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act be amended so that its provisions will be the same for male and female contributors?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The recommendation to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act so that its provisions will be the same for both male and female contributors is being studied in concert with other government pension plans. Any change would require legislation and would be presented to parliament in the normal manner.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—POLICY STATEMENT BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ENSURING EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY IN EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 376—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) the federal government issue a policy statement to the Ministers of all federal government departments, the heads of Crown Corporations and agencies, and the Speakers of the Senate and the House of Commons, expressing its intention to (i) ensure equality of opportunity in employment for women and the greater use of womanpower, and (ii) undertake short-term special measures where these are necessary to achieve its objectives; and (b) an information programme be undertaken so that management and supervisors at all levels in the Government of Canada be made aware of the government's policy regarding its employment of women?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): With respect to part (a) of the Recommendation, a Cabinet Directive was issued to deputy heads of all government departments and agencies in April 1972, directing them to "take steps to encourage the assignment and advancement of more women into middle and upper échelon positions". With respect to (b), this has been effectively implemented through the Cabinet Directive, the departmental activities and the service-wide Committee on Equal Opportunities for Women in the Public Service developed by the Public Service Commission's EOW Office and jointly chaired by the Commission and the Treasury Board, as well as the widespread public attention being focussed on the federal government's equal opportunities program.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—NATIONAL HOUSING LOAN REGULATIONS

Question No. 377—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the National Housing Loan Regulations be amended so that (a) for purposes of the gross debt service ratio, either husband or wife may be deemed to be the purchaser or owner and (b) up to 50 per cent of the income of the spouse of the purchaser or owner, or of the spouse of the person deemed to be the purchaser or owner, may be included in computing the annual income?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) and (b) The National Housing Loan Regulations were amended by Order in Council P.C. 1971-1767, August 18, 1971 to provide that either the husband or wife could be considered the home owner or the home purchaser, and that up to 50 per cent of the spouse's income can be included with the applicant's income. A further amendment to the National Housing Loan Regulations by Order in Council P.C. 1972-1836, dated August 24, 1972, makes it possible to include up to 100 per cent of the spouse's income for the purpose of qualifying for an NHA loan.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PARTICIPATION BY SPOUSE IN CANADA AND QUEBEC PENSION PLANS

Question No. 378—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission of the Status of Women that (a) both the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans be amended so that the spouse who remains at home can participate in the Plan, and (b) the feasibility be explored of (i) crediting to the spouse remaining at home a portion of the contributions of the employed spouse and those contributions made by the employer on the employed spouse's behalf, and (ii) on an optional basis, permitting the spouse at home to contribute as a self-employed worker?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Minister of National Health and Welfare will meet with his provincial colleagues in April to examine the total Canadian social security system, and to determine the manner and extent to which the present system might be more satisfactorily organized and made more responsive to the needs of Canadians. Such issues, as posed by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, would fall within the scope of these discussions. With respect to the Quebec Pension Plan, amendments were made on January 1st, 1973, and no action was taken by the Government of Quebec in regard to these particular recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—WOMEN'S VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATIONS

Question No. 379—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government (a) make greater use of women's voluntary associations; and (b) increase their financial support ot (i) women's voluntary associations engaged in projects of public interest, and (ii) voluntary associations working in fields of particular concern to women?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Citizenship Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State has increased its financial support to women's voluntary organizations engaged both in projects of public interest and projects related directly to the concern of women from $6,000 in 1971-72 to $75,000 in 1972-73.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ILO, INSTRUMENT OF RATIFICATION OF CONVENTION 100

Question No. 380—Mr. Howard:

Order Paper Questions

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Canada deposited with the ILO the Instrument of Ratification of Convention 100 on November 16, 1972.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CANADA LABOUR STANDARDS CODE—EQUAL WAGES PROVISIONS

Question No. 381—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Female Employees Equal Pay Act be amended to apply to all employees of the Government of Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Female Employees Equal Pay Act was revoked, effective July 1, 1971, by an Act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and equal wages provisions are now included in Part III of the Canada Labour Code (Labour Standards). Part III of the Code does not apply to employees of the Government of Canada.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—FAIR WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOUR REGULATIONS

Question No. 382—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Female Employees Equal Pay Act, the federal Fair Wages and Hours of Work Regulations and equal pay legislation of provinces and territories require that (a) the concept of skill, effort and responsibility be used as objective factors in determining what is equal work, with the understanding that pay rates thus established will be subject to such factors as seniority provisions; (b) an employee who feels aggrieved as a result of an alleged violation of the relevant legislation, or a party acting on her behalf, be able to refer the grievance to the agency designated for that purpose by the government administering the legislation; (c) the onus of investigating violations of the legislation be placed in the hands of the agency administering the equal pay legislation which will be free to investigate, whether or not complaints have been laid; (d) to the extent possible, the anonymity of the complainant be maintained; (e) provision be made for authority to render a decision on whether or not the terms of the legislation have been violated, to specify action to be taken and to prosecute if the orders are not followed; (f) where someone has presented the aggrieved employee's case on her behalf and the aggrieved employee is unsatisfied with the decision, she have the opportunity to present her case herself to the person or persons rendering the decision who may change the decision; (g) the employee's employment status be in no way adversely affected by application of the law to her case; (h) where the law has been violated, the employee be compensated for any losses in pay, vacation and other fringe benefits; (i) unions and employee organizations, as well as employers and employer organizations, be subject to this law; (j) penalties be sufficiently heavy to be an effective deterrent; and (k) the legislation specify that it is applicable to part-time as well as to full-time workers?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): 1. The Canada Labour (Standards) Code as amended on July 1, 1971, revoked the former Female Employees Equal Pay Act and set out provisions relating to equal pay which substantially meet the requirements of these recommendations.

2. The recommended amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Regulations are under consideration.

3. The Minister of Labour cannot answer for the provinces and the territories.

[Mr. Howard.]

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PAY RATES FOR NURSES, DIETITIANS, HOME ECONOMISTS, LIBRARIANS, AND SOCIAL WORKERS

Question No. 383—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the pay rates for nurses, dietitians, home economists, librarians and social workers employed by the federal government be set by comparing these professions with other professions in terms of the value of the work and the skill and training involved?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Members of the Nursing, Home Economics, Library Science and Social Work occupational groups, like members of most other occupational groups in the Federal Public Service, bargain collectively for their terms and conditions of employment under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. They are represented by the union of their choice. Employees represented by union have the fullest opportunity to advance those factors which they believe should be taken into account in determining terms and conditions of employment including rates of pay. In the event that agreement cannot be reached by negotiation, employees have a choice of arbitration or conciliation as a means of dispute resolution. The Employer's position in all Public Service negotiations has consistently been that of paying salaries commensurate with those paid by other employers in Canada, i. e. those paid by the competition.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CANADA AND QUEBEC PENSION PLAN

Question No. 384—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that legislation on the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan be amended so that the provisions applicable to the wife and children of a male contributor will also be applicable to the husband and children of a female contributor?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): See response to Question 378.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Question No. 385—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Unemployment Insurance Act and Regulations be amended to provide a common definition for "dependants" of women and men contributors?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): When regulations were made on 6 July, 1971 under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the subsection which placed a limit on the earnings that a dependant could receive and still be considered a dependant was changed from what it had read under the former Act to provide a common definition for "dependant" of men and women contributors. Also under these regulations a common law wife can be considered a dependant of a claimant. On 20 June, 1972, the regulations were amended so that a common law husband could be considered as a dependant. The only difference that now remains is that the regulations provide that a man can consider his wife as a dependant if she is being maintained wholly or mainly by him whereas a wife can consider her husband as a dependant if he is dependant on her.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—EMPLOYEE-EMPLOYER RELATIONSHIP

Question No. 386—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Unemployment Insurance Act be amended to apply to all employees working in an established employee-employer relationship?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The new Unemployment Insurance Act which came into force on June 27, 1971, effectively implemented Recommendation 15 of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, which stated: "We recommend that the federal Unemployment Insurance Act be amended to apply to all employees working in an established employee-employer relationship". This new Act extends considerably unemployment insurance coverage, with the result that the great majority of employees working in an employer-employee relationship are now protected. About 98% of persons under a contract of service are now covered. The very few individuals who are not, remain outside the plan for reasons such as having only a very casual or minor attachment to the labour force, they can be considered to have retired or they should not be insured in their employment at a particular time because of their relationship to their employer.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—MATERNITY LEAVE

Question No. 387—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the amendment of the federal Fair Employment Practices Act provide for (a) an employed woman's entitlement to 18 weeks maternity leave, (b) mandatory maternity leave for the six-week period following her confinement unless she procures a medical certificate that working will not injure her health, and (c) prohibition of dismissal of an employee on any grounds during the maternity leave to which she is entitled?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Part III of the Canada Labour Code (Labour Standards) now includes provisions for maternity leave of 17 weeks, and the other requirements of recommendations (b) and (c).

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—MATERNITY LEAVE BENEFITS

Question No. 388—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Unemployment Insurance Act be amended so that women contributors will be entitled to unemployment benefits for a period of 18 weeks or for the period to which their contributions entitle them, whichever is the lesser, (a) when they stop paid work temporarily for maternity reasons or (b) when during a period in which they are receiving unemployment benefits, they become unable to work for maternity reasons?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which became effective on June 27, 1971, fulfilled the intent of this recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. The Unemployment Insurance Act (1971) provides that women with the necessary attachment to the labour force, which is defined as 20 or more weeks of contributions in a qualifying period, are entitled to 15 weeks of benefit which are payable as follows: eight weeks before the week of confinement, the week of confinement and six weeks after the confinement.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION ON BASIS OF SEX OF EMPLOYMENT ON AIR LINES

Question No. 389—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the elimination of any discrimination on the basis of sex in the terms and conditions of employment for air crew on air lines?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): On may 10, 1972 the Minister of Labour tabled for first reading Bill C-206, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Employment Act with respect to discrimination in employment based on age, sex and marital status. The Bill would have prohibited discrimination in respect of any term or condition of employment on grounds of sex in respect of all employment within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. That employment includes air crews on airlines. The Bill died on the order paper in the last parliament.

The Department of Labour is reviewing Bill C-206 with a view to preparation of a successor Bill.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—SEX-TYPING OF OCCUPATIONS

Question No. 390—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that sex-typing of occupations be avoided in the text and in the illustrations of all federal government publications?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission.

It is now a policy of the Public Service Commission to avoid any sex-typing of occupations in the text and illustrations of its publications, which are subject to regular review through the Commission's Public Relations Division and the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women. The bulk of the federal government careers and occupations material is produced by the Public Service Commission, thus ensuring implementation of the recommendation generally throughout the service.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—DISCRIMINATION IN JOB REFERRALS

Question No. 391—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Canada Department of Manpower and Immigration refuse to make arrangements for firms to interview students in connection with positions for which the firms have specified sex preferences or sex requirements?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Canada Manpower Centres, in the conduct of their referral operations, are bound by the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, which stipulates inter alia, that they shall not discriminate in the referral of any job applicant to an employer on the basis of sex, except where such a limitation, specification or preference is based upon a bona fide occupational qualification.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATION THAT SEX AND MARITAL STATUS BE INCLUDED AS PROHIBITIVE GROUNDS FOR DISCRIMINATION

Question No. 392—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) the Fair Employment Practices Act be amended to (i) include "sex" and "marital status" as prohibited grounds for discrimination, and (ii) apply to all employees of the Government of Canada; and (b) The Fair Wages and Hours of Work Regulations be amended to include "sex" and "marital status" as prohibited grounds for discrimination?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (a) On May 10, 1972, the Minister of Labour tabled in the House of Commons Bill C-206, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Employment Act with respect to discrimination in employment based on age, sex and marital status. The Bill died on the order paper in the last parliament. A successor Bill is under consideration. (b) The recommended amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Regulations are under consideration.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—INCREASE IN NUMBER OF WOMEN ON FEDERAL BOARDS, ETC.

Question No. 393—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government increase significantly the number of women on federal Boards, Commissions, Corporations, Councils, Advisory Committees and Task Forces?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The government has made 200 Order-in-Council appointments of women since it took office in 1968. These include twenty-four full-time appointments, among whom are two at the deputy minister level, Dr. Sylvia Ostry and Dr. Jean Boggs, four are judges and the rest are to full-time positions on such boards as the Canadian Transport Commission, the Economic Council of Canada, the National Parole Board, the Pension Board, the Public Service Commission, the Citizenship Court, the Canadian Pension Commission, The Immigration Appeal Board, as well as the Law Reform Commission and the LeDain Commission. There have also been 176 appointments to part time boards such as the Science Council, the National Film Board, the Canada Development Corporation and others. When a position is vacant, a reminder is sent out to the minister responsible for filling the position, to take into account not only the ethnic, linguistic and geographic factors but also the need to appoint more women.

[Mr. Howard.]

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—STUDY OF FEASIBILITY OF GREATER USE OF PART-TIME WORK IN CANADIAN ECONOMY

Question No. 394—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government undertake a study of the feasibility of making greater use of part-time work in the Canadian economy?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Canada Department of Labour is now studying this question.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ELIMINATION OF DIFFERENTIAL TREATMENT OF NURSING ASSISTANTS AND NURSING ORDERLIES

Question No. 395—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the differential treatment of Nursing Assistants and Nursing Orderlies in the federal Public Service be eliminated?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): There has recently been an amendment to the classification standard which places nursing assistants and nursing orderlies at the same wage level thus removing the wage differential. After discussions with the bargaining agent this change in the standard has been made retroactive to January 1, 1972.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—CLASSIFICATION OF SECRETARIAL POSITIONS

Question No. 396—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the positions of secretaries in the federal Public Service be classified by one of the methods used for other classes in the federal Public Service?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Arising from the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women several alternative methods of evaluating secretarial positions in the Public Service have been examined. The most feasible method is to be determined after a test is carried out using actual positions in a number of major departments. These studies are expected to be completed by the end of September 1973.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

Question No. 397—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Public Service Superannuation Act be amended so that (a) there will be no differences in the provisions on the basis of sex, and (b) the surviving spouse of a contributor will be paid the supplementary death benefits?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): At the request of the President of The Treasury Board, this recommendation was studied by the Advisory Committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act and a report has been made to the Minister. The Government's decision will be announced in due course.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—REMOVAL EXPENSES

Question No. 398—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Removal Expenses Regulations be amended so that the expenses paid for the wife of an employee will also be paid for the husband of an employee?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): A new "Relocation Directive" including appropriate provisions to implement the recommendation is being developed by the Treasury Board Secretariat with a view to issuance in the near future. The Relocation Directive will replace the Removal Expenses Regulations.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—MATERNITY LEAVE

Question No. 399—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations be amended by (a) deleting section 50(2), and (b) substituting the provision that, during the six weeks period preceeding the expected date of an employee's confinement, a deputy head may direct the employee to proceed on maternity leave unless she produces a medical certificate that she is able to work?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): (1) Section 50(2) of the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations has not been deleted; (2) Section 50 of the said Regulations was amended by Treasury Board on September 23, 1971 as follows: "(1) Every female employee who becomes pregnant and who applies for leave of absence without pay (hereinafter called "maternity leave") shall be granted maternity leave by her deputy head for a period commencing at least eleven weeks before the expected date of the termination of her pregnancy and ending not later than six months after the date of the termination of her pregnancy." "(2) the deputy head may, (b) grant maternity leave to any female employee to commence earlier than eleven weeks before the expected termination of pregnancy;" This amendment increased from two months to eleven weeks the length of time a female employee is entitled to be granted maternity leave prior to the expected termination date of her pregnancy. This amendment brings the subsection in line with amendments to the Canada Labour Code as passed by parliament and proclaimed July 1, 1971.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PAYMENT OF SUPERANNUATION AND GSMP CONTRIBUTIONS WHILE EMPLOYEE ON MATERNITY LEAVE

Question No. 400—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal government continue to pay the employer's contribution to the superannuation and Group Surgical-Medical Plans when an employee is on maternity leave?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): On March 30, 1972 the Treasury Board revoked the Group Surgical-Medical Insurance Regulations and approved the Public Service Health Insurance Regulations. Among the provisions contained therein was one providing supplementary health insurance coverage at the regular cost to employees on maternity leave.

The recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in relation to the Group Surgical-Medical Insurance Plan has therefore been implemented.

The further recommendation relating to superannuation contributions is being considered with the other recommendations on the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act referred to in Question No. 397.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—PUBLIC SERVICE BINDING POSITIONS

Question No. 401—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that federal Public Service bindery positions at levels 1 and 2 be open to women and men on the same basis and that the job title "journeywomen" be eliminated?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The Public Service bindery positions at levels 1 and 2 are now open to men and women on the same basis and the job title "journeywomen" has been eliminated.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT OF WOMEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 402—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that, until the sex-typing of occupation is eradicated the federal Public Service Commission and federal government departments (a) take special steps to increase the number of women appointed to occupations and professions not traditionally female, (b) review and, where necessary alter their recruitment literature and recruiting programs to ensure that it is abundantly clear that women are wanted in all occupations and professions, and (c) take special steps to obtain applications from qualified women when appointments for senior levels are outside the service?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission. With reference to part (a) of the Recommendation, the establishment of the Commission's Office of Equal Opportunities for Women in February 1971 constituted a "special step" in this direction, since one of the functions of this Office is to propose and promote programs and special measures within the public service that will ensure equality of opportunity is provided in all aspects of employment, including recruitment and selection, training and development, promotion, etc. Further special impetus came with the issuing of a Directive by the Cabinet in April 1972, sent to deputy heads of all government departments directing them to "take steps to encourage the assignment and advancement of more women into middle and upper échelon positions". The Cabinet Directive provided a policy framework for departmental activities and resulted in the establishment by the Commission's EOW Office of an interdepartmental committee to co-ordinate action and provide a mechanism for exchanging information and measuring progress. Twenty-three departments are represented on the committee which meets in full session four times yearly, with work groups meeting on an ad hoc basis to deal with special problem areas and matters affecting the employment of women in the public service. A further point on part (a) of the Recommendation: appointment activity in recent months indicates there is an increase of women in non-traditional occupational groups. To illustrate, a women has been appointed director of the Secretary of State department's Social Action Branch; another has been appointed director of information for the Department of Communications; another woman has been appointed director of the Socio-Economic Program at the Public Service Commission; the Agriculture Department has appointed four female agricultural officers, the first in the history of the department; three women are in trade commissioner training at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, etc. An employment information counsellor is being appointed at the Public Service Commission to further assist capable women both within and those from outside the service, in learning of employment opportunities throughout the service. On part (b) of the Recommendation action has been taken through the development of special education and information projects by the Commission, among them the production of an equal opportunities audio-visual presentation, an equal opportunities newsletter entitled "Interaction", (25,000 copies of which are issued five times yearly), and brochures and posters which have been distributed across Canada, both within and outside the public service, to heighten awareness of the federal government as an equal opportunities employer. In addition, special attention is being paid through recruiting programs, speeches, seminars and discussions in universities, community colleges and high schools to encourage girls and young women to prepare for careers in "shortage areas" and traditional male-oriented occupations, such as accounting, commerce, economics, statistics, financial administration, etc. The Commission's new advertising policy, noted above, requiring all advertising posters to carry immediately below the logo, the words "This competition is open to both men and women," has become a further means of making it "abundantly clear that women are wanted in all occupations and professions". Early trends on results of this new policy, indicate that it is resulting in an increase of applications from women, particularly in the non-traditional applied sciences fields. A more detailed evaluation of policy is currently being conducted. Regarding part (c) of this recommendation, special efforts are being made to ensure that capable women from within the service as well as outside the service are fully considered for competitions at the senior levels. An inventory has been compiled of qualified women within the service who would be suitable candidates for senior executive positions. (Two new appointments of women to the senior executive category were made in November, 1972). In addition, in order to increase the number of applications from capable women outside the service, universities, national associations, and other sources have been drawn upon as resources for developing a roster of qualified women from whom such applications may be derived. The advertising policy directive of June, 1972 is another special means of increasing applications from women inside as well as outside the service.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—ELIMINATION OF IMBALANCE PROPORTION OF WOMEN AND MEN IN SENIOR POSITIONS

Question No. 403—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Public Service Commission and federal government departments have as an objective the elimination of the imbalance in the proportion of women and men in senior positions and (a) as much as is feasible, emphasize potential rather than experience as a basis for appointment or promotion; (b) ensure that vacancies are open to employees at a classification level low enough to permit consideration of qualified women; and (c) when a job opens, make sure that women candidates get full consideration including the evaluation of their experience in volunteer work and running a household if it is relevant?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission. Regarding part (a) of this Recommendation, "potential" is one of the three major factors in the evaluation of a candidate for selection and promotion, the other two being "knowledge" and "experience". On part (b) the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women maintains an inventory by department, group and level of all women in the public service in the scientific and professional and administrative and foreign service categories and is carrying out comparative analyses on the career and mobility patterns of men and women in the service, with a view to identifying problem areas requiring special action. The Commission has responsibility for defining the area of competition, under Section 13(b) of the Public Service Employment Act, and in so doing care is taken to ensure that the area is broad enough to include qualified persons at lower levels who have potential for development. Action on part (c) of the Recommendation has been taken with the issuing of a directive by the Public Service Commission to departments concerning the assessment of all relevant volunteer experience in candidate selection.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—WOMEN IN ADMINISTRATIVE POSITIONS

Question No. 404—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the federal Public Service Commission and federal government departments (a) introduce programmes that will ensure the consideration of secretaries for administrative positions, and (b) open up intermediate and senior administrative positions to women in traditionally female professions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission: Part (a) of this recommendation is being implemented with the development by the Commission of two special courses: (i) Self-Development and Career Growth for Secretaries (two weeks in length), and (ii) Special Officers' Development Course for the Administrative Support Category (three weeks in length) During the 1972-73 fiscal year six courses in each of the two programs have been held with an average 33 participants each. A similar number of courses in both programs is scheduled for the 1973-74 fiscal year, available in both French and English. The two programs are the initial steps in long-term efforts to improve opportunities for administrative support personnel, the majority of whom are women, to advance into the officer groups. Comprehensive evaluations are being carried out by the Public Service Commission in 1973, to assess the effectiveness of the two programs, and in the case of the Special Officers' Development program, to assess the post-course assignment phase of the program, in which course participants return to their home departments for a six to ten month developmental assignment to prepare them for promotion competitions for officer positions. Initial indications from the assignment of the first Officers' Development Course of February 1972, indicate a positive trend. Eight months after the course, of the 29 first course participants, eight had been promoted to officer positions with a further nine promotions predicted within four months. On part (b) of the Recommendation, the Commission is examining the occupational and salary levels of women in traditionally female professions such as nursing, library science, and social welfare work as a preliminary step in determining appropriate means of increasing opportunities for persons in these groups to attain intermediate and senior administrative positions.

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—WOMEN IN ADMINISTRATIVE TRAINEE POSITIONS

Question No. 405—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that (a) a special effort be made to attract more women applicants for administrative trainee positions in the federal Public Service, and (b) federal government departments ensure that women administrative trainees are given the kind of training assignments that will prepare them for advancement to the senior levels?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Currently, approximately 30 per cent of administrative trainee positions are filled by women. However, special efforts are being made by the Commission through the university recruitment programs, the EOW newsletter "Interaction", speeches, literature and audio-visual presentations, etc., to attract more women at the point of intake, as well as to ensure that the assignments of both male and female administrative trainees are creative and preparatory for career advancement. A major evaluation of the administrative trainee program is being carried out by the Commission program responsible for recruiting administrative trainees, and will track the 1967-1969 period using linguistic and sex breakdowns, examining the AT population, the assignment phase of the program, advancement rates, attrition rates etc., with a view to determining future courses for action. On the matter of female representation levels in the AT group, it should be noted that currently approximately 37 per cent of all university graduates are women, and, as a consequence, the proportional intake of female university graduates is relatively comparable to the population from which the administrative trainee program draws.

Order Paper Questions

STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION—RECOMMENDATIONS TO INCREASE ENROLMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE MANAGEMENT COURSES

Question No. 406—Mr. Howard:

What action has been taken with the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that action be taken to increase greatly the enrolment of promising women in federal Public Service management courses, including the step of waiving salary floors and age ceilings where necessary in their case?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission: A number of special projects are being undertaken in efforts to increase the number of women nominated by departments to centrally-run (i.e., Bureau of Staff Development and Training operated) mangement courses. The average participation rate of women in management courses currently is approximately 11% of the eligible female population in the service. These special efforts include: (a) Development of one or two day modules discussing the role of women in the work world, the management world, the attitudes of men and women and the socio-cultural influences affecting female work patterns, etc. These are being developed for incorporation by "animators" and trainees in BSDT courses to assist in attitude changing and motivating both men and women about changing work patterns and work roles. (b) Administering of an attitude survey to all participants of BSDT courses in 1972 (some 2,500 persons) sponsored by the Equal Opportunities for Women Office as a further means of changing attitudes. (c) Development of a special edition of the EOW newsletter "Interaction" on training and development policy and opportunities throughout the federal services. It is being prepared for March distribution with a basic 25,000 copies to be distributed to the regular "Interaction" audience, plus an additional 10,000 for selected distribution to training and development officers and women in junior and middle management positions in the service.

To further assist in improving female participation rates on departmentally run courses, the Commission, in conjunction with a Treasury Board Specialist (Women's Interests), is maintaining a watching brief on the training rates in the service through the Board's annual review of training and education.

TRADE OFFICES IN U.S.S.R.

Question No. 408—Mr. Wagner:

1. How many members of Canada's Embassy in Moscow are Trade and Commerce officers or directly involved in improving U.S.S.R.-Canada Trade?

2. Does the government have any consulates or trade missions in the U.S.S.R. located outside of Moscow?

3. Has the government approached the Government of the U.S.S.R. in the hope of establishing consulates or trade missions outside of Moscow and, if so, what has been the response?

4. In what other countries of the Warsaw Pact does Canada have consulates or trade offices outside the Capital City?

5. What efforts are being made to establish such offices?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has three officers at the Canadian Embassy in Moscow and all are directly involved in trade work.

2. There are no Canadian government offices outside Moscow in the U.S.S.R.

3. When Canada agreed to the establishment of a Soviet Consulate General in Montreal, one condition was that Canada should be able to establish, when it was required, a comparable office in the U.S.S.R., subject to mutual agreement at the time. This commitment was confirmed in the general communiqué issued at the end of Mr. Martin's visit to the U.S.S.R. in November 1966.

4. Canada has no offices outside the capital city in countries of the Warsaw Pact.

5. There are currently no efforts underway to establish such offices. Trade officers in capital cities currently travel extensively throughout their territory.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT REGULATIONS—AMOUNTS REPAYABLE TO RECEIVER GENERAL

Question No. 499—Mr. Symes:

1. What amounts have been deemed repayable to the Receiver General in accordance with Section 49(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act for each quarter of the calendar year 1972?

2. What amounts repayable to the Receiver General have been written off for each category under Section 175 of the Unemployment Insurance Act Regulations for each quarter in the calendar year 1972?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Quarter ending 31 March 1972, $4,902,638; Quarter ending 30 June 1972, $9,-057,250; Quarter ending 30 Sept. 1972, $8,732,297; Quarter ending 31 Dec. 1972, $8,108,466.

2. Quarter ending 31 March 1972, $116,096; Quarter ending 30 June 1972, $93,920; Quarter ending 30 Sept. 1972, $169,333; Quarter ending 31 Dec. 1972, $216,172.

PUBLIC WORKS—CONFEDERATION BUILDING

Question No. 557—Mr. Latulippe:

Is it the intention of the government to build an underground tunnel linking the Confederation Building and the West Block for Members of Parliament to go from one building to the other and, if so, on what date will the project be implemented?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): The whole matter of interconnection amongst the several buildings on and adjacent to Parliament Hill, including the Confederation Building, has been and is under study and review. Until this study has been completed, it is impossible to say what, it any, action will be taken in respect of a tunnel to the Confederation Building.

INSHORE OIL BOOM TENDER

Question No. 583—Mr. Hellyer:

Was the description of the required material in tender file No. LKT8080-2-1392 Inshore Oil boom that of a specific industrial product rather than a general specification and, if so, for what reason was this practice followed?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The description of the required material requested in the tender was a general specification.

OFY—WOMEN AND MARRIED STUDENT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 617—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many OFY employees in 1971 and in 1972 were women and how many were married students?

2. What percentage of all of OFY employees were women?

3. What percentage of all OFY employees were married students?

4. How many and what percentage of women and married students employed by OFY in 1971 and in 1972 returned to university each fall?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. The Opportunities for Youth Program provided employment to 7,403 women in 1971 and 13,449 in 1972. There are no available statistics on the number of married students.

2. In 1971, 26.6%; in 1972, 44.9%.

3. There are no available statistics on the number of married students.

4. There are no available statistics for 1971. In 1972, 22,046 or 73.6% of all Opportunities for Youth project participants said they were continuing their education in the fall of 1972; these statistics were not broken down by sex and marital status.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—LOTBINIÈRE

Question No. 645—Mr. Fortin:

Has the Department of the Secretary of State invested funds in the constituency of Lotbinière through the Opportunities for Youth Programme and, if so (a) what is the amount (b) what is the complete list of individuals responsible for accepted projects (c) what was the amount of each grant allocated and the number of jobs thereby created?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): A list of all projects funded under the 1972 Opportunities for Youth program has been completed. Projects are classified by province and in alphabetical order of the towns and cities in which the projects were carried out, not by constituency. Information includes the project title and number, a short description of the projects' activities, amount of the grant, number of participants, and the name and address of the project representative. This 421 page listing can be obtained from the Secretary of State Department.

ISSUANCE OF STAMP TO COMMEMORATE ROBERT BURNS

Question No. 655—Mr. Macquarrie:

Is it the intention of the Post Office Department to emulate that of the U.S.S.R. and other countries in issuing a stamp honouring the great poet Robert Burns?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): It is not the intention of the Canada Post Office to issue a postage stamp honouring the Scottish poet Robert Burns. The policy of the Canada Post Office is that subjects selected for postage stamps should illustrate the cultural and economic life of Canada or contribute to an awareness of our traditions, accomplishments and history. Only ten to twelve subjects can be selected each year from several hundred suitable themes of significance and interest to Canada and Canadians. The revised commemorative stamp programme for 1973 is as follows: 31 January, François de Laval; 21 February, Algonkian Indians; 9 March, Royal Canadian Mounted Police Centennial; 18 April, Jeanne Mance; 16 May, Joseph Howe; 8 June, J.E.H. MacDonald; 29 June, Centennial of Prince Edward Island's; Entry into Confederation; 2 August, Royal Visit and Commonwealth Meeting; 14 September, Bicentennial of Arrival of Scottish; Settlers at Pictou, N.S.; 10 October, Nellie McClung; 1 November, Christmas; 28 November, Algonkian Indians.

"USER-PAY" POLICY WITH RESPECT TO AIRPORT FACILITIES

Question No. 700—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. Was a fund established for the financing of the government's "User-Pay" policy with respect to airport and air terminal facilities and, if so (a) on what date (b) by what method has it received monies (c) what is the fund's total at the present time?

2. Of this total how much has been used for the specific purposes of the fund?

3. Of the monies used, have any been used for the contruction of new or the replacment of existing facilities and, if so (a) what are the specific instances (b) how much has been expended in each case?

4. Have any monies been designated for use at (a) Ste. Scholastique Airport (b) Malton Airport (c) the proposed Pickering Airport and, if so (i) what are the amounts in each case (ii) over what period?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Vote L160 was established in the 1969-70 Estimates. The purpose of establishing this Vote was: "To authorize the operation of an Airports Revolving Fund in the current and subsequent fiscal years in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Treasury Board, for the purpose of the operation and development of the Montreal and Toronto International Airports and such other airports as Treasury Board may approve. . . " (a) April 1, 1969 (b) The Fund receives (a) all monies received from the operation of the said airports, and (b) all loans made by the Minister of Finance. (c) The Funds total Assets as at March 31, 1972 as shown in Public Accounts is $290,429,000.

2. Of this total all has been used for the specific purposes of the Fund.

3. Some of the money has been used for the construction of new facilties and some has been used for the replacement of exisitng facilities (a) and (b):

Montreal and Toronto International Airports	Construction of New Facilities	Replacement of Existing Facilities	Total
Dorval	$ 11,345,000	$1,241,000	$ 12,586,000
Ste. Scholastique	127,818,000		127,818,000

Pickering	1,801,000		1,801,000
	$185,602,000	$2,222,000	$187,824,000

The above covers Fiscal Years 1969-70 to 1971-72 inclusive.

4. (a) yes, (i) $255,449,000, (ii) Fiscal year 1969-70 to 1972-73 incl.; (b) yes, (i) $127,782,000, (ii) Fiscal year 1969-70 to 1972-73 incl.; (c) yes, (i) $67,888,000, (ii) Fiscal year 1969-70 to 1972-73 incl.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INFORMATION TO ISOLATED AREAS

Question No. 733—Mr. Marshall:

Is it the intention of the Secretary of State to ensure that every effort will be extended to providing all information to students who live in remote and isolated areas, and do not have access to reasonable TV, radio and telephone communications, of the Opportunities for Youth Programme and, if so, will the Minister look into the reasons for the delays by CBC to provide normal TV service to Northern Newfoundland?

Hon. J. H. Faulkner (Secretary of State): The Secretary of State has taken steps to ensure that information on Opportunities for Youth programs is provided students living in remote and isolated areas and not having access to TV, radio and telephone communications through project officers who personally solicited applications from such areas, and through contacts with local school officials, community leaders, etc. In addition, Opportunities for Youth program operations were decentralized this year in an effort to afford a more effective response to the diversified character of regional and subregional needs. All staff have been recruited from the region in which they will serve and operations are being directed on a regional basis. In so far as the second part of the question is concerned, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has greatly improved its television coverage to the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundland by establishing a rebroadcasting station at Bonne Bay in 1971 by increasing the power of its existing station at St. Anthony's and by applying for yet another rebroadcasting station at Mount St. Margaret's which is expected to go on air in the fall of 1973.

OFY—NORTHERN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 736—Mr. Marshall:

1. Is it the intention of the Secretary of State to seek the co-operation of Information Canada to ensure that all Canadians who live in remote and isolated areas and do not have access to reasonable TV and radio communication and are out of reach of Manpower Centres will receive all pertinent material and assistance, so that they will have equal opportunity to submit applications for employment and, if so, how will this be implemented into communities in Northern Newfoundland in the constituency of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe which takes in the Great Northern Peninsula?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Secretary of State and Information Canada as follows: 1. Information brochures on "Summer 73", OFY applications and accompanying brochures on how to apply for a grant in the Opportunities for Youth program were distributed to all Information Canada Centres. In addition, Opportunities for Youth made pertinent program material and assistance available through project officers who personally solicited applications from such areas (including communities in Northern Newfoundland in the constituency of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe which takes in the Great Northern Peninsula) and through contacts with local school officials, community leaders, etc.

2. No. Information Canada was dissatisfied with the reports because they were not representative of the country. It is expected the reports will recommence when Enquiry Systems are established in all Regions.

POLAR ICEBREAKER

Question No. 742—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will a polar icebreaker be constructed in Canada and, if so, are there shipyards in Canada large enough to build a vessel of 100,000 horsepower or more and from which competitive bids could be obtained?

2. What mandatory minimum percentage of special equipment required in such vessels will be of Canadian content?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Studies are presently being carried out on questions related to the design of a polar icebreaker. A team is being assembled to gather all the pertinent data to bring about a polar icebreaker design, cost estimate, and anticipated Arctic traffic that it may be required to support. Following this, a recommendation will be made that construction be proceeded with immediately or set aside until a more appropriate time. Yes, there are Canadian shipyards capable of building such a ship and providing competitive bids.

2. It is the Ministry of Transport's policy to ensure that Canadian equipment, where available and competitive, must be used in ships being built for the Coast Guard fleet.

COMMERCIAL MARINE TRANSPORTATION IN ARCTIC

Question No. 752—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What steps does the government intend to take in order to make commercial marine transportation in the Arctic safe and acceptable?

2. Does the government have any programme in operation that would produce the necessary ongoing oceanographic services in order to produce reliable navigational charts of the region and (a) if so, at what stage are these programmes in terms of eventual completion date (b) if not, is it the intention of the government to commence such studies, and, if so (i) on what date (ii) with what projected completion dates?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Environment is concerned: 1 and 2. Nautical Charts based largely on reconnaissance surveys presently exist for the major Arctic Waterways. Detailed charting activities of existing and potential ports and routes are being accelerated to meet demands. Intensive survey work has been carried out over the past twenty years but, because of the requirement for continued updating of Nautical Charts, a final completion date cannot be projected. In so far as the Ministry of Transport is concerned: 1. The government presently provides aids to navigation, ice-breaking support and regulations concerning ship construction and manning in the north.

2. These are continuously under review and are being updated to meet the need.

CNR—COMMUTER SERVICE IN MONTREAL

Question No. 775—Mr. Stackhouse:

Did CNR incur a deficit from providing commuter service in the Montreal area during (a) 1971 (b) 1972 and, if so, was this deficit paid by (i) moneys from the government and/or the Quebec Government (ii) CNR from its general revenues?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: (a) Yes. (b) Yes. (i) No. (ii) Yes.

OPPORTUNITY FOR YOUTH GRANTS—DURHAM COUNTY, ONTARIO

Question No. 787—Mr. Lawrence:

Who, or what organizations, resident or located in the County of Durham, in the Province of Ontario, received Opportunity for Youth Fund grants or financial assistance, what were their respective addresses, what was the purpose of each such grant, and how much was paid to each, in each of the years 1971 and 1972?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): A list of all projects funded under the Opportunities for Youth program in 1971 has been completed. Projects are classified by Province and then by type of project, not by constituency. A list of all projects funded under the 1972 Opportunities for Youth program has been completed. Projects are classified by Province and in alphabetical order of the towns and cities in which the projects were carried out, not by constituency. Information includes the project title and number, a short description of the project's activities, amount of the grant, number of participants and the name and address of the project representative. This 421 page listing can be obtained from the Secretary of State Department.

COUNTY OF NORTHUMBERLAND—OYF GRANTS

Question No. 788—Mr. Lawrence:

Who, or what organizations, resident or located in the County of Northumberland, in the Province of Ontario, received Opportunity for Youth Fund grants or financial assistance, what were their respective addresses, what was the purpose of each such grant, and how much was paid to each, in each of the years 1971 and 1972?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): A list of all projects funded under the Opportunities for Youth program in 1971 has been completed. Projects are classified by Province and then by type of project, not by constituency. A list of all projects funded under the 1972 Opportunities for Youth program has been completed. Projects are classified by Province and in alphabetical order of the towns and cities in which the projects were carried out, not by constituency. Information includes the project title and number, a short description of the project's activities, amount of the grant, number of participants and the name and address of the project representative. This 421 page listing can be obtained from the Secretary of State Department.

VANCOUVER—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION JOB PLACEMENT ASSISTANCE

Question No. 987—Mr. Reynolds:

1. On February 1, 1973, did Hospitality Personnel Service of 1015 Burrard Street, Vancouver, B.C. request UIC assistance in the placement of 80 people and, if so, what was the reply?

2. Did Mr. G. E. Hubley, Director of Manpower Operations for the Pacific Region write Hospitality Services on February 2, 1973 to indicate that Manpower Offices do not refer workers to employment agencies and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. Yes. Unemployment Insurance Commission representatives met with Hospitality Services on February 5, 1973, to discuss employment opportunities available through this company. The company was advised that the Unemployment Insurance Commission was prepared to make unemployed, experienced hotel and restaurant employees aware of job vacancies as registered with Hospitality Services.

2. Yes. Mr. G. E. Hubley's letter to Hospitality Services explained the Department's policy as it relates to private fee-charging employment agencies only. The policy is as follows: Canada Manpower Centres may refer clients to private fee-charging employment agencies provided that those clients referred are to fill bona fide vacancies on the agencies' staff. But Canada Manpower Centres will not refer clients to such agencies for re-referral to employer clients of these agencies. Notwithstanding this policy, pilot projects involving the reciprocal referring of vacancies have been established between the Department and some private fee-charging employment agencies, in Toronto and Montreal, as a first step in the process of reviewing this policy. Work is also underway towards the establishment of similar pilot projects in Vancouver, B.C. and Halifax, N.S.

MUNICIPAL AIRPORT, BERGERONNE

Question No. 1,002—Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix):

1. Has the government made funds available for (a) installation (b) maintenance (c) improvement of the municipal airport of Bergeronne (a private airport used by Anglo-Pulp and Hydro-Quebec) and, if not, is the government considering investing funds in this airport?

2. Has the government reached or is it considering negotiating an agreement with respect to this airport and, if so, on what date will it take effect and for what period of time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The government has not made funds available for (a) the installation or (b) the maintenance of the municipal airport of Bergeronne. The Ministry of Transport provided $12,000 for improvements to the runway and this is expected to be paid in the near future.

2. The municipality of Grande Bergeronne has not approached the Ministry of Transport for a further agreement with respect to this airport.

LIP GRANT FOR INNOVATION QUEBEC PROJECT

Question No. 1,003—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Has the Department of Manpower and Immigration made a LIP grant for a project under the name of Innovation Québec whose address was 4101 Jarry East, Montreal and, if so (a) what were the names and addresses of the promoters of the project (b) what was the amount of the grant (c) to whom were the cheques issued (d) on what date and in what amounts?

[Translation]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) The sponsors of the project were Mr. Marcel Ducharme, President, of 8400 23rd Avenue, St. Michel 456, and Mr. Fernand Laliberté, Secretary, of 7490 22nd Avenue, Montreal 453. (b) The Department made a grant to a project entitled Innovation Quebec under the 1971-72 Local Initiatives Program. The grant was initially for $112,320 for the period February 14, 1972, to May 31, 1972, which was subsequently increased on April 21, 1972, to $131,976. On May 30, 1972, the project was extended to September 30, 1972, the contract value being increased from $131,976 to $317,304, and on September 21, 1972, a further extension to November 30, 1972, was granted, the contract value being increased to $408,968. Cheques have been issued as follows:

(c) Payee	(d) Date	(d) Amount
Innivation Quebec	March 7, 1972	$ 44,199.00
Mr. Ducharme	April 17, 1972	56,889.00

CAMPUS CRIME

Question No. 1,014—Mr. Mather:

What was the rate of "campus crime", i.e. theft, violence, rape in each year 1962 to 1972?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Crime figures are not broken down by locality where the offence is committed. Any offence committed on a university campus would be reported to us by the Police Department policing the municipality where the campus is located as part of their total statistics.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—BENEFIT DISQUALIFICATIONS

Question No. 1,020—Mr. Hueglin:

1. What is the estimated amount of money saved by UIC benefit disqualifications in (a) 1972; (b) 1971?

2. Of all claims disqualified in (a) 1971 (b) 1972 how many resulted in application of penalties?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. It is not possible to determine the unpaid benefits resulting from disentitlements. There is no way of knowing how long the disentitlement actually lasts. Claimants may stop reporting to the Commission when they find they are ineligible for benefits or perhaps they have found work. Therefore benefits not paid because of a disentitlement cannot be measured.

JAMES BAY ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

Question No. 1,070—Mr. Harding:

1. How many environmental studies which relate to the James Bay Project and in which the government has participated, have been completed or are currently in progress?

2. (a) What is the objective of each project (b) on what date did each commence (c) on what date was the study completed or expected to be completed?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. Environmental studies relating to the James Bay Project are currently in progress in the fields of climate, oceanography, wildlife, fish, vegetation, water quality, archeology, geomorphology and biophysical mapping. One has been completed.

2. (a) The objectives of each project are: 1. To establish baseline data with which to assess the impact of development in the James Bay area of Quebec on the environment. 2. To enable recommendations to alter the design, construction or operation of the development, as required, to protect the environment. (b) All studies began in the late summer and fall of 1971. (c) One project on Ice Accretion on Structures was completed in December, 1972. All other studies except those of a monitoring nature are scheduled for completion by March 31, 1976. It is expected that interim results for specific areas will be available earlier and certain migratory bird studies will be completed in 1974.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—FULL-TIME EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,090—Mr. Paproski:

1. How many full-time employees were under salary in the Department of National Defence on (a) January 1, 1963 (b) January 1, 1973?

2. How many people of each of these years were receiving salaries of (a) under $10,000 (b) between $10,000 and $20,000 (c) over $20,000?

CONSTRUCTION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE FROM WEST INTO ONTARIO

Question No. 1,166—Mr. Darling:

1. Has the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources any knowledge of plans to construct another natural gas pipeline from the West into Ontario?

2. Has the Department received any applications from firms or individuals interested in constructing such a pipeline?

3. If such applications are filed, has the Department considered requiring that any new pipeline be constructed along Highway 69 when it passes through the Parry Sound-Muskoka area, in order that an entire new region would have access to natural gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In so far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: 1. No, other than the eastward extension of the proposed Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline and the looping of the existing system of Trans-Canada PipeLines Limited.

2. No.

3. This requirement is not within the Department's authority.

TRANSPORT—BLUEPRINTS OF HALIFAX, QUEBEC CITY AND TORONTO AIRPORTS

Question No. 1,167—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Does the Department of Transport have blueprints of the Halifax, Quebec City and Toronto Airports and, if so, do they show five car rental firms in each airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, the Department of Transport does have blueprints of the Halifax, Quebec City and Toronto Airports and, no, they do not show five car rental firms in each airport.

TRANSPORT—STUDY OF FUTURE FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NEW ENGLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,179—Mr. Haliburton:

1. Has the government initiated any study by the Department of Transport or by consultants regarding future requirements of ferry services between New England and Nova Scotia during the period 1967 to date?

2. Has the government initiated any study into the nature and extent of demand for ferry services between Bar Harbor, Maine and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia as presently served by M.V. Bluenose with a view to determining (a) whether there is traffic which might be handled by a vessel using end-loading techniques (b) whether there is sufficient traffic to justify a second ferry on that run at any season of the year?

3. Has the Department initiated any investigation of the M.V. Bluenose to determine the life expectancy of that vessel and to estimate how long it might effectively serve on its present run?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. (a) Yes, (b) Yes.

3. Yes.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF TRACTORS AND AUTOMOBILES

SEA ISLAND—VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS OF HEARING OFFICER

Question No. 1,212—Mr. Reynolds:

Were any of the recommendations of the hearing officer (Fisher) on the Lancaster area hearings (Sea Island-Vancouver International Airport) accepted and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): No recommendations were made by the Hearing Officer. The Expropriation Act recites the Duties of the Hearing Officer in Section 8 (4) and requires that he "submit to the Minister a report in writing on the nature and grounds of the objections made."

VICTORIA INNER HARBOUR—WINTER WHARFAGE

Question No. 1,214—Mr. McKinnon:

Has it been decided that the winter wharfage for the fishing fleet in Victoria Inner Harbour is to be phased out and the operation moved to Sooke Harbour and, if so, is it the intention of the Minister of the Environment to review the matter, giving cognizance to the views of the Mayor and Council of Victoria and the Pacific Trollermen who want the wharfage increased in Victoria Inner Harbour?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): It has not been decided nor are there any plans that the winter wharfage for the fishing fleet in Victoria Inner Harbour be phased out and the operation moved to Sooke Harbour.

ESTABLISHMENT OF POSTAL DELIVERY SERVICE IN WINDSOR MUNICIPALITY

Question No. 1,216—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Is the Post Office Department considering the possibility of establishing a postal delivery service in the Municipality of Windsor and, if so (a) what criteria are required by the Department for the establishment of such service (b) what steps are to be taken by the Department until this service is actually in operation?

2. According to the Department, if the Municipality of Windsor meets the required standards, what is the approximate date on which this postal delivery service will be instituted?

3. Does the Post Office Department consider the present Windsor Post Office adequate to meet the new role it will be given if the Municipality's request is accepted?

4. Is the Post Office Department considering the possibility of recommending the enlargement of the Windsor Post Office if the Municipality's request for postal delivery service is accepted and, if so, what will be the nature of this construction or alteration of the present Post Office?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. Yes. A preliminary survey is to be conducted later this month to determine whether the area qualifies for this service. 1. (a) The principal requirement is the availability of at least 2,000 points of call in a compact, well built-up area. Subsidiary conditions are: 1. Walking conditions within the area must be satisfactory on a year round basis. 2. There must be access to the homes by means of pathways or driveways, where conditions under foot are deemed to be satisfactory. 3. The premises must be numbered in accordance with a municipal numbering plan and numbers must be placed so that they are clearly visible from the street. 4. Street names and signs must be erected at intersections. 5. It must be possible to make transportation arrangements for the letter carriers, when necessary, due to the serving of areas well removed from the Post Office. 6. Suitable letter slots or boxes must be installed. 1. (b) Information concerning procedures to be followed prior to the establishment of this service covers some 17 pages in a manual and is considered too lengthy to be repeated here.

2. This is contingent on the results of the preliminary survey mentioned in Part 1.

3. See part 2.

4. See part 2.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR—PERSONNEL

CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHERN GAS PIPELINE

Question No. 1,274—Mr. Rowland:

1. Has the government received representations from Mr. Charles P. Bennett and M. Dimentberg of Winnipeg, Manitoba, to the effect that the costs of construction of a Northern gas pipeline could be reduced by a factor of 50% if the system was designed to transport natural gas in a liquid rather than vapour state?

2. Has the government investigated the accuracy of the submission and, if so, by whom was the investigation carried out and what were the findings?

3. Has the government investigated the proposal for a liquid natural gas pipeline from the point of view of its potential for reducing damages which might result from a break and, if so, by whom and with what results?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes.

2. The federal government has been making such an appraisal on an interdepartmental basis.

3. Yes, as part of 2.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF TEST LOOP FOR NORTHERN PIPELINE

Question No 1,275—Mr. Rowland:

Is the government giving consideration to providing funds for the construction of a test loop for the purpose of evaluating the efficacy of a liquid natural gas pipeline in transporting natural gas from the North of Canada to the South and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The federal government is not giving consideration to providing funds for this purpose because test loop feasibility work for pipelines is a responsibility of industry.

BANK OF CANADA GOLD RESERVES

Question No. 1,498—Mr. Matte:

What are the current gold reserves of the Bank of Canada and on which criteria is the issuing of paper currency and coins based?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The Bank of Canada does not own any gold, either for reserve or for other purposes. Pursuant to Section 21 of the Bank of Canada Act, the Bank has sole right to issue notes intended for circulation in Canada. The Bank does not maintain gold reserves as a counterpoint of outstanding notes. The amount of the note and coin issue is determined by the general public's demand, and depends on whether the public prefers to hold its liquidities in the form of notes and coins rather than in the form of deposits with chartered banks and other financial institutions. Currency outside banks (coins and notes) represents only a portion of the money supply, which is usually defined to include currency outside banks and total Canadian dollar deposits with chartered banks. For economic stabilization purposes, the Bank of Canada's efforts are therefore directed towards controlling the total money supply rather than one of its components.

1. By province, since 1967, what was (a) the seeded area (b) the total crops (c) the value of the rapeseed crop?

2. What part of such crops was exported and what part was consumed in Canada?

3. What were the rapeseed and its by-products used for in Canada?

4. What industries or enterprises are the largest buyers of rapeseed and its by-products and for what purpose are they used?

5. Does the government make grants of any kind to rapeseed growers and, if so, under what form?

Return tabled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make reference to starred question No. 1,658, which asks:

1. What information has the Department of External Affairs been able to secure concerning the disappearance of the aircraft operating under the auspices of ICSC which carried Mr. J. W. Douglas Turner, an external affairs officer, and two other Canadians on board en route to Hanoi on October 18, 1965?

2. Did the minister of external affairs, when in Hanoi, bring up this matter with the authorities in North Viet Nam, in Laos or South Viet Nam and, if so, what was he able to ascertain?

This is a very touching situation. The parents of this young man have been trying since 1965 to find out something concerning their son and the other two Canadians who disappeared at the same time. They have had a harrowing experience for eight long years. Some have endeavoured to get an answer to this question and have made inquiries of the Department of External Affairs, but without success. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was over there. The question could easily be answered and should be answered. No one who has not had a relative missing with no report of the missing person for years can fully appreciate how terrible is the plight for the mother and father of this young man.

• (1420)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have approved the answer to the question and I do not understand why it was not given today. I will make inquiries, but may I say I have answered oral questions about these people who disappeared, and I share the right hon. gentleman's concern.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With no information in the oral answers.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if we can have some assurance that Hansard will be published on time tomorrow in view of the fact more questions on the order paper have been answered than at almost any other previous session of parliament, and answered promptly by the government.

Mr. Baldwin: Go back three years.

An hon. Member: You haven't even come close to it.

Mr. Hees: Never was such a large backlog answered with so little.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I have had a question on the order paper since January 4, the first day the House sat. I should like the assurance of the parliamentary secretary that the question will be answered by Wednesday.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to look into it.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to grant Bell Canada almost all the rate increases it requested in its application A, and the need for the government to suspend the application of the decision immediately and to consider rescinding it as unacceptable and contrary to the public interest.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has given the Chair the required notice of his intention to propose this motion under the terms of Standing Order 26. Since then I have given the matter very serious thought, but even at this moment I feel that the decision should perhaps be delayed for a while as authorized by the Standing Order. I appreciate, as the hon. member does, and I am sure as all hon. members do, how important this matter is. I recognize it is a matter of urgency, a matter of national importance and one of concern to all members of the House.

What concerns me is that perhaps the method proposed under Standing Order 26 for discussion of this important matter may not be the best in the world and not the best in the circumstances. Hon. members know that a debate under Standing Order 26 is really an open-ended debate with no motion before the House except that the House adjourn, and the adoption of such a motion means that hon. members go home. I am not sure whether, in the circumstances and in view of the importance and interest in this matter, the best way would be to have a debate under Standing Order 26. It is a matter of substance and perhaps we should have it before us under a substantive motion rather than under a motion to adjourn the House.

It is because of this uncertainty and these qualms that I would like to be given an opportunity to give the matter further thought, perhaps in light of the question period and what may transpire later this afternoon, and then make a ruling, as I am authorized to do under Standing Order 26, later this afternoon, in any event at or before five o'clock. If there is to be a debate today it would take place at eight o'clock this evening, but at or before five the Chair will be in a better position to make a more informed and enlightened decision.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA AND CN-CP TELECOMMUNICATIONS RATE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING REVIEW BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION—CABINET CONSIDERATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the appeal made by the Minister of Finance to labour and business to use restraint this year, I should like to ask whether the government intends to ask the Canadian Transport Commission to review its recent decisions granting increases in rates to Bell Canada and to CN-CP Telecommunications?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are considering this question, and if an announcement is to be made it will be made.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the cabinet is reviewing this recent decision by the CTC in view of the significance to the economy and to the inflationary expectations in the country?

Mr. Trudeau: I have just answered the question, Mr. Speaker.

M. McGrath: In view of the very serious problem of the high cost of living faced in Canada today by all Canadians, may I ask the Prime Minister if the government is prepared to set an example by enforcing guidelines on areas within the government's jurisdiction?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe we indicated as long as four years ago that to combat inflation we were indeed prepared to recommend guidelines and apply them ourselves.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF IMPLEMENTATION UNTIL GOVERNMENT STUDY COMPLETED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct it to the Minister of Communications. Arising out of the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission of last Friday, I ask the minister whether he has had a chance to study the decision and whether he will take steps to suspend the operation of that decision until the government has had time to study it and take action on it.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as just stated by the Prime Minister, the matter is under consideration. The hon. member knows that parliament has deemed it advisable to entrust control to an independent body, the Canadian Transport Commission. He also knows that the government, that is the governor in council, cannot decide to alter, suspend or annul a decision unless there is an extremely serious reason to do so—for example, if the decision is based on a false assumption—or on serious factual mistakes.

When I learned that decision, as did all hon. members on Friday last, I acted as is normally done in the Department of Communications when such decisions are made; I asked my officials to determine as soon as possible whether government intervention is warranted. Once I have on hand the conclusions of that study and the consideration by the government, I will be in a position to answer the hon. member's question in the House.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate what the minister has said, but in view of the fact that the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission states toward the end that the change in tariffs will come into effect one week after the tariffs are tabled with the commission, in view of the fact that this may happen very soon, and finally in view of the fact that once those tariffs are imposed changing them or rolling them back would present the government with great difficulty, may I ask the minister whether he is now studying—I hope favourably— the possibility of suspending the operation of the decision so that he and his colleagues may have time to decide what they may do about it?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, in order to recommend to the government if only to suspend that decision, what I have just said must be ascertained. There must certainly be an extremely important reason. There are very few precedents in this field. In view of the philosophy of the government, and even of parliament quasi judicial bodies are independent from the executive power, as much as possible, and this government endeavours to respect this autonomy. However, as I said, I for one have asked senior officials of the department to review this question as soon as possible and I certainly do not propose to delay the decision making process regarding this.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South on his second or third supplementary and then the hon. member for Egmont. If there are further supplementaries, hon. members will be recognized after I give an opportunity to an hon. member of the other party to my right to ask a question. For the moment, the hon. member for York South has the floor.

• (1430)

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister whether, in view of the fact that the law has not only set up the Canadian Transport Commission and given it certain authority but has also given the Governor in Council authority to vary or rescind any decision made by the commission, in view of the fact that parliament must have given that authority to the government so that the government could use that authority when the appropriate circumstances are present, and because of the other facts I stated in my last question, could he guarantee to present an answer to the House within a week from this day before the new tariffs are likely to come into operation?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I can promise, Mr. Speaker, to do everything I can to that end, but I think that it would be presumptuous of me to promise that, within the next five days, the department's review would be concluded. I could not promise him that. I can only assure him that I will hurry.

[English]

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF DEFENDER OF INTERESTS OF GENERAL PUBLIC IN SUCH APPLICATIONS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that these recent rate increases and other actions taken by the Canadian Transport Commission indicate there is an obvious lack in the workings of the commission in that there is little opportunity for the public to be represented with the same degree of effectiveness that large corporations such as Bell Telephone and others have in presenting their cases, are the Prime Minister and his colleagues giving some thought to introducing legislation so that all of these impartial boards, such as the CTC, would have before them from time to time, when requests are being made such as the Bell Telephone application, those who would act on behalf of the public interest or as a defender of the general public in order to present their case with the same effectiveness as that possessed by those speaking on behalf of very large corporations that have the resources to make their presentations effectively?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under the law which created the CTC and which was debated at great length in parliament not many years ago, the CTC was set up indeed as a defender of the public interest, one which was to look into all aspects of any question before authorizing any rate increase. That is why in a sense the control of rates, of prices and of wages in our economy, if recommended at all, will have to be done by boards that represent the public interest, as does the CTC. I will certainly consider the suggestion made by the hon. member to see if in some way the board can be assisted in its duties of representing the public interest, and if the suggestion has merit we will discuss legislation.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In this consideration would the Prime Minister consider as an example the months of testimony before the CTC, when it appeared obvious that the role of the CTC was that of a judge hearing the facts impartially. The fact that one very large corporation had tremendous resources while those who attempted to represent the public interest did so, unfortunately, with very limited effectiveness because they lacked similar resources, and that this may be one reason for the decision with which we are faced now?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is really questioning the philosophy which is at the base of all public interest boards. I believe parliament agreed at the time—and I certainly still share that view—that tribunals, boards and judicial or quasi-judicial bodies are set up to represent the public interest. The idea that they are automatically influenced by some strong representation made to them is not one which I share. I repeat that there may be some added procedures that might be introduced to ensure that the board is enlightened further, but until I have seen evidence to the contrary I do take the view that these boards are there and that they do speak for the public interest. Indeed that is why, as the Minister of Communications just indicated in his answer, they are removed from the executive power, to make sure that there will be no undue interference by politicians in the subject.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have one final supplementary question. In attempting to review this process—and I think it is the process, not the philosophy, with which hon. members are concerned—would the Prime Minister inquire or those who did make representations at the recent hearing whether they felt they had adequate resources to deal effectively with some of the very complicated issues that were adjudicated by the CTC?

Mr. Trudeau: I can certainly look into the matter, but I am afraid there is a difference of principle between the attitude of the hon. member and that of the board as it is set up under the law. I can only remind the House that, indeed, if any form of control is to be introduced it has to be set at arms' length from the government and it should not be subject to interference, not only by the government but by parliament, on a day to day basis.

Mr. Stanfield: That is not the question.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister, in his reconsideration of this very important matter of principle, look at the debate on the establishment of the CTC which took place in January, 1967, and in particular examine the motion of the hon. member for Peace River, seconded by myself, on this very point in which we gave the examples of Australia and Saskatchewan as a way of not interfering with the efficient handling by the CTC but at the same time giving parliament some control, and look in particular at how the vote took place on that amendment?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED IMMEDIATE DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND OTHERS ON TRANSPORT OF ALASKAN OIL THROUGH CANADA

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the Supreme Court decision announced today in Washington, which effectively barred the Alaska pipeline and the proposed tanker route along the Pacific coast, is the minister considering holding immediate discussions with the United States authorities, the British Columbia government and others on the subject of the only alternative left to the United States, namely, the transport of Alaskan oil through Canadian territory?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we would like to see the decision and have a full report on it and also get an assessment of its impact under United States law, namely, whether the decision of the Supreme Court effectively bars Alyeska or whether possible Congressional action can remove that particular bar.

As I have told the House several times, the government has been active in presenting to the U.S. administration the possibilities of the Mackenzie route through Canada for Alaskan oil and, as I also indicated, this, of course, is dependent upon the terms of the National Energy Board Act which in the first instance puts the judgment on this in the hands of the National Energy Board. What we would like to do is to get a full assessment of the U.S. position before making further public statements at this time.

Mr. Harding: Will the minister consider placing this important matter before the appropriate standing committee of the House for investigation and study without delay?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It really is before a committee now, as the hon. member knows as a participant in the National Resources and Public Works Committee. If the committee chooses to elect this particular subject matter under the estimates of my department, I would be prepared to go ahead and have a full discussion of it. It is up to the steering committee to decide on the subject matter with which they would like to deal under this general heading.

CO-ORDINATION OF CANADIAN OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE THROUGH JOINT GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can he advise the House whether there is now a joint task force or committee of the federal government and the B.C. government instructed to co-ordinate Canadian opposition to the tanker route, and I emphasize the word "now"?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As I indicated to the House, we immediately requested of Premier Barrett the information and the professional studies upon which he had put forward his Yukon railway proposal, and I sent to British Columbia last week the assistant deputy minister of my department to look further into the preparation that the B.C. government had done prior to this. I might mention to the hon. member who is the environmental critic, that not all environmental critics favour the Mackenzie pipeline route as a means of dealing with the transportation of oil products.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to again consider what I asked him, and that is whether there is any joint committee? Is there any plan on behalf of the government to set up a joint co-ordinating committee with British Columbia, and has British Columbia been invited in specific terms of join in such a committee, because even the Prime Minister said eight weeks ago that time was of the essence?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with federal responsibility for the Mackenzie Valley and with a pipeline which in essence will not go through British Columbia at all. I have a little difficulty in understanding why the British Columbia government would be participating in this kind of decision, to be taken under federal law, with regard to a pipeline passing through federal territory. We regard ourselves in this parliament as representing the interests of so far as the west coast is concerned, British Columbia, and it is for that reason I have been active in the past year in presenting this alternative to the United States authorities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that there are a number of supplementaries on this subject. I am not sure whether the right hon. member for Prince Albert also wishes to ask a supplementary on this matter.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—AUTHORITY OF GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL IN REGARD TO FINAL DECISION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked earlier and concerns a statement by the Prime Minister in connection with what, on the face of it, appears to be an outrageous increase in rates on the part of the Bell Telephone Company. The Prime Minister told the House that, after all, the Canadian Transport Commission is an independent body, set up free for parliament, and so on. Is it not a fact that regardless of how independent it is, the final decision as to whether the increases shall be granted rests with the Governor in Council, the cabinet, which has the power to suspend, postpone, alter, or do away with altogether the recommendations that are made by the commission? Does not the final power rest with the Prime Minister and his cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the right hon. gentleman is asking for a legal opinion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no.

Mr. Trudeau: And if on the face of it the rate increase is so obviously outrageous, I do not see why his party does not condemn it unequivocally.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a typical example of the Prime Minister playing with the parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would be the last to ask him for a legal opinion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Why did you ask, then?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, he even has the support of his Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask him this question: has not the government of Canada the right under the statute to do that which I suggested a moment ago, or has he not read the statute?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman says that he would be the last to ask me for a legal opinion. He has just asked me for a legal opinion. I can only say that as he is constantly bemoaning that this place is not lively enough I am sure he and I will want to contribute to the liveliness of it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the right hon. member is rising on a question of privilege he will be recognized for that purpose. I was under the impression that we were going to deal with supplementaries to the second question. When we have settled the question of privilege the Chair will return to the hon. member for Kootenay West, then the hon. member for Calgary North and then the hon. member for Yukon who have supplementaries on the second subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege on behalf not only of parliament but of the people of Canada. The Prime Minister refuses to admit his responsibility and that of his cabinet. He tries to brush it aside by an imaginary suggestion that a legal opinion is involved. The people of Canada look to the government, although I know unsuccessfully, to protect them from this type of inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR THOROUGH EXAMINATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA PROPOSAL THAT ALASKAN OIL BE TRANSPORTED BY RAIL

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Kootenay West has the floor and he should be given an opportunity to ask his question.

Mr. Harding: My supplementary relates to the Alaska pipe line. I felt the minister indicated that preference would be given to the Mackenzie Valley route. I would like to ask him whether he will assure the House and the government of British Columbia that a very thorough discussion and examination of its proposal of a railway to transport oil from Alaska will be undertaken before any decision is made as to which route, if any, is to be taken?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I would only say that if Premier Barrett in fact did any studies before making his Yukon railway proposal, I am certain he will be glad to make these background studies available to the government of Canada. I hope they will be forthcoming shortly.

U.S. SUPREME COURT DECISION BARRING ALASKA PIPELINE—SUBMISSION OF CANADIAN POSITION—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, has the minister now officially or unofficially put forward Canada's position very clearly so that the U.S. Congressional hearing at least will have that knowledge? Second, since there seems to be some question of where the government stands on this issue, would the minister undertake to make a clear and unequivocal statement on the energy policy of the government, particularly when we are dealing with an energy problem that really is a world crisis?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the second question would require a statement rather longer than I would be allowed to give during the question period. With respect to the first question, I would remind the hon. member that repeatedly during the past year and several months since I have been in this portfolio I have put the position of the government regarding the possibilities of the Mackenzie route before the House and the government of the United States. I am, however, governed by the National Energy Board Act as to the decision that should be taken.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that it would take too long today, but I am asking if tomorrow or very soon the minister will make an unequivocal statement on the national energy policy of the government, dealing with this matter of whether we are going to have a supertanker route down the west coast or whether we are going to have a pipeline, because that energy is going to be moved in spite of this government that will not be moved?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to remind the hon. member that the oil resource he is talking about is not here in Canada. It is in Alaska and the Americans are seeking to move it to the southern 48 states. If he pauses to think about it for a moment he will realize that the question of a trans-Alaska pipeline is one of U.S. energy policy and not of the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon and after his supplementary try to go to another subject.

REQUEST THAT TERRITORIES BE REPRESENTED ON ALL BODIES CONCERNED WITH POSSIBLE NORTHERN PIPELINE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have only one supplementary. I would like to direct it to the Prime Minister since it involves several departments of government and the question of a pipeline. I ask him to give the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories his personal assurance, and that of his government, that in all discussions, on all task forces, and in all consideration given to the matter of a pipeline to be built through the northern portion of this country, the people there will be represented through their elected representatives on the territorial councils?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, whenever it is appropriate we do ensure such representation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED TUBAL LIGATION OF NATIVE WOMEN WITHOUT THEIR KNOWLEDGE OR AGAINST THEIR WILL

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that a program of tubal ligation is being carried out on native women who apparently do not understand the consequences or claim they have not been informed that they are being sterilized, can the minister say what steps are being taken to rectify this shocking situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the hon. member's statement that this program was set up by the government.

I listened myself to yesterday's CBC program; the Deputy Minister of National Health had given instructions concerning these operations.

Mistakes may have been made, and I know that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is studying the problem at the moment. But the government has no established policy concerning the sterilization of Indian women.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Is the minister suggesting that the native women who were interviewed on the CBC and said the operation was done either against their will or without their knowing were in fact making false statements?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said just now that there is always a possibility of mistakes. But the government's policy on this is quite clear, and these operations only take place when requested by the person concerned. The Department of National Health and Welfare requires in every case that there should be an interpreter present to facilitate conversation between the two doctors and the patient.

FINANCE

LOWERING OF TARIFFS ON FOOD IMPORTS—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ACTION RESPECTING OTHER SEGMENTS OF ECONOMY

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Because of the government's action in lowering the tariff on food imports and in setting up a special committee to study trends in food prices, and because of the concern expressed about the tremendous increase in food imports into Canada, is the government now considering controls or guidelines or direct action aimed at any other segment of the Canadian economy, or are the farmers of this nation and their families to bear the entire financial burden of the government's fight against high living costs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate and will agree, I am sure, that the second part of his question is argumentative and in this way the question is not in order.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should not be allowed to ask a supplementary to a question that is out of order, but I will be pleased to allow the hon. member to rephrase the question.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, that was my point. Thank you. May I ask the minister if the government contemplates imposing any controls or guidelines on any other segment of the Canadian economy comparable with those now imposed on the primary producers of this nation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the hon. gentleman has rephrased his question I want to say to the House that I do not accept his preamble and that the budgetary measures to which he refers also include a good many benefits to the farmers of this country, including transfers on death of the family farm and a good many items affecting farmers as consumers.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Peace River on a supplementary and then recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

JURISDICTION RESPECTING IMPOSITION OF PRICE CONTROLS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would he at the earliest opportunity make a statement on motions indicating if the Minister of Agriculture was enunciating government policy when he said in the House on Friday that only provincial governments have the right to deal with questions of controls? Would he at the same time indicate what are the circumstances of emergency under which this government would see fit to act?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that is a question of constitutional law.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: This is a new low for non-answers, Pierre.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—CONSIDERATION BY CABINET—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister assure the House that he will assign to his cabinet top priority for the consideration of the recommendations of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister will report to cabinet on the findings of the committee.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): In view of the urgency of the situation of rising food prices, resulting in protest movements of consumers across Canada, would the Prime Minister assure the House that he or one of his ministers will make a statement on motions within a week as to the government's intention in regard to implementing the recommendations of the committee report?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will consider that suggestion.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Did the government take any initiative to discourage Japanese food buyers from buying food, especially pork, in the last two weeks or so in this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such initiative.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ARREST OF CERTAIN PERSONS IN TORONTO—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF REGISTRATION DEADLINE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for immigration. Is he aware that on Friday, I believe just prior to the deadline, 60-odd persons were arrested in the city of Toronto? If so, could he shed some light on this procedure which calls for an explanation, failing which the gentle hand theory would perhaps go out the window?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the number is overstated. All the persons who were arrested last week in Toronto had arrived in Canada during November and December of last year and at that time they were not considered bona fide non-immigrants. All were released under bond to appear at a later date for a special inquiry. Those arrested had failed to appear and were arrested under provisions of the Immigration Act; all will appear at inquiries early this week.

Mr. Alexander: As there seems to be an indication by some immigration officers that they are extending time for registration, is this now government policy, or is the minister giving consideration to this matter in terms of extending the time for registration?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, people wishing to register can come forward at any time, but the deadline for registration as indicated in the release and the regulations early in January will stand. However, I expect to be able to make a more definitive and complete statement on this within a few days, and I hope to have the opportunity before the appropriate committee, I believe later this week.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

INQUIRY WHETHER HMCS "SAGUENAY" HELICOPTER EQUIPPED AND DISPATCHED TO SOUTHEASTERN ASIA WATERS

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Acting Minister of National Defence or for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is HMCS Saguenay helicopter equipped and has it been dispatched to Southeastern Asia waters to join the Terra Nova?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take the question as notice on behalf of my colleague.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DECISION ON FUTURE OF COQUALEETZA COMPLEX—REASON SALISH WEAVERS ASKED TO VACATE PREMISES

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his unavoidable absence I will direct it to the parliamentary secretary. It is based on a letter received from the minister under date of March 29 with respect to the Coqualeetza complex in my constituency, in which he states: "I have agreed to delay a final decision until March 23 pending receipt of the proposal." He was referring to the brief of the Indian chiefs. May I ask the parliamentary secretary if a final decision has yet been taken with regard to the future of the Coqualeetza complex?

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the presentation made by the Indians has been received by the department, is under active consideration, and no final decision has yet been reached.

Mr. Patterson: In view of the fact that the decision has not been made and also in view of the fact that action that is contemplated will destroy years of work and progress in reviving their native art and establishing sales outlets, could the parliamentary secretary advise the House why the Salish weavers have been ordered to vacate the Coqualeetza premises by March 31?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the point made by the hon. member and can neither confirm nor deny it, but I certainly agree that it is a matter of considerable interest. It will be looked into by the department immediately.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET FARM ORGANIZATIONS TO OBTAIN VIEWS—MEETING WITH WESTERN PREMIERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the finding of the food committee that the producer is suffering as much as the consumer from the fact that prices between the farm gate and the consumer continue to widen, will he meet with farm organizations in order to obtain the benefit of their views on current trends in prices?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the cabinet met less than three weeks ago with two farm organizations which made representations to cabinet on this and many other matters. I am always prepared to meet with representative organizations.

Mr. Gleave: May I ask the Prime Minister if, in view of the recent meeting of the four western premiers in which they expressed some unhappiness over the treatment that western Canada is now getting from Ottawa, he will contact the western premiers in order to ensure that there will be a meaningful exchange of views and concrete action at the forthcoming meeting next July with regard to some of these problems?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, surely the House realizes that it is the federal government that initiated these meetings and suggested they were necessary to meet problems that exist in the west. Therefore the hon. member's enjoinder should be addressed to the premiers rather than to this government.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED GROS MORNE PARK—DECISION ON NEWFOUNDLAND REQUEST FOR RENEGOTIATION OF BOUNDARIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister advise, as he indicated he would, whether he has reached a decision with regard to the request by the province of Newfoundland to renegotiate the boundaries of Gros Morne Park as they now discriminate against communities whose citizens do not want to move?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have made a decision and I hope to be able to inform the government of Newfoundland of it next week. I prefer not to inform the House so as not to be accused of favouritism.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated he would be providing information to the province of Newfoundland. As national parks fall within federal jurisdiction and as the member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe represents that district, will the minister indicate why I cannot get the information?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will communicate with both at the same time so that one will not be jealous of the other.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND NATIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister going to meet soon with the Native Council of Canada as requested by its president, Mr. Tony Belcourt, so that the council can have an input into the revised DREE policies which I understand will be announced in the not too distant future?

• (1500)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be more than pleased to meet with the particular group to which the hon. member refers. I had some meetings three or four weeks ago with one group, the Manitoba Indian groups that may wish to meet with me.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATION TO GIVE CROWN EQUITY IN CORPORATIONS RECEIVING GRANTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a question in terms of the review of his policy. Is the minister in a position to inform the House today whether the government will make it a requirement in the future that companies receiving financial assistance of any form from the federal government, will give the government of Canada some degree of equity in the corporation, as a consideration for the assistance?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this is one of several facets of the changes in the Regional Development Incentives Act that we are considering. The hon. member and I have had conversations on this. There are cases where it is an attractive proposition and, where that exists, we are certainly prepared to exercise that option.

ALLEGED TUBAL LIGATION OF NATIVE WOMEN WITHOUT THEIR KNOWLEDGE OR AGAINST THEIR WILL—PROVISION OF INTERPRETER

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This matter was raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. Can the minister, in conjunction with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, take such steps as will be necessary to assure these unfortunate native mothers that there will be on the staff of the Charles Camsell Hospital in Edmonton people who are able to communicate with them in their own language and dialect concerning the problems surrounding the very matter the hon. lady has been discussing?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is already the government's policy to ensure that there is an interpreter present. That may not be necessary in every case, but when the problem is discussed, the policy established by my colleague is that the choice must be given to the person concerned through an interpreter if this is necessary; I believe the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare may have more information to give the House.

HALIFAX HARBOUR—SUGGESTED MEETING WITH FISHERMEN TO PLAN FOR DISPOSITION OF DREDGED MATERIAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Will the minister use his good offices to suspend the dredging program in connection with the auto port in Halifax harbour until such time as the environmental protection service people have had an opportunity to meet with the fishermen and work out an adequate way of dumping the dredged material?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries and ensure that the necessary steps are taken.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED ARREST OF GREEK LAWYERS ACTING IN DEFENCE OF STUDENTS—REQUEST FOR EXPRESSION OF CONCERN BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I put this question to the Acting Prime Minister on Friday. Has the government received information that six Greek lawyers involved in the defence of students on trial in Athens have themselves been arrested, are being detained in police headquarters there and are reported to have been subjected to torture? If so, will the minister take the appropriate steps to indicate the humanitarian concern of the Canadian government and the Canadian people?

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member, I have been aware of these reports. First, I ought to make it clear there are no Canadians involved, neither as lawyers nor students, so we are not directly concerned to make representations on behalf of Canadians. However, we are concerned about the suppression of civil liberties in Greece. I have made representations along these lines to the Greek government and have made them publicly as well. However, one has to bear in mind that when dealing with an intervention in a legal proceeding one has to be careful not to do damage to those people one is trying to help.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSALS TO ASSIST SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On Friday, the minister referred to "new proposals which I am preparing in order to provide additional special assistance to small business." Is the minister willing to indicate to the House whether he can make a statement on motions tomorrow indicating what those proposals will be to help this very vital sector of our economy?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, these proposals are under very active consideration at the present time. When I have an announcement to make on policy changes, it will be made in the normal fashion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are reaching the end of the question period. The hon. member can ask a supplementary, and I will then try to recognize one or two additional questioners without supplementaries.

Mr. Beatty: Can I ask the minister whether he intends to introduce these proposals while there are still some small businesses left in this country?

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF CLOSING DATE OF ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Due to the fact that manpower centres have not been able to complete contracts under the training-on-the-job program relating to the job creation element, which includes agriculture, as of the March 31 closing date because of shortage of applicants for available jobs, will the minister consider extending this program until April 30?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will give the representation consideration.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE PAS INDIAN BAND—DISPUTE CONCERNING OPERATING FUNDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the minister aware of the dispute between his department and The Pas Indian band concerning operating funds? In view of the fact the band has relinquished all responsibility for programs on the reserve, and in view of the fact that over 300 children are not attending school, will the minister assure the House that he will take the necessary action to resolve the dispute without delay?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed of the situation. I feel it is unfortunate because just a few years ago there was absolutely no program vesting Indians with the authority to administer their own funds. However, we must operate within a budget and we are unable to meet the requirements of all Indians; I hope to be able to meet some of their requests. I do not believe it is possible to meet all their aspirations within one year. We have progressed tremendously in this area during the past few years, and attitudes of the kind that have been taken recently are not likely to further the cause of Indians more rapidly.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to do so. I had hoped to ask a question on this. In replying to a question on the government's jurisdiction over the Canadian Transport Commission with regard to the decision-making of that body, the Minister of Communications left some doubt whether he knew what he was talking about. He seemed to indicate there was some question whether the government had any jurisdiction after a decision had been made. Since that time I have had an opportunity to examine the National Transportation Act. For the education and edification of the Minister of Communications, may I refer him to Section 64(1) which gives the Governor in Council the authority to rescind any order of the Canadian Transport Commission.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE OF ICE BREAKER

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure how to get my point across to Your Honour and the House. For the past six or eight weeks the east coast of Newfoundland has been suffering from the worst ice blockade in history. Today, we received serious reports about a fuel shortage and the fact that one vessel is dangerously stuck in the ice floes. Despite the diligent efforts of the departmental officials to serve all the needs of the local inhabitants, they have not been able to do so. I wonder if I could ask the minister today to state whether he could mobilize some icebreaker facilities to assist in what could be a very serious situation. I am reluctant to ask this question, but it is of a nature that is very urgent and not the typical question raised in the House.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to consider that and discuss it with the hon. member.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Friday, March 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned on Friday, I was in the course of emphasizing that the economic nationalism, if you like to call it that, to which my hon. friends and I subscribe is not an expression of xenophobia but an essential ingredient of individual and national dignity. I said last Friday, in effect, that it was neither arid nationalism nor a case of outdated chauvinism. It is, as far as I am concerned, an assertion of a healthy national individuality. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot have confidence in ourselves if we lack confidence in our own country, and that a country incapable of making its own decisions would, indeed, deserve no confidence. That is the road along which we are now travelling. Fortunately, however, Canada at the present time still deserves our confidence; our people across the country know this and are proud of this. But we must take immediate steps to make sure that our ability to maintain this status is not further eroded.

The fact is that over the last five years an endless stream of statistics and studies has convinced even the most sceptical of Canadians that our economy is largely controlled from outside our borders and, this being so, many political decisions must at least be influenced by pressures which do not originate in Canada and which therefore fail to reflect Canadian interests.

May I remind the House of a couple of statements made by the President of Mexico last Friday—statements which I accept without reservation? I quote from page 2802 of Hansard:

The control of the state over the main economic processes is a necessary condition to maintain the autonomy of its political decisions. That is why there is a general concern to study and regulate the characteristics of foreign investment and of ways to absorb technological resources.

I will simply say that this has been the position taken by the New Democratic Party since its foundation. We have emphasized that it is impossible in modern conditions for a country to be politically self-reliant if it continues to be an economic dependency of a powerful neighbour, as is rapidly becoming the case as far as Canada is concerned.

The President of Mexico, a little further on in his address, said something which I also consider to be of great value and importance when he stated:

Within a framework of independence we shall accept and use technology in so far as it adjusts to the aims of our economic policy. We shall try to eliminate practices or stipulations which limit our exports, prevent the development of our own technology, make production more expensive or hinder our autonomous development. In short, we want technology to be an instrument of progress, not of subjection.

Nothing could be more relevant to this discussion. I subscribe to that comment without reservation. It is an eloquent statement of the position which my hon. friends and I have presented to the people of Canada for many years. Canadian governments and business leaders in this country have in the past made a fetish of economic growth for its own sake, without considering the quality of that growth or what it held for the future of Canada and what it did to the lives of Canadians in the process of the exploitation of their resources. The result is that we have a branch plant manufacturing industry which is not as efficient as it should be, one which is not as rationalized or as specialized as it should be to meet world competition. Second, there is little research done in Canada. Business leaders and governments have relied on foreign-owned corporations to carry out research elsewhere because it was cheaper to do so in that fashion than to be concerned with the skills and talents of scientists and others in this country and the future of Canada in a technological world.

In the resource industries, we have permitted these multinational corporations to ship out not merely Canadian resources but Canadian jobs, because we have allowed them to make use of our raw materials with little processing or refining or development done in this country. We ship out raw materials and later we buy back the finished product made from those materials in the United States or elsewhere. This is the way to the exhaustion of our natural resources without benefit to the people of Canada. It is not the way of a country which is proud, self-reliant and determined to define its own future.

Indeed, as I pointed out in great detail during the last election campaign, we have developed a taxation system deliberately designed to make it possible for multinational corporations to exploit our resources, and concentrate economic development particularly in the acquisition of massive investments in oil, energy and mineral products rather than in the manufacturing and service industries which provide Canada with the jobs that are needed. I say that this development, encouraged by Liberal and Conservative governments, as well as by the leaders of business in Canada—all continentalists, no matter how much they may deny it—has left Canada at the mercy of multinational corporations. This applies particularly in the sphere of exports where these corporations divide up world export markets. Canadian governments have helped this process. I refer, for instance, to the agreement by the Conservative party in the early sixties to divide Canada into two oil markets, one for the distribution of Canadian oil from the west and the other, east of the Ottawa River, for the sale of oil imported by the very international corporations which exploit our western reserves—oil imported from Venezuela and other countries. We have deliberately adopted policies designed to encourage this division of Canada, policies which have worked to the advantage of multinational corporations and to the disadvantage of the people of Canada.

Figures have already been placed on record in Hansard. Let me put a few further figures on record, because they are so revealing. The fact is that foreign control of our economy has been increasing steadily, particularly in the area of the resource industries. It has not been reduced in any sector. It has been increasing steadily year by year. Note these figures for the year 1969. They are updated from the figures in the Gray report which were based on 1968 statistics. In metal-mining 55.5 per cent is foreign-owned. The point I wish to make here is that this 55.5 per cent represents an increase from 38.5 per cent in 1965. In only four years or so, from 1965 to 1969, there was an increase amounting to about 75 per cent in the foreign control of our metal-mining industry. Control of fuels in 1969 amounted to 82.5 per cent. The figure for rubber products was 92.7 per cent—it could not increase any more. In the wood industry, the figure was 42.6 per cent, increased from 28.2 per cent in 1965.

Similarly, in 1969 the printing and publishing sector became 20.4 per cent foreign controlled, an increase from 11.3 per cent in 1965. In the machinery sector foreign control amounted to 73.2 per cent, transportation equipment 86.4 per cent, and in petroleum and coal a staggering 99.5 per cent. Almost all of our resources are controlled by foreign multinational corporations. In chemicals and chemical products, foreign control was 80.4 per cent and in manufacturing as a whole, 57 per cent. This was the extent to which Canadian industry in 1969 was controlled by these powerful multinational corporations.

I want to underline, in connection with these statistical facts, that the picture becomes even more frightening when you examine the situation in terms of size of these corporations to see which corporations have the real levers of control in the economy. Let us see to what extent they are Canadian controlled and to what extent they are foreign controlled.

Looking at all corporations in Canada in terms of size of assets, you find that corporations with assets of less than $1 million are only 9 per cent foreign controlled, 91 per cent being Canadian controlled. But corporations with assets from $1 million to $5 million are 29 per cent foreign controlled; corporations with assets from $5 million to $25 million are 50 per cent foreign controlled; and corporations with assets of over $25 million are 54 per cent foreign controlled. So you see that the larger the corporation, the greater its power over the economy, and the larger the proportion of foreign control in that particular sector of the industry.

As hon. members know, the picture in the extractive industries is really frightening for the future of this country. Foreign corporations in the extractive industries account for 70.6 per cent of the assets and about the same proportion of all profits. In the mineral fuels sector, foreign corporation account for 82.5 per cent of the assets and 90.7 per cent of all the profits.

The picture in the total mining industry, again in terms of asset size, shows that corporations with assets of under $1 million are only 33 per cent foreign controlled. That is high enough since it means one third of our mining corporations are foreign controlled. But when you move on to corporations with $1 million to $5 million worth of assets, the proportion of foreign control becomes 62 per cent; corporations with assets between $5 million and $25 million are 80 per cent foreign controlled; and those with assets over $25 million are 88 per cent foreign controlled.

The point that disturbs me about the position taken by the Liberal and Conservative parties is this. Last Friday the minister and also the hon. member for Trinity argued that foreign control, foreign capital and foreign investment in the past have assisted our development. I would ask, whom did it assist? Whose development has this foreign capital assisted? From the figures I have already cited, and from many other figures one can lay one's hands on, I would suggest that this foreign capital has meant foreign corporations have been assisted in exploiting our natural resources mainly for their own profit, not for the benefit of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The position taken by the hon. member for Trinity was that foreign capital has been useful and beneficial to Canada. Members of the Conservative party who have made interjections underline the fact that all of them believe that. They believe in that only because their concern is with the value and power of the corporations of this country and not with the value and power of the people of Canada. They are concerned with what the minister calls economic growth, without considering the consequences of that growth on present and future generations of Canadians.

The fact is that we have not needed foreign capital in this country for years. We have been selling Canada out with our own money. We have permitted foreigners to buy us out with our own dollars. In 1968, as all hon. members know, only 6 per cent of foreign capital expansion in this country was derived from parent corporations in the United States and other United States sources; 94 per cent came from Canadian sources, such as undistributed profits, from retained earnings, from various reserves, not least of which is the tax reserve that we permit these corporations to defer without interest for years on end, and from borrowing on the Canadian capital market.

I draw to the attention of hon. members, particularly Tory members in view of the comments they have made, that between 1960 and 1969 Canada had a net loss as a result of foreign investment in this country. In those 10 years, 1960 to 1969 inclusive, U.S. investments totalled in round figures about $5.5 billion. But we paid to parent corporations that invested this money in Canada, $6.25 billion by way of interest and dividends, and a further $1.75 billion in royalties and fees of all sorts. Thus we paid out to United States corporations a total of $8 billion in return for a total investment of $5.5 billion in ten years. In other words, we paid out to American corporations $2.5 billion more than we got from them in the form of direct investment.

