However, as we look at the over-all picture we must not lose sight of the fact that these token gestures do not reflect drastic changes which are necessary if we are to achieve any measure of a just society. It is high time we began to use our budget as a long-term planning device rather than a mere short-term response to particular crises. We must make a choice as to what our goals should be. Are we to have economic growth? Are we to have price stability? Or are we to have income redistribution and the alleviation of poverty?

We will never really exercise such crucial choices so long as we continue to be obsessed with mere means and methods rather than long-run objectives. Every time there is talk of tax reform we hear loud voices of protest from those who fear they may be deprived of their familiar loopholes—their expenses, entertainment allowances, dividends, depletion allowances, capital gains and other artful tax shelters. These protests usually come from those who are well organized, highly visible and vocal and easily make their demands known through well financed lobbies and pressure groups. Such is not the case with those who are unorganized, undereducated and relatively powerless. They are used to expecting little and getting less.

In conclusion I can only say that I welcome the deductions in this bill. I welcome them because they are essential under the present system. I welcome them because there are those whose needs are such that these deductions will enable them to live just a little better.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to confine my remarks on Bill C-170 to the amendment dealing with the transfer of farm property by a farmer to his child. This really reinforces the comments made earlier by the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin (Mr. Olaussen) and the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis).

In the riding of Lambton-Kent we have a very impressive historical record of Century Farms, yet despite this living testimony of family farm units there has been a steady migration, in particular of our young people, from the rural communities to the urban centres because of the economic uncertainties of a future in agriculture. This fact, of course, has been well substantiated by Statistics Canada. The figures for 1971 reveal a drop of 24 per cent, in five years, of Canadians living on farms. Less than 7 per cent of Canadians now live on farms, compared with 10 per cent in 1966 and 12 per cent in 1961.

The declining number of farm residents coincides with a similar drop in the number of the nation's farms. In 1966 there were 430,522, and in the last year for which I was able to obtain statistics there were 366,128. In addition, there has been a decrease in the number of farmers who are living on their farms. In many instances they find it necessary to live and work in towns and cities to supplement their income so they can retain their farms.

I can assure the House that the agricultural community of Lambton-Kent is deep in tradition and proud of its farming heritage. When the initial legislation proposing the capital gains tax on the transfer of farmland was introduced, they were quick to realize that the gradual erosion of the family farm unit, which had been evident in the entire agricultural community, would not be greatly reduced. The farmers of Lambton-Kent are knowledgeable, capable of interpreting government action or, in the instance of that piece of legislation, government inaction in responding to their pleas. They realize this government has a paucity of ideas for an effective agricultural policy. Add to this the crippling capital gains tax on the transfer of family farms, and it is not difficult to realize why our farm community has lost confidence in the government. Indeed, farmers are entitled to ask if this government has an interest in Canada's primary industry, namely, agriculture.

I know this issue is of major concern to the entire farming community of Lambton-Kent and I know I speak for that entire community when I earnestly urge that amendments be made to the bill which is presently before the House. We welcome in principle the introduction of the provision which is in keeping with the position this party has clearly outlined in the past. Unfortunately, the provision, although a move in the right direction, is far too restrictive for sound farm planning and I am certain it is not too difficult for hon. members to visualize the innumerable awkward situations that can arise from such a restrictive provision.

I wish to remind hon. members that when the original legislation was introduced to the House, the Senate committee recognized that farmers occupy a special position in the society's economic structure. They realized that over the years this part of the economy has been subjected to pressures leading to changes in the nature and use of farmland. They realized that there was a continuing trend of dissolution of the family farm and they urged that measures should be taken to reverse it. They strongly recommended that land, together with any other capital property used by the individual in a farming activity, should be allowed to be transferred during the lifetime or on death to descendants without being subject to capital gains tax. I support that view and strongly recommend the proposal.

Another problem that frequently mitigates against sound farm planning, and on occasion has a deleterious effect on the family unit, is the inability of a farmer to sell his farm property to buy another farm which may be more socially or economically feasible in terms of the entire scope of his operation. I cannot see the logic of penalizing a farmer in this instance with a capital gains tax and would strongly urge the correction of this inequitable situation.

Another matter which I would like to bring to the attention of the government relates to the evaluation of land, or to land valuation. Mr. Speaker, I found it very disconcerting, on April 4, as recorded in Hansard at page 2968, when the following question was asked of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Hollands):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue concerning the land evaluation taking place in Canada for tax purposes. Would he inform the House whether the property owners whose properties have been appraised for tax purposes have been notified, and, if so, is there an appeal procedure to handle these evaluations?

The Minister of National Revenue replied as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the evaluations that are taking place are for the purpose of future reference. They do not necessarily have any status in law at this point. Valuations from any source can be considered. This information is being gathered to assist parties in the future determination of values.

I believe the significant part of that statement is that they do not necessarily have any status in law at this point. Surely there should be some direction as to whether or not valuations will actually be accepted at this time. Surely, sir, the government must have the ability to arrive at some formula. I am sure many formulas could be devised for land valuations.

The last point I would like to deal with, which I feel requires attention and correction by the government, is an allied problem which discriminates against many of our farmers with the existing Income Tax Act. I can best illustrate this by citing a specific example recently brought to my attention by a constituent. A farmer and his son had hoped to convey their farm properties to their own corporation. The Income Tax Act in its present form states that any gain on a deemed disposition or sale of a principal residence of a taxpayer, including the one acre, is not subject to tax under the act. In the event that the dwellings were included in the farm sale to their company, they would not receive this benefit.

However, if the father and son were able to sever the one-acre parcels from the farmland and retain them as their own private dwelling, they would not have been taxable under the act. But the municipal act authorizes townships to pass bylaws controlling the severance of property, and in this particular township, as well as in many townships in the province of Ontario, a bylaw exists to the effect that no area of less than ten acres can be severed from the farm property. In such cases, the township committee of adjustment refuses the one-acre applications since they contravene their township bylaw. In other areas where it is not necessary for the township to have such a bylaw, one acre of land properties can be severed and the remainder conveyed to farm corporations. Of course, this means that farm owners residing in those areas have a decided tax advantage over farm owners residing in areas which have a ten-acre by law.

This places the farmer in a most unfortunate situation. Under capital gains tax legislation there is no consideration for his dwelling, while on the other hand under the township bylaw he cannot have the house severed from the farm. To summarize, Sir, as the legislation presently exists there has been no consideration by the government to recognize the necessity of different severance bylaws in the townships, which are fundamental on their part to effective planning, and there is obvious discrimination to the farm community when adequate consideration has not been given to the formation of limited companies.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the amendment but I re-emphasize that it is far too restrictive for sound farm planning and I would urge that serious consideration be given to the proposals I have outlined. If the government is interested in preserving the family farm, surely it will be prepared to take action on these reasonable requests which come from the farming community.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I think I will follow the example of the two previous speakers and be as brief as possible, although I must give you due warning about an occupational habit of mine, that as a former university lecturer I tend to go for 50 minutes until the bell rings. But I will try to see if I can finish in five minutes.

Although there is very much to be said about this bill, there is one very small item which I want to talk to tonight. It is small but it does affect some people in this country, not a large number of people, rather intensely. I refer to section 81(1)(h) of the act, which since 1970 has received revision. In the old form of the act it was section 10(1)(h). Now it has moved to section 81(1)(h). I take some comfort in realizing it is possible for tax acts to be amended. Under the old form of the act, section 10(1)(h) used to read:

> compensation received under an employees or workmen's compensation act of Canada or a province in respect of an injury, disability or death,

This kind of compensation was to be included in amounts not included in computing income. It has been proven possible to change the act, because the present consolidated version in section 81(1)(h) reads this way:

> compensation received under an employees or workmen's compensation law of Canada or a province in respect of an injury, disability or death, except any such compensation received by a person as the employer or former employer of the person in respect of whose injury, disability or death the compensation was paid—

I want to speak in favour of looking at this part of the act a little further to see if it could be amended, because the kind of case I want to raise now, as I suggested a while ago, may not be numerous but it is rather harsh in its nature. I have received representations, as I am sure other hon. members have, from people who have been paid disability pensions in compensation for injuries received while they were working for units or entities which were not covered, strictly speaking, under the workmen's compensation acts of their respective provinces.

[Mr. Holmes.]

I can bring before the attention of the House one particular case, that of a Toronto firefighter who was injured in 1955, in fact injured seriously enough to be granted a rather significant disability pension. It turns out that this man has his pension taxed because, according to the law, his pension is paid under the Toronto fire department's superannuation and benefit fund. The pension was clearly granted for his disability; it is a disability pension. However, at the time he was working for the Toronto fire department the employees of that department were not included, by reason of provincial legislation—not by any choice of their own—under the workmen's compensation act. Still he has his disability pension. He and a number of others are paid out of the superannuation and benefit fund, but in this case it is clearly a disability pension.

Over the years this man has tried to have this pension included in that kind of income which is not considered for taxation purposes, just as workmen's compensation disability pensions are not included in income to be considered for taxation purposes. But, of course, his appeals and his attempts have proven unsuccessful, although he has met with an enormous amount of sympathy. He has gone to appeal boards of the income tax division and he has been told that they would recommend that the law be changed to allow him an exemption.

He has spoken to what he calls government lawyers who agree with him and say, "You are absolutely right; your disability pension should not be taxed." But the fact is that the law is quite clear; on the one hand it says a disability pension granted under a provincial law providing for workmen's compensation shall not be taxable, and on the other hand in other sections the law says that benefits paid under superannuation or retirement funds are taxable. The simple point of the matter is that although this man's disability pension is paid out of the retirement or superannuation fund, it is still, I repeat—and if I have to repeat it again, I will—a disability pension and should not be taxed.

I know it is very difficult to have the machinery of parliament grind fine enough to take care of the few cases of injustice of this kind. I cannot tell you, Mr. Speaker, how many cases there are across the country. I know of this man's case, and I know with regard to the Toronto firefighters that there are about a dozen such cases. We can guess that across the country a significant number of people are suffering under this injustice. But even if there were only one case it would be reason enough for parliament to take action now to correct this kind of injustice.

For a very brief time we will be considering amendments to the act. Since 1950 we have been able to add a grammatical clause to section 81(1)(h). The purpose of the clause—when we get to committee of the whole we can discuss it—is to define this kind of disability pension, even though it comes under a superannuation fund, as a disability pension and therefore remove it from taxation. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it will not take a lot of effort for us to do that. I could understand, if this bill were not before us now, that it would take a lot of effort to do so, and perhaps we could justify our inaction on the basis that we cannot steam up the vast machinery of parliament to take care of this single, simple case.

However, the bill is before us and I am sure there would be no difficulty at all in the minister proposing this kind of amendment. He has proposed all kinds of amendments to the act, and I am glad to see that a lot of work has been put into it. In the bill before us, clause 23 proposes quite a number of changes to section 80 of the act.

I appeal to the House and to the minister to take a few moments of our time to consider this question. I am sure most of us would agree that this man's case is extremely valid and his cause is just. We would like to bring about the kind of change which would finally bring justice to this kind of situation.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate. My remarks will be from the viewpoint of a farmer-rancher from western Canada. My main association with agriculture over the years has been in the production of beef cattle on the short-grass ranges of southeastern Alberta.

The provisions of the present tax structure with regard to family farm transfers were a most important issue in the last election. I do not think there was any topic that came up more often—perhaps not during meetings but at the back of the room over a cup of coffee—than this subject which most members from the rural areas are talking about tonight. It is most important to me.

The new proposals, in this regard, in Bill C-170 are of the utmost importance to agriculture. I refer, of course, to the tax deferral provision that will permit farmland to pass tax-free from one generation to the next within the family. At first glance, I suggest it would appear to be the complete answer to the criticisms of the existing tax set-up. However, it is really much too limiting in that the proposal only applies when the farm property is transferred by inheritance on the death of the father or mother. For sound estate planning, a farmer should not have to die in order to have his children take over legally and officially.

Let me give the House a typical example of a family farm transfer. This is a very real problem that is presently being discussed in a family in the Medicine Hat riding. It was brought to my attention a week ago when I was home for a visit. A 65-year old farmer and his two sons, aged 34 and 29, came to see me about turning the father's farmlands over to the two sons. Nine years ago the father had helped the eldest son get started on his own by backing the son's Farm Credit Corporation loan with some of the father's land as security. Five years ago the younger son got started on his own in the same way, with another FCC loan again backed by the father's land as security.

Now, at the age of 65, the father would like to retire and sell his land to his two sons. Because the Farm Credit Corporation's contracts with the two sons are not open-ended, they will not release the titles to the father's land and the proposed sale to the sons cannot be completed. In addition, the father had assumed he could turn over his farm at his cost to his sons without a tax and, of course, be able to enjoy his retirement—alive! In addition to the tax deferral provision, this situation also points out very clearly some of the inadequacies of the Farm Credit Corporation of the federal government.

We have all heard many times, and I am sure under many circumstances, of the so-called family farm problem. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that it is not so much a family farm problem as a "young farmer" problem. To me it is the most underestimated Canada-wide problem in agriculture today. It is no wonder our food costs are so high and are going higher. It is a case of fewer and fewer farmers on larger and larger farms that become more difficult to finance every time they change ownership.

The 1971 census shows that the average age of farmers in Canada was 49.1 years. This is an increase of 0.2 years in the five years since 1966. Less than 7 per cent of Canada's population are now farm residents. The number of farms in Canada declined 10.4 per cent between 1961 and 1966, and 17.2 per cent between 1966 and 1971. Young farmers, even with the best intentions, are having increasing problems in financing their own new farm, even from their parents. There is no stampede of investment capital into straight farmlands today. This is all the more reason why the Farm Credit Corporation and this capital gain deferral provision must be restructured to provide the incentives for young farmers to become established and allow their parents to retire at a reasonable age.

The new budget provision allowing livestock to be brought into inventory up to fair market value is a welcome provision. Once again, however, it does not go far enough in providing for a capital herd or the recognition in the tax law of the validity of treating breeding animals as a capital asset. In addition to these two suggested changes, three other tax items are suggested for inclusion in the approach to this new tax act. The capital gains roll-over provisions should also apply to what I term the family corporate farm as well as the provision for principal residence exemption. Five-year averaging for incorporated family farms should also be permitted.

The income tax definition of the term "farm" is much too broad. Surely it is time for a new definition that will more properly serve the more active and meaningful members in this industry. I have used the terminology "family corporate farm" in this debate. This type of farm administration has become necessary in order that a good many family farms can continue to operate as viable institutions.

I should like to bring these comments to a close by reminding the House what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said in the throne speech debate, as recorded at page 343 of Hansard. He called for suggestions from all hon. members as to "what they think the Farm Credit Corporation can and should be doing to help young farmers and farmers in general." I say to the minister that he might begin by giving the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the benefit of his experience and wisdom in matters relating to farm taxation and financing.

Taxation and Farm Credit Corporation policies must be redirected to give younger farmers a chance, so that they do not have to compete so openly against the more affluent farmer who is very often one or two generations older. We should all recognize that what the young farmer lacks in concrete collateral for loan purposes, he more than makes up for in youth, energy, ambition and much better education, and that these non-material, intangible items are his strength and, indeed, Canada's agricultural strength.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I take part in this debate, in view of some of the changes which have been proposed to this legislation. I am sure my colleagues realize that the whip does not spend all his time attending debates in this House, and therefore they will not mind my having a few words to say. I promise to be brief, which will be a change.

I am always amused to see that when we deal with income tax and the Income Tax Act is debated, we take up parliament's time with amendments, subamendments and amendments to those subamendments. Not long ago we saw the Carter commission report on taxation. After that we saw Mr. Benson, who has been sent to the Canadian Transport Commission to retire, introduce a bill that was 1,500 pages long, and almost too heavy for any Member of Parliament to carry, on the subject of income tax. He had to make some 200 amendments to that piece of legislation which he introduced.

Next we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) bringing in more legislation to change the amendments that were made previously to change the Income Tax Act as proposed by the previous minister. That legislation was forced through, by closure, in 1971. I suppose we shall see more amendments to that legislation. This reminds me of a story. It seems that the Income Tax Act and the amendments thereto go through as many stages as a cocoon goes through in changing into a butterfly. This evening we are dealing with more changes.

Having mentioned that the Minister of Finance is introducing changes, let me say that there are parts of the legislation relating to western agriculture that bear mentioning. The government, in talking about the great changes to be brought in has, as usual, taken that great position espoused by liberalism and has not gone the whole way but only half way. When proceeding with income tax changes in 1971, the government was told, in the form of amendments proposed by members of the NDP, that transfer of the family farm from one member of the family to another should be exempt from capital gains tax; those exemptions should apply across the board if the farm went from the father to the son, daughter, or another member of the family. The idea was that the farm should stay within the family and remain a family farm. That amendment was moved by the former member representing Regina East, Mr. John Burton.

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Knight: He will be back. The second amendment proposed was for retaining the concept of the basic herd. Again the government said no, it could not be done. I expect the mandarins of the Department of Finance who sat just in front of the Minister of Finance and conferred with him said, "No, we cannot make this kind of change." Then we saw a general election that brought an interesting result on October 30. Suddenly, this minority government decided that it could be more open-handed in a number of ways and, following the concepts of classical liberalism, it went half the way. We did not see the re-establishment of the concept of the basic herd—I see my hon. friend for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) is interested—we got half a loaf. Perhaps in one or two years further amendments will be introduced, because half a loaf creates complications.

Next we come to the capital gains tax. I listened with great enthusiasm to the Minister of Finance when he said that we had done away with the capital gains tax as it relates to the family farm. Members of the other side cheered, and some of us on my side even smiled. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) jumped up from his desk, ran over to the Minister of Finance and shook his hand as if salvation had come. They are still behaving that way over there, Mr. Speaker. That minister suggested the government's action would bring salvation for western producers and they would think he was a really great Minister of Agriculture.

Then we read the details of the proposals of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance and found that there is to be a very limited change in the provisions relating to capital gains. They will affect the family farm and are related to the time of death.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I said that on budget night.

Mr. Knight: That was a very limited change, in view of the proposal put forward by the former member for Regina East, one of my party. We will continue to press for further revisions in this respect. I suppose that we are seeing the old story re-enacted. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence), who wants a freeze on farm prices, will vote the same way as other members of the Tory party, who I suspect will vote the same way as the NDP will vote on the measures before us, namely, with the government. After all, half a loaf is better than no loaf. If he is here for a few more years or for as long as the member for Assiniboia, he will learn.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He is already in the deep freeze.

Mr. Knight: I am pleased to see further exemptions respecting old age pensioners. Some exemptions are to be increased to $1,000. I believe these will provide relief to those who are supporting young persons going to university, high school and institutions of higher learning. These further tax exemptions are welcome. I believe that $50 a month for expenses is to be allowed. I support and welcome that proposal.

Before going on with any more complimentary remarks, let me say that the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) made an excellent speech. I am not always that generous, let me add. In any event, he quoted from some of the speeches made by the Minister of Agriculture. I want to end on this note. So far as I recall, at no time did he bring out in those speeches what the minister's position was with respect to capital gains tax. He quoted from only a few of those speeches. If he had produced all the speeches the minister has made, he would have needed about five wheelbarrows.

If we in this House of Commons had as many changes to benefit the western producers and farm producers of this country, or if we had as many bills from this minister as we have had speeches, we would not be doing anything but dealing with farm legislation. Our farm legislation would be the best in this country. All we get from this minister is talk, talk, talk. We have had one lousy piece of legislation on crop insurance, and that was it. There have also been two changes with regard to the basic herd. The minister is very excited. He made two speeches in my constituency. No one will believe he is credible unless we see more than we have seen up to the present time.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief points. I agree with those who referred to small farms. The passage of an amendment to pass on a small farm at death is really an example of tokenism. Very few farms are in the hands of the original owners at death, unless they are unfortunate enough to die in their forties or fifties before their families mature. Farmers now wish to sell their farms at the age of retirement, 65 or soon thereafter. They expect to use the money to live at a higher standard than in the past. For a farmer 70 or 75 years of age to have a son willing to take over the farm is most unusual. I think this aspect of the tax bill can only be considered as a token gesture. As a previous speaker mentioned, it is only possible to postpone the payment of capital gains. With the increase in the rate of inflation, it is logical that most farmers would want to pay the capital gains when the farm is passed on so that in the future they will not have an enormous bill to pay.

I would now like to deal with some aspects of small business. In my province there is an estate tax. All businesses are valued by either the federal government, from the point of view from assessing capital gains, or by the provincial government for estate taxes either on the basis of seven times the profits or the net assets value, whichever is higher. This creates a great problem. There is a long series of negotiations while the tax accountants and tax lawyers attempt to reduce the assessment by the government.

The problem is that both governments assess the business as though it were a pile of cash in the bank, or on the desk, from which they can take their share. However, it is not a pile of money; it is a going concern. With the death of the chief of the business, it is under poor management for some time. The small business is not able to protect itself against the death of the owner. If the owner is getting on in years, the premiums are very high. Often he is uninsurable. Although the insurance may be used to pay the income tax or estate tax, it is not deductible as a business expense.

Take the example of what will happen in the future for a small business in a province such as Manitoba that has both an estate tax and a federal capital gains tax. A small business with a gross value of $500,000, not a large business by modern standards, would only employ about 10 to 12 persons. In then years' time, with inflation and some accrual, the business could be worth $1 million. If the owner suddenly died, the business would be faced with a very severe problem—how to pay the capital gains tax. Assuming the rate is 50 per cent, it would be $125,000. There would also be an estate tax of approximately $187,000. A company worth $1 million would be faced with a tax bill of over $300,000. The business management would be insecure and poorly oriented. Also, the management would be poorly trained. Even with six years to pay, there would be only one way to pay the $300,000 bill. That would be to sell it as fast as possible, take their money and find another job.

This did happen to a company in Manitoba, a successful, family-owned oil company. They could do nothing but sell out. It was sold to a company that would be considered foreign-owned. There was no other option available. This has reference to the foreign ownership bill which is now before the committee. This is a very tangible problem. It will become even worse as the capital gains tax matures. Unless the provinces with estate taxes, and the federal government, come to some agreement this problem will increase in the future.

I wish to say a few words about partnerships. I have been told that with the taxation system for partnerships, it is almost impossible to sell out. They are not particularly onerous or unfair but they are so complicated that this method of doing business will not be as successful as it was in the past. A partnership is one of the best ways of carrying on a business. With those few words, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, some members of our party would like to make a few remarks about the bill before the House, and I would like to call it ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The Chair is aware that it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Comtois: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance on a point of order.

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Speaker, I thought all parties had agreed to approve second reading before ten o'clock this evening. If some members of the Social Credit Party of Canada wish to speak, I am sure they will have a chance to do so tomorrow in the committee of the whole.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I called it ten o'clock; a number of my constituents are having tax problems, and I intend to speak on their behalf tomorrow.

Adjournment Debate

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RENEWAL OF NORAD AGREEMENT—OPPORTUNITY FOR DEBATE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on February 6 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether it was the intention of the government to permit a debate in this House, prior to May 12, of the entire question of the North American air defence agreement. I asked that question because on May 12 the present agreement is due for renewal, or termination. Before a decision of this magnitude is taken, I think the government should have the advantage of the advice of the House.

The Prime Minister's answer was to the effect that if the opposition parties really wanted to discuss the matter, they had opposition days available to them and should utilize one of those days for this discussion. I consider that to be a highly unsatisfactory answer. This is a matter of government policy and it is the responsibility of the government to bring its policies before the House for approval or denial.

My purpose in raising the question this evening is to secure an assurance from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) or his representative here tonight that prior to May 12, the day on which the NORAD agreement must be renewed in some form, or terminated, this House will have the occasion to debate the subject in order that the government may have the advantage of the advice of this chamber before making a decision of considerable importance to our nation.

The North American air defence command was established in the mid-1950s to counteract the threat of a manned bomber attack on the continental United States of America. I think it is time indeed to re-examine the whole premise upon which that alliance was based. In the opinion of most experts, the threat of a manned bomber attacked on continental North America is no longer extant. The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the major threat to North America in the event of war, now has other methods of conducting an attack on this continent. It has intercontinental ballistic missiles in hardened sites resistant to a first attack. It has nuclear submarines equipped with intermediate range ballistic missiles. The Soviet Union and the United States of America combined have the nuclear capacity to destroy this world twice over.

Given that kind of situation, it is extremely doubtful that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics would employ its long-range bomber force to attack North America in a first strike. It has 195 aircraft capable of attacking North America and returning to the Soviet Union, and those aircraft travel at under 600 miles an hour. That provides simply too much warning for them to risk a first strike situation. When these bombers start to move, the whole United States retaliatory system would be activated. It does not make any sense at all that they would employ their long-range bomber force in that manner.

[Mr. Godin.]

The second strike employment of long-range aircraft is doubtful because a United States first strike probably would render the Soviet bomber bases ineffective. In addition to that, when you consider the efficacy of NORAD in that kind of scenario, should the Soviet undertake the first strike NORAD bases would be among their first targets. So the whole notion of an agreement designed to counter a manned bomber attack as being effective or useful becomes very questionable.

In order to maintain NORAD we are now involved in discussions and possible vast expenditures on an airborne warning and control system known as AWACS, in addition to discussions in respect of the purchase of an improved manned interceptor known as IMI and discussions about the purchase of over-the-horizon backscatter radar, all of which technical schemes involve expenditures beyond belief. All of them are designed to counter a non-existent threat.

Given the fact that a manned bomber attack on North America is unlikely in the extreme, I wonder why this country should continue to associate itself with an alliance designed solely for the purpose of countering that non-existent threat. I am quite prepared to admit that in order to assert its sovereignty, this country must maintain the capability of surveillance and interception within its airspace, but that kind of capability does not necessarily involve a formal alliance with the United States.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the representation of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) for a debate on NORAD. I think he will appreciate that any expenditure made by any country in the western world is worth the price of freedom.

I should like to remind the hon. member at this point that the deputy commander-in-chief of NORAD, Lieutenant General R. J. Lane, appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on March 2, 1973, and addressed the committee on the history of NORAD, its missions and its forces and facilities. At the same time, Mr. Kirkwood, the assistant deputy minister of policy, spoke briefly to the committee on the nature of Canada's contribution to NORAD.

Tomorrow morning at 9.30 the minister was scheduled to address the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence exclusively on the subject of NORAD. In fact, I believe the hon. member has already received an advance copy of the statement that was to be made by the minister. It is regrettable that the committee meeting had to be postponed late this afternoon. I have been given to understand that several members of the committee are participating in the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group at a meeting in the United States later this week.

The House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence will be holding meetings shortly and the hon. member will be given an opportunity to express his views at that time, when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) will be present to answer any of his questions.

POST OFFICE—NEW POSTAL CODE—PROVISION OF PRINTED STICKERS TO PUBLIC

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the minister on the new arrival in his household.

I wish to speak on the matter of the postal code that soon will be used across this nation. There are some serious defects in this system and there is a question concerning exactly how successful the code will be. The introduction of a Canadian postal code and the proposed investment of $100 million for a mechanization program in the Canada Post Office are causing considerable waves in public opinion and the postal unions in particular. A much simpler coding system could have been adopted. The possible error factor is too high and will create confusion. Machine sorting will be done only for coded mail, and therefore hand sorting could not be eliminated. The desired rate of 50 per cent to 60 per cent coded mail will definitely not achieve a cost reduction, for the obvious reasons.

I do not agree with the objections of the postal unions that the proposed mechanization will reduce the labour force. The opposte is more likely. It is the investment of $100 million which should be the main concern. Once the equipment is installed, it has to be maintained. Repairs, occasional breakdowns and improvement of the sophisticated equipment will be an additional cost factor and also more reason to keep the old hand-sorting method alive. It will be no surprise if the present postal deficit of $77 million to $105 million per year doubles in the near future. As a result, the total deficit for the next decade could reach $1,500 million to $2,000 million. We will have to make unpopular decisions to cover the enormous money demand of the civil service, which in turn is influenced by so-called experts. The Canadian taxpayer will have to pay again for experiments, as he has so often in the past 20 years.

Since the Canada Post Office is on the road of no return with the introduction of the postal code, it would appear that a complimentary label system will be required. I have further information on the label system which I have presented to the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet).

It seems to be a fact that the rising prosperity of nations is leading to inflated costs of their services. One of the most affected is the postal service. While the West German postal deficit in 1970-71 was over $120 million, the Canadian postal service was operated in the past decade with close to a $600 million deficit, with $77 million for 1971-72. The mail sorting operations represent a key problem, also, for the slowly decreasing efficiency. Therefore, the Canadian postal service is in the process of introducing an area coding system with an investment of $70 million for mail sorting equipment.

The record shows that in Great Britain, where the coding system was introduced three years ago, only very few people use it. There is no doubt that the coding system, with its sophisticated equipment, depends solely on the participation of the public. In order to utilize the sorting equipment, the code system must be extensively used, otherwise it will create considerable confusion and will make the equipment obsolete. The label system is designed to solve this problem by creating many personal advantages for the participant so that he will be more inclined to use the code.

I have further comments in respect of the postal code. Postal codes as complicated as those pressed by the Post Office upon Canadian postal users were introduced in Britain more than two years ago. With the exception of a few firms, practically nobody uses them. They do not appear on the letterheads of reputable newspapers. A large number of private citizens are not even aware they exist. I asked friends in London for their postal code, hoping to speed up my mail. "What postal code?" was their astonished reply. This is in stark contrast to the use of zip codes in the United States or postal codes in most of continental Europe. Further, Britain and Canada seem to be the only countries in which the Post Office has been persevering in respect of fully automatic sorting.

All other industrialized countries, including the United States, have come to the conclusion that this is impractical since it would presuppose every letter writer knowing the complicated codes of all his or her correspondents. Most countries use a simple code of figures or letters denoting districts. This means that detailed sorting has to be done by hand. But British experience has shown that after five years a vast majority of people never use the complicated code, and sorting then has to be done by hand. The very expensive machinery thus lies idle. And there are not enough skilled sorters available and mail is subjected to endless delays.

Automation is not the answer to every problem; there are many occasions when human skill is both superior and faster. If the Post Office had invested all the money that has been poured into the sophisticated machinery in human relations, we might have had a faster service and perhaps even contented personnel.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there are serious doubts as to the success of the postal code. Over half a million dollars has been spent to advertise the code system but the question is: Will it do the job? I am sure the country will be most interested in the Postmaster General's comments.

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the hon. member and to assure him that both the mother and the son are doing well. Judging by the way my boy arrived on earth, crying, I would be surprised if very soon he were not in politics and in the House of Commons.

I would like to say first, in reply to the hon. member, that three minutes is very little time in which to answer all the questions that he has put tonight. The response to the code, based on the experience in the province where the code has been launched, has so far been excellent and it is continuing to be good. We hope to complete coding in Canada by the end of this year and then we will be able to cope with the problems in sorting the mail.

The reason this code uses letters and figures is that we want to have a code which would allow us to fulfil our requirements not only at present but for the 20 years ahead. The other reason we have such a code is that it is more precise. There is no doubt that this is a much better code than the one used in the United States or in Britain.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member when he referred to the label system. This is something that we could look at to see what could be done, although I would like to remind the hon. member that we will be writing every Canadian to give him his code and give him some labels that he could use to put on his telephone or to send to his friends. The response so far has shown that we are on the right track. We hope the public will understand that by using this code we will be able to provide them with a better service. We do not think this system will be unsuccessful. Quite the contrary, we feel that in the long term we will save money and we will give Canadians what they want, namely, a better postal service.

FISHERIES—LOBSTER FISHERY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REVIEW OF EFFECT OF OFFSHORE ON INSHORE FISHING

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, this evening I wish to raise in this brief period a subject which is of great interest and concern to lobster fishermen in the area of South Western Nova. That area has 2,500 or 3,000 men engaged in the lobster fishery. They have their organization, the Southwest Nova Scotia Lobstermen's Association, which had an undertaking from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the summer of 1971 that a study would be undertaken by the Department of Fisheries in order to determine what detrimental effect the fishing of lobsters in offshore areas might have on the inshore lobster fishery. I raised that question with the Prime Minister in the House a few weeks ago but had no answer from him; so I raise it again this evening.

The impact of an extensive fishery in the offshore area, being undertaken not only by our Canadian fishermen but by fishermen of foreign fleets, is of grave concern. It is understood that the Russians are taking lobsters in their drags, unhampered, and that the Japanese fleet is fishing precisely for lobsters, because they have developed some very sophisticated equipment to take lobster off George's Bank and the Grand Banks. They freeze them, carry them to St. Pierre and Miquelon, where they make use of warehouse facilities, and then the lobsters are transshipped to Japan. One question I would like to ask the minister is whether his department of the government of Canada is concerned with that trade, whether they have any way of determining what volume it is and thereby determining what value and what is the result to our fishing resources.

It is also a matter of concern that control over lobster fishing has not been brought under the ICNAF arrangements; accordingly there is no international way in which the fishing of lobsters offshore can be controlled. This is vitally important to a segment of the population in southwestern Nova Scotia and it is a question that it behoves the Department of Fisheries to investigate, just as the Prime Minister undertook that it would be investigated.

It seems to me that the Department of the Environment should determine the volume of lobsters being taken by foreign fleets in these areas and should investigate the fishing techniques being employed by these fleets. It also seems to me that the department must determine the volume and efficiency of the domestic offshore fishery and that a definite appraisal must be made of the relationship between offshore lobsters and inshore lobsters.

This is an industry that means some $20 million to the fishermen in my area. The fishermen's view is that the inshore stocks cannot possibly account for the replenishment that takes place from year to year, and that the volume of sprat to be found in our inshore areas could not be accounted for by mother lobsters in that area. They also say that lobsters are known to move many miles in a 12-month period; that inshore stocks can be exhausted in a 12-month period and are replaced by lobsters from some extraneous source.

I suggest it is incumbent on the minister and the department to make a definite determination of where the seed lobsters for the inshore areas come from. If it is not possible to determine absolutely that there is no connection with offshore lobsters, then it seems to me the only proper thing should be a presumption to be made by the department that there is in fact a connection and that inshore lobster stock should be protected by very careful control over the offshore fishery, whether it be international control or Canadian control.

I might add that to my knowledge fishery scientists so far indicate that they are doubtful of any connection between the two species of lobsters, the inshore and the offshore. But that is not a good enough answer for that industry. It is not a good enough answer for people who are interested in the future of a Canadian industry, who are interested in what has been a Canadian industry. It is not good enough for people who are interested in Canada exercising and taking the available resources which are within an area which has always been thought of as Canadian from a nationalistic point of view.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the hon. member arrived quite late and the representative of the government who was to answer his question had to leave the House.

In any event, I am very happy to tell him, on behalf of the government, that to my mind the problem is very important. I listened closely to the remarks of the hon. member and I can assure him that the Department of the Environment, which is also responsible for Canadian fisheries, is watching the situation very closely.

Personally, I am sure that all Canadians are very proud of the quality of the Canadian lobster; we want to preserve that extremely important industry. Not only is the lobster catch important to the fishermen themselves; it is also important to all Canadians and in particular to the government and the responsible department.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 6, 1973

The House met a 11 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER ON FIFTH ANNIVERSARY AS LEADER OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are some occasions of special significance and importance which are allowed to be noted in the House from time to time. Just a few days ago we all joined in sincere tribute to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) on the 33rd anniversary of his election to parliament. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have acclaimed Your Honour and others at relevant times.

Today is one of those relevant occasions for some of us in this chamber because it was exactly five years ago that the Liberal party selected for itself a new leader supremely fitted for the task of leading his political party—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walker: —and the country through the difficult and challenging days that lay ahead. Building on the solid base of an awakening Canadianism that had been generated by his immediate prime ministerial predecessors, Pierre Elliott Trudeau has worked every waking hour to forge a conscious Canadian identity and unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, some question his methods but none can challenge his motives or dedication to this task to which every political leader is committed.

In a spirit of political generosity I believe all hon. members would wish to join with us on this side of the House in wishing the Prime Minister good health, good spirits and good will in the task that every Prime Minister faces, the furthering of national unity in a Canada where every Canadian will be at home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to associate myself with the good wishes to the Prime Minister regarding his health.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I called across to him earlier, before I realized there was going to be speech-making in connection with this anniversary, that sometimes it is said about other institutions that the first five years are the hardest, and that may well be his wish.

Ordinarily one does not make very much of a third, fourth or fifth anniversary, but I can well understand the desire of my hon. friends opposite—of course I am not referring to the Prime Minister—to note this anniversary at this time because it may be their last opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, of course I join others in wishing the Prime Minister well and in congratulating him on five years of hard work. When I listened to the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) telling us that the Prime Minister worked every hour of the day for the last five years, it occurred to me that perhaps that was the reason for some of the things that have happened. Perhaps the Prime Minister ought to work less from now on. Mr. Speaker, we wish him well in his personal future.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for the warm welcome they extended to me this morning upon my return to the House. It is not my fifth anniversary but I join all my colleagues in wishing the right hon. Prime Minister good health, specially from the political point of view. I hope he will call an election on the double that we may try to act quickly and efficiently as legislators. I join the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the government members, the NDP members and my own colleagues in wishing the right hon. Prime Minister well, that he may continue to do his utmost for the well-being of the people, regardless of their political affiliations, and to act as a true Prime Minister of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in acknowledging the compliments I have received this morning, I should like to say to you that I appreciate the thought that anniversaries can really come up quite often in the House.

I wish to apologize to my colleagues for not having the ease of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when it comes to expressing thanks on the occasion of anniversaries. With the years, however, I trust I shall improve, and I thank my colleagues from all parties for their great kindness and confidence.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am not one, as you know, who is very enthusiastic about recalling or celebrating various anniversaries. I know that you have some question in your mind about how much time we should spend doing this. I have, as you know, in the past done my best to suppress some of my own anniversaries, and I hope you will not find me too guilty. Let me just say thank you very much to all hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Prime Minister

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Ottawa West rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Reilly: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair owes an explanation to the House. The hon. member for Ottawa West and the Chair had a discussion about a possible question of privilege. That is why I took the liberty to ask the hon. member whether or not he wished to proceed.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF TEMPORARY SUSPENSION OF CTC'S DECISION

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in allowing a debate this Monday on the March 30 decision of the Canadian Transport Commission you recognized the urgency and the importance of the question and you also recognized the essential role that the telephone plays in the day-to-day lives of all Canadians. This decision affects hundreds of thousands of citizens.

From its very inception in April 1969, my department recognized the social impact of telecommunications and undertook a series of studies under the heading of the Telecommission. The first report—Instant World—followed by the recently tabled green paper asked the question: "How can Canadians be assured of a reasonable variety of choice in the communications services available to them, and what must be done to ensure that at least basic communications services are available to all Canadians, wherever they may live at just and reasonable rates?"

The green paper proposed answers to these and other problems. And in recognition of the impact of telecommunications on the social, cultural and economic life of the country it made concrete suggestions for a new regulatory framework. I hope that these government proposals will, in the very near future, bring about a public discussion leading to a reform of the present regulatory structures so that these social and cultural considerations may be taken into account in future rate cases.

[English]

In the meantime, as I told the House last Monday, my department and the government are studying the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission on Bell Canada's application to increase its rates. At the time, I told the House that I would undertake to keep hon. members informed of the results as soon as possible. Even though the study is not complete, it has become apparent that there are some vital points surrounding the decision that need explanation and that the commission should be asked for clarification to that effect. The government has decided to suspend the decision pending clarification from the commission and completion of the review.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I welcome the minister's statement. However, I feel that the explanation for this decision is highly irrelevant. Both in the House and in the transport committee we have expressed our concern about the effect of the decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission granting Bell Canada and CN-CP Telecommunications rate increases. This is precisely why our members on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications moved for the tabling of all documents, reports, studies and papers relating to the Canadian Transport Commission decision, notwithstanding the reluctance of the president of the commission. This also is precisely why we moved for a 90-day postponement of the implementation of these increased rates in the transport committee yesterday.

We have been particularly concerned about the way in which the commission reached its decision under the guidance of Edgar Benson, whose financial competence is well known to the House.

An hon. Member: Incompetence.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, incompetence. The CTC has been given the authority to decide on matters affecting all Canadians' personal lives. The government has frequently chosen to ignore the fact that it does have power to intervene under the provisions of the National Transportation Act. We suggest that if the government does not choose to take the responsibility as representatives of the Canadian people in these matters, then the Canadian people themselves should be allowed to participate in the decision-making of the Canadian Transport Commission.

At present the procedure is heavily weighted in favour of the applicants. I believe that ways and means must be found to redress this balance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I believe that the government should seriously consider allowing greater public participation at CTC hearings, especially when they are particularly relevant to the Canadian consumer. The evidence from recent CTC decisions concerning Bell Canada, CN-CP Telecommunications, and freight rate increases shows that the consumer is bearing a heavy load of inflation. This latest decision has created a question mark in the minds of many Canadians as to the credibility of the CTC in upholding the public interest under the National Transportation Act.

The government's reason, stated by the minister, for delaying implementation of the increases, is the need for integration into a telecommunications policy. This is beside the point. What is at stake and at issue is the government's failure to curb inflation and the commission's failure to act in a way which satisfies the public and ensures that the public interest is being upheld. Surely at this point the time has come when the government, as an absolute minimum, must outline price guidelines, at least for those sectors directly controlled by the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues in welcoming the minister's statement, and I do so with pleasure. The decision taken by the government precisely coincides with the suggestion I made in my motion of last Monday, and I congratulate the government wholeheartedly on the decision which the minister has just announced.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this is merely the first step toward the eventual rescinding of the unjustified and unconscionable acceptance by the Canadian Transport Commission of the application of Bell Canada. There have been many instances in the last while indicating that the way in which the commission functions, the way in which it has organized itself, makes it, judging from the results, impossible for that commission really to represent the interest of the Canadian people. In every case they are bamboozled by the kind of bookkeeping that the large corporations do into accepting the arguments that the corporations present to them.

• (1120)

It is my conviction, Mr. Speaker, that Bell Canada is fudging its real profits. Like other such large conglomerates, it simply is not telling the Canadian Transport Commission, the people of Canada and the government the truth about its profits. It is time the people of Canada, the CTC and the government made that giant corporation tell the truth about its profits and stop gouging the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Bell Canada will not tell the commission what retained earnings there are in its many affiliates. I understand from my colleagues who are members of the standing committee that Mr. Benson, the chairman of the commission, said yesterday afternoon or evening that the commission is not permitted or does not think it has the right to look into the earnings of the affiliates of Bell Canada. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that is a silly situation which is against the interests of the people of Canada. Bell Canada has a fully owned subsidiary like Northern Electric and we ought to know what the relationships are between Bell and Northern, what they cook up between them at the expense of the people of Canada. For the CTC to say it does not have the authority to look into that is to me an abrogation of its elementary duties.

Furthermore, I indicated in a letter I wrote to the minister yesterday that if you take the retained earnings of Northern Electric into the profits of Bell, as one should, then you have $8 million last year and probably $10 million this year, and if you were to make Bell add to its profits what it should add, namely, the $60 billion or $70 billion in deferred taxes which it may never pay, the actual rate of return would be 1 or 2 per cent more than it was.

I congratulate the minister and the government for having taken this step. I appeal to the government to follow it up by rescinding the decision of the CTC, all the time remembering that there is another application before the commission demanding even larger increases than the ones which the commission has so far studied. As far as my colleagues and I are concerned, we will simply not tolerate any further enlargement of the powers and wealth of Bell Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Bell Canada application for an increase in rates seems to be into a purely political issue.

I have just heard the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) state that Bell Canada refuses to reveal its profits, to indicate how much money is coming in, how much is going out, that the company is deceiving the people etc.

Bell Canada is a big corporation, everyone knows that. We have in Canada what we call antitrust legislation. Those acts apply to Bell Canada as well as any other big corporation.

Bell Canada filed its application with the Canadian Transport Commission to satisfy its shareholders who, as far as they are concerned, want a return on their investment because if their investments in Bell Canada are not profitable, these shareholders will sell them, and invest their money elsewhere.

That is not the only point, Mr. Speaker. They are calling for increases of 5 to 7 per cent. Well, that is shocking, according to those who want to play politics with private corporations throughout Canada. No consideration is given to the quality of services supplied by Bell Canada or other private corporations.

I have made close comparisons with what I have seen throughout the world. When I was in Moscow, and I mention this for the information of the hon. member for York-South (Mr. Lewis), it took me 29 hours to put a call through from Moscow to Ottawa.

You had to go through not private companies, but officials who are like the hon. member for York South.

I am not going to be hypocritical; I am not going to mince my words to tell the hon. member what I think. Just wait and see.

Mr. Speaker, I am just back from Jamaica; I stayed at Ochos Rios just 75 miles from Montego Bay where the telephone service is provided by a subsidiary of Bell Canada. I called Ottawa and it took me exactly three minutes to get my party. Now, this is a private enterprise, and the hon. member cannot appreciate the services supplied by private enterprise. He is always ready to knock it in an effort to turn the people against it but when the time comes to pay for the services, he is reluctant to do so.

Mr. Speaker, what is worse still, is the fact that Quebec Hydro has just increased its electrical rates. And that company is indeed a government agency. Have members of the New Democratic Party been heard protesting against tariff increases by Hydro-Quebec, the Ontario Hydro or the Manitoba Hydro? No. That is right, that is logical and understandable. If private enterprise says: We are prepared to improve our service, there are protests. And yet the hon. member for York South will agree that Bell Canada provides the best telephone service not just in this country but in the whole world.

Mr. Speaker, did the hon. member for York South protest when the salaries of members of parliament were raised from $18,000 to $26,000? No.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Never! He voted for it, just like the others.

From what they say, Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats would have us crush, mutilate and stamp out private enterprise. That is just what would be needed for socialism to develop and make an impact.

Mr. Lewis: That is your opinion, but I—

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes and it is exactly in line with what the hon. member for York South was saying just now.

But I said at the start that there are laws against monopolies and trusts. If Bell Canada, or any other company, is shamelessly exploiting the population, or trying to, there are laws to prevent it.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), for example, states, and I quote:

> The government has decided to suspend the decision pending clarification from the commission and completion of the review.

Now, the Canadian Transport Commission has heard Bell Canada's request, and has studied it. And so I find it hard to understand the government now "playing at politics", falling into the socialist trap to obstruct initiative and prevent private property developing in Canada, while promising the people better service.

[English]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It relates to the announcement of the suspension by the cabinet of the Bell Canada rate increases. My question of privilege is that this is a discriminatory act on the part of the government, because that self-same government permitted Northland Shipping (1962) Company Limited, which is in a monopoly position, to impose a 7 per cent freight rate increase for its services on the north coast of British Columbia. It approved that, and I simply ask it to be fair. How about suspending the Northland Shipping freight rate increase as well?

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Speaker: Of course, that is not a question of privilege. I hope the hon. member would not expect the Chair to make a ruling in any event.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

COST OF LIVING INCREASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of the utmost urgency concerning the continual staggering increases in the cost of living. Food and shelter costs have risen .4 per cent in the past month and 11.3 per cent and 6.8 per cent respectively in the past year. The impact of the sharp rise in food costs affects all Canadians, but in particular those living on low and fixed incomes who are finding it increasingly impossible to afford a nutritionally adequate diet. In light of the seriousness of this matter, Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

• (1130)

> That, given the continual rise in the cost of living and the consensus now existing in the country, the government immediately implement a freeze on wages and prices and act during this time to formulate long-term policies to halt or alleviate these disastrous increases in the cost of living.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: —will agree to this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House for unanimous consent to introduce a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact figures released today show that the food price index rose 11 per cent in the past 12 months, and in view of the fact that consumer groups, including Women Against Soaring Prices, have repeatedly called for a price review board, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

> That this House instructs the government to introduce immediate legislation to implement the recommendation of the committee on food prices to establish a prices review board with all the powers necessary to deal with food costs, including the power, where necessary, to order a rollback in prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion which requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

DETAILED STUDY OF ABORTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise to move a motion dealing with a matter of prime concern and national emergency.

In view of the growing opposition from the Canadian people to the liberalization of abortion and the lack of precision of the act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs be instructed by this House to consider the whole question of abortion and report to parliament before the end of this session.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is none, and therefore, the motion cannot be put.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been a lot of controversy over the past couple of months regarding the use of Standing Order 43. Motions have been moved under this standing order today and in the past six or eight weeks that were designed to have the House express itself as the parliament of Canada on very legitimate issues. Many of these motions have been moved with no partisan intention.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: There has not been unanimous consent because of opposition from five or ten members. We have a situation where the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) has been designated to oppose such motions that are brought before the House. I have kept a record of what has gone on in the past couple of months. As a result of the action of one government member there is no opportunity for members of this House to utilize Standing Order 43, effectively.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Increase in Shelter Costs

Mr. Lundrigan: I respectfully request, Mr. Speaker, that the matter of the use of Standing Order 43 be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and that some direction be given to the chairman of that committee to deal with this matter. Instead of having the matter drawn out for six or eight weeks or several months, as has happened with the subject of the question period which I understand has not yet come before the committee, direction should be given to that committee to report on the subject within a matter of weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Was that a motion under Standing Order 43?

Mr. Lundrigan: I would like to move that as a motion but it would take a moment for me to draft it.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN SHELTER COSTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. This motion arises from the fact that shelter costs, as announced today, are up 6.8 per cent over a year ago and the related fact that only 20 per cent of the government's proposed spending on housing for 1973 is devoted to low income categories, with only $2 million allocated for co-ops in spite of the fact that the Co-op Housing Foundation of Canada has estimated the need for co-op spending this year to be $30 million. Given the obvious need for a much greater allocation of funds to low income housing and specifically to meet the anticipated demand of the co-ops—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to all hon. members that there are sufficient difficulties relating to the application of Standing Order 43, some of them being those referred to by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, that we might at least try to follow the practice established in recent years that hon. members limit themselves to indicating what the motion would be without arguing in support of it. I invite the hon. member to indicate what the motion would be on which he would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Broadbent: I will do so, Mr. Speaker. However, I would like to add that I have taken no more time than others who have moved motions under this Standing Order today. I will come directly to this important motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this House instructs the three ministers responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation capital budget, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and the President of the Treasury Board, to appear next week before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to explain why more money is not being allocated to this important area of social need.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. This motion also requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

OLD AGE PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 with a motion which I dare to hope the House will accept. Now that Royal Assent has been given to Bill C-147, the new $100 basic rate of the old age security pension is in effect. However, in view of rising prices there is urgent and pressing necessity that something further be done during this session to improve the position of our senior citizens. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House indicates to the government that it would welcome, during this session, a further bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, the purpose of which would be to provide an additional increase in the basic amount of the pension paid thereunder and to lower the eligible age.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX INCREASE—POSSIBILITY OF PRICE FREEZE OR OTHER MEASURES TO COMBAT INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the figures released today showing a continuing increase in the consumer price index. Is the government now prepared to adopt a comprehensive approach and attack on inflation in Canada, such as our recommendation of a price freeze, in view of the continued increase and the evident failure of the budgetary measures to halt this increase and in view of the growing expectation of a continuing high rate of inflation this year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the hon. gentleman is adding to that expectation. However, I say to him that the basis of the rise again this month is primarily food. It is true that the rise in food prices is disturbing to the House and to every Canadian. As I said earlier, it is primarily a supply problem. It is primarily a reflection of world commodity prices in grains, meat, sugar, coffee and so on. The hon. gentleman referred to the budgetary measures. Looking over the index I note that, except for food, the rise was less than the average in recent years, largely attributable to the removal of the sales tax on children's clothing and children's footwear.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I do not intend to refrain from making suggestions or discussing public problems because of threats from the Minister of Finance or anyone else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX INCREASE—MONITORING DEVICES TO ASSURE TARIFF CUTS AND SALES TAX REDUCTIONS PASSED ON IN LOWER PRICES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs what monitoring devices of a concrete nature have been established to assure that the tariff cuts and sales tax reductions that were made have in fact been translated into lower prices?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As I said in the House earlier, we are working on methods for doing this and will be reporting to the House shortly about these methods.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether one of the measures he is taking to ensure that such tariff cuts, etc., will be translated into lower prices was the increase in corporation taxes which he put into effect on January 1 for all corporations, all lines of business, in this country except manufacturing and processing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The government is, through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of National Revenue, in the process of monitoring the effects of the sales tax removal and other commodity tax cuts contained in the budget.

An hon. Member: Another study?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, it is in operation.

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a temporary freeze lasting 60 or 90 days, as suggested by some members of the House, could not possibly do any good for the consumer since it would store up a likely larger increase in the cost of living at the end of that period, I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving favourable consideration to implementing the recommendation of the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices that an effective prices review board be established?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did discuss this matter, and we are very impressed by the serious nature of the work done by the committee. I hope we shall be in a position to make an announcement on our attitude toward its report in the not too distant future.

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—SUGGESTED QUARTERLY ADJUSTMENT OF PENSIONS AND SUPPLEMENTARY PAYMENTS TO WELFARE RECIPIENTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary to the Minister of Finance in the hope that he will consider very carefully a suggestion which has probably been made to him by many others. In view of the fact that an increase in the cost of food in particular continues to take place regularly every month and is likely to continue for some time, will the minister give serious consideration to adjusting the old age pension and similar payments quarterly in accordance with the rise in the cost of living, rather than annually, and also give serious consideration to providing funds for supplementing the incomes of welfare and similar recipients in order that they and their families may be able to enjoy a better diet?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that part of the philosophy of the May and February budgets was to protect Canadians on fixed incomes, particularly those whose earning days are over, from rising prices. It is my view that we certainly would not fight inflation on the backs of the senior citizens of this country. I will take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration.

INCREASED FOOD AND SHELTER COSTS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT CALLING FOR HOLDING THE LINE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In the light of the staggering increases in the cost of food and shelter, and in the absence of positive government action, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he, as the leader of this country, in the interests of the poor and those living on fixed incomes, is prepared to make a statement calling upon the food industry and all other segments of the economy to hold the line, or the government will be forced to take action?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. gentleman for suggesting a policy to the government.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that a special committee of the House was set up to look into this problem, and in view of the failure of the country to respond to the request of the Minister of Finance in his budget statement of February 19, may I ask the Prime Minister, because the question is urgent, whether he will issue a call to the country to hold the line against these staggering increases in the cost of shelter and food which are having such a disastrous effect on the poor and those living on fixed incomes?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member credits any Prime Minister with a great deal of strength if he thinks that by making such a call he will obtain automatically the result he suggests. The House will recall that four years ago we did hold a series of conferences with industry, the provincial governments and business in which we indicated the importance of fighting inflation. I do not believe we received much support from the hon. member and his colleagues at that time.

FINANCE

BORROWING BY QUEBEC IN UNITED STATES—INQUIRY WHETHER LOAN SOUGHT FROM BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance regarding the $125 million loan just taken out by the government of Quebec on the U.S. money markets.

Does the minister know if the province of Quebec has asked the Bank of Canada for this $125 million loan?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I doubt that very much, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY RESPECTING STATEMENT BY BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA VICE-PRESIDENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

The vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia just stated that if banks were authorized to include treasury bonds and short term provincial bonds in their statutory reserves, this would lower interest rates. I would like to ask the minister if he intends to take into serious consideration the suggestion made by the vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia who is asking, on behalf of the chartered banks, the right to include provincial government bonds in their statutory reserves.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): As the vice-president is backed up by the leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, I shall take this matter into very serious consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

If the vice-president supports me, does the Minister of Finance expect that the president of the bank will support him in that same field?

PRICE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT CONTINGENCY PLAN—LEVEL OF RISE NECESSARY TO JUSTIFY IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My question is for the Prime Minister. Some time ago the Prime Minister indicated the government would be willing to put into operation its contingency plan, which he told us has been in existence for some time, when the cost of living had reached a stage at which it seriously affected our export position and the unprotected sector of the Canadian earning community. Can he tell the House whether the cost of living has now increased to the extent that this plan will be used? If not, to what extent must the cost of living rise before the government makes such a move?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is asking for a statement of our policy on this matter. Such a statement has repeatedly been made by the Minister of Finance and by myself. When we have further announcements to make, we shall let the House know before anyone else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize that a number of members are seeking the floor to pose supplementary questions on this important matter, but perhaps we might try to have two, three or four questions on other subjects following the supplementary question of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

I might also say that I am not sure we completed the first round of questioning. I was not able to determine whether the hon. member for York South was asking supplementaries. He called his first question a supplementary but it was perhaps more a related question than a supplementary. In fairness I think I should recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a supplementary question at this time.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister a very straightforward question. In view of the fact he has rejected the suggestions by our party, by the hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for York South, can he tell the House whether the government is willing to take any action at all toward controlling or influencing the direction of the cost of living, and will he announce to the House right now whether the government has any such plans or whether it is prepared to announce such plans, or does it intend to do nothing about this problem?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my question is on housing and I direct it to the Minister of State for—

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, but the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a point of order.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might repeat my question as the Prime Minister obviously did not hear it, and I am sure he would certainly want to answer it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member asked his question clearly. Obviously there was quiet in the House and I am sure all hon. members heard the question. The hon. member will appreciate, I am sure, that while he has the right to ask a question he cannot insist on an answer. That is why the Chair recognized the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is fine for the Prime Minister to sit and sulk, but there are 22 million Canadians across this country who want to know the answers to some of these questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should resume his seat. He has raised a point of order that is not a point of order. He suggests that the right hon. Prime Minister should reply to his question, but he knows very well that he cannot insist on that.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I want to know from the Prime Minister if he refuses to answer questions by hon. members in this House—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Lundrigan: If the Prime Minister is refusing to answer questions of members of this House, it would at least be an answer if he would get up in the House and say so. But I respectfully submit that for the leader of this country to sit and sulk—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: —and refuse to get up and answer a question—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lundrigan: —which was not in any way a partisan question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I have made my ruling on the point raised by the hon. member. He is unhappy or concerned about the fact that he did not get a reply to his question. That is his right. But again the rules are clear that an hon. member cannot insist on a reply to a question. I suggest to hon. members that we could spend the whole of the question period arguing whether or not the question should be replied to, but that would not be very helpful. I doubt whether the hon. member would achieve very much except to register his protest, which he has already done.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Many members on this side of the House have been chastised legitimately, I respectfully say, for a lack of discipline or because of the inability of members like myself to verbalize their questions. But I respectfully suggest to Your Honour that if members of the cabinet sitting across the way are not prepared to co-operate with members of the House by answering questions and giving evidence that it is the responsibility of members on this side to seek in trying to hold the government accountable, then we have lost the last bit of control we have. The only control the Canadian people have left is that exercised by the opposition during the question period. We have lost control in committees and we have lost control in respect of supply.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lundrigan: The only control we have in respect of holding the government accountable is the question period.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lundrigan: Members of the government are not being responsible when they sit sulking and refuse to answer questions by hon. members on this side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the third time I call the hon. member to order. I recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

HOUSING

SHELTER COST INCREASE—REQUEST THAT MORE FUNDS BE ALLOCATED TO LOW-INCOME HOUSING—REALLOCATION TO CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, before I ask my serious question, may I suggest—

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: Ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the hon. member's willingness to assist the Chair by making suggestions, but perhaps he could assist the Chair even more effectively by asking his question at this time.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I was going to propose a 90-day freeze on questions of privilege but I will not do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and relates to the increase of 6.8 per cent announced today in the cost of shelter in Canada. In view of this fact and the related fact that only 20 per cent of CMHC's capital budget is intended for low-income housing, will the minister consult in the next few days with the other two ministers responsible for that budget to see if there can be a significant increase in the allocation of money for low-income housing?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's support for low-income housing, but there must be some error in his figures. The capital commitment budget for 1973 for CMHC is 20 per cent over what it was last year, and over 80 per cent of the units we are building or financing this year will be in the category of low-income housing. in view of the hon. members' earlier intervention, and I know he is concerned about the level of expenditure in respect of co-operative and other forms of low-income housing, I will certainly give him an undertaking to meet the requests of the co-operative movement in respect of lending under the CMHC program.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the $2 million the minister has allocated for co-op housing which, on his own admission last night, would account for the construction of only about 100 units or one co-operative building, and in view of the fact the co-op societies in Canada have estimated their needs for this year to be $30 million in anticipated demand, will he assure the House now that he will reallocate sums to meet that anticipated demand of some $30 million?

Mr. Basford: I have grave doubts, Mr. Speaker, that the co-operative movement will be able to make loan applications to the extent of $30 million for the year 1973. Should they do so within the provisions of the act, I am quite sure I can reallocate money from somewhere to meet that request for $30 million.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a last supplementary question, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and then the hon. member for Calgary North.

REQUEST THAT BANK ACT BE AMENDED TO COMPEL BANKS TO SET ASIDE PORTION OF INVESTMENTS FOR HOUSING AT SIX PER CENT INTEREST

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the income of the average borrower under the National Housing Act is well above the average family income in Canada, will the minister take action by changing the Bank Act to make it mandatory that the banks of Canada set aside on an annual basis a certain percentage of their total investment for housing at an interest rate not exceeding 6 per cent?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the legislation introduced by my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, will go a long way toward meeting that particular problem.

PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST THAT FREEZE BE IMPOSED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to consumer price increases. My question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his comment a few moments ago that he and the government are considering the establishment of a food prices review board, in view of the fact that the staggering consumer price index increase revealed today covers all items and not just food, and bearing in mind the possibly unfortunate results of his remarks today, will he indicate to the House now, following the precedent of the freeze just put on Bell Canada rates, that the government will impose today a freeze on all incomes, costs and prices?

INCREASE IN SHELTER PRICES—REQUEST FOR TEMPORARY FREEZE TO HELP THOSE ON LOW AND FIXED INCOMES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the answer the Prime Minister has just given I should like to zero in on one subject that is very important and in respect of which I think there is a national crisis. Will he now accept that there is a national shelter crisis in Canada in light of the fact that last year the increase was a big 5.9 per cent and there was a further increase last month, and is he prepared to use the crisis theory under our constitution and bring in at least a temporary freeze on shelter costs, namely, the cost of construction and the cost of land, to help particularly those people on low and fixed incomes at this time? I suggest there is a crisis and that the people are looking for some action.

• (1200)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, you will realize that these are very far-reaching suggestions that I am receiving from various hon. members opposite. I can do no more at this time than thank them very deeply for their assistance in studying this very serious problem. I hope they will not expect me to answer to shooting from the hip such worth-while and far-reaching suggestions. We will consider them.

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS TO LOWER COST OF SHELTER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. This is the thousandth time it has been asked and it is still important. Would he now consider the repeal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials because the price of some building materials has risen by as much as 100 per cent, which means that the tax today, if it is related to when it was implemented, is really 22 per cent and not 11 per cent?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked the question. Perhaps the latter part was an argument in support of his question.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is still no, and I find my view supported by the newly elected president of the Lumber Association of Ontario who does not feel that the removal of the sales tax will have the effect the hon. member seeks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is debate between the hon. member and the minister. The hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It is pursuant to a statement made by the hon. member for Edmonton West yesterday in his speech, as recorded at page 3005 of Hansard, in which he stated that taxpayers entitled to reimbursements will have to wait until June or July in order to obtain their refunds. Will the minister tell us when these reimbursements will be made?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West is quite incorrect. We are processing these returns as they come in and refunds, dependent on the current budget bills, will go out within two weeks after these very welcome measures of Liberal tax relief become law.

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST THAT MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE BE PROCEEDED WITH

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to one asked before. I would like to direct it to the President of the Privy Council. In light of the fact, indicated by the Prime Minister's answers, that the government has abdicated its responsibility either through fear or ineptitude, will the government House leader be prepared to consult with the other House leaders in order to permit the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, plus such amendments as may be moved to it, to be brought forward soon and brought to a vote so that the House may have an opportunity to fill the vacuum left by the government's inaction?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may reply to the question, but the hon. member for Peace River, I am sure, will be the first to recognize that the question is not asked in procedurally correct terms.

FOOD PRICE INCREASES—SUGGESTED SUBSIDIES TO FARMERS AND ON IMPORTS TO CONTROL COST

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the recent cost of living increase announced today is to such a large extent caused by the increase in the cost of food, will the minister and the government give consideration to the advisability of government subsidies on food prices both for the farmer producing food in Canada and on the large amounts of food imported into Canada on which no controls could have any effect?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the procedure that the government has adopted, of course, is to meet the problem the hon. member brings up by increasing the disposable income of Canadians by tax reductions and by eliminating one of the cost factors of food by taking off the sales tax on every item of food and drink except alcohol.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the organization of the food industry is such that distributors, wholesalers and retailers work on percentage mark-ups when the cost of the product at the farm level goes up the percentage goes up, would the government give serious consideration to a system of food subsidies which would eliminate increases of this kind?

Mr. Speaker: That also is a representation.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CHANGE IN CALCULATION OF CONSUMER, INDUSTRIAL SELLING AND WHOLESALE PRICE INDICES WITHOUT PUBLICATION OF DETAILS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is further to a question I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I notice he is not in the House. Perhaps his parliamentary secretary could answer for him. I have given written notice of the question. Recently I asked the minister a question regarding possible changes in the basis and procedures for calculating the consumer price index, the industrial selling price index and the general wholesale price index. I ask the minister now whether he will assure the House that no changes whatsoever will be permitted in the bases of these indices without publicly specifying the nature and details of the changes involved and simultaneously publishing the previously used bases and figures for a period of one year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister I will be glad to take notice of the question and have my colleague answer it on his return to the House.

REQUEST THAT FARM LAND EVALUATIONS FOR CAPITAL GAINS BE MADE AVAILABLE TO FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Would the minister make available to farmers the evaluation assessments made by departmental appraisers or by those working on behalf of the minister?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps what the hon. member is referring to is not what he and others have been calling valuations but rather information being gathered for a real estate data bank which will assist taxpayers and the department in arriving at valuations on disposition of property. The kind of information that is being gathered, for instance, is the address, the legal description, the sale price, terms of sale, the municipal assessment, the dimension of the land and buildings and the income and expenses at the time of sale where relevant. So, obviously this is mostly available to the buyer and most of it actually comes from public records and observation.

APPRAISALS FOR CAPITAL GAINS TAX—POSSIBILITY OF VERIFICATION BY DISTRICT TAXATION OFFICES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary I should like to direct to the Minister of National Revenue. In light of the fact many Canadians have already paid for appraisals to help them determine valuation-day values of their assets, particularly real estate, and many other Canadians are wondering whether or not to do so because of the capital gains tax provisions, will the minister undertake to provide some forum, possibly through the district taxation offices, so that these Canadians can have their appraisals officially verified or otherwise?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that is not possible within the resources available to the department. I think the hon. member would not want such a proliferation of bureaucracy that would permit it. It is not possible to do that for farms any more than for any other assets that might be subject to capital gains tax. The valuation has to be made at the time of disposition, and we will help all we can through the real estate data bank to make sure that information will be available so that fair valuations can be made at that time.

POLICE AND SECURITY PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP—POSSIBLE ENLARGEMENT OF SCOPE AND ROLE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Are the role and scope of responsibility of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group the same today as they were when established by the government as the security planning and research group and, if not, on what date and under what authority was the decision taken to enlarge the role and scope of operations of this group?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression this is a question that might well be placed on the order paper. Indeed, there are questions closely resembling that asked by the hon. member already on the order paper. Unless there is some urgency or some other aspect to the question—perhaps the hon. member would rephrase the question.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I think I am asking a very serious question which has tremendous import to this nation and I should like to point out why.

On September 21, 1971, this House was made aware of the scope and responsibility of an organization known as the security and research planning group. On April 4, 1973, another Solicitor General, in answer to a starred question, made certain information available to the hon. member for Leeds indicating the scope and responsibility of a new organization known as the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group.

My question is put in all seriousness to the Prime Minister, and it is a very important question which I think has a great deal of urgency. I want to know—and I believe parliament should have the right to know—when the scope and responsibility of this organization changed, if they have changed, on what basis the changes were made, and what reasons led the government to enlarge the scope as outlined in the answer to the question of the hon. member for Leeds on April 4, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may be right but if, every time the Chair makes a ruling that a question might be put on the order paper, there is a question of privilege or a point of order or an argument raised whether or not the Chair is wrong in its judgment, hon. members can see where that would lead. I am sure I must be wrong very often, so there would be a debate in many instances. The Standing Order does provide a remedy for hon. members in that the matter can always be brought forward at the time of adjournment. At the same time, we have some minutes left before the end of the question period and if one of the ministers would like to reply quickly to the hon. member's question I have no objection.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with you that your ruling had nothing to do with the importance of the question asked. I realize its importance. It is probably also urgent in the eyes of the hon. member. But I think that the suggestion Your Honour made of putting the question on the order paper is the best way of getting the answer from me. I would have to ascertain from the Solicitor General if there have been any changes, in depth or otherwise, in the set-up. To my knowledge, none have been made aside from a slight readjustment in name. The Solicitor General has invited hon. members to visit the premises and to meet the group. We are as open as possible on this. But the suggestion of putting the question on the order paper is the best way for me to give a thorough answer to the hon. member.