Yet members of the Liberal and Conservative parties still claim that we need foreign investment. On behalf of the New Democratic Party I say that, except for the occasional area that may occur, we do not need foreign investment in this country. Canadian savings are sufficient to provide us with all the capital necessary to develop this country through the efforts and skills of Canadians alone. In view of this net outflow of $2.5 billion in the space of ten years, I ask the minister and the hon. member for Trinity, where in heaven's name has there been any benefit to Canada from capital investment in this country during the last ten years?

This brings me to the bill which is before the House. I agree with the minister that this bill is a great improvement over the bill which we opposed last year, which we were determined to stall and did prevent from passing. It is obvious that this bill is a response by the government to growing concern right across the country about the issue of foreign investment and control of our economy. I dare to suggest—because I know it is true—that the improvements contained in the bill before the House are also a response to the New Democratic Party's objections to last year's bill and because the government knew that if they produced last year's bill it would not get our support on second reading. The bill, instead of dealing with a minor part of the problem as the bill last year did, with merely foreign takeovers, now deals with screening of new enterprises by foreign investment, and screening also of investments by existing foreign corporations into unrelated fields.

Because it has extended its purview, its area and concern, we will support the bill on second reading, but I want to make very clear to the minister that even this extension cannot satisfy members of the New Democratic Party. Indeed, I appeal to him that it should not satisfy him or his colleagues in the Liberal party either. It will satisfy the Conservatives who do not really want any limit on foreign investment.

An hon. Member: No, it doesn't. Don't speak for us.

Mr. Lewis: Their main concern, as the hon. member for Trinity showed us on Friday, is to make further concessions to corporations and investors in the hope that they will be Canadian corporations rather than foreign corporations. I say to the minister that if he meant what he said at the beginning of his speech last Friday, and if the Throne Speech means what it says, he ought not to be satisfied with the bill he has presented to this parliament. There are obvious areas for extension of that bill and we intend to propose these areas to the committee when this bill reaches that stage.

I want to make this appeal to the minister. What he has presented to parliament is not a bill prohibiting certain things. He has presented parliament with a bill for screening certain areas on the basis of certain criteria, and since that is the case and since the screening agency will have the authority to make recommendations as to whether something should be allowed or disallowed, then I say to him there is no reason in the world he should not have had the courage to go beyond the three areas his bill now covers.

This bill now covers takeovers; it covers new investments and it covers screening also of the expansion by existing foreign corporations into unrelated areas. Since it is merely a screening process with power in the agency and the minister to decide whether to allow or disallow a certain thing, again I urge him that the bill should immediately be extended into the following areas.

The bill ought to cover the screening of imports of parts and components into Canada in order to make sure that those parts and components could not be produced in this country with Canadian capital and Canadian labour in order to increase the number of available jobs. There is no reason this screening agency could not look into the importation of parts and components by existing foreign corporations in this country.

The second area this bill ought to deal with is the screening of the export of raw materials in order to make certain that raw materials have sufficient processing, refining and development in this country before they are exported at the expense of Canadian jobs. I appreciate that this will require joint action by the federal and provincial governments concerned, but I urge upon the minister that this provision be put in the bill subject to the necessary consultation and provincial supplementary action.

I urge the minister that the bill should cover another area as well, and there is no reason a screening agency could not do this. I repeat, since it will not make the final decision and does not prohibit certain things, the final decision being made by the minister on recommendation of the screening agency, this bill ought immediately to provide for the screening of export agreements by and among multinational corporations in Canada in order to make certain that any restrictive covenants in them are removed, or these export arrangements should not be permitted. This, too, is emphasized by me on behalf of my party because again there are hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs constantly being put into jeopardy by the fact that the multinational corporations have among themselves and their subsidiaries around the world arrangements which are restrictive on exports from one country, since any one country is merely another source as far as they are concerned.

Fourth, and perhaps most important of all, I see no reason why this bill should not give the screening agency authority to screen expansion of foreign corporations in Canada into related areas to those that have been occupied. In spite of the repetition, I say again that there is no reason for leaving this out of the ambit of the screening agency. There is every reason it should have that authority in order to be able to look into the books of companies to find out exactly what they are doing and to what extent they are really further buying out Canadian business or expanding their own at the expense and at the cost of Canadian people.

That is the first set of things I wanted to tell the minister and this House that we feel ought to be changed in those directions. Second, I want to tell the minister that we strongly oppose the change he has made from last year in the definition of non-Canadian corporations to satisfy Tory demands. They were the only ones who demanded it and the minister ought to have had the courage to withstand that demand. In last year's bill a non-Canadian corporation was defined as one in which foreign control is 5 per cent of the voting shares and 20 per cent of the non-voting shares. This bill provides for 25 per cent instead of 5 per cent and 40 per cent instead of 20 per cent. That is a sellout to reaction, and I tell the minister that this ought to be changed back to what it was. There is no reason he should have done this.

An hon. Member: It is a sellout to the Tories.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, it is a sellout to the Tories, and that is why I said it was a sellout to reaction.

I want to say to the minister that we are not satisfied with the provisions for proclaiming the bill. The fact that he cannot make the bill law with Royal Assent can be appreciated, because presumably time will be needed to prepare rules and regulations and he cannot do that within 24 hours. However, I object strenuously to the fact that he is going to proclaim the new areas only at some later date. There is no reason for that and the bill ought to be proclaimed in total at the same time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only if he is given more time by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, I need only a minute or two, and I am grateful to hon. members of the House for giving me that opportunity.

Thus, there are three areas which we are going to seek to strengthen when this bill is in committee: One is additional areas of authority to the screening agency; the second is the definition of non-Canadian corporations, to bring this back to the 5 per cent and 20 per cent as in last year's bill, and the third is that the entire bill ought to be proclaimed at the same time. I simply cannot buy the minister's argument that the reason he wants more time for the proclamation of those sections of the bill dealing with new investment or expansion by existing corporations into unrelated fields is that he wants to have some experience. I think that is what he said was the reason for it. I cannot buy that. I am not sure that experience in one area would be of value to him in another. He had better start getting the experience right away in all areas. I am sure he needs it as I need it. The only way he will do a job is, to proclaim all the bill at the same time instead of this kind of pussyfooting. Because I cannot buy this argument, I have an ingrown suspicion that the reason for the delay on that part of the bill is that the government is not serious about it. I want to tell the minister that if he is to convince us he is fully serious about action in the field of foreign investment he had better change his requirement about the time in respect of the proclamation. There is no excuse for dividing up the bill in the way he suggests.

I did not hear the interjection by the hon. member for Trinity, but in this connection I want to say that his objections and the objections of the Conservative party are that the bill represents another "don't do"—I think his words were "don't do"—among the cures that we have. Let me say on behalf of my party that we have had the development which we have had, that we have reached the dangerous situation we have reached, precisely because Canada has been the only country in the world which has permitted foreign investment without rule, without regulation, without limits and without concern for the future of this country. The time is long overdue—I say this without any hesitation—for this country to impose limits on and conditions for continuing foreign investment in Canada. Unless there are limits and unless conditions are there and are sternly applied, we will continue to have an expansion of foreign investment. The private entrepreneurs that hon. members in this House talked about last Friday will be entrepreneurs as long as it pays them better to do it at the expense of the Canadian people through certain tax concessions than it pays them to sell out to some United States, Japanese or West German concern.

One of the two ways to guarantee that foreign investment can be limited in this country and that its expansion can be stopped is by imposing limits and conditions. Because this bill gives the government an opportunity to impose conditions, we will vote for it on second reading subject to our attempts to strengthen it in committee. But, Mr. Speaker, we will eventually—and if we in the New Democratic Party had the opportunity eventually would not be very long hence—have to repatriate Canada's economy. It is not sufficient merely to limit further expansion. The time has come for Canada to take steps to repatriate control of its economy and make sure not only that further expansion is Canadian but that a large part of that business now in foreign hands becomes Canadian.

Mr. Hellyer: That is the Conservative philosophy.

Mr. Lewis: That is the Conservative philosophy through the measures the hon. member for Trinity suggested Friday, which consist of further concessions to the corporations and to the investors. My suggestions are entirely different in principle.

First, we have in Canada now between $5 billion and $6 billion in foreign exchange reserves. I urge on behalf of the New Democratic Party that the government use a large part of those foreign exchange reserves to buy into the resource industries of this country and make them Canadian through public participation in those industries. Second, I say that the time is long overdue for us to withdraw the present tax give-aways in our tax system which are made use of particularly by the resource industries to the disadvantage of our economic development. This would help a great deal in stopping the rape of Canada's resources. Third, I urge that the government consider imposing export taxes on the export of raw materials and energy resources so that we may have a pool of money to assist the people who are affected by those exports. We could make much more money available directly to the people of Alberta rather than permitting the multinational corporations to increase their prices so that they receive 15/16's of the added price and the government of Alberta receives only 1/16 of that additional price.

Fourth, we urge that this country must take steps to rationalize and specialize our manufacturing industry because the branch plant manufacturing will eventually destroy Canada's place in the international markets in that area. It has not yet, and there is still time if there is direct government intervention to rationalize our manufacturing industry and insist that it specialize in producing those things which Canada can produce best at least cost. Finally, I repeat what I said on May 29 last year that what would really assist in this problem of foreign investment is if the Canada Development Corporation were entirely revamped and made an entirely new organization. If it were publicly controlled and publicly managed with a massive fund obtained by a law requiring that a certain proportion of the investment capital from public as well as private corporations be invested in the CDC, then we could do a number of things. We could use the CDC to invest in new industries as well as to buy into existing foreign corporations. Above all, we could make the CDC a source of investment capital for the provinces which need it because the provinces are constantly concerned about the fact that their development within their borders cannot be made without capital and there is no source of such capital in Canada. The Canada Development Corporation, properly organized, could provide such a source.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say to hon. members of this House that in my travels across this country I have been persuaded that large numbers of Canadians have become very concerned about the extent of foreign control of our economy, about the extent of foreign influence in our cultural development and about the need to give Canada funds to build in this part of North America a distinct society. This is not being anti-American. I merely say that the Canadian people are capable of building a society distinct from the American society and I would hope a society which is much fairer, much more decent and much more human than some events to the south of us in the last number of years would lead us to believe is the case there.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, before undertaking the preparation of the speech I intend to deliver—

• (1550)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is customary to recognize the spokesmen for each party for the first round. I did not see the gentleman on the far right rising. Perhaps he wished to take part. So, I would ask the indulgence of the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and I would recognize the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) at this time.

Foreign Investment Review

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The hon. member who was to speak this afternoon on behalf of our party has not yet arrived; he has missed his train and I would like his turn to be reserved. He will certainly speak tonight.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Roberval. The hon. member for Nipissing has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: As I said, Mr. Speaker, before preparing the speech I intend to deliver and in view of the importance of this subject, I saw fit to inquire from my constituents so as to know their position with regard to the bill before us.

It is my pleasure to inform the House that the results have been more positive than I had hoped for. I have received only one negative reply and I consider it negative since it is supporting the statu quo.

Indeed the majority of the replies I received either approved the bill without any reserve or approved it by requesting stricter controls or the adoption of a completely new bill.

It is therefore obvious that Canadians know we must protect our heritage and independence.

[English]

It is indeed the latter concept which seems to preoccupy my constituents, and I can appreciate their concern. We have dealt since the beginning of this parliament with a number of worthwhile projects and measures of considerable social import. The two main documents which have been the vehicle of this government's policy have been the budget speech and the Throne Speech. Both documents did indeed contain legislative proposals which received plaudits for their progressive social measures. We had bills increasing old age security payments and amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act, amendments to the National Housing Act, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, tax reductions, increased exemptions available to lower income groups, and many other measures which are an expression of the concern of Canadians for social justice.

No one in the House, indeed no one in Canada, would dispute that Canada is a leader in providing for the material security of its citizens. The same can be said for Canadian laws relating to and affecting the rights and freedom of individuals in Canada. The Canadians' equality before the law, their right of access to judicial administrative and political redress are ensured. However, it would appear that Canadians, having achieved in considerable part the goals that they have set for themselves relating to material and personal security, those achievements may now be made vulnerable to the financial and industrial decisions made in the corporate boudoir outside our national boundaries, corporate decisions made beyond our control in foreign capitals and predominantly in the United States. That indeed is a justifiable concern and it should be stressed, as, I am sure, most speakers participating in this debate will stress.

Canada has been very fortunate to have been able to foster an economy which has provided the material advantages that are ours, an economy able to provide social justice and indeed justice in all its aspects. However, having achieved these goals, Canadians are now concerned that perhaps the freedom they have secured for themselves may be curtailed by an increase in economic competition, competition for investment capital, for sophisticated technology, for consumer markets, for energy supplies and for raw materials. It is becoming more evident that this parliament and all its committees are dealing with subjects of considerable import. Perhaps it is just the fact that I am new in the House, but I feel very strongly that not only is United States presence felt in the matter of foreign control but it is felt in the matter of the development of our whole economy, the direction that we are going to take so far as our cultural and political evolution is concerned.

It becomes evident that the United States is facing and will be facing in the next two decades a considerable economic upheaval. It is facing shortages in energy; it has difficulties with population control, and it has difficulties with its whole constitutional system. Indeed, it will have difficulty in repatriating the massive amount of capital the export of which its policies since the turn of the century have encouraged, the export of billions and trillions of American dollars that are now invested in economies that are not the American economy. Evidently, legislation is presently before the congress to limit the future export of capital and encourage the repatriation of huge amounts of American capital.

It is in that context that I think this bill is timely. I hope that the government will find that this bill is but one of the bills to be enacted which will have as its goal the control of Canadian investment and the protection of national interests. This bill contains provisions whereby the government, through the minister in charge of the administration of this legislation, will be able to negotiate the terms of investment in Canada. This negotiation will, of course, depend on the support that is to be afforded to the minister by the Canadian public. It is, therefore, essential that the public be informed of all the perils that Canada is facing with reference to its economy and the perpetuation of Canadian control over the destiny of Canadians.

The provisions of this bill have been set out by the minister and in the speeches of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). Central to the bill is the question that the minister, in this instance the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), will initially have to make the decision with reference to whether to allow the takeover or a new investment. The minister will be assisted by an agency in performing this task.

Initially, when I intended to take part in the debate on this bill, I was under the impression that the minister was to be assisted by a quasi-judicial commission. At that time, it was of some interest to me to ensure that that particular commission have adequate representation from my area and from other not so favoured areas of Canada. Now, I see that because the legislation foresees a ministerial decision there can be an input from members of the House regarding these decisions, and although it is not official at least it may perhaps be persuasive in the stage between the notification by the foreign investor and the eventual decision by the minister. The agency itself is but an advisory agency and that is as it should be.

It might also be pointed out to the hon. member for York South, who indicated that he would like to see a provision whereby Canadians would be encouraged to buy back those industries and concerns that have been taken over by Americans, that it is the intention of some of the provisions in this bill that that be done. Indeed, the bill's provisions apply in the event of a foreign investor attempting to take over a Canadian company, even though that company may already be owned by foreign interests. The foreign investor has to give notice under the legislation, so that a review of his intentions can be carried out. May I suggest that in this way an opportunity would be provided to determine if the takeover, by a foreign investor of a foreign-owned Canadian concern, would be in the best interests of Canadians.

The bill further provides for a review agency, with ministerial discretion, to consider the establishment of new businesses by non-residents, or of Canadian corporations controlled by non-residents, but it does not include review of expansionary investment in a business already carried on in Canada, by an investor, notwithstanding the fact that he is a non-resident. I thoroughly agree with that particular provision, because we have already experienced how sensitive capital investment is to radical legislation. I recall that during the Quebec crisis of 1970-71 there was a flight of capital from Quebec, and it was correctly analysed at the time as being the direct result of unsettled economic conditions in that province, and of the threat of political upheaval. If radical measures were taken now, the same result might well follow throughout Canada.

[Translation]

It is essential to point out that the bill before us does not try to prohibit foreign investments nor the purchase of a Canadian enterprise by foreign interests.

In fact the question is to examine the intentions of the investor who would try to take advantage of a favourable financial climate in Canada and to study, through an agency, the advantages of investments under non-Canadian control.

This examination would not be made in a vacuum but in the light of five basic principles which, in my opinion, would be guidelines to the minister responsible for it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain simply the effect of these five criteria. First, the question of the effect of the acquisition or establishment on the level and nature of economic activity in Canada, including employment.

It is obvious that the minister must make sure that investments favour the industrial development policy in Canada. Secondly, the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise must be dealt with. It means therefore that through investments Canadians will be called upon to participate more actively in the proposed industrial development through acquisition or investment. Third, the minister must also consider the effect of the acquisition or establishment on productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, some Canadians want us increasingly to develop our own technology in Canada. With the help of this technology we could develop goods for use in a typically Canadian context, that we could make in accordance with our own traditions, our own imagination and our own initiative, for the general benefit not just of Canada, but of other countries too.

Mr. Speaker, the member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spoke just now of Canadian participation, of the question of industrialization, of the rationalizing of industry and of specialization in certain areas of manufacturing. I am delighted to see the member for York South adopting a policy which is basically the Liberal philosophy, namely industrial specialization in Canada. He did so, and I congratulate him for it. I note that clause 2(2)(c) of the bill deals directly with developing such specialization by encouraging development of technology in Canada.

The fourth criterion is the effect that buying or founding will have on competition in one or more industries in Canada. I need say no more about that, because it goes without saying. The fifth question is that of the compatibility of buying or founding with national policy in the industrial and economic fields, bearing in mind the aims of the economic and industrial policies put forward by some provincial authorities.

And so this is a new concept, Mr. Speaker. It is one by which the federal government, seeing the need for investment and for investment control, also sees that there is economic inequality in Canada, and therefore realizes that it must make sure that the industrial interests of the provincial governments are protected and that the latter are consulted at every stage. All that amounts to helping the minister decide, taking all the factors into account, whether investment is or is not likely to be of significant benefit to Canada.

[English]

Thus, Mr. Speaker, we are speaking of significant benefit to Canada. Those are the key words, and to my mind they ought to be interpreted as synonymous with the national interest. I will go even further. I will suggest that this bill is fundamental to the whole political philosophy of the Liberal party, because in those criteria that have been announced—

An hon. Member: Boy oh boy, what a lousy philosophy!

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, nothwithstanding the narrowness of view indicated by the comment from across the chamber, this legislation, as indicated by the particular formulation of the words used in it, is fundamental to that political philosophy. Full employment is indeed encouraged. Canadian control of the economy is also encouraged. The development of Canadian technology is encouraged. Regional development and the removal of regional disparities are encouraged. Those four factors represent the backbone of the government's policy. They are being written into law, and it is to encourage the realization of these aims that this bill is being represented at this time.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the final decision is to be a political one. It will not be buried in the dark rooms of officialdom, subject to the decisions of deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers, and third assistant deputy ministers. The decisions will be determined in the political arena, and in making a decision in that way a minister makes himself politically liable. The decisions made in this sphere will receive more and more publicity, and all this as a result of the interest of Canadians as a whole in economic nationalism and in preserving control over their economic destiny. I welcome the fact that takeovers will be the subject of political review, and I am sure that this legislation will help us preserve Canadian control over our own development. There are some advantages that flow from this legislation, and I disagree with my colleague for York South—

• (1610)

An hon. Member: I am sorry, but he is not your colleague.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I wish that interventions from hon. members were a bit louder, so that I might know their import. It appears that the collection of information that is to flow from the investigations will be most advantageous to the future development of this government's policies in the field of economic nationalism.

The theory of the "corporate veil" has been and still is dominant in corporate law in Canada. That theory, indeed, has worked to considerable disadvantage in the fields of Canadian knowledge and information. These relate to economic decisions that are made in Canada and affect Canada's destiny. I hope that the regulations to be drafted, which cover the necessity of disclosure by foreign controlled companies and foreign investors seeking to purchase Canadian companies, will be most elaborate and permit a complete review of the circumstances in question. I feel this is important, as we will need to make decisions for some time to come on the desirability of any given investment. The more information we can gather, the better the situation will be.

One concept is not included in this bill, and I should like to see it included, if not in this bill then in some other forthcoming piece of legislation. I am referring to the use of the CDC. The hon. member for York South indicated that he wanted to change the whole structure of the CDC. It is all very well for him to suggest a complete change. Sudden or radical changes may be very well to advocate, but those who have the responsibility of governing cannot always advocate such changes. If I may speak for the record, let me suggest that the CDC could be employed in this particular process with respect to which we are now legislating. It could be used in the creation of an adversary system in this field.

Our deliberations in this House are based on an adversary system, and I submit that we should employ that system in the process that we are now contemplating. I am suggesting the involvement of Canada Development Corporation because I firmly believe that that corporation will in time evolve as our main agent in securing Canadian control over commercial enterprises. I might suggest, further, that the use of that organization at this time with respect to the process being devised would be premature.

In future there will be ample time to review, discuss and debate the suggestion I am making.

Under the adversary system, Canada Development Corporation could be given notice of the intention of a foreign investor to invest in Canada. At that stage, Canada Development Corporation would have a chance of reviewing the company which is subject of the proposed takeover and it could see if perhaps it could not make an offer to the minister with respect to the takeover of that particular company. I truly believe that in many instances in the past foreign takeovers were forced upon companies as a result of their not having sufficient capital to solidify or consolidate their position, or to expand. I am sure that if CDC were involved, it could intervene in the transaction. It would have the ability to invest in the company sought to be taken over by the foreign concern, the result being that that particular company would stay in Canadian hands. The same reasoning would apply to the creation of new businesses, Mr. Speaker.

We are in the present situation because there has been an absence of information available to Canadians regarding the effects of the potential investment. I feel that as a result of the information in this field that is to be made available to us by virtue of the passage of this legislation, Canadians will be better able to determine where their money should go and what is proper investment. Indeed, the Canada Development Corporation would be the instrument for carrying out the will of the people, because it could invest with a full knowledge of the areas in which investments ought to be made.

I am pleased to have been able to participate in the debate on this long awaited piece of legislation. I feel that, to be effective, it will require public support, and public awareness. There must be public recognition of the importance of each decision taken under the provisions of this legislation. Inevitably, because of the wide scope of its terms, each decision will be precedent setting. Of necessity, I believe Canadians should follow the whole process, so that by their participation and by their reaction, the government may know where the people think we should go. The exercise of the ministerial discretion will, of course, be governed by what is the national interest and the public good. Only an aware public, recognizing the difficulties with which the minister is faced, will be able to advise the minister on the propriety of any decision.

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, Canada up to recent times has been a juvenile giant unable to stand on its own feet. It was spoon fed first by Britain—there was no spoon feeding from France—and then by the United States. In our infancy we were fed from Britain, nourished by her money and technology. When we became older we left mother for a more interesting and swinging personality from whom to receive, a personality just across the way, Uncle Sam. Besides giving us money, Uncle Sam did most of our thinking for us.

Uncle Sam developed such ideas for us to copy as the factory assembly line, the use of the computer, cost accounting, data processing, and new packaging and marketing methods. It was Uncle Sam's money that was used for research, so that even without an idea in our heads we could have money in our pockets. Uncle Sam built our early libraries and stocked them with books and educated our university graduates with grants from the Rockefeller, Carnegie, Ford and Fullbright foundations. In fact, in our relationship with the United States, we received everything but pride in ourselves. However, the times are changing. Canada is no longer just a fat copycat. Canada is developing a unique way of life. Canada is becoming the place to talk about.

• (1620)

For many observers, Canada is the centre of sophistication. To speak only briefly, and of the province in which I live, there is the Ontario Science Centre, the new Toronto City Hall, Ontario Place, the Shaw Theatre in Niagara-on-the-Lake as well as the Shakespeare Festival at Stratford, Ontario, the unique outdoor zoo that is being created in Scarborough and so on. There are the television centres of Toronto where artists flock from the United States to make their shows. There is the Ontario Educational TV channel which recently sold to the NBC in the United States more than $2 million worth of educational productions which are regarded by NBC as among the best educational ones in the world.

Further, in the field of entertainment, the whole world is singing our songs, be it Gene McClelland's "Put Your Hand in the Hand of the Man from Galilee" or the songs of Canada by Gordon Lightfoot, Joni Mitchell or a score of others. In Canada there is new energy, imagination and ideas, new writers whose books are appearing throughout the world and new film makers whose movies are applauded by the sophisticated film critics of the world. This cultural flowering, this developing Canadian style, can only be sustained if there are continuing initiatives in the business field. Culture grows out of national prosperity. Culture grows out of money.

We find that not only in the world today do we have a cultural flowering and not only do we have industrial development in our own terms, but in the industrial field, we have multinational development. Until 1946, Canadian Pacific was only 9 per cent Canadian controlled by its shares. In 1973, it is 60 per cent Canadian owned. Canadian Pacific is spreading throughout the world. It is a multinational company with offshore oil rigs in the Mediterranean, a tin mine in Australia, mineral exploration in Greenland and in South Africa, a Canadian Pacific trucking fleet in Great Britain and hotel projects in Israel, Mexico and Portugal. Canadian Pacific has foreign investments which, in just the past few months, have run into tens of millions of dollars. At home, CP has a 53 per cent ownership of Cominco Limited, a major producer of lead, zinc, silver and chemical fertilizer. CP has a 51 per cent interest in Great Lakes Paper Company.

I find it strange that when a member of the Progressive Conservative party proposed initiatives that should be adopted for greater business prosperity in order to provide for our own development and personality, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) criticized the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). When the hon. member for Trinity stated his ideas on initiatives that should be taken in Canada by the government in order to have the kind of stimulation that is needed for Canada to maintain its present prosperity, let alone going to greater prosperity, the hon. member for York South referred to greater tax concessions. He referred to stimulations as being everything to build Canadian entrepreneurship at the expense of the Canadian people.

The hon. member for York South quoted from his particular selection of statistics to show how bad the situation is at present. It is true that if we look at corporate taxation as compared with taxation of individuals, according to the figures of the Canadian Tax Foundation, whereas corporations paid as a percentage of direct taxes 28 per cent in 1950, in 1973 they are expected to be contributing only 12.2 per cent. The hon. member for York South utterly ignored the fact that, although in 1950 the individual paid 26.7 per cent of direct taxes and in 1973 he is expected to pay 50 per cent of direct taxes, the income of individuals has increased 700 per cent since 1950. The income of individuals for 1972 is expected to amount to $50 billion. The income of corporations for 1972 is expected to be $7 billion, an increase of 300 per cent over 1950. He ignored the fact that the number of taxpayers in 1950 was 2.4 million and in 1972, 8 million. He ignored the fact that this increase in the number of taxpayers came about as a result of the increased prosperity brought about by business. This made it possible for individuals en masse to have 700 per cent increase in income since 1950 for a total of $50 billion.

I wonder what my friends to the left think happens if there should be a $2 million profit for a company after it has paid all its taxes. I know what they would propose. They would propose that this profit be immediately taxed and sent to the government. However, this $2 million is either invested, which provides for further jobs and which in turn provides for further increases in income tax, or it is sent to shareholders as dividends. These shareholders must pay income tax on the amount they receive. The income tax is probably close to 50 per cent. Also, the shareholders may decide to reinvest this money.

I have more faith in income in corporations being spent by the corporations instead of being shoveled over to the government and spent by the bureaucrats. The most successful countries industrially in the world today, Japan and Germany, have arrangements whereby the government has a very low corporate income tax. As an example, at the present time there is a higher corporate income tax in Canada and the United States than in Sweden, which is supposed to be the place for social democracy. In Russia, all profits go to the state. The result is that they had to bring in the Fiat Motor Company of Italy to show them how to manufacture cars, the Japanese to show them how to drill for oil and process it and the Hilton company to show them how to build hotels where the elevators do not creak.

In Canada, we must have a continuing encouragement for initiative, not a discouragement of those who would invest from outside the country. If we are going to put on those types of restrictions, then we in Canada will find it difficult for our investments outside the country. We can only exist in this world in a prosperous way if we have the initiative to have multinational companies. With our achievements so far, we are merely on the threshold of unique achievement. The threshold is slippery. We will fail in the highly competitive world of today and tomorrow unless we lay the foundation for continuing productive Canadian initiatives.

With the kind of projects it is encouraging today for those who will be the business leaders of tomorrow, those who will make or break Canada's future our youth, the government, with merely the measures of Bill C-132, will only scratch the surface of a solution to the economic problems of Canada. It will add to the bureaucracy and uncertainty in the economic field. As the hon. member for Trinity stated, it will be basically negative in its approach. Unless it seizes initiatives as alternatives for the basic necessities for Canada's growth, it will not be the basis for independent survival, let alone a possible great future for Canada.

The kind of productive initiatives needed are those described by Mr. Gary Price, President of the Student Enterprises and Assistance League of Toronto. Mr. Price says:

> We feel that Canada's most valuable natural resource is not its oil, minerals or fresh water, but its youth, and the segment of this resource most vital to our country's economic growth, the young Canadian entrepreneurs, have never been given the opportunity to live up to its full potential. Young people with creative drive are today usually found operating government-sponsored projects since it is common knowledge that these are the easiest source of capital available to youth who wish to "do their own thing". The obvious danger of this policy is that we run the risk of producing an abundance of artists, social workers, survey-takers etc. without sufficient businessmen to sustain them. As we see it, the alternatives open to the two major sources of capital in Canada, government and corporations are either to assist more young people to become productive and self-supporting or to suffer the consequences in rising welfare costs and social unrest in the future.

Projects of the kind Mr. Price and his associates in the organization known as SEAL have in mind for 1973 should increasingly be attracting attention and action in this House. This is the philosophy which will guide the SEAL entrepreneurial program for 1973:

> Priority will be given to supporting small business ideas which have the potential to become on-going. We will attempt to start these small businesses with a minimum of seed capital and after the initial start-up period operate them on a profit-sharing basis. Any small business that cannot become self-sustaining after a reasonable start-up period will be discontinued. Any employees who are not meeting performance levels will be dismissed. We have found that young people working on profit-sharing ventures do not tolerate slackers; once a crew is paid commensurate to its performance those who do not shoulder their fair work load are quickly weeded out by their fellow workers.
> All profit generating businesses will set aside a pre-determined percentage of weekly revenues to replay initial capital requirements.

There are other voices offering guidance as to what the government should be doing in providing incentives to youth and laying a foundation for the Canada of tomorrow. Prominent among them is Mr. John Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business who had this to say concerning the ideas he has for New Ventures in an article he wrote for the Toronto Star of August 10, 1972:

> The over-riding philosophy would not be to "make work" or engender a false sense of productivity. It would be to create new enterprise that aims at becoming permanent and perhaps financially independent; a dues-paying member of the community performing necessary services, creating jobs and contributing new technology. This program would rely heavily on the private sector for know-how and financial support.

[Mr. Arrol.]

Mr. Bulloch notes that as the basis of his recent thesis, "Can Canada achieve economic independence?", Professor George Sinclair of the University of Toronto, establishes that innovation, new products and jobs stem from small companies and inventive individuals. A national policy to encourage such activity is, therefore, a logical step toward achieving economic autonomy. Mr. Bulloch tells us:

> . . . the motivation of those who wish to create and innovate is not primarily profit, as is commonly supposed; it is the desire to build, to do something better than someone else, to create something new and useful.
> It is small businesses which are the source of most of the innovation and engineering advances that change and build our society.
>
> New Ventures takes direct aim at one of the real mistakes in our society—the fact that millions of Canadians, old, young, employed and unemployed possess unique energies and skills which presently benefit neither society nor themselves.

As circumstances have developed, Mr. Bulloch says:

> Youth becomes disillusioned, the able-bodied opt out for unemployment and welfare subsidies. Pride in performance becomes a memory.

Mr. Bulloch labels his ideas "New Ventures, Canada". New Ventures, he explains, would work this way:

> Young professionals would be brought together to provide free services in such areas as law, accountancy, engineering and marketing, while low-cost space, in an old warehouse, perhaps, would be provided for anyone who wished to start a new venture.
> Such office services as typing, duplicating and book-keeping would be available from the New Venture pool and lists of high-risk capitalists willing to invest in likely-looking new enterprises would be compiled.

The whole of Canada would be involved in this enterprise. Those who today wish to "create for Canada" so that they can have pride not only in their own efforts but pride in the country which is developing freely, will be such as accountants, lawyers and engineers who would give their services without charge so as to ensure a nucleus of healthy business practices. As each successful venture reached self-sufficiency, it would be replaced by new consultants.

I am sure the provinces would co-operate with the federal government in encouraging organizations whose objective is to educate for positive, contributing citizenship. I am sure the provinces would wish to get together with the federal government to find alternatives to the expensive "formal education for all" concept which is tending to bankrupt the country. The idea of formal education for all is one which must be replaced. Formal education for all, in an abstract sense, isolated from what should be the mood of a developing country, is a highly over-rated concept. Because, today, everyone must stay in school, teachers entertain when they cannot explain, using films, records and "do-your-own-thing". In response to the resulting din and confusion, new educational philosophies are developed to justify and sanction the chaos. When most students fail, their marks are raised and new courses are invented or slapped together in the hope that something will seem to have been accomplished.

Good citizenship is learnt, primarily, in a student's home and community, from friends and from people he admires. It is learnt there or not at all. Forcing an unhappy student to sit inside the formal walls of school for six hours a day, at a total cost to the nation of billions of dollars—$2 billion a year in the province of Ontario alone—instead of initiative productive enterprises in which learning can take place in the spirit of a new Canada, has probably done more than anything else to make poor citizens. It has probably done more than anything else to undermine the spirit of initiative which should characterize our great nation.

In addition, then, to seeking other alternatives, we should look for new ways in which to channel the energies of the youth of today so that these energies do not become corroded by frustration or ebb away in bitterness or utter resignation. This is an even more urgent issue than fears which have been expressed concerning an American takeover: emphasis must be directed mainly not to temporary, make-work projects, as is now the case, but to "take-off" programs, initiatives supported by the government in the hope that the enterprises assisted in this way can become self-sustaining and generators of jobs and services on their own. Canadian prosperity must be based on the development of this country's human resources. Canada can no longer be regarded as a country of untold riches whose resources can be tapped or dug into—as one would go to a bank when money was needed. The deposits are running low. The foundation of Canada's prosperity can no longer be a policy of resource depletion. Assessments have shown that Australia possesses natural resources in similar measure to our own. Brazil has more than Australia and Canada combined, and Siberia has more than all three.

• (1640)

We live in an insecure economic world where the only security lies in the development of human resources. Bill C-132 is an attempt to bring about a bettter Canada by encouraging Canadians to maintain control over their own economic destiny. This is an approach that this bill is supporting. What the House should pay heed to is the tremendous necessity for a massive change in policy that is needed to enable Canada to develop a prosperous future.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must first explain this delay in taking the floor, which I was not expected to do. One of my colleagues was supposed to deal with this matter, but as transportation means are not always most efficient in the province of Quebec, unexpected inconveniences frequently occur.

Yet I am very pleased to be able to say a few words about Bill C-132, an Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons.

Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) introduce the motion for second reading of Bill C-132, I asked myself some questions. I wondered, for instance, what benefit the passage of such a bill, designed to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises, would bring to the Canadian economy?

For 11 years I have been a member of parliament and I have heard in this House that we simply must do something to encourage Canadian businessmen or industrialists in order to protect them against the American giant and against all sorts of foreign control over the Canadian economy. Are we likely to find in Bill C-132 a real answer to the questions all Canadians are asking themselves? I say no, Mr. Speaker, and I refer to the words of the minister himself when he said, and I quote:

I do not expect this bill to change the situation in our country overnight.

Of course a bill that proposes only a review, a study, an appraisal of the foreign takeover of our Canadian industries cannot ensure concrete and immediate action likely to solve this problem so familiar to all Canadians namely that for a hundred years all our governments have been selling our economy to foreigners, retaining only a modicum of administration for the Canadian people. I say that this is another smoke screen to hide their shame and leave Canadians hoping, until the next election at least, and that it is the characteristic attitude of a government whose only motivation is the next election.

To prove that fear is the beginning of wisdom, I have taken a note of a statement by the hon. minister at the beginning of his speech—statement which is full of truth—and I quote:

... the Canadian future is not something that just happens. Our future does not need to be merely a response to external factors, however important they may be.

At that moment, some hon. members said:

Hear, hear!

Yes, Mr. Speaker, "Hear, hear!" But it is not new. Many other ministers and hon. members uttered these words well before the present minister. If civil servants suggested these words to him, I should advise them to modernize their literature.

Further, the hon. minister also started that we had to examine what exists in fact, namely the foreign takeover of our Canadian industries.

I invite the hon. minister to go further in his research, because we should have gone beyond the stage of studies in this area. In fact, everybody knows that 80 per cent of our mines are owned by foreigners, as well as 90 per cent of our oil and 60 per cent of our manufactures. Both the minister and Canadians know it. The hon. minister recognizes all this but he foregets to say why it happened.

Why do Americans buy our Canadian industries by the dozen?

As a matter of fact, one has the impression that, when a manufacturing of marketing industry seems to be flourishing, the two levels of government, one after the other, are always on its tracks and so persistently bombard it with taxes of all kinds that comes a day when it cannot survive and is forced to have recourse to financial companies. And then comes the first threat because the banks are never there to grant assistance to those industries and refuse further credit. It is then that our industrialists, in despair and in order not to loose everything fall into the hands of the first bidder; and, as it happens that first bidder is always an American. And the most tragic aspect of it all is that the American industrialist will buy that Canadian industry with the same credits that had been refused the Canadians owner, that is to say the very same Canadian bank which refused the necessary financing to the Canadian industrialist will offer double the amount to an American who will become the new owner with disbursing more than 10 per cent of his asset.

I have concrete examples, Mr. Speaker, of the problem I just spoke about and this is why I am very surprised not to hear about that way of doing things from our banking institutions. However, the minister knows quite well that our banks favour foreigners a lot more than they do Canadians.

I have in mind an actual case of one of my friends who had an investment of over $1 million and who only needed $250,000 to avoid bankruptcy. No bank wanted to finance him, so he had two choices—bankruptcy or selling out to American interests. He chose the latter. Two days after the new American owner went to the same bank which had said it did not have the available money for the Canadian owner and received $400,000 on the same collaterals.

That is the major cause of many business and industrial bankruptcies in Canada, the major cause of the transfer of our secondary and tertiary industries to foreign hands. I wonder when the minister will finally act and stop making studies whose results are already known to everybody.

The minister says that he will provide an incentive for Canadians to invest in their own industries. As a matter of fact we already have the 20 per cent tax reduction on the first $50,000 of income of Canadian companies, but we will need more. This government will have to consider further participating in the promotion of mixed industry.

Obviously, we cannot recognize the socialist doctrine of the New Democratic Party whose only solution to the control of our economy is nationalization of our industries.

We are more democratic than they, and we do not want to do without the excellent asset that private enterprise, private initiative represents. We realize that it has performed miracles in the last centuries. We claim that today, because of the advent of the machine, electronics and all the scientific discoveries, the state must help the new large corporations develop themselves without dehumanizing society. If Canadians really want to own their economy, they will have to increase their participation.

Mr. Speaker, by participation I mean that of the employer as well as that of the employee. To my mind, the salvation and the recovery of our industries still depend on that participation; it is essentiel today because the businesses or industries whose owners have encouraged the participation of their staff or who simply gave their employees shares in the undertaking, are flourishing today. There are no strikes in those industries; the employees are interested and, of course, the owners make less income. Although they may get only 50 per cent of the income, they enjoy 90 per cent more security and obtain 90 per cent more services.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

This is why I say that the secret of Canadian success would be to accelerate that participation through implementation of legislation favouring the investment of working capital in our industries. I think that by encouraging labour-management participation the minister would be taking a great step toward the control of our industries.

Some people tell us that we are against foreign investment in Canada, which is incorrect. In fact, we approve of it provided it is profitable to Canadians rather than simply providing white nigger jobs for French Canadians and letting the bigger revenues go to foreign countries while leaving us the crumbs.

That is not what we want. Everyone's participation is invited and we welcome foreign capital but here again, to the extent possible, the government should adopt legislation to control the inflow of foreign capital. This would entail payments of royalties instead of accepting this capital as if it were a favour.

In my opinion, we are doing foreigners a favour by allowing them to invest in Canada. Investors ought to pay their share of royalties. Then and then only shall we begin not to reject foreign capital but to welcome it as long as we obtain appropriate returns from it.

That is why I was pleased to hear the minister announce support for Canadian industries and grants necessary for their expansion.

The second issue raised by the minister is that Canada should derive maximum benefits from foreign capital.

That is our wish and you can be assured that on certain points we will give our support to the minister.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before moving on to the next order of business, perhaps I should refer to the matter raised earlier today when the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) proposed the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 to discuss an order of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Hon. members agreed with my suggestion that the Chair be given additional time to consider the proposed motion. When it came before the House, I expressed reservations about the adequacy of the debate on an adjournment motion to consider this important issue. At the same time I recognized that the motion deals with a suggestion that is national in scope and of urgent importance.

After much thought I can say that the apparent urgency of the matter, the fact that it is of national interest and concern and, a factor which is even more material, the fact that there does not appear to be an early opportunity for debate would suggest that it would be the general consensus of the House that the Chair should accept the motion. This is essentially a borderline case, and, since I can see no reasonably early opportunity for the House to debate the issue, I feel that the hon. member should be given the benefit of the doubt. While it may be that a more appropriate vehicle should be available to members for the purpose of a debate on this issue, I would have to rule that, on balance, the motion ought to be accepted.

Does the hon. member have leave to propose his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: According to the Standing Order, the motion will be put and the debate will take place at eight o'clock this evening.

Before going to the next matter of business I would urge representatives of the different parties, perhaps the House leaders or the party whips, to confer before eight o'clock in an effort to agree on an adjournment hour. My experience, and I am sure the experience of all members, has been that a debate which does not have a closing hour tends to drag on and its best speeches are not necessarily those that are made at one o'clock in the morning. From my experience, and I suggest this with all sincerity to hon. members, I think perhaps we would have a better debate if it were kept relatively brief with shorter speeches. Hon. members may want to consider the advisability of agreeing that the motion to adjourn be passed sometime around ten o'clock, ten thirty o'clock or eleven o'clock, depending upon the arrangement which can be made between hon. members.

• (1700)

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, on question of order, under these circumstances what would normally happen to the late show or will that be decided at that particular time?

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. member refers to as the late show, the adjournment proceedings, would automatically be suspended and delayed regrettably until tomorrow night.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HEALTH

SUGGESTED ACTION BY GOVERNMENT TO SUPPLY DRUGS TO THOSE UNABLE TO PAY FOR THEM

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, where any person has an income of such amount that he is unable to pay for, in whole or in part, the cost of drugs that are medically prescribed for him or a dependent, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps, by itself or in co-operation with provincial authorities, to ensure that he is supplied with such drugs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in presenting this motion this afternoon I have in mind, as do many but not all members of this House, a situation one encounters among our constituents from time to time. I refer to the fact that a person with a very modest income by any standards, who is not receiving assistance from any federal or provincial plan, is faced with a heavy burden through having to buy drugs under prescription in order to remain alive or remain in moderately good health.

As I am sure everyone knows, these drugs often are exceedingly expensive. The financial drain on persons with a modest income becomes almost intolerable. I have in mind people of any age who suffer from diseases of a permanent nature, such as diabetes, some forms of cancer, heart disease, kidney disease and other diseases, and who are literally kept alive through constant dosages of drugs. This is a particularly heavy burden on those of low or modest income. This motion is designed primarily for the benefit of such persons. May I say I purposely phrased the motion in very general terms so that if the government should take notice of it or agree to it, which I admit is probably highly unlikely, the government would then have the widest possible terms of reference within which to take some action. The first part of the motion reads:

—where any person has an income of such amount that he is unable to pay for, in whole or in part, the cost of drugs that are medically prescribed for him or a dependent,—

I say "any person" because people in all age groups are affected by this problem. It is true that those who are older are more likely to suffer, but occasionally younger people also suffer from some kind of chronic ailment. I am sure every member of this House could give a similar example, but I know of a young man 28 years of age who is suffering from a coronary attack and must take a variety of expensive drugs for a long time. I know of another young person, the head of a household, who has a very severe kidney problem involving very heavy medical expense in respect of a variety of drugs.

The next point in the motion concerns the words "unable to pay for, in whole or in part". This, of course, might be a matter of judgment because what one person might consider insufficient income another person might consider sufficient. We all know that some years back the poverty level in Canada, according to either the Economic Council of Canada or the Senate Committee on Poverty,—I forget which—was considered to be $3,000 for a family. Since then, after a period of inflation, I would think that an income of somewhere in the area of $4,000 or $4,500 might be considered to be the poverty level for a family. For a single person, it might be considered to be $3,000.

I do not believe I should suggest what might be the best method to prescribe free prescription drugs to those persons who might be concerned. There are a number of administrative ways in which this could be done. I will suggest some, but it will be up to the government to decide what administrative level would be the most effective and cheapest. Of course, the expense involved in buying these drugs could be shown as a deduction from taxable or net income. There is some relief at the present time in the Income Tax Act but I do not think this is of practical help to the people I have in mind, since it merely involves expenditures in excess of 3 per cent of income. However, something along this line might be pursued. The government should take into consideration the fact that people of low income usually are required to pay cash for drugs, and cannot hold the bill for a period of a year in order to receive the benefit of a rebate. Perhaps some form of direct payment of these accounts should be considered by the government. The government might undertake this by itself or in co-operation with the provincial authorities.

Some weeks ago in this House I posed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who indicated that he would discuss this matter with his provincial counterparts. For the information of the House and the minister, I might say I have also made this suggestion to the provincial ministers of health and to the Ontario Minister of Community and Social Services. I have letters in front of me which indicate that the province of Ontario would be very happy to consider such a plan in co-operation with the federal government, because at the present time there is no such provision in respect of drugs in the province of Ontario, with certain exceptions which I shall mention in a moment. As I pointed out earlier those who are particularly affected by this matter are those who are over 65 years of age. While it is quite true that the recent increase in the old age pension certainly is helpful in matters of this kind, nevertheless the fixed incomes on which elderly people live are not too great.

When it comes to spending money in order to keep oneself alive, perhaps an appropriate expression would be that used in the movie "The Godfather",—"make an offer that can't be refused". To paraphrase that, even though people have a limited amount of money they must use it in order to keep themselves alive or in reasonable health. I would point out in this respect that 50 per cent of Canadians over 65 years of age live in poverty. This is the finding of an 18-month study of the income patterns of the aged. The study, conducted by two economists in conjunction with the Canadian Council of Social Development and the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs, concluded that the aged are poor whether they work or not.

• (1710)

The basic conclusion of the report described the situation as follows:

> Whether they work or not, they are destined to obtain a minimum subsistence income. For some, the decision to leave the labour force is merely a decision to accept a different poverty lifestyle.

The level of poverty among the aged is two to three that of other age groups. In 1968, 41 per cent of families whose head was over 65 years of age had an average annual income of less than $3,000, as compared to 8 per cent of families whose head was under 65. Elderly people spend a large portion of their income on prescription drugs, yet there are no assistance programs, either federal or provincial, which deal specifically with the aged. They are covered, however, under the following circumstances in most provinces. First, if they are in hospital, drugs are provided free of charge in certain cases. Second, if they are welfare recipients, most provinces will provide some assistance. In Ontario this also occurs under the family benefits plan. Third, if they reside in nursing homes which are under provincial jurisdiction, drugs are usually issued free.

A new plan is being undertaken by the Ontario ministry of health to provide free drug care through community pharmacies in home care cases. This will be designed as a full reimbursement program, but again is not specifically related to the elderly.

The Nova Scotia council of health recently concluded an 18 month study on all aspects of health care within the province. Their conclusion was that too many people still cannot get the health care they need and deserve. They recommended that free drugs should be made available to people receiving old age security supplements and to those who pay more than 3 per cent of their taxable income on drugs. People cannot afford the high cost of drugs and often end up in hospital as a result of improper medical treatment. This results in considerable expense to the taxpayer.

I know that many people would point out the high cost of the drug plan, but let me point out the high cost of no drug plan. As a matter of fact, a hospitalization and a medicare plan which results in not obtaining treatment at an early date often leads to serious medical problems which have to be paid for under the present federal-provincial plan. Some elderly people and poor people are often in the high drug utilization group; in fact, I would add that most of them are, yet they are the ones who can least afford it. In Ontario, recent estimates of the cost of drugs distributed from pharmacies in the province, showed an expenditure of $155 million a year. Of this, at least $28.5 million is spent by the over 65 age group, representing approximately 18.4 per cent of the total. Yet, the elderly are the ones who rely most heavily on drugs. The above mentioned figures can be interpreted to illustrate that the aged and people in the low income groups, while composing the group utilizing drugs the most, do not even spend an amount that would equal half of their need.

As I mentioned earlier, I have deliberately left the terms of the resolution very broad indeed so that should the government take some action on the matter they would have a carte blanche so far as the resolution goes. They could make some arrangements with the provinces, which would be more practical than doing something entirely on their own.

May I say in conclusion that I earnestly plead with the government to take some note of this resolution, because I feel that if nothing is done it will cost the country more in the long run. The government has certainly taken a great deal of credit to itself for its generosity toward the low income groups and the aged by its recent increases in old age pension. While the government in its wisdom did not see fit to lower the age of eligibility at which old age pensioners will receive their increased amount, I hope they might see fit to try to make some arrangement to provide prescription drugs to persons of any age, and particularly the elderly who require these to stay alive.

At present there are many persons—we all know of some—with extremely modest incomes who are just beyond the reach of any provincial or federal assistance. They do not seek welfare or charity with regard to drugs; in fact, they simply will not ask for it and have great difficulty when they have heavy drug bills every month in trying to stay alive or even in reasonably good health. I hope the government will give consideration to this problem and take the necessary action.

Mr. Cullen: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member at liberty to tell us which provinces he wrote to and which of them replied? Perhaps I should preface my question by complimenting the hon. member on raising this issue. I know the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) raised it in the last session, and they are both to be complimented. Is he at liberty to tell us how many provinces he wrote to and those which replied and whether they were prepared to look at the situation?

Mr. Nesbitt: I had only written to the province of Ontario and there was some indication of what the province of Nova Scotia had recommended. I wrote to the minister concerned in the province of Ontario. I did not feel I should take the liberty of writing to ministers outside the province. Perhaps I should have done so.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) introduced this motion on January 12. It really asks for aid for those people who find it difficult to pay for their drugs. The history of assistance schemes goes back to the early depression years. Different provinces brought in their own plans, and the federal government did also. But in 1966, the Canada Assistance Plan bill was passed in the House. It superseded four previous acts and underwrote the provincial medicare and welfare plans to the tune of 50 per cent. The act clearly states that people, even on minimum assistance, are entitled to payment for prescribed drugs.

However, the provinces in general have not incorporated drugs into their specific medicare programs, except for two or three instances. Yet, the Canada Assistance Plan allows prescription drug payment where tests of need, budget and family resources indicate inability or hardship in the purchase of necessary medication. It is sad to relate that not all persons in need are covered now. It is merely provincial inertia that prevents them receiving this assistance.

Broadly speaking, we must first define poverty. Second, we must know the nationwide cost of drugs, and third, we must determine the total cost of health care. It is imperative to designate also the levels of governmental responsibility, whether at the federal, provincial or municipal level. In the debate in the Senate on November 10, 1971, the question of poverty was discussed. A special Senate committee worked for three years and painstakingly examined every community in the country from St. John's to Vancouver. They found that the poverty rate in Canada amounted to 25 per cent of the population.

The causes of poverty should be understood. It is due to inadequate education, overcrowding in large cities, the fact that half of the poor are in the most densely populated provinces of Ontario and Quebec, that about two thirds of the poor are working people and over one million of the five and a half million people are over 65 years of age. It is this latter group which was referred to by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) in his question in the House of Commons on January 25, 1973, when he asked about drug costs for this group.

The Senate Committee recommended a guaranteed annual income for the main welfare agencies which could be conveyed to the provinces. This could be done without displacing Old Age Security, the Canada Pension Plan, Unemployment Insurance, War Veterans Allowances or the programs for Canada's native peoples.

Recently in this House veterans' pensions were stepped up, and will be increased yearly to parallel the general standard of living increment. So now veterans' pensions are almost in the category of guaranteed annual income. The Senate Committee also recommended inclusion in medicare of dental services and prescription drugs to all Canadians. So far this proposal has been rejected by all parties because the added cost would be prohibitive.

Provincial medicare schemes mainly cover hospital, diagnostic and treatment services as well as office and out-patient hospital care. Of course, convalescent and chronic care hospitals as well as many auxiliary services are included. The health bill for Canada is $3½ billion annually. The federal government insists on four cardinal points in any provincial health scheme. They are, comprehensiveness, universality, portability and administration by a public, non-profit body. It is one of the most enlightened health programs in any western, democratic country. Recently, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) announced in this House that he envisaged changes to improve the present act after consultation with the provincial governments. It is hoped that all provinces will add drug costs to their medicare schemes for the low income group.

One should compare our plan with that of the United Kingdom and of the United States of America. The former is a 100 per cent state-supported health program. Though the level of specialized hospital care is excellent, hospital beds are at a premium. In addition, the general practitioner work load is unbearable, so that apart from the hospitals the health service is unsatisfactory both to the doctor and to the patient. In the second instance, the United States only has medicare for those people over 65 and for those on welfare. There is no inclusion of specialist care. The United States falls away behind both the United Kingdom and Canada in its health program.

To digress momentarily, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Drugs of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation, of which I am a member, presents an interesting experience. Most drugs which are used to combat cancer are expensive, and in most cases are required for long periods of time. It is the policy of most hospitals, cancer clinics and private doctors to allow a majority of the people suffering from cancer to have access to free drugs. They do not use any elaborate means test to make this decision. For this one group alone in Ontario the Foundation spent $153,961 in 1972 for this service.

Our Department of National Health and Welfare, through its director general, Dr. Armstrong, informed me that in 1970 $14.12 was the average cost per person for prescription drugs at retail pharmacies throughout the country. When this figure is translated into total population costs it amounts to well over $300 million. In other words, the 25 per cent of the population designated as the poor would be spending over $80 million a year which they cannot afford.

The figures show that the Canada Assistance Plan even now provides $8 million to $10 million to provincial agencies for the cost of drugs, and this must be matched by the same amount from the provinces or municipalities. This leaves $50 million to $60 million still not underwritten by government agencies, even though there is provision in the Canada Assistance Plan to pick up that tab. Both the patient and the assistance agencies seem to be ignorant of the benefits that are possible to obtain. This $50 million to $60 million is a big sum, but we could accept it because even this amount could be divided between the federal government and the provincial governments. In the light of this fact, if this segment of society is to benefit from the proper interpretation of the Canada Assistance Plan Act, practically all people below the gray line of poverty would not have to pay for their drugs. It is suggestions like this which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has on his agenda to discuss with provincial premiers in the near future.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address myself to this motion with a considerable amount of sympathy for it, but with some reservations. The motion deals with payment for medically prescribed drugs provided for persons who are unable to pay for them themselves. My hesitation arises in the difficult area of a means test to discover those who are in the category of needing this kind of assistance. Otherwise, I think the hon. member has pointed out an area of real concern to us as Canadians, in terms of the kind of situation which we as members of parliament run into all the time, where elderly individuals find difficulty in paying medical bills, particularly drug bills. Where these people have to use drugs, such as insulin, they find it a particularly costly item.

I have encountered this situation on numerous occasions and this is the reason I rise to speak to this motion today. I want to quote from Senator Croll's report on poverty, the Special Senate Committee, which pointed out a number of relevant problems connected with the cost of drugs. A representative of the Canadian Medical Association pointed out the following facts to Senator Croll's committee:

> It so happens that even in the most affluent nations like Canada and the United States, 20 per cent of the population are poor. There are forty million poor in the United States and 3,500,000 in Canada, and this 20 per cent of the population suffers something like 75 to 80 per cent of the major illnesses.

It bears repeating that 20 per cent of the population categorized as being below the poverty level suffers somewhere in the neighbourhood of 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the major illnesses in these two countries. This illustrates the kind of real tragedy there can be in our society for those people who cannot meet the cost of drugs.

Further on the report points out:

> People "on welfare" receive doctors' services free of charge in all provinces. Five provinces include drugs. Five cover dental care. Four provide optical appliances, and various others provide such items as prosthetic appliances, physiotherapy, home nursing, chiropractic, and transportation.
>
> People who are not "on welfare" but are poor may have to dig very deep to find money for health services not included as yet in any plan, particularly the cost of drugs. High drug costs represent a real barrier to meeting health needs.

[Mr. Railton.]

• (1730)

The words of the Royal Commission on Health Services are then quoted as follows:

> We believe it is only fair to the drug industry to serve it notice that the nation expects that drug prices can be brought down over the next five years to levels more comparable to those prevailing in other industrialized nations of the world. The time has come for the drug industry in Canada to recognize that it is not just like any other industry operating for gain, but that it deals in products which are essential for health and indeed for life.

The report points out areas where there are problems relating to the cost of drugs for individual citizens. The costs bear especially heavily on those persons whose income is below the poverty line. The entire area of drug costs must be tackled by the government, in the public interest. I am sure hon. members realize that in Saskatchewan medical services are provided for citizens irrespective of income level. In that province the costs of such items as hospitalization and medical care premiums are covered. Senior citizens over age 65 in Saskatchewan pay no medical care or hospitalization premiums. This year chiropractic care costs have been added to the program and hearing aid costs are also to be reduced. I have spoken to senior citizens in small communities of Assiniboia who have paid incredibly high prices to shysters who have ripped them off by charging far too much for hearing aids. In addition to these programs we have in Saskatchewan other fairly comprehensive social assistance programs.

One cost, however, that is causing considerable concern across this nation is the increasing cost of prescription drugs. That cost is of concern particularly to the one out of every four Canadians who live below the poverty line. We must go beyond the measure brought forward by the hon. member. All Canada must involve itself in an over-all prepaid drug program which must cover the entire population of this country.

Although there is nothing new in the recommendations of the Croll report on poverty, I think some of the recommendations concerning a prepaid drug program and other ancillary programs relating to health as set out in "Highlights from the Report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty in Canada" are worth mentioning. In particular, I am referring to four recommendations of substance that should be given serious consideration by any government in this country. Those recommendations say, and they are worth repeating:

1. that hospital and medical services be financed entirely out of general revenues.

2. that the Medical Care Act or similar legislation be the vehicle for bringing additional forms of necessary health care, including dental services and prescription drugs, to all Canadians.

3. that comprehensive community-based neighbourhood health centres be encouraged and that more emphasis be placed upon preventive and rehabilitative aspects of health care.

4. that family-life education and family-counselling and family-planning programs be made available and easily accessible to the poor.

The main recommendation is the second one, that the Medical Care Act or similar legislation be the vehicle for bringing additional forms of necessary health care, including dental services and prescription drugs, to all Canadians. I believe that all governments in Canada should join together and institute a prepaid drug program across the board for all Canadians. We should make sure that those in need in this country are covered by proper programs of insurance that will enable them to meet the high costs of medical services. It is important that such a program be made available in lower income areas which also suffer from high food costs. This scheme ought to be made available nationally, in all provinces. I am sure that all three NDP governments in Canada would be interested in a national program involving prepaid drugs. Such program could be put into effect in each province to ensure that Canadians can properly meet high drug costs.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) for bringing this motion before the House. I also congratulate the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) for their comments.

I believe the program we are talking about is most important. The minister of national health and welfare in the previous parliament suggested that the establishment of such a program might be his next priority. I do not know what the priorities of this government are. Nevertheless, let us remember that the Hall commission report, on which the medicare program is based and which the government followed, recommends the establishment of such a program. It said definitely that drug care should be the first priority after the institution of the national health care plan. We must keep this in focus, because the bill setting up the medical care plan was introduced in 1967. The report said specifically that medical care must be available to all people, regardless of their ability to pay, and drug care was to be a priority. It is worth reminding hon. members of the recommendations in that report because I think people need to be reminded that drug costs in this country are almost equal to medical fees: we pay about as much for drugs as we pay for doctors' services. We must not forget that. Publicity says so much about the high cost of doctors' services; therefore, let us talk about the high cost of drugs.

It is true that since the federal government took over responsibility for medicare, costs jumped from $3.2 billion in 1967 to $4.5 billion in 1972. That is quite an increase. Naturally the government is concerned, particularly when its over-all spending this year will increase by 17 per cent. I should like to point out that if the measure introduced by the hon. member for Oxford were to be passed, we could bring down health care costs. Many health costs are borne at present under the national medicare plan. There are many reasons for increasing health costs in this country and I think we should consider some of them. As the hon. member for Welland pointed out, our life span is increasing. Let us not forget that. Although I do not want to burden hon. members with statistics, they should remember that in 1900 the average life span was 40 years; today it is over 70 years. One need not use much imagination to realize that there are a great many older people living today. In Canada, a higher percentage of the population is composed of the aged, as is the population of the entire world.

In 1900, the world population was 1.5 billion; in 1960 it was 3 billion, and by the end of the century there will probably be between 6 billion and 7 billion people in the world. Naturally, there will be an increasing number of older people in the population. Looking after all those people, keeping them well, keeping them active and keeping them out of hospitals and institutions will cost the taxpayers of this country many millions of dollars. Right now there are over 1,700,000 people over 65 in this country, about one quarter of whom do not have any taxable income. Most of these people are unable to work; and I need not tell you, Sir, what inflation has done to any savings they might have accumulated.

The old age security increase of April 1 will be an increase of only $13 and a few cents a month. We must not forget that. This in no way meets the escalating costs. I ask all members of this House to look at the record since 1965, using the inflationary factor. It will be seen that these people are still being denied what is their right.

In Canada, approximately one in four is living at or below the poverty line. Sure, we pay for the health care of many of these people. We see them in emergency departments or in our offices. We give them a prescription, and over and over again they ask what it is going to cost. This can be supported by every doctor in practice. Often they will have to wait until they get their pension cheque, pay day, or can borrow some money. What is the common sense in having a man come to an expensive emergency unit in a hospital, have the doctor see him and prescribe medicine that he cannot buy?

I was very interested in the figures quoted by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). He stated that the sickness factor was much higher for those living below the poverty line, and the aged. This is very true. If we do not want to be sympathetic, let us do something for economic purposes. If we reduce the number of people in hospitals, keep them from suffering a long sickness and restore them to health as quickly as possible, we will find that this is also the cheapest way.

The fact that there is four times the amount of sickness among those below the poverty line needs no further explanation. This situation requires four times the amount of hospitalization. A hospital bed in Canada today runs anywhere from $50 to $80 a day. The Hall commission report has already been quoted. It states that one day in hospital costs the same as a month's supply of drugs. We should look at this not only from a humanitarian standpoint but from the standpoint of straight economics. If a prescription is not filled, the same patient may later be admitted to hospital at a cost of $60 to $80 a day. Anyone can see how "penny wise and pound foolish" that can be. The same argument applies to all those who are not covered by welfare and yet make up the people unfortunate enough to be in the one-to-four group. The government will say that the Canada Assistance Plan will buy their drugs. It does in some cases. However, let me remind the government, if indeed it needs reminding, that this is slow in operation and uncertain in its application.

In Ontario there are two levels of assistance. First there is the basic requirement of food, shelter and clothing. The second requirement is listed as other items under health care, including drugs. We must remember that some provinces have no appeal board for health care services and drugs. The province in which I live does not. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and people working in this field know the hodgepodge area in which they are working. An overlapping bureaucracy costing millions of dollars serves no purpose for the person who needs help. In many cases it leaves untouched pockets of humanity in despair and needing help.

The economic cost of this program is tremendous, particularly when you consider that there is four times the amount of hospitalization and sickness with persons 65 years and over than there is with those in the 35 years of age group. This proportion holds true for those living below the poverty line. The reducing of this amount of sickness would cut down health costs materially.

Another point I would like to make is that many people who are on essential medicines are able to work. They do not become economic charges. Many of them are able to look after themselves in their own homes, rather than being in a hospital or a chronic care unit. The lives of many are maintained on life saving drugs that are necessary for the treatment of cardiovascular disease, diabetes and a long list of other diseases. Almost 50 per cent of our diseases have emotional overtones. Many people today would be in mental institutions or otherwise confined if it were not for the judicial use of tranquilizers. They are able to adjust, to look after themselves and to work.

Drug care was to be a part of medicare. It is a priority. If drugs were made available in many cases, as the hon. member for Oxford suggested, health care costs would be cut and we would be doing what we should be doing to avoid suffering, illness and increasing economic costs in our community. I do not think I need dwell at length on the life saving quality of drugs, but I want to say that many professional men in Canada today, many people in business and in the work force who work every day, and if it were not for drugs, many of them would not be working; many would have passed on; many would be in chronic care units. This would cost a lot more than we are paying today.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, one day in hospital costs more than four weeks' supply of drugs and dressings. I wish to cite a simple example. Thirty years ago, the disease of pneumonia was very common. One in four died from it. Many of these people were husky, young, family men who left four, five or six children when they died. The death rate was one in four or one in five, depending on the type of pneumonia they had. Then penicillin was discovered. The story before penicillin was that one in four or five died of pneumonia and the others were away from work for a minimum of two months. Many had to be taken to hospital and operated on for empyema, or pus-forming in the lung. Today, by administering drugs properly, these people are able to return to work. Most of them are back at work in two weeks. This is a striking case of the economics of drugs.

I do not think I have to go any further than saying we should follow up the Hall commission report, not only for the sake of humanity and decency but to stop spiralling health care costs. Let us treat these people adequately, keep them out of hospital and keep them working.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) and the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). I would like to deal with the questions raised by those hon. members and, more specifically, with the motion now before us.

Motion No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Oxford deals with a very specific question. In effect, it recommends that the government give consideration to providing a form of care to those who are unable to care for themselves. In his speech, the hon. member paid particular attention to those over 65. I would like to say that as a federal government we do not have full and total jurisdiction in this particular case. Under the Canada Assistance Plan which was passed by parliament, the federal government has provided a vehicle in fact to achieve the objectives of this motion. Under the Canada Assistance Plan we pay 50 per cent and the province pays 50 per cent to look after those in need. That includes the elderly and those of any other age group which needs medicines or drugs.

The provinces have the responsibility of administering that program. This means that I, at this moment, cannot really see any point in passing the recommendation presently before the House. However, the comments of hon. members certainly lead me to believe there is need for further consideration to be given to the whole question of pharmacare and the approach toward the provision of free drugs to those in need.

I would like to comment now on some of the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia. He is really advocating a universal pharmacare program. This is something which I agree has to be considered by the provinces and by the federal government. As hon. members know, a federal-provincial conference of health ministers is to be held in the near future, at which the provincial health ministers, along with the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare, will be giving consideration to a whole new formula designed to look after health care costs. Hopefully, an agreement will be reached which will allow the provinces a full range of programs which they themselves can initiate without in any way jeopardizing the cost-sharing arrangements with the federal government. At present there is a 50-50 cost-sharing formula, depending on the kind of service which is provided. This means that in many cases provinces confine their medicare operations to areas which are more expensive than others because we share the costs with them.

Under the formula which is proposed, financing will be on a per capita basis and the provinces will have full and complete freedom to involve themselves in a whole broad range of medicare facilities. This will, it is hoped, cut down the rapid escalation in health care costs as well as provide better health care delivery systems in the provinces. It is my opinion that such a conference is the kind of forum at which the question of pharmacare costs should be raised. I believe that many members of this House as well as many Canadians in general recognize the problems and the benefits which may result from a universal pharmacare program. I am hopeful that the conference of health ministers will take this question into consideration very seriously.

In addition to the forthcoming conference of health ministers, a further conference has been arranged to consider the Canada Assistance Plan and a whole series of welfare programs now operating in Canada, whether federally initiated or provincially applied and initiated. The one thing we have asked all the ministers to bear in mind during the initial discussions on welfare problems in Canada is that they should set aside for the time being questions of jurisdiction so that they can look at the whole problem and develop a formula which will benefit all Canadians. We could then zero in, determine who is responsible for what, and how the programs would be implemented. It is hoped that the result of such an approach would be to provide better welfare services in Canada, better programs which would reduce the amount of red tape, giving Canadians easier access to the kinds of assistance which are really necessary.

As has been mentioned many times in this House, the Speech from the Throne referred to the provision of a guaranteed annual income to those who are unable to work, and undertook to provide some other assistance to those who are able to work but who cannot find jobs. Certain of those who are in need in that group—and there are many of them; the handicapped, for example—could well be classified as unable to work, yet at the same time there may be many handicapped people who think it is in their interest to work, that it would be good for them if they did so. This is the kind of question which has to be resolved. I am hopeful that in the over-all review which will next take place during Easter week, the kinds of representations made here today will form part of that consideration.

An hon. Member: If you are hopeful, sit down and vote.

Mr. Cafik: The hon. member says that if I am hopeful I should sit down and vote. I have thought about that, Mr. Speaker, and it is my opinion that these are not questions which should receive consideration by the federal government alone. After all, we do live in a federal state, and in the cause of preserving national unity and co-operation with the provinces it is only fair and reasonable, and I believe it, is expected of us, that we negotiate these matters in a conciliatory way, allowing the provinces to participate with us, so that we will arrive at a position whereby a maximum number of people in Canada will derive benefit from the deliberations of the provincial governments and the federal government.

The resolution suggests, really, that we ought to give consideration to providing, at the federal level, assistance to those who are in need in respect of drug costs. That, Mr. Speaker, is already being done under the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) on a point of order.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has just indicated that in the resolution there is no reference to the provinces. I will not read the whole resolution, in consideration of the member. having only a few minutes left, but I refer to the resolution as follows —the government should consider the advisability of taking steps, by itself for in co-operation with provincial authorities, to ensure that he is supplied with such drugs.

Mr. Cafik: I have already pointed out in respect of this question that the Canada Assistance Plan passed by parliament does in fact provide the vehicle for the achievement of the objectives of this particular motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA—RATE INCREASES

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Leave having been granted to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to grant Bell Telephone almost all the rate increases it requested in its application A and the need for the government to suspend the application of the decision immediately, and to consider rescinding it as unacceptable and contrary to the public interest.

Accordingly, the motion is as follows: the hon. member for York South, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) on a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions through the usual channels as to the procedure we might follow this evening. I believe it would be agreeable for the lead-off speakers from each party to have 15 minutes, for succeeding speakers to have 10 minutes and for the House to adjourn at eleven o'clock. I think there might be agreement to make this a House order.

Mr. Baldwin: That is quite all right, Mr. Speaker. Who knows; it might become a tradition of the House to have speeches of that length.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, what the parliamentary secretary has stated does represent the agreement of all of us, except that I would make this one modification, namely, that the adjournment is to take place not later than eleven o'clock. If words run out before then, we should rise at that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I suppose there have been some discussions and since we make it a practice to abide by agreements, we approve the proposals just made.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed, then, that the lead-off speaker for each of the four parties shall have 15 minutes, that thereafter each speaker shall have 10 minutes, and the debate shall continue until, but not later than, eleven o'clock this evening?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the motion was placed before the House, not as a gesture but because I believe it is important for the people of Canada, for the minister and for the government to have the views of Members of Parliament as it considers this important issue and tries to arrive at a decision. The first fact I want to underline—and I shall go from one point to another as quickly as I can—is that Bell Canada has been given four increases in three and a half years. They had an increase on September 25, 1969, another on December 1, 1970, a third on May 19, 1972, and a fourth on March 27, 1973. Each time, the Canadian Transport Commission gave Bell Canada not always all it requested, but almost all.

What disturbs me even more is that the increase approved last Friday by the Canadian Transport Commission is merely a prelude to application B which is already before the Canadian Transport Commission, and if that were granted the increases would make those approved last Friday pretty small potatoes. Obviously, Bell Canada is seeking more and more of its customers' money. I say, Mr. Speaker, it is time to call a halt to the monopolistic gouging by Bell Canada of the people of Canada.

The second point I make, Mr. Speaker, is that Bell Canada is not claiming that it needs these increases for profit or for its operations; Bell Canada is claiming it needs them in order to have capital for further investment. What it will do is get from its customers a pool of investment capital for which it does not have to pay, and I say that a company as powerful as Bell should not be allowed to tax its customers; and that is what its rate increases really mean.

Mr. Speaker, what is this poor, poverty stricken company about? What have its profits been? I received only today the annual report of Bell Canada for the year 1972, and on one of the pages of that report there are financial figures for 1963 to 1972 inclusive, that is, over a period of ten years. During that period there was a steady and large increase in profits every year except one: in 1969, the profits were slightly below those of 1968. But to make up for it, in 1970 there was an increase of 17.2 per cent over 1969; in 1971 and increase of 10.5 per cent over 1970; in 1972 an increase of 11.9 per cent over 1971.

Mr. Speaker, when you look at the profit picture of Bell Canada in these ten years, you find that from $68.25 million of profit in 1963, this gouging company reached a profit of $164.75 million in 1972. How much more does Bell Canada want out of the people of this country? And I am not talking about gross profit before taxes; I am talking about profit after taxes that are currently paid, which include deferred taxes in large amount. In addition to these profits, according to this report which I have just studied, Bell Canada now controls ten other companies outright and has an interest, although not a controlling interest, in several others.

I say that the people of Canada have already made a sufficient investment in Bell Canada. Some hon. members may not know this, but I have been interested in the subject and as at the end of 1971, Bell Canada had total deferred taxes of $224 million. By the end of 1972, these deferred taxes amounted to $322 million. That represents an interest-free loan by the people of Canada to this huge corporation of $322 million at the end of 1972.

What is even more significant in respect of Bell Canada's request for an increase is that one of the ways it can add to its deferred tax position is to continue to invest and to change its machinery and equipment. The more it changes its equipment every year, the fancier the telephone, the more it is able to avoid paying taxes by deferring them. That is the only way a corporation can do this, by continuing to buy new equipment and machinery; only then can they take advantage of the deferred tax provisions of our unfair tax system. The amount of $322 million from the people of Canada is more than enough to give to this huge, powerful corporation.

It is for these reasons, and because these facts seem to be overwhelmingly persuasive, that I think Bell Canada ought not to be allowed any more increases at the expense of its customers, the majority of the people of this country. On this basis I placed this motion on the order paper.

I want now to turn the attention of the minister to the act and its relevant section. It is, of course, true that parliament gave, under the National Transportation Act—as it had previously given under the Railway Act—the first responsibility for regulating these prices, tariffs and charges to the Canadian Transport Commission. I have very grave doubt whether the Canadian Transport Commission is equipped to deal with this matter, whether it is equipped to understand the importance of the material that Bell Canada places before the commission every time it asks for a rate increase. Therefore, I have very grave doubt whether the commission is in fact protecting the public interest.

I note with sadness that the president of the commission which granted this increase to Bell Canada is the Hon. Edgar Benson, former minister of finance. Whatever one may say about the Canadian Transport Commission, I plead with the minister and members of the government to realize that the ultimate responsibility for protecting the public interest lies with them. The act places that responsibility upon them. Section 64(1) of the National Transportation Act reads in part as follows:

The governor in council may at any time, in his discretion—

Let me point out this is not in the discretion of the Canadian Transport Commission; it is in the discretion of the governor in council. It continues:

—either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the commission, whether such order or decision is made inter partes or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application; and any order that the governor in council may make with respect thereto is binding upon the commission and upon all parties.

There could not be more clear language. The act in fact says, I suggest, that the initial responsibility for regulating these rules lies with the Canadian Transport Commission, but that the ultimate responsibility for protecting the public interest is placed on the government of Canada by the section of the act to which I have just referred. I plead with the government not to abrogate its responsibility in this case. I plead with the minister and the government to carry out its duty under the section I have read, because there is no reason for this increase.

I appreciate, as I indicated by a question this afternoon and as I indicated to the minister in conversation on the subject this morning, that it would take time for the government to make a final decision. I hope it will be a decision to rescind this unconscionable increase in rates which the CTC has thoughtlessly given Bell Canada. I appreciate this will take time. The government cannot easily do something about a decision of a body given the power under the act. The government needs to have a full study made, not only of the decision but of all the material that was placed before the commission, so it can justify whatever decision it will make.

Because I appreciate that, I suggested to the minister in my question this afternoon and in my conversation with him this morning that the government ought to immediately suspend the application of the CTC decision pending a final decision of the government on the order made by the commission. If the government takes a week or two to make its decision, by that time the new tariffs will be in effect and I suggest at that point the government will be caught and will not able to act where it might easily want to act after studying the decision and all the relevant material.

It seems to me there is clearly a prima facie case to question the action of the CTC. It seems there is clearly an initial reason for wanting time to study the material, in order to act upon it in accordance with the authority given the governor in council by the section of the act I have read. In order to give itself the time necessary, I see no reason in the world why the governor in council could not, within the next week or so, make a decision to suspend the application of the order of the Canadian Transport Commission pending further study of the entire matter.

The CTC has obviously been intimidated by this large corporation I submit that the government must not permit itself to be intimidated by this huge, monopolistic corporation in Canada. I suggest, also, that it is time we served the interests of the people of Canada instead of the interests of Bell Canada. As I said earlier, the time has long passed when a halt should be called to this constant demand by Bell Canada for more and more from its customers, the people of this country. Now is the time for the government to act along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I do not intend to plead on behalf of this party for relief by the government. It has been our task, which has proved to be ineffective, to plead with the government in respect of other issues. Our efforts in this regard have proved that the government is insensitive, not only to the pleas of the opposition but to the pleas of the public.

• (2020)

The recent approval by the CTC of the application by Bell Canada for rate increases is yet another example of the contradictory and convoluted non-policy of the government with regard to combating inflation. In the February 19 budget address, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) adamantly claimed that the 1973 budget was designed to reduce inflationary pressures in Canada and to offset the effects of past inflation. He implored business, labour and the professions to "exercise price and income restraint". Yet the Liberal government has failed to offer any specific guidelines or policy proposals to implement and enforce their budget goodies. The increases allowed Bell Canada, and others under the CTC's jurisdiction, are so large and out of proportion that there can be no relationship whatsoever to any reasonable price guidelines as advocated in the February 19 budget speech.

I find it interesting that there was placed on our desks a short while ago a green document from which I should like to quote a small portion which I find very interesting. It reads:

The present federal regulatory body for telecommunications carriers is the Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) which derives its authority from the National Transportation Act, the Railway Act, and the special acts of incorporation of the undertakings subject to its authority. The CTC either does not have, or has not in the past exercised, authority over a number of matters that are dealt with in subsection C below.

The powers of the CTC are suitable only for the broad economic regulation of a particular corporate entity and are not related to any statutory national policy and objectives—

I repeat the words "are not related to any statutory national policy and objectives."

—such as the vital importance of east/west communications to the sovereignty and economic prosperity of Canada, and to the preservation of its social and cultural identity.

It goes on to say that the recent criteria for the exercise of regulatory authority require the commission to ensure that questions in respect of tolls shall not subject any particular person or company or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatever. I suggest that we are subjecting all the people of the area governed by this monopoly to a particularly discriminatory rate increase. The government obviously is unwilling and incapable of fighting rising inflation. Its persistent refusal to meet with business representatives or the provinces to outline policy guidelines shows a decided lack of forthrightness and iniative.

As recently as March 28 this year, in reply to a question asked by Mr. Stanfield about wholesale price increases and the government's intention to implement new measures—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please refer to hon. gentlemen who are members of this House by position or constituency rather than by name.

Mr. Ellis: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. I was directing attention to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition about wholesale price increases and the government's intention to implement new measures to control inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replied:

I have no policy statement to announce today on that matter.

We have had no policy statement since then having to do with the control of price increases. The day after the budget was presented, with the plea of the finance minister to business, the government's spending estimates were introduced for the fiscal year 1973-74. These showed an increase of almost 15 per cent over the previous fiscal year.

We would strongly recommend that the government take advantage of the power vested in it by law and review the decision of the CTC to increase rates for Bell Canada. One of the facts I find so interesting is that originally, as I understand it, the CTC was developed to protect the consumers' interest; in other words, to defend the public from increases by bodies which had powers unaffected by the normal question of competitive rates.

I recall an occasion many years ago, while I was mayor of a small city, when the Association of Mayors and Reeves decided to object to similar rate increases. however, the association did not have the financial base upon which to argue in respect of the decision of the CTC to give Bell Canada an increase. When the provinces object to such increases, frequently they have difficulty in finding sufficient money in their budgets to oppose an increase, simply because Bell Canada with its army of lawyers, economists, and so on, is extremely well prepared and well financed to fight such a battle.

I suggest that this applies not only to the CTC in respect of Bell Canada but also to freight rates, telecommunication and transmission rates which the CTC also controls. So far as that goes, we have the present government not using the authority it has to hold in check other regulatory bodies, such as the National Energy Board, the CRTC, and others. These bodies, seemingly, grant increases whenever asked and the government does not provide an opportunity for the public as a whole to object to the increases.

Corporate law is becoming very complex and the individual Canadian is not equipped to appear before the CTC and present his views in a manner that could overcome the rhetoric of the legal staff of Bell Canada or other large bodies. So we find that the government has increased its spending and is allowing its own regulatory bodies to increase rates without any guidelines whatever. We feel the government must recognize the state of the economy for what it is and, furthermore, must introduce effective measures and guidelines to combat increasing inflation, particularly in areas under its jurisdiction.

[Mr. Ellis.]

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to comment on the motion before us this evening requesting the immediate cancellation of the rate increases granted Bell Canada.

The matter is very serious because we are grappling with a company that has virtual monopoly, in Quebec and Ontario, on all that is called "telephone". People are therefore the slaves of any of the company's decision because they cannot switch over for service to another company when costs are too high.

I congratulate the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for having introduced a motion on this matter this afternoon. The terms used are, to my mind, quite accurate; it reads in part as follows:

. . . the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to grant Bell Canada almost all the rate increases it requested in its application A and the need for the government to suspend the application of the decision immediately and to consider rescinding it as unacceptable and contrary to the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, this motion is most important because it reflects, I think, what all Canadians believe. I am sure the hon. member for York South thought of all Canadians this afternoom and specially of those who have a hard time making ends meet. Through this motion, he appeals to all, and particularly to those who are responsible for this Commission and have the power to authorize or refuse the increases requested by Bell Canada.

Everyone in this House knows that for the last six years Bell Canada—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

• (2030)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) wishes to rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I have obtained a copy of the French text of the resolution if I understand the hon. member addressing the House, he is referring to a resolution to rescind decisions relative to increases whereas the resolution does not mention rescinding but actually calls upon the government to suspend application of the decision immediately in order to consider rescinding it.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The dividing line is a little thin, as I read the resolution in both English and French, and I think the hon. member should be allowed to make his argument. So I recognize him again.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I thank the hon. member for calling me to order. I believe it means practically the same thing, if we went to the same school. We probably did not, but I believe we both speak French. And the terms are very similar.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote now from an article published in the Friday, February 16 issue of Le Soleil, by Mr. Burtnick, a representative of the Ontario government, who says he is shocked that Bell Canada, over at least six or seven years, has been requesting rate increases every year or two. And Bell Canada never fails to indicate that the request for increased rates is motivated by increased salaries. The low-wage earner is always blamed for the poor management of those who are seeking excuses for their mismanagement.

I should like to quote the statistics supplied to me by the Corporation of Quebec teachers, in a brief addressed to each hon. member, to prove to the House that salaries are not the cause of Bell Canada's increased operation costs. In 1966, Bell Canada had 40,008 employees and total salaries were $225,400,000; salary increases were $25,200,000, i.e. 12.6 per cent.

• (2040)

In 1967 the number of employees at Bell Canada was 38,123, salaries $236,800,000 and the growth in salaries $11,400,000, a 5 per cent increase.

In 1968 employees numbered 37,489, salaries reached $250,700,000 and the growth in salaries $13,900,000, a 5.9 per cent increase.

In 1969 it was clear that it was certainly not the rise in salaries that was behind the tariff increases, for Bell Canada had 38,686 employees, paid $274 million in salaries and the growth in salaries was $23,300,000, a 9.3 per cent increase.

In 1971, the company had 39,136 employees, the payroll was $333,800,000 and the growth in salaries was $31,900,000, a 10.6 per cent increase.

In 1973 the number of employees is 41,000, salaries amount to $398,800,000 and the growth in salaries is $30,200,000, an 8.2 per cent rise.

Bell Canada stressed to the Commission the cause of its tariff increases. I believe that if this company is granted the increase that it is now requesting, this will be the equivalent of disguised taxation which, once again, will come from the pocket of the small taxpayer.

Bell Canada attributes the rise in its operating costs to the following elements: the rise in prices, $11 million; increased taxation $12,900,000—we see that it is again the "behind the door" taxation which is putting the tariffs up—and the new collective agreement, $33,400,000.

The figures I quoted earlier show that the cost of the collective agreement, $33,400,000, is not the correct figure. I have worked out the average of the figures I quoted earlier; it comes to $26,600,000 and not $33,400,000. Therefore, it is no excuse for Bell Canada to say that it is the small salary earners who are lining their pockets, and that that is what is putting up the cost of its services.

To quote again from the same newspaper; Le Soleil, Mr. D. W. Burtnick stresses:

> Last year the company installed 177,000 more telephones than expected—at an average cost of $17.50—but in its end-of-year statement, Bell said it had spent $500,000 less than expected.

And it claims it is forced to put up its tariffs. If it sets up more equipment than anticipated on the other hand, it incurs less expenditures.

The quotation goes on as follows:

> The Ontario representative also blamed those who, testifying for Bell, stated that if the company could not increase its rates, the service would deteriorate.

In the past, one had to travel 2 or 3 miles to find a phone in a home of a remote rural area. On the other hand, we find one in almost every house and even sometimes 3 or 4. I think that it shows that Bell Canada does not have to raise its rates to finance itself. Moreover, in order to show what is going on in Quebec, I would like to quote again Le Soleil:

> Calyle Gilmour from Covey Hill recalled that Quebecers already pay $24 million to Bell and that the company will pay $32 million in school and municipal taxes in Ontario, but only $7.4 million in Quebec.

Once more, the people of Quebec are those who will bear the cost. In Ontario, Bell Canada almost always purchases its equipment from a company which it owns outright. If this company increases the prices of the equipment it sells, the user who must pay cannot be held responsible for it.

Statistics show that 99 per cent of families have a telephone and that Canadians are the world leaders as regards the use of the telephone, with 6.2 calls a day.

Therefore, I believe that the telephone can no longer be considered as a luxury but rather as a vital service for all the Canadian people. Consequently, anyone should be able to afford it. Even the government of Quebec considers as essentiel the cost of telephone when calculating the amount of the benefits to be paid to the 300,000 people who live on welfare in Quebec. I suggest it is very important for the government to see to it that this vital service is not too expensive.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to describe all the aspects of this rate increase, but I wish to emphasize the fact that Bell Canada is going much too far when establishing some rates which always go up every two or three years.

With this new application A there will be a 50 per cent increase for installing new telephones for anyone who is moving into a new house or who has no telephone. This is nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

Considering that there is a 50 per cent increase by set, if a homeowner has had 4 telephone sets installed, equipment charges for the four sets are increased by 50 per cent.

Moreover, if there are two or three telephones in a house, it makes no difference: so much is charged by set. Nor can I understand how it is costing to make a call from a Contempra phone than from a standard phone. There are a lot of anomalies in that rate increase and once again I congratulate the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for having brought that motion in.

Bell Canada

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend in this debate to stand up for Bell Canada and its claims. Nor is it my intention to stand up for the decision made by CTC nor the commission itself, the very simple reason being that the decision was made exactly three and a half days ago and out of those three and a half days two were non-working days. I think that the opposition and my own colleagues would have every reason to find me extremely presumptuous and question the soundness of my remarks if I ventured to stand up for or condemn the decision when all hon. members of this House barely had time to peruse the document.

This is why I am somewhat surprised to see the opposition express its views in such a firm and categorical way when it is a document, as I say, that nobody has had time to examine in depth; if somebody did have time to do so in the period of time available to us the analytical faculties of that man would have to be proclaimed as those of a genius.

What I would like to deal with, Mr. Speaker, is the resolution addressed to the government urging it to act immediately by way of the exceptional powers which are found in the statutes and whose existence nobody in this House will deny, of course.

It is to this subject that I would like to devote most of my time tonight because this haste to tell the government: Cancel, suspend, rescind or modify this decision which you hardly had time to read, seems most suspect to say the least.

In this House and in this Parliament we have a tradition of which I would like to remind hon. members. The opposition has unduly often reminded us of this tradition over the few years I have been there. This tradition, which is the expression of Parliament's will, consists in requiring from the executive power that it respect the independance of constituted bodies, especially quasi-judicial bodies.

I say "especially" because the opposition has always been extremely touchy in the area of executive power interference even with bodies not of quasi-judicial nature. For instance, I am thinking about the charges or suspicions which have been expressed more than once when someone feared or pretended to fear that the government had tried to interfere with the decisions of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, for instance, of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission or even of the Art Council.

The opposition has always shown paradoxical positions. On the one hand, they ask questions and urge the government to act, as the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) just did. They blame the government for its lack of action one and a half working days after the decision has been published and, on the other hand, with this splendid paradoxical position, if the government is so unfortunate as to voice one single critic against quasi-judicial bodies, similar clamours arise from the opposition but this time in a reverse direction. They then tell the executive: Hands off; those are bodies whose freedom is extremely dear to this Parliament, whose independance has been established by Parliament and the government should not tamper with it.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

I am surprised to hear shouting from that corner—I do not know where it came from exactly—because when I think, for example, about the protests at the slightest suspicion or at the least indication of governmental intervention in the administration of the Canada Council or the CBC, it is certainly, and I congratulate them, our friends from the New Democratic Party who tried the hardest to prevent an action of this type.

[English]

An hon. Member: You are throwing in a lot of red herrings.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I do not know what the hon. member wants with his red herrings, Mr. Speaker, but if he only came back from fishing, we might go on with the discussion.

Actually, at the CRTC, for example—and I want to make it very clear—even though the government is authorized to issue guidelines to that agency, within certain limits set out in the act, to my knowledge, in four years and a half to five years it has done so only four times and those guidelines were all likely to gain the support of all members.

The first guideline, it will be remembered, was designed to bring back to Canada certain radio and television stations, and cablevision companies.

The purpose of the second was to force cablevision companies to reserve a channel for educational television and another for community television.

The third as applied to educational television, gave the provinces authority, if they themselves were creating independent corporations for this purpose, to hold broadcasting licences.

• (2050)

I am convinced that this tradition, this respect for the independence of commissions having quasi-legal status, for independent agencies created by this Parliament, is one from which Parliament has no intention to depart.

I shall now come to the second part of my argument to show hon. members how irregular it would be to force the government, and for the government to accept this constraint, to suspend, alter or reverse, a day and a half after its release, a decision following almost a month of public hearings and a month of deliberation by the Commission itself. And apparently we are being asked tonight to take, in two or three days, a decision which is per se, and I emphasize this point, an exceptional one. Because of course, upon reading the Act which contains the section which the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) read out a little while ago, it can be seen that this Act provides for very general acceptance, without amendment, of the Commission's decisions.

This power of the executive to suspend, amend or rescind decisions is obviously exceptional.

As I said this afternoon, when answering a question by the hon. member for York South, it would be quite unusual for the executive to use these powers unless such an intervention is justified by a very serious reason. I gave two examples which to me would be reasons—

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Give us some examples.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I gave some today during the question period. I will repeat them for the hon. member, as it seems they need repeating.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister is chicken.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): First I gave the example of a decision which would mainly be based on an obviously false principle and, second that of a decision which would obviously be based on inaccurate facts or serious falsehoods.

Those are but two examples among many others. There might be other reasons as I said this afternoon during the oral questions period. I do not reject a government intervention, but I want to stress the point that it would not be made without very serious reasons. According to a practice in the Communications Department that has been going on ever since the department itself has been established, as soon as a decision is published, it is submitted to the high officials and advisors of the department so that it can be considered at length. They report to the minister who, although he may accept or reject their advice, must hear from them before rendering his decision: he must be aware of the pros and cons which could make the executive power, the governor in council act directly, use its reserved powers. This is a matter of routine.

Such a practice, I repeat, was resorted to as soon as the department was established and this is the first thing I did myself as soon as the ruling being considered tonight was published.

It would be irregular, I think, to expect such a study to be completed within a day and a half, within two, three or maybe five days, in view of the long process which enabled the Commission itself to reach the ruling that is the subject-matter of this resolution.

Such interference, as I said, constitutes an exceptional measure and there should be serious reasons for invoking powers reserved to the cabinet.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said in his statement that the CTC "was not equipped" to discharge the responsibilities entrusted to it. Mr. Speaker, the truth is—and the government probably knew it before being told by the opposition—that the circumstances have changed faster than the Commission could transform itself. And I should like to refer the hon. members who did not read it, to page 26 of the Green Book I had the honour of tabling recently in the House. The hon. members will realize that the government is quite aware of the problem to which the hon. member for York South referred, and that it is now clearly considering in that Green Book a reorganization of the Telecommunications Section of the CTC.

Incidentally, I should also like to tell the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) who, during the question period today, proposed that consumers should get help from the government, under some form or other, to submit their claims and make their case before the CTC, that if he refers to page 14 of the Green Book, he will see that this possibility is actually being considered. In fact, we are saying, and I quote:

> The Government is accordingly considering a number of suggestions with regard to the representation of consumer interests when licensing and regulatory matters are being dealt with by the Minister of Communications and the federal regulatory bodies.

Therefore, in the government, we are quite aware of the fact that some changes are urgently needed in that respect, and Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the House the assurance that after having conducting the consultations called for by the Green Book, we intend to act and to act with determination and haste, in order to take the corrective measures required in a situation that we have fully looked into.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, here is the last point that I want to deal with. A short while ago when I talked of cancelling or changing a decision I heard someone: It is only a matter of suspension. So I think that the suspension—again I do not exclude the possibility of the government eventually taking this decision or of being myself compelled, once an analysis has been made by my department, to recommend to the government such a measure—of a decision by the Canadian Transport Commission already constitutes a kind of judgment made on the validity of the decision itself. And I was concerned, for instance, when I heard the hon. member for York South state positively that "the Board has been intimidated". He was certainly not making it easy for us to accept a suggestion that is his own, because after this charge has been made in such a positive manner, if we were going to suspend the decision we would now seem to admit that the Commission has been intimidated.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This completes the round of 15-minute speakers. There are 14 members on the list who are to speak for the next 120 minutes, each of whom shall not speak for more than 10 minutes.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as I suggested in my supplementary question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) earlier today, the motion before the House raises the ghosts of the past. This evening's debate has been held before. What is being said in the present debate is almost a repetition of what was said in the debates of 1966 and 1967 on the setting up of the Canadian Transport Commission. At that time, members of all parties worked together in this House as members of all parties have never before worked to produce the national transportation bill and to remove from the control of Parliament over 40 per cent of the economy of this nation. The House put that power into the hands of a commission, known as the Canadian Transport Commission, in the interests of efficiency in the running of this country.

In that debate those of us who were concerned about this tremendous transfer of power to the board issued warning after warning, as can be found in the speech of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) of December 12, 1966, and again in the speech of the hon. member for Peace River as well as in my own speech delivered on January 12, 1967. All the things I want to say tonight can be found in Hansard for those two days. What warning did we issue? We warned that one of the great dangers in turning all this tremendous power over to a board would be the risk of the acceptance of a principle of infallibility by this board that we had seen demonstrated in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, other boards, commissions and Crown corporations in this country. Those warnings of 1966-67 have come home to roost in this debate on the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission on the Bell rates.

It is absolutely impossible for the ordinary layman to be able to comprehend the technical aspects of a rate hearing and make his views known before the board on such matters. If you think there is difficulty in connection with Bell rate applications, think how difficult it is to understand the applications that will come from the railways in the years ahead.

Let me tell the House a little story based on the experience of 10 years ago in the MacPherson Royal Commission. One of the railway companies, Canadian Pacific Railways, has a study prepared on moving grain out of western Canada into the export market. Since there were no experts in Canada able to do this, they went to New York and got a reputable group of accountants to produce this study. The study showed that the railway operated at a tremendous loss in 1958 in the hauling of western grain to market. This alarmed the western governments and wheat selling organizations in the west. They hired another group of experts from New York, equally reputable, to study the same figures. They proved conclusively, with the same figures, that this railway had made money carrying this grain to market. The royal commission had two reports before it, so they hired another group of experts, also from New York, to study the two reports. The third group published a volume three and one half inches in depth called the Third Volume of the MacPherson Report analysing these reports. They finally concluded there was a slight profit in the moving of grain.

This story is told for a purpose, mainly that the technical aspects of rate setting are beyond the comprehension of an ordinary person. Realizing this is 1966 and 1967, the hon. member for Peace River moved an amendment. This amendment laid down the best structure we could suggest for setting up a statutory committee, not under the control of the cabinet or the Prime Minister, but under the control of this House. The minute the House met, the statutory committee was to meet. This committee would have had at its disposal competent advisers who could cope with and examine the reports, provide us with a window on these hearings and translate them into language the laymen in the House of Commons could understand.

That amendment was turned down in 1967 and turned down in a committee vote. Every member of the Liberal government of that day voted against the amendment. Every member of the New Democratic Party also voted against it on the grounds that we should turn over complete power to these boards or Crown corporations and give them the power of infallibility. The first chairman was the Hon. Mr. Pickersgill, "Slick Pick". The next chairman is a Buddha called Benson. Do we have to get down on our knees and say that this board is infallible? I have known these men for 25 years. They are just as awkward and stupid as I am, and they make just as many mistakes. When the Prime Minister stood up in this House today and said that this board was set up to handle all these things, he not only let down the power of parliament to have some say over such an important segment of our community and our economy, he abdicated his right as the head of a government to have some say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My seatmate, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), pressed home the point this afternoon. I wish to quote from the act which was quoted by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). The act in question which guides this group called the Canadian Transport Commission states:

> The Governor in Council may at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the Commission.

It is bad enough having parliament removed from the scene with no sophisticated committee able to handle these technical matters, but just imagine the position of the ordinary citizen of Canada appearing before a board on technical matters which are beyond the comprehension of almost every person in Canada, except the technically qualified men in accounting at this level. He has no chance at all. When I heard the Prime Minister today abdicating the right of parliament, I realized this was a complete acceptance of the principle of infallibility of government boards.

In my speech of 1967, I stated that I did not blame people who are socialistically oriented and believe in this sort of nonsense; that is their right. However, I believe that a government which calls itself Liberal should know better. A Tory who knows something about the defence of the human race should certainly know better. Our party voted to give and maintain some power for this House of Commons.

Infallibility of government boards? The Prime Minister is as bad as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who last Friday over a television station in Regina and Saskatoon enunciated the same principle about the Canadian Wheat Board. Once you appoint these men to the board, they achieve infallibility. Even Pope John gave up the notion of infallibility 20 years ago. Here we have a government that accepts no responsibility.

I close my remarks by saying that what we are hearing here is a doctrine of elitism. We have in power a government, supported by a party on this side of the House, that believes it is perfectly right and proper for the representatives of the people to turn their power over to boards and give them complete power and right over our fortunes ever after. Elitism, infallibility or whatever you call it, it is not democracy. It is not democratic government in a modern corporate state like the one in which we live.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, while I do not agree with all the rhetoric of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I do find myself in substantial agreement with the general thrust of his argument. It must be said the proposal that the federal cabinet should reconsider and perhaps over-rule the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission is not an easy one to make. It may be argued, for example, that it is an independent tribunal set up specifically to make the kind of decision it has made. It has the staff, expertise and jurisdiction to do just what it has done.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has just given us a very good demonstration of why boards such as this need independence. They need protection from the rantings of Members of Parliament who would interfere with these boards every time they disagree with a decision.

• (2110)

Mr. Alexander: Let the public suffer.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is not a question of infallibility. It is a question of independence. I must say that after hearing the previous speaker I should hate to entrust any of our agencies or our courts to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). We must jealously guard the independence of federal agencies.

Mr. Alexander: While they are shafting the people.

Mr. MacGuigan: At the same time, we must bear in mind, of course, that the government has the ability to reverse the ruling of such a Commission. Provision for this is made in the legislation and it is open to the cabinet to act in such a case. In my view this is a case in which the cabinet should assume its responsibility and reconsider the matter.

If I understand the resolution correctly, it asks that the cabinet suspend the decision of the CTC while it is reconsidering the question. But the resolution does not prejudge the decision which the cabinet might make in its consideration of the matter in accordance with the resolution. In those terms, I completely agree with the resolution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well, that's one. Now, what about the other?

Mr. MacGuigan: The resolution is not a criticism of the CTC. I believe all members of the House would like to repudiate some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. The question here is the possibility of reconsideration on broader grounds of the decision the CTC has made. It is precisely because the CTC is limited by its statute in terms of what it can do that the problem to which the motion addresses itself has arisen.

The problem is in fact larger than the problem immediately at hand. First, there is the unfortunate inadequacy of the structure, inasmuch as jurisdiction over both transportation and communications has been joined in one regulatory body.

Bell Canada

At the time Canada came into being, the distinction between communications and transportation was scarcely realized. Certainly, it was not clearly realized.

An hon. Member: There is no difference.

Mr. MacGuigan: The only reference to communications as a distinct subject in the British North America Act is in section 92(10)(a) in the mention of telegraphs. The other words in that subsection refer to "works and undertakings connecting a province with other provinces or extending beyond the limits of a province." It was to bring it under this category of "works and undertakings" that the act incorporating the Bell Telephone Company in 1880 was amended by a statute of 1882. In section 4 of that statute it was stated:

> The said act of incorporation is hereby amended and the works thereunder authorized are hereby declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

It was only under this type of provision in our constitution that federal regulatory jurisdiction over what we now consider to be distinctively communications began to emerge. Subsequently, with the decision of the Privy Council in the radio reference of 1932, it was recognized that here was a new field of regulation, and not long after that radio, and then television, began to be separately regulated. Telegraphs and telephones were left where they had begun, in the field of transportation, and I suggest this is no longer satisfactory in the year 1973.

The second inadequacy is a consequence of the first, and is an inadequacy in the terms of reference. The Railway Act stipulates that the Transport Commission regulate federally-chartered telecommunications common carriers and approve all rates for public and private wire communications. The type of regulation envisaged by this act is set out in section 321 (1):

> All tolls shall be just and reasonable and shall always, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions with respect to all traffic of the same description carried over the same route, be charged equally to all persons at the same rate.

Mr. Speaker, these are not sufficient grounds of consideration today when we must respond to the type of request which is continually being placed before the Commission by Bell Canada. I should like again to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the minister, in a green paper, has himself suggested that a new body should be set up, one which we migh call a Canadian Communications Commission. This would separate, once and for all, the regulation of communications from the regulation of transportation.

An hon. Member: And how would that help?

Mr. MacGuigan: It would have authority over all matters involving communication. This would leave us in a much better situation because all issues affecting communications would be dealt with together, and the regulatory body would be able to develop expertise in that particular field. The terms of reference drawn up for that Commission should, of course, be sufficiently broad as to enable it to take into account much wider considerations, when considering applications for rate increases, than is now permitted.

The third inadequacy is the lack of procedures for opposition. I have among my constituents some who would have liked to oppose the application made by the Bell Telephone Company. But the fact that the hearings were being held in Ottawa would have made their appearance very inconvenient and expensive. I understand, also, that the proceedings at pre-hearing conferences were not made available free to intervenors, and this, too, would constitute a financial hardship. In this respect, there is a proposal in the green paper which should be adopted as soon as possible. It reads, and I quote from page 14:

> The complexity of the subject and the contingent requirement for highly specialized legal and economic skills have inhibited individuals and groups from appearing before the regulatory board to press their views. The government is accordingly considering a number of suggestions with regard to the representation of consumer interests when licensing and regulatory matters are being dealt with by the Minister of Communications and the federal regulatory bodies.

There is surely a need in this area which must be met speedily by the government. Such a body could also act as an appeal board to consider representations from aggrieved users of the telecommunications system.

In sum, the point is not so much that the decision of the CTC is wrong as that it does not appear to the public that the decision has been made by the most appropriate body, nor does it appear that it has been made in accordance with procedures which allow for sufficient public participation. Just or not, the decision has not been seen to be just.

Perhaps the present problem will force us speedily to adopt the proposals which the minister has placed before us in the green paper.

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in the past several weeks the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) has on several occasions been asked to intervene in the Bell Canada rate hearings on behalf of the public interest and the minister has consistently refused to do so on the ground that the cabinet had the power to disallow a decision of the CTC. It is on this basis that our party is asking the government not to permit the rate increase to be proceeded with pending a thorough review by the cabinet, a review which the minister has already acknowledged lies within the power of the administration.

The minister laid considerable stress this evening upon the fact that the Bell judgment had only been made public at the end of last week. Mr. Speaker, it does not take more than a few moments to recognize that there is considerable public dissatisfaction with the judgment, and it does not need much imagination to undertake to suspend the effects of that judgment until a review can be carried out. I submit that the arguments put forward by the minister do not detract in any way from the force of the representations and requests made by members of this party.

I was more impressed by some of the arguments put forward by the parliamentary secretary. Extracts have been quoted from the green paper on communications policy. I, too, wish to quote from this document. On page nine we find the following:

> Equally important is the fact that efficient low-cost telephone service has come to be looked on as a necessity of life for individual members of the public.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

I suggest that this paragraph might well serve as a theme for the debate tonight. What we are concerned with tonight is trying to debate whether such an efficient, low cost service is being provided to the public by Bell Canada; and if there is any doubt about the matter, we say that the cabinet should intervene, make an assessment on behalf of the public and arrive at an objective judgment which, in the words of the parliamentary secretary, may be seen to be just.

• (2120)

If one compares the rates of Bell Canada with those of, say, telephone companies in other provinces—I refer particularly to the western provinces—one will discover in virtually every case Bell rates are substantially higher at the present time despite the fact, one might assume, that Bell enjoys economies of scales which other telephone companies do not. For that reason I suggest there is serious doubt as to whether Bell is offering the kind of low cost, efficient telephone service which the government itself recognizes as a necessity for individual Canadians.

I think what is at issue in this debate, Mr. Speaker, is the ability, or the willingness, of the transport commission to represent the public interest in the hearings which have taken place over a number of years. I think it is instructive to recall that Bell Canada has frequently made application for rate increases down through the years, and the fact is that on no occasion, in all its appearances before the Canadian Transport Commission, has Bell Canada been refused an over-all increase in the rates it charges the public; this in spite of the fact that in its early years Bell exceeded the permissive level of earnings set by the board. I suggest that because of this, in very real measure the transport commission has lost the confidence of the public to act in what it believes to be its best interests.

Moreover, it was frequently recorded during past months that the complexity of the argument which only Bell, I submit, really understood, which Bell designed and which took place on Bell's terms, prevented most if not all of the intervenors being able to make their case satisfactorily. I submit that even the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec publicly conceded that they were unable to present the kind of evidence and to marshall the kind of resources, with the time at their disposal, that would enable them to counter the deep and complex financial rationalizations being put forward by Bell Canada.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the methods of proceeding under which the commission conducts the hearings into Bell Canada applications appear to be designed, as the parliamentary secretary admits, to encourage non-participation on the part of individuals and organized groups alike. What was intended as a quasi-judicial regulatory agency has become, in reality, the playground of the legal profession.

Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions, through the minister and directly to the commission, requests were made for the commission to facilitate intervention and an expression of opinion by the public. But the commission would not undertake to hold hearings outside the city of Ottawa and, as has already been admitted, many individuals and groups simply were unable to afford the time or the financial resources to appear to present their case.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the public interest was, in large measure, not represented by any agency of this government or this parliament before the hearings of the CTC. It was left—I think this is a matter of regret for members to note—to the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, with such resources and time as they had at their disposal, to represent the public interest.

There have been a number of quotations from the green paper to the effect that the government will be proposing a new regulatory agency to deal with these applications in the future. I submit to this House that the fact that such proposals are being made underlines the weakness of the kind of scrutiny which the CTC has in the past been able to bring to bear upon these applications. If, in fact, the CTC was doing the job properly there would be no need for the minister to stand before us and say, "We are making some changes in the near future." I submit those changes cannot be allowed to take place some months hence. The reasons which gave rise to the need for changes should be brought to bear upon the current applications, for the same reasons as those for which the government now concedes reform is necessary in regulating rate increases of public utilities. For those reasons the cabinet should now undertake to bring scrutiny to bear upon the Bell rate increases. Therefore, I submit that the government's own arguments, couched in its proposals for a new communications policy, in themselves cast doubt upon the commission's ability to adjudicate fairly, objectively and in the public interest the application presented by Bell.

Mr. Speaker, this is, I concede, a complicated subject. One could for some time quote figures in support of one's case. But this is not the time nor the place to repeat all the technical arguments. The point is this: however successfully Bell may have mesmerized the transport commission, its case before the Canadian public has not been proven. Putting it charitably, there exists serious doubt that the rate increases are justified.

I hope that the government takes seriously its responsibility to represent and defend the public interest, as I submit the commission has failed to do. This is a time of mounting and justifiable anxiety about price increases in Canada. In the circumstances, the government is surely obliged to suspend, at least, the implementation of these rate increases pending a thorough review. That review, Mr. Speaker, must place the public interest ahead of Bell Canada's interests. If this happens, I am confident that the government can come to no conclusion other than that the rate increases must not and shall not be proceeded with.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, due to the exclusive monopoly exercised by Bell Canada in Quebec, that province is particularly and severely affected by the rate increase as a result of the fourth application since 1969. This increase soon gave rise to a reaction among Quebecers followed by general dissatisfaction, especially in certain groups affected such as senior citizens, disabled persons, the poor and the tenants. Consequently, I feel it is my duty to speak during a few minutes on the motion of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

I admit that I am convinced that the cause we are pleading is justified, but when I realized that I was supporting the hon. member for York South, I was somewhat reluctant. I wondered whether I actually was on the right side. But when I found out, after reading his motion, that this would not result in a blame or a non-confidence motion, then, I understood why the hon. member for York South could criticize Bell Canada cheerfully and bravely, with honour and vigour, casually chide the government, because the latter will not be defeated as a result of this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of using the same language as the hon. member for York South as regards Bell Canada. First of all I would like to clear up a few jurisdictional points and take up again some of the arguments put forward by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier).

The minister indicated that it was impossible for the government to take action at this time and meet our demand that the judgment made by the CTC be suspended, because the autonomy of these quasi-judicial bodies has to be respected. The minister seemed to be sad and unhappy that we called upon him to intervene. He said: Do not call upon me to interfere.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that we do not ask the government to intervene in the course of a hearing by a body. We are only urging the government to take action, to prove its leadership and simply suspend a judgment which has already been made. For what purpose? Because it is a matter of common knowledge that all parties must be heard before a court. Well, before this very decision was made, Bell Canada was one of the only parties to be heard. The public at large never had any opportunity of coming before the court, of setting forth their viewpoint, and of stating that in view of the rising cost of living, for instance, it is impossible for them to agree with the increase that the CTC has just approved.

Consequently, it would only be the most elementary justice to suspend this decision for a moment in order to enable the government, the governor in council, to review the case to ensure that justice has really been done, that all aspects have indeed been weighed in the light of the social context because it is clear to everyone that this fourth or fifth increase in rates is socially unacceptable.

This is why the government would not make an error by interpreting with generosity its jurisdiction under the law, to fulfill the wish of all hon. members and to suspend the decision of the commission. Moreover, it is natural that in the final stage the government become the superior court before which the Canadian people can plead their case through hon. members.

Before ordinary courts, one can be assured that justice will be done because there is always a court of appeal and above it the Supreme Court. But here there is no court beyond the decision of the commission except the one of the Governor general in council that Parliament has wanted to establish under the law. I say to the hon. minister that the first argument does not seem to be very valuable and I answered with the explanations I have just given.

The second argument used by the minister, and without too much conviction, I must admit, nor too much persuasion, was that they would have to make within two or three days an exceptional decision that an independent board or body could have made in two months. But what is extraordinary about that? Courts do that every day. Courts make decisions within 15 minutes whenever injunctions, for instance are required from the Superior Court and are turned down afterwards. An appeal can be lodged immediately with the appeal Court and immediately the judges for the sake of justice, agree to suspend, to stay the ease, until they have had enough time to make a judgment upon the merits in order to prevent any injustice. Here again, I believe the example applies in the case of the government and it would probably be wise for the government to accept at this time to stay the decision pending further consideration. That is not to prejudge in any way the final decision and neither to criticizing the one that was made. It is simply to show broad-mindedness and wait so that better justice be done to Canadian citizens.

Concluding his speech, the minister said: but there should be a serious reason for me to act. That serious reason, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it lies in that request for an increase in rates that was granted, which is socially unacceptable and comes as a coicidence—which is quite revealing—at a time when a House committee on the cost of living had to make public a majority report in which they recommended the setting up of a commission to control the cost of living. And in the minority report, we told the government to go further and to implement, among other things an immediate price and wage freeze.

That is an indication that it is not a mere coincidence that this motion is being debated in this House; it is because at the present time the great concern is about the cost of living which has gone beyond bounds, and that concern cannot be allowed to continue. The government must bring in measures and show it is capable of making decisions. That is what we are asking of the government now, and we take the opportunity offered by this debate to say to the government: Set the minds of the people of Canada at rest and as far as this decision is concerned, which must necessarily be of an inflationary nature, postpone it for a while. When you have examined it in depth, when you have allowed the people of Canada to express their views, you may decide as you see fit. But take a decision right now.

Mr. Speaker, now that I have answered some of the arguments made by the Minister of Communications I would like to conclude by saying first of all that Bell Canada deserves to be congratulated. That company undoubtedly deserves it. For years it has succeeded in developing its means of research, showed a sound administration practice made progress in marketing and other fields and that is why that company is recognized throughout the world as a model. We must congratulate Bell for that. But congratulating it does not mean that it is always right. And we submit that in this case it is not right. We submit that the record indicates very clearly that its need for expansion and its quest for reinvestment are not warranted in the present economic and social context and if that company is not right in this regard we urge the government to be logical and decide on the basis of the general context of the Canadian economy. That increase in rates granted to Bell Canada will become more and more generalized in other fields and will thus become dramatic. The cost of living will become too heavy a burden for the underpriviledged and for middle class people who are too often forgotten.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has now expired.

• (2140)

Miss Monique Bégin (Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all be permitted to correct at least one point of the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). To tell the truth, I was somewhat at a loss to understand whether he was for or against but I noticed that he based his first argument on an assertion which I believe to be wrong. He mentioned the lack of participation of ordinary citizens, of intermediary bodies, of anyone other than Bell Canada representatives, at the public hearings held from January 10 to February 16 last whereas, to my knowledge, the number of representations made at that public hearing is the greatest the company has ever received.

Having said that, I was most interested in some of the problems outlined by my colleagues, without going into details, and for good reasons. I believe, for instance, that there are highly specialized technical problems involved. I am thinking of the legal problems, notably the precise nature of the CTC's relations with the cabinet and with Parliament, and the problems of taxation, such as the reviewing of the concept of deferred taxation and its implementation. I am also thinking of administrative problems, such as the quality and quantity of personnel in the Canadian Transport Commission or the administrative plan for the running of the Commission.

For my part, I do not mean to speak on these points, which have already been commented on in outline. I intend to give voice to some more general considerations, for the good reason that since the Commission's decision was only published on Friday, I have not been able to study the decision, or the complete file, for that matter.

Besides that, it seems clear to me that our role as parliamentarians is rather to suggest ideas or basic principles. Here again, I differ from the previous speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, for if I understand correctly, we are soon going to be controlling and reviewing all personal and corporative decisions that are made in Canada. This is really not the role I see myself in, or ourselves. My role is to put forth basic principles, and to enlighten the matter to the best of my knowledge, rather than to get carried away from reading press clippings or extracts taken out of context from just one of the briefs submitted at the public hearing last January and February.

I am not concerned, therefore, with reducing the scope of the debate until we are arguing about dotting the i's and crossing the t's, but rather with reflecting in the name of my constituents on some of the wider aspects of this discussion that affects every family in Canada.

[English]

To my way of thinking, it is much too easy to choose a big public corporation such as Bell Canada and make it the villain. That attitude, to me, is by analogy very similar to the one adopted last week by another opposition party which for hours and hours deliberately exploited human misery.

[Translation]

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, except for its shareholders, who likes big corporations? Unless I am mistaken, it is not very profitable these days to be a Bell Canada shareholder. Personally, I do not like paying bills any more than you all.

I have many other reasons however, for complaining about Bell Canada. In my riding, and here I refer to a situation in the metropolis of Canada and not in the Arctic, there still are party lines, and not because people have chosen to use them: there are so many other kinds of entertainment in Montreal.

It seems to me that the fundamental problem of maintaining service rates and facing increased costs of corporation debts, versus an increase in subscribers' rates and the cost of equity should be studied exhaustively.

This being said, the fact remains that as far as I know the quality and the variety of the services offered to Canadians by Bell Canada are outstanding.

A little while ago, as I was listening to the honourable member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I wanted to ask him if he remembered the time when he was a student in Paris. Of course I am a generation remote from him, but nevertheless we have certainly encountered the same problems. He must certainly recall the telephone slugs that you have to buy in each restaurant and that cannot even be used in another telephone booth. I am also thinking about the calls you have to make three or four hours before you can get the connection. As to residents, I think about the months and years they must remain on a waiting list before getting a telephone, without mentioning the basic installation cost of some $500 that the ordinary citizen must pay, and all the rest.

It remains that Bell Canada offers one of the best services in the world, at one of the most reasonable and controlled prices in the world. What can we do?

I imagine that a certain party will answer: Nationalize Bell Canada! and I would understand to some extent! Everybody would want the increases that are paid Bell Canada, the increases which I pay, that is the investments that I offer the company would allow us to be come shareholders at least. Perhaps but would that guarantee a better service at lower cost? Certainly hon. members will allow me to doubt it!

In fact, what is the price of something all about? It seems to me that it is the actual number of hours during which the consumer has to work in order to be in a position to obtain goods or services. Certainly, at the present time, I am not sufficiently briefed to supply figures; no one among us really is.

However, I think that we should think about that and see that, all things being equal, the portion of the family budget devoted each month to payment of Bell Canada bills has noticeably diminished as compared with what it was 10 or 15 years ago.

However, some questions remain unanswered. One can wonder whether the parallel is fair between the increases in rates obtained by Bell Canada through last Friday's decision and the increase in the cost of living, whether both are commensurate, if I may say so. One may wonder whether the commission is in a position to study the expansion priorities that Bell Canada has set forth itself.

One can wonder whether the act and regulations governing the Canadian Transport Commission can really allow a clear interpretation of the notion of public interest.

All of those questions appear to me much larger than the sole decision of Friday last, that is, rate increases that are not at all agreeable to us; last night I wrote my cheques to the order of Bell Canada.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is surprising to find one of our members so young and attractive, yet so endowed with the principles of "Mother Bell" and tradition that she can see fault in the minor resolution that the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) brought forward today. Obviously, the Canadian people are thinking about nationalization and government control not only of Bell but of all the other telephone companies and communications media in Canada.

• (2150)

It is no longer an advantage to have a telephone; it is a downright necessity, an essential part of life. I would suggest to some of those who question whether the CTC has made the proper judgment to consider the fact that an announcement will be made of the payment in April of a quarterly dividend which will be increased to 71 cents a share. The annual rate will be $2.85 cents a share. Previously, Bell telephone paid three quarterly dividends of 66 cents and one dividend of 67 cents, for an annual rate of $2.65 a share.

What they asked for when they came before the CTC was the right to raise enough money to make an expenditure of $590 million. Leaving aside the fact that they paid this dividend, their shareholders were not too enthusiastic about the stock. As I said, last year they paid a dividend of $2.65. However, the interesting thing is that all they are going to ask for in the financial markets is an additional $200 million in order to raise the $590 million they say is necessary for construction.

Do the members of this House not know what Bell Canada is? Do they not know that they own many subsidiaries in other fields which are also involved in the decision to allow an increase in rates for the service so the corporation can continue to build an empire which is not only in the telephone field? To the best of my knowledge, Northern Electric is still a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bell. It is interesting to note that at no time was the Canadian Transport Commission able to separate what Bell telephone was making from its own operations, and what they were making from Northern Electric; what they were bleeding off into Northern and how they were making their sales. The CTC spent years trying to find that out, but to my knowledge they have never been able to do so.

I am sure that the CTC is much less competent than was the old board of transport commissioners. It is interesting, however, that Bell telephone also owns other subsidiaries, such as Microsystems International, Nevron Industries Company, Northern Electric Distribution, Northern Electric tele-something, which is in Turkey—even the bilingual members of the House would not able to pronounce that name—and Northern Telecom Inc., in Boston, Massachusetts. It also owns 49 per cent of Bell Northern Research and it owns Northern Telephone in northern Ontario and Northern Telephone in northern Quebec. It owns a vast network of telephone systems.

It may be true that Bell telephone has done an excellent job in the telecommunications field, and I would be the first to admit it. But I suggest that this field is important enough to the people so that even the minister, inept as he may be, has suggested that the government proposes to merge the functions of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission with those of the Canadian Transport Commission which apply to telecommunications carriers, subject to federal regulatory authority. Why is that? Obviously, he has suddenly come to the conclusion that the money people pay for telephone service is not all going into producing telephones or bringing the service up to date; much of it is going into non-allied fields.

We should be interested in looking at some of the figures in relation to the rates paid for telephone service. The figures which I can quote were provided in a Canadian Press survey published in the Gazette on February 15 of this year. They indicate the monthly basic rates for privately-owned telephones in communities with 5,000 to 10,000 telephones. In Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, the rate is $5.60; in Caraquet, New Brunswick, it is $5.10; in Exeter, Ontario, it is $4.50; in Powell River, British Columbia, it is $4.70. But the government-owned telephone system in Flin Flon, Manitoba, is $3.25. This is only about half the cost in some other communities. In North Battleford, Saskatchewan, unlike Glace Bay where it is $5.60, the rate is $3.45—over $2 less. In Lloydminster, Alberta, it is $3.80. This is the rate for government-owned telephones in Alberta, where I have not heard anybody sound remotely as if they would want to nationalize or socialize any kind of public utility.

Mr. Baldwin: Don't be so sure about that.

Mr. Peters: I am sure that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was progressive when he was 30 years younger, and so were the people in that area and they probably did nationalize the service. But I am suggesting it is time we did something about the whole communications system in Canada, and did it now. Every time Bell telephone goes before the government, they present this kind of document. So does Canadian National. Nobody is able to argue against their tariff structure, because nobody understands it. I disagree violently with the parliamentary secretary who says that what we need is another regulatory body to regulate the body which we have set up to regulate the company. Let us quit playing around, take over this company and operate it in the interests of the public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Few people in Canada today, except for the dinosaurs in political thought, believe that in a monopolistic, public utility company there should be no government ownership or no government control. Our telephone systems now are satellites and are connected through microwave systems to people in every part of the world. It seems to me that this is a sufficiently important segment of our economy to be brought under the control of the people.

It may be that if we are to maintain the standard that we have maintained in telephone communications, not only in Bell telephone but in other telephone systems in Canada—and there are 30 to 40 such systems—we will have to pay more. As the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) said, the cost of living is going up and therefore it is reasonable to expect telephone rates to go up also. But if that is so, at least let us ensure, on behalf of the individual who is paying the bill, that he is getting the most for his money and that he knows to what other uses his money is being put.

Therefore, I suggest that we do not need another "senate" to look after the "senate" that we have created in the CTC, where we put tired, worn-out or defeated politicians. We need to establish a Crown corporation which will operate our public utility from coast to coast to ensure that not only is it the best possible but that service can be provided to every part of the country through our communications media whether radio, television, telephone or any new developments that take place. That will happen at a cost the people can afford only if we do it publicly, and if we do it all across the country by uniting Bell telephone with all the other systems in Canada, making it a government-operated Crown corporation in the monopoly, public utility field.

• (2200)

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member allow me a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I must point out to the hon. member that the time of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) having expired, he cannot be asked questions unless there is unanimous consent, and I would be surprised if the House agreed.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we could sum up the very excellent speech of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) by saying that the essence of it was that the bell tolls for Bell, if he could have his way. It is fascinating, however, to recall that the President of the Canadian Transport Commission, who actually sat on this particular hearing, is the same distinguished gentleman who, as minister of finance, started the inflationary spiral in this country, or at least did more than any other minister of finance to keep it going. However, we now find him, as president of this commission, still pouring oil to fuel the fires of inflation. We are concerned about this. We are very concerned about it. We have shown our concern in our discussions, speeches and questions.

Just today I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what I thought was a very reasonable question. I asked him if he would make a statement on motions as to whether or not the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was stating government policy when he indicated that in his view only the provincial governments had the authority and the jurisdiction to do anything about instituting a freeze or controls on prices. I asked the Prime Minister also if in his statement on motions he would say what, in his opinion, would be an emergency which would prompt the government to act. All we got was a smart-aleck reply, saying that this was asking for a legal opinion. I was not asking him for a legal opinion. If I wanted a legal opinion I would go to a man who knows the law. I would not go to the Prime Minister. I would not go to anybody over there on the other side. In fact I would call them, as we used to call a judge in our county, Judge Necessity. He was called that because we all know how much law necessity knows.

What worries me is the futility of this proceeding today. Here we are with a serious problem facing millions of people in this country and we cannot do anything about it. I give credit to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for instituting this proceeding so that we can at least do a little talking about it. But this is the House of Commons, this is parliament, and we should have the right to come here and indicate by a recorded vote what we think about the situation.

We are deprived of that opportunity. Why are we deprived of it? It is because hon. gentlemen opposite, or their predecessors, combined with my hon. friends to my left and voted against the amendment to which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) referred, by means of which we attempted to reserve to the House of Commons some overseeing role with regard to issues of this kind. I can recall that when speaking on behalf of that motion I said, as reported on page 11392 of Hansard for December 20, 1966:

> The scope of this act—

That is the National Transportation Act.

> —is enormous, and equally vast will be the overriding supervisory authority of the transport commission. Let there be no doubt that if this bill is passed without any material change we shall have surrendered to those men who will compose the commission almost complete authority over a variety of subject matters in the field of transportation which so deeply affects every Canadian and every part of Canada.

It was on that basis that we pursued our course in this debate. The motion was put. The hon. Mr. Pickersgill, at that time the minister in charge of the bill, said the motion had some merit, but, that there were reasons why he did not want to vote for it. The then hon. member for Selkirk, now the Premier of Manitoba, spoke in that debate before the supper hour and said he would support the motion. But obviously, as a young member, he was called by his party leader and told the facts of life. He came back to the chamber after supper and said he would not support the motion. When it was put to a vote members of the party opposite and the socialists to my left voted against it, and it was not passed.

If it had been passed there would now be in existence a committee in this parliament charged with the responsibility of scrutinizing the decisions of boards of this kind, and more specifically a decision of this kind. I do not expect, I do not want and I do not believe, that parliament can get into the detail of the decision making process, but when parliament does as it has been doing, to my sadness over the years, gradually divesting itself of all authority to check, challenge and scrutinize the actions of these boards, then, Sir, when motions of this kind come before the House I must recall the sad mistake in judgment made by my hon. friends to my left.

The hon. member for Timiskaming finished his speech by saying, let us create another Crown corporation. That is the only solution the socialists have—create more bureaucracy, more Crown corporations. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain said something about infallibility. The semi-socialists opposite and the socialists to my left seem to believe that all Crown corporations are, in fact, an immaculate conception. I do not believe that. I think they are composed of men and women, dedicated, serious men and women, but that in the final analysis only parliament, and particularly this House, really can deal with the public interest. We may be slow. We may talk too much. You, Mr. Speaker, will probably accept that. We may be clumsy and awkward, but in the final analysis only the House of Commons, elected as it is, has the interests of the people of Canada at heart, and it is for us to make the final decision. That is the problem we face now.

If this motion which I had proposed, and which was referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, had been passed, this committee would now be in existence. We would have been able, by a simple order of the House, to have had the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission referred to that committee for consideration, not in the sense that we would go into all of the technical details but that we, representing the public interest, would have had an opportunity to examine the decision, to call witnesses, and to test the validity, the accuracy and the rightness of the decision. After that, we could have made a report to the House, and the House could have voted on it. The decision of the House would then have been supreme and nobody else, not the CTC and not the government—which isn't a government, which is a Prime Minister surrounded by yes-men—

Mr. Wagner: Not even a Prime Minister.

Mr. Baldwin: As my hon. friend from Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) says—and not too much of a Prime Minister—only the House of Commons would make the final decision. When I see my hon. friends opposite collaborating with the NDP, with the socialists, I know why. They believe in the same thing. They are suspicious of parliament. They are suspicious of the opportunities of the members of this House to express themselves. That is the situation.

I do not like to say this but it is true that all too often, almost weekly, we find this House almost like a bawdy house with the New Democratic Party trying to offer for sale their virtues and principles. I think this is a sad situation, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that this motion in effect should provide an opportunity for members of the House to express their opinions, not in debate of this kind, but by means of a vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of the chance to say a few words on this motion. Unlike some opposition members, I am going to try and tell the House clearly whether I am for or against this motion, rather than just making the government bear the brunt of a decision with which they had nothing to do.

I think that the purpose of the motion introduced by the member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is in itself quite praiseworthy, inasmuch as he would like the government to look into the Canadian Transport Commission's decision on the matter of Bell Canada's application "A". I agree in principle, and so, I think, do most Canadians.

I think everyone here will agree that this decision came as a surprise to everyone, and to me more then anyone.

No one expected the Canadian Transport Commission to give their approval to over 80 per cent of the contents of application "A" as presented to them by Bell Canada.

And so it is quite understandable that telephone users are concerned—and rightly so, you have to admit—about this decision and about the rate increases which they will have to put up with.

Now, although I agree with the general principle of the motion, I cannot agree with the way it has been drawn up, because it calls for the implementation of the decision to be suspended immediately; that is where I differ from the member for York South. The same member who was telling us just now that the government cannot act now, that the government will need time to consider thoroughly the CTC's decision, is asking us in the same breath, in his motion, to suspend immediately, and therefore blindly, this same decision. This is where I no longer agree with the motion.

The government will surely need several weeks, if not a month—judging by the discussion I had this afternoon with an official—to consider this decision seriously and give a sound ruling. The CTC took two months to give birth to this baby: a month for the hearings and a review of the briefs submitted, and another month in camera to study and reach the decision it then announced.

Let us not ask the government, after three days, to rule immediately and to suspend, blindly, without knowing whether they are justified in doing so, the decision of the CTC. To my mind, the government would need at least a month to reach a final decision; and at least a week or a week and a half will be required before the Minister of Communications, (Mr. Pelletier) can advise the House of whatever he intends to do.

Why a month's delay? Because one month will be required if the points under dispute and the heart of the matter are to be dealt with, if a rational decision is to be reached. It is not enough to say, "Costs have gone up, leading to inflation". The points under dispute must be clearly identified and to my mind, there are three of them: the first and most important, is the quality of the service.

We probably have in North America the best telephone communications service in the whole world.

I shall not repeat what the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) said when she spoke about telephone service in Europe. All those who travel know the low quality of service in continental Europe; they know the waiting periods of an hour or even two hours to put citizens in communication in the same urban center and they know it is sometimes necessary to wait several hours or even till the next day to communicate with someone who lives 100 miles away.

In Canada, we enjoy a service which is far superior to what people have in the other countries. In fact, we can say that there are two kinds of telephone service on earth: the service we have in North America and the one we encounter everywhere else. It is as simple as that.

I think that Canadians have a right to enjoy this service, particularly when one considers that they now get it at a rate which is far cheaper than what European consumers and users pay for a much inferior service. The first disputable point is the quality of service.

The second point, which goes along with the quality of service, is the study of the costs of this service, namely. to see whether the costs are normal for the service the users get. There lies the whole question. It is not simply a matter of saying: prices have increased but of seeing if the increase is warranted, keeping in mind the excellent service we enjoy.

Finally, another point worth studying is the financial situation of Bell Canada. Several hon. members, as a rule those of the New Democratic Party, are always ready to raise a hue and cry on corporations, to say they make too many profits. However, I think that before talking like that, it would be a good thing if the government would seriously examine the financial situation of Bell Canada in order to know if its request for a rate increase is really justified. The government will be able to take realistic and considered measures because if they acted this evening, probably pleasing opposition members, these people would be the first to criticize us in a month or two if it appeared, after a serious study, that the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission was justifiable.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Are you for it, or against it?

Mr. Morgan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member who has the floor would permit a question? Does he not think that if the price increase is not stopped now, Bell will ultimately have to pay much higher costs? Bell would put the increase through its computers. Would it not be more fair to the company and to the government if these increases were suspended until the whole subject had been inquired into? Obviously, the cost to Bell, if this matter is suspended and the increase is rolled back, will be much greater after the increase is processed through the computer.

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member is taking so much interest in the company. If the company processes the increase in its computer, and if the government decides that the company must undo what it has done, that is the company's problem. It is asking for the increase. If that increase is not justified, it should suffer for its decision in asking for an increase.

[Translation]

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I continue my remarks.

What is wrong with the resolution, in my opinion, is the request for immediate suspension, as I said, of the Canadian Transport Commission decision. I am in favour of suspension after some time, when it is definitely deemed advisable but a suspension based on clearly unsubstantiated representations of the opposition would seem absurd and unrealistic.

No opposition speaker has mentioned quality or cost of services; none mentioned the various points in support of Bell Canada's application "A". Of course, the case has just become public, and opposition members know no more about it than the government does at this time. Actually, what is the opposition trying to achieve tonight? The purpose is to bring up the subject of inflation in an effort to convince citizens that the government will be responsible for price increases. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) told us earlier that Mr. Benson, the present Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, started spiraling inflation and is attempting to perpetuate it through this decision rendered by the Commission. As for the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), he was dissatisfied because the New Democratic Party did not word the motion to blame the government. Come on now! To condemn this government for a decision rendered not by it but by an independent body is not reasonable.

What they are trying to do tonight is to accuse the government and blame it for this increase, while everybody realizes that this does not make sense. In fact, they seem to be playing political games with this and finally, all that they manage to do, on either side of the House, is to express doubts as to the merits of a decision made by the Canadian Transport Commission. In fact, I understand that doubts may be felt, but let them not ask the government to act immediately on the basis of a doubt. They must realize that this government must take a few days or weeks in order to make a serious decision. I do not think that the people expect a responsible government to show less seriousness. And any government that would act on the basis of a doubt would not enjoy the confidence of the people.

This is why I recommend to this government to take all the time required in order to review the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the motion before us is most appropriate. I agree however with the remarks made by the minister a moment ago, because I feel that they are very reasonable. It is true that a very short time has elapsed since the decision was announced. But I realize also that the decision must be brought to the attention of the government.

I am satisfied that the government will take the necessary steps to examine the reasons which have incited an hon. member to introduce this motion and the points which have been made in support of it. I will merely quote two excerpts of briefs presented by two very representative bodies to the Canadian Transport Commission. First, here are the views of the Canadian Labour Congress:

> The Canadian Labour Congress welcomes this opportunity to submit its objections to the last request made by Bell Canada in its application "A" for the approval of its proposed adjustments in its rates related to services, equipment and facilities. Such application, if it were agreed to, would bring to this company, as estimated by itself, additional revenues amounting to $36 million for 1973 . . . We wish however to point out from the outset that the Congress is speaking on behalf of a much wider sector of the population since its concern is not limited to the narrow scope of the union movement. Rather our brief is expressing the frustration and the discontent caused by Bell's off-hand attitude towards individuals and groups, and which have been conveyed to the Congress through letters and private communications. In brief, we are not only the spokesmen of the Congress members in these regions, but we are also quite concerned that the proposed increases will cause additional hardships for the aged, the disabled, the unemployed, pensioners on fixed income and low income people . . .

I for one am convinced that the CLC officials did not try to exploit human misery, no more than the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe earlier when he suggested that those people will suffer as a consequence of the increases authorized by the Canadian Transport Commission.

When we mention the serious situation of underprivileged people, I am a little tired of hearing some hon. members accusing us of trying to make cheap political gains and of politicking. I hope this will be taken into account in the future.

• (2220)

At any rate, this is what the CLC thinks—and here I call the attention of the minister upon this so that the government can see whether there was abuse or not and I quote:

> During the period from 1958 to the mid-sixties, Bell Canada exceeded the level of earnings allowed by the former Transport Commission. Expressed in actual money earnings, the excess of profits that Bell Canada illegally drew out, in contravention of the commission's order, was approximately $37 million. And as the corporate tax reached an average of 50 per cent at that time, one can say that the Bell succeeded in drawing out $75 million from telephone users through a direct violation of the commission's decision.

That is why I invite the government to watch closely the decisions made by the Canadian Transport Commission and even in the case of an independent body, I think it is up to the government to see that the corporations abide by the decisions that are made and that they do not go beyond the decisions, as was reported in the CLC brief.

Moreover, I am convinced of one thing: a member said a while ago—and I agree with him—that Canada has one of the best telephone services. I admit that Bell Canada had a great part in it, but I also recognize that the company is mainly doing business in the most profitable and advantageous centres. That is why they can make profits.

I can also recall the days when areas had no telephone service and Bell Canada would not provide them with the necessary service on the grounds that it was not financially sound. Therefore with the help of a few of my fellow-citizens, I worked on setting up a cooperative telephone network and for 20 years I have been the manager of this business. Therefore, I am in a position to speak with some knowledge and state that a telephone company is one of the most profitable things to operate.

Therefore, I feel no pity at all for Bell Canada because they do make profits, and I understand that they have developed into a corporation for this purpose. But there are also limits, and I do believe that because of abuses, the confidence that the public may have in private enterprise is falling short.

The capitalistic system, in my opinion, is good in itself. It is good when it is reasonable. When it becomes faulty and that we try only to recognize and develop the financial capital without taking into account the rights of the human capital, I suggest that the government must interfere in order to set a limit so that the rights of the population are not encroached upon.

A moment ago an honourable member was mentioning the rising cost of living. It is a fact that prices are increasing in almost all areas. We will have to take a decision sometime! We should not allow big, powerful and strong people to increase their prices according to their fancy, and ask the small fellow to be reasonable, to refrain from asking for any increase in wages, to try and be satisfied with whatever he has.

A responsible government must look after the welfare of the people, and I agree that in the case before us, they must be given the necessary time to analyse the whole situation and take a decision without delay in accordance with the common good.

At any rate, my deep thought is the following: Bell Canada is in such a financial position, as I understand, that it may proceed at present with intended developments without having to increase its rates.

These are not paltry increases when you are talking of 50 percent in the case of installation of equipment. I should have been happy to benefit by such increases when I was the manager of the cooperative telephone network I referred to a short while ago. At that time, we were controlled by the Quebec public services Board and when we applied for small increases this resulted in quite a number of hearings, and only after we had demonstrated the necessity for an increase was a decision made to grant it by order.

In the present circumstances, as I said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the order of the House made earlier today has expired.

• (2230)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly and unpretentiously during this debate but with the intention of expressing a rather deep conviction.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

The debate held this evening is extremely interesting since it gives to all the members the opportunity to take a stand on this matter of public interest. We learned a few days ago that Bell Canada was authorized to increase its rates. I think that all members recognize as I do that the services provided by Bell Canada are comparable to any other offered throughout the world.

Bell Canada is reputed—and I think that such a claim is valid—to be providing services which do credit to all Canadian people. The question raised today is to determine whether the requested increase not only meets the corporation's needs, but if it can provide the necessary funds.

This debate gives me the first opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to take a stand on a basic question, namely that of the action of a political power on a judicial or quasi-judicial body.

Mr. Speaker, ever since 1968 when I had the honour of sitting in this House, I have always been—and there is no secret about it—a stubbornly argued for the division between the judicial or quasi-judicial power and the political power.

This evening I should like to suggest to my colleagues that it is extremely important, as hon. members, to be able to respect the decision of an independent authority which, in this case, is the Canadian Transport Commission which exercises powers that we have freely conferred upon it.

Far be it from me to pretend that this decision which we are discussing meets all the criteria of justice that we would have liked to see in a decision made by an authority in which we vested powers. But I remain convinced, Mr. Speaker, that in the final analysis that decision which was made in good faith by the Commission after an in depth examination of the applications or the arguments submitted to it represents the opinion of a good number of experts who submitted to this House an opinion which I consider undoubtedly as debatable.

I think that if we look at that decision, first of all we are surprised that it authorizes a rather substantial increase in the rates Bell Canada can charge the public. Right off the bat I would be inclined to make a general criticism. It seems to me that the Commission, with all due respect, did not take into consideration the capacity of the public to provide an additional income to that company. With regard to the powers of the Canadian Transport Commission I have to admit that it acted according to its prerogatives and the powers that we, as members of this House, have given it.

However, I am somewhat disappointed that the Commission restricted its action to the powers it had been given. It seems to me that it would have been not only possible but even easy for the Commission to wonder about the capacity of the public to meet those increases in rates.

I think that while recognizing that Bell Canada offers services which are generally better than those provided by other companies of the same size it must be recognized that the public is now grappling with the problems of inflation and the cost of living that is going up at an alarming rate. And if we accept that Bell Canada should consider giving improved services, I think it would have been preferable, under the circumstances, for the CTC, bearing in mind the cost of living as I said before,—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, recently we had the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission in connection with the application by Bell Canada to increase its rates. That decision was made without even the benefit of a white paper. The president of the Canadian Transport Commission gave us, when he was minister of finance, the "glories" of our present Income Tax Act. Now the commission has authorized Bell Canada rate increases which are really suspect. I hope in the few minutes allotted to me to outline some of the suspicions many of us have in connection with these increases. I should like to repeat the promise given to this country by the leader of our party, namely, that he would make sure the present commissioner was returned to his accounting practice so he could enjoy the benefits of the act that he foisted upon the people. As time goes on we will have to develop a proper board system for reviewing prices, not only of companies like Bell Canada but rail rates as well. Prices of other monopolies or quasi-monopolies will have to be reviewed, in the public interest. It is important that a tribunal system be organized so as properly to administer this kind of review.

• (2240)

Our judicial procedures are based upon the adversary system of justice, where an independent tribunal listens to argument presented on one side by a litigant or proposer and to argument presented by those on the other side, and thus arrives at a decision. In matters as complicated as telephone rates, indeed in matters as complicated as freight rates, the public interest cannot be protected by ad hoc representations, even by authorities as powerful as the province of Ontario or the province of Quebec. These matters are so complicated that the public interest must be protected by independent action which presents the public's case to the inquiry, so that the public can draw out, under the light of proper cross-examination and the presentation of relevant facts, what is the true position of the person or corporation that is applying for a rate or price increase. This is a matter the government will have to consider. This is one of the reasons the suggestion that this particular rate increase must be suspended, at least for the present, is valid.

At this point I want to deal with several questions that were raised during the Bell Canada hearing which indicate to me and to others in this House that there is something seriously wrong with the increase awarded. A great deal has been said about modernization of equipment, the cost of expansion of service, the necessity that shareholders receive a fair return on their money, and that investors are induced to lend money to this corporation on the basis that the corporation's charges will justify such investment. I appreciate those remarks, and I think that even the members of the party to my left can understand that obviously this corporation must earn a sufficient return in order to pay its debts and to pay for the use of money at its command. However, I should like to present some matters and questions that occur to me in connection with the decision made by the Canadian Transport Commission.

First of all, this corporation has a quasi-monopoly on television cable distribution in many of our communities. This television cable service is rented to a TV company or cable company for a limited period of time and then the contract can easily be terminated. There is no requirement that the use of Bell facilities can go on and on. Speaking to television cable companies, I am informed that the monopoly aspect of Bell in regard to this service causes serious concern. Secondly, Bell has spent a great deal of money through its many subsidiaries on research and development. This research seems to have been charged to Northern or to one of the other subsidiaries, but really it is charged against the regular telephone cost to every user. There is no question that this research should increase the share value of Bell, and increase it dramatically. Is there any reason why Bell stock is selling for 10, 11 or even 12 times book value? If this company is going to do that through its subsidiary, the research company, then the market should appreciate that research and the value of it, in the long term, should be considered when rate charges are made against regular telephone subscribers of Bell.

It is doubtful whether the commission has looked properly into the relationships that exist between Microsystems International Limited, Nevion Industries Limited, Bell Northern Research Limited, and Bell Northern Telecommunications Inc. Indeed, one columnist suggested that the reason for the increase is Bell's ownership of Anik.

We should also have inquired whether Bell is borrowing its money at the cheapest possible rate in order to conduct the expansion necessary in telecommunications in this country. Perhaps there are other methods by which this corporation could obtain something on a longer term basis or on a lower interest basis, so that the need for increased charges to consumers would not arise.

Thirdly, many of us question how Bell gets away with its fancy Princess phones, its coloured units, its inordinate charges for yellow page advertisements and all sorts of other gimmicks that the company is able to dream up. The real question is whether this company is acting in the national interest.

I am glad the minister is in the chamber, because I want to mention another matter. Last December, Bell—and I wonder how closely the minister has got into bed with Bell—was given a licence in my riding for one of these Bellboy transmission systems. I checked into that system and was told that Bell was supposed to have a 100-watt transmitter. Some of our investigations indicated that Bell was actually transmitting at 400 to 700 watts. When I asked the minister for a copy of Bell's licence, he said, "Oh no; licences are privileged." Members of Parliament are not entitled to look at a Bell transmission licence. So I am given cause to wonder how deeply the minister is in bed with Bell Canada.

During the election campaign the New Democratic Party made great play of capital cost allowances. Did this commission look into the depletion and depreciation rates charged by Bell, and did it regard these rates as proper in view of the ability of the equipment used to last certainly longer than the quick write-offs allowed under our Income Tax Act? While speaking to a Bell representative, I asked him this question but really he could not give me an answer. Many members of this House were lobbied by Bell representatives in connection with this hearing. Let my speech tonight be an answer to some of their lobbying.

Basically speaking, Bell Canada has done a good job for us in Canada. It has provided good service. It has provided perhaps the best telephone service of any country in the world. I am told that Canadians use the telephone more than people in any other country. The telephone is pretty important to us. Indeed, as Members of Parliament we sometimes feel that we have telephones on our ears. The whole review process of corporations—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

• (2250)

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nichel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I listened this evening to the speech of the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) and it sounded much like a speech written by the recently elected president of Bell Canada, Monsieur Grandpré. One of the things that concerned me very much was the statement earlier today that the CTC is an independent body, yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested he wanted to get this commission free of political interference and pressure. This seems like a strange position for one to take, considering that the commission was appointed by the government and that its president is a former cabinet member.

In view of the fact that this government does have authority to roll back the rate increases awarded to Bell Canada by the CTC, I think morally the government should do so. After all, which is the most important: the commission appointed by this government, or the elected representatives of the people of Canada? Surely we should decide which is to make the decisions in the public interest.

Bell Canada went before the Canadian Transport Commission to receive approval of its application for rate increases in 1973 and 1974. The CTC should not have granted these rate increases, when we consider the kind of complex questions raised regarding monopolies, profits, service, communications, corporate responsibility and the cost of living.

In the first instance, Bell Canada sought rate increases on the plea of poverty. Their argument was something like this: Profits have risen but they have not risen high enough to satisfy the investors; therefore, the company is encountering increasing difficulties in raising in the money market funds it needs for the capital expansion that must be undertaken.

The figures show that Bell Canada's profit for 1971 was $147 million, up from $108.5 million in 1967. In the last ten years, total profits were $1,021,135,000. Between 1962 and 1971, profits increased by 125.6 percent. It should be noted that Bell Canada has $233.6 million in deferred taxes owing to the Canadian people. According to the publication "Corporations" with a directory of Canada's top 100 companies excluding government-owned corporations, Bell Canada is number one in rank by assets, number one in rank by net income and third in rank by sales.

If the investor is not satisfied with Bell Canada's financial position, what precisely does it take to satisfy him? Should it be the role of the older citizen to pay through the nose for an ordinary telephone service, a public utility, in profit terms, thereby increasing its justification for an over-all telephone rate increase in order to satisfy the investor? I do not think that is right.

This brings me to the issue of what price we should pay for our telephone service. A comparison of telephone rates in other provinces shoes that while people in Ontario and Quebec pay an $11 service charge for the installation of an ordinary, black telephone, Albertans and British Columbians pay $10. In Saskatchewan and Manitoba, where the telephone companies are government-owned, the same service costs $2 to $3. At the same time, the average monthly rate for a phone in Ontario and Quebec is $6.10 but B.C. residents pay $5.55 per month, Albertans pay $3.35, while Saskatchewan subscribers pay $4.15, and Manitobans $3.90.

Keeping in mind these figures, consider that among the many increases Bell has been awarded by the CTC is an increase in the installation charge from $11 to $22, as well as increases in monthly rates and long distance calls, pay phone calls will be doubled to 20 cents and operator assistance will cost 25 cents per call if the number is in the directory.

In theory, the rates of Bell Canada are governed by the people of Canada. But Bell Canada, being a public utility monopoly, is required by law to present an application for rate increases for approval by the CTC, which is a government agency. The public, then, has the right to object to or support the application. Citizen interventions should bear weight with the CTC, yet in 1973 the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, the Association of Ontario Mayors and Reeves, the Ontario Municipal Association, the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and some 200 municipalities in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, among others, made representations against Bell's rate application; and still Bell Canada has had its application approved by the CTC.

The same was true in 1969. For those most severely affected by rate increases—that is, those on fixed incomes, pensioners, the unemployed, low income earners and small businessmen—the difficulties of being adequately represented at rate hearings are virtually insurmountable. It is also intriguing to note that prior to 1969, Bell had made application for a reduction in rates of certain long distance calls. By 1969, however, the figures show that 99 per cent of all households in Ontario and Quebec had acquired telephone service. Then Bell applied for rate increases in 1969, 1970 and 1971, as well as for 1973 and for 1974. Bell is, consequently, now in the position which enables it to make exorbitant demands, secure in the knowledge that few subscribers will give up their telephone and that there is no competing company to whom those in disagreement with rates and service can turn for a telephone.

Although Bell has gone to great pains to justify its application for rate increases, it strains both the public good will and credibility when we look at some of Bell's operations. For instance, the rates we pay for telephones are governed by the rate group in which we live. That rate group is determined by the number of telephones in the area, the number of main phones plus extensions. In other words, the more phones and extensions in the area, the higher the rates. Consider, then, that Bell, in an apparently unprecedented burst of Christmas spirit, offered last November the installation of an extension phone free of charge. Many took advantage, not realizing the cost implications.

Let us consider, as an example, Northern Electric, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bell Canada. It has received $26 million in government grants, plus an effective tax rate of 9.8 per cent, and $14.1 million in deferred taxes; yet that company managed to lay off 5,000 employees in one and a half years. In addition, Microsystems International, a Northern Electric subsidiary, received an interest-free loan of $12 million from the federal treasury in July, 1969. In May, 1972, Microsystems announced it had built a new assembly plant in Malaysia and practically at the same time 50 persons were laid off in Ottawa. We must also consider the situation in respect of Tele-Direct, a subsidiary of the same company.

My time is running out. I should like to conclude this speech by saying that I feel the government ought to refute the decision by the CTC, and roll back the increase granted to Bell Canada. Indeed, many people in Nickel Belt would far rather see added to the words on the sign outside the Bell Canada office here in Ottawa, "Place Bell Canada"—"Under public ownership".

At 11 p.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ADDRESS BY COMMISSIONER IN WASHINGTON—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity superseding the one I read in the House yesterday on the matter of an alleged statement by Mr. Keith Spicer referring to English-speaking Quebeckers as "Westmount Rhodesians". I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates):

That the matter of the address made last Saturday in Washington, D.C., by Mr. Keith Spicer, Commissioner of Official Languages, be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for a full investigation and examination and in order to permit Mr. Spicer to answer any charges that may be made, and that the said committee report its findings along with any recommendations it may have for further action to this House as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MEASURES TO ACCELERATE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of national interest.

Since the media are inviting Canadians to contact the friendly advisers appointed by the Department of National Revenue to guide us on the way to complete our tax returns and since a large number of unemployed people have not received their payments for the months of November and December 1972, and therefore are in danger of losing their homes or their cars or having to move, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House examine as promptly as possible steps to be taken in order that the Department of Manpower and Immigration be vested with authority to hire all personnel required to issue cheques refused by defective computers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity. The hon. member's motion therefore cannot be put.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move, under the terms of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the matter of the rate increases granted to Bell Canada by the Canadian Transport Commission last Friday, March 30, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

DOLLAR A YEAR BILL

MEASURES TO ALLOW PRIVATE INDUSTRY TO LEND EXPERTS TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Yvon L'Heureux (Chambly) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-169, respecting "dollar a year" men.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. L'Heureux: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of all Canadians, I move that experts in all fields of human endeavours become "dollar a year" men as provided in an act respecting "dollar a year" men. It would, therefore, be advantageous for the government to secure the services of these experts, in order to resolve today's numerous problems, at no cost to the taxpayer.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INCOME TAX ACT

EXPEDITING OF AMENDMENTS AFFECTING 1972

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question about the bill to amend the Income Tax Act affecting those who are filing returns for 1972 and looking for refunds. Assuming that the ways and means motion is debated later this afternoon, I should like to ask the minister whether he would be prepared to confer with the House leader with a view to the bill being brought on for second reading tomorrow, having regard to its urgency. If he is prepared to do this, we would waive the requirement of notice for this purpose.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I will certainly do that.

INTRODUCTION OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION ON CORPORATE TAX REDUCTION—METHOD OF ENACTING ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION PROPOSAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, regarding the proposed corporate tax reduction. Recognizing and accepting the importance of proceeding with the 1972 measures first, as the minister proposes to do, may I ask him when may we expect to see the notice of ways and means motion respecting the proposed corporate tax reduction?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That's better than you did last night, Bob.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt an extraneous conversation but I would like to say that, as I explained to the House last week, I would hope we could dispose of the 1972 matters before we introduce the 1973 matters. But here again I should like to consult my colleague, the leader of the House, first.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not see why the introduction of the ways and means motion would in any way interfere with our proceeding with the other matters first. I should like to ask the minister whether he can tell the House how he intends to proceed with the fast write-off provisions? Does he propose to bring the matter into the House at all and, of so, in precisely what form?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I explained when the question was put to me outside the House, the definition governing the regulations concerning fast write-offs or accelerated capital cost allowance relates to manufacturing and processing, which happens to be the same definition that is relevant in the case of the corporate tax reduction, as the hon. gentleman knows. I felt that the House should have the opportunity to express its views on that issue. Whether or not I would exercise the option of bringing those forward by order in council, I have not yet determined, but I know the hon. gentlemen's views.

POSSIBLE MEETING OF BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER AND MINISTER ON PROVINCIAL PROPOSAL THAT ALASKAN OIL BE TRANSPORTED BY RAIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman received a telegram from Premier Barrett of British Columbia regarding the proposal of that government for transporting Alaskan oil and gas by rail to Lower Post, B.C. and then by underground pipeline to the United States? If so, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the telegram requests a meeting with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has such a meeting been arranged and, if so, when and, if not, can the Prime Minister assure the House that such a meeting will be arranged?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to refresh my memory as to the existence or otherwise of a telegram to me. I do know that the subject was raised, but I am rather certain it was not in a telegram to me.

As regards the substance of the question of a meeting, I believe that my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has indicated that he is prepared to discuss this topic. He has indicated, and I certainly agree with him, that any discussion would be more fruitful if he were able to know more about the proposal. In particular, he has asked for the background documents and research upon which this proposal has presumably been based.

INQUIRY AS TO DEPARTMENTAL STUDY OF FEASIBILITY OF RAIL TRANSPORT IN FAR NORTH

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the group at Queen's University have done a fairly exhaustive feasibility study on rail transport in the far north, and since Canadian National Railways has announced that it is undertaking an extensive study, may I ask the minister whether his department has set up any task force to make a study of rail transport in the far north, both as to the economics and as to the ecological feasibility of such a proposal similar to the advisory committee that he set up to study financing of a Mackenzie route pipeline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have not set up an advisory committee but we have instituted a study to examine the feasibility of the Queen's University study. However, the hon. gentleman will recall that that was with respect to the Mackenzie valley rather than the Yukon.

OIL—POSSIBLE SHARING OF RESOURCES BY OECD COUNTRIES IN EVENT OF MIDDLE EAST CUT-OFF—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION—BILATERAL APPROACH

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question in reference to his statement that the OECD members propose to have some sharing of their oil resources in the event of a Middle East oil cut-off. What surplus of oil does Canada have to contribute to such a plan, have any commitments been made, and is the minister making any approaches to Venezuela or any of the OPEC countries regarding a bilateral agreement to assure security of supply in the event of Middle Eastern oil being cut off?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the OECD discussion is with regard to offshore supplies of oil coming to Canada, the United States, western Europe, Japan and Australia. For that reason it is not so much a question of Canada contributing to it but of the way in which offshore supplies would be dealt with. With respect to the bilateral approach suggested by the hon. gentleman, he will recall that Dr. Howland advised the standing committee that one of the aspects of the OECD agreement is that there should not be in effect competitive bilateral deals between various members of the OECD and the OPEC countries because of the competitive element that this would bring about.

TRANSPORT OF OIL FROM NORTH—CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS STUDY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he would inquire about the studies carried out by the Canadian National Railway in respect of railway construction in the far north, and if they will be made available to committees of the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the department and the CNR have carried out and are still proceeding with detailed studies on the possibility of constructing a railroad to Northern Canada, but the reports are not yet completed.

PROPOSED WEST COAST OIL TANKER ROUTE—ALLEGED LACK OF DEPARTMENTAL CO-ORDINATION OF OPPOSITION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question concerning the shipment of oil which I should like to direct to the attention of the Minister of the Environment. Is he aware of the statement by Dr. McTaggart Cownan, Director of the Science Council of Canada, to the effect that he is concerned about the apparent lack of a co-ordinated effort by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport in respect of opposing and being ready to meet the threatened shipment of oil down the B.C. coast in particular?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I understand this comment was contained in a report that was finalized about a year ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that his question simply asked whether the minister was aware of a statement, and to that extent it would hardly be in order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTION THAT BILL C-125 BE PROCEEDED WITH BEFORE EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Privy Council.

Since Bill C-125 amending the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1971 includes fine provisions, can the President of the Privy Council assure us that it will be studied before the Easter holiday?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether that would be possible.

Mr. Hees: I rather doubt that it is possible in view of the way it has been shifted or put aside, and we know why, Al.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL SECURITY

POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP—INQUIRY AS TO USE OF ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT TO MONITOR CONVERSATIONS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General. Can he advise the House whether the offices of the police and security planning and analysis group, newly expanded and located next to the minister's own departmental office, include sophisticated electronic equipment capable of monitoring conversations in other offices or rooms or via telephone?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Is he prepared to arrange a familiarization visit by Members of Parliament, perhaps the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, to the offices of the police and security planning and analysis group, with such visit to include the communications room known as "Interex"?

Mr. Allmand: I will look into the possibility of that, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

REASON FOR APPOINTMENT OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL DARE AS DIRECTOR GENERAL, RCMP SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a last supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Since the policy of the government has invariably been to fill top level vacancies in the RCMP by promotions from within the force, the last rare exception being the appointment of Major General J. H. MacBrien over 40 years ago, will the minister explain the government's departure from this policy in the recent appointment of Lieutenant General Dare of the police and security planning and analysis group as Director General, Security Service, of the RCMP?

• (1420)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, General Dare was appointed to replace a man who was also not a member of the RCMP, Mr. Starnes, who was appointed some years ago because it was felt there should be some civilians in the security area of the RCMP.

POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP—POLICY RESPECTING COLLECTION OF DATA AND MAINTENANCE OF FILES ON PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Solicitor General. Will the minister advise the House whether it is government policy to have the police and security planning and analysis group collect data on public servants? If so, is it government policy to maintain files of information, including any indication of the political affiliation of public servants and the frequency of their communication with Members of Parliament, and are such files available to the cabinet through the minister?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there are many questions there but generally the answer is no. There is no such policy.

POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP—INVESTIGATION OF LABOUR UNIONS—POSSIBLE USE OF MONITORING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Is the minister aware of whether the police and security planning and analysis group conducts investigations of labour unions in Canada and the leaders of unions, and can he inform the house if there is a policy which permits the use of electronic monitoring equipment in such investigations?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the group referred to is not an operational group. It does not conduct investigations. It is merely a policy, planning and advisory group and is not operational.

[Mr. Allmand.]

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—SHOOTING OF GUARD BY PRISONER—ATTACKS ON OTHER GUARDS—RELIEF OF OVERCROWDING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he has looked into the seriously developing situation at the Saskatchewan penitentiary at Prince Albert with respect to an outbreak a couple of weeks ago involving the shooting and wounding of a guard by a prisoner who is serving a life sentence for murder but was out of the penitentiary and had a gun, and also other attacks on guards that have taken place there very recently?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There was an unfortunate incident on March 30 where an inmate had been taken outside the penitentiary to a hospital. Once the handcuffs were removed he drew a homemade zip gun and shot one of the guards. The guard was not seriously wounded but it was still a serious incident. To protect the guards and staff the penitentiary service has standing orders regarding the frisking of inmates who are taken out of the penitentiary. In this case, although the guards had frisked the inmate before taking him out of the penitentiary, for some reason they did not discover the double-barrelled zip gun which was later drawn on them and used to shoot a particular guard. It was an unfortunate incident. As a result of this incident we are conducting a thorough search of Prince Albert penitentiary to discover other zip guns and further contraband has been discovered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do want to thank the new Solicitor General for being so generous in answering the question at such length. I appreciate that very much. I would ask him whether or not action will be taken to remove numbers of prisoners from this institution which today is grossly overcrowded? I would also ask him whether action will be taken in respect of those prisoners who have a gun or knife record behind them to remove them therefrom, for the guards are facing grave dangers and so state. I should add that my informants fear that from day to day the situation worsens.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, there is a serious population problem at the Saskatchewan penitentiary as well as at other penitentiaries in the prairie region. In the estimates which are now before the House we request funds to expand our facilities on the Prairies and also to expand our staff so we can better handle this increased population. I would also like to say that disciplinary measures will be taken with respect to men who are found with contraband weapons, and in particular the man who was involved in this case.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a last supplementary question on this subject and then recognize the hon. member for Northwest Territories.

NATIONAL SECURITY

POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP—POLICY RESPECTING COLLECTION OF INFORMATION ON UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS AND STUDENTS

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Solicitor General is supplementary to the questions asked by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North and the hon. member for Yukon. Will the minister advise the House whether it is government policy to permit the police and security planning and analysis group to collect or to receive from any investigative branch of the government files of information on college or university professors and students, and whether it is government policy to have such information collected by paid agents stationed on college or university campuses?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the group in question does not have any agents. It gets its information from the RCMP and other departments of the government. Once it receives information it analyses it and advises the government with respect to security questions, but it does not have agents of its own.

INCOME TAX

CONSIDERATION OF SUBSIDIZED HOUSING AND SIMILAR BENEFITS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AS INCOME

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of today's radio news broadcast I should like to ask the minister to inform the House whether or not he has instructed his department to consider subsidized housing and similar benefits in the Northwest Territories as income for tax purposes?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have had this broadcast and this matter drawn to my attention and have asked my officials to advise me on it. I will be pleased to let the hon. member know the result as soon as possible.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

In its 1971-72 annual report, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation pointed out that its coverage work group would submit to the government in November 1972 a complete master plan for the extension of its television and radio services in communities of at least 500 inhabitants. Can the minister tell the House whether the government has obtained from the CBC some details on that master plan and does it expect to report to the House in the near future?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, yes. The department has received proposals for accelerated coverage from the CBC. We are in the process now of discussing the proposals with the CBC, and I would hope to be in a position to report to cabinet shortly.

CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—STUDIES RESPECTING POSSIBLE REOPENING—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Could he tell us if the studies on the Temiscaming plant are completed and when does he expect this industry to resume operations?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, the studies have in fact been completed and have been translated into a set of proposals which have had preliminary consideration and will be considered in final form later this week. It is my hope and intention to be able to make an announcement before the end of the current week.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us if this industry will resume operations or not?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, all I can say at the moment, as I replied earlier, I believe, to the hon. member for York South, is that I am optimistic that some suitable arrangement can be worked out.

C.A.E. AIRCRAFT LIMITED—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF NO FURTHER PERSONNEL LAY-OFFS—FUTURE CONTRACTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Transport. My question is in regard to C.A.E. Aircraft Limited in Winnipeg and the laying off of personnel. Can the government give an assurance that there will be no further lay-offs and that there will be future contracts that will keep the plant in operation?

• (1430)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, C.A.E. Aircraft does not come under the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence, but we do have defence orders that are being undertaken by the company at the present time.

Mr. McKenzie: Since the Department of National Defence was involved in the initial arrangements regarding the setting up of this company, can the Minister of Transport give us any information on these lay-offs and tell us whether there will be future contracts?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire whether there will be contracts and make a report to the hon. gentleman.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING REGIONAL PAY RATES IN LIGHT OF DISPUTE WITH DOCKYARD WORKERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the President of the Treasury Board. It arises out of press reports this morning indicating a breakdown in negotiations between the Dockyard Trades and Labour Council and his departmental officials. In light of this breakdown, largely over the question of regional pay rates, can the minister say whether the government is at least considering a movement away from the rigidity of its position with respect to prevailing rates so as to avoid an unnecessary and possibly prolonged walkout which would have the consequence of tying up virtually all of the Canadian Armed Forces maritime capability?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am as eager as anyone in this House to avoid any kind of tie-up, walkout or prolonged period of indecision, but I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to have me interfere with the normal bargaining process. The next step is to proceed through the conciliation process as provided in the law.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North but the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East has a supplementary.

Mr. Forrestall: Can I construe the minister's statement as meaning that the government is not prepared to move away from its oft-stated position with respect to the principle of regional prevailing rates? Do I understand him correctly on that?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that interpretation should be placed, by any reasonable person, on my remarks. I merely say that we should proceed through the normal business of conciliation rather than negotiating on the floor of the House.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would invite hon. members to limit supplementaries. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North has a supplementary to a question asked much earlier during the question period. He will be recognized after the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East who I believe has a last supplementary.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether or not, in light of the government's position that regional disparities should be removed, he has made any overtures or is prepared to make overtures with respect to eliminating archaic wage disparities?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I would have to have more specific information before answering. Generally speaking, no incentives are offered, or indeed granted, unless at the very minimum the wage laws of the particular province concerned are adhered to.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North and then go to another subject.

POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP—INQUIRY AS TO DIRECTIVE TO RCMP TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATIONS OF UNIONS FOR GROUP

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a further question, for clarification purposes, to the Solicitor General. Has the government given a directive to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to carry out investigations at the direction of the police and security planning and analysis group that would permit the police and security planning and analysis group to maintain files of information on union activities and union leaders, with such files available to the cabinet through the minister?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): To the best of my knowledge, no, Mr. Speaker, but I will check this out. Generally speaking—as a matter of fact, I think this is the rule—the group does not give instructions to the RCMP to carry out investigations but receives information from the RCMP. As I say, I will check this out for the hon. member.

LAKES ERIE AND ONTARIO—PAYMENT BY MUNICIPALITIES FOR USE OF ARMED FORCES—REQUEST THAT POLICY BE CHANGED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, last week I posed a question to the Minister of National Defence about the use of the Canadian Armed Forces in connection with the emergency situation along the shores of Lake Ontario and Lake Erie. I now find out from the Emergency Measures Organization that the municipalities involved must reimburse the government for the use of the armed forces. Is the minister prepared to change that policy in view of the present emergency?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, our policy is to provide these services on a cost recovery basis.

Mr. Blenkarn: In view of the fact that the Armed Forces have their salaries paid in any event and already have the necessary equipment on hand, can the minister explain why municipalities must be charged for what is already paid for in the budget of the minister?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, we do not charge for the salaries or for the use of the equipment. It is really the direct out-of-pocket costs that arise from assisting in any particular emergency.

In view of the allegation that innocent claimants have been disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits by certain investigative techniques of benefit control officers, is the advisory committee looking into the conduct and techniques of these officers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I previously indicated to the House, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: How soon will the minister have a report for parliament from the advisory committee?

Mr. Andras: I am consulting regularly with the chairman of the advisory committee and he tells me they are proceeding as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Rodriguez: Is the minister considering changing the regulations so that the innocent are not penalized along with those who take advantage of the system?

Mr. Andras: I would hope that the regulations are now such that the innocent are not penalized.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC MINISTER RESPECTING JURISDICTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications.

The Quebec Minister of Communications stated recently that there had been no consultation between him and his federal counterpart concerning the publication of the green paper, and on February 23, the Quebec minister stated, and I quote:

—Quebec's jurisdiction over cablevision is a matter of fact, and not open to negotiations.

I should therefore like to ask the minister if he still intends to start further negotiations or if he is inclined to recognize Quebec's jurisdiction over cablevision?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the statement by my counterpart in Quebec surprised me as much, I suppose, as it surprised the hon. member for Joliette, for the Quebec minister had himself not consulted the federal government before publishing a green paper, and since the green paper published by the federal government is precisely for use in consultation, discussions and negotiations, consultation should normally take place after, not before publication. No provinces were consulted about this publication, but all provinces, including Quebec, were informed of the publication of the green paper at the same time as members of the federal parliament.

Regarding the federal government's position concerning the claims of the Quebec Minister of Communications, I believe that the papers I have tabled in the House, that is to say my correspondence with the Quebec minister, should put the hon. member for Joliette clearly in the picture, if he takes the trouble to read them.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the hon. minister.

I should like to ask him if he intends to meet his Quebec counterpart to clarify the situation.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, once again the answer is clear and I have repeated it several times in this House: now that the green paper has been published I plan to meet the provincial ministers of communications.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT MEMBERS BE GIVEN MORE TIME TO STUDY APPLICATIONS BEFORE COMMENTING

Mr. Ellwood Madill (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the members of this House this morning received the applications for the Opportunities for Youth program, with a reply required by April 9, can he extend the date so we can give them more informed study and make a better reply?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to look at this on an individual basis because I want to be as fair as possible. But generally I would like to resist delays because we are on target across the country, and in fact in parts of the country we are ahead of schedule. I think all members of the House agree that it is important to get the announcements out to the students themselves as soon as possible, but if there is a clear case of injustice I am prepared to look at it on an individual basis.

• (1440)

Mr. Madill: Can we have an undertaking from the Secretary of State that in those cases where projects are not recommended by Members of Parliament the department will not adopt the practice of telling people they were turned down because they were not on the list of projects recommended by the Secretary of State?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, we take responsibility for both the approvals and the rejections.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ROLE OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT IN SELECTING PROJECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would clarify his position with a little more care as to the role individual Members of Parliament are to play in the selection process. The memo that the minister sent to all members implied one possibility, that members were to act as some kind of veto agency in terms of a certain percentage of those applications. Would he clarify the situation for the House now?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this year, as last year, the role of the Member of Parliament is consultative—

Some hon. Members: Oh?

An hon. Member: Isn't that nice?

Mr. Fairweather: In what way are we consulted?

Mr. Faulkner: If hon. members want a dictionary definition of the word "consultation" I will be happy to comply, but it is perfectly clear that it does not imply a veto.

POLLUTION

THREAT OF OIL SPILL FROM SUNKEN "IRVING WHALE"—MEETING WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PREMIER—GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister agreed to meet with the government of Prince Edward Island, as I believe they requested, with regard to the suggestion that it would be feasible to leave the Irving Whale lying on the bottom of the Gulf of St. Lawrence? Also, regardless of the decision in that regard, does his department accept primary responsibility for any oil spill that might occur?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will meet with the Premier of Prince Edward Island next Monday, April 9. I have already written a letter to Mr. Campbell on this subject and we are going to discuss it on Monday. There is no doubt that we accept responsibility. If there is an oil spill we are going to assume the financial responsibility for cleaning up the whole thing.

THREAT OF OIL SPILL FROM SUNKEN "IRVING WHALE"—UNDERWATER INSPECTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate to the House when the last underwater inspection of the Irving Whale took place and when the next underwater inspection may take place in order to determine the actual condition of this vessel and the likelihood of it causing a serious pollution problem on the shores of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Minister of National Defence if he could help in examining the Irving Whale. I did not get any answer yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: That is not surprising; that is routine.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I know they have special devices that we do not have. As for the last date it was examined, I will inquire about that because I do not know exactly.

Mr. Hees: Jean, now you know how we feel.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Transport meets the P.E.I. authorities, will there be any talk of setting up a Canadian merchant marine?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, please forgive my absentmindedness. Could the question be repeated?

Mr. Boisvert: I shall repeat it, Mr. Speaker.

When the Minister of Transport meets the P.E.I. authorities, will there be any talk of setting up a Canadian merchant marine?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, even if we managed to set afloat the Irving Whale it would certainly not be the first ship in our merchant marine. In any event, the matter is still on my mind and I trust that some day or other its solution will be found.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS IF AFFECTED ADVERSELY BY TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has pledged assistance if needed to small business firms affected by the upcoming trade negotiations with the United States, can the minister tell the House if Canadian agriculture and specifically farmers can look for economic aid if they are in any way adversely affected by the same negotiations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, even by the seating arrangement in the House hon. members can see that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and myself are in constant consultation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South. Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but I believe the hon. member for Lisgar has a supplementary. I will recognize him for that purpose and then I will see the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Murta: In light of the hardships that will be experienced under the new tariff reductions brought down by the present government and presumably with the minister's knowledge and seal of approval, how does he intend to convince the farmers of Canada that he is sincere in what he has said?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question obviously is not in order.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REPORTED RESIGNATION OF VANCOUVER ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and arises out of the questions that have just been asked him involving opportunities for youth grants. Word has just been received that the advisory board in Vancouver has resigned. Can the minister advise whether this is so? I might also advise him that I have not received any OFY applications in my office.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, my information is about as sketchy as that of the hon. member. I hope to get clarification on the status of this board at the end of the question period. In terms of having received projects or not, these are going out across the country in stages. Some areas are being dealt with first and in those areas the projects will be arriving in members' offices ahead of some other members. There is nothing to fear. The hon. member's city will get its share.

Mr. Fraser: Could the minister give some assurance that if this in fact happens an appropriate extension will be given for OFY grants in Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is hypothetical. I bring to the attention of hon. members that we are coming to the end of the question period. I recognize that a number of members are seeking supplementaries but there would not be time between now and the end of the question period to have all the supplementaries on this subject. SPORTS

POSSIBLE MERGER OF NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE AND WORLD HOCKEY ASSOCIATION—ACTION TO RETAIN PRESENT CANADIAN FRANCHISES IN WHA

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and refers to the fact that the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association are discussing merger. Does the government intend to take any steps so that the franchises of WHA clubs in Canada will remain in Canada and not go to the United States, as I am informed will happen when the merger takes place?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the present combines law does not cover services. I hope my hon. friend will support the new policy in due course that may cover services. In any event, I would be happy to discuss this matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If I am not mistaken, his predecessor did take some initiatives in this regard.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the 11 WHA clubs plan to merge with the NHL, and in view of the fact that only one of the 11 plans to remain in Canada, would the Prime Minister use his good offices to see that the franchises that are Canadian remain in Canada?

AIR TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POSITION IN LIGHT OF OPPOSITION TO REQUIREMENT THAT AIRCRAFT BE EQUIPPED WITH EMERGENCY LOCATOR TRANSMITTERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that federal plans requiring emergency locator transmitters in aircraft are running into opposition from the aviation community owing to their cost, what positive action does the government contemplate to ensure that all airplanes will now be equipped with this safety device?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I announced a few months ago that some devices will be compulsory from January 1, 1974. In the meantime, we are in consultation with the industry, with the aviation clubs and those who are interested in aviation. We have received this kind of comment and we are going to receive others. After that, we will see if we will leave the regulations as they are or modify them.

MANPOWER

USE OF GERMAN WORKERS TO INSTAL MACHINERY AT ATLANTIC PACKAGING COMPANY—REQUEST THAT WORK PERMITS BE REVOKED

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that work permits have been issued to some German workers to instal machinery at Atlantic Packaging in Scarborough, and considering the painful fact that there are now about 80 qualified millrights out of work in Toronto, will the minister have these permits revoked so that skilled Canadian workers can have access to these jobs they have full right to?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that these tradesmen came to Canada for a short time to instal a particular piece of specialized equipment which had been purchased overseas. In fact, their part in the installation was contained in the contract price and because of this they were exempt from the requirement of manpower clearance. They did, however, require and receive employment visas.

• (1450)

Mr. Harney: In view of the fact I have the same information from the pages of the Globe and Mail, can the minister assure the House that he will cause an inquiry to be made into this situation on the grounds that a contractual basis between a private company in Canada and a private company in Germany should not be cause enough to ignore the rights of workers who are skilled and competent?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give the representation consideration.