INQUIRY AS TO REASON FOR REMOVING RESPONSIBILITY FOR SECURITY MATTERS FROM ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I say with great deference that the suggestion that questions be put on the order paper indicates that Your Honour has not carefully examined the degree to which this government covers up information by not giving answers to questions on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister, whose responsibility as Prime Minister is paramount on the matter of the security of our country from within and without. I want to ask him this question. In relation to the security of classified information, which normally would be under the control of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, has anything taken place in recent weeks or months that indicates that the RCMP cannot look after security of that kind and security in general?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, here again I would give the same answer but I would also like to make a suggestion. If the system of putting questions on the order paper is not satisfactory—the House will realize that in the case of questions such as this one it is impossible for me and probably for most ministers to come up with an answer when the question is posed without notice—perhaps we could adopt the British system and change the question period into one where notice would be given to the ministers in advance. Then, they would answer from time to time in the House to this type of question. I would be very happy to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even on this very happy occasion of the right hon. gentleman's fifth anniversary as Prime Minister, I find it necessary to ascertain from him why there has been a change and why such security has been removed from the RCMP by means of the establishment of this organization, the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group. Why, I ask him, is the security of classified information taken over now by a group responsible only to the Solicitor General? Does he not realize that this kind of thing would permit concealment, would permit the government to pretend that certain documents were—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman has asked the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that when the report of the Royal Commission on Security was brought down before the House a couple of years ago, one of the recommendations was to take security and intelligence away from the RCMP and to make it a purely civilian function. At that time we did not do this; we left it under the authority of the commissioner of the RCMP but under the directorship of a gentleman reporting to the commissioner and to the minister, a gentleman who was from the civil side of our society. I remember at the time there was criticism of this decision from hon. gentlemen opposite because we had not followed the recommendation and had not taken security and intelligence entirely away from the RCMP. I find it strange now that they are criticizing the general compromise position we took of leaving security and intelligence under the RCMP. I think they will have to make up their minds.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise—

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. gentleman should resume his seat, and then I will recognize him. He says he has a question of privilege and I will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The right hon. gentleman cannot get away with such a subterfuge. That is too patently transparent even for him who, two years ago—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in December, said that inflation had been beaten and the government had done it. I have before me the recommendations referred to by the former Solicitor General at page 8026 of Hansard for September 21, 1971 when there was set up a security planning and research group. That research group dealt with insurrection potentialities in Canada but not with other matters that come within the jurisdiction of the RCMP.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the right hon. gentleman is on a question of privilege or whether he intends to ask a question. It seems to me that we are obviously having a debate at present. The right hon. gentleman should ask the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I say with great deference, Sir, that a debate consists of a difference of opinions. This is a fact that I am placing before the House, not the imaginary conjuring up of something to explain by the Prime Minister. I ask him this, and it is a simple question. He is in charge of security. Why has it become necessary to remove from the RCMP the protection of the security of classified information? Why has that been done?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has been asked. The right hon. Prime Minister might be allowed to reply. We have gone beyond the question period, but I will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West and the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. We will have one question at a time. First, the right hon. Prime Minister might be allowed to reply to the question asked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am always very deferential, but there is a matter at stake here that is dangerous to our country. I want to know why there has been a change. Is the government trying to cover up? Has it some confidential, secret documents that it does not want the RCMP to have?

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the last five minutes I have been trying to give the right hon. Prime Minister an opportunity to reply. Unless there are many other points of order and questions of privilege, I will then try to recognize, as I said, the hon. member for Scarborough West who has been attempting to get the floor for the past 25 minutes on another question.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the right hon. Prime Minister. He will have to wait to reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, in deference to the office of the Prime Minister I will hold my question of privilege until he replies.

Mr. Speaker: We must have some order. The hon. member should state his question of privilege now. After that I will allow the Prime Minister to reply and the hon. member for Scarborough West to ask his question, and perhaps by that time we will be able to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Wednesday last the Solicitor General gave his answer to starred question No. 1,779 which I had placed on the order paper, on the subject of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has just now drawn the attention of the House to information previously given on this same subject in the days of the predecessor of the minister, and I find that there is a very material difference. Indeed, I would say the discrepancies are startling, and this leads me to question most seriously whether the rights and the privileges of the members of this House have been interfered with in some way.

What exactly has happened here? One of the ministers involved, either the present minister of his predecessor, was not correct in the information he gave to this House, or else the functions of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group have been fantastically expanded. I respectfully submit that either of these two possibilities raises a very distinct matter of privilege.

An examination of the answer given by the minister on Wednesday last to starred question No. 1,779 clearly shows that the minister states that the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group has assumed functions that were, in effect, categorically denied in the previous information given to the House. To illustrate this I refer to the answer given to part 1 of my question on last Wednesday, where all sorts of things were included, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert has pointed out, that were not included before.

If the statements of the minister on Wednesday last are correct then I submit that in these statements there is a case of privilege involved by virtue of the fact that there is only one possible conclusion to be drawn, namely, that the government has been hiding legitimate information from the members of this House as to the true nature of this police group and that the government, without the knowledge and without the consent of the people of Canada through their elected representatives in this House, has subverted the RCMP, which has been the incorruptible symbol of Canada throughout the world, and has placed certain functions which everybody believed were functions of the RCMP, without the knowledge of the members of this House, in the hands of a group totally unauthorized by this House to perform such functions.

I submit, as one final submission to the House, that what is certainly an affront to and a breach of the privileges of this House is that there is the possibility that the government has been creating, unannounced and behind the scenes, some monstrous form of political police snoopery that is a threat to the democratic principles of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: What is the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group? What kind of a dictatorial horror has been manufactured by the government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: It is another Watergate scandal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the right hon. Prime Minister was seeking the floor a moment ago to reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Although the time allotted for the question period has expired, I think that after that I should still recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the question is an important one, and it is because of that I suggested that, if hon. members had given notice of the question, as we give them notice, Sir, of statements we are going to make on motions, I perhaps would have been able to answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Doesn't the Prime Minister know what is going on in security?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do know one thing that is going on. It is that the Conservative party is deliberately trying to prevent the House from working.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Bell: Bring on the taxation bills.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should resume his seat. It is elementary, when the Chair has the floor, that hon. members should resume their seats. The hon. member for Leeds indicates that he wants to rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I consider it is a legitimate question of privilege when a member of this party raises a matter of concern to all Canadians, a matter of a very serious nature, and the Prime Minister makes some remark about the Conservative party as a way of passing it off. I think it is a matter of privilege when questions are asked in this House by a member and the Prime Minister passes them off by arrogance or by red herrings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not say what is going through my mind at the present time regarding this alleged question period. I recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am listening to the hon. member. Perhaps he might proceed.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The point of order arises from the last answer given by the Prime Minister. As you know, Mr. Speaker, questions are often ruled out of order, but the answer by the Prime Minister on this occasion imputes motives to the members of the Conservative party simply because they asked under what authority certain matters had been done and certain information sought. He thereby violated a rule of the House and he should be called to order for an improper answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lawrence: I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is this: I am a member, and proud of it, of the Conservative party in this House. There has been a claim in the House, by the leader of the government in the House, that those of us who belong to the Conservative party unduly delay the work of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I personally, Sir, bitterly resent that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: I think that is a reflection on the way in which I carry out my responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: I think there has been a great deal of delay in the House in respect of the business of the people of this country. I firmly believe, Sir, that it is the responsibility of the House leader and of the government of the country to get on with that business. But above all, Sir, I think there has been a reflection on my responsibilities and on the way I carry them out here, and I ask the Prime Minister now to retract unreservedly and apologize to the members of the Conservative party.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to hon. members that this is not the first time that one party has accused another party of delaying the work of the House. This kind of accusation is made all the time.

Mr. Lawrence: Then it shouldn't be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has stated his case. I cannot agree with his suggestion that it is a question of privilege. The hon. member may feel hurt or may feel that the statement or suggestion made is unfair or incorrect, but that does not necessarily make it a question of privilege.

While hon. members may be asked from time to time to withdraw a statement that is unparliamentary, I suggest to hon. members that in the cut and thrust of debate in the House many statements are made in relation to the other parties, and even during the current session I have heard serious statements made in relation to other parties, by members of one political group in relation to other political groups, but the suggestion has not been made, at least that I have noticed, that those statements are unparliamentary. They are part of debate. I am not sure whether they should be but they are. It is a practice that I am sure hon. members will recognize has existed for a long time. I doubt that the matter can be considered as a question of privilege.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I agree with you and say that we should get on with the business of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: That, Mr. Speaker, is the discussion of a tax bill which it has taken the Minister of Finance 11 months to get to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: He is afraid to bring on the corporate tax bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to the question that was put forward today dealing with the business of the House. I should like to submit on a point of order that when a government seeks to set up a secret police force, in my opinion that is a good reason to delay the business of the House and find out—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I gave an undertaking a long time ago to the hon. member for Scarborough West that he would be given the right to ask his question, after which I will call orders of the day—with the assistance of hon. members.

INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF RADIO PRODUCTION AT DON MILLS PLANT OF PHILCO-FORD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question to myself is—how do I follow an act like that? I must say that after hearing this 20 minute debate on the rights and interests of members of this House, it is with a certain trepidation that I rise to ask a question on the rights and interests of the ordinary working people in my riding. My question would be directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if he were here but I will direct it to the acting minister, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. My question concerns the announcement by Philco-Ford of Canada, as it were, that they are going to close down the rado operation of their Don Mills plant, thus throwing 100 or more production workers out of work. In view of the fact that the total production of this unit will be moved to Brazil for re-entry into Canada, would the minister advise the House whether there is anything he can do or that can be done under the provisions of the auto pact to have the company reconsider this decision made with ruthless and impersonal disregard of Canadian interests and the rights of Canadian workers?

Mr. Speaker: The minister will be recognized for the purpose of a reply to the question, and then I shall call orders of the day.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as acting minister I shall bring the question to the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I am sure he will reply on his return.

Mr. Harney: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment debate last night, I had expressed my wish to make a few remarks about the bill now before us, Bill C-170, which some of us consider as a reform of the tax reform. We all recall that the previous reform—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I would invite hon. members to be more courteous toward those who want to listen to the statement of the hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Godin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

We all remember that the reform inspired by Bill C-259, passed on December 17, 1971, neglected some categories. In the bill before us, we find about the same faults. If the slogan of a just society has lost its value, it is simply because the Canadian government neglected to recognize some responsibilities, and I think that those who pay taxes should have the same privileges in return.

In 1971, I pointed out the advantages enjoyed by some professionals, namely lawyers, notaries, doctors and the members of any other profession who have a right to claim expenses incurred in the practice of their profession. Mr. Speaker, I not only agree but once again I congratulate all these people who succeeded in having laws passed which favour them.

But I think it is my duty to claim the same rights and the same privileges for other Canadian workers. Among these are construction workers, auto mechanics and forest workers. If often occurs that construction workers need tools worth $1,000 and they must continuously replace these tools they cannot do without. The same thing applies to auto mechanics, except for the fact that the value of a tool chest can reach $2,000. For them also there are new tools to get because of the changes in car models and because of wear and tear.

It is the same thing for wood cutters and forest workers who must part from their families for long weeks and who must support rather considerable travelling expenses in addition to their tool expenses. I believe it would also be in order that those workmen be allowed to deduct all such expenses from their taxable income, within certain limits, however, that is within a reasonable daily or weekly commuting distance.

Moreover, thousands of employees of the private or public transportation systems: railwaymen, bus drivers, truck drivers, have to take most of their meals outside their homes. It is only normal that a man should eat three times a day. So the government should allow, when determining the taxable income, such extra expenses to be taken into account in respect to various jobs.

Some tax rules recognize some expenses, but the implementation of those rules make me wonder. I hope I am mistaken, but I fear that the implementation of the Income Tax Act can vary between the year before a general election and the year after.

Let me quote before the House two documents concerning the meal expenses that truck drivers are trying to have allowed as deductions in the legislation. With leave of the House, I shall read a letter that was addressed to me by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), then Minister of National Revenue, on March 19, 1971. I quote:

> Further to the questions you asked in the House on February 17 and March 4, 1971, I have to inform you that the department has not established new rules prohibiting deduction of the cost of one meal per day by the taxpayers.
> In fact, following several complaints, similar to those expressed by your constituents, in the year 1969, the department has conducted a study on the matter of expenses incurred away from home which transportation and railway company employees throughout the country wish to claim as a deduction. This study showed that many of these claims were not supported by vouchers and that the department's policy was not consistent.

[Mr. Godin.]

> It was found that those taxpayers find it hard to keep records and obtain vouchers to account for their meal expenses. Consequently, a policy was adopted under which workers in transportation and railway companies, when they could not produce vouchers, received an allowance based on the length of their stay away from their usual residence and on a reasonable amount for the cost of each meal. Moreover, the study we conducted as well as the discussions we had with officials of various trade unions have shown that an amount of $1.75 for each meal was reasonable.

• (1240)

> As a rule, when a taxpayer has to be away from his normal place of residence for a period of at least 10 hours, he is allowed to claim three meals at $1.75 each, or a total of $5.25.
> I must point out that when a taxpayer produces the TL22 form, which is in fact a claim for expenses incurred away from home, as well as the vouchers for his meals on the road, he may be granted more than $1.75, this amount having been set to check the claims from taxpayers without vouchers.
> If you feel that some of your electors were not compensated according to the policy outlined above, please send me their names and addresses.

The letter ends with these words:

> Sincerely yours.

And it is signed by the minister.

Last January I received another document from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) concerning the various claims of truck drivers. It contains the example of a taxpayer whose claim for 1970-71 was reduced from three to two meals a day. In the absence of a detailed report and of a statement of night trip expenses, this would seem to be fair.

In connection with another case, we can refer to information circular 71-30 which reads as follows:

> —When a truck driver has the right to deduct meals, he must provide vouchers for claims over $2.50. All meals claimed by this taxpayer were approved, but since he did not supply vouchers, his 1970 claims were reduced to $2.50. His 1971 claim was reduced to two meals a day at $2.50 a meal, in the absence of a detailed report and statement of night trips. This would seem fair.

Mr. Speaker, some senior civil servants informed me that the letter from the Minister of National Revenue dated 19 March 1971 contained a mistake.

The mistake was allowing $5.25 a day for meals for a 200 pound truck driver who works 65 hours a week.

Apparently, the truth was to be found in the second document: two meals a day at $1.25 each.

Mr. Speaker, truck drivers are not asking for their meals to be reimbursed. All they are asking is that their meal expenses be acknowledged and be made tax deductible. There is quite a difference. I am sorry to have to point this out, because I think that there are two sorts of ministers in the present government: there are the good guys, and the others. Personally, I like to think the hon. Minister of National Revenue belongs in the first group.

In view of the Department of National Revenue's large number of employees, the minister obviously cannot control all those public servants. There may be among them people who like to make trouble, over-eager people ready to defy regulations.

So, Mr. Speaker, public accounts have already revealed that the Canadian government was paying for $65-a-day hotel rooms and $12 meals for some CBC employees.

Mr. Speaker, I feel there is too great a difference. In fact a $12 meal for an employee who is wondering what he was hired to do and a $2.50 meal for another whose 65-hour week is not long enough for him to do his work, is somewhat revolting.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what to believe. Because of contradictory documents, I am under the impression that the more you ask the greater the chances of getting it. And in certain cases regulations seem to be truly ignored. Allowing $5.25 to a truck driver who works about 250 days a year means that he can claim about $1,300 a year. In the riding of Portneuf one man put in a claim for $1,675. For 1971 he gets back from the Department of National Revenue the following correction: Travel expenses claimed: $1,675, revised travel expenses: $1,115, which is not too bad for this man.

There is another one who asked for $1,500 for 1970. The department answered: revised travelling expenses—$1,000. Another one, Mr. Speaker, had claimed $1,300 for travelling expenses in 1971. He received the following adjustment: revised travelling expenses—$910. A third applied for past travelling expenses of $1,312 for 1971. He was abiding by the rules, according to the letter from the former Minister of National Revenue. Nevertheless, the department sent him a new bill which read: revised travelling expenses-$875.

A fourth claimed $1,275. He received the following note: revised travelling expenses—$875. A fifth claimed $1,280 which was reduced to $868. One who had applied for $1,026 for 1970 was allowed a deduction of $708.75. Another who had claimed $1,061 for 1971 was allowed $647.

Mr. Speaker, another claim of $941 for past travelling expenses in 1971 was changed to read: revised travelling expenses—$437.50.

Some were totally disallowed. Others filed a regular claim and were disallowed 50 per cent of it.

Mr. Speaker, how are regulations applied? I am still wondering since I am under the impression that the higher the claim, the likelier a truck driver is to see his expenses allowed.

On March 4, 1971, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) gave me the following answer which I am reading as it appears in Hansard for March 4, 1971, page 3981:

> Meanwhile, the hon. member may be assured that the 9,000 audits referred to in the question he asked originally—and presumably the instance that he cited this evening was an example of one of those—are simply desk audits in the ordinary course of the department's 1970-71 reassessment program pertaining to the returns of taxpayers who have claimed deductions from taxable income of personal living expenses while away from their ordinary place of residence. This is part of the regular departmental procedure to assure that our self-assessing tax system works properly.

Mr. Speaker, accounts are sent to know if the system works. I think that we can work with such methods only in the name of the law. We want to know if it works, so we send accounts. Let us imagine the small retailer who would send fictitious accounts to residences in his neighbourhood to know how it works! Imagine a taxi company that would start collecting money for fictitious trips to know how it works. I think it would not be long before people would call it highway robbery or a scandal. I think they would be right. This is called tampering.

Mr. Speaker, the many officials working for the department should concentrate on something else. In the name of the law, foolish things, can be done, but I ask the Minister of National Revenue to suggest to his officials to proceed with understanding, honesty and, above all, common sense.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I wish the minister would make us aware of his intentions. I wish he would make a statement to the House in order to assure the nation's truck drivers that they are entitled to three meals a day.

I would also like to suggest that the act provides for a penalty equal to 50 per cent of the present tax which some citizens would try to evade. I do not see anything in this bill aimed at changing this provision of the act.

In fact, right now, anyone having violated the Income Tax Act has to pay a fine equal to 50 per cent of the unpaid tax. Which means that if a person owes $5,000 in income tax, he will have to pay $7,500.

In some cases, I find this legislation quite ridiculous, because we often realize that those who worked harder are those who are the most hurt by its enforcement.

Tax officials go everywhere, make investigations, harassing small businesses, mostly, private enterprise, corner stores, those who work 365 days a year, who never go to Florida and who support only one woman, their wife.

Then, they show up at a business that does not operate like a company. This businessman has been living so sparingly that he has managed to save $150,000 over 20 years. Now the investigators prosecute him. He is charged with having concealed some income, and he is billed. In addition to his income tax, he must pay a fine. As he is kind-hearted—whether he is a dealer or a businessman—who earns his living and has customers, too often he pays without uttering a word, because he is unfortunately afraid of being pointed at. I think he could avail himself of the act and demand that his case be heard before a court. But to save his reputation and his business he cannot afford to make his problem known publicly.

Unfortunately it is too often that industrialists and businessmen are faced with that problem. I would like to get the minister's views on that practice.

We know that there are families which manage with $6,000 a year and that for others $12,000 is not enough. I think that surveys made by the Department of National Revenue should take those facts into consideration.

When an industrialist or a businessman has set $10,000 aside, it might well be that he hid nothing but it can very well be that he administered his business as a true businessman.

Another thing I would like to point out with regard to Bill C-170 is that the bill contains certain provisions dealing with the transfer of family farms. On the face of it the provisions seem interesting. However, looked at in the general picture this measure is far from being adequate as it deals only with the transfer of farm property at the death of the father or the mother.

In brief, under the present government one must die to expect benefits. That provision of the act really lacks rationale and I think it should be amended so as to make it more reasonable.

At the moment, farmers as all other citizens of Canada must wait until they are 65 to qualify for an old age pension. One must remember that farmers as other citizens work hard. Some are exhausted, others are stricken by illness. the case might very well happen where for such reasons a farmer is forced to sell his farm to his son at the age of 55 or 60. And because social welfare allowances in Quebec are very low the farmer selling his farm should normally expect to benefit from his property and live a few years of peaceful life.

That is why I hope the minister will come up as soon as possible with changes which I consider indispensable for that class of society.

We all know how difficult it is to live on a farm and those who succeeded in that profession had to work very hard. They turned to their wives and to all the other members of the family for help. For this reason, it is the Canadian government's duty not only to bring in measures to incite young farmers to take over but also to spare the latter the pain of seeing unduly heavy or harsh taxes levied against parents who wish to retire at a reasonable age or who are compelled to stop working.

[English]

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly on this matter and one other matter that was raised a little earlier about the passage of legislation through this House. It should be on the record that those of us in this party certainly intended to see passage of second reading of this bill last night. We were fully in agreement with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) on this matter, as I am sure he will acknowledge. It was not our group that held up the passage of this legislation last night.

With all due respect, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were in his place in this House a little more often to see what is going on here, he would not be so wild in his accusations about holding up legislation. We were quite willing to pass second reading of this legislation last night. It was another group in this House which indicated it had a long list of speakers, and that is what is holding up this bill.

There is only one other matter I wish to mention. My intention is to urge the minister and the government to reconsider this bill and redraft it slightly to make it more realistic to the needs of the farming community. There is no denying that this is sensible and necessary legislation. I know that we in the Conservative party were complimented frequently during the election for proposing in our platform that capital gains taxes should be waived on the transfers of working family farms from one member of the family to another. I might compliment the government for its wisdom in lifting this plank from our platform. However, I would like to stress, Mr. Speaker, that they have not taken the whole plank. In fact, they have forgotten or ignored a very important part of it.

Politics aside, Mr. Speaker, the trouble with this bill as it stands is that it does not go far enough. I think all members of this House who represent farming areas will agree with me on this point. The legislation, to fully accomplish its intent, should waive the capital gains tax where a farmer who is retiring, passes on his farm to his son, daughter or spouse who is to continue to work the farm. The child or spouse should not have to wait until the father dies to become owner, or else pay capital gains tax.

As one agricultural spokesman in my riding noted when referring to this measure, many farmers are notoriously long-lived. Therefore, as this bill now stands, we could have a retired farmer dying at age 90 and passing on his farm tax-free to his son who is 70 and also retired, and whose own sons, or perhaps even grandsons, are the ones actually working the farm. It is unrealistic. It creates as legal fiction. Surely, it is only sensible and realistic to allow the ownership to pass, unhindered by this tax, to the member of the family who is actually working the farm.

I recognize that at this stage such an amendment by us would be out of order, but I hope that all members of all parties will agree to a Conservative amendment which will be moved in committee along these lines.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to confine my remarks this afternoon to the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act as they relate to the farming community.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), on Monday, February 19, in the course of which he said:

> I should like, now, to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to another matter which is of great importance, namely the preservation of the family farm.

I expected the minister would then go on to announce tax changes which would in fact help to preserve the family farm. I thought that at long last the government really intended to recognize the pressing problems in agriculture. The thought occurred to me that the election slogan "the Land is Strong" was not just a gimmick but something in which members on the other side really believed. I guess I was wrong. It was a gimmick, and the land is strong only when the farmer dies.

What we need is legislation which will exempt the family farm from capital gains tax when it is transferred during the lifetime of the farmer. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has gone around the country attempting to give the impression that the present legislation is great legislation, and that it has solved the problems of the farmer who wishes to pass his farm on to his son. I suggest the minister does not understand the legislation. At least, he did not understand it eight days after the budget. He did not understand that it referred to the transfer of land on death only.

Mr. Whelan: I did so.

• (1410)

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Let me quote from notes of an address the Minister of Agriculture made to the annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council at the Chateau Laurier on February 27.

Mr. Whelan: Someone has already done that.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): He said:

> Farmers specifically got an exemption from the capital gains tax for family farms passed from parents to children. I welcome this change for two reasons. First of all, it recognizes the importance of the family farm as our basic unit in agriculture. This tax concession does not apply to corporate giants, but to the family farm. Second, the change encourages farmers' children to stay in this business of agriculture. We need good, young farmers in Canada today. A high percentage of our farmers are at, or near, retirement age, and we need the help the budget gives to transfer farms to the next generation.

It is obvious that the Minister of Agriculture was not consulted by the Minister of Finance when his budget was prepared. It is obvious that what the Minister of Finance did was attempt to adopt one of this party's proposals during the election campaign, a proposal he thought was popular with the farmers in the west and one which would make him popular. He did not do his homework as well as he did when he adopted some of our other proposals, such as reducing personal income tax. He only adopted part of this proposal.

I suggest that neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the Minister of Finance understands the problems involved in passing on a family farm from generation to generation. I have practised law in an agricultural area for over 20 years, and I can assure both hon. ministers that even without the capital gains tax, without estate taxes or succession duties, there are numerous problems. It is very rarely that a farmer wishes to retain his farmlands until he dies and then pass them on to his son. He wants, in a majority of cases, to retire at 60 or 65 years of age and at that time turn his farm over to his son. Sons will just not wait and do not want to wait until their fathers die before establishing themselves in farming. If there is more than one child in a family a son does not want to run the risk of waiting until his father dies because, in many cases, the son is middle-aged before his father passes on.

During the lifetime of his father he could make a reasonable business deal with him for the purchase of the farm on agreed terms, whereas in many cases on the death of the farmer the son is faced with the fact that there are other members of the family who have a share in the estate, or is suddenly faced with the need to raise a substantial amount of cash in order to pay off the other beneficiaries. In numerous cases, and I have seen this happen often, a son has not been able to raise sufficient money to buy out his brothers, sisters and other members of the family and the family farm has had to be sold. The son then finds that he has spent most of his life working on the farm for nothing.

Quite often as well a situation arises in which a son has worked all his life on the family farm, only to find that in the final one or two years of the father's life they become involved in an argument, the father changes his will and the farm goes to someone else so the son is left with nothing. The most common arrangement over the past number of years between fathers and sons has been for the son to work for the father, building up some capital of his own, possibly acquiring some land of his own, and then, when the father is ready to retire, the son purchases the farm.

Farm prices in Saskatchewan, as hon. members are probably aware, are subject to wide fluctuation. Valuation day, December 31, 1971, was a time when farm prices were low, possibly 50 per cent lower than they were two years previous. Since December 31, 1971, farmland has started to increase in value and, if we continue to have good markets and good prices for grain, the price of land will continue to rise. I suggest that soon there will not be a farm in the province of Saskatchewan which will not be subject to capital gains tax when sold. I suggest also there will be a continuing and increased reluctance on the part of farmers to sell or transfer their land to their sons because this will attract a substantial amount of tax, and the result will be that instead of preserving the family farm there will be a destruction of the family farm.

I would urge the minister to give immediate and serious consideration to the elimination of capital gains tax on the disposal of farms during the lifetime of the farmer, not only when he transfers or sells the farm to his son or a member of his family, but also when a farmer disposes of his land to anyone during his lifetime. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture might say that to eliminate the capital gains tax on any sale by a farmer would be giving the farmer an unfair advantage in relation to other citizens of Canada. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is not so, and I would point out that in a majority of cases the only source of funds many farmers have for retirement use is the proceeds from the sale of their farmland.

In rebuttal the minister might suggest that a farmer on retirement can draw the benefits provided under the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan. On March 19 I spoke in this House on a motion I submitted on January 12, suggesting that the government should give consideration to the advisability of allowing farmers to make contributions to the Canada Pension Plan, regardless of their net income. In that speech I pointed out that the income of a farmer is subject to great fluctuation and, generally speaking, in a five year period a farmer would have one or two years of substantial income and two or three years with little or no income or, in many cases, a substantial loss. The result is that the farmer probably makes Canada Pension Plan contributions two years out of five on the average and, therefore, when he begins to draw his pension on retirement it will only be nominal.

Many family farms today are small units and, generally speaking, after the debts most farmers have are paid following disposal of the farm, the net return from the sale is no more than sufficient to enable the farmer to retire comfortably. If we charge a capital gains tax on the sale of such a farm we will further reduce the amount the farmer has available for retirement. The minister has not seen fit to say whether the elimination of the capital gains tax on the passing of a farm at death refers to the shares held by a farmer in a family farm that has been incorporated. It may be that he has been reluctant to exempt the disposition of shares in a family corporation because this might upset hon. members to my left. To them the word "corporation", whether it be large or small, is a dirty word, and I appreciate that the minister might be reluctant to upset those hon. members and do harm to their cosy relationship.

I point out to this House that in the past eight or 10 years it has been fairly common, in Saskatchewan at least, for a farmer and his son or sons to incorporate. I will not go into the reasons for incorporation as I am certain the hon. minister, being a lawyer, will understand. Basically, however, incorporation has been carried out by farmers as a means of estate planning. If a farmer is not allowed to dispose of his shares on death without attracting a capital gains tax, I suggest that this particular segment of our farm population will have been discriminated against. The preservation of the family farm is of vital concern to all Canadians. We must do our utmost to ensure its continued existence. I am sure it was an oversight on the part of the Minister of Finance when he failed to adopt our policy in total. It could not have been intentional. Our party will give the minister its wholehearted support if he will now undertake to adopt the balance of our party's policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-170 on personal income tax will not bring much of a tax relief to the working people.

Increasing the basic exemption by $150 or $200 a year is no big deal. For years we have been requesting that all incomes under $5,000 for married people be income tax free and that a personal exemption be granted amounting to $500 per child. With a family of six children, the exemption would be $3,000.

We also ask that all incomes under $2,500 earned by single people be tax free and this would improve the plight of those who have no way of "playing" with the tax department. In fact, in their case, their taxes are deducted from their salaries whereas for the well-to-do people there are always expenses for administration, recreation, maintenance and communication which can be claimed as exemptions.

Such is not the case for a worker. The men working for Noranda, in my constituency, and those working for Canadair Limited or Canadian Vickers Limited, in Montreal, have their salaries reduced even before getting their cheques. The situation has become unbearable. I remember myself saying about 20 years ago: if we continue in this direction, within a few years the cheque vouchers will be twice as long as the cheque itself. Have we not reached that point now? In effect, the cheque vouchers are at least 18 or 24 inches long and the cheque itself about 6 inches. If we keep on like that for 10 years more the worker will not get any cheque. He will simply receive the voucher which will explain to him how his money has been spent.

There will no longer be any salary but only a breakdown of expenses imposed by bureaucrats, technocrats and all the government employees.

There is another thing that we requested, and that we are still requesting: How is it that a worker, whether he is employed by Canadian National, Canadian Pacific, Air Canada, Coca-Cola Ltd. in Montreal or Seven-up in Lévis, or by the little spruce beer plant in Chicoutimi, may not deduct from his taxes his own tools that he uses in his work?

All classes of society have the right to deduct tools and even clothing, within limits.

For example, a doctor can deduct from his income tax any new scalpels that he buys. His new office is tax deductible; if he uses his car to go and see patients, he deducts that from his income tax.

And yet the worker in Montreal, Rouyn, Quebec City or Trois-Rivières does not have the right to deduct his car expenses for going to work; he does not even have the right to deduct expenses if he uses public transport.

To work in a mine, for example, you need a whole set of equipment: a special helmet, a gas mask, rubber clothing. The worker cannot make deductions. He has to buy boots, a safety helmet, a lamp; yet he may not deduct from his taxes these expenses that are directly incurred in carrying out his duties.

Mr. Speaker, what is the reason for this discrimination against Canadian workers? It is in effect everywhere.

If I have a business, and I change my furniture, I deduct the cost on my income tax return. If I use my car I deduct travel expenses from my income because I use my car for going to work, for travelling all around my constituency. But a factory worker does not have the right to do this. Why not?

The same thing used to happen when Their Royal Highnesses the Progressive Conservatives were in power, with the largest majority that the government has ever had in the House. The workers were treated in just the same way. Today, we hear them weeping on the workers' shoulders. Now they say the workers are being mistreated! Yet when the Progressive Conservative party was in office, they treated workers exactly in the same way. They are what I call "hypocrits in furs". There is no other way of designating them. They are guys who are ready to do anything when they are in the opposition, but once in office they prove to be inefficient, helpless, numbers, they are of no use.

Mr. Speaker, the Income Tax Act should apply in the same way to the whole society, and basic exemptions should be improved so that ordinary workers, low wage earners, white collars, in short everybody would benefit from them. We must not always relieve the rich and ask the poor to pay more.

Mr. Speaker, this year, for instance, Statistics Canada forecasts that our national product thanks to the work of all workers, farmers, etc., will reach $102 billion. However, the national annual income of the Canadian people—including Members of Parliament—amounts to $70 billion.

Mr. Speaker, how can we possibly buy $102 billion worth of products with an income of $70 billion? As I have said quite often, instead of fiddling about under the income tax legislation with some $70 billion which are not enough to enable our production to reach consumers, why does the government not go and get new credits at the Bank of Canada in order to relieve taxpayers from taxes they are now paying?

Could the worker who pays $500 or $600 a year in taxes not use these $500 or $600? Let us ask them. They could certainly spend them. If they were able to do so, they would spur production and create jobs. We would fight against unemployment and inflation at the same time; this would not increase prices, since it is included in those $70 billion.

Mr. Speaker, the government is not thinking about that because economists fail to draw that consideration to its attention, and as it relies on economists, on shady tax speculators as I call them, on people who base the economy on taxation, on lunatics, on guys lost in the fog, the government is idle.

They are waiting for the economists. It is quite strange to hear them! A liberal economist will say to the Liberals; "This is how taxes should be levied." The Progressive Conservative economist who has attended the same university says: "That economist is wrong. As a Progressive Conservative, I have a better solution; instead of taxing A let us tax B". The Neo-Democrat intervenes: "Let us tax both. We will dispossess them as much as possible and give that money to the government". He is wiser than the economists or the political parties. He knows how to bring everybody to their senses. Down with free enterprise and long live state socialism!

Mr. Speaker, there is a limit to such deception. This is still being done today. Indeed, as long as Canada has existed, they have been meddling in the same mess and the same system to try to distribute scarcity when there is an abundance of products everywhere. But why do we not adjust our financial system to Canada's production, to the result of society's work? Production is the result of the work of labour, farmers, white collars, lawyers, professionals, in short, of all the people. But no! They try to equate all people with the total annual income, which economists do not want to disturb, because they would have to proceed with a monetary reform.

Mr. Speaker, they don't laugh at Social Credit as much as they used to but still, in certain circles, through ignorance, ill will, bad faith or simply because they do not think of it, some people still find that funny. They figure that the system is perfectly logical until these people feel somewhat cornered. When they do, they change their minds and say that something ought to be changed. In order to do so, they say: Let us take $10 from Peter's pocket and put it in Paul's, less the cost of bureaucracy. Then, they distribute less than what they have collected. After that, they wonder why there is a lack of purchasing power among the people.

They are all shouting: Spend more, spend more. Go and tell the fellow who has $50 to spend $150. Can he? Spend more, they say, but with no more than you have. That is impossible. And that is what economists are suggesting here in Canada. They say: Spend more. Where is the money to come from? I don't know, they say, but spend more just the same. That is clever.

Mr. Speaker, we propose a solution. As for income tax, we don't say "Abolish it immediately but: Begin at the beginning. All incomes under $5,000 for married persons should be free from tax and there should be an exemption of $500 per child, and of $2,500 for single persons. Now, the bill before us provides for a basic exemption of $2,850 for married persons and $1,500 for single persons. Just imagine! A single person will be saving about 12 or 13 cents a year. Big deal! A married, childless person will save what? Twenty-five cents. Then, the government will say: See how generous we have been to the Canadian workers!

I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is smiling, but he knows full well I am right. He introduces his Bill C-170 of which I heard someone say: The transfer, at death, of farm lands to a child requires capital gains declaration. That means that if a farmer owns a beautiful farm, he may not bequeath it to his child before his death without paying a tax. Upon his death, he may bequeath it to his son without having to pay taxes. One hon. member said this morning, I do not remember which one: Take a farmer of 92 years of age. He dies. His son of 74 inherits the farm. The grandson of 50 or 52 farms the land because his father of 74 is no longer able to do so. Still, the latter inherited the farm without having to pay tax while his son has to do so. Then the government figures it has helped out agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, what a shame to laugh at people like that!

But why, when everybody in Canada is claiming that agriculture is going bankrupt, why is nothing done to make it possible for a father to hand his land over to his son when the latter is 20, 22, 25 years old? Why do people now leave the family farm in order to go and live in the city? It is because the land is no longer providing farmers with a livelihood. People are compelled to go to work in the city to keep their farms going. Despite that, the government keeps on levying taxes as soon as the father hands over his farm to his son. Now we are told that after the father's death, the property can be transfered without any taxes having to be paid.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a solution. A few days ago I heard some Acadians from New Brunswick say that it will be fashionable within a few years to go back to the farm. In fact, it is now realized that life on the farm is much more natural than life in the chicken coops of Montreal, Hull, Ottawa or Quebec City. It is quite natural: That is not the point provided they have the right to live. There is no return to farming as at the time of the Vautrin program in 1935. Settlers were "carried up" to Abitibi in "ox carts". Mr. Speaker, this is not a return to farming. It is a return to the ox. This is not where they should go but back to farming.

To meet this objective, we should have a global policy which would enable farmers to live on the land. Would not a farmer's son live more happily there than in the Noranda mine, 8,000 or 10,000 feet under ground, where he will surely lose his health within 15 or 20 years whereas by farming and raising some livestock and by gardening he could live and raise a family. You cannot do that in the Montreal streets where the air is polluted by carbon monoxide from cars.

I submit that our provincial governments, with the assistance of the federal government, of the municipalities and of public bodies, should establish a program to spend money as it is done in the big cities to facilitate their return to the land for those interested in doing so. I am confident that these chicken coops will be emptied, that we will resettle the land particularly in Quebec which I am most concerned about.

We shall have helped humanity in connection with social, economic and political problems in so far as people will think of Social Credit.

Mr. Isabelle: You are doing a commercial!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I am doing a commercial to keep the hon. member for "dull" and not for Hull interested; the "H" should be removed.

Here is the proof, Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Finance was applauding me. I was right to mention the hon. member for "dull".

Joking aside, the Minister of Finance should think seriously of amending this provision of the bill, so that the farmer can transfer his property when he is alive. It is not after death that one must have the opportunity to live, but when one is alive. We should allow the farmer to transfer his property to his son, if he is interested in farming. In this case, let the 25 or 30-year old son become the owner of his father's property without being forced to pay taxes.

The minister realizes this very well. About 90 per cent of our farmers are on provincial or federal farm loan plans. If this has mortgaged their estate, why should we tell them: If you transfer your mortgage to your son it will be considered as income and you will have to pay taxes even on the transfer of your farm.

Mr. Speaker, it is not logical, It is not a way to help farmers or to encourage the young man to carry on his father's agricultural work. No, it is not. We discourage young people when we say: go away, go to town, go to Sarnia, Sudbury, Montreal, or Toronto, leave the land!

After that, what do we see? Smart Americans come to Canada and buy farms by tens, hundreds and thousands; they try to get hold of lands bordering lakes or near urban centers. They will then be divided up and sold back to our fellow citizens at very high prices, while action should be taken immediately, not to send the Americans back home like the Iroquois and the Hurons in 1604, but to help our citizens to own something.

I believe the minister should consider amending that clause to allow present landowners to transfer their property to their children without having to pay any income tax. The various working classes of society should be granted exemptions of up to $5,000 for married couples and of up to $2,500 for single persons; $500 could be granted for each child. The Minister of Finance could then stand proudly and say: At last, I have applied part of the Creditistes' wonderful program!

• (1440)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is always a delight to answer the hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), and particularly today to follow him because our views, only on this matter, coincide. I have a concern about the manner in which personal income taxes have their impact upon people living in urban areas vis-à-vis those living in rural or northern areas. This concern is a bit larger than the concern I have over the impact of these taxes upon the family farm and the transmission of the farm through the generations. None the less, it is still a concern over the impact of tax law as it applies to individuals living in those two types of settings, urban and rural. It has long been recognized in Canada that, because of the fact the population is concentrated within a few miles northward from the U.S.-Canada border, we have always had higher costs the farther north you go from that border and the farther you go from the urbanized centres.

There was reference earlier today about the effect of a 7 per cent freight rate increase to a shipping company, Northland Shipping, in my own province, the result of which is to place the cost of food, for instance in the Queen Charlotte Islands, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent higher than it is in the lower mainland area of the province. There is the situation in the mid-north area of the province, all through the area of Prince George and Vanderhoof, where food and living costs run anywhere up to 15 per cent higher than they are 500 miles to the south.

We also have the fact that all across Canada the facilities and services available to society are fewer in the rural and lesser populated areas than they are in the urban centres. Invariably, or almost universally across the land, if you have an extreme or rare ailment, or even moderately rare ailment, you do not get the medical attention that is necessary in your home town if it is a smaller sized community. You have to travel to the larger centre to get that. In Manitoba, the movement of people has to be towards Winnipeg, Brandon and Portage—that part of the province—in order to get the special medical attention that may be necessary. In British Columbia, it is to Vancouver or to Victoria on Vancouver Island. I do not know Ontario that well, but I am quite sure that people in Northern Ontario do not have medical facilities available to them to the extent that they are available to people in the Toronto-Hamilton area.

Recognition was given to this problem in the budget speech which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) made on May 8 last. In order to put it on the record, just in case by some extreme circumstance someone may read what I am saying at some later date, I will read what the minister had to say on May 8 last year in respect to that particular matter of medical expenses.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is already on the record.

Mr. Howard: I am sure it is on the record, but it is not on the record in the way I want to put it. It is not in the context of an analysis; it is only in the context of a presentation, a presentation that has a failure in it that I want to draw to the minister's attention. The minister said, as recorded at page 2005 of Hansard for May 8, 1972:

—I propose to include as a deductible medical expense amounts paid to commercial transport services for transportation of a taxpayer or his spouse, or dependant, and an attendant if necessary, to and from a hospital, clinic or doctor's office to which the individual has travelled a distance in excess of 25 miles to obtain medical services not otherwise available nearer home.

I am not sure whether "in excess of 25 miles" is the round trip, or the one-way distance about which the minister is talking. In other words, if a person is living 13 miles away from where he has to get medical attention, would his going and coming constitute 25 miles or not? The minister shakes his head, so I think it is 25 miles one way.

The minister also talked about paying amounts to "commercial transport services." I think that is a bit too narrow. Let me give a case in point from my own knowledge of the area. In central British Columbia, along the coastal area, there are three communities of relatively equal size, Prince Rupert, Terrace and Kitimat. An attempt is being made to place specialized medical services of a particular nature in all of those communities, with each type different from the other one, so that there will be access to a variety of medical services in the area. Kitimat and Terrace are 38 miles from one another. If a person in the community of Terrace has to travel 38 miles to the hospital at Kitimat, one way, to get specialized medical attention, he would be unable to take advantage of this provision mentioned by the minister because there is no commercial transport available between those two communities. He would have to take a car. If the bill reflects that narrow a concept of commercial transport this is something that I would like the committee to look at, and I will probably expand on it at that stage. I am sure this situation is duplicated in many parts of Canada.

If the principle is recognized that people in smaller communities have to travel some distance in order to get medical attention not available to them in the smaller communities, then this provision should be available to all without confinement, whether or not there is commercial transport available to them. I understand it is government policy, or a least government thinking, to curtail urban growth and concentration of population, facilities and services in metropolitan or urban areas, in order to decentralize these facilities.

I submit that what our tax law is doing as long as it is maintained on the basis that a person is liable to the same percentage of taxation, depending on what income class he falls into, is making him liable to pay the same amount of tax regardless of where he lives or works in this country. In effect, this policy subsidizes urban living and the facilities that exist there at the expense of the facilities that might be available in rural areas. The tax each individual pays, is, in effect, assisting to attract people to the urban areas where the educational facilities are more specialized and varied, the medical services are more specialized, arts, drama and the theatre may be more specialized and more available than in the smaller areas. If you want to hear a good jazz band in Saskatchewan, you cannot hear it in La Loche or Buffalo Narrows; you to go to Saskatoon and even there you have to go to the university. In British Columbia, the only place you can go to the opera is in Vancouver. I cannot, at times, understand why people would want to go to Vancouver but they do. Nevertheless, this tends to attract people to the urban areas, especially for such purposes as medical attention or the larger number of facilities and services that are available there.

I think we have to recognize that it costs more to live in northern areas than in the urban areas. We have to recognize the fact and reflect it in a discriminatory way in our tax structure, that there are more facilities and services available in urban areas than in northern or rural areas. We also have to compensate for that by providing the person who lives in the northern or rural area with a special tax consideration. In other words, he should pay less income tax than his counterpart in the city.

I think this was recognized in the speech that the minister made on May 8—and he nods his head. He recognized that problem in so far as travelling for medical purposes is concerned. He should also recognize it in terms of the cost of living in northern areas. The government recognizes it in some mid-northern communities in British Columbia by providing a special living allowance to its own employees. The people who do not have the advantage of working for the federal government are left on their own in those areas.

I am not asking the government to say that every employer in every area where the government, by its own edict, has recognized that people have higher and special costs should give a bonus to compensate for that. I do not think that would be possible and it would not take into account collective bargaining and that sort of thing, but surely the government could recognize the advisability of a lower tax rate in those areas. There could be a higher exemption or something of that nature which would say to the employee who lives in a rural or northern area that he does not have to pay as much income tax as his brother in the urban setting because he does not have the same facilities and his costs are higher. This would be a way of recognizing his difficulties. It would be a bonus for living in that part of the country where facilities are not available.

A couple of years ago the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) went to New Zealand and Australia to look at the treatment of native people by those governments. He discovered that the Australian government had recognized the thing I am talking about by providing a lower tax rate for people who live in the Northern Territory. Australia is a fine counterpart for Canada. The cost of living is higher in the Northern Territory of Australia and the facilities are fewer. The government recognized this many years ago and said that those people who live and work in the Northern Territory would pay less tax than was demanded of people living in Canberra or other urban areas in the country. That is what I suggest we should do here.

This problem was brought to the attention of the minister while he was in Australia and he sat in on a meeting when the Northern Territory Legislative Council discussed the question of the special tax rate with federal government officials from Canberra. I do not know what his impression was, but he gave me to understand that he agreed it was a good idea. It is in my view, in any event. I think such a concession would have to be tied to the length of stay in the area. I do not think a person who lives in Vancouver and takes a job in the Yukon Territory or at Farrell Creek, say, for one week, then comes back to Vancouver should be eligible for the special tax rate. It could be tied to residence of half a year or some period that would make that person a bona fide resident of that area for the taxation year.

The minister is proposing that the tax rate for corporations in the manufacturing and processing industries be reduced to 40 per cent—at least that is what he was proposing last May; I do not know whether he is still proposing it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am counting on your support on that.

Mr. Howard: I did not hear what the minister said.

An hon. Member: He is counting on your support.

Mr. Douglas: He is leaning on a broken reed.

Mr. Howard: I will tell the minister what I will do, Mr. Speaker, and I have learned how to say this from listening to cabinet ministers. Normally, I would not put it this way. If the minister will commit himself now to come into this House within the next couple of weeks—after Easter, even—with a bill which will recognize the need to have a lower tax rate for people living in northern areas, then I will commit myself to him that I will look at his proposal as to the 40 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What a deal!

Mr. Howard: I will consider it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You will have to do better than that.

Mr. Howard: The minister laughs; he knows exactly what I mean because he uses that approach himself so often.

I do not want to be diverted too much from my original theme about the burden placed upon people in northern and rural areas through taxation. I want to relate that to the proposal for reducing corporation taxes to 40 per cent in the manufacturing and processing industries only. If the minister contends that the proposed reduction to 40 per cent for manufacturing industries is valid, and I do not think it is, then he is saying that he wants to give a special advantage to the urban areas again because that is where the predominant manufacturing and processing industries are. He shakes his head, but that is where they are.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Look at the processing. I want to process these primary resources up in the north.

Mr. Howard: We know all about that. I will take the minister's word that he wants to do this in the northern areas. But if the principle is valid for corporations, and I do not think it is, then surely he would agree that it is valid to apply the same principle to human beings. Surely, he would apply it to people and agree to reduce their tax rate in those northern areas as well rather than just the tax rate of the so-called processing industry. We are not just talking about so-called manufacturing industries.

• (1500)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The provision of jobs is what this is all about.

Mr. Howard: The minister talks about jobs. That is what he said on May 8 last year. His first words on that occasion were that the provision of jobs was his first priority. But he has yet to show me how fast write-offs for machinery can provide jobs. The more machines you employ, the fewer people you employ.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In these days we are not introducing the cotton-gin.

Mr. Howard: The minister suggests that is not so. Obviously, he has information about the activities of the federal government. Computers were installed. They were to replace people. But now the government is employing more people than ever and is using the computers as well. This is the result of incompetence on the part of ministers; it is not the fault of the system itself.

What I am trying to get across, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the minister is that the tax rate applicable to the person who works at Keno Hill in the Yukon, or in the Queen Charlotte Islands in my riding, is exactly the same as that of the person who works in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto. I say that such a tax system is inequitable because under it the advantage always goes to the person who lives in the larger centres close to existing facilities. It discriminates against the person who has children of university age and who may, therefore, have to move his family from The Pas, Flin Flon or the northern reaches of this nation to Vancouver, Toronto, Winnipeg or somewhere else where there are universities.

The system is discriminatory because from an aesthetic point of view the person concerned may prefer to live in the north where he has a good job with prospects of security and advancement. I know of such cases. A person may have to leave the community where these benefits are available to him, and live in a chicken coop in the city—the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) spoke about this—merely because the facilities are to be found in the city. We have argued the other way and said that facilities should be available in the northern areas. But they are not there now.

The only way to compensate for this situation is to introduce an equitable tax structure which recognizes that living costs for persons in rural areas or in the northern reaches of this land are higher than those of persons living in urban centres. This business of those who live in the north—although I do not live in the north, I do live in the mid-north of British Columbia—having to subsidize Canadians who live in other areas should cease and desist. The minister may not have a chance to bring in another budget, so he had better do this right now before he leaves his portfolio. Let him do it quickly. Why wait for spring, John; do it now!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I feel it would be wise if parliament were to consider what Benson and Turner budgets have actually done for Canada in past years. It is important for us to realize that on a national accounts basis, every deficit or surplus that has been predicted to date by Mr. Benson or by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has been overstated.

In the 1968-69 budget it was predicted that, on a national accounts basis, there would be a deficit, but that deficit was overstated by $400 million. In 1969-70 it was predicted that there would be a surplus, but we found that the surplus was understated, depending on the type of accounting you use, by between $5 million and $80 million. In 1970-71 a surplus was predicted, but we found that it was overstated to the extent of $490 million. Subsequently, in a second budget, the government predicted a deficit. As it turned out, this deficit was overstated to the extent of $220 million. In the 1971-72 budgetary provisions another deficit was predicted. We subsequently found that the amount was overstated by $250 million.

I am giving this background because I believe if one looks at the budgetary history of the present and the previous minister of finance you will see the sad spectacle of total ineptitude in their attempt to plan for Canada's economic needs. It should be borne in mind that not only has their budgetary planning been inept but it has resulted in an extremely heavy tax load for Canadians. I mean, of course, that if we look at the rise in personal income tax since 1963 and compare this with the projection for 1973, we will find that personal income tax has jumped from $1,700 million to a predicted $6,850 million this year. This compares with corporate income tax which has risen from the 1963 level of $1,182 million to the current level of $2,320 million.

Hon. members to my left often cite these figures as an indication that corporate income tax is not high enough, that there are undue write-offs or that somehow there have been concessions to corporations and these should be remedied. I suggest that undoubtedly in certain respects every tax system contains inequities which should be corrected. I believe the significant fact colleagues to my left are overlooking, and which the Minister of Finance has chosen to ignore, is that Canadian business profitability has gone down extremely sharply under the Trudeau government. That is why businesses are not paying the amount of corporate tax that one normally would expect them to be paying.

There is no mystery about this, I suggest. The Science Council of Canada, in an informative booklet entitled "Innovation in a Cold Climate" has effectively pointed out the complete lack of foresight shown by the Trudeau government. The government, in coming before this House and indicating that it should receive great credit for a suggested reduction from 49 per cent to 40 per cent in corporate tax with respect to manufacturing and processing industries, without making it clear to the House that it created the climate in which these industries have found it increasingly hard to make a profit, is presenting its case in a misleading way.

As was said by the speaker before me, there should be more reference to the fact that the present Minister of Finance, and his predecessor, in every budget speech paid great lip service to curing the problem of unemployment. The fact is that the area in which unemployment has risen at a faster rate and, conversely, in which employment has not kept up with predictions, is the manufacturing industry. As the Science Council said:

> Until recently, employment in manufacturing industry rose proportionately with the labour force. For most of the sixties, a constant 21 per cent of our labour force was employed in this sector. Most of our models for employment are based on the premise that this trend will continue, and that 20 per cent of the labour force will be employed in manufacturing in 1982.
> By mid-1971, however, manufacturing accounted for only 19 per cent of the labour force. This departure from projections began in 1967—

That was the year before the Trudeau government took office. The situation is illustrated graphically in this booklet. The Science Council also pointed out:

> By 1971, employment in manufacturing had fallen short of expectations by 120,000 jobs.

Those 120,000 jobs represented two-thirds of the total shortfall in employment projections which had been made. The Science Council also stated:

> These profits are stated in current dollars, the value of which decreases about 6 per cent each year. In terms of buying power, manufacturing has had progressively less to reinvest over the last six years, and now has fewer disposable funds than at any time since 1958.

We have witnessed a government which through lack of proper industrial strategy has allowed our manufacturing industry to get into a position where it cannot expand in accordance with expectations because it does not have the wherewithal, the profitability, to do so. The report concludes:

> The Science Council views with alarm the current deterioration of technology-based manufacturing industries in Canada. While we have avoided a recession in our over-all economy, something very much like a recession is now occurring in manufacturing. How temporary an effect this is we do not know; what is certain is that the condition will not improve automatically.

Hon. members will recall that in March, 1972, parliament passed a bill providing a 7 per cent reduction in corporate income tax to apply to the last half of 1971 and all of 1972. The bill giving effect to that proposal had first been announced the previous October. The 7 per cent reduction in tax applied to all corporations. For the year 1972 it meant that the general corporation tax would be at the rate of 46.5 per cent. That measure was passed, as I have stated, on March 22 and received royal assent a week later.

Forty days later, on May 8, the Minister of Finance presented his maiden budget to this House. That budget proposed a special reduced tax rate to apply to manufacturing and processing profits effective January 1, 1973. However—and I want to be sure that everyone in Canada understands this—the Minister of Finance neglected to mention in that budget speech that the general corporate tax rate was going to increase in 1973 over what it had been in 1972. I remind hon. members that in the same speech he also forgot to mention that personal income tax would increase on January 1, 1973.

In his May, 1972, budget the Minister of Finance put all the emphasis on the proposed special tax reduction for the manufacturing and processing sectors. He did not point out that the implementation of this special reduction would still see the general corporate tax rate on all profits not directly associated with manufacturing and processing increased to the old level of 49 per cent from 46.5 per cent. I think this is unforgiveable misleading of parliament. There is no reason why a minister of finance who expects the confidence of this House, the public and, most important, the business community has to be so devious in his approach.

Now, almost a year later, the Minister of Finance is still up in the air with regard to his proposal for special tax rates on the profits of manufacturing and processing industries. There is still nothing being done about the general corporate tax rate in this country. Businesses other than those in the manufacturing and processing fields will be required to pay almost 6 per cent more this year than it paid last year. The tax rate on Canadian-owned private companies earning less than $50,000 will be increased by 7 per cent in 1973 compared with 1972. The minister's proposed special rate will bring this tax down in relation to manufacturing and processing profits, if he ever gets around to implementing that provision; but for all other business profits the rate of taxation will have increased from 1972 to 1973. I should add that in February of this year the Minister of Finance did correct the personal income tax situation by reinstating the lower rate effective January 1, 1973. He proposed a cut in relation to the 1972 personal tax rates, and if he ever gets up to date with his budget bills parliament will be asked to confirm them.

The February 19 budget speech made no mention of doing away with the general corporate tax rate increase to which I have referred. One can only presume that the government fully intends this increase to apply throughout 1973, and perhaps indefinitely. After reviewing the history of previous forecasts in Benson and Turner budgets one begins to wonder about this type of devious presentation of what they are in fact doing for business. How can we expect industry and business in this country to have the confidence they should have to ensure they will indeed produce the employment we will need in future years?

Not only with regard to the handling of tax measures should the government be criticized. As a Canadian, I have been deeply concerned about the great increase in business failure in the past few years. The most recent Dun and Bradstreet report shows that 2,848 Canadian businesses went bankrupt last year. That figure is the highest in recent history. It is unequalled since the depression of 1932, when there were 2,938 failures. The difference is only 3 per cent.

This intolerable situation was treated as a priority during the recent election campaign, during the course of which my leader and myself campaigned on the basis that there should be great assistance to smaller businesses in this country. The situation had become so desperate that action in two areas was forecast in the Speech from the Throne. The two items singled out—the only two items—were as follows: first, there was to be aid to small businesses through new initiatives to strengthen management and consulting services; and, second, the provision of improved access to financing facilities by way of improvements to the machinery of the Industrial Development Bank.

Despite the continuing gap between government policy and productivity, I was greatly encouraged by that statement in the Speech from the Throne, believing that this promise of reform would at long last materialize in the budget. My faith was reaffirmed by the opening remarks in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance on February 19, as follows:

> This budget is aimed at the faster growth of our economy and the strengthening of its basic structure.

When the budget presentation ended without evidence of any satisfactory attempt to fulfil its promises, any faith I had in the government's credibility collapsed. The chicken had laid an egg—and it was not a golden egg. The net result of a myriad carefully worded Liberal promises, then, is clause 60 of Bill C-170. This clause would implement paragraph 55 of the income tax resolution, which reads as follows:

> That for the year 1972 and subsequent taxation years, the tax in respect of ineligible investments under part V of the said act shall be repealed.

This tidbit of proposed legislation might be equated with the tip of the proverbial iceberg. Speaking on behalf of all Canadians who were led to expect comprehensive legislation designed to guide us back to a firm economic footing, I can only say it is unfortunate that the greater part of this anticipated legislation remains submerged. In short, the Minister of Finance has put small business back to square one. The legislation before us seeks the repeal of a negative measure, and introduces no positive ones, in what is apparently yet another ad hoc approach of the kind so often adopted by the Trudeau government in the last five years.

The Minister of Finance is quite correct when he names unemployment and inflation as Canada's two main problems, but I suggest he is totally incapable of coming up with a solution to either problem.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal with several subjects this afternoon. However, before I do I should like to comment on the contribution of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) with regard to the special difficulties of those who live in the north. His remarks were well made. I am sure the government is aware of the need for special consideration for those who face the exceptionally high cost of living in the northern regions. We have recognized that this special situation exists by providing increased expense allowances for members of parliament who represent northern constituencies. We realize it is far more costly to travel to these locations, and travel within northern regions is also costly. Then, again, the cost of food is sharply increased by the necessity of bringing in by air so many supplies. This is on top of the present price levels with which all Canadians are becoming familiar.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) had a wonderful opportunity in the budget to deal with the economic difficulties of Canada. He might have done something, for example, to reduce the cost of housing, which is vexing so many Canadians. But he completely failed to do so. Consider the effect of the sales tax on building materials which go into a home. This is an expense which in practice is financed over a long period of time, and over the years it amounts to a great deal of money. The added cost is, in my view, a continuing inflationary factor. The government should have removed this tax, obtaining revenue from some other source if that was their preoccupation. The minister should have faced this issue squarely.

Again, the government should have addressed itself to solving some of the difficulties which beset agriculture. These can be measure by the average income of our farmers, which last year was in the neighbourhood of $5,200. The average salary of civil servants was around $8,100. Of course, we must bear in mind there are many people earning below the average income. Another measure of the difficulty facing agriculture is the fact that farmers have been leaving the land continuously for 25 years; since the last war, in fact. In the last five years we have been losing seven farmers every hour, day in and day out. This is the problem which results when farmers are disrupted and move from their surroundings. This situation adds fuel to the fire of inflation and the cost of housing in urban centres.

When considering these difficulties caused by disruption, one might expect the government to move in an effort to resolve the problem, perhaps by creating incentives to keep as many people as possible working the land. One must realize that every additional tax imposes an extra burden. When it comes to the question of capital gains tax, surely there should be an exception in respect of farms passed on from one generation to another. Surely we do not resolve these problems by imposing additional taxes.

We in the opposition have argued very strenuously against the imposition of additional taxes, particularly the imposition of capital gains tax. This government has ignored our arguments. However, since the last election it has realized it should do something about taxation. Rather than doing something constructive, the government has done a lot of window-dressing. It has given the public the impression that capital gains tax is being removed in respect of farms passing from father to son. Let me quote as follows from the highlights of the budget of Monday, February 19, 1973:

> Family farms permitted to pass from generation to generation free of capital gains tax.

Can one blame the average farmer for believing that this is true, that there is no capital gains tax on a farm passed on from one generation to another? Let us look at the actual situation, which has been adequately stated in the House. One of the best speeches in this regard was made yesterday by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis). He covered the subject thoroughly.

In view of the various interpretations of this legislation by accountants and lawyers within the department, we can well understand that there are complications in addition to those we all know. I suggest that a farmer will never see his land passed on to his son or daughter, as the case may be, because he must die before he can do so without the imposition of taxation. What I am concerned about is the statement contained in the budget to the effect that the deferral will apply only if the land is being used for farming by the taxpayer or his children at the time of the taxpayer's death and if the land is left to a child who is residing in Canada. The point is that the land must be used by the taxpayer or his children at that particular time.

If you read page 6 of the notices of ways and means motions you will find this wording:

> That where land in Canada owned by a taxpayer who died after 1971 was used in the business of farming by him, his spouse or any of his children immediately before the taxpayer's death, and upon his death is transferred or distributed to his child who was a resident of Canada immediately before the taxpayer's death, the taxpayer shall be deemed to have disposed of the land for proceeds of disposition equal to the adjusted cost base of the land immediately before his death and the child shall be deemed to have acquired the land for the same amount.

This implies there is no capital gains tax, but the fact is that many children are too old to farm and rent out the land. On many occasions farmers will rent the land as a means of supplementing a pension or other income; someone else may be doing the actual farming. That type of transfer will not be regarded as eligible for tax exemption. I do not believe the minister really wanted to deal with this matter fairly and squarely, but wanted to leave the impression that the problem was solved. At the same time, he wanted to make sure that almost everyone did not qualify for the exemption.

There are many instances where a farmer is living and would like to transfer the land to his son for the purpose of farming but the son is not able, for a number of reasons, to comply with the father's wish. The son may have children who do not wish to farm. He may be one of a number of sons, some of whom passed away before the father. This leaves the family in an awkward position. Also, the farmer's son may be too young to go into the business of farming, so the capital gains tax will be applicable. This is disadvantageous to the family farm operation.

We have heard a great deal in the last few days about the increasing cost of food. We must realize that every time taxes are imposed upon primary producers, the cost is passed on to the consumer. I remember buying a tractor 25 years ago for $2,500 and a combine for about the same price. Today, this equipment costs in the neighbourhood of $15,000. This all adds to the cost to the consumer. There is only one way the farmer can recover the increased cost of machinery, and that is by charging the consumer a higher price for his product.

We have heard about incentives. This is an area in which I disagree with the hon. member for Skeena. Surely we should be considering the opportunity for the government to do something for our farmers. Steps should be taken to reduce their over-all costs and thereby reduce the cost of food to the consumer.

I want to speak about one other aspect, that is, the method of valuation. I have directed several questions in this regard to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury). Similar questions were asked today. It has been suggested that valuation today would not be applicable at a future time. The minister said that you do not have to pay tax on the basis of valuation today. I suggest that as a result of evaluation of a farm property today, the tax will be fixed for the future, with no appeal. The result will be that ten years from now, after the death of the farmer the inheriting son will not be in a position to argue successfully with the department. It is difficult at best to argue with the department. How can someone argue ten years from now?

When the department sets up its documentation, it will sit in judgment; it will be prosecutor and judge at the same time. That is not fair. I do not think it is proper for the minister to suggest that his staff is not large enough. He suggested this would be too complicated a matter to handle. He wrote me a letter a few days ago saying he could not do what had been requested because it would perhaps mean entering businesses, and so on. This should not be a one-sided affair; it should not be stacked against the taxpayer. Surely, with all its resources, the department should not bank itself up on all sides and then try to prove we are wrong. They will not allow us to see the documents, yet they will be using the information they are preparing today. I think this is wrong. I do not think the department should follow through with the stupid capital gains tax. I do not think this country is rich enough to support it. It may be all right in respect of speculation. But this is not speculation; it is an opportunity to make a living. I think all anyone expects is such an opportunity without being saddled with this tax.

There should be a reappraisal of the tax itself. I think it should be removed. But if this Liberal government insists on retaining it, it should at least provide an opportunity for the individual to defend himself. There should be provision for a turnover from father to son while the father is still living. My grandfather died two years ago, and my father 25 years ago. There is no incentive for anyone to stay on the land. One would have to be stupid to think he would eventually become the owner. I know of many cases where the son has died before the father. As I have already pointed out, the whole tax situation will not provide an incentive for anyone to stay on the land: it only complicates the matter.

There are several other areas I would like to discuss but I shall mention only one other. That is the whole question of valuations. There should be a valuation on quotas as of V-day, as it is commonly known. That valuation should be in the same form as it was in 1971. If someone applied for a permit, and had no cost other than perhaps postage stamps or phone calls, and so on, it is not fair in respect of valuation day to expect another form to be required for purposes of the quota when it comes to dairy cattle, beef cattle, and so on. Sooner or later the government will have to change this situation. Why not do it now? Why saddle a few people with this burden when next year or several years later the government will have to come to its senses. These are some of the areas of grave concern which stand out very plainly.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-170 to amend the Income Tax Act. I should like to make a few comments to the bill and on the government's taxation policy in general.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Bill C-170 contains 140 pages of material on tax amendments. Many of them are very complicated. Some of the highlights are that it will increase the tax exemption of people 65 years of age and over from $650 to $1,000; there will be a $50 deduction per month for students in full-time attendance at secondary educational institutions; there will be some medical expenses deducted for full-time nurse or attendant care for the taxpayer, the spouse or dependant in the home. There are some changes in respect of retirement savings plan. There is also a provision in respect of the transfer of a farm to the children of a farmer on his death: this will be free of capital gains tax. There are measures in respect of small businesses, to encourage them. Such encouragement is needed in this country. There is the repeal of the ineligible investment test.

These are some examples of what is contained in the bill. In most cases these are good measures. However, I think we must examine the whole issue of taxation in this country. When we do that we must look at the relationship between corporate and individual taxes. When we look at the first seven years of budgets of the Trudeau government, we find that since 1968 individual taxes in this country have gone up by $1.5 billion whereas corporation taxes have gone down by $500 million.

It is very interesting to compare the percentage of government revenue in 1951 with the percentage of government revenue today in respect of what comes from corporations and what comes from individuals. In 1951, 29 per cent of government revenue came from corporations, and 27 per cent came from individuals. So one can see there was a fairly close relationship; each group was bearing its burden rather equally. However, in 1973, especially if the corporate tax cuts go through, only 12 per cent of government revenue will come from corporations whereas 50 per cent will come from the individuals.

When we look at the loopholes in our present system, we realize that in 1969, the last year for which we have figures available, 46 per cent of the corporations in Canada paid no federal income tax. If we made revisions and plugged some of the loopholes in respect of giveaways to corporations, we would have somewhere around $2 billion more in government revenue, which would mean we could begin to give a break to the taxpayer so that he would have more money to buy more goods and help increase the job situation in this country.

The individual pays more tax. I should like to give an example. It is true that personal income today is 26 per cent more than it was in 1969, but it is important to remember that taxes have increased by 42 per cent in the same period. An average family of four in 1969 had $9,700 after taxes and inflation are taken into account. Today, the same sized family has $10,400, or an increase of only $700. That certainly is not as impressive as the 26 per cent would indicate. Who are the victims of Canada's tax policy? When we look at the whole issue, we see that the Carter commission in 1968 undertook a thorough investigation of Canada's tax system and declared that there were many glaring inequities. The commission recommended that the whole tax system be based on the principle that a buck is a buck no matter how it is earned, whether through wages, interest, income, and so on, and we should therefore base the tax system on that principle. If you have deductions because of expense accounts, and so on, they should be calculated as income.

There are still many disparities and inequities in our tax system. For example, we know that salesmen are given a tax allowance for using their cars for business purposes. I know of supervisors at the steel plant in my riding who have to use their own cars; they travel up to 10 miles a day throughout the environs of the steel plant in order to carry out their work, but they are not given tax deductions for their use of the car, as salesmen are. There are many inequities along these lines. What happened to the recommendation of the Carter commission that the whole system be overhauled? We all know that, unfortunately, the former minister of finance, Mr. Benson, caved in to pressure, mainly from large business groups, and his so-called white paper was not carried out.

Today personal exemptions have been raised from $1,000 which was based on the 1949 cost of living. Now the taxpayer gets a $1,500 exemption for an individual, and the basic $2,000 for a married person is raised to $2,850. But here again we see an inequity. If we kept up with the cost of living, the basic exemption for an individual should not be $1,500 but $1,640; likewise, the exemption for a married couple should now be $3,280 and not $2,850. I hope the minister will look at this problem and agree that the cost of living should be included in the calculation.

Another example is a family with two children and an income of $5,000. They pay tax of $73. Under the reform, that is a saving of $137. But take the same family with two children and an income of $50,000 a year. Their taxes are $20,675, or a saving of $347. In other words, the richer you are, the more you are saving under the current tax system.

People in my riding have written to me about discrepancies. One man asked: "If people whose wives work can deduct for child care, why should he not be able to deduct for his wife taking care of his children?" That is an interesting question to which perhaps the minister could address himself at some time. There is another point. When the baby bonus, or family allowance is cut off, should an individual not be able to deduct a higher amount than the basic $300 per child? Could that not be compensated in the deduction after the allowance is cut off?

There are other examples. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) spoke about the cost of living in northern communities. I come from northern Ontario where the cost of living is very high. Could consideration not be given to a cost of living deduction in income tax to reduce the burden of people living in the north? When we look at our whole tax system we find there are many inequities.

The Economic Council of Canada has concluded that the general burden of taxation falls unfairly on low income people despite the so-called tax reform that we have heard about. The low income people have to pay, apart from the federal tax, of course, provincial sales tax which hits everybody equally no matter what their income. And, of course, there are provincial property taxes as well. The middle-class people who do not receive some of the allowances and benefits of the low income people also have to bear the burden of the tax system in this country. What we would like is a really progressive tax structure where those who are wealthy or very wealthy and are making more money should pay more tax.

There are many loopholes in this system. For example, in 1969, the last year for which I have had a survey carried out, we find that of the people earning $600,000 a year there was one person who did not pay any income tax at all because of deductions; and of the people earning $25,000 to $50,000 a year, 98 were able to escape federal income tax.