IMMIGRATION

ARREST OF CERTAIN PERSONS IN TORONTO—NUMBER REGISTERED PURSUANT TO NEW REGULATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is more or less a related question. It is still in the same area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: It is a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary question, a related question or, if he wishes, one that is not related at all. After that, we will then have to call orders of the day.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister now bring us up to date with regard to the arrests in terms of numbers as of now and, further, can he give some indication as to the numbers who have registered to date pursuant to the new regulations?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, 34 persons were arrested and detained in Toronto last week, all of whom had not been considered bona fide non-immigrants at the time they sought admission to Canada. All had been released previously under bond which carried the requirement and condition they would appear at a specified later date for a special inquiry, but all of those arrested had failed to so appear. They were arrested while attempting to register for employment visas and detained under Section 17(2) of the act. Inquiries will be held this week.

One person was arrested in Montreal. This man had previously been ordered deported and had appealed unsuccessfully to the Immigration Appeal Board. He said he would take voluntary departure but failed to do so. That is the sum total of the number of arrests to date that my information now indicates. I do not have full details on the number who have registered, but during the period February 26 to March 31 it was slightly under 10,000 people.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADOPT POLICY OF EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one raised by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. It is a very important question. I direct it to the President of the Treasury Board. In the interest of settling the dispute which is under the jurisdiction of the minister and could very seriously curtail activities on both coasts and in the interest of equality of opportunity for all Canadians, especially those in the federal jurisdiction, is the minister prepared to announce that it is government policy to pay Canadians under federal jurisdiction equal pay for equal work regardless of the part of Canada in which they may be located?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the quick answer is no. What the hon. member has suggested is, I think, producing local dislocations in pursuit of some unattainable objective.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact the minister is responsible for problems in areas of regional disparity, what has his advice to the government been in areas under Treasury Board jurisdiction where the issue of inequality of pay for equal work in different parts of the country is involved?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would not think a question in those terms is in order. Before calling orders of the day, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ENSURE CONTINUANCE OF CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): That was certainly well worth waiting for, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As customs preclearance at airports is of great assistance to the large number of Canadian businessmen who go to the United States every day to sell Canadian products and the large number of American businessmen coming to Canada to buy Canadian products, will the minister speak to his colleague, the Minister of Transport, and ask him to get the lead out and get this matter straightened out so that this very necessary service can be maintained to assist those who want to build Canadian trade?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise on a question of privilege, but I do so to make a very serious appeal to Your Honour as the protector of all members of the House. Perhaps no members know this more than those of us who grace the back rows. Your Honour has heard many representations, complaints and suggestions about the question period. Your Honour has undertaken to ensure that there will soon be changes made so that the question period will make parliament what it should be.

Again today we have seen that the question period is not working. I have personally experienced this. There were a number of serious questions of national and urgent importance to be posed to the Solicitor General. They could not be put because the time limit forced Your Honour to move on to other subjects and legitimate questions of other hon. members.

My question of privilege is simply an appeal. While we appreciate Your Honour's undertaking that a review is being made of the question period, on behalf of all hon. members I urge Your Honour to speed up that process because we are in serious straits under the present situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The reference to the question period made earlier by the Chair was to the effect that the matter would be studied by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I believe that the matter will be looked into by that committee. If hon. members wish to make representations in this regard, they should make them to the chairman and members of the committee. I suggest to all hon. members that one reform that could easily be adopted would be for members asking questions to exercise more self-discipline—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —by limiting the length of the questions posed to ministers and by limiting the number of supplementaries. When we have as many supplementaries as we had today on practically every question that was asked, it is unfortunate that some members, usually those in the back rows, are penalized. In such circumstances it is unfortunate that members in the third, fourth and fifth rows are penalized from day to day when there are too many supplementaries.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be possible for the chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to make a report, either later today or tomorrow, in order to give us some idea of what progress has been made. The question raised today by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth was brought to the attention of Your Honour and the House five or six weeks ago. I think at that time all hon. members agreed that something had to be done, perhaps along the lines suggested by Your Honour, to make the question period more workable. I think this would be an appropriate time to have a report on the work being done to see if there is some way of lengthening the question period or some other modification that is appropriate.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Monday, April 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in this House on May 31 last year on Bill C-201, the foreign takeovers review bill, which was the predecessor of the bill now before us, I was not enthusiastic about the government's response in that bill to the problem of foreign ownership in Canada. I said, if I may quote from page 2738 of Hansard:

If this bill were intended to be a complete solution to the problem of foreign investment in Canada it would be completely inadequate. Fortunately, it is not being presented in this light by the government, but rather is one in a continuing series of steps, and focusses on the particular problem of takeovers.

While I did expect further steps even in the short run, I must admit I did not expect a bill which would supersede the bill we were debating at that time before it had even passed into law. But I welcome the bill now before us, Bill C-132. It reveals a marked advance in government response and comes much closer to my own perception of what the situation requires.

I realize the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has already taken credit for this marked advance. Without wanting to be a spoilsport, Mr. Speaker, I suggest there are two other factors which have had greater impact on the change; first, the pressure of members like myself within the government caucus, and second, the pressure of public opinion. I would like to refer briefly to two gallup polls taken last year which dealt with this subject matter. The first of these was reported on August 26 of last year. The question posed was: "Do you think dependence on the United States is a good thing for Canada or not?" The poll revealed that, whereas in 1963, 48 per cent of Canadians polled thought that dependence on the United States was a good thing for Canada, only 34 per cent thought so in 1972 and whereas 44 per cent thought it was not as good in 1963, 53 per cent shared this view in 1972.

Even more to the point is the result of a poll which was released on September 23 of last year. The question asked was: "On the whole, do you approve or disapprove of the way in which the federal government is responding to United States control of our industry and natural resources?" The result of the poll, taken nationally, revealed that only 34 per cent of Canadians approved. Forty per cent disapproved, and 26 per cent were undecided. Of course, disapproval could come from either side, but these were figures which could hardly give comfort to the government. The election results may also have been a factor, though neither of the parties opposite, because of dissention within their own ranks, dared to make an issue of foreign ownership in the campaign.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacGuigan: Perhaps we can all agree that there is a concordance between the direction the government is moving and the direction in which the public is thinking, and that this is a happy situation.

I should like to draw the attention of the House briefly to the principal differences between this bill and that of last year. The first and most important of the changes is the inclusion in the scrutiny process of entirely new businesses established in Canada by foreign capital. The second is provision for scrutiny of expansion of existing United States firms or foreign-owned firms in Canada where it is unrelated to their existing business activity. The third is the inclusion in the criteria of specific reference to provincial interests, and the fourth is the establishment of an agency, the foreign investment review board, to play a large role in the scrutiny process.

I do not propose to say very much about the first two of these changes, those which deal with new businesses and unrelated expansion. The fact is that without provisions of this kind the attempt to restrict foreign investment in Canada might very well have failed completely. There were so many ways of getting around the proposals announced last spring that they might have been ineffective in dealing with this problem.

The question of the change in the criteria is worth slightly more emphasis, especially since the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) has made the point that there was no consultation between the federal government and the provinces. Of course, the hon. member was wrong. The present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) went across the country last year to consult with all the provincial governments very specifically in connection with the proposals the government was making.

Mr. Hellyer: Were they aware of it?

Mr. MacGuigan: Since then, the provinces have not been shy about making their views on the proposals put forward both last year and this year known to the public.

In clause 2(2)(e) of the bill, the fifth of the criteria is:

—the compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with national industrial and economic policy.

These words are common to last year's bill and to this year's, but this year's bill contains the additional words:

—taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the government or legislature of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment.

• (1510)

It seems to me that while it was previously understood that this was the way in which that criterion would be applied, it marks a useful step forward in our approach to the subject to have it spelled out specifically in the bill. There were legitimate fears on the part of many provinces both in the east and in the west that not enough attention would be given to provincial priorities, and that the federal government might be imposing upon the provinces industrial policies that they would not wish to see take effect in their part of the country. To have this stated as an express concern of the review process is, I think, a very useful addition indeed.

The fourth addition to the earlier bill, the proposed establishment of a foreign investment review agency under a commissioner, is also of interest. It does not change the basic thrust of the review process. The House will recall that last year it was argued by members of the NDP that the scrutiny body should be either independent or at least some branch of the government other than the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I recall having a dialogue during my own speech on the subject with the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland). I rejected the point of view that was expressed at that time by the NDP, since I believe that this department does have the expertise necessary to make this kind of review and that the government must assume responsibility for the decisions that are made.

An independent agency would simply not do because it would not be sufficiently responsible to the public and to parliament. The provisions of the bill do not change the fact that the government does bear ultimate responsibility. The words of the act clearly state that the decision to be made is still the minister's. Therefore, he is still completely responsible, though he will have the help of the foreign investment review agency. It would seem that in this way the agency will be of great assistance in expanding the scope of the bill.

The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) has also made a charge with respect to this proposal. Forgive me if I pause for a moment to find the reference in Hansard so that I do not misquote the hon. member. The hon. member argued that the determination that will be made in the scrutiny process will be largely subjective, and will depend to a considerable extent on the attitude and approach of the commissioner, the minister and the Governor in Council. According to the hon. member, the latter will reflect the opinion of the key members of cabinet or "in group" in control at the time. He went on to say that the extent of the inevitable subjectivity concerned him. If he means that the administrators will not impartially administer the criteria, then I think he is impugning the public service of this country.

I understand him rather to mean that there was some margin for discretion in the process, and that the government—in this case—will bear full responsibility for the decision that is taken. This is indeed exactly what the bill proposes. The position is exactly that it is the government that will be responsible for the administration of this policy. It is not that some unknown civil servant will be responsible; the government itself will bear responsibility for this, just as it has to bear responsibility for the over-all industrial policy of the country and for its over-all well-being at any particular time, a matter that the opposition parties are always drawing to our attention.

In general, members of opposition parties seem to be agreed with what is in the bill, at least so far as I can interpret the position that they have taken. In some cases their speeches have been sufficiently beside the point that it is hard to tell how they are going to vote on the measure. But to the extent that their speeches have been specific, it seems that their objection is not so much to what is in the bill as to what they feel is not in the bill. We, therefore, come to consider those other steps that might be taken by the government in the future, either along with or in replacement of this bill.

We have heard a good deal about Mexico, perhaps as a result of the interesting coincidence that occurred between the opening of this debate last Friday and the address on the same day of the honourable President of Mexico, who of course spoke to us of his country's concern with the protection of its political sovereignty through protecting its economic sovereignty, a sentiment with which I think most members of this House are firmly in accord. But that should not blind us to the fact that experience with the particular measures that Mexico has taken has not been an entirely happy one.

I should just like to quote from a source which I believe is both reputable and impartial. I refer to a small pamphlet called "Foreign Investment in Mexico: Some Lessons for Canada" by I. A. Litvak and C. J. Maule and published by the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, which may be presumed, as I say, to be impartial. I should like to quote from page 14 of this pamphlet:

> The most obvious lesson to be drawn for Canada from the Mexican experience with foreign investment is that limiting foreign equity participation to a minority position does not necessarily result in a transfer of effective control to the domestic partner. So long as there is a need for the transfer of technology from the foreign investor, there exists numerous ways by which the investor can set the conditions under which the domestic enterprise will have to operate. These conditions may include limiting export opportunities, tying import purchases, and determining manufacturing, personnel, and marketing policies. In addition, there will be a tendency to dissuade the domestic enterprise from doing any research and development work of its own . . .
> The foreign partner, while owning less than 50 per cent of the enterprise, will still try to maximize his return on investment through higher charges for technology, management services, and the pricing of intermediate products purchased from the foreign parent . . .
>
> A second observation based on the Mexican experience is that the "buy-back" strategy can be extremely costly. If local savings are inadequate or not forthcoming to purchase the foreign equity holdings, then resort has to be made to foreign loans with definite commitments as to repayment. The profitability of the purchased sector will affect the ease of repayment, so that sectors with industries in decline should not be the target of buy-back strategies . . .
>
> Thirdly, the administration of policies towards foreign investment in Mexico is an example of an approach which is overly bureaucratic, inconsistent, and poorly integrated with the country's over-all strategy of industrialization. Too many government departments and officials are involved in overseeing too many aspects of foreign investment. Too many guidelines are used to assess each case of foreign investment with too many exceptions granted.

Mr. Blenkarn: Just like this bill.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Mr. MacGuigan: I think that comment of the hon. member for Peel South is helpful as an indication of the way the hon. member's party will vote on the bill, because we have been in suspense.

> Finally, failure to appreciate the ways in which foreign investment can contribute to the country's industrialization strategy can result in a situation in which the country is more heavily dependent economically on foreigners, although not necessarily in the form of direct foreign investment.

I think this rather lengthy quotation illustrates the fact that there are pitfalls in the way of the type of approach that has been taken by Mexico. We have the advantage of looking at their experience and profiting from it. Without any further reflections on the Mexican experience, I think I can say that the approach which is being proposed by the government in this bill is one that is soundly based and which should work out very effectively in the future.

Mr. Hellyer: That is a hypothetical assumption if ever there was one.

Mr. MacGuigan: The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who I regret is not in the House at the moment, has enlightened us with some of his additional proposals and entertained us with others. On the side of entertainment, there was the proposal that our foreign exchange reserves should be used to buy back foreign-held corporations. I have often heard it said that there is a point at which the extreme left and the extreme right come together, and I thought indeed that this was a proposal worthy of the hon. gentlemen to my right. Certainly, I must admit I had not expected to hear it from the hon. member for York South. This is a theory which might be called "the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow" theory. I had thought the Socialist mythology was made of sterner stuff, and I hate to be the one to tell the hon. member for York South that Santa Claus no longer exists, that the pot of gold is not there. It seems to me that someone ought to tell him if no one in his party will do so.

• (1520)

Let me remind that hon. member that our foreign exchange reserves are only something like $400 million.

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. MacGuigan: I am sorry, $4 billion. Whatever the figure may be, the fact is that Germany recently found that a reserve of $8 billion was not sufficient to halt the monetary problems it was experiencing. What the hon. member for York South has suggested would put us in the position of having difficulty in dealing with foreign exchange policy. Last year I recall his arguing against a fixed exchange rate, and for a flexible exchange rate. But his present proposal would put us in a position of extreme rigidity. Under these circumstances we would have no options at all if we ran into a currency difficulty. Suppose that we did use our reserves to purchase, say the Chrysler Corporation. Then, if an exchange problem arose, we would have to sell the shares again in order to obtain funds to save our currency. This is hardly a good position for Canada to put herself in.

There is in fact no easy solution to obtaining money to buy back that part of our industry which is under foreign control. The only way to do so is by raising taxes, and the NDP ought to face this fact.

Some of the language used by the hon. member for York South reflects his well-known prejudices against business. We on this side do not share this unreasoned hostility to business, and I do not propose to deal with this subject from that point of view. Some of his concrete proposals are worth looking at seriously.

The first proposal he made was in respect of the screening of imports of parts and components. His second proposal was in respect of the screening of exports of raw materials to be certain they have enough processing in this country before exportation. His third proposal was in respect of the screening of export agreements by multinational corporations. All of these would fall under the criteria this bill proposes.

To return to these criteria, which I did not read in full before, the first of the five proposed is the effect of the acquisition or establishment on the level or nature of economic activity in Canada, including employment. The second is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in new business enterprise, new business in Canada or new industry of which new business enterprise forms a part or might form a part. The third is the effect of the acquisition or arrangement of productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada. The fourth is the effect of the acquisition or establishment of competition within any industry or industries in Canada.

It seems to me that at least the first three of these would cover the type of concern the hon. member for York South has expressed. I hope that there will be bargaining in respect of some of these criteria when the minister has to make a decision to approve an expansion of foreign investment.

The fourth proposal by the hon. member for York South was for the screening of expansion of a foreign corporation into related areas. This proposal is expressed in such general terms it is hard to know what the hon. member meant and therefore hard to know what attitude to take toward it. So many questions come to light that one does not know in which way to proceed.

How would one define "expansion"? Is an increase in sales an expansion, even if there is no expansion in the plant itself? An increase in sales could be an expansion because the company may be under-using its existing productive capacity. Does expansion include new buildings, does it include extension of existing buildings or does it mean only when there is an expansion on a piece of land which has not been previously used or on a piece of land that has recently been purchased? It would seem to me that however you define this type of expansion you are likely to find yourself in an administrative nightmare in which all major business decisions are being made by the government. That is not our notion of a mixed economy on this side of the House. Even with considerable qualification of these proposals by the hon. member I think that we cannot find ourselves in sympathy with his ideas.

However, it seems to me there are areas in which we should consider further governmental review, and we should undertake to see whether or not these areas require future review. One of these areas is the drawing on the Canadian capital market of foreign-owned businesses. A review procedure would ensure that a foreign-controlled firm would not use Canadian capital markets at the expense of displacing Canadian users of these funds.

It is hard to get exact statistics in respect of this matter, but it may be that a large part of the foreign investment in this country is financed by money from our own capital market. I am sure we would all like to have exact statistics. If it were proved to be a fact it would seem to me that this is an area in which we would want to impose some control of a negative nature along the same lines as this bill. We would want to control the investment of our own capital by foreign interests. We might also want to limit borrowing by Canadians in foreign capital markets, but that goes beyond the scope of the present bill.

Our greatest industrial need, Mr. Speaker, is for a viable and innovative secondary industry. We require a dynamic secondary manufacturing industry which would both maintain and generate an expansion of the present level of employment in the resource and service sectors. In this context we need, as several hon. members have said, a further rationalization of our industries and a concentration on technological innovation. This is one of the recommendations which has been made to us by the science committee of the other place. The Gray Report has also revealed that technological innovation is one of the casualties of foreign ownership in Canada.

In relation to technological innovation the minister made an important announcement towards the beginning of his speech on last Friday at page 2777 where he said:

> My department is preparing a bill as well, which I hope to introduce very shortly, to provide for the registration of technology transfer agreements. There will also be legislation providing that a majority of the board of directors of federally incorporated companies be Canadian. Measures to increase Canadian participation in the ownership and control of resource projects are under consideration.

The suggestion in this announcement on which I wish to focus at the moment is that in respect of the registration of technology transfer agreements. As the Gray Report states on Page 44:

> Licensing as a vehicle for the transference of a manufacturer's distinctiveness can have many of the same costs and benefits associated with foreign direct investment. The granting of a licence may be used by a manufacturer to spread his market power if he cannot afford direct investment in all markets. It may be used to foreclose entry of a potential competitor by granting him a licence. On the other hand, a licensing arrangement may allow a host economy to acquire a distinctive capacity without the necessity of bringing in other unneeded inputs, e.g., capital. A licensing arrangement can also lead to a more rapid diffusion of distinctiveness through the training it gives a potential competitor. Because of the similarities between foreign direct investment and licensing and other forms of contractual arrangements, much of the analysis which applies to direct investment is also appropriate to licensing arrangements.

While the minister has not spoken of the form which this legislation will take, it would seem to me appropriate that it might be carried on by the same minister with the assistance of the same agency suggested in this bill. I think there would be an advantage in having this done that way, but we will be looking forward to the proposals of the minister in this respect.

• (1530)

As the constitution committee pointed out in the last chapter of its report to parliament last March, there is a definite need in Canada for the development and indeed the deliberate cultivation of a positive nationalism. We can so easily change into a country which is fragmented in spirit. We need to make special efforts to overcome our regionalism. Such regionalism is indigenous to our country by reason of its geography, its distances, its languages, its culture and its variety. The variety is something I think all of us in this House would like to see preserved. At the same time, because of the very fact that it exists, with a potential for divisiveness, we must be especially conscious of the need to cultivate a positive nationalism. As I see it, a positive nationalism is vital to our future and this bill is vital to the development of a positive nationalism.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, we were told after the October 30 general election that this government had learned some lessons. It surprises me therefore that the government should have the nerve to introduce the same poor bill, with minor alterations—changes which merely add to the preamble in respect of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons. All I can say about this is fiddle-de-dee. It is the same inept bill. It was inept then and it is inept now. It is amazing to realize, in view of the fact the party to the left of us was so anti-Bill C-201 last year what the bedroom can do to change a party's attitudes and principles. What was considered bad last year is now praised by the party to the left. No one may criticize the preamble to this piece of legislation. The problem is that this bill embodies a philosophy which does nothing for business and does nothing for Canadians. It is a bill which starts off by saying "thou shalt not."

Clause 2 of the bill still contains the same subjective analysis problems. There are no real criteria concerning what will be good for the development of Canada. It still refers to percentages of shareholdings. Indeed truly real Canadian companies are suddenly deemed to be foreign companies just because 25 per cent of their shares lie in other countries, or because in some cases one foreign shareholder holds 5 per cent of the shares. This is no way to deal with Canadians. In many cases, the companies now deemed by this bill to be foreign are really Canadian companies.

I was surprised that the minister, having mentioned the positive steps he intended to take, did not completely rehash this measure and provide as a minimum requirement that at least the majority of the directors be Canadians and that at least Canadian talent be represented in senior management. We still see the incension of the 90-day review. We still see the possibility of the review carrying on forever. We still have the provision under which, should the minister think I intend to sell a business or that perhaps you, Mr. Speaker, intend to sell a business to foreigners, he can send in his troops to investigate us just because he has reasonable grounds to believe such a sale is contemplated. That is the kind of thing we object to. It is not necessary. It is not the kind of thing which develops a positive Canadian nationalism.

This bill will develop a huge bureaucracy to inquire into investment decisions which people make. The whole question of foreign review has been investigated by some provinces. In the province of Ontario a standing committee of the legislature has been sitting since this time last year looking into the whole problem of foreign ownership and the way in which it affects our culture and our business activities, as well as the development of our nation. That committee has held several hearings, including hearings held right here in Ottawa. When Bill C-201 came before this House and the standing committee last year, nine days were devoted to hearings—they were not nine full days because each session lasts for only an hour and a half.

I suggest that if this bill passes second reading—and there are grave doubts about that—the whole issue of foreign ownership should be reviewed by a House committee. We must call in experts from industry and the market. We must call in people from the provinces, We must hear from the banks, the life insurance companies and the pension funds. We must go to specific industries and find out whether the activities undertaken as a result of this bill will hurt rather than help in the development of Canada particularly with respect to oil and gas, mining, the auto industry, transportation, printing, publications and communications. It is important that we look at these things because the bill means that if a company has gross assets or $250,000 or if a small-town auto dealer has help from Motor Holdings, even though he lives in that small town and is a Canadian, his company is deemed by this bill to be a foreign corporation. This is the type of thing which must be studied to determine whether it contributes to a better Canada, contributes to the development of the country and as well provides for Canadian ownership.

The practice of my party in debates this session has been for individual speakers to concentrate on parts of the Progressive Conservative program and so present our program to the people of Canada and to the members of the House. Today I want to talk about taxes, the tax policies of this government and how those tax policies affect foreign ownership and the development of Canada and prevent, in many cases, Canadians becoming masters in their own house. The other day the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said that all the Tories want to do is talk about taxes, because if taxes are reduced the wealthy and the privileged will be better off. Perhaps he is right to some extent. But his party is worried that some one will make some money, that some Canadian will become wealthy, that some Canadian will all of a sudden be successful in Canada and will take advantage of his opportunities. That party would have us in the blue uniforms of China. That party would have us in the straitjacket of Bolchevism. That party does not give a darn about Canadians. That party wants to stifle enterprise, stifle initiative, and stifle progress, and that is why they stand condemned.

Mr. Knight: Same old gang.

Mr. Blenkarn: What danger is there in giving Canadians some money? This party talks about the amount of money that goes to foreigners. For the sake of the hon. member for York South—and I am sorry he is not here—I could say that in 1972 well over a billion and a half dollars in Canadian money went across to some other country in the form of dividends, remittances or allowances to pay for the foreign investment we have in this country. By 1982 it will be at least $2.6 billion per annum, and something radical must be done because this country must be owned by Canadians. This is our country, and we are not going to build a better country with negativism, backward talk, and socialism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: There is nothing wrong with people becoming rich, and I hope many Canadians become rich. I hope they make a profit. That is the kind of thing we on this side of the House are talking about. We are talking about opportunities for young people and older people. We are talking about equality and about the improvement of Canada.

Dealing with tax problems, I said during the election campaign that it was a miracle that Canadians would even bother investing in Canada at all. We have probably one of the highest graduated tax rates on personal income in almost any country in the world. Our tax rates rise to 45 per cent when someone makes $15,000 of taxable income. This tax level does not just affect those fortunate few who are managers of corporations and the like, but it affects auto workers, teachers, and construction machine operators. These people are not highly paid people in the inflationary economy which we now have; they are ordinary Canadians who want to have opportunities in Canada. These Canadians are taxed at such a high rate that they are prevented from saving. They are taxed on their savings and they are taxed higher possibly than people in any other country in the world except Sweden. We have to supply Canadians with the incentive to invest, to acquire, to save and to build, and we will not do that for Canadians with this enormously high tax rate.

Speaking further on the question of personal tax matters, there are provisions in the Income Tax Act with regard to registered retirement savings plans. Unfortunately, those plans are bound up in red tape. They really prevent the investment of funds in pension plans and venture activities. I am sorry the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) is not here, but I suggest to him that we need to liberalize the investment requirements in registered retirement savings plans so that Canadians will be able to acquire to some extent risk equity in planning for their future. These are changes that need to be made.

I want to speak next with respect to the policy of taxing dividends. It became apparent at one time that if a company earned a profit, it paid a corporate tax. Then, when the dividend is passed on to the shareholder, that dividend bears a tax again. In the amendments to the Income Tax Act, the advantages of the dividend tax credit to many Canadian investors was seriously limited. I do not know whether the minister has looked into this, but I have had an economist do this and I understand that the cost of removing any tax on dividends to Canadians from Canadian corporations would cost the national revenue less than half the cost of last year's LIP. That would be of great advantage to Canadians investing in stock in Canadian companies. The dividends you receive would not bear any further income tax. That would be an incentive and a positive program.

We have a series of problems in connection with remittances that go from one foreign-controlled corporation to another. Somewhere along the line it is necessary for a government to monitor what I would call inter-office charges. International companies have considerable latitude in evading fiscal and monetary policies. They can be obviated through the taxes on retained earnings, in one subsidiary of the parent company. They can be obviated by transfer prices for goods and services exchanged in inter-company transactions. If a country does not get its share of taxes from the profits of international pricing procedures, then it loses almost all of the benefits of direct foreign investment. Customs officials have difficulty in determining duty valuations for inter-company transfers, especially when unique products are concerned such as computer tapes of technological information. These are the kinds of things that I thought this minister would introduce as positive measures when he was talking about foreign controlled corporations and the way they do business in Canada.

Then, there is the matter of the withholding tax. It is amazing that our major trading partners are still able to invest money in Canada, take it home with them and pay only a 15 per cent withholding tax on their income. No effort has been made by this government to renegotiate the tax treaties in connection with the withholding tax. A Canadian pays up to 60 per cent tax on his income: a foreigner comes to Canada, invests in a mortgage or in a building, takes his profits home with him, and leaves Canada 15 per cent in tax. That is what Liberals called encouraging Canadians. That is the policy of this government, and they have done nothing about this matter. These are positive measures in connection with taxation. Of course, speaking of the withholding tax, while Canadians pay capital gains taxes, foreigners in this country are not required to pay such a tax to the government of Canada on the capital gains they make in Canada. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) said that this government has done more to sell out Canada than any other government in the history of Canada. Certainly it has never introduced a positive measure in respect of foreign control to assist Canadians in owning their own country.

We must also index the cost on capital gains taxes because capital gains, to some extent and in many cases, are not really a gain but an inflationary increase in price. So what we have to do in the capital gains tax portion of our tax legislation is to provide that increases in the cost of living are added to the base costs as determined at valuation date in determining the capital gain made on a sale. At present this is not the case, and this should be done in all fairness to Canadians.

One of the problems with respect to capital gain is the deemed realization of the gain on death. This has been mentioned with respect to the family farm. I should like to say something about it with respect to the family business.

The private entrepreneur often has all his eggs in one basket. They may be all in his private company. If he dies there is a deemed realization of his assets. You go back to valuation day, and even with the indexing I am talking about, there can well be a gain. That gain is immediately taxable, and the tax becomes instantly payable. We must make positive recommendations for allowances to Canadians so that if this occurs they will have at least ten years, at low interest rates, to pay back the tax chargeable as a result of this death or of a sale.

Efforts must be made to allow investment credits to persons who invest in small Canadian business. This whole matter will be dealt with later by members on this side, but the proposals made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), during the election and since, in connection with allowing at least $5,000 per annum for those who invest in small business, must be given serious consideration as a positive incentive to Canadians to invest in Canada. We must attack the restrictions on business. We must make a conscious effort in this parliament to eliminate as much red tape as possible, as well as other things that adversely affect Canadian business.

The other day a businessman came to see me. He said, "Look, why should I have to file a bond for the sales tax department? After all I have been in business for 15 years, but they still won't trust me." It is about time the government started trusting Canadian businessmen. It is time it said, "You have been a good customer and paid sales tax regularly for 15 years, so we can trust you to remit your tax once a month. We don't require this additional red tape."

We ought to eliminate some of the needless statistics required for Statistics Canada reports. These cost money. They are a disincentive to Canadian business. We must do something, as I said earler in this session in connection with the Income Tax Act, to make it easier for business to file the returns required on T4 slips, T5 slips, T2 slips, and information in respect of deductions required weekly for employee UIC contributions, the Canada Pension Plan, hospital insurance and the like.

Lastly, we must look into the corporate tax rate. The government has proposed a reduction to 40 per cent of the corporate tax rate for manufacturing corporations. But we find that in the aggregate 58 per cent of manufacturing corporations are owned by foreigners. So, really this particular tax reduction was aimed primarily at assisting foreign corporations by giving them a tax break. This is the policy of the government. That is not the answer. What we should explore is a method whereby Canadian corporations are given a lower tax rate than corporations owned by foreigners. This would encourage Canadians to own corporations in Canada. Our present tax laws are in fact forcing the few multinational corporations owned by Canadians, and operating around the world, to think about leaving Canada.

The publication Business Week of March 17 last reported that Massey-Ferguson is seriously considering not retaining its head office location in Canada any longer because of the way in which the Income Tax Act affects foreign investment by our multinational corporations. Several corporations that were Canadian are no longer Canadian. They found that doing business in Canada as Canadian corporations was not profitable. That is no way in which to build Canada, but that is the policy of the Liberal government. The principle "Thou shalt not" upon which this bill operates, is one which should not be encouraged.

This is a bill which provides for penalties, which provides for bureaucrats, which provides for investigations, and which provides for reviews. It is a bill that says, "Give us more policemen." It is not a bill which does anything to encourage anybody. Indeed, it does the opposite. I am sure that is why the NDP and the Liberal party are together here, because they both believe in Big Brother. They both believe that business in itself is bad. They both believe that free enterprise must be controlled and hamstrung. They both believe Canadians cannot be trusted.

Our approach to this bill clearly demonstrates the philosophical difference between our party and what I am going to refer to from now on as the New Liberal Democratic Party. Our party believes in Canadians. Our party will trust Canadians. Our party will give Canadians incentives to build Canada, not just more controls.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I want to remind you of this minister's record. Look at the Export Development Bank. There is a pile of money there, but where does it go? He makes sure that the foreign owned corporations get their share. Look at the advances to Michelin, Gulf Oil, Douglas Aircraft and IBM. This is the approach of the government with respect to handouts. It will not be the approach of this party when we form the government shortly.

We believe a government of Canada should do everything to ensure that Canadians own their own homes and are able to own shares in Canadian business. We believe in personal, private stakes in Canada, in taxes, in bank borrowing, in development policies and in resource utilization. This party, Mr. Speaker, is the "Canada first" party. This party has been the Canada first party since the days of Macdonald, and this party will continue to be the Canada first party. This party is not the party of big bureaucracy and big control. That is the philosophy of the New Liberal Democratic Party.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I am one of those on this side of the House who felt that the foreign takeovers review bill which was presented in the last parliament did not go really far enough. It did not go far enough toward what I consider to be the most important national goal, that is having a Canada which is master in its own house; having a Canada which is in control of its own economy. I mean having control of its own economy, Mr. Speaker, to the maximum extent that is possible in a world which is becoming increasingly interdependent.

• (1600)

The government's response so far to problems involving foreign ownership and control of industry in Canada and of our natural resources, has found only very limited favour with the people of this country. According to one Gallup Poll that was released last September, only 34 per cent indicated satisfaction with the record of action so far. Another 40 per cent were critical of it, and it is the views of those persons that I should like to consider for a moment.

Those who said they were critical of the government's handling of the problem of foreign ownership and control were asked to explain why they felt as they did. Almost half of them answered in terms of general dislike of foreign economic domination of this country. Most of them, by the way, felt that this foreign domination meant U.S. domination. "We should run our own country", they said and, "the U.S. is taking advantage of us". A labourer from Ontario put it this way "We are becoming a little America". Well, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be ample evidence to support those feelings. It is certainly not part of my dream for Canada that we become nothing more than an economic appendage to the powerful American republic.

In the past few years, the Canadian public has become increasingly aware of the extensive nature of foreign ownership and control in our country. A growing percentage of people in Canada are coming to regard foreign ownership and control of our industry as undesirable. An examination of the reasons on which this opposition to foreign ownership is based indicates a concern on two predominant issues. The first of these is the loss of control in making decisions strictly in the interest and to the benefit of Canadians; the second is the economic loss, the loss incurred when profits and dividends leave the country.

There was a time during our quite recent history when it could be said that in Canada there was a conflict between two national aspirations, the desire for rapid economic development on the one hand, and the desire for cultural and political autonomy on the other hand. Even in the midst of such a conflict, however, Mr. Speaker, there were always those who pointed to that which has now become quite obvious, namely, that economic domination and political domination are inextricably bound together.

In the past, too much attention has been paid to the assumed benefits of foreign investment and not enough was said about the drawbacks. In recent years as the evidence accumulated concerning the extent of foreign ownership and control in this country, more and more Canadians have come to realize that the penalties substantially outweigh the benefits. What penalties? Certainly, one is the loss of control in making decisions strictly in the interest of and to the benefit of Canadians. How can we effectively make economic plans with any degree of confidence if a board of directors meeting thousands of miles away in another country is making major decisions about industries which it owns and operates in Canada and which directly affect our economic life? Those are economic decisions.

Political decisions as well can be affected by a high degree of foreign ownership and control. The Wahn Report put it this way:

> The danger which Canada must guard against is that it will drift into such a position of dependency in relation to the United States that it will be unable, in practice, to adopt policies displeasing to the United States because of the fear of American reaction which would involve consequences unacceptable to Canadians.

Probably the most critical aspect of this relationship of dependency is the fact that it makes it increasingly difficult for Canada to establish its own regional development objectives. Large companies invest in Canada to extract resources for the American domestic market. Their investment decisions quite naturally reflect the industrial priorities of their economy, not ours. In the resources sector, one of the major reasons for American control is to ensure a stable source of raw materials for the parent company in the United States.

I have heard it argued, Mr. Speaker, that a vigorous, truly effective foreign ownership policy would work against the less developed regions of Canada and that only the more advanced regions of this country would benefit. In my view, such an argument is a fallacious one because I firmly believe that Canadian ownership and control allows for the possibility of a more rational and more long-term development policy. I believe it allows for a much greater opportunity to eliminate the chances for undue exploitation of people, of communities and of resources. The Canada for Canadians policy must, of course, be introduced in conjunction with a vastly improved program of regional economic development on the part of the federal and the provincial governments working in closer harmony. It is sometimes said that capital from the United States or some other country is needed to help our economic well-being. There are others who are quite convinced, and have statistics to back up their belief, that extensive foreign ownership and control means an economic drain rather than a benefit—a drain whereby profits and dividends leave the country.

Recent studies have shown that there is no actual shortage of capital in Canada and that new American capital which comes into our country is far exceeded by the export of capital to the United States by Canadians. Professor H. G. Aitken in his study of 1961 entitled "American Capital and Canadian Resources", showed that over 75 per cent of American investment was financed by Canadians through retained earnings of foreign branch plants operating in Canada, depreciation and depletion allowances granted those corporations by the Canadian government, and by funds raised abroad by issuing stocks and bonds on the Canadian money market. A more recent study has confirmed Professor Aitken's findings and has shown that the trend is increasing. In the areas surveyed, new funds from the United States amounted to 10 per cent—and I am talking about actual new funds, not recirculated funds—in 1963 and only 4.8 per cent in 1968.

Do we have enough domestic capital in Canada? The Gray Report answered that question. It suggests that Canadian savings are already large enough to sustain both greater growth and fuller employment than we have at the present time. So, despite a smaller percentage of actual new capital coming into Canada from the United States and despite the availability of adequate Canadian capital, foreign ownership and control is still increasing and it is increasing, Mr. Speaker, at a very alarming rate. According to the Gray report, in 1948, 43 per cent of our industry was foreign owned and in 1968, it was 58 per cent. This fact has led one distinguished economic nationalist to state that the problem in Canada is not foreign investment as such, but rather foreign ownership and control. He went on to say that our high degree of non-resident ownership and control produces an emasculated country without the characteristics of a sovereign nation.

• (1610)

It is said that the foreign investment and review bill now before us is a response by the government to the fact that non-Canadian control of Canadian industry, trade and commerce, and its effect on the ability of Canadians to maintain desirable control over their economic environment, is a matter of national concern. It is said that the measures contained in the bill will help Canadians develop an expanding economy for the benefit of Canada. These measures are to form part of the government's efforts to put in place a clear set of industrial policies to encourage national objectives. It is said that this legislation complements a whole range of positive measures to build strong Canadian entrepreneurship, to encourage a high level of economic activity and to provide incentives for Canadians to invest in their own country. I want to be optimistic enough to believe that this bill will do all these things, but I must say that I regard this bill as a rather cautious proposal, one which I trust will move us in the right direction, but cautiously.

In considering foreign takeovers and the establishment of new businesses by foreigners, the government will examine carefully the effect of economic activity, particularly employment, the degree of significant participation by Canadians in the business or the industry that is going to be examined by the review process, the effect of the proposed investment on productivity and competition in Canada and, finally, the compatability of the proposed investment with national, industrial and economic policy objectives. One would certainly be hard pressed to see in this approach any suggestion of narrow nationalism, but those who see it as a bit too timid may be on firmer ground. That we need a review process, there can be no doubt. That we will need more in the future seems obvious. The issue of foreign ownership and control is of deep concern to Canadians and it will continue to be more so in the years ahead. This is a problem and an issue facing Canadians that is not going to go away. It is going to be with us for a long time.

I suspect that Canadians are going to demand that their federal and provincial governments continue to take steps to deal with this issue. At this time, I would say that Canadians and their governments are still somewhat uncertain about what the optimal answer may be, but the people of Canada do expect us to take firm, all-embracing steps to curtail the growth of foreign ownership in this country. There can be no doubt about that. They expect us to do this while at the same time taking steps to ensure that the potential growth of Canadian business is realized. Bearing those things in mind, I suspect that this government is trying to find a safe and workable middle road.

Our citizens demand of their governments effective measures which will result in a stronger economy for the full benefit of all Canadians. They want, and will want more so in the future, a restoration of control over their own economic destiny. I strongly suggest to this government and to parliament the wisdom of providing continuous leadership in these directions. We should do that rather than follow far behind the aspirations of the Canadian people we have been called upon to lead.

[Mr. Penner.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should first comment on the address given to this House today on the bill before us by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner). He said that the bill was a cautious proposal. Coming from a member of the Trudeau Liberal government, I suggest that is an understatement. The bill is, indeed a cautious proposal.

I read the speech of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) when the bill was introduced. He stated that Liberal policy on foreign investment is based on two pillars. If I may, I would like to refer to them as the pillars of Gillespie. I suggest those pillars are just as mythical as the pillars of Hercules.

The two pillars referred to by the minister are first, positive support for the development of Canadian-owned and controlled corporations and, second, positive measures to maximize the benefit to Canada of foreign investment. My, how high sounding that is. If we take a deeper look, not only at the words of the minister, but more importantly, at the actions of this government over the past 10 years, we will see how shallow his pillar reference is in fact.

The Trudeau Liberals and the minister took a great deal of time to point out what they felt the problems were today. I suggest there is no one in this House who should know better than the Trudeau Liberal government what the problems are because the problems substantially grew during their 10 years in office. I suggest that these problems have been well outlined and explained by a committee on finance of the United States Senate which filed their report in February, 1973. Before the committee finally considers the bill we are debating today and refers it back to this House, I suggest every member of this House should read the report of that committee on finance of the United States Senate which was chaired by Russell B. Long.

In their report, they reviewed the implications of multinational firms for world trade and investment and for United States trade and labour. This report, which covers almost 1,000 pages, reviews on a global basis, the effect of multinational corporations around the world. There are many references to Canada. I wish to point out only two or three of them today. At page 96, the report points out and I quote:

> Canada because of proximity, language, and common interests, was viewed for many years by U.S. companies almost as another state. Some of these companies' annual reports included the Canadian results with the domestic totals instead of in the foreign section. The Canadians welcomed this investment which brought them rapid economic growth and a high standard of living at the cost of foreign economic domination of many of their industries.

• (1620)

Then, there is this comment, and I think it is very relevant:

> More recently, the Canadians have raised questions about this foreign domination but they have not attempted to reduce it significantly.

That is the Finance Committee of the United States Senate speaking. It is speaking as of February, 1973 in reference to the actions of the Trudeau Liberal government with respect to the problem the government feels will be lessened as a result of the bill before us today. The report goes on at page 97 to set out a chart on which is recorded the growth of direct investment by United States multinational corporations around the world. The figures compare the situation in 1960 with that in 1970 and they show that direct investment in Canada rose from $11.2 billion to $22.8 billion in that period. I think it is significant to note that those are mainly the years of Liberal government in Canada. The U.S. Senate committee mentions for example, that, by deliberate choice, Japan, in contrast to Canada, has successfully restricted foreign direct investment in productive facilities. Again, I remind the House that this is a committee of the U.S. Senate commenting on our performance as far as the United States investment around the world is concerned. I think it is fair to say that, in general, the tone of this committee report is one of utter amazement at the inactivity of the government in Ottawa faced with th problem hon. gentlemen opposite feel they are coping with in the bill before us today.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House unduly by discussing all the various points made in this report, but it is of particular interest to find the committee mentioning, specifically, that research and development tends to favour parent corporations at the expense of subsidiaries. I shall touch on this matter later.

I feel that when we discuss the problems which face Canada in this field at the present time we should bear in mind that the problems have been well spelled out. What we need are the answers, and I suggest that the minister, in his address to the House, has failed to provide those answers. I do not feel that the bill he has proposed is, in itself, an answer.

Allow me to return, for a few moments, to the subject of the "pillars of Gillespie". I would remind the House that he said they constitute a positive support for the development of Canadian-owned and controlled corporations and positive measures to maximize the benefit to Canada of foreign investment. Let us examine two or three of the areas which the minister has under his jurisdiction. I refer particularly to the anti-dumping legislation and to the activities of the Export Development Corporation. We find that this government, which speaks so righteously on this bill, has not maintained in practise the pillars of Gillespie. Its actions with respect to anti-dumping measures and the Export Development Corporation do not bear out the minister's words. Here is a minister who says the government stands for small business, that it stands for the proper development of Canadian-owned and controlled corporations.

Let me tell hon. members the tale of the tanning and shoe industry in Canada. This industry has been inundated by imports of goods from all over the world. Its representatives have made numerous trips to Ottawa pleading for something to be done to set a quota so that they might be able to carry on as an industry. Part of the answer by the government was to refer the plight of the industry to the anti-dumping tribunal. Appearing before a committee of this House, the chairman of that tribunal confirmed that the reference to them had been made in November, 1971 but he said that to date the committee had not reported on its findings concerning the industry. The industry has now stated that unless something is done on an emergency basis it will literally be out of business by 1975. In the last five years, 3,000 employees have lost jobs in this industry because of the failure of the federal government to do something about the importation of foreign goods.

What I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, is that if this is an example of the type of agency or tribunal the minister proposes to set up to solve the foreign ownership problem facing this country it is a sorry precedent. Such an agency would be a totally inept vehicle for coping with the problem we are considering today. I would point out that the chairman of this anti-dumping tribunal, who receives a salary of $34,000 a year, and his two assistants who between them get another $60,000, operate on a budget in excess of $300,000. They have dealt with six references in the current year. The average number of references since the tribunal was set up in 1969 have been five or six a year. I take it this is what the minister calls action. He can slough off a problem without worry that something will be done for 16 months or so in the case of the tanning and shoe industry. The tribunal to which I have referred has sat on the matter while a 100 per cent Canadian-owned industry dies.

Consider the question from another aspect. How can the government actively assist Canadian business? Take the Export Development Corporation, for example. In this case we find that the No. 1 multinational corporation in the world, General Motors Corporation, has been very fortunate in Canada. In 1973, it recorded sales in this country worth approximately $2.5 billion. The corporation's net income was approximately $80 million. But I wonder whether the minister realizes this: in the years 1970 and 1971, the net income tax paid by General Motors of Canada Limited amount to approximately $35 million. Here is a corporation with net sales, if we join the two years, amounting to almost $4 billion, which pays approximately $35 million in Canadian income tax. To put this into a world perspective, the parent company recorded sales of $28 billion around the world in 1971 and paid $1,900,000,000 around the world in taxation. I suggest that our tax program certainly has not been unfavourable to this corporation.

Most surprisingly, though, the Export Development Corporation has extended credit in the past year or so, mainly to Yugoslavia, in a total amount of $57 million for the benefit of General Motors. As at the end of December 1972, almost $50 million of that amount was still outstanding. It represented almost 6 per cent of the total ceiling that parliament granted to the Export Development Corporation for such assistance. In the two years 1970 and 1971, General Motors paid through it Canadian subsidiary $35 million, but it reaped the benefit of financing through the Export Development Corporation of some $50 million as at the end of last year.

• (1630)

As mentioned earlier in the House, the financings of the Export Development Corporation are generally around the high 6 per cent or the low 7 per cent a year level.

Those financings as a rule are on a 10 to 15 year basis. So, how nice it is, Mr. Speaker, to be such a corporation in Canada!

I should not, of course, stop at the General Motors of Canada, Limited example since eight corporations shared half of the one billion, some odd million dollars worth of financing that was arranged by the Export Development Corporation. Of that number, over half were foreign controlled. So, we have the odd situation where the minister comes into the House and, with a few words, spells out a beautiful picture showing how effectively the government is dealing with the problem of multinational corporations in Canada. On the other hand, the actions of his department's Crown corporation and of his anti-dumping tribunal spell out a totally different picture of what the Trudeau Liberal government is in fact doing for Canadian businesses and how they are not solving the problems created by foreign multinational corporations in Canada.

There is a total lack of vision and courage on the part of this government is projecting ahead on a five or ten year basis. It would be a great accomplishment for this parliament to get the present Liberal government to think past their next press release. Press releases seem to be the best thing this government has been able to do during the last four to five years.

Having said that, I believe it is extremely important that my party's position be reiterated on the subject we are discussing today. The hon. member for Trinity pointed out in his initial speech many of the problems that have not been dealt with in the bill. But most importantly, he outlined what the Progressive Conservative party believes would be a sound, positive approach to help Canada in its present position. First, I wish to reiterate that our full employment proposals include a more expansionary budget, coupled with wage and price controls.

An hon. Member: That is five times you have said that.

Mr. Stevens: Just on that point, in reply to the hon. member, may I say that we should say it one hundred times, because hon. members opposite have not started to listen to us. I suggest that this point is no better demonstrated than by what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) said last evening when he was before the—

Mr. Roy (Timmins): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Timmins on a point of order.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stevens: I would be more than pleased to take a question later, Mr. Speaker. If I may continue, I point out that the Minister of Finance appeared last night before the finance committee and he and his assistants showed a complete lack of knowledge of the operation of the wage and price controls that have now been instituted in the United States. Theirs was an unbelievable performance. Yet hon. members opposite have the audacity to carry on and govern this country.

Our second point is that we believe our tax laws should be changed so as to encourage greater savings, investment and risk-taking by Canadians. At the present time, taxwise an American is in a more opportune position to invest in Canada in many fields than is a Canadian. This situation must be changed to ensure that a Canadian has an advantage if he wishes to invest in such fields in his own country.

Third, we say that Canadian business in general has fallen behind the world in the last few years in research and development. Federal leadership is required to allow us to regain our momentum in this important field, and we intend to outline certain proposals to allow our businesses, especially those Canadian controlled, to regain their ascendancy in the world.

Let me underline our party's position. Research and development are the forerunners of business development. During the last ten years Canada, with all its resources, and potential has fallen into the bottom third of the first 25 countries listed in the World Atlas for 1972 in terms of rate of growth per capita. For a country with the potential of Canada, I think this is a disgrace. It is time that that trend was changed, but it will not change until the government is changed.

Fourth, the Progressive Conservatives believe that our financial institutions should be redirected and structured to ensure that Canadian entrepreneurship can be properly financed within Canada, including a proper financing of regional activities of companies in our five main regions. I think it is interesting that in the speech of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce no reference was made to the fundamental question of competition in Canada. I believe that is a serious oversight and that the government should look into the lending pattern and policies of the Canadian chartered banks. Certainly, our party will do so when we form the government. Surely, at least the question should be asked whether our banks should be allowed to continue to lend literally hundreds of millions of dollars as they see fit, irrespective of the impact on Canadian ownership.

Fifth, we believe that through a more aggressive export policy a positive trade balance in current account can be achieved exclusive of whatever resources are sold. Such a positive balance will create a cash pool which could then be directed to acquire substantial or controlling interests in Canadian institutions now foreign controlled. In many fields, we believe Canadians could buy sufficient equity to ensure control of many of the multinational corporations themselves, and in this regard we are suggesting it is high time that Canada started to live as part of the world.

• (1640)

To summarize, most Canadians are in favour of economic nationalism, but the question is: What is economic nationalism? To some, it is the taking of positive economic steps to strengthen Canada's position at home and abroad, and that is the Progressive Conservative policy. To others, it is the welcoming of foreign or Canadian investment funds and technology to achieve these ends with the proper safeguards to protect Canadian industry. To others, however, economic nationalism means being insular and defensive in outlook. They would tend to discourage or restrict the investment of foreign funds and technology, even if it meant a lowering of the standard of living of the average Canadian. There are, therefore, positive nationalists and negative nationalists.

In a world of economic change and challenge where Canada has much to gain but even more to lose, it would be unfortunate if this nation embraced a form of negative nationalism. The exponents of negative nationalism have one thing in common; they are anti-foreign and, in particular, anti-U.S. They link this attitude with being pro-Canadian in most cases. Within this group there are Socialists, such as we have to my left, and so-called free enterprisers, although I doubt this very much, in front of us. The Socialists see an opportunity to mobilize grass roots sentimental nationalism to help promote their new radicalism. Their goal is a socialist Canada.

The non-Socialists speak of an independent Canada in terms of minimizing international involvement, but they are parochial minded. The challenge of today's multinational commerce, which so many Canadians are meeting successfully, is not for them. In rather emotional arguments these negative nationalists take statistics on foreign ownership and use them out of context in an alarming way. They allege that various types of ownership are harmful without meaningful proof. They fail to appreciate Canada's involvement in today's multinational world economy and they put forth no creditable alternatives to replace what they would destroy.

I am a positive nationalist I am proud of Canada and what we have done in the business world, but I believe that we can do much better. We are in a world of opportunity but we have a coalition government which does not understand the economic world of today. Most importantly, this government is giving no leadership to our businessmen to assist them in coping with today's world economy.

Let there be no mistake; Canada's multinational corporate activity throughout the world is impressive. We are the second largest foreign investor in United States industry, Great Britain being the first. Canadian multinational corporations with sales over $20 billion per year transact business throughout the world in a manner similar to foreign multinational company activity here. These companies include the Moore Corporation, Limited, which does approximately 88 per cent of its $450 million business in the United States, with less than 10 per cent of its business in Canada. Hiram Walker-Gooderham & Worts, Ltd. and Distillers Corporation-Seagrams Limited, with a combined sales volume of over $2.2 billion has 90 per cent of its business outside Canada, mainly in the United States. Alcan, with total sales of $1.4 billion, does most of its business outside of Canada, with only 12 per cent conducted here.

In the merchandising field, the 15th largest retailing concern in the United States, National Tea of Chicago, with sales of $1.6 billion, is controlled by George Weston Limited of Toronto. There are at least 100 such multinational Canadian manufacturing, retailing or other corporations active around the world, including our airlines, shipping concerns, mining companies and banks.

Our banks, for example, have 286 branches in some 35 foreign countries, including the United States, Great Britain and France. Currently, approximately 25 per cent of their total assets, of some $63 billion, are involved in foreign banking activity, and five of our banks are among the 50 largest in the world.

Our life insurance companies are also active internationally. In 1970 over 32 per cent of their business in force, which totalled $119 billion, was in countries outside Canada. Such Canadian life companies held $5.1 billion in foreign investment in 1970. Canada's position in the multinational world economy is also reflected in Fortune directory. Of the 300 largest industries outside the United States, Canada ranks fifth behind Japan, the United Kingdom, France and West Germany. Each of these countries, of course, has substantially larger gross national products than we have in Canada. We now stand fifth, but we Progressive Conservatives believe that we can improve our position in relation to this large multinational corporation activity in the world.

At the present time we have 17 corporations listed among the top 300 outside the United States. If we had a pro rata share we would have 30, and I would like to see this country top that goal instead of allowing negative nationalism to take hold. That has been the case put forth by our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Multinational corporate activity is reciprocal. We cannot expect to remain active in foreign lands if we choose to become more and more restrictive at home. With foresight, Canadians can continue to tap the world market and, in particular, the OECD countries with their combined $2,000 billion GNP. Unfortunately, this government, which has been in existence since 1963, has not seen fit to cope adequately with this important issue in Canada. In 1963 they brought in legislation which was subsequently taken advantage of by Union Carbide Canada Limited. This legislation provided that if 25 per cent or more of the stock of a foreign-owned subsidiary was sold to Canadians it would receive a beneficial tax position in Canada. The sad fact is that $60 million in stock was sold by Union Carbide at $24 per share in 1964. Today that stock sells for $17.50 per share. That is what happens to Canadian investors under the leadership of this Liberal government. I sincerely hope that the present trend of this government will not result in further losses to Canadians, either directly or indirectly.

Encouraging multinational companies to sell and Canadians to purchase minority interests in foreign subsidiaries does not put any important power into the hands of Canadians and, in fact, may cause the foreign parent to divert attention and business from the Canadian subsidiary which is no longer 100 per cent wholly owned.

If we were interested in doing something more effective, and if we use the 5 per cent reference in the bill now before us, we could take $150 million, and buy equity in the parent Union Carbide Corporation of the United States and that amount would probably give us effective control of that foreign multinational corporation. Surely that would be more constructive than buying a minority interest in their subsidiary. We would have ownership in Canada of the 25th largest multinational corporation of the United States. That is the kind of vision and the type of thrust which I believe we in Canada are capable of if given the leadership. Canada historically has been an internationally oriented country. We have done well with such orientation. We can do better. Multinationalism is an integral part of our past success and an essential ingredient for our future success in achieving a rising standard of living. There are new opportunities opening up for us such as the leisure time field and oceanography. Canada could become a pioneer in the new frontiers of business.

• (1650)

Mr. Hellyer: And urbanology.

Mr. Stevens: Urbanology is suggested. I quite agree. This is the type of forward thinking we would like to see from the government of Canada. Unfortunately, this has not been done by the Trudeau Liberal government. Canadian government and industry will be judged in future, not on how it has resisted the tide of world events, but on how they have capitalized on that tide.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would entertain a question?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, as I recall it the hon. member was once involved in obtaining some capital to flow out to a bank in western Canada and that movement failed. I wonder whether he could now encourage his boardroom friends in Toronto who are hogging the capital there to distribute it to western Canada, and at that time we might be more interested in his concern about foreign capital.

Mr. Stevens: What was the question, Mr. Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may repeat the question until it is understood or perhaps put in a way in which it can be answered, but the Chair will not repeat the question.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member consider encouraging his boardroom friends in Toronto who are hogging the Canadian capital on Bay Street to disperse that capital to the regions in Canada where it is needed?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, one of the points I raised was that it is not only myself who would take such a course but my party believes our financial institutions should have redirection and restructuring to ensure the regional type of involvement that the hon. member is suggesting.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I guess that was a draw.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the four or five minutes remaining, I should like to open my remarks in respect of Bill C-132, the foreign ownership bill. Before doing so, however, may I say I was very amused by the comments made by the members of the Conservative party about the role of the NDP. They must think our position on foreign ownership in this country has a great deal of credence because they constantly refer to us and to the solutions we propose to the government in terms of reforming or amending the legislation which is before us today. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was talking about positive nationalism and creating Canadian based multinational corporations. This is the old theory of what is good for General Motors is good for the country. The old fashioned free enterprise in a corporate enterprise system is what the Conservative party is offering us here today. That seems to contradict some of the other Conservatives, such as the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), who last year thought that the bill presented by the minister did not go far enough.

Then we have the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Blenkarn) who today compared our party to the blue uniformed people in China and said that this is what the NDP really wants. We also have the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the great economic neanderthal, who last year was concerned about the foreign takeover bill being too radical, too progressive. So, I wonder what the position of the Conservative party really is. When it comes right down to it, I think what they want to do is speak the rhetoric of an economic nationalist and cash in on a bit of the feeling about repatriating our economy. At the same time, the only solutions they have are in hand-outs and more tax concessions as outlined by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) when he spoke in the debate on Friday. So, I will be very interested in following the position of members of the Conservative party in this debate, in committee and on third reading of this bill. I think this bill will probably reveal who are the true friends of the Conservatives and what are their true intentions when it comes to foreign ownership and an industrial strategy for this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I would like to say that, perhaps more than any other western industrial country, Canada is really dominated by foreign economic control and by foreign-based multinational corporations. As a result of that—and we are all very much aware of that fact—Canada has become a net exporter of jobs, of wealth, of political autonomy and indeed in some cases of military autonomy as well. Culturally we have been assimilated to a large degree by the Americans to the south of us with one notable exception, French Canada. I think that is to their credit. The people in French Canada have their own language, their own singers, their own playrights, their own musicians and their own cultural entity. We do not have that in English Canada and have been largely assimilated into the North American cultural mainstream. Foreign ownership also contributes to the problems of national unity, regional disparity across this country, unemployment and inflation.

We know about these things in Canada all too well. In the last five or six years we have had three major reports concerning the incidence of foreign ownership and control of our economy. We had the Watkins Report, a very exhaustive study commissioned and carried out under the guidance of the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Gordon. We had a parliamentary committee of this House, the Committee on External Affairs, which presented a report about a year or two ago again raising the same concern about our economy. Then, we had the Gray Report presented last year which reiterated the same facts, that Canada's economy is controlled by foreigners to too great an extent, that we are losing a degree of sovereignty and that we must act very soon.

Before five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to make one more point. When our party speaks about Canadian nationalism, in reply to the hon. member for York-Simcoe, we are not being anti-American. I do not blame the United States for this situation. If I were the president of a huge United States multinational corporation I would come into Canada today. I would come here to invest if I could make a few thousand dollars and walk away with a profit without having a capital gains tax and so on. It is only a natural phenomena. It is Canadians, and the government of this country, which bear the full blame for having our economy eroded from us without rules or regulations and foreseeing our decision-making ability taken away. Mr. Speaker, since it is five o'clock, I shall come back at eight o'clock to finish my remarks.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—External Affairs—Representations to United States against proposed flooding of Skagit River Valley in Canada for power project; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Fisheries—Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation—investigation by Standing Committee of operations and dismissal of employees; the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes)—Drugs—Availability of QUAD program date to bulk purchasers, physicians and other health professionals.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

EXPORT OF PRIMARY PRODUCTS

MEASURE TO LICENSE AND CONTROL EXPORT OF PRIMARY PRODUCTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved that Bill C-15, concerning the exportation of the growth and produce of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs:

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple bill but its impact would be very great on the economy of Canada. This bill has been introduced on a number of occasions. The last time it was discussed was in 1967, at which time members from all parties, most of whom are not here now, took part in that debate. The purpose of this bill is outlined in the explanatory note which reads as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to limit, licence and regulate the exportation of basic and primary resources. No licence will be granted until the authority has ascertained that the national interest of Canada now and in the foreseeable future can best be served by such export permit.

No primary product can be exported until every effort is expended to ensure the growth of its secondary manufacturing potential in Canada.

The reason I bring this bill forward is not in the expectation of it being passed, but in the hope that members will give some consideration to the problem that has developed over the years because of the fact that Canada has to a great degree become the hewer of wood and drawer of water instead of developing a separate identity in the manufacturing and natural resources fields. Canada is rich in natural resources, and I think that in the next few years we will see a total change in the economy of our country.

In an earlier debate today we have referred to the problem of control over foreign ownership of the economy of this country. But the problem, in my opinion, is larger than that. It involves the control by Canadians of much of the development of our own products. I see Canada, within the next few years, making great inroads into the European Common Market with many of our products. Again, we are going to find that our agricultural products are in great demand across the world. There will be a shortage of food in Canada and, rather than discouraging farmers, we should be fostering our agricultural production so that it can be increased not only to fill Canadian needs but to provide for the needs of the peoples of the world who will be suffering from protein deficiency, which can only be remedied by countries such as Canada.

This gives us an opportunity to break away from the past and to adopt a new outlook with regard to the development in Canada of our agricultural commodities which will be exported. These should form a basis for a large portion of the development of our secondary industries and in many cases of our natural resources which should be further processed before being exported. Our agricultural products, in the main, will probably be exported in the semi-finished state, but our resource products have often only been superfically treated before being exported. I am particularly concerned with iron ore, forest products, the petroleum industry and industries that revolve around the production of copper and nickel. These are primary industries that provide little employment. It takes very few men to operate a modern, up-to-date open pit glory hole mining operation in iron, zinc or copper, but it takes a large number of men to develop products from that iron ore to finished state.

Every store in every city has a multitude of products from countries all across the world. It seems to me that in developing the export of our agricultural produce, particularly for the European Common Market, we will have to emphasize employment by providing for the orderly development of industry in this country. As well, we shall have to restrict or prohibit the export from this country of our raw materials when they could be processed here and exported in a finished state. Iron ore is an example.

Northern Ontario and northern Quebec are rich in iron ore. We have there large low grade deposits that can be developed. Yet, all we do is to pelletize the product and ship it out of the area for further processing. We are shipping raw iron ore to Japan, to the United States and to Germany. It seems to me that we should limit the export of this product in that form and develop a secondary industry to process it.

One of our largest secondary industries is the petroleum industry. I think that the difficulties that are developing in the United States now have made us suddenly realize that petroleum will not last much longer if we continue to use it for fuel, and that we will have to develop other by-products instead of only burning it in the form of fuel. There are thousands and thousands of products made from petroleum, such as synthetic clothing, drugs and dyes. Yet, we are exporting large quantities of petroleum in its raw state to our neighbour to the south who is then developing thousands of by-products from it from aspirin to clothing. We are exporting the raw material and buying back the finished product.

A long time ago we passed legislation in the province of Ontario—and I understand this also took place in the province of Quebec—to prohibit the export of lumber. It is true that a small amount of raw wood is exported. These amounts have to be approved under the provincial legislation. What I am suggesting is that we do this with all our natural resources in Canada, and I am suggesting that we should develop our products in Canada before we allow them to be exported in the raw form. I am sure there are many members of the House who have not realized the potential which we have in Canada.

As I stated previously, we are going to find that instead of having surpluses of our agricultural products, there will be shortages. Probably the price of those commodities will rise to such an extent that it will be both economic and feasible to increase production on lands that have not yet been developed. This is all within the foreseeable future. This is also true of other commodities, and if we tie them in with our agricultural commodities we, the people of Canada, will receive a considerable bonus.

When we in Northern Ontario adopted the concept that wood was not to be exported any longer as pulp in box cars, or as sawn logs, we developed in our area pulp and paper mills, plywood mills, and flake board mills. We are now developing secondary industries based on those mills that are manufacturing such commodities as kleenex, kotex, and plasticized fibre boards of various kinds. We have reached a stage of development in furniture making, but the amount of possible diversification in these fields has been touched on only slightly.

It was always maintained that there was a danger in producing manufactured products at a great distance from the market. I talked to one company manager the other day and I was surprised to find that he was using the flake board product produced by the mill in my community, putting a plasticized surface on it, and shipping that finished product to a large radio and electronic company in the city of New York. He has no difficulty in making a profit, even though he had to ship the product over a great distance. In fact, he found he could not get enough of the fibre board from my area and had to import some from the Kapuskasing-Hearst area. In fact, he even has to buy carload lots of fibre board and ship them from Portland, Oregon, to Ontario.

We could undertake secondary manufacturing if we had a mind to do it. Many people say that if there is a buck to be made the entrepreneur will come into any area and make it. But that is not always true. Certainly, it was a lot cheaper to drive logs down the rivers to Ottawa, to the Gatineau, to the Eddy mill, than it was to build pulp and paper mills in Northern Ontario. I am sure we could have driven logs down from the head of the lakes to some American pulp and paper mill had we wished to do so, and it would have been a fairly cheap operation. But we decided to process the logs at home, and when we made that decision we created the basis for many of the towns and communities in that area. The finding of copper and zinc in the Timmins area offered the people there an opportunity of processing it in that area or of processing it somewhere else. I believe that the American headquarters of the company concerned decided to export the raw ore in concentrate form, and it was only after it was offered assistance by the federal government and threatened with legislation by the Ontario government, that the company decided secondary development of that product was possible in the Timmins area. Thus has taken place there since then.

We, in Canada, control the world's supply of nickel, yet Sudbury is almost totally dependent on the mining of that ore and on the primary refining of it into ingots which are then shipped all over the world. This is also true to a large extent of copper mining in Canada. We are exporting copper in a primarily refined state to most of the countries in the world. We are doing the same with cobalt and many other minerals. I think most hon. members will agree that if we are to end the concentration of secondary industry in urban communities, in probably less than 15 centres in Canada, we will have to spread secondary industry into other parts of the country. One of the best ways to do that would be to place a restriction on base material and raw products leaving their areas of production in an unfinished state.

In northern Ontario and northern Quebec we are producing fodder for mills in Montreal, for mills in Toronto, for mills in Germany, and for mills in the United States. The main employment is to be found in those mills. Take the example of copper coming from the refinery in Noranda. About 4,000 to 5,000 men are employed in the production of that copper, with only about a third of them working at the refinery. The copper goes to plants in Montreal, and I understand that about 10,000 people find employment in the further processing of that copper which comes from Noranda. I am sure that if 10,000 people living in the area around Noranda could get that employment it would result in improved conditions in that area. I also suggest that Montreal would be the better for it, as would other cities such as Toronto, because the mills there have difficulty in disposing of waste material. There is the problem of pollution. There are the problems of transportation for mill employees, of housing for mill employees, and all the other problems associated with major cities. These are not present to the same extent in the areas where primary production takes place.

I do not suppose that this bill will be passed, Mr. Speaker. However, if the Canadian people do not soon give some consideration to developing the resources of this country to as highly a finished state as possible before allowing the exportation of them, we will lose considerable industrial development in Canada, and the country will be the worse for it. In my opinion, Canada is in the beautiful position of being able to get into the Common Market through the agricultural door, and at the same time to take large quantities of finished products as part of the price for directing our agricultural products to that area.

If the government had the foresight to introduce legislation of the very simple nature outlined in this bill, we in Canada would have a much greater development of secondary industry, not entirely confined to the urban centres but spread across the mid-Canada corridor. It is in this area that real wealth of Canada still lies, where the unemployment picture is the darkest, and where secondary industry would be a distinct asset and not a liability. I heartily commend this idea to the members of the House.

• (1720)

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has presented us with a bill which certainly embodies a sentiment well accepted throughout Northern Ontario, namely, that our region should be something more than a producer of raw materials and that we need more secondary industry. We need more secondary industry requiring highly skilled employees because one of the things that disturbs and distresses us in this vast geographic part of Ontario is that we are losing our young people. We are unable to retain them because we do not offer a wide enough variety of highly skilled jobs which will keep them there following their training or attract them back following studies in other parts of the country. In addition, if we had a higher degree of secondary industry in Northern Ontario it would give many of our communities a long-term future instead of the short-term future some of them have at the present time, particularly those communities which are based on the extraction of non-renewable resources.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, how depressing and disturbing it is to see those non-renewable resources running out and to witness the anxiety which goes through a community as the years fall away, when they know that each year brings them one step closer to the time when they will have to go to another mining town and start all over again.

The purpose of the bill introduced by the hon. member is, as indicated in the explanatory note, to ensure that primary resource exports are in the Canadian interest now and in the foreseeable future, and that opportunities for further processing in Canada are not overlooked. This sentiment is fine and no doubt the hon. member will receive the applause which he is seeking back home. That we should have a more effective resource upgrading policy there can be no doubt, but Bill C-15 has a number of weaknesses which I do not think commend it as a serious proposal.

One of the major defects of Bill C-15 is that it does not sufficiently define for us a "primary product". First, it is not clear whether the bill is intended to apply only to agricultural products or to mineral, forest and fishery products as well. The hon. member elaborated on this in his speech, but it is not in the bill. The title of the bill refers to the "growth and produce of Canada" while the explanatory note refers to "basic and primary resources". If the bill is intended to apply to the products of all resource industries, then I think there are a number of observations that can be made. The bill could presumably apply to some products which are already subject to government regulation for export such as oil, natural gas and uranium ores which are now so governed.

It may be appropriate to ask whether Bill C-15 would apply to livestock or only to feed grains and forage crops. Would it apply to pelletized iron or only iron ore, to other mineral concentrates or only to mineral ores in their most crude form? Would it apply to crude forms of minerals obtained as a byproduct in the processing of other ores? In the case of forest products, is it intended that Bill C-15 apply to wood chips and pulp or only to logs? The hon. member for Timiskaming was quite correct in pointing out that in Northern Ontario the export of pulp logs is prohibited by provincial law and he spoke extremely well of the benefits of that prohibition. We all know that it fostered a number of mills along the north shore of Lake Superior and that gives testimony to the kind of action that the hon. member is suggesting.

The nature of the problem that the hon. member is seeking to solve concerns many Canadians, and I do not think we should let it pass without saying that it concerns the government as well. The government is well aware of the desirability of obtaining the optimum benefits from the production of primary materials in Canada, such as minerals. I might say, and perhaps this may be thought of as a commercial, that Canada is fortunate in having a substantial stock of deposits of ore which are either in production or proven. Northern Ontario particularly is a region of Canada which is richly blessed by having large areas of potential mineral-bearing lands. There is so much, particularly iron ore, that it has lulled some people into thinking that the reserves are so vast as to be practically inexhaustible. This is a dangerous dream because such is not the case. We know from studies related to resource depletion that these reserves are not inexhaustible.

Many people at the present time fear that these ores are being sold much too cheaply. As time goes on they are going to become more and more valuable, and more and more expensive to buy. Although many people in Northern Ontario want to see a rapid development of those resource areas, there is something to be said for conservation, leaving something to benefit those who will follow us and perhaps benefit them in a much more extensive way than is the case now.

It is right to suggest, as the hon. member has, that there must be more processing and manufacturing in Canada. We do want more processing, more manufacturing, to do more with this raw material and to reap the benefits. If the hon. member believes that, surely he is telling us in his own way that he is going to support those measures which the government will shortly introduce designed to stimulate the growth of manufacturing in Canada so that more and more raw materials can be processed and exported in a finished form. This is going to result in higher profits, more jobs, improved technology and, generally, a more buoyant and vigorous economy for Canadians. If the hon. member is saying that he is going to support those measures designed to give the manufacturing and processing industries of Canada a boost, then I take delight in the ray of light that has suddenly been cast upon him. That is welcome news from the hon. member for Timiskaming, which he has communicated to the House.

At the present time and probably in the immediate future, the rate of production of minerals in Canada is in excess of Canadian requirements. Those minerals which are produced in excess of our requirements are sold abroad as exports. The hon. member for Timiskaming would have us introduce legislation to limit or restrict that movement of minerals. Of course, I do not totally disagree with him, but I have a few reservations. I have reservations when I think of those communities now dependent on mining; I have reservations when I think of those small Northern Ontario communities which know that they are situated near vast mineral deposits and have looked forward to the day when the deposits will be developed and some benefits will accrue to them.

Rather than specifically restrict exports, I would favour policies which would permit a much greater use of those excess minerals which are now on hand. Two points should be borne in mind with respect to the sale of minerals abroad. First, the employment and revenue derived from the export of minerals is an important element in sustaining the present level of the Canadian economy. I am aware that this is an element often played down by spokesmen in Canada; nevertheless, it is an important element in sustaining our economy. Any precipitous action to reduce the export of minerals would indeed have an unfortunate effect on employment in this country, not only in the mining industry but in industries which supply materials, machinery and equipment for mining and sectors which process minerals into higher value products.

• (1730)

The second point concerns the price at which our minerals are sold. This price is determined by international market conditions and by competition. We do not decide what price we will receive; this is decided by the supply available on the international market. We always endeavour, of course, to get the best possible price for the minerals we export. It is clear that any immediate change in the level of export of minerals would produce undesirable results for Canada. It would certainly produce undesirable results in northern Ontario, an area which the hon. member for Timiskaming and I represent. It is equally clear that in the long term, the adequacy of supply for Canada's own requirements is a matter of the greatest importance. The hon. member for Timiskaming has recognized the potential dislocation which might be inherent in any immediate action to control the rate or price of minerals exported. This is evident from his inclusion of paragraph (c) of clause 3 of the proposed bill, where it is to be determined that——upon the balance of convenience and necessity, the exportation is in the public interest.

He has, of course, quite properly taken that matter into account. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for introducing this bill. He has brought before us for debate a very legitimate concern. It is a concern not only of individual Canadians but, more specifically, of many developing regions of this country. There is no doubt about the concern expressed in the hon. member's bill, but in my view there is doubt with regard to the specifics of the modus operandi which he proposed. While it is right that we should debate the bill I do not think it is one we could properly vote for because of the many deficiencies in its details.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will begin where the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) left off. I agree completely that this bill has a great many weaknesses and shortcomings that would preclude our giving it support, although there is no question of the validity of the motivation which caused the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to introduce it.

Certainly, the question of our natural resources and the use we make of them is fundamental to the vitality of Canada now and in the future. We as parliamentarians must be vitally concerned about this question. We cannot, and should not, put up with a policy or procedure that is tantamount to direct exploitation with no consideration for maximizing the national good or for future prospects. It is questionable what the limits are, but there are limits to the natural resources that Canada has now, thank goodness, in apparently abundant supply. We must be aware of these limits.

The hon. member for Timiskaming quite accurately implied in his speech that the economy of Canada is in a sense distorted in structure from the economy of most other developed nations. We have in our economy a very large primary sector, to which a great deal of our wealth and our standard of living is attributable. We have a well developed, substantial tertiary sector of our economy, the service industries.

When it comes to the question of secondary industry, the hon. member is correct; we are in a pathetically weak situation. However, I differ radically from the hon. member for Timiskaming in how we reached this situation and what the cure is. The important question is, how can we develop a larger secondary or manufacturing component in our economy, since it is universally recognized that this is the component which will generate the jobs we need right now and will need more of in the future? Our apparently weak secondary manufacturing component was not caused by our export policies with regard to primary materials. There is absolutely no basis for assuming that if we cut off the export of raw materials, our secondary manufacturing industry would automatically grow. It is not true that a large primary industry is the main cause of a small secondary industry. The reason Canada has a small secondary component in its total economy is wholly and directly attributable to Canadian government policies. In this regard I point to members across the way.

For the past four years under the Trudeau government, the position of secondary manufacturing in Canada, in terms of number of jobs, profits, growth and so on, has deteriorated drastically. This is a direct result of economic policies introduced by the Trudeau government. It is not the result of having a healthy primary industry. If we are to encourage the growth of secondary manufacturing—and I hope there is unanimity in the House for doing so—we must address ourselves to the fundamental reason for our being in this state, namely, the economic policies of this government. We must provide, and this word may cause some difficulty for the hon. member for Timiskaming, incentives to Canadians in the way of taxation policies, fiscal policies; and we must aggressively seek export markets for our manufactured goods.

We should provide incentives in the way of economic policies, as outlined by my colleagues, specifically the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) during the budget debate. This would do more for promoting the growth of secondary industry in Canada than any negative policy of limiting the export of our natural resources. As the hon. member for Thunder Bay pointed out, implementation of this bill at this time would directly result in a great deal more unemployment and economic hardship. For that reason alone it should be defeated, as I am sure it will. Anyone who looks at this approach in a careful, unbiased manner will see that it is totally negative and totally at odds with the desires and abilities of the Canadian people. As I have stated, we should implement aggressive policies to expand our manufacturing and supportive industries. The hon. member for Timiskaming indicated that he expected Canada to benefit through increased trade with the Common Market in the near future. I sincerely hope he is correct, but I question how this expansion will be achieved by government action which is basically out of our hands.

What worries me about Canada's long-term trading prospects is that we may become increasingly isolated as a result of the policies of a protectionist United States and a protectionist European Common Market, while the Pacific market is increasingly taken over by the Japanese with very little competition from ourselves. I do not think we can succeed in breaking down these barriers by adopting a policy of not exporting our primary products. This will do no good because there are alternative sources of supply. We are blessed by a bountiful supply of natural resources, thank goodness, but this does not mean we have a corner on the world market—not by a long shot.

The hon. member for Timiskaming told us a genuine success story about the processing of wood products in northern Ontario. He implied that since certain methods worked in this case, they would work in other cases where raw materials are abundant. For instance, he told us that because of the tremendous variety of products which could be made from oil, we should require that many more of these products be manufactured in Canada. But the analogy does not hold; I feel I must repudiate the arguments put forward by the hon. member. He was correct in saying that an enormous variety of products can be produced from the raw material, but if they were all produced here, delivering them to the markets which required them would be a task of enormous complexity.

Then there is the question of scale of production. Like it or not, our domestic market is limited. This situation has good points and bad points. It means there is more of Canada for each Canadian to enjoy—and I like that. It also means there is a smaller market, and the unit cost of producing goods is greater. When one talks about petrochemical products, scale is everything. It is simply not economically feasible to require that all petroleum products which end up as consumer products should be processed to consumer product level within Canada. The volume of production required in the processing plant in order to bring the product within the economic reach of the consumer is simply too great.

Our fundamental criterion, when we consider the question of our raw material resources and the extent to which we should limit their export and require reserves to be kept for the use of future generations, must be the maximization of the national good. Licensing provisions governing the export of oil came into effect on March 1, so this bill is redundant in this respect. Two extreme positions could be taken. For example, we could allow export without restriction. This would be irresponsible, and nobody has advocated such a course: I include most of the people engaged in the oil industry in Calgary. The other extreme point of view is that no exports should be allowed. Members of the NDP have expressed themselves in favour of such a stand. Their justification is that figures produced by the National Energy Board indicate that Canada has proven continental reserves sufficient to last for about 15 years. The thinking goes that if we have only 15 years' supply left, we should halt exports and keep the oil for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this would guarantee that in 15 years we would run out of oil. If we were to stop all exports it would mean that all exploration, all drilling activities, all the industry's activities in Alberta would come to an end, incidentally throwing thousands and thousands of Albertans out of work, not to mention the fact that the government of Alberta would lose millions of dollars in revenue. The fact is that such action would prevent the discovery of the millions of barrels of oil which still exist somewhere in Alberta but which have to be discovered through exploration programs.

If, instead, we adopt a reasonable policy of allowing exports while protecting Canada's needs, this will guarantee the continuance of an exploration program which will ensure that reserves will continue to build up, and at the end of 15 years we shall be able to rely, in terms of reserves, upon at least as much as we are counting on today. It is an on-going process. It cannot be viewed in the simplistic manner some have adopted. I hope the government appreciates all these factors and will take them into account when implementing the regulations which accompany the licensing procedure.

In conclusion, let me say that the motivation of the hon. member in introducing this bill is highly commendable. I agree we must conserve our resources for the benefit of future generations, and prevent irresponsible exploitation. We must also do something about the position of secondary industry in this country if we are to cure our unemployment problem. I agree with the hon. member in this regard. However, I believe that to limit the export of primary products by means of a tribunal, without taking account of positive factors, is a wrong-headed approach and one which will simply create more unemployment and weaken the primary sector of our economy. I, for one, cannot see how weakening the primary sector can do anything to advance the secondary sector. I hesitate to conclude on a partisan note, but what we need is Progressive Conservative policy.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) says he is hesitant about concluding on a partisan note. I am happy he did. I am happy that at least one member on that side of the House will support the corporate tax measures sponsored by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

• (1750)

The hon. member said we should have more positive and aggressive policies that would encourage secondary manufacturing in Canada. The budget measures of May, 1972, introduced by the Minister of Finance do exactly that, and I am happy to see that the hon. member for Calgary Centre will support those measures. I hope they will be passed by the House, since they are necessary for the economic well-being of Canadians in the future.

Mr. Andre: When will they come before the House?

Mr. Breau: They will come in due course, and I am happy that the hon. member will support them. His colleague from Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) will also support them in view of their importance to manufacturing, not only in his constituency but in his province. The hon. member mentioned that in the last four years secondary manufacturing industry in Canada has deteriorated. I notice he used the word "détérioré" and did not say there was "less" manufacturing. I suppose he wants to be on safe ground. I am sure he is an honest member and he would not say things that were not accurate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All members are honest.

Mr. Breau: That is right. So I do not want to impute motives. But he used the word "détérioré"—I have difficulty saying it in English—rather than saying it had diminished. I do not think it is a fact there has been less manufacturing in Canada in the last four years. I do not have the figures in front of me—

Mr. Andre: I have.

Mr. Breau: Then I should like to see them. I have figures in my files prepared by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that prove the contrary, that in fact Canada has improved its manufacturing position a great deal. The hon. member spoke about the Liberal government's record. Let me remind him it was this government that brought in the corporate tax measures, which I hope his party will support. Obviously he will support them because he wants strong secondary industry. It is the Liberal party that brought in the Regional Development Incentives Act which is applicable only to the manufacturing and processing industries. This measure was brought in in 1969 by the then minister of regional economic expansion for the purpose of encouraging strong secondary industry in slow growth areas of Canada. As a matter of fact, in the hon. member's own wealthy province this act has benefited many people by creating long-term manufacturing jobs.

So I cannot accept the fact that secondary industry has been worse off since the Liberal government took office four and a half years ago. Neither can I accept the fact that we do not have aggressive policies. My difficulty with the Progressive Conservative policies which were referred to by the hon. member is that I cannot find out what they are, in many instances. Perhaps if we saw them we might support them; you never know. Certainly I should like to see some clearcut policies emanate from that party. Last night on the national news I heard the leader of that party speak about the corporate tax measures, and again he tried to confuse the issue. He tried to capitalize on the sentiment that exists in this country against corporate tax cuts. We must realize that some people in this country see no benefit in these tax cuts. I do not agree with these people. But last night the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) tried to fan those sentiments by saying the measures were not enough to meet the problem.

What the hon. gentleman wants to do is to extend them to the service industries and primary resource industries, which I think is totally illogical if we are to develop a strong secondary manufacturing industry that can compete with other countries. He mentioned the protectionist attitudes of the EEC and, I will not say the protectionist attitudes of the United States but certainly the different attitudes in the United States from what we have witnessed in the past.

I think this government has done a great deal to encourage secondary manufacturing. As a matter of fact, we have done so well that the government of the United States is very concerned about it. It is so concerned that it is trying to divert production from Canada to the United States. President Nixon expressed concern in a recent report to Congress about the matter. So there is no question that we have done very well out of the auto pact and in other ways.

May I now deal with the bill before us. Secondary manufacturing is referred to in the bill, and I have to deal with it since the hon. member raised it. I would also commend the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) for having brought the bill forward, because it is certainly a subject that interests me. While the export of these products is not prohibited, I think that management of the resource is of greater importance. In practically all cases, non-renewable resources are in the hands of the province. For example, in my own province too many minerals and other resources are being exported in a raw state without any processing. This is the case with minerals in my constituency in northeastern New Brunswick.

As the result of action taken by the very active Robichaud government of New Brunswick some time ago, these mines were developed. The government of the day forced the company to build a smelter to process the minerals. The company did so, even through it said it would not make a profit until 1975, I believe. Nevertheless, the government said that was tough; they had to build it anyway. I believe that 300 to 400 people work at this smelter. The only problem now is that there is a Conservative government in New Brunswick that is not ready to follow the progressive policies of the previous Liberal government; as a result, the province is now exporting some raw minerals.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Breau: It is a shame. Some hon. members might think it is a joke, but it is very important to an area such as northeastern New Brunswick which has a high level of unemployment. Raw minerals should not be exported, especially in a case such as this. Even if the hon. member said that export controls were negative, I would not agree with his rationale. I am sure he will admit that an extracting operation must be viable, and to be viable there must be a certain volume of extraction. If the company is forced to process the minerals, they would not be able to close down because of their investment in processing plant and equipment.

Mr. Andre: So you twist their arm?

Mr. Breau: The Liberal government twists the arm of business in this country so that the people can benefit. If the present government of New Brunswick would do that, the company would have to keep the mine open and continue to process the raw material in my riding, which perhaps would create a thousand new jobs in the area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Foreign Investment Review

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned this debate for private members' hour I was suggesting that Canada, perhaps more than any other country in the western industrialized world, is dominated and controlled by foreign economic concerns, mainly foreign-based multinational corporations. As a result, we find ourselves in the position of being a net exporter of jobs and wealth as well as political, economic and, to some extent, military decisions. We also find we are culturally assimilated as part of the North American continent. This also adds to the problems of national unity, regional disparity, unemployment and inflation.

I suggest that we in this country are well aware of these problems having had two reports dealing with foreign ownership, the Watkins report and the Grey report, as well as a third report by the external affairs committee saying about the same thing as the other two. At five o'clock, before I was interrupted, I had suggested that when we are discussing foreign ownership it should be made clear, in answer to some Conservative speakers during this debate and the debate last year, that we are not being anti-American; we are being very much pro-Canadian.

We in this party have talked about repatriating the Canadian economy and putting more Canadians in control of our own destiny. If I were the head of a United States multinational corporation, I would be doing the same thing they are doing: I would locate and invest in Canada. I do not blame the heads of U.S. corporations, but I do blame Canadian governments which during the past 20 or 30 years have allowed this type of activity in Canada without regulation or rule and without any guidelines for the protection of Canadian people. The situation is entirely our own fault.

Other countries have set down guidelines and regulations. The one which comes to mind first is Mexico, whose President addressed this chamber last Friday. Sweden set down guidelines in 1935. Norway and other countries have done the same. Indeed, in the United States at one time there was a great deal of foreign ownership and foreign capital, but it was able to develop its own economy which is now extremely viable. After the Second World War, Germany and Japan were practically destroyed, at least many sectors of their economies were, but they developed an industrial strategy and today are viable and forging ahead rapidly. We must do the same thing here in Canada. We must repatriate our economy and develop an industrial strategy that will start this country moving economically again.

In 1958, a Canadian academic writing in a Canadian magazine said:

> Shall we suffer passively our situation and economic domination? . . . It could be better to be annexed outright by the United States than be exploited without limits.

That academic is fairly well known here: his name is Pierre Elliott Trudeau, and he wrote those words in Cité-Libre in 1958. Last year when the government brought forth its foreign ownership bill, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Liberal government betrayed those words: they produced a foreign takeover bill which covered only 5 per cent, 10 per cent or 15 per cent, at the most, of foreign activity in the economy of our country.

That bill was stalled in the House and our party was able to kill it.

The bill itself was a big zero and an absolute farce. If it had passed, I suggest it would have had the effect of creating an economic eunuch in a bordello of foreign-based, multinational corporations. In other words, it would have been absolutely useless and would have done very little to reverse or even hold back the trend toward foreign domination of our economy. The members of this party are proud to have killed that bill and forced the government to come to us with the improved legislation we are debating today.

The bill now before us is one result of the October 30 election which returned a minority government to parliament. The government could not ignore the wishes of the people, as it did last year. Therefore, it expanded the bill to take in not only takeovers but also the screening of new investment in Canada and, in addition, the screening of the expansion of existing firms in new or unrelated areas. I suggest this goes a considerable distance from the bill that was previously debated.

I have mixed feelings about the bill. I am not perfectly happy with it. I do not suggest it will solve all our problems. Much of the effect of the bill will be determined by whether it will be administered by people who are really determined to do something about Canadian ownership or whether it will be administered by the people like those who administer the CDC, which has become a farce and nothing but another investment or mutual fund. So much of the impact of this legislation will depend upon how it is administered and who it is administered by, because many of the decisions these people will make will be very subjective. They will have a tremendous amount of discretionary power.