What I am asking for is not just one, two or three special corrections. I want a complete re-examination of our tax system to give more help to the lower income people and to establish a really progressive structure so that the middle-class is not bearing the whole burden, and under which the wealthy would pay their rightful share.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boulanger in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Four o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being four o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave of the House to sit again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, in the minute that is remaining could I ask the Minister of Finance if, in the event that the time on Monday is not pre-empted by any other motion, we will be proceeding with this bill in committee of the whole?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is my understanding, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT (PUBLIC ACCOUNTS)

MEASURE TO REGULARIZE CONSTITUTION AND PROCEEDINGS OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington) moved that Bill C-19, to amend the Financial Administration Act (Public Accounts), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my bill I would like to say a few words in connection with the value of the private members' hour which we have two or three times a week. It is a time allotted by parliament for a very useful purpose. I am sorry to say that it is not always well attended by hon. members. However, it does afford members an excellent opportunity to put forward ideas and suggestions. I well remember as a backbencher how it provided a great opportunity to get the feel of the House. Many important measures have been passed by the House during private members' hour. For instance, the name Trans-Canada Air Lines was changed to Air Canada as the result of a private member's bill.

I remember speaking during private members' hour several years ago when bilingual cheques were introduced as the result of a private member's motion. I also had the privilege of putting forward a private member's resolution which brought about the parliamentary internship program which is now in its third year and has proven very satisfactory around Parliament Hill.

This bill on which I am about to speak deals with the public accounts committee. It is proposed as a reform measure to regularize the constitution and proceedings of that most important of committees, the public accounts committee. When speaking to this bill I would like to emphasize two very important principles. First, the executive should have no income which is not granted to it or otherwise sanctioned by parliament. Second, the executive should have no expenditures except those approved by parliament, in wages approved by parliament. The observation of these principles would be impossible were it not for the existence of a variety of rules, customs, devices and institutions. One of these institutions is the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, which is parliament's own auditing committee, responsible for scrutinizing the use or misuse of public funds.

Today, as the size and complexity of the federal government increase, the task of this committee grows more crucial if the principles of responsible government are to be safeguarded. By a year from now, March 31, 1974, the federal government, with more than 284,000 employees, will pay out roughly $10 billion for goods and services, and $6.5 billion in grants and contributions, along with supplementary estimates that are likely to come forward. This will mean a total expenditure of approximately $20 billion. It is the role of parliament, and of the public accounts committee in particular, to ensure that these sums of money authorized by parliament annually are being utilized in the ways parliament intended.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

Let us look at some of the weaknesses in the parliamentary control of public funds. In Canada, the different stages in the administrative process of public expenditures are laid down in the Financial Administration Act. Among other things, the act ensures the public accounts and the report of the Auditor General are laid before parliament each year. This is all set out by statute. What parliament does with the public accounts and the Auditor General's report is not laid down by any statute and depends entirely on custom and the business priorities of the government. This has resulted in a weakening of parliament's control over public funds and in the increasing and unchallenged power of the executive. Furthermore, it has seriously reduced the effectiveness and efficiency of the public accounts committee.

The Canadian system of control of public expenditures, like any chain of command, is no stronger than its weakest link. The purpose of this bill is to strengthen the weakest link, namely, parliament's scrutiny of public funds. The House of Commons, through this committee, should be able to scrutinize thoroughly and without impediment the accounts of Canada and the annual report of the Auditor General, and present to the House for debate reports which empower the executive to take action, thereby completing the cycle of parliamentary control.

What are some of the weaknesses in the House rules? Under the Standing Orders, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts must be struck within a given time at the commencement of the first session of each parliament. Unlike the other committees of the House which must have the estimates referred to them, the public accounts committee may never be called or given an order of reference by the government should it not be in the interest of the government to do so. The executive does not have to organize the committee and does not have to refer anything to it.

May I give just a few examples of the delays that have occurred in the work of the public accounts committee. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is up to the government House leader to call the organization meetings of all committees of the House, including the public accounts committee. In the twenty-sixth parliament, the opening was May 16, 1963, and the organization meeting of the public accounts committee was not held until October 16. In other words, six months elapsed before the committee was even organized. From the opening of the twenty-seventh parliament on January 18, 1966, to the organization meeting on March 1, 1966, two months elapsed. That was not so bad. From the opening of the twenty-eighth parliament on May 8, 1967, to the organization meeting on May 5, 1968, 12 months elapsed. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, a whole year went by before the public accounts committee was called for an organization meeting! From the opening of the twenty-ninth parliament, the present parliament, on January 4 of this year, to the organization meeting on March 14, two and a half months elapsed.

What about the reference of work to the public accounts committee? From the opening of the twenty-sixth parliament on May 16, 1963, to the first reference in May, 1964, a year elapsed. From the opening of the second session of the twenty-seventh parliament on May 8, to the first reference to the committee, several months elapsed. The present parliament opened on January 4 and there has been no reference of any work to the public accounts committee since then. Three months have elapsed. Yet that committee is behind in its work; it has not yet finished the 1971 report of the Auditor General. The Auditor General's report for 1968 was tabled on March 16, 1969, and was referred to the committee on April 16, 1969. Only one month elapsed. Only the first volume of the 1969 report was referred to the committee. Apparently, from the records that I have been able to locate, the second volume was never referred to the committee.

The Auditor General's 1970 report was tabled on June 4, 1971, and was referred to the committee on September 22 of the same year. So there is still delay between the time the Auditor General tables his report and when it is referred to the committee. I will refer to these delays later in my speech. This practice has weakened parliament's responsibility as the guardian of the public purse and, furthermore, the responsibility of the public accounts committee to examine critically public expenditures.

Under the present rules, committee reports may be presented to the House by committee chairmen. They may be concurred in and debated. It is very seldom done, but they could be. It has been the experience of the public accounts committee that its reports have been tabled with little or no debate. This may be the result of the committee's limited power to secure orders of reference and government recognition.

The committee has no power to enforce the implementation of its own recommendations; it is entirely dependent upon the will of the executive. In Britain, the treasury has the responsibility of reporting to the public accounts committee the status of outstanding recommendations and their effective implementation. The Treasury Board of Canada does not have this responsibility unless directed by the cabinet. There are some other limitations. Attendance and participation at committee meetings pose problems for members with many parliamentary commitments and, in turn, the detailed attention they can give to the committee's inquiries. There is a growing need for research assistance and professional services to facilitate the committee in its work.

What are the solutions? There are two or three possible ways of dealing with the problems. First, amend the statute, the Financial Administration Act; second, amend the Standing Orders of the House of Commons; third, deal with the problems by a separate bill or an act. I have chosen to introduce a bill, but it is immaterial to me how the change is brought about, Mr. Speaker.

I know that the Australian government has had a committee of public accounts act since 1913 and it has worked very well. I have had the opportunity of visiting the standing committee on public accounts in Australia and talking with the chairman and secretary. I also have had the privilege of sitting in at a meeting of the United Kingdom public accounts committee. Both these committees work and are organized under a statute. Unlike Australia, the public accounts committee in Britain receives its authority from a specific British House of Commons standing order No. 86. In both Australia and Great Britain the public accounts committee has specific terms of reference. The Canadian committee, on the other hand, observes the general terms contained in the Standing Orders along with other standing committees of the House. They are just general terms.

What are my recommendations, Mr. Speaker? The purpose of Bill C-19 is to ensure that the responsibilities traditionally handed down to the public accounts committee are safeguarded by statute. Presently they are not. They should be. Therefore, it is recommended that the bill include the following four main points: first, the public accounts committee personnel shall automatically be chosen and organized during the first 15 working days of each session of parliament. The Standing Orders of the House set out that the members must be chosen at the commencement of each session, but there is nothing to say that an organization meeting must be held. As I have proven by dates, we have had lapses of up to a year between the day the members were chosen and the organization meeting was held.

Second, the chairman of that committee, unlike the chairman of other parliamentary committees, shall not be a member of the party forming the government, but shall be a member of the official opposition. This is the system we have at the present time but there is nothing in the statute to say it should be that way. In the Australian and British systems it is laid down by statute. Third, the public accounts of income and expenditure, and the Auditor General's report shall automatically be referred to the public accounts committee as soon as they are tabled in the House, and not be delayed from such reference and study at the whim of the government of the day. I am looking at this in a non-partisan way. I am looking at it as a long-term statute for this parliament of Canada, no matter what party is in power. I feel that these principles should all be laid down by statute and there should not be as much power given to the executive as there is at the present time.

Fourth, all recommendations made by the public accounts committee to parliament shall be reported on annually, or sooner, by the responsible minister upon action taken by him or the Treasury Board. This would make it compulsory that the recommendations made by the committee should be handled and reported within a year. I do not care which method is used, Mr. Speaker, whether it is the Financial Administration Act, Standing Orders of the House of Commons or a separate bill. One thing I do know, however, is that if the public accounts committee is to perform the function it was meant to perform, it should be independent of the executive and set up by statute as it is in Australia and the United Kingdom.

I hope my bill is not talked out, but if there is a feeling that there should be more discussion on it, I will agree to whatever the House decides. I should like to have it referred to the finance committee or the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, however, so that they could decide which form the statute should take.

It is very important, as I see it, that in the years that lie ahead we should follow the proven and tested system which other countries have used. We are operating under a sort of hearsay operation, a sort of tradition. There is nothing laid down by statute, and I sincerely feel there should be. It was with that line of thought that I introduced Bill C-19.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to make my modest contribution to the study of Bill-19 to amend the Financial Administration Act (Public Accounts) introduced by my excellent friend the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales). The hon. member guided my first steps in the House and in the Public Accounts Committee after my first election in 1970. We became friends through this association and I have had the privilege of visiting Guelph the splendid city of his birth. I hold the hon. member in high esteem. I should like to tell him that I sympathise with his complaints and his desire to find some way to accelerate the proceedings of the committee, to alter or reform it and make it more efficient in order to be able to study various public account items and the report of the Auditor General with greater care and attention than at present. In my opinion, that bill is precisely meant to make the committee more efficient. Several reasons have been put forward by my colleague, the sponsor of the bill, to explain why the proceedings of the committee are not carried out as quickly as expected.

He broached a few points, and if I am allowed to do so, I would like to state a few reasons why the proceedings of that committee have often been delayed. While I do not have his experience as a member of that committee, I wish just the same to give some information. I wish to point out in the first place the delayed tabling of the Auditor General's report whose consideration is the main item in the order of reference from the House. And that report—as stipulated in the statutes— must be tabled fifteen days after parliament reconvenes or the beginning of a session. And three months and a half will soon have elapsed since Parliament reconvened and as we know, that report has not been tabled yet. And this is the sixth year, if I remember correctly, that we are unable to get that report.

The Auditor General has been saying every year since I became a member of that committee that for all kinds of reasons, it was hard for him to hire staff, that the government, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and many other things were to blame, but never his incompetence or his inability to get the necessary staff, since it is up to him to recruit the staff he needs to discharge his duties.

While discussing the matter with some of his colleagues who have left and others who are still serving under him, several gave a few reasons to explain the delay in tabling the report or the difficulties experienced by the Auditor General in getting and keeping a staff.

Of course, in a service like his, as in any other organization, there is a certain percentage of the staff that cannot practically be retained, while in a private enterprise of a similar nature, if after five years business is successful and one has been able to keep 50 per cent of his staff, it means that he is a good boss and that the staff is well paid. On the other hand, in the public service, I am told that the staff stability rate is much higer than in the Auditor General's office. There are surely reasons for this. As a matter of fact, we examined the different reasons that were given by various people in connection with this position and it was said that the employees did not enjoy the same job security as those in the public service because they were operating within a very restricted perimeter. The staff numbers perhaps 200 at best. The public service has thousands of civil servants on its payroll and so offers much more opportunities to those with ambition.

Recruiting opportunities have never been rejected. Each year all the budgets introduced were examined and never submitted to amendments or restrictions. If the Auditor General was requesting additional credits to hire personnel he was never refused and was thus able to ensure the renewal and training of his personnel and his department was as efficient as the House and the government were entitled to expect it to be and because this department should operate as well as all the other federal bodies.

In my opinion this explains why committee business has often been delayed. This most serious reason explains why the report is tabled late each year.

• (1620)

[English]

I have a few other reservations about the bill, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to deal with them. I should like, first, to mention that this statutory authority perhaps may be desirable but I am surprised at the choice my colleague made, namely, the Financial Administration Act. His proposal is most surprising, since the Auditor General is a servant of parliament and should not be appointed under legislation generally administered by the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board. I also looked into the Australian arrangement and have found that the public accounts committee in Australia is a joint committee; it is composed of members of the Senate and members of the House of Commons. On the other hand, our public accounts committee is composed solely of members of the House of Commons.

The bill also provides for the chairman to be a member of the opposition. This practice has been followed in our committee but it is not a matter of statute; it is a matter of convention. It has always been so. It is our tradition that the chairman of the public accounts committee shall be a member of the official opposition party. I agree with this convention. It is a good one and we have the good fortune of having an excellent chairman, as I said at the beginning of my remarks.

I have other concerns respecting the proposed bill and I should like to deal with them. One of my concerns relates to the powers conferred on this committee and the provisions set out in proposed sections 55G to 55S. I believe it might be extremely prejudicial to the ordinarily understood constitutional position of ministers with respect to parliament to insert in this statute authority which might be interpreted as requiring a minister to appear and produce documents. I should like, as well, to draw attention to the effect of conferring the powers in question on a committee of the House, since the result may be that we should confer on such a committee greater power than that possessed by parliament itself. Indeed, if any thought is given to proceeding with this legislation, I would suggest that it be referred formally to the Department of Justice so that they may have a look at the implications and various aspects of the bill.

After providing for the establishment of the committee, there are in the bill just two sections dealing with the duties of the committee and its modus operandi through subcommittees. Following that, the greater part of the proposed legislation deals with procedures for taking evidence, offences and penalties. The provisions for offences and penalties are not consistent with section 92, the section of the Financial Administration Act which deals with offences and penalties.

I should now like to deal with section 55E(1)(c), which speaks of the form of "the public accounts or in the method of keeping them". This is Australian wording and, within the context of the Financial Administration Act, creates a failure to differentiate between the accounts of Canada and the public accounts. In section 55E(2), where the words "shall report annually or sooner if he desires" appear, since the word "annually" covers a period of time rather than a fixed point in time, the word "sooner" would need to be replaced by a word or expression such as "more frequently". This particular subsection does not appear in the Australian legislation, I might add. Further, in section 55E(2) the words "Minister responsible for that department" would need to be replaced by the words "appropriate minister", the approved terminology of the Financial Administration Act.

I should also like to refer to section 55Q, which is intended as an authority for expenditures. Except for the last six words, the section is taken from the Australian act and would not appear to be an appropriate matter for a private member's bill under Canadian parliamentary practice. I suppose this is realized, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there may be many more reasons why we should improve the operation of this committee. Perhaps we should find a way of changing the whole parliamentary system; but that is another problem.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give brief support to Bill C-19, introduced by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales). I will give brief support because, like the sponsor of the bill, I am anxious for these proposals to come at least before the committee so that, hopefully, they can be put into effect.

I will be very brief in my remarks, Mr. Speaker. In a very few words, this bill can be described as one which seeks to add independence and power to the work of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. That means adding power for the good work of that committee, on behalf of parliament and the public, in which it is engaged whenever it has the opportunity to block the loopholes through which many millions of dollars have escaped in unproductive expenditures—in other words, waste.

The hon. member who introduced this bill knows very well whereof he speaks. As has been indicated, he has been and, hopefully, will continue to be chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. He is an excellent chairman in every respect. I think he adds to his excellency in that capacity by the bill he has introduced.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mather: As the hon. member for Wellington suggested, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts is one of the most important committees of parliament. It deals with the public's money and tries to make the best use of the money provided by the public through taxes. I think the hon. member for Wellington and others will agree that, at best, we are being guided through the labrynth of ever expanding governmental responsibilities and expenditures by the Auditor General, on one hand, and the chairman of our committee on the other.

While engaged in very important work, the committee can hardly do justice to the very important financial matters that come before it. What we are doing in that committee as it is presently constituted, and with the limited powers it has, is touching the peak of the iceberg of public expenditures. It is a multibillion dollar iceberg. We are doing our best, with the aid of the Auditor General and his officials, to probe the tip of that iceberg.

I believe the committee would benefit by the proposals put forward by the hon. member. The committee is in a very strategic position. It could do more, with a little more independence, to effect great savings and make better use of the public's money. I support in particular the proposal in this bill which calls upon Treasury Board to require a report, at its disposition, of the anti-waste recommendations of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts within a reasonable time. At present, after many hearings and doing as well as we can, we make recommendations some of which go unanswered or are hardly acknowledged and certainly are not put into effect for years. This is a waste of public money. If Treasury Board were required to prepare a report, at its disposition, on what action the different departments have taken on the recommendations of the public accounts committee, this would be an excellent step forward.

There are one or two other points which would be of benefit to the committee and parliament if they were adopted or considered in line with this bill. The public accounts committee should have a permanent secretary to improve the continuity of its work. The committee is faced with many detailed and complex financial matters. It should have the benefit of at least two qualified research people to help in its deliberations. I agree with the hon. member who introduced this bill that it would be most beneficial to have the government, through Treasury Board, acknowledge the recommendations of the committee and their disposition.

I do not want to take much more time. I would like to see this bill sent to the appropriate committee for consideration and action. To strengthen the public accounts committee and help it to do better work is not sufficient. I believe that at least every ten years there should be an in-depth and in-breadth investigation of the structure of the Canadian government and its responsibilities and ever growing expenditures. I believe the last such investigation was carried out ten years ago. In view of the great expansion of government expenditures within the last ten years, the time is ripe for an in-depth and in-breadth examination of the whole structure of the functions of the government and the spending of public money.

This would do more to probe the tip of the iceberg, which is important enough and which is really the function as the committee is presently constituted, which the public accounts committee carries out. We need something more basic. We need to examine the continuing waste of public money as well as the consequences of it. I take my seat in the hope that the bill will proceed to a committee for action.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on Bill C-19, entitled an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act and deal more particularly with the Public Accounts Committee its constitution and the procedure it should follow.

I believe that all the speakers have recognized the importance of that committee, whose duties are to supervise and scrutinize government expenses, besides analysing as minutely as possible the Auditor General's report.

The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) recommends the adoption of this bill after consideration in the House. At the same time he points out how weak parliamentary control over government expenses is. I must say that even if that control can appear weak from many standpoints, it is nevertheless essential to the operation of any democracy. My colleague the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) has dealt at some length with the matter of the Auditor General's annual report, which is almost always tabled late, and this under all sorts of pretences. Now, I would hope that with a new Auditor General, new rules and a new legislation on the operation of the public accounts committee, we might in the near future get those reports on time, so that we may analyze and study them and make the necessary recommendations each year.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) has suggested that the Treasury Board report on the results obtained following the changes introduced as a consequence of the inquiries conducted by the Auditor General in the discharge of his duties. I believe that this is a very good idea which the house should perhaps consider. As to his suggestion that we secure the services of a permanent staff, especially those of a secretary and qualified research personnel, I believe that it is a wise one which could contribute to immensely improve the work of the committee.

It might also be good for members of the committee themselves to be as permanent, if possible, at least for the span of a parliament.

The mover of Bill C-19 wants to strengthen the power of the committee to scrutinize government expenditures and in fact it all boils down to strengthening the power of Parliament to scrutinize government expenditures. The purpose of the bill is good: the hon. member pointed out several weaknesses in the operation of that committee. For example, he talked about the delays in establishing the committee and he went back to the 25th Parliament but I think that if he had gone further back he would have found the same delays that we have today and which can be due to a host of circumstances beyond the control of either the government or parliament.

Evidently, we are having difficulties due sometimes to a host of circumstances in all committees and I wonder if it is need for special legislation or if by simply reviewing the procedure we could not reach the same result.

Mention has been made of committee chairmen who by tradition in Canada are members of the opposition. It is obvious that it is not in the books but I think that precedents and traditions in our parliamentary system will always be respected. I think that budget estimates and public accounts should be referred as sson as possible to the committee for examination as well as the report of the Auditor General which, hopefully, in the future will be submitted within a prescribed time limit.

There is often concern about the fact that the recommandations of the Committee on Public Accounts are not taken into consideration by the government and that there are delays perhaps more or less warranted before immediate action is taken. I think that there is good understanding within the committee. I have had the pleasure to sit on it on several occasions; I think in spite of everything that can be said that it is one of the committees with the best records and who is doing an excellent job, although there are obviously some difficulties. In spite of that, I think all the committee members would agree that the chairman, whom I have known since I have been a Member of Parliament, is doing an excellent job and deserves the congratulations of all his colleagues. As was pointed out earlier, the hon. member for Wellington will remain chairman of the committee on public accounts for as long as he is a Member of Parliament and of the opposition.

I should like to end my remarks by saying that it is obvious that the more independent a committee, the more independent his members and the better the work done, bearing in mind the political context in which we live. In this committee especially, most of the time there is an absence of partisanship that makes me hope that in spite of all the difficulties and disadvantages that is has to face, the committee on public accounts will continue to do the work expected of it to the satisfaction, I would think, of the large majority of members.

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) for bringing this measure before us. The functioning of the standing committees of the House of Commons has been engaging our attention for some time. Indeed, it would seem that the whole committee system is under attack at the present time, since it is trying to operate under circumstances which were not envisaged. Consequently, we are discovering that there are imperfections in our rules giving rise to difficulties which will probably have to be fought out on the floor of this chamber.

The problem is self-evident and it is one which will not be easily resolved. It is one which I hope will be discussed in detail in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. At the present time, this committee is engaged in studying the estimates of the House of Commons but, hopefully, when these have been dealt with it will turn to the larger question of the rules governing these committees and the way in which they relate to the House of Commons.

I wish to say a few words on the proposition the hon. member for Wellington has advanced. It has to do not only with the public accounts committee; it seems to involve the relationship of the Auditor General with the House of Commons and parliament in general as well as the question of the appointment of a new Auditor General. Hon. members will no doubt recall that a number of proposals have been put forward as part of a possible new legislative enactment to govern the activities of the Auditor General. A recommendation was put forward some time ago by the public accounts committee itself. It was not acceptable to the House of Commons and so far we have not been able to resolve this dilemma. It would seem to me, however, that the new Auditor General might make recommendations acceptable both to the public accounts committee and to the House of Commons. For this reason I believe the period following the appointment of the new Auditor General would be a much more suitable time at which to legislate the responsibilities in question.

The Financial Administration Act is not a particularly suitable vehicle for this purpose since it deals with the financial responsibilities of Crown corporations and other federal agencies. If we were to insert artificially a description of the role and functions of the public accounts committee, I believe we would be stretching the scope of the act somewhat too far. Indeed, we would be guilty of a crime with which the government was accused last session, that of trying to insert too many pieces of legislation under the title of one bill. I have in mind omnibus bills which the government introduced in past sessions. Hopefully, this practice will not be continued.

I want to draw the attention of hon. members to the delicacy with which we must approach this question. Although the successor to the former Auditor General has been named, he will not assume his duties until some time in July. In the meantime his position is being filled by the Assistant Auditor General. Consequently, it seems to me that until the new Auditor General has had an opportunity to look into his new responsibilities and to read the past minutes of the public accounts committee when the Auditor General's Act was discussed, and indeed to read this debate, it would be somewhat presumptuous of us to give second reading to this proposal and send it to a committee for discussion before the new Auditor General had taken up his position. It seems to me that the least we can do in these circumstances in which we are in transit from one Auditor General to another is to display the courtesy of waiting for him to take control of that position and to make recommendations to the public accounts committee.

I feel it would be far better for the Auditor General to make recommendations to the public accounts committee and for the committee, as a result of studies it has engaged in over the past several years, to make recommendations to this House. I recognize, as I am sure other hon. members do, that this transfer is an onerous one. I think in all justice, also, that hon. members will recognize that the position of Auditor General is a matter of some contention between various parties in the House of Commons.

It may well be that even an act of parliament on the Auditor General written in God's own hand would not be acceptable to hon. members of the House. It does seem to me that until we have reached a reasonable agreement in the House of Commons as to the development of the Auditor General's position under an Auditor General's act, we would be presumptuous in moving forward with this proposal. What I am suggesting is that we should not move forward on a piecemeal basis, but instead should march forward with a co-ordinated and logical approach to the whole problem.

The dilemma hon. members have in coping with the estimates of the government is illustrated most profusely in the way in which committee activities have taken place this year. Hon. members know that the entire estimates of the government are referred to standing committees and that these standing committees have until the end of May to complete their detailed study of the estimates. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts finds itself in a different role. It is designed to receive and report upon the findings of the Auditor General. The role of this standing committee could be competitive but it is designed to be co-ordinative and co-operative.

Our dilemma, as a result of the committee system at the present time, is that Members of Parliament find it takes a great deal of time to carry out the work which has to be done in criticizing the spending of the government in a detailed and precise way. It strikes me that this is not the fault of the structure of the committee system as it now stands but is a problem of the individual member of parliament. We often hear in the House of Commons that there is no time for the House to properly and seriously examine governmental spending. In point of fact, there is ample time under our present system, having regard to the supply motion, allocated days and the time allotted for specific examination under other motions.

Your Honour will note that this is not the approach hon. Members of Parliament take. Very seldom do they come forward with detailed plans to eliminate government spending. Instead, the general tenor of the debates since the last election has been for the government to extend its spending in a whole series of trends; in respect of increased pensions to senior citizens and veterans, increased welfare payments, increased subsidies to farmers and corporations, and increased payments for education. The House of Commons is never free of requests for increased governmental expenditures. However, the real skinflint of the parliamentary system is not the opposition, not the members of the government backbenchers and not the members of the small parties; the actual skinflint is the Minister of Finance and the cabinet, not individual members seeking to have the government increase spending programs.

Your Honour has properly drawn to the attention of the House of Commons the fact that in the third report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development it is suggested the government make grants to the Native Council of Canada, I believe it is to provide proper research facilities to examine aboriginal claims. I am sure that members of the House of Commons will agree that this is a laudable aim. However, there is a procedural point in respect of whether a committee of the House can recommend to the House of Commons an expenditure of money without royal recommendation or the recommendation of a minister. This is a very serious procedural point and I give notice that when such motions are brought forward, some hon. members on this side will argue it.

The point I am trying to make is that not only do members make such recommendations in the normal course of their duties; they seek out opportunities which, in my opinion, are clearly not allowed by the rules, and continually importune the House of Commons to authorize further expenditures. Each member comes to the House of Commons with ideas that are perfectly sensible, reasonable and logical. Very few members come here to suggest that we must cut back expenditures in respect of specific items or departments. The problem, therefore, has become one of tradition in the House of Commons. The idea of cutting expenditures has evaporated and now we are continually seeking increased expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour allotted for private members' business has now expired.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

GRAIN

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE OF WHEAT AND BARLEY TO RUSSIA

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the House that the Canadian Wheat Board has signed contracts covering the sale of some $200 million worth of Canadian grains to the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics.

The wheat contract covers a total of 1.5 million metric tons, or some 58 million bushels. This will include a variety of grades of spring wheat and durums. The barley sale amounts to 500,000 metric tons, which is approximately 24 million bushels.

The grains will be shipped through east and west coast ports and for the first time, I am pleased to say, through our northern port of Churchill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased to hear the announcement by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. However, what concerns western farmers is the eventual price they will receive. It is hard to know what the return will be. It is interesting to note that the latest report from Statistics Canada indicates that western farmers intend to plant some four million acres less than recommended by the government. There is great concern in western Canada about all the unknown factors.

I would like to hear the minister clarify as soon as possible some of the guidelines regarding who will be eligible to vote in the forthcoming vote on whether oilseeds should be sold through the Wheat Board, as well as clarify the whole feed grain situation in western Canada. The western feed grain growers are in a quandary. They do not know whether the eastern market will be protected. I hope the minister will clarify some of these matters soon.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the minister's announcement. The other day in the committee the Minister of Agriculture said he would like to have the job of looking after the Wheat Board, and I did not know how quickly the two ministers were going to make the switch. Apparently the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is still on the job and has negotiated another sale to the Soviet Union. I only hope that we can produce enough grain to meet these and other commitments. I also hope that the weather will be favourable and that there will be enough moisture to produce the kind of crops we need on the acreages we have.

I think that transportation again needs maximum attention from the minister to enable us to develop a rail system that will move our grains effectively. I am very pleased that the government is planning to make greater use of the port of Churchill. This will help to make up for some of the traffic taken away when the job of supplying northern stations was moved from Churchill to Montreal. If the minister has some influence, perhaps he could also restore this traffic and thus improve the over-all situation.

So far as planting is concerned, I think the farmers are reacting to the relatively dry conditions in western Canada. Hopefully, this situation will improve and result in much greater planting. With regard to price, perhaps the minister might develop the habit of telling parliament and the farmers the price at which he is selling our wheat. This might be helpful.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, first I must thank the minister for sending us a French copy of the statement which he has just made. As I would rather congratulate than blame, I am pleased to discharge my responsibilities, especially since my point of order was rather strangely reported in newspapers last week. Therefore, I hope that they will report my comments today as being a compliment to a minister of the Crown.

This being so, I would like to make some brief remarks on the minister's statement that a rather considerable quantity of grain will be exported to Russia. This clearly shows that Canada is in a position, when wisely developing its natural wealth, especially its soil, to contribute to feed mankind.

I am very pleased with this sale which will contribute not only to feed part of mankind but also to expand further agriculture in Canada. However, I would like to point out to the government that if we want to keep on exporting so that we may help feed mankind we must not neglect our important and basic industry, namely the agricultural industry.

And, in conclusion, I would also like to point out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that Canada could find it beneficial to engage on a larger scale in stock-farming so as to use up our grain and put us in a rather favourable competing position, thus preventing us from having to import more meat when it is possible to increase such production at home.

Anyway, I am most pleased by such a transaction and I am convinced that all Canadians will benefit from it.

Again I congratulate the minister for his interest in this matter, though I maintain my position and suggest once more that the Canadian Wheat Board be put under the immediate responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—KILLING OF MEMBER OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TO SUPERVISORY COMMISSION—STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my very sad duty officially to inform the House that Captain Charles Eugene Laviolette of the Canadian Armed Forces, on assignment to the Canadian delegation to the International Commission of Control and Supervision, was killed in the line of duty on Saturday, April 7, when the International Commission helicopter in which he was a passenger crashed near Lao Bao in Viet Nam with the loss of all nine persons on board. I know that all members of the House, and all Canadians, join with the government in extending sincere condolences to the wife and family of Captain Laviolette and share their deep sense of grief at this tragic event which has befallen them.

The sadness and grief caused by this incident do not affect Canadians only. One Indonesian officer and two Hungarian officers were also killed, as were two Americans and one Filippino, crew members on the helicopter, and two Viet Cong or PRG liaison officials accompanying the party. We are relieved, however, that the other two Canadians, Captain R. L. Parsons and Master Corporal J. M. R. Laplante, who were passengers in another helicopter on the same mission which went to the aid of the stricken aircraft, are now safe in good health.

The Canadian government deplores this tragic and unnecessary incident which, according to preliminary investigation and reports, was the result of a hostile act directed, either deliberately or by mistake, against helicopters which were clearly marked with ICCS insignia. One helicopter was struck by a missile fired from the ground, presumably by the party in whose area of occupation the incident occurred, while it was approaching Lao Bao on an ICCS mission. This happened despite the fact that all the safety procedures and precautions designed specifically to prevent such incidents had been carefully followed. The team had secured the Viet Cong's assurances of safe passage, as witnessed by the presence of two of their representatives on the stricken helicopter, and according to our information the helicopters did not stray from the designated flight corridor to which these assurances of safety specifically applied.

I wish to state as clearly and as forcefully as possible, Mr. Speaker, the conviction of the Canadian government that absolutely no circumstances should ever justify the firing upon personnel of the International Control Commission by any of the belligerents. Even if these helicopters had strayed off course, which all the evidence available to us denies, the penalty for losing one's way in the cause of peace should not be death at the hands of one of the signatories to the Paris Peace Agreement.

While we were under no illusions at the start of our participation in the ICCS concerning the dangers that existed for Canadian personnel in Viet Nam, we have advocated and, we believed, had secured adequate safety and security measures in the field, based largely on trust in the assurances the ICCS is given by the parties involved in each particular case. However, the circumstances of this incident and the events which followed, particularly the hindrances encountered by the commission in its efforts to locate and bring aid to ICCS personnel on the missing aircraft, are such that they jeopardize this trust, even to the point of questioning the ability of the PRG representative in Saigon to speak for all of the military formations occupying the area in question. It cannot but have an effect on the future operations of the ICCS in the deployment of its teams and its investigatory capacities and, as a result, on the attitude of the Canadian government.

The International Commission is still attempting to carry out a detailed investigation of the incident and, until it is completed, not all details will be known. In the meantime, however, I wish to provide the House with the following information, as we have it to date, on events leading up to Saturday's tragedy, what we know of the incident itself, and what has passed since.

May I at this point apologize to the spokesmen for the other parties that I was not able to get this statement into their hands earlier. It was in the course of being revised right up to the last moment on the basis of the latest information.

Under article 4(d) of the protocol on international supervision, attached to the 1973 Paris Agreement, Lao Bao is a specifically designated team site of the ICCS. According to the agreement, the Lao Bao team was to have been in place and operational within at least 30 days after the agreement was signed. However, for a variety of reasons, it was not until March 17 that the first helicopter reconnaissance visit took place to Lao Bao, via Quang Tri and Gio Linh. For this visit the necessary assurances of safety were received from the Vietnamese parties involved and the Viet Cong provided liaison officials to accompany the ICCS team. A second reconnaissance visit was planned for April 5, to see if the Lao Bao facilities were ready for ICCS occupation, but it was abandoned when the Viet Cong liaison personnel were prevented by officials of the Republic of Viet Nam at Quang Tri from boarding the helicopter.

This reconnaissance flight was rescheduled for April 7; on the morning of April 7, at Quang Tri, with clearances and safety guarantees for the flight received from both the South Vietnamese and Viet Cong authorities, the crew of ICCS helicopters Nos. 006 and 115 were carefully briefed by Captain Parent on the exact routing designated by the Viet Cong as being safe for travel to Lao Bao. The two helicopters left Quang Tri at nine o'clock in the morning on April 7 for Gio Linh, where two Viet Cong liaison personnel boarded helicopter 006 and a third boarded helicopter 115. The helicopters departed at 11.15 and proceeded along the route designated by the Viet Cong, from Gio Linh to Dong Ha, and from Dong Ha toward Lao Bao following highway nine at a pre-arranged altitude of 1,000 meters within the agreed corridor two kilometers either side of highway nine. At ten minutes before noon, helicopter 115 reported that it was in its final approach to Lao Bao. Approximately three minutes later the ICCS team in Quang Tri received a transmission from the helicopter to the effect that one was receiving ground fire and that the other helicopter had been hit by a missile and was going down.

Canadian personnel aboard the surviving helicopter confirm that their helicopter was fired upon at this time. They report that it took evasive action and landed in a hamlet on highway nine, from where they walked to the crash site of the other helicopter, about two kilometers away. There is therefore no reason to believe that either helicopter was outside the flight corridor at the time of the incident, and the weather conditions were excellent. The helicopter which landed safely was fired upon with small arms after it was on the ground, where its ICCS markings could not have been mistaken.

The PRG authorities in Quang Tri have issued their own account of what they call "the accident". They claim that the two helicopters were at least 25 kilometers, that is, about 15 miles, away from the approved flight corridor when helicopter No. 006 was shot down. The statement maintains that they had been this far off course for 40 minutes.

Within minutes the commission's regional headquarters at Hue were informed of the radio distress report and were told that there had been subsequent loss of contact. Immediately, Canadian and other ICCS personnel began common efforts in Quang Tri and in Saigon to get information on what had happened, and most important, to launch a search and rescue mission.

All efforts were to no avail. At Quang Tri, about 40 miles away, Colonel McLeod, commander of the Canadian forces in ICCS region one, contacted representatives of the Viet Cong, which claims to be the party in control of the area of the incident, who were across the river from Quang Tri. During the course of the afternoon of April 7, he was three times refused permission to proceed by either land or air to Lao Bao. He was eventually informed early in the evening of April 7 that necessary arrangements for safe passage to Lao Bao could not be made. Later he was told that one helicopter had landed safely, but that the other had, and I quote, "met with an accident". The PRG or Viet Cong representative would give no information on casualties or on the condition of the personnel involved.

In Saigon, while General McAlpine and his three colleagues on the military committee of the ICCS left for Hue to conduct the inquiry personally, similar attempts were being made to secure information from the PRG or Viet Cong delegation to the two-party Joint Military Commission. These efforts, which involved a three-hour meeting between the PRG representatives and the Indonesian chairman acting on behalf of the commission, also failed. The Viet Cong would not permit a proffered American search and rescue operation to proceed from Thailand as the commission had requested, and they refused to provide liaison officers for any search organized by the ICCS, although helicopters were standing by. Nor would they give any information on the personnel involved. Almost 24 hours after the incident, the best that could be obtained from the Viet Cong was a letter to the commission confirming that one helicopter had "met with an accident", and that the PRG was organizing its own search and rescue operations.

By this time General McAlpine had proceeded from Hue to Quang Tri with other members of the ICCS military committee where, on the morning of April 8, he met with the same PRG representative who had refused Colonel McLeod permission the day before to go to Lao Bao. The Viet Cong representative reported, at last, that all those aboard one helicopter had been killed in the "accident", but he still either could not or would not say which helicopter was involved. General McAlpine was also told that the Viet Cong were bringing out the dead and survivors to Gio Linh that evening, and that he and his colleagues should proceed there to receive them. Early in the morning of April 9, which was yesterday afternoon by our time, General McAlpine received the Canadian survivors and we are able to positively identify, for the first time, which helicopter had been shot down. As I mentioned above, the survivors were examined medically and found to be in good condition.

We have been informed by the Canadian representative on the military committee of the ICCS, Major General McAlpine, that when the so-called PRG officially handed over the bodies and survivors on the morning of April 9 at Gio Linh, it made an attempt to have the ICCS military committee sign a prepared statement claiming that the helicopters were off course and that the incident was an accident. The ICCS military committee quite rightly refused to meet such an outrageous demand.

From the reports which we have received, however, it is understood that before they were released, the surviving passengers and crew of the helicopter had been required to sign statements prepared by the PRG that they were off course, and that it was implied that if they refused they might not be returned to ICCS authorities. I understand that the survivors did sign the statements; I am sure that hon. members will make no mistake about the value of such statements signed under these circumstances.

In the meantime, the commission is proceeding on an investigation of this tragic incident. The PRG have agreed that the military committee will be escorted to the crash area where they will be permitted to conduct their own on-site inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, that is the extent of the information which is available to us now. I am bound to say that this incident is only the most tragic of a number of cases in which ICCS aircraft, all of which are clearly and prominently marked, have been fired upon. As hon. members will recall, the first such incidents occurred in late February. Since the incident of which I have just given an account, I have received a report that another ICCS helicopter has been fired upon within the past 24 hours. Two Canadians were among its passengers. On April 9, in the southernmost of the ICCS's seven regions, the ICCS helicopter was accompanying a helicopter of the Joint Military Commission near a team-site called Vi Thanh. The JMC helicopter was flying at an altitude of 500 feet, and the ICCS helicopter was following it at an altitude of 3,500 feet. Both were fired upon from the ground, and the JMC helicopter is reported to have been hit by a number of rounds. As a result, all ICCS helicopters in the region have been grounded pending consideration of the matter by the ICCS at its headquarters in Saigon.

I wish to assure all Canadians, and especially the families and friends of Canadians serving in Viet Nam, that the government is taking these incidents very seriously indeed. It is doing everything within its power to ensure that they do not recur. We are in touch with our representatives in Saigon to ensure that all possible measures are taken to that end. When we are satisfied that we have obtained all the relevant information, and after consultation with our partners in the ICCS, particularly those whose nationals have lost their lives, we will take appropriate action to hold accountable those responsible.

Such serious incidents will of course have a bearing upon the government's decision concerning Canada's continued participation in the ICCS. Hon. members will recall that in my statement to the House late last month, I said that the general situation in Viet Nam was highly unsatisfactory, and that Canada would terminate its participation at the end of June if the situation did not improve substantially. Since then, the general situation has not improved; in fact, it has deteriorated. If it does not improve very substantially, it will be clear that by continuing to serve in the ICCS we would be staying on to observe, not a peace, not a cease-fire, but a continuing war. We would be doing so, as this recent deplorable incident makes clear, at totally unjustified human risk. This we will not do. This House may be sure, and all Canadians may be sure, that we will not continue to risk Canadian lives in fulfilment of a task which is not worth doing. The parties are responsible for making the task worthwhile, by making it a task in support of peace in Viet Nam. We will expect them to fulfil that responsibility.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, a Quebecer, in the line of his peace keeping duties has just lost his life in Viet Nam. It makes us all feel very sad and on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and of my party, I extend to Madame Laviolette and to her family our deepest sympathy.

In our opinion, this tragedy is not an isolated case which is to be accepted with submissiveness and fatalism. It is a tragedy which must be considered in the overall picture of a mission that is becoming more perilous and desperate each day, because this government to which we gave the benefit of the doubt when it renewed its commitment shows that it is incapable of securing the required guarantees for the safety of our observers.

Not only did we fail to get essential and necessary guarantees, but because of a stupid, incomprehensible and foolish act which we strongly condemn, NLF sharpshooters have killed several observers, including a Canadian, Captain Laviolette from Quebec. How far, Mr. Speaker, do we have to go to establish peace in Viet Nam?

We agree to hope beyond all hope, but we must not confuse daring and recklessness, or highmindedness and naiveté. We shall continue to question the government on its ambivalent behaviour in this whole business. We trust the government will give us answers that are as specific as our questions will be. We will continue to demand that complete light be shed on this subject in committee.

And if, after having performed a superhuman task, Ambassador Gauvin may be justified in having holidays, we wonder why he could not appear before the committee and do so with the same government permission he had to get for his visit to Tokyo, to enlighten the public and the Members of Parliament on the measures taken by the government in Viet Nam.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, there are some fundamental questions that must be asked about our operation in Viet Nam. They are questions Canadians have a right to see answered. If, as the minister said in his statement to the House when the government's decision to recommit was made known, our role is more in the area of providing an international presence than supervising the peace, why must our men be continually subjected to increasing danger? More directly, what action are we taking at the ICCS level to ensure that all ICCS personnel are subjected to as limited a degree of danger as possible? If, as Canadians have believed, we are there at the invitation of the combatants, why did we experience, if reports are correct, continued difficulty in gaining access to the crash site in order to make our own inquiry, either independently or as part of a special ICCS investigation?

We must ask whether those we are dealing with representing the combatants really do have control of their forces in the field. If we do obtain guarantees of safe passage from the Viet Cong, for example, can we be satisfied that such guarantees will be respected by Viet Cong regulars in the field? Are Canadian forces in the field, in conjunction with other ICCS members, being afforded basic co-operation—basic at least to the extent of safe passage? Are ICCS craft so viewed by the combatants that the slightest diversion from course causes them to be classified as hostile and open to attack?

Sir, these are questions to which every responsible member of this House and of the government should want answers. There were accidents in Cyprus, there were accidents in the Middle East and in the Congo. Nevertheless, there was a basic assumption of safety under international auspices throughout all those assignments. It is this assumption which Canadians are working under now and which was understood when most agreed that we should accept our responsibilities in Viet Nam. It is surely the basic assumption that we must demand from the combatants if we are to continue to maintain our commitment.

When the party to which I belong accepted the view advanced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we should continue our commitment in Viet Nam in the hope that our presence might ease peace into place, we asserted that the minister had the responsibility to continue and re-initiate efforts to gain formal acceptance of the essence of our basic conditions for participation. The tragic death of Captain Laviolette and those of his international colleagues underlines the need for those initiatives. I say to the government that all Canadians are now calling on the government to illustrate clearly and forthrightly that we have done all we can, and are continuing to do all we can, in order that no more Canadians or other ICCS members should have to make this supreme sacrifice.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, every member of my party in the House, like every Canadian throughout the country, is saddened by the tragic death of those aboard the helicopter, saddened not only by the death of Captain Laviolette, although his death is closer to our hearts and to our thoughts, but saddened also by the death of the other people who were on that helicopter, some of them members of the ICCS and even Viet Cong people as well. I join the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the spokesman for the Conservative party in sending Madame Laviolette and her family our very deepest sympathy.

It is possible, of course, in a situation of this kind, to start making political accusations against the administration, either in Ottawa or in Viet Nam, accusing them of having failed to obtain sufficient guarantees or of not doing enough. I submit that this is not the issue. There is no evidence that Mr. Gauvin and his associates in Viet Nam have not worked their hardest to get all the assurances it was possible to obtain, and I am not prepared to try to make political capital out of this situation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —by accusing either the people in Ottawa or the people in Saigon or other parts of the Viet Nam of having failed in their duty.

What has obviously happened—and this is the saddest part of the situation—is that the assurances that had been obtained, particularly from the Viet Cong, particularly from the PRG, are assurances that have not been kept. The PRG would not have placed two liaison officers on the helicopter that was destroyed if arrangements for the flight had not been very carefully and fully made.

I say this to the minister, which seems to me to be important above anything else: the event which occurred on Friday was not an isolated incident. As he makes clear in his own statement, helicopters have been fired upon since February. The ICCS has not been given an opportunity to do its job. It was even refused the right and the opportunity to investigate the crash itself. It seems to me a pattern is developing which shows there are some parties who are not prepared to keep the Paris peace agreement. It may well be that those parties agreed to the presence of the ICCS only for the period when this was necessary in order to get the American troops and the American prisoners of war out of the area, and that now this has been accomplished certain parties in Viet Nam—not limited to the North Vietnamese or the PRG, since it would seem the South Viet Nam government is also playing this kind of game—are no longer concerned about having the ICCS there but are more concerned about having freedom to continue the war, as the minister indicated in his statement, than in taking action which would really stop the war. If this is the case, I suggest to the minister that the date of June 30 is not a sacrosanct date, even though it is the date we suggested, and I repeat the statement I made in Charlottetown during the weekend that we should now decide to withdraw before June 30. I do not think it is a sacred date.

It has already been shown that the work of the ICCS is being interfered with, that the lives of members of the ICCS are being endangered. I think the government ought to decide now that, if this danger continues over the next week or two, we will not wait until June 30 but take action to end the ICCS operation just as soon as it becomes evident that there is no reversal of the attitude of certain parties in Viet Nam. I urge the minister that we not wait that long, not only because of the danger to our personnel there but also because we ought not to participate in an operation that is clearly being frustrated by those people who are responsible for keeping the peace.

One other factor that has disappointed my colleagues and myself immensely about the work of the ICCS is that it has not been given any opportunity at all to look into the question of the political prisoners held by the South Vietnamese government. There are thousands of these prisoners. Their numbers have been debated by those who say they know, but there may well be 200,000 of these political prisoners who are being held by the South Vietnamese government. Their release is not only a humanitarian necessity but also a necessity if there is to be peace in Viet Nam, for they are the people who could build the bridges among the various sections of the Vietnamese people.

If the minister has not already done so, I think he ought to take the initiative in making sure that our arm of the ICCS is having intensive discussions with the representatives of the three other governments. I also suggest that we ought to initiate immediately very serious discussions with the joint military commission of the combatant parties to see whether we can find out if they really intend peace or the opposite.

I close by repeating our deep sadness at the death of Captain Laviolette and the others with him in the helicopter. I also reiterate my plea to the government that they not hold the date of June 30 as sacred but that we leave this dangerous area just as soon as the government becomes convinced that there is no chance of reversing the attitude of certain Vietnamese parties.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I join all other members in extending to Madame Laviolette and her family our most sincere sympathy on the very sad incident which took place on April 7, in Viet Nam.

I also endorse the views that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has just expressed when he said that one should not use such an incident to play politics.

I heard earlier the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) make a lacrymose statement holding, so to speak, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) responsible for what happened in Viet Nam.

Mr. Speaker, I can't help wondering what the Progressive Conservatives would have done in the place of those who now govern us. That, they forget to tell us. However, they are prepared to put the whole blame on this government, when we know very well that our participation in the International Commission of Control and Supervision leads necessarily to certain consequences. One cannot go there without running any risk, and by the way, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said it recently.

And so I do not think it is altogether honest to try and make little of the government's action. If one wishes to avoid all risk, there is only one thing to do: stay at home. We undertake to carry out the mission, and then, when we are there, there is an accident and we are all upset. I thought the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was sobbing just now. I thought the member for Saint-Hyacinthe was going to start saying his prayers; he was that serious.

Mr. Speaker, this is no way to treat an accident of this sort. For my part, I thought, and I still think, that we should have stayed at home, because the situation over there was not clear, and it is not any clearer now. The minister has just said that we will not be taking any more risks. It is high time we thought about that. I consider that we must help Viet Nam if Viet Nam wants to help itself. But if it does not, let us not impose ourselves. I am speaking now to all those concerned. To those who say that what is happening there is the Americans' fault, I answer that it is just as much the fault of the communists. If we blame one side, let us also blame the other. Let us tell them that the Vietnamese must be left to settle their own problems without intervention by the USSR, China, the United States or Canada. It is as simple as that. That is our position.

I am totally opposed, Mr. Speaker, to any attempt at making politics of this issue, and I am sorry that such attempts are being made. What is the government going to do? What is the government going to answer? The government might answer: I think Mr. Laviolette was killed. That is quite simple, and everyone knows it. We do not yet know all the causes of this incident. When we do, we will be able to form a clearer, sounder opinion. But meanwhile, let us hope that there will be no more such incidents in Viet Nam and that, as Canadian members of Parliament, we will do all we can to prevent them.

Mr. Speaker, those are all the remarks that I wished to make. In ending, I again present our sincerest condolences to all of Mr. Laviolette's family and I hope that this will not happen again in Viet Nam.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as Captain Laviolette comes from my riding where his parents and his wife's parents are still living, I wish to join the Secretary of State for External Affairs and members of all parties in this House in extending to Mrs. Laviolette, her nine-year old daughter and to all her relatives, my deepest and most sincere sympathy.

POLAR BEAR PROTECTION BILL

PROVISION TO OUTLAW KILLING OF POLAR BEARS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-174, to provide for the prohibition of the killing of polar bears in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I think I will have to yell louder because the microphone seems to be out of order. I am very happy to have my five children sitting in the gallery today and I hope they have not caused any problem.

No more gracious or majestic animal so typifies the spirit of the north as the great polar bear. Yet, like so many of our wildlife resources, this animal too faces extinction. In this regard the purpose of this bill is to protect from extinction one of Canada's most beautiful wildlife resources, the polar bear.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is as follows:

Number of notifiable cases of tropical and parasitical diseases as reported by provincial authorities is:

	1969	1970	1971	1972
(a) Montreal	1	None	None	None
(b) Toronto	None	46	63	181
(c) Vancouver	2	None	1	None

No cases of the four quarantinable diseases, smallpox, cholera, yellow fever and plague, were reported during this period.

The answer to part two is that there is no Canadian medical speciality in tropical diseases and therefore, of necessity, no physicians in Canada qualified as such. However, there are doctors who direct a significant proportion of their services towards the treatment of these diseases and who have considerable expertise in this area of medicine. Also steps have been taken by health professionals in Canada to establish a tropical medicine and international health organization.

The answer to part 3 is 38 and none.

The answer to part 4 is that the reported cost of drugs used in the four main tropical diseases clinics in 1969 was $2,386, in 1970 $3,767, in 1971 $4,073 and in 1972 $4,529.

The answer to part 5 is none. All immigrants to Canada, referred to the Department of National Health and Welfare by the Department of Manpower and Immigration for medical examination, are examined to ensure that their presence in Canada will not endanger public health.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last week or the week before I inquired about my question No. 278 which appeared on the order paper on January 12. That question deals with the Opportunities for Youth program. The Minister is requiring that members of the House give him a report on proposed opportunities for youth programs and that it be presented to him for approval today. It would be very much easier for me and other members if this kind of question which I placed on the order paper were answered. I see no reason whatsoever for this question not having been answered. It is a matter of privilege for myself as a member of the House to point out that the government has not got around to answering this question despite the fact I have already raised the matter on the floor of the House.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order or a question of privilege in view of the fact I have had about 60 questions on the order paper since February 23 which ask the government what financial contributions have been made for development assistance to various countries of the third world. What is the minister hiding?

Why do this departmental officials not answer my questions?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer, the department has been working for some weeks on these questions involving a very long and detailed answer. I am hoping to be able to condense all the answers into one tabulation and I expect it will be ready this week.

Mr. Paproski: I wonder whether the minister would at least give me some little detailed article? The Department of External Affairs seems to keep publishing in the papers the contributions to different countries, but members on this side of the House cannot receive an answer.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—GROUNDING OF SUPERVISORY COMMISSION HELICOPTERS—SAFETY OF CANADIAN DELEGATION—NUMBER OF INCIDENTS OF FIRING ON HELICOPTERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question first for clarification. When he says that all helicopters of the International Commission of Control and Supervision in the region have been grounded, would he clarify what he means by "region"? Does this mean within the whole jurisdiction of the ICCS or does it mean the region where the attack took place?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that question too precisely. It is my understanding it is in the areas where we have not been receiving co-operation with respect to safety of the flights, but I will put this question to Saigon to see whether I can get a more precise answer.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether any further precautions are being taken with regard to the safety of our members particularly on the ICCS and whether any consideration is being given to withdrawing them into a position of relative safety in Viet Nam compared with being perhaps in exposed positions of possible danger in the event of an outbreak of hostilities?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that question, generally speaking, is yes.

Mr. Stanfield: Arising out of the minister's response to my first question in which he was not quite positive concerning what "region" meant in relation to the grounding of the helicopters, could the minister tell us approximately how many instances there have been prior to this tragedy in which ICCS helicopters have been fired upon? He mentioned that there had been a whole series of them. Could he give us the approximate number?

• (1500)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that very soon after the ICCS teams were fielded in Viet Nam there were attacks on helicopters. There was a sufficient number of them at that time that all the helicopters were grounded. That was the first series of events. Then we had the event on April 7 when these two helicopters were fired upon and one of them crashed. Since that time we have had another incident. This is one of the reasons, of course, for the first question put by the Leader of the Opposition about the use of helicopters thereafter. I hesitate to be too precise because it may be there is some information I lack from Saigon, but it is my understanding that it has been in the areas where safety could not be assured. Helicopters are presumably operating in other areas where there have been no incidents of any kind.

Mr. Stanfield: Did I understand the Secretary of State for External Affairs correctly that there were no instances of firing upon ICCS helicopters between the grounding following the first series of attacks and the tragedy of recent days?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. There may have been a very minor matter where there was perhaps some small arms fire which never reached the helicopter, or something like that. But, as the hon. gentleman knows, we do not want to put these helicopters into the air unless we are pretty well guaranteed that they will not be fired upon. That is why not only our people in Saigon but the whole of the ICCS, including the Indonesians, the Poles and the Hungarians, have been using helicopters very sparingly and only when they felt they would not be fired upon. This latest tragedy is an instance of how impossible it is to protect oneself in advance against what appears to be a deliberate flouting of the agreement reached by the high command of the PRG.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister communicated directly with the first ministers of the Provisional Revolutionary Government, the government of the Republic of Viet Nam and the government of the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam to impress upon these governments that if the fighting continues and if the lives of ICCS personnel continue to be in danger, Canada will be compelled to withdraw her contribution to the commission with a minimum of notice as obviously there is no peace to supervise?

Mr. Sharp: The statements that I have made to that effect in this House and publicly have been conveyed to the representatives of the PRG.

CIVILIAN PRISONERS IN SOUTH VIET NAM—REQUEST THAT CANADA PRESS FOR RELEASE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on a slightly different subject. In view of the widespread concern throughout Canada, of which I am sure the minister is aware, about the plight of civilian prisoners in South Viet Nam, what steps will the minister take to inform the government of the Republic of Viet Nam of the Canadian concern and to press for action to relieve the situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I was in Saigon I brought this question to the attention of the foreign minister and the prime minister of that country, and the response I got was that they had given a list of the 5,000 civilian prisoners now being held.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE RECONVENING OF SIGNATORIES TO PARIS AGREEMENT TO REVIEW SITUATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether or not, in light of the tragedy and the whole situation over there, the government has given any consideration to our taking any initiative whatever to have the signatories of the Paris Agreement reconvene in Paris for the purpose of reviewing, first of all, whether or not the safeguards and assurances given under that agreement can in fact be achieved or whether or not, in light of the present situation, there is indeed any point in continuing?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not as yet given consideration to that particular suggestion. It is one of the means open to us. I doubt very much whether under present circumstances Canada would get much support in reconvening the Paris conference, but it was one of the points I pressed upon the conference that there should be a mechanism for having the conference recalled. Unfortunately, the mechanism that we had suggested was not adopted, but at least on the request of six members the conference may be recalled to hear evidence that the cease-fire is not being observed.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Darmouth-Halifax East. It seems to me, however, that the supplementary questions asked by the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East bifurcated somewhat from the original question. It might be better, after I have recognized the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, that we complete the first round of questioning and then return to supplementaries which may be either supplementary or an extension of the original question.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, we are all concerned about the activities in Viet Nam. I am sorry if I am straying away from the original locale. I do not intend to do that but rather to ask whether or not there is a useful vehicle to ensure that the very objections which were raised could be met. I wish to ask the minister one further supplementary question. I understood the minister to say that the parties must agree to the recalling of the Paris conference. May I ask then, by way of a representation, whether or not the government would now take some initiative to see if within the next two or three weeks such an invitation could be jointly issued by the members of the ICCS to the signatories to that agreement?

Mr. Sharp: I thank the hon. gentleman for his suggestion. I cannot give a definite answer now but it is one of the possibilities that remains open and it will be kept under constant review.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—CONSULTATION BETWEEN GOVERNOR AND MINISTER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I assume from the provisions of Section 14 of the Bank of Canada Act that the governor of the Bank of Canada consulted the minister and that he had the minister's agreement for the increase in the interest rate of half of one per cent which the governor of the Bank of Canada announced. Would the minister inform the House whether my assumption is right, that he was consulted, and whether he agreed to this increase in the rate?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was informed of this by the governor of the Bank of Canada prior to his raising the bank rate. In our meetings the governor has kept me fully informed. As the hon. gentleman knows, the governor has the day to day responsibility over monetary policy. I am satisfied with the action, particularly if the hon. gentleman refers to the statement of the governor when he stressed that monetary policy in Canada will continue to be expansionary and the bank remains firmly committed to maintaining a rate of monetary growth high enough to support a strong expansion of Canadian output and employment. In those terms, I agree with the action taken by the governor.

An hon. Member: When did it start?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister does not accept that gobbledygook—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): You accept it.

Mr. Lewis: —of the governor of the Bank of Canada saying, on the one hand, that he is going to have an expansionary policy and, on the other hand, doing something that prevents an expansionary policy.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): When did he phone you?

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON EXPANSIONARY POLICY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance since he has the authority under Section 14 of the Bank of Canada Act to disagree with the governor and when he does disagree to give him a written directive as to what the policy should be, whether he has in fact approved this increase in the interest rate, and can he briefly indicate to the House how that is consonant with an expansionary policy?

• (1510)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ought to recite to the hon. gentleman and to the House the rate of expansion with respect to the monetary policy for the first three months of the year. Total loans of the Canadian banking system increased at an annual rate of 26 per cent. Total major assets increased at an annual rate of 19 per cent. Mortgages increased at an annual rate of 34 per cent, and the privately held money supply increased at an annual rate of 17 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are obviously involved in debate. The hon. member may ask a supplementary. He will be recognized for that, and then I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West has a supplementary.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER NOT AGREE TO FURTHER INCREASES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): In view of the fact that this kind of action by the monetary authorities in the past has often been a prelude to continuing similar action to increase interest rates which affect mortgages as well as bank loans eventually, and thereby to reduce the monetary supply and so affect the expansion of the economy—I suggest to the minister that this is a fact—can the minister assure the House that he will not agree to any further increases in interest rates that will affect the Canadian economy as disadvantageously as this one will?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the full ambit of the preamble to the hon. gentleman's question. I cannot give the House any such assurance. The bank rate was raised in order to ensure that the continuing expansion of the monetary supply would not be continued at a rate that might jeopardize the situation. Bank loans are increasing at a very strong rate. We are also affected by the short-term interest rates abroad, which are a point and a half to two points above Canadian interest rates. They were attracting money from the Canadian market and that was prejudicial to Canadian borrowers. Those were the reasons the bank rate was raised.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON VALUE OF DOLLAR AND EXPANSIONARY POLICY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House how he reconciles a deflationary step such as increasing the bank rate, which today is having a consequential increase in the commercial rate or the prime rate charged by the banks, with his claims of an expansionary budget and economy, as well as relating it perhaps to some problems with regard to the international value of the dollar? Is he now expecting a greater inflow of foreign currency so that the Canadian dollar will be affected thereby?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speculate on the future value of the Canadian dollar, but I want to remind the hon. member that short-term interest rates in Canada are still considerably lower than those in the United States or Europe, so I would not anticipate the result to which he refers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue, and then return to supplementaries on the first and second questions.

CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—STUDIES RESPECTING POSSIBLE REOPENING—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Last Thursday the minister announced in the House the possibility of reopening the CIP plant at Temiscaming and he stated that he would have discussions with Quebec authorities during the week. Before making this statement last Thursday, had the minister been in communication with Quebec to say how much he was concerned about the reopening of the plant?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon just prior to coming into the House I placed a call to the appropriate minister in Quebec. He was not in his office at the time but I am expecting that the call will be returned later this afternoon. If so, I will be prepared to go to Quebec either tomorrow or Wednesday.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

I am glad to hear the minister is prepared to go to Quebec to settle the matter, but has he in hand the productivity study the province of Quebec is deemed to have made on the reopening of the CIP plant?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: I do not personally have it in hand, but I know that my officials have been advised of most of the contents, and of course it formed a large part of the basis on which the decision was made that I announced last Thursday.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the very short, terse statement given by the governor of the Bank of Canada in making his announcement of the increase in the bank rate, would the minister make a statement on motions within the next day or so setting forth what the monetary stance is now, what the purpose of the increase is and what it is all about, or do we have to have a continuation of the mysteriousness that always seems to surround movements made by the Bank of Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be appearing again before the standing committee of the House on Department of Finance estimates next week and will be glad to go into that in some detail as members put the issue to me. I just want to remind the Leader of the Opposition that the primary day to day responsibility for monitory policy rests with the governor of the Bank of Canada, unless there is a conflict between the thrust of monetary policy and that of fiscal policy or governmental policy. That is not so as long as the monetary policy remains expansionary, which it does.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON SLOW GROWTH AREAS—DISCUSSION WITH GOVERNOR

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the impact of any restrictive monetary policy on slow growth areas, which I think can be amply demonstrated, can the minister advise whether any conversation took place between himself and the governor of the Bank of Canada with regard to some kind of favourable monetary attitude toward slow growth areas, especially relating to capital formation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the governor of the Bank of Canada advised me of the action he was going to take, I suggested to him that when he was communicating with the presidents of the Canadian chartered banks he should reiterate to them his earlier strictures, namely, that loans ought to be made primarily available to small Canadian borrowers and in those areas of slow growth, and that the spread between the rate paid on deposits and the rate of interest charged on loans should remain the same so as not to increase the profit potential of the banks. When the president of the Canadian Banking Association telephoned me this morning I repeated to him personally those same concerns on the part of the government.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE—EFFECT ON NATIONAL HOUSING ACT MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that all previous increases in the bank rate have led to an increase in the interest rate on NHA mortgages, could the minister inform the House if before approving of the current increase he calculated its effect on the NHA mortgage rate? Specifically, can he assure the House that the NHA rate, which is already at 9¼ per cent, will not be increased?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no direct connection between the bank rate and mortgage rates. As a matter of fact, over the past few months, as the hon. gentleman knows, rates for conventional mortgages have been coming down.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE DELAY BY UNITED STATES IN IMPLEMENTATION OF GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY AGREEMENT—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the stated concern of some United States Congressmen that the United States will not issue the necessary regulations controlling sewage from U.S. vessels on the Great Lakes by the required date of April 15, can the minister assure the House that Canadian regulations required by the Great Lakes water quality agreement are ready to be issued by April 15?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to take that question as notice and give a more complete answer tomorrow. The information I have now would not justify me in giving the kind of answer that I think the hon. member would like.

CAMP VERNON—ACCIDENTAL DEATH OF TWO CHILDREN FROM EXPLOSIVE DEVICE—ACTION TO PREVENT SIMILAR DISASTER

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware of the tragic incident yesterday which caused the deaths of two Vernon, British Columbia, children, killed when a mortar shell, picked up on a former munitions training range at Camp Vernon, exploded?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this tragic accident. It is being investigated. I do not believe it is yet known what the explosive device was that caused the accident, but the RCMP are investigating and we are co-operating fully.

Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Will the minister indicate whether or not he is prepared to issue a directive that this second world war training range be combed and recombed in order to prevent similar disasters?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, this area has been examined by military engineers over the years, dating back as far as 1963. If there is new evidence following the investigation that warrants a further examination, then I would authorize it.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE PRODUCTION OF PROTEIN FROM WHEY

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of recent reports that the processing of protein may soon become a leading industry in Canada, has the minister considered the production of protein from whey, which is available at the rate of a quarter of a billion pounds annually in my area and could produce approximately 15 million pounds of pure protein annually?

• (1520)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that the research department of the Department of Agriculture has probably one of the most expanded research programs of any group of researchers in the world studying the use of this product so it can be economically used. We are aware of this and are considering how it can be done in economic fashion for the benefit of all producers that have to use this protein.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am taking this question as notice.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CHARTERED BANKS TO MAKE SMALL BUSINESS LOANS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that some Canadian chartered banks are refusing loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act and, if so, what action is open to him under the act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have specific instances in order to look into the matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED FLYING HAZARD FROM PROPOSED CANADIAN NATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS SPIRE, TORONTO—REQUEST FOR STUDY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that neither the Canadian Owners and Pilots' Association nor the Canadian Airline Pilots' Association was consulted with regard to the hazardous aspects of the Canadian National Railways 1,800 foot telecommunications tower in Toronto, will the minister assure the House that an in-depth study with respect to flying hazards will be carried out in conjunction with the two organizations mentioned before any further planning is done?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have taken all necessary precautions concerning air safety in the area of Toronto. We are confident that standards have been respected, but in view of the importance of the problem I am prepared to review this question and consult with all interested parties, particularly the pilots' associations.

ROYAL BANK'S BONUS TO PERSONS TAKING LOANS—MINISTER'S POSITION—EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESS LOANS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister contacted the Royal Bank of Canada to object to their latest advertising gimmick whereby a cash bonus of $25 is given to persons who are willing to mortgage their future to some prescribed extent?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, but I will pass on the hon. gentleman's remarks to the Royal Bank.

Mr. Hellyer: While the minister is passing on these remarks and encouraging the bank not to continue with this sort of gimmickry, perhaps he might inquire to what extent loans being pushed in that direction might affect loans available to small business?

ALLEGED INDICATION OF TIGHT MONEY POLICY BY BANK OF CANADA—MEASURES TO OFFSET RESTRICTION OF CREDIT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the governor of the Bank of Canada seems to be heading us into a tight money situation which would run contrary to the minister's expansionary policy, I want to ask the minister, apart from his conversation with the governor, what specific action he intends to take at this time when DREE policies are under review to bring in specific measures to offset restriction of credit which would have such disastrous consequences in the slow growth regions of the country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no tight money policy and the demand for loans is heavy enough that the banks and the Bank of Canada do not anticipate any lessening of the demand or acquiesence in credit. As for the slow growth areas, I tried to answer the hon. member's colleague in specific terms. If the answer did not satisfy him, I would be glad to take a supplementary at a later date.

TARIFF REDUCTIONS ON AUTOMOBILE TIRES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO FURTHER REDUCTIONS CONTEMPLATED

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that tariff reductions on automobile tires could lead to the phasing out of marginal second line tire production in Canada, thereby causing unemployment in this $365 million industry, are further tariff reductions being considered beyond the 5 per cent proposed recently, especially in view of the increase in countervailing tariffs by the United States on Michelin tires?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there were any further moves to be made in the tariff field, of course, they would be announced in the House, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that no further action is contemplated at this time.

POSSIBLE POSTING OF HMCS "KOOTENAY" TO SOUTHEAST ASIAN WATERS—SUGGESTED SENDING OF OTHER TYPES OF VESSELS

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the first question to the Minister of National Defence and relates to his announcement that the HMCS Kootenay would be sent to Southeast Asian waters to relieve the Terra Nova. Is any consideration being given to sending a ship similar to the HMCS Preserver or the HMCS Protector in order that there might be some passenger carrying ability connected with those vessels that will be operating in those waters, particularly after the events of Saturday?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if I may correct the question in this way, we did not announce that the Kootenay would be going; we asked the Kootenay crew to stand by and be prepared to leave if necessary. The Terra Nova will be there until the end of May. No consideration has been given to other ships because in fact that would not be necessary. The Terra Nova or the Kootenay could carry all of our personnel in Viet Nam.