If the bill is well administered, it could go a considerable distance toward regulating, in the future, the incidence of foreign ownership in our community. For that reason I suggest this House should deal with the bill on second reading and refer it to the committee, at which point we will try to move several amendments. As the minister himself has said, this is only one step in the area of foreign ownership of our economy. The bill is not retroactive; it will not buy back the Canadian economy that is now in foreign hands. It does not really establish priorities concerning which industry or sector is important. It cannot set provincial priorities. It can only be part of an industrial economic strategy for Canada. That is the context in which we must treat the bill which is before us.

As I said a minute ago, our party feels this bill will go part of the way and that we should move several amendments. I think there are five or six which are very important and which I should like the minister to think about seriously. I would also hope members of the House would think about them seriously. The bill covers three areas: takeovers, new investments and expansion of existing firms into unrelated or new areas.

I suggest, as many others have already suggested in newspapers such as the Toronto Star, that this House should look at a fourth area very seriously, that is, the expansion of existing firms in the same area of production. I realize, after listening to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), that we would have to word an amendment in such a way that we would not be interfering with a small firm wishing to expand its plant a little and add 10 or 15 jobs. I believe we could come to a consensus on that so that a large firm, for example, which is doubling in size could be screened. This is a large part of foreign ownership activity in our economy, and if we do not add this sector to the bill we will be missing a considerable degree of economic expansion in our country by foreign concerns. Again, we can elaborate on that question at the committee stage and move amendments.

The second area which I believe must be broadened considerably involves the factors to be screened or taken into consideration by the screening agency as outlined in the bill. Again, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville said that many of these factors are covered in the first part of the bill, but I suggest, with great respect, that they are vague. I think some of these factors should be stipulated in the bill. I think there should be a clause in respect of screening imported parts and components to see whether alternative sources exist in Canada and, if not, whether they could be developed here. I think this is one area in which the Canadian economy has not been as active as it could be. Again, parts and components are labour-intensive and I believe this should be a natural part of the screening mechanism as outlined in the bill.

The second addition in respect of factors to be screened, I suggest, would be the export of raw materials from our country, to determine whether some of the processing, developing, packaging and manufacturing could take place prior to export. This would seem to be a very important point to stress. This country is an exporter or raw materials and unfinished products, and an importer of finished goods and manufactured products. I remember very well the former member for Duvernay, Mr. Kierans, speaking in this House about a year ago on this very point of placing more emphasis on manufacturing and processing. At that time he said that for every $100 invested in resource development or the extraction industries, we provided only about $6.50 worth of wages; but that for every dollar invested in manufacturing we could provide about $30 or $35 worth of wages.

When we have such a heavy emphasis on the resource industry in this country, what we are doing is exporting jobs. If we export $100 worth of raw materials to the United States, we in turn import $100 worth of manufactured goods and probably export $25 or $30 worth of wages in the process. I suggest the minister consider this as the second area which should be added to the factors taken into consideration by the screening agency.

The third factor which should be taken into consideration would involve the screening of any export restrictions which may exist by agreement or, indeed, export restrictions which may exist in practice which prevent the expansion of export markets for this country. There are many export agreements which could be looked at which are established by the government through tariffs, and so on. Even more important, however, is the practice of multinational corporations which develop a product in one country and another in Canada.

A third area which I believe should be added to the bill—this perhaps will be more controversial for some members of the House—is the prohibition in certain areas of our economy of any new equity investment that would place effective control in the hands of a foreign individual or foreign concern. I suggest areas which should be considered include mineral resources, energy, water and power. I think all these things, and perhaps a few others, are vital to the future development of the Canadian economy. I feel these are areas in which there should be massive public ownership and certainly public control, because the resources are here for the Canadian people and not here for any profiteering by foreigners or multinational corporations based outside this country. That is another factor we will have to study.

There are a number of other items which I hope the minister and members of this House will consider. One is the provision of more information on the activities of the screening agency. There should be a regular report to the House within two or three weeks after a decision is made, whether it be a positive or a negative decision. There should be an amendment respecting fines as outlined in the bill. There should be a major amendment as to when this act shall come into effect. As it is now spelled out, the only part which comes into effect after royal assent is that which concerns takeovers. The other two portions of the act come into effect upon proclamation.

What does this mean? It may mean we will wait five months, six months, a year, two or three years before the act takes effect. The government may delay it indefinitely for five or six years. That is something I do not want to happen. I believe the act should take effect after royal assent providing, of course 50 or 60 days for the drafting of the regulations. I think parliament should make that decision and should be supreme, rather than the minister, the cabinet or the government.

There are a number of other amendments which I believe should be considered by this House. There is the one outlined by my leader yesterday concerning the definition of an eligible or non-eligible person. I believe we should revert to the definition in the legislation of last year, instead of selling out to some of the Conservative members, by increasing the number of non-eligible persons. More legislation is needed. I realize many other members have said the same thing. I hope that we will introduce very soon more bills to reverse the trend in this country toward foreign domination of our economy.

All one need do to recognize the problem is to look at a few of the statistics. We find that 57 per cent of our manufacturing, and 99.9 per cent of our petroleum and coal industries are in the hands of foreign concerns. In the extraction industries as a whole, in 1969 70.6 per cent was in the hands of foreign concerns. We lose jobs, we lose wealth and we lose some of the power to make important political and economic decisions for this country.

I should like to dwell for a few minutes on some of the consequences of foreign ownership in Canada and suggest five or six steps that I believe parliament and this government should be taking. First of all, in this situation we lose jobs and we lose the ability to plan our country industrially and economically. I have referred already to the fact that we export raw materials and import manufactured goods and thereby lose jobs. We should be doing more processing in this country and more manufacturing. We should keep the jobs right here at home for Canadians. We should also be doing more specializing in our economy. Canadians do not specialize in anything. We are not like the Germans, or the Japanese in particular who since the Second World War have specialized in the electronics industry, in automobile manufacturing and in other industries that are labour-intensive.

This is what Canada should be doing. One way of doing it is by regaining control of our economy. Unless we do this, we will continue losing jobs in Canada because the parent company has to close a plant here, because of more and more protectionism in the United States, and because world competition for trade is becoming tougher. This is why we must repatriate our economy.

I remember very well two or three examples of our losing jobs directly because we have branch plants in this country. Last year, when the DISC plan was introduced by President Nixon of the United States, I remember very well an article in the paper saying that a branch plant of a U.S. corporation in Ontario that was producing toboggans was closing down, while the parent company in California was expanding because of trade restrictions here and incentives in the DISC plan for expansion of the U.S. economy. This was a direct transfer of jobs from the toboggan factory in Ontario to the toboggan factory in California.

There is an example in my own riding where there is the largest potash mine if the world, the International minerals Company of New Mexico. It is at Esterhazy. As we all know, there has been an oversupply of potash in the world and there is now more competition among the suppliers. What has happened? The mine must cut back on its production. It has two plants, one in New Mexico and one in Saskatchewan. In New Mexico they cut back to 90 per cent capacity, and in Saskatchewan to less than 50 per cent capacity; so it is we in Saskatchewan who lost jobs. If the mine had been Canadian owned, perhaps we would not have had to cut back to 50 per cent capacity and we would have had more jobs for Canadians.

There are examples of this in the field of research and development. Naturally, our scientists, our young people and our technicians are going abroad to where the parent plant is located, rather than doing research and development in one of the branch plants in our country. This situation could be changed if we had stronger legislation concerning foreign ownership in our country.

The second point I want to mention regarding the consequences of foreign ownership is that we are now losing more, in terms of exporting wealth and dollars, than we are gaining in new investment in Canada. I believe two years ago, or perhaps it was last year, the U.S. department of commerce issued a report saying that 94 per cent of the money invested by foreign and American-based corporations in Canada was Canadian money—in other words, 94 per cent of the funds that they invested in our economy was Canadian money—and only 6 per cent consisted of new funds that came in from the United States or elsewhere.

Therefore, what the corporations are doing is reinvesting their own profits, their own dividends, or they borrow money from Canadian banks and financial institutions and invest it for themselves in our country. They are taking your savings and mine, Mr. Speaker, and investing them to expand their enterprises in our country. I think some of these funds could be put to use by Canadian companies or through more public ownership of our economy, and more government leadership. We would have a much better economy as a result.

The other fact that came to my attention the other day was that between 1960 and 1969 we had in this country $5.5 billion worth of investment from the United States. Meanwhile, we paid out of this country to financial concern in the United States in terms of dividends, profits, interest rates, royalties, fees, and so on, $8 billion. We paid out $2.5 billion more to U.S. companies and concerns than came back in terms of new investment from the United States. I think it is ample evidence that something is wrong when we export more money and more jobs than are coming into our country.

Some people have said that our party is being hypocritical, that indeed the NDP governments themselves go to the United States to borrow foreign funds. That is true; some of our governments have. But the point I want to make is that there is a real difference between loan capital and equity capital, in terms of investment. I remember that when the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was premier of Saskatchewan, the province developed the Saskatchewan Power Corporation which is publicly owned. If I am not mistaken, millions of dollars for the development of the corporation were borrowed in the U.S. money market. This was not equity investment; it was debt capital which is being repaid by the people of Saskatchewan. They have ownership and control of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation.

That is the type of thing we should be doing when it comes to foreign investment in our country. Every country in the world has a degree of foreign investment, but most countries have debt or loan capital rather than equity capital. It is as if you pay off a mortgage on a house and eventually own it. You certainly have control over the decisions that have to be made. Now I see that the Power Corporation in our province is making several million dollars a year in profit besides providing the Saskatchewan people with some of the lowest power rates in the Dominion of Canada. I think this is the direction in which we must go. This corporation is run on its own; it is not run out of the tax revenues of the province. It is a viable and profitable corporation.

I suggest that another source of revenue for Canadian investment would be some of the funds that are now invested by Canadians in other countries. Canada itself is somewhat imperialistic in economic terms. If you go down to Latin America, or countries such as Trinidad, Tobago and Jamaica, you see a high incidence of Canadian ownership and investment. I remember being in Jamaica two years ago, picking up a newspaper and seeing a headline reading "Jamaicanize the economy. Get rid of Canadian ownership." I remember being in Britain, standing on a street corner and seeing two or three Canadian-based multinational corporations.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Indeed, a great amount of money is going out of this country into other countries. Much of this money could be channelled into the development of Canada. We could also make better use of the Canadian Development Corporation, but that is an argument I will not get into tonight. We should also do more to control Canadian chartered banks, finance companies and insurance companies and use their huge pools of capital to develop our country.

• (2030)

One hon. member earlier in this debate said that the Canadian chartered banks have assets of $63 billion in this country and in other countries around the world, and that the Canadian insurance companies have $117 billion in assets in Canada and elsewhere around the world. Much of this huge source of capital could be put to work right here in Canada in order to help the country develop and control its own economy.

I believe that we have lost a certain degree of our political autonomy. There have been times when a degree of foreign ownership has affected political decisions in this country. We can recall the time when we were not allowed to sell flour to Cuba and trucks to China, thanks largely to the fact that the headquarters of certain companies were in the United States. A few years ago there was the question of potash sales from my province to China. I am informed that American ownership barred that sale as well. Foreign ownership has an impact on the decision-making process in this country. These are some of the reasons why I and the people in my party are very concerned about foreign ownership in Canada. I believe this bill will go part way to remedy some of these problems, if it is properly administered.

In the few minutes remaining to me I would like to outline a number of other things that the government should be doing. First, Mr. Speaker, there should be investment controls regarding foreign ownership. Most other countries in the world have them—countries such as Mexico, Japan, the United Kingdom, France, Denmark and Sweden. In some areas they entirely prohibit foreign investment, and in others they set a certain limit on the degree of foreign investment allowed in a particular industry. Canada should be doing the same thing. We should have regulations whereby the majority on the boards of directors must be composed of Canadians, and whereby the management of companies must be by residents of this country. These are some of the basics, or preliminaries that this country should have taken action on years ago in terms of controlling our economy.

I also believe—and this is where some of the Conservatives will disagree with me—that there should be a great deal more public ownership of our economy in key areas such as resources, financial institutions, transportation and public utilities. These are some of the basics in our economy that should be owned and controlled by the people of Canada. These areas should not be exploited by others, and our people should not be exploited when they use the services provided. I believe that Bell telephone should be owned by the people of Canada because it provides a service. Organizations like Bell telephone should be prevented from exploiting the people of this country.

I believe we must reform the taxation system. Again I go back to the remarks of Eric Kierans when he was a member of this House, talking about the horrendous loopholes of which some of the corporate welfare bums in the extraction industries take advantage. I have before me some figures that were prepared about a year ago by the provincial department of finance in Manitoba. They show how the extraction industries take advantage of tax loopholes. They show the proportion of profits on which companies have paid taxes during the last ten years.

From these statistics we find that retail merchants pay taxes on about 90 per cent of their profits. Like workers and farmers, they are taxed on almost everything they make. Wholesalers pay taxes on 87 per cent of their profits. The construction industry pays taxes on 77 per cent of its profits. Manufacturing industries pay taxes on about 65 per cent of their profits. Then we get down to the mining companies, which paid taxes on only about 13 per cent of their profits in the last ten years. The gas and oil companies paid taxes on only about 5.7 per cent of their profits in the same period. From these statistics one can see the tremendous incentive there is for capital to go into the extraction industries, into mining resources and the development of gas and oil resources. All these industries are capital-intensive. They do not provide many jobs for Canadian people and they do not help to develop our country. The taxation system should be rearranged so that the extraction industries engaged in the development of oil, gas and mining would have to pay much higher taxes. This would encourage more funds to go into the service industries and into manufacturing.

I believe there should be a tax on the export of raw materials from Canada to the United States and from Canada to any other country. There should be more coordination between the provinces and Ottawa regarding the development and processing of raw materials in our country. Another suggestion I would like to make to the government—again, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville shrugged this aside earlier today—is that we use some of our foreign exchange reserves in order to buy back from foreign concerns some of the key areas that will be important to the development of Canada in the future. If I am not mistaken, we have about $5 billion in American currency and gold sitting in the vaults of the Bank of Canada. A part of this, say $2 billion, $3 billion or more, could be earmarked to buy back part of our economy.

Another suggestion the government should take seriously is that it should cease giving government grants and aid to foreign corporations in Canada. One of the Conservative members referred to this question earlier today. The government hands out millions of dollars of tax concessions, depletion allowances and grants to foreign companies in Canada each year, to the detriment of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people. I would like to quote a few statistics to show the seriousness of this problem. We find that since the inception of the DREE program, over 50 per cent of the grants made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have gone to foreign companies. We find a large proportion of the activity of the Canada Development Corporation devoted to assisting huge, foreign, multinational corporations. We find that under the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, known as IRDIA, 39 per cent of the grants have gone to foreign companies. Under the advancement of industrial technology program, known as PAIT, 45 per cent of the grants have gone to foreign firms and foreign companies. Under the defence industry productivity program, 86 per cent of the grants have gone to foreign companies and foreign concerns. This type of activity should stop: we should cease to give grants and handouts to foreign-based companies.

There is another area on which I want to comment briefly, that is, the field of culture. I believe this is very important in terms of developing a country that is truly Canadian. We have had some leadership from the government of Canada, in terms of Canadian content in broadcasting and regulations specifying 80 per cent or more Canadian ownership of radio and television. Measures like this can be taken in other areas of importance, both in the cultural and the economic fields.

I believe that the book publishing industry is one that should be totally controlled by Canadians. There should be more encouragement given to Canadian writers, artists and magazine publishers. This is the area in which the cultural identity of a country is developed. It is an area that is very important to the development of students and young people. I remember as a child in elementary school that I knew more about Lincoln and Jefferson than I knew about former prime ministers of Canada such as Macdonald and Laurier. I remember students finding American history more exciting, more dramatic than the dull Canadian history they had to memorize for examinations. A lot of this could be changed if we put more emphasis on areas such as book publishing and writing. In this way we could develop a Canadian society with a distinct culture separate from that of the United States.

Earlier today I mentioned that French Canada is a great exception in this respect. There they have their own language, their own culture, their own writers, their own singers, performers and artists. All of this is a tremendous credit to Canada and to French Canadians. There are many other areas in the social and cultural fields that Canada should act on soon. Today in the House a question was asked by an hon. member about the degree of foreign ownership of hockey teams in the National Hockey League and the WHA. That is another area being exploited by big American business to the detriment of Canadian hockey players and Canadian hockey in general.

• (2040)

I should like to conclude by saying that if we act positively, Canada will be much better off in terms of jobs provided, in terms of planning our economy and the country, and in terms of the wealth we will keep in Canada. We have the funds to develop this country. Any foreign investment that comes in should be debt or loan capital, so that we control all facets of our economy and develop it for the benefit of this country. Only then will we be able to tackle some of the problems of national unity and regional disparity. Only then will we be able to face the problems of unemployment and inflation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker).

Foreign Investment Review

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this subject is one of great importance to all Canadians. It has been talked about for 50 years or more in successive Canadian parliaments. I am very grateful to the various associations and individuals who is the last few years have generated some public opinion to the extent that the government of the day has now produced what has been called a first step toward what I hope will be the eventual ownership of our own country and political destiny.

I do not propose to quote statistics tonight, Mr. Speaker; we all know them. I have been interested in this matter for many years and I know there have been cries of alarm in the past about the statistics that have been given. I have here an article from Maclean's magazine of 1962. At that time we were given 40 months to make or break Canada. The 40 months are up, another 40 months have passed and we are still here. I do not think we are ever going to have as much time again to make this great national decision that we must make.

I should like to congratulate the minister and the government who have faced this matter and brought it before parliament. For the last 50 or 60 years, successive governments of all political stripes have turned their backs on this subject. I am very pleased to support a government that has brought in this measure, although in my opinion it could be strengthened and made more purposeful and it should not be too long before some of the action provided in the legislation is taken.

Many good speeches have been made on the subject in this House, and there has been a great deal of reference to the visit of the President of Mexico. I do not know whether it was coincidental or by design that on the very day this bill was presented for second reading, the President of that great and courageous country gave us some good advice about the subject we are tackling now.

In a few days it will be the seventh anniversary of one of my speeches in the House on this very subject. I thought I could do no better than refresh my memory and perhaps the memory of some members who were in the House at that time. I am sure this is an emotional issue if we are to make the national decision that must be made. The pros and cons on both sides of the subject have some emotional content, and I do not think we are ever going to arrive at a national consensus if the decision is made only on the basis of emotion. There are many more practical things to say.

I see my friend the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) wishes to rise on a point of order. Or does he just wish me to carry on, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lundrigan: Make a new speech; don't read the old one.

Mr. Walker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will enjoy this because he is a very intelligent person and usually listens very carefully to anything said from this side of the House. Just to show how ageless and yet how timely this whole subject is, I should like to refer to the speech I made in 1966. It could well have been made by any member who spoke today and be totally relevant to the bill before us. At page 3993 of Hansard of April 19, 1966, I said:

The issue I bring before the House, Mr. Speaker, is the whole question of the extent of foreign ownership and control of Canadian resources and industry in 1966, one year before the celebration of our hundredth birthday. Are we quietly strolling down the road to national oblivion? Is there an inherently dangerous relationship between massive foreign ownership and economic and then political sovereignty?

I spoke earlier, Mr. Speaker, of the desirability of communication and public discussion of national goals and projects. If ever a question of the greatest public concern cried out for the broadest public discussion right now it is this one.

As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I again point out that the public discussion that has taken place in the last few years through associations such as the Committee for an Independent Canada and through the work of some individuals, is what some of us were calling for seven years ago. I continue:

I should like to see the Canadian people committed one way or the other by the time of our one hundredth anniversary a little over a year from now. What will we be saying as a nation on July 1, 1967—"We wonder what is going to happen to us by 2000 A.D." or "We know what we will make of Canada by 2000 A.D.?"

I believe this is the major issue of the day.

I believed it then and I believe it now, seven years later, Mr. Speaker. I went on:

Really it is the only issue because, until it is faced and settled for generations to come, discussions of other matters including budgets, are academic. We may be spending money for nothing. The moment of truth has arrived for us as a nation and as individual Canadians.

I said when I commenced these remarks that I was not going to speak about statistics. Everyone knows the statistics. I want to talk in broader, philosophical terms on this subject. I then said:

The conscious settlement and decision of this issue in our heads and hearts could prove to be our salvation as a united country. It could lift us out of our introspection and destructive self-criticism, this pulling up the flower to see if the roots are growing. I am convinced that the spiritual resources of most Canadians in every province are more than equal to the challenge and responsibility of owning Canada. This is a big enough challenge to stir their loyalty; this is a great enough goal to enlist their devotion. It is though enough to use all their muscles and energy and creativeness; it could be the moral equivalent of war for a peace-loving people.

Then later:

The first question to decide is whether economic and political domination follow large foreign equity ownership of a country's economy. Where is the danger point? The second question is: In this interdependent world how do we handle this problem without becoming selfish national isolationists, without giving ideological comfort to the enemies of freedom and individual liberty, without making enemies of traditional friends and allies whose friendship is valued and unquestioned?

• (2050)

Our aim should be clear: under our own ownership and control to make the greatest contribution our talents allow to the awakening of the sleeping Canadian giant and then, in full co-operation with all nations, to work for equality of opportunity with all nations, to work for equality of opportunity and justice through the rule of law for all human beings, black, yellow or white.

There are those, Mr. Speaker, who believe that Canada can accomplish these aims by becoming economically integrated in the North American complex. By submerging or erasing borders we become part of a larger unit. This thinking, which is represented on both sides of the forty-ninth parallel, has come to be known as continentalism. Those who see more good than evil in foreign ownership penetration into Canada's economy have been called continentalists. For want of a better word those who take the opposite view have been called nationalists—economic nationalists or political nationalists. I prefer the word "Canadians."

Fundamentally—and I hope I am not simplifying this to much—a continentalist seems to think, consciously or otherwise, that whatever is good for North America is good for Canada. He sees no direct relationship between national self-determination, economically, politically or culturally, and the eventual total integration of Canadian and United States economies. If figures mean anything, then the present rate of takeover of Canadian resources, business and industry can lead only to that end. If there is no danger to Canadian nationhood in such an intertwining, we are very fortunate people. However, if there are unknown contingent liabilities involved in such an arrangement which affect all living Canadians and those yet to come, then we are embarked on a hazardous adventure. Those who have done any thinking at all about Canada's future must surely ask themselves: What are we getting into?

It is time, Mr. Speaker, for the fullest and widest public discussion from coast to coast about this whole matter.

I again congratulate the minister and the government for giving all Canadians the opportunity to discuss this subject. I would like to see seminars and public meetings across the country so that a consensus can develop. Otherwise, even the small measures in this legislation could prove to be divisive. I want to say something later about that in terms of the Canadian east and west. To continue, Mr. Speaker:

I ask my generation to answer these questions: Are we giving away our past which we did not earn, and our future which does not belong to us? As temporary custodians of this entity called Canada, have we the right to sell the family assets without reference to our heirs?

If we Canadians can have the best of both worlds, economic and political control of our country plus unprecedented prosperity through foreign equity investment, then everything is coming up roses. I do not believe we can. The hard, cold fact of financial equity investment is that political power is always used eventually to protect that investment.

That has been the history of equity investment in every country in the world when the investment has been made on the part of other countries. As a former speaker mentioned, Canada is not without blame in this whole question of foreign ownership. If we are not careful we will, quite rightly, be coming under the same scrutiny in other countries, particularly those in the Caribbean, as foreign investors in Canada are now coming under. More wars than enough, under the guise of battles for freedom, have been fought to protect the interests of nations who have an equity investment in smaller nations. I again quote:

We are naïve to think otherwise. All the weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth will be to no avail if we wake up some morning and find we have lost the right to make our economic and political decisions for all time. And we will have no one to blame but ourselves—not the Americans, not the Japanese, not the Germans, just ourselves. It makes much more sense to me to ask individual nationals of other countries to come here and help us develop our nation from within as Canadians than to import dollars and have them develop and control it from without as non-Canadians.

In terms of labels, it is already clear I am an economic nationalist. I believe that whatever is good for Canada is good for North America and the world. I want Canada to be able to speak forever with all the power and freedom of a nation in full control of its future. This does not preclude collaboration and the fullest cooperation with other nations whose aims are compatible with ours. It does mean that we are under economic obligation to no one to compromise our convictions or destroy our destiny. Who is going to develop and own Canada? Other people or Canadians?

When I spoke on this matter in 1966 I quoted statistics which, seven years ago, were very alarming. I quoted 1959 figures. The rubber industry was 90 per cent foreign owned, and the pulp and paper industry 38 per cent foreign owned. The figures quoted tonight by an earlier speaker point out that because nothing has been done in the intervening years, the figures have increased alarmingly.

I again say that I am glad the government has given us this opportunity to focus our attention on this problem. It is now time for Canadians to decide, because a decision will have to be made for their future. I personally believe that this legislation is as far as we can go at the moment without being divisive. The legislation before us can be a forum for the kind of public discussion which should lead to a national decision.

I completely understand the feelings of western Canada and the Maritimes in this matter. These parts of Canada do not have a pool of capital for their development. They have had to go outside their borders for the simple reason that the great province of Ontario, where I now live after having lived in the province of Alberta for 28 years, with all its wealth has seen fit to use its money for other purposes than to encourage and assist other parts of the country in their development. That is why I say that only a very small step can be taken at this time because of the necessity for capital in the west that is not forthcoming from Ontario. I believe the maritimes are in the same position. Therefore, certain parts of Canada are opposed to any type of control that will stop foreign capital from coming in to assist them to develop to the point where they will become as rich and powerful as the province of Ontario.

I would like to see something done, possibly through taxation measures, to assist in achieving this type of broader national prosperity across the country. Frankly, I do not know what can be done without changing the political system under which we operate. Do we want a government that has the full authority to say to all Canadian people that all the money we need to develop our country is now in Canada? Do we want an authoritarian government that will say to Canadians they must not ship their money out of the country, even though they can get a better deal by buying American stocks and bonds rather than Canadian bonds? Surely there could be some small incentive for buying Canadian bonds. Tax-free interest on Canadian bonds would be some incentive, with no great loss to the treasury. I believe that some of these things will have to be done in order to back up the type of legislation now before us.

I believe that the extreme parts of the country might then be more amenable in understanding the problems involved in the loss of political sovereignty. If those other parts of Canada assent, then at least the central provinces should assist them financially in bringing about development which is needed. These are some of the aspects I should like to see the government look into and, maybe, do something about.

One other point. I believe legislation along these lines can only be successful in this country if it has the support of Canadians in all geographic regions. A national will must emerge, and the first small but reasonable steps taken in this bill might provide the spark necessary for the debate which should take place right across the country. Since this issue affects us all, action must be taken in a way which will not disturb national unity. We should bear in mind that there are two types of criticism of this bill. Some say it goes too far and others say it does not go far enough. This illustrates the lack of consensus about what needs to be done now and in the future. If agreement is reached some day that we must place ourselves in a position to exercise our sovereignty, action must be taken in a way which would bring all Canadians together in a great national adventure of true nationhood. Then we could be of help to other nations to a far greater extent than at present.

Again, I congratulate the government. I want to congratulate all the speakers I have heard and read in this debate so far. We are all very concerned about this question and I hope the principle of what we are trying to do in this bill will be accepted. There may, of course, be disagreement as to the method and the tactics employed, but I very much hope that everyone will understand the basic reason for bringing the bill forward—the strengthening of our country so that it can fulfil the promise we all predict for it. This is why I hope there will not be too much criticism of the measure on political grounds merely because it happens to be a bill brought down by the present government. It might just as well have been brought in under the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), or it might have been introduced back in the days of Laurier or St. Laurent. It was not.

The time has come when the Canadian conscience wants this type of debate to take place so that all the facts can be brought out in connection with a national consensus or decision as to where we are going.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, the minister, when introducing Bill C-132 on foreign investment last Friday, seemed so overly preoccupied with the Conservative position on the matters raised in this legislation that I feel compelled to spend a few minutes at least in trying to soothe his sensitivities. The minister will not find us quarrelling with the general purpose of this bill as set out in clause 2(1) thereof. Who, indeed, is not vitally concerned with the ability of Canadians to maintain effective control over their economic environment? The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) has reflected our concern and has said that the bill should be sent to committee for study.

I would suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister would have had much less to apologize for last Friday had he made some attempt, however meagre, to admit that this bill is but a part of a very small short-term answer to a very large, long-term problem. I assure him that all concerned Canadians have looked to him for a range of programs to achieve the solution to these problems, and I hope he will appreciate the disappointment we must feel when all we hear from him is an ad hoc reaction which cannot be, and is not, a satisfactory substitute for long-term, forward planning.

[Mr. Walker.]

When business in this country looks for positive economic incentives, the minister surely cannot be surprised with their disappointment at finding penal measures. We are a positive and industrious people, Mr. Speaker, and if there need be a Criminal Code for foreign-controlled business, let it play but a minor role in our total federal program; let it merely support the fundamental thrust of positive encouragement of Canadian business.

Let it also be a hallmark of this thrust that the federal government can no longer continue to operate in a vacuum. Surely the minister must agree with the Conservative position that this type of legislation dictates federal-provincial consultation and co-operation. Some could say that to bring Bill C-132 forward without having consulted the provinces is bad manners, Mr. Speaker. It is more than that—it is bad business. Therefore, I say to the minister that he need not have been so preoccupied with our position had he given us some reason to believe that he subscribed to but three basic fundamentals: First, that this legislation is but a minor part of a comprehensive business program, which the minister should be obliged to outline in detail; second, that the over-all program will be one which embodies a positive encouragement for Canadians; That he will retreat from his unilateral position and consult immediately with the provinces.

In my riding, Mr. Speaker, there are many companies which are foreign owned and I, for one, am happy to see that the government has not succumbed to pressures from some quarters to embark upon a corporate witch-hunt. A test which we have used in our communities with some success could be classified by some as a moral test. We have said to all members of our business community: Are you a good corporate citizen? Are you discharging the responsibility which inevitably accompanies the freedom you enjoy to be a part of this community? The test, Mr. Speaker, has been one of responsibility rather than nationality.

I can appreciate and share the concern of all Canadians when they hear of takeovers, forced sales and similar transactions. Of equal concern, though, is this government's apparent willingness to react in patchword fashion to these economic pressures. This indeed, Mr. Speaker, gives business, regardless of where control lies, lack of confidence in government. Business is saying to itself: What will be the next step in this Liberal-NDP alliance? In finding itself in such a vulnerable position, should any business, especially Canadian-owned business, engage in long-term expansion plans? Surely it is not unreasonable for all business to ask whether in future we shall continue to engage in an adversary system of business/government relations.

The hon. member for Trinity has called for an imaginative and dynamic economic structure. I am proud to subscribe to his presentation enthusiastically and with confidence, and I wish to speak today for a group of Canadians who are anxious to participate in this structure. I wish to emphasize the forgotten Canadian businessman who until I came to Ottawa I knew as the small businessman but who, for clarity's sake, I will describe as the very small Canadian businessman—the proprietorship, the partnership, the very small incorporated company. These people do not have $250,000 in gross assets. Their revenues do not exceed $3 million, and quite likely never will in my lifetime, even given our present rate of inflation.

• (2110)

They employ, on the average, much less than 100 employees; indeed some of them only employ the husband, his wife, and the kids when they get home from school and on weekends. They are in every phase of our business community—retail, wholesale, manufacturing. They are people who work 12 and 14 hours a day, six and seven days a week, and take so little out of their business that many months provide them with less than the minimum wage. They reinvest their profits daily so they can buy a more efficient piece of machinery or a second delivery truck; and, Mr. Speaker, whether this government believes it or not, they are willing to continue to do so provided they can see a ray of light or a hint of encouragement from this government.

So they look to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and what he had to say to and for them in this House last Friday. He said, Mr. Speaker, a grand total of six lines out of the hundreds and hundreds of lines of his speech in the official report of last Friday's debates. What were the minister's words? Let me quote from page 2780 of Hansard:

> In closing the catalogue, I should like to refer to new proposals which I am preparing in order to provide additional special assistance to small business. This is the sector which employs most of our work force. In my view it is the sector which generates most of our new products and services.

This apologetic afterthought is all the minister can offer to those whom he calls the sector that employs most of our work force, the sector which generates most of our new products and services.

The leader of the New Democratic Party has accused those in this party of selling out "to the wealthy, the rich and the powerful corporation". The people for whom I speak are apparently unknown to the hon. member. These people and the companies for whom I speak are not the wealthy, the rich and the powerful; they are the overtaxed, the discouraged, and the bureaucratically controlled Canadians who are buried in government inspectors, government forms, government reports and government regulations, who are finding it hard to find the time to be good Canadians, let alone good businessmen, because of government pressure and because of neither government encouragement nor understanding.

The leader of the New Democratic Party says that all the hon. member for Trinity proposed last Friday will be at the expense of the Canadian people. Mr. Speaker, those for whom I speak are that part of the Canadian people which the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) will doggedly and blindly crush if he continues to exert his control in his alliance with this government. These small business people look to this government to be pro-Canadian, not anti-foreign. However, they would likely support Bill C-132 if it was evident that it was but a minor part in a total, positive economic program.

Not one of these vital citizens in my riding of Perth-Wilmot, be he personal or corporate, is looking for a government hand-out, although most would agree that the $1 billion this government spent to bail out the unemployment insurance fund was the result of economic mismanagement, and that had that amount been spent over a period of time in economic incentives a few years ago, the UIC fund never would have become overdrawn.

So when these people, who are the heart, the soul and the backbone of many Canadian communities, see this foreign investment review bill presented to the House without any indication of other positive incentives to Canadians, they must wonder if this government has any idea of their position, where they are overtaxed, have limited access to capital and are being destroyed by high interest rates.

Small business wants and deserves the opportunity to play its role in expanding the economy and providing employment, and I suggest that any government which denies them this role is doomed. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept a business climate where the business failure rate in Canada last year was the highest since 1932. This year brings no better news, for in January there were 217 failures, compared with 177 a year ago—an increase of 17 per cent. And this government must assume its share of the blame for this unacceptable situation. As the leader of my party said last fall:

> It is characteristic of the government today that its preoccupation with its own size and power leads it to ignore those it considers of relative inconsequence. Attempts at tax reform led big government to ignore the total interests of small business. And yet, small business in this country generates more employment, more real growth, and more tax revenue, and bears more of the cost burden of government than does the so-called big business.

The minister, with some justification, may accuse me of enjoying the luxury of opposition which provides me with this opportunity of telling the House that this ad hoc, penal bill is inadequate in face of the demands for positive, economic incentives. Therefore, I wish to itemize only three areas in which a Conservative government would meet these demands. I hasten to point out that there is no reason why the minister should not imitate his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in adopting Conservative programs, although I would hope he would be inclined to be more courteous than the Minister of Finance and acknowledge their source.

In any event, the first program would involve the orderly transfer of ownership of the small family business within the family. We should investigate the elimination or changing of capital gains tax for this transfer, since I suggest to the House that the capital gains tax produced in these family transfers would not be sufficient to pay for the bureaucracy costs in having inspectors, accountants and others running around the country trying to figure out the necessary valuations and making them stick, any more than these costs can be met by the capital gains tax revenues resulting from the transfer of family farms.

Therefore, if the minister chooses to take advantage of our suggestion of considering the elimination of capital gains tax for the transfer of the small family business to a son or daughter, I wish him more success with the Minister of Finance than that enjoyed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who wound up with the incredible situation of telling this country's farmers that they have to die before an orderly transfer of the family farm to their children can be affected. It would also be a Conservative government's responsibility to consult with the provinces regarding the effect of death duties in this area. I suggest to the House that we simply cannot sit here and justify, on any logical basis, a forced sale of a family business because of capital gains tax and death duties.

Our second program would be small business services and incentives. Under this program we would emphasize managerial and technical assistance, as well as assistance through research and development, where present government programs, no matter how well intended, are simply not reaching, let alone assisting, our small businessman. In most cases, not only are they not available to him; he has never been told of them and is not likely to be. Also within this second set of programs, we in the Conservative party are committed to the procurement of government contracts for the supply of goods and services by small businesses so that they receive a fair share of such contracts.

Finally, under this second area of our programs we would introduce the Canadian investment credit incentive, a tax incentive for small business. We acknowledge immediately that the cost to government in the first year would be from $100 million to $300 million, but again I emphasize that this is preferable to having to spend $1 billion in rescue money for unemployment insurance. As the House knows, Mr. Speaker, this program is designed to encourage Canadians to invest in small business risk ventures and, by doing so, to create jobs. It will be available to any Canadian who makes a direct investment in the equity of Canadian-owned small business. The credit, which is 50 per cent of the investment, with an annual maximum of $5,000, will be offset against the investor's income tax or rebated directly to him. This means that if a Canadian invests $1,000, for example, in a qualified business, he will receive a credit of $500 against his income. The credit is repayable only if and when the Canadian realizes on his investment.

The third and final set of programs deals with borrowing. When presenting Bill C-132, had the minister even hinted that a substantial portion of our problem of foreign ownership was the direct result of a banking policy which encouraged foreign investment, while at the same time discouraged Canadians from expanding, he would have received a more sympathetic hearing.

I submit to the minister that as long as Canadian lending institutions are eager to provide funds for the foreign takeover of a business, while at the same time the same institution denies the same funds to the Canadian owner of the same business, fifty bills of the ilk of Bill C-132 will not solve the problem for him. If the minister is of the opinion that these are isolated cases, I urge him to consider the speech in this House by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) on January 16 of this year.

Also under the heading of borrowing, I would suggest that while prime lending rates are around 6½ per cent, this government's one and only answer to Canadian small business is its Industrial Development Bank, with interest rates at 11 per cent and 12 per cent. This, Sir, is no answer at all. A Conservative government would have no hesitation in exercising moral persuasion or even stronger measures, including revisions to the Bank Act, when dealing with our chartered banks, and we are committed to making the Industrial Development Bank play a more meaningful role in our economy.

These, Mr. Speaker, are but three of the programs we would undertake to assist the small businessmen I am pleased to represent. They are positive measures of incentive and assistance. We will send Bill C-132 to the committee for its careful examination, but we in the Conservative party consider that this negative reaction to a serious economic problem is no substitute for strong, imaginative and positive measures of incentive and assistance.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a word about bills such as the one now before us which, to be quite candid, is very important.

Mr. Speaker, if Canadians all had the opportunity to be here we would hear much comment and would find out more about the bill and the economy in general.

We are wondering, Mr. Speaker, what the real economic trend is. Economy nationalism as mentioned by the minister and hon. members of other parties, is impossible without economic reform under the label of the present monetary economic dictature unless we can buy back the control of our economy.

The purpose of the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is not to prohibit, but merely to examine and recommend certain measures, to control certain facts according to certain criteria. As a screening agency has been set up to this end, it will be authorized to submit recommendations as to whether a certain course of action is to be authorized or prohibited. It will certainly not be very efficient and I do not believe we can rely on such an agency to solve our problem, which is Canadian rather than international.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, deals with take-overs through new investments and control of expansion of existing foreign companies into unrelated areas. Finally the bill is a screening agency for authorization or prohibition of investments, foreign or otherwise.

I consider that the bill should provide for injection of the capital required for our companies to obtain exclusively Canadian funds for the development of Canadian economic resources.

In this way, Mr. Speaker, our raw materials could be processed here by Canadians with Canadian capital. We all know that we are exploited at 80 to 90 per cent by foreigners, but we do nothing to provide the capital as it is needed by funding our economic development credits on the same Canadian values as foreign and international financiers do for their credit.

Economic common sense, Mr. Speaker, calls for our capital to be based upon our own actual values. If a well integrated economy is to succeed, any new project requires new reimbursable credits at depreciation costs only. It is the only extreme and efficient means that will allow Canadians to gain control over their country.

The New Democratic Party is justified in saying that foreigners develop our resources to profit from our own assets by issuing credits for that purpose. We have only to do likewise through our financial institutions which are well established, well structured to do the job. We need only give them the necessary orders and to take action.

Mr. Speaker, our technology should be an instrument of progress at our disposal. The economic clock should not be short of figures.

The economic clock, Mr. Speaker, has all the necessary figures. It operates and figures are added, multiplied, divided and subtracted.

If the clock has all the figures required to give us the correct time, our economy—which is a clock—must absolutely not be short of figures to let us have the capital we need for our economic development so that we may become our own masters.

• (2130)

Mr. Speaker, from the point of view of foreign investment, the world today is split into two groups, because of the different monetary systems which are mutually exclusive. Each group is controlled by a dictatorship working through a monopoly.

In the western countries, this is a financial dicatatorship that works through the monopoly of capital. We come under this domination.

In the communist countries, it is the dictatorship of the state, working through the monopoly of property and of all material assets; each group fears the other, and the reaction in each case is intensive research and development of highly secret and highly terrifying tools of destruction, in the name of liberty and patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, we must abolish this dictatorship in both systems and make money democratic, a tool to serve us rather than a dictatorial god. The New Democratic Party wants to reverse this monetary decentralization. If this is not done, the two dictatorships will soon be at war, and will thereby destroy all the civilization that man has built so arduously and so slowly.

We must bring the politicians of western countries together, to take steps to set up an honest financial system, in which money will retain its value, and both businessmen and the man in the street will be able to look forward to the future confidently, without fear of a depression or of a financial crisis, without having the sword of Damocles hanging over their heads; for at the moment, governments have a stranglehold on them through income tax and all other kinds of taxation.

We must build a society with sufficient capital for all Canadian developments to adapt to prevailing conditions using capital that is truly Canadian. In this way, we will become masters in our own house.

Mr. Speaker, as the average industrialist, the small industrialist is being entirely exploited by all sorts of tyrants. Interest rates are too high; our industrialists are dishonourably and I would even say dishonestly exploited. The government itself through its taxes and also IDB's financing at excessive interest rates is also exploiting small and medium business by its dictatorial financial means always to fatten the same institutions at the detriment of workers and small businesses which find it so hard to survive.

Our industries are still standing up because they are indebted right up to the nose, because they resort to loans at extremely high interest rates and because if they also want to finance the storage of goods they must under formula 88 of chartered banks pay 10 to 12 per cent interest for the storage of goods they often have to sell at a loss to pay the advances they received from financiers and the interest on those amounts.

Those small and middle businesses are thoroughly exploited and if they cannot be successful now it is because the prices of their products are too high and they cannot produce at a cheaper cost. But it is mainly because they do not find buyers for their products as the limited purchasing power of Canadians does not enable them to pay for them. Manufacturers have to store their products at great cost, with the help of finance, which requires an 8, 10 or 12 per cent interest. All that adds to the cost of living and small and middle industries find it increasingly difficult to keep their business and be masters in their own house.

As for international affairs, finance is certainly based on actual credit, on the real values we have to offer. If foreign concerns come here to develop our natural resources, it is because they are the ones who guarantee credit issues made for that purpose, mainly and exactly on the credits we have and which they are going to exploit for us. Therefore, if foreigners are able to develop our natural resources in that way, we Canadians can certainly take advantage of existing institutions to finance our businesses and base our credits on our country's same values, so as to enable the Canadian people to develop more, to regain control over their economy, for it was because of that despicable finance that we lost the control of our economy.

If indeed foreign corporations have made inroads into 80 and 90 per cent of our economy, it is because we let them do so. We only have to regain control over our business and follow their example to become again our own masters. Gradually, we could develop anything in our country. We could enable any industry to operate inasmuch as we provide the necessary capital with reasonable rates of interest and as long as the citizens have the necessary purchasing power. We could then develop our resources and become real Canadians controlling our natural wealth.

If we have to import capital, it should be technological capital. If there is a lack of technological means for our future development, we should be in a position to import some and pay proper salaries to technicians in order to ensure our expansion.

We can resort to foreign technicians, if we are short of technicians. We would then import the human resources that we might need. We have the necessary means to import such capital, to pay the technicians; in so doing, we shall be able to keep ownership of our assets and to safeguard our legal and fiscal rights.

The point is to put that same human capital at our service. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has only to so decide, jointly with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the leaders of the other parties. We can take any decision. Provided something is materially possible, we must make it feasible by way of a well-balanced, well-synchronized, well-controlled and well-adjusted economy.

Mr. Speaker, in order to produce heat, a furnace must be well-adjusted and equiped with thermostats designed to ensure comfortable living for the community.

Such is the way we can grow and develop, because we have got everything we need. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is no use wasting our time, blaming foreigners and adopting legislation to prevent them from coming and investing here. Let us settle down to work and let us use our economic tools for the good of our economy; each and every Canadian will fare better from it and will eventually become master of his own destiny.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the stated intention of Bill C-132 is to keep effective control of the Canadian economy in Canadian hands. Taken by itself, this principle is something with which I think we all agree. But it seems to me the bill does not do that; it does not contain a mechanism to achieve this goal. The main thrust of this bill is typical of NDP and Liberal philosophy, namely, that the economy can be regulated through restriction in the negative sense.

The previous bill which was presented by this government a year ago was essentially of the same nature. It was designed to stop something from happening, namely, to stop the takeover of existing businesses by foreign enterprises, rather than to encourage something more desirable to happen. I think that puts in a nutshell the basic difference between the Liberal and NDP philosophy and the Conservative philosophy. They believe in restriction, and we believe in encouragement. That is a very significant difference.

The new bill, however, contains an innovation to deal with the establishment of new businesses. In general, one can easily say that this bill does not come to grips with the problem of foreign ownership in this country. It does not propose to do anything about the major portions of our economy that are already in foreign hands. In addition, the Gray report in 1969 showed that massive increases in foreign ownership within this country occurred as a result of the expansion of existing, foreign-controlled enterprises. This expansion, of course, is untouched by Bill C-132 except in the case where a foreign-controlled company may be expanding into a new and unrelated business. The present bill, therefore, is no substantial improvement over the previous one, since it is obvious that a policy ignoring this kind of expansion of existing, foreign-owned companies, which is in fact the largest contributor to the growth of foreign ownership in this country, obviously touches only the periphery of the foreign ownership problem.

Few issues before the Canadian public in the past ten years have aroused so much interest as the question of foreign ownership, and as well few issues have been treated with as little effort to resolve it by the government as that of foreign investment. To say the least, the approach so far has been one of ad hoc reaction. A review of the figures shows that in the production and manufacturing sectors, 99.7 per cent of petroleum and coal products, 81.3 per cent of chemical products, 93 per cent of rubber products, 87 per cent of transport equipment and 72 per cent of machinery manufacturing are owned by foreign enterprises; and many others are 50 per cent or more foreign owned.

Public opinion research has shown a steady increase in the feeling among Canadians that foreign investment is a bad thing, and there has been a simultaneous decrease over the past few years in the number of people who feel that foreign investment in this country is a good thing. It would appear that rejection of foreign investment has been the least pronounced in the maritimes but varies somewhat in other regions of the country. Because of this, the policy must be developed in close consultation with the provinces, to ensure that the provinces are consulted and that regional differences are taken into account. While there is a clause which provides that industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the provinces would be taken into consideration, the bill sets up no guidelines by which the provinces will be consulted. It makes it possible for provincial issues to be taken into account, but any provincial consultation that could occur will be inconsequential to the bill itself.

If one looks at the unemployment figures in the various parts of the country, it becomes obvious why the concern for foreign investment varies. If it is a choice between having no job at all or having a job created by foreign investment, obviously Canadians would go for the job created by foreign investment. With that in mind, many factors have to be taken into consideration besides the emotion of economic nationalism. At best, the present proposal is a piecemeal approach which falls far short of the kind of decisive action that would be required to put Canada's economic future in Canadian hands.

This new bill suggests that government policy in this area is foggy, to say the least. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once indicated that a foreign ownership policy would be complete enough to be an immediate guide for business decisions once it was announced, and that people would know how to conduct themselves from the day the statement was made. On reading the bill, can one really say that this kind of guide to business is being offered in it? I would say the answer is no. The uncertainty is still as great as ever.

The government is only playing games with nationalism by using vague phrases such as "significant benefit to Canada" which strike me as faint echoes of "the just society" and "the land is strong". I wonder if the Prime Minister is just making a few token gestures for the benefit of the nationalist voters in the same way as he plans economic conferences, to soothe one part of the country or another, or sets up the food prices committee to dispel the anger of the housewife. Or could it be that he is just making a token effort to appease the token party to my left, normally referred to as NDP but now having new initials, the NLR which is the "New Liberal Rump"?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in a recent speech cited this government's new Bill C-132 as an example of the kind of good effect there has been on the Trudeau government from the NDP holding the balance of power. I wonder whether he was really serious when he made that statement, because when he spoke in the House of Commons on March 30 he was critical of my party and of the Liberal party on some of their proposals, and said that the Liberals and Conservatives were clearly one in their proposals. He followed it up by saying:

We reject that kind of approach to Canada's economy and Canadian economic independence.

How can he say, on one hand, that a bill is an example of the effect of his influence, and on the other reject that kind of approach to Canada's economy and Canadian economic independence? It leads one to wonder what the hon. member really does mean or what he really believes in. But we are becoming accustomed to the leader of the NDP reversing his position from one day to the next and contradicting remarks one day that he made the day before. He said in his comments that his respect for us as a party has decreased because of some of our policy statements.

Mr. Speaker, at least we have been consistent in promoting policies which we believe to be good for the country. We can hardly say that the hon. member for York South has been consistent. If we review the voting pattern of his party since January of this year, we find that on several occasions they voted in complete contradiction to what they said a short time before. We can go back to January, for example, when we put a motion before the House asking that the throne speech debate be set aside so that old age pensions legislation could be brought forward. The NDP, who had very sanctimoniously on many occasions promoted the idea of increasing old age pensions, voted against that motion, thus causing an unwarranted delay in increasing old age pensions from January to April 1.

We also had the spectacle of the NDP crictizing the government's economic policies. But when it came to the crunch when there was a vote of confidence in the government's economic policies, their vote was with the government, contrary to their remarks. We even had a motion about corporate welfare bums. They, of course, voted against that too. It was no longer important enough for them to discontinue their support of the government.

One day not too long ago they talked against the sale of Polymer. But when it came to a vote, they voted in favour of the sale of Polymer. How does the hon. member expect us or the people of Canada to increase our respect for him if he cannot put his vote where his mouth is? How can he expect us to believe anything he says if over and over he has shown that what he says is wrong one day, he says is right the next day? I do not want to suggest that the hon. member is dishonest by intent, but it certainly appears that his methods are tortuous, if not devious.

If we look for a moment at the debate on the old bill back in May, 1972, as recorded at page 2639 of Hansard, when speaking about the bill the leader of the NDP said it was "a policy which has very little meaning for Canada." In another place he said: "I believe this bill must be opposed." Finally he said: "We do not intend to support such a useless step as the minister has proposed." But today he and all his members have been speaking in favour of essentially the same measure.

Mr. Gleave: What is your policy?

Mr. Yewchuk: The hon. member wants to know about my policy.

Mr. Gleave: Why don't you tell us about your 60-day freeze?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. If the hon. member wants the floor, he can seek it later in the debate.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I see that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) has wakened up. I am very glad to see that. He wanted to know what our policy is. The first thing I would say about our policy is that at least we vote according to our principles and in accordance with what we say. I think that is a prime essential in politics. It is obvious to me that the conscience of hon. friends to my left is bothering them—if they have one—and it is obvious that the conscience of their leader is bothering him.

Mr. Baldwin: It isn't that; it's his figure.

Mr. Yewchuk: No doubt as a result of having given up his principles. I think this guilty conscience of his is reflected in the fact that he dedicates most of his speeches to attacking the Conservative party and in particular to attacking our leader. We can only conclude from this that he wishes he had the courage and the fortitude to stand up for what he believes in, the way the Conservative party has been doing during the past weeks.

For example, he was critical of our policy, stating that we want to make the wealthy wealthier and want to make the powerful more powerful at the expense of the ordinary Canadian worker and of the small Canadian businessman. But after a careful review of his speech I failed to find any evidence of what he would do for the Canadian worker, and in particular for the private Canadian, small businessman, except to conclude that he would probably abolish him.

The statement I am referring to is recorded at page 2789 of Hansard for March 30, where he is reported as saying that "the objectives of a corporation"—he does not differentiate between big and small—"whatever its ownership, are the same. The interest in profit and power is the same. The public interest takes second place whether the corporation is privately owned by Canadians, owned by Americans or owned by nationals of any other country." From this we can conclude that his position is that any corporation of business privately owned is not in the best interests of the Canadian public. It is an obvious promotion of the old doctrine in the Regina manifesto, suggesting that only government knows how to run your business; that no private individual has any humanity, social honour or any sense of loyalty to the country, but is strictly motivated by greed and the desire to abuse everybody.

It seems to me that is a rather distorted view of private enterprise, which in fact has shown all around the world that it can do more for countries and their development and for their peoples than any other system, including dictatorial socialism which the hon. member and his party seem to admire so much. Let us look at the results of socialism in our own country. Let us take Saskatchewan, a shining example of socialism. According to the last census, that is the only province where the population had actually gone down. People are still leaving there, scurrying in all directions to get away from that great NDP government.

Mr. Orlikow: Why did they vote in an NDP government?

Mr. Yewchuk: I hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) making some noises. Let us look at Manitoba, the province that has the highest taxes of any province in Canada, which is also scaring away people as well as industry. They have one company there—I do not need to mention its name—which produces tractors that are sold at a good price to Canadians. This company is on the verge of moving out in order to get away from that greedy socialist government. Look at the province of British Columbia, another example of NDP peace and quiet, where the people are in the greatest turmoil they have ever experienced since they entered confederation.

Mr. Orlikow: Why did the people elect an NDP government?

Mr. Yewchuk: If we want to look at the facts, we see that the have provinces are those that have been built up over many years of Conservative government.

Mr. Orlikow: Like Nova Scotia? Tell us about the heavy water plant at Glace Bay.

Mr. Yewchuk: One example is the province of Ontario; others are Alberta and British Columbia which have grown up under the private enterprise system. If we look at the have-not provinces—

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about the heavy water plant.

Mr. Yewchuk: My hon. friends do not like to listen to this. They do not want to listen to the truth. If we look at the have-not provinces, they are the ones that have been under Liberal control for a long time; and if we look at those that are rapidly becoming have-not provinces, they are those that hon. friends to my left control.

We have a different approach to this whole question. We feel that the negative approach of the Liberals and the New Democrats is not what Canadians are looking for. Canadians are looking for a positive approach based on growth and development of the country. A foreign ownership policy which proposes to lead to Canadian control of the economy must be tied in with the country's total economic strategy. Conversely, this total economic strategy must be developed in such a way that greater encouragement is offered to Canadian participation in development than to foreign participation.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are sitting on the edge of your chair. I am not sure whether you are getting sleepy, but if Your Honour wishes, I will call it ten o'clock.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AGAINST PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY IN CANADA FOR POWER PROJECT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, a long time ago I asked a question in connection with the Skagit valley and it is now coming before you in the "late show". I have spoken to the hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) and I think he has a pretty good idea of the questions I am going to put to him this evening.

• (2200)

As hon. members know, some time ago the minister assured the House that the flooding of the Skagit valley would not take place. He said, as did the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), that the flooding of the Skagit valley was a dead issue. We are, of course, glad to hear this and we hope the two ministers are correct. That assurance was given some time ago, however, and the fact is that the Seattle City Light Company is proceeding with its application before the United States Federal Power Commission seeking the right to raise the level of the Ross dam below the Canadian border. If granted, this will result in the flooding of the Skagit valley.

I know that to a considerable extent the assurances given in this House by the Minister of the Environment to the Ross committee, which is the citizens' group in Vancouver which is fighting the flooding of the valley, have caused the committee to take the position that it is in fact safe to withdraw from the Federal Power Commission hearings. As a consequence, on March 6, 1973, Mr. Ken Farquharson, secretary of the Ross committee, wrote a letter to the Hon. R. A. Williams, Minister of Lands and Forest for the province of British Columbia. In that letter he said, in part:

> Following the announcement by the federal and provincial governments that they will co-operate to prevent the flooding of the valley the committee has considered its position and has decided that its aims have been fulfilled and as a result the committee will not prepare evidence for submission to the FPC.

Further on in the letter he wrote:

> The committee wishes to advise you that, if the FPC hearings do take place, and if the federal and provincial governments desire a Canadian intervention to correct misleading testimony, and if they are not prepared to intervene themselves, then the Ross committee will prepare testimony provided that it is given notice of this requirement prior to 1 May, 1973, and that adequate funds, information and manpower are made available by the federal and provincial governments to the committee. The cost of such an intervention by the Ross committee would of course be much less than the extra compensation that Seattle might expect to receive if their application to the FPC was successful.

Arising out of this, I would appreciate the Minister of the Environment bringing the House up to date on the situation. I should like to know what the response of the United States government has been to the note of January 9, 1973, which was apparently sent to them by the Canadian government. My authority for this is a statement to that effect in the House on February 6, 1973, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As reported at page 1000 of Hansard, he said:

Mr. Speaker, on January 9, a note was sent to the United States authorities requesting discussions on this question. This is the procedure that has been approved by both the government of the province of British Columbia and of course by this government. It seems to us the most effective way of getting action.

I would like to know what the response to that note has been, Mr. Speaker. I think most hon. members of this House, and certainly the public, want to know whether the Canadian government has in fact said to the American government that there will be no flooding, and whether the American government has agreed, either by implication or directly, with representatives of the Canadian government that the flooding will not take place.

While I do not doubt the sincerity of the assurances given in this House, I would hope that our proper acceptance of the sincerity of this statement does not lead us on this side of the House, or any member of the government, into a position where the wishful thinking of several months ago is leading us into a situation where we may not be as secure as we thought we were. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of the Environment to advise us tonight of the real situation of the agreement between Canada and the United States that this flooding will not proceed.

I would also like to know whether the government of Canada has received a copy of the letter that I quoted or a similar letter, or whether the government of the province of British Columbia has communicated the contents of that letter to the federal government. With regard to whether the federal government has received it, I think it would be beneficial to know whether the federal government would be prepared to assist financially if it should occur that the Ross group had to make representations at the hearing. I think my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would appreciate the minister dealing with the matters raised.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the questions raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), I would say the following. The Canadian government and the government of British Columbia, both separately and jointly, have said that the flooding of the Skagit valley in British Columbia will not take place. This message, loud and clear, has been transmitted to Washington. It is a message which has been received there with concern.

We have now had a reply from the United States State Department officials. They agree, in principle, to the convening of a meeting or a series of meetings with the two principle parties with a view to terminating a long-standing contract. The two principal parties are the Seattle City Light Company, owned by the people of the city of Seattle, in the United States, and the government of the province of British Columbia, in Canada.

The date of the meeting between the four parties, the two principal parties, Seattle City Light and the government of British Columbia, and the United States Department of State, and External Affairs, supported by the Department of the Environment for Canada, has not been set. It is expected, however, that it will be some time within the next month. This is a matter which I will be taking up on Monday, April 9, with Mr. Russell Train, chairman of President Nixon's environmental council, when he comes to Ottawa to discuss this and other matters.

The United States State Department raised the matter with Premier Barrett when he was in Washington recently. He agreed, to explore several possibilities originating with Seattle City Light, one of which was the supply of power from British Columbia in lieu of the power that would have otherwise have been generated by the Ross dam in the United States, the reservoir of which would have flooded back into Canada.

As I understand it, Mr. Barrett's response was one of interest but not of final commitment. I understand Seattle City Light has since been in touch with the British Columbia hydro authority with a view to negotiating an export of power from Canada in lieu of power which would otherwise have been generated in the United States from Canadian water flowing down the Skagit valley.

The hon. member for Vancouver South asked about the Ross group. I think the Ross group is right in not spending too much time and money preparing a brief in opposition to the flooding. It should nevertheless continue its watching brief. As I understand it, Seattle City Light is scheduled to appear before the U.S. Federal Power Commission. The date has been put off an additional number of months to December, 1973. Hopefully, long before those hearings begin and long before it would be necessary for Canada and British Columbia otherwise to intervene in those hearings, there will be meaningful negotiation between Seattle City Light and British Columbia which will terminate this threat of flooding in the Skagit valley forever.

FISHERIES—FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—INVESTIGATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF OPERATIONS AND DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can begin by presenting some background. On January 11, 1973, I learned of large lay-offs at the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation's new Transcona plant. Accordingly on January 12, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I asked the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on the grounds of urgent and pressing necessity, and as an explanation I provided the following information:

Yesterday the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation announced large lay-offs of personnel in their Winnipeg and Selkirk plants. This action follows radical alterations in the marketing procedures pursued by the Corporation, the dismissal or resignation of significant numbers of the Corporation's most senior staff, allegations that the Corporation is running a huge deficit and allegations that a part of the inventory of fish of the Corporation cannot be accounted for . . . I therefore move:

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be immediately established and that the entire matter of the administration and operations of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation be referred to it for investigation and report.

Unanimous consent was not granted. Therefore, on January 19 I asked the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) the following question in the House:

In the light of recent events associated with the Freshwater Fish

Marketing Corporation, including the resignation and dismissal of a large number of senior staff and the unfavourable profit and loss picture of that corporation, does the minister intend to refer the matter of the administration and operation of the corporation to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for investigation and report?

The minister's reply was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. As hon. members know, we have encountered management problems in the operations of that joint federal-provincial Crown company. This matter must be referred to the committee because of the financial losses involved.

By February 2 no action had been taken with respect to an inquiry, so I put a further question to the minister as follows:

A couple of weeks ago the minister gave an undertaking to the House that there would be an inquiry by the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry into the operations of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Is he now in a position to indicate to the House when he expects this inquiry to begin, and when he expects the committee to be set up, and would he also give some indication of the terms of reference to be given to the committee?

The minister's answer was:

I hope to be able to make a statement to the House in this connection shortly.

Mr. Speaker, it is now April 3, two months later, and an inquiry has yet to be held. There has still been no reference to the committee with respect to the affairs of the corporation. Each day of delay in referring the matter to the committee ensures that the committee will encounter increased difficulty in getting to the bottom of the questions which are currently the source of rumours and discontent with the corporation. Each day's delay means it will be more difficult for the committee to call key witnesses before it as they become dispersed and involved in other employment, in some cases.

I realize that the standing committee is presently examining the minister's estimates and that during this examination the committee is free to make inquiries about the corporation. However, examination of the estimates does not provide the committee with the time or the scope for the undivided attention this subject demands. The FWFMC is the key to the livelihood of virtually every commercial fishermen in northwestern Ontario, the prairie provinces and the Northwest Territories. It is a Crown corporation and it has been the instrument of introducing radical changes into the fishing industry in the regions mentioned. Because of its importance to a key sector of the western economy, and because the livelihood of large numbers of Canadians is totally dependent upon its efficient operation, the subject demands a full inquiry based upon terms of reference permitting a complete examination of the corporation's operations and administration.

There are many questions to be answered. For example, did the Auditor General refuse to endorse the corporation's books and, if so, why? Has the corporation suffered losses? If so, did they amount to $1 million, $1.5 million, $3 million or $5 million? I have heard all those figures cited. Then again, is part of the corporation's inventory of fish unaccounted for? If so, how much, and why?

Have purchasers of fish from the corporation defaulted on payment for goods received? If so, how many and in what amounts? Why have large numbers of senior staff of the corporation been dismissed or resigned, and what is their side of the story? Has adequate compensation been granted to fish buyers, processors and distributors displaced by the corporation? Are there large amounts of expensive fish processing equipment lying unused and deteriorating in the new Transcona plant? Has the new plant proved to be inadequate for the task of handling the volumes of fish reaching it for processing, with resultant wastage? Are other new plants being contemplated? Have attempts at new marketing procedures and the development of new fish products been abandoned? If so, why and with what result?

Why are there large fluctuations in the labour force associated with the processing of fish by the corporation, and can these fluctuations be controlled? Why have fishermen in northwestern Ontario elected to cease operating under the auspices of the corporation? Why has the Saskatchewan Fishermen's Co-operative voted to do the same? What are the grievances of fishermen in The Pas, Manitoba, and are they justified? Was the new plant located in Transcona rather than in Selkirk because of cold, hard, economic fact, or because of political patronage of the worst sort, as claimed by Liberal candidates during the last election would seem to indicate?

All these questions and many, many more require answers. In posing these questions, I in no way wish to imply anything beyond the fact that those are questions that are being asked, and because they are being asked they demand to be answered. If half of these problems exist, then a public inquiry is necessary. Answers to these questions can only be obtained through a full public inquiry. Thus, I wish to know when this House may be presented with the terms of reference for such an inquiry by the minister, and when the standing committee can get down to that job. I hope the minister will be able to supply us with that answer this evening.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) has asked a number of questions, such a large number that I shall be able to answer only a few of them this evening.

I should like to inform him that the estimates of my department have been before the fisheries committee of the House on three separate occasions and will be before members of this House for another ten days. I will be in attendance at all times and would be glad to try and answer these questions there. The chairman of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is scheduled to be there next week and for as long as the committee wants to keep him there. So I suggest to the hon. member for Selkirk that either he get himself on the committee or that he arrange for somebody else to ask these and other questions on his behalf.

This is a serious matter. Unlike the Saltfish Corporation, the Freshwater Fish Corporation has run into financial difficulty. This is a corporation that was set up originally at the request of the three prairie provinces. It is a corporation which is a joint enterprise between the prairies provinces and the federal government, with Ontario included and the Northwest Territories. It was created to deal with a very difficult, I would say messy, fish marketing situation. Its main purpose was to create a single selling desk instead of dozens of local operators operating mainly from telephone booths. The single desk was an attempt to deal effectively from a position of strength with fish buyers from the United States.

For the first year it managed to increase the price of fish to fishermen at the lakes materially—somewhere between one-third and 50 per cent. By contrast, the last two years have been years of difficulty. First, we had the mercury problem; second, there was the change in value of the Canadian dollar which effectively reduced the price by 10 per cent. Serious overfishing, particularly in Lake Winnipeg, has resulted in a marked reduction in the quantity of fish which the province will allow to be taken from that very important lake. As a result of that, in the case of the start of the difficulties poor design of some equipment in the new plant at Transcona resulted in serious miscalculations about inventory, with a serious loss of fish. There was a shortfall run amounting to several millions of dollars over a period of two years.

• (2220)

The federal government has agreed to meet half of that loss as an exceptional measure and has asked the provinces to do likewise. If the provinces match the federal government, the fishermen on the lakes will not suffer in terms of price. We have had difficulties in respect of management as well as problems in respect of marketing in the United States. Hopefully, these are challenges that the corporation will be able to overcome in the long run.

DRUGS—AVAILABILITY OF QUAD PROGRAM DATE TO BULK PURCHASERS, PHYSICIANS AND OTHER HEALTH PROFESSIONALS

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that because of the importance of this matter the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) would be in the House this evening. However, I am glad to see that his parliamentary secretary is here.

On February 28 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare the question which appears on page 1757 of Hansard, namely, if he would table in the House the various investigative studies, including those relating to bioavailability, which would substantiate the claims presented in the QUAD' 72 publication.

Again on March 8 I raised the question in the House which appears on page 2020 of Hansard. On that occasion I pointed out the necessity of presenting the scientific data supporting the claims of the QUAD publication to the professionals responsible for prescribing drugs, in order to allay the apprehension which had developed between the minister and his top departmental officials concerning the therapeutic equivalents of drugs.

It may be that I did receive a portion of this information last Monday. Although I will not attempt to comment on how to summarize the analytical data, as suggested by the minister in his accompanying letter, I would like to comment on the program itself because of the possibilities it offers to the professions, the industry and, above all, the consumer, particularly if it can be developed in the proper atmosphere, an atmosphere which must be devoid of political overtones such as those in the minister's statement of March 13. If I may, Sir, I should like to quote the last paragraph of that statement as an example of what I refer to as political overtones. The statement is as follows:

> The government feels that QUAD is sufficiently valuable that we are prepared to take whatever action is necessary to ensure that achievement of its goals is not thwarted.

I think that is a classic example of this attitude on the part of the government. I can assure the House that a program which is scientifically oriented and so closely related to the expanding field of biopharmacology must be nurtured and allowed to grow without intervention by political decisions.

I concur, also, with the initial concern of the government to evolve a plan which would reduce the cost of drugs to the Canadian public. Indeed, we should pursue that goal. I also assure Your Honour, from personal experience, that the fundamental question which must always be answered is: Does the patient have an effective drug? In clinical practice the problem is one of effectiveness, and it may be a difficult decision to determine whether chemical assay percentages of plasma concentrations are the best indicator of drug effectiveness. Clinical evaluation of a drug must be an important component of investigation. The government should join with the industry and the academic community to establish this setting and promote research in areas such as improving drug monitoring techniques, encouraging additional pharmacological research and ensuring optimum drug utilization and rational prescribing. I could give a classical example of the introduction of L-Dopa in the treatment of Parkinson's disease in the United States, in which there was a definite correlation between industry, the government and the academic community.

The government also has the responsibility to reduce the cost of drugs, and an equal responsibility to ensure that they are effective and safe, which implies that the information must be made available to prescribers, as well as patients, on their use and efficacy. In the report the minister indicates that the program was built upon four cornerstones; chemical analysis, comprehensive evaluation of manufacturing capability, measurement of clinical effectiveness, which is equated with bioavailability, and publication of the data.

Unfortunately, as one peruses the statement it has taken on an aura analogous to the scriptures, where truths are presented throughout the 17 pages and one has the impression he would be branded as a heretic if he questioned the conclusion. I would suggest, Sir, that in an area which is exploding with knowledge the minister should welcome the critics with their searching questions, their doubts and concern for improving drug quality.

As an example, Dr. R. J. Withey, when he was with the food and drug directorate, reported at the fifth annual symposium of the Canadian Association for Research in Toxicology that the matter of bioavailability was not yet settled. Following studies of administration of chloromphenical, by different doses and different routes, to pigs, he concluded there was no difference between the dosage formulations or the selected routes of administration based solely on bioavailability and suggested at that time the performance of a drug be assessed in terms of its pharmacoid activity rather than in terms of bioavailability.

Let me suggest possible areas of responsibility for government action relative to drugs. I recognize there has been a meagre beginning. First, they should ensure all drugs in general use are reasonably effective and safe. Second, they should be concerned with drug research, not only those prescribed by doctors but self-medication and abuse of drugs by society. In addition, research in clinical pharmacology should be expanded. Third, government should take responsibility for research in important areas such as cancer research and cardiovascular disease, which frequently are commercially unrewarding. Finally, government should see that patients get value for their money.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the series of questions originally raised by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), I believe have been responded to in the letter from the minister to the member dated March 30 to which he referred. It deals with the difficulty involved in the processing of analytical data which form the bases of the QUAD program itself. It is an extremely complex subject and one which involves volumes and volumes of material. It is extremely difficult to be able to examine these in the way they should be examined by doctors and others who are concerned about the question.

The next point I would like to make is that the hon. member, not only in his original questions but again tonight, indicated that there is some conflict between the minister and his officials in respect of equivalents of the drugs that are covered in the QUAD program. This simply is not true. There is no disagreement whatever between the officials and the minister in respect of this. The member talked about the importance of reducing the cost of drugs to consumers, and at the same time ensuring that they are effective and safe. That is precisely the reason for the QUAD program.

It seems rather difficult to understand the hon. member, when you marry that particular idea with another one which came forward in his remarks when he indicated that this kind of thing should be free of any kind of political interference or political overtones. He quoted from a release which I do not have in front of me, but I challenge what he said basically. He talked about the minister stating that he would make sure that the goals of the QUAD program would not be thwarted.

Surely that is a kind of political interference which is very good and which shows the determination that the government has, not only that the drugs taken by Canadians be safe, but also that information is available so that they can have those drugs at the lowest possible cost. Surely there is a role for government in this respect. I would be surprised if the hon. member for Lambton-Kent would not agree with me that we must make sure that drugs are analysed and that the information is presented to the Canadian public so that they will know that the drugs they can choose are clinically equivalent and can be bought for the cheapest possible price. That is the purpose of the program, and I think all hon. members would subscribe to it.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 4, 1973

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED FAILURE OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE TO PROVIDE INFORMATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which concerns the failure of a minister to provide information to members of the House which legitimately he should provide.

Yesterday, while searching through the material related to the application by Bell Canada to the Canadian Transport Commission for increased telephone rates, I found a document dated December 28, 1972, presented by Bell Canada to the Canadian Transport Commission. It contains an item identified as No. 15 which reads as follows: "IRDIA grants credited to expense account, $1,212,482." This means that Bell Canada has declared in a public document that in 1972 it received federal grants administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the amount of $1.2 million.

On January 4 of this year I put on the order paper a question asking for the names of recipients of grants under IRDIA and the amounts paid. On March 7 the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) tabled his answer, which reads in part as follows:

> Section 13 of the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act prevents the disclosure of this information.

My first point of privilege is that the members of the House of Commons are refused by the government information involving an expenditure of some $165 million since 1967 under the pretext of statutory secrecy, while a recipient of these grants, in this particular case Bell Canada, is at liberty to divulge the same information in a public document.

The second point of privilege arises from the fact that the minister is using the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act to withhold inappropriately requested information from members of this House and the public. The minister—and this is the important point here—referred to section 13 of the act. Section 13 reads as follows:

> All information with respect to a corporation obtained by an officer or employee of Her Majesty in the course of the administration of this Act is privileged, and no such officer or employee shall knowingly, except as may be necessary for the purposes of sections 11 and 12 or in respect of proceedings relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act, communicate or allow to be communicated to any person not legally entitled thereto any such information or allow any such person to inspect or have access to any application or other writing containing any such information.

The point I want to make is that the information requested by me does not involve information obtained by the department from the corporation but information which had been generated by the department itself, namely, the amount of the taxpayers' money which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in his wisdom, had decided to give corporations. I maintain that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is therefore incorrectly using section 13 of the act to prevent members of the House and the public from finding out who is getting multimillion dollar grants from the federal treasury.

Therefore, if Your Honour agrees that this is a legitimate question of privilege—I think it is and I am sure you will agree—I would move that this matter be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should advise the hon. member immediately that I have to disappoint him; I do not agree that this kind of question is a question of privilege that ought to be referred to a standing committee of the House and, in particular, to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By way of introduction to the brief remarks I will make regarding the hon. member's proposed motion, I might say that the notice he filed with the Chair earlier today is not, I suggest, entirely within or does not fulfil the requirements of the Standing Order. Hon. members are required by the Standing Order to indicate to the Chair, for the guidance of the Chair, the substance of the matter that they propose to raise by way of a question of privilege. I think I should suggest to the hon. member that it is not sufficient, and it does not fulfil the requirements of the Standing Order, simply to say that he proposes to raise a question of privilege having reference to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. But I say this only in passing; it is not the substance of the comments I propose to make.

The hon. member claims that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not supplying him or the House with certain information, which the hon. member claims the minister is required to do. I suggest respectfully to the hon. member that that is debate between himself and the minister. I really do not think it would be conducive to effective study and consideration of the business of the House if, every time a minister refused to give information for one reason or another and an hon. member felt that the information ought to be supplied to the House, the dispute were to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. That committee, I suggest, would then be overloaded with the business of dealing with such questions. I think this is a matter of argument between the hon. member and the minister.

Form of Committee Reports

• (1410)

The Standing Orders do provide ways and means by which hon. members can seek information by verbal or written questions, or by requiring the production of papers or documents. With all respect to the hon. member, I suggest that is the method or the procedure he should attempt to follow in accordance with the Standing Orders.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Second and third reports of Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development—Mr. Buchanan.

[Editor's Note: For text of above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to seek the floor a second time but I do so only for a few minutes as I think this might be the appropriate moment to refer to certain procedural difficulties arising from the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices which was presented to the House on Monday of this week.

Hon. members will have observed that there stands in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway a motion to concur in this report, and presumably this motion could come forward for debate as early as tomorrow.

I draw the attention of hon. members in particular to recommendation No. 6 of the report, which is to be found at page 234 of Votes and Proceedings for Monday, April 2. It states:

> That the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make specific moneys available to consumer groups to present briefs to various governmental boards, where appropriate.

It may be that there is available to the department funds to cover the recommendation I have alluded to, so perhaps the objection is not substantial or serious, but I feel that a direct recommendation of this nature appears to be a departure from the procedure and practices of the House. I would draw to the attention of hon. members, without reading it, citation 260(1) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition.

Hon. members will have observed also that the chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development has, a moment ago, tabled two reports of the committee, and it is possible that the House may be faced again with a motion to concur in these reports in the immediate future. I particularly draw the attention of hon. members to the recommendation dealing with the allocation of federal funds for the settlement of certain claims. Here again, the recommendation is a departure from the well established form which is to the effect that the government is required to give consideration to the advisability of a certain recommendation proposed by a committee. As hon. members will appreciate, this question really goes to the root of our whole system, and in my view the House should not embark lightly on a new procedural course which would appear to be at odds with the Standing Orders and, as I have said, with the long established practice of the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I make these observations at this point merely as a caution in order that members may consider the difficulty. I make no ruling. It may well be that hon. members can easily satisfy the Chair that in at least one instance there is no particular difficulty. Perhaps the Chair does not interpret correctly the word "recommend", and that a recommendation of a committee is not in itself binding on the government. But I do feel this is a matter of some importance which should concern all hon. members and which perhaps should be looked into further in due course, not necessarily today.

As I said, I am making these remarks at this time only so that hon. members may give some thought to the possibility that a point of order could be raised when concurrence in these reports is moved in the House later.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order which in effect has been raised by the Chair. I realize one is not supposed to question the Chair from the floor, but I wonder if I might pose this issue? Is the comment from the Chair a comment on the validity of the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, or does it involve the procedural acceptability of the motion for concurrence in that report?

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member says, the Chair should not be involved in a debate on procedural points. I think I have made the point sufficiently clear. I have raised it not as a formal issue but as a caution. I thought hon. members would want to give some advance consideration to the point I have raised for the guidance of hon. members. In any event, at the point when the motion for concurrence is proposed the Chair might be prepared to entertain the advice of hon. members on this matter, not in respect of the whole report but rather in respect of the particular recommendation contained in these reports.

Mr. Baldwin: I take it that what Your Honour is doing is filing a caveat which might have to be considered at the time a motion might be made which if passed, might place the House in the position of accepting the report. The practice of filing caveats is one this party takes so often, Mr. Speaker, in respect of government measures.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is correct, of course, in his interpretation of what I tried to say.

MANPOWER

PROPER USE OF FUNDS PROVIDED FOR CERTAIN PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on a subject which is of urgent necessity, concerning the Local Initiatives and Opportunities for Youth Programs.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

> That this House do appoint immediately a special committee made up of representatives of all parties to examine the possibility of entrusting the provinces and municipalities with the Local Initiatives and Opportunities for Youth Programs so that the funds appropriated for these agencies be used more adequately for the needs of the people.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity under Standing Order 43, namely, the issue of the increased telephone rates granted Bell Canada. Since I rose on this matter yesterday the Quebec Minister of Communications has expressed opposition to the increase and Bell has now filed its new rates with the commission, so they will become effective a week from today. Considering that these two new and important events add urgency to the situation, I am hopeful that all members will be persuaded that this motion should be agreed to without debate. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the difficult and complex issue of telephone rate increases be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and that the committee report its findings and recommendations to the House before April 11.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion under Standing Order 43 which requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I was going to introduce exactly the same motion as the one moved by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 95—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Department of Communications on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70, 1970-71, 1971-72?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms or individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. What contracts for publicity and/or information were awarded in the current fiscal year, what are the names and addresses of contractees, what are the amounts of money involved in each case and what is the purpose of each contract?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned: 1. Money spent on publicity and/or information: in 1968-69: this department came into existence April 1, 1969. Therefore there is no information available for fiscal year 1968-69. In 1969-70: Nil. In 1970-71: Nil. In 1971-72: Nil.

2. Not applicable.

3. Contracts awarded in fiscal year 1972-73: to John Doherty Co. Ltd., Ottawa, Ont., two contracts for a total of $9,800 to provide consultant and editorial services.

[English]

NEW JOBS—OFY, LIP, DREE

Question 283—Mr. Leggatt:

1. What was the total number of new jobs created in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, for each of the following government program or departments (a) OFY (b) LIP (c) DREE?

2. What was the total number of immigrants to Canada in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Secretary of State (Opportunities for Youth program), Manpower and Immigration and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. (a) 27,832 jobs were created in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, under the OFY program. (b) Records of jobs created were not maintained on a fiscal year basis. The nature of the program was such that its time span covered part of the fiscal year 1971-72 and part of fiscal year 1972-73. Therefore, the total of 92,000 jobs created is for the period to May 31, 1972. (c) Projects that were certified in commercial production from April 1, 1971 to March 31, 1972 and which were subsequently inspected by an officer of the Department for payment indicated that the number of jobs created was approximately 14,300. Details of the total jobs created by all programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion are not available; however, for industrial development projects under the Regional Development Incentives Act and Special Areas programs the figures are indicated above.

2. 117,568.

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES VANCOUVER SERVICE

Question No. 543—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Has Pacific Western Airlines applied to fly a Seattle-Vancouver service and, if so, what decision was rendered?

Order Paper Questions

2. Have complaints been registered about the present stop at Victoria and, if so, how many?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. No.

2. There are no complaints before the Air Transport Committee.

IMPORTS OF AUTOMOBILE PARTS FROM U.S.A.

Question No. 622—Mr. Rowland:

1. Is the government importing automobile components from the United States which contain chrome originally obtained in Southern Rhodesia and, if so, what was the value of the imported components involved for each of the years 1968 through 1972?

2. Is 1968 Order in Council 2339 still in effect and, if so, is it being applied with respect to direct and indirect importation of Rhodesian chrome?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Information not available.

2. Yes, the 1968 Order in Council 2339 is still in effect and is being applied with respect to direct and indirect importation of Rhodesian chrome.

CANADA-U.S.S.R. HOCKEY SERIES—RECEIPTS

Question No. 626—Mr. Rose:

What is Hockey Canada's share of (a) the receipts from the Canada-U.S.S.R. series (b) from the other games in Europe?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Hockey Canada is a Private Corporation, established under Part 2 of the Companies Act, and while the Federal Government makes a grant to Hockey Canada, the Department of National Health and Welfare has no authority to divulge Hockey Canada's share of (a) the receipts from the Canada-U.S.S.R. series (b) from the other games in Europe.

FEES PAID TO OFFICIALS OF HOCKEY CANADA

Question No. 627—Mr. Rose:

What were the amounts of fees, remunerations and salaries paid to all officials of Hockey Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Hockey Canada is a Private Corporation, established under Part 2 of the Companies Act, and while the Federal Government makes a grant to Hockey Canada, the Department of National Health and Welfare has no authority to divulge the amounts of fees, remunerations and salaries paid to all officials of Hockey Canada.

STUDY ON INCLUSION OF OPTOMETRY AND DENTAL SERVICES INTO MEDICARE

Question No. 684—Mr. Muir:

Has the Department of National Health and Welfare undertaken any studies on the inclusion of optometry and dental services into Medicare and, if so (a) what were the names of the studies (b) by whom were they undertaken (c) how much did each cost?

[Mr. Reynolds.]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The department periodically estimates the cost to the people of Canada of various health care services other than those covered by the major insurance programs—both under present arrangements and if provided as an insured service. Optometry and dental services are among the health care services considered. These estimates are prepared by experts within the department and the cost is absorbed as part of the annual program administration expenditure. The studies, being entirely in-house, are unnamed.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 774—Mr. Leggatt:

1. What was the total amount of money (a) applied for (b) granted under LIP, in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, in each of the following centres (i) Vancouver (ii) Winnipeg (iii) Toronto (iv) Montreal?

2. What was the total amount of money (a) applied for (b) granted under LIP, in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1972, for cultural grants in each of the following centres (i) Vancouver (ii) Winnipeg (iii) Toronto (iv) Montreal?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) This information cannot be made available without excessive cost as details of unsuccessful applications were not computerized. (b) (i) Vancouver: $6,147,618; (ii) Winnipeg: $5,291,098; (iii) Toronto: $4,864,347; (iv) Montreal: $18,400,235.

2. (a) This information cannot be made available without excessive cost as details of unsuccessful applications were not computerized. (b) (i) Vancouver: $832,236; (ii) Winnipeg: $207,868; (iii) Toronto: $906,015; (iv) Montreal: $1,156,307.

NEW HORIZONS PROGRAM, ALBERTA

Question No. 828—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Under the New Horizons program, who applied for and received grants to January 10, 1973, in the Province of Alberta?

2. What was the address of each applicant?

3. How much did each applicant receive?

4. What was the project undertaken by each applicant?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1, 2 and 3.

Name and Address	Amount Granted $
Centennial Club #25, c/o Mr. Peter Larsen, President 4737-34th Street, Red Deer, Alberta	1,000
Camrose Golden Club, c/o Mrs. Oma Huolt, President 4856-51 Street, Camrose, Alberta	600
Blackfalds Senior Citizens Cheemo Club, c/o Mr. E. Bergman, President	5,750

Name and Address	Amount Granted $
Box 244, Blackfalds, Alberta
Visiting Resource Volunteers, c/o Mr. O. S. Geiger, Chairman 2612 Toronto Crescent, Calgary, Alberta	1,200

4. Centenniel Club No. 25: The project entitled "The Village Inn", has two parts: the opening of a drop-in centre for elderly people that will bring together senior citizens from a village of 250 people and the surrounding area; and secondly, the opening of a craft shop in which senior citizens will work and then try to merchandise their wares.

Camrose Golden Club: The grant is for the project "Louder, Please", which will enable the club to purchase and install a public address system in its meeting hall. The Golden Club has 180 active senior citizens as members, some of whom, however, have hearing disabilities that hamper their efforts at becoming totally socially animated in the activities of the club.

Blackfalds Senior Citizens Cheemo Club: The grant will allow for the continuation of a good quality of life, both artistically and recreationally, for the senior citizens of Blackfalds, a community 90 miles south of Edmonton. The grant will help defray costs of providing a senior citizens' lounge, and will result in the inauguration of a number of activities that will involve senior citizen participants in the club itself, as well as with other organizations.

Visiting Resource Volunteers: The grant will enable an active group of retired persons and senior citizens to productively use their leisure time by visiting Calgary elementary schools and addressing the young children. Talks will vary but will draw upon the experiences and knowledge of the participants to discuss such things as the early years of settlement and development of Western Canada. The project helps overcome any generation gap and gives the elderly participants a meaningful role in the community. The grant covers materials, and transportation costs.

DAY CARE CENTRES

Question No. 830—Mr. Stackhouse:

Is it the intention of the government to convene a conference with the provinces to clarify jurisdiction over and responsibility for day-care centres?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The provinces clearly have jurisdiction over and responsibility for administering day care programs including the licensing of day care centres. The federal government's role is primarily a financial and consultative one. Under the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan, the provinces are reimbursed 50 per cent of shareable costs of operating day-care centres. In addition, a National Day Care Information Centre has been established within the Plan whose purpose it is to act as a clearing house for information on day-care. It is possible that this subject will be raised in the context of the over-all revision of the social security system which the provinces will undertake with the federal government this coming April.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES EMPLOYEES

Question No. 845—Mr. Andre:

1. For each year 1966 to 1971 inclusive, how many individuals employed at Canadian universities were exempted from paying income tax?

2. How many of these individuals subsequently became ineligible for income tax exemption?

3. For Parts (1) and (2), what was the distribution by province?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is concerned: 1, 2 and 3. Based on the records kept by this department, it is impossible to provide an answer to this question.

WELFARE TRAINING GRANTS

Question No. 869—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money was allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work?

2. How many people are now at recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants?

3. What are the amounts of the bursaries provided?

4. Was any money allocated for research projects in the field of social service?

5. Were any plans developed for research into appropriate use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In 1971-72, $327,150 was allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work.

2. In 1971-72, a total of 80 people attended recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants, 29 of which received fellowships and the remainder, provincial bursaries.

3. The amounts vary with the province, but the average appears to be approximately $3,000.

4. In 1971-72, $410,127 was allocated for research projects in the field of social service.

5. Several applications to this end were received in 1971-72 under the National Welfare Grants program of the Department of National Health and Welfare. One of these was supported to the extent of $17,215.

OFY 1972—CRISIS CENTRE, WINNIPEG

Question No. 888—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Did a contribution from Opportunities for Youth help finance a "crisis centre" at Winnipeg in 1972?

2. What other groups contributed to this "crisis centre"?

3. What was the extent of (a) OFY contribution (b) the contribution of each other source?

4. What was the described purpose of the "crisis centre"?

5. Who were the sponsors of the "crisis centre"?

Order Paper Questions

6. Who approved the OFY grant to this group?

7. What investigations preceded the decision to grant OFY funds to the "crisis centre" and by whom were the investigations carried out?

8. Was the grant to the Winnipeg "crisis centre" terminated prematurely and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) at whose direction?