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF WHEAT BOARD TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. A. P. DAIRYING—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC TO ENSURE THAT PRODUCERS BENEFIT FROM INCREASED PRICE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As a result of the statement which he made in the House on March 29, announcing a possible increase in the price of manufacturing milk of 60 cents per hundred pounds, will the minister take the necessary steps to obtain the assurance from his Quebec counterpart that the producers will get the full 60 cents or as in the past, will the increase be frittered away without the producers being a position to take full advantage of it?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing the whole program in detail and if changes have to be made it will be within our realm or within the realm of working very closely with the provincial people that we will make that change, but only with that co-operation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the question has been asked before but if I am wrong the minister could reply. Perhaps he has additional information for the House.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the answer is the same as last week. We have been in negotiation with the United States for four years, so we hope that we are going to solve all these problems together.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED RECRUITMENT ABROAD OF PROFESSIONAL PEOPLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the President of the Treasury Board. Considering the present high levels of unemployment, especially amongst those under 24 years of age in this country, and the number of university graduates and other professionally trained persons who are having difficulty finding suitable employment, is it now the policy of the government and the Public Service Commission to go outside Canada for clerical, junior career, and professional people and have they in fact abandoned the policy of hiring Canadians first and, second, landed immigrants?

• (1530)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, they have not abandoned the policy of hiring Canadians first. I would be surprised if the Public Service Commission were to endeavour to recruit outside of Canada for jobs to be performed in Canada. Understandably, I think, there would be some effort abroad to recruit locally for jobs to be performed locally, abroad, on a continuing basis.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat. Unless the hon. member rises on a point of order or question of privilege, which I hope he will not do, he may only ask a question and not draw to the attention of the minister or the government a situation or alleged facts. The hon. member is recognized for a supplementary.

Mr. Dick: Is the minister aware that an advertisement was carried in The Economist in England on March 19 asking for junior financial and accounting people, who are to be paid $11,000, to be transferred to Canada to serve across Canada?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker. I would be interested in seeing that.

ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF CATTLE CONTAINING DIETHYLSTILBESTROL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of reports that American beef cattle now being sold in Canada have been finished with the hormone fattening agent known as diethylstilbestrol, which has been banned in Canada because it is suspected of possibly inducing cancer in humans, can the minister say whether he has contemplated recommending that cattle implanted with this agent be banned for sale in Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to consult on this matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Agriculture. I think the Minister of Agriculture may have some further information on this, if he may be permitted to add to my answer.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to that minister.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the impression is that cattle in Canada do not contain any DES. This is not true, because if farmers quit using DES when the sale of DES was banned the last use would have been at the end of December and it will not have worn off until the end of April. So, Canadian cattle still contain some DES and American cattle still contain DES. However, only 50 per cent of American cattle are implanted with DES, so that it is very hard to tell. We are running 30 checks a week on testing beef products to find if there is a carry-over of DES, and there is a carry-over of DES in all beef cattle.

ALLEGED CONFLICT BETWEEN DEPARTMENTAL REPORT AND LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT ON NUMBER OF DRUGS USERS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. One week ago Friday the minister released his department's report on drugs which showed there were approximately 7,000 people on heroin and approximately 45,000 on cannabis. As the Le Dain commission report shows that there are roughly 900,000 in this country who have used cannabis and that there are approximately 15,000 on heroin, which report are the people of this country to look upon as being credible.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I missed the last part of the question. Would the hon. member repeat the last part.

Mr. Reynolds: Which report is the official report, or which report should the people of Canada look upon as being the credible report?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, of course the report from my department.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary, but I hope there will not be too many supplementaries so that we can give an opportunity to as many members as possible to participate in the question period.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, since the report of the minister is more credible, is the minister now saying that all the money spent on the LeDain commission, all those millions and millions of dollars, was a total waste?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That supplementary, of course, is out of order.

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN BAIL REFORM ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for the inconvenience being caused by the microphone system. My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. On March 21, the minister stated that he had received few if any complaints about the way the new Bail Act was working, not even from authorities in Ontario, and therefore would make no substantial changes in the bail law. In light of the fact that the wives of Toronto policemen have collected more than 149,000 names on petitions which urge reforms not only in the Bail Reform Act but call for more control and for capital punishment, is the minister now satisfied that there is an abundance of complaints regarding this matter? Will he, therefore, reconsider his position and tell this House what changes, if any, he is considering making in the Bail Reform Act? If no changes are being considered, why are they not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms cannot be in order. The hon. member, to be brief, is inviting the minister to make a general statement which ought to be made on motions. However, the minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the hon. member's question, after which I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated many times, we are interested in looking at constructive proposals for change, and we certainly do so. I have had an exchange of correspondence with all the Attorneys General and, basically, have found that they too agree that the new law is working much better in protecting the liberties of individual citizens. There is a great deal of misunderstanding about how the new law and the old law differ, and I am afraid that many of the complaints ignore the fact that nothing—

If so, what action does the government plan if the United States should slap an embargo upon shipments of coal to Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have under study measures which would, we hope, make it possible for western Canadian Rocky Mountain coal to penetrate the central Canadian market. There have already been a number of experimental shipments. We will be carrying on discussions on this matter, particularly with the ministers involved in each of the two provinces affected.

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Two years ago the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that perpetual leases in national parks were valid and could not be altered. Why, then, has the government not instituted proceedings to reinstate those perpetual leases which were terminated?

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

IMPLEMENTATION OF TAX REDUCTIONS ON APRIL PAY CHEQUES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When the answer from the Minister of Supply and Services reached me, it sounded as if the minister said he would take the question as notice. I have been advised by some of my colleagues that the answer was something different. I wonder whether it would be possible for the minister to clarify this very important matter.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have in fact signed a letter to that effect which has been sent to all employees of the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: That is fine, Mr. Speaker. I understood the minister this time. I now rise on a question of privilege. In view of the fact there was no translation system, I would have thought the minister would have had some respect for my Irish background and answered in English. Be that as it may, I want to bring to the attention of hon. members something which I consider to be of very substantial importance. We have before us a bill which has to do with the basic income tax exemption proposed by the Minister of Finance in February.

I have in my hand a copy of a letter which was sent to the minister's officials. It indicates that the deductions from the April cheques will be along the lines proposed by the Minister of Finance. If this move had been made by a company, corporation or anyone outside of the government, it would be understood to mean something, namely, anticipating the behaviour of parliament. Out of respect for the Minister of Supply and Services, I will not use the word arrogant, but I certainly consider it to be an affront to parliament when a member of the Privy Council circulates a document through his office indicating that changes will take plece. In doing so, he is anticipating the behaviour of parliament. The minister did not indicate that there might be a change in the basic exemption or that there would possibly be a change. The minister, himself, decided that there will be deductions from the April cheques along the lines proposed by the Minister of Finance.

Despite the fact that we welcome the proposed change, and hopefully it will be in effect before the end of April, I consider the minister's actions to be completely out of order. I think the minister owes this House an apology. It is an affront to parliament. The minister should have a little more respect for this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, April 6, consideration in committee of Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. The House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax. The discussion will commence with clause 1 of Part I.

On Clause 1.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, 18 months after the beginning of the discussion on Bill C-259, we find ourselves in a very interesting situation. We have a bill before us that is about one seventh as big as the previous one. However, it introduces many amendments. I hope that members on the government side have not accepted these on blind trust because Bill C-259, which was accepted on blind trust, was shown to be terribly deficient. I want to make a couple of observations on clause 1 because of what I said on Thursday last about the complexity of this bill and the difficulty in dealing with it in detail as we should.

I know that hon. members, as well as the media, shun an income tax bill like the plague. They do not want to put their hands near it. In fact, many do not even want to hear of it. They are afraid it is contaminated. I think hon. members will recall the bitter experience when we were dealing with Bill C-259. The difficulty lies in comparing the bill as presented with the ways and means motion. That in itself, is a complicated procedure. We then have to mesh the bill with the Income Tax Act so that it makes some sense and can be understood. I am the first to admit that in the time that has elapsed since we have had the bill, it has not been possible to get all the homework done. Therefore, my questions to the minister will be of an exploratory nature. I trust that he is thoroughly versed in the provisions of the act and the amendments. It would have been much more convenient to have had a private briefing session around the committee table. It would have been possible to examine these proposals. I intend tp proceed on this basis and I hope that the minister will have the answers. I would like to see this bill cleaned up as quickly as possible.

I wish to draw to the minister's attention a letter which I received from a young man attending university. He filed his income tax teturn many weeks ago. There is owing to him approximately $240. The last instalment on his university dues is $134 and he only has $6 in the bank. His parents filed their income tax return some weeks after he did. They received the refund to which they are entitled. However, because he availed himself of a provision in the Income Tax Act as outlined in the budget last May and which the government delayed bringing forward until last week, he has not been able to get his money. This student would like to know whether the Minister of Finance is prepared to intercede with the university authorities on his bahalf. He has not been in a position to pay his dues because of the $240 that was extracted from him in excess of what should have been. He does not yet have his refund and he is not in a position to pay. I am sure that this situation is repeated in hundreds and thousands of cases.

I want to re-emphasize the major complaint I have made about the delay in implementing these provisions of the act. All this could have been done last December. There is no excuse. The legislation was ready. The motions had been presented to the House, and Bill C-222 had actually been presented in June of last year. As to the procedure to be followed today, I am not yet sure whether it will be preferable for our discussion to go forward clause by clause or not. I am disposed to think so at the present time, though later, possibly, on re-examination, it might appear there would be a better grouping allowing us to discuss several items en bloc. Here again, there was not much time available in which to determine what the best course would be. All of us, I think, would have appreciated it had there been more time available between the presentation of the bill and its detailed study so that those who are recognized to be tax authorities and commentators could have made their professional and impartial views known in connection with the effect of these provisions. Views of such experts as CCH and DeBoo's would have been an invaluable service to the committee had they been given an opportunity to make their comments.

I recall that in late September and in early October, 1971, when we were discussing the subject matter of the first clause of this bill which involves the determination of what is income, we were considering the definition of a new aspect of income, that is the benefit conferred on taxpayers who have automobiles placed at their disposal. In cases where a company owns vehicles and a car is made available to the president or any of the company's officers or employees to use for their own purposes, the question arises as to the value of that benefit to the individual taxpayer. This provision is causing concern to a great many people who have hitherto been able to incorporate into what one might call the total package of their jobs, the advantage of the use of such a vehicle. It was a new provision and we have seen that difficulties arise in its implementation. I notice the minister has made the amendment retroactive to January 1, 1972. It is a question of what is a reasonable standby charge on a vehicle, what is the valuation under lease. The effect of the amendment here is to adjust for automobile insurance as against the value of the vehicle on the basis of a lease.

Clause 1 subsection (2) deals with the assessment made on an automobile salesman who is allotted a demonstrator for his own use. It has brought forth a great number of anguished cries, since a fair assessment is very difficult to determine. I notice that the minister has reduced the basis of the charge from one per cent to three-quarters of one per cent or the net average cost of the vehicles which have flowed through the inventory of a distributor. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, I would think that a salesman in a large agency who concentrated on compact models might feel unhappy in finding attributed to him a charge based upon consideration of cars of the Cadillac or Lincoln class. Perhaps experience will show what variation ought to be provided in such cases. In any event, in many automobile agencies the man who sells the Vegas does not sell Cadillacs and he might well have cause for complaint if he drives a Vega all the time and is charged Cadillac rates in whole or in part.

My general remarks have to do with the handling of the bill at the present time. It will be interesting to see how many hon. members take part in this discussion. I see that some members who used to sit on the Finance Committee have now assumed different responsibilities and it occurs to me they are likely to prove discreetly silent. I wonder whether some of those who, in the past, thought the bill was so good are now considering whether they ought to come forward and suggest improvements. Income tax is so horribly complicated that we are bound to make an attempt to put some of these requirements into the best possible layman's language. I shall have further observations to make in the course of our discussion during which I shall point out some of the horrible complexities into which we have gotten ourselves. They almost defy description. I have in mind particularly the effect of the interaction of three or four of the clauses in the bill before us.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply to one of the questions which was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West during the debate on second reading. He wanted to see some comparison of the bill with the ways and means motion. I would be glad to follow his wishes, because I believe it would be useful to do so in the context of our discussion of the bill in committee.

The documents which were tabled in the House on March 29, 1973 were notices of the ways and means motion amending the Income Tax Act and the income tax application rules by providing, among other things, certain specific measures. The phrase "among other things" is included to allow, for instance, for the precise problem raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West and, within reasonable limits, I suggest the rules do allow for the inclusion of new items, particularly if they do not involve major matters of policy or increases in the tax burden. I am willing to submit this material either by tabling it or as part of my remarks, or, as the hon. member suggests, by making it an appendix to Hansard, with the consent of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I take it I have consent.

There are, in total, 39 clauses or subclauses in question. Of these, 15 might be considered consequential. Eight of the clauses are corrections to the French version of Bill C-259, the earlier tax reform bill. The remaining 16 clauses are technical changes involving no alteration in policy. Virtually all of them are relieving in their effect. A number of the clauses are intended to clarify the operation of particular sections of the act or of the application of rules. In a few instances it has become apparent that a particular section or subsection is redundant. Therefore, the bill proposes to eliminate it. For example, I refer to clauses 2 and 70(1). In another case, clause 82, there is an extension of the filing date for an election to be treated as a public corporation. In some cases obvious anomalies of a purely technical nature are corrected: for instance, clauses 3, 5 9(1), 21 and 89.

• (1600)

In a sense, most of these 16 clauses or subclauses can be said to be consequential amendments, except that they are not consequential upon the amendments proposed in the ways and means motions of March 29, 1973; rather they are consequential upon the provisions of the Income Tax Act and the income tax application rules themselves. These 39 clauses or subclauses were not mentioned in the ways and means motions because they were of a purely technical dimension and do not involve any important changes in policy nor any significant change from the existing act. I wanted to clarify that for the committee in view of the point raised on second reading by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

As to this particular clause—

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question on that to the minister? Could he tell the committee, either now or later, how many of these amendments in the bill constitute an attempt by the government to comply with the statement made by the former minister of finance to the Senate committee? The minister will recall that when Bill C-259 was in its final stages in the other place, in order to accelerate passage of the bill through the other place the then minister of finance appeared before the Senate committee and admitted that Bill C-259 did require a number of very important changes, both remedial and mechanical. Indeed, the minister will know from the experience of the government that there were certain defects in that bill which we drew to the attention of the House, and this was followed by this admission made to the Senate. The minister of finance at that time said that these changes would be made and would be brought forward "next spring", meaning the spring of 1972. Therefore, may I ask him whether Bill C-170 is, to any extent, the implementation by the government of the promises the former minister made in the other place?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to give the committee a precise list. I am advised that, to the best of our knowledge, we have fulfilled all the commitments made by my predecessor in the other place, but I shall be glad to furnish further details to the committee.

The Chairman: Before discussion continues, may I ask the minister whether the analysis of clauses which was sent to the Chair is the material to be printed as an appendix to today's proceedings?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think that was the general feeling of the committee.

The Chairman: Then that can be done when Mr. Speaker is back in the Chair.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, as to the specific clause before the committee, this amendment makes a relieving change to the provision of the act that deals with determination of the reasonable stand-by charge for the use of an automobile in cases where an employee is furnished with an automobile for personal use by his employer. Relief goes primarily to salesmen in automobile dealerships and there is also some change to the wording for sake of clarity. The hon. member for Edmonton West had the general sense of it.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, may I just ask the minister a question. Every car would carry a different charge, depending on its make and value. As most of the automobile dealers have suggested, their accounting departments would have obviously an impossible task in view of the number of different prices. The price would differ monthly or even daily, since a salesman could have a different car every week or month.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I believe this does meet the problem that the automobile dealers put to us. The salesman has the option of taking three-quarters of the actual charge or of taking three-quarters of the averaging of all the demonstrators in the dealership. Depending on the accounting facilities of the employer, he can now do it either way.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I have a note on this particular clause. If one traces through the effect of the amendment to see what it means, one is taken to section 12 of the act, first of all. This amendment goes to subparagraph 12(1)(e)(ii) and all that is being dropped is a reference to subsection 20(7). Section 12 deals with amounts to be included in income from business or property. This amendment removes subsection 20(7), which in itself is a listing of reserves to be included in income. We then go to section 20, and the chief heading is "deductions permitted in computing income from business or property".

So, first of all, we have reference to amounts included in income from business or property, and then there is a reference to the deductions permitted in computing income from business or property. What we are chopping off from the first reference is an exception to deductions. We are removing that reference to subsection 20(7), which must mean that this is a tidying up process, as mentioned by the minister, in the list of 39 clauses of Bill C-170 that are not included in the ways and means motion. The reason I have taken so long to draw this to the attention of the committee is that the act is so complicated. I cannot overemphasize the care that one has to exercise in examining all of these particular provisions because they have cross-references. But in short, why the change?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. gentleman realizes, this is a technical amendment. It will delete reference to subsection 20(7) presently in subparagraph 12(1)(e)(ii). The reference to subsection 20(7) is redundant since it is previously mentioned in subparagraph 12(1)(e)(i). It is just a redundancy that we are eliminating without any policy consequences.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Obligation issued at discount.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, May I ask the minister why the change? Is it merely an error? I recall that Bill C-259 had the date June 17 or June 18, and this was the wrong day. Is that all it is?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Chairman. This is another technical amendment to ensure that bonds and other obligations issued on June 18, 1971, the date of the former budget, are covered by this subsection. This date was inadvertently missed in the existing provisions.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I think I should make it clear at this point that you had better keep looking down my way when you call clauses since I have many questions to ask. At some point we must have an explanation on the record from the minister of every change that we are making. There need not be a long elaboration, but I think that both the House and the general public are entitled to know why these changes are being made in the act. There is no other way for the public to be acquainted with these problems. Those reasons may be commented on by outsiders at some later date. However, this is the only way we will have an Income Tax Act which makes any sense.

• (1610)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am agreeable to that procedure, Sir, but I would intend to follow it with the understanding of the committee that I give a brief explanation of every clause as we come to it. If members of the committee are not satisfied with the explanation or wish a further explanation I will rise again. I might say that the hon. member for Edmonton West knows that whatever I say is not binding on the court in any event. It will be the wording of the clause which counts. I mean my words will not be binding on the court in respect of a determination of the meaning of a particular section or subsection. Subsection 18(4) of the present act provides that where a corporation's debt equity ratio exceeds three to one, that is to say where the ratio of debt to equity is larger than three to one in terms of dollar value, the excess debt will be regarded as equity and an appropriate part of the interest will be treated as a non-deductible expense.

This is the thin capitalization rule, and is used to prevent corporations so arranging their financial affairs that they artificially arrange their debt-equity ratio so as to have a good deal of their equity in debt and deduct the interest on it rather than have it as a non-deductible expense. Paragraph 18(4)(a)(ii) requires the equity portion of the formula to be calculated at the beginning of a corporation's taxation year. This creates a hardship for newly incorporated and expanding corporations. The amendment, in effect, permits the taxpayer to determine the equity by reference to the paid-up capital at either the beginning or end of the year. This is primarily a benefit to smaller companies which would not want to duplicate their accounting unnecessarily.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering whether the insistence by the government on this debt-equity ratio is not going to work a much greater hardship on small businesses and those just starting-out. I am not worried about the bigger established corporations. I am wondering, in this so-called neutrality approach to the act, what the effect will be. I have known many companies in the past which had perhaps $50,000 worth of assets. Two or three individuals would decide to incorporate the business. They would be in partnership and would have anywhere from $25,000 to $50,000. There is no question that this many shares will be issued as their contributions and that they are going to issue the necessary shares to themselves for the carrying on and establishment of a corporate entity because this very definitely, shall we say, affects their future operations with regard to the shares.

In setting up an obligation by the company to the individual shareholders concerning their major contribution, frankly I would suggest to the minister that he is being overly severe on small business. Whether it is at the beginning of the fiscal year or at the end matters little insofar as these businesses are concerned. I think what the minister is forgetting is that interest is being charged to the company expense account. If the business should be a small business, likely it is being taxed at the lower rate. Remember that as soon as it is charged up to the company's account, it is deemed to have been received by the shareholder whose marginal rate quite conceivably may be considerably higher. Therefore, why limit the structure to Canadian business if there is no way that the public is being cheated, since these are private companies. Why make it so difficult?

I am looking also at certain provisions which did exist in the province of Alberta of no-share qualifications for directors. Where there is a very small issue of shares, maybe three or five, for small businesses, why have this insistence on that particular rule? This is where I think the minister is doing a disservice to the smaller and newer businesses.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I may have misled the hon. member. Primarily, of course, this is to apply to foreign-owned corporations so that they cannot artificially arrange their capital and debt structure to lower income by way of deductible interest against debt and in effect manage to distribute that equity dividend back over the border or back to wherever the parent is. That is the purpose of the thin capitalization rule. It really has application only to foreign-owned corporations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In what way does the minister suggest it has application? Surely, the statement in the act catches all corporations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am advised not, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Wait a minute, Mr. Chairman. I raised a question as to whether this provision relates to a domestic corporation. Section 18(4) states:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, in computing the income for a taxation year of a corporation resident in Canada from a business or property, no deduction shall be made in respect of that proportion of any amount otherwise deductible in computing its income for the year in respect of interest paid or payable by it on outstanding debts to specified non-residents that

I see that it states "to specified non-residents".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right. I will take it within limits. But, can the minister say if it was felt there had been an abuse or if an abuse had been suggested? What proportion of companies does he think this affects, and is there any feeling that it materially affects the structure of those companies that he purports to catch with this section?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, we had some difficulty in this regard, but it was felt at the time of the tax reform that there had been some abuse and the thin capitalization rule was to meet it. We are now rendering the rule not more flexible in substance but only in accounting date.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. This is on clause 5.

Mr. Nystrom: I would like to ask whether there had been a previous rule here relating to debt equity or whether this is the first one.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This rule was enacted by my predecessor and came into effect on January 1, 1972.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am not getting up because I like to do so, Mr. Chairman, but because the committee feels I should give a brief explanation of every clause.

The Chairman: Is the minister referring to clause 5 or clause 6?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Clause 5, Sir. This is a technical amendment which was necessary in order to ensure that the amount paid with regard to principal payments in any preceding year is taken into account in determining the amount of reduction made in the current year. Paragraph 20(1)(f) of the act provides that when payments in respect of principal made in previous years exceed the amount for which the obligation was issued the excess is deductible.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Farming business.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I wonder if I might follow the procedure agreed upon. This is an important relieving provision concerning farm animals. It permits farmers to value their inventory of livestock, other than animals included in the basic herd, at any amount at fair market value even though they are reporting income on a cash basis.

• (1620)

Section 28(1) allows farmers to use the cash basis method under which an amount is included in income only when received and an expense is deducted only when paid. The new paragraph (b) of section 28(1) permits farmers to adjust their income otherwise computed under the cash basis method with the amount of inventory of livestock valued at a flexible amount from nil to the fair market value of livestock. This amendment responds to the fact that in the early years of establishing a herd on a farm expenses often far exceed income, and neither the five-year averaging nor the loss carry-over provision can fully absorb the loss in herd. The use of this flexible inventory system will provide the farmer with another way to average his income.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I would like some clarification now. As I understand the clause and the minister's remarks, this would mean in effect that a rancher could keep taking cattle into the herd and he would be, in effect, depreciating the total value of the animal as it was put into the herd. He could claim the value of the animal as a total expense. Am I correct?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman. This provision does not apply to the basic herd situation at all. It applies to animals other than a basic herd.

Mr. Gleave: Perhaps I should not have used the term. This means, then, that the farmer may retain animals in the herd and claim them as a total expense as they are retained, that is as a charge against his year's operation. Is that correct?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman should not confuse the animals that are treated separately outside of the herd, with which this clause deals, and the basic herd where other provisions pertain. In referring to a herd situation, he is putting himself outside the context of this amendment.

Mr. Gleave: What does this mean in effect? It says here that farmers may declare that they have kept animals. Let us get back to the start. As I read the clause, the farmer can declare the value of an animal without having sold it. Am I correct, or does this only apply to the selling side and not to the income side?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He can value his livestock other than the basic herd as a going inventory.

Mr. Gleave: Going into the herd? As he takes them in?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is an entirely different situation. This does not apply to animals going into a herd or coming out of a herd. This applies just to livestock, other than animals treated by farmers as part of their basic herds. So, the basic herd provision is not applicable here.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I still have some questions to put to the minister.

The Chairman: I will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar in a moment, but it seems to me he has asked the same question several times, and perhaps with an opportunity to consult the minister or his officials that difficulty could be resolved. Perhaps we can stand the clause until it is resolved. I do not want to hasten the committee but I think we cannot really have repetition of one question. We should try to avoid it.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. Can some farmers who have retained the basic herd also use this?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, indeed, for animals that are not part of the herd.

Mr. Ritchie: Say a farmer has 20 head of cattle and increased this number by the addition of five head of cattle which have a certain value. Let us assume they are valued at $300 each. Does he declare an income of $1,500 for these five animals with which he has increased his herd from 20 to 25?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If he is increasing the herd from 20 to 25 head of cattle, he comes within the basic herd provisions. If he elects to treat some animals in a different way, as livestock other than the basic herd, then the inventory calculation in this section applies.

Mr. Ritchie: It was my understanding that this provision would not apply to farmers who establish the basic herd after the provisions of the Income Tax Act came into effect, only those who already held the basic herd previously.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Ritchie: Therefore, we have to assume that on these five animals the farmer would declare an income of $1,500 although he did not have the cash but only animals worth $1,500. He would declare this as income for the year as well as what he sold.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, he can value those, according to the meaning of this amendment, anywhere between zero and the fair market value of those five animals.

Mr. Ritchie: I would like to ask a question. Let us say the market value of the 20 animals is a certain amount one year. The next year the farmer has 25 animals but their market value has gone down although he has far more animals. Is he deemed to have any income that year? He does not assume any income.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I understand it, he can revalue every year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gleave: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am on the same one. As I take it, the minister's explanation of this matter is that if a farmer had no basic herd or if these animals are supernumerary to the basic herd, they are inventory on which tax will be paid because they are taken into the income in that taxation year, and although they are sold the following year those receipts do not become income in the subsequent year, the same way as accounts receivable of the professional such as the doctor or the lawyer who has billed his patient and takes his account, although not collected, into his income and pays tax on it. Be that as it may, it would make it rather difficult, I think.

I am not too sure that there is an option here. Yes, I see there is an option if the taxpayer so elects. Once having elected, does it mean it is his option or choice depending on valuation, and therefore there is a degree of flexibility? Let us assume that we are in this year when animal prices are very high on the market. At the end of the taxation year prices will be at the same level and therefore this will tend to increase the farmer taxpayer's income. He may find himself in a higher tax bracket. The animals that he has now may be sold only some time next year when the market price may have dropped 25 per cent. Then, he will have paid income tax on what is more than the fair market value on the sale of his animals. Is there provision for readjustment between the actual realization and the valuation that the farmer puts on an animal this year at fair market value, or will the taxpayer be committed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is my simile correct?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, the hon. member's simile is correct and valuation can be made year by year. He is not held by his previous valuation. The problem is to allow a flexible inventory valuation so that he, in effect, can allocate losses in a future year against an inventory built up, if he chooses.

• (1630)

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, over a period of time the farmer or rancher could continually build up his cattle herd. I am not referring to the basic herd. I am sorry that came into the discussion, because I very well understand that the basic herd provision was eliminated except for those people who already had such a herd. Now, nobody can start a basic herd. But the farmer or rancher, as I understand it, can still build up and expand his herd. With each animal that he retains he can declare it as an expense and so would be building up his herd. In other words, he would be acquiring animals on which he did not have to pay income tax. Is that right?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, that is right.

Mr. Gleave: What happens X number of years down the road when he decides to liquidate those animals, which he has been able to acquire without paying tax on them? Does he liquidate them all as a bunch, and at that stage pay income tax which may be very high, or is there some way he could spread that payment over a period of time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If in an earlier year the farmer had brought the cattle into income by putting them on his inventory at fair market value he would already, in calculating his income against expenses, have paid taxes on them, and on their eventual disposition he would not be taxed twice. If the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with this explanation we could explain it to him in an accounting way thoroughly.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, this bill is before the committee, and accountants are asking me these questions. I think that question should be answered here and now in this House. If the explanation is given to me afterwards, that will not clarify matters for members of the House. For those people in Canada who deal with farmers' accounts, and who must advise farmers I think the explanation should be given now. But if the minister is unable to answer my question now, I am willing to accept that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I submit to the committee that I have answered it, so that any accountant who is advising a farmer, from my explanation would be able to advise him how to value his inventory of cattle through the business life of a farm. I do not think, from an accounting point of view, I could be any more explicit, than by saying this permits farmers a flexibility in valuing inventory which is not available to any other businessmen. It gives the farmer the flexibility of bringing cattle into income at any stage in the life of a beast. If he brings an animal into income, then tax is paid on it because the inventory is increased by the value of that animal. He would not be taxed twice when he disposes of it. That is the simplest explanation I can give. I submit that it is clear, and that an accountant who is familiar with farm accounts and with inventory in farming would have no difficulty in following that explanation.

Mr. Gleave: If the farmer disposed of the final herd he would not be taxed on the total received for these animals, on the cash income at that time. Is that right?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right. If those beasts have been brought into income, and the income calculated in a prior year, he would not be taxed again.

Mr. Ritchie: I would presume that once a farmer elects this method he will have to make an assessment of what his herd is worth every year, because it is going to vary from year to year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is so, but he can always return to a valuation at zero if he wants.

Mr. Ritchie: What is covered by the term "livestock"? Does it include a stable of race horses, pigs, chickens and so on?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will get the definition of that as found in the existing act and will give it to the hon. gentleman in just a moment. Now, I understand there is no definition in the act, and that being so the term can be given its ordinary meaning, to include horses.

Mr. Ritchie: And poultry and pigs?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman is just as capable of defining livestock as I am, and probably better.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will deal with the basic herd provisions. Even though these provisions go part way, they do not recognize the full intent of the basic herd in the cattle industry in Canada today. The beef cattle industry is the largest agricultural commodity group in Canada today, with sales of $1.2 billion at the farm gate last year. The cattlemen through their organization, the Canadian Cattleman's Association, have made representations to the Minister of Finance, and more recently to the Minister of National Revenue. I believe this took place at a meeting in Kamloops. I would strongly support their representations. A number of abuses in connection with the basic herd provisions could be corrected with the introduction of a proper amendment, but the principle of the basic herd provision, in recognizing the capital value of a breeding herd, is a very sound one, and the cattlemen of Canada would like to see this fully incorporated into the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Dauphin asked what animals would be covered, and since there is no definition of livestock in the act itself I would ask the minister to look at section 248(1), the definition clause on farming, which states that farming under the terms of the act includes tillage of the soil, livestock raising and exhibiting, maintaining of horses for racing, raising of poultry, fur farming, dairy farming, fruit growing and the keeping of bees. If you are engaging in the farming business and are talking about livestock, all those things are a form of livestock. They are certainly alive. Someone asked if you are going to count the bees and find out whether they are alive. If you are mink ranching you will find out by poking your fingers into the cages! But is there any definition? I think the hon. member for Dauphin had a perfectly valid question when he asked what you mean by livestock and how far this is going to go.

There might be a distinction. If there is a narrow interpretation given in the new subsection 28(1) to the word "livestock". Livestock appears to be cattle because in the definition clause on farming there is a definition drawn between dairy farming and livestock raising. Let us hope there is not this narrow definition in this interpretation. Fortunately, the Minister of National Revenue is in the House and I hope his ears are tuned to this discussion and that he will make sure there is not a narrow interpretation of this particular clause but that it will be applicable to dairy farmers, to mink ranchers, to poultry raisers, horse breeders, cattle breeders and beekeepers. Let the minister change the act. He does not understand because the section indicates that the keeping of bees is farming.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not read the subsection the same way as the hon. member, but I will give an undertaking to committee that if I find on consultation with my colleagues the Minister of National Revenue that there is an undue restriction on this I will bring it back.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, my information is that most beef farmers are a bit concerned that this provision will not work to their advantage or be as fair to that type of industry. I think this is because it takes a long time to build up a herd—it is generally 10 or 15 years before the farmer makes anything. Will the minister monitor the effect of this clause very carefully to see whether there should not be a change back to some type of basic herd?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I certainly will, Mr. Chairman. I am concerned that the Income Tax Act should make some sense down on the farm and on the ranch. The purpose of this amendment is to allow for the early years in establishing a ranch or a farm when the expense usually exceeds the revenue. In those days neither the five-year averaging or loss carried forward is of any use to the farmer or rancher to fully absorb the losses that are incurred by a flexible valuation of inventory; now he only needs to bring his inventory into valuation when it best suits from his own revenue-expense point of view. This amendment is in response to the representations we have received from the dairy and cattle industries, particularly the beef industry, and we will continue to stay in touch.

I want to recall to the committee that when the Prime Minister gave me this particular job I arranged with the former member for Calgary South to set up a three-way committee of finance, national revenue and agriculture, to examine the application on a continuing basis of the Income Tax Act to agriculture. I felt then, and I still do, that a good many of these provisions were made by people who had not too much experience on the farm. We are trying to improve on a continuing basis, so that I can give an undertaking to the hon. members for Dauphin and Edmonton West.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Can we get a firm understanding—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Red Deer has the floor.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask one question of the minister. In speaking about the basic herd, we are talking about numbers. Is the minister speaking about numbers of cattle or is he talking about dollars?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, we are not talking about the basic herd at all. This amendment applies to those animals not in the basic herd. We are talking about numbers of dollars, about bringing individual animals into inventory at the choice and election of the farmer. He could bring them in at zero or the fair market value or anywhere in between as suits him best.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, are we agreed that we shall stand this clause and come back to it later with the changes the minister may find acceptable to correct this situation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have not yet found any situation to correct. I have been trying to give an explanation. The only problem we had was the definition of livestock. Since there is no definition in the act then according to the ordinary rules of interpretation, the dictionary definition of livestock would apply. I gave an undertaking to the hon. member for Dauphin and the hon. member for Edmonton West that if in the course of these proceedings I find that the administration is more narrow than that I just indicated, I would bring it back to committee and we would cure it.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister says that he does not see anything to correct in the clause. This particular part of this bill is supposed to take the place of the provisions we had in the previous act for a basic herd, according to my understanding. I do not know what other purpose it serves. The last time I heard these changes discussed it was decided that the basic herd provision would be eliminated with. The only reason that I can see for this particular clause is to try to put something into this bill that will permit a farmer to build up a herd. As the hon. member for Dauphin pointed out, that takes about 10 or 15 years. Surely this must be the purpose. Therefore, instead of livestock the reference it should be, to the kind of herd you would build up, which is cattle. Why do we not stand the clause and put in what is necessary so that the ordinary, working farmer will understand it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With respect, Mr. Chairman, I think the ordinary working farmer understands what livestock is; livestock is certainly wider than cattle. I think the wider the definition the better the farmer would like it. It certainly includes cattle.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make some comment about the term "farm" and the term now being used by a good many of the more viable farm units all across the country, the "family corporate farm". I want to assure everybody concerned that by this terminology I do not simply mean a sort of branch of the business type corporation in any sense of the word. The corporate family farm is a device that farmers, as their land requirements grow because of the need to spread their unit costs, have had to resort to in order to maintain a little longer the original concept of the family farm. This is no way can be considered as a large business corporation.

My point is that family corporate farms should be treated under the tax laws as individual farmers are treated. Corporate farms are discriminated against, and this discrimination works real hardship on the farmer who incorporates. Strong representations have been made on this point. A good example of the situation is the fact that corporate farmers are not permitted to average over five years and are not able to declare their principal residence. These items are most important. I stress their importance and suggest that the family corporate structure should be dealt with in the same way and on the same lines as an individual farmer is dealt with, for taxation purposes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am advised that for purposes of this clause, the evaluation of inventory applies to any type of farm, whether incorporated or unincorporated.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to see this clause stood and the word "livestock" changed in the bill. There was a reason for previously establishing the basic herd provision with respect to beef cattle. The reason is that a cow usually has one calf, whereas a sow may have a large litter and the chicken population can be built up just as quickly as the farmer can put eggs through an incubator. The producer does not need a long time to build up his stock of hogs or poultry, but he does need a long time to build up his herd of cattle. I submit that this particular clause should refer specifically to cattle. That is what I am trying to impress upon the minister. Let us stand this clause and change that word. I think the hon. member for Medicine Hat would agree with me, as would all those here who are familiar with farming, and say that that is what we want to do. I am not prepared to see the farmer left in his present position, as some members, when we are considering some other part of the bill, may see fit to introduce changes to this effect. Why not act now?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the problem to which the hon. member is addressing himself is unreal. He suggests that this clause should apply to cattle only. Its application is wider than that. The definition of farm business is to be found at the beginning of the amendment and that term is defined widely. The farmer can elect to value animals of other than his basic herd at fair market price, at zero, or anywhere in between. He does not need to do so. Not only will cattle farmers get the benefit of this provision, but farmers engaged in other types of livestock rearing will also benefit. Therefore, I submit it is in the interest of the whole farming community.

The hon. member has suggested that this should be restricted to cattle. I am suggesting that he really wants a wider purview of the amendment which, after all, is a relieving amendment and will encourage the farmer to begin animal production by the flexible evaluation of inventory. He can set income against losses, when loss is incurred. He does not need to take advantage of this provision. It is not introduced only for the benefit of the cattle farmer; it is there for any other type of farmer. If the hon. member wants to restrict it to cattle, then he is running against the interests of what he wants to continue, and I say this with respect.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, the minister a moment ago said that this provision applies to all farmers. I wonder whether, when drafting this legislation, it was decided to limit this provision to the family farm, or to the incorporated family farm, eliminating, in other words, the non-family farm corporation, the huge concern which goes into farming much as it might go into any other business for the purposes of tax reduction. Or, the same might apply to a lawyer or a doctor who might purchase a farm and use it for a tax deduction. I wonder if this matter is being considered.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it would be very difficult to do that, as this part applies to the computation of income from a farming business.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Loss from farming where chief source of income not farming.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is a relieving provision which permits the taxpayer whose chief source of income is either from farming or a combination of farming and some other source, in other words a hobby farmer, to deduct from his income all scientific research expenditures without being subject to the loss limits under section 31 subsection 1. Section 31, as it now exists, permits the hobby farmer to deduct from other income a maximum of $5,000 of losses originating from farming business, but these losses can be included as a deduction for scientific research. The maximum of scientific research would be in the amount of $5,000, and that would be the limit. The new amendment will ensure that the deduction of all expenses for scientific research related to the farming business can be deducted. Submissions to this effect have been made. A number of people across this country are saying that it is in the interest of legitimate scientific agricultural research to have that expense deducted.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I am gratified to see this amendment, because I suspect there is a big pile of letters in the minister's office on this question. This matter has been drawn to my attention by farmers, that is, by those engaged in farm operations in Alberta. I know that this is of concern to farmers across the country. The people I am concerned about, particularly, are engaged in a large ranching operation. They operate with a particular type of land that has been seeded in a special way. Records have been maintained by computer and special nutrients and food additives have been prepared and fed according to formulas of, shall we say, the more scientific developers of agricultural feeds. They are the corporations which carry on business in these nutrients. They use machinery and other equipment and are engaging in, shall we say, a partnership in this type of operation. They were able to deduct their expenses. There is a particular operation I have in mind. Now, it is paying taxes, I am glad to say, and is no longer a loser. There were some large initial losses under the old ceiling, which was lower, which had a very serious effect. I am glad to see this amendment. The point I want to make clear is—

The Chairman: Order, please. This is a good time to call it five o'clock. After completing our procedures, we shall go on to the consideration of private members' business.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was agreed earlier that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) would request leave, when the Speaker was back in the chair, for the printing of the analysis of clauses or subclauses appearing in Bill C-170 and not referred to in the ways and means motion. Is it agreed that these be printed under this part of our proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty)—Canadian Pacific Railway—site for dumping of garbage from metro Toronto; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave)—Agriculture—feed grain—suggested additional compensation to western producers; the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Gauthier)—National Capital—inquiry as to purchase of LaSalle Academy by government.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR DEDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST ON PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure to amend the Income Tax Act to provide that a taxpayer be entitled to deduct in computing his income for a taxation year, interest paid on money borrowed to finance the cost to build or purchase a home to be used by such taxpayer as his principal residence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, housing is a universal need, yet home ownership is too expensive for the majority of Canadians. Canadians want to own their own homes. Surveys conducted by the task force on housing and verified elsewhere clearly established that 80 per cent of Canadian families want to live in single family dwellings. If 80 per cent of Canadians want such housing, it is our job to see that they get it, if it is within the power of the House to do so. The effect of the policy I propose would be a dramatic reduction by almost $1 billion per year in the cost of housing for Canadian families. Much has been said in this House and in the press about the tendency of the government to profit from inflation. Proposals have been made by our party and adopted by the government which will tend to off-set future inflation to some extent.

The deductibility of mortgage interest would in effect reduce the impact of inflation on land and construction costs and interest rates over the past 10 years which have, partly through errors and omissions of government, been out of proportion to the general increase in the cost of living. I cite as an example the recent report that housing in the Toronto area costs 11 per cent more than it did one year ago. While food costs rise people are still eating, while clothing costs rise people are still clothed. The rise in housing costs, however, has deprived many of the prospect of home ownership and committed them to a life of paying rent.

My motion seeks to eliminate what I feel has been a serious loss to the quality of life of lower and middle income Canadians. Canada's population has increased from 21.4 million people in 1970 to 21.7 million people in 1971, and to just over the 22 million mark today. During this period, net family formation has been estimated at well over 200,000 families. The need to increase the supply of reasonably-priced housing for these and existing families in Canada is obvious.

To this end, a comprehensive plan must be evolved which would effectively reduce the final price of a home by compensating for any disproportionate component in the cost of a house. By reducing the final cost of a home, this plan would have the added appeal of increasing real demand and thereby stimulating the economy. This, then, is the problem with which we must deal.

There are three main components in the cost of a house; the land it is built on, the structure itself and the mortgage loan by which it is financed. All three have contributed to the escalating costs in both the home ownership and rental markets. Unquestionably, the largest single cost contributor, in recent years at least, has been the cost of money as reflected in spiralling interest rates.

The rise in interest rates from about 6 per cent to about 9 per cent has added more to the monthly payment of an average mortgage loan than a $5,000 increase in the price of the building lot would have added without a change in the interest rate. For example, a mortgage with a principle amount of $16,500 repayable over 25 years at 6 per cent would have a total interest cost of $15,200. The same mortgage carrying an interest rate of 9 per cent would have a total interest cost of $24,500, a difference in interest costs of $9,300 on a mortgage loan of $16,500. Furthermore, high interest rates have the effect of substantially raising the level of annual income needed to secure a mortgage compared with previous years.

Similarly, cost pressures are affecting the rental market. A rise of 3 percentage points in interest rates, for example, will add between $15 and $30 or more to the monthly rental for a new apartment, depending on its size. Therefore, not only are more families excluded from the market for the single family dwelling, but it is now much more difficult for them to find relief from the pressures of rising financing costs in the rental market. As a result, families in search of decent housing are being priced out of the market and the long-run health of the housing industry is being threatened. This housing market of relatively short supply and relatively high cost has made the quest for adequate accommodation a major problem for more than the lowest income groups. They have a problem, to be sure, but so do those in the next income brackets, the average wage earners of the $6,000 to $12,000 range who in most cases do not qualify for public housing assistance and should not have to seek such assistance in any case.

With the general level of living costs escalating and with single family dwelling prices what they are, the home-ownership dream of many of these Canadians is just that, a dream. Instead they are left to scramble in the grim reality of the rental market to obtain accommodation, much of it ill-suited for family living and much of it renting at monthly rates well beyond the 27 per cent of income the CMHC handbook deems acceptable for a family budget. It is this group who, in many urban centres, are increasingly earning the designation of the affluent poor.

Existing government housing programs which were designed and intended to aid average and low income groups in Canada to own their own home are not adequate. The estimated average family income of all Canadian families in 1971 was $10,471. However, the average family income of NHA borrowers was $12,005 in 1971, a gap of over $1,500 in money terms and uncounted thousands in human terms. Additional methods and programs must be developed in Canada whereby low and middle income families can reasonably aspire to home ownership. That they do aspire to it, as indeed do most Canadians, was one of the more unanimous conclusions reached by the 1969 federal task force on housing and urban development.

This task force listened to a continuous flow of expert testimony that future housing policies for Canada must be directed to the provision of multiple unit accommodation, largely on a rental basis. They found, however, that as a result of economic pressures, group after group of concerned citizens came forward to voice their deep yearning to own their own home. It became the practice of the task force at its public meetings to seek a show of hands on this question. Invariably the response indicated that at least 80 per cent of those present wanted to own their own home; the same figure, incidentally, which Professor Edward Michaelson of Toronto obtained in a more scientific sampling.

To have a such a high percentage of real and potential homeowners within the Canadian population should come as no surprise. It was the pursuit of independence and the search for new beginnings that brought pioneers to Canada originally as a place where a man and a family could acquire a piece of land. There seems to be little doubt that this same attraction and spirit are still vital forces in this country, even if that piece of land is becoming over more expensive to acquire. We are living in an age of exponential change. Individuals are being buffeted about by forces they do not understand. If we are to avoid alienating Canadians, we must provide a continuum whereby the past can be lined to the present. It is my belief that the best vehicle to stabilize any individual against the vagaries and pressures of a changing society is to place his roots firmly in the soil of home ownership.

In recent years, Canadians have come to accept continuing inflation as a way of economic life and, having done so, they are looking more and more to investment sources which seem to offer protection for their earnings and savings from the ravages of an inflationary rip-off. Today, there are a few better such sources than single family dwellings, prices of which have generally been rising in a supply-short market at rates sufficient to allow for even the worst inflationary loss. Single family dwellings then are increasingly becoming not only a desirable place to live, but a good investment as well.

In short, as a result of factors such as these, there still exists a definite, if frustrated, philosophy of home ownership among the Canadian people. I realize there are not simple solutions to the cost of money problem. The mortgage market cannot be divorced from the over-all Canadian capital market and the general level of interest rates in Canada cannot be divorced from those of the western world in general and, particularly, the United States. Any steps that can be formulated and implemented, however, which would have the effect of reducing the net cost of mortgage money to homeowners would be constructive. The alternative is to continue to deny large numbers of Canadians access to the housing market.

By ensuring an adequate supply of mortgage funds we do not necessarily ensure that such funds will be available at rates of interest which bring housing costs within the range of the average Canadian wage-earner. Indeed, there seems no question that the sharp rise in money cost during the past several years has been the largest single factor in maintaining the gap between average family income and average homeowner income. A straightforward, pragmatic method of dealing with high interest rates would be to simply alter the tax laws so that interest payments could qualify as a legitimate expense against taxable income. This would be consistent with the present treatment of interest rate expenses incurred by investors.

Since the purchase of a home is a most important social and economic investment for most Canadian families, such tax write-offs should be given priority consideration. On equity grounds, similar write-offs might be granted to renters—the portion of the monthly rent which covers the mortgage interest payments of the landlord being the tax deductible expense. These modifications to the tax law would comprise an additional and beneficial component to the present policy. At the same time, exemption from income tax of interest paid on house mortgages would mean a redistribution of government revenue—federal as well as provincial since both levels of government share income taxes—in favour of taxpayers who own a mortgaged house. In this sense, there is no debating the significance of home ownership as a technique by which low income households can acquire their one major asset and build a substantial nest egg at the same time.

If mortgage interest payments were made tax deductible a ballpark estimate of the annual cost in terms of foregone revenue would be in the order of $930 million. The alternative proposal to eliminate the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials it is estimated would cost about $365 million per year. However, the mortgage interest cost calculation does not take into account offsetting federal government revenue which would be derived from increased mortgage interest payments resulting from a greater number of homeowner mortgages being taken out. Similarly, the increased sale of building supplies which would result from the stimulation to the housebuilding industry and the resulting increased level of employment among those who would be engaged in this industry would aid this sector of the business community significantly and, therefore, the Canadian people.

By stabilizing the housing industry we would effectively reduce union demands for higher wages geared to offset numerous lay-offs. This, in turn, would help dampen inflationary tendencies in the economy and the increased level of employment in absolute terms would increase government tax revenue while decreasing transfer and welfare payments and, at the same time, reduce our chronic unemployment problem.

The real cost of the mortgage interest program could further be reduced if, to offset excessive benefits accruing to more affluent housing consumers, a limit were placed on the amount of interest payments exempted from taxation. For example, a $2,000 annual limit per family up to a maximum of $30,000 over the life of the mortgage, would cover all or the greater part of mortgage interest payments from most home purchasers. Payments beyond this limit could be taxable either wholly or partially, according to some graduated schedule. With any incentive directed to a specific section of the economy there is a need to assess its efficiency. In my submission those who would benefit the most from this motion are the very people who have the potential purchasing power to give a massive thrust to the development of new housing in all areas of Canada, given this type of assistance.

This proposal then, by reducing the cost of housing to the individual buyer, would enable a more realistic number of Canadians to acquire home ownership and thereby provide for Canadians access to a lifestyle in accord with their aspirations and the promise of this great country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) the mover of this motion, says that the government should permit homeowners from now on to deduct interest charges from their taxable income.

Obviously, this proposal has a great deal of political appeal and were it not for the fact that we are good administrators we certainly would be inclined to adopt this proposal and to put it in effect in order to get votes. However, I do not feel this is part of the Progressive Conservative program, because, on looking at the program they submitted at the time of the last election campaign, I did not notice that they had put forward a proposed tax reform whereby interests paid on individual properties would be deducted from taxable income.

At the time of the budget debate and in the course of speeches made on other financial measures, I listened to spokesmen for the Progressive Conservative party, and I have to make the same remark. As for the member for Regina East, his proposal reflects his personal views, because, to my knowledge, it does not have the support of his party.

The hon. member particularly explained to us the aspect of housing promotion for low and middle income people. According to me, he did not consult the recent statistics, because since 1968, there have been more houses built in Canada than in the last 20 years. Consequently, the fact that a homeowner could not deduct from his taxable income the interest he was paying on his mortgage, has not proved an obstacle, in my opinion, to the construction of private homes in Canada.

Maybe certain arguments have not been put forward, either the principal of the Income Tax Act according to which there cannot be deducted, as personal or living expenses, genuine personal expenses. This obviously includes interests paid on loans obtained for the purchase of goods and services for personal use, as opposed to those that are used for business purposes.

Already, under the Income Tax Act, the interests paid on money borrowed to earn an income or for reasons of business is deductible, and we have gone one step further in the context of tax reform for we have even suggested that when a company borrows to increase its share capital, the interests should be deductible. We are well aware that as many individual exemptions as possible must be made, but we must nevertheless bear in mind the important principle of taxation which says that expenses may be deductible when they produce income.

If, as the previous speaker suggested, expenses of a personal nature were deductible, obviously very few people would have any taxable income in the long run because it seems to me people would rush to get loans and deduct the interest so as to take advantage of the additional exemptions.

In order to balance a budget, taxes must be collected, and to do so, somebody has to pay taxes.

• (1720)

Rather than allow such deductions, we have, since 1972, raised the basic exemptions to $1500 for single person and $2850 for a married one. In fact, the February 1973 budget provides for an increase in basic exemptions to $1600 and $3000 respectively. To these exemptions, we have added additional exemptions such as for dependent children. Furthermore, under the provisions of the bill now before us, the taxpayer over age 65 benefits from an extra exemption of $1000. The blind have special exemptions especially when they have to stay in bed or move in a wheelchair.

The basic deductions allowed in this country stand among the most generous in the world. Compared with those granted in the United States, we see that in that country the basic exemption is $750 for a single person and $1500 for a married couple. Even if certain countries have already recognized the possibility of deducting, for income tax purposes, the interest levied on a mortgage, their basic exemptions were rather different from ours and I think that it is quite an appreciable benefit for low and average income groups.

According to the motion of the hon. member for Regina East, it must be pointed out that the principal residence is the home where the taxpayer is living and consequently, such a purchase must be considered as a personal expense.

As a rule, the purchase of a house is not different but more important than that of any personal item. However, such a purchase is usually the highest individual expense made by the taxpayer in his lifetime. We are conscious of that problem since we have put forward some incentives and steps to help the small investor build or buy himself a house, if he chooses to, it should be remembered that when the fiscal reform was introduced, we of the Liberal party recognized the desirability of encouraging home ownership. On the other hand, we did not feel that the best solution lay in departing from the basic rule of deductibility of above-mentioned personal expenses.

The Income Tax Act therefore provides two major incitements to home ownership. The first consists in allowing a taxpayer, when he sells his home, a tax-free capital gain. The second provides for continuation of the rule whereby such economic advantages accruing to him because he owns his home are not included in his income. This advantage can be considered as a return on invested capital, i.e. the value of his home. It could also be considered as income not received because he did not invest his money otherwise.

Incidentally, it is useful to note also that in other countries, especially in Great Britain, presumed income was once added to the taxpayer's income.

We should bear in mind whenever we deal with the Income Tax Act, the principle of justice whereby all taxpayers, whoever they may be, get the same treatment, as regards their participation to any government's budget, especially the federal government's.

If two individuals have $20,000 each and one of them decides to invest his $20,000 in bonds or something that would yield an income while the other one decides to use his $20,000 to buy a house, the result would be that the one investing in shares would contribute to the development of Canadian economy and the creation of employment, the one investing his $20,000 in interest bearing bonds would pay tax on the interest he would get, while the person investing in property, would see the mortgage interest he would have to pay, if there were a mortgage, deducted from his taxable income tax and that would be unjust perhaps in the case of the tenant as compared with that of the owner. One could also say this, should one wish to carry the arguement further: if we grant such an exemption to owners, we should also grant one to the tenant who pays rent.

The Progressive Conservatives very often complain, Mr. Speaker, over the complexity of the Income Tax Act; it would be still more complex if we followed such a method.

If the individual investing $20,000 in something other than personal property and the one investing in the property, would sell after 10, 15 or 20 years the assets they have acquired and both make a $10,000 profit, the home owner would have no tax to pay on capital gains since the law provides for a special exemption on the taxpayer's residence, whereas the individual investing in other areas would have to pay capital gains tax.

Then perhaps there would be a different status between tenant and owner and since the Income Tax Act is aimed at equalizing the economic force of Canadians in the field of taxes, this proposal would hardly be acceptable. The implementation of this proposal could be technically detrimental to those investing in areas other than real estate.

Moreover—and this is a rather important point—the adoption of such a proposal would favour high income taxpayers in three different ways. One thing we do not want now is to be partial to the rich at the expense of the not-so-rich.

First, if an individual's earnings do not allow him to save the down payment for a house, obviously he could not take advantage of this provision.

Second, if an individual owns his own home but has a taxable income lower than his mortgage interest, he would not be entitled to the full deduction.

Third, because of the escalation rate of personal income tax, a deduction is more valuable for a taxpayer whose maximum rate is currently about 50 per cent than for another whose maximum rate is 10 or 12 per cent. One could also point out two other aspects of that proposal, hypothetical ones, of course, but having some importance, since the proposal itself is hypothetical in that sense that if it were applied, one could wonder about the results. There might be results which the mover perhaps has not considered.

First, such a system could boost mortgage interest rates because house buyers might be ready to pay higher rates since they could deduct interests from personal income tax. Therefore, a problem could appear.

Second, one can assume that such a system would incite people to mortgage their houses in order to accumulate funds for other personal expenses, since they could not deduct from their income tax the interest paid on the money borrowed to buy personal items. Which means that instead of borrowing, for instance, to purchase a boat or any other object that people now use daily, someone could say: I am going to borrow on my property, serving as a guarantee, since I am entitled to deduct the interest that I shall pay on the mortgage, and that money I will use not for amortization of the price of a property, but for personal purposes, for instance, buying a boat or some other thing of that kind.

And that way I think we would be encouraging people to mortgage their houses to buy all sorts of other items which are not directly related to production and which could not constitute a source of income.

We could thus end up with a situation where a sense of clear-cut ownership of a house could be an indication of very bad tax planning.

It is difficult to assess the exact cost of such a proposal from a tax point of view and I hesitate to put a figure on it. If we need $18 billion or $20 billion to operate this country, obviously people will have to pay taxes. If on the one hand we grant them a mortgage interest exemption, surely the amount lost which could reach $500 million or more will have to be recovered by considering the abolishment of certain present deductions as a replacement for those I have mentioned. I think that if we look at the issue of income tax, budgets and estimates, that suggestion is not valid.

However, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Regina East for having raised that very interesting problem and I think it is good for the people of Canada to know the arguments voiced by the hon. member concerning housing and also to stress the effects that such a suggestion could have on government revenues.

In fact, there are still two aspects to those questions and I think it is very valid to allow hon. members to express their personal views through motions such as the one before us and to have them debated so people will be able to judge as long we can recover the amounts thus lost by the Treasury.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take only a few minutes in this debate. I should like to commend the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) on the statement he made in presenting his motion. If that commendation seems to imply that he said something in his speech that is not contained in the motion, that is precisely the implication I intend to convey.

As hon. members will be aware, there are times when this kind of motion is presented that we ask certain questions. Today, however, the hon. member for Regina East anticipated those questions and indicated the terms on which he would like such a policy to be administered. In particular, he made two points on which I commend him. I wish the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) had listened to the speech instead of merely giving us the prepared answer.

On the one hand, the hon. member for Regina East said that something comparable to the measure proposed in his motion should be available for persons who rent their accommodation. His second point was that there should be a limitation on the amount of mortgage interest that could be claimed for income tax purposes. These two problems arise in connection with a policy of allowing mortgage interest as an income tax deductible item, and I welcome the fact that the hon. member for Regina East has made it clear that in working out such a policy he would want these two points to be met. Therefore, the understanding is that this is what we are talking about in these income tax adjustments which will assist people to purchase their own home: we are not talking about borrowing money to buy boats or other things, which the hon. member for Laurier raised as a sort of strawman. I am getting mixed up here when I have boats turning into strawmen. But what we are talking about is a policy which will encourage home ownership and at the same time provide comparable assistance to those who rent their accommodation. In our view, this is a commendable policy. I would like to see further thought given to it.

I know what happens to resolutions and bills in private members' hour. The only thing I must not do is take part in any talking-out process. May I say again that I think the hon. member for Laurier should have listened to the hon. member for Regina East when he said there should be a limitation placed on the amount of mortgage interest that would be allowed for income tax purposes. That certainly meets the point about an arrangement of this sort being a bonanza for the wealthy rather than one to meet its intended purpose.

As many members of this House will be aware, some of the provinces already have done something in this area. I know this because I am familiar with the situation in two provinces, namely, Manitoba and Ontario. This probably applies to other provinces as well. Rebates on account of property taxes are being allowed. The conditions vary in these two provinces, but not greatly. In both Manitoba and Ontario an arrangement has been made whereby persons who rent their living accommodation receive a tax credit similar to that which is available to home owners. So this is not a crazy idea about which no one could ever do anything: Manitoba and Ontario have done something about it. I think it is time this arrangement was looked into at the federal level with respect to the cost of shelter.

Another argument the hon. member for Laurier used was that if you start talking about expenses for which you allow deductibility for income tax purposes, where do you draw the line? This expense is allowed, somebody wants another, and pretty soon all of one's income is claimed as expenses and there is no taxable income left. May I suggest, again, that that argument is a strawman. May I also suggest that surely living accommodation is a pretty basic fact of life and it is not unreasonable to suggest that income tax exemption arrangements should take care of that fact.

The cost of accommodation is becoming so high that I do not think we can trade on the arguments against this sort of arrangement which for many years the department has ground out for government speakers in private members hour. This has become a serious problem and I think something should be done about it. Let me say quite frankly that there are several ways: there are tax credits, there are special exemption amounts for home ownership or for home rental, such as the blanket exemption which we have for charitable donations, or we could adopt a formula such as the one proposed by the hon. member for Regina East. In any case, I think the House should take seriously the proposition that consideration should be given in our income tax arrangements for the cost of occupancy, whether it be for those who rent a home or for those who endeavour to buy one.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, at first blush one reads the hon. member's motion with interest and certainly with approbation. The problem with the motion, in the view of the government, is that the hon. member did not elaborate it enough. Notwithstanding the support which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) sought to give, I think the motion raises many more questions than it answers. The few buttressing answers provided by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre just do not fit the bill, so far as I am concerned, although they certainly make the views of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) more palatable.

The feeling regarding motions of this nature which are so often put on the order paper is that they do not look far enough down the road. Hon. members who sponsor such motions are prepared to show all the advantages but they do not spend too much time elaborating the problems that would arise nor the administrative difficulties that would be involved.

The great thing about a motion such as this, however, is that the government, nothwithstanding the fact that a motion or a bill in private member's hour may be talked out, is given an opportunity to pause and ask itself: Is there a way in which this particular administrative difficulty can be overcome? I think some of the views expressed by the hon. member for Regina East endeavour to do just that. I do not think he provided all the answers but I think that for once—we do not get too much of this from opposition members—he conceded that there might be some problems and he came up with suggestions to overcome them, namely, a limitation on the amount of mortgage interest that would be exempt and the suggestion dealing with the unfairness that would arise relating to a man who rents as opposed to one who owns a house.

The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) was listening, but did not feel it was necessary to elaborate on the comments made by the hon. member for Regina East. However, he went down another road and dealt, not so much with the man who buys a house but the man who invests his money. There might be further difficulties in that particular area. So the motion does give rise to many questions.

There is a grey area in the hon. member's motion, and with the latitude allowed in private members' hour I would like to explore it for a few minutes. I refer to the situation where a home owner has imposed upon him a problem not of his own making, where he is required to put out money and where in all probability he has to borrow that money and pay interest on it. I think there is an area here where the total amount of money borrowed and the interest paid should be allowed either as a write-off, as a deduction, or as some form of tax concession to the home owner.

I am thinking primarily of the problem faced by home owners as well as those who rent, because this would be equally applicable to both categories, along the shores of the Great Lakes. When I say "along the shores," let me point out that some years ago they lived 100 yards or so from the shore but now find themselves on the shore of Saint Clair Lake or of the various rivers that feed into the Great Lakes basin. This is the situation of people who had built a house, or a substantial building, on the lakefront but suddenly found that erosion had occurred. When they built the house it was far enough from the water's edge that they did not have to worry; now they find the water has come closer to their front door and they are forced to do something to protect their property.

An hon. Member: What about floating a loan?

Mr. Cullen: An hon. member suggests floating a loan. They are faced with this situation, and they have to build walls or hire trucks to drop loads of gravel and stone along the water's edge. A great deal of money has to be spent simply to protect their property. Perhaps a concession might be made—this is an area which could be considered by the Department of Finance—in the interest of helping these people. It is not a problem they created; it is a problem forced upon them by the vagaries of nature, if you will.

Some people may ask why such action should be taken because an individual is protecting his private property. I suggest he is protecting a piece of property which will be owned by others down through the years, and the land involved will be protected in perpetuity. The home owner is not only protecting his home for his own use and benefit, but for the benefit of those who will buy it from him and will own the property through the years in perpetuity. So, in effect, it is money he or she is spending in the interests of protecting a piece of property that must be protected now if it is to maintain its value. Here is a situation where a tax allowance somewhat along the lines proposed in the hon. member's motion could work to the advantage not only of the home owner but of the person who rents along the shores of the Great Lakes.

Some of the points I had hoped to make were, in effect, made by the hon. member for Laurier. This is where I thought the hon. member for Regina East and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre might have helped us a little more by having carried out more research on this motion to discover how much tax revenue would be lost as a result of this proposal. I know the hon. member made a valuable effort to indicate that tax revenue would be lost, and he felt there were some areas where it would be recouped. If there had been a little more research I would be more apt to vote in favour of the motion should it come to a vote today.

I conclude by again pointing out that perhaps a tax allowance or a tax credit could be considered in the case of people who have an adverse situation forced upon them. In this situation, governments are often prepared, after the fact—after a flood, after substantial damage, after a tornado or a hurricane—to pour millions of taxpayers' dollars into repairing the damage. Government at all levels seems somewhat loath to make taxpayers' money available, to make tax concessions to people before a problem arises, in the course of its arising or before it becomes a disaster or a catastrophe.

I was pleased to hear the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) indicate the role the federal government is prepared to play, and I hope some initiative will be shown by the provinces. I understand that the province of Ontario is taking some action so that the taxpayer will be protected in this instance. One of the things that concern people when taxpayer's money is spent on a particular project, or when tax concessions are made, is that they might find themselves with their land in the public domain. In some cases, beaches or access to beaches will be thrown open to the general public. This is a question that should have been answered many years ago and I am sorry that it was not. There is an immediate problem here and I believe a tax allowance or concession should be made available to people, along the lines suggested by the hon. member, respecting interest on mortgages when they have to deal with a problem not of their own making.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should simply like to make a few comments on the motion now before us concerning home ownership and the deduction from personal income of the interest a person must pay for any building which enriches the whole country.

I think we should make efforts to encourage young people to become owners, because to be an owner is in fact to participate really, to possess really part of the fatherland. In some way, the home is a small fatherland someone owns, someone loves and someone wants to defend with all his strength.

It is fine to make nice patriotic speeches and to show young people that the fatherland is something sacred we must defend with all our strength but if we make it possible for young people to become real owners through legislation, they will have the pride of improving their property from year to year, and of being more concerned about the public administration, not only at the national level but at the provincial, municipal and school levels.

When we succeed in getting young people interested in becoming real homeowners, then we will interest them indirectly in the entire public administration, at any level. When we succeed in creating this concern in young people's mind, we may be sure that when unhappily a dramatic situation happens where our nation's fate is at stake, as I said earlier, then these young people will understand that their real homeland begins at the very level of the property.

When these young people understand that their property is part of the nation, they will be prepared to make sacrifices to safeguard it, at the school, municipal, provincial and national levels. I suggest that then it will really be possible to count on an efficient and interested contribution from every citizen to safeguard all the provileges that the property right involves.

I therefore understand perfectly well what prompted the hon. member to present that motion. He would like the state to facilitate access to home ownership and its permanence. For it is not enough to be able to become the owner of one's home; one must also be able to keep the house and tell the family: This property is truly ours.

I therefore feel that deducting the interest from taxable income of the individual to guarantee that right to ownership is very legitimate. I, who have several children, heard yesterday that two of them negotiated terms last week with a view to buying their own homes. So, from the bottom of my heart as their father, I congratulated them on their efforts to save on their income in order to do something that would make them worthy of being true Canadians and to interest their wives to do more so that the houses will really be theirs, their own corner of Canada, so to speak.

I think that in their heart, all Canadian fathers and mothers want their children to be able to own a house where they can live 365 days a year. The government should allow them to deduct, for tax purposes, the interest they must pay to become owners which, in short, is part of the national heritage and we then will contribute to create among our youth a real interest that will finally enable them to better understand what is the meaning of father land.

I strongly support this motion so that we should finally give our youth the right to private ownership. We must recognize this not only in principle but in fact and give youth tax benefits so that they should realize their ambitions.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to add a few words concerning this motion and to remind hon. members that one of the problems to be faced by the government is the matter of establishing its priorities. According to the wording of his own motion, the hon. member for Regina East recognizes that the government's income would decrease by at least $930 million, whereas his colleagues and namely the financial critic of his own party, suggest that the government should increase its disbursements by $2 billion for the current year.

As for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who supports the motion, he recommended an increase in old age pensions last week and the lowering of the age of eligibility. So—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary. The time allotted to private members business has expired. The House will now resume the debate interrupted at five o'clock.

[English]

The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. Before the Chair calls it six o'clock, I might suggest that the House go back into committee of the whole on Bill C-170. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax. The committee is on clause 7.

On clause 7 –Loss from farming where chief source of income not farming.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I had the floor when the committee recessed at six o'clock. I wonder whether the minister feels it necessary to establish some guidelines here. Section 37 of the act does refer to scientific research. Whether it is sufficient to meet the definition of section 31 and the amendment proposed by the minister, it does use the phraseology "scientific research". And, of course, it makes reference to section 37. I ask as a final question: Is there a ceiling on the loss?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not on scientific research, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about guidelines, or does the minister feel they are not needed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would think the definition found in section 37 would be a good analogous reference. If we find, on application of the measure, that we need guidelines, I suppose we can provide them.

Mr. Ritchie: I should like to ask the minister what kind of person would qualify as an individual farmer. For instance, would he have to be connected with a university, or would a person growing specialized seeds fall under this definition? Who would make the decision—the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): First of all, by the amendment anybody would qualify whose chief source of income was neither farming nor a combination of farming and another source of income and who was engaged in scientific research involving expenditures. Section 37 of the act sets out what "scientific research" means. Anybody who meets the definition of these two sections would qualify without limit.

Mr. Ritchie: Can the minister cite an instance where this has occurred? Perhaps that would clarify the matter.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The variety is immense. Take somebody in Calgary who operates a ranch part-time but whose major income comes from oil. He would only be entitled to a $5,000 deduction on the land of his farm, because he is not in the business of farming. On the other hand, if he is interested in animal diseases or some of the toxic aspects which affect cattle and buffalo herds in Wood Buffalo National Park and spends $25,000 a year trying to develop a preventative because he is interested in the breed and in agricultural research, then he would be entitled to a $5,000 loss on farming, but only to that.

We wanted to plug a limitless deduction against other income where a man was not a legitimate farmer but was a hobby farmer. Because of the social and agricultural advantages of engaging in research in the agricultural field, on the representations of a number of members, including the hon. member for Edmonton West, we felt it was good policy to encourage agricultural research. If the expenses were legitimate and were incurred for scientific research within the definition of section 37 of the act, then they should qualify. It is almost limitless.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there has been any change in the deductions of $2,500 and $5,000 for a long time. They are probably too low by present day standards and should have been raised. The structure of farming is changing. Most farmers now have a double income because they farm part-time and have income from another source. I think it is important that agriculture have some more capital-injected income.

At the present time, injected income is largely derived from government loans. It seems to me there is a place for individual entrepreneurs who would invest in bona fide farming. The figures of $2,500 and $5,000 were set some time ago; they could well be doubled and still not be excessive. One of the difficulties, of course, would be to distinguish between bona fide farming and so-called hobby farming. I have heard of cases where a farmer has had to take other work. He has been classified as a hobby farmer. I think such instances are quite genuine.