9. Was Mr. Harold Mike Lewis the supervisor of the "crisis centre" and, if so (a) by whom was Mr. Lewis appointed (b) what investigations preceded his appointment (c) by whom were these investigations conducted?

10. Where is Mr. Lewis at this time?

11. Are any criminal or civil charges outstanding against Mr. Lewis by that or any other name, in Canada or any other country and, if so (a) what charges (b) in what name (c) in what country or countries?

12. Was Mr. Lewis a Canadian citizen at the time of his appointment as the supervisor of the "crisis centre"?

13. Was it a requirement of the OFY grant that (a) the project supervisor (b) each project staff member be a Canadian citizen?

14. Did officials of OFY investigate specifically to determine the citizenship of (a) Mr. Lewis (b) other staff members?

15. Is it a general requirement of the OFY Program that persons employed by OFY-funded projects be Canadian citizens or landed immigrants applying for Canadian citizenship and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what procedures are followed to determine the citizenship status of persons employed by OFY-funded projects?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Opportunities for Youth did not fund a crisis centre in Winnipeg in the summer of 1972.

2 to 14. Not applicable.

15. It is a general requirement that persons participating in Opportunities for Youth projects be Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. All project participants are required to sign the contract between the project and the Secretary of State which requires that all participants are either Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. If there exists any suspicion in the mind of the project officer that a participant is not of this status, the Immigration and Citizenship Registration authorities may be consulted.

DREE—NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES AFTER RECEIVING GRANTS

Question No. 900—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many industries declared bankruptcy after receiving grants from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in (a) 1968-69 (b) 1969-70 (c) 1970-71?

2. What was the total amount lost by the governemnt in (a) 1968-69 (b) 1969-70 (c) 1970-71?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. The following is a list of the number of companies which are bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act. The figures relate to the operations which became bankrupt during the control period of the relevant legislation (ADIA—36 months; RDIA—24 or 36 months). Therefore, this summary would not include companies that went bankrupt beyond the control period indicated above.

	Area Development Incentives Act	Regional Development Incentives Act

UNEMPLOYMENT IN DRUMMOND CONSTITUENCY AS OF FEBRUARY 1, 1973

Question No. 1,005—Mr. Boisvert:

1. How many workers were unemployed in the constituency of Drummond as of February 1, 1973, and of these, how many were (a) under welfare (b) recipients of Unemployment Insurance benefits (c) attending re-training courses?

2. How many persons applied for jobs to the Manpower Centre at Drummondville in 1972?

3. How many jobs were found by the Manpower Centre in 1972?

4. What is the average salary paid to those who found employment through the Manpower Centre at Drummondville?

5. What was the number of workers in the constituency of Drummond as of February 1, 1973?

[Translation]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission as follows: 1. As of February 1, 1973, there were 2,943 unemployed clients registered with the Drummondville Canada Manpower Centre. (a) Not available. (b) As of February 1, 1973 there were approximately 3,500 Drummond constituents in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits. (c) As of February 1, 1973, there were 369 clients from the Drummondville CMC in training. These clients are not included in the count of unemployed clients in (1) above.

2. In 1972, 7,250 new client registrations were received by the CMC, and 6,271 client registrations were revived by persons re-applying at the CMC one or more times in the year.

3. 3,987 placements were effected by the CMC in 1972.

4. Not available.

5. Not available.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT (1971)

Question No. 1,022—Mr. Hueglin:

1. To date, has there been a saving in welfare costs since the introduction of the new Unemployment Insurance Act (1971), and, if so, by how much?

2. What specific category or categories of welfare payments were affected by the introduction of the new Act?

3. How were the welfare payments referred to in Part 2 originally financed, and under what government jurisdiction do they lie at the stage when money is handed out to an individual?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The rate of increase in general assistance (welfare) costs, which had been in excess of 20 per cent per year for each of the two previous fiscal years, fell to an estimated 10 per cent for the 1972/73 fiscal year. Several factors have contributed to this decline, including: broader unemployment insurance coverage and higher benefits; the impact of financial support provided under the Local Initiatives Projects and Opportunities for Youth programs; increases in Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement payments; increased Canada Pension Plan benefits. During the past eighteen months several provinces have increased their general assistance rates. Because of the interaction of these various factors, it has not been possible to identify precisely the savings in welfare costs attributable solely to the Unemployment Insurance Act (1971).

2. The general assistance provisions of provincially administered social welfare programs were affected by the introduction of the new Act, and in particular, the payment of financial assistance to unemployed but employable persons whose resources are insufficient to meet their basic needs.

3. The welfare payments referred to are made to individuals by the provinces and/or their municipalities. The federal government shares 50 per cent of the cost on the basis of monthly provincial claims submitted in accordance with the Canada Assistance Plan agreements.

LIP GRANTS FOR PURPOSE OF DEVELOPING FACILITIES FOR SNOWMOBILES

Question No. 1,024—Mr. Kempling:

Have any LIP grants been made for the purpose of developing facilities for snowmobiles and snowmobilers and, if so (a) how many by province (b) what is the total expenditure by province (c) what is the total over-all expenditure?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DEEP SEA PORT IN PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Question No. 1,073—Mr. Oberle:

What commitment and contractual arrangements has the government entered into with contractors or local governments and what plans are being worked out in respect to the establishment of a deep sea port in Prince Rupert, B.C.?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: NHB has no commitment and contractual arrangements with contractors or local governments. NHB proposes the construction of a deep sea dock facility comprising some 42 acres at the Fairview site at Prince Rupert. DPW has now completed first stage design and specifications and NHB proposes to call for tenders this spring.

*REPLACEMENT FOR THE ARGUS LONG-RANGE MARITIME PATROL AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,276—Mr. Rowland:

1. Has the government now decided to purchase a replacement aircraft for the Argus long-range Maritime patrol aircraft rather than undertaking a major refit of the Argus aircraft and, if so (a) how many long-range patrol aircraft does the government intend to purchase (b) what is the total anticipated cost of the aircraft (c) of the total anticipated cost, how much will be spent in Canada?

2. What is the regional breakdown of the total expenditures in Canada on the aircraft?

3. Will Canadian content requirements, if any, be part of the formal contractual arrangements with the successful bidder?

4. What companies have made submissions to the government with respect to a long-range patrol aircraft?

5. On what date may an announcement with respect to the purchase of an aircraft be expected?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services as follows: 1. Yes. (a) Not yet known as the number could vary depending on the type of aircraft selected; (b) Cost will not be known with any precision until the various proposals have been received and studied. (c) The amount of Canadian industrial participation will be evaluated when contractor proposals are received.

2. The regional breakdown cannot be evaluated until contractor proposals are received.

3. Yes.

4. Requests for contractor's initial response have been issued to: Canadair Limited, The Boeing Company, Hawker Siddeley Aviation Limited, Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, McDonnell-Douglas Aircraft Company.

5. At the present time it is anticipated that the purchase contract for an aircraft will be awarded in the fall of 1974.

DREE—BREAKDOWN OF EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCE

Question No. 1,296—Mr. McKinnon:

What is the breakdown, by province, of the estimated expenditures in each region as outlined in the estimates for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under total program at page 22-4?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: The main estimates cannot be broken out on a provincial basis. The geographic distribution of incentives activity depends on the response of industry to the program and the geographic incidence of other program activity depends significantly on agreements that are in the process of being negotiated with the provinces.

DISTRIBUTION OF PAMPHLET "A WELCOME IS AWAITING YOU IN INDIAN COUNTRY"

Question No. 1,379—Mr. Atkey:

1. Is the pamphlet "Canada, A Welcome is Awaiting you in Indian Country", being distributed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development this year and (a) if so, what has been the extent of distribution for the past five years (b) if not, for what reason has distribution ceased?

2. Has the pamphlet been replaced by another pamphlet or pamphlets and, if so (a) what is the extent of distribution of the new pamphlets (b) what is the nature of the replacement?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The pamphlet "A Welcome is Awaiting you in Indian Country" ceased to be distributed early in 1972 when remaining stocks became exhausted. The pamphlet was distributed to (a) the Tourism Authority in each province for placement in Tourist Information Booths; (b) the Canadian Government Travel Bureau for distribution outside of Canada; (c) Information Services of the Department to satisfy enquiries.

2. The pamphlet is being replaced by a small, comprehensive directory treating all Indian operated tourist facilities in Canada. The Directory has been in preparation since before the supplies of the pamphlet became exhausted. It will be ready for distribution by June 1973 and will enjoy wide distribution through the normal tourist channels.

2. Yes, funds have been budgeted by Ministry of Transport.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—FUNDS CONTRACTED TO THE FIVE REGIONS OF CANADA

Question No. 1,534—Mr. McKenzie:

1. In the fiscal years 1968-69 to 1971-72, how much money was contracted to each of the five regions of Canada by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. What was this in per capita terms for each region?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The cost to answer to above question for the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70 and 1970-71 would be exorbitant. The manpower required is not available to research the files. However, we do have the figures for the fiscal year 1971-72.

1971-72 Region	1. Amount $	2. Per Capita $

NATIONAL REVENUE—REBATE OF SALES TAX

Question No. 1,543—Mr. McKenzie:

Since the construction of new schools permits a school board to claim a rebate of federal sales taxes amounting to 2.95 per cent of the contract price, will the Minister of National Revenue give consideration to allowing the same rebate of sales taxes on the purchases of new materials and equipment used in the renovation of old schools in order to allow for the utilization of existing buildings?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Consideration has been given to this matter but in view of the fact that the Excise Tax Act provides for relief specifically in respect of materials used in the construction of school buildings, there is no authority whereby the scope of this provision in the Statute may be enlarged by administrative action in order to include materials used in the renovation or repair of school buildings.

NUMBER OF VISITORS TO CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,662—Mr. Haliburton:

1. How many visitors registered at the Cape Breton Highlands National Park during the summers of (a) 1970 (b) 1971 (c) 1972?

2. How many such visitors were from outside the Province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The estimated attendance at Cape Breton Highlands National Park during the summers of 1970, 1971 and 1972 is shown below:

	1970	1971	1972
June	128,409	92,544	103,286
July	270,888	271,257	265,297
August	268,751	266,643	267,894
Total	668,048	630,444	636,477

2. Eighty-one per cent of the visitors to Cape Breton Highlands National Park were from outside the province of Nova Scotia in 1971. It is estimated that the proportion of visitors from outside the province would be approximately the same in 1970 and 1972.

*INFORMATION CONCERNING DISAPPEARANCE OF AIRCRAFT EN ROUTE TO HANOI, OCTOBER 18, 1965

Question No. 1,658—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What information has the Department of External Affairs been able to secure concerning the disappearance of the aircraft operating under the auspices of ICSC which carried Mr. J. W. Douglas Turner, an External Affairs Officer, and two other Canadians on board en route to Hanoi on October 18, 1965?

2. Did the Minister of External Affairs, when in Hanoi, bring up this matter with the authorities in North Viet Nam, in Laos or South Viet Nam and, if so, what was he able to ascertain?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Department of External Affairs has made repeated enquiries over the years to determine whether any information has come forward concerning the disappearance on October 18, 1965 of the ICSC aircraft with three Canadians on board. At the time of the disappearance of the aircraft extensive searches were undertaken. However, the aircraft was never found and the cause of its disappearance has never been ascertained. While in Hanoi, the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised this question with authorities of the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam and explained the circumstances, as far as they are known, of this incident. This enquiry was noted but it elicited no new information.

*DUTIES OF POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP, DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Question No. 1,779—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is a full and exact description of all duties and tasks performed by the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group in the Department of the Solicitor General?

2. Has any person attached to, on loan to, employed by, or on behalf of, the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group compiled information, dossiers or files of any kind on individuals serving as Members of Parliament since April 20, 1968 and, if so (a) for what reason were such files compiled (b) how many such files exist?

3. Has the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group in the Department of the Solicitor General directly or indirectly undertaken or authorized any form of electronic snooping on individuals or groups of individuals since its creation?

4. Has the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group in the Department of the Solicitor General furnished any information of any kind whatsoever at any time to any person attached to, on loan to, employed by, etc. the Office of the Prime Minister or to any other government department and, if so, how many times has this happened?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is: 1. The duties and tasks of the police and security planning and analysis group in the Department of the Solicitor General are: (a) to review and develop proposals for security policies in relation to the changing threat to Canadian security; (b) to review and analyze criminal activities, trends and developments which are of national interest and formulate proposals for government policy concerning crime and police procedures in relation to changing Canadian society; (c) to formulate proposals for general security policies and procedures concerning: (i) security of government buildings and installations, (ii) protection of specially designated personnel, (iii) security of classified information; (d) to receive, collate and evaluate data on the problems posed by subversion and criminal activities associated with social unrest; (e) to assist in the training of government security officers.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Since the police and security planning and analysis group is one of the principal agencies within the interdepartmental security structure, the exchange of information with security branches of other government departments and agencies is a continuous process.

Mr. Cossitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the starred question answered by the Solicitor General was a question I placed on the order paper a week ago. I would refer the minister to part four of the answer. I do not believe he answered the question at all. It was a vague, general statement. I asked specifically whether information of this kind was sent to the Prime Minister's office.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I did answer that question. I said it is sent on a continuous basis when it is necessary to do so.

Mr. Cossitt: It was very vague.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Allmand: On that same point, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants specific answers, let him put specific questions to me.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. There is a debate between the minister and the member on whether a question is specific and the extent to which it is specific. I do not think we should have debate on that point. The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, on January 16 I asked a starred question which was specific but I cannot get any answer at all, specific or vague. It is No. 438. The information is well known to the government. There is no reason the government should not answer this question. It has made the appointments and it certainly ought to be willing to inform parliament.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, a week ago I rose on a question of privilege concerning a number of questions I had on the order paper that had been sitting on the order paper since the beginning of the session on January 4. The parliamentary secretary did attempt to facilitate the matter to some degree, and he answered two or three of them. Question No. 22 asks specifically:

—how many individuals who were defeated candidates in the federal election of October 30, 1972, have become employees of either the Prime Minister or cabinet ministers or how many have assumed a position with the government that is paid for from the federal treasury?

I realize that there may still be one or two defeated candidates who have not been employed by the government, but I would think that at this stage of the game the government could compile the names and provide me with the information. Of course, there may be two or three who are still feeling badly because they have not yet been looked after by the government.

Mr. Sharp: You fellows looked after Perry Ryan, all right.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might inquire about questions Nos. 1,385 and 1,386 standing in my name since March 2. They deal with a very controversial matter in connection with income tax policy as applied to part-time farmers.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I have asked about those questions and I hope to have the answers next Monday, if possible.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, may I draw the parliamentary secretary's attention to question No. 276 standing in my name since January 12. It asks in effect whether there will be a reduction in the staff of Air Canada's finance department located in Winnipeg. While the answer may cause some embarrassment to the government, it should be fairly simple to reply to the question.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 41 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions mentioned by the parliamentary secretary, does the House agree that notice of motion No. 41 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND QUEBEC INVOLVING FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PROGRAM

Motion No. 41—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, telegrams, memoranda, and other documents between the Government of Canada and the Province of Quebec involving the Family Income Security Program (Bill C-170, 4th Session, 28th Parliament).

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion No. 159.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATED TO LIP No. M-1101 BY PEACE IN THIS HOUSE INC.

Motion No. 159—Mr. Rowland:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all documents, correspondence and memoranda related to the consideration of LIP No. M-1101 "OMNIBUS", submitted by Peace in this House Inc.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the papers requested are internal departmental memoranda and reflect on the personal competence or character of an individual. As such they are confidential and not of a public or official character. In view of this I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Rowland: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, standing in my name since February 26 are notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 161 to 185 inclusive asking for a copy of the time schedule established for individual pulp and paper mills in British Columbia within which they must comply with the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations promulgated by the government. I wonder why there is this long delay in providing that information?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Are the remaining notices of motions allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

NATIONAL POLICY—POSSIBILITY OF TABLING REPORTS BEFORE EASTER—PROVINCIAL INVOLVEMENT—RELATIONSHIP TO INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would remind him that on January 16 he said that he would be "putting some reports on the table of the House with regard to a national energy policy". On January 10 he said it would be some time during the course of the spring that this would be done. I should like to ask whether he can assure the House that these reports with regard to a national energy policy will be tabled before the projected Easter recess or before he goes to China?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker; we anticipate they will be available immediately after the recess.

Mr. Stanfield: With the request apparently coming forward now from a number of provinces for a national conference with regard to the formation or development of a national energy policy, I should like to ask the minister what the government's attitude is toward this request. Is the government disposed to have such a national policy involving the provinces or does the government intend to develop its own policy and announce it with such consultation with the provinces as it sees fit?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the parliamentary committee about a month ago, the proposal of the government is to lay energy studies on the table and then by consultation both with the provinces and interested members of the general public we hope to develop a national consensus on the lines that energy policy changes should take. In this respect the comments made by Premier Davis in Calgary last night very much fit the plan we have been proposing. I would certainly be looking forward to his co-operation in due course. I think he was talking about an autumn timetable and that may fit very well.

Mr. Stanfield: Do I take it from the minister's reply that he is favourable to the sort of conference that Premier Davis was requesting? May I ask what his attitude is on the position taken by the Premier of Ontario that a national energy policy must be related, among other things, to a national industrial strategy? Can the minister give us any information as to when the government's national industrial strategy is to be announced?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think a national energy policy is really more pervasive in our community than a national industrial strategy. As I say, I am glad to have the support of Premier Davis in the timetable I had set out to the committee a month ago, and I will be glad to have his support in this regard.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister again, recognizing that a national energy policy is related to a national industrial strategy only among other things, as I put it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh,!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, now!

Mr. Stanfield: That is exactly as I put it before, Mr. Speaker. I think it is time the Minister of Finance started to listen to me a little more carefully.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister whether the national energy policy he is developing will be related, among other things, to an industrial strategy and when we may expect to learn what the government's national industrial strategy is?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. As to the second part, perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to refer to my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for a timetable.

NATIONAL GAS—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS TO PROTECT CANADIAN CONSUMERS AND INCREASE EXPORT PRICE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the request of Premier Davis for a federal-provincial conference on a national energy policy arises from the fact that Canadian consumers of natural gas are faced with the prospect of having an increase in price of 10 cents per thousand cubic feet, while at the same time we are exporting gas at prices that are resulting in a loss of at least $150 million per year to Canada, has the minister any proposals now to put before the House or between now and Easter, or any proposals that he intends to put before the suggested conference on how he intends to protect the Canadian gas consumer on the one hand while at the same time securing a fair and just price for our exported gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, the chairman of the National Energy Board put out in very extensive detail the returns from the export price of gas and the initiatives that he and the board have been taking in the very recent past. Therefore I have to take issue with the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's assumptions. I think we can expect with regard to the price of natural gas domestically that in the process of bargaining between the purchaser and the seller it is very likely that the price of this commodity will increase. The discussion of a national energy policy, however, will be related to the use of this and other commodities over the longer run. For that reason, of course, we would be planning on a federal-provincial conference, as the Premier of Ontario suggested some time during the autumn.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact the chairman of the National Energy Board admitted before a standing committee of the House that our export gas was underpriced and in view of the fact the Alberta energy board estimated that deficiency to be 10 to 20 cents per thousand cubic feet, has the minister issued any instructions to the National Energy Board to bring the price of export gas in line so that Canada will get a fair return for the gas it is exporting to the United States?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the chairman made no such admission and the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board made no comment of that kind either. The figures he was referring to were the figures in the Stanford Research Institute Study which, of course, are a matter of some debate both within and outside the industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary and then, before continuing with supplementaries, including the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, the hon. member for Calgary North and others, I will recognize the hon. member for Richmond. For the moment, we will have the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on his supplementary.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that the Liberal party has been in government now for ten years—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: —and in view of the fact we have been waiting during that period for a national energy policy, may I ask the minister if he can assure the House that we will have a national energy policy before we run out of energy resources?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The hon. member for Richmond.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW POLICY—DISCUSSION WITH EASTERN FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

In view of his statement in the House around mid-February that he was drafting a new policy for the price of feed grain in eastern Canada, can he say if in fact something has been done in that connection? If so, when will this new policy be enunciated?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne announced that it would be before the new crop year. We are working on this and hope to announce it even before that. This is a joint project with the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. We are doing a lot of work on it and are trying to come up with a policy that will be satisfactory to users of feed grains no matter where they are in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I have a supplementary Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Agriculture says that this new policy is worked out in co-operation with the Canadian Wheat Board. Can he tell us if it is also made in consultation with organizations in eastern Canada?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

NATIONAL POLICY—SUGGESTED WITHHOLDING OF ANNOUNCEMENT UNTIL UNITED STATES INDICATES ITS POLICY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. From his answers to the Leader of the Opposition I detected that he has considerable rapport on the planning of joint policy-making with the premiers of Ontario and Alberta. Did the premiers of Alberta and Ontario agree with the minister's position that Canada should not declare a national energy policy until the Americans have stated their policy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not specifically discussed this with the two premiers. I am glad, however, that Premier Davis has supported the position I take. May I just say to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that we have had a policy for ten years.

• (1440)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will try again. What I am trying to get from the minister is a declaration of the government's intention not to announce Canadian energy policy until the Americans have stated theirs.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. member in committee and I just said to his leader that it is not the intention of the federal government to announce a uniquely Canadian energy policy. We intend to put the studies before the public, before parliament and before the provincial governments and by a process of consensus achieve this. I cannot be sure when President Nixon will have his policy ready, but I know we will be ready with our studies soon. After that, it will be a matter for the Canadian political process to decide what changes will be made in the energy policy we have had in this country since the Borden Commission.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY OIL PIPELINE—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Thursday, March 22, and again on April 2, on the subject of a Mackenzie Valley oil pipeline to move Alaska crude oil to market and representations to the United States on this matter, the minister spoke of "measures taken just over a year ago by myself and repeated on a number of occasions since then to the American administration." On February 14 the minister said, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Calgary North on the same subject:

> Mr. Speaker, the "not so long ago" to which the hon. member refers was 11 months ago. The government has no intention of renewing its representations.

Will the minister say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member respectfully that perhaps his preamble is a little too long. Perhaps he might come to the question. I gather he was just reaching the question in any event.

Mr. Bawden: Will the minister say which of his answers was correct?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): They both were, Mr. Speaker. We repeated to the American administration the statement I made, which was tabled in the House in the last session. The hon. member, as a new member, might want to look it up. They were—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt, but I think the supplementaries have developed to the point that we have entered on debate. Perhaps we might try another subject for a few moments.

FINANCE

FORECAST BUDGETARY BALANCE FOR CURRENT FISCAL YEAR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact we now have for the first 11 months figures for expenditures and revenues showing that there is a surplus of over $1 billion for the first 11 months, are the Minister of Finance and the department still staying with their prediction that we will have a budgetary balance for the current fiscal year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must once again remind the hon. gentleman, that to get the total cash position of the government, he will have to look at both the budgetary and non-budgetary figures. As hon. members are aware, there is usually a substantial increase in expenditures in the final month, and particularly in the 30-day period after the end of the fiscal year which is permitted for the final allocation. I would think that at that time the position would be known with a little more accuracy than it is now.

Mr. Baldwin: How is the unemployment insurance fund?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MISTREATMENT OF INDIANS AT GRAND RAPIDS, MANITOBA—DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. Has his attention been drawn to complaints by Indians living in Grand Rapids, Manitoba, that they have been mistreated by RCMP officers and to the subsequent investigation of those complaints by the provincial ombudsman?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have been made aware of this incident and disciplinary measures have been taken against the RCMP officers in question.

Mr. Orlikow: Did the disciplinary action taken against these RCMP officers consist essentially of transferring those who were guilty of misdemeanors to other positions in the province of Manitoba?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will get that information and supply it to the hon. member. I do not have it now.

Mr. Orlikow: While the minister is looking into this question, would he give consideration to whether, if that was the disciplinary action, he considers it to be sufficient in light of the very serious nature of the charges?

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OBTAIN ASSURANCE FROM CHARTERED BANKS OF NO INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the Royal Bank of Canada recently broke the interest rate ceiling set by the minister last June, and as increases in interest rates at this time will of course slow down the economy and make the provision of jobs more difficult, has the minister been in touch with the presidents of the Canadian chartered banks and has he received from those gentlemen an assurance that they have no intention of raising interest rates at this time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been in conversation with the Governor of the Bank of Canada who has the initial responsibility for monetary policy and I am watching the current situation both from the domestic and the international point of view.

Mr. Hees: Of course, the minister made no attempt to answer my question. Has he received any assurance either from the presidents of the chartered banks or from the Governor of the Bank of Canada that interest rates will not be raised at this time? Yes or no? Come on, answer.

COLLECTING OF CERTAIN COINS BY AMERICANS FOR MELTING IN UNITED STATES BECAUSE OF SILVER CONTENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance a practice that has since been expanding—indeed, it has become a racket—whereby Americans come over here with machines, pick up Canadian silver coinage, take it to the United States and there make very large profits. What is the government going to do about this?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful that the right hon. gentleman brought this to my attention two weeks ago. It is true that the price of silver has been rising, following the price of gold. There has been some impetus in the buying up of silver coin and exporting it in order to break it down. I have reviewed this matter carefully and when action is taken I will advise the right hon. gentleman of just what has been done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: While consideration is being given to this matter a group of Americans, particularly connected with trucking, are making a bonanza. I ask whether or not an order in council should not be passed, similar to the one brought in in 1970 which prevented this kind of thing taking place unless a permit was secured. That order in council was repealed in 1971. Will the minister not now do something about bringing in an order in council to prevent this racket continuing?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, of course the primary responsibility is to protect the currency here in Canada. As the right hon. gentleman knows, under the Currency Act there is only jurisdiction with respect to money being melted down within the country. He is also aware that since we are dealing with post-1968 currency, which was primarily in nickel, that to date this has not affected the amount of currency in circulation. I have looked into the precedent referred to by the right hon. gentleman and if action is taken it will be announced in due course.

TRANSPORT

TRAIN DERAILMENTS—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ACCIDENTS

Mr. Jack Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of my previous questions and in light of the fact that the Canadian Transport Commission report for 1972, just presented, states that there were 327 train derailments in 1972 compared with 271 in 1971, will the minister now appoint a special committee to investigate these accidents thoroughly?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what the commission is doing right now and I am expecting a report.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON RAILWAY SAFETY

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Transport. On January 30, during a debate in the House on railway safety, the parliamentary secretary indicated that the report on railway safety was almost ready and would be available soon. Can the minister now tell us when this report on general railway safety will be ready?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement was quite accurate.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUGGESTED DECENTRALIZATION OF FUTURE CONSTRUCTION TO AREAS OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister consider the development of a policy directing future government building expansion intended to accommodate viable national services to areas of Canada experiencing high unemployment, provided that such services can function efficiently?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question, and for his patience. For some time now the government has, as a matter of policy, sought new opportunities to decentralize national services and facilities with a view to making Canadians more conscious of the federal presence and with a view to improving the services and to offering employment. The location of certain operations, like the mint in Winnipeg, is an indication of this. There are some services which inevitably, for reasons of efficiency, must be located in the national capital, but I fully expect to continue decentralizing, as has been the practice, and I hope the constituency of the hon. member will not be forgotten.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF SUBSIDIES TO WOMEN TO ATTEND FARM MANAGEMENT COURSES

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Since rural men qualify for government subsidies while attending courses in farm management and rural farm women do not, despite the fact that many of them are involved in farm management, has the minister given consideration to changing government policy so that rural women can be included under this program?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): This is the first time the matter has been brought to my attention. I will certainly investigate.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DEATH OF INDIAN AT FORT ALEXANDER RESERVE—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the unfortunate incident that occurred at the Fort Alexander Indian Reserve in Manitoba on Saturday, March 31, which resulted in the death of a young native resident of that reserve, may I ask whether the Solicitor General has received a report from the RCMP or from officials in his department in connection with the shooting incident?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I have received a brief report but I do not have sufficient information at this time to answer the hon. member's question fully. I shall be pleased to do so as soon as I have received a full report.

HEALTH

INDEMNIFICATION OF VICTIMS OF THALIDOMIDE—MEASURES TAKEN BY DEPARTMENT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising from recent discussions related to the tragic thalidomide problem. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to the progress being made which would relieve the great anxiety felt by the parents of the children concerned?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed met recently with representatives of Richardson Merrell (Canada) Ltd., and I am at present writing to all parents of thalidomide children whose claims have not been settled and who do not at the moment have legal representation.

After my meeting with the company's representatives, I first recommended all parents find themselves a lawyer, and the company agreed to pay all legal costs that the parents incurred in Canada, in all cases where the claim was recognized as legitimate.

The company also agreed to let me know periodically of any information it might obtain about the victims. In all cases, the company will attempt to have the settlements approved by the chief justice of the highest court in the province concerned.

Moreover, the department and the company will be periodically exchanging any information that might help identify new cases of thalidomide victims. The company has also indicated its firm intention of reaching settlements in good faith with all parties concerned.

INDUSTRY

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY—INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, following the suggestion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he is developing a strategy of industrial development for Canada and when we may expect a statement in this regard?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have made a number of statements on the subject. The Speech from the Throne set out clearly that the government is committed to a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada. From time to time I have had occasion to outline some of these policies, as have the Minister of Finance and other ministers. The evolving position has, I think, been fairly clear with respect to the industrial strategy question. In addition to broad band industrial policies in support of Canadian industry, we will have a number of sector policies, or strategies for various industries.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the minister to meet with the provinces to involve the provinces directly in the development of an industrial strategy for Canada? I have in mind a conference designed to promote such a strategy.

Mr. Gillespie: As I have made clear on earlier occasions—I am not sure that the Leader of the Opposition understands this distinction—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: —we are not talking about one big blueprint which for all time will represent what might be described as an industrial strategy for Canada. We are talking about a set of coherent industrial policies for Canada—this is our position—and an industry by industry strategy. A very good example is the textile industry. There is quite clearly an industrial strategy for the textile industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: One can just hear Paul Martin standing up and making a speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. I hope the minister is able to conclude his remarks as quickly as possible so that we may continue with the next question.

Mr. Gillespie: As to the second part of the hon. gentleman's question with respect to consultation with the provinces, within the next ten days I shall be meeting with all the ministers of industry of the various provinces of Canada to discuss, among other things, this question.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): The minister has told us there would not be one over-all blueprint but a series of blueprints. Will he be making a statement in the near future with respect to some of the specific proposals in terms of goals or bench marks in order that Canadian public opinion may have some means of measuring the success of these various policies?

Mr. Gillespie: I am not sure we shall be able to satisfy the hon. member with respect to the question of bench marks, but I hope to satisfy him and other hon. members with a plan which will clearly identify those industries that require a strategy for themselves. I have mentioned one. There is another at the present time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

OSOYOOS BAND—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPLY TO LETTER CONCERNING APPEAL AGAINST ELECTIONS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. An urgent appeal has been made to me by members of the Osoyoos Indian Band, British Columbia. I would ask the minister when he intends to answer the letter of December 21, 1972, in connection with the appeal lodged against the elections of December 14, 1972, the situation being that all band matters have been completely at a standstill since January 24, 1973?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether it is in order simply to ask a minister when he intends to reply to a letter. In any event, the minister may reply briefly.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I will have to check once more. I believe an inquiry is going on at the moment and that the matter is in the hands of the judge. But I will check further and inform the hon. member.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED ADVICE TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE APPLICANTS TO APPLY FOR JOBS DIRECTLY

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Having regard to the policy followed by his department under which officials of the unemployment insurance claimants' assistance program work in close co-operation with Manpower in finding job placements for the unemployed, can the minister explain why applicants for unemployment insurance benefits in my constituency are being advised by unemployment insurance officials to apply for jobs directly to employers rather than through the Manpower office, and why Manpower is not consulted by U.I.C. in order to co-ordinate job placement opportunities?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I should like to see the specific details so that I can determine whether there is any irregularity, but the general practice is that in addition to being registered with Manpower claimants should also exercise their own initiative in seeking jobs and look anywhere they can.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—INQUIRY RESPECTING TRANSPORT COMMISSION DECISION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications.

Could he tell the House whether the Canadian Transport Commission must ask his advice or inform him before taking a decision?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): The answer to that question is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is out of order and the minister answered too quickly. I point out to the hon. member that such a question is out of order. If he has another question to ask, I will recognize him for that purpose. He could perhaps try to ask an acceptable question.

CONGRATULATIONS ON 125th ANNIVERSARY OF 8th CANADIAN HUSSARS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, of which I have given him notice. Does the minister agree that the 125th anniversary today of the 8th Canadian Hussars (Princess Louise's), the original New Brunswick regiment and the oldest serving unit in the Canadian Armed Forces, is worthy of note now or, if the Speaker so rules, at the time of adjournment?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to say to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal that I am aware that today is the 125th anniversary of this oldest serving Canadian regiment. I would be pleased to join him in expressing congratulations and best wishes to this famous Canadian regiment.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY ON WORK PERMITS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the frustration and the great anxiety facing thousands of Canadian university students who have to obtain a work permit in order to work this summer, is the minister going to make an announcement in a few days to clear up this very difficult problem?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be making some comment on the matter before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration tomorrow afternoon, I believe.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps my supplementary is in the form of a recommendation to the minister. Will the minister, in his statement, ensure that he makes it clear that students will be given an opportunity through work permits in the summer to carry on their education?

When will the minister make a statement with respect to the implementation of this report?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to deliver a statement to the House but I can tell the hon. member that we have continued discussions with the Ontario government and that this is a joint project because some parts of the canal system are provincial government property and others belong to the federal government. We are trying to unite our efforts to obtain the most concrete results possible.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED CURTAILMENT OF IMPORTS OF BEEF CATTLE FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. As a result of the minister's answer to a question from my colleague last Friday in the House to the effect that he was not aware that there were thousands of cattle being imported into Canada, and since it is now quite obvious that Canada, particularly Ontario, is receiving much heavier than normal imports, of United States beef on the hoof, do the minister and the government not consider the situation serious enough to curtail these imports by means of the powers invested in the government for such emergencies, namely, the legality of the unknown deposit of stilbestrol?

Mr. Speaker: That is a representation rather than a question. The hon. member has to assume that his representation is noted.

INDIANS AFFAIRS

REPORTED COURT DECISION GRANTING NATIVE BROTHERHOOD PERMISSION TO FILE CAVEAT ON MAJOR PORTION OF MACKENZIE VALLEY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development based on press reports of a decision of Mr. Justice Morrow of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories granting permission to file a caveat on behalf of the Native Brotherhood of the territories over a major portion of the whole of the Mackenzie valley. Does the government intend to take any action with respect to that decision, if it is reported accurately, and, if so, what action?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the hon. member did not quite understand the newspapers. The judge has taken the case under consideration and did not render any final decision. He has authorized the parties to prepare their case and a hearing will take place on May 15. As can be expected, I think the federal government and the territorial government will make representations as will the Indians.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I have one supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the hearings that will be held before Mr. Justice Morrow. Is it the intention of the government to be represented at those hearings by counsel?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, no decision has been reached as yet but I should think so.

LAND USE PERMIT TO COMINCO AT WRIGLEY—CONSULTATION WITH NATIVE PEOPLE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I wonder whether the minister would tell the House if the land use permit issued to Cominco at Wrigley in March was issued in consultation with the native people in that area?

Mr. Chrétien: What was the place again?

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I asked whether the land use permit issued to Cominco at Wrigley in March, which is the area that started this whole question of the restraining order, was issued in consultation with the native people in the area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as a rule, my department never fails to consult the Indian and Eskimo communities when there are developments and in this particular case, I shall inquire and report to the hon. member. VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPORT OF JOINT STUDY GROUP ON BASIC RATE OF DISABILITY PENSION—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION BEFORE EASTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs and it relates to the report of the joint study group on the basic rate of the war disability pension, which was endorsed unanimously by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Can the minister say when the bill implementing this recommendation will be placed before parliament?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this report has received some study by the government and it is coming back again on April 16. We planned on getting it there before that, but due to other matters that needed to be taken care of previous to that time we were not able to do so. As I say, it will be before the government again on April 16, and if I have the permission of the government I hope progress will be made on the report and that we will be able to proceed with the enactment of legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the likelihood that such a bill would receive quick passage by the House, will the minister make every effort to get it to us before Easter?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will make every effort to do that.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE SUPPLIES SUFFICIENT TO MEET DOMESTIC AND EXPORT REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that a recent news release from the International Wheat Council indicates that wheat supplies throughout the world are becoming scarce, and in view of the fact that the United States and the Argentine are restricting exports of wheat, would the minister assure the House that Canada has sufficient supplies on hand to meet its export commitments and still retain a reasonable reserve for domestic purposes in the event of a reduced wheat crop in Canada this year?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House easily about the availability of supplies to meet our export commitments. Indeed, I can tell the House that the Canadian Wheat Board is very carefully assessing not only our own future needs but the regular supplies which our very good customers count on receiving from us, and are planning their sales accordingly. The Canadian Wheat Board is continuing to make forward sales of wheat in view of the supplies we have on hand.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PRESENTATION OF MEASURE RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

On March 14 last, I put to him a question concerning the official languages and, on that occasion, the Prime Minister answered that he expected to be putting something on the order paper within two weeks at the latest, that would provide the House with information.

Is the Prime Minister in a position to say when he will enlighten the House on the nature of that something?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will indeed see that it is something when it comes.

As concerns the date, I apologize to him and to the House for having been too optimistic about that date. I hope it is soon, but it will definitely not be within a few days.

INCOME TAX

LAND VALUATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF APPEAL

Mr. Dan Hollands (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue concerning the land evaluation taking place in Canada for tax purposes. Will he inform the House whether the property owners whose properties have been appraised for tax purposes have been notified and, if so, is there an appeal procedure to handle these evaluations?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the valuations that are taking place are for the purpose of future reference. They do not necessarily have any status in law at this point. Valuations from any source can be considered. This information is being gathered to assist parties in the future determination of values.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. How can one appeal some five, six or ten years from now when that same assessment is put forward by the department?

Mr. Stanbury: That is not the assessment, Mr. Speaker. The assessment would take place at the time of disposition, and any owner is free to make that kind of valuation himself or obtain one.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS OF GREAT LAKES—GOVERNMENT STUDY TO PROVIDE GREATER SAFEGUARDS AGAINST PROPERTY DAMAGE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In light of the information sent to him by a number of Ontario municipalities, including the borough of Scarborough, what plans has he or the government for initiating a study of the high water level situation in the Great Lakes with a view to gaining greater control of the water level in future, greater safeguards against property damage and greater protection for property owners in municipalities in the area? What type of study, if any, is being planned in consultation with other governments or on the part of the federal government alone?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there have been very extensive studies under way, some of them for a number of years, in co-operation not only with the government of Ontario but with the United States and the governments of those states adjoining the Great Lakes.

ELECTIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION THIS SESSION RESPECTING CANDIDATE AND PARTY EXPENSES

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the strong possibility of an election in the not too distant future—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson: —will the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government plans to introduce legislation to regulate election expenses of candidates and parties before the end of this session, as recommended by various commissions and a committee of this House?

An hon. Member: The coalition is crumbling.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would be the first to note that the premise to that question is hypothetical in character. Having said that, I can only remind the House that we did bring such legislation before the last parliament, but unfortunately it did not have the support of the parties opposite. We do intend to bring forward legislation on the same subject as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the right hon. member for Prince Albert has a supplementary question, after which the Chair will call orders of the day.

DISTRIBUTION OF KITS TO ENUMERATORS—POSSIBILITY OF EARLY ELECTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should not like to leave this hypothetical question up in the air. I would ask the Prime Minister whether there is any significance in the fact that enumerators' kits are being sent out this week to all returning officers by the Chief Electoral Officer, bearing in mind the fact that in 1972 the same course was followed three months before the election?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is significance in that fact. It is related to the fact that the Chief Electoral Officer stated publicly a month or two ago, I believe, that an election would not be easily held until perhaps June because of the importance of getting a lot of material printed and distributed. He is now taking steps to make sure that an election will be possible and will not be held up for technical or constitutional reasons, if an election were deemed to be desirable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the right hon. gentleman saying there are technical reasons why these kits should go out at this time, other than because of a contemplated election on his part?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, hon. members know that the mails are slow in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to Question No. 1,849, in 29 parts, appearing on the notice paper in the name of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I know it will not proceed to the order paper until Monday, but I want to enter a caveat at this time reserving my right to argue against the procedural admissibility of this question or some of its parts.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the slanderous statement first made in respect of the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet). I rise at this time to raise an objection on his behalf.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW BILL

PROVISIONS RESPECTING ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL OF CANADIAN BUSINESS ENTERPRISES AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW BUSINESSES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-132, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some discussions about the progress of this legislation. To help push the government into getting some legislation through before that hypothetical event takes place, and in order that we can get the income tax bill before us as soon as possible so we can redress the many inequities it contains, it is suggested that we might agree to an order of the House that all questions needed to be put to have second reading should be put before six o'clock tonight, and that speeches be limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think this suggestion should be processed through the usual channels.

An hon. Member: In other words, you disagree.

Mr. Speaker: As I understand it, the suggestion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is that there should be further discussion among party representatives. If that is the case, we will proceed for the moment by recognizing the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk).

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, when I began my remarks prior to the adjournment last night, I suggested this bill was not one which came to grips with the problem of regaining Canadian control of our economy. I said it was not the kind of clearcut measure the Canadian public expects from this government. It does not take into account regional differences. It does not provide for sufficient consultation with the provinces. In fact, it is essentially the same piece of legislation which was presented to parliament about a year ago. At that time the NDP opposed the bill. Now, they say they will support it and suggest it is an example of the kind of good which flows from that party holding the balance of power in the House of Commons. At the same time their leader condemned the government, the Liberals in general, and the Conservatives as being in favour of the same things in so far as our economic policies are concerned.

I pointed out also that, in spite of that statement, the Leader of the NDP supported the government on its economic policies on the Vote at the conclusion of the budget debate. Because the members of the NDP talk one way and vote another, it has been difficult for us as well as for anybody else to know exactly where they stand on any particular issue. I said that this bill was negative and that its intent was based on restriction and suppression. Our policy is the opposite. It is based on the positive approach of encouraging something to happen rather than preventing something happening. We feel the desired goal can be achieved by encouraging something better to happen than is happening right now.

A policy on foreign ownership which proposes to lead to Canadian control of our economy must be tied in with the country's total economic strategy. Conversely, the total economic strategy must be developed in such a way that greater encouragement is offered to Canadian participation than to foreign participation in respect of the development of Canadian resources. This, of course, must be done in close consultation with all the provinces and territories to ensure that central policies are not in conflict with the needs and plans of the various regions of the country.

When I spoke yesterday, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) wanted to know what our policies are. He has fallen asleep again in the usual way. However, I want to outline roughly what I have been suggesting the policies should be. First of all, we must immediately implement a full employment policy aimed at rapid expansion of the Canadian economy by taking measures which our spokesmen outlined during the budget debate and on subsequent occasions. We must make changes in the tax laws of a nature which would encourage Canadian entrepreneurship, Canadian enterprises and Canadian investment, again as we outlined during the last campaign and during the budget debate. Contrary to the policy of the NDP as stated by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who would apparently remove from the Canadian scene the principle of private ownership, I think we should encourage the small private entrepreneur to develop to his full capacity. We must take steps to encourage labour intensive industrial development to satisfy the Canadian need for jobs as well as to balance our economic policy, the primary objective of which in the past has been the exploitation of natural resources. Research and development in Canada must be encouraged and undertaken in order to ensure a rapidly developing and expanding economy for Canadians. On Canadian terms, methods must be found to ensure that more and more manufacturing and processing type industrial development is carried on in Canada to increase the emphasis on the export of finished products as opposed to the present emphasis on the export of raw materials. As I see it, Canada's future development is embodied in a national development strategy designed to achieve these goals.

I was disappointed by the statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) today when he intimated the government had no industrial development strategy and that its approach was one of a piecemeal nature dealing with emergencies as they occurred in one particular sector of the economy. I do not think that is good enough. I think Canadians expect something a little better than that. In many ways, because of the approach of the present government during the past decade, we have been losing not only from the point of view of the export of raw materials but also because by this action we export jobs. The people of other countries take our raw materials, develop them into finished products and export those finished products back to us. This means that those countries are using our resources to create jobs for their people, while our people need the jobs.

Second, these countries profit from the sale of the finished product to us and again Canada loses because we should have the profit from the sale of the finished product. There must be more flexibility in our financial institutions as well, in order to provide more venture capital from existing Canadian resources. In cases where foreign capital is encouraged to come in, steps should be taken to ensure that it comes in the form of debt capital rather than equity capital, which has been the method by which it has been coming. We must also make a massive effort to increase, and perhaps acquire, control of some of the major foreign companies which are functioning within our borders. Furthermore, we must take some steps in the area of labour unions to ensure that these are Canadian controlled and operated. Canadian labour leaders have admitted that their long term interest would be best served by getting more autonomy and control over their own affairs.

I was somewhat surprised to find that the hon. member for York South, and so far as I know all the members of his party, failed completely to make any reference to this aspect of Canadian economic nationalism. I think Canadian unionists are becoming increasingly resentful of being treated as a branch plant operation by remote and insensitive union leaders. The growing national sentiment in Canada within the labour movement must be used to Canadian advantage, and guided by responsible and experienced men within the movement in such a way that union decisions, union activities and union influence would be working in the interest of Canadians. I see this as equally important if not more so than the insistence on having corporations acting as good corporate citizens.

To sum up, the Progressive Conservative party recognizes the urgent need for increased Canadian participation in our economy. We propose policies which will ensure the development of Canada by and for Canadians. We believe that any effective approach in this country toward increasing Canadian participation and ownership in the economy must be a joint federal-provincial effort involving the closest consultation and co-operation with the provinces. We must ensure that any policies designed to monitor or regulate foreign investment in our country will be designed in such a way as to strengthen Canadian unity, which makes it all the more important that we have provincial involvement.

Bill C-132, which is merely a restriction of foreign takeovers, certainly does not ensure the survival, let alone the expansion, of Canadian companies faced with serious competition from industrial giants of other countries and their subsidiaries within our borders. We must be prepared to take positive measures designed to enable Canadians to participate in the development of Canadian enterprises, and we must take measures designed to encourage these enterprises to thrive. In this way we can meet our own aspirations for control of the economy and at the same time create jobs that are needed in this country. However, stress must be placed on the encouragement of Canadian enterprises rather than simply on the suppression of the foreign enterprises. Based on a theory that the Canadian economy can and will grow rapidly, if a majority of that growth is produced by Canadian-owned enterprises, then in due course Canada will regain control of its economy with minimal damage to the standard of living as the process takes place. It seems to me a set of guidelines must be established, and that a long-term plan must be implemented to achieve these goals. While Bill C-132 may, in the long run, be useful in some ways, something much more bold and daring is required at this time.

• (1530)

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in being able to speak on Bill C-132 which relates to foreign ownership. I find it rather ironic, if not pathetic, that in our national anthem "O Canada" no less than five times do we repeat the phrase "we stand on guard for thee", yet when we look at the present state of economic affairs in this country we find that it is indeed a sad one. I hope it is not prophetic that the composer of "O Canada" eventually gave up on this country and went to the United States where he became an American citizen.

I should like in my speech to review the causes of the situation that we now see before us, the fact that Canada's economy is owned to such a large extent by foreigners. I should like also to look at the state of foreign ownership in this country and then to examine the bill and our party's opinion of it.

If we look at Canadian history and the origins of this country, the first thing that must impress us is that Canada does not make sense as a geographical entity. The lines of communication on this continent run north and south, and to divide the continent by the 49th parallel to form a country runs contrary to this logic. We in Canada have felt this north-south pull to the extent that much of our trade, culture and economy is tied with our neighbour to the south. When we look also at the history of the development of this country, we see that its origins were founded on pessimism rather than optimism. There were more regional loyalties than there was loyalty to a national entity, and this country had to struggle not only against internal disunion but also the threat of American absorption through the famous policy of manifest destiny.

Another characteristic of this country in its early days was an inferiority complex which was bred out of living in the shadow of our giant neighbour to the south. This inferiority complex has all too often been a characteristic of not only Canadians in general but of Canadian businessmen and Canadian investors. We have all too often sat back and let Americans and other foreigners invest in this country to the extent that they now control much of our economy.

When we look at the history of Canada, we must look at the history of the Liberal and Conservative governments and their attitudes toward foreign ownership. I should like to review for the House some examples of these attitudes at both the provincial and federal levels so that we may put this whole issue into context. I will use as an example the Liberal government in Saskatchewan under the premiership of Mr. Thatcher in 1971. I do not think you could find a more dedicated free enterpriser anywhere in Canada. Let us just see what this provincial government--and there are many examples—tried to do in 1971.

In 1971 there was a project to develop a $177 million pulp mill at Dore Lake. The mill was to be built and mostly owned by Parsons and Whittemore Incorporated of New York. Remember, this is an American company. What would result, unfortunately would be more competition for Canadian industry in this precarious pulp and paper market. Here is how the capital cost of $177 million was financed. This is typical of so many Progressive Conservative and Liberal governments throughout history. We find that $141.7 million of this capital cost was to come from or be guaranteed by the Canadian public, and this is broken down as follows. The American company was to receive $107 million as a provincial guaranteed loan, $12 million as a federal grant, $7.2 million as equity investment by Saskatchewan, and $19.1 million from Saskatchewan as road grants, part or half the contingency plans, an equipment loan and other credits. Of the $145.3 million the province was to get back only $3.6 million as a guaranteed fee.

What did the American partner in this venture, Parsons and Whittemore, put up as part of the required $177 million? They put $16.8 million into equity investment, $3 million as its half of the contingency loan fund, for a total of $19.8 million. The U.S. Export Import Bank guaranteed equipment financing by a loan of $12 million. So the company then put up 11 per cent of the total investment. What did it get in return? It got 70 per cent ownership of the mill through share equity, that is 70 per cent of profits, whereas the provincial government under the Liberal premiership of Mr. Thatcher was to get only 30 per cent of ownership. The company got another $12 million in contract fees for building the mill. It got about $2 million as an annual commission on sales.

The profit on sales of machinery from this wholly owned subsidiary was also in the hands of the company. The company got exclusive timber rights on 23,000 square miles of Saskatchewan, which is twice the size of Belgium, and had in effect a monopoly on all the pulp within the province. It was the province, not the company, which was to be responsible for replacing slashed timber. The company would pay only 25 cents per cord for reseeding and, in addition, the mill would consume 56 million gallons of water from the Dore and Beaver rivers with very little anti-pollution control.

So here, then, is the rationale of the Thatcher give away, or the attempted give away. He said since it was necessary to create jobs it was all right to give all this financial advantage to a foreign corporation. The premier claimed that 1,200 jobs would be created during construction and 1,600 during the operation of the mill. However, the truth was, as it was discovered later by the vice president, there would be 450 jobs in the mill and about 800 in the woods, which works out to a grand total of $157,333 for each job created. Fortunately, the people of Saskatchewan came to their senses, elected an NDP government, and the whole deal was scrapped.

I could give other examples of the Conservative government in Manitoba under Premier Roblin and the great The Pas pulp and paper deal which was equally disastrous, or Joey Smallwood in Newfoundland and the Come-By-Chance refinery. What I am trying to show is that many provincial governments under Conservative and Liberal leadership contributed to the sell-out of Canada's economy.

What has the federal government done with regard to foreign ownership? The Liberals, I am afraid, have been continentalists from the time of Laurier. Foreign investment was welcomed, especially after World War II, with the encouragement of C.D. Howe. What has been the result of this Liberal government in action? Today, the percentage of foreign ownership in Canada, is as follows, and indeed it is a frightening list. In the printing and publishing industry, 20.4 per cent is foreign owned. In the wood industries, 42.6 per cent is foreign owned. In the mining industries, 60 per cent is foreign owned; mineral fuels, 82.5 per cent; machinery, 73.2 per cent; transportation equipment, 86.4 per cent; rubber products, 92.7 per cent, and petroleum refining, 99.9 per cent. Some 59 per cent of the total manufacturing capability in this country is foreign owned. On the average, approximately 80 per cent of foreign-owned industry in Canada is under American control.

Figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1969 show that foreign investment in this country totalled over $46 billion. When we examine the assets of corporations, the frightening finding is that corporations with $5 million in assets are 29 per cent foreign controlled, those with $5 million to $25 million in assets are 50 per cent foreign controlled, and those with over $25 million in assets are 54 per cent foreign owned. The statistics in themselves are frightening, but what are the implications? Foreign domination in this country means mostly American domination. Let us not kid ourselves. The Americans are not here out of the goodness of their hearts. They want our resources and they want profits from Canada, and they are going to place United States interests before Canadian interests. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give you some examples of how foreign interests take precedence over Canadian interests.

First of all, American corporations or subsidiaries in Canada have to obey the provisions of the United States Trading with the Enemy Act. As a result, there have been numerous instances where subsidiaries in Canada wanted to sell products to foreign countries but were barred from doing so, not by Canadian law but by American law. I can think of our flour mills being prohibited from selling flour to Cuba and of truck and fertilizer plants being prohibited from selling their products to China. In these instances we have a foreign government interfering in our economy. Second, United States anti-trust legislation also applied to American subsidiaries in Canada. We can document at least 20 cases in Canada's history where the U.S. regulations on company merging policy have taken precedence over Canadian government policy, or irrespective of Canadian government policy. An instance is the refrigerator market in Canada.

Our refrigerator market is approximately 400,000 units per year. This demand could be efficiently supplied by two companies but we have nine in Canada, seven of them being U.S. branch plants. What would be best for Canada would be to combine these refrigerator companies, thus bringing down the price through a rationalization of the industry and through more efficient competition. But because of U.S. anti-trust legislation, Canada cannot do this for the benefit of its consumers.

Moreover, U.S. policy can affect the Canadian money market. In 1963, 1965 And 1968 the United States government demanded that American subsidiaries in Canada return capital to the United States. This upset our whole money market. Indeed, the President of the Royal Bank of Canada was prompted to say:

Our own monetary authorities appeared to be attached to a string . . . the business end of which is held in Washington.

There is a fourth way in which foreign domination is detrimental to the Canadian economy. United States companies in Canada buy the majority of the component parts they require for manufacturing from their parent companies in the United States, which in turn means more jobs for Americans. Some 70 per cent of company imports in Canada come from the parent companies in the United States. American subsidiaries in Canada do not compete vigorously for foreign markets because this would be competing with the U.S. parent companies. Indeed, 82 per cent of the production of subsidiaries in Canada is sold in this country.

The fifth way in which foreign control is detrimental is that it results in our having a branch plant economy. This means that research and development are done in the United States rather than in Canada. As a result, we are exporting our scientists, engineers and technologists, and many of the bright young people graduating from our universities. They are going to the United States where the research is done. In 1951, 11 per cent of Canadian engineers and scientists left for the United States. In 1956, this figure had risen to 46 per cent. The science and engineering work force in Canada is growing at a rate of 9 per cent annually, the highest of all the occupations, and in 1970, 882 Canadian engineers and scientists moved to the United States. We all know how hard pressed the remainder are to try to find jobs here in Canada.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce reported in 1970 that foreign-owned firms were spending little or nothing on scientific research and development in Canada. Despite the fact that sales had risen 35 per cent, research spending here rose only 18 per cent, the average expenditure being $325,000, a sum considered trivial for the size of the firms investigated by the department. For example, in the rubber and plastic industries in 1967, $6.06 per $1,000 of sales was spent on research in Canada while in the United States this figure was $11.33 per $1,000 in sales. As a result, we have a lack of jobs in Canada for university graduates, and Canadian subsidiaries get new technology later than their parent firms, which weakens Canada's position in world markets.

Moreover, a foreign-controlled economy means that the decision to expand or close branch plants is made in the United States by American companies to benefit American workers. When the American economy slows down the first lay-offs will take place in the branch plants in Canada. There are many examples to document this statement. One could think of Dunlop Tire in 1970. There is the infamous example of the U.S. company, Selkirk-Metalbestos, which made a decision in 1968 to take an Ontario Development Corporation grant of $77,000, supposedly to create jobs by expanding a plant in Brockville. However, the company then bought another firm in Hamilton, closed it down and moved that operation to Brockville. The result was that in Hamilton 50 workers lost jobs, and in Brockville ten new jobs were created, but at lower wages than had been paid in Hamilton. In light of this evidence, how can it be argued that foreign subsidiaries work primarily for the benefit of Canadians? The decision making in our economic sphere rests with foreigners who place their interests above ours.

Why on earth have Canadians accepted this state of affairs? Many myths have been propagated about our economy, and I would like to examine a few of them. We have grown up under the myth of the necessity for foreign investment and the necessity for subsidiaries in Canada. We are told, for example, that Canada is 30 per cent less efficient than the United States in most secondary industries. This is a fact. We are told the reason we are less efficient is that we have a small population, we have to ship products a greater distance, we have a poor climate, our workers do not work as hard and our managers are not as skilled. But the facts belie this. A population of 21 million is not small. It is three times the size of the population of Sweden which is more prosperous than we are. Sweden has a less favourable climate than we, less favourable geography and agriculture, yet it is prosperous. Most of our industry is in southern Ontario where geography and climate are equivalent to the United States industrial heartland, and our workers are as good or better than American workers in productivity. Just talk to any automotive assembly line worker about that. The real reason that we are less efficient is duplication, and the inefficiency of our branch plant economy.

Another myth that has been propagated is that Canadians do not have the capital and must seek foreign investment. This may have been true in the past, but it certainly is not true now. From 1961 to 1967, over 60 per cent of the capital financing of foreign firms in this country was raised right here in Canada from Canadian sources. Indeed, in 1970, American subsidiaries raised 94 per cent of the capital needed for expansion and for buying up Canadian companies right here in Canada from Canadian banks and investment companies. We are the only country in the world that is financing its own sell-out. Foreign investment is not the blessing it is purported to be. From 1960 to 1967, American subsidiaries sent to the United States $1.8 billion more in profits than they received in capital inflow. Who benefits from this investment? Surely not the Canadian economy.

There is also this other myth that foreign owned corporations are contributing to the Canadian economy through the taxes that they have to pay. Mr. Speaker, 38 per cent of the manufacturing industry in this country did not pay federal income taxes in 1969, which is the last year for which we have figures. Also, 79 per cent of mining, oil and gas wells did not pay income tax. Resource industries are overwhelmingly foreign owned and they have many ways of getting these tax deductions through capital cost allowances, depletion allowances, mine income exemptions, amortization and debt interest charges.

In my research, I discovered a more interesting revelation which I do not think has been brought out before, even in the last federal election campaign. I have discovered that the bigger the corporation the less income tax is paid. In 1969, income taxes actually paid by corporations approximated 50 per cent of taxable income. Do not forget that taxable income means the pittance that usually remains after all the loopholes have been taken out. The total amount of income tax paid amounted to $2.7 billion which, in turn, represents only 36 per cent of book profits. But this 36 per cent is only an average. The big companies, those with assets of more than $5 million, pay well below this average, only 28 per cent. Obviously bigness pays—but not income tax.

Manufacturing companies pay at an average income tax rate of 39 per cent, with the big ones paying 36 per cent. Within the manufacturing industry, the highest rates of income tax for both small and big corporations is, interestingly enough, in the printing and publishing industry, 49 per cent, and lowest in the petroleum and coal products group, 14 per cent. Do not forget which sector is Canadian controlled and which is foreign controlled. The mining industry, oil and gas wells pay little income tax, as we already know, and again the big ones pay less, an average rate of 10 per cent, while the little ones pay an average of 21 per cent. Mineral fuels pay an average tax rate of 7.6 per cent, and metal mining 10.1 per cent. In the latter group, the small companies average 22.1 per cent and the big ones 9.9 per cent on their book profits.

If you remember what I said earlier, that large corporations are mainly foreign controlled, you now know that they pay income tax at much lower rates than small companies, which happen to be mainly in Canadian hands. We have been more than hospitable to the man who came to dinner. He has gorged himself at our table and pocketed the silverware. What we see is that "big" means less income tax and big companies mean foreign companies. The results of Liberal and Conservative governments welcoming foreign investment without proper control as every other sensible nation in the western world has done are evident. Our Canadian controlled economy is fast reaching a point of impossibility; the number of foreign takeovers of Canadian companies is alarming. In 1959, nine companies were taken over by foreigners; in 1960, it was 93 and in 1970, it was 163. Over the last three years, it has been averaging 170 per year.

The federal government also aids in this takeover by giving grants to foreign firms. Of the grants given by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, over 50 per cent went to foreign-controlled corporations in Canada. Indeed, I believe this is one of the reasons Mr. Kierans resigned from Cabinet. He relates the case of the Canadian communications industry which was 85 per cent Canadian owned. What did the Liberal government do? It gave a DREE grant of $22 million to a United States firm called Control Data to set up a plant in Quebec City, and it gave $6 million to the American giant IBM for a plant at Drummondville, Quebec. As Mr. Kierans says, "We create a few temporary jobs and destroy a whole Canadian industry".

We find, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is losing more capital than she imports, that exporting our resources means exporting our jobs to the places at which the resources are manufactured and refined, namely, the United States. As a result, areas like my own, northern Ontario, have chronic unemployment. We see that the Canadian consumer pays more for products because of the inefficiency of the branch plant economy. We lose our brightest minds as our scientists emigrate to the United States to take up research and development positions. Decisions to close down plants and decisions on the priorities for development and expansion are taken in boardrooms in the United States where their interests are placed before our interests. We see, Mr. Speaker, that foreign corporations are paying less income tax than Canadian corporations.

This whole problem of foreign ownership has accelerated in the past decade. The warnings were there. Our party spoke out against this trend but we were ignored. We were ignored by Conservative and Liberal governments and the Liberal government cannot plead ignorance. They had the Royal Commission Report, the Watkins Report, that voice crying in the wilderness, Walter Gordon, the former minister of finance, the Wahn Report in 1970 and the Gray Report in 1971, but they chose to ignore the alarming facts on foreign ownership brought out in these reports. Now, with a minority government the Liberal government of today has responded to public concern and brought forth Bill C-132 and it is this to which I should like to turn my attention.

This new bill covers takeovers of Canadian business; it covers new investment and expansion of foreign corporations into unrelated areas in Canada. The commission to screen foreign takeovers of Canadian companies has the power to block certain takeovers in the interests of Canada. Yet this provision would only affect between 12 per cent and 15 per cent of new foreign investment in one year. What remains outside the screening process is the expansion of foreign-owned subsidiaries in Canada operating in their own or related fields, and this represents about 80 per cent of the growth in foreign control.

• (1600)

My party believes that this bill is a step in the right direction, but we should like to see a number of amendments introduced to strengthen the bill. In particular, we should like to see a provision under which the screening agency would review the expansion of businesses operating in similar or related areas of production. We should like to see a screening of imported parts and components, to determine whether alternative sources of supply exist or can be developed in Canada at competitive prices. We want to see a screening of raw material exports, to determine whether further processing in Canada would be possible prior to export. Also, we want to screen any existing export restrictions imposed either by agreement or as a result of practices that prevent the expansion of export markets. I alluded to this earlier. We want to prohibit new equity investment that would put effective control in foreign hands of all areas involving mineral resources, energy, power and water. Those are a few of the many amendments we should like to see introduced. Other members of my party will elaborate on this theme.

This problem in Canada has been accelerating during the past few years, and neither Liberal nor Conservative governments have been able to arrest the sell-out of our economy. One wonders, as one looks at the political donations of corporations, whether there is not some link that is significant here, because non-Canadian corporations contributed 29 per cent of all donations to the Liberal and Conservative parties of this country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit the bill is a significant step in the right direction. However, it needs strengthening. We must press hard to stop the sell-out of the Canadian economy. There is one problem that this bill does nothing to solve, the repatriation of the Canadian economy. We must begin thinking about buying back the economy. To do that, we shall need a strong Canadian development corporation that has public funds, and that will engage on a program to encourage the repatriation of our economy. We need to utilize some of the $5 billion or $6 billion in foreign exchange reserves that this country has for buying back Canadian industry from foreign control. The time has come for the government, businessmen and people of this country to throw off their inferiority complex, to use their talents and the wealth of Canada in order to repatriate the economy for the advantage of all Canadians. Only with determined government leadership will the words of our national anthem become a reality. Only then will we be the true north, strong and free.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; there was agreement earlier that we should end this debate at six o'clock, but we could not get definite agreement on the length of speeches. Through the usual channels, agreement has been reached to the effect that the remaining speeches should not be longer than 15 minutes, beginning right now. If at five o'clock there are still some who want to speak, we might voluntarily reduce the length of time for the last few speeches to somewhat less than 15 minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) is quite correct. There have now been discussions through the usual channels regarding this matter. We are prepared to agree with the arrangement suggested, which includes the question on second reading of this bill being put not later than six o'clock this evening. While I am on my feet, may I say that we shall have only one further speaker today, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, this is agreed to on my side of the House. I would hope that the other parties would agree that I might be allowed ten minutes, perhaps, not any more, to wind up the second reading debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member for Joliette rising on the same point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Joliette, on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have already informed the government House leader that provided I have time to express some opinions in the House this afternoon, I shall agree to the arrangement that we end the debate at six o'clock. Otherwise, unfortunately, I could not give my consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member assumes that the Chair should recognize him without delay. Such terms are hardly acceptable.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I do not know. I am referring to the right or privilege that each hon. member enjoys in the House. If possible, I should like to way a few words, and then I shall consent to the second reading of this bill this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Perhaps the hon. member is right in assuming this: the Chair was probably about to decide to recognize him in a few minutes. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Agreed. Is the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) rising on a point of order?

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I recognize the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for paying perhaps not special but fair attention to the independent member of this House. I shall certainly not waste the time of the House by making a long speech, but I do have a few remarks to make about this bill which strikes me as extremely important.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to express a few opinions which may not be different from all those I have heard. I am pleased to note that up till now the speeches have been very positive, very objective.

The purpose of the bill before us is certainly excellent. However, bills rarely achieve their objectives. Still, in view of the opinions I have heard, I can say that the debate is objective; this, to my mind, is absolutely necessary for the proper management of the country.

• (1610)

Bill C-132 relates to the control of our economy. This is all tied in with economic nationalism.

I think it is important to quote some statistics as many others did before. Naturally, everybody is tempted to accuse the present or past governments of being responsible for the exodus in our economy or the foreign takeovers of our industry and our economy in general.

There are reasons for this and previous governments certainly made mistakes in spite of all the good they did, which resulted in Canadians are not owning as they would like the largest part of our economy, especially our industry.

I would like to outline the particular care we should bring regarding economic nationalism and I would urge the government to increase its endeavours to promote nationalism among Canadians. I consider it of utmost importance. Of course nationalism requires a certain self-respect.

Do we not all limit ourselves to speech-making instead of getting involved, from a sense of national pride? And I think we should by all means recall that pride we, as Canadians, should have about that bill and its impact on our economy.

Of course, the present government has established, hardly two years ago I think, the Canada development Corporation which was a means for Canadians to keep control over their industries. I believe that most hon. members supported the bill. I was among them and I am very happy to see that this agency is to ensure retaining certain industries in Canadian hands.

Was that enough? Of course not, Mr. Speaker. Still, it was an effort, and a typical and concrete example of the government's interest in this problem.

Much has been said about buying back our economy, which is perhaps not the most difficult of tasks. It is very important that we assume immediate control of our economy and put a halt to this persistant drain taking place on our continent and primarily in our country as soon as possible.

We must consider measures enabling us to retain existing industries in Canadian hands in the future and now, and to finance any new industries or projects of major interest for our people.

I think that we must take care of the present and the future and with some very beneficial accomplishments, we could eventually consider the repatriation of our economy. It would be advisable to remind hon. members and especially the government that we should take steps urging Canadians to encourage Canadian compagnies first. This is true economic nationalism: to convince Canadian consumers that they ought to buy either Canadian foodstuffs or industrial products.

I for one try every day to buy an item made in Quebec, and I imagine that proud as they are Manitoba residents probably do the same. In addition, I insist that the product be at least Canadian and finally if I do not find the Quebec or Canadian product which I need, I will accept an import. Now, there are always some countries which are especially eager to export their products here.

I think that this is showing a certain nationalism which is prefectly justified and logical, if we truly want not only to regain control oever our economy but also to maintain our economy and ensure that it is balanced.

When economic takeover by Canadians in Canada is mentioned, I think it would be just as important for this government never to forget to negotiate or invite provinces to discuss appropriate measures aimed at achieving the purpose contemplated by Bill C-132.

Promoting pride among all Canadians must obviously be done through publicity campaigns. To what extent have we forgotten that this publicity is absolutely necessary in order to awake Canadians? Whether we want it or not, we can do like several members and limit ourselves to condemning whichever government for not having found the appropriate machinery.

We could also just keep on thinking that legislation calling for huge outlays could manage to achieve the intent of the bill now before us. I think we will be able to do so if Canadians are aware of its importance and if they are willing to pay for this economic liberty.

It is all very well to talk about independence in all its forms but, just as we often say that a rich people is a strong people, we will indeed have to be rich if we are to be strong as an entity or as a country. Such wealth is attainable, therefore, if Canadians have enough sense of pride to invest and to want to invest, every day if that were possible, in Canadian industries and companies.

I suggest that the government should hasten to promote in Canadians this pride in investing in Canadian companies.

Let us take the example of insurance companies, because they involve large sums of money. If the millions of Canadians who need insurance were to choose Canadian companies, this could have important consequences and the government could then grant certain loans. That is what I call control of our own economy.

I have, of course, nothing against the American insurance companies, whose offices here are excellent, but I wonder if this field, like that of food, is not one in which we should exercize this individual pride. This might not seem like a very serious suggestion, but I think that governmental supervision of this sort may be necessary to attain the objectives of Bill C-132.

We can content ourselves once more with asking the government to pass legislation, but we cannot force a man to have enough pride to keep this objective in mind on a nation-wide basis. But, by means of publicity campaigns, for example, and by not being afraid to express certain opinions to the public, Canadians will become the real masters of their own economy, and then only to the extent that they want to and to the extent that they are taught to.

I could give as an example in Quebec, the Desjardins Co-operative Movement which achieved wonderful results through the promotion of collectivism, information and education. In my opinion, the government also has the responsibility for informing the people about the ownership of our corporations. We must teach the Canadian people how to invest in Canadian corporations and promote what we call Canadian products.

I will give another good example. In my own riding, Mr. Speaker, there is a green pea industry. Many times I have said, and I repeat it now, that if the people in my area decided to buy green peas from that industry which belongs to us, it would develop tremendously. Let us imagine the good results for all producers in that area and think of what might happen actually. We do not have enough pride which is essential to the success of a nation.

That is the reason why I say again that it is not only by passing legislation and by criticizing any government which failed to achieve that objective, but by teaching individuals and by giving them the necessary pride that we will cause Canadians to invest in Canadian corporations.

• (1620)

I am also aware of the efforts of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. For a few years, this department has been spending millions if not billions of dollars. Did we ever think, for instance, of giving many more benefits to the really Canadian enterprise than to another one? Here again, there might be a few comments to make about what financial policy the government could adopt to help Canadian companies through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, not necessarily to penalize foreign businessmen but rather to encourage Canadians. I suggest that no government could be admonished for having helped Canadian-owned businesses. I think that this suggestion would deserve the government's consideration.

If we are to speak seriously about taking over our economy and ensure above all that henceforth it will remain in the hands of Canadians, I suggest it is very important to make proposals and think of getting the contribution of Canadians.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, that it might be possible for the government to consider, for instance, withholding a percentage of Canadian wages. Perhaps this measure would not be very welcome, but the Canadian people would serve their own interests in so far as they would be compelled to do so. They are quite willing to be independant, they want to take all kinds of decisions, but they are not really prepared to endure the sacrifices all this involves. Therefore, I wonder whether the government should not decide to establish a bank designed specially to maintain our industries and establish new ones, something which would be particularly useful to our university graduates, to the experts we are now developing thanks to millions of dollars but who cannot find a job. At present, they become unemployed people with Phd's. The problem of university students is not one of skills—because they have skills—but of finance. Unfortunately, they do not have the necessary capital which would enable them to create new industries or to administer. In short, they do not have the necessary financial resources enabling a group to build something which would definitely be Canadian owned.

If we thought for instance of retaining one per cent of each Canadian's wages, it would represent millions of dollars in less than a week and much more at the end of the year. This money would be administered by the government and would not bring in a cent of interest to Canadians but it would be returned to the worker without interest 25, 30 or 40 years later; he would however have been forced to take part in the so-called conservation of our economy and in the development of the takeover of our industries. He would have been forced to it, Mr. Speaker.

This is a solution to consider even if it is unpopular at the outset. It will really be profitable for Canada inasmuch as the worker will be forced to a certain extent. He will be proud to bring into being the objective aimed at in Bill C-132 by creating new industries, by offering jobs, which will be definitely useful to future generations. It would be a way for the government to implement a measure which would give Canadians a better chance to achieve this objective, to keep the ownership of their economy. The economy will be made by Canadians, perhaps in a coercive way. But, I think it will be necessary to remind them that economic freedom in this country, whether we like it or not, will have to be paid for, and I think it would be an outstanding way to get it.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should think that this debate is largely a rerun of the one we had last session; the bill has added to it only the clause dealing with new business. The subject of foreign ownership is one that has occupied Canadians for the last few years. Foreign investment has been viewed by many of our present economic nationalists as being something that has been foisted on us, and that much foreign investment has been deliberately designed to weaken Canada's position as an independent power. Yet I think we have to be reminded that Canadians actively sought foreign investment as a means to develop our industries and our resources for the benefit of our people. Canada has one of the most advanced, if not the most advanced, welfare structures in the world. We live in a cold climate, and without a very great level of economic activity and investment from outside this country it is extremely difficult to see how our social advancement could have been achieved without the help of foreign capital.

There are those who say that the over-all costs of foreign ownership and control are far outweighed by the benefits in the long run, while there are others who suggest that the costs and benefits are too close for a comfortable position on either side. There is the obvious question as to whether the rate of Canadian economic growth would have been significantly lower if foreign investment had not taken place at the rate it did. I do not think that there is any doubt, at least in certain parts of the country, that our resource industries would have been markedly reduced if there had been no foreign investment.

Let us take the example of the Alberta oil and gas industry. In the western provinces there are about six million people. Of these, it is reliably estimated that one million are dependent on the oil industry for their livelihood. And yet the oil and gas industry has been almost wholly developed by United States capital, with a small input of western Canadian capital. There was on the whole, up until very recently, just not the capital resources available in Canada to develop the oil and gas industry. Without this influx of foreign capital, it seems unlikely that the oil and gas industry would have been able to generate enough capital to balance Canadian imports with exports. Perhaps more amenable tax laws would have fostered a greater investment by Canadians in the industry. So, Mr. Speaker, whatever else we may think or complain about, we have as a nation been actively promoting foreign investment up until the present time.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, Canadians react curiously whenever conditions arise that will injure this flow of foreign investment. The United States DISC program is designed to keep U.S. investment at home and to increase the productivity of their own factories instead of their foreign subsidiaries. This attempt by the United States government to keep investment at home should have been viewed with great affection by our economic nationalists, because it would mean a lessening of U.S. influence over economic activity in this country.

There is another facet of this debate which I do not think we have considered. There is an entirely different climate today from that a year ago as far as the investment of foreign capital is concerned. It is obvious that the position of the U.S. economy is considerably different from a year ago. The United States, with its complaints of trade unionists, a weakened dollar and a growing disenchantment abroad of the once respected label "made in the U.S.", is reordering its trading strength.

We then have the proponents of the Burke-Hartke bill which, if implemented, will bring an entirely new dimension to the problem that this act is supposed to solve. In Mr. Hartke's words:

> This bill would discourage American business investment abroad and limit the flow of imports into this country. We can no longer afford to export American jobs and technology at the expense of our own industry, all in the name of free trade.

I think words such as those send shivers into the hearts of businessmen, as well as their employees, who export goods to the United States. But United States business has counter-attacked and the multinationalists have argued that their overseas activities create jobs by opening new markets for U.S. goods and technology.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who yesterday stated that Canada does not need foreign capital, would be heartily in favour of this Burke-Hartke bill. A recent survey of the investment plans of a number of large American multinational corporations, as reported in one of the financial papers, indicated that their projected investment of capital in Canada was down from around $600 million in 1966 to $300 million in the present year. The recent fall of oil stocks was an indication of a withdrawal of U.S. investment, so perhaps the functions and duties of this review board in future will be different from the past.

The central issue of the foreign ownership bill revolves around the question of the proper role of the federal government. The government and its supporters are consumed by a fear of engulfment and have resorted to a defensive Maginot line posture which in a dynamic world will inevitably be outflanked.

Canada with 22 million people is in the middle of 500 million producers and consumers in the advanced economies of Japan, the United States and the European Common Market. The arguments against foreign takeovers are emotionally appealing but economically unsubstantiated. Our economy is characterized by the rapid spread and progressive development of enterprise which demands efficiency and flexibility if we are to compete in world markets. Certainly, too, the tax legislation of 1971 operated in the wrong way by penalizing subsidiaries of Canadian companies through preventing them from sharing in tax concessions granted by foreign host countries. This measure will not produce any benefits if it has the effect of cutting off the whole flow of investment funds with all that would entail.

• (1630)

The arguments for ensuring the Canadianization of the ownership and management of our enterprises rests on the doubtful assumption that it is the function of shareholders, directors and management, rather than parliament, to see that business is conducted in the national interest, and to ensure that Canadian ownership is sufficient to guarantee confidence and devotion in that endeavour. It is difficult to understand how one will become more efficient by ensuring Canadian control of share ownership. It seems likely that some Canadians will lose by being prevented from selling their business to the highest bidder, regardless of nationality.

It is almost certain that by eliminating the possibility of foreign takeovers, many Canadian companies will lose their bargaining power and they could be taken over by large Canadian enterprises at depressed prices. The best way to ensure the promotion of the general welfare is to compel the existence of effective competition in the market for goods and factors of production. Restrictions on foreign investment makes far less sense than making sure that all businesses operate in accord with Canadian interests.

Mr. Speaker, in attempting to control and monitor foreign investments, we are in effect setting up another bureaucracy to control private business. I use the phrase "private business" advisedly because, with the thousands and indeed millions of investors in some of the large corporations, they are in themselves almost small nations, albeit of a multinational nature, but the government will be setting up a bureaucracy in Ottawa which will mean that for every business sale the seller will have to ascertain whether or not the proposed sale meets with the approval of the screening agency.

Much of the impact of this legislation will depend on how the act is to be administered. There are many small businesses, including farms, that will be affected by this legislation. And then, of course, the onus is on them to ascertain whether or not the proposed sale of a particular business is to a foreigner. This screening committee will be a body in Ottawa that could have a great deal of influence and could become a bureaucratic nightmare when it is carrying out its functions. To the bureaucracy will be given the task of deciding whether a foreign takeover or a new business will increase the level of economic activity in Canada, including employment. This is almost a motherhood statement and I would think that every takeover or new business could be so classified.

Then, we must consider the degree of Canadian participation in an industry or the degree of productivity, efficiency and so on. The fourth factor is the effect of the proposed investment on competition within Canada and, finally, there is the compatibility of the investment with national industrial and economic policies, including those enunciated by the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, this is quite a tall order because the members of the board will have many variables to assess. I suggest that the senior members of this board, sitting here at Ottawa, will have a difficult time in deciding, with the myriad of guidelines to follow, just what to do in any particular application. I suggest that this review body could have other very useful roles with regards to foreign ownership takeovers. Canadian society has rested on two major elements which protect the individual and promote general welfare. These are the rule of law and the maintenance of a reasonable balance among the institutions of power so that no one institution or group becomes too powerful.

This commission could well have the general authority to obtain information concerning businesses and corporations. It would gather statistical information on business organizations and procedures throughout the nation. This collection of data would serve as a groundwork for policy information and as a base for new legislative departures. This commission would serve to make sure that free enterprise would be permitted to operate; it could carry on investigatory activities which should be handled by its own economic staff; it could analyse purchasing and output policy and important market imperfections would be reduced and restricted, and unethical practices curbed. It could investigate the policies through which United States parent companies govern their Canadian subsidiaries, and the reaction of parent companies to permitting Canadian subsidiaries to expand their activities.

The present Combines Investigation branch only studies possible violations of the combines law that have been submitted to it. The projected trade commission would be a permanent organization which, by gathering statistical information on business organizations over the whole field of industry, would be able to uncover new problems and make recommendations for additional legislation to correct any abuses.

The devising of an industrial strategy for Canada, as has been noted by some, follows the idea that we should trade off manufactured goods as the price of allowing the export of energy to the United States. It is widely felt that only the manufacturing industry can provide the jobs necessary for the Canadian labour force. But all statistics indicate that Canadian manufacturing is hard put to maintain the present number of jobs and it has fallen on the service industries to provide the jobs for the record number of Canadians entering the work force.

These service industries have largely lived on the income provided by the selling of resources to the world at large. It is difficult to see how the United States, with its balance of payments problem, can provide the only market for Canadian manufacturing as it presently does. All indications are that the price of Canadian energy, if we have a surplus of it, will be high and run into competition from oil and gas brought from the Middle East. Canada's best export chance seems to be in selling raw materials, processed to the greatest degree possible before their sale.

It is interesting to note that many Canadians feel that the U.S. has made us the hewers of wood and the drawers of water, when the fact is that Japan and the ECM take our natural products in a much lower form than does the United States. All of these problems were ventilated at the hearings last year.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation brings forward many ideas as to what we should do to make our Canadian economy more effective. It seems to me that the way to counter foreign investment is to have a strong internal business economy. In the budget speech the government suggested that they would bring forward proposals and legislation which would substantially help the small business. But really these are, in many cases, merely token efforts.

I should like to turn to agriculture as one area in which the government has often followed policies which have not been in the best interests of agriculture or the country as a whole. In recent years we have had the white paper on taxation, with all its uncertainties about what our taxation policies should be. These taxation policies were especially detrimental to the individual entrepreneur in agriculture, and, when the white paper was translated into the tax measures, the primary producer of food found that he was severely penalized. The overriding implication of the white paper that a buck was a buck and should be taxed accordingly found its way into the tax legislation.

Agriculture is a significant factor in both our external and internal economy. We have to import a large amount of food that cannot be grown in our cold country. We are confined in our exports to three or four major commodities such as wheat, barley, rapeseed and flax. In general, we are a meat importing country. The export of grains is especially valuable to Canada because this $2 billion is obtained mostly from outside continental North America, not the United States. Has the tax legislation this government enacted in this past four years been beneficial to these exports and to the industry? The answer is, of course, no. The government has introduced a capital gains tax on farm lands with merely a face saving device such as exempting from capital gains tax the passage of the land at death within the family.

The cancellation of the straightline depreciation on farm machinery is a severe blow to the grain farmer of western Canada. The removal of estate taxes is of no real benefit, but as a result of certain changes we will be able to preserve productive farm units from one generation to another. Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has expired.

• (1640)

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I must say that this particular subject is one which produced a remarkable lack of interest so far as the public was concerned during the election campaign. As I look over the number of members in the House of Commons today, that same lack of interest seems to be expressed by our elected representatives. I am sorry to see this, because I believe this should be one of the gut issues of the country. What we are debating today is really not a question of the effectiveness of this bill, but rather whether or not Canada can survive and whether or not this debate is really heralding the beginning of the end of Canada as an independent sovereign country. I suggest that unless we do something meaningful we can look forward to that in the future.

The trends in respect of increasing foreign ownership in this country are so firmly developed and so firmly established that to tinker around with the subject in the way in which this bill does will not come to grips with the problem. In fact, I suggest it may do more harm than good because the bill appears to do something about the problem, when I submit that it will accomplish nothing significant in respect of retaining our cultural or economic independence. I say this because the extent of the problem is overwhelming.

I hate to bore parliament with the dreary litany of statistics in respect of foreign ownership, but a couple of items have not been raised. One is that there is more foreign ownership in Canada than in all the European nations combined. Second, we have the highest per capita foreign direct investment of any country in the world. In terms of percentages which have been gone into, 99.9 per cent of the petroleum industry is controlled by foreign investment. This figure is 97 per cent in respect of the automobile industry, 62 per cent in respect of mining, 83 per cent in respect of oil and gas, 90 per cent in respect of the rubber industry, 77 per cent in respect of the electrical apparatus industry, 90 per cent in respect of the computer industry and 92 per cent in respect of the aircraft and aircraft parts industry. What may be more significant is that these are the growth areas in which we find the new technologies which drive Canadian competition to the wall. What happens is that our Canadian companies are not being given the capital which is necessary in order to compete with this American multinational trend.

Let us have a look at what the bill would do to reduce this trend. I suggest that it allows this government to sit by and watch this process continue. It is less a screening agency than a welcome wagon. Let us not forget that this bill is not particularly significant in its present form. The key weakness in the bill is that it fails to limit the expansion of existing foreign-dominated corporations. By far the greatest growth in the foreign sector is through the expansion of existing subsidiaries. It has been noted that the growth is almost entirely financed through Canadian capital, either through loan capital or annual profits. The failure to cover this situation in the bill avoids the real problems which are developing and which have been developed in the economy over the past 30 or 40 years. I submit the bill must go further in terms of the export of raw materials. I come from a province where recently during a provincial election this was the number one issue. On this issue, the party which I represent was elected to office. That was the major platform. The people were waking up to the situation.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. What I have to say may not be very pleasant but the Chair must take this opportunity to point out to hon. members, and particularly to the one who now has the floor, that a certain behaviour is expected in this House. Conduct, decorum are prescribed by the Standing Orders; the hon. member should stand up like all other hon. members to address the House.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I assume that you have some objection to my placing my foot on the chair. I will be happy to conduct myself in a parliamentary manner.

Mr. Baldwin: The game here is not to put it into your mouth!

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Mr. Leggatt: I thank the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. I am sure he was being kind to a new member by admonishing me for having put my foot in my mouth rather than on the chair. I shall keep your admonition in mind, Mr. Speaker, but I think we should try to be informal in this place and when standing should attempt to be as comfortable as possible.

I was talking about the export of raw materials and the fact that the government of British Columbia recently changed over this particular issue. What I am suggesting to this government is that unless it wakes up to this issue, the government of this country will change. We cannot continue to export our jobs along with our raw material. There, again, I suggest that the bill is inadequate.

The other area which to me seems to involve something close to a national scandal is the way in which we continue to finance takeovers through the use of our own resources, taxes, gifts and grants. Over a three-year period DREE gave more than $42 million in grants to foreign-owned corporations. It gave $6 million to IBM, $15 million to Proctor and Gamble. How does a Canadian corporation compete with that sort of thing? I submit this kind of nonsense must end. It is even worse of course when one looks at the giveaways in respect of research to foreign corporations in this country so that they can more efficiently and more effectively compete with Canadian corporations and drive them to the wall or out of business. As much as 80 per cent of the expansionary funds the United States corporations use in this country are Canadian in origin. I repeat that we must be the most stupid people in the world to continue with this kind of nonsense. Let us not be afraid of tough foreign control legislation. The rest of the world has not been afraid of it. We can learn something from Japan, Sweden and France as well as Mexico which has begun to cure this problem in respect of its economy.

The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) indicated in his remarks that no one from this part of the House, the New Democratic Party, mentioned the labour movement in the context of Canadian independence. I am very happy to raise that particular subject because I think it is one which is important. However, let us keep it in context. The question of autonomy in this country is far less significant than the ownership and control of our natural resources as well as our business corporations. The international labour movement does represent a problem. I can give an example from my own riding. The local union of a distillery, Seagrams, the Distillery Rectifying Wine and Allied Workers of America, voted 96 per cent in favour of rejecting the recommendations of their international organization whose headquarters is in New Jersey. Their vote was invalidated in New Jersey on the somewhat spurious ground that it had been counted before it reached the international office. All these workers in New Westminster were seeking was parity with the workers in the Hiram Walker Plant in Ontario. They were seeking some equality for their female workers and equality in respect of benefits now paid in the province of Ontario. This international union, which looks surprising like a company union, refused to accept their legitimate ballot count.

• (1650)

With reference to this subject, I say to the Canadian labour movement—and I am proud to say it as a member of the NDP—that they have to clean their house. We must give autonomy to Canadian labour unions. They have to change their constitution so that they can have autonomy with regard to their money, their votes and in every other area affecting labour in this country.

In 1958, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was quite a literary giant. He was writing in a publication called Cité Libre. He had some very interesting things to say about Canadian independence. This is what he wrote:

Shall we suffer passively our situation of economic domination? It would be better to be annexed outright by the United States than to be exploited without limit.