I think the Department of National Revenue has been hard in the interpretation of this section and perhaps more thought should be given to its administration, because more and more people who are engaged in farming are part-time farmers; either they or their wives are bringing extra money from other sources into the family. I urge the minister to consider raising this deduction for a non-farmer or for the person whose income is not totally derived from farming and to define, in conjunction with the Department of National Revenue, who is entitled to the deduction and who is not.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one or two questions? I think I may have missed some of his previous explanations relating to deductions for scientific research. How much can be deducted for scientific research and who may make such deductions?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Anyone who is not in the business of farming, or anyone whose principal source of income is not farming is entitled to deduct the loss from the farm that he runs on the side, whether as an interest, as a hobby or for pleasure because he wants to get out of the asphalt jungle. Because this was in the past used by some urban taxpayers as a way of artificially reducing their income, there was a limit of $5,000 placed on the amount that could be deducted.

All a person need do in order to qualify, is not to be principally in the business of farming. He may deduct $5,000. But if he is engaged in scientific research within the meaning of section 37 of the Income Tax Act, then in addition to the $5,000 he is entitled to all that expense which could be classified as coming under legitimate scientific research. His activity may consist in improving animal stock, conducting research into animal diseases, improving grain strains, and what have you. The purpose of that, in terms of national policy, is to encourage agricultural research. Not only have representations come to us from people who were legitimately doing this as a hobby in all parts of the country, but a good many agricultural associations thought it was a good idea.

If I may return to the representations of the hon. member for Dauphin, we must reconcile two interests. We must protect the public treasury from people who might tend to abuse the family farm as a way of artificially reducing income and, on the other hand, we must help the legitimate farmer who in order to supplement his income enters another business. I will look at this question again, and will ask the department to do so. But that is the saw-off we must make.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, will a bona fide, full-time farmer qualify for an exemption for scientific research?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): He always did, as part of the cost of doing business.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the minister. Supposing a man in Ottawa decides to buy a piece of land; there are marginal farms around here that are not very profitable. Supposing he decides to buy one of those farms, plant a special kind of tree and see if it will grow in a certain way. Or let us suppose he tries to find the best way to grow trees. Would his expenses in that undertaking qualify as expenses for scientific research, even though he is enjoying living in the little log cabin next to the lake?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is a matter of administrative fact. It would have to be legitimate scientific research and that would be a matter of fact that the Department of National Revenue would have to interpret. I refer the hon. member to section 37(1) which spells this out clearly. It reads, speaking of deductions that the taxpayer may consider:

(a) all expenditures of a current nature made in Canada in the year

(i) on scientific research related to the business and directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer—

In this case it would be the farmer. I continue:

(iii) by payments to an approved university, college, research institute—

The hon. member spoke about marginal farms around Ottawa. I assure him that the farming community of Ottawa and environs would not want to be referred to as operating marginal farms. There are good farms here, including some of the best dairy farms in the country.

Mr. Baker: Particularly in Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There are many good farms in Ottawa-Carleton, and in Grenville-Carleton too. I therefore hope the hon. member from western Canada will reconsider that portion of his remarks.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister may have his fun but I do not want to reconsider my remarks. I am perfectly serious about this. There are marginal farms around Ottawa, just as there are marginal farms around Saskatoon; and there are people who engage in farming because they like to do so. And God bless them; I appreciate their interest. Speaking as a farmer, I have experimented with special crops just to see what would happen.

In such instances I could charge the expense off as an ordinary expense.

In the case I referred to a moment ago, the person planting the trees would be undertaking what might be called scientific research. If that activity is controlled through, say, the University of Ottawa or the Experimental Farm, or if the University of Saskatchewan works closely with the individual concerned, that would be one thing; it would be a controlled experiment. But if an individual simply says that what he is doing constitutes a scientific undertaking, that is something else. That is specifically why I asked the question. I think this committee deserves a specific answer and not the sort of spin-off or joke which we heard about the kind of farms which are to be found around Ottawa.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I take a great deal of interest in the sort of farms which are to be found in Ottawa-Carleton and in Grenville-Carleton. Let me return to section 37(3) of the Income Tax Act, which provides:

The minister may obtain the advice of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the National Research Council of Canada, the Defence Research Board or any other agency or department of the Government of Canada carrying on activities in the field of scientific research as to whether any particular activity constitutes scientific research.

So it is open to the Minister of National Revenue to determine whether any particular activity by any person who is not primarily in the business of farming constitutes scientific research for the purposes of this deduction. Scientific research is further detailed in section 37, subsection 7 of paragraph (b) of the regulations. The definition is precise.

Mr. Baldwin: Can one go to Information Canada?

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister regards the definition as precise. If a person carrying out such an operation claims a deduction in his income tax return, will somebody with knowledge and capability in this field examine his operation, or is it assumed from the return he files that he has complied with the regulations?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am advised that there has not been any problem in the administration of this particular section, and that the definition is considered to be precise enough that its factual application is easy to determine.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question about restricted farm losses? Previously, farm losses for 1971 and before then were restricted to $2,500 a year. Is the farmer to lose what he accumulated prior to 1971?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot appreciate the full significance of the question. Perhaps the hon. member could be more precise.

Mr. Ritchie: As I understand it, a person with a restricted farm loss can carry it forward for only five years. He then loses the benefit of the provision if he does not take advantage of it. The suggestion in the report on tax topics in the budget, as I read it, is that a person who has a restricted farm loss for the year 1971 or previously would not be able to take advantage of it; under this clause it would be wiped out.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I know a little about fishing but not much about farming. I hope the minister will bear with me as I try to put into words what I understand this provision to be. From reading the clause and listening to the minister, I understand that a scientist with the National Research Council, for example, could buy a 50, 150 or 200-acre farm somewhere around Ottawa, farm it marginally—in other words, as a hobby farm—but use his scientific knowledge to engage in some kind of scientific research as contemplated in section 37 of the act and thereby be able to curtail the amount of tax he must pay to the federal government. However, in the case of someone in my constituency trying to develop a farm and working eight hours a day in a mining operation, logging operation or some other industry, he does not get any advantage out of this provision. He spends his spare time trying to clear the land and develop it into a producing farm.

On the surface, it seems that if you have an "in" with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, you are all right. However, a poor guy trying to slug it out by working in industry and trying to build a farm cannot get any help whatever. A person trying to make a go of farming in the north country is subject to attack by the Department of National Revenue. They check his books for the previous five years, say that he is not a bona fide farmer and do not permit him the few deductions available to him, even though he cannot develop the farm by himself and needs money from some other source.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, here again we are referring to expenses for scientific research. They are actually expended. Their purpose is scientific research. They are defined within the regulations. They do not accrue as an advantage to the person who expends them. Because of the national purpose of including agricultural research, we propose to allow them as an additional deduction.

It is true that somebody with a basic scientific background might be able to qualify more easily, but it is not so limited. If a miner in Terrace or Kitimat wants to buy a farm and operate it in his spare time, he can qualify for the $5,000 deduction as a non-farmer. I refer to regulation 2900 under the heading of "Scientific Research." If a person in Terrace gets material from the University of British Columbia for basic research that he would like to do on mid-northern agricultural farming, he would qualify as easily as somebody who is a member of the National Research Council operating in Grenville-Carleton, if he undertook, with the help of a university or anybody in the area of applied research, the following:

(a) basic research, namely, work undertaken for the advancement of scientific knowledge without a specific practical application in view,—

(b) applied research, namely, work undertaken for the advancement of scientific knowledge with a specific practical application in view, and

(c) development, namely, use of the results of basic or applied research for the purpose of creating new, or improving existing materials, devices, products or processes.

That is the purpose of it. Agricultural research could be done in the hon. member's part of the country and could be used intensively. It is that kind of research the Department of Agriculture wants to encourage and has recognized, under the Income Tax Act, as a deductible expense.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the minister put it clearly and distinctly when he stated that somebody from the National Research Council would probably have a bit of an edge in this matter.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct a question to the minister. Perhaps he dealt with this matter before, but I am not clear on it. It seems it is left to the minister's discretion when a taxpayer's chief source of income is neither farming nor a combination of farming but is from another endeavour. This is a sore point in my area, because many farmers who find it difficult to earn a suitable living from farming try to earn outside income. Many obtain employment in automobile factories. Through some circumstance of crops they find they are not able to declare a full farm loss on their operation. I am wondering how a determination is made in this case.

I wish to refer to two specific examples. First, a person who farms part-time and also works in a factory may lose his entire crop due to floods. His farm operation may have a net loss of $8,000, $10,000 or $12,000. The way the act previously read, he was not able to claim this loss because he was not considered to be a farmer of this type. Second, a farmer may have had a very successful year in farming but did not dispose of his crop before the end of the taxation year. His entire crop may be in storage. Under the terms of the act as it stood previously, he was unable to claim his legitimate farming expenses to the extent they actually accrued. Can the minister give an indication of how it is decided whether a farmer is indeed a bona fide farmer when his income is derived from two sources?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this relieving amendment is open to people who are non-farmers but are in the partial business of farming. If a farmer from Kent county or Essex county decides to work in an automobile factory, it is a question of fact whether he shifts his principal source of income to farming or to being a wage earner in an automobile factory. Who determines this? In the first instance, I suppose that he determines this when he files his income tax return. He may be challenged by the officials of the Department of National Revenue. If the taxpayer objects, he can file notice of objection. He may then go to the tax review board, then to the Federal Court or any other part of the appeal system. it becomes a matter of judicial interpretation. It is an appraisal of fact whether his principal business is farming or not.

Second, as to qualifying for this relieving provision, whether the expenditures for which he is claiming an additional deduction beyond the $5,000 deduction already allowed in the act are for the purpose of scientific research, that is a question of fact that would have to be interpreted by a court. It is not left to ministerial discretion.

Mr. Danforth: I understand the provision made for scientific research. What I do not understand is the way in which determination is made as to a taxpayer's chief source of income. This could change from one year to another, taking into account the vagaries of farming. What about the example I gave of the taxpayer who stored his crop? His chief source of income in the year in which he disposed of his crop might be his wages as an automobile worker, not his income as a farmer. Certainly, his category cannot change from year to year depending on whether or not he stored his crop.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I suggest it could. Here again, it is a question of fact. What is the chief source of income? A taxpayer might have one view of it, the minister might take another. If there is a dispute, the review board or the appeal court can make a decision.

Mr. Danforth: But it could not change under the act from year to year?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would think so. The hon. member has put forward a borderline case, but conceivably it could.

Mr. Baldwin: Suppose he was on a farm, drawing unemployment insurance for ten months?

Mr. Gleave: I would point out that the trend in agricultural research is away from the type of operation the minister was describing. There was a time when substations devoted to agricultural research were operating in various places—for example, in northern Ontario and in Saskatchewan—under the direction of the principal research stations. Local farms were picked to carry on experiments designed at the central station in Ottawa, Saskatoon or Swift Current. This practice has been discontinued, as far as I know, because it was felt by those responsible for agricultural research that research should be concentrated in the main experimental stations.

I am a little surprised the minister should tell us he has been advised by the Minister of Agriculture and others that we ought to start again along these bush operation lines. The bill reads:

> Where a taxpayer's chief source of income . . . is neither farming nor a combination of farming and some other source of income—

That is a nice definition. But would the minister tell us what the real source of income of this individual would be?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member may feel that in general terms the main rate of agricultural research is carried on by the provincial experimental farms, and I agree with him. I wonder whether he would want to discourage scientific research in agriculture which could be carried out by individuals across the country because they have an interest in the land. As long as the research is bona fide, and as long as its purpose is the furthering of knowledge pertaining to husbandry and horticulture, the hon. member might think it was an effort we should encourage. Surely, some of the great ideas in agriculture have come from individuals who stood apart from the main research centres. This is the social purpose behind the suggested amendment.

Mr. Gleave: I do not want to discourage that kind of activity. I just do not want to encourage people to do it at the taxpayers' expense, that is all. It is true individuals have made outstanding contributions to research, but most of the work in this field has been associated with our experimental farms. I think our tax money should go to the experimental farms and to the universities; I do not think it should be frittered away into little cul-de-sacs here and there. I object to the minister suggesting that I want to discourage experimental agriculture. I have done it myself on my own farm. But no one gave me a tax concession for doing so. I cannot accept the charge that I want to discourage research in farming.

Mr. McKinley: If the department is not prepared to allow all the expenses incurred on a farm out of income other than that which may be used for experimental purposes, how can the department justify charging income tax on any profits made from that farm?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is not a deduction allowed in respect of farming in general. A farmer is entitled to deductions with respect to all expenses incurred in running a farm. This provision is for the non-farmer who has a farm on the side known as a hobby farm. At the moment he is allowed a maximum of $5,000 as a deduction. The national policy reflected in the amendment before us is that we ought to allow, beyond that $5,000, any expenses legitimately incurred for purposes of agricultural research.

Mr. McKinley: If the department does not allow all the expenses legitimately incurred in the operation, I cannot see on what grounds it can levy income tax in the event of profits made.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A person whose principal business is farming is entitled to every legitimate expense he incurs. But if, as is often the case, he is not working the farm full-time and incurs a loss, the maximum he is allowed is $5,000 a year. Under this amendment there would be a further exemption with respect to legitimate scientific research.

An hon. Member: It is open-ended.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is not.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member says it is open-ended. The taxpayer has to spend the money and the department has to be satisfied that the expenditure was legitimate. It is up to the committee to decide whether agricultural research is worth enough to the country to allow such expenditure to be covered. I might add that the $5,000 figure was set, taking into account the balance of convenience, as applying to people living in the cities who were running farms as a hobby or for pleasure. It was felt that they should not be allowed to reduce their income unduly by running a farm, so a limit of $5,000 was placed on the deduction. The figure of $5,000 is a figure decided on by parliament in its wisdom at an earlier date. We are proposing to add now, beyond and above that, an allowable deduction in respect of legitimate research.

Mr. McKinley: Suppose expenditures of more than $5,000 a year are incurred in making a farm into a profitable unit, and eventually a profit is generated; will the extra expenditure then be allowed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If a farm shows a profit, the person whose principal source of income was not farming would then be allowed every legitimate expenditure because the particular provision would not come into play.

• (2040)

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could give me a little additional information. The words to be added, namely, "without reference to this section and before making any deductions in respect of expenditures described in section 37", are, I gather to be substituted for the words that are now in the section, namely, "otherwise determined", presumably to make the section more precise. The words now in the law, "otherwise determined," obviously include so-called scientific research as enumerated in section 37. However, do these words include anything else? I assume that the words "otherwise determined" may embrace other things. If that is so, what are those other things?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Section 31 now reads:

> Where a taxpayer's chief source of income for a taxation year is neither farming nor a combination of farming and some other source of income—

Under that section he would be entitled to deduct the lesser of the amount by which the aggregate of his losses for the year otherwise determined from all farming businesses carried on by him exceeds the aggregate of his incomes for the year from all farming businesses and the amount derived as a result of the equation contained in subparagraph (b) of the section. So that if the losses attributable to the business of farming exceed $5,000, he is only allowed the amount of those losses after calculating his income from the farm and calculating his losses. If the losses exceed his income by more than $5,000, he is only entitled to the maximum of $5,000 deductible from other income, non-farming income.

Mr. Howard: So what happens now if a person opts to take advantage of section 31(1), the provision we are talking about, and that person is engaged in scientific research?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is the point of the amendment, Mr. Chairman. If a person undertakes scientific research now—agricultural research, obviously—then the capital expenditures incurred are part of his total expenditures and his loss deduction is still limited to a total of $5,000. He may have spent $15,000 on legitimate agricultural research and he may have another $15,000 expenses for his farm, a total of $30,000. If his income is $10,000, his loss is $20,000. But he only gets at the moment the maximum of $5,000, despite the fact that his agricultural research cost him $15,000. Under this amendment he gets the entitlement of $5,000 on his losses, plus his $15,000 expended on agricultural research.

Mr. Howard: But, Mr. Chairman, it does not relate only to agricultural research; the provision relates to the whole range of scientific research set out in section 37. If we were talking in this amendment of research conducted on a farm for agricultural purposes that would accrue to the advantage of agriculture, then I would buy it. But we are not. What we are talking about is every conceivable crackpot with some bent for scientific research and who has the money to buy a hobby farm and engage in such research. If this is the case, then I would suggest to the minister that he consider holding this clause until we can take a little more time to look at it and see whether we can nail it down in the way I should like to see it nailed down, namely, to agricultural research that accrues to the benefit of agriculture in a general way.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Gleave: No, Mr. Chairman. I think some of the matters that have been raised must be adequately answered. These proposals are not clearly defined. As my hon. friend from Skeena has just said, this provision is an open invitation to any—to use his words—crackpot who wants to spend some money on a hobby. Since the question has not been answered by the minister, I think we should stand this clause.

These changes have wiped out the old-style concept of the hobby farmer who is tied to his farm. This is the chap who ran a farm, the operations of which were not self-supporting so he also got a job to see him through until he built up his farm. That concept has now disappeared and we are creating a special category which we loosely label "scientific." In our general approach to scientific research in agriculture we have been moving away, as I said a minute ago, from that concept and concentrating on research in universities and research institutions. I would oppose any suggestion that we free taxpayers' money for this sort of thing. I wonder whether the minister would stand the clause so we could look it over, as suggested by the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have a little more confidence in the individual than the hon. gentleman has. Section 37(1) provides as follows:

> There may be deducted in computing the income for a taxation year of a taxpayer who carried on a business in Canada and made expenditures in respect of scientific research in the year the amount by which the aggregate of
> (a) all expenditures of a current nature made in Canada in the year
> (i) on scientific research related to the business and directly undertaken by or on behalf of the taxpayer . . .
> exceeds the aggregate of amounts paid to him in the year under an Appropriation Act and on terms and conditions described in paragraph (c).

The taxpayer is entitled to a deduction for scientific research anyway.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Related to the business.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Related to the business. What we are doing here is allowing the same deduction to be added to the $5,000 deduction that he has if he is not in the business of farming. So there is nothing radically new here. We are just trying to recognize the impetus given by the Income Tax Act now to encourage individuals in this country—not only individuals working in institutes and on experimental farms, but ordinary individuals—to try to advance the scheme of knowledge.

This has been part of the Income Tax Act of this country, and before that it has been part of the tax law of Great Britain for 300 to 400 years. This research is for the benefit of the public; scientific research is considered to be for the benefit of the public. If this money is expended by somebody not in the business of farming because he has a legitimate interest in trying to advance the knowledge of agriculture, then I submit to the committee there is an argument to be made for his having this expense as an additional deduction.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister has not told us why agriculture is singled out from other occupations for this purpose. He said there is provision already in the Income Tax Act for people or for corporations or businesses carrying out scientific research. Of course there must be provision so that research can be carried out. But the minister has not said why he or his colleagues found it necessary to give it particular application to farming. This is the question I have raised, because I say it runs counter to what we have been developing in the past few years in our approach to agricultural research. It leaves it open, I believe, to a fair amount of abuse at the expense of the ordinary taxpayer.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am not attempting to belabour this matter, but perhaps you would allow me to reiterate the procedure we established earlier in the day, namely, that the committee suggested I make a statement on each clause and, if necessary, expand later on that short statement.

Clause 8 is a relieving amendment. The present act requires professionals to pay a tax on money received for services to be rendered at a future date. As other businessmen are permitted a deductible reserve against this type of receipt, so should the professional.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I believe this clause has caused considerable comment. It refers to a "reasonable reserve." As I understand it, the reserve cannot be greater than that claimed on receivables to the end of the year 1971, and there will be a new reserve established every year. Have the rules been formalized concerning how the reserve shall be calculated?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Basically, the professional has a retainer for work to be rendered in the future. If he has not accomplished the work, then under this amendment he is only bound to take into income that part of the retainer for which he has already rendered service.

Mr. Ritchie: In making a calculation in professional partnerships, I believe this reserve is considered to be very complicated. Does this clause clarify the matter so far as partnerships are concerned?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It does not clarify the essential allocation of income in partnerships, but it applies to partnerships and, of course, to partnership assets.

Mr. Ritchie: I would ask the minister if his department would look at this question in order to solve some of the problems in respect of allocation of reserves in partnerships. As I understand it, it is so complicated it may well mitigate against the use of partnerships among professionals. I think the practice of forming partnerships has become a natural process in doing business, and unless the rules are clarified I believe there will be considerable hardship and a great deal of uncertainty over many years.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I accept the point of the hon. member. We hope to proceed with some clarification which appears to be necessary, and to come up with it fairly soon. But there is nothing in the bill in this regard.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9 -Deemed disposition of property where taxpayer has ceased to be resident in Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, let us look, first, at section 48 of the act. This section provides for the deemed acquisition or disposition of property, as the case may be, where a taxpayer becomes, or ceases to be a resident of Canada. The object of this provision is to ensure that a taxpayer is taxed on the gains accrued during the period of his residence in Canada—and neither more nor less. The so-called departure tax does not apply in respect of property that is taxable as Canadian property. There is a right to receive payment described in any of the paragraphs from 212 subsection (1)(h) to paragraph (o) for other property which the taxpayer has elected to treat as taxable Canadian property. The latter exclusion permits a taxpayer to defer his tax on such property until his gains have been realized.

These amendments are in large measure responsive to representations for modifications to alleviate the burdens on employees who are required to move from one country to another in the ordinary course of their career. The principal change is to permit a departing taxpayer to elect to avoid a deemed realization of capital properties, and he agrees to include in his income the actual gain made when the property is sold.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I suppose one might say this deals with some of the worms which came out of the can called capital gains. We find that Canadians are moving on a multinational basis, and presumably there will be a lot more moving on that basis. Am I not right that in a ten-year period the residence abroad must not be more than 36 months, and that the provision of capital gains does not apply? Now I see it is in respect of residents coming into Canada; that is the revision. If someone coming into Canada is not going to stay more than 36 months in a ten-year period, he is not caught by the capital gains tax in any way.

What is the situation in respect of a Canadian who goes abroad? We have a number of Canadians in North Africa working in the oil industry. We also have people going off in advance parties all over the world for other valid reasons. I presume if they leave their property in Canada, such as a house which is no longer their principal residence and they rent it, plus a summer cottage, the property would be subject to capital gains. If it is left here, is it the requirement of the minister, under this provision, to hypothecate, to make some charge, or to leave this property in part as security for any capital gains the individual may have?

What about Canadian military personnel who are posted abroad as military attaches or who are seconded to commands? What about personnel in the foreign service, either in trade commissions or in the consular service? How are these people affected? It might be to the advantage of an individual to sell his house if he should be posted abroad for five or six years. He may decide to sell his house.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If he elects to defer the tax on the realization until it is sold, then of course I say to the committee he would have to post the necessary security, as the hon. gentleman suggested.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, since this act has been in force for some 15 months, I am wondering whether the minister has any information from his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, concerning just how many worms are being found in Canada with regard to this particular part. I refer to Canadians leaving this country and having a deemed realization.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am advised it is a pretty clean can, Mr. Chairman.

Clause 9 agreed to.

• (2100)

On clause 10—Where option expires.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West has asked me for an explanation. This clause is simply a consequential technical amendment to amend the subsection in line with the amendment of subparagraph 65(15)(v) which is made in subclause 18(5).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is the effect of it? It refers to "an option to acquire shares of the capital stock of a corporation in consideration for the incurring, pursuant to an agreement"—which is described in another subsection—"of any expense described," and so on. I would like to know what the effect of such an option, or the expense, would be.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If hon. members turn to clause 18(5) they will see that this, again, is a technical, relieving amendment to the subparagraph to which I have referred, which presently provides that certain exploration and development expenses incurred for shares in Canada, pursuant to an agreement in consideration for shares of a corporation, will constitute Canadian exploration and development expenses.

The changes made to this subparagraph by reason of subsection 18(5) of this bill are the following: The benefit of this subparagraph is widened to encompass all taxpayers instead of only principal business corporations. The amendment makes clear the requirement for shares which are issued as consideration for the incurring of exploration and development expenses are those of the corporation which is a party to the agreement and not those of some other corporation. The amendment makes clear that the phrase "after 1971" applies to when the expenses were incurred and not to when the agreement under which the expenses were incurred was entered into. The amendment also makes clear that it is expenses incurred pursuant to the agreement for activities or acquisitions specified in the amendment that constitute Canadian exploration and development expenses, and not amounts paid for the shares. Obviously, the option for those shares that are related to exploration and development will fall in the same way as the allocation of the shares themselves.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Convertible properties.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Clause 11 is another relieving amendment to section 51 of the Income Tax Act. This amendment removes the restriction that only preferred shares qualify as convertible properties eligible for roll-over treatment, and extends such treatment to common shares as well. As a result, it is now possible to convert one common share to another class of common shares under the protection of roll-over treatment. It has made it easier for companies to take advantage of special rules for distributing pre-1972 surpluses.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Idem.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Clause 12(1) relates to the cost of property acquired by a non-resident. The amendment has a new subsection 52(1.1) to give a cost of the specified property of a non-resident which otherwise would have no cost. Without such a cost, the property when disposed of would attract capital gains tax on the full amount of the proceeds of the disposition.

Clause 12(2) relates to the cost of property transferred by trustee under employees' profit-sharing plans. It is an amendment which is consequential to the changed tax treatment of the distribution of property from employees' profit-sharing plans which is proposed in clause 49 of this bill.

Clause 12(3) is, again, a technical amendment. It ensures that the untaxed half of capital gains can be passed on to beneficiaries tax free, from when they are distributed on a current basis.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Clause 13(1) relates to clause 22 of the bill which introduces in section 80.1 of the act special rules in respect of property, or a business taken over by a foreign government in exchange for government bonds or other securities referred to as expropriation assets. The consequential amendments to section 53 which are set out in subclauses (1), (2) and part of subclause (4) of clause 13 provide the necessary changes to the adjusted cost base of expropriation assets for the purposes of the provisions of the act relating to capital gains.

Clause 13(3) is simply a consequential technical amendment to amend section 53(e) in line with the amendment to section 66(15)(b) of 18(5) as (v) in clause 18.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 14—"Principal residence".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Clause 14 refers to the definition of "principal residence." This is a relieving amendment whereby the definition of "principal residence" would bring it within the exclusion of capital gains treatment, and is expanded to include the lease on interest in the housing unit. Disposition of these interests will henceforth be exempt from capital gains tax in the same manner as the principal that is owned by taxpayers. This amendment is in response to inquiries from the Ontario Housing Corporation which administers the HOME plan, and will also cover other situations such as government parks where homes must be or are leased.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment on this "principal residence" clause. I commented this afternoon on this matter, but this is the section of the act where I am sure my comments more properly apply. My remarks deal with what I prefer to call the family farm corporation. There are many of these now. This is a development that has been necessary to maintain the family farm.

At present, the principal residence of the family or corporate farm are not exempt. I suggest that the principal residence clause should apply to the family farm corporation set-up. The way this provision is being interpreted, where the family farm corporation cannot apply, simply means that the residents are the only class of citizens in Canada denied the right of the principal residence exemption, if in fact the minister suggests that a corporation does not require a residence. I suggest that a family farm corporation does indeed require a residence.

The key, of course, is to accept the terminology of family farm corporations. This is the traditional family farm, in the way it is used today, and it should be treated for tax purposes as an individual family farm, not as a large, conglomerate business corporation which is the interpretation given to it in the present act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with my colleague from Medicine Hat on this matter in that in the consideration of capital gains and principal residence, and the fact that the House some 18 months ago refused to exempt farmlands from capital gains, the residence of the farmer, which is included in the farm, and the value thereof in this particular case, are caught by a capital gains tax. In other words, the farmer who uses his farm home and buildings as his principal residence, under the act is denied the same consideration as any other taxpayer with regard to that person's principal residence. It seems to me that there is a very definite discrimination against the farmer in this regard.

In addition to that, there has been total lack of recognition of what exists in all provinces of Canada to a varying degree—I would suggest to a very surprising degree out in the Prairies and, I am told in parts of Ontario; and certainly I know it exists in parts of the province of Quebec—where the farm has been incorporated either by the farmer and his son, or by the farmer and his wife. Anyway, they have a family corporation, not in the terms that we know the family corporation but at least they have a private company running the farm. The company is the registered owner and the farmer, his wife, and possibly his children, own the shares. But, lo and behold, under this act, if then they sell their principal residence they are caught by the total provision of capital gains on farmlands.

This is what my hon. friend from Medicine Hat is suggesting, that right here at this point in section 54(g) of the act, in determining the principal residence, if we are prepared to say it means a housing unit, or a share of the capital stock of a co-operative housing corporation owned in the year by the taxpayer, if the housing unit or if the share was acquired for the sole purpose of inhabiting the housing unit, and furthermore provide that it is ordinarily inhabited by the taxpayer the year round, and so on, why would it not be possible—if we now make this amendment—where they are going into a very desirable or innovative type of housing, a leasehold interest of a public nature, also to introduce provision covering the shares in the family corporation owning the farm to include the principal residence in the exemption to capital gains? Certainly a strong case can be made for that.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the problem in connection with family farms also applies to businesses that are incorporated, where the living accommodation for the private owner is located on the business premises. There seems no reason why the concept of a leasehold interest could not be broadened by changes in this section to allow the leasehold value or the personal residence value not to attract capital gain.

The use of a corporation for estate planning or for moving property from father to son in a corporation is a common method that has been encouraged by ministers of finance and ministers of agriculture in the past. It strikes me it is imperative at this point that the private business with personal residence on it, and that of course would include the family farm—here I would ask the minister to talk on a broader base than just the family farm—should be included by a redrafting of this clause so that the personal residence, or principal residence of a taxpayer, if it is within a privately controlled corporation should still have the advantage of a tax-free capital gain.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, through you I want to say first of all to the hon. member for Medicine Hat that there is no discrimination here against the farmer. The same problem involves every taxpayer who has a personal corporation in which he has put his principal residence. So the same rules apply to a corporation whether the corporation has as a principal shareholder a farmer and his own residence is within the assets of that corporation, or whether anybody in a city or in business has his residence in a corporation. To begin with, there is no discrimination between the farmer, the small businessman or anybody else.

Therefore, the question is really this: Should treatment of the disposition of a personal residence be extended not only to where the taxpayer personally owns the house or to where the taxpayer leases the house under a situation contemplated by this amendment, but where the taxpayer has put the house into a personal corporation in which there are other assets represented by shares? The difficulty here is how to allocate the transmission of the house against the shares. In administrative terms, it is a potential nightmare. After all, the shares of the corporation represent all the assets of the farm, the land, the principal residence, depreciable property, whether this be the barn or the silo, and the animals. In the case of a small business having a personal corporation, those assets against which the value of shares has been calculated might represent a so-called principal residence, stock in trade, inventory, goodwill and a number of other items.

The act is quite clear at the moment. The personal residence, in order to be given capital gains-free treatment, must be owned by the taxpayer, and the taxpayer is the individual who dies or sells. It becomes a very difficult problem if it is going to be allocated to a corporation, because here again there must have been other tax reasons for having the residence in the corporation property. Surely the answer is to take the principal residence out of the corporation, whether it be a small business or a farm, and allow the residence to be treated as the act expected it to be treated.

Mr. Blenkarn: The minister's explanation does not have any realism. After all, through all these matters of taxation we go on the basis of assessment. Usually in a real estate transaction, if there is no appointment between land, buildings and chattels, the minister's officials will always take the assessment made by provincial or municipal authorities and the like. There is really no problem for the minister to assess the value of a residence included among the buildings of a farm corporation, as opposed to commercial valuation of stock in trade, chattels and the other things that he mentioned.

The problem is that the act refuses to give small businessmen—this includes the farmer and the guy who happens to live in a house from where he runs his trucking business, his garage or service station—any equality with the person who may be an apartment owner and who works for a wage. The government must come to grips with this problem and treat small business equitably. This is a serious problem. On that basis the clause needs to be redrafted to take into account the problems of small business. There is no problem for the assessors. In the past they have had no problem determining the relationship between chattels and land and buildings nor, indeed, has the minister. It has not presented any problems to his office before, and it should not now.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Chairman, I suppose the point of my comment about the family farm corporation is that I look upon this as a different structure entirely from the business corporation that I think most people have in mind. In western Canada, our provincial governments recommend that the family farm be incorporated into this type of set-up in order to carry on a viable farming unit. There is no reason why the family farm corporation concept should be treated, in terms of definition, as an individual family farm for purposes of the residence clause and for the five-year averaging.

Mr. Baker: Looking at this clause, I think there is no doubt that there is no discrimination between businessmen and farmers. However, between businessmen and farmers as a group, in the circumstances of this section, and all other types of owners of residences there is in fact discrimination which I do not believe the minister intended.

Another comment I wish to make on the rural aspect is to point out that if a farmer chooses to incorporate his farm and take advantage of the law for an individual owner of a principal residence, it is necessary in the province of Ontario, and I am sure in other provinces, that he obtain a severance of the house and the acreage from the farm and then transfer the farm to the corporation, thereby holding the piece of land with the house on it.

As a matter of fact, at this time in all provinces which have jurisdiction in these matters as a very real onus is placed on the land owner to justify the severance of the land when he makes application for it—particularly in Ontario. I think the suggestion of my friend from Peel South is worthy of consideration, having regard to the peculiar situation in which farmers find themselves in this age of urbanization as a result of the difficulties of land severance. There is a discrimination in the section which I am sure the minister did not intend. I would support him if he saw fit to take this clause back for consideration in order to find some way out of the dilemma. That would be a service to the people who find themselves caught on the horns of this dilemma.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 15—Bourses d'études de perfectionnement, etc.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is an amendment to the French version, paragraph 56(1)(n). It would make the underlying changes to the text.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Estate tax applicable to certain property.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This amendment would correct a technical feature of paragraph 60(m) which now prevents an intended deduction for taxpayers. Paragraph 60(m) is intended to allow a deduction from certain kinds of income, such as a pension, in respect of estate tax and provincial succession duties that have been imposed on the value of the right to this income. The present wording of paragraph 60(m) makes the deduction dependent upon the property having been taxed under the Estate Tax Act. This makes the paragraph inoperative with respect to property passing as a result of death after 1971 when the estate tax ceased to apply.

The amendment would divide the present paragraph 60(m) into two paragraphs. Revised paragraph 60(m) provides a deduction only in respect of estate tax, and hence applies only to property that was part of a pre-1972 estate. It also drops a reference to the income averaging annuity contracts which did not exist prior to 1972. The new paragraph 60(m.1) provides a deduction in respect of provincial succession duties.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 17.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This amendment expands the definition of an income averaging annuity in section 61 to include annuity contracts sold by trust companies. The amendment will allow trust companies to compete for this business.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 18.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suggest to the House that it would have been worth while to have the comments of the oil industry, the tax specialists or the investment people on this particular clause because this is one of the most complicated parts of the act. The cross-references are innumerable, and I make no pretence of understanding them. We are now getting amendments which say, "such part of his income for the taxation year as may reasonably be regarded as attributable to the production of . . . gas".

In paragraph 66(1)(b), which is the main portion of this amendment, we are dealing with a principal business corporation, and beyond that we are getting into many cross-references. I would be interested to see at least some indication of where the thrust of the amendment is under clause 18. Are we in any way varying the principal occupation here? I do not think so. The information available to the minister and to us on this side is almost nil, yet we are being asked by the officials of the department, along with the drafters of the legislation, to accept highly complex language that is supposedly meant to do something. I am afraid that neither side of the chamber tonight is in a position to comprehend what is being accomplished by the committee accepting amendments.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It might help the committee if I were to read the explanation of clause 18 and the subclauses. Clause 18(1) is a particular amendment to provide for the order of deduction of Canadian and foreign exploration and development—called "E and D"—expenses for principal business corporations. This amendment provides that foreign E and D expenses will be deducted up to the amount provided by subsection 66(4). Then, Canadian E and D expenses will be deducted under paragraph 66, subparagraph (1), subparagraph (b), to the extent of the corporation's income, after the deduction of E and D expenses. This amendment assures the taxpayer of the right to a deduction of foreign exploration expenses up to the amount of foreign resource income. Without the order of deduction provision it was not clear whether the foreign income would be first reduced by Canadian exploration and development costs, which would limit the deduction of foreign exploration expenses to something less than foreign resource income.

If I may turn to subclause (2) of clause 18, this is a relieving amendment which will allow for increased deduction of E and D expenses by individuals and non-principal business corporations by the deleting of certain restrictions from the act. Individuals and non-principal business corporations are presently entitled to deduct their previous undeducted Canadian E and D expenses to the extent of the greater of 20 per cent of their previously undeducted E and D expenses and the aggregate of their income from oil and gas and mining in Canada, but such income would only qualify if certain restrictions are met. These restrictions are that the taxpayer has to operate and have an interest in the oil or gas well or mine. This amendment will delete these restrictions. May I now refer to subclause (3).

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, may I intervene in order to make clear the particulars of the matter? Has the minister just referred to the elimination of the principal occupation rule with regard to Canadians investing in the exploration and development of petroleum and natural gas?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it is not really the elimination of the 20 per cent figure. It has to do with the redefining of income that an individual qualifies for.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, the subclause talks about "such part of his income . . . as may reasonably be regarded," and so on. Is the minister depending on the word "reasonable" and, if so, what guidelines will the minister use in that regard?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, as I read this clause, the reasonable action will be left, in the first instance, for the minister to work out with the taxpayer; but the final determination, of course, will be for the courts. Ministerial discretion does not interfere with that determination.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Chairman. We were discussing subclause (2) of clause 18 and there are five or six pages to go yet. We have not passed clause 18; we have not considered all of it.

The Chairman: Order, please. There are three pages connected with clause 18, and not five or six. Is it agreed that the subclauses on page 16 are carried?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I understand it, we have finished subclauses (1) and (2).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With the consent of the committee, we will now deal with subclause (3). This is a relieving amendment which will allow for possible foreign E and D expenses by deleting certain descriptions from the act. Taxpayers are presently entitled to deduct their previously undeducted E and D expenses to the extent of the greater of 10 per cent of their previously undeducted foreign E and D expenses and of their income from oil, gas and mining outside Canada. But such income will only qualify if some restrictions are met. These restrictions are that the taxpayer has to operate or have an interest in the oil, gas well or mine. The amendment will delete these restrictions.

The Chairman: Shall subclause (3) of clause 18 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Subclause (4) is a relieving provision which provides that all corporations, and just not principal business corporations, can be shareholders of a joint exploration corporation. A joint exploration corporation can incur Canadian E and D expenses and can renounce such expenditures to its shareholder corporations, which can deduct them to the extent allowable for calculating their taxable income.

Subclause (5) I dealt with when I was referring to the consequential amendment earlier. This, again, is a technical and relieving amendment. I have put the reasons for it on record.

Subclause (6) is a relieving provision to amend the definition of a shareholder corporation of a joint exploration corporation by removing the requirement for the shareholder corporation to be a principal business corporation.

The Chairman: We now come to subclause (7).

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There should not be any problem with this subclause.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 19—Depreciable and other capital property of deceased taxpayer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the debate on second reading, and I suggest that most of the debate on this clause will centre on the transfer, by death, of the family farm. My remarks will relate to clause 19(3) and of course will relate to clause 20 of the bill. I should like to make a few comments about the family farm.

The purpose of the amendment that is now brought before the House is to meet the problem of the transmission from one generation to another of a family farm in circumstances that were set out in the tax reform law which came into force in January 1, 1972, under which there was to be a deemed capital gain upon transmission of the farm; but there was no income or liquidity from which to satisfy the payment of the capital gain.

The distinction between the family farm and any other sort of business is that a farm, by its very nature, tends to be highly capitalized in terms of land and equipment. Secondly, there is a predominantly non-liquid situation in that most of the assets of the farm are tied up in land and equipment. Thirdly, the value of the land is highly volatile; it depends on market conditions prevailing at the time in the area and on other market conditions that may be quite irrelevant, apart from the essential worth of the farm as a going concern. Fluctuations in value might be caused by increased land values because of metropolitan expansion and encroachment.

That being so, it became clear to me when I took on this portfolio that something had to be done to ensure that the deemed capitalization would not hinder the transmission of the family farm from one generation to another in cases where the family intended the land to continue in use as a farm. In other words, something had to be done to prevent a forced sale of the farm in order for the family to meet the debt to the Crown against the deemed capitalization. That is why the amendment is now before the committee.

Some points were made during the debate on second reading to the effect that freedom from capital gain should apply not only to the deemed realization on death but also to any transfer within the family during the lifetime of the farmer, so long as the farm continued as a farm. When we first reviewed the situation it was our opinion that the same situation did not apply during lifetime as applied after death. In other words, the capital gain could only be incurred during lifetime by actual payment, because the actual payments by son or daughter to the father or mother would take place and the capital gain would only be incurred as the moneys were received. If payments were made in instalments, the capital gain would only be due in instalments.

Take the situation where a farm was originally worth $100,000 and increased in value to $200,000 at the time of transfer. There is a capital gain of $100,000. The payments are made in instalments over a ten-year period; they are each $10,000. The capital gain would only be 50 per cent of each of those payments, namely, $5,000 out of each $10,000 payment. The capital gain payable on that $5,000 would only be one half that amount, namely, $2,500 at whatever the taxpayer's graduated rate may be. If it is 30 per cent, it would be 30 per cent of $2,500, which equals $750. That does not appear to be the same type of hardship as deemed realized of a total capital gain. I have looked at the situation. We have consulted our own people. If it is the feeling of the committee that the purpose is to maintain the family farm, the government is prepared to look at this matter seriously. I can recall the words of the hon. member for Bruce at the finance committee, who said this ought to be done.

As hon. members know, subclause 19(3) of this bill would implement the ways and means motion to provide a roll-over for farm profit on the death of the taxpayer. As I have said, this change is to avoid the disruptive effect which the imposition of tax on an accrued gain might have at that time, and thus help preserve the continuity of the family farm. We all want to see that. Representations have recently been made. I listened to speeches by members opposite and by members on the government side, both in caucus and in the finance committee when I was discussing my estimates, very carefully. I read them again to make sure I understood what I heard. Representations were made that this roll-over be extended to transfers during the farmer's lifetime. I am prepared to take that point. I am, therefore, prepared to move the necessary amendments to the ways and means motion when the Speaker is in the chair. This can be handled however Your Honour wishes. If the amendments are accepted by the Chair, I can then make the necessary amendments in committee to clauses 19 and 20.

A new clause No. 20.1 would permit a farmer to transfer his farmland and appreciables to his child by sale or gift during his lifetime without imposition of a capital gain at that time. There are two other consequential amendments I would want to put to the committee at this stage. Hopefully, the committee will think about them and assess them. A new clause 20.2 would attribute a subsequent gain or loss on the farm property back to the farmer who transfers to a son or daughter if the child sold the property before he or she reached the age of 18. This is the deemed realization of any transfer by a minor. I do not think that any member of the committee or the House would want to see the sale through a child to a third party. I think that is fair ball.

A further amendment to clause 75 of the bill would preserve the transitional rule where the farm was owned by the taxpayer at the end of 1971. Those are the so-called neutral zone rules. The new clause 20.1 would also permit the farmer to set a price on the sale to his child which would realize some capital gain or capital loss where the fair market value of the property had changed, if he desired to have this effect.

In any event, I think the committee would want to see the ways and means motion. Members will want to look at the effects of the amendments. Perhaps we could stand the necessary clauses so that the committee could look at them. I am willing to accept whatever procedure Your Honour wants to adopt. I am willing to table the notice of ways and means motion which will have to be forwarded to Mr. Speaker. I am willing to table the amendments to the bill, to take effect if the House allows the amendment to the ways and means motion and then goes back into committee on these particular clauses.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I think that would be appropriate, because an amendment to the ways and means motion requires 48 hours' notice. As I understand the future business of the House, we will receive this bill again on Thursday. This would allow the appropriate time to elapse before we take the necessary steps. Certainly we will want to study all the implications. As we have not seen this, Mr. Chairman, it is hard to say whether it meets exactly what opposition members want. I look to the 1971 debate on this point. I refer to the deathbed confessions or repentance on the part of the government with regard to this particular point.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Just as the amendment would propose switching from death into inter vivos or during the lifetime, I want to assure the hon. member that the government is very much alive. He ought to take the analogy very seriously indeed. I hope the members of the committee, in their capacity as members of the House, will waive the 48-hour rule. In any event, the hon. member informs me that we will not get back to this bill before Thursday. He knows more than some of the rest of us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, even though what is being proposed is obviously welcome, I would not want to suggest that members be asked to waive the 48-hour rule on something we have not seen. I wonder whether this possibility could not be left open. After we have seen the amended resolution in print, we might let it go at 24 hours.

The Chairman: Order. Do other members of the committee wish to speak on the particular point of order?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps I could table these amendments, with consent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton-West): Let the committee rise, and we will call it ten o'clock.

The Chairman: Several points are being suggested to the chair at this time. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar wishes to pursue the point of order.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister a question. When considering this question, did the minister also consider whether it could apply to the family farm corporation? This may not be possible, but I ask the minister if it was considered, because this point was also raised.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would prefer at this stage to exclude the corporation, whether it applies to the family farm, small businesses or whatever. The exclusions from capital gains treatment of the personal residence applies to the taxpayer. The committee ought to realize that we have a very difficult problem in trying to segregate the assets of a corporation to allocate the transfer either of a principal residence or a farm. This was originally set up to make the farm more liquid, in a transmissible sense, by reducing it to a shareholding. The shares can be transferred much more easily over a period of time. The same lack of liquidity is not apparent in a farm corporation as it is in a family farm. I hope the committee, and eventually the House, will allow this amendment as a recognition of the sociological and agricultural problem of preserving the sanctity and integrity of the family farm.

The corporation question not only involves the family farm, but small businesses, personal residences and corporations. It is a far vaster subject and far more open to problems. I could undertake to look into that question, but I hope the committee will not press the government at this stage because I must say we have not thought all these problems through. They give rise to great difficulty.

Mr. Towers: I should like to ask the minister a question before we leave this clause. For some time we on this side of the House have been trying to get answers from the Minister of National Revenue with respect to the evaluation of farm properties which is presently taking place. To refresh the memory of the Minister of Finance I should like to read a question asked in this House on April 4 by the hon. member for Pembina, as reported in Hansard at page 2968.

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue concerning the land evaluation taking place in Canada for tax purposes. Will he inform the House whether the property owners whose properties have been appraised for tax purposes have been notified and, if so, is there an appeal procedure to handle these evaluations?

To that question the Minister of National Revenue replied:

> Mr. Speaker, the valuations which are taking place are for the purpose of future reference. They do not necessarily have any status in law at this point. Valuations from any source can be considered. This information is being gathered to assist parties in the future determination of values.

The hon. member for Crowfoot then asked the following question:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. How can one appeal some five, six or ten years from now when that same assessment is put forward by the department?

The minister replied:

That is not the assessment, Mr. Speaker. The assessment would take place at the time of disposition, and any owner is free to make that kind of valuation himself or obtain one.

The next day I put the following question to the Minister of National Revenue:

Would the minister make available to farmers the evaluation assessments made by departmental appraisers or by those working on behalf of the minister?

The minister replied:

I think perhaps what the hon. member is referring to is not what he and others have been calling valuations but rather information being gathered for a realistic data bank which will assist taxpayers and the department in arriving at valuations on disposition of property. The kind of information that is being gathered, for instance, is the address, the legal description, the sale price, terms of sale, the municipal assessment, the dimension of the land and buildings and the income and expenses at the time of sale where relevant. Obviously, this is mostly available to the buyer and most of it actually comes from public records and observation.

I have found, from my experience over the years, that there is information available to the government which is not available to the farmers concerned. If the government wants to do what is right by the farmers across Canada, they will enter into an agreement with them to establish a value on their property which is acceptable not only to the Department of National Revenue but also to the farmers. If it is not acceptable to the farmer, he should have an opportunity to appeal the decision and clarify the situation during his lifetime; the task should not be left to his heirs. This is an important point and it behooves the government to look into it while other amendments to the act are being considered.

The Chairman: Perhaps it would meet the convenience of hon. members if we rose and reported progress. Then we could receive properly in the House the amendments which are being presented by the minister. Is this agreeable?

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in committee, made reference to an important amendment which was being considered. I think that for the interest of hon. members I should refer to Standing Order 60(1) which reads:

A notice of a ways and means motion may be laid upon the table of the House at any time during a sitting by a minister of the Crown, but such a motion may not be proposed in the same sitting.

Perhaps the chair might suggest that we now receive the changes proposed by the minister and agree to have them printed as part of today's proceedings so that our record would clearly indicate exactly what is being proposed, since I gather that the change proposed is of a fundamental nature.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): With the consent of the House, I should like to table an amendment to the ways and means resolution relating to the transfer of a family farm, and to advise the House that when the House again goes into committee of the whole this amendment will be put forward, unless the House would be interested to see the amendment earlier so that there would be sufficient advance notice before we resumed in committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps it would be for the convenience of the House to see the amendments we propose before we resume later in committee of the whole.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Could they not only be tabled but also printed as an appendix to Hansard or to Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I believe the consensus of the House may be that they be printed in Votes and Proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is suggested I read the following two paragraphs of Standing Order 60:

2. An order of the day for the consideration of a ways and means motion or motions shall be designated at the request of a minister rising in his place in the House.

3. When such an order is designated for the purpose of enabling a minister of the Crown to make a budget presentation, a motion "That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government" shall be proposed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will designate Wednesday.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That doesn't apply.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let's stick with paragraph two.

• (2200)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the motion presented by the Minister of Finance concurred in?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—SITE FOR DUMPING OF GARBAGE FROM METRO TORONTO

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on February 2 I asked the following question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) as reported at page 907 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Three weeks ago, in response to a question from the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, the Minister of Transport undertook the investigate and report back to the House on the location of the site to be used by Canadian Pacific Railway for the dumping of 400,000 tons of metro Toronto garbage annually for the next 15 years. Has the minister investigated this and can he report to the House which site is the prime site under consideration and the locations of the other five or six sites being considered by the railway?

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) chose to respond to my question with the following answer:

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer that question. I have discussed this matter at length with the minister of the environment for Ontario. It is substantially a matter for the provincial authorities.

Since the time I spoke with the minister in the House about this matter, CP Railway have made the announcement that they have not decided not to go ahead with the Minto township dump site, but that plans to put one into Hope township near Port Hope are under way. This is a matter of great concern to the people of Hope township, just as it was for the people of Minto township. Certainly a great sight of relief was heaved by most of the people in our area when we discovered that this dump site was not going to be forced on us.

Since that time an article has appeared in the Mount Forest Confederate which indicates we may not be completely off the hook yet. In the Thursday, March 1 edition of the Mount Forest Confederate there appear the following three paragraphs:

Barbara Murray, full time worker for Derail Dumps Today, feels that the group may set be in for a fight with CPR over garbage. She formed her opinion after talking to CP officials at a four-day information exhibition in Hope township.

It has been rumoured for several months that CP wanted to establish a land fill site in Minto township. The rail company announced last week that they would be asking the Ministry of the Environment for permission to operate a site in Hope township about 55 miles east of Toronto.

Speaking with John Cox, public relations representative for CP, she learned they may apply for a site in Minto if the proposal in Hope does not go well.

This is a matter which still concerns our area. We believe that it is the right of small municipalities to determine for themselves the kind of developments that take place in their own communities. We believe that a large and powerful corporation like CP Railway does not have the right to ride roughshod over the wishes of local citizens, who should be fully consulted about such matters.

We also believe that CP Railway have been extremely negligent. They have been extremely secretive about their plans, and only told the people of Hope township what they had in mind for them after they had prepared a massive public relations presentation. At no time did they really level with the people of Minto township. People may now wonder whether Minto township is off the hook and whether this debate we are having tonight is still relevant. To me it is very relevant. It raises much broader issues than merely the future of Minto township; it raises questions as to the role of the Department of the Environment in regulating environmental matters in this country.

The minister seemed to feel that this matter was strictly within provincial jurisdiction. I disagree. I believe in the case of Minto township there is a possibility that the fishery may have been polluted—section 33 of the Fisheries Act gives the federal government responsibility for fisheries, pollution—and to the people in Minto township it is an important matter. I also believe that there is a possibility that water systems could be polluted which ultimately flow into international territory, so the federal government should show an interest there too.

Beyond that, it is the federal government, not the municipal or provincial authorities, who is responsible for making sure that good corporate citizenship is shown by the great train companies in this country. This they have not done. The train companies have shown extremely poor faith in dealing with the people in my area. They have closed down train passenger services in my area. They have allowed their rights-of-way to go to weed, to the detriment of farmers' fields, and they have not shown any concern to keep up fences along the rights-of-way. This is symptomatic of the way that CP and CN view the people of this country. The federal government has responsibility for making sure they act as good corporate citizens.

Beyond that, there is the question whether the Department of the Environment is to be construed as anything but a simple piece of window-dressing for the government. We all know it has very little responsibility north of the sixtieth parallel, for example. If you get north of that area the responsibility is that of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

There is also the question of what is being done in southern Canada. It is very little. The federal government has shown little initiative and little imagination in this matter. For example, the province of Ontario is quite willing to go ahead with massive projects in conjunction with the municipalities, the federal government and corporations in order to get to work in recycling the projects which could prove valuable for the whole of this country. The provincial government is willing to free the money for this, but the federal government has proved to be very lax in this regard and has shown very little initiative in providing any leadership.

We are also concerned because in many small municipalities the question of sewage treatment is a matter of life or death. Often the municipalities are not able to grow unless they can put in proper sewage facilities. The municipalities do not have the money to do this. The government of Ontario has come through with money for this, but the federal government has once again shown it has little interest.

I believe this is an area where the federal government could be active. As we enter the next decade we will have to be more and more concerned about making peace with the environment, if we are still concerned about the sort of quality of life our children will inherit. I think there is no other area in this country where the federal government could pay more important and essential attention than this area. There is no other area in the whole of this country in respect of which the government has been more negligent in taking action.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my minister answered the question earlier, and I would like to elaborate on it to some degree now. The acquisition of any property which might be developed as a waste disposal site is solely a matter between the vendor and the purchaser—in this case, private property owners in the Port Hope area and Canadian Pacific Railway. I understand that Canadian Pacific now owns the land in question. Control of the development of the lands for waste disposal purposes can be exercised at the local level by municipal bylaws and in particular zoning bylaws passed under the provisions of the Ontario Municipal Act. Use of land, contrary to the provisions of any bylaw, would be illegal and if the bylaw is to be amended it would require the approval of the Ontario Municipal Board. This will be required in this case.

Approval for the development of lands for waste disposal sites comes under the direct control of the ministry of the environment of the province of Ontario. Before a certificate of approval can be granted for a waste disposal site, a formal application must be received by the ministry and a public hearing before the environmental hearing board must be convened and completed. The environmental hearing board will hear arguments for and against the proposal and report to the executive director, air and land pollution control division, who will then decide whether a certificate should be issued and, if so, under what circumstances and with what conditions.

For a certificate to be issued, the acceptability of the area will have to be proven to the ministry of the environment, which will also specify development and operating procedures. In the event that the executive director refuses to issue the certificate, the applicant can appeal the decision to the pollution control appeal board which will hear evidence supporting the proposal and in support of the refusal. This board can direct that a certificate be issued.

The present status is that the province of Ontario has recently received an application for a certificate, but no date has yet been set for an environmental board hearing. The position of the municipality of metropolitan Toronto is that the Canadian Pacific Railway is the sole agency responsible for acquiring and developing the waste disposal site subject, naturally, to receiving approval of site from the provincial ministry of the environment. The initial commitment between the two parties is for Canadian Pacific Railway to transport and dispose of 400,000 tons of refuse per year, representing approximately 25 per cent of the waste generated in the metro Toronto area, in accordance with provincial regulations and at an agreed unit cost of $6.35 per ton. There are two fundamental points to be recognized. The management of waste comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, and the proposal by CPR will be subjected to close scrutiny both in the public forum and by professional staff in the provincial government. The socioeconomic and environmental concerns will be fully examined.

The CPR is making an effort to expand the type of service available to potential clients. The concept of rail haul is new to Canadian waste management practices and comes at a time when large urban centres are facing serious problems in providing waste disposal facilities. This problem is probably most acute in the metropolitan Toronto area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but according to Standing Order 40 he is limited to three minutes. I see from whatever notes he has that he might go beyond one or two minutes more, and I cannot allow that.

AGRICULTURE—FEED GRAIN—SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION TO WESTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on the question which I asked the minister in February regarding the method of pricing feed grains domestically in the eastern market and in British Columbia. I was concerned with the eastern market.

This matter arose out of questions which I asked, in the committee on miscellaneous estimates, of Dr. Perreault of the eastern feed board regarding prices at that time. According to the information he gave me, for example, we were selling barley at $1.53½ at eastern ports and at $1.63 at Thunder Bay. When you put it on a tonnage basis, we were selling barley to the Montreal market at $65.54 a ton whereas U.S. corn in Montreal at that time was selling at $68.93 a ton. I am interested in asking the minister what policy is being followed and what policy will be followed in arriving at a price that is fair and equitable.

It is significant that at the same time as I asked these questions in the committee, I was told that previously we had charged the domestic market more than the export market. This information came out also at a seminar of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture held in Ottawa in the winter. It seems to me that if we are going to be fair and practical, we must adopt a method of pricing in the eastern feed market that is more consistent than heretofore. One yardstick that has emerged as being reasonably good is the price of U.S. corn in Montreal. That is the competitive product. The other could be the export market which we could use. But in my view the main thing is to adopt a policy that is known to the western farmer who is the producer, and to the eastern farmer who may choose to buy.

I think we will probably need a good benchmark much more in the future than we have needed in the past. The European market is changing, with Great Britain entering the Common Market. This means a single market for practically the whole of western Europe so far as pricing procedures are concerned. Freight rates may again come under review, but that is another matter. The main thing I am concerned about in raising this question with the minister is the pricing method which it is proposed to follow, while at the same time leaving the Canadian Wheat Board free in exercising its judgment as to the day to day pricing. This factor has to be borne in mind.

I note that in his answer to my question the minister said he thought I was in favour of Wheat Board marketing. He is quite right, I am. I believe we need to leave the Wheat Board in a position that it is free to make its day to day decisions, but the producer and the feeder should also know within what frame of reference the general policy is operating.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words in answer to the question of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). For quite some time now the Canadian Wheat Board in effect has been pricing barley into the Canadian domestic market, outside of the designated area, at prices which bear a fair relationship to the competitive potential of American corn. It has done this during a period of time when world grain prices were very low and where, on occasion, in order to continue to move our products into markets and to secure and maintain customers it was willing to offer barley at prices fairly low throughout the world. It at that point offered at prices somewhat higher in eastern Canada and British Columbia, maintaining that competitiveness with American corn which has marked our pricing since about three years ago when the Wheat Board decided to compete and avoid the entering into Canada of the American feed grain product.

It has now been holding those markets in British Columbia and eastern Canada against competitive corn really on the same principle, even though on occasion and for a variety of reasons international prices may have been higher than American corn, as they have in recent days. It is interesting that when domestic prices were higher than international prices, they still were very low prices, generally not covering the cost of production. Now that they are falling behind international prices, they more likely reflect a fair return.

There is another consideration facing us which we will be dealing with in the days ahead, and that is the challenge to maintain a fair relationship between feed grain prices in the designated area and prices outside that area. The government has committed itself to maintaining that relationship by a formula which we hope to announce prior to August 1, the start of the new crop year. That is important in order to maintain a fair balance between competitiveness of the different regions of the country.

In answer to the direct question of the hon. member, I would say that for the last several years it has been the Wheat Board's policy to price Canadian barley in relation to American grain, and that has been shown by a generality of price as much as $5 a ton less than American corn although occasionally creeping up as high as $3.50 a ton below the American corn price.

NATIONAL CAPITAL—INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF LASALLE ACADEMY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, on March 20 last, I asked the government, and in particular the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford), whether the historical LaSalle Academy building, which is located in my constituency, had been purchased by the federal government, and if so, to what end?

We have since been informed that the government has purchased the building in question, and that it will carry out repair work with a view to preserving it, aging the exterior, that is, giving it its former look, and modernizing the interior to house the Department of Urban Affairs. Mr. Speaker, all who live in the national capital welcome the news that the building will be renovated and preserved.

There can be no doubt that this federal government purchase is a wise decision, in contrast, some would say, with the fate of the Rideau street convent. We are all aware of the great changes that are taking place in our city centres; we all agree that the old areas of our cities need redevelopment for the modern world. Unfortunately, our insatiable thirst for modernizing threatens the existence of many older buildings, to make room for bigger, more modern and often more profitable ones. Sometimes these soap box constructions are outstanding only for their ugliness, and they are sometimes sterile from their conception.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the purchase of the LaSalle Academy by the federal government really fits in well with the program for the renovation of the west part of Lower Town; this program which bears the label "Centre Rideau" is part of Phase II of a complementary project doubtless intended as the counterpart of a similar project now under way in our twin city, Hull.

I rose, Mr. Speaker, not only to recognize the soundness of that purchase but also to point out the importance of the name LaSalle for generations of Canadians, Francophones as well an Anglophones in the Ottawa area, and to suggest to the government that the building should keep its name of LaSalle.

Built in 1852 by the bishop of Ottawa to lodge the Bytown College, later to become the Ottawa University, it became a hotel in 1856 where part of the Queen's 100th Regiment was billeted during the Fenian War; later, it was leased by the Ottawa Separate School Board to be used as a school by Notre Dame Parish, in Ottawa. The Brothers of Christian Schools had been teaching there since 1870. In 1889, they bought the building where they dispensed Christian and French teaching until 1971.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, for over 100 years the Brothers of Christian Schools have been giving quality teaching and pupils have been receiving serious and religious academic teaching. Being my Alma Mater, Mr. Speaker, I must say I deeply regret the disappearance of this institution which has been integrated into the Ontario secondary French public school system.

All the same, we rejoice that the building will remain, and I think, Mr. Speaker, that I express the wish of all the people of Ottawa, of the Academy alumni, of all the French-speaking and English-speaking people of Ottawa and Hull, who know that building under the name of LaSalle. I think I can rightly speak in their name and ask the government seriously to consider keeping the name of LaSalle for that building.

More and more, Mr. Speaker, citizens' groups conscious of the historical value of some old buildings not only fight for their preservation but are also convinced that they represent an integral part of our cultural heritage and our indentity.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in co-operation with the Department of State for Urban Affairs, the Department of Public Works has purchased the LaSalle Academy building for the price of $1 million. When the building has been restored to its original 19th century state, it will house the Department of Urban Affairs. This acquisition comes under the government's policy on the restoration of buildings in the lower town and on the redevelopment of residential and commercial areas, which is an improvement on simply demolishing the old buildings.

[English]

The choice of the LaSalle Academy complex was a deliberate one. It is a unique urban opportunity for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) to symbolize in the national capital area one of the goals he holds for communities and neighbourhoods throughout Canada. Renovating a viable heritage property in Canada is a case of practising a policy we are preaching. It reflects our concern with the revitalization of older neighbourhoods and with business districts in the downtown cores of Canadian cities. It reflects our concern that the character of older communities be preserved when they are worth preserving, and it reflects our feeling that the recycling of older districts is as important as the creation of new communities and new housing developments.

The proof of our concern lies not only in the choice of our future headquarters, however. It also lies in the Neighbourhood Improvement Program and other measures now under discussion by the House in Bill C-133. By preserving and renovating the LaSalle complex, which includes two other, more modern buildings, the ministry is demonstrating its belief that older buildings and neighbourhoods of historic significance need not be destroyed or preserved merely as museum pieces.

The purchase of the site is consistent, too, with plans for urban renewal in the Byward market-lower town area. Hon. members may recall the plans announced in the fall to sponsor the rehabilitation of a 50-acre area in lower town near the LaSalle site. This will involve the co-operation of all governments involved and participation from businessmen in the national capital area. Plans for renovating the LaSalle academy complex are now being completed by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs and the Department of Public Works. The restoration of the buildings to a viable economic and social future will in turn stimulate the preservation and rebirth of the surrounding area. In this way, the ministry will have served as a catalyst to make the historic lower town area once again a focal point in Ottawa's business life and in the daily affairs of its residents.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Ottawa East that his remarks on the naming of the building will be brought to the attention of the minister tomorrow morning.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON DISCUSSIONS WITH CHAIRMAN OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL ON ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House about my discussions yesterday with the Hon. Russell Train, Chairman of the United States President's Council on Environmental Quality. Mr. Train is the cabinet level adviser to the president on environmental matters.

Among other things, I drew Mr. Train's attention to the impressive list of studies being carried out by the Canadian government and industry to ensure the protection of our northern environment, especially in respect of the Mackenzie Valley corridor.

We had an exchange of views on the protection of the boundary areas of our coasts, especially protection from oil spills. Mr. Train and I agreed that on the Pacific coast, in the Georgia Strait-Puget Sound-Juan de Fuca Straits area, a better understanding of the marine ecosystem is essential for the effective management and protection of these waters. We arranged to meet soon with United States scientists and other experts to start a comprehensive and detailed joint study which will provide the basis for programs and other measures to protect and enhance the environment of this area.

Since my meeting with Mr. Train last July a joint contingency plan has been prepared which will be effective in the boundary waters of the Pacific and Atlantic coasts as well as in the Great Lakes. The contingency plan for the Great Lakes has been in effect for over a year, and on several occasions it has proved highly successful in containing and cleaning up oil and other hazardous substances. Within a few weeks we shall have a Canada-U.S. agreement which will bring fully into effect similar joint plans on our two coasts.

Mr. Train and I reviewed at length the serious problems of high water levels in the Great Lakes. There are, of course, very severe limitations on what can be done to lower these levels. The fact is that the lakes are full as a result of record levels of precipitation, and the only means of affecting the levels is by controlling the outflows from Lake Superior and Lake Ontario. The International Joint Commission is at present considering a plan to increase storage in Lake Superior, and will hold public meetings on this plan in May.

Mr. Train asked me for my views on several proposals now before the U.S. Congress to increase the outflow of water from Lake Michigan at Chicago. I replied that Canadians would doubtless object to any proposals which would amount to an export of water from Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Davis: I asked Mr. Train about progress on the U.S. side in implementing our Agreement on Great Lakes Water Quality. Mr. Train was well aware of the concerns which have been expressed about the timing of the U.S. programs. He undertook to provide further details about the flow of U.S. federal government funds this year and next year for the construction of municipal sewage treatment projects in the Great Lakes basin. I reported that on our side, with the co-operation of Ontario, the municipal sewage treatment plant construction program is ahead of schedule. This is the result of our research efforts which have substantially reduced the capital cost of phosphorous removal facilities and speeded up construction. Mr. Train assured me of the determination of his government to meet its commitments and schedules under the agreement, although he suggested there might be some slippage in timetables.

We discussed the proposal to raise the Ross Dam in the state of Washington, which would result in the flooding of the Skagit valley upstream in British Columbia. I conveyed to Mr. Train our determination, and the determination of the British Columbia government, not to allow the Skagit Valley in Canada to be flooded. I also made clear our desire to seek a negotiated settlement which would take account of the legitimate rights and interests of the Seattle City Light and Power Company. Mr. Train said that his government's position was that a valid contract exists between Seattle City Light and Power Company and British Columbia, and that any solution must be arrived at within this context. We both agreed on the desirability of bringing the parties directly concerned to the negotiating table at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party I want to thank the minister for his statement. I want to make it clear that we in this party are very cognizant of the importance of ongoing discussions such as have taken place over the past day with the President's adviser on environmental matters meeting our own Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis). Having said that, however, I think that in part of the minister's statement questions are raised rather than answered.

I refer to the minister's remarks on the discussion that he had with Mr. Train on the Mackenzie Valley route. He did not say in his statement to the House just what the implications of those discussions were or what he really said to Mr. Train. The minister is reported in the press as having said that the Mackenzie is our "trump card"; presumably this is in connection with using the Mackenzie corridor as an alternative to the tanker route.

The minister goes on to say, as reported in the press, that he personally does not think that these great oil tankers will be moving in the critical areas off the west coast, but there is no indication in the statement he made today why he believes that. I would remind all hon. members that it is very dangerous for ministers to make statements indicating that a danger that the public is aware of is not in fact a danger. I would remind the minister that statements along the same line have been made in connection with the Skagit River flooding problem. Now we have further similar statements made by the minister with respect to the threat to the west coast by tankers. Apparently the minister is of the opinion that this probably will not take place, but there is nothing in the statement to indicate that Mr. Train agreed with this.

When the minister talks about using the Mackenzie as our trump card, it must indicate, if that is government policy, that a decision has in fact been made by this country that we are going to have a transportation corridor down the Mackenzie. I remind all hon. members that this is not really consistent with the position taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), that there is in fact no decision and that Canada awaits an application to the National Energy Board. Hon. members will recall that a motion was moved by this party to have this matter referred to a parliamentary committee of all parties in order that a cohesive policy could be worked out and presented to parliament rather than to leave us dependent on what are perhaps only the pious hopes of the minister whose aim is to placate those people on the west coast who are concerned about the potential pollution problems along that coast.

The minister referred to the Skagit Valley. Some months ago this was considered by the government to be a dead issue but it keeps recurring. It is quite clear from the minister's statement that the American position is that British Columbia and the city of Seattle have a binding agreement, but there is no suggestion that the Americans have agreed in principle with our position that the valley should not be flooded. In consequence, the negotiations that will take place are very much up in the air and we do not know for certain what the outcome will be. When the minister talks about the contract between British Columbia and the city of Seattle and the legitimate claims of compensation by Seattle, it should be remembered that there is some serious question about whether that contract, whether the agreement and whether the IJC order are in fact legal and binding. I would hope that this government is not, by the use of loose wording and sloppy comments, putting the country or the province of British Columbia into the position where it will be impossible, when dealing with the Americans on the subject, to raise as a defence to their exaggerated compensation claims the legal defence that in fact the IJC order is not valid and, as a consequence, the agreement subsequently signed is not valid either.

The minister also referred to the Great Lakes Water Quality Treaty and indicated that Mr. Train said there might be some slippage with respect to the United States meeting the deadlines regarding the regulations that they must meet, as mentioned yesterday, by April 15. I hope that there will be some assurance from the government today that the Canadian position is that the regulations which were in fact supposed to have been ready are ready and that there is no delay so far as Canadian participation in the preparation of these regulations is concerned.