That is what he said then; what has he done about it since? In fact, the trend has not only continued but it has accelerated under the jurisdiction of the Trudeau government. The time has come in our history when we must ask ourselves: is this country worth preserving? It is these differences that are worth preserving. I do not think anyone in the House wants to see this country become an extension of Los Angeles or adopt an extension of the American ethic because there is something worth preserving north of the 49th parallel. It is subtle, it is intangible, and it is very hard to define, but it has something to do with the Canadian attitude to life. Perhaps the tradition of settling our differences short of violence and finding by the rational method a solution to what seemed on the surface to be an insoluble problem has something to do with it. We have the tradition in this country of having settled our west with very little violence, unlike the United States. Perhaps what is most important is that we have a chance on this half of the continent to learn from the tragic and serious mistakes that were made in the formation of society to the south, where a climate of violence prevails and where there is one of the highest crime rates in the world.

We have a different kind of experiment on this half of the continent, and I submit that it is well worth preserving. I want to quote Abraham Rotstein of the Committee for an Independent Canada who said:

It's time to interfere in our own internal affairs—

I suggest that this bill really does not interfere in our own internal affairs at all. It is just a kind of watching brief on the continuing sell-out of the country. Abraham Rotstein went on to say:

—to show that after a century of living as bastard Englishmen and bastard Americans, it's all right to be plain Canadians at last.

What Mr. Rotstein and the Committee for an Independent Canada have done has been to cast a strong light on Canadian identity because that Canadian identity will disappear into Baffin Bay if we continue the cultural colonization of this country at the present pace.

I also want to quote Dennis Duffy of the Globe and Mail who said:

You can cook a toad so slowly you won't even know it's being done.

That is what has happened, and I say it is time to stop.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, clause 2 of the bill now before the House states clearly, specifically that the Parliament of Canada—

. . . in recognition . . . that the extent to which control of Canadian industry, trade and commerce has become acquired by persons other than Canadians and the effect thereof on the ability . . .

Faced with this situation, we cannot but support any measure intended to stir the Canadian people to react to that state of affairs. Still, it is strange, Mr. Speaker, that we should have to speak of taking over the control, since that leads us to ask ourselves why we no longer have it? It was therefore urgent that we should react to that situation, that we should take steps likely to favour typically Canadian undertakings. But we can only arrive at concrete and tangible solutions if we try to determine the causes of our difficulties.

How is it that for years we have had hardly any protest against the fact that we dress ourselves in foreign clothes, that most of our consumer goods are made abroad? How can we explain that we even buy some of our food products abroad?

Mr. Speaker, it is obviously our present financial system which is the cause of this. Why do these difficulties exist? It is because we have ignored a basic principle on which any investment policy should be founded, which is that the spirit of initiative that brings Canadians to set up manufacturing industries, or to found companies, is totally paralyzed, quite simply through lack of capital. As the sole source of such investments is foreign capital, it is hardly surprising to see that the investors finally take control. This is to be expected.

Mr. Speaker, first, we should ask ourselves to what extent do we need foreign investment to promote exclusively Canadian production, and whether or not we have the necessary raw materials. Second, we should ask ourselves if we have sufficient labour to manufacture what we need. Third, we should ask ourselves if we have the engineers we need to set up plans and make the extrapolations, in a word, to know exactly where we are going.

If we asked ourselves those three questions, Mr. Speaker, all hon. members of this House would agree of course that surely we are not short of raw materials in this country. We are short of nothing—I have said so on many occasions—except lemons, oranges, grapefruits and bananas. In brief, we are short of nothing in Canada. We even have pears in abundance.

Mr. Speaker, we have all the natural resources, all the raw materials that we require to manufacture all the products that we need for domestic consumption, We have—and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) knows that more than anyone—nearly one million unemployed in Canada. So we are not short of manpower. And since we have more universities and colleges which now train engineers, scientists in all fields, surely we are not short of experts either.

With those three essential elements, why, Mr. Speaker, ask ourselves if we need foreign capital? That is what we have done in the past, and that explains the considerable amount of unemployment as well as the fact that 60 per cent of the products we consume come from abroad. We would be better off manufacturing them ourselves. In other words, that explains the failure of Canadian industry. If we want to remedy that we will not succeed by penalizing those who continue to believe in foreign investment but by changing in its entirety the principles which govern production in Canada. And that is why this bill centers on very deep causes as well as other points essential to the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that as long as we accept to consume foreign products which we can produce ourselves, as long as we believe that nothing can be done without foreign investments, nothing—and I repeat—nothing will be done.

Yet there is a concrete and clear solution: all our consumer goods whether food stuff, textiles or whatever, should be produced right here in Canada. All the government need do is ensure the availability of credits required for this purpose. As soon as this principle is recognized, we will no longer have any foreign ownership problem as it will be our own money. In other words, our own credit would finance our whole production system. This is quite same problems and never find any solution.

When we speak of respecting private enterprise, when I say that the government should facilitate credit I do not mean that it should take control of all our companies and interfere with the private sector. This is of course not my point; we are completely opposed to the NDP policy in this connection.

We want all businesses with initiative, when they prove they are able to manufacture the required products which can be consumed by the Canadians, to be assited by legislation aimed at creating new enterprises or at facilitating credit.

Mr. Speaker, we would then be far from subsidies and grants and the whole system now in force and in order to palliate the unemployment problem and promote production in Canada, I believe it would be much better to provide those businesses with the credits they need, provided it would be at a very low rate of interest. There lies the problem. I am convinced that if we were to ask all owners of businesses to choose between a $100,000 loan at 3 or 4 per cent and a $25,000 grant combined with a $75,000 loan at a 10, 11 or 12 per cent rate of interest, they would prefer not getting any grant at all and securing a total loan of $100,000, but at a very low rate of interest. That is how industry could compete with foreign production.

Besides, I think it could never be said too often—it is somewhat ridiculous to have production work exclusively on others.

On what grounds can Americans, Europeans, Asiatics or Africans, with the help of their internal policy, come and influence ours? On what grounds do we have to buy shirts from Japan, Korea or China, merely because those shirts on the Canadian market are, we are told, a little cheaper than the shirts made in Canada? On no grounds at all.

Even if Canadian shirts or shoes were a little more expensive than those made in Japan or elsewhere in the world, what is important is that the Canadian consumer should have the purchasing power he needs to buy them.

Citizens from Quebec, British Columbia or Ontario would not mind paying shirts twice the price provided they would have in their pockets the money to buy them. It is as simple as that.

It is that sound and firm principle that should be applied. Should we concentrate all our activities on the attainment of balance between the purchasing power and the production cost there would never be any inflation or deflation; in short, there would never be any problems.

So, if our system allowed us to produce in Canada all the goods we need, whatever the price, we would only have to balance purchasing power and cost of production. Under such a formula we would reduce unemployment to its limit and we would no longer be at the mercy of other countries for our survival.

Under such a formula, I already said it and I am taking the liberty of saying it again, we would no longer be compelled to buy foreign products because they are cheaper. We cannot presume what went on in the exporting country. What assurance have we that such countries do not succeed in competing with us because of special laws of their governments? Mr. Speaker, I will say as a closing note on Bill C-132 that I understand the government's intentions and I agree with them. However, I want to point out that the question of foreign investment will not be truly solved until we stop waiting for foreign capital and start issuing the credits required to produce the goods the Canadian consumer needs.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that there are three speakers left on the list, and I suggest that to permit the minister to wind up the debate we limit speeches to 12 minutes for the succeeding speakers so that we could finish by six o'clock.

• (1710)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). Is there agreement that from now on speeches will be limited to 12 minutes, with enough time for the minister to wind up the debate and take the vote by six o'clock?

[Translation]

Do hon. members agree that speeches be limited to 12 minutes in order to allow those who wish to speak to do so before six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, because so many hon. members have spoken on this bill before me, I do not want to repeat the pages and pages of statistics which have been brought out in this debate. I would rather, Mr. Speaker, begin by trying to determine what the results of foreign investment in our country have been and will be on the well-being of Canadians one way or the other. After all, this is the key area with which we should be concerned, and it seems to me that it is often overlooked by members from the other parties.

The contribution of foreign investment to economic growth can be measured by determining the extent to which foreign capital permitted an increase in the stock of Canadian capital that would not otherwise have taken place. Against these benefits to Canadian economic growth must be set the interest, dividends and business service payments of various kinds which foreign owners earn in Canada. Therefore, the value of foreign investment equals the increase of Canadian stock capital which otherwise would not have taken place, minus the interest, dividends and business service payments earned by foreigners.

However, the nature and extent of the grain from any given direct investment depends on two crucial points: first, it depends on the extent to which competition in a system diffuses the impact of new products and processes-increasing productivity or lowering prices. In brief, whether the new entrant shakes up the pattern of production or distribution, or simply adapts to the existing pattern in order to avoid disturbing the market. Second, the extent of gain depends on the extent to which Canadian governments succeed in taxing profits accruing to foreigners at an optimal rate. It also includes the special need to ensure there is not overpricing on purchases from foreign affiliates and underpricing on sales, such as to reduce the tax yield due to Canadian authorities.

For the greatest part of the last century, the principal objective of industrial policy in Canada was economic growth—growth through settlement of the west, growth through exploration and exploitation of mineral resources, growth through application and adaptation of technology to processing and growth through protection of manufacturing activities to supply the requirements of an expanding population. Today, growth is still important, particularly in the relatively short term, since in the 1970's the Canadian labour force is growing more rapidly than in any other developed country. But these days, growth in productive capacity is only one of our objectives. Our main concern is to increase Canadian participation in the development of the economy, and yet another is, obviously, to increase the quality of life for all Canadians, to create more "Canadianism" in our economy, if I may use that term.

The following problems draw attention to the fact that the allowance of foreign investment into Canada must be accomplished in terms which differ from those used in the past. The government must become more active than it has been in order to ensure Canadian participation in the Canadian economy. It must guarantee that not only future, but also present, foreign investment serves Canadian interests. Direct foreign investment provides capital for growth both through new inflows of capital and through use of retained earnings in Canada. The reinvestment of retained earnings is often viewed as the use of Canadian savings, which is correct in a sense, but the crucial question, frequently overlooked, is whether these savings would have been generated without the original foreign investment initiative.

We must, therefore, consult and co-operate with the provinces to assure an increase in Canadian participation in ownership of the economy, and not keep a closed door policy as the government has been doing in the past. We must have some positive measures designed to encourage Canadians to invest in the development of Canadian enterprise and our party has on numerous occasions proposed, among other things, initiative programs for both individual Canadians and Canadian small business. Mr. Speaker, I do not have time at present to elaborate on this matter.

We must establish more effective guidelines for corporate behaviour in Canada by foreign-owned companies. We must require full financial disclosure from Canadian based subsidiaries of firms owned by interests outside Canada. We must require that Canadian citizens constitute the majority on the boards of all companies operating in Canada under federal charter. We must encourage foreign-owned subsidiaries to appoint Canadians as executive officers of their companies.

We must immediately set to work with the provinces to produce a national development strategy for Canada. Part of the process of arriving at that strategy will be the identification of any additional key sectors of the economy in which foreign investment or takeovers should be limited or not permitted. These key sectors will be determined on the basis of their significance to either economic or cultural fields. Unfortunately, this bill does nothing to control in any way the continued expansion of existing foreign-owned companies in Canada so as to assist remaining all-Canadian companies to grow in a healthier economic climate. Foreign ownership in Canada has increased in the most part through the expansion of existing foreign controlled enterprises mostly with our own money—a fact that Bill C-132 has overlooked as well. And that, Mr. Speaker, leads me to the far too inadequate banking system and more specifically the antiquated Bank Act itself. I believe the banking system bears prime responsibility for not only the largest total of business failures since the depression, but for the ultimate alternative of foreign ownership.

I can think of no better example than my own business experiences during the Trudeau years to demonstrate the many flaws in the government's over-all economic policies. Unfortunately, my experience is not an isolated example but is a far too common happening in Canadian business today. I started a small manufacturing company some years ago. In the first three years we realized a substantial growth to over $1 million in sales, providing over 50 new jobs for Canadians. By the middle of 1971, business had become very active and we reached even higher sales which required us to expand our facilities. For this we needed further financing. Up to this point, it sounds like a perfectly healthy business situation. The simple fact that any Canadian, whether rich or poor, can start a small business of his own at any time, anywhere, makes me proud that I am Canadian. But over the years, especially the last decade or so, under the Liberal government, it has become more and more difficult to expand a Canadian business once started. Foreign owned companies can expand easier than we can, because of the high credit given their parent companies.

Mr. Speaker, let me briefly go back to my own experience, when my small all-Canadian business needed expansion capital in order to exist with the growing market trend. The crunch came when we approached Canadian chartered banks and finally the Industrial Development Bank, which theoretically was created to promote the economic welfare of Canada with particular consideration to the financing problems of small enterprises. It took us close to a year to obtain a relatively small loan from the IDB which cost us in legal fees nearly 10 per cent of the loan. Our collateral to the IDB was almost four times the value of the loan. As a matter of fact, so much collateral was needed that if I had told them my grandmother had gold fillings in her teeth they probably would have wanted those as well. On top of that, the interest rate was 11½ per cent. I do not call that helpful to anyone.

Eventually, like many other Canadian manufacturing companies we lacked growth capital to create jobs, curb inflation, and generally, in a small way, help the over-all Canadian economy. The American sharks were biting at our heels. To make the story short, an American firm finally offered to buy me out. This American firm had already been offered the required capital for the takeover by the same Canadian bank that had turned us down to stay Canadian. In other words, it is the same old story of being bought out with our own money. Fortunately, in my case, due to numerous personal circumstances, we were able to stay Canadian. But there are many cases in Canada, not only in small business but large industry as well, where the Americans literally did buy us out with our own money.

For example, McGraw-Hill bought out Ryerson Press and did so with a $2 million Canadian bank loan. Michelin of France moved into Nova Scotia, financed in part by a $20 million loan from the Royal Bank. Crown Zellerback of Canada borrowed $35.2 million from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce to pay a debt to its U.S. parent. I could go on and on giving a great list of Canadian companies being bought out by Americans with our own money. If foreign firms, most of them American, get first crack at our savings, Canadian firms will therefore be denied this privilege which they deserve. There must be many revisions to the Bank Act, to encourage the development of financial institutions which are feasible and will suit Canadian needs.

• (1720)

We can only expect, if this dearth of funds continues, to see more reports such as this recent Dun and Bradstreet report from which I shall quote:

2,848 businesses went bust last year, the highest total since 1932, when there were 2,938 failures.

Immediate action must be taken by the government of Canada to change this drastic movement in our over-all economy or, to put it more simply, to get more Canadians involved in Canada. The government must act to revitalize the whole banking system. We need immediate action, Mr. Speaker. It is clear, once again, if we look at the present inadequate bill before us, that the Trudeau government is not the government that is able to cope with this most important of problems.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal government has once again demonstrated its incompetence. After years of legislation which has discouraged Canadians from investing in Canadian businesses, this government has found it necessary to yield to pressures and has introduced another negative bill, Bill C-132. This is an especially negative bill, when contrasted with the extremely positive ideas put forward in this debate by my colleagues, particularly the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer). In addition, Mr. Speaker, this bill will create the foreign investment review agency, complete with commissioner and staff; and another full-grown bureaucracy will have been added to the ever-increasing amount of federal government.

The taxpayers of Canada have said that they do not want more government bureaucracies; nor do businesses, large or small, want more government forms and red tape. They all want less government, less taxation and less interference with personal freedom. They know that the Conservative party is the only party that can form a government which will provide the results they want and that Canada needs so desperately.

I should like to tell hon. members a little story that will illustrate the degree of incompetence displayed by this government and that will show that one hand of this government has no idea what the other hand is doing. At the same time that the government was drafting Bill C-132, which proposes to restrict the transfer of Canadian businesses to "non-eligible persons", this same government was embarking on a business venture in partnership with some of those very same non-eligible persons. On January 15, this year, the Vancouver Sun carried an announcement regarding the formation of a new capital ventures firm, with majority control by Canada Development Corporation. The new company, Ventures West Capital Limited, with head offices in Vancouver, has an initial capitalization of $3.5 million, of which Canada Development Corporation has taken over $2 million. Some other investors are the Bank of British Columbia, the Bank of Tokyo, Guaranty Trust Company, and several other individuals and private investment groups based in western Canada. The Bank of Tokyo, of course, would be considered a "non-eligible person" under Bill C-132, and at least one other corporate investor has non-eligible shareholders. Surely this is a strange involvement for the child of a government that professes a desire to save Canadian businesses.

You may recall that CDC was formed to prevent Canadian businesses from falling into foreign hands. As if its recent activities were not strange enough, we are told that CDC will participate in further Ventures West share offerings of $1.5 million. You may know someone who, on the apparently favourable terms offered, would also like to go into partnership with CDC. Unfortunately, Chairman A. E. Hall, who also happens to be President of the Bank of British Columbia, says that investors must be active in the world of big business and that the minimum investment is $100,000. Also, the new company considers itself to be a private company, so the books are closed to public scrutiny, even though some $2.5 million of taxpayers' money is invested.

I would emphasize that I do not question the motives of the non-government investors; nor do I suggest any wrongdoing on their part. Every westerner knows that western businesses have often been at the mercy of the big eastern financial interest. We westerners welcome new pools of capital, to give the eastern trusts and banking fraternity some competition.

The stated objectives of Ventures West are to take equity positions in western Canada and the north and to encourage Canadian and foreign investors to participate in joint ventures. But, I question the propriety of the government's entering into such a venture, especially at the very time it had Bill C-132 on the drawing board. The new ventures capital company will concentrate on investing in natural resource companies and companies that have good management and good growth prospects. These are admirable aims and the private investors are to be commended for their initiatives. But the government should be condemned for entering into a business which will use the taxpayers' money to undermine competitive sources of venture capital, underwriting facilities, etc. The targets of Ventures West are the companies that can survive and prosper in the existing conditions without government interference. And I protest on behalf of all taxpayers this further act of "big brotherism", by which the government takes away the fruits of our labour so that it can invest our money as it pleases, even when its investments conflict with its own policies.

As I said in this House only a few days ago, the government cannot create, cannot built of itself, but can seize only what others have created, to do what it want to do. So, Mr. Speaker, here we have the spectacle of the government proposing a bill to restrict foreign investment in Canada, when it has just embarked on a business venture with foreigners and placed itself in the position of having to answer the following questions: First, was proper value received for the investment of taxpayers' money? Second, did all investors pay the same price for their shares? Third, why can't the ordinary investor benefit from the apparently attractive terms offered, and why does the government favour only the wealthy, who can afford to put $100,000 into a single investment? Fourth, why has the government invested taxpayers' money in a private company which is not subject to public scrutiny? Fifth, why has the government seen fit to use taxpayers' money to undermine competitive brokers, investors and underwriters? Sixth, why has the government allowed CDC to vary from its charted course and use Canadian tax dollars to invest in the very companies that do not need government intervention? And perhaps the paramount question is, why is the government interfering with people's personal freedom to work, save, and invest as they see fit—as the people see fit?

I say again that it is folly for us to think that government can solve our problems for us, when the only resources at government disposal are our resources. Bill C-132 and the contradictory activities of CDC are examples of the government's taking the people's money and spending it as politicians and bureaucrats see fit. These are steps in the wrong direction, steps away from a truly free and prosperous society.

This government says that it is concerned about the high proportion of foreign ownership in Canadian industry yet this government brought in a capital gains tax! I cannot think of a single instance in Canadian history in which the government's actions were more inconsistent with its words. Even the actions of CDC, which I have been talking about, pale in comparison. Either the government is terribly ignorant of economics or the government is terribly dishonest. If it thinks that it can increase the proportion of Canadian ownership of Canadian industry by levying a capital gains tax, which penalizes Canadians for risking their savings in Canadian equities, then it is terribly ignorant of economics.

The alternative is that the government is aware that the capital gains tax seriously impairs Canadian investment, but that the government's tax policy is made by socialist theoreticians, who levy taxes in accordance with socialist ideology, not as a practical means of raising revenue. Of all the taxes presently levied on Canadians, none is more injurious than the capital gains tax. It discourages Canadians from investing. By forcing investors to make investments on the basis of tax considerations rather than considerations of efficiency, it wastefully distorts what Canadian investment there is. It reduces the amount and efficiency of capital goods with which Canadian labourers work, thereby reducing the productivity of labour and labourers' real wages. It imposes a nightmare of complexity on Canadian taxpayers. Surely the value of the time wasted by Canadian taxpayers and their lawyers and accountants, as well as by the bureaucrats in the income tax department, will exceed the revenue brought in by this tax.

If this government were really serious about increasing employment in Canada and encouraging Canadian ownership it would get rid of its socialist theoriticians and their capital gains tax. Then it would ask practical men to help find practical, not ideological, solutions to Canadian economic problems—problems which are substantially the creation of this government. But, Mr. Speaker, we understand this government well enough to know that Canadians cannot realistically expect such genuine reform from the present administration. That is why the present administration has got to go, to make way for a Conservative government to straighten out the mess that the present government has created.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments on the investment review bill. I have listened to some very fine speeches in the House on this subject. I have listened to the economic surveys which have been presented to us by many hon. members, and the more I listen the more I become confused.

With respect to the foreign review board which is to be set up, I wonder, in particular, what it will cost the Canadian taxpayer and how effective its actions will be. I am prompted to ask this question because of what other boards set up in this country have done, or left undone. I think, particularly, of the anti-dumping board intended to protect Canadian industry and the jobs of labour. This tribunal is, as I understand it, processing cases at the rate of five or six a year. I have looked up the cost of this tribunal to the Canadian people and I find it is in the neighbourhood of $300,000 a year with a top salary to its chairman of about $34,000. What have they done? This is a question we should ask ourselves. What is the board contemplated in this measure likely to do?

In my area there is a Canadian-owned industry processing hides. It was not protected. They have not been able to buy their hides in Canada. They have to import them from Mexico. Then they must compete with foreign labour whose wages are half those paid to workers on similar jobs in Canada. I should like to place on record an excerpt from the statement of the president of that company to show how ineffective are the tribunals and boards which have been set up. The statement is contained in a report delivered to the annual meeting held at the Skyline Hotel in Toronto. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has a copy of this report. Mr. Albert Cook, the president, stated:

> The tanning industry has been in existence in Canada for 323 years, since the building of the first tannery in Levis, Quebec. I doubt that the industry has ever in its long history been in as precarious a position as that in which it finds itself today. Unless help is forthcoming soon, the Canadian tanning industry as we know it is on its way out. With it will go the jobs of some 2,500 men and women working directly in the industry and, more important still, the jobs of 25,000 workers in related industries would be affected.

This is a Canadian industry, Mr. Speaker. What are we doing to protect it? Mr. Cook continued:

> I speak not only as president of this association but as a Canadian when I say this situation is a matter of national concern. Our industry is unique in Canada. Our member firms are 100 per cent owned and operated by Canadians. We are well-equipped, technically competent and well-managed. In this era of multi-national corporations and the dominating presence of foreign investments in almost every facet of this country's economic activity, a genuine all-Canadian industry is a rarity. But, like the whooping crane, we are an endangered species, threatened with extinction.

I go on, now, to read another excerpt from the report:

> In 1960, only 5 per cent of the pairs of shoes sold at retail in Canada were produced outside Canadian factories. Almost half of all shoes sold at retail in 1972 were imported.

We might well ask ourselves at this point what is the use of setting up boards costing the taxpayers millions of dollars when they are not even protecting the industry which is presently established here. I think it is most important we should protect established Canadian industry, and for this reason I am putting parts of Mr. Cook's statement on the record. He continues:

> The intrusion of both shoes and leather from other countries into the Canadian market is perplexing, to say the least. The shoes and the leather come mainly from the so-called developing countries where substantial government subsidies to exporters and comparatively low wage structures combined with the very latest in production equipment, often provided at government expense, make it impossible for Canadian-made products to compete in the Canadian domestic market.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that some of this equipment is provided by the Canadian government itself. The report goes on:

> Another factor working against our industry in the past year has been the spiralling price of hides generated by a world shortage... Not only does our industry find itself threatened by imports, but our markets abroad have declined drastically largely due to the devaluations of the pound sterling and the U.S. dollar.

Britain and the United States have been the industry's chief customers. The possibility of replacing these two main markets is non-existent. Other countries are developing their own tanning industries and with them are coming trade restrictions. To quote directly from the report:

> Some 65 per cent of domestic leather sales goes into the manufacture of footware and unless other markets for leather can be developed we have to reply for survival on a continuing domestic market for shoe leathers... It is apparent that the Canadian tanning industry has become almost totally dependent on the Canadian footwear industry for its existence.
> A recent study commissioned by the federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce shows the folly of this position. The study forecasts that by 1975, only two years away, if the current situation remains unchanged and the trends of the past ten years are allowed to persist, imports of footwear would total 41 million pairs and would result in reduced consumption of Canadian-made footwear to 18 million pairs. I suggest to you that this is a very conservative forecast.

Perhaps it is not quite so conservative, because it was the government which undertook this study, I believe.

> It would mean that domestic sales of shoe leather would be reduced by at least 50 per cent.
> Clearly, before 1975, unless something is done to rectify this situation, the Canadian tanning and shoe manufacturing industries will be on the ropes, and also the jobs of those Canadians who are employed in these industries.

I think this is most important because, after all, we are dealing here with a Canadian industry.

> What is to be done? We have placed all these facts before the federal government. We have placed them before the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the previous administration, as well as officials of his department. We have privately restated our case for the benefit of the new minister.

I note he is in the House and listening to this. Last May a submission was made to the anti-dumping tribunal but since then we have heard nothing. The anti-dumping tribunal is not a regulatory body but merely makes a recommendation, if so inclined, to the federal government. I do not know whether the federal government have heard anything. If not, I think they should have communicated with this tribunal.

This gentleman winds up by saying:

> —I predict the Canadian tanning industry, born in 1651, will before 1975 be preparing its obituary.

I put that on the record, Mr. Speaker, because here is a Canadian industry that is disappearing from the Canadian scene. I should like to know how the minister proposes to deal with this situation, and what he proposes to do about it when the investment review board is set up. I have seen so much political window dressing during my time in parliament, Mr. Speaker, that no wonder I am sceptical. To put the matter in focus, I have put on the record some excerpts from the report of the Tanners Association of Canada.

I suggest that we will have to develop new Canadian industries. I feel that what we have to do is to put much more money into research. I am sure the minister realizes as well as I that it was the United Kingdom that developed the United States and its industrial complex. The United Kingdom also developed Canada. In about the year 1926, if my memory serves me correctly, investments from the United States and the United Kingdom were roughly equal. Then, the flow of investment capital from the United States into Canada became greater and greater while that from the United Kingdom fell off. It is also interesting to note that United Kingdom investment was mostly portfolio investment, including railways, canals and other investments of that type, whereas U.S. investment went into industry in Canada. Had it not been for this situation, the people of Canada today would probably be accepting half the standard of living they presently enjoy. There would have been a Chinese wall along this 5,000 mile boarder that separates us from the U.S.

If with all our great natural resources which the United States craves for—and we have the resources that the U.S. is growing short of—we cannot do the necessary research in this country to develop the particular products that are peculiar to our resources and which other countries have been unable to develop, then I suggest there is something wrong with us. The minister knows as well as I do that if you spend the required amount of money on research and you have the right men, you will be able to market products you can sell to the world.

This is what I conceive we should be doing. We should be spending much more money and using our educated young people, many of whom today are walking the streets hunting for jobs as research workers. If they are insufficiently trained, then we should send them back to school and make researchers out of them. To date we have depended on the United States to do the research for us. U.S. subsidiaries operating in Canada largely depend on their parent companies in the United States for research.

I was talking to a manufacturer the other day in my constituency who told me: "Ten years ago when we needed some money, a time when we employed less than 100 people in our factory, do you know where we had to get it? We had to go south of the border to our parent firm. We got the money and today we are employing 600 people". I can see no reason why we should not talk to the United States, tell them that we have the resources, that they have the know how and the industrial base, so let us work this out to the benefit of both of us. We are neighbours by geography, and historically we are blood related. You have the French descendants in the New England states, whereas in other parts you have Anglo-Saxon descendants. Why do we not sit around a table and work out what is in the best interests both of Canada and the United States? I think this could be done, and must be done.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be rising at this time to conclude the debate on second reading. It has been a debate which I think all members have sensed to be a rather dramatic occurrence. I listened to the various speeches for their thoughtfulness and for their imagination as well. I think we all sensed there was an emergency with regard to foreign investment, and I think there is a general disposition on the part of the House to regard this measure as timely.

I was particularly struck by the amount of common ground that exists between the various parties. This is as it should be, since this is a question of national concern. For instance, there is general agreement that a problem does exist and that something should be done about it. There is even a large measure of agreement on the general policy approaches which should be taken. Various speakers have alluded to the economic policies that Canada should have—policies with respect to the pursuit of full employment; policies with respect to encouraging Canadian savings and entrepreneurship. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) referred to these matters, and so have others on both sides of the House.

The hon. member went on to emphasize, as did the previous speaker from Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), the importance of research and development which is undertaken in Canada. He referred to the need for flexibility in our financial institutions and to efforts to increase our exports. Without wanting to sound immodest, I think hon. members could have found all those particular policy thrusts in my own statement on second reading when I introduced this bill.

Perhaps it might be worth mentioning that the economic background to the development of Canada and to foreign investment policy has to be seen, from our vantage point, as one of the key elements in a coherent set of industrial policies for Canada. Some would use the phrase, "the industrial strategy" which covers the broad band of policies.

Let me refer to one or two of the items which were alluded to. For example, entrepreneurship. The government has adopted a two-fold approach in this area, one relating to financing and the other to the development of managerial and entrepreneurial capability. On the financing side, the government has introduced programs such as the general adjustment assistance program, GAAP, and the defence industry productivity program, DIP. Then, we have the operations of the Industrial Development Bank which are under review by the government. Special additional measures are also contemplated in relation to the financing of small business. On the management side, the government is thinking of expanding, indeed, doing more than that, is planning its counselling assistance to the small enterprises program, CASE, which was introduced a year ago in Montreal and subsequently in Winnipeg. I would hope that during this fiscal year it will be introduced in a number of centres across the country.

• (1750)

I would refer as well to the question of support for research and development to which the hon. member for Simcoe North referred. We do have a substantial government assistance program for the advancement of industrial technology, PAIT, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, IRDIA, shared on a 50-50 basis, as well as the Industrial Design Assistance Program. The Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act allows for outright grants in respect of new industry or innovative research.

As the Minister of State for Science and Technology I announced a year ago the government's new policy on contracting out research and development projects previously undertaken by the private sector. In other words, we are giving the private sector an opportunity of learning from research efforts by the government. In this way we are assisting in the development, if you like, of a distinct Canadian competence, and in this sense I refer to the Export Development Corporation bill which is presently before this House. Indeed, it was referred to the standing committee which has had its first meeting. That represents a major program for the expansion of exports.

While there is some common ground, as I have indicated, there are also some major differences. This is a debate on foreign investment in Canada. I was struck by the fact that the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) managed to avoid any reference in his policy proposals to measures directed specifically at foreign investment. Is his a foreign investment policy without measures to deal with foreign investment? There was not even the usual reference found in Conservative statements to a need for additional key sectors.

As I pointed out in introducing this bill for second reading, it is important to have measures to support the development of strong Canadian owned and controlled companies. That is the first pillar of Liberal policy. It is also important that the government has the means to ensure that needed foreign investment brings maximum benefits to Canada. The Conservatives appear to have no answer on that point. Bill C-132 does. I must also confess to some surprise and disagreement with the Conservative espousal of the buy back of Canadian industries. We must increase our trade surplus, said the hon. member for Trinity, in order to generate the capital to repatriate Canadian industry. However, as I pointed out in my earlier remarks, there are grave problems to this approach.

Let us leave aside for the moment the massive amounts of capital involved. What are we to do about the other problems? Why buy back the past instead of building for the future?

There is common ground between myself and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: There is, for example, some substance to his comment that Conservative answers all involve some form of tax concession, or some other form of incentive directed toward the public purse. Positive incentives have a role to play and, as I have indicated, the government has used them where necessary, but to rely solely on these incentives is to admit the bankruptcy of that policy.

The NDP has given notice that it will seek to strengthen the bill in committee in three respects: Increasing the coverage of the screening agency; amending the presumption of non-eligibility back to the 5 per cent and 20 per cent as in the old takeover review bill, and have the entire bill proclaimed at the same time. According to the hon. member for York South, screening powers should be extended to cover imports of parts and components, exports of raw materials, export agreements between affiliates of multinational enterprises, and the expansion of existing foreign controlled corporations in Canada into areas related to present lines of business.

Let me say that there may be some misunderstanding about the proposal now before this House. As I and my predecessor have made clear on a number of occasions, in looking at whether a proposed investment will result in significant benefits to Canada, the government will look at procurement policy, export policy and further processing to ensure that to the maximum possible extent economic activity which can rationally be carried out here in fact takes place here. These considerations go to the heart of the screening process.

This is not to say that the screening process will examine every purchase contract, every export contract and every sale of Canadian resources. Just to state this possibility is an indication of how impossible it is. Billions of dollars of exports and imports between affiliate companies across our borders every year are being carried out under thousands of contracts. It is inconceivable to me that the government could contemplate setting up a bureaucracy to screen every such transaction. Business and the economy would grind to a halt in that event.

Mr. Speaker, in the one minute left to me I would just like to refer to one criticism that has been raised, that there is no screening of the expansion of existing foreign-controlled firms already in business into related areas of activity. As the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) pointed out, there are some horrendous administrative problems in this regard. Perhaps this explains why other countries have shyed away from this type of action.

I have indicated on a number of occasions that the proclamation of this part of the bill, and this is another criticism which has been suggested, should take place within a year of passage of the takeover provisions. It seems to me entirely sensible to proceed in this orderly step-by-step manner when introducing this policy which will affect all sectors of the economy. As Aristotle said "Well begun is half done".

Mr. Baldwin: Are you sure it was Aristotle?

Mr. Gillespie: There will be an opportunity when the bill is before the standing committee to deal with a number of other aspects. The one point I would like to make to hon. members this afternoon is that this is not a policy of negative nationalism, this is rather a policy in support of the Canadian attitude and in support of Canadians running, managing and developing their own economy. I look forward to the discussions in the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In accordance with the order accepted previously today, it is my duty to put the question at this time. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 2 p.m.

SPRING!

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is a bit unusual for a "Rose" to be part of a daffodil promotion; nevertheless I am pleased to be part of the traditional rite of spring in the House that heralds its coming in British Columbia and is announced by making flower children of all hon. members.

The Bradner daffodil growers of my riding, who donated these blooms, regret that spring is a little late this year and hope that next year the presentation can be made in late January or early February when the blossoms are usually at their peak.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND, 1973

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Section 19 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, to lay upon the table of the House a certified copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Newfoundland, 1973.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

METHODS OF BENEFIT CONTROL OFFICERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, that benefit control officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission are using devious methods to disqualify immigrants who are not fluent in one of the official languages from unemployment insurance benefits. Such methods are unacceptable to Canadians and, indeed, as far as this party is concerned are very repugnant. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That the question of methods used by benefit control officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to exclude immigrants who do not speak an official language from unemployment insurance benefits be referred to the appropriate standing committee for investigation and report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DIFFICULTIES IN MEETING LAND ACT REQUIREMENTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. The vast increases in the cost of land and housing are causing serious restrictions for some 125,000 war veterans who hold qualification certificates in meeting the requirements under the Veterans Land Act. This difficulty is emphasized by the acreage requirement, the limits on loans available, and the high down payment required. In order to bring legislation in line with the needs of the veterans, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling):

That the government immediately appoint a committee, consisting of members of the department, officials of the veterans land administration and veterans organizations, to study these matters with specific consideration given to removing the October, 1968, and March, 1974, deadline restrictions, and that the report be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs within three months.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

APPEARANCE OF MINISTER BEFORE COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that a motion was passed in the Standing Committee on Regional Development this morning deploring the failure or unwillingness of the minister to appear before the committee, among other things, I ask unanimous consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That this House call upon the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to appear before the Standing Committee on Regional Development at its next sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

REFERENCE OF POLICY PAPER TO COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the recent green paper outlining proposals for a communications policy for Canada explicitly draws attention to the growing inability of the Canadian Transport Commission to reflect the interests of Canadian consumers in regulatory hearings, and because this criticism bears directly on the validity of the rate increases awarded to Bell Canada, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the paper on "A Proposed Communications Policy for Canada" be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

REPRESENTATION OF PARTIES AT FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I would like to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the minority situation of the party in office and the ever growing importance of social security throughout this country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Tétrault):

That a representative of each of the parties in this House accompany the Minister of National Health and Welfare at the federal-provincial conference of the Ministers of Social Affairs.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The hon. member's motion cannot therefore be put.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PASSPORT BILL

PROVISION FOR ISSUANCE OF PASSPORT IN NAME ON BIRTH CERTIFICATE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-173, respecting a passport issued to a woman who is married.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this bill is about sexual equality. Its purpose is to make it possible for a woman who is married to have the same right as a man by enabling her to have a passport issued to her in the name which is set out on her birth certificate should she so desire.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—DIFFERENCES BETWEEN ALBERTA AND ONTARIO—STATEMENT BY MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ROLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was stating government policy last night when he indicated that the federal government does not have any role with regard to any potential differences that may exist between the province of Alberta and the province of Ontario over certain energy matters.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could respond to that question. I did not use the terminology and phraseology referred to by the hon. member. Rather, I indicated that we did not want to get into the middle of the acrimony which was developing between—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister will appreciate the difficulty the Chair is faced with. When there is allusion in a question to a statement made outside the House it is recognized practice that the inquiry should be limited, as was done by the Leader of the Opposition, to asking the Prime Minister whether the alleged statement represents government policy.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did spend some time with the minister yesterday afternoon discussing this very question. I was sure he would say he did not make the statement which is attributed to him.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary which I shall direct to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is it the position of the minister on behalf of the government that the government of Canada does not have any role with regard to the potential differences that exist over certain matters between the provinces of Alberta and Ontario?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, certainly the government of Canada does not have any role to get in the middle, as I was about to say, of any acrimony publicly between two premiers. However, we believe it would be desirable to have private consultation with the interested parties in this particular matter. I am looking forward to having such consultation to see whether we can bring together the consumer and producer interests involved in this matter and arrive at a mutually satisfactory settlement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is it the minister's position that any such differences should be settled before any general national conference or any general national consultation takes place with regard to energy policy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That certainly is the insistence of the premier of Alberta. It seems to me that the situation of future planning by the Trans-Canada Pipelines in particular will require that the outstanding issues be resolved at an early date. Therefore I think the timing of the matter does indicate that before we can have a general federal-provincial discussion and a full scale meeting for that purpose we will have to arrive at some agreement on the current and immediate issue.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the minister's intention or the position of the government that the National Energy Board should have any role to play or have any jurisdiction with regard to the regulation of any such disputes in the future?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The jurisdiction of the National Energy Board is set out under the statute. What is involved here is really a substantial change in the base price of gas which until now has not been a subject of the board's consideration. I think that the slightly longer term question is the kind of question that should be involved in the over-all energy discussions in due course.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT DECISION ON TRANSPORT COMMISSION ORDER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. In view of the fact that Bell Canada tabled its proposed new tariffs with the Canadian Transport Commission a day or two ago and therefore time is of the essence with regard to any decision by the government, may I ask the minister whether the government has made a decision on the order of the Canadian Transport Commission and, if so, whether the minister intends to make any statement to parliament on the matter?

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—DIFFERENCES BETWEEN ALBERTA AND ONTARIO—COMMUNICATION BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIERS ON POSSIBLE PRIVATE MEETINGS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary to the questions that were put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources by my leader. Have you specifically been in touch with the premiers of Ontario and Alberta with respect to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should address his question to the Chair even if it is a supplementary. The Chair accepts even supplementary questions.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister could answer my question whether he has in fact been in touch with either premier concerning his suggested private meetings.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, with the responsible ministers and in one case with the responsible parliamentary assistant.

NATURAL GAS—DIFFERENCES BETWEEN ALBERTA AND ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister consider making a statement to the House on motions stating, I hope clearly and concisely, what the federal government's position is, if it has one, with regard to the proposals made and the constitutional position taken by the two provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have pursued that in the standing committee. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to peruse the proceedings there.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—ALLEGED USE OF IMPROPER METHODS BY OFFICERS IN OBTAINING STATEMENTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for unemployment insurance. It arises as a result of statements made regarding questionable actions of benefit control officers. In view of the fact that Parkdale Community Legal Services has charged that "it is clear the benefit control officers have been coached in methods of extracting statements that are damaging to the claimant", would the minister issue instructions in no uncertain terms that such practice is to be discontinued immediately?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already done so. I might say that I welcome the report of Parkdale Community Legal Services, as does the chairman of the advisory committee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to whom it was directed. The chairman assured me this morning that the committee will contact the people who prepared the report and look into the activities of the unemployment insurance commission which were criticized by them, with protection of any claimants involved, as part of the advisory committee's over-all examination of the benefit control operation.

Mr. Alexander: Pending receipt of and action taken on the report and recommendations, if any, of the advisory committee, will the minister assure the House and advise benefit control officers that no interviews or statements related thereto will be used in considering disqualification unless and until claimants have been informed of their rights, the purpose of the interview and how the information they offer will be used? Can the minister give us that assurance pending receipt of this report?

• (1420)

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that is the intention of my instructions to the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the past.

BENEFIT CONTROL—INQUIRY AS TO TIGHTENING OF INTERPRETATION OF "SUITABLE WORK" AND SECRET ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the Unemployment Insurance Commission in the past three months tightened up its interpretation of "suitable work", and have there been any new and secret administrative decisions taken recently about which parliament and the public have no knowledge?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would say the answer to that is no. The benefit control operation was introduced in June or July of last year and has been continuing with certain refinements, about which I have advised the House, since that time. So I do not think the allegation is correct.

Mr. Rose: Since the previous minister of manpower and immigration defended the new UIC program on the grounds that more generous benefits took the load off provincial and municipal welfare expenditures, has there been any change in policy deliberately to transfer desperate UIC claimants, and the cost associated with them, to the provincial and municipal welfare rolls?

Mr. Andras: Very definitely no.

REQUEST FOR REOPENING OF OFFICES IN RURAL AND SMALL TOWN AREAS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister now reopen UIC offices that were shut in rural and small town areas in order to assure the House that the thousands of Canadians now unfairly disqualified in these areas, and who are available for work, will have their claims processed fairly and promptly?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise of the hon. member's question, I have indicated before and I indicate again that a reorganization of the commission is pending and should be announced shortly.

Mr. Grafftey: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see 15 members who are seeking to ask supplementaries. We will not have that many. The Chair will recognize two or three, and if hon. members then want to have a debate on this subject we can use the rest of the question period. For the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Grafftey: Will the minister inform the House how the UIC offices for these areas know if a man is available for work when the offices are over 70 miles away from where he lives and there is no liaison with the local placement officers?

Mr. Andras: If the hon. member will give me specific examples I will look into them and advise him later.

ENERGY

PROPOSED NUCLEAR REACTOR DEVELOPMENT ON STODDART ISLAND, N.S.—NEGOTIATIONS WITH DEPARTMENT—MEETING OF SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has to do with reports that in all likelihood negotiations are going ahead for the development of what has been described as the world's largest nuclear reactor at Stoddart Island off the coast of Nova Scotia. First of all I want to ask whether or not at this point in time there have been any negotiations between the developers of that project and his department and, if so, is the minister satisfied that the reason for their coming to Nova Scotia is legal difficulties in the United States, and are the safety standards involved in the building of a plant of this magnitude being met by the developers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not participated in any such discussions and I am not aware that there have been any recently. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the Atomic Energy Control Board has jurisdiction from parliament to control any such installation and that the board has expressed its reservations about the safety of the American-type reactor. On that basis, and using the question of the hon. gentleman for the purpose, I might remind interested parties that the board would have to be satisfied about the safety of any reactor.

INCOME TAX

REPORTED ILLEGAL AVOIDANCE OF TAXES BY CHRYSLER CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the report that Chrysler Canada has illegally avoided paying taxes totalling approximately $34 million for 1967-68 by inappropriately claiming losses which accrued to its dealers, will the minister inform the House whether or not his department has investigated this and, if so, would he inform the House what his decision has been on the matter?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that it would not be proper for me to discuss any individual tax case here.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the seriousness of the charge respecting this major tax evasion, would the minister table any copies of letters between the Chrysler Corporation and the internal revenue service of the United States on this subject, which I am informed are in his department?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any such correspondence and I am not certain that tabling it would be proper either, but I will be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the minister inform the House whether any present member of the cabinet has interceded on behalf of Chrysler Corporation on this matter?

Mr. Stanbury: Not with me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REPRESENTATION OF PARTIES AT FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, I should like to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the federal-provincial conference which is to take place in the near future for the purpose of reviewing the whole question of social security in Canada, does the hon. Prime Minister intend to invite representatives of all political parties sitting in the House to participate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe a decision has been made as yet as to whether the conference will be in camera or public.

If it is public, we shall probably, as usual, reserve seats for observers, and members of the political parties represented in the House will have priority over the general public.

[Later:]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PRIORITY ON AGENDA OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the federal-provincial conference is to take place on April 25, 26 and 27, and since the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs intends to take part, would the Prime Minister say whether the question of family allowances will have priority in the upcoming discussions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There may have been a mistake, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry if there has, but I thought the hon. member was referring to the first ministers' conference.

If this is his question, the answer is that the agenda has not yet been drawn up. If the hon. member is referring to the matter of the welfare ministers' conference, I would ask the parliamentary secretary to answer. But first let us find out if I have got the question right.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, my question is about the coming federal-provincial conference, which is to take place on April 25, 26 and 27. It is a conference of health and welfare ministers.

[English]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of the federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers is to discuss an over-all review of all welfare programs, and in the area of social security family allowances form a very important part and they will certainly be discussed at that conference.

COLLECTING OF CERTAIN COINS BY AMERICANS FOR MELTING IN UNITED STATES BECAUSE OF SILVER CONTENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance what I termed a racket whereby Americans come to Canada, gather up our silver coins, take them to the United States and then melt them and make a very large profit. Will consideration be given to an order in council being brought in, similar to the one in effect in 1970 and set aside in 1971, to prevent this racket continuing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the instance of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, an order in council was passed by the government this morning under the Export and Import Permits Act placing silver coinage bearing pre-1968 date on the export control list.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I commend the minister for the alacrity with which action was taken. Can he give any general idea of the amount that may be exported without having a permit? Has he that information available at the moment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It would be very difficult to trace, Mr. Speaker, because the purpose of this type of export would be to melt down the silver. I cannot give any more information to the right hon. gentleman who on this issue has been as bright as a silver dollar.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—ALLEGED USE OF IMPROPER METHODS BY OFFICERS IN OBTAINING STATEMENTS—INVESTIGATION BY ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Hamilton West. In view of the statement by Parkdale Community Legal Services that unemployment insurance benefit control officers are using unacceptable methods to exploit immigrants who do not speak English very well as a method of disqualifying them, will the advisory committee be conducting a detailed investigation into this aspect before it reports to him?

• (1430)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would find such activity on the part of benefit control officers to be as reprehensible as the hon. member finds it. As I indicated in my previous answer, the allegations of Parkdale Community Legal Services are to be investigated by the advisory committee and contact is being made by the chairman of the advisory committee with the people who prepared the report.

[Mr. Cafik.]

BENEFIT CONTROL—CONSULTATION WITH LABOUR LEADERS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Will the minister say whether or not his department plans to get together with leaders of the labour movement with a view to working out some agreement in this matter that will be acceptable to all parties?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, of the members of the advisory committee four are representatives of the labour movement. They are working diligently with the four representatives of management under the direction of their capable chairman, Mr. Anatole Lesyk.

POWER

PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—NATURE OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES RESPECTING POWER PROJECT—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. On April 3 the Minister of the Environment said, concerning the Skagit River, as found on page 2943 of Hansard:

> We have now had a reply from the United States State Department officials. They agree, in principle, to the convening of a meeting or a series of meetings with the two principal parties with a view to terminating a longstanding contract.

Yesterday Mr. Vickery, superintendent of Seattle City Light, held a press conference and stated that he had been assured by Rufus Smith, United States Undersecretary of State for Canadian Affairs, that no agreement has been reached to end the project.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question should not be posed in those terms. I think the hon. member might like to come to his question now.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether the United States government has officially assured the government of Canada that the only question to negotiate is the question of compensation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance to the House. The main purport of the statement I made was that an agreement had been reached between the two countries to hold meetings between the principal parties, British Columbia and Seattle City Light, with the purpose from our point of view, of terminating the agreement.

Mr. Fraser: Today Mr. William Johnson of the United States Embassy advised me that the official American position is that of Seattle City Light. In view of that, can the minister assure the House that Canada has delivered to the United States government notice that Canada will not permit the flooding?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview? The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—POLICY RESPECTING LANGUAGE CAPABILITY, OTHER THAN ENGLISH OR FRENCH, OF OFFICERS IN CERTAIN AREAS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that many areas in Canada have large immigrant populations whose language is neither French nor English, can the minister advise the House as to the policy of his department with respect to language capability of benefit control officers in those areas?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being given attention, and to the degree practical and possible language services other than French and English are being provided to where claimants have difficulty in understanding.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain rising on the same question?

REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS FOR TRADESMEN IN ORDER TO RECEIVE BENEFITS—ALLEGED EXPULSION THREAT BY UNIONS IF NON-UNION JOB ACCEPTED

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to talk about the two official languages. My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the policy of the government that an unemployed tradesman simply has to register with the Unemployment Insurance Commission and his local union in order to receive benefits, or does he also have to register with Manpower and seek work himself?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all he has to qualify under all the regulations and rules of the Unemployment Insurance Act, but he has to register with the Manpower centre in his area and he is requested to seek work beyond any reference by Manpower. The general practice, where this exists, is to go through union hiring halls and this is acceptable except where the extension of unemployment is very long and where there are identified jobs for which he is capable. Then there will be other directions given to him.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Is the minister aware of the muscle being exerted by international unions, with threats of union expulsion if a tradesman accepts a non-union job in a related field? If so, in such cases does the Unemployment Insurance Commission allow these persons to continue to receive benefits after they have refused employment because of their fear of being expelled from their union?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there is protection in the act for union members and the rules and regulations under which membership is maintained, but where they are on extended benefits and their unemployment has lasted an inordinately long time, they are requested to take jobs beyond those referred to them by the union hiring hall.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Can the minister not answer my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will again give the hon. member for Broadview a chance to ask his question. I am not sure whether he wants the floor.

HOUSING

ACTION TO CONTROL RENTS IN LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So many are jumping up that I am sure you have trouble in seeing me. My question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that the intention of the limited dividend provisions of the National Housing Act is to provide low rent for persons with low incomes, and in view of the fact that the limited dividend group of the Dufferin project in the city of Toronto have advised the minister that their rents are as high, if not higher, than those of similar projects in the same area financed by private owners, what steps does the minister intend to take to lower the rents of persons in limited dividend projects?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the limited dividend program is to limit the return of the owner of the buildings and thereby provide housing at slightly less than market prices. However, the owners are entitled under the terms of the mortgage agreement to charge through rents for actual increases in costs. I have not yet seen the representations the hon. member refers to but I will get them out forthwith and examine that particular case. Of course, I have also instructed CMHC, as the hon. member knows, to examine all applications for expense increases as strictly as possible.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INTENTION RESPECTING CUSTOMS SERVICE AT SIDNEY, B.C.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. He is aware of the nature of my question because of the discussions we have had about it. Will the minister say whether he plans to continue or discontinue the customs service for parcels and other commercial consignments that has been enjoyed for so long by the businessmen of Sidney, British Columbia.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to the hon. member previously, there will be no change made in the substance of that service without discussing it further with him and with the Chamber of Commerce of Sidney and Saanich, as I believe the area is known. There is no suggestion of removing the service.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there are to be further questions, I suggest to the hon. member that they should be placed on the order paper.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

POLICY RESPECTING MOVING OF HEADQUARTERS TO VANCOUVER

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On November 29, 1971, the right hon. gentleman announced in the House that the Canada Development Corporation would have its headquarters in Vancouver, British Columbia, within two years. Is that still the policy of the government, and when may we expect the corporation to have its headquarters in Vancouver?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has not changed its policy since I made the announcement in that regard.

Mr. Reynolds: Can the Prime Minister announce when the Canada Development Corporation will be moving its headquarters to Vancouver since there is such a short time between now and November and because it will mean, as the Prime Minister stated, the creation of hundreds of jobs for British Columbians?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED MOVING OF SOME SERVICES TO ALBERTA

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister said he wanted to continue the policy of decentralizing government services. Is he giving any consideration to moving government services to or developing them in western Canada, specifically Alberta?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, such decentralization has already been brought about in the case of Alberta and of other provinces too.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST THAT ABORTION BE REMOVED

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact the Criminal Code requires that abortions be performed only in accredited or approved hospitals and with the sanction of a hospital board, and because in many areas the refusal of hospitals to establish such abortion boards creates a situation where other hospitals are overloaded or where women must travel to other provinces or other countries to seek an abortion or fall into the hands of illegal or incompetent practitioners, will the government consider removing abortion from the Criminal Code, thus making possible the establishment of clinics where legal abortions can be performed by competent physicians?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the hon. member's address.

• (1440)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to take action to remove it from the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: I should add that I do not see anything in the Criminal Code that requires any hospital or individual to participate in abortions.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I ask whether the minister will at least consider honouring the promise of his predecessor that parliament would be given an opportunity to debate this matter?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, several years have gone by since that time. In that interval a good deal of debate has occurred in the country and I am not sure whether any fruitful purpose would be served by a debate in the House at this time.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED EASING OF RESTRICTIONS UNDER VETERANS LAND ACT BECAUSE OF INCREASED COST OF LAND AND HOUSING

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact the present provisions of the Veterans Land Act are not keeping pace with the vast increase in the cost of land and homes, will the minister advise what consideration is being given to relieving the restrictions being faced by veterans who hold qualification certificates?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this would be a matter of government policy. If any changes are to be made, they will be announced in due course.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the vast increase in the cost and size of the land required by veterans, will the minister take the necessary action to relieve the acreage payment under the act by reducing the limitation of one half acre less 20 per cent for veterans who qualify?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, this would also be government policy which would be announced in due course.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—RESUMPTION OF HOSTILITIES—SECURITY OF CANADIAN OBSERVERS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In the light of reports of an intense renewal of hostilities in Viet Nam, could the minister inform the House as to the present position of the Canadian observers, especially with regard to their safety, and could he tell us if he is considering any changes?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received from the government of the Republic of Viet Nam a protest against the activities of the communist forces in that area. This has been addressed to us not as a member of the International Control Commission but as a member of the International Conference on Viet Nam. In other words, this protest has been made to all parties to the conference. The commission itself is continuing to try to carry out its responsibilities under increasing difficulties, but we have not yet had any advice that in their view it is necessary to withdraw from any place in which they are now located.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY RESPECTING REQUESTS BY PROVINCES OR PROCESSORS TO WITHDRAW FROM FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact many fish processors suffered losses in last year's operations and there are many unanswered questions with regard to the financial state of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, has the minister received any request from any processor or province to withdraw from the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, other than the corporation itself, it is not true that either the fishermen or the fish buyers lost money. The financial loss is confined mainly to the corporation.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My information is that the Co-op Fisheries of Saskatchewan lost $108,000 last year.

FLOODS

LAKE ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF SANDBAGS TO PROPERTY OWNERS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Because of many instances of urgent need for sandbags to cope with high water levels of Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte, will the minister and his department take action to make sandbags available to property owners whose premises are presently threatened with flooding in this emergency?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the property owners should look for this help to the levels of government to which they pay property taxes.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I remind the minister that these waters are under national jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LAND USE PERMIT TO COMINCO AT WRIGLEY—SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON DEVELOPMENT UNTIL LAND CLAIMS SETTLED—STATEMENT ON ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the recent press statement by the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories which mentions the sham the government went through in granting a permit to Cominco at Fort Wrigley against the wishes of the band and settlement councils, which resulted in the land caveat being filed, will the minister tell the House if the government is now prepared to grant a moratorium on development in the affected area until the land claims are settled?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have repeatedly invited the Indians in the Northwest Territories to choose the lands they are entitled to under treaties Nos. 8 and 11; our position in this regard is still the same. We hope they will make a choice; it is up to them to decide which lands will belong to the Indians in that area.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of a press statement by the Indian Brotherhood of the Northwest Territories that a caveat over the major portion of the whole MacKenzie Valley was based on possible claims to aboriginal rights of the Indian people of the Northwest Territories, will the minister tell the House when his statement on aboriginal rights will be presented to the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are now working on the matter of the rights of the Indians in the provinces where no treaties were signed. We hope to be able to discuss this problem or formulate a policy on this subject within the coming months.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON FEDERAL REPRESENTATION ON NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE—INCLUSION OF YUKON RESIDENTS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In reply to a question put to him by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands last Wednesday, he said he would be announcing this week the composition of the federal half of the negotiating committee that would be negotiating settlement of the claims of the Yukon Native Brotherhood. Can he now say whether the composition of the federal side of that committee has been decided and, if so, what is it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there is one day left before the week is over. I hope to keep my promise before tomorrow evening.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are two or three minutes left before the end of the question period. The hon. member can ask a supplementary question. The Chair will then recognize the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South and call orders of the day.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister assure the House that the committee will be composed of five or six members and that at least two will be drawn from nominations of the Commissioner in Council of the Yukon?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, at least one resident of the Yukon will sit on the negotiations committee; this will be announced in due course.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED CUT IN CORPORATION RATES—INQUIRY WHETHER WAYS AND MEANS MOTION WILL BE THE SAME AS LAST YEAR'S MOTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the House whether that part of the notice of the ways and means motion relating to the proposed cut in corporate tax rates with regard to manufacturing and processing profits will be the same as the relative part of the motion arising from his—I am speaking very slowly so the minister will be sure to understand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Stanfield: Will that part of the motion relating to this tax be in the same words as the ways and means motion the minister tabled following his 1972 budget?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to analyse that statement very carefully.

Some hon. Members: Oh. oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to have the answer tomorrow.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE TO TEMBEC TO CONTINUE OPERATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Two or three times in the last couple of weeks he has indicated that his department and the government were reaching the point of decision with respect to the application of the group known as TEMBEC to continue the operations of the mill in Temiscaming. May I ask the minister whether a decision has been reached, and can he inform the House what it is?

Hon. James C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to say, as I indicated earlier this week that I would, that we have reached a decision. It is one that involves government participation in a major effort to get this mill reopened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: There are several other parties to the agreement, as the hon. member and the Speaker will know, and there will, of course, have to be continuing negotiations to work out suitable arrangements. But if all the other pieces fit into place satisfactorily, the federal government will not impede the project but, indeed, will make a contribution toward it.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad to have the answer that the federal government will participate, but I am a little worried about the further consultations that the minister says will have to take place. In view of the fact that this attempt was put before him last November, or before his department, would the minister take steps to see to it that these consultations are completed quickly and that the mill is reopened with the least possible delay?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give that commitment. May I also add that the reason for additional consultations with the government of Quebec and the company, but particularly with the government of Quebec, is that they have made certain conditional commitments to the project and we want to be sure exactly what their nature is. I hope to meet with the appropriate minister from Quebec on Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed there is still one minute left before the end of the question period. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for South Shore.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON HALIFAX CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH ICNAF MEMBERS ON HERRING QUOTAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. When will a report be made available to members of parliament concerning the decisions reached following the secret two-day federal government-industry conference on fisheries problems, which concludes today in Halifax?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Within the next few days, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary. Since herring overfishing was reportedly discussed at the meeting and herring landings in Nova Scotia declined by approximately one-third in January of this year compared with landings a year ago, is the minister contemplating any immediate discussions with members of the International Commission for the North Atlantic Fisheries to review the herring quotas established by the council in Rome in January, since the recommended increase—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was given the floor for a brief supplementary. We have now gone beyond the end of the question period but the hon. member will be allowed to finish his question. I was hoping that it would be brief, but the hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, to finish the question—since the recommended increase of 25,000 tons to 90,000 tons from the Nova Scotia banks means that foreign herring fishing in sub-areas 5 and 6 has increased by 50 per cent in the last two years.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly be taking up this matter again with the other nations fishing in the North Atlantic. However, we will do so after we have had the recommendations of the fishermen and the companies.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the government House leader what the business is for this week and next week?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, today we will begin second reading of the income tax changes, followed by the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Tariff Act. Following that I shall probably call the CNR financing bill and then crop insurance.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would remind his colleague, the Minister of Finance, that by the time we come back after the Easter recess it will be almost one year since the day he brought in his last budget, and that the House would be very much obliged if the minister would speed up his cerebral processes so we could examine, before we leave for the Easter recess, the ways and means motion he still has to bring in?

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, could the House leader indicate if legislation to increase the basic rate of the pension will be introduced before the Easter recess?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Would the President of the Privy Council check with the answer given to that question yesterday by his colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs?

Mr. MacEachen: I would be happy to, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax, be read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I invite members of the committee who have to leave the House to do so as quickly as possible so we may proceed. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-170, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Speaker was putting the question on second reading, I stood up but he continued to put the motion. There is so much hubbub in here I still am not sure whether the motion was carried on second reading, and can judge only from the fact that Mr. Speaker left the chair and the Chairman seemed to take over. Both the minister and I stood up to make statements and to carry on the debate. There is no way it could have been considered we agreed to go into committee. I suggest that a message be sent to Mr. Speaker under the circumstances, because that was certainly not the case.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member will understand that the proceeding he is referring to cannot be judged by the Chairman of the committee. If the hon. member wants the committee to report progress and to bring Mr. Speaker back into the Chair, there is only one way, as Chairman of this committee, that I can make a decision as to that to the satisfaction of the hon. member.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would support the interpretation of what happened that as given by the hon. member for Edmonton West. If there is unanimity, perhaps we should ask the Speaker to resume the Chair.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not want to be very, very difficult about this, but I should like to indicate to the Chairman, as perhaps he knows as a result of occupying the Chair himself that at the particular point when proceedings in the House change it is absolutely impossible to hear what is being said by the Chair. Therefore, in view of what the Minister of Finance has said perhaps I can move that the committee rise, report progress, and that we then revert to second reading when Mr. Speaker is in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: I am not sure whether I understand correctly the proposal the hon. member is now making. If he wants to put a motion to the Chair, I think it should be followed up. Otherwise, there could be another solution. The practice has been that hon. members could be permitted to make speeches on the whole subject matter of the bill under Item 1.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The motion is not required to be in writing.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the committee is master of its own rules and, by unanimous consent, we are asking you to report progress in order that we might return to the second reading stage as though second reading were not given. I think that is the consensus of the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, it was not the intention of this committee, sitting before as the House, that second reading should be given without an opportunity for adequate debate, and any such interpretation is not in accord with the view of the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to the suggestion of the minister that the committee report progress in order that we might call Mr. Speaker back to the Chair?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The procedure suggested to the committee, as I understand it, is to dissolve the committee and revert to the procedure we agreed to and return to second reading stage. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Progress reported.

[Editor's note: And the House having returned to a consideration of the motion for second reading:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for coming back. As I explained to the Deputy Chairman, it was impossible to raise this point of order in respect of the action of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) before the committee. This point of order is really raised for clarification, and is something on which Your Honour may have to take advice, or perhaps it will have to be referred to the Committee on Procedure.

This matter arises because of the unusual circumstances the House finds itself in today as a result of the so-called superseding notice of motion and a bill being presented, presumably based on that motion and having reference to notices of motions for ways and means of May, 1972 and February 19, 1973.

Standing Order 60(11) reads as follows:

> The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

Quite to the contrary, the House has adopted five ways and means motions, each of which was an order of this House to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of such motion. On Tuesday last, the Minister of Finance introduced Bill C-170, and that is the one that is before us for consideration today. This bill is divided into three parts. The first part relates to the Income Tax Act, the second part commencing at page 110 of the present bill relates to amendments to the income tax application rules, 1971, and the third part commencing at page 136 relates to chapter 63 of the 1970, 1971 and 1972 statutes. Each of these parts of Bill C-170 relates to a different ways and means motion, yet the wording of the rule suggests there can be a bill or bills arising out of one motion, but not one bill arising out of several motions. Accordingly, I suggest to Your Honour that we have to consider whether this bill conforms to Standing Order 60(11).

The minister acted on his own motion, and without obtaining the consent of the House to suspend the application of Standing Order 60(11). As a result there is no way of raising a point of order and there is no debate at that time.

An additional oddity is that two of the motions purport to amend the same act, one part being Part III and the other Part IV. The minister has not explained why such changes were based on separate ways and means motions, and under a strict interpretation of Standing Order 60(11) he should have brought in separate bills, not an omnibus bill. The reason I raise this matter is that this is the first occasion of this kind and it may require clarification.

The second point I should like to make, and this is as a result of a combination of circumstances which originated in the inability of the government to make up its mind as to what it intended to do in proceeding with ways and means motions, relates to the presentation of two budgets. The motions were tabled as required by the rules following the presentation of the budget messages. Then, the government waited, waited and waited and finally made up its mind to bring in what the minister calls a supersed-ing ways and means motion. This was introduced to the House on Thursday and the designated day was Tuesday. Now, we have a 110 page plus bill which was not available to the House until yesterday afternoon.

There is one question which arose in respect of a previous budget. Your Honour will well remember it as it caused grave difficulty. On that occasion, the bill that followed the passage of the motion did not conform with the terms of the motion. I have some very serious doubts about the procedure followed by the minister in this case. The quick survey I made this morning would indicate that in Part I of the bill there are at least 15 amendments to which there is no reference in the ways and means motion. In Part II of the bill there are seven such references, and Part III of the bill conforms with the motion.

In fact, there are two particular provisions, one in Part I and one in Part II, which are entirely new and are marked "new". It may be that the minister has an explanation for this, and we do agree that in some matters there are consequential amendments. It is readily understandable that when Clause 7 provides for something and Clause 8 is consequential upon Clause 7, an amendment to Clause 8 is required but would not be the subject of a detailed determination in the supply motion.

We have not had an opportunity to make that very detailed examination of this 110-page bill in relation to the Income Tax Act. We are being asked to debate it now. We saw it for the first time yesterday and, as I say, I raise these points of difference already. Somehow or other the minister may be able to give a valid explanation, but I raise this is as a point of order in order to afford him an opportunity to have this particular point checked out. However, if we are to continue tomorrow or later today with the clause by clause study, the minister will readily understand that because of the timing he has put on this—certainly he understands the complexity of the Income Tax Act, —and the fact that we might have to take this blessed bill and blend it into the act so that one is not caught up in agreeing to what is nonsense and so that one can readily understand it, some better effort should be made in the future to ensure that this dilatory government does not rely on being able to put the gun to the head of the opposition.

Many of the provisions of this bill should have been in effect a month or six weeks ago. However, they are no proposed and the government says that we must pass these in a hurry of else the taxpayer will suffer. That is totally wrong. I want to come back to the original point I made in respect of Standing Order 60(11). I do not want the bill blocked, but I would like Your Honour to take up the matter to see whether there could be a reference to the committee on procedure to have this particular point straightened out.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am rising in respect of the debate on second reading.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might reflect briefly on the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I appreciate his suggestion that the very interesting comment he made is not one which should be used by the Chair or by the House at this time to set aside this particular bill. He is perhaps, placing a caution on the proceedings of the House by suggesting that the matter be considered in due course by the Chair and also by the Committee on Procedure and Organization. When points of this nature are brought to the attention of the Chair they are normally, or I might say as a matter of fact, referred to the Committee for study. This is what certainly would be done again in this particular instance.

I would like to refer to one point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West to the effect that there is no precedent for this procedure. There is a precedent. It may be that it is not a good precedent and that perhaps we should not have followed this procedure in the first instance. If the hon. member would look at the House of Commons Journals for February 16, 1971 he will find that there were two resolutions proposed for consideration of the House. They were carried. There was a motion in respect of one bill that was passed on the two resolutions. Again, as I say, this perhaps is not a good precedent in the sense that it may be that the procedure at that point was not correct and that the point of order should have been raised at that time. In any event, however, there is a precedent for the procedure which is being followed at this time and the particular incident will be brought to the attention of the committee.

Is the minister rising to make his initial statement?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, if I might.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose the fear of hon. members is that perhaps the minister is rising to close the debate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the way you suggest is the right way to handle the point of order, if I may say so with respect. We are about to commence debate on Bill C-170 to amend the Income Tax laws relating to the year 1972. I think it might be helpful if I took this opportunity to comment upon some of the more important aspects of the bill.

First, I should like to refer to a number of measures which are designed to assist individuals. One urgent priority confronting us is the threat posed the the financial security of those Canadians who have little or no ability to protect themselves from the burden of rising living costs. I refer principally to the aged, a large proportion of whom are women, and to the blind and disabled. A number of steps have already been taken by this government to assist this hard pressed group, including the indexing of the old age security pension, the increase in the old age security pension and the improvement of the benefits paid under the guaranteed income supplement. In addition, this bill proposes to increase the exemption allowed persons 65 years of age and over for income tax purposes from $650 to $1,000. I do not believe members of this House would want to penalize those men and women who have made sacrifices throughout their lives in order to save for their own retirement. This increased exemption will also be extended to taxpayers who are confined to bed or a wheelchair and to the blind.

In my budget of last May, I spoke of the growing financial burden facing students and their families in meeting the rising costs of higher education or vocational training. Traditionally, we have tended to think of education and training as the problems of youth alone. Increasingly, however, education and training are becoming a continuing process. More and more Canadians and an ever larger number of adults, particularly married women, are resuming their studies in order to obtain more interesting and better paying jobs to widen their own horizons in life. The costs of education and training have been climbing, and there are indications that these factors are weighing heavily against decisions to proceed with education or training. Hence, the need to propose measures to encourage the efforts of students and their families to invest in further education or training.

The bill before us provides a new deduction related to the cost of obtaining education, which will be in addition to the existing deduction for tuition fees. This new measure will provide for a deduction of $50 per month per student for each month in the year during which the student was in full-time attendance at certain educational or training institutions. It will be applied to full-time attendance in a qualifying educational program at educational institutions providing courses at the post-secondary level, and also at educational institutions certified by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in connection with the present tax provision affecting tuition fees. The deduction will be available to the student, but to the extent that she or he cannot make full use of the deduction, it will be available to the student's parent, husband or wife.

A further proposed amendment affecting individuals relates to medical expenses. This is an area which requires continuing surveillance to make sure that the hardship cases are dealt with quickly and adequately. To this end, the bill proposes to include as a medical expense for tax purposes an amount paid as remuneration for a full-time attendant to care for a taxpayer, his spouse, or other dependent, in a domestic establishment in which the cared for person resides. This will be available upon certification by a doctor that the person is incapable of self-care for what is likely to be an indefinite period.

It is also proposed to include as a deductible medical expense amounts paid to commercial transport services for transportation of a taxpayer or his spouse, or dependent, and an attendant if necessary, to and from a hospital, clinic or doctor's office to which the individual has travelled a distance in excess of 25 miles to obtain medical services not otherwise available nearer home. I believe that this will be of untold benefit to those living in smaller communities across Canada where some of the specialized medical services are not close or easily available and where Canadians go to the larger centres for more specialized treatment.

There are also several proposed amendments concerned with deductions at source, a matter of considerable importance to many individuals. First, there is an amendment which would permit a taxpayer to elect to have tax deductions made at source on income such as pension benefits. Ordinarily, this type of income is not subjected to source deductions, but a number of taxpayers have asked that they be given the option to pay their tax liability on a periodic basis. This could prevent the need to meet a large year-end tax liability.

Second, the income tax regulations have for many years authorized a reduction of the amount of tax normally deducted from payments at source, where deduction of the full amount would cause hardship. This might be done, for example, where a taxpayer had little other income and was likely to end a year with little or no tax liability. An amendment is proposed to place this authority in the Income Tax Act rather than in the regulations.

Finally, in this regard, individuals who earn income that is not subjected to deductions at source are required to pay instalments during the year as a payment against their tax liability for the year. In order to ease the financial and paper work burden facing many of our low income taxpayers, especially pensioners, an amendment provides that instalments will not be required if the individual's federal tax liability for the preceding year did not exceed $400.

In this bill there are several important proposals concerning taxation of retirement income plans. It is proposed to amend the definition of earned income used in determining the amount an individual may deduct as a contribution under a registered retirement savings plan. The amendment provides that the deductible amount of a retirement savings or pension plan contribution, will not be subtracted in computing earned income. The effect of the prior law was to reduce the maximum contribution permitted to be deducted from an intended 20 per cent of earned income to approximately 16 2/3 per cent of earned income. This amendment will correct that anomaly.

It is also proposed to treat a refund of premiums from a registered retirement savings plan received by a beneficiary through an estate in the same way as if the payment were received directly from the plan. In the result, a spouse will be able to invest the amount as a contribution to another registered retirement savings plan or use it to purchase an income averaging annuity.

In certain circumstances, tax on the post 1971 appreciation in value of shares or other securities received from a deferred profit sharing plan on retirement, death or withdrawal will be deferred until the recipient eventually disposes of the securities. The recipient's cost for tax purposes at the time of receipt will be based upon the amount he would have received upon withdrawing from the plan on January 1, 1972, plus amounts allocated to him after 1971. In effect, this amendment will provide a form of rollover treatment for securities distributed by a deferred profit sharing plan to its members.

I would now like to mention in general terms a number of amendments contained in Bill C-170 before the House which provide assistance to the farmer. Most important, an amendment is proposed which will permit a farmer to transfer his farm to his children free of capital gains tax at the time of his death. This exemption from the general rule of deemed realization of capital property at death is intended as a response to a most urgent problem facing us, namely, the need to help preserve the family farm as a viable unit. The farm is a unique property—it is an illiquid asset, subject to volatile fluctuations in value. An involuntary deemed sale for tax purposes at a time when there is no actual receipt of cash may leave the family with no choice but to sell out. This amendment should help to prevent that result.

Under the present law, part of the sale proceeds of licences and rights issued by a federal, provincial or municipal authority and acquired before 1972, and later disposed of, are treated as income. No deduction may be made for any amount paid to obtain the licence. An amendment is proposed to ensure that any recovery of original cost will not be taxed. This provision will cover milk and other agricultural marketing quotas, timber, taxi, bus, truck, broadcasting and similar government issued licences.

For farmers and ranchers reporting their income on a cash basis, the early years of establishing a new herd can result in heavy startup expenses and a substantial loss. In many cases, the loss cannot be used within the five year period allowed for the carry forward of losses under the existing act. A proposed amendment will permit a farmer or rancher to carry his livestock in his inventory at any amount up to fair market value. This will overcome the problem of "unusable losses" in the early years and allow those startup expenses to be taken into account in later, profitable years.

There are also a number of proposed amendments in this bill which are of particular interest to the small businessman. As an incentive to small business, the present act provides a rate of 25 per cent on the first $50,000 in each year of business income of Canadian-controlled private corporations until $400,000 of taxable income has been accumulated. The purpose of the incentive was to provide additional funds to help corporations expand their businesses. To the extent that a corporation did not need additional capital to expand, the benefit of this incentive was not made available. This was accomplished by a provision withdrawing the benefit of the low rate to the extent that retained earnings were put into long term investments, unrelated to business activities—the so-called ineligible investment test. This ineligible investment test has proven complex and difficult. An amendment will repeal the test effective January 1, 1972.

The Income Tax Act requires a corporation to make an election when it pays a special dividend out of its surplus which was accumulated before the start of the new system on January 1, 1972. Many small corporations found difficulty in meeting these requirements during the first year of the new system, and to relieve the problem, an amendment will permit corporations to file late elections for special dividends payable during 1972. A corporation's surplus accumulated prior to 1972 consists of undistributed income and capital gains. A corporation may distribute both of these surpluses free of tax to its shareholders, but only after it has paid a special 15 per cent tax on its 1971 undistributed income. If the corporation distributes its pre-1972 capital gains before it has paid the 15 per cent tax on all of its pre-1972 undistributed income, a special tax is levied.

A proposed amendment would permit a corporation to elect to pay the 15 per cent tax on its total undistributed income—whatever that figure turns out to be—and once that election is made the corporation could proceed to distribute its pre-1972 capital gains without the risk of paying the special tax. This will relieve the difficulty facing many small corporations in estimating their undistributed income on hand at the end of 1971.

Where a Canadian corporation distributes its property to shareholders in the course of winding up, it may have difficulty in taking advantage of the rules permitting payment of dividends out of its special surplus accounts. Proposed changes will permit the rules for distribution of these special accounts to work more effectively. This has been a particularly troublesome problem to many small businessmen who often find themselves faced with the need to re-organize their business. The proposed amendment should provide welcome simplification of the existing rules.

I wish that time permitted me the opportunity to discuss all of the many amendments proposed in this bill, but I hope during the committee stage to be able to give what explanations I can to the House through the committee and to respond to whatever questions and clarifications may be needed. I have limited myself to a few general comments at this second reading stage upon some of the more important measures affecting individuals and particularly farmers and small businessmen. I hope that, in so far as they went, my remarks have been helpful to hon. members in obtaining a better general understanding of the nature of the bill. I look forward to the constructive comments which I am confident will be forthcoming at the committee stage and during second reading from all hon. members as we debate the bill.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) did not speak any truer words than the last ones that he uttered when he said his explanations at this stage are extremely brief on a subject which is extremely difficult. I must say that I find the thinking processes of the government somewhat illogical at this time.

• (1530)

First of all, the minister exhorted us to deal expeditiously with this legislation when he introduced his ways and means motion the other day. He said, as recorded at page 2723 of Hansard for March 29:

> I would urge the House to deal expeditiously with these 1972 tax measures . . . After these have been dealt with, parliament will be asked to consider those tax measures arising out of the May and February budgets which affect 1973 and subsequent taxation years.

That sounds very nice, reasonable and plausible, except that it was within the power of the government to have had the House deal with these matters much sooner than now. It is only at the eleventh hour—as a matter of fact some people would say at five minutes to midnight—that the government has made up its mind on how it is going to proceed on some of the budget proposals of May, 1972 in order to maintain a somewhat illicit relationship with the NDP. I can see the pattern now. The government is going to combine some of the May proposals with those made in February. Now that he has seen this bill, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) must realize how much of the February budget there is in it, and how much of the administrative changes applicable to Bill C-259 have been smuggled into this bill. There will be left some very stark realities to consider in contra distinction. There will be the personal tax reduction and all the other goodies of the 1973 budget up against one corporate tax cut in an omnibus bill. We are given an omnibus bill here,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There may be two bills.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —Mr. Speaker, and we are being asked to put through some of the most complicated changes to the Income Tax Act in an attempt to clarify those sections of Bill C-259, all 700 or 800 pages of it, which defied the wit of the government at the time, which practitioners have shown to be impractical, and on which the government knows it has not been able to bring in the regulations causing delay in the application of some sections. Indeed, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) says he does not even know when the regulations are going to be ready. Yet, the taxpayers have their heads on the block. They are supposed to work industriously for the government under conditions that they simply cannot know.

The minister, as I say, has asked us to deal expeditiously with these measures. He has said that there are taxpayers over the age of 65 years who are facing problems with regard to the increasing cost of living. Whose fault is that but the minister's and his administration? That measure could have been passed last year. Was it mandatory with respect to the May 8 budget that we could not see the motions to adopt, nor the bill founded on it, until June 26? The House could not act at that time. Then the House adjourned on July 7, and came back at the end of August. After that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his associates went off on their frustrating fall hunt for votes. What a story of misadventure and misgovernment. Those should have been the days when these measures were dealt with in parliament. If these tax measures were so good for the public, and the government had any real concern for the beneficiaries of this miniscule largesse that it was exhibiting in last year's budget, why was it necessary for it to decide on an election at that time? What kind of priorities did it have? Today, those people are being given top billing in the government's priorities, but ten months ago they were at the bottom of the ladder. They were not even considered.

As a result, today we are being exhorted to get on with it, and if any of us speak for more than ten minutes we will be told that this is far too long.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Take your time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There are many other things in the changes to Bill C-259—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are the first speaker for your party. You have unlimited time.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And I intend to take my unlimited time.

Mr. Knight: Surprise, surprise!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): For instance we know how many representations were made with regard to deferred profit sharing plans. The hon. member for Weyburn is making some sort of intemperate interjections—

Mr. Knight: Assiniboia.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I apologize to the constituency. We know that members from that party at that time had many things to say about changes that should be made, but they were resisted. Now that the changes are being brought in, surely to goodness they must get the same degree of careful attention. First of all, they must get the same degree of explanation. We cannot complain about lack of explanation at the time of Bill C-259. There had been a white paper. There had been innumerable committee hearings on the basis of the white paper. There had been the committee report, and then legislation introduced based on the committee report and on other material which the government had, followed by nearly three months of sittings in the House to handle that tax bill. There was plenty of explanation for a portion thereof until the guillotine started to fall.

What sort of a guillotine is the minister trying to impose upon the House now? It is that represented by some sort of sympathetic consideration for the senior citizens, for the disabled, for the blind, for those people who had heavy ambulance expenses, for students and for small business. You know, Mr. Speaker, I almost drowned in what I thought were the crocodile tears of the minister when he spoke about small business and its non-eligible income. His predecessor had insisted that this was right. It is great to see that his predecessor and his parliamentary secretary, who seemed to plug up their ears against protests throughout the country, are no longer in this House, one by choice and the other by the electors' choice.

We will just see how we get along with this bill rather than merely accept these exhortations of the minister for the wrong reasons. Then, Mr. Speaker, the minister pats himself on the back, almost like my colleague from Crowfoot, little Jack Horner, in his self-satisfaction—not that my colleague has that degree of self-satisfaction—at pulling out a plum. He says:

> I am confident that members of this House will agree that this is a sensible and orderly way to deal with the tax measures arising out of the May and February budgets.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, on a quick rundown this morning I was able to find 25 instances of changes in the act to which no apparent reference can be found in the Ways and Means motion. There may be an explanation because, strangely enough, many of them arise in the French text. They may be corrections for some reason or other, but there is no indication. The minister failed to explain that. I had hoped he would accept the invitation which I had extended and that at this stage we would get some explanation. We have not been able to make an exhaustive study of the bill, nor have we been able to dovetail it into the act. This would require a great deal of time.

In addition, we do not know yet what features out of the 1972 budget and the 1973 budget the minister is going to include in one or more bills to come with regard to income tax. We know Bill C-222 of last year, but we would have to compare it to Bill C-170 of this year to see if anything in Bill C-222 was dropped except the reduction in corporate taxes. There is no provision for the accelerated write-offs which was in the 1972 measure.

The notices of motion of February 19 are still outstanding. What features of those budget proposals are still outstanding with regard to the amendment of the act? Perhaps this is an abject confession by the minister that there is still disagreement on government policy with regard to one or more features of the two budgets. Perhaps the budgetary proposals in themselves at some stage are incapable of definition or, what is worse, that Bill C-259 which was presented to this House as being so well prepared has presented difficulty. It must be remembered that there were many sections of that act in which there were no principles of taxation or extensions of tax, particularly in relation to capital gains. The extension of taxation into trusts was taken on trust by this House—certainly in blind uncomprehending faith by government supporters on the alleged assertion that the regulations would be published shortly and that this would all be clear.

There are reams and reams of regulations yet to be written, Mr. Speaker, and that bill was passed in December, 1971. It seems that in the view of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue the average taxpayer of this country, whether personal or corporate, is some creature to be flogged, to be flayed alive and have all sorts of hardships inflicted upon it. It is of no concern to the department—ultimately the tax will come.

I say that those senior officials of the two departments should have two or three years out in civvy street defending taxpayers, being involved in business and finding out what a monstrous thing they are administering. Hopefully, they would be humanized.

Before the hon. Minister of Finance came into politics, Mr. Speaker, he was attached to what I would call the best tax firm in Canada. He should have instilled in his heart forever—

Mr. Knight: What heart?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): All heart.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —a concern for the taxpayer but he has yet to show any of that sympathy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, Marcel!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am surprised at the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I think he figures he has written his ticket to heaven in due course—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —by that proposal to reduce personal income tax by 5 per cent and by some other things he has done, such as the additional $100 on personal exemption and a few other things in the February budget. If there had been anything less than that I would have said that the minister had in place of his heart all the ice of the Arctic and the Antarctic, because in places Bill C-259 was calculatingly designed to extricate from the Canadian taxpaying public far greater sums than should have been extricated. All they did was artificially set up a financial cushion to give a little leeway.

The minister would not listen to what the former treasurer of the province of Ontario, among others, had to say when he appeared before the Finance Committee as to the potential tax yield under personal income tax. Oh, no, the Department of Finance people will have nothing to say about looking at that. They are in continuing shame they were so far out in their estimates. The minister will agree that the yield in 1972 on the basis of Bill C-259 was far in excess of what any government should ever aspire to. Knowing the level of unemployment in many areas and the decline of industry—if there had been a buoyant economy in 1972—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is the reason we got those receipts, a buoyant economy.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With 6 per cent unemployment? With 18 per cent unemployment in a constituency that the Speaker knows a lot about? And the young people—what about the under twenty-fives who are unemployed? What about certain industries that had to close their doors? That was a buoyant economy? The only thing that could give the minister the idea it was buoyant was rampant inflation. It is easy to have inflation to steam up growth but it is all artificial. Those people who have investments can tell how it is. In any event, this is what the minister was doing and this is why he felt so good. You know, Mr. Speaker, it is amazing how this administration has boasted. It boasted during the last election campaign, and it will probably boast in the same way during the next one, whenever that may come, perhaps in the not too distant future.

• (1550)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Is the hon. member nervous?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not nervous. The government will claim that it is the slick administration, the efficient one. Yet here we are, 11 months after the introduction of certain tax relief measures, and the government is finally moving to implement them. It is only doing so because it knows that if it delays any longer there would be a great wave of dissatisfaction on the part of thousands of taxpayers who are waiting for refunds and voters who have followed government instructions for claiming exemptions and relief that have no foundation in law. Even if these provisions become law before the Easter adjournment, not until June or July will the individuals concerned get their refunds. Is this how the government treats them? Of course, the government can take all the time it wants in making refunds; but, let the taxpayer delay making his return for even three days, and 6 per cent interest is charged. That interest is charged even if the return is made two days late. The scales are not evenly balanced, Mr. Speaker.

You know, Mr. Speaker, taxpayers are making claims under these not yet passed measures because they were instructed to do so by the government's income tax forms which blithely ignore the fact that, in so doing, illegal actions were being sanctioned. We are now being pressed to legitimize those particular actions.

Where did this whole mess begin? We could go back to the May 8 budget address by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). Although he had been in office for less than 40 days, I think he went out a lot faster than Walter Gordon.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I was appointed on January 29.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then, let us make it 60 days.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Make it 90 days.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Those were the so-called days of decision in which the various personal and corporate tax reductions were spelled out. The minister might explain why, in a majority House, the government waited 34 days before introducing bills to implement the tax relief proposed in the May 8 budget. Then before those bills could even be debated, the House was adjourned eight sitting days later, on July 7. You know, it is widely rumoured, but only the Minister of Finance knows for sure, that the real reason for this lack of urgency was the blind faith of the Trudeau administration that the government would be returned by the people in a general election with an increased majority.

What were they suffering from? I do not know. It was not spring, so it could not have been spring fever. It must have been the June moonlight that affected them. Something like that affected the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his advisers, because we know how wrong they were. Does that mean that the Minister of Finance, who was a far more practical politician, I would say, than some others, was overruled by his cabinet colleagues and that the Liberal party then went out vote hunting with unfinished business left behind? This is not how the shop ought to be run, under any circumstances. I would think that the Minister of Finance, if he does not wish to repeat that experience this time, would insist that these budget bills be all locked up, so to speak, and enacted into legislation, because the country just cannot stand this, shall we say, slopping handling of business any more.

What was behind the governments's actions? I do not know. It could be, of course, that the administration was beguiled by that slogan, "The land is strong." Perhaps they thought they were strong and that they did not have to worry about those people who had been given tax relief.

On November 28, 1972, the Minister of Finance, speaking to the Canadian Tax Foundation, a body to which I belong, said:

> A few days after the election, the Prime Minister stated the government's intention to put Bill C-222 back on the Order Paper when Parliament returns to work. I renewed that pledge earlier this month.

Then, he said:

> I repeat it tonight. We want to get on with the Budget bill . . .