Lastly, I want again to emphasize the importance that my party puts on ongoing discussions. I thank the minister for his statement but I end with the warning that statements made in the House of Commons ought to be consistent with statements made outside the House of Commons. It ill behooves the government or any member of it to make statements that tend to lull the citizens into an acceptance of a position in which they do not have to continue to maintain vigilance in areas as important as the pollution threat to our west coast.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party in the House welcome the interesting statement made by the Minister of the Environment regarding his meeting with Hon. R. B. Train, Chairman of the United States President's Council on Environmental Quality. I should like to tell the minister that such meetings in our opinion are very essential if we are to obtain a united approach to our joint international environmental problems. Some of the comments made by the minister were extremely interesting. He covered ten specific points. There is not enough time to go over them in any detail, but I must say he has given us just enough information to make hon. members start asking questions about the depth of the talks he had with Mr. Train.

To begin with, he mentioned the discussion and the turning over of information to Mr. Train in connection with the Mackenzie River Valley. I suggest that the minister ought to level with the House and turn over the same type of information to hon. members.

We have not received in detail the context of the studies that have been done on the Mackenzie, and we should like to know whether the minister indicated clearly to Mr. Train that this could be the alternative to a tanker route down the west coast of British Columbia. It is time that members of the opposition were taken into the minister's confidence. It is time that we had a full and open discussion on where Canada is going with respect to this problem.

I might mention another interesting point. I noted that there was talk about an exchange of information regarding the east and west coasts of Canada, what they are going to do to control oil spills and so on. This is good. I suggest to the minister there is one very important factor that must be taken into consideration if we are to prevent oil spills, and that is the setting up of some type of traffic control system on both the east and west coasts. It must be a very efficient control system that will go a long way toward eliminating the numbers of shipwrecks that take place resulting in disastrous oil spills which affect the ecology and marine life of both the east and west coasts of Canada.

Another point that certainly warrants comment is the fact that Mr. Train asked for the minister's views on several proposals now before the United States Congress to increase the outflow of water from Lake Michigan at Chicago. Our party views with apprehension any suggestion of increased Canadian flows to any river in the United States. It means a further export of Canadian water before any discussions are entered into. I was pleased to hear the minister say that the Canadian public would probably not look upon it with favour. I agree with him. Parliament and the people of Canada must jealously guard this great natural resource and ensure that we do not make any more mistakes such as we made with the Columbia River treaty when we gave away a tremendous power potential for peanuts.

There is another point in connection with the clean-up of the Great Lakes. The minister used the term, "slippage in the timetable." I suggest to the minister this is not the only timetable where some slippage has taken place. We have had some slippage in our timetables as far as environmental problems in Canada are concerned. I suggest to the minister that we very carefully examine not only the water pollution problems in the Great Lakes but the problems relating to air pollution. There is a vast amount of air pollution drifting into Canada and an exchange of pollution in the international boundary area. This must be taken into consideration and some satisfactory solution worked out at a very early date.

I wish to make some comment on the Skagit. I come from British Columbia and, as the minister indicated, we do not want the Skagit Valley flooded. I think it has been made clear to the American authorities that under no consideration will we go along with the raising of the Ross Dam and the flooding of the Skagit Valley. I urge the minister and the government to take a much firmer stand and to tell the American authorities that under no consideration are we going to allow the dam to be raised and a further chunk of Canadian territory flooded.

I welcome the minister's statement. I hope we will have further clarification of what he has said today.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. minister for informing us of his conversations with Mr. Train, the American government representative, about the Canadian environment.

Mr. Speaker, before making any comments, I should like to point out to the minister that I was given the English version of his statement at 1:45, and that when I came to the House at two o'clock I was sent a polite note that reads as follows:

We regret to inform you that the French translation of this statement has not reached us in time for us to let you have a copy.

Please rest assured that we will take steps to prevent any reoccurrence of such a delay.

And I have just been given the French version at 2:15.

Mr. Speaker, an Official Languages Act has been passed in Canada by the federal parliament and I consider that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should instruct all his ministers to issue their statements in both official languages. If a statement is in French, there should be an English translation to accompany the French text, and vice versa. In this way, there would be no problem about two official languages. Before we speak about the environment, we should deal with the matter of the two official languages. I therefore suggest that the right hon. Prime Minister instruct his ministers to that effect. I have nothing against either of the two languages, on the contrary, I should like to see them both respected, first of all in parliament, because it is we who passed the act.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the environment on our east and west coasts and in the Great Lakes, and also to air pollution, I consider that it is in the interests of both the United States and Canada to come to fair, not "lion's-share" agreements by which the Americans would take their responsibilities, and Canadians would follow suit in order to protect the environment in our country and, incidentally, in the United States.

I feel that studies, discussions and talks which took place during these past few days specifically tend to halt pollution of Canadian territorial waters, of the Great Lakes as well as of the air. I urge the government to pursue the debate, not indefinitely and to no purpose, but in a manner likely to solve the problem and allow to depollute water and air and thus protect our population.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of privilege at this time because I have just been informed that members of the press gallery have been excluded from the government lobby. I just want to say I hope no attempt will be made by anybody to prevent members of our party from having the privilege of meeting members of the gallery in our lobby. We have found that the opportunity available to members of the gallery to meet members of our caucus in the lobby has not been abused, and we certainly do not intend to raise any objection to their continued access to our lobby.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion.

Since the inception of family allowance payments in 1945 the consumer price index has more than doubled to its present level of 145.7 per cent and as a result the mothers of this country have lost the race between population and inflation. As an interim measure to tide us over until a better system could be developed, family allowances have not only failed to close the gap between 1945 buying power and present buying power but have also failed to increase in step with the constant escalation in the cost of living. So it is obvious that motherhood has lost its battle with inflation. I therefore move seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie):

That the government come to the aid of motherhood in its fight against inflation by reintroducing the family income security program into the House no later than the end of this week, and, further, that it restore the buying power of the family allowance for all Canadians to bring it in line with the 1973 consumer price index.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS OF GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 concerning an urgent matter which has already been touched upon in the statement made by the Minister of the Environment, that is, the growing damage being caused in the Great Lakes area by high water levels in that lake system. I hope the hon. member opposite whose job it is to shout "No" to every proposition under Standing Order 43—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly indicate the terms of the motion so that the Chair may inquire whether there is unanimous consent under the terms of Standing Order 43?

An hon. Member: No!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grier: I will, Mr. Speaker. I move seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the government make Canadian forces personnel available to assist the municipalities in constructing protective works at no cost to the municipalities involved, and further that the government offer emergency short-term funding, to be shared on a 50-50 basis with the provinces, to pay for the cost of such works.

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

[Mr. Carter.]

REGULATIONS APPLYING TO FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that persistent representations to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) have not resulted in the elimination of the discriminatory aspects of unemployment insurance regulations as they pertain to fishermen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That a special reference be made from the House to the committee that these regulations be immediately reviewed with the aim of eliminating discrimination against fishermen which is now placing thousands of fishermen unnecessarily on welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The hon. member's motion cannot be put.

FOOD PRICES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

April 3, 1973—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

That the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, presented to the House on April 2, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order respecting the procedure of the House today. I can say that there have been discussions among representatives of all the parties in the House, including one of the representatives of the independent members, and I think you will find that there is agreement on two points. The agreement is, of course, subject to the debate itself being allowed.

The two points are, first, that the motion be moved and that the debate take place not now but after the oral question period and, second, that the time limit on speeches in today's debate be 30 minutes for the first spokesman for each of the four organized parties and 20 minutes for all other speakers. I believe you will find that there is agreement on these two points.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed and so ordered by the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members may recall that when the motion was originally put there was some doubt on the part of the Chair on a small though perhaps important point of order but one which in the view of hon. members might be overlooked. In any event, this aspect of the matter might be looked at briefly when we reach the item on the order of business after the oral question period.

Is it the wish of the House that we proceed with routine proceedings, then go to the question period, and then return to motions for the purpose of putting the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ABANDONMENT OF CHERRY POINT OIL TANKER TERMINAL BY UNITED STATES AS CONDITION FOR TRANSPORTING ALASKA GAS THROUGH MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. When the minister says that he hopes to persuade the United States to abandon Cherry Point as a terminal for the tanker route down the west coast from Alaska and to go farther down to California as the terminal, can the minister say whether he made it clear to the hon. Mr. Train that the Cherry Point terminal is unacceptable to Canada, and that this terminal must be abandoned as a necessary basis for any co-operation with interests in the United States in transporting natural gas from Alaska via a Mackenzie valley pipe line to the United States mid-west?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, at our meeting yesterday we discussed pollution problems and environmental hazards along the boundary between Canada and the United States. We did not discuss oil and gas policy as such.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, when the minister says that he hopes to persuade the United States to abandon Cherry Point as the terminal for the tanker route from Alaska, does this mean that the government of Canada has decided to take the position that the elimination of the Cherry Point terminal should be a condition prior to any co-operation or agreement regarding the use of a Mackenzie valley pipeline for the transmission of gas from Alaska to the United States mid-west? Has the Canadian government taken such a position?

Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that Cherry Point is now adequately supplied with oil through the Trans-Mountain line from Alberta, and I believe this should always be the case.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish the minister would answer the question, but I think he did when he said no. When the minister says that he hopes to persuade the United States to abandon Cherry Point as a terminal, does that mean that the Canadian government has already agreed to the construction of a gas pipeline down the Mackenzie valley to transport gas? Or is the position of the Canadian government still that frequently enunciated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, namely, that this is a decision that must be made by the National Energy Board? In other words, does the minister know what he is talking about?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition posed two questions. The answer to the first question is no, and the answer to the second question, namely, whether I know what I am talking about, is yes.

ADEQUACY OF PROTECTIVE MEASURES AGAINST POTENTIAL OIL SPILLS OFF WEST COAST

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. Having in mind the criticism in recent days by the head of the Science Council of Canada, Dr. McTaggart-Cowan, of what he calls the snail's pace progress being made by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of the Environment to protect the west coast of British Columbia from potential oil spillage along the tanker route to Cherry Point, which is within 18 miles of my riding, is the minister satisfied with the protection that exists, or will he pay heed to the warning issued by the head of the Science Council within the last four or five days?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will ever be completely satisfied with the measures that we are taking, but our performance recently on the west coast relative to the spill from the freighter Irish Stardust was much better than that with respect to the Arrow with which Dr. McTaggart-Cowan is familiar.

MEASURES TO SECURE ABANDONMENT OF CHERRY POINT OIL TANKER TERMINAL

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister tell the House whether the government intends to take further measures, possibly along with President Nixon, to change the Cherry Point terminal, and will he tell the House why the government agreed to a contingency plan that does not definitely eliminate the most significant danger of the TAPS tanker route, which is the Cherry Point terminal?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am certain the hon. member for Vancouver South is aware that there is a great deal of traffic already moving through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and through the waters about which we are concerned off Cherry Point. Some of the vessels in that area now are carrying oil and have done so for the last 50 years, so we are concerned about contingency measures there now.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the Minister of the Environment, but can he tell the House upon what possible basis he was able to say to the public through the press that the Mackenzie is the trump card and, further, that he does not see any real possibility of tankers moving in the critical areas off the west coast, unless he has some sort of agreement in principle or otherwise from Mr. Train?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should clear our statements of policy with officials from the United States.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the hon. member for New Westminster has a supplementary question, but perhaps he might allow the Chair to complete the first round of questions and return to this matter in a short while. I will then recognize that hon. member for his supplementary.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT DECISION WILL BE MADE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Communications arising from his announcement last Friday that the government has decided to suspend the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission approving increases in rates and charges by Bell Canada. Can he now inform the House when the government expects to announce its final decision on this matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, by an official ruling adopted yesterday by the Cabinet, the decision has been suspended for a 90-day period for the purpose of study.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the minister says the suspension is for 90 days. Can he assure the House that he will within that period make a final decision, which I hope will be to rescind the order of the Canadian Transport Commission?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I think that in so restricting the suspension of the decision, the government has implicitly undertaken to take a decision, whatever it may be, within 90 days.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final short supplementary question. Last Friday when the minister made the announcement he made no suggestion of any time limit in respect of the suspension. Will he inform the House why he is now talking about a limit of 90 days for the suspension rather than giving himself enough time to make sure he can complete the studies he requires?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): I did not mention any date in my statement on motions, Mr. Speaker, but the legislation provides that a decision cannot be delayed indefinitely. When the government suspends a decision, it must change the date set by the commission itself for another specific date.

[Mr. Fraser.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF CHANCELLOR WILLY BRANDT TO WASHINGTON—INVITATION BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TO COME TO OTTAWA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

In order to take the opportunity of the forthcoming visit of Chancellor Willy Brandt in Washington next May 1 and 2, has the Canadian government invited the leader of the government in Bonn to come to Ottawa during that trip?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, such an invitation was not sent.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I would like to ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Does the right hon. Prime Minister not believe that this would prove a marvellous opportunity for Canada to tighten its business ties with Germany and to make the greatest possible use of the vast possibilities of the Federal Republic of Germany?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I share the admiration of the Creditiste leader for that prominent socialist leader in the world today. He has surely played an extremely important part in his country and in Europe. The Canadian government would like to welcome him one day. However, we do not want it to be in connection with his visit to the United States and this is why I answered to the Creditiste leader that we had not invited him on that occasion.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN CHARTERED BANK INTEREST RATES ON GOVERNMENT POLICY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the increase in interest rates announced by Canadian chartered banks following a similar increase by the Bank of Canada which brought about this action by the chartered banks, will he take the first opportunity on motions to explain to the House the apparent inconsistency in government policy, on the one hand proposing lower taxes to stimulate the economy and on the other authorizing the Bank of Canada to increase interest rates, which will lead to a parade of generally higher interest rates resulting in slowing down the economy?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no conflict of policy at all. The Governor of the Bank of Canada made it quite clear that the monetary policy of the bank would continue to be expansionary. I will be glad to deal with the subject, as I said to the hon. gentleman's colleague, at the meeting of the committee on finance of the House of Commons when it deals again with my estimates next Monday night.

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE INCREASE—EFFECT ON PRICE LEVELS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In reading his answers to questions yesterday on the matter of the increase in the interest rate by the Bank of Canada I gained the impression that the minister does not believe it will cause a contraction of the economy. Is it his position that the increase in the bank rate will have no effect on price levels in the economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the increase in the bank rate and the subsidiary action by the chartered banks in raising their prime rates will, of course, do something to the cost of borrowing money.

Mr. Hees: It sure will.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But we will still have the cheapest money in the world compared with the United States and all the major countries of Europe.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, this supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the answer of the minister suggests that the policy is going to be inflationary, is it the position of the minister that we cannot control inflation in this country by raising interest rates?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would rather use the word "expansionary" than "inflationary". The hon. gentleman ought to take into consideration that if the present expansion in loan requests reflecting the expansion of the economy were to continue at the earlier rate of interest, this might well have involved over-expansion of the economy which the hon. gentleman was so worried about the last time he put the question to me on January 26.

SUGGESTED REQUEST BY MINISTER TO CHARTERED BANKS NOT TO INCREASE LENDING RATES FURTHER—IMPOSITION OF CEILING UNDER BANK ACT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the four leading chartered banks have followed the example of the central bank by increasing their prime interest rates, and in view of the fact this will undoubtedly stimulate a further increase in the cost of living, may I ask whether he would undertake to attempt to persuade the banks not to make any further increase in their lending rates and, if he is unable to persuade them, would he undertake to bring in legislation to re-impose the 6 per cent ceiling on bank loans which one of his predecessors, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, took out of the Bank Act a few years ago?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I would not give that undertaking. I want to say to the hon. member that, in view of the very heavy demand for credit in response to the expansionary economy in Canada and of the international situation in respect of interest rates, had the present interest rates not adjusted to these market forces the expansion in money supply might well have added to the inflationary cost of living about which the hon. gentleman is so rightly concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I point out that there are perhaps five or six members seeking to ask supplementary questions on this subject. We will try to have as few as possible for each member, but for the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and then the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INDUCE CHARTERED BANKS TO REDUCE SERVICE CHARGES IN LIGHT OF INCREASED PROFITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that bank profits have increased substantially since the 6 per cent ceiling was taken off, and their profits last year were over 20 per cent higher than the previous year, would the minister use his good offices to persuade the chartered banks to reduce the service charges they are now levying upon their customers as one means of keeping down the cost of living?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when I was talking to the President of the Canadian Banking Association prior to the increase in prime rates on Monday I asked him to relay to the presidents of all chartered banks in this country that I consider it important that credit not be reduced to Canadian-owned small businesses in this country, nor to those areas of the country that are growing at a slower rate than some other areas, and particularly that the spread between deposit rates paid by banks against money deposited with them and the interest rate charged by the banks on money lent by them should not increase. I am happy to observe that the banks have all indicated that the spread between their prime rate on loans and their deposit rates, either for savings or chequing accounts, has not increased, so that profits obtained by the banks can in no way be affected by—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister but it seems to me questions being asked at this time and the answers given by the minister are more in the form of a debate than questions and answers. I would hope that the questions might be briefer and the answers also.

BANK INTEREST RATE INCREASES—EFFECT ON UNEMPLOYMENT—FORMAL COMMUNICATION INDICATING MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the answer the minister has just repeated is a very vital one for us in Atlantic Canada. In view of our concern about the impact of the present move of the central bank with regard to the interest rate and the concomitant potential impact on unemployment, can the minister say whether any formal direction or communication has been issued to the Bank of Canada or to the Canadian Banking Association indicating the minister's stand, and would he be prepared to table any such documentation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no formal communication in that sense was made and nothing, therefore, can be tabled.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that 1969 government policy is beginning to show its head again and as it had such a detrimental effect on slow growth areas, can the minister indicate what guarantee to the slow growth areas in Canada there is that the policy will not have a very serious effect on unemployment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Since I cannot accept the preamble, I ask the hon. member not to accept the conclusion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North and then we will try to move to the next subject or perhaps go back to the first question and allow the hon. member for New Westminster his supplementary.

BANK INTEREST RATE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT HOUSING INTEREST RATES WILL NOT BE INCREASED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for housing whether he will assure the House now, because interest rates are one of the ingredients that have added considerably to the cost of housing which has gone up 100 per cent in the last five years, that there will not be any increase in rents, first, on uninsured direct loans out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and, second, on all loans which are insured by CMHC to protect Canadians in the purchase of houses?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the interest rate payable under the insured loan provisions of the National Housing Act is set out in the act by legislation, not by the minister or the government.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be argumentative and I appreciate what the minister says, but would he be prepared to see written in the legislation a guarantee to the nation that there will not be a considerable increase in the cost of housing at this time when we are in a national crisis?

Mr. Basford: If it is the type of amendment that it appears the hon. member is suggesting, it would result in no insured loans being made at all.

REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF 100-MILE PROVISION OF ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT ON WEST COAST

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the statement he made in the House today and in view of the continuing pressure by the United States administration to commence the tanker route, will the minister now consider inplementing the 100-mile provision of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act on the west coast to assist him in his negotiations?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my impression of the hon. member's question is that he is asking that the Arctic waters pollution provisions be implemented on both our coasts. Were that to be done, it would of course, intersect some of the world's major shipping lanes.

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the statement the minister made today, can he give us some indication of when the government will take a definitive position with regard to alternatives to the TAPS route because at present there is no assistance being given to U.S. authorities to change that route?

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN ESTIMATES FOR CANCER AND HEART RESEARCH

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which I wish to direct also to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare reconsider his estimates for the present year, in consultation with the Minister of State for Science and Technology, with a view to making a substantial increase for cancer research and at least a small contribution to heart disease research since the present government has about the worst record in the western world in this regard?

INQUIRY RESPECTING IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSIONER'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since reports often remain a dead letter and are ignored, could the Prime Minister say whether he intends to follow through with the recommendations of the Commissioner of Official Languages?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I have understood the whole question, including the premise, but in answer to the question itself, we do intend, of course, to follow through with the recommendations of the commissioner. Furthermore, we always consider them carefully and we are very pleased in fact that they spur many people on concerning the application of the Official Languages Act.

ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT POLICY AND DIRECTION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the statements that have been made by the chairman of Air Canada to the effect that the lack of direction and clear enunciation of government policy is causing a great deal of hardship and difficulty in the administration of Air Canada, is he prepared to make a statement on motions at a very early date to clarify this important matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately it was impossible for me to discuss this matter with the chairman of Air Canada. He is out of the country and has been for about ten days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): He will fly back, I am told, by Air Canada tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will then have an opportunity to meet him and discuss with him the report of the newspaperman, not the statement.

Mr. Mazankowski: Could the minister indicate to the House whether he has received a draft set of policy objectives which was forwarded to the minister by the chairman of Air Canada, and can he indicate to the House the nature of his response?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have many communications with the president of Air Canada, many of them on policies, and this is what we are studying now. I made an announcement in the House the other day that after we had assigned the German and Chinese routes to the companies, within a few weeks we will be in a position to make another statement concerning the future designation of routes. This is based on discussions with Air Canada, and in particular its chairman.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is it the minister's intention to bring to the House a new set of policies, policy objectives and guidelines for the operation of Air Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I intend to keep on co-operating with these two large companies which are CP Air and Air Canada in order to assign international routes in an equitable manner for the greatest benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Vegreville of the Minister of Transport. TORONTO—PROGRESS IN ESTABLISHMENT OF WATERFRONT PARK

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Last fall the government announced its intention to acquire land on the Toronto waterfront for the purpose of creating a waterfront park.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Walker: Now that summer is fast approaching, can the minister tell the House, and particularly the people of Toronto, what progress has been made and whether Torontonians will be able to enjoy the park this coming summer?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, considerable progress has been made in the establishment of the Macdonald park.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: I had a very successful meeting yesterday with the mayor of Toronto, the chairman of metro Toronto and the provincial minister involved. All of the property is under acquisition by the federal Department of Public Works. Part of the park will be available for the public of Toronto this summer, and we will be having a public information meeting in the mayor's chambers on Monday night.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—EFFECT OF CIVIL UNREST ON CANADIAN PEACEKEEPING FORCES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and/or his colleague the Minister of National Defence. In view of Canada's rather unhappy experience in Viet Nam in peace supervision and the lengthy, extended role of Canada's peacekeeping forces in Cyprus, would the minister advise the House in what way those forces might be affected by what appears to be an upsurge of civil unrest in the island of Cyprus?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. gentleman knows, Mr. Speaker, there is a great difference between the role we have undertaken in Cyprus and that which we have undertaken in Viet Nam. In Viet Nam we are not engaged in peacekeeping but in peace supervision. In Cyprus, we are engaged in peacekeeping in the traditional sense.

As I understand the situation at the moment, most of the problems that have arisen recently in that island have arisen within one community rather than between the Greek and Turkish communities, so it has not affected the operations of our forces so far in any way that we can discern. In Cyprus we are not faced with hostilities between the two communities, but just within the Greek community itself.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does the minister distinguish between civil unrest between the Greeks, amounting perhaps to a good shooting war among themselves, and the struggle between the Greek Cypriots and the Turkish Cypriots?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our forces are there really to stand between the two communities. It could be, if there is further trouble in Cyprus, that the trouble will expand and our forces could be affected, but I was merely explaining that so far there has not been an outbreak of violence between the two communities between which our forces stand.

CLOSING OF WHALING AT BLANDFORD, NOVA SCOTIA—COMPENSATION FOR THOSE UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that the Minister of the Environment closed down the whaling industry at Blandford, Nova Scotia, last year and to date these men are unemployed, what is the amount of compensation to be paid on an annual basis to the workmen affected, and when will this compensation be provided?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that normally this kind of question ought to be placed on the order paper, but if the minister has the information available he might as well give it to the hon. member and to the House now.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, a task force has been at work, has visited the three whaling stations on the east coast which are closed down, and is in the process of making recommendations with regard to compensation to plant owners and alternative sources of employment for the workers.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question that is supplementary or related to an earlier one. Has he had an opportunity to review this matter and can he give us some word about his conclusion?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have carefully considered rent increases for permanent married quarters and, generally speaking, they are consistent with the rates in what is called "civy" street, or the private sector.

In view of the fact that yesterday I, as a Member of Parliament, was barred from hearing an address by an assistant commissioner of the RCMP, in what has been described as a talk focusing on labour unrest produced by subversive elements, and in view of the further fact that this talk was given to a private group primarily consisting of businessmen, will the minister assure the House that a copy of Assistant Commissioner Draper's address will be made available not only to myself but to all members of the House?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to look into the matter. This was a conference on industrial security. I have just received notice of the hon. member's question, and I will be pleased to do what I can for him.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister concerns other papers, apparently classified confidential, which were given to private businessmen but not to representatives of labour or Members of Parliament. I refer the minister to a paper given by Mr. R. Bourne entitled "Government Security Organization." Will the minister also assure members of the House that they will get a copy of that paper?

Mr. Allmand: I will do my best to provide that paper as well. As far as I know that paper did not contain anything that was classified. It contained matters that were public knowledge, but I will get a copy for the hon. member and look into the other part of the question as well.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

The government having decided to suspend to Bell Canada rate increases for 90 days while it reviews the question and ask certain questions, and as Northern Electric seems to be a subsidiary of Bell Canada, can the minister tell us whether in the course of that special inquiry the government will ask questions about Northern Electric to find out what its profits are—which seem to be considerable?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): I will consider the question, Mr. Speaker, but off hand I would say the answer seems to be negative since, as far as I know, the Northern Electric Company is not under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Could the hon. minister tell the House whether the Canadian Transport Commission will examine the consolidated accounts of Bell Canada?

Today we hear the Minister of the Environment suggesting that the United States should be directing its oil farther down the coast. I should like to ask the Minister of the Environment if this is a change in policy?

INCOME TAX

VARIATION IN INDIVIDUAL RETURNS MADE OUT BY TAX CONSULTANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Several weeks ago I brought to the attention of the minister the fact that when the work of tax offices was checked in filling out individual income tax forms, 11 different results were found to have been submitted to the Department of National Revenue. Has the minister investigated this situation or is he taking any action in relation to the kind of service provided to individual taxpayers by tax offices of all kinds and natures in this country?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the department has monitored as far as possible the returns which appear to be coming from tax consulting firms. There seems to be no pattern of error in them so far, and the error rate generally is considerably lower this year than in the past. However, I am giving consideration to the desirability of having people who prepare tax returns for a fee identify themselves on the forms in future. I am not sure yet what steps might be necessary to do this but it is a possibility worth considering.

SCOPE OF JOB INQUIRIES TO BE MADE TO QUALIFY FOR BENEFITS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the fact that some workers across the country are reporting every week and oftener at Canada Manpower Centres, the official government employment agency, looking for employment without success, it is necessary that he or she also search for work in other areas in order to qualify for UIC benefits and if so, how many searches, and has this fact been well advertised so that workers know that this is a new interpretation of the regulations?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that question several times in the House before but to repeat, yes, there is a requirement not only to depend on the services of Canada Manpower or not only to depend on the services of union hiring halls where they exist, but to seek work beyond that so that no avenue is left unexplored. This situation has been made known reasonably well to workers across the country but I repeat it and hope it will be publicized again.

Mr. Muir: In view of the fact that applicants for employment are continually unsuccessful in securing employment at CMC offices, can the minister advise where a man or woman can find employment apart from CMC offices in a region where the unemployment rate is 20 per cent and higher?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the active search for work as a requirement of the act is not enforced as rigorously in areas where it is known that unemployment is that high. If the hon. member has a specific example of where this has been overstressed, I would appreciate the details so that I can take the necessary steps.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period but I was hoping to recognize two or three members who have not had an opportunity to ask questions or supplementaries in this or the last couple of question periods. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

I know the minister was going to look into this and I wonder if he has an answer in order that employers may know whether it is six months before January 1 or just what the situation is?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did indicate to the hon. gentleman that I would get an answer for him and make it known but I regret that I have been occupied since last Thursday. This is being researched and I think the answer is that we will not take any heavyhanded action against employers who employed people without visas prior to March 31, again unless there was blatant and knowing exploitation of the situation due to other factors.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have received the telegrams referred to. ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FOOD PRICES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

April 3, 1973—Mrs. MacInnis:

That the First Report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, presented to the House on April 2, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order with respect to the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices. My purpose in raising this point of order is not to seek to have the motion ruled out or that the subject matter of it not be dealt with; rather, I want to enter a reservation with respect to the form of recommendation No. 6 of that report which reads:

That the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make specific monies available to consumers groups to present briefs to various governmental boards where appropriate.

[Mr. Cafik.]

I make no comment on the substance of the recommendation. It seems to me that it touches upon the whole question of the financial initiative of the executive and it would be unfortunate if, in allowing this kind of language, an important principle of government were overlooked. If the recommendation could be put in the form that has been used in the two preceding recommendations, namely, that the government consider or give consideration to the advisability, etc., it would be better. If the final recommendation could be put in that form, instead of in the form in which it now is, there would be no objection whatsoever to allowing the motion to be dealt with.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how serious the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is in raising this point of order, nor do I know how serious Your Honour was when you raised the same question a few days ago. In case there is any doubt about the right of the House to proceed with the motion to concur in the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, I should like to say a few words.

First, I suggest that the rules against the making of motions involving an expenditure of money all say quite clearly that there must be no direct instruction to the government to spend any public money. I point out that the report before us now, which was tabled on Monday, April 2, as set out in Votes and Proceedings for that day, ends with a section entitled, "Recommendations", and then these words appear: "The Committee recommends." After that introduction there follow six different paragraphs, and I suggest that each of those paragraphs is governed by that introductory phrase, "The Committee recommends." Therefore, one should read paragraph 6 not by itself, but with the introductory words, so that what is before us in paragraph 6 is the proposal that the Committee recommends "That the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make specific monies available to the consumer groups to present briefs to various governmental boards, where appropriate."

Just as the passing of this report by the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices did not put that expenditure into effect, so I submit that if the motion to concur in this report today were carried, it would not be an instruction that money be spent. Rather, it would be a recommendation to the government to consider that proposal.

However, Sir, it is usually regarded as desirable when matters like this arise to ascertain whether there are any precedents. Although I have not spent all my time since Your Honour raised this question looking for precedents, this morning I managed to look at a few that came readily to mind because they related to the reports of a committee of which I have the honour to be a member. For example, on Friday, February 23, 1973 as noted on Votes and Proceedings for that date at page 141, there is this entry:

Mr. Dupras, from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented the First Report of the said Committee, which is as follows:

Pursuant to its Order of Reference of February 15, 1973, your Committee has considered the Report of the Joint Study group on Basic Rate of Pensions, and has agreed to report it with the Committee's endorsation.

I have, Sir, in my hand a copy of the report of the Joint Study group referred to in that motion. It is a document of some 25 or 30 pages and clearly contains the recommendation that there be a substantial increase in the basic rate of war disability pension, plus a recommendation that there be an escalation of that pension year by year, plus the recommendation that war disability pensions continue to be income tax free. I happen to be a member of that committee and am one of those who joined in the unanimous endorsation of that report. The point is that such a report was laid on the table of this House and that no one objected to its being tabled, even though it recommended expenditures. Your Honour may say that no motion was moved to concur in that report. That is true, but it so happens that the report is now in the hands of the government, which is considering it.

However, let me go back to two previous reports of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. First, I refer Your Honour to Hansard of Friday July 7, 1972. At page 3860 it is recorded that, on the motion of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) the third report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on Monday, June 26, 1972, was concurred in.

The third report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs is to be found in the Journals for Monday, June 26, 1972, between pages 426 and 428. It is a rather lengthy report and contains a number of recommendations having to do with prisoners of war generally. One of the recommendations says that age requirements for former prisoners of war who were incarcerated for one year or more be removed from the War Veterans Allowance Act. Then follows this sentence:

> The effect of this recommendation would be to provide War Veterans Allowance benefits to former prisoners of war, regardless of age or the theatre of war in which they served, who find that because of deprivation and hardships suffered, they are unable to secure or hold continuous employment.

Sir, that was a committee recommendation which clearly involved the expenditure of money. The traditional words that "consideration be given thereto" do not appear in the report. There is the simple language saying that the committee recommends that this be done. As I say, on the motion of the hon. member for Algoma, who was then chairman of that committee, that report was concurred in. No questions were raised because the committee had recommended something that involved the expenditure of money. Again, the passing of that report did not directly require that the money be paid. Actually, the recommendations contained in that report have not yet been brought before us in the form of a bill.

Let me go back to one more precedent. In this case, I go back to Hansard of Tuesday, June 23, 1970, at page 8495 where I find this entry. Mr. Lloyd Francis, of respected memory, the former member for Ottawa West moved:

> —that the second report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on June 22, 1970, be concurred in.

Again, may I emphasize that this was a motion for concurrence in a report that had been tabled on Monday, June 22, 1970. That report can be found in Journals of Monday, June 22, 1970, from pages 1049 to 1082. It was a very lengthy report. It had to do with the recommendations arising out of the Woods report. There are scores of recommendations. I did not take time to go through and find out how many involved the expenditure of money, but there are literally scores of recommendations in that report which, if they were implemented, would involve the expenditure of money. A bill was later brought in and almost all of those recommendations were put into effect.

In that report which is found in Journals of Monday, June 22, 1970, there does not appear the traditional phrase that consideration be given to such and such. The main body of recommendations begins at page 1054 of Journals for June 22, 1970. The initial paragraph reads:

> Your Committee, therefore, recommends that the following Woods Committee recommendations as modified in some cases by the White Paper and in other cases by the proposals made by the National Veterans Organizations of Canada be implemented.

I think we dealt with 146 or 148 of those recommendations. Some we approved, some we did not. However, the number of recommendations that were made and concurred in that involved the expenditure of money was, as I say, voluminous. Again, the passing of that motion in the name of the former member for Ottawa West did not bring these money payments into effect. It simply became the registered opinion of this House that this ought to be done.

I submit, therefore, that because there are so many of these instances, we are quite in order today in considering a report which merely recommends that certain things be done, among them being the recommendation that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make certain monies available.

I would certainly have no objection if the House could somehow agree that the words suggested by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) be considered as there, but I would hope that no one would seriously suggest that because of the absence of those words, this report should be sent back to the committee simply for the purpose of putting in those words. My contention is that even without them, there are plenty of precedents to suggest it is appropriate for a committee to make a report recommending things that may involve the expenditure of money so long as it does not try in its report to word its proposal in such a way that it becomes a direct order.

I submit that since the recommendation in paragraph 6 is preceded by the words "we recommend", it is not a direct order and, therefore, the report should be considered as properly before us. If that is the case, I contend that the House should proceed with the motion to concur in the report that is now before us.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I gather from what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) said that he was, in effect, filing a very strong caveat and a caution and that he was reserving the right on future occasions to raise this point. If we do proceed, I do not expect that this will be considered a precedent. I will not argue that at any length.

While I am not necessarily in accord with the terms of the report we are considering, I fully agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said. I would probably add two or three sentences to show that there are other precedents as well. Your Honour will remember the occasion when, for the first time in this House, a member of the committee other than the chairman moved concurrence in a report dealing with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It was the Interdepartmental Oil Pollution Disaster Committee. This report was presented by the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development on December 16, 1969. That report included certain recommendations which could be construed as recommending or suggesting certain actions be taken by the government which would involve the expenditure of money. I quote from that report:

> The Committee recommends that appropriate agencies of the Government move immediately to conduct research in the Arctic to gather information on the following:

There are several recommendations. One reads:

> Your Committee also recommends continued research by the Department of Fisheries and Forestry to establish the extent of the fisheries potential of Arctic waters.

There may be a case to be made that these recommendations are not in the same category as those we are considering today. I will not argue that. However, a point of order was argued in this House as to the right of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) to move concurrence in that report. Your Honour considered that, ultimately made a very intelligent decision and the hon. member was permitted to move the motion. It was a very good decision, Mr. Speaker. I wish to point out that there was not one single suggestion that the terms of the report, the language in which it was couched and the fact that it recommended certain things be done by the government, which inferentially involved the expenditure of money, could in any way be a bar to the consideration of the report.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said there are a number of precedents. I argued before Your Honour on a number of occasions that all of this jurisprudence stems from Section 54 of the British North America Act and Standing Order 62. The operative word in those two provisions is "appropriation". I do not know how in the name of heaven this House ever allowed inhibiting jurisprudence which attempts to bar this House from the opportunity of debating simple recommendations which cannot, in any sense of the word, be construed as binding upon the government to spend one red cent of money. If the government allowed the motion to come to a vote, and if the House in its wisdom saw fit to approve the motion to concur, not one red cent of money need be spent.

A number of reports have been filed which include the words "we recommend" and involve the expenditure of money. In the limited time available, I was not able to ascertain whether they were reports in respect of which a motion to concur was made. In August, 1956, a report of the joint committee on the Federal District Commission was presented. It contained the following recommendation:

> In view of the magnitude of the plan for the National Capital, and the amount of money involved in developing it, we recommend that the Chairman of the Commission be employed full time at a salary and with a status commensurate with those of a Deputy Minister.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

That is one of many recommendations. It may be that these were never the subject of a motion to concur. I never examined them to that extent. The Journals are filled with illustrations where committees have made reports containing that recommendation. A recommendation is not defined as being an order. It is not defined as being an order in any of the dictionaries I have been able to consult this morning. I would quote, for example, from Webster's Dictionary, 7th Edition: "Worthy of acceptance or trial; urge the acceptance of". How in the name of Heaven that could be considered as constituting an order to the government to spend money, I cannot understand. I, therefore, urge the Chair and the government House leader not to try to inhibit debate, not to try to further restrict the already limited role we can play as we seek to have this matter examined in free discussion. If this report had been couched in terms which constituted a direct order to the government I would wholeheartedly agree with the President of the Privy Council. But the terms of the report being as they are, I, for one, if the report is debated, will discuss it as if it did not contain the restricting words which the minister has suggested it contains.

Finally, to cut short what could be a lengthy argument, I would refer Your Honour to May, on the British practice, as outlined on page 640 of the 18th edition:

> Select committees may consider and report to the House resolutions recommending an outlay of public money for the purposes therein specified without the previous signification of the Royal Recommendation because such a resolution is regarded as analogous to those abstract resolutions by the House in favour of public expenditure which are in the nature of suggestions and are not in themselves binding upon the action of the House.

One day Your Honour might see fit to state a case in this context. It is a matter for the Committee on Procedure to consider, it is true, but it might be months before the committee has a chance to consider the question and report to the House, especially in the light of the situation with which we are faced at present and the problems with which many committees are confronted. I have it in mind that Your Honour might like to consider all the facts and state a case to the House at a suitable opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for the advice and guidance they have extended for the benefit of the Chair. What the President of the Privy Council had in mind, I gather, was to register a caveat so that we might bear in mind the very interesting point of order which he raised and to which I alluded when the notice was filed and received at the table.

I must say I cannot agree with the point of view advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and, quite understandably, concurred in by the hon. member for Peace River. At the same time, I say right now that I will do nothing to prevent the consideration of this report at this time. I said, when the matter came before the House, that we were dealing actually with one of the many recommendations made by this committee. I am convinced that hon. members are anxious that we forget about the procedural aspect of this matter and proceed with our debate on the recommendations contained in the report.

Hon. members cannot convince me, however, that the Chair should disregard a practice which has existed over many years, probably for more than a hundred years. Hon. members may say that to recommend a course of action to the House is only a recommendation and that the government is not bound by it. My recollection is that just a few years ago, when the House adopted a report which recommended a certain course of action and when the government, in its wisdom, or lack of wisdom, depending on which side of the House hon. members sit, did not take action as recommended—and I insist on that word—by the committee, there were suggestions that the government was in contempt of the House and that the word "recommend" could not be used in the sense given to it by the hon. member for Peace River, but that the course of action in question had become an order of the House to which the government was required to adhere. That is, I suggest, the difficulty when we come to the expenditure of money.

It is fundamental to the parliamentary system that financial initiative belongs to the Crown and I think it is going around this well-established practice to suggest that after a committee has recommended an expenditure of money the House can approve a report from the committee and then consider that an order has been made, which the government must obey, that certain sums of money in respect of which there has been no recommendation, should be expended. That is the problem. It is as simple as that.

Hon. members have referred to precedents. I have looked at precedents also, with the assistance of the Clerk at the table, and there are very few real precedents which would support the position adopted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Peace River. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to a very recent precedent, a precedent involving a recommendation for the expenditure of money which was included in a report of the Committee on Veterans Affairs as reported in the Journals of the House for June 22 and June 23, 1970. It should be noted that what we were considering then was a report which was dealt with by unanimous consent. The motion read:

That the notice standing in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West with respect to concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs be considered and that the question be put on the same without debate.

That, I think, indicates why there was no occasion to raise the point of order. I do not intend to go into the matter further, but I still suggest to hon. members that there is virtue in respecting long-established precedents. It is a long-established practice of this House that recommendations coming from a committee and requiring expenditure of money include the traditional words that the government give consideration to the advisability of spending moneys, and hon. members should give serious thought to having these magic words included in their committee reports when such recommendations are made.

This having been said, we are dealing with only one aspect of this report, as I mentioned the other day, and I would think there is anxiety, a determination on the part of all members, to proceed immediately to the consideration of this very important report, and if hon. members are satisfied, or half satisfied, with the comments I have made, I will now put the motion which stands in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moves:

That the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, presented to the House on April 2, 1973, be concurred in.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every member of the Committee on Trends in Food Prices has been wishing that while we were drafting the precise terms of our report we had been able to benefit from your wisdom, because it might have saved us from straying into danger along the way. I do not think we ever forget to be grateful to you, Mr. Speaker, for the impartial and fearless way in which you uphold the traditions and liberties of this House.

It gives me satisfaction to be able to move this motion to concur in the interim report of the Committee on Trends in Food Prices for a number of reasons. We have put in a great deal of hard work during the two months we have been working on the preparation of this report. But the thing that gives me satisfaction is that at long last we have raised the question of food prices and the whole system by which food is brought to the people in a manner worthy of the attention and consideration of this House. In my opinion it is not a moment too soon. All across the country people are desperately concerned with what is happening to food prices, and they have been told by authorities of all kinds that no end to the process is in sight. I am glad that we are able to discuss this report here, since people expect that we as a parliament are able to do something to prevent the everlasting escalation of the price of those things people must have to survive.

The members of this party are not displaying a sudden interest in this matter. Last June when food prices were rising twice as fast as the general cost of living, the New Democratic Party tried to get parliament to set up a special committee to investigate food prices. On behalf of this party, on June 1 last year I moved such a motion. The motion was debated for one day and then roundly defeated in a recorded vote. But by the late fall the picture had changed somewhat. Prices were still escalating, but a minority government had been elected and there was a much greater disposition on the part of that government to consider certain matters that it had not considered necessary to deal with before.

The position of the New Democratic Party was firm and solid. We had prepared a shopping list of those items that we considered vital to the Canadian people and on which we felt action must be taken by this administration if we were to be able to support it for the duration of the time the action was forthcoming. Very high on this shopping list of ours were some steps to stop the rising cost of living, particularly the price of food. At that time we specifically recommended that there be a prices review board. Again, this was nothing new for us; that had been a cornerstone of our policy on food prices for at least five years. When parliament met on January 4 of this year we were very glad to see included in the Speech from the Throne the definite promise of a committee to make a special study of trends in food prices. That committee was set up, with an interim report called for within 60 days.

I am not going at this time into the various channels we went through and the various motions and amendments made to get the committee set up. Nor am I going into the problems which we encountered in the committee. At first there was a very great disposition on the part of a number of members of the committee to think it was nothing but a farce, a circus or a witch hunt; I believe those terms are accurately reported. But as time went on all members of the food prices committee began to feel that public and media alike were concerned and interested, not only in what was going on, but that there be a worth-while report recommending some type of definite action at the end of the interim period of 60 days.

From the outset the NDP members on that committee—my colleagues from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier), and at times Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman)—stated that we felt two particular recommendations should be included in the report. One was for a prices review board; the other was for immediate measures to put proper food on the tables of people on low incomes, people who cannot wait for endless studies or determinations of trends before action is taken to prevent deteriorating quality of nutrition for their families.

The result of our investigations in the food prices committee was to put both of those recommendations in our report, and I shall be dealing with them both. But first, I want to make the point that this is a majority report. Most of the members on the food prices committee are going along with the report. Apparently the Progressive Conservative members did not go along with it, although today no one knows, least of all themselves, exactly where they stand on the matter. Certainly, I am hoping that this day's debate will bring about some enlightenment in that regard.

Apparently the Progressive Conservatives were going to give us that enlightenment when the report was tabled, but the press conference that they scheduled was cancelled, presumably because they just had not been able to make up their minds what they wanted to say or had failed to restrict themselves to at least two or three points of view. They then issued three press statements—not one, not two, but three. Their first press statement was to the effect that they disagreed with the main report. They wanted a 90-day freeze all the way across the board, with no ifs, ands, buts or exceptions. Their second press report was to the effect they had suddenly discovered that it was not fair to leave farmers in their 90-day freeze, so they said everyone but the farmers ought to be subject to a 90 day freeze on prices. Their second press statement made it abundantly clear that their across the board freeze would leave out the farmers.

Mr. Atkey: We did not say that.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Well, I can see there will be lots of scope for elucidation and clarification in this debate, something I very much hope to hear as we go along.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Their third press statement was a little more—the word that comes to my mind is "wonky". They did not oppose the first report in total because they agreed that it offered protection to the farmers and they believed that the farmers should be protected. I am hoping that this debate will show where they really stand on this matter, if indeed they do stand at all. Sometimes I think there are about as many varieties of Tories as there are varieties in the famous 67 brands of Heinz.

Mr. Danforth: You are wrong there too; it is 57.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I come now to the major cornerstone recommendation of our report, which is the recommendation that we set up a prices review board. I am going to read the recommendation that we made in our interim report:

The Committee recommends:

1. That the government give consideration to the advisability of introducing the necessary legislation to establish an independent Food Prices Review Board equipped with such powers as are necessary to review prices, and that it report to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In its reports to the minister, the board could make recommendations concerning appropriate action to be taken.

In addition, periodic reports to the Food Prices Review Board may be referred to a standing committee of the House. The board shall have the authority to incorporate in its periodic reports, a request to appear before the said standing committee.

After a report is referred, the committee would have authority to call the board before it.

The point that I want to make is that, as far as we in this corner are concerned, everything depends not on the government merely accepting this recommendation, not on the government merely concurring with the fact that it is a good thing, but on the willingness of the government to introduce concrete legislation now to spell out the intent of the recommendation. I am going to indicate what kind of flesh we believe should be put on the skeleton of this recommendation.

I realize there are members of the committee who believe, investigation, publicity and moral suasion are enough in such legislation if it should be introduced, but we in our party have no confidence whatsoever in legislation of that type to deal with this particular situation. We have been through that exercise before. We remember the saga of the late unlamented Prices and Incomes Commission, a saga that can be told in precious few words: Three years, $3 million, an undetermined amount of paper and whitewash with prices and incomes going up at the end of the whole process. So we have no desire whatsoever to go through the exercise again of setting up a board which would merely depend on investigation, volumes of paper, whitewash and publicity, with the feeling that moral suasion would protect the consumer from elements of the food chain.

I want to say now that we are not going along with or giving sanction to that kind of legislation because it will not be worth the paper it is printed on. The people of this country do not deserve to be led down the garden path a second time, having been led down that path for awhile in the belief that the Prices and Incomes Commission was going to do something. We have no intention in this party of accepting any such toothless wonder. We want legislation with teeth in it and we are satisfied that the consumers want such legislation.

My correspondence continues to emphasize the fact that people are expecting parliament to do something to halt this everlasting increase in food prices, and they know that more and more hands are coming in between the farmer and them to take handfuls of their consumer dollars. They want something done to stop this continual inflationary spiralling of the prices of those elements of food they must have in order to survive, and I give this warning to the government.

What do we want in this legislation? Let me name the points. We do not want a departmental committee or something under a departmental wing. We want an independent board reporting to parliament through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Again, I wish we could chop off the consumer affairs part and make it different from the corporate affairs part. The further apart consumers and corporations are, the better I would like it, and I have always felt that way. We want an independent board reporting to parliament through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and in the initial instance it would be a food prices review board. Later on perhaps, we might add other items of necessity to the consumer.

Second, we want the board to have the power to investigate. We do not want all this clamping down across the board with controls on everything in the field. We want a selective approach to those items of food which together make up a balanced and nutritious diet for people. Those are the items to which attention should be given. There should be searching and swift examination in specific areas of the food industry where quick action can and must fairly be taken. We do not want another of those great, top-heavy bureaucracies loaded with armies of civil servants.

Third, we want the board to have the power to take action directly or the power to recommend appropriate action to the minister. The committee has opted for the second course, that is, the board having the power to recommend appropriate action to the minister. Henceforth, in this speech, I accept the committee's option of a board with the power to recommend appropriate action.

Let me now spell out what we consider to be appropriate action. Appropriate action in the view of the NDP should include: (a) steps to ensure that prices be not increased; (b) rollback where necessary for the public welfare and, (c) support prices and subsidies to the farmers where these are necessary to protect farm income. One of the things we were seized of all through this inquiry was the fact that there is a great spread between what the farmer gets at the farm gate and what the consumer has to pay at the supermarket checkout. The farmer now is just beginning to recoup a little of the loss he has sustained for many years.

We on the food prices committee, and particularly the members of our party, are anxious that in the powers of the board there should be the power to recommend to the minister action in respect of subsidies and support prices where necessary to protect the farmer.

Fourth, we believe the board should have the power necessary for effective analysis of the factors involved in food prices. This means that the board must be able to summon witnesses and require the production of papers, books, records, financial statements, agreements, contracts, leases and all other necessary documents and information.

Mr. Atkey: And union contracts.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, and union contracts; the whole works.

Fifth, the minister should be required to announce within 15 days of receiving the board's recommendations what specific measures he plans to take. There should be no secrecy about the reports and there should be no delay in respect of them. There should be this statutory requirement.

Finally, these hearings must be public and reports and recommendations must be made public without delay. The board should also have the power to publicize information which may benefit the consumer.

I have not time to go into the detail these recommendations merit. What I want to do today is outline those recommendations which would constitute the appropriate action to be recommended to the minister. Anything less than those, in our mind, would not be useful and we will not support such legislation. We believe that these in essence are the basic legislative requirements that cannot be dodged. Food prices are still spiralling, and the government will pigeonhole and water down these recommendations at its peril.

It may be said that these things I have mentioned are not in the recommendations for a food prices review board. That is true, but I suggested that these recommendations represented only a skeleton. The teeth were not spelled out, but we recommended an independent board with the power to recommend appropriate action to the minister. I have detailed what we regard as appropriate action, and I have spelled out the teeth which should be put into the legislation. We believe that the function of the legislation is precisely to spell out the appropriate action the board must be able to take, and also spell out the powers with which the board must be clothed if it is to do the job of protecting the consumer in the matter of food prices.

I am not denying that this whole problem in respect of food prices is exceedingly difficult and complicated. Anyone who has been on the food prices committee does not have to be told that. The whole thing is a smooth, interacting chain from the farmer through to the supermarket checkout. This involves the whole food industry. Some of us are not looking for villains half as much as we are looking for those elements in the whole food chain that make this process of getting the food from the farmer to the consumer inefficient, wasteful and unnecessarily expensive.

We know from the people who came before us as witnesses that each sector believed that its operations were carried on efficiently, well and in a profitable manner, everything being equal, and that they were doing their full share in the whole food chain. They feel that, and we know it; but while it may have added up to efficiency, efficacy and value to each particular sector and those people backing it, it has also added up to high prices for the consumer, unnecessarily high prices, and in some cases prices a way beyond the reach of a quarter of the Canadian people. These people simply cannot afford the kind of diet they should be having with the kind of prices they are having to pay now. We know that.

We know also that, although it is very difficult, new patterns must be set. We know that a start must be made on this, and we know that Canada is not the first country to try to make this start. I do not think there is any sense at all in taking refuge in the constitutional attitude and saying: we would like to do this, but of course the federal government does not have the power to do it. If you look back in history, not very far back either, you will find that there was a host of subjects on which the federal government had divided jurisdiction with the provinces. I could mention highways, medicare, housing, and many more. I know that, at the beginning, the same old arguments prevailed. They said: we would like to do this but of course it would be unconstitutional; we cannot touch it because the authority is mainly local, the initiative is local or provincial.

Yet, today we find that Trans-Canada and other major highways, medicare and housing, are being recognized increasingly as responsibilities which must be met on a three-way basis with the three levels of government participating. This has been achieved through negotiation, through devolvement of powers from one government level to another and, above all, through the will to do it. I suggest that if this government has the will to bring in legislation that will really deal with food prices, it can find ways and means of doing so constitutionally. To say that they cannot do so is no argument, and it will melt before any of the precedents that we care to examine.

If you look at the alternatives, the one that we are proposing is the only possible and workable one which offers any chance of action at this stage. The other alternatives are these: first, let nature take its course. No one, with the possible exception of one or two of the Cabinet Ministers, would care to defend such a course because we have seen that when nature has been allowed to take its course, that course is an increase in food prices over a long period of time. Second, there is the 90 day freeze. We have yet to hear from our friends to the right. Perhaps they will let us know today what they would do once the 90 day freeze was on, what they would do at the end of it, and what it would do. Surely, they have heard about Mr. Nixon's experience with the 90 day freeze, and surely they know that in the United States food prices are continuing to spiral. Surely, they are not anxious to put the Canadian people through another exercise in futility when we have had the experiment of our neighbours to the south clearly and plainly before our eyes.

Mr. Danforth: Has the hon. member seen the report from the south and the price index there?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, I have, Mr. Speaker and I do not think they give us any confidence in the approach of freezing inequities for 90 days, freezing high prices, and then going back to where we were before.

Mr. Baker: You have not read the report.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): We are not in favour of the third alternative, moral suasion, either. I have already referred to the disastrous experience of the Prices and Incomes Commission, which really boiled down to moral suasion for the powerful and legal compulsion for the scapegoats, namely, people with low incomes in this case. If members on both sides of the House will think about it they will realize that the establishment of a prices review board which we propose is the only viable way to start. When we have done this and given it a good try, if we should find that measures involving income control were necessary, then O.K., there are other steps that can be taken. But please note that we shall continue to say what we have said from the start, that we are not going to allow any group of workers to be picked out, pilloried and victimized by having their incomes frozen. If incomes are to be frozen at all, then all forms of income should be put into the pot, namely, wages, salaries, rents, interest, and profits, the whole bit.

Mr. Baker: We agree.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): You agree, but Mr. Nixon did not. He confined himself to wages, and that did not work very well.

An hon. Member: Don't believe them, either.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I do not and I do not think we are going to hear very much later on, but I hope we shall.

I think that speed is of the essence in this matter because the low income people simply cannot wait. This is why I want to refer very briefly to recommendation No. 5 of the Food Prices Committee which we certainly consider to be a very important one. It reads:

> That the federal government, in co-operation with the various provincial governments, consider the feasibility of co-sponsored programs to get proper food on the tables of people with low income.
> The committee feels that programs must be devised to enable food to be made available directly to particular groups, primarily children, senior citizens, shut-ins, and the destitute.

This is an exceedingly important recommendation. I believe this opinion is shared by all members of the Food Prices Committee.

May I say what we in this party believe that this recommendation entails? We believe that it entails the encouragement of provinces and municipalities to increase welfare payments by an amount necessary to augment food allowances to provide welfare recipients with an adequate diet and that notwithstanding the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government would undertake to pay 100 per cent of the increase for this purpose. This is a subsidy to the low income consumer in particular which would match the subsidies which we have already outlined for the producers.

Second, this recommendation would aid volunteer organizations, such as missions, meals on wheels, senior citizens associations, and the like.

Third, it would provide funds to school boards, at their request and with the agreement of the provinces, for hot breakfasts or lunches.

I see that I have only a couple of minutes left and I have only been able to outline in the barest possible way the points which we believe are essential in legislation to deal with this problem and which we hope the government will be considering. I want to warn again that this is not a problem which affects only the low income groups. They need this special treatment to help them to survive in the interim because in the interim their children are growing and children who are undernourished in their early years, can never catch up either mentally or physically. These are things which should be attended to at once. But we are confident that a prices review board is the first step to sanity in providing consumers in general with the food they must have to live at a price which is consonant with its real value.

This report must not be pigeonholed. People across the country are waiting and looking for action now. They are waiting for legislation to deal with the matter now. If we could establish this board and start it functioning, the Food Prices Committee would have a life of much shorter duration because this board could do a much better, more effective and thorough job of investigating the food industry than we are able to do, however hard we may try.

I want to conclude with both a warning and an appeal to the government that the time for action is now. The consumers of this country are not going to be content with boycotts. They want action in an orderly fashion, and if they do not get it from this government they will try something else that is better, fairer and faster.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), who moved this motion, ended her speech with a call for action. She suggested that the consumers of this country were impatient and were demanding action. Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the hon. member, who was an active participant in the committee and whose contribution is always welcomed, that she will not get that action out of this report.

The report which is now before this House completely negates the order of reference of this House. That order called upon the committee to report action in two months. There is nothing in this report that would implement such action. Indeed the only major recommendation of the report, that dealing with the prices review board, would be about as powerless and ineffective as the late, unlamented Prices and Incomes Commission.

I had difficulty following the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway because there were times when she seemed to be coming down on both sides of the argument. I can certainly understand the conundrum she is in, because obviously she is compromised in a very difficult situation. Deep in her heart she knows that in order to approach the whole problem of spiralling prices you cannot isolate food prices. It must be approached in an over-all context, and that has to include the whole spectrum of prices, incomes, salaries and wages. Wages and income are a major component of the spiralling cost of food, and so I can understand her difficulty.

This committee, which had been meeting for the past two months, was a good committee. It worked hard. It met on an average of twice a week, sometimes three times a week, from 9.30 in the morning until 12.30. It achieved something which is rather rare these days under the new rules. It achieved a degree of collegiality. Indeed, it can be said that a consensus was developing in the committee. That consensus was developing from a sense of complete and utter frustration, born of the inability to find answers to the questions we were directing to the parade of witnesses who came before us. Our complete and total inability to cut through the "PR" jargon of all the briefs was really the thing that united the committee more than anything else. But, Sir, I do not believe there was any consensus among the members of the committee with regard to this report.

This report represents only the views of the party to my left, the NDP, and their partners in coalition, the Liberals. It in no way reflects the views of the ten PC members of the committee who approached the matter from the point of view that in order to cope with the very serious problem of rising food prices it must be approached from the over-all picture. In order to come up with a mechanism, with a device that would be effective in keeping prices within acceptable levels, there should be an across the board freeze on prices and incomes. I say this because ever since the committee was first referred to in the Speech from the Throne, and ever since its establishment, the committee itself has had the effect of building up anticipation in the minds of the people engaged in the food industry in Canada that there would be government controls, or a freeze. That anticipation has been a major factor in the spiralling costs of food. Indeed, the price of food will continue to increase because that expectation will continue to exist until the government shows courage enough to take the necessary action.

Let us take a look at the consumer price index. The over-all index for November showed 5.1 per cent. For December it was still 5.1 per cent. In January it was up to 5.7 per cent; in February up to 5.8 per cent, and in March up to 6 per cent. For food for the same months, in November it was 9.1 per cent, December 8.6 per cent, January up to 10 per cent, February up to 10.2 per cent and March up to 11 per cent. If there was one common thread running through all the evidence heard by the committee it was that prices will continue to rise.

We heard evidence from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) which was contradictory to the evidence from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). The first minister could not account for the substantial increases in the price of food for the month of December, January and February, because he admitted that the harvest factor, which had an effect on the price of food last year, was simply not a factor this year. But the Minister of Agriculture came before the committee and told us, "You have never had it so good. Food is still the best buy." The Minister of Agriculture went on to talk at great length about this. Then, he showed a certain contempt for the committee by not appearing on the next scheduled day when he was supposed to appear to conclude his evidence. Instead, he sent his deputy minister with a press release which tried to substantiate his contention that food is a best buy.

The Minister of Agriculture showed us three diets compiled on costs in the city of Ottawa on February 15; one a moderate diet, the second an intermediate diet, and the third a generous diet. I will deal with the moderate diet because this concerns the main point of the minister's argument. This moderate diet, which runs all the way from stewed chicken for dinner on Monday to meat balls for dinner on Sunday, cost an average family of four $28.50 a week in the city of Ottawa. I sent copies of this diet to a number of consumers in my own province, and they all came back with the same finding. After having taken this list to their supermarkets, they found that the cost for the same diet in the province of Newfoundland was exactly a third more. So, the minister's contention that food is the best buy is probably a good argument if you are lucky enough to live in southern Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, but if you happen to live on the peripheries of the country, in slow growth areas, where unemployment is the highest, where costs are the highest and incomes are the lowest, then you can only conclude that the minister was speaking for a very small constituency when he made that statement.

Poverty is a factor in Canada. I am only sorry the committee did not have time to hear sufficient evidence on this. The Economic Council of Canada, in its fifth annual report, states that 1.5 million families, or 22 per cent of all family units in Canada, are below the poverty line. It sets out its guidelines as follows: a one person family unit will have the poverty line set at $2,013, a two person family unit at $3,355, and all the way through to a five person family unit where the level would be $5,368. The Senate Committee on Poverty also had a lot to say about this, and I would recommend its report to members of the special committee. The Senate Committee on Poverty found that the over-all poverty rate in Canada is approximately 25 per cent; this is virtually the same as the finding of the Economic Council of Canada.

We talk about food being the best buy. That is all very well if you happen to be in or above the middle income bracket, but if you happen to be in that unfortunate 25 per cent or to live in a slow growth, high unemployment region of this country, the proportion of your dollar that is spent on food is increasing. Steak has only gone up by 1 per cent, hamburger has gone up by 18 per cent, pork shoulder by 28 per cent and roast beef by 5 per cent. Eggs are a very important item in a stable, nutritious diet and in the past year the price of eggs has risen by almost 47 per cent. The menu proposed by the Minister of Agriculture is totally unrealistic and unacceptable, even to those who can afford it. If you want to have the ultimate in a nutritional diet for the least possible price, I suggest that you buy dog food which is the cheapest and possibly the most nutritious food on the market today. But who wants to eat dog food? I suggest to the minister also, who wants to eat meat balls and gravy?

The committee's major recommendation deals with a Prices Review Board. We believe that this should be the kind of action to flow from a freeze that would have to be placed on all prices in Canada as a very first step. We believe this is necessary because all of the evidence indicates that prices will continue to increase.

The other recommendations of the committee are worth-while and we want to make it very clear that we support them. In order to present our own report however, we have to abide by this device of not concurring in the majority of recommendations because we did not support the principal recommendation which calls for what would amount to an ineffective Prices Review Board. In our opinion, this would be just as ineffective as the recent Prices and Incomes Commission.

The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) will have more to say about the second recommendation of the committee because this is basically the recommendation for which he argued. It calls for changing the Competition Act so that those areas of the act dealing with misleading advertising be put under the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and become a separate act.

We agree with the third recommendation of the report which reads:

> That the government give consideration to the advisability of introducing legislation governing the nutrient content of foods sold to the consumer and requiring nutritional labelling because it is imperative that nutrition information be brought home to the consumer.

Everybody knows this is a fact. In this country nourishment is a problem of major proportions. There is evidence to indicate that there are children in this country today who are undernourished because of an inadequate diet; they are going to school on an inadequate breakfast. In the committee we heard a brief from the advertisers which supported the fact that advertising is not a major component in the high cost of food. The average percentage of advertising in the cost of food was between 1.5 per cent and 2 per cent, until we got to breakfast cereals where it rose to a whopping 11 per cent. The reason is product proliferation and the need for cereal manufacturers to sell this unnutritious junk food. Wheat germ has been removed from it and by the use of powerful and subtle advertising techniques children are induced to eat cereals which have no nutritional value whatsoever. There is no question in my mind of the need for the third recommendation of the committee.

The fourth recommendation deals with the media in consumer education. There is a definite need for that. The Croll-Basford Report resulted in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which has been about as effective as the Prices and Incomes Commission. The Prices Review Board proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway would be about equally effective.

There is a need in Canada today for a real consumers department and for a minister who is consumer oriented. The present incumbent seems to be oriented toward the corporate end of his portfolio. Perhaps a case can be made for a separation of the two levels of responsibility. Perhaps the corporate responsibilities of the minister should be returned to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) where they properly belong.

Mr. Baker: There is a conflict of interest.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, there is conflict of interest. Perhaps we would then have a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who represents the best interests of the consumers of this country.

The fifth recommendation reads:

That the federal government, in co-operation with the various provincial governments, consider the feasibility of co-sponsored programs to get proper food on the tables of people with low income.

Who would quarrel with that recommendation? Everybody supports it. Anyone who has read the nutritional report of the Department of National Health and Welfare, which I think was called Nutrition Canada, and the report of the Senate Committee on Poverty, would be struck by the serious nutritional problem in this country. In this land of affluence there are families that are undernourished because of improper diet—not underfed but undernourished. There is no doubt that in areas of the country there is a need for dietary supplements. It is not necessary to have federal-provincial agreement on this because the provinces would welcome the initiative of the federal government in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, the sixth recommendation is the subject of procedural argument today and I subscribe to that notwithstanding the fact that it may have procedural limitations. As the minister's office is now constituted it is totally ineffective; the minister does not have the power to act, does not seem to have the resources to act and does not seem to have the heart or willingness to act. Perhaps we need to reread the legislation setting up the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and governing the conduct of the minister. We subscribe to this recommendation and in committee played a major role in having it incorporated in the report. We do not subscribe to an ineffective Prices Review Board which would in no way solve the problem of the rising trends in food prices. If there is a trend it is the continuing increases in the cost of food.

What do we recommend, Mr. Speaker? As a first step, we recommend a 90-day across-the-board freeze. If anyone wants to argue about the effectiveness of a freeze, I would recommend that they study the effects of the freeze in the United Kingdom and in the United States and that they compare the increases in the cost of living in these countries to our own. They would come to the conclusion that a freeze is and can be effective. We believe that a freeze is necessary first of all in order to halt the spiralling increase in the cost of food which is a direct result of the anticipation of some kind of government action in one instance.

Another factor of course, is world market conditions. We believe that a freeze is necessary because the government would then be able to consult with the provinces who have tremendous jurisdiction in this area. For example, there could be consultation in the area of rents and other areas which are directly under provincial jurisdiction. There has to be federal-provincial co-operation. In consultation with the provinces, given the freeze and given the necessary power to work out the necessary mechanism, the government could devise a truly effective prices review board, one that would not recommend action through the minister but one that would have power to take effective action. That is where we quarrel with the major recommendation of this report. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway can argue all she wants. The fact is that the committee is recommending the establishment of an agency which would be no more effective, probably less effective, than the Prices and Incomes Commission.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. McGrath: Well, all you need to do is read the recommendation. It says that the government "give consideration to the advisability of introducing the necessary legislation to establish an independent Food Prices Review Board equipped with such powers as are necessary . . .". Necessary to do what? To review prices, I suggest. Ask any housewife in the country; she can review prices for you. She reviews them week after week as she goes to the supermarket and sees the weekly increase in the price of basic and staple food items. There you have the best review board in the country. I submit the consumers of this country are looking for action, and not for the sort of thing recommended here. They are looking for real action.

The boycotts in the long run will not be effective; they cannot be effective. The boycotts, nevertheless, are a manifestation of widespread consumer unrest in this country over the high cost of food and high cost of living. The government should pay heed to those boycotts and consider them for what they are, a manifestation of unrest.

What is this review board mentioned in the recommendations called upon to do? In addition to being given powers to review prices, it is to report to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Then, the first recommendation reads:

In its report to the Minister, the Board could make recommendations concerning appropriate action to be taken.

What kind of appropriate action would be recommended? The government would not have to take such action. Given our present parliamentary situation, if that review board recommended that there be a freeze on wages, salaries and incomes in the country, do you think that such a recommendation would be supported by the NDP? Of course not! Consequently, if this board is to be effective and placed outside the realm of partisan political influence, it should be given powers to act on its own. We maintain that such a board could conceivably result from a freeze but, first, there should be a freeze. Then, the mechanism could be devised. That mechanism could result in an effective instrument being created and not in the ineffective sort of recommendations of this report.

We also look at this matter in the broader context. We feel that there should be a reversal of present economic, monetary and fiscal policies of this government. The government should introduce a real expansionist program. It should cut back certain sales taxes, particularly the sales tax on food, which is especially hard on Canadians with lower incomes. There should be a general reduction in such taxes. A case could be made for a general reduction in unnecessary government expenditures. We believe, Mr.

Speaker, that this would provide the necessary thrust to lift the Canadian economy out of the unemployment slump in which it now is. That action would put cash into the hands of those who need it most.

Some of us may live in a cashless society, but you still have to lay down hard cash when you buy food in this country. That is where the poor and those on low and fixed incomes are disadvantaged. They do not have the necessary cash. Oh, sure, they buy their television sets on the never-never plan, and they buy their automobile on the never-never plan; but when they go to Dominion, or to Steinberg's, or Loblaws or any of the food chains of this country, they still have to pay cash, just like everybody else. Actually, they pay a disproportionate amount of their cash for food, because the kind of food they need for their diet has become more expensive. Cheap cuts of meat and hamburg have gone up by 18 per cent. They cannot afford steak. They do not eat it. They cannot afford roast beef; they eat the cheaper cuts of meat, and those cuts have gone up in price to the point where, in some cases, a meat boycott is mandatory because those people just cannot afford to eat meat.

We believe that a temporary 90-day freeze should be imposed on all incomes, that is, on all dividends, fees, wages, salaries, and on all costs and prices except those relating to food at the farm gate. We do not believe that you can impose these kinds of controls on the farmer because when the food leaves the farm and enters the hands of the processor, the inflationary process begins. That is where the inflationary factor begins to work, not at the farm itself.