I do not known how many of the minister's officials told me the same thing when I asked about certain provisions regarding Bill C-222. Why, they said, Bill C-222 was almost on the order paper, they were to act on it so quickly. But Bill C-222 has not even hit the order paper. Oh, yes, some provisions are on it now. Those orders are less than a week old, and we are now in the first week of April. That is performance, Mr. Speaker, real performance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Since the administration said that there was such urgency and priority to these budget bills, one can well ask why they waited until January 4, this year, to call parliament into session. It would have been a simple matter to recall parliament at the beginning of December. The legislation was ready. It was not a new program which had to be enacted. The legislation could simply have been brought forward as the minister has now brought it forward, by way of the introduction of a notice of motion on ways and means, and we could have had this legislation completed by Christmas. But did they do that, Mr. Speaker? No. That action would have forced them to disclose the unholy mess in the UIC. The administration has been temporizing and the taxpayers of Canada have had to suffer.

We know that the pressure has been put on the government from within, from within its own caucus and from the people to the left of me, with regard to the corporate tax measures.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Some want to put the corporate tax measures through, and the result is that the administration has delayed, fobbing off that measure with other tax measures, trying to blame the opposition, and so on. It has tried to pressure the opposition through some of their friends. The government only acted when we, in the opposition, brought attention to the position of senior citizens, students and others. There was not even the semblance of any reaction on the government side during the budget debate. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I and my colleagues have come back to this charge: that the government has failed to act on the real heart and guts of the May budget.

We have heard a lot about corporate tax cuts, yet it is remarkable that in his budget of May 8 last year the minister did not say anything about the 3 per cent increase in personal income tax that was to come into effect on January 1. The parliamentary secretary said nothing about the 7 per cent in corporate taxes that is to be imposed for corporations generally. The relief proposed in the May budget applies only to those engaged in manufacturing and processing. Yet the administration cannot draw up regulations or establish guidelines with regard to what is a manufacturing or processing concern. As a matter of fact, for the ordinary Canadian corporation, there is a tax increase over 1972 of close to 6 per cent.

For a Canadian corporation earning less than $50,000 this year, there is a tax increase over 1972 of 7 per cent.

• (1600)

Some members who were not here at the time will not remember, but those of us who were here during the debate on Bill C-259 remember that during an emergency debate on Wednesday night, October 14, the then Minister of Finance announced a tax cut from July 1, 1971 of 3 per cent for personal income tax and 7 per cent for corporations across the board. No one has mentioned that. All the attention has been turned to a tax cut of 9 per cent for the manufacturing and processing industries. Actually, it is less than that. It is 4.5 per cent. It goes back from 50 to 40, although the statute provides for 49, so on a percentage basis, it is a 4.5 per cent tax cut. What about the rest of the corporations? What are they saying to the government? Do they realize they will have this tax increase for 1973? Every little trucking firm, paint contractor, house builder, corner grocery store and any other similar organization in Canada with the initials "Ltd." behind their name, or in the province of Quebec, "Inc.", will have their taxes increased by 7 per cent over 1972.

Now, we see just how much concern the minister has for small business under these circumstances, how much concern we will see in 1973 because a great deal of small business is incorporated. They are not all the ogres the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) seems to mouth. A man and wife running a grocery store may be incorporated. The hon. member for York South says "They are the villains of the peace. They are the corporations. They are the ones." I am surprised about the concern of the Minister of Finance in his 1972 budget, and again in his February budget, to get the economy going when everybody is going to have to pay 7 per cent more corporate tax. That is a great stimulus to business? My eye, it is. It is a great stimulus to inflation. There is no way that any business is not going to pass on tax increases to every Tom, Dick or Harry, the consumers.

A municipality may decide to raise assessments or impose higher taxes for municipal services. This may be to increase salaries for the administration or for education. Some of these are rather astronomical when compared with salaries of members in this House. If they do that, the money will come out of your pocket, Mr. Speaker, and mine. That is the place from which it is extracted.

We wonder about the pressures of inflation in this day and age. It is the older people and those on fixed incomes who have to bear the brunt. They are not able to pass on the hot potato of inflation. They are the ones who must pay. What concern is there in the May budget and the February budget for those people? We traversed this ground in the budget debate, but I remind hon. members there is no help for the elderly and those below the exemption levels.

The minister can boast all he wants about increasing exemption levels, but it does not do one iota of good to the person who is below the exemption level. It is worse than Marie Antoinette's reference to cake to say to them their exemptions are being increased when they are already $500 or $1,000 below the exemption. What good does it do them if the exemption is increased? That is the kind of concern we get from this government when it comes to income tax changes.

The minister will get his bill in due course, but I wish to advise him that my colleagues want to talk to him about family farms. According to the minister one has to die to pass on a farm within the family. If the health of the farmer has broken, he cannot retire in decent honesty at age 65 or 70 and pass on his farm to his son. Oh, no. There is a deemed realization at that time. There are also other areas my colleagues will talk about.

As we debate all these nice provisions to tidy up the deficiencies of Bill C-259 and clarify the act, I hope the minister will be here with his officials to give this House and the country the fullest possible explanations. This is a big volume. It has to be as good and as clear as the rest of the act. It is a tough act. I wish some other changes were being brought in to alleviate the lot of the taxpayer from an administrative point of view, but we have not seen them up to the present time. The government has not yet quit patting itself on the back for having introduced these tax reforms. The government has compounded many sins. I think we will be here for some time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) used to say, it is a great pleasure to follow the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I can assure the minister that I will be taking a slightly different tack regarding taxation and the bill before us today. Bill C-170 contains approximately 130 or 140 pages outlining, as the hon. member for Edmonton West stated, several changes to the tax laws of this country. Primarily and basically, it deals with a number of changes regarding individuals, ordinary people. It increases the exemption for pensioner, for example, from $650 to $1,000 and provides for exemptions to students in post-secondary institutions. It also provides for medical expenses, such as ambulances and so on, and there are some legislative changes regarding farm write-offs, such as capital gains when a farm is transferred on the death of the farmer either to his son or his daughter. These farm items are important, and other changes could be made. The minister knows our position and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) will be elaborating on it a little later.

Since the bill deals primarily with individual items, I and my party feel it important to pass the measure as expeditiously as possible through second reading and through the other legislative stages in this House. We feel it is important that individual citizens receive the benefits contained in the bill. However, I do want to make one or two arguments about taxation and about the record of this government in that field in order to emphasize the position of our party. We are placing emphasis on the individual taxpayer, the average guy, and ask that he be given a better tax break. In turn, this would stimulate the economy more effectively than would giving tax breaks to corporations through the proposals of the minister in connection with fast write-offs and a reduction in corporate income tax.

I think that the fallacies in our taxation system have been outlined many, many times in the past. We had the Carter commission report in 1961 which said that we had a very unfair tax system which should be reformed or amended. We then had the white paper on taxation which was brought before this House. The Conservative party, and members from Calgary and Edmonton in particular, regarded that as the great "red manifesto". They said that it was much too radical, much too progressive a document. As a result, we had the tax reform bill which retreated considerably from the white paper proposals which were put before this parliament.

At any rate, I feel that we need a taxation system in this country that gives the average person a much greater tax break than he gets and which taxes the wealthier people more, one that plugs some of the loopholes and taxes in a much more fair manner extractive industries. This has just not happened in the last few years under either Liberal or Conservative governments, as an examination of the last few budgets reveals. I want to examine the last seven or eight budgets that have been presented by this government since 1968 and show how they have favoured the corporate sector in an ever-increasing way and have heaped more and more taxes on individuals. I have prepared what might be called a sort of scoreboard so as to compare the benefits reaped by the corporations to the detriment of the average taxpayer.

The first budget was brought down by this government in October, 1968. The then Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, made some very interesting announcements. For example, he applied a new social development tax, as he called it, against the people which was expected to increase government revenue by $55 million in the 1968-69 fiscal year and by a further $440 million in the 1969-70 fiscal year. The total increase in taxes for people in that budget was some $495 million. The social development tax, as we all know, was continued in 1970 and 1971, so about $1 billion more could be added to the total taxes paid by people in this scorebook that I have prepared.

In the same budget, on the corporate side, Mr. Benson applied new taxes on life insurance companies and changed reserve requirements for certain financial institutions. According to my calculations, it was forecast that these two measures would result in a total of $130 million additional revenue obtained from corporations in that year. The then minister also announced that corporations would have to pay their tax a little sooner, on a month by month basis the same as ordinary people. He estimated that this would mean an additional $275 million in federal revenue received from corporations in 1969 and 1970. However, this was not really a tax increase; it simply meant corporations could no longer defer their tax payments for as long as they had previously.

There were a few other small changes in 1968, but all had minimal effect. If you look at the scoreboard for 1968, you find that taxes for individuals—and this is important—went up by $1,495 million. In other words, there was an increase in taxes to the tune of $1.5 billion in the first Benson-Trudeau budget 1968. On the other hand, taxes paid by corporations went up by only $130 million. That gives a comparison of the priorities set by the government that was supposed to be a reforming government, one that would bring a new look to Canadian society in 1968.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Budget No. 2 was presented by the same government in June 1969, and again the former minister, Mr. Benson, decided that tax increases were to be the order of the day. He extended the 3 per cent personal and corporate surtaxes applied in the previous budget for another year. This meant increased taxes paid by individuals to the federal goverment of about $107 million; for corporations it meant $48 million in added taxes. Some capital cost allowances for new buildings in selected areas were deferred, but the amount involved was relatively small. Taking budgets Nos. 1 and 2 together, we find that the cumulative figures for taxes paid by people went up by $1.6 billion and for corporations by only $178 million.

The third budget brought in by the Liberal government was in March, 1970. In that budget there were not any major tax changes, either on the personal side or on the corporate side.

Budget No. 4 was presented by the government in December of 1970. The minister of finance decided once again to extend the 3 per cent surtax on individuals and corporations until the end of 1971. The estimated revenue increase received from individuals was $170 million and from corporations $75 million. But the corporate side also received an off-setting tax cut of $25 million through more favourable capital cost allowances for manufacturing and processing. So the net increase in corporate tax was reduced to $50 million, whereas individual tax increases amounted to $170 million. A look at the cumulative figures of tax in the first four budgets of the administration which commenced in 1968 reveals that taxes for people increased by $1.7 billion or $1.8 billion and for corporations by $228 million.

I now come to the fifth budget of the Trudeau-Benson era which was presented in June 1971. I might add that that was the month that a democratic socialist government was re-elected in Saskatchewan, my home province. The economy was in an extremely depressed state at that time, as we all remember, and at last the Minister of Finance began to acknowledge that fact, so the federal goverment decided it was time to cut taxes. For people, Mr. Benson reversed his earlier decision to apply the 3 per cent surtax to the whole of 1971 and abolished it effective July 1. This reduced personal income tax revenue by some $90 million. In addition, some new exemptions were permitted, which further reduced revenues from individuals by $45 million. But on the other side of the ledger, we find that corporation income taxes were also cut in that year, saving corporations about $40 million. I may add that corporate income tax cuts in 1971 were supported in this House by members of the Conservative party.

• (1620)

In addition, the so-called tax reform package was introduced in June of that year but did not take effect until the end of 1971. If you take the cumulative figures in respect of the first five budgets brought in you find that taxes have gone up for individuals by $1.6 billion and for corporations by $188 million since 1968. The same pattern was developed right through the first five budgets presented by this government since 1968.

At the time budget No. 6 was presented in October, 1971 the economic situation had not improved, and more tax cuts were announced by the government. The people received a 3 per cent tax cut amounting to $125 million in 1971-72 and $225 million effective in 1972-73. Again, the corporations had their taxes reduced, and this was referred to earlier by the hon. member for Edmonton West. There was a 7 per cent across the board tax cut for all corporations in this country amounting to $160 million in 1971-72 and of $175 million in 1972-73.

We find that in this budget there are further tax cuts for individuals and corporations. If you put the cumulative tax cuts in the six budgets together, you find that by October 1971 taxes had gone up for individuals by some $1.3 billion while taxes for corporations were already $147 million lower in 1971 than they were in 1968. You can see the continuing imbalance in taxes as between individuals and corporations.

Let me now come to the seventh budget of last May 8, and some of its proposals are before the House today in the bill we are now debating. It was brought in by the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). For elderly people and students there were special exemptions, and these are being debated today. These special exemptions result in a $50 million tax cut over a full year. Corporations fared much better with fast writeoffs, and a reduced income tax rate for processing and manufacturing businesses from 49 per cent to 40 per cent starting January 1, 1973.

In total, these changes represent $500 million in corporation tax cuts for the first full year and $700 million in the second year of application. If you put all these factors together, to the end of 1972, as announced in the May 8, 1972 budget, we find that as a result of the first seven budgets of the Trudeau government taxes were increased for individuals by $1.5 billion since 1968 and that taxes for corporations went down by $500 million between 1968 and 1972.

That was the situation as we commenced the election campaign last fall. Taxes for individuals have gone up by $1.5 billion since this government was elected, and taxes for corporations have dropped by $500 million since 1968. As a result of the October 30 election, this party was able to influence to some degree some decisions made by the Minister of Finance and the government. We find the budget he brought down in February differing fairly radically from previous budgets of this government.

We find, for example, that he continued the tax cut, increasing it to .5 per cent, although this was not an across the board tax cut, but contained an element of progressivity. There is a $100 minimum exemption for taxpayers and a maximum of $500. This is a much more progressive method of taxation, benefiting people on lower incomes more than the wealthy of this country. We also find an increase in the old age pensions. Again, the increase was not as great as we had hoped, but at least pensions went up to $100 basic and $170 for those receiving the supplement. We also have increases in the pensions of veterans of this country and we have tax changes favouring farmers. We have, too, an increase in exemptions for individuals of $1,600 and $3,000 for married couples. All these things are on the individual's side of the taxation scoreboard.

We also had a cut in the sales tax on certain items like children's clothing, footwear, cosmetics, toiletries, and so on. We find that the equalization payments for the poor provinces have gone up as the cost of local school taxes were taken under consideration.

There is one clear exception in this budget in comparison to the first seven presented by the government sitting across the way. That exception is that there is not proposed in this budget additional handouts, gifts or tax cuts on the corporate side. I suggest this is the result of the influence our party was able to exert in this parliament. This is a direct result of the election of October 30 when the people of Canada said, in effect, they wanted a more equitable taxation system, that the average citizen was paying far too much in taxes today with the benefit going to extractive industries, with loopholes allowing the wealthy people to get off scot-free.

The parallel I have drawn proves that this government, over the years, with the support of the Conservative party, has been giving much too much to large corporations in this country and much too little to the individuals. This trend has begun to change and this party will be pushing as hard as it possibly can in the direction of giving the average citizen a real tax break. I should like to add, and this does not need repeating because we have said it so often, that our party remains firmly against any proposal introduced by a Liberal government, a Conservative government or anyone else, that will give the corporations a greater tax break or more benefits, and the members of this party will vote accordingly.

In the next four or five minutes available to me, I should like to suggest two or three things to the government in terms of reforming our tax system to make it even more equitable for the average citizen. First of all, I believe a system of tax credits should be used instead of a system of exemptions. I feel this is more progressive in that if we use tax credits the person at the lower end of the income scale would receive more benefit while the person at the upper end would not. I think that is the more progressive and natural way to move.

I also believe we should have a comprehensive income concept with all forms of income being subjected to income tax. I believe we should have a full capital gains tax that would attack all incomes in the same way, with exemptions in respect of family farms, homeowners and small business enterprises in the family which are so vital and necessary to keep the economy moving. If we do not have a more equitable tax system then we will continue to penalize the average citizen instead of helping him by giving him.

Let me give you one example of the way our present taxation system militates against the ordinary citizen. I have taken some statistics from the tax reforms of last year and compared the cases of three individuals. Each of these individuals is receiving an income of $10,000, is single and does not have any dependents. The first makes $10,000 in wages or salary. Perhaps he is a teacher or works in a factory. That $10,000 income will be taxed at the rate of $2,285. The second person is also single with no dependents, but making $10,000 through capital gain by speculating on the stock market or perhaps by selling off some land at the edge of the city, or in some other manner. Capital gains are taxed at half the rate at which wages and salaries are taxed. He pays on $10,000, $844 in taxes. Is that fair? I do not think it is.

• (1630)

The third example is that of a single person who has no dependents and also has an income of $10,000. His income is through dividends rather than through wages. He is the poor guy who clips coupons and derives his income through dividends from corporations. Under this new bill he pays in taxes $193 per annum, or even less. This person takes advantage of the tax loopholes that this government has built into the taxation system and which the Conservative party supports. The tax is $193 or less for a person with an income derived through dividends, and is $2,285 for the person who slaves it out in the factory or in a business who receives his income through wages or salaries. I say it is about time that we changed that system. We should treat all taxable income equally, whether it is the income of, a corporation or a person working in a factory or teaching school.

The final point I want to make in respect of taxation is a point which has been made many times. It was made last year by Mr. Kierans. The natural resources and extractive industries in this country should be taxed at a much higher rate and should not have the advantage of the tax loopholes they now have. If this were done, there would probably be much more incentive for capital to go into the manufacturing, processing and service industries, industries which are labour intensive and not capital intensive. Therefore, there would be more jobs and employment would not be exported from this country. We could accomplish that objective by reforming our tax laws and making these people pay their fair share.

Like the former member for Duvernay, Mr. Kierans, I would like to point out a few statistics which reveal how unsatisfactory the taxation system is when it deals with raw materials compared to other sectors of our economy. I have some statistics from the Department of Finance in Manitoba which I believe were used in this House by Mr. Kierans last year. They show the percentage of profit on which companies paid taxes over the last few years. We find that the retail merchants paid taxes on 90 per cent of their profits. Wholesalers paid taxes on 87 per cent of their profits. The construction industry paid taxes on 77 per cent of its profits and manufacturing paid taxes on 65 per cent of its profits. Then, when we come to the mining industry, which is capital intensive and which is largely foreign owned or dominated, we find that it paid taxes in the last ten years on the average of only 13 per cent of its profits because of the special gifts, concessions, grants and loopholes which are available to it.

Turning to the gas and oil companies, we find that they are even better off than the mining companies in Canada. They paid taxes on an average of only 5.7 per cent of their profits. I say it is time that we reformed the tax system so that we do not provide any more incentives for the mining, gas and oil companies. We would then have more revenue for the people of Canada and more revenue for programs to encourage more capital investment in manufacturing and processing which would mean that our country would indeed be better off. So, I want to urge that the minister give consideration to some of these suggestions. I think these are ways in which we can provide some real purchasing power for the little people and give them some confidence in their own country and in the economy of this country. I urge the expeditious consideration of the bill before us. It deals with individuals. It deals with the average citizen and will help him a bit in the jungle of taxation laws we have in our country.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville entertain a question?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member has reviewed what he regards as the inequities in the taxation policy. Does he feel it would also be helpful if the government stopped spending so much money?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A good Tory question.

Mr. Nystrom: The question is so typically Tory that I am almost stuck for an answer. The hon. member asks whether or not cutbacks in government expenditures would make for a more equitable taxation system. I agree that there are a number of areas where there probably could be cutbacks in government spending, but I believe there are also areas where the government should be spending money. There should be more expansionary measures in the budgets of the country; there should be more government leadership, for example, to provide jobs which would in turn provide more productivity in our economy, this would lead to greater benefits for the average citizen. I think we can do this by implementing a tax reform package such as that advocated by our party and by implementing many of the proposals in the Carter Commission Report. This would give a real incentive to the average citizen. The average citizen will not receive much incentive if General Motors or Shell Oil is given a huge tax concession or a huge grant under DREE or under some other governmental program. The average citizen will have more of an incentive if he receives a genuine tax cut so that he is able to buy some better food, purchase some better furniture or perhaps purchase a home in order that he may have better living accommodation for himself and his family.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments about Bill C-170. I would like to refer in particular to the impact of our economic system on taxpayers. Mr. Speaker, they are not satisfied because they cannot enjoy the goods that nature and industry have put at their disposal.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to consider briefly the situation which prevails in any of the world nations. Whatever political party or economic philosophy we adhere to, either capitalist, socialist or communist, everywhere in our world which is called the earth we find natural resources, everywhere people till, work, produce, consume, capitalize, finance. Everywhere, healthy adults are responsible for the production for all citizens, including those who are too young, too old, too ill, too poor, too uneducated to earn their living. We must protect them.

Mr. Speaker, will all these economic changes proposed in Bill C-170 have a saving effect on our taxpayers? I maintain that taxpayers will not find very much that is better in all these statements of principles and new legislation that are being put through in the field of taxation.

I think that we will still have the same problem, and that all that will only complicate the economic situation that we already know and deplore.

Our economic situation lacks of satisfactory balance. As I said just now, we produce all sorts of goods, we consume and we capitalize. These are the sectors that need putting straight, and they are precisely the sectors that the present bill does not deal with.

The present bill pays little attention to these areas, which we should all examine with a view to making changes that will bring about the results that the people have waited so long for. We all know that, in this budget as in previous budgets, the improvements we make to various forms of taxation and distribution are a mortgage on the future.

We are basing these regulations on a mortgaging of the future. Indeed, our tax laws and regulations are drawn up in such a way as to allow for future debts, future mortgages, and this does not solve the problem, now or in the future.

We are using the future more and more to mortgage Canadians, which will not solve the basic problems of our economy. Amassing still more debts will hurt us later on, because then we will have to pay debts of the past, and incur new ones so as to face the problems that confront us then.

The prime objective of the budget is to stop unemployment, put an end to poverty and reduce inflation. I think that, in the present situation, the contrary occurs because we have an increase in the rate of unemployment and in inflation, and we see with regret that poverty is growing worse.

The more we advance, the poorer we become, the less citizens can provide for their needs and balance their own budget because it is unbalanced in fact by government budgets.

When governments want to give some leeway to enable the individual to make both ends meet and set his budget on an even keel, we can only do that by unbalancing the budget of the state. If we do that to try to straighten out the budget of the individual, the problem is still there and the state is in a bad position, with the deficits we now have.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would bring up the basic personal tax exemption from $1,500 to $1,600 a year for unmarried people and from $1,850 to $3,000 for married couples. I think this is far from being sufficient and I am convinced that the problem will not be solved that way.

Mr. Speaker, to be logical and to tailor the tax exemption to the rise in the cost of living, it would have been necessary to do like Quebec and increase the basic allowance for single persons to $3,000 and for married persons to $5,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, although it would have been a little more acceptable to taxpayers, it would not have solved the problem because it is now said that almost 2,700,000 taxpayers will no longer pay income tax under the new basic exemption. They did not pay any before, because they were too poor, but the rise in the cost of living coupled with inflation is neutralizing the effect of the incentives which the government thinks it is giving to the people.

Apparently thousands of citizens will no longer pay income tax, yet the government will levy almost $1.5 billion more than before.

They said that they were going to cut taxes but the reverse is happening; they raise taxes as never before. The same holds true of provincial governments. They call an election and tell the citizen that they have lowered taxes while they did just the opposite.

The taxes that we have now are in part indirect, they are hidden and the government or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is prepared to show his great talent by telling Canadians: We have exempted you from taxes, we have cut taxes, whereas in fact the burden is being shifted to a certain category of taxpayers.

As for the suppression of the 10 per cent tax on soft drinks that they have asked us to accept, we did, I believe, with pleasure, but it does very little for the taxpayers and will not even begin to solve their problems.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if this government had included in the budget a 10 per cent discount on the ever rising milk prices and on other food products in order to really help families, we could say: this is a positive and sensible measure which will directly help people in their great economic recession, which will help them meet both ends and live a little more decently.

As for the old age security pension raised from $82 to $100 a month, we voted for it and we are proud but we know that it will not solve the problem either. We know that the rising cost of living and inflation eats it all up. So there is no practical solution as yet, no solution we can accept with confidence. We cannot yet tell the taxpayers that we have really done something tangible for them. We have done nothing positive. It's all negative, Mr. Speaker.

The right-thinking citizens, those who are clear-sighted are saying to us: your work in parliament is all negative; nothing in all this fiddle-faddle helps us enjoy a decent living, absolutely nothing. All we are getting is higher taxes; the more we borrow money the more we have to pay back and we are becoming poorer and poorer.

The more governments advance, the more poverty increases among the population; the more governments get into debts in all kinds of ways and in all fields of economy, the poorer the people get. These changes are far from being advantageous and practical for the general public.

The New Democrats say that the problem will be solved by taxing the large corporations. I am in favour of only one tax table and I would like to see it appear. But to tax some people in order to give to others, when there are masses of overproduction, and to tax citizens who do not have enough already in order to give to someone else, that does not solve the problem. As a matter of fact, that only increases the cost of living and the cost of products.

• (1650)

To solve the problem, one must get to the core of it, namely lower the cost of living by every possible means.

Now this government is a good representative of the people's image. Out of 264 elected members, there are thirty ministers who spend most of their time discussing and bickering over minor issues, forgetting and neglecting the only real problems, the first and most important of which is the problem of a guaranteed personnal income for every Canadian citizen, paid out of the national production of goods and services of the current year. There are nearly 23 million Canadian citizens and there is enough production to satisfy all of them. There is even enough for exportation and in spite of that, there will still be surplus. That is where we should do something and through various means, solve that problem.

Instead of solving problems, we multiply them, we forget about them; we pretend to solve some of them among the less urgent ones, to make believe that we are doing something, but in fact we try hard not to change anything in the general pattern of national economy, which inflates the income of rich people and their society and drains more and more those of the poor people and their families.

People, families and corporations, that is all that is being administered throughout Canada, but only persons are endowed with life. Families and corporations are not alive, they are but groups of people. Families are natural groups of living people, while companies are artificial groups of adult citizens legally associated under regulations established by the supreme authority of the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the companies' organization is respected. The company is respected as a body and is considered as a direct body whereas it is a body without a soul, an indirect body. The direct body is the human being and it is each human being and for each human being that we must administer and this not for public bodies without a soul nor public bodies without responsibility. Only the human being has responsibilities.

Everyone knows that there is only one administration formula of which I have already spoken several times. Everyone knows that the companies are making profits and reserves on their administration of the current year to warranty the progress and safety of the years to come and succeed in whatever they undertake.

Then why not plan the family administration which also needs profits and reserves for the years to come in addition to meeting the current year's expenditures? Why oblige all the family heads to administer their family expenditures on the income of only one person or of a single person?

This is how absurd is our national economy. This is the reason for inflation, unemployment and poverty.

The increase in the cost of living is subtly hidden in the huge reserves, the hidden and secret reserves of public or private corporations camouflaged by the accountants in their annual reports and tax exempted by the government to the benefit of the shareholders and directors in collusion with the economists who pretend not to see or know nothing about this common practise which is used to deprive the people and even governments and families of the greater part of the national wealth.

So much is being given to private and public corporations, whereas nothing is provided for the families; not enough is being given to the adults who contribute to production through their work and their capital, in return for which they receive salaries and interests planned and adjusted to their degree of education and experience. The hidden cause being detected, their wounds become easier to heal.

Mr. Speaker, we know that there exist large corporations which are hoarding large reserves. There are hoarded reserves of billions of dollars on which no taxes are being paid. Some order ought to be put in those reserves, though without confiscating everything. A small portion of this should be levied for payment of a guaranteed income to all our citizens and, moreover, part of the excess production should be turned into funds to be distributed among those Canadian people not lucky enough to draw salaries because they cannot work, or are too old, or are sick, in short, those unable to earn what they need. Some help must be provided for them through other technical means, because the world in which we are living is a modern world, where technology has been promoted and replaces labour. Those citizens who are not working must live. This is one of the reasons why we shall soon have to pay a guaranteed income to each citizen, though without robbing those who already have not enough money. The necessary money for distribution should be drawn on the excess funds and excess production.

Mr. Speaker, this is the means we are putting forward to alleviate the disquieting economic situation now prevailing.

A large measure of general confusion still surrounds the guaranteed income plan in 1973. The idea is to bring order into all that.

Mr. Speaker, those matters have been under study and subjected to various experiments for over 50 years already, as the minister himself explained it in detail in this House on January 11 of this year and as reported at page 197 of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker, the big royal commissions of the federal government since 1960 on the revision of our banking and fiscal systems, on the status of women and on poverty in Canada have already explained all there is to be known to curb inflation, unemployment and poverty, to restore national economic balance between individuals, families and companies, incomes, expenditures and profits, taxes and reserves, needs, costs and prices, capital, work and the right to a living, employers, employees and dependents.

Mr. Speaker, everything has been said by those big royal commissions which required time, energy and money. For over 10 years their reports remained available to all people concerned, governments and the governed. The famous reports of those royal commissions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House, Ottawa
April 5, 1973

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Gérald Fautaux, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 5th day of April, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Roger de C. Nantel for Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to Standing Order 40, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Post Office—New postal code; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—National Defence—Renewal of Norad Agreement; the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Haliburton)—Fisheries—Lobster fishery.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, as listed on today's Order Paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

[English]

There being no item under the heading "Bills" on the order paper, the House will now proceed to Notices of Motions (Papers).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF MR. JUSTICE TRITSCHLER ON CONSTRUCTION OF GREAT SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of Mr. Justice Tritschler on the inquiry into the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion for the production of the report of Mr. Justice Tritschler into the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway is on the order paper because it is my opinion, the opinion of members from all parties in the House, the opinion of some eminent legal counsel, and the opinion of the contractors themselves that they still have cause for some significant redress as a result of losses incurred in the construction of this railway on behalf of the Canadian National Railways. After seven years or more of efforts of all kinds to obtain redress, these contractors have not yet given up. The standing committee of this House on Transport and Communications, after a great deal of effort by members of all parties, were finally able a couple of years ago to get the government to agree to refer this subject to the committee. We had hearings, heard the contractors, heard the railway representatives and submitted a report to this House which the House subsequently adopted. I quote from that report as follows:

During the hearings your committee was confronted with conflicting evidence relating to the problems caused by unexpected weather, difficult terrain, and the use of clauses 16 and 18 in the Canadian National Railways' construction contract. Considering this conflicting evidence and the technical problems relating to it your committee recommends the following:

I will read the one pertinent recommendation, which is:

That the Minister of Transport establish a one-man inquiry to consider the merits of the claims submitted to this committee by the Great Slave Lake Railway contractors. The person nominated to conduct the inquiry should be acceptable to both the contractors and the Canadian National Railways and should report to the minister in confidence so as not to prejudice any future court hearing.

After many more months of delay, the minister finally appointed Mr. Justice Tritschler who submitted his report to the minister. As a result of that report the minister advised the contractors concerned, without telling them what was in the report, that their demand for redress would not be recognized. Mr. Speaker, the minister and the government say that because the report was submitted to the minister in confidence they cannot make it available to the House and, more particularly, to the contractors concerned. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the reason for confidentiality no longer exists for the following overriding reasons. I repeat the statement in the report:

The person nominated to conduct the inquiry should be acceptable to both the contractors and the Canadian National Railways—

At no time, Mr. Speaker, did the minister or any of his officials communicate in any way with the Lucas Construction Company or Mr. John Lucas of Regina to ascertain whether the appointment of Mr. Justice Tritschler was acceptable. My information is that the minister or no one in his department contacted any of the other four contractors in this regard. The minister and his officials, chose to ignore that part of the recommendation but conveniently chose to abide by the part of the recommendation concerning confidentiality of the report. Since the recommendation that the person making the inquiry should be agreeable to both sides was ignored by the government, I submit that completely destroys their claim for confidentiality of the report. It is my opinion, and the opinion of many others of all parties, that these contractors are still entitled to redress.

I want to give a bit of background on the Lucas Construction Company. John Lucas, who has been in the construction contracting business since 1934, did contract work for the South Saskatchewan River Dam, for the Saskatchewan Department of Highways, helped build the railway to the Kelsey Dam in Manitoba and helped build the Flin Flon highway in Manitoba. Those are a few of the projects in which he was involved. He was an experienced and competent operator in the north, knew the conditions, the weather and the terrain. He was not, I repeat not, what one could call a fly-by-night operator. Yet this contractor, Mr. Speaker, lost over $1 million on the contract with the CNR. In fact, if one were to take into account all his losses, he lost over $1 million on machinery, nearly half a million dollars in land, lost his bonding and refinancing to the value of $1,200,000, lost a further $200,000 in earnings in subsequent years—in total, the loss was in excess of $3 million.

Two or three or all four of the other contractors suffered similar losses, Mr. Speaker. Why? I submit there were two reasons. One was the weather—abnormally bad weather for that part of Northern Canada, particularly in the matter of rainfall. The Peace River Record Gazette of August 2, 1962 reported that rainfall between April 28 and July 28, 1962 in that area totalled 25.3 inches. There was upwards of 50 inches of rainfall in the area in which the Great Slave Lake Railway was being constructed during that time.

The other reason for the difficulties these contractors experienced was the severe, and in my opinion unreasonable, enforcement by CNR officials of the provisions of the contract as well as the outright interference by the CNR engineering staff with the contractors in attempting to carry out the contract. There is not any question that Lucas Construction, for example, did its utmost to comply with CNR demands, despite the terrible weather in 1962, the adverse decisions of the engineering staff and the frightful working conditions in the spring of 1963.

For example, Mr. Lucas was arbitrarily required by the engineering staff of the CNR to sublet part of his contract to New West Construction Company. Whereas the CNR was paying Mr. Lucas 27 cents per cubic yard, Mr. Lucas was forced to pay 30 cents per cubic yard, in the rough construction, to the subcontractor as a result of an arbitrary and, I submit, unreasonable decision of the CNR engineering staff.

• (1710)

It is clear from the foregoing and from the many documents that many Members of Parliament have been accumulating for the last ten years that Lucas Construction and the other contractors made every effort at considerable additional expense to complete the project as soon as possible. It is clear, too, that the CNR acted in a way, on a number of occasions, that was clearly unreasonable, especially in view of the unparalleled bad weather. This contract was unbelievably harsh, so harsh that it did not contain a "force majeure" clause, nor an arbitration clause. That contract appropriated complete control in all particulars to the CNR. My learned legal counsel, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) tells me that "force majeur" means an excuse for not fulfilling a contract.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in full motion.

Mr. Benjamin: It is invoked because of irresistible conditions or acts of God. This kind of unreasonable, unjustifiable contract under which the CNR calls for tenders I believe constitutes an immoral business practice. It raises the question as to whether a Crown corporation or, for that matter, any corporation can call for tenders on a public project, can sign an almost impossible contract and, in the carrying out of that contract, act in the way the CNR acted. Is there no obligation on that public concern to remedy the damage that it did to the public, of which even dirt contractors are a part? Since the government, the minister and the department failed to carry out the full recommendations of the committee that were debated in this House, the House, and particularly the contractor concerned, I submit are thereby entitled to access to the report of Mr. Justice Tritschler. I hope that all hon. members will agree, for the sake of fairness and for the sake of redressing the wrong that was done over ten years ago, to adopt this motion. The government I submit should give redress to both of the contractors to whom reference was made. Even an ex-gratia payment of $200,000 or $300,000 to Mr. Lucas would enable him to start again. He has lost his bonding. He cannot get going again. He has lost everything. The only reason he did not lose his house was that it was in his wife's name. In all fairness and justice, we must continue this fight. I know members of all parties agree with this, and I hope the House will adopt the motion before it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to add my support to what has been said by the hon. member in whose name this motion stands, for two reasons. I will try to be brief, although I do not know why I should be, because I do not suppose the government intends to accept the motion. In any event, I will be brief.

My first reason for supporting the motion is that I am aware of the particular circumstances involved in this case. I know of the difficulties faced by the people involved in the construction of this railway. They worked during two or three years of the most difficult construction weather in a most difficult area building a railway. Mr. Lucas and some of the subcontractors, some of whom are still in the Peace River country and were and are involved in this matter, have sustained financial losses because of the various predicaments in which Lucas and others found themselves. They went struggling ahead in order to make sure that the railroad would be constructed on time and at very, very reasonable cost.

I know the legal aspects of this matter. There is no question but that the CNR did all it had to do legally. But as the government, on the one hand, can airily throw $1 billion into the unemployment insurance program, $1 billion more than it originally intended to spend and, on the other hand, become involved in proposals for spending hundreds of millions of dollars in the giving of discounts under corporate tax write-offs for unlimited periods to a great many corporations, most of which will go to the United States, it seems to me that it could look at the situation before us and, as my hon. friend suggested, make a compassionate payment. After all, Mr. Lucas worked well and deserves the thanks of the people of this country. He and his fellow contractors deserve our thanks for what they did, and I think a compassionate allowance would be well within the range of possibilities that might be considered by the government and the CNR.

As the commissioner appointed pursuant to the order of the committee of this House failed to make public the reasons for his recommendation or failed to make his report in such a way that it could be made public, I submit that we, in this House, should be diligent in finding ways by which the report could be made public, so that this House and the people of this country might know why the commissioner acted as he did. To me, brought up in the traditions of the law in which trials are held in the full glare of publicity, in which witnesses testify in public, in which decisions are made public and in which appeals are allowed, it is intolerable that a judge of the Supreme Court should make a report of this kind which the government keeps from the people involved and from the members of this House. I think it is a vicious and intolerable system which allows this. For that reason I hope that some way may be found of making the report public. No harm would be done by it. On the basis of the report, once its contents are known to the members of the House, we might be free to recommend a compassionate payment. That is the particular reason for my support of this motion.

There is a more general reason for my support, namely, that there is too much secrecy surrounding the actions of this government, just as there is too much secrecy surrounding the actions of all governments. This government is particularly addicted to secrecy. We see that in the way ministers fail to answer questions, or answer irrelevantly, or do not provide answers that are responsive to the question. You cannot have a democratic institution operating in the shadows. Facts must be made public, must be made known. Why, in heaven's name, that is not the case I do not know. Why should not governments make public the facts, documents and information on which they act? I know that we often hear the same story. We are told, "Well, it is not possible. If decisions are to be made, the circumstances under which they are made must not be made known to the public. Such decisions would not be possible if civil servants were not allowed to operate furtively and secretly and if the public had knowledge of the recommendations which they make."

I disagree with such assertions violently. I should like to have the full right to make known the circumstances of such recommendations, and give others equally the right to appear before committees. Let them have the right to justify the recommendations and justify the facts which they make public, on the basis of which the government makes decisions.

There is an interesting article carried in a special "Playboy Forum" report entitled, "Mr. Nixon and the media". It reads in part:

• (1720)

Why should freedom of speech and freedom of the press be allowed? Why should a government which is doing what it believes to be right allow itself to be criticized? It would not allow opposition by lethal weapons. Ideas are much more fatal things than guns. Why should any man be allowed to buy a printing press and disseminate pernicious opinions calculated to embarrass the government?

That is what Lenin, Russia's first communist dictator, said. Those are the questions he asked. They are statements which are being put in a little different way by governments in both this country and the United States. There is an attempt being made by the President and the present government of the United States to seriously impair the freedom of the press to make full disclosure of the facts coming to their attention. There is the Pentagon papers trial and reporters are imprisoned from time to time for refusing to make known their sources of information. By declaratory judgment in 1945, the United States supreme court declared, and I quote:

—"the assumption that the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the [public] and that a free press is a condition of a free society."

I do not believe people listen to these things very carefully. All too often, governments do not listen. Slowly and insidiously, we see taken away from what has been a free society and the institutions of that free society, the right to demand the fullest possible dissemination of facts, information and documents. What the hon. member is asking here is an illustration of that statement which I have made.

I know that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has tabled a set of rules which he proposes on behalf of the government as the basis on which documents asked for by notices to produce should be produced. Let me say at once that is totally unsatisfactory to me. It is inadequate. It simply sets out in a formal documentary fashion the present exceedingly limited opportunities that are available today. Why should any minister or any government have the right to say that, in his opinion, it is in the public interest that this document be not disclosed? What special virtues surround any minister to permit him to make that statement? There is no question that in many instances it is because the disclosure of the documents would result in embarrassment. It is about time more ministers and more governments were embarrassed. It is time that we opened the windows then let in the fresh air and sunlight with the freest possible dissemination of information. Does the hon. member want to ask a question?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Conservatives not do so in 1962?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I said the same thing then. I do not care what government is in power. There was a great deal more freedom then. I sat behind the government in 1961 and 1962 and watched ministers of the Crown respond to questions. I watched the dissemination of information in response to notices to produce. Disclosure was a lot fuller and freer than today.

I admit there are abuses in the practice of seeking information and the production of documents. There are abuses on both sides of the House. However, that does not alter the fact that the primary responsibility rests upon the government to disclose, to the fullest extent, facts and information in its possession. These are limits. I have said that. I supported a bill proposed by the hon. member for Souris-White Rock (Mr. Mather) attempting to secure approval of this House on second reading of a bill for freedom of information. I said then, and I repeat now, there are certain areas of national security. There are also criminal offences which may be under investigation and cases involving confidential information gathered by the government with regard to such matters as income tax. However, the government shows no reticence.

A businessman sitting in his office or store day after day receives a voluminous amount of questionnaires from the government which demand, not ask that he fill in the information requested with the penalty of prosecution if he fails. Governments are never hesitant when it comes to demanding information, but it is a horse of a different colour when they are requested to make known facts in their possession. You will never have a free, open and good society when you have a government that is secretive, hides facts that should be made public and refuses to allow the dissemination of that information to the press, Members of Parliament and the citizens of this country. That is the major reason that I want to support the hon. member in his quest for the very reasonable production he has asked for in this case.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised to hear the speeches of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I feel they have done the House a disservice. Neither of these members bothered to read to the House the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which recommended the establishment of this inquiry. What exactly does that say, Mr. Speaker? Let me read the first recommendation from that report. I quote:

That the Minister of Transport establish a one man enquiry to consider the merits of the claims submitted to this Committee by the Great Slave Railway contractors. The person nominated to conduct the enquiry should be acceptable to both the contractors and the Canadian National Railqays—

I want to emphasize the next part of the sentence.

—and should report to the minister in confidence so as not to prejudice any future court hearing.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know whether the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) was here and asleep or out of the chamber, but that is exactly the part I read in my speech a few minutes ago.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I was in the House listening to the hon. member. If he did read it, I am surprised that he did not understand it. If he did understand it, he would never have made the ridiculous argument that the government was trying to prevent information coming to the House of Commons. What the government is doing is accepting a recommendation of a standing committee of this House and keeping the report confidential. There is no question of withholding information from members of this House. It is obeying a recommendation of the committee to the House of Commons. If the government had taken the attitude that this information should be permitted to come forward, the government would have been in default and should have been condemned.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I listened to the hon. member in whose name the motion stands. I heard him make that statement. I did not repeat it. I heard him say that, because one condition was breached, the condition that both parties would be consulted with regard to the appointment of the commissioner, there was not the same degree of validity in the other condition. That is the statement made by the hon. member. I accepted that statement.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I was closely involved in the negotiations that led to this particular matter being referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I was not involved in the selection of a commissioner. From my conversation with the contractors, I know there was a great deal of difficulty and, in the end, there was no particular agreement on who should be commissioner. In point of fact, when the two parties were unable to agree, they went to the minister and said if he would appoint someone who was reputable, they would accept him. Because the two parties were not able to agree on a person, they agreed on a different procedure being used. The point about the confidentiality of the document has nothing to do with the former point. The point was that a report was to be made by a reputable investigator. The report was to be made confidential in order to protect the rights both of the contractors and the CNR.

• (1730)

The only point I want to make is that the government is obeying resolutions and motions which were accepted by the committee, whose report was later adopted by the House of Commons. Were the government to do otherwise, it would be derelict in its duty. Had the government done what the hon. member wants it to do, it certainly would not have followed the recommendations made by a committee of this House and adopted by the House.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in the debate of motion No. 47. I believe it might be a good thing to place on the record some of the events that have taken place in this regard, since I believe it important to do so.

The construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway gave rise to a number of disputes between the contractors responsible for the clearing and preparation of certain segments of the land, and the CNR. The disputes led to litigation which was eventually settled with each claimant and a release obtained from each party by the CNR.

However, notwithstanding this disposition of the matter, the contractors continued to press for further payments.

The following is a summary of the statements which led to an order of the House to hear representations from the contractors. The problems related to Great Slave Lake Railway contractors were first raised in the transport committee in June, 1967, when Mr. Schreyer asked Mr. MacMillan for comments related to the difficulties faced by seven contractors. The chairman of the committee referred to an earlier reply by Mr. MacMillan to the effect that if there was not litigation regarding these contracts, there soon would be and he would just as soon not comment. Mr. Schreyer stated: "Yes, but that leads me to this: You would expect that there would be litigation, but if these firms have gone into receivership or bankruptcy, how in the world could they initiate a civil suit?" When told that there could be a civil suit in such a case, Mr. Schreyer noted that he would like to see what lawyer they would get to act for them on that basis.

On March 5, 1968, and again on March 18, 1968, Mr. Schreyer questioned the then minister of transport about what action he had taken to date on an investigation into the construction of Great Slave Lake Railway and the bankruptcy of some construction firms engaged on the line. On March 25, 1968, Mr. Schreyer referred to allegations by contractors that Canadian National Railways enforced terms of the contract unfairly and onerously, and he summarized the circumstances of the contractors as follows:

> The majority of the 13 or 14 construction firms involved in the project lost heavily, half of them being forced into bankruptcy. If that had happened to only one or two, one might say, well, it was a case of poor management or poor bidding. But when half the firms—seven of those involved—go into bankruptcy, it is safe to assume that there is something rotten in Denmark and that the contract conditions must have been onerously enforced. Or perhaps the Canadian National Railways' specifications were sloppy in the extreme and grossly inaccurate. Many elements could enter into the matter.

Then Mr. Schreyer referred to a prior inquiry made into the pipeline contracts as precedent for the need for an inquiry, and noted the results of the pipeline inquiry. The inquiry found that Mannix Company Limited had submitted claims amounting to $16,000 which were settled for $6,600. Mattagami Construction had submitted claims amounting to $27,900 which were settled for $17,900. Mannix Construction Co., had submitted claims amounting to $972,000 which were settled for $420,000. Canadian Comstock had submitted claims for $96,696 which were settled for $65,243. Dutton Williams Brothers had submitted claims amounting to $2,776,731 which were settled for $692,490.

In October, 1968, Mr. Schreyer noted that the minister had continually been requested to look into the matter of improper tendering with respect to Great Slave Lake Railway. He noted that allegations had been made that serious errors in the enforcement of the terms of the contract were made by Canadian National Railways, as a result of which some contracting firms engaged in building the Great Slave Lake Railway went into bankruptcy. Mr. Schreyer stated:

> Several months have elapsed since then—

The minister had received some briefs from contractors.

> —and in the meantime some firms have been forced into receivership and bankruptcy. Some were forced into bankruptcy before the matter was brought to the minister's attention by members of this House. Since that time I understand one or two other firms engaged in the construction have also been forced into receivership.

Mr. Schreyer noted that the contractors had exhausted all legal avenues. He further stated:

> —unless we obtain from the Minister of Transport some indication of action, the contractors to whom I have referred will all be forced into personal and corporate bankruptcy.

I am sure the hon. member is pleased to hear this; and may I tell him I am well aware of what I am quoting. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), referring to another branch line, stated that local employees had been used in the construction of the line and noted that it would obviate some of the problems that plagued contractors in the Great Slave Lake area in regard to local employment problems. Then, according to the information I have, Mr. Schreyer later said:

> Some construction firms, Hatch Construction, Pete Rohl Construction, Ginter Construction, Krywa Brothers Construction, Lucas Construction and others, have been put into bankruptcy because of clause 16 of the form of contract. The acting minister will want to look at this material—

That is, briefs sent to the minister.

> —in detail to see what course of action can now be followed in order to redress the grievances of these people. There is no use talking about their right of access to the courts. In some cases justice, unfortunately, still is not obtainable without money with which to hire legal counsel, etc.

On February 5, 1969, Mr. Schreyer's question No. 206 was answered. The question asked:

> 1. Has the Minister of Transport made a decision relative to the claims submitted to him by those contractors that were engaged in the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway for the CNR and, if so, what is the decision?
> 2. If such claims have been accepted as valid, is Treasury Board approval being sought for payment, either in whole or in part, of these claims?

The question was answered by the then minister of transport, the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), as follows:

> 1. A review has been made of the circumstances relating to the claims of various contractors against the CNR in respect to the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway.
>
> Notwithstanding that one may have considerable sympathy for the circumstances in which the contractors find themselves as a result of these contracts, it appears that the claims, to the extent that they remain outstanding, are matters which must be settled between the companies directly involved and the management of the CNR.
>
> The CNR has informed the Minister of Transport that some of the claims have been dealt with and additional payments have been made in some cases.

• (1740)

Part 2 of that question the then minister of transport answered by saying, "Not applicable." During the hearings in May, 1969, on the Canadian National Railways' annual report, numerous statements were made, some of which I would like to quote as follows:

Great Slave Lake Railway

MR. SKOBERG: I move that the committee call as witnesses those contractors available that were engaged in the construction of Great Slave Lake Railway and were subject to the invoking of clause 16 of their contracts by Canadian National Railways.

Considerable discussion ensued related to the wording of the motion, the need to appear, etc. In this regard Mr. Allmand noted:

We should not entertain these grievances under this particular motion because these contractors, whoever they may be, whether individuals or corporations, might have made a claim through the courts, which is the usual way when one is not satisfied under a contract. The usual procedure is to make a claim in court. I do not know at this particular time whether any claims have been made in court; whether there are judgments on these particular claims or whether there have been settlements made out of court. Maybe they did not make claims before the court; maybe for some reasons they were prevented.

Mr. Horner spoke to Mr. Allmand's recommendation to turn down the recommendation, as follows:

Secondly, I would like to suggest that the whole difficulty arises out of something that was not the contractors' fault. It was not the railway's fault either. It was practically an act of God: the weather conditions were the biggest trouble. Surely, contractors or the Canadian National Railways should not be held responsible. We should hear the problems that the weather conditions brought about, without forcing these people who, as I understand their case, are nearly bankrupt anyway. I sincerely want each member of this committee to look at this problem. If they tendered low and lost their shirt, then you and I can justifiably say, well, the next time they will tender wisely. But in this case it was not a case of tendering low; it was an act of God—building a railroad in severe conditions through what we might call a hinterland, an area which is not settled, an area which nobody really knew the conditions, and then, on top of all that, adverse weather conditions during the construction of the railway.

He went on to state:

Mr. Chairman, it is only fair and just that we at least hear their case. If we decide that it was not because of weather, but through faulty construction or faulty management of their contracts, then I do not think we should be held responsible for bailing them out, nor should the government, no matter which government. If we find that it was because of adverse management direction under clause 16 of the contract, or because of adverse weather conditions, perhaps we could give them a sympathetic hearing at least, and maybe a sympathetic answer. With regard to Mr. Allmand's third point, Mr. Chairman, that this whole question may go before the courts, I urge this committee to give serious consideration to that problem. If these contractors are in as severe a position as they say, they are facing bankruptcy. They cannot afford to go to court.

Some hon. members of the committee went on to speak about this, and Mr. Nesbitt said:

—it is quite evident that the House leader, Mr. MacDonald, has been apprised of the matter and has made certain commitments in the House. There seems little doubt that this matter would be heard and witnesses called to hear both sides of the story. It is my understanding that the minister might have some reservations in setting an unfortunate precedent where every person who had a 25-cent claim against the railway or the government might want a hearing, or that it would open the flood-gate in the future, but I do not think that could happen and I think this committee could, perhaps, make that quite clear. This would not set a precedent as there are very unusual circumstances in this case. There are many millions of dollars involved. It has been apparent that the cause of the thing was not necessarily the fault of the railway at all, but was caused by unforeseen acts of God, as I believe the term is, although I do not know why the Almighty should be blamed for some of these unfortunate things. However, that is in fact what they are, and there certainly have been commitments made that the committee would hear the whole matter.

To sum up briefly—

[Mr. Guay (St. Boniface).]

An hon. Member: That would be nice.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I could continue, because I think some hon. members would want to hear all these facts. I thought they were of interest. I should like to reiterate the authority given to the commission by the House of Commons on December 11, 1969, as follows:

That the Minister of Transport establish a one-man enquiry to consider the merits of the claims submitted to this committee by the Great Slave Lake Railway contractors. The person nominated to conduct the enquiry should be acceptable to both the contractors and the Canadian National Railways and should report to the minister in confidence so as not to prejudice any future court hearing.

I should like to conclude by quoting from a letter from the CNR, signed by Clare J. Irwin, to the Hon. G. E. Tritschler, Chief Justice, Court of Queen's Bench for Manitoba, Law Courts Building, Broadway Avenue and Kennedy Street, Winnipeg 1, Manitoba, dated October 22, 1971. It reads in part:

The evidence of both Ben Ginter Construction Co. Ltd. and CN supports CN's contention that the powers of the CN engineer under clauses 16 and 18 of the section 6 and 7 grading contracts were exercised reasonably and with discretion under difficult circumstances.

By Benjamin Ginter's own tesimony, the weather was not a problem with respect to this grading work and there is no evidence that the condition of the terrain gave rise to unusual difficulties in this regard.

In any event, the evidence is that a formal claim was made to CN on behalf of Ben Ginter Construction Co. Ltd. following completion of these contracts. This claim was settled after protracted negotiations between counsel for the contractor and for CN in the amount of $342,000, a sum greatly in excess of the $207,000 recommended by Dr. R. M. Hardy following his consideration of the claim. That amount must be considered as having fully compensated this contractor for claims of any nature which it brought against CN following completion of the work.

The evidence adduced at the hearing was that the CN engineer in exercising his powers under clause 16 of this contract acted reasonably. Despite this fact, when a formal claim was made by this contractor and Dr. R. M. Hardy was asked to advise with respect to that claim, a settlement was effected to the mutual satisfaction of both parties by CN paying to the contractor the sum of $64,000. This amount was equal to the full amount paid to hourly-rated contractors for work done under clause 16 on clearing sections 6 to 9 and initially charged to Krywa Bros. Const. Ltd.

It is important to note Dr. Hardy's evidence that, in addition, this contract was earlier paid approximately $40,000 for work done by the hourly-rated contractor at no cost to Krywa Bros. Const. Ltd. Even if it could be concluded that CN's engineer exercised his powers under clause 16 unreasonably, it is submitted that this total additional payment of approximately $100,000 adequately compensated Krywa Bros. Const. Ltd. for any costs resulting from such action.

The weather gave rise to no unusual difficulties in the clearing work done by this contractor and the condition of the terrain cannot be the proper basis for a claim by a contractor engaged soley in clearing land.

The letter goes on to explain, in respect of all other contractors, that they were all dealt with in the same manner. I could continue reading this letter; it might be of interest to some hon. members of the House. Possibly I could quote one more paragraph which indicates that Lucas Construction Ltd. had been treated in the same way. The letter reads:

• (1750)

Following completion of the hearing with respect to Lucas Construction Ltd. it became apparent that portions of the testimony of Dr. R. M. Hardy may have been unclear. Accordingly, I asked Dr. Hardy to advise me with respect to these points. I enclose for your further consideration Dr. Hardy's letter to me 21 October, 1971.

It is CN's submission that the evidence clearly indicates that the powers of CN's engineer under contract clauses 16 and 18 were exercised reasonably under the circumstances existing throughout the duration of this work.

The effect of weather upon a contractor engaged in this type of heavy construction must be foreseen by the contractor at the time he makes his bid.

The evidence of Dr. Hardy as clarified in the enclosed letter together with the evidence given by witnesses for both Lucas Construction Ltd. and CN at the hearing would indicate that an unusual soil condition was encountered on grading section 4. There can be no doubt, both from the evidence of Dr. Hardy as found in the Minutes of Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of 19 June, 1969, at pages 2599 and 2600 and from Dr. Hardy's evidence at the recent hearing as clarified by his letter, that any additional costs incurred by Lucas Construction Ltd. attributable to this soil condition were considered—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him is up.

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, since there are only seven minutes left, I shall try to leave enough time for the question to be put.

Mr. Justice Tritschler's report on the inquiry into the construction of the Great Slave Lake Railway is more evidence of the government's policy of silence when it suits them. The manner in which they have kept this report secret is further proof of the government's dictatorship in Canada. Under cover of a well-disguised democracy, the word "freedom" comes to mean—

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-147, an act to amend the Old Age Security Act—Chapter No. 8.

Bill C-148, an act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act—Chapter No. 9.

[Translation]

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, before recess, I was speaking about the state of mind of all Canadians concerned, the governments or the people.

I was suggesting that we produce too many of these official reports, royal inquiries and white papers submitted in large numbers to all Canadian members of Parliament. Why should we spend two more years on new studies, reviews, federal-provincial consultations, suggestions, further research, when all that is already included in the work carried out since 1960?

Mr. Speaker, the general impression we get from January 11th's impressive speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), the member for Outremont, especially coming from one who was once in the first rank of advisors to the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) for almost five years, and who must know better than anyone what goes on, after so many royal inquiries on these matters, is an impression of dullness which suggests incompetence, impatience, incoherence and a waste of time, which suggests perplexity as to which way to turn in the maze of organizations that are immediately involved with the guaranteed personal income which guarantees the individual's right to a living.

We must, Mr. Speaker, work towards setting up a national organization that will guarantee all Canadians a share in the national revenue.

The regulations of exchange and commerce, the general levying of taxes by everyone under our present system, the exchange rate and minting, banks, the issuing of paper money and rates of interests, all these are the aims of our present economic system.

Inflation, unemployment and poverty are merely failures in the circulation of money. Let us stop complaining and sulking. The solution to our lack of money lies in the hands of the government of Canada, and particularly in those of the seven most important ministers and Members of Parliament elected by the Canadian people.

The seven members of the cabinet who can supply an immediate solution to the problems of circulation of money, in the interests of the nation and of the 23 million Canadians, are the right hon. Prime Minister, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), the leader of Social Credit (Mr. Caouette), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

These Canadians are those mainly responsible for our economic organization. Only they can make the big decisions, and only from them can we expect decisions and major reforms that everybody hopes this parliament will introduce to correct the present economic situation.

Now, if national production amounts to $114 billion in 1973, which means $5,000 per capita or $25,000 per family of five members, on average there are nine million Canadian producers who get revenues from their wages and investments. We call upon this government to consider major economic factors and establish a national economic balance between people, families and companies, between earnings, spendings and profits, between taxes, duties, exemptions and personal income, and to provide for a guaranteed personal income.

Mr. Speaker, although the Canadian economy is still one of the most prosperous in the world and while generally, the capitalist economy of free enterprise is still superior to the socialist and communist systems, I assert with supporting evidence that our Canadian capitalist economy of free enterprise has some basic deficiencies, namely inflation, the rise in the cost of living and interest rates generally; unemployment and the numerous strikes are only some apparent and localized symptoms at certain times and places.

The basic deficiency, the basic weakness of our economy, the sole and basic source of all the troubles which we are endeavouring to control, including currently rising interest rates, that sole cause of our many economic difficulties is the essential aspect of our Canadian capitalist economy of free enterprise which is so difficult to correct. It is merely the unbalance among the various foregoing constituent factors.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to support this bill but in a rather negative way because we feel that it does not contain the solution we are seeking. We would have preferred to see the tax exemption for married couples raised to $5,000 and $3,000 for single people. In spite of that we accept the government proposals. We will not oppose the passing of the bill but we would like to make it known to this House that we are not very satisfied because we would have liked in this month of April 1973, in the twentieth century, in view of our fantastic production which increases from year to year and the decrease in the number of individuals contributing to production—nearly 30 per cent of our labour force is unemployed—to increase our gross national output to at least $125 billion or perhaps $150 billion in the coming years. We cannot do it because our workers are out of work and because we have not found the means to make the investments needed to get our economic production system going to produce more. When the young are not working, they are not producing. We would have liked to see people work and produce more because in that way we could have reduced prices and would have done so through the help of competent citizens putting their energies at the service of their fellow countrymen and working for the good of the community. We could have increased our assets and by doing so we could have reduced our costs and if our costs were reduced with methods such as those we advocate we could give compensated discounts to reduce the cost of living, to prevent it from increasing steadily.

Mr. Speaker, we could reach a peaceful settlement of the major problems affecting us and to which we cannot find a solution.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[English]

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, may I preface my remarks with a brief quotation as follows:

> The federal government is aware of the importance of the family farm. We realize the importance of keeping our family farms healthy and growing . . . Despite all our talk about corporate farming and about agriculture being big business—and it is—the family farm is still a basic unit in our agricultural community.

The author, Mr. Speaker, was the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and these remarks were contained in an open letter to farmers of Perth county, published in the Perth-Stratford Beacon Herald on February 10 this year, on the occasion of that county's annual agricultural week celebrations. The date of publication, February 10, is significant because it was nine days before the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on February 19. What did this minister have to say about the family farm? I quote from page 14 of his speech as follows:

> I would now like to draw your attention to another matter which is of great importance, namely the preservation of the family farm. Under the present rules, when a farmer dies and leaves his farm to his children he is treated as if he has sold his farm at its fair market value. In the result, there may be a capital gains tax liability. For many of our farmers this poses a serious problem. First, the value of a farmer's land is often subject to fluctuations which have little bearing on the real value of that land as a farm. Second, most small farmers have little available cash and have already exhausted their credit. Therefore, a tax liability at a time when there has been no real sale may leave the family of the deceased farmer with no alternative but to sell out.
> To remedy this problem, I propose that, effective January 1, 1972, when a farmer dies and leaves his farm to his children there will be no deemed sale of his farm land.

In the "Budget Highlights" at page 5, however, that passage was reduced to the following brief sentence:

> Family farms permitted to pass from generation to generation free of capital gains tax.

This is what was picked up across the country and for several days or weeks there was joy in the rural areas, based on the general misunderstanding that capital gains tax had been eliminated for the transfer of a farm to a wife, son or daughter. At this point, the farmers of Canada were rejoicing because of four basic misunderstandings of this supposed tax relief as it applied to the family farm. Indeed, all Canadians felt that at long last this government had recognized and were prepared to cure the ills that the government's tax legislation had brought to them. These four items of misunderstanding were as follows: first, the farm could be sold or transferred to the children during the parents' lifetime without tax liability; second, capital gains tax had been eliminated with respect to such sale or transfer; third, the residence of the child or children at the time of the parent's death was of no consequence; fourth, the whole farm could be sold or transferred.

With respect to the first item of misunderstanding, it took a week or more before it was realized that the farmer had to die before any relief was possible. Regarding the second misunderstanding, it gradually became clear that capital gains tax was not eliminated at all; it was merely deferred. Therefore, if the farm had a value of $50,000 on valuation day, and a few years later had a value of $75,000 on the date of the father's death, or even a few years later had a value of $95,000 when the son sold it, perhaps to a neighbour, we find that the capital gain to the son is $45,000. In other words, farmers are finding out that even though they leave their farms to their sons in their wills, their sons will still be stuck with retroactive valuation day value.

The third misunderstanding is the residence rule which must be met by the farmer's son or daughter. I wonder if the Canadian farmer realizes even today that if he leaves the family farm to his son in his will, and by sheer coincidence that son, at the time of the father's death, happens not to be at that precise moment a resident of Canada, no relief from capital gains tax can be enjoyed even though the son returns home post haste in order to continue the operation of the farm.

The fourth misunderstanding, Mr. Speaker, is crucial. It involves the question of what is a family farm. I suggest that most of us know it as a combination of land and buildings, probably a dwelling house, livestock, equipment, feed, fertilizer and other things. It is the totality of all of these in combination. When we speak of the family farm in relation to its purchase or sale, or in relation to capital gains tax, however, the interpretation is perhaps more narrow. It is considered by most to mean the land and buildings, the real estate: the non-movables, or immovables, if you prefer.

When a farm real estate agent lists a farm for sale he intends to sell, and the prospective purchaser intends to buy, not such things as stock, equipment and other things; he intends to buy the land and buildings. Therefore, Canadian farmers did not pay special heed to the reference in the budget speech to "farm lands," because "farm lands" mean land and buildings. It bothered a few of us though, Mr. Speaker, because it is no secret that the Minister of Finance would not know a cow from a cabbage and could not care less.

It bothered the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) who in this House, on February 28 last, asked the Minister of Agriculture if this capital gains tax exemption—I should point out that some of us at that time did not appreciate that it was simply a deferral—also included the buildings on the farm, or was it just the land? I remember the question very well, for two reasons. First, I was trying to be recognized by Your Honour on the same day to ask a similar question and, second, before the Minister of Agriculture answered he leaned over and consulted his colleague the Minister of Finance. Even this brief consultation, Mr. Speaker, was so unique and historic that it became branded in our memories. In any event, after this consultation the Minister of Agriculture replied, "It includes the complete farm".

Mr. Speaker, why would any farmer have difficulty understanding this answer? A few might believe that a complete farm includes such things as livestock, equipment and feed. In any event, we were all pretty well satisfied that the tax on land and buildings could at least be deferred except for this. A few of us began receiving strange reports that farm groups such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers' Union and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture were not getting firm answers to the questions they had been putting to the minister and officials of his department. Therefore, the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe wrote to the minister and asked for a specific answer to this question: Does the deferral of capital gains tax apply to both land and buildings? The answer, dated March 9, 1973, included a lot of the usual gobbledygook about parts XI and parts XVII of the act, "deemed disposal," "recipient descendants," and so on. However, one part of the minister's letter is very clear. It reads as follows:

• (2020)

> The deferment of capital gains tax does not apply to farm buildings or machinery. There will be no change in the basis for valuing the buildings and machinery.

What are we to believe, Mr. Speaker? What are the farmers of Canada to believe? Are we to believe the minister's answer in this House on February 28 when he said, after consulting the Minister of Finance, that the deferral included the complete farm, or are we to believe what he said a few days later in his letter of March 9, that the deferment of capital gains tax does not apply to farm buildings?

If we believe the minister's letter which indicated that only raw land is considered, then this simply has to be a gigantic hoax perpetrated by the government on the farmers of this nation. Is this government serious in believing that farmers across this country shall secure valuation on land alone? Will the government ask these Canadians to consider a family farm as land alone? The whole proposition is so preposterous that it would be laughable if it were not for its tremendous tax implications.

I listed four points of misunderstanding and concern and I have spent most of my time on the fourth point in the hope that a minister will tell this House just what farm assets are subject to capital gains tax and what farm assets are not.

Mr. Benjamin: You can only exclude the wife and the hired man.

Mr. Jarvis: Let me return to the first area of misunderstanding, that the parent must die before the tax can be deferred on the passing of the farm to the child. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House that this is not only unsatisfactory; it is deplorable. Many whose opinion I value share this position. For example, Farm and Country magazine published on March 27 a story headed, "Leaving a farm to a son in a will has never been a satisfactory means of transferring the farm from one generation to the other." Let me quote from that story by Lyall MacLachlan. It reads in part:

> There have been too many cases where sons have reached their fifties and had nothing for their years of hard work on the farm except a promise of the farm when father was gone. As the years pass by, family relationships often change, as a daughter-in-law and then grandchildren appear on the scene. We all know wills can be changed at any time . . .
> Those of us who counsel and help farm families with their transfer programs have been striving to get away from the idea of leaving everything in the will. We urge farmers, depending on their individual circumstances, to start a tranfer program as early as possible in their lives and not to depend on their will for transferring the main farm business.
>
> The proposed change in the Income Tax Act will encourage farmers to do the very thing we have been working to change. However, perhaps when the details of the proposal are known, it will include deferment on any capital gains tax when a father transfers his farm to his children while living.

What a vain hope that was, Mr. Speaker. In the same publication there is a story concerning Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. The story is headed, "Budget moves undermined Whelan, Hill warns federal cabinet session", and reads in part:

Federal budget proposals hurting Canada's farm population 'have undermined the confidence we have in (agriculture minister) Gene Whelan,' the federal cabinet was told recently.

'Also, it's undermined the confidence we had in the government,' Gordon Hill, president, Ontario Federation of Agriculture, added. In an open confrontation, he said the move on capital gains and elimination of the tariff on imported fruit and vegetables plus beef had 'shocked farmers.'

'It's bloody well not good enough,' snapped Hill. Exempting farms from a capital gains tax only on the death of the father 'keeps young men hanging around waiting for the old man to die.,—

Hill said the appointment of Whelan as Minister of Agriculture met with farmer approval. 'He's doing a good job. He's talking the farmers' language. He was convincing farmers that the federal government was trying to solve their problems. Then came the Turner budget. Now we've got a lot of doubts.'

Finally, let me read an editorial in the same publication, written by Don Coxe. It is headed, "Tax deferral misleads farmers". According to the story:

Turner's budget move was hailed in government press releases as 'solving the problems of family farm inheritances.' In reality, what Turner has done is to give a tax deferral to those heirs who are Canadian residents at the time of the death of a parent owning a farm which they inherit; those who stand to benefit most are those whose families have done no estate planning.

He concluded this thought by saying:

'Better dead than in the red' could become the watchword of farm estate planning.

In order to be absolutely fair to the Minister of Agriculture, let us consider for a moment what he has been telling farmers and farm organizations across this country. I believe I have read every speech he has made since the budget speech, and there have been many. Let me begin by quoting what he said to the Canadian Horticultural Council, at the Château Laurier on February 27, 1973:

Farmers specifically got an exemption from the capital gains tax for family farms passed from parents to children.

Later in this speech he said:

—the budget has brought important gains for farmers, and in particular the exemption from capital gains for transfers of family farms from parents to children.

Next let me read from the speech he delivered to the Waterloo County Federation of Agriculture. He said:

The capital gains tax was changed for farmers who pass their farms on to their children.

From there he moved to Port Elgin, Ontario, and addressed the farmers during the Saugeen and district farmers rural-urban night. He said:

In closing, I would like to review some of the gains farmers made as a result of the new budget announced last month. First of all, farmers got a cut in income taxes—by as much as 47 per cent for those with an income of $5,000. Second, there was the exemption from capital gains tax for farms passed on from parents to children.

[Mr. Jarvis.]

Finally, let me quote from the speech he made to the Farm Forum at Weyburn, Saskatchewan. He said:

In the budget speech last month, we announced a change that will exempt family farms from the capital gains tax if they are passed down from parent to child.

Those are fine words, Mr. Speaker, but one must be particularly impressed by what the minister did not say to the farmers of this country. First, he has not said a farmer must die first; he has not said that in any speech. Second, he has not said that the tax is only deferred. He spoke repeatedly of tax exemptions. Third, he has not told farmers of the residency rule. Fourth, he has not told the farmers that the provisions apply to land only, if indeed that is his understanding and that of the Minister of Finance. The minister, even though he will not deign to inform the farmer, has given him some advice. I refer to his remarks as recorded at page 1580 of House of Commons Debates for February 22, 1973. He said:

I am happy to see that the budget aims at preserving the family farm. The tax concession does not apply to the corporate giants but to farm families who pass on their farm from one generation to the next.

I think the change is important enough that farmers should consult a lawyer—and even for a farmer this is a concession—or an accountant if they are planning a transfer of their farm to their son, son-in-law, daughter or whoever it may be. There are several methods of transferring a farm from father to son or daughter including gifts spread over a number of years. A good accountant can tell them how this can best be done. The change announced in the budget changes the rules of the ball game, to the benefit of the family farm, and I want every farmer to get the most he can out of these concessions that are rightfully his.

From the day this session commenced to the present day, the Canadian farmer has been misled, misinformed and mistreated; and not one incident can be found of this government's willingness to inform farmers of the exact nature and import of the capital gains tax legislation in a frank, open and honourable manner. In closing, sir, may I quote again from the remarks of the minister to this House as recorded at page 1582 of House of Commons Debates for February 22. He said:

• (2030)

We have talked about the family farm. It is easy for many people to talk about a family farm, people who really have no feeling in this regard. I think one has to be raised on a family farm to really understand what it means and to have the feeling of having produced crops. One must be in this position to know what it is to create things. I have been criticized before for saying I feel that farmers are the salt of the earth and closer to God because they create things.

In light of what has been produced by this government with regard to the family farm, I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a good thing our farmers are close to God, because about all the Canadian farmer can hope for now is divine intervention. Finally, I wish to quote what my leader said in Regina on September 15, 1972:

We will act to ensure that capital gains tax does not apply to transfers of average sized farms within the family unit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this bill. First I wish to quote from a letter sent to one of the British Columbia members by a farm organization in that province. It lists three items the farmers in that area would like to see in the tax proposals which are passed into legislation. They are as follows:

(a) the need for farm transfers within a family without capital gains taxation.

(b) the need to remove taxes from the sale of marketing quotas.

(c) the need for maintenance of the basic herb concept.

They are not asking for a great deal. It will not cost the government a significant amount of money and will not bankrupt the Canadian economy. It could be done without causing a great deal of distress to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). It may even help the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to look like a better guy. However, it is aparently just too much to hope for.

The basic problem of the government and those who plan our taxation system is that they do not understand what it means to let agriculture survive in this country. Never mind helping them to survive, but just to let them survive. That is our problem. The government is hopelessly behind the times in its thinking. They are attempting to have a taxation system that was relevant to agriculture 15 years ago. That is another problem: the practices in farming are changing very quickly.

The second item with respect to the need to remove taxes from the sale of marketing quotas would not have been raised in this House or this country 10 years ago, and certainly not 15 years ago: I think I am absolutely safe in saying 10 years ago. However, it has now become a very important factor in the operations of a significant number of farmers in Canada today. The dairy industry, to name only one sector, has gone the furthest in making a saleable quota part of the total marketing operation. Perhaps it should not have been done that way. I think better methods could have been devised, but that is beside the point. The point is that in many areas the industry now operates in that way.

If a cream shipper—I do not refer to the big shot dairy farmer, but the ordinary person milking 10 cows and shipping cream, or the person milking 10 to 15 cows and shipping industrial milk in Saskatchewan or many other provinces—has to purchase a quota, he has to borrow money. He is making an investment. If he borrows money, he has to pay interest. If he sells his operation, he must either try to recover that money, sustain a loss or those who take over the operation from him must sustain a loss. The present taxation provisions make it difficult for them to finance the operation.

I do not know whether this government and the minister responsible seriously want the kind of farm we have in Canada today to survive. They had better make up their minds pretty soon. The kind of taxation imposed decides, to a very considerable extent, the type of farm that will continue. The manner in which transfers take place, how money is invested and how the farm is passed from one generation to the other is decided by the taxation system. If the taxation system makes it impossible for family farms to finance their operations, they will cease to exist.

I now wish to deal with item (a), the need for farm transfers within a family without capital gains taxation. In their wisdom, those who planned our taxation system said, a farmer can transfer without capital gains taxation, but he must die before he can do so. There are not many tax provisions where a person must die before he is entitled to an exemption, but that is the case here. What about transfers that are made while the farm owner is still living? Most farmers I know do not want to hang on to the farm until they go to the cemetery; they want to be able to turn it over to their son, son-in-law or whoever it may be. Many prefer to quit so they can relax and take it easy. They may wish to help the son or the family along for a few years. But no, this cannot be done. They have to cash in their chips to get any benefit from this provision. I do not understand why.

• (2040)

Perhaps the minister has some good reason why it is so. Maybe it will cost the government less money if farmers have to die before passing on their land, rather than passing it on while they are still alive. If that is the case, I think the minister should tell us. I think only a few of them will be able to pass it on if they wait till they cash in their chips, because the children will get tired of waiting and will leave. Perhaps the minister will get some more money in that way, but he should at least tell the House why this particular method was chosen.

While the minister is at it, he should also tell us why he did not give consideration to the position of family farm corporations. We now have a significant number of farms run by a father and son or by a family corporation. These farms are also transferred, yet no reference is made to them in the bill. This bears out by my belief that the drafters of this legislation did not understand what they were dealing with and did not choose to consult anyone who did. I get a bit irked when I think of people in my constituency in Saskatchewan who are trying so hard to run their own farms and produce grain, cattle and hogs, yet their ordinary needs are not considered.

Mr. Speaker, there are enough economists in the Department of Agriculture, and I do not know what the Minister of Agriculture is going to do with them. He said that he did not like economists; I have heard him make some harsh remarks about them. But let me tell the minister that they have been the fastest growing force in his department during the last three or four years. The minister has spent more money gathering in economists than gathering in anybody else.

Mr. Whelan: Not me.

Mr. Gleave: Not you; but you have them, buster. Having acquired all these economists, they cannot even tell the Department of Finance how to arrange a taxation system that will enable the farmers to continue operating. It is either that or the Department of Finance will not listen to them.

We tried to talk the government into leaving the basic herd alone so that farmers would be able to build up and maintain a stable herd of cattle. But even that was too much. No minister of the government has stood in this House and explained why the government could not afford to leave the basic herd as it was. If there is a reason, why does not a minister tell the House what it is? That is the logical and reasonable thing to do.

All of us have to pay our share of taxes and, goodness knows, they are high enough. Although we are prepared to do this, one of the basic precepts of income tax is that it should not kill the goose that lays the golden egg; in other words, it should not destroy entrepreneurial activity, if for no other reason than that this activity produces revenue. I should like to know how much tax the government is collecting from dairy producers in foreign countries who are going to sell Canada over 25 million pounds of butter. Are the economists that the Minister of Agriculture has in his stable going to advise the government how to tax butter producers in New Zealand or other countries? The government ran out of time to pay subsidies so as to get the cheese factories out of business in Ontario. This year they gave them an extension of time so they could collect the grant to quit producing cheddar cheese. The government could have saved taxes by not paying the cheese factories not to produce cheese.

I say it is about time the government started to think about the ordinary guy in the farming business in Canada. The government has programs to get them out of farming. The agricultural adjustment program was another scheme the government dreamed up in some back room to kill off the taxpaying farmer of Canada. They wanted them shuffled out. I do not know whether these farms will get any better, but they are certainly going to make them bigger. There is a good scheme going now to get them big enough that Kraft will buy all the milk. Then you will have a one-man show.

The government will then have the problem of trying to get Kraft to pay income tax. Kraft will probably move its head office and the government will be pretty badly strapped. Before the government finishes its grand master plan to close down the cheese factories and let Kraft take over, it had better develop some method of getting tax moneys from Kraft. Otherwise, the government may experience some small difficulty.

The government has set up some pretty good outfits. For example, there is the Canada Grains Council. I asked the minister about this today. The government gives this council some of the taxpayers' money, then the council publishes a little pamphlet which is just like the one put out by the Department of Agriculture. So there is more duplication there, but I do not know whether they think it is important. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is also responsible for this council. He sends out questionnaires to find out how farmers want their two-price wheat system implemented. Then these retired farmers write us letters asking how they can get paid their share. These are the retired people for whom the two-price wheat system fails to provide, the people who have retired and whose sons have taken over their farms. They write to us saying they are dependent on their farms for some of their income and that they want their share.

The government and the minister are not really thinking about the ordinary operator and how he can solve his problems. Today the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers met in Ottawa and invited the minister to speak to them at the Chateau Laurier. An hon. member who represents a number of these people was in attendance. I am not sure whether he heard this statement, but he should have because it is indicative of the situation on farms throughout western Canada. The statement made by the minister to the wool growers' association was as follows:

> I think one of the most important challenges you face right now is to make the industry grow, and to get more farmers into the business. I say that because I believe you don't have enough volume to build up a consumer market. You don't have enough volume to make it attractive for businessmen to invest in a top-notch marketing system, including packing plants.

It does not matter whether it is the wool growers or anybody else, if they are to obtain an increase in the price of their products and invest more money in the industry, they must have confidence that they will be able to obtain a reasonable return. They must be confident in the belief that if they invest, their money will be secure and they will be able to make a decent living. If farmers do not have that confidence, they will not stay on the farm.

The minister has said that dairy farmers in Ontario are not able to employ enough workmen to operate their farms. I suggest this is because we have persuaded too many young people to leave the farm. Anyone who has observed population trends knows that it is easy to convince young people to move from rural areas to the city, but extremely difficult, once they have become urbanized, to persuade them to move back to the country and work in a rural environment. That is what has happened in this country. The minister agrees that it has happened because we have not provided encouragement or security to young people living and working on the land. Instead, we have developed policies which result in the very opposite, namely, encouraging people to leave the land.

I recall attending a meeting during the election campaign in a little place called Hafford in the northern end of my constituency. This meeting was arranged by people involved in the dairy processing industry and officials of the provincial government: they got these people together to persuade them to go back to milking cows and producing industrial milk. Some five years earlier these people in the town of Hafford were milking cows and shipping cream. The dairy commission changed the method of quota payments, and many of the producers dropped out of the industry. Some of their sons and daughters had left the farm and had no intention of returning. I assure the Minister of Agriculture that we in Saskatchewan will have an uphill job getting these young people back to the farm. This is mainly because of politics adopted by this government.

The same situation exists in the hog industry. There was a real upsurge in hog production in 1969 and 1970. Then we hit a downturn in price and this government did not make any move to protect the producers until it was too late. We will now have a difficult task increasing hog production.

I see that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture have got together. I do not know at this point whether they are discussing a charge in these taxation proposals, but I hope they are.

An hon. Member: One or the other should resign.

Mr. Gleave: An hon. member suggests that one of them should resign. I think that is an excellent suggestion. At least they have sat at the same desk and are talking to each other. Perhaps they could confer long enough to come up with a realistic approach to agricultural policy in order that we will have a taxation policy that will enable our farmers to survive.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I was born and raised on the farm; consequently, I have a feeling for the way of life on Canadian farms and for the many problems and dilemmas which farmers, young and old, face today. I know, for instance, what difficulties young farmers face when they take over their father's farm of agricultural business, as we like to refer to it today, after the father has retired or has died. For this reason I shall confine my comments to the parts of the bill which relate to agriculture.

The bill before us today is inadequate. It forgives the capital gains tax only in the case of a farmer dying and passing his farm on to his son, daughter or another member of the family. It is ridiculous for such a concession to be made only when a farmer dies. Let us consider the perfectly logical case of a farmer in his forties who has a son in his early twenties, a son who is willing and anxious to get into farming—which is perhaps rare today. Perhaps the farmer is prepared to give all or part of the farm to his son in order to get him started, but the son finds out that the capital gains tax would be prohibitive and he could not own the land on which he would toil until his father's death.

I am a young person who recently married. I am not sure it is my political life that is the cause, but we are just beginning to plan a family. I will have the same feelings as my father, and his father before him, who worked very hard to make sure their children would benefit from their work and have a better life than theirs. Our pioneer forefathers spent long hours hewing out a living on the land in anticipation of a bright future for themselves and their children. I resent very much an attitude on the part of any member of this House which would indicate that one generation has no right to pass on wealth in the form of capital farm assets such as land and machinery to another person of the same family.

I think this is a step backward and one which takes away the incentives which have been inbred in our people through the free enterprise system. This is what the government is doing to our bona fide rural farmers by imposing capital gains taxes on farmland and farm machinery, and by taking away the basic herd concept. The farmer has limitations that other businesses do not incur. If a farmer has an increase in the cost of his input, such as fertilizer, machinery, sprays and everyday expenses, he is unable to add these to the price of the barley he grows or the steer he sells. He must pay the increased costs of inflation, labour and other inputs which, should a machine company be faced with them, would simply be added to the price of the product sold to the farmer.

We might consider another set of circumstances in which a young farmer could afford to purchase some of his father's land, or take a loan to do so, only to discover that the capital gains tax was prohibitive because land values had risen tremendously in a speculative area. This is a common situation in my constituency and in many constituencies close to metropolitan areas. Areas within 30 or 50 miles of a metropolitan area find that land prices have risen because many people have moved into the small towns. I suppose this population flow from the cities is all right in this instance because it takes away from the urban sprawl. But because of this situation land prices in the area skyrocket.

My point is that long before there is any actual development there is excellent arable land available for farming for a period of 10, 20 or even 100 years. It is not fair that young people who happen to live in rural areas should be subjected to a high capital gains tax. We have seen in the past few years recommendations by accountants and agricultural experts to the effect that farm people should incorporate in order that they could pass on partial or total ownership through shares from father to son in the form of a gift, to the allowable limit. My reservation is that this means of transfer should occur free of capital gains tax.

One of the most undesirable aspects of this bill and of other recent tax legislation is the terrific burden in respect of bookkeeping and computation which is placed upon the farmer. Many of our farmers, as many hon. members are aware, are not yet caught up in an agribusiness concept of operation. They keep records in their head, in an old shoe-box in the barn, or elsewhere. Undoubtedly, this is not the most efficient, modern way to proceed. However, it is a fact of life. Most older farmers are set in their ways and will have difficulty adjusting. I hope the government will provide assistance for farmers to complete their returns properly, and will see that farmers are not penalized or prosecuted due to genuine and inevitable confusion and misunderstanding in this transitory period.

In addition, as I have pointed out previously to this House, capitalization costs for farms are rising at a tremendous rate. The average capital outlay for a new farm in 1971 was $37,000. Today the figure has reached $80,000. At the same time, the number of census farms in Alberta, and in Canada generally, has dropped off rapidly, and the average age of farmers is increasing to the point where it is now 50 or more. This is not an unusual situation, I might add, in view of the attitudes implicit in the bill before us. It is unfair to impose a capital gains tax on a young farmer who takes over from his father who may have been running the farm on the 1950 basis, because the new farmer may find it necessary to update the equipment and perhaps purchase another quarter section of land in order to make it an efficient farm unit. The young farmer would have difficulty obtaining a loan, not only for the purchase of the land but for bringing the farm up to date, without having the imposition of a capital gains tax upon the takeover.

I am one who believes in rural values and rural ways. Amidst the hurly-burly of city life, its glamour and excitement, all hon. members and indeed all Canadians from rural areas know the special feeling and characteristics of country life, such as the opportunity for reflection and quiet, the stern reliance on self-initiative and self-discipline and the avoidance of government paternalism wherever possible. I believe that such basic values, including the work ethic, were instrumental in building Canada and are not irrelevant today. Indeed, I believe they have as much to contribute to the future as they did to the past.

We should look at the hippy attitude and learn something from it. They led the movement away from urban smog back to the soil, back to nature and back to the natural life. As the pace of our lives continues to mount, we need even more the balance and perspective that the rural values of Canadian life have to offer. The preservation of rural communities, which the present bill does not aid as effectively as it should, means that the basis of our society, the family, should be able to stay together.

Communities are preserved only because succeeding generations continue to work and remain there for the good of the community. Young people are kept on the farm, join 4-H clubs and obtain the reverence and respect for this life which will impel them, wherever it is financially possible, to stay on the farm and see that people do not join in the mass exodus to the cities because it is possible for them to remain on the family farm. I find that some towns which develop close to cities and lose their farm atmosphere suffer severe social problems as a result. I have seen examples of this in my riding. The smaller rural towns 15 miles or so away from the cities find they are growing rapidly because of improved commuter transportation, and so on. Homes are being broken as fathers work away from home for longer periods of time. The children are left to play on the streets since their former clubs and meeting places have closed down. Drugs become a large problem in these towns.

I reiterate how ridiculous it is for this capital gains tax to stand in the way of retaining the farm atmosphere. Most farmers put all their profits and savings back into the farm during their lifetime. The farm is essentially their retirement fund. If it is prohibitive for them to sell their farms to their sons, then it is small wonder that so many farms are closing down. The hard work of a farmer often necessitates his comparatively early retirement. It is unfair for a farmer who must get some capital for his retirement from his farm, to have to pay or have his son pay capital gains tax. If this government is in fact committed to preserving the family farm and is not merely paying lip service to a remote ideal, then it should eliminate the capital gains provisions completely on any farm transfers within a family unit.

The people of the west are not deceived, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) found out last October, by rhetoric and hyperbole. While they know that this bill is a step in the right direction, they also know it stems not from any real appreciation of our needs and desire to maintain the family farm in Canada. I conclude by repeating that this legislation is a baby step in the right direction, but further steps must be taken to remove the capital gains tax from the family farm unit.

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, to say that our tax system is unfair to those in the lower income bracket is to repeat the same old story over and over again. However, I will repeat it once more and say that our tax system has never afforded fair treatment to Canadians. We may increase a few benefits here and a few benefits there, but the over-all result remains the same. As long as the voters of this country are willing to accept these inequities in our tax system, the basic problems that exist in this system will not change.

Low-income groups continue to bear a disproportionate share of the tax load. They are also the unfortunate target of federal and provincial sales taxes which result in their paying a greater percentage of their income in the purchase of goods than those whose incomes are substantially higher. For them, tax relief is available when amendments to the Income Tax Act are brought in, such as the one we are debating tonight.

For the old age pensioners, the proposed increase in exemptions from $650 to $1,000 to all persons 65 years of age and over will undoubtedly give them some relief, temporary relief, that is supposed to enable them to cope with increases in food prices and other essentials. For students, the proposed deduction of $50 a month in computing the taxable income will be a welcome relief during a period when there is a loss of income which might otherwise have been earned. It will also no doubt be a welcome relief for those parents who have to bear the extra costs of education and other related expenses.