We believe that during the period of the 90-day freeze the government could find the necessary time to come up with meaningful policies for fighting inflation in this country, inflation that has taken such a tremendously high toll of those on lower and fixed incomes. More important, we believe that if the subsequent hearings of the committee are to be meaningful, if that committee is to be effective, it can only do useful work within the framework of a freeze. That is why we do not support the recommendations, or the major recommendation, of the committee. That is why we, if this motion comes to a vote, will vote against it.

Mr. Gray: Shame.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the comments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) as well as to those of the member who just resumed his seat.

Mr. Speaker, since 1948, a few years after the Second World War, we have been hearing in this House complaints and laments from everyone about increases in food prices. We hear suggestions. For instance, two parties believe we should have a minister of consumers who have no money, as is the case now. Unemployed people get a mere pittance, people under social welfare get scraps and they think that the appointment of a minister of consumers would solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, the only way to solve the problem is to give consumers a way of choosing what they want. That would be the solution. The member for Vancouver-Kingsway suggests that we should set prices for certain products but not for others, that we should prepare diets to help the Canadian people eat better at lower cost. Mr. Speaker, is it up to a government or a political party to tell consumers what they should eat and should not eat. Should the government decide for the family? Is that what they should do? Should we not try to balance the consumers' purchasing power with industrial and commercial prices, with production prices. Not a word about that. The hon. member for St. John's East said a while ago there was an NDP—Liberal coalition to maintain the present system as it is.

On many occasions, we have submitted the Creditiste solution which is a compensated discount on retail prices following an agreement between the government and the retailers and this not by force but voluntarily. Under this agreement between the government and the retailers, they would grant a 20, 25 or 30 per cent discount on retail prices. Then the consumer would pay 30 per cent less and the retailer would not lose one cent since the discount would be refunded to him by the government.

This solution did not come to the mind of any other political party because we can see the liberal, progressive conservative and NDP coalition. Each time we introduce a motion aimed at improving the consumers' purchasing power, they close ranks against any solution proposed by Creditistes.

Yet they are more than willing to establish all kinds of new gimmicks with a bureaucracy worse than what we now have, to appoint a new minister of Consumers—as I said earlier—even though consumers have no money. Would this solve the problem? No!

Let us tamper with anything, let us attack business, the distributor, everybody but not the financial system which is sacred! Let us keep on imposing all kinds of taxes under the pretense of relieving the consumer. But exactly the opposite is happening.

Since 1948, prices have been increasing be it for food or anything else. Instead of subsidizing the consumer to buy products, we subsidize the producer to produce more to the point where we have an extraordinary volume of products of all kinds and consumers without purchasing power.

This is no solution, but what is suggested? Price controls. What would that do? Exactly what they did when we had controls. At that time, I was operating a small grocery and prices as well as on many of the products we were entitled to have. We were using ration coupons and we could not buy more than prescribed by these coupons and at controlled prices.

Mr. Speaker, there was also at that time the 2 cent discount on the quart of milk. But what did price controls give us? Black market. And this black market was not only practiced by big wicked financiers, big wicked producers or big wicked industries. Not at all. There was black market even within our cooperatives.

The New Democratic Party is aware of that. There are many co-operatives, in western Canada, and there was black market there just like everywhere else.

I recall that at that time I used to buy my butter in a co-operative of Nédelec, in Témiscamingue, in my riding, with ration coupons. I was entitled to one pound per coupon, which was the limit fixed by the government. The price was also fixed, but if I wanted more, I had to pay a little more, without coupon, and I bought as much butter as I wanted. It was a co-operative—not a Steinberg supermarket—that of Nédelec. The same thing happened everywhere else.

Some time later, I used to work in the automotive trade. Tires were controlled by the federal government, through the famous wartime Price and Trade Board. We could buy tires with rationing coupons at a price established by the government. Apart from that, we could get as many tires as we wanted on the black market, at $10 more per tire than the current price. And tires also used to be sold by co-operatives both in our region and in western Canada.

The price of cars was controlled by the government and established at $1,500. But if you went to a car dealer, you could get a car without coupon for $1,000 more than the current price. That is what the NDP would like to see. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway would like the government to control prices of certain products only. It would be so much easier to free all consumers from such a terrible bureaucracy. But no, we do not hear anything about the consumer. When we do, we hear: They are paying too much. It is obvious that they are paying too much. But their solution is fantastic. The paradox is the following: Let us control consumer retail prices so they will not go up any more and let us help the farmer and the primary producer to keep them from going bankrupt. They also say: Increase the minimum wage. Increase subsidies to farmers. Increase the aid to wheat growers. Increase old age security pensions, pensions for bureaucrats and other pensions. Increase all that. Have strikes on top of that and then try to control prices. I am telling you, that is a very intelligent solution. To solve what? Nothing.

Mr. Speaker, we regret price increases but we hear from all sides: Let us increase salaries and profits. They center on those who are going to make a profit of 4 or 5 per cent and they say: For those who are earning only 90 cents an hour, let us increase their minimum wage to $2. They do not say that that is directly included in prices. No, they are not honest enough to say so. We do say so, Mr. Speaker. An increase in minimum wage will not save the consumer and the worker, but rather the national dividend added to their present salary, a dividend which does not go into prices but which comes directly from the Bank of Canada, a financial institution owned by the people of Canada. That is the solution.

Salary increases go into prices and then people shout: Prices have gone up, it is obvious, they are crying for a price increase. When you cry to get it, well, you have to suffer through it. If they do not want to face a logical solution, let us continue to fiddle about as we are doing now.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new about the coalition of the old parties to tell people what they should or should not buy. This has been going on for years. It was done in wartime and it is still done now. This is why we of the Social Credit Party of Canada are saying: the compensated discount at retail level would definitely solve this problem.

For instance, price increases in the field of raw materials development, price increases for finished products, price increases in the distribution sector are fantastic. A can of tomatoes, corn, beans, salmon or sardines costs today twice as much to produce, thus rising its retail price.

Mr. Speaker, is there a private members' hour?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this is a convenient place for the hon. member to interrupt his speech or have his speech interrupted.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Finance—Meeting of federal and provincial Finance Ministers—Inquiry as to proposals respecting estate and capital gains taxes; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—Grain—Suggested increase in subsidized price of wheat for domestic consumption; the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta)—Grain—Wheat—Disparity between cost of hopper cars purchased by government and those bought by United States railway.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Your Honour was about to call private members hour, but I believe there have been some discussions as to the possibility of continuing with the debate we have been having this afternoon. May I put it this way. The arrangements today included considering the second reading of Bill C-21 in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan—The Islands (Mr. Douglas). If there could be an understanding that this bill would be called either Thursday or Friday, my friend would be willing not to proceed with it today so that we can carry on with the motion before the House.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I believe there would be agreement on this side of the House to that arrangement.

• (1700)

Mr. Bell: Yes, we agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I gather that there is agreement. The hon. member for Témiscamingue is recognized to continue his speech.

Food Prices

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member for Joliette agree?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The independent member does agree.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FOOD PRICES

The House resumes consideration of the motion of Mrs. MacInnis: That the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, presented to the House on April 2, 1973, be concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I resume the outline of the solution advocated by the Creditistes for some 30 or 35 years. When we suggest the setting up of a compensated discount on retail prices, after agreement between the central government and Canadian retailers of course, so that prices might remain what they are, we feel that the retailer should be free and not forced to adhere to the agreement. If he did, he would become entitled to the discount decreed by the government. A Minister of Consumer Affairs or Consumers should not be appointed in Canada. The Minister of Finance could be used and that would create far less embarrassment than the present situation. Let us take a typical example. At the present time, any . . . member or any other Canadian can buy for $1,000 of Canadian goods at current prices. If he does not have the money, he borrows from a finance company. In such cases, it will cost him $200 to finance his $1,000; meaning he will have to reimburse $1,200 for $1,000 worth of merchandise. If that same buyer has $1,000 to pay cash, he will be able, in most areas of economic activities, to obtain a 20 per cent discount. If he is granted a 20 per cent discount, this means it will cost him only $800 to obtain $1,000 worth of goods at current prices.

Mr. Speaker, this represents a difference of $400 on a $1,000 purchase. It is a matter of a 40 per cent saving, or $400 on $1,000. Mr. Speaker, this solution would help the consumer and would boost his purchasing power without price increases. It would be entirely different from what we hear the other political parties propose. It's easy to tell the government: You are wrong, your are wrong, you are wrong. There are two or three New Democratic governments in Canada. Let us go and see if prices are different in the New Democratic provinces. A can of tomatoes costs as much in Winnipeg as in Montréal. And yet a New Democratic government has been in office for three or four years.

When I hear the New Democrats talk like that in the House, I say to myself they are a bunch of practical jokers. They are people who state principles, but who are incapable of applying them. So they accuse Ottawa. In the province of Quebec, a department wants to help consumers, while at the same time another suggests a tax increase and a third thinks that the minimum salary must be increased and that the establishment of an annual guaranteed income must be pursued, but not get financing where it must come from. Oh no! They get it by levying taxes, from the taxpayers' pocket. That raises prices still further. Then there are reports from commissions. As though we did not have enough commissions! We have the Food Prices Commission, and the commission to help producers form associations to protect their prices. After that, it is suggested that we have a commission to control consumer prices. The consumer will be told, as I said at the beginning: Do not eat bananas, do not eat too many apples, get sardines instead, do not go here, do not go there. There are controls and commissions for all these things. We also have the prices commission, and another commission to check if the prices commission is taking sensible action, and a third one to check on the checkers. So we build a pyramid of bureaucrats. And who pays for all that? The consumer whom we are supposed to be trying to help. It is a pretty comic set-up. They called themselves a Liberal-Progressive-New Democratic coalition, but all three have the same solution, and none of them has the courage to attack the financial system that has caused the economic chaos which, in turn, mirrors the chaos of the whole society. We are witness to the discontent of all classes of society and the uprising of young people against those in power, against the authorities. Why all this? These are the consequences of a system that refuses to serve them.

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is a 20 or 30 per cent compensated retail discount, to be negotiated with the retailers. There were protests recently about the 4, 5 or 6 cents a quart rise in the price of milk. And people ask how we are going to feed children in poor families. With spruce or birch "juice"? It is not so bad in spring; there is always maple water, in the areas that produce it. But that does not solve the problem. Talking about milk, they say: The big dairies are the ones which are exploiting us; but they do not say that 25 years ago, you could buy a quart of milk for 12 cents. Oh no. Only them, a milkman would earn $35 a week. You could buy a milkman's truck for about $2,000; and gas for 22 cents a gallon; a tire cost $10. Today the milkman gets $125 or $150 a week. A truck which was sold about $2,000 now costs $5,000. All this affects milk prices to a certain extent.

The refrigerator trucks used for transporting milk were not very widespread 25 years ago. People drank fresh milk when it was not sour. They were sometimes forced to put in some gin. Mr. Speaker, things have changed since then. If we urged the New Democratic Party members to reduce the milkmen's wages and the price of trucks as well as the wages of people who work for Ford, General Motors, Chrysler Corporation or American Motors, they would cry shame. Nobody wants to admit that conditions have completely changed. I find we pay too much for milk but does the farmer get more? He gets more today than ten years ago when we were elected to this House. For his industrial milk, the farmer gets at least twice the price he received ten years ago. The price is $5.35 a hundredweight.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): It is $5.37.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It is $5.37 a hundredweight. Mr. Speaker, I think they got $2.64 in 1960.

• (1710)

We do not talk about that. Someone said that prices must be controlled, and that means wage control, profit control, indeed control of everything as was done during the war and two years after, I believe. The prices were controlled because it was feared there would be a shortage of products and coupons were issued. So we would have to go back to the coupon system. If we make a selection of products, we will end up with coupons. However, some feel the coupon is more respectful of the human being? It is impossible to adjust the ration coupon to the hungry stomach. No, the ration coupon is printed and then you have to make do with what you can buy with it. But they do not understand that. Let us take the workers in the Noranda mine, working in the hole. Some eat four sandwiches for their meal, but others who work at the same place need only one. But, the NDP says: No, that is wrong, everybody must have equal treatment. Let us give one sandwich to everybody. Those who need four sandwiches will starve. You, little man, will be restricted to three; let us give three to everybody. You are not hungry but eat anyway, it is the government's decision.

Mr. Speaker, we lived through those hardships during the war; I do not want them during peacetime nor do my colleagues. What we want is an increase in the purchasing power so that the consumers can buy products which are made for them. It is as simple as that. During the war, the price of every product was controlled: jams, cars, meat, butter, tea, coffee, etc. What were the results? Everyone was bothered.

Mr. Speaker, the compensated discount to the consumer should not be financed by taxes. When we already have enough, it is not time to tax more. The compensated discount must be financed by the Bank of Canada. The governor can increase the interest rates; he has done it a few days ago. The governor will be given orders to support consumption. Instead of being maker of interest, debts, taxes, the Bank of Canada governor would serve the Canadian people and not the Canadian chartered banks.

Mr. Speaker, that is the solution advocated by the Social Credit party. Some will still find this funny because the financial question overcomes them. Social Credit, it is said, will create inflation and so on. Inflation already exists, we have price increases and everything that goes with that. Social Credit is not applied in Canada but we have a liberal system similar to the conservative system of four or five years ago. The situation is the same all over Canada; premiers, prestigious and capable men fall on their kees in New York to sink the provinces and the country deeper into debt, and that is normal! Let them stand up as men before the governor of the Bank of Canada and tell him: Sir, you are an employee of the Bank of Canada belonging to the Canadian people; you shall do what we tell you and not what the financiers are ordering you to do. Then, we shall reach a solution. But we are all too much afraid to speak about it. Why? I do not know. Let us talk about everything except the actual reason for the Canadian people experiencing problems in Canada. The funny thing is that if a war was to break out tomorrow morning, there would be no more problems. The financial circles would be on the spot just as quickly as guns would be available; the financial circles would be in attendance, quite manageable, and we would be short of nothing. We hear about pollution and the costs of a controlling it. The American people say that such an undertaking will cost a lot of money. If they spent to fight pollution half of what they have spent to land on the moon, the pollution problem would be quickly solved in North America. However, it was more important to fool away their time on the moon, where they could see nothing, than to create on earth a system allowing human beings to live as human beings should and can live in affluent countries. People are moved to pity, and rightly so, by the fate of underdeveloped countries, but they are afraid to be moved to pity the fate of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, time will come when people will see otherwise. People will turn to the Social Credit party to promote personal initiative, help private enterprise, develop our country to the utmost, find help for the Canadian people and all the others who need us.

Mr. Speaker, we will be witnessing in our country some difficulties experienced in many other countries. We will then be put into a strait jacket as in socialist countries where the government takes all decisions, where people are even afraid to state openly their views, where they are always afraid to be caught napping by the state police force. We will then regret having remained idle when we still had the freedom and the power to act. It will be too late because we will have refused to consider making the necessary changes.

Mr. Speaker, are we going to wait to be bombed before acting and looking for true solutions. We must not find solutions by creating new and worse problems than those we now have. Price controls would be worse than present conditions. We would restrict personal initiative and free entreprise, but public services would in no way be improved. The government would remain an organization working from 9 to 5, whereas the private sector employee must work 18 hours a day. Try and make a bureaucrat work until 11 p.m. and see how he works. He does so unwillingly, cursing the government.

Yesterday, in a dining room, people were moaning, saying how hard it was to work there, that it did not pay enough. Then, I said: When one is not happy to work somewhere, one goes to work somewhere else. It is that simple.

Those who were crying for a job go on strike after getting it. That is how clever the system of the New Democratic Party is, anywhere.

People cry for a job, but once they get it, they go on a picket line in order not to get back to work.

Mr. Speaker, when you reach such a point, you look rather silly. And yet there is everything in plenty to supply the whole population, to help everyone, parents, young people, children; all those, the Canadian family has plenty of. What is lacking in Canada? Purchasing power and nothing else. Is there a shortage of automobiles? No. What is in short supply? Services? No. Do we lack doctors? No, we have them. Are we short of lawyers, of farmers? We have everything.

Mr. Speaker, what is lacking is purchasing power. Therefore, why not study that aspect of the problem? The basis of an economic system, to be rejected or accepted, is service to Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, consumers should be protected and if they are, if their purchasing power allows it, all other social classes will be saved. Obviously, the consumer encourages the producer. Who is the producer? The farmer, the worker, the whole population. Production should be financed by consumption; then, we would not have the type of problems we now know. We would not miss the obvious, or seek silly solutions such as spending our time setting up boards, as we do now. Setting up boards does not feed the poor in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Rouyn-Noranda. But it sure empties pockets, though, you may be sure of that!

Mr. Speaker, the Créditiste solution is plausible; as for controlling prices, obviously we will fight them with all our might and any control measure, regardless of the party that suggests it, will certainly not get the support of the Creditiste members. I ask my colleagues to do their utmost to prevent the "controllers" from taking over the very life of the Canadian consumers, the Canadian people.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the debate so far has been useful in showing us the positions and, in at least the Conservative case, the lack of position, of the opposition parties in this House. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) suggested there was something wrong with the order of reference to the food committee in allowing it, in effect, to deal essentially and primarily with the price of foods. Instead, he agreed its work should have been on a much broader scale. I suggest that this argument overlooks completely the fact that food prices have risen more rapidly in recent months than other components in the consumer price index. The hon. member for St. John's East also suggested that the very existence of the committee has somehow caused prices to increase rapidly in anticipation of control.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if there is an increase in prices in anticipation of controls the blame for this can be put solely and squarely at the doorstep of the Conservative party. Members of the Conservative party were the ones who, day after day in this House and in the committee, were pressing the government to disclose the details of its contingency plans in regard to price and wage controls. Second, it was the Conservative party itself which formally proposed that if it had been the government it would have instituted a freeze on prices and wages to be followed by more permanent steps. They had pretentions that they might at some point—something which is very unlikely—be forming a Conservative government. Certainly, if there has been any increase in prices in anticipation of controls it has been due to a self-realizing prophecy brought up solely by the Conservative party.

I want to indicate the contradictions and divisions within that Conservative party. Its members have now suggested that they would have instituted, if they formed the government, a price freeze, including a freeze on the price of food except at the farm gate. But a few weeks before one of their principal spokesmen, the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth), said that they would be introducing "some price controls on all items except food." Surely, this is an indication of the lack of clarity in their own thinking as a party, and surely this is an indication of a lack of any clear position of what they would be doing as a party in the unlikely event they might form the government. I think what they have said in this House, in the committee and outside the House, really demonstrates essentially that they have not got any clear idea of what they would do about increases in food prices and prices generally.

Hon. members of that party have called for a 90-day freeze on prices and wages, but they have made very clear in this House today and previously, that they have not the faintest idea as to what they would do at the end of that period. They do say they would not apply their price freeze to prices at the farm gate. I suggest that if this approach were ever put into effect it would likely be a cruel deception and disappointment for the farmer. They say the freeze would not apply at the farm gate, but I ask whether this would not be a freeze in fact if the farmer could not sell at a higher price, if he wished to do so, since the middleman would not be willing to buy at this price in view of the fact the increase could not be passed on down the food chain, ultimately to the consumer. What better indication could there be of the lack of decision on the part of Conservatives in this respect? I think the Conservative position is nothing more than sound and fury, signifying nothing. It is nothing but a blatant and desperate effort to score political points. This is proven by the fact that they admit the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices is constructive, and claim they agree with most of it, yet will vote against it. I submit that the report of the committee is worthy of the kind of support the Conservative party, in spite of its members' praise for the recommendations, is unwilling to give it.

As the minister who proposed the motion in this House setting up the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, I know of the many hours of deliberation, consideration and debate that was required to produce the report within the time limit imposed by this House. I believe, as I think most hon. members do, that it will be one of the more important documents of this parliament. There are several noteworthy points about the report. First of all, it is readable. It deals with the concern of Canadians over high food prices in language that all can understand. It does not hide behind the jargon of the experts. When the committee does not know the answer it says so. When further study and analysis is required, it proposes that it be made.

Second, the report is fair. It must have been tempting for some committee members to seek simplistic solutions to the problems of high food prices. I think it is a credit to the committee that it recognized that the factors and causes of the recent acceleration in food prices are complex and that it was not possible to seek out a villain or a particular group as the single cause.

The interim report clearly indicates that any comprehensive examination of the problem must deal not only with the primary producers, with the farmer and the fisherman, but also with the food processor, the food retailer and the consumer; it must deal not only with the domestic market but also with the international situation; it must deal not only with the cost of primary production, the price at the farm gate, but also with the expenses of processing, transportation, packaging, advertising, wholesaling and retailing.

Third, the report is realistic. The interim report has some useful comments on the extent to which governments should intervene to control the operations of the marketplace. I was particularly interested in its finding that there was almost unanimous opposition among witnesses to the idea of imposing price controls on food products alone, or imposing price controls at all.

The committee in its report clearly recommends that controls are not a surefire solution to this problem. After all, controls, if introduced at the wrong time and without due regard for the fundamental factors governing food production, could well lead to situations of decreasing supply and in the long term result in the development of a food price upsurged even more widespread than we have faced over the last year.

I was also interested to note that the Conservative government of Alberta shared this concern and expressed its opposition to controls as a solution. It said in its brief to the committee it felt "that detrimental effects would result for the food industry and the consumer in the long run" from controls.

Fourth, the report is one with a conscience. It shows a real concern for those living on low incomes, for whom the recent rapid increase in the cost of food has created hardship. The government shares this concern. The interim report was tabled a little over a week ago. In that brief period of time, I have had some opportunity to begin discussing it with my colleagues in the government. I want to say that the government intends to make a positive and full response to each and every one of the recommendations set out in the report. Work is now under way within the government to analyse and examine the implications of all of the recommendations and to develop responses in terms of new activities or extensions of existing activities. While it may be necessary in developing these responses to modify details to meet the requirements of particular circumstances, I can say that the government is in full agreement with the main intent of each of these recommendations. I therefore, ask the House to concur in the interim report. It is the government's objective to place before the House as soon as possible comprehensive statements as to how the government intends to respond to each recommendation.

The committee listed the main reasons for the worldwide upsurge in food prices. I am referring to such things as crop failures in certain parts of the world, the disappearance of fish from waters off the west coast of South America and the resulting shortages of high protein meal, the floods that occurred in some parts of North America, the effects of livestock production cycles, the rapid rate of rise in the demand for meat and other factors that have been raised on many occasions over the past few months.

The committee noted, after looking at the rate of increase in retail food prices in 27 industrialized countries between 1967 and 1972, "the rate of rise in Canada was lower than in all but six of these countries, namely, West Germany, Australia, Switzerland, Austria, Mexico and Italy, and was only marginally above the rates recorded for most of these leaders." Of course, the rise has been particularly rapid in Canada in recent months, but with the exception of food I think the record shows that few countries have had better consumer price performance than Canada during this period.

As I mentioned earlier, the committee has avoided the pitfalls of supposing that rigid price controls applied to food could be what is required. Instead, it has recommended a flexible review procedure. It has resisted the temptation to forecast how effective a price review operation might be. I personally think we can be hopeful that price reviews that are flexible and efficiently conducted can have salutary results. But I agree with the caution with which the committee has approached the subject. I also agree with the prominence it has given to the idea of concentrating as much on studies of efficiency of resource use in food industries as on investigation into the possibility that excessive returns are being received by some participants in the chain of food production operations.

Let me deal more specifically with the recommendations in the report. As I have just said, it is not yet possible to put before the House a detailed response to each recommendation; the government does require further opportunity to complete its work on them. A major recommendation of the report is the one calling for the establishment of an independent prices review board. Regarding this recommendation, I can now say that the government agrees there is need for a mechanism to review and examine the causes for particularly striking increases in staple items in the food budget of the consumer, and whose findings would be available to parliament through the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This is an area where more facts could have a beneficial effect in moderating upward trends in food prices.

I would be less than candid, however, if I did not remind the House of the complexity of this issue. Indeed, the interim report of the committee has clearly shown that many factors underlie increases in food costs and that easy solutions in this field will not be found. But I do want to say that the government intends to announce its detailed plan of action for a review mechanism before the end of this month and, hopefully, within the next week or two.

In its examination of food costs, I was pleased to see that the committee did not overlook the importance of competition as a policy instrument that can have a key role to play in maintaining cost-effective markets for food in Canada. It is clear from the outline of the future workload of the committee that it intends to explore vigorously this aspect of the food situation over the next few months. As the House knows, the government has stated that it will be bringing forward a competition policy which will reflect the consideration that has been given by it to the many comments it has received from the public on the original draft bill. The government will expedite its work in this regard.

I note that the recommendations in the report concern only those sections of the draft competition act appearing to deal directly with consumer protection, but I think there are other aspects of the proposed bill that are also of concern to the consumer and have a bearing on the issue of food costs. As the interim report notes, factors such as concentration in the food wholesaling, processing, packaging and retailing activities of the food industry and overcapacity in food distribution are areas where further examination is required by the committee. In its work on this recommendation the government will bear in mind what I believe is the main intent of the committee's recommendation, that is, an assurance that competition in the food industry will be improved to the benefit of the consumer.

Another major recommendation of the interim report dealt with the hardship caused to persons on low income resulting from increases in food costs. It is these people who suffer most from upsurges in food prices. They do not have the ability to weather a rapid increase in food prices without serious deterioration in their living standards. They are not in the position of some Canadians whose purchasing power has increased rapidly over the past decade in spite of the increase in the cost of food.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is already involved in cost-sharing with groups cited in this recommendation. This is a matter of shared federal-provincial responsibility. Through the Canada Assistance Plan, the Department of National Health and Welfare already shares with provinces the cost of approved programs such as meals-on-wheels for senior citizens and shut-ins who meet a needs test. Additional sharing is provided in respect of hostels which provide food and shelter for transients. Amendments to the Canada Assistance Plan regulations effective November, 1972, have provided for the expansion of financial support to day-care services to include, among other items, the cost of food. The legal provisions are there, and undoubtedly there is room for expansion and improved distribution of services under the existing provisions.

The government has stated its intention to introduce legislation on family allowances in this session. This was confirmed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) during today's question period. This legislation should improve the purchasing power of low-income families and disabled individuals and help put more food on their tables.

Adequate nutrition for Canadians is of special concern to the government, particularly the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The nationwide nutrition survey launched in October, 1970, is now being analysed. The final results are expected this October. This survey took into consideration the effect of low income on the nutritional status. We look forward to the findings of this study in guiding us on programs and policies to improve the nutritional status of Canadians. The Minister of National Health and Welfare intends to discuss these aspects of the committee's recommendations further, within the framework of the review he is now undertaking of the social welfare policy in conjunction with his provincial counterparts.

The remaining recommendations of the committee concern consumer education, the advisability of introducing legislation governing the nutrient content of foods and government support for consumer groups appearing before federal regulatory boards. I want to assure the House that the government is developing further programs in each of these areas and they will be announced as soon as work on them is completed.

To conclude, I wish to reiterate that the approach the government is taking to the interim report of the committee is that it will do its best to make a positive response to each and every recommendation in it as quickly as possible. I therefore urge this House to concur in the interim report of the special committee.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) and I honestly wish I had not done so because his speech was the same threadbare type that we have been listening to constantly over the past few months. In his speech the minister embraced fully the interim report that has been put before the House. Why shouldn't he, Mr. Speaker? In most instances it contains almost word for word the testimony that he gave before the special committee.

It is no coincidence that the minister was able to stand up in this House today and tell us in how many ways the government was already acting on the recommendations of the committee. It may be working on the recommendations, but the fact remains that we still have high food prices and a high cost of living. Listening to the minister today bore out in no uncertain terms the contention held across the country that this is just a tired old government, without any ideas, without any initiative and it is time it was gone.

Why was the special committee established? It was set up because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the government had absolutely no other program or way to combat the increasing cost of living that was panicking everyone. Their answer to the people of Canada was to set up a special parliamentary committee. In my candid opinion, the members of that committee did everything possible to determine what the problem was, even working under the deadline with respect to this interim report. But, Mr. Speaker, the task was impossible: it just could not be done. The fact that the government has rushed to embrace this interim report is a good indication of why we could not make any progress in the committee.

People engaged in the food industry believed, because of the haste in which the committee was established and the confining of its terms of reference to food only, that the government was looking for a scapegoat. The briefs submitted to the committee bore that out; in almost every instance they were defensive. Under the circumstances I do not blame any witnesses who came before the committee. I would be tempted to do the same thing. That is why we have not made progress in the committee. The minister scoffed at us in the Conservative party for proposing a freeze on food prices and wages. He called it a control. He said the people of Canada were not ready for controls, and castigated us for being divisive. This is absolute political hypocrisy. If it has any power and takes any action whatsoever, what in the world is a review board but a control?

What is most clear is that the minister does not understand the farmers of this nation. He said the proposed prices review board will be a control, but only on food prices. There will be no freeze on wages and prices, as we recommended. This means it will extend right back to the primary producer. What the Minister is actually saying is that the farmers of the nation will be asked by the government to bear the blame for the high cost of food.

The minister went on to say he was going to put the interim report before the cabinet for study. But nowhere is there to be found any thought of controlling the increases in the cost of living. That is what consumers are interested in and that is what this party is interested in. Hon. members opposite scoff at the freeze suggested by this party; to them it is laughable. The members of the NDP are against a freeze. They point to the United States. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point to the United States, because the 90-day freeze in that country stopped the spiralling increase in their cost of living rising to three times that of Canada, in a period of one year, to the point where it is now two-thirds of the increase in Canada.

Mr. Gray: What happened after they took it off?

Mr. Danforth: I am talking about right now. Today it is only two-thirds of the increase in Canada. The NDP, through their spokesman, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), derided control. Has the hon. member no concern for the consumer? The figures show that the action taken by the U.S. government resulted in a substantial saving to every housewife in the United States. To me, that is the name of the game. That is what I am interested in.

Here we are talking about setting up a prices review board. We have had many review boards in this country. I have reason to know. We have had problems with tariffs. We have had review boards to determine whether an import has hurt a Canadian commodity or Canadian industry. Do you know how long it takes these boards to make a report? It can take anywhere from 13 months to 18 months. If we are to have a food prices review board that will take 18 months to make a recommendation to the government, and then the government will take time to consider the recommendation, food costs will have risen out of sight before any action is taken.

The hon. member spoke about not having a price freeze and said she does not believe in moral suasion. But she talked about state control. She talked about government action to roll back prices. That is state control. She says that we should roll back the price of food and subsidize the farmers with taxpayers' money. Mr. Speaker, the farmers do not want subsidization; all they want is a fair return for their products. The hon. member also said we should subsidize the lower income groups so they could buy food with higher nutritional value. That is a laudable point. But again, Mr. Speaker, that is using taxpayers' money. Our policy is that we should reduce taxes. Let us get people working so they can buy their own food and make their own choice. Let us not have a socialist state, with all initiative destroyed.

The hon. member also said that we must not touch wages. I am interested in that point. What part do wages play? Wages can be a multiplying factor. If there is a wage increase of 10 per cent or 5 per cent in an industry which builds tractors, the increase is passed on to the farmer and he has no way to meet it except from the sale of his products. If there is a wage increase in the industry which makes food containers, that increase will be reflected in higher food prices. An increase in the salary of the manager of a food chain is reflected in the consumer price. Every time railwaymen get an increase in wages, transportation costs go up and the price of food is increased. These increases are passed on to the consumer. I am not saying this is unjustified or wrong, but I think we should know the whole story.

I was disappointed when the CLC appeared before the committee and did not justify the part that wages play in the cost of food. Mr. Speaker, the committee's terms of reference were to investigate the trends in food prices. In order to conduct a fair and just review we must find the basic reasons. I think many committee members feel that in order to decide what is actually happening, we must have more pertinent information. I believe that the only way we can get this is to take any group of basic commodities used by the average housewife in this country and send out an inquiry from our committee to everybody who has anything to do with those foods, from the primary producer to the ultimate consumer. Pertinent and simple questions should be asked such as: How much does it cost you to process it or semi-process it? How much does it cost you to provide services? What is your selling price when you pass on these costs? Give us a list of your input in order that we may judge the part it plays in the food chain.

The food chain is a very very complicated business, Mr. Speaker. For a parliamentary committee to think it can examine the food chain in two meetings a week, over a period of two months, is absolutely ridiculous. I think every member was aware of this fact at our first meeting. This is why I feel we have not achieved anything. I cannot support this interim report because I do not believe it does the job we were asked to do. It is only an interim report, but on this very basis the government is ready to plunge into action!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: The interim report itself says the committee is not satisfied that it knows the answers. These are minor recommendations, temporary recommendations; they are not solutions. If they are, the committee is ridiculous. There is no man or woman in this House, Mr. Speaker, who does not fully realize that if every recommendation of this interim report were implemented, it would not make one percentage point of difference to the cost of food. The only people to be influenced at all would be those on welfare, and they would be given a great deal of purchasing power.

We were asked to study the trends in food prices, Mr. Speaker. In its report, the committee did not say a word about the very evident fact that wages have increased by 5 per cent, on average, over the last four or five years and will increase by 5 per cent this year and next year. This means the cost of food will increase by that amount as well, unless there is drastic curtailment at the producer end. There will be an increase in the price of food if wages go up. There is nothing in the report to say that, based on increased prices and built-in cost, the price of food would not continue to rise. There are just nebulous solutions put in there to relieve this government of responsibility for an economic program that has caused the highest inflation in the western world apart from two other nations.

This government points its finger at the United States. Mr. Speaker, housewives in this country would love to be submitted to the increase in the cost of living that is evident in the United States, rather than that in Canada. It is all right for the minister to ridicule this party because we asked the government to consider a plan that has worked, over one which no one is sure will work or how long it would take. Even the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who introduced this proposition to the committee, and may I say that she worked hard in the committee—

An hon. Member: That is the best part of your speech.

Mr. Danforth: Even the hon. lady herself expressed tremendous doubt in her own proposition. If members opposite had been in the House to listen to what she said, they would know it would need a tremendous amount of legislation to obtain absolute government control in order to make this proposition work. Mr. Speaker, through its minister the government did not propose to bring in legislation; they said they were going to send this report to cabinet for study.

Mr. Gray: No, I did not.

Mr. Danforth: The price of food continues to rise while these people study and study and study. If people in this country have an opportunity at all, hon. members opposite will soon have a lot of time to study.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept this interim report, because I am convinced that it does not represent the best efforts that can be made by the committee. The committee had just started to work, to get an idea where it should hone in on the basic facts if it was to make a reasonable report, then it was faced with producing an interim report which, by the government's own action, had to be produced after only 60 days of study.

Mr. Gray: You wanted the whole committee to wind up in only three months.

Mr. Danforth: The reason for this, Mr. Speaker, was the absolutely impossible demand of this government for an interim report to solve the food problem in Canada, which just was not possible. That is why we have no faith in this committee. We knew, also, that this was panic action by the government to place the whole responsibility for controlling the increase in food prices on the committee. We could not even ask a question in this House during the past 60 days, Mr. Speaker, on what the government proposed to do about the increase in food prices, because the answer would have been that a standing committee of parliament was studying the matter and was instructed to bring in a report.

In conclusion, I cannot support this interim report and I will not support it. But I hope the government in its wisdom will allow the committee to hold further hearings and that we will have an opportunity to study the problem in a businesslike way, so we can produce a report that makes some sense and has some justification to the consumers of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the committee hearings during the last part of May, in radio interviews I indicated at the outset the paradox of rising food prices. It was that probably everyone was to blame, and possibly no one. After almost two months of hearings, listening to many witnesses and reading letters and briefs, I have yet to change my view in that respect. Most assuredly, food prices are rising. We did not need a committee to tell us that. What we were endeavouring to find out was if there was, and to what extent there was, a villain of the piece.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and note that his party and members of his party on the committee accept five of the six recommendations of the first report. There is no such thing as a majority report. Mr. Speaker, when you consider that this was a 25-member committee composed of ten Conservatives, ten Liberals, three NDP members and two Créditistes, I think it is significant and commendable that the committee came up with a report containing six recommendations, five of which have won acceptance by all parties in this House.

The Conservatives indicate that they would impose a 90-day freeze. The committee as a whole could not accept that. In saying that, I speak as an individual member of the committee. It could not accept it because it would work to the detriment of innocent parties in the food chain. There are some who should not have their prices, wages, dividends or profits frozen. I submit that just automatically imposing a 90-day freeze on all prices would work to the detriment of innocent parties who are suffering from increased food prices. Therefore I could not accept that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

Although I would welcome a food prices review board, the adjective to be used in connection with such a board is "independent". I think that is the kind of board the committee would wish to see established. Is it better not to review prices, to review profits, to look at packaging, to look at what retailers have been doing, to look at what farmers are earning, and then to come up with suggestions? That, I am sure, is what the majority of the members of the committee would want to see, and not an automatic freeze that could hurt innocent parties.

I listened, also, to the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). He seems to have a convenient memory. It was not the government which suggested that this committee should meet for two or three months; that was the suggestion of the official opposition. They thought we ought to wind up our work in three months. It was the amendment of the New Democratic Party which said that the committee should meet as long as necessary but should bring in an interim report within 60 days or within a two-month period. We worked hard and came up with an interim report.

The criticism we heard from the hon. member for Kent-Essex is the kind of criticism that is often levelled at a hockey player. For instance, if Phil Esposito at the beginning of the season scores six or seven goals within a certain period, your hear the critics say that if he keeps up that rate of scoring he will score 106 goals during the season. His final score might only be 70 or 75 goals. That is the kind of criticism the hon. member for Kent-Essex levelled at the committee.

I am not suggesting that we came up with all the answers or, for that matter, that the members of any one party came up with all the answers. We worked within the terms of reference laid down by the House; we tried to do our work within the framework of those terms of reference. I think it is unfair to set impossible targets for committee meetings to be held during a two-month period and then expect us to come up with all the necessary suggestions or answers that the hon. member suggested we ought to come up with. We are living in an age in which we witness what is known as the revolution of rising expectations. I think the hon. member was raising expectations inasmuch as he expected too much from an all-party committee of this House. He expected that committee, after two months of hearings, to bring down all the answers and all the necessary recommendations.

The hon. member for St. John's East criticized the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and seemed to equate what that minister had to say with what the committee in the final analysis had to say. The Minister of Agriculture was quick to point out, on behalf of the primary producers in agriculture, that food prices in Canada represent a bargain, and that as a matter of fact food prices in Canada have been too low so far as the farmer is concerned. But, Mr. Speaker, we did not accept everything that came to us from the minister or from witnesses. In the committee report, on page 5—I sometimes wonder if members of the Conservative opposition have read the report—we find these words:

Impact of Food Price Increases

A significant number of Canadians have incomes so low that their positions were precarious at best even before the recent period of rapid food prices began. One major fact that has come out of the hearings is that the food price increases have turned some of these precarious situations into near-desperate ones.

We were endeavouring to make the point that perhaps for a large number of Canadians food prices are not too high, but that for an all too large and significant number of Canadians they are too high. It should surprise no one, therefore, that if this matter comes to a vote I intend to vote in support of the motion. It is my view that we of the committee have done a good job of work. We were a 25-member committee which met anywhere from four to six times per week; we also met in the steering committee. All this work imposed a heavy work load on all committee members who read the briefs and letters which came over our desks or were presented to us. The hearings themselves were only the tip of the iceberg. There were briefs and letters from all Canada. We interviewed, and were interviewed. We talked and we listened. We had the benefit of advice from our special advisers. I think anyone who attended the committee's hearings would agree that each party used its research staff to advantage. How we did read! Letters, reports, newspaper articles, pamphlets, items—in fact, practically every type of written communication came to each member.

We shopped, watched, noted and debated. We saw the signs hanging in the retail outlets. We wondered if they were having a significant impact on food prices. Being the kind of committee it was, we had political gamesmanships surfacing occasionally, sometimes to the detriment of the committee's goals but never destroying its over-all effectiveness. We gained credibility. Two provincial governments felt we were important enough to request permission to appear before us. Representatives of the governments of Alberta and Manitoba appeared before the committee. Many others asked to come before us. In recent days some have even demanded the right to do just that. We were a better committee toward the end. Frankly, I was sorry to see what was called a minority report, especially for the interim report, because I felt we were beginning to gel. I think we can do it again.

We had press reports that were good, and some that were bad. By that I mean there were good comments and bad comments about our work. In many cases there was criticism that was justified. However, some of the reporters who criticized could have done a little more in-depth study of the report. I was interviewed by a reporter who in fact had not read the report. He did not know what was going on in the House of Commons. He did not know that we were today debating a motion to concur in the report. A little more in-depth study of what we said in our report could have made him a better reporter.

We did not tie down many sections in the report because we felt it should have a broad-axe approach. We tried to cover many areas. It is very easy for members of the opposition and the press to say on occasion that the report is toothless, complicated and obscure. Those are the kind of words that are easy to print and understand. It is more appropriate to read some of the editorial comments by people who have obviously done a bit of study. They are not all favourable. I wish to quote from an article that appeared in the London Free Press of April 5, 1973. It reads as follows:

Food committee: a positive effect.

From the majority report of the Commons committee on food prices and, indeed, from the minority report of the Conservative opposition, it is evident that Canada is moving toward greater government surveillance of key areas of the economy, if not government control.

The way in which this surveillance is used will be the key factor in determining whether it inhibits and weakens the Canadian economy and living standards or whether it helps to produce efficiency, equity and economic vigour . . .

The general effect of the committee so far has been constructive, and its work will continue. It has brought groups together, illuminated problems and gathered proposals, and it may have laid the groundwork for a more effective effort by all groups in the food industry to stabilize and support the marketplace within a free economy.

At present that is the best way to fight the battle of inflation. Government price controls are cumbersome and costly in their application and they defeat the free market system while providing marginal gains for the consumer. They are a last resort, and the food economy of Canada is still a long way from such desperate measures.

One of the criticisms of the committee is that we studied food prices, and food prices only. There are four good reasons why we studied food prices. I am referring, of course, to the period before the terms of reference, because the terms of reference limited us to that particular aspect. We were limited to food prices because it is the area with which most Canadians are familiar. We could see the impact this was having. We could see that it covered the whole gamut of the economy. It dealt with capital costs, costs of operation, labour costs, transportation costs, advertising costs, packaging and retailing costs. We heard that when the consumer price index goes up, food is the item that pushes it up the highest. We heard evidence to the effect that when the food chains had their price war, this had the effect of levelling-off the consumer price index. Therefore, it seemed important to study this question.

We studied food costs because the average person goes to the store on one or two occasions a week and pays cash for the items he purchases. The shopper is aware of the fact that food prices are on the increase. I have heard the example of the increase in the price of shoes. It used to be possible to buy a good pair of dress shoes for $23. One chap wrote saying that in six or eight months the price had increased to $40. But there is no suggestion of a boycott in that particular area. There would be if we had to buy shoes on a more regular basis.

I think it is appropriate that we studied food prices. The setting up of a board, as suggested, could work as a pilot project for looking into all areas of the economy. It might be a good step forward in so far as setting prices that have a tendency to increase faster than they should because of excessive profits in particular areas.

This board has been called toothless. I hope it will not be. As I indicated, that is why we put in the word "independent." We wanted it to be independent of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and, in fact, independent of government. We wanted the reports to be made public. We wanted them to recommend action to the government.

It has been suggested that after a 90-day freeze, the Conservative party would suggest something along the same line, a food prices board, but that the board would have authority to take action. I think that is passing the buck. It is not up to a board appointed by parliament to take action. It is up to a board to recommend action to the government. The government should have the guts to say yes or no to any recommendation brought forward by the board. I do not think it is appropriate to simply slough off responsibility on a board.

The personnel of a board will have a lot to say and do as well as determining the effectiveness of the board. Can you imagine a board headed by Mr. Maxwell Henderson? I think a person of his calibre heading a food prices review board would be effective and would have more than the morals indicated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). The personnel of the board would have the opportunity to determine how effective it would in fact be.

If the board made a recommendation to the government and the government did not act on it, or ignored it, the board would have additional teeth. It would have the right to demand to appear before a standing committee of this House. Maybe some day there will be a standing committee on consumer affairs. That would be an appropriate committee to which this board could report if it were not getting the kind of co-operation from the government that it felt it should.

In our report we reached many conclusions and made six recommendations. One of our conclusions was that the primary producer was not responsible for this situation. I doubt very much if the committee will spend a great deal of time in the future dealing with the primary producer, be he farmer or fisherman. If there is a villain, we have to look elsewhere. Most assuredly it is not the fisherman. We heard evidence to the effect that notwithstanding the fact that the price the fisherman was getting ten years ago has increased, the price of fillets and other fish that come to the marketplace and to the retailer has increased substantially. The fisherman in this country is getting the royal Canadian shaft. Maybe we should be looking at that particular area. We could not find a villain, at least we have not yet.

Standardizing packaging and private labelling would assist in this area. We should stop talking about controls, because they are self-defeating; they have the effect of increasing prices. If we impose price controls, we can look to a black market situation. The lower income group is the hardest hit and these people must be to assisted in trying to cope with rising food prices.

Marketing boards were not condemned. We suggested they are needed for a stable market. They may tend to increase prices, but we submitted in our report that stability in the marketplace is worth it. It is difficult to evaluate what effect price wars have and whether there is, in fact, real competition when they occur. We heard from an independent grocer who saw the return on his investment fall from 15 per cent to nothing. All he took out of the enterprise were his wages for working a six-day week.

We were concerned about overcapacity—about the activities of those in the development field rather than in the food industry who decide to set up new shopping centres. They say to businesses which already have all the capacity they need: We intend to build a shopping centre here. If you wish to acquire space you may do so; otherwise we will bring in one of your business competitors.

As the hon. member for St. John's East has already indicated, we found there was overpromotion of breakfast cereals and a few other food items. We were disappointed that representatives of the Chamber of Commerce did not appear before us. Spokesmen for individual Chambers of Commerce have since sent me letters and telegrams indicating their support for some of the views expressed by various businesses. I am sorry that officers of the Chamber of Commerce did not appear; I believe they could have made a significant contribution to the deliberations of the committee.

People who appear before a committee need have no fear. The only witnesses who need be afraid are those who are trying to hide something. Retail merchants appeared before us. One individual told us the amount of money he had invested, the wages he earned from his enterprise, the return he made on his investment, the number of his employees, the effect upon business of price wars and the effect of competition over which he had no control. I think there is a message in this report for each link in the food industry chain. Witnesses have a message to impart, and the committee provides an appropriate forum. If witnesses have something to hide, they certainly have something to fear.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time has expired. I simply conclude by saying that I enjoyed being chairman of this particular committee. I feel I received great co-operation from all members of the committee from all parties. And I do not mind a little political gamesmanship now and then.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, no one denies that the high price of food constitutes a major problem for all Canadians. Most members of the committee worked hard, as the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) has said. They worked very hard to find out why food prices were rising so rapidly, with a view to producing an interim solution which would work and which would be acceptable to the Canadian people. The difficulty was that some members, for reasons known only to themselves, chose to close their minds to some of the real problems as illustrated by the evidence presented, mainly because they had formed preconceived solutions and they wanted to make sure that the problem was stated in such a way that it would fit the solution which they were already committed to proposing.

The New Democratic Party, by its own admission, has advocated a prices review board for many years. This was clearly stated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) in her address this afternoon. Indeed, in her party's minority report it was made very clear that this proposition had been part of the NDP platform for a great many years. All one has to do is go back to the Croll-Basford committee of 1966-67. What was the solution which the NDP was touting at that time? A prices review board. Mr. Speaker, that outdated solution dominated the discussions of this committee, at least as far as the majority of members was concerned. It was interesting to watch the reaction of the government members on this committee. For them, the issue was: Shall we join the NDP in voting for a prices review board or not? This was the crucial issue when it came down to the nitty-gritty of deciding on the kind of report which was to be presented.

In 1966, the government members on the Croll-Basford committee resisted such a proposition. Instead, they took an alternative route and recommended the setting up of a Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. History will judge whether that recommendation was wise or not. In 1973, on the other hand, the government members capitulated. After some fumbling around, after some strong reservations on the part of a few hon. members opposite, they capitulated. The coalition is complete as far as a food prices review board is concerned. So we are faced with a solution conceived as early as the sixties, completely irrelevant to the difficulties facing the country today. And efforts are being made to impose this outdated solution on the country in a manner which I suggest is inconsistent with much of the evidence which was presented to the committee.

In case supporters of the government should take some comfort from the rather vague wording of the first recommendation in the majority report of the committee, I would draw attention to the expectations so clearly articulated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. It is no "Casper Milquetoast" lukewarm board which is proposed by that hon. member. Let us consider what she supports and what her expectations are. The hon. lady, who is in favour of this report, is expecting that this board would have the power to hold the line on price increases. Indeed, it would have the power to roll back prices. Moreover, the board would have power to determine support prices and subsidies to farmers—arbitrary power, I might add. It would also possess independent powers of investigation and analysis as well as the power to take corrective action or, at least, to require the minister to announce within 15 days the corrective action he proposes to take.

It is interesting to note that neither the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) nor the chairman of the committee saw fit to challenge or moderate the expectations of the New Democratic Party as expressed in the House this afternoon. The coalition is complete, no matter how cautious or vague the formal recommendation may be. Canadians now know what they can expect in the near future.

What is wrong with this recommendation? The position taken by my party is quite distinct from that taken by the NDP-Liberal coalition. We believe that the preconceived solution which has been put forward deals with only one side of the equation. It deals with prices. And in the food industry, which is labour-intensive, it is almost criminal to ignore wages in terms of a review mechanism. In my opinion, this is an absolute sell-out to the selfish aims of organized labour, the very power base of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Atkey: It is a sell-out by the Liberal-NDP coalition. If I may make a prediction, this coalition will forever be tainted with the inability of this board to do justice to the expectations of the Canadian people. Those expectations are very high. I am afraid they will be sadly disappointed by this ineffective, toothless board if it is set up in the way the NDP proposes and which the Liberal government has implicitly accepted.

What is even more important is that this recommendation has singled out food for special treatment. As I said at the outset, food prices are a problem. All members of the committee agree with that. But this preconceived solution singles out food for special treatment and ignores many of the other consumer items that Canadians must have and pay for. I refer to rent, various non-food items, appliances—a whole range of consumer products that are necessary in the day to day lives of Canadians.

• (2030)

In case hon. friends to my left have not seen fit to review the evidence that was presented to the committee, let me review some of it for them. I think it is interesting to draw on some of the briefs and try to make use of some of the material presented to the committee during the hours of hearings that were held twice and three times a week in January, February and March. The Canadian Food Processors Association had this to say.

Mr. Benjamin: What do they know about it?

Mr. Atkey: They know more about food than the hon. member does. They said in their brief:

—it is our opinion that it is wrong to single out food prices as the prime cause of the inflationary trend in Canada. To set up a mechanism to control the price of food without establishing controls for wages, raw produce, packaging, supplies, and all other cost components, would lead to disaster for the food industry.

The inflationary trend is evident in all areas of the Canadian economy, and price controls over all commodities and services, including rents, dividends, interest, taxes, profits, and government expenditures, would be necessary to completely control inflation.

That is our position, Mr. Speaker. In case hon. members doubt the wisdom of that particular source, let me quote Dr. Sylvia Ostrey of Statistics Canada who is, perhaps, a more neutral source. At page 12 of her brief Dr. Ostrey says this:

—in the longer term the price increases faced by consumers for foodstuffs have been reasonably similar to those which relate to non-food elements in the family budget—

Hon. members may recall that Dr. Ostrey went back to the year 1961 and indicated that "since 1961 there has been a rise of 47.1 per cent for food and 41.7 per cent for non-food. Since 1967 the advances have been 25.8 per cent and 27.0 per cent respectively." I submit that this is ample evidence that concern for the cost of non-food items should be equally as great as that for food items, and this is where the committee in its majority report recommendation No. 1 missed the boat.

In case hon. members require further evidence, let me refer to the brief of the Grocery Products Manufacturers. At page 5 that organization referred to the increase in wage rates. They indicated that hourly wage rates were going up by 23 per cent more than the increase in the price of food, and something like 21 per cent more in terms of the increase in the price of non-food items. Wage rates—I am refering to take-home pay—increased substantially more than the cost of non-food and food items in the total cost structure of our economy.

The Progressive Conservative party has proposed that there be a temporary, 90-day freeze on prices and incomes in order that the federal government might have an opportunity to meet with the provinces, business, consumer groups and labour to work out, on a co-operative basis, without dictating the terms, a viable cost stabilization program. No one is going to dictate the exact terms of this program at the present time. The 90-day freeze would be federal action which is required in emergency circumstances, a situation that hon. members know exists in view of the inflationary rates in our society today.

If hon. members to my left require further legitimate evidence of the necessity for a freeze, let me refer them to the brief submitted by the government of Manitoba, a New Democratic Party government, and in particular to the words of Premier Schreyer. He said this in the brief which was submitted to our food prices committee:

Obviously, controls would be an extreme step, and we recognize of course that they could only have a limited duration. Nevertheless, they would provide a temporary, partial solution to the problem of price increases while both federal and provincial governments formulated plans for dealing with this situation over the long term.

Those are the words of the Premier of the New Democratic Party government of Manitoba, which perhaps is a little more enlightened than the members to my left. With regard to the 90-day temporary freeze on wages and prices, let me make a final reference to the brief presented by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, a neutral body, as hon. members opposite are well aware, which has been taking stands on matters of great economic import in this country.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association told our committee that "in certain circumstances a system of wage-price controls may become a necessary short-run expedient, despite their very real shortcomings and dangers," which we acknowledge. "The circumstances would involve a rate of inflation in Canada", the association said, "which is clearly and persistently in excess of the rates in our major competitor nations, principally the United States, to the extent that a national emergency is demonstrable". The association went on to say that "the major purpose of controls in such circumstances would be to declare a national moratorium on inflationary expectations, and during their term to implement other measures needed to attack the causes of inflation".

With respect, I think that the position taken by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is a reasonable one, one that shows some concern for the inflationary rate existing in society today. It shows that a degree of caution must always be exercised, and exhibits a certain wisdom regarding the present state of affairs in this country.

Should hon. members require further evidence as to the actual level of inflation in this country as compared with the country to the south of us, and as to whether or not we are appoaching an emergency situation, let me refer to comparative increases in the consumer price index. Let me take, for reasons which will become obvious, the year 1971 and particularly the month of August. The month of August, 1971, was when phase I of the economic stabilization program of President Nixon of the United States was instituted. Prior to the introduction of that program the annual increase in the consumer price index for all items in Canada was 3.4 per cent; in the United States it was 4.4 per cent, slightly higher. In February, 1973, a substantial period after the introduction of phase I, the annual increase in the comsumer price index in Canada was 5.8 per cent, whereas in the United States it was only 3.9 per cent.

Who are the hon. members that say the cost stabilization program of the United States is not working? Let me give them the figures relating to the increase in the cost of food. In August, 1971, the annual increase in the consumer price index for food in Canada was 3 per cent; in the United States it was 3.5 per cent. Then we had a government in the U. S. which acted deliberately and responsibly. In February, 1973, the annual increase in the price of food in Canada was 10.2 per cent; in the United States it was 7.6 per cent. Hon. members opposite and to my left suggest that the controls and the temporary 90-day freeze under the cost stabilization program in the United States have not worked. Rubbish!

The Progressive Conservative party has been challenged in this debate to provide the details of the cost stabilization program that would follow the 90-day freeze. As I have already indicated, I think it would be particularly dangerous for any government or party to specify at this time the details of such a program, when the very nature of a freeze is to allow consultation with provincial governments—which, after all, have a stake in the economy—with business, with consumer groups and with the unions.

If hon. members on the committee had done their homework, they would have realized that there were a number of possibilities for such a program. Some of the research documents prepared for the committee by our excellent staff discuss some of the alternatives, and all parties are free to read and discuss these as alternative approaches to a cost stabilization program. There is the normalized profit margin approach, which some members may be aware of. There is the General Motors approach, which might be attractive to others. There is the profit share approach, or there are voluntary guidelines with threatened sanctions.

There are a variety of programs, and I think it would be particularly inappropriate for a federal party, or indeed for the government, to specify openly what the long-term provisions of that cost stabilization program will be in advance of consultation. But what is necessary now is the initial dramatic and dynamic thrust of freezing prices and incomes to allow the conditions to develop for working out that program in a short space of time. That is our anti-inflation program, Mr. Speaker.

Some members opposite have suggested that the Conservative party is inconsistent in its approach to this committee by painting with too broad a brush. We have been in favour of the consideration of items other than food because we care about items other than food as well as food. Let me refer to the majority report of the committee to show how consistent we were and how inconsistent were some of the members of the committee who subscribe to all the recommendations in that majority report. We have in the majority report the second recommendation relating to the consumer protection provisions of the proposed competition bill. This recommendation applies to items other than food. It applies across the board to all consumer items. That is in the majority report, and it does not deal just with food. Then we have recommendation No. 4 which reads:

> That broadcasters, in particular, and all media in general, be encouraged to continue, and to increase consumer education programs and articles. Consumer information must be made available to all segments of the population and the committee invites the media to undertake more investigative reporting of consumer protection.

We agree with that, Mr. Speaker. However, it applies not only to food but to other non-food items, across the board. Obviously, the committee did not see its own inconsistency in proceeding in that fashion. Let us look at the final recommendation, No. 6:

> That the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs make specific moneys available to consumers groups to present briefs to various governmental boards, where appropriate.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the scope is much broader than food. Some hon. members opposite do not appreciate that the problem is much broader than just food. Yet that is really the underlying basis of at least three of the recommendations to which they subscribe. This is an important aspect of the report which heretofore has gone unnoticed and shows the real inconsistency in the majority approach. On one hand they want to single out food, but on the other hand they want to paint with a broad brush. Our approach, when we saw the problem in the way it was described by some very competent witnesses, was to bite the bullet and paint with a broad brush, because that is what the Canadian people expected from us.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has apparently taken some comfort from recommendation No. 2 of the majority report of the committee which reads:

> That certain provisions of the proposed Competition Act dealing with consumer protection . . . be split off into a separate bill and enacted immediately, and not be tied in with the provisions relating to monopolies, mergers, etc., requiring reconciliation with broader policy directions relating to industrial strategy and foreign investment.

It really escapes me how the minister can take any comfort from that recommendation, when implicitly it amounts to a repudiation of the bulk of that infamous competition bill brought before this House a little more than a year ago. Essentially, what this recommendation does is take a minor portion of the bill, suggesting it is good, but hive it off from the rest of the bill which was so terrible. All of us did not want good provisions held back by the broader provisions of the competition bill which were disastrous and stand little chance of being enacted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I am highly honoured, this evening, to speak as a member of the committee that studies food price trends, and also as a consumer who has seen prices rising steadily for the last ten years.

I should like especially to comment on the recommendations the committee made at the end of its report and I quote:

> 1. That the Government give consideration to the advisability of introducing the necessary legislation to establish an independent Food Prices Review Board . . .

What might these powers be? The board could examine food prices at the level of the producer, the wholesaler, the distributor and the retailer, processing, transportation, packaging and advertising costs, and also the relevant collective agreements.

The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) would have preferred to see a 90-day prices and wages freeze. What would this have achieved? We had controls like this during the war; the results were disastrous for the small wage-earners. Who do we want to protect today? The small wage-earners? During the war, a black market grew up alongside these controls and created a food scarcity when there was really no scarcity at all. And what happened? The low income families were the worst hit.

Moreover, the measure suggested by the hon. member for Kent-Essex seems impracticable to me, particularly because we are importing a very large amount of food products. At this time of the year, for example, almost all green vegetables and fresh fruits are imported from the United States. The hon. member for Kent-Essex does not tell us how prices controls would apply to imported food. To take an example: last week, Mexican tomatoes sold for 29 cents a pound because of an overproduction and an exceptional crop. I have never seen that for all the years I have been shopping. Therefore, how could we control the prices of tomatoes imported at such a low price?

We admit, however, that price controls on meats would eliminate in the short run an upward trend, but we think that in the long run, the food industry and the consumer would suffer adverse effects. Stock-breeders, at grips with rising supply costs and fixed prices of their products would be compelled to maintain the necessary levels of production and would find themselves in a rather precarious situation.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we would rather provide stock-breeders with an incentive in order to encourage them to produce more and palliate a certain scarcity of this product.

[English]

I should now like to speak about the boycott, of which we heard a great deal last week. The trouble with the boycott idea is that it is based upon an imperfect understanding of the economics of the situation. Boycott organizers have grasped correctly that the law of supply and demand provides that lower demand can also lower prices under certain conditions. They have failed to realize that this holds true only if the demand is reduced while the level of supply holds constant, and that it is the producer and not the consumer who controls the level of supply. The producer can control that supply by withholding livestock from the market until the boycott ends, or by simply exporting to the United States or to other countries where the demand remains high.

Worse still, an artificial and dramatic disruption of demand can actually backfire against boycott organizers and lead to higher meat prices a few years from now. If the producers become uncertain about the stability of the Canadian market, they can make production decisions the impact of which will be felt two or three years from now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the second recommendation:

> 2. That certain provisions of the proposed Competition Act dealing with consumer protection (e.g. misleading advertising, bait and switch selling) be split off into a separate bill . . .

I fully agree with that provision. For my part, I wish some provisions of the legislation would ban once and for all misleading advertising, coupons, stamps, everything included in the packaging and which is not the product itself.

The third recommendation deals with the nutrient content of food. This recommendation is only worthwhile when included in the fourth recommendation. Of what use would it be if the consumer did not pay any attention to it? As you know, I am a consumer but I realize that as such I am a little responsible for the growing increase in food prices. In order to please the consumer, we are now offering on the market blanched potatoes, diced potatoes, french fried potatoes, frozen potatoes, plain potatoes—

An hon. Member: Dried potatoes!

Mrs. Morin: —dried, yes. Furthermore, all kinds of products under various forms from miniature to giant sizes are offered, but the consumer does not seem to realize that all these conveniences are paid for at a high price when she buys these foodstuffs.

A massive educational program aimed at the consumer is required but this will prove useful only if the consumer is willing to participate.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, after sitting for some 60 days, or two months, in the committee studying food prices it gives me some satisfaction to see that a report did come out of the committee, because we listened to a great many people with a variety of opinions and we made recommendations to this parliament. I make a point of saying we made recommendations to this parliament, not necessarily to this government. It is my hope, as a member of this parliament, that the government will bring before the House legislation and proposals that will enable the House to take, or to refuse to take, action as a result of those 60 days of hearings.

The terms of reference came from the government, it is true, but the recommendations came from the committee. Members of one or two parties in the House may say that they disagree completely with the recommendations of the committee. That, of course, is their privilege; indeed, it is their right. But I and my colleagues think the recommendations that came out of the committee are worthy of the consideration of the House and indeed are worthy of the consideration of Canadians.

There may be some here who may say, as do those to my right, that that is not enough; that there should be a 90-day freeze and that we should reach out and put a clamp on everyone, now. There may be others, such as those across the aisle, who may say that we should have done nothing; that somehow by manipulation of money we could avoid doing anything or taking any responsibility as a parliament. They hold before us the threat of a bureaucratic nightmare and try to scare Canadians into adopting a pose of rigidity and of refusing to do anything at all. These are the two opposites, the two poles, if you will. In my view, the committee chose a course in between and chose to recommend to the House certain actions which the committee thought, or at least the majority of its members thought, could meet some of the needs and, hopefully, most of the needs of the situation.

So far as I am concerned, in the 1972 election and since that time consumers have said to me, "Do something about prices." They said it in the 1972 election and I have since received letters saying the same thing. When I refer to consumers, I do not mean only housewives; I mean the wage earner who is buying a house, the farmer who is buying fertilizer and fuel for his tractor and other machines. People right across this broad spectrum of our society have been saying this, and I think that we should take notice of their complaints. When the consumer was saying this to us, the farmer was saying, "I want a guaranteed price, a fair price for the products which I produce."

I do not know if a great many people in the House understand the kind of experience the farmer has had in the last two and a half years in this country. When members to my right say that we should have a 90-day freeze, do they intend to freeze the price of hogs at 54 cents, or are they going to freeze the price at 46 cents? Are they going to freeze flax at $5.89, or when it goes down to $4.16? Are they going to freeze rapeseed when it hits $4.50, or are they going to freeze it when it goes down to $3.40?

An hon. Member: You know the answer to that.

Mr. Gleave: I do not, because those hon. members have never given me the answer. And when they had the opportunity to put those grains under the Canadian Wheat Board and provide the farmers with some stability, they refused to do so. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be kidded in the House, and I was not kidded in the committee by some of the statements made there.

I support without any reservation the proposal for the establishment of a prices review board. We are not in 1943, we are in 1973, and a lot of things have changed since 1943. I do not know about the rest of the members of that committee, but as we sat and listened it became very plain, to me at least, that so far as food distribution at the retail end is concerned, in 1973 we are faced with what is essentially a monopoly position. It became plain to me that the same is true of the processing industry which has a virtual monopoly. We cannot deal with this problem by saying that these situations do not exist.

I recall the time when Federated Co-operatives were before us. I checked through the proceedings of that meeting this afternoon. I asked them about a situation concerning the number of retail outlets in part of the city of Saskatoon. Now, in the same area, up goes another retail outlet—a large one—erected by a Calgary developer. I asked this group whether the additional space was needed in that part of the city, and they said no. I asked them, who was going to pay for it, and their answer is recorded in the minutes of proceedings of the committee. They said the consumer was going to pay for it. They also said there was another little city in Saskatchewan, down in the southwestern corner, where the same developer was constructing another outlet. The co-operative will be forced to move into that development and pay rent there because, if it does not, somebody else will move in and they will be faced with additional competition. Again, Mr. Speaker, the consumer is going to pay.

This evidence was put before us at the committee hearings. It was put before a commission in Saskatchewan several years ago. What are we going to do about it? I suggest that the committee is frank when it advocates a prices review board which can undertake a continuing job of investigating what is happening in the food industry as a total system. I do not think you can single out one particular sector at one particular time and say that this or that is the truth unless real investigation has been undertaken and you know what is happening.

The first job a prices review board can do is to find out what is happening. Our party has said plainly that after that happens, we expect such a board to have the power to make recommendations, and we expect the responsible minister to act on those recommendations within a limited period of time. We are not talking about a weak-kneed, ineffective board, such as is alleged we are talking about. That is not our concept.

In the committee we received evidence on excess advertising. It was plain that advertising was being undertaken that really did not relate to the real needs of the consumer. Just the other day when I was coming through Winnipeg I bought the Winnipeg Tribune. It carried an article explaining why TV ads aimed at children worked so well. It was by a Mr. Choate, and was taken from a Los Angeles paper. In part it read:

> For the past year the Council on Children, Media and Merchandising . . . has had financial support from foundations in studying the impact of TV commercials on children. As a result of our study, I have concluded that the techniques of creating ads with a predictable effect on youngsters are the closely guarded secret of a cadre of motivational researchers, employed by American business . . .
> Under controlled circumstances, and with the utmost security, the personnel of motivational research firms across the country monitor the reactions of children to given commercials and products. In this way, children are being used in laboratory situations to formulate, analyse, polish and compare ads designed to turn other children into salesmen in their own homes.

This is 1973, Mr. Speaker, and children are being programmed to buy products in a way that is acceptable to those who are merchandising and packaging the products. I repeat that this is 1973, not 1940. We should look at this question as a part of the total picture. We should also look at the needs of the farmer. One hon. member, I think it was one of the very attractive members of the committee—I am sorry that I do not recall the riding—said we could very well face the risk of a drop in the production of meat because of the pressures being put on the farmer by those who are promoting boycotts. Mr. Speaker, there is no group in our society that has asked less of society than the food producers. All they have asked of society is some security and a reasonable standard of living. They have not asked for excess profits or excess privileges. They have not taken time on radio or television to gull people into the kind of programs they think will be of advantage to them. They have asked for minimum prices that would protect them against slumps, in some cases foreseen and in others not unforeseen.

Just two years ago hog producers were losing money on every hog they produced on their farms. I saw the audited statement of a hog producer in my constituency. He was producing 2,000 hogs a year and was losing $6 on every hog. All that producers such as that require of society is that they be given a reasonably steady return on their products; then they will produce all the food we need. I would say to that same hon. member that if we make the production of food unattractive enough, and if we introduce enough risks for the farmer, we may succeed in getting to the point in Canada where we will not produce enough food for ourselves. That will be an achievement for a country like Canada! But if we keep on like this, and hang on 90-day freezes and capers like that, we may well achieve it.

I suggest that if we are practical and if we investigate the real cause and take reasonable steps, we can produce all the food we need, we can distribute it to the people who need it and we can avoid some of the malnutrition that there is in this country. Evidence of malnutrition was brought before the committee. People came before the committee and told us in plain, simple language that malnutrition—in other words, starvation—exists in Canada. Yet we pride ourselves on being one of the richest countries in the world, with a very high standard of living. We can avoid malnutrition if we take reasonable and logical steps that will adequately serve and protect Canadians.

If we need some advertising and can bear the cost, we should do it logically and not do it on a profit exploitation basis. Let us do it on the basis where it will serve Canadians, where it will tell children the foods that will build healthy bodies instead of trying to persuade their mothers to buy something that is not needed. We used to go into school when there was no television and put pictures on the walls which told children that oranges and eggs and bacon made them healthy. Now that we have one of the best advertising medium in the world, what is it used for? To sell cornflakes! As responsible people in this House, let us say to these image markers, "Don't tell us how to starve to death. Tell us how to live". That would make more sense.

If this committee did nothing else, at least it gave its members an opportunity to understand some of the factors at work in the food industry. From time to time members said, with some frustration which I also felt, that we were getting a snow job, and at that stage I suppose we were getting the public relations treatment from the industry by the people experienced in doing a selling job. But there were those of us who wanted to look—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the order made today has expired.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, as one who participated on a part-time basis in the Special Committee on Price Trends in Food, it gives me pleasure to participate in the discussion on the motion for concurrence in the report of the committee.

The problem the committee has been asked to deal with relates to the basic problem of inflation. We have a government which, for reasons best known to itself, over the past two or three years has been very active with the printing press in increasing the money supply of this country. I would find this rather amusing if it were not so sad for those people who are unable to defend themselves against the ever increasing rise in all prices, not just food. No member in that great collection of intellects on the government side can say why we are having a problem with prices today. It should be elementary that if you are irresponsible and make the printing presses work overtime, you will have inflation and consequent increases in the price of food and everything else.

It is interesting to note that over the past two years the money supply in this country has increased at a rate that is not less than 10 per cent. I think the average of the two years would be 15 to 17 per cent. This is completely unacceptable. We have also had a situation where the federal government—the most obvious government; the one at the top of the heap; the one that everyone looks to as an example—has failed to live within its income. We have had a period of sustained high taxation and sustained high government return but, nevertheless, a continuing succession of deficits. I think is beyond dispute that government deficits result in inflation and increased prices. I do not know what the mystery is. We have an irresponsible administration which has been playing with the fiscal and monetary policies of the national government and, as a result, we have a national problem.

Members of the New Democratic Party and of the Liberal party scoff at the suggestion that the federal government should undertake a freeze in order to change the direction that the economy has been following for the past five, six, seven, eight or ten years. I suppose that dates back to the famous Pearson formula for settling the Seaway dispute which set off this most recent siege of inflation. In any event, I am not sure what was illogical or wrong with the suggestion that the federal government take hold of the problem and tell the people that they are going to take a new approach to the situation and will protect the population of this country—especially those who are unable to protect themselves by way of collective bargaining or otherwise—and enable them to maintain their purchasing power. No one is suggesting that a 90-day freeze is a total solution to the problem. I think that anybody on the government side, as well as their auxiliaries to my left, would realize that the policies pursued to date are wrong and there must be a change of direction.

I suggest that the basic change required is an example by the federal government, to be followed by other levels of government and business in the country, to start living within their means. In that way we would give some real impetus for growth in the economy and provide more benefits for everybody. The coalition that we have now has passed along the old idea of the New Democratic Party for a prices review board. It is very interesting to note that the motion we are asked to concur in does not recommend any real powers to be given to the review board, but the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway

(Mrs. MacInnis) suggests that the board should have the power to roll back prices and enforce what it considers to be the general good of the consumer as well as the producer.

I cannot understand why that hon. lady would wish to be associated with a prices review board that does not live up to her expectations of what it can do. She and her party are advocating a much more severe solution to the problem than has been advocated by this party, which has said that as a beginning there should be a 90-day freeze while governments at the provincial and federal level work out a meaningful program within the general free market approach to this situation.

There is no escaping the fact that this is an economic problem. Someone has said that you can make an economist out of practically anybody or anything. Just the other day I heard that the best way to make an economist out of a parrot is to teach him the words "supply and demand". Surely the real problem with respect to food in Canada today has to do with supply. This, in turn, relates to our being part of the world economy—and the world is desperately short of food. It is discouraging to note that in the last year or two we have become net importers of agricultural products. At one time we prided ourselves on being the breadbasket of the world and, without difficulty, producing enough for ourselves. Now we are net importers of food. When you are a net importer of food, you are at the mercy of world markets. I think you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that our approach to solving this problem should be one involving increased supply.

One does not hear the New Democratic Party or the Liberal party advocating measures that would increase the supply of food. Actually, one can remember that classic example of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) introducing the infamous program, Lower Inventories for Tomorrow—otherwise known as Lift—on the Prairies, whereby the taxpayer of Canada was actually paying grain producers not to grow grain. This happened withing the past three years. Now we see that the latest contract for the sale of wheat to Russia, announced earlier this week, will take every bushel, every grain of wheat out of our possession. I therefore wonder what would happen in this country if we were to be unlucky with the weather. This has not been unknown in the past. Probably we would end up buying back some of the grain we sold at higher prices, if we were unfortunate. If the weather co-operates, there is no question that the Canadian farmer can produce the required amount of grain to meet our current commitments and also enable us to make other sales.

Primarily, we require at this time courageous policies on the part of government which must be effective in the war against hunger in the world. No one can deny that there is a world food shortage. If we can gear our production in such a way that we produce surpluses, if possible in most commodities that we are capable of producing, we shall take the pressure off the demand for food in this country and thereby reduce prices. As a happy consequence, of course, we shall be able to earn much needed foreign exchange and generally expand prosperity in the country by transmitting the benefits gained by foreign trade to manufacturers and other sectors of the Canadian economy.

The government is entranced by the NDP-inspired idea that supply management should apply in the agricultural sector of our economy. Much time was taken in the previous parliament in debating that silly piece of legislation, Bill C-176, the result of which was a restriction in the supply of food in this country. It is time to remind hon. members again of this fact: if we are to bring prices down, we must increase supply.

The NDP philosophy is that there must be ever bigger units of production. They will not do the job. I believe that we can do the job most efficiently if we encourage small producers to produce. The cumulative effect of their production will provide the necessary quantity of products for us, at the best price. In my view, we do not want a continuation of greater and greater restrictions regarding grading and inspection of our products. We are only too familiar with the disappearance of small abattoirs and meat processing facilities which have been scattered about the country and replaced by larger slaughterhouses and meat-packing plants operated by an ever decreasing number of people. That situation may be very good for the NDP and their friends in organized labour, since it makes it so much easier for them to organize the people who are dealing with these products and who want to demand ever increasing wages.

As my hon. friend from St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) pointed out, nobody who has taken part in this debate so far has been prepared to say that the food processing and distribution industries, which are labour-intensive, have contributed to increasing prices. Of course, the world situation has a great deal to do with the problem. However, when you see the lonely meat-cutter in the supermarket earning in excess of $5 per hour in many parts of the country, you begin to realize why the price of meat is increasing. I suggest that if we are to keep some sort of lid on that part of our economy, we should encourage the establishment of more, and smaller meat processing and other processing facilities which deal with food in this country.

Certainly we do not want to increase the activities of marketing boards, the sole ambition of which is to restrict supply in order to drive up prices. We want policies that will enable producers to be efficient and produce the greatest amount possible in order to maximize income. They should not maximize their income by reducing production, since in the end nobody will benefit and food supplies will be lower. We have seen in the past how such policies have resulted in the tremendous cost-price squeeze from which the farmer has suffered. Prices, until relatively recently, remained dormant. At the same time, the price the farmer has had to pay for everything he uses has gone up fantastically. That he should still be in business, I submit, is a tremendous testimonial to the staying power and efficiency of the average farmer.

I suggest that we shall maximize production and solve our problems if this government is prepared to go into world markets and sell our products, instead of merely being an order-taker. We presently are commanding relatively good prices for our cereal grains, largely as a result of the crop failures in eastern Europe and China. For a long time I have advocated the setting up of overseas storage facilities so that we can be truly competitive in the cereal grain market. Let us face it; the time will come again when we shall have a surplus of agricultural products merely because the agricultural segment of our economy is truly efficient and productive and will produce no matter what governments do.

Farmers do their best to produce, because in so doing they feel they are accomplishing something worth while. I admire them for that. Let us see some decent salesmanship by the government. Let us see greater efforts to enter into long-term contracts with new or emerging trading blocs, in particular the European Economic Community which will supplant our traditional market in the United Kingdom. I was interested in hearing the minister of industry, trade and commerce of the last parliament, and the present minister, announce what is happening, what the government are doing and that ambassadors have been appointed.

We do not seem to be coming to grips with the real problem of getting business tied up on a long-term basis so that our producers will have the knowledge that there is something to work toward. In order to get into that position the government should, as a matter of principle, embark upon a policy of paying for storage of grain on farms so that we can at least be in a position to deliver these additional sales when they come. This would also level-out the peaks and valleys of our production in that area.

We should establish a guaranteed floor price. It should not be established at a price that is more than ten years old and has been depreciated in the meantime by inflated dollars. If there is a demand for the product, let us produce it. We should become efficient.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the House order made earlier has expired.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, as one who served on the trends in food prices committee, I can certainly agree with the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) who said that to serve on that committee was a fantastic learning experience. It undoubtedly was.

We all know that the impact of the high cost of eating has become a predominant concern of the consumer. The topic of food prices has once again been the subject of an inquiry by the federal parliament. It is right and proper that the consumer and government alike should be disturbed. However, I suggest, as did some hon. members opposite and as did the brief presented to the committee by the Manitoba government, that in comparison little attention has been devoted to prices of goods and services other than foods, such as housing, transportation, health and personal care.

Mr. Woolliams: I couldn't agree with you more.

Mr. Penner: This is rather extraordinary, in view of the fact that a very large majority of consumers during the past few decades have been spending a declining share of their income on food, in contrast to income shares devoted to housing, transportation, health care, recreation and entertainment.

If we are disturbed about food costs, we should be even more troubled by the prices of houses. There are, of course, many reasons why food is costing more. It was rather difficult for the committee throughout all its deliberations to single out one culprit or even to find that one section of the food industry is responsible for taking undue advantage of us. When you come to housing costs, however, and I will use this as a brief example and not expand upon it, it is quite easy to pinpoint the problem. There is a shortage of serviced land. This has pushed up the value of real estate in many Canadian communities and has opened the door wide for land speculators. I read in the Financial Times this week that the cost of serviced lots in the city of Toronto is now somewhere between $18,000 and $20,000. Without talking more about that problem, which is one that ought to concern our provincial governments a great deal more than it obviously has, I would like to go on to deal only with food costs.

The brief from the Manitoba government spoke of an apparently unwarranted preoccupation with food prices. Part of the reason for this is that shopping for food is done by cash on a daily or weekly basis. Other necessary expenditures which consumers have to meet, such as mortgage payments or rent, seem to be extracted from them in a way that is somewhat less painful.

In any consideration of food prices, meet always seems to be at the centre of the stage. It seems that consumers in North America have too great an appetite for meat to be satisfied with macaroni and cheese. The committee report refers to the increased demand for beef and pork products. I quote the report as follows:

> Canadians like meat and are willing to pay for it.

In 1961, according to calculations of the Meat Packers Council of Canada, consumers in this country used 70.5 pounds of beef per capita. Consumption of beef then rose throughout the decade until it reached 87.3 pounds per person in 1971. Statistics for 1972 are not yet complete, but it is estimated the per capita beef comsumption will be almost 90 pounds, and the trend is rising for 1973. Consumption of pork and poultry on a per capita basis has also risen rapidly.

The increasing proportion of meat in Canadian family diets, which represents an upgrading of the food consumption pattern in this country, has been made possible by rising real incomes. the rising demand for beef has seen our farmers make very determined efforts to increase supplies in economic response to a profitable level of livestock prices. Farmers have been encouraged by higher prices to produce more and better quality food. For the farmer, these improved prices are necessary to meet his rising costs of production.

The chairman of our committee already referred to the fact, and all members of the committee were certainly convinced, that the primary producer, the farmer, the man who produces the food in this country, cannot be held responsible for the high costs we have to pay. What happens if these efforts on behalf of the farmer to increase supply are slowed down or stopped? What happens if more and more farmers quit producing food? One leader in the food industry put it this way: "With the demand for food rising rapidly in this affluent country, lack of incentives to farmers will mean shortages and even higher prices". I feel strongly that this point needs to be stressed. If there are not incentives for the farmers, it will mean shortages of the food the consumers in this country want, and that in turn will mean still higher prices. This spokesman went on to say that unfortunately the consumer cannot have it both ways. Rising income levels and low food prices are just not compatible.

Let us accept whatever validity there may be in that statement, and I think there is considerable validity in it. At the same time, however, I am quite prepared to accept the fact that there is need for a food prices review board in Canada. To do what? The Conservative party has talked about a 90-day freeze. They say they will have a food prices review board instituted after the 90-day period. They have not yet told us what that prices review board will do.

We can tell you what our board will do. it will make absolutely certain that no one in the very involved and complicated food industry, from the farm gate to the retailer, will take undue advantage of the consumer. They will not take undue advantage by charging food items prices that cannot be justified. Many increases can be justified. We have to be concerned about finding the person along that food chain who is slipping in an increase that cannot be justified. The government of Alberta, which presented one of the finest briefs to the committee, recommended a continuing vigilance on the factors that contribute to food costs in all sectors of the food chain. Continuing vigilance surely implies a food prices review board of one kind or another. The official opposition has seen fit to downgrade such a function, but the government of Alberta saw considerable merit in it. It was not alone. The Consumers Association of Canada, an organization for which I have the greatest respect, said that the consumers of this country need, and indeed demand, a watchdog agency to ascertain that food prices are as fair and reasonable as possible, all relevant factors being considered.

The association in its brief noted with interest the suggestion that a prices review board be established to investigate rapid increases in the prices of any food product, to determine the cause of the increases and to inform the public of its findings. The association said such a board would offer an opportunity for a more effective scrutiny and increased understanding of the food industry. Returning for a moment to the brief from the government of Alberta, and still talking about the need to investigate the food chain, this is what the submission said:

> Such a watchdog agency should seek out new developments having a potential for improving the effectiveness of food production, processing and merchandising.

So the Alberta government envisaged an added role for such a board. Indeed, it went one step further. The board, ought, it said—> —to initiate educational activities to keep consumers informed of new developments and informed about the food system thus encouraging them to obtain maximum nutritional benefit from the food dollar.

The committee examined very carefully the wisdom of imposing wage and price controls as an effective weapon against inflation, particularly against rising food prices. The official opposition, as we well know, has proposed such a freeze for 90 days, but hon. members opposite have made it clear that they will exempt raw, unprocessed food, which I take it includes meat, dairy products, eggs, fresh fruits and fresh vegetables. These, incidentally, account for about 55 per cent of the food budget. The Alberta government noted it would be very concerned about the effect of price controls on the food industry. The brief stated:

> Although we recognize that price controls on food would arrest the trend of steadily increasing food costs in the short run, we feel that detrimental effects would result for the food industry and for the consumer in the long run. The food industry, which is faced with increasing supply costs and fixed production prices, would be hard pressed to maintain necessary levels of output. Shrinking margins would place many producers, processors and handlers in a precarious economic position with the result that output would tend to be reduced as profit incentives were eroded. A situation such as this would be contrary to the best interests of both consumers and producers.

Are there any examples that we can consider? The action of the President of the United States in placing a ceiling on the price of meat suggests he believes that farmers are mainly at fault for the food spiral. By putting a ceiling on the retail price, the United States administration is counting on pressure rolling back through the retailer to the middle man and, eventually, to the farmer. I believe this shows the folly of the position of the opposition in saying they would control prices only beyond the farm gate.

Mr. Woolliams: We never said that at all.

Mr. Penner: Oh, yes. It has been said that prices are to be controlled beyond the farm gate, but if the producer cannot sell his product he is stuck with it. So if prices are rolled back to the level of the producer, he is the one who will eventually take it on the chin. This is the point which has to be emphasized. Ultimately, it is the farmer who will suffer. If the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) would look at the news reports, he would see that United States' farmers feel betrayed by the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. They betrayed because in their view he did not serve their interests well by objecting to the imposition of the ceiling on meat prices in the United States. Previously, he had stated repeatedly, when speaking to farmers and to other groups in the country, that this was not the way in which to solve the problem.

What did he suggest as an alternative? He suggested the alternative outlined by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), who said the answer was to increase supply, stimulate production and increase beef imports. I am talking now about imports into the United States. The President of the United States now faces the frightening possibility of a farmers' strike. If production falls, the resulting shortage will raise another spectre—the spectre of a black market in meat. It may be that meat prices in the United States have already reached their peak. If that is the case, the ceiling is meaningless. But if the price has not peaked, the ceiling will likely create a shortage of meat, and that will make conditions right for a black market. In addition, it means that when the controls are removed there will be fantastic pressures to push prices upward, beyond the point they had reached when the ceiling was imposed.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray) has told the House he will make a positive response to each and every recommendation in our report.

Mr. Frank: When?

Mr. Penner: Did you listen to his speech? He told us when. He said he would do so on an urgent basis and would provide us with detailed plans and policies early in May.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: I think members of the committee would expect no less. Finally, I would say it is very important to the 25 members who served on the trends in food prices committee that we test the House with respect to the report we have submitted. The committee was a servant of the House of Commons and it deserves to know the judgment of parliament on the work it has done. I therefore urge all members not to talk out this motion, but to allow it to go to a vote a ten o'clock in order that those who worked long and hard and in a very dedicated way on the committee may know whether or not they have served the House of Commons well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal tonight with several aspects of the problem that faces us.

First of all, there is the problem of rising prices. Why are prices increasing in such an alarming way from one month to another? What are the effects of this rise on the middle class, and then on the disadvantaged category which is reaching increasingly larger proportions in Canada? What are the influence and importance of the big trusts with respect to the problem of inflation at home and even abroad, considering the sprouting of an ever larger number of multinational corporations? What evidence has been given in the food prices committee to point out where the actual problems were? How is the collusion of traditional governments being expressed? What is the solution offered by our traditional governments? What is, finally, the alternative advocated by our party, in those circumstances?

Mr. Speaker, prices are going up at an alarming rate in all fields. Here we are considering the problem of food prices in particular. We must not forget that food prices are not completely independent of prices in other sectors of the country's economy. Indeed, other sectors are experiencing the same problem, whether we are talking about clothing, automobiles, building, housing or transportation. We have reached the stage, especially for small wage-earners, where inflation has reached the limit. Formerly, people would spend less money on food, so as to make ends meet, but in view of the price increases in all the areas I have just mentioned, that has become impossible. In many cases, people want more than food handouts to the poor, which the hon. minister suggested recently.

What are the causes of inflation? One of them is obviously the excessive profits made by some companies, and their way of exploiting people's senses, if you look, for example, at the way they present products. In some cases, the packaging costs more than the product itself. That means that the merchants, the producers, are less interested in satisfying the people than in making a profit. For those who exploit human poverty, all that counts is making a profit, getting steadily richer while others are getting poorer.

The committee heard evidence from dozens of people, representatives of the manufacturers' association, producers, farmers, packers, advertisers or any other associations, to the effect that it was not their fault if there was inflation and rising prices, but the fault of other people who could not be named. In the end, Mr. Speaker, where is the problem? It seems to me that if the committee does not get to the deeper causes of the present unrest, it is missing the point and merely acting as a safety valve in society.

Canadians are beginning to be hungry; the Roman principle is applied: They are given games or still a minor committee is established to reduce them to silence or let them hope that the problem will be settled while knowing quite well that this will only contribute to satisfy them temporarily and the problem will persist because it is in the interests of those who benefit from it.

The solution of conventional governments is price control or price freeze. Prices are controlled but a black market is created. As noted recently, a meat boycott is under way. Suddenly, the people became tired of the boycott and they began to buy. This is exactly what will happen when price control or freeze will come to an end.

In my opinion, we should apply a solution which would be much more favourable to the people than to those who strive to control it and get rich at their expense. That is the solution our party recommends. A discount on purchases should be granted, not to the producer, but to the consumer. Mr. Speaker, no incentives should be offered for production when products are in sufficient supply, but potential buyers of the products should have incentives and thus the wheels of economy will be able to turn. This system should be carried out in association with dealers, with producers willing to have this type of market.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this solution be considered; it is one which would suit, not the minority, but a majority of the population as a whole.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, there has been a steady rise in food costs which has been accompanied by a steady migration from the land of rural Canada. This must be taken into account when we consider food costs and what has happened in the last few years. Farm units have become larger, with many farmers producing much more specialized grains, along with beef cattle and so on.

May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—MEETING OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL FINANCE MINISTERS—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSALS RESPECTING ESTATE AND CAPITAL GAINS TAXES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on January 15, less than two weeks after parliament met for this session, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) whether he would make specific proposals regarding estate and capital gains taxes to provincial representatives. I had hoped that he would show some leadership in this regard, but in the succeeding weeks the minister has gone only part way in assuming a leadership stance. In fact, I submit that he has tried to substitute salesmanship for leadership, and this is becoming more and more evident.

The federal attitude toward estate tax has been very equivocal. After the former minister of finance announced with fanfare that the federal government was in fact out of the estate tax field since capital gains taxes were in, this administration said to the provinces, in effect: You collect and we will help you. Two provinces, Alberta and Prince Edward Island, have in fact decided that this is a regressive tax and one which should not be collected. Is the federal government doing anything to assert leadership with regard to the position of other provinces? Of course it is not. Nor is this government going far enough to bring equity into those instances where farmlands are being hit with capital gains tax.

The capital gains tax on farmlands favours corporations. It destroys, or at least seriously erodes and impedes—as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) pointed out not too long ago—the natural desire of farmers to pass on the results of a lifetime of toil to their families. It takes a long step, I suggest, toward further eroding the position of rural areas of Canada. Death should not be a prerequisite to passing on farmlands without taxes.

Ever since the former minister of health made his famous remarks last year concerning the further taxation of the middle-class, the government has suddenly realized the extent of the antipathy this approach aroused among much abused, middle-class Canadians. The government is now exhibiting a new-found interest in doing something for small businessmen and middle-class Canadians. In fact, this government is adopting so many of this party's policies suggested by our leader that I should not be at all surprised if a directive has not already been issued that the cabinet must wear Stanfield underwear in future.

I ask this government and the Minister of Finance to give the provinces a clear understanding that it would be in Canada's best interests if they all got out of the estate tax field, since this tax as it now stands hits not just rich people but most middle-class Canadians who are already paying capital gains tax. I ask them, also, to remove capital gains tax or to further substantially modify it in regard to farmlands passing from one family member to another, or one generation to another, and to show some leadership and give some sense of direction to Canada's financial affairs.

I make the suggestion to the minister that he must further modify the capital gains tax. He should realize that this tax must be refined. For example, with regard to Canadians who over the years, either through systematic saving or a stock option given by his employer—as is often done in the case of public utilities which permit employees to buy stock over the years at a favoured price under certain conditions—have held stock, they should not pay capital gains in the same way as a speculator. Perhaps in some instances no capital gains tax should be paid. There is a great deal of difference between buying 1,000 shares of General Motors and selling it in a comparatively short period of time and making a profit, if you are doing it for speculation, and borrowing money to buy shares in a Canadian company, holding those shares for a number of years, perhaps five, to assist in your retirement or in the education of your family.

By failing to distinguish between the Canadian who buys stock in a Canadian company and holds it for a specified time, and a speculator who is a trader or an opportunist, this government is doing this nation a disservice. A selected capital gains tax exemption up to a certain amount, perhaps $25,000 or $50,000, in Canadian securities held for a specified time, say five years, would encourage Canadians to invest more in Canadian companies.

There are, of course, many modifications needed to this suggestion, but I would urge the minister to consider it and use a little more imagination in giving some leadership to this nation's financial institutions. Perhaps soon on motions he could also tell us what effect he feels high interest rates are having on our slow-growth regions; and perhaps he will also give us his views on regional financial policy. He might also indicate whether he has found a method of complementing our regional development policy.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we know that the federal-provincial conference mentioned by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) in his question took place on January 18 and 19; it would appear that the questions mentioned by the hon. member were not raised by the provincial governments. However, as the Ministers of Finance meet fairly regularly, it is no doubt quite possible that the matter of estate taxes might be raised again at a coming meeting.

I might point out that the question as expressed does present a certain anomaly since, as we know, the federal estate tax was abolished at the time of the tax reform, precisely because it was considered that its role was now fulfilled by the new income tax on capital gains. The matter involved then is that of the interaction between personal income tax and provincial estate tax.

Here again, the problem does not apply to some provinces which decided to abandon the area of succession duties, that is to say Alberta and Prince Edward Island.

However, New Brunswick and the province of the hon. member, Nova Scotia, announced their intention to retire from this area whereas Quebec has recently reduced its tax rate in a gesture that leads way to a possible withdrawal.

As to the implementation of the personal income tax on capital gains coming from the sale of land, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) recommended in his budget speech of February 19 that we should allow farmers in the future to leave their land to their children, at the time of death, without paying taxes.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we know that the Minister of Finance tabled yesterday motions of ways and means which make it possible to extend these provisions to transfers inter vivos, that is to say, when the farmer is alive.

As for help to small businesses, we know that the government is reviewing all this matter and that it is committed to report on this to Parliament as soon as possible.

GRAIN—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN SUBSIDIZED PRICE OF WHEAT FOR DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on January 18 I put a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) which I wish to pursue tonight. It reads as follows, as recorded in Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question relating to the two-price system. In view of the fact the international wheat price is at least 50 cents above the domestic price paid by the millers of $1.95½ a bushel, can the minister inform the House whether the subsidized price of $3 a bushel will be increased by at least 50 cents in comparison with what was paid last year?

The minister replied:

> The $3 price ensures, of course, that the farmer in the prairie region obtains that price for the wheat consumed in Canada, and that price is still well above the international price.

I want to point out to the parliamentary secretary that the statement made by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is totally misleading in terms of the two-price system. Let me give a number of reasons in the short time available to me. First, the domestic price paid by millers in this country to handle Canadian wheat is $1.95½ a bushel, basis Thunder Bay. The subsidized price is $3 a bushel. The difference is subsidized by the federal government.

What the minister failed to point out was that the difference between $1.95½ and $3 is not paid directly to the wheat producer but is paid on an acreage basis on all six grains. Therefore, when the international price for wheat rises for the first time in a long time above the fixed price of $1.95½ a bushel, when it goes up to $2.68 a bushel, the western producer of wheat loses at least 50 cents or more per bushel on domestically consumed wheat. That means in one crop year a minimum loss to wheat producers of $30 million. This is the kind of information which I would like to point out for the information of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Further to that, since I asked that question the minister has sent out a questionnaire to all producers in western Canada. It was sent out to all permit book holders, not just to wheat producers. As pointed out by the Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta wheat pools, the questionnaire was heavily loaded in terms of getting the farmers to answer on an acreage basis. I would like to point out to the minister that the questionnaire was worded in such a way that the only answer a farmer could give, if he was trying to be fair, was on the basis of acreage payment. I point out that an area such as Assiniboia constituency, which is 90 per cent wheat producing, replied as being 28 per cent in the affirmative when I asked the following question:

> This spring should see another payment under the two-price system for wheat. What would you prefer—the present system of $3 per bushel for the top grade sold on the domestic market and distributed on an acreage basis on all six grains?

But when I asked, would they prefer a guaranteed price of $3 a bushel, for example, on the first 2,000 bushels sold, 71 per cent of the producers replying said that they would like it on this basis. This is something I want to point out to the minister in terms of the discrepancy in the questionnaire he sent out to producers in western Canada. Furthermore, I take issue with him in sending the questionnaire to all permit book holders, because when it comes to the question of rye, rapeseed and flax, are the producers of southern Saskatchewan going to have the opportunity of saying that those three grains should come under the Wheat Board when they are just producing wheat? After all, when it came to the question of the two-price wheat system, all the grain producers were allowed to answer as to whether or not payments should be made on an acreage basis. This is something that should be pointed out to the minister.

There is one final point I wish to make. I would hope that in the future any questionnaire sent out relating to two-price systems, or to the question of whether certain grains should be under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board, should give the farmers enough choices so they could make a fair reply, rather than what happened in this particular case. The answer to the problem of a realistic two-price system for wheat producers is to ensure that there is a guaranteed minimum price for all six grains. When you have a domestic price for wheat related to costs, you can assure the domestic producer of wheat, as well as the other producers, of a minimum price.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) wishes to point out that there always has been a significant argument in favour of paying the two-price wheat money supplied by the federal treasury to all wheat producers on the basis of their potential rather than on the basis of their actual production. Every grain farmer is a potential wheat producer. This is borne out by the fact that every shipping bloc in western Canada delivers wheat through the Canadian Wheat Board system. If the payment was made on the basis of wheat only, every producer would likely produce enough wheat to qualify for the payment. This is particularly and significantly true if you think in terms of a payment on a limited number of bushels of wheat. The advantages in favour of helping the smaller farmer, in favour of making a payment even when there is no crop, and in favour of diversification instead of encouraging wheat, all point in the same direction.

The results of a questionnaire on the payments, sent to 171,625 holders of Canadian Wheat Board permit books, was quite conclusive. To date, 36.6 per cent of the producers have returned completed questionnaires. Some 87.1 per cent favoured payments on an acreage basis; 1.3 per cent favoured part of the payment on acreage and part on a bushel basis; 10.3 per cent favoured all of the money being paid on a bushel basis through the Canadian Wheat Board wheat pools, and 1.3 per cent returned the questionnaire with no choice indicated. This certainly indicates how western grain producers preferred to receive the payments from two-price wheat funds.

In conclusion, it should be made clear that the government took its responsibility for deciding that the money available for payment should continue to come from the treasury, even though a significant proportion of it now is clearly a consumer subsidy, holding the price of bread down instead of letting it reflect world prices for wheat. On the other hand, the $3 price for wheat is still higher than the world price and therefore producers as a group have no complaint, as they strongly indicated in their replies to the questionnaire.

It is difficult to follow the argument of the hon. member that wheat producers lost $30 million on the basis of what millers are paying, and the international price. Last year we paid over $57 million to grain producers in western Canada, on an acreage basis. At least 80 per cent of all grain producers in western Canada produce wheat; therefore, on this basis wheat producers received $45.6 million out of the $57 million paid out.

GRAIN—WHEAT—DISPARITY BETWEEN COST OF HOPPER CARS PURCHASED BY GOVERNMENT AND THOSE BOUGHT BY UNITED STATES RAILWAY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to stress my concern about a question I asked some time ago and in a letter I wrote to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) last August. At that time I questioned the minister about the purchase of hopper cars for the movement of Canadian grain. I criticized the minister because I felt that the amount of money paid by the government for the hopper cars was abnormally high. The minister replied in writing and said there was fair bidding, etc., on the contract. I am not criticizing the purchase of the hopper cars, because I think it is a generally accepted fact, at least in western Canada, that this was a step in the right direction. But I am criticizing the terms of the purchase. I believe this is not only important to westerners but to all Canadians.

The thing that spurred my question was that the Burlington Northern Railway in the United States had also purchased hopper cars for the movement of grain. They bought 1,000 jumbo hopper cars for $18 million. From my information, they were 100-ton cars with a capacity of 3,300 bushels each and will be in service by this summer. These cars are virtually of the same size and capacity as those purchased by the Canadian government. I believe the difference is that the federal government has overpaid the companies who built the cars by some $12 million. This is the discrepancy between the Canadian and the United States figures.

My purpose tonight is to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board if he will outline what the excess covered. I have some questions that should be answered in connection with the sale of these hopper cars. First, has there been a final agreement between the government and the railways as to the exclusive use of the cars? Second, what arrangement has been reached for the maintenance and repair of the cars? Who is going to pay for that—the federal government or the railways? Third, what is the rate structure for reimbursement by the railways for use of the cars?

Since half of the lines in western Canada will not be able to carry these cars because of their size, I think the Canadian people, especially western grain farmers, should know how the grain is going to get to the main line so that the hopper cars can be used. Are the railways going to buy the cars from the government, or is the government to continue ownership? The minister has defended his action by saying the difference is made up in part by federal sales tax and transportation to western Canada. The grain trade sources that I have been in touch with say that any companies doing business with the federal government are exempt from federal sales tax. That would be taking money from one pocket and putting it in another.

These are some of my concerns, Mr. Speaker. To my way of thinking, $12 million is a considerable discrepancy. When I asked the question in the House, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board said it looked as if there were some additional ball-bearings or some other small parts in the make-up of the cars, and this constituted some of the difference in price. I do not think that answer is good enough.

The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board has always been very secretive and has not imparted information to the Canadian people. I hope that tonight we will hear some details about the contract and exactly why there is this differential in price with respect to cars to be used in Canada and those that are used in the United States, so that this matter may be cleared up and the Canadian taxpayer may know exactly where and how this money is being spent.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) had indicated to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) that there is a good deal of room for difference in the engineering and make-up of the hopper cars involved.

The Burlington Northern, the United States railway involved, purchased 1,000 hopper cars at a cost of $18,000 per car. This $18,000 should be compared with the net price of the Canadian car of $20,100 after federal sales tax and consulting and inspecting services are substracted. However, the Canadian cars had a number of additional features not incorporated into the U.S. equipment. These added-cost Canadian features will result in long-term operating benefits. There is less incentive to incorporate these features into the U.S. cars, as cars there spend a large part of their operating life on lines other than those of the owners.

The additional features in the Canadian equipment are these: First, the Canadian cars have two wear wheels; the U.S. cars have single wear wheels, and therefore the Canadian wheels have a much longer life. The additional cost involved in $200. Second, the Canadian cars have four internal hoppers and discharge gates; the U.S. cars have three. The Canadian cars have a lower centre of gravity. The additional cost here is $390. Third, the Canadian cars have internal epoxy resin paint to eliminate corrosion, whereas the U.S. car is untreated. And the Canadian car has extra external paint costs. Together these, but mainly the resin, add $930 to the cost. Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian cars have a WABCO PAC brake system; the U.S. cars have only standard equipment. The cost here is $830.

The extra features incorporated in the Canadian cars, totalling $2,350, are responsible for the differential in the net price between the two types of car. Federal sales tax of $2,500, and various services at $700, account for the total cost.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved that the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on April 4, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I believe a point of order could legitimately be raised as to the appropriateness of putting this motion at the present time. Yesterday when we were discussing the motion to concur in the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices the point was made that some of the recommendations exceeded the powers of the committee in that they involved the expenditure of money. If Your Honour were to examine closely the second report and the document contained in issue No. 8 of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development at page 42—this is the document on aboriginal title which the motion proposes we concur in—and the legal consequences of Indian or aboriginal title and what this document considers to be those legal rights, I think Your Honour would find that the same point arises as was raised yesterday as to the appropriateness of a committee of the House of Commons making a recommendation to the House that would involve the expenditure of money. I would refer Your Honour to Beauchesne, citation 260(1), which reads as follows:

> The tendency has been in the Canadian House of Commons, for the past 25 years, to rule out all motions purporting to give the government a direct order to do a thing which cannot be done without the expenditure of money. Our Journals are full of precedents to this effect.

Numerous other precedents and citations from Beauchesne and May might be quoted, but I think the general principle is quite clear. I would make the argument that this motion to concur in the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development does involve a commitment for the government to expend money not only to enter into negotiations but to right alleged wrongs by the expenditure of money. I suggest that this would not only be against the Standing Orders of the House but also any authorities on the subject that Your Honour might care to consult. On that basis I think Your Honour might be asked to give a ruling on the appropriateness of this motion and on the appropriateness of a standing committee of the House of Commons making such recommendation to the House itself.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we pursued this point yesterday. I made my comments then and will not repeat them. I understand that the parliamentary secretary in effect is repeating the caveat that the government House leader entered yesterday in reserving the right not to have this matter taken as a precedent if Your Honour should decide that the debate should continue. I will not repeat the argument. I simply say that the fact that Your Honour, after having been elected Speaker, goes to the other place to claim on behalf of this House the right of free speech, makes it incumbent upon Your Honour, in any case where there is a reasonable doubt and there is no inconsistency with specific rules, to resolve that doubt in favour of the opportunity for debate in the House, and any further attempt by the government to restrict the freest possible debate should not be countenanced.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, may I put to you, in addition to the remarks made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that there should be no doubt whatever on the motion before us whether an expenditure is involved, and so I think there is no necessity to rule on the side of parliament as distinct from ruling on the claimed right of government with respect to expenditures. I say there is no doubt because of the very wording of the report that is before the House. Let me read the pertinent words to you, as found at page 241 of Votes and Proceedings for April 4, 1973:

> Your Committee accepts and endorses the concept of aboriginal title as set out in the paper entitled "Aboriginal Title" presented to the committee by Mr. George Manuel, President of the National Indian Brotherhood, on Thursday, March 29, 1973, and urges the Prime Minister, on behalf of the government of Canada, to publicly accept and endorse the said concept of aboriginal title—

There is no question of expenditure there. It is simply a declaration of recognition that is asked for. The report continues:

> —and to take steps immediately to enter into negotiations with the Indian people with respect to the said title.

That contemplates no expenditure whatever. It may well be that as a result of those negotiations expenditures will be forthcoming, but that will be as a result of the negotiations, not as a result of the motion and report now before the House. I think Your Honour has no choice.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members again for the advice they have given to the Chair. This point has been raised twice within the last few days. In the course of giving my views about the motions that are before the House I had expressed the thought that my reservation dealt more precisely with the third report of the committee rather than with the second report. My understanding of the second report was, as the hon. member for Skeena has said, that the first part deals with principles, and if there were fault to be found with the wording of the report it would be found in the last part which reads as follows:

—and to take steps immediately to enter into negotiations with the Indian people with respect to the said title.

My hope would have been, and it is still my hope, that this could have been altered and perhaps have achieved the same result by substituting the following words; "and consider the advisability of entering into negotiations with the Indian people with respect to the said title."

There is not, perhaps, a substantial change there, but at least if those words were included in the report before the House we would have respected a longstanding practice of the House and I think would have saved ourselves a great deal of trouble. I wonder whether the House, by unanimous consent, would not be prepared to make this change now. If it did, there would be no difficulty in proceeding. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent, therefore, the report will be changed in that way. This having been done, there is no difficulty at all from a procedural standpoint with the motion and it will be put to the House.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if we could adopt the same practice as was followed yesterday and suspend the discussion on this motion until after routine proceedings and oral questions have been completed. In addition, in view of the very great interest that has been shown by many people in this subject and as we have to convenience the government in trying to expedite passage of the tax bill and have agreed to take today, a short day, for this debate, possibly there might be agreement to limit speeches to 20 minutes for the first speaker from each party and 15 minutes for each following speaker. It has been shown by experience that speeches are very much better if they are shorter.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the desirability of suspending the debate until we have concluded routine proceedings and the oral question period. However, I would very much prefer to have the regime that was followed yesterday, namely, that the chief speakers from each group have 30 minutes rather than 20. With respect to subsequent speeches, I am quite prepared to agree to any reasonable arrangement.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, possibly we could have the usual interesting meetings through the usual channels to see if we can work something out before the debate begins. Otherwise, we might have to agree to something we do not want.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I consider this to be a very important motion, and because today is a short day I suggest we deal with it in its proper order.

Mr. Speaker: I gather we have agreed not to agree and there will be discussions through the usual channels. Is it the wish of the House that the motion be put at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that this debate will be postponed until after the question period.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

APPOINTMENT OF DEFEATED LIBERAL CANDIDATES TO POSITIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as we are still on the order of motions I should like to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I do so for the purpose of clearing the air and removing certain uncertainties, particularly for friends of my friends opposite. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House request the government to table a list of all Liberal candidates defeated in the last election who have not yet been appointed to government positions, together with a list of the positions to which they will be appointed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I gather there is not unanimity. I have already heard some nays.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the exceptionally high water levels in the Great Lakes and the consequential danger to property and human life constituting a national emergency. RCMP SIGNS ON BUILDINGS

Question No. 1,450—Mr. Coates:

1. How many signs at RCMP detachment quarters, and other quarters, were changed with a wording of "Police" replacing the former complete name of the force?

2. Since the initial changes, how many of these signs have been reworded so that the full name of the force now appears?

3. How many signs indicating RCMP force offices or quarters still carry the wording "Police"?

4. Is action being taken to have all RCMP quarters signs bear the full name of the force and, if so, when will this programme be completed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): For the Ministry of the Solicitor General: 1. Twenty-six signs containing the crest of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the word "Police" were installed on operational buildings replacing signs which contained the crest of the Force and the words Royal Canadian Mounted Police or Gendarmerie Royale du Canada. In addition, twenty-six buildings housing offices of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had the sign with the word "Police" installed because they were new buildings previously unmarked and the Force was occupying them for the first time.

3. Fifty-two.

4. A new building sign bearing the crest of the Force and the words Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Gendarmerie Royale du Canada has been approved and will be taken into use as soon as supplies can be obtained.

RCMP SIGNS ON VEHICLES

Question No. 1,451—Mr. Coates:

1. What lettering is presently being used on RCMP vehicles and is the RCMP crest included with the wording on all vehicles of the force?

2. Are there any RCMP vehicles being used that carry only the word "Police" without any indication of the force that operates the vehicles and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): For the Ministry of the Solicitor General: 1. Royal Canadian Mounted Police vehicles now in service may have, as part of the vehicle marking, either the lettering RCMP or the single word POLICE. The vehicle marking, or shield, includes in every instance the crest of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The current use of dual types of vehicle markings results from a changeover to bilingual vehicle markings commenced in January 1972 as new vehicles were brought into service. This practice was halted on April 28, 1972 when only partially implemented because of representations regarding the particular markings and since that date, save in cases of operational necessity, new vehicles have been left unmarked. A new vehicle marking bearing the crest of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with the letters RCMP and GRC on either side has been approved and will be taken into use as soon as supplies can be obtained.

1. By department, what projects were accomplished in the constituency of Compton in the current fiscal year?

2. What are the projected plans by department for the same constituency during the next fiscal year?

Return tabled.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, last week and earlier this week I rose in connection with my question No. 278 which was filed with the government on January 12. I have raised a question of privilege in this regard on two occasions, and this is the third occasion. The government is clearly refusing to answer the question. I am reasonably convinced that it has the answer in its files and material. I think it is an affront to myself as a member of the House that the government refuses to give any answer whatsoever to this question, even though the question has been outstanding at this point for nearly four months.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I too should like to make a request concerning a question of mine that has been on the order paper since February 7. I am referring to question No. 832 relating to the Canadian Commercial Corporation. My question was initially raised but not answered by the Auditor General of Canada. I believe that the government should be more forthright in presenting the answer to parliament.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw attention to questions Nos. 1,752 to 1,760. Two of these the parliamentary secretary said would be answered today, namely, 1,755 and 1,756. As all of these questions are of the same nature and pertain to people who were Liberal candidates in the last election and have been appointed to various government positions, I really cannot see why they cannot all be answered, not just two. I can only assume that the government is so busy appointing further unsuccessful Liberal candidates—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should point out that there are nearly 2,000 questions on the order paper. If every time we reach this order of business we hear speeches from hon. members on why questions have not been answered, we might spend quite a bit of time on the matter. I am not disputing the hon. member's right to rise on a point of order, but I would hope that hon. members would not extend their remarks too much. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta is also rising on a point of order.

Mr. Reynolds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I too have a question on the order paper, No. 230, asking for which insurance companies Air Canada acts as agent. The only reason I take the time of the House is that the previous member from my riding, a Liberal, put this same question on the order paper two years ago, and the government is still refusing to answer it. It is of great concern to the people of my riding.

Mr. Baldwin: I move the motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, no written representations have been made to the United States government in respect of the operation of the Canada-United States automotive trade agreement and the possibility of revisions to this agreement. However, these matters have been the subject of numerous discussions with senior United States officials who thus are fully aware of Canadian views. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Withdrawn, subject to the right of the hon. member to reinstate it after examining all the subtleties of that answer.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

BURKE-HARTKE BILL—REPRESENTATION BY GOVERNMENT TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Motion No. 200—Mr. Lawrence:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all notes and formal representations made by, or on behalf of, the Government of Canada to the Government of the United States of America with respect to the so-called "Burke-Hartke" bill.

Mr. Baldwin: I move the motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, no written representations have been made to the United States government with regard to the so-called "Burke-Hartke" bill. However, this bill and its implications for Canada have been discussed on numerous occasions with senior United States officials who are thus well aware of Canadian views. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is the same as the one I raised last week with reference to notices of motions Nos. 161 to 185 inclusive standing in my name since February 26. They ask for a copy of the time schedule that is supposed to exist within which pulp and paper mills in British Columbia will have to meet the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations established by the government some two and a half years ago. I am wondering why there has been such a long delay in replying to that request.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECTIVENESS OF PRESENT STRATEGY IN REDUCING UNEMPLOYMENT IN LIGHT OF REPORTED GOVERNMENT INTENTION TO PROVIDE WORK FOR EMPLOYABLES ON WELFARE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether, in view of the intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to get employables off the welfare rolls by providing work on the government payroll, it is now the position of the minister and the government that its present economic strategy will not reduce unemployment to an acceptable rate?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is basing that question on a press report, and he ought to wait and see the policy announced by my colleague.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it now the policy of the minister to attempt to reduce unemployment by creating a sort of huge LIP style program, does the government believe this is necessary in view of interest rates going up, and will the government accept the proposition that its policies will not create sufficient jobs in the private sector?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has been consulted about the work program proposal of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government is constantly in touch, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO MAKE OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH AND LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAMS PERMANENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the two employment programs devised by the government in the last couple of years, opportunities for youth and local initiatives, and in view of recent comments by the Secretary of State in respect of the possible integration of these programs and the lack of any statutory recognition for them, will he indicate whether the government plans in this session to bring legislation before parliament in effect to ratify or establish policy on a long-term basis for these two programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member in his question did state well the government's expressed concern for these programs and the areas in which they have been working. I am afraid I cannot answer the precise question whether we will be making an announcement or taking any action at this time. Such a decision has not been made.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS ON GREAT LAKES—POSSIBLE USE OF ARMED FORCES FOR PREVENTIVE MEASURES—NEGOTIATIONS WITH ONTARIO ON COST-SHARING

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence or the Minister of the Environment; I am not sure which should answer. It arises from reports yesterday of continuing and increasing flood damage to property in municipalities along the Great Lakes from Windsor right through to Oshawa. Can the minister confirm to the House that the government is currently negotiating an arrangement with the province of Ontario to share the cost of Canadian forces units which would be used to assist municipalities in flood preventive measures? Can he indicate the basis of such an arrangement and whether it will assure that municipalities will be relieved of any part of the cost involved?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with the Minister of National Defence and there has been no request for assistance from the government of Ontario.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not hear the reply. Would the minister kindly repeat it?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks me to repeat my reply. I have been in touch with the Minister of National Defence and, as I understand it, there has been no request for assistance by the armed forces in respect of this matter from the government of Ontario.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that reports in the press today attribute to the Ontario resources minister remarks to the effect that negotiations are currently under way between the governments of Ontario and Canada to make cost-sharing arrangements to cover the cost of use of the Canadian forces, can the Minister of National Defence indicate whether in fact such negotiations are taking place?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are no current negotiations specifically with regard to cost-sharing. I have outlined the procedure before. We do operate on a cost recovery basis but we do not charge for salaries or equipment, just for out of pocket expenses.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that many municipalities would wish to take advantage of the services of the Canadian forces units, and in view of the fact these units are not being made available because the province has not requested them, will the Minister of National Defence or the Minister of the Environment take the initiative once again to consult with the government of Ontario in order to establish whether some mutually acceptable arrangement can be made in order that municipalities in Ontario can be assisted in this very important matter?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, we are in the closest possible consultation daily and hourly with the government of Ontario.

HIGH WATER LEVELS ON GREAT LAKES—NATURE OF SITUATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Is it the government's opinion that there is no emergency on the Great Lakes in respect of the high water situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an opinion and a question in those terms is not in order. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of the Environment inform the House what level the lakes would have to reach or what the government has in mind in respect of this problem on the Great Lakes?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): As is well known, Mr. Speaker, we already face an emergency on the Great Lakes. It remains to be seen, however, as to whether it is a national emergency or a local and provincial one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Peel South on a supplementary question, but we should then try to allow the hon. member for Témiscamingue to ask his question in order to complete the first round of questioning.

• (1440)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Great Lakes are clearly international waters is it not a matter of national importance that these international waters be a matter of federal responsibility?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is actually submitting an argument or representation to the minister. He has to assume that it has been noted. The hon. member for Ontario on a supplementary.

HIGH WATER LEVEL ON LAKE ONTARIO—REQUEST THAT PICKERING TOWNSHIP APPLICATION FOR ASSISTANCE BY ARMED FORCES BE RECONSIDERED

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the recent communication by the township of Pickering to the department which indicated that the township was willing to assume the out of pocket expenses of the Department of National Defence in lieu of the fact that the province will not do so, will the minister reconsider that application for assistance.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that particular communication.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated a moment ago that we should go to the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—ALLEGATION THAT CERTAIN EMPLOYEES MAY BE GUILTY OF FRAUD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the fact that the interim report of the advisory committee on unemployment insurance mentions that some employers cheat by giving certificates of dismissal to employees who leave their work simply to rest, because they prefer not to work, could the minister tell the House what he intends to do to identify the employers and bring them to justice if necessary?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the advisory committee has not yet reported to me, contrary to some suggestions by the press. Second, if there is any evidence or incidents of fraud on the part of employers or employees in terms of collusion or otherwise, it is the intention of the commission to investigate and, where substantiated, to prosecute.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ALLEGED ABUSES—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House when the report of the advisory committee will be in his hands and whether he intends to table it in the House at the same time?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am just as keen as other hon. members to get the report. I have talked to the chairman of the advisory committee. There are many complex matters before the committee and they tell me they wish to have a few more days. It may be that it will come in two stages, first, an examination of the program and its concept at the national level and, second, an examination of the program as it is implemented in the field. They are conscious of the need to proceed quickly, but I hope hon. members will permit them time to complete their job.

GRAIN

ADEQUACY OF PROJECTED PLANTINGS OF WHEAT, BARLEY, RAPESEED AND FLAX TO MEET DEMAND—POSSIBILITY OF INCENTIVE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since Statistics Canada has come out with a crop report indicating that wheat, barley, rapeseed and flax will be down this year and down from the minister's own recommendations and also from what the government feels is the necessary level to meet demand, I should like to ask the minister whether the government is contemplating giving any incentive in any form to ensure that adequate acreages of these crops will be planted this spring?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not accurately depicting the results from the Statistics Canada survey since the indications of plantings are significantly up in wheat, up in barley and very close to the same level for rapeseed as in the previous year. The figures are down from the suggestions we made in our March 1 letter, mainly because farmers intend to leave more land in summerfallow than we had suggested. This, of course, can still change depending on weather conditions in the prairie region. The fact is that the distribution of acreage between the various crops is very encouraging, particularly the very strong emphasis remaining on barley. There remains some time for further consideration by farmers of increased acreages in all crops.

Mr. Murta: Since the minister has raised the point that farmers will be planting approximately 24 million acres of wheat and since the government recommended that the figure should be approximately 28 million acres—I disagree with him on this point and also so far as barley is concerned—if the proposed plantings are followed by farmers, and since the amount cited by Statistics Canada will not be adequate to meet demands in the coming year, does the government intend to give any indication that it will increase the initial prices for Wheat Board grains and will it also give a further incentive to rapeseed producers for this coming year?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we did already indicate an increase of 15 cents per bushel in the case of barley as a specific encouragement to the production of barley and as I said, the relationship of barley to wheat is very encouraging indeed. The hon. member again is making a mistake with regard to what we suggested to the farmers. If he reads the March 1 letter very carefully he will see we said they should plant a maximum of 28 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members are already rising for supplementaries but perhaps they might allow the minister to complete his reply. I am not referring to the hon. member. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Lang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is fairly important, I think, that hon. members understand that the March 1 letter indicated that there should be a maximum of 28 million acres of wheat. In other words, we were urging farmers not to go higher than that figure under any circumstances because of the need to stay in barley and rapeseed in a significant way. The total prices of grain, not the initial prices, of course are the main sign of encouragement to farmers with regard to the planting of grain. These prices are very good. There is every indication that they will remain very good, and I will continue to speak to farmers about planting a little more grain and putting a little less land into summerfallow this year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

RAPESEED—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF GUARANTEED PRICE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's expressed desire to increase the amount of rapeseed produced, may I ask him whether he is prepared to set up a support or guaranteed price for rapeseed that will make it as attractive to farmers as to grow crops such as wheat which have a support price in effect through the initial price?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Any question of an initial price or support price for rapeseed would depend upon the disposition of a question to farmers about the manner in which they want rapeseed marketed. I am surprised, though, by the hon. member's statement because certainly in the last ten years or so rapeseed has given a greater return to the farmer than any of the other grains.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the situation we find ourselves in Canada with regard to feed grain stocks and wheat, would the minister not consider making a public apology to western grain producers for his perpetration of the Lift program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Shefford.

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POLICY—DISCUSSION WITH GOVERNOR

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Finance.

Can he tell us if the recent increase in the interest rates that the Governor of the Bank of Canada announced last week is altogether in line with the federal government's financial policy, whether the Bank of Canada had informed the federal government of its intention to increase interest rates, and whether this decision was taken unilaterally by the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I have the distinct impression that this question was asked a few days ago. If I am mistaken, the minister may answer the hon. member for Shefford. If not, I shall recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Rondeau: I should like to put a supplementary question.

I checked the answers given these past few days by the Minister of Finance and he surely did not answer that question because none was similar to mine.

Does the monetary or financial policy of the Bank of Canada concerning the increase in interest rates announced last week truly represent the monetary policy of the government or is it a unilateral decision taken by the Bank of Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is the prime responsibility of the Governor of the Bank of Canada to which the government has found no objection.

[Later:]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Can the Minister of Finance tell us whether the Bank of Canada had given notice to the federal government of its intention to raise the interest rates, or whether this government has heard of this just like all of us?

Mr. Speaker: This is precisely the question which has already been put, but the minister may perhaps answer it again.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

METHOD OF ESTABLISHING PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs may I address my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs last night that the government intends to set up a prices review board by the end of this month, would the Prime Minister advise under what aegis or what legislation this would be done, what the authority would be and how the board would be funded, or is parliament to see this legislation or the proposals for the conduct of the board before it rises for the Easter recess.

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I would not want to go any farther than what the minister stated last night when he indicated that the House would be seized with the measure and that members would then see what form it would take. It would not be compatible with my decision to keep a low profile—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —if I were to try to scoop the minister on an announcement such as this.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ROLL BACK INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES OR SUSPEND FOR STUDY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. On Monday of this week the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked the minister whether the increase in bank rates would be reflected in increased NHA mortgage rates, and the minister assured him that there was no connection between bank rates and mortgage rates, and that in fact conventional mortgage rates had been going down during the last few months. In view of the announcement today that major financial institutions have increased their mortgage lending rates from 9 per cent to 9¼ per cent, would the minister take immediate initiatives to roll back this increase or, like the Minister of Communications did with respect to Bell Canada, stay the action of the banks and lending institutions until further study is made with regard to the increase?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when I said there was no connection it so happens that turns out to be true. My understanding is that the NHA move was made prior to the announcement of the Bank of Canada, and there was no prior knowledge by the national housing administration of the increase in the bank rate by the Bank of Canada. As for rolling back rates, I have already dealt with that so far as it relates to the banks.

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR REVIEW AND STATEMENT ON ECONOMIC POLICIES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. As the action which the Bank of Canada took last week has started a general movement toward the tightening of credit throughout the whole economy, does the minister intend to review this action which the Bank of Canada took last week and would he, at the earliest opportunity on motions, outline to the House just what economic goals and just what economic policies the government is now following in this regard?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Governor of the Bank of Canada made it quite clear that the monetary policy of the bank and of the country remains expansionary. I said to the hon. gentleman the other day that when I appear again on my departmental estimates before the standing committee on Monday night, if there is no contrary engagement here in the House, I will be glad to expand on that.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, does the minister intend to try to convey to the House that he believes rising interest rates do not tighten up credit and that this does not constitute a tight money policy, in effect and in action, whether it is his opinion or not?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have asked a very important economic question which the minister has not answered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hees: Tight money Turner! Tight money Turner! Here we go again with tight money Turner!

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE INCREASE—DROP IN PRICE OF LONG-TERM BONDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. The other day he said in the House that the change in the bank rate would not be reflected in mortgage rates or in the interest rates structure generally. I would like to ask him whether he has taken notice officially of the fact that immediately following the increase in the bank rate the prices of long-term bonds fell, meaning that long-term interest rates went up immediately?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I did, and so did the market, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON INTEREST RATES ON CMHC LOANS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State responsible for housing whether, since increased interest rates are now being charged on money lent on mortgages, he would be prepared to freeze interest rates on all uninsured CMHC loans, that is, loans not guaranteed, to make certain that public housing and low cost housing remain unaffected, because rent increases are now eroding the purchasing power of those on fixed incomes, particularly old age pensioners, from whom we are getting thousands of letters?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already made clear to the House that rentals for senior citizens under the control of CMHC have been frozen, and I have written to the provincial housing agencies with regard to rental rates in public housing developments and sought their co-operation in seeing to it that there are no increases this year. I have been receiving favourable responses from the provinces. However, the interest rates charged by CMHC for the type of loans mentioned in the question are established in the act relative to the government's borrowing rates. That is determined by the legislation.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope I understood the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North for a second supplementary on this subject and then the hon. member for Hamilton West because, from the number of supplementaries being sought on this subject, I suspect that we could again have a full fledged budget debate during the question period.

Mr. Woolliams: As a prelude to my question, I hope the minister is not suggesting that the rates are set out in the act. When the matter comes before the cabinet, for the rates to be set by order in council, will he take the position that these rates of interest on money to be lent for public housing and low cost housing under the new program he has been talking about will be frozen at a rate that will enable people on fixed incomes and pensions to be able to afford shelter?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I think the beneficial interest rate charged by CMHC should be related to the government's borrowing rate. I would have much preferred to have an increase in the budget for very substantial subsidization of rents for senior citizens and public housing.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for immigration regarding the very unsatisfactory state—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Hamilton West. I have to interrupt him because the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on Monday and yesterday, and again today with the hon. member for Shefford, questions were raised with the Minister of Finance regarding a formal communication or sanction of the move by the Bank of Canada. I know Your Honour will realize that the question has been put to the minister before, but the minister has not given a clear answer whether the move means that a restrictive monetary policy is now officially sanctioned government policy. I think the hon. member for Shefford had a very legitimate question and the minister did not answer, or perhaps was not permitted to answer. I think it should be on the record whether this policy has been formally sanctioned in communications between the minister and the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I again apologize to the hon. member for Hamilton West. He has the floor.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD ACT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister responsible for immigration. In light of the very unsatisfactory situation with respect to immigration and the accelerating number of appears, and in order to clear the air, would the minister advise whether in fact he has legislation prepared in order to deal with the appeal board, and how long has it been ready for presentation to the House?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before the committee last Thursday, we hope to present legislation amending the Immigration Appeal Board Act in the very near future, the exact time depending on House business.

• (1500)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. The number of appeals has reached 840 per month, compared with 212 last September. Could the minister advise the House why priority was not given to the presentation of legislation dealing with the appeal board? Why has it been given such low priority in view of this accelerating crisis?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is no low priority attached to this item. As soon as the bill is put on the order paper we will make an effort to have it dealt with as quickly as possible. I do not think that will be likely before the Easter adjournment, but soon after that we ought to be in a position to deal with it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House if this is the same legislation that was presented to the cabinet two years ago and was scuttled by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Hamilton West has a further supplementary on this subject.

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYERS TO CHECK ON EMPLOYMENT VISAS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, it is a related question involving immigration. The minister has tried to clear up a problem that exists regarding employers. We understood that he was going to use a gentle hand with visitors but we found they were placed in jail. He said he would not use a heavy hand with employers. Can the minister advise the House of the situation respecting employers prior to the imposition of the regulations covering employment visas? I believe he has an answer which would clarify the situation.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of an employer is that he may not knowingly employ a person who requires, yet does not possess, an employment visa. It has always been an offence to knowingly induce, aid or abet, or attempt to induce, aid or abet any person to violate a provision of the Immigration Act and the regulations thereunder. On the presumption that employers have not knowingly violated the law prior to March 31, 1973, it is not required that they go back through their employment records to check the legality of their employees prior to that date.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION TO RESTORE RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the transport committee, under the distinguished chairmanship of the hon. member for Crowfoot, by an all-party vote last night recommended that the government restorate rail passenger service in Newfoundland, at the instigation of my colleague the hon. member for St. John's West, does the minister propose to take the necessary action to implement this all-party recommendation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply to the question, but the hon. member for St. John's East knows it is irregular to refer to a decision of a committee or to the proceedings of a committee until a report has been made. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the hon. member's question which I believe is irregular.

An hon. Member: Say yes, Jean.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would rephrase the question and, as a prelude, suggest to the minister that he confer with the distinguished chairman of the committee to find out what went on last night. Is the minister now prepared to expedite a study, which was commissioned by the department, into all phases of ground transportation in Newfoundland; and if that study has been completed, when will the minister report its findings to the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the physical location of the chairman of the committee has nothing to do with my relationship with him. Although I do not know exactly what the committee decided last night, there is no doubt that we will have to study, and ask the CTC to study, the restoration of railway service in Newfoundland.

ROYAL BANK OF CANADA—INCENTIVE TO PROSPECTIVE BORROWERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the bribe of $25 offered by the Royal Bank of Canada to prospective borrowers of $1,000 or more, which was condemned by the Consumers' Association of Canada, can the minister tell the House whether he has investigated this practice and, if so, can he report to the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Trinity raised that point a day or so ago. I relayed the position to the bank.

Mr. Nystrom: Would the minister personally urge the Royal Bank of Canada to stop this irresponsible action? Would he make a recommendation to the bank on behalf of the government?

STATUTORY HOLIDAYS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the most historic holiday we have in Canada, July 1, falls on Sunday this year, and the statute states it must be celebrated on the day on which it falls, can the minister tell the House and Canada on what day the holiday will be celebrated?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the act also provides that when the day is a Sunday the celebration will take place on the following Monday.

MARINE RESOURCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION AT NEXT LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to the Minister of the Environment, I am not sure which. Perhaps the minister responsible will answer. In view of the importance of the next Law of the Sea Conference, which will determine for many years into the future the distribution of our marine resources as well as the development of the mineral and petroleum resources on our continental shelf, is it the intention of the government to make a statement on motions in this House, when convenient, so that members will be aware of the stand to be taken by Canada on this important matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I can undertake on behalf of my colleague and myself to make such a statement, but it is for consideration whether it might not be more useful to give it in one of the standing committees. In any event, we would be prepared to make a statement.

VIET NAM—DISCUSSION WITH MEMBERS OF ICCS RESPECTING RECENT INCIDENTS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Following the incidents which took place recently in Viet Nam, could the minister tell this House whether he has had contacts, through diplomatic channels or otherwise, with representatives of Poland, Hungary and Indonesia, and if so, what have been the reactions of these countries?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had some contact because I sent messages of sympathy to the countries whose nationals had been killed in the same helicopter crash. I have under consideration having discussions with their representatives here or through our representative abroad in those countries as to their reaction to this unfortunate tragedy.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Did the minister protest to the NLF and did he receive any apologies for this incident?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. We have received from the representatives of the Provisional Revolutionary Government an explanation of the event which is the same as the one I gave in my statement to the House in which they claimed that the helicopter was off course and that there was an accident.

GRAIN

DEFINITION OF "PRODUCER" FOR VOTE ON WHETHER FLAX, RAPESEED AND RYE SHOULD BE MARKETED THROUGH WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board supplementary to a question already asked. In view of the mounting interest in western Canada in the forthcoming vote on the marketing of flax, rapeseed and rye through the Canadian Wheat Board, may I ask the minister what the definition or requirements of a voting producer will be?

[Mr. Wagner.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I cannot answer at this stage, Mr. Speaker. We are having discussions with various farm organizations concerning the nature of any questions put, and also the qualifications of voters. There have been suggestions as to two basic types, that it be a vote by rapeseed growers only, on the one hand, or a vote by all permitholders on the other. This is the issue to be resolved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF MEMBER NATIONS OF ICCS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. Have any of the other countries represented on the International Commission of Control and Supervision suggested in any way that as a result of recent events they wish to withdraw from the commission or see it dissolved?

• (1510)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I have received no reports or representations of that kind. The commission, of course, is considering the implications of the tragedy for the operations of the commission itself, but that relates to the deployment of the teams.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

REASON FOR REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF WOMEN MEMBERS AND THOSE WITH BROADCASTING EXPERIENCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. What was the basis of the criterion that the minister used to reduce from two to one, out of a total of 15, the number of women serving with the CRTC, and to reduce from three to two the number of individuals with broadcasting experience?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first, I must say that there is constant disruptions in agencies of this kind. We must always attempt to reach the most perfect equilibrium. I would add for the encouragement of the hon. member that vacancies sometimes occur in the CRTC as in other similar agencies. Even if, at times, there seems to be some disruption, the government keeps in mind that it must be remedied as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the importance of the CRTC to the communications industry in Canada and the quasi-judicial nature of that body, would the minister check with the chairman of the CRTC so that he may assure the House that all commissioners, both full time and part time, appointed to that body did not hold political office at the time of appointment or during appointment?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I think such control devolves upon the minister who makes recommendations to the cabinet, which makes the appointments. I am therefore responsible for this control in the case of the CRTC.

INCOME TAX

DEDUCTION FROM TAXABLE INCOME OF EXPENDITURES INCURRED TO REPAIR DAMAGE TO SHORELINE PROPERTIES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister under active consideration a proposal to allow expenditures undertaken to protect shoreline property from erosion damage as an authorized deduction from taxable income?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take that representation very seriously.

AIR TRANSPORT

CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to indicate whether he will accede to Air Canada's request to eliminate customs pre-clearance for all airlines on April 29 at Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver? If the minister has not yet made a decision, is he taking into account the substantial inconvenience and expense that will be caused to the travelling public and to Canadian business if this request is approved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter we are now discussing. The president of Air Canada is now on his way to Montreal. I hope that in a few days I can give a more precise answer to the House.

AIR CANADA

RESTRUCTURING OF FINANCIAL DIVISION—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN DECISION WHILE EMPLOYEES NEGOTIATING

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have given the minister notice of my question. As Air Canada has just completed a study which could result in the restructuring of the company's financial division, while at the same time the Canada Airline Employees Association is involved in negotiations, will the minister assure the House that no restructuring will take place while these negotiations are in progress?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. However, I cannot see very well the relationship between the two matters he has mentioned. I will make sure that this difficulty does not exist, because employee negotiations and the restructuring of finances are two different matters.

HEALTH

INDEMNIFICATION OF THALIDOMIDE VICTIMS—ALLEGED STATEMENTS BY MINISTER

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

On March 12, the minister stated that certain cases of thalidomide victims in Quebec had been settled by the payment of $3,600 in compensation, and that this compensation did not seem high enough.

On April 4, the minister made a statement on cases yet to be settled, but he made no mention of those where the settlement seems clearly too low and discriminatory.

Can he tell us today whether he has ordered an inquiry into the cases that were settled unfairly?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I never made the first statement for the good reason that I know nothing about the matter.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CAMP VERNON—ACCIDENTAL DEATH OF TWO CHILDREN FROM EXPLOSIVE DEVICE—ACTION TO PREVENT SIMILAR DISASTER

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that concern has been expressed by residents of Vernon, British Columbia, that proper precautions have not been taken to seal off the Camp Vernon training range to prevent further dangerous accidents similar to the one that killed two boys the other day, will the minister have this matter further investigated and make sure that every precaution is taken to provide maximum safety in the future?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. I have told the House that the RCMP are investigating, and we are co-operating fully.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

BASIC RATE OF PENSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON JOINT STUDY REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am getting my monthly nibble. My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of conflicting answers given in the House last week concerning legislation arising out of the joint study report on the basic rate of pension, and the fact that the House leader indicated that legislation would not be introduced before the Easter recess, would the minister make a statement on motions before the Easter recess outlining the government's position on this report?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to answer the hon. member's question, as I indicated to the House last week this question is now before the government. In keeping with government policy, when I have official information it will be released to the House in the normal way.

TARIFF BOARD

QUALIFICATIONS OF RECENT APPOINTEE

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Tariff Board is a quasi-judicial body that is of significance to the economy of Canada, can the minister inform the House of the qualifications of the recent appointee, Mr. Deachman? How is he qualified to serve on the board?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Deachman has been a great public servant—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —who developed his judicial qualities to a very high degree in this House. As a matter of fact, he is replacing a very good former Member of Parliament who was appointed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Can he inform the House whether within his department there is a contingency plan to train public relations men in basic economics?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very good idea and I would be very pleased to enrol the hon. member as one of the first trainees.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. I had hoped that one or two more questions could be asked without supplementaries before we call orders of the day and proceed with a very important item of business which I know hon. members are anxious to discuss.

SHIPPING

DAMAGE TO SHORELINE PROPERTIES ON LAKE ONTARIO AND BAY OF QUINTE BY WASH FROM LAKE VESSELS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is another high-water question but it pertains to his department. I have received complaints from people along the shores of Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinte that the wash from lake vessels under full speed is damaging shoreline properties already vulnerable because of high-water levels. In many cases the wash from these ships is destroying the work already carried out for the protection of buildings and property. Would the minister order that all ships reduce speed within a certain distance from shore, in this emergency situation?

• (1520)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last week I issued a communiqué on this matter. I do not know whether it covers the exact area referred to by the hon. member, but I will check into it so that ships do not destroy the shoreline.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River and then proceed to return to motions.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—PORT DEVELOPMENT STUDIES—REQUEST BY B.C. NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL FOR INFORMATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Has the minister received a request from the Northern Development Council of British Columbia for information concerning studies carried out by his department in connection with port development at Prince Rupert? Have studies been carried out, and has the minister sent a reply to the Northern Development Council?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, studies have been carried out. I do not recall having received a request from the development council which the hon. member has in mind, but I will check this and send them copies of the studies.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we have had some discussion about the matter I raised earlier. It is hoped that the following might appeal to the House. As there will not be enough time today for hon. members to be advised of all the facts on this very interesting subject, it has been suggested that the first speaker for each party might speak for half an hour and all other speakers for 15 minutes. As I understand it, the government will undertake to bring the matter back for one hour's debate, hopefully at the same time as the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, at which time members may be able to come to a decision as to what they want to do and whether there will be a vote.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I accept the first part of the suggestion but I am reluctant to accept the idea that we come back for one hour's debate or set a time limit on the subject matter. I am reluctant to accept the suggestion that if it is talked out tonight there should be that restriction if it is brought back as a result of government initiative.

Mr. Speaker: There is apparently agreement as to the length of speeches. If there is unanimous consent, it will be so ordered.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion has already been put. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) that the second report of the standing committee on Indian affairs and Northern development, presented to the House on April 4, 1973, be concurred in.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I indeed feel privileged to have the opportunity to move this motion to concur in the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is my hope that the government will allow this motion to come to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): The subject we are discussing today deals with the concept of aboriginal title. Today, Mr. Speaker, is the first time this vital matter has been debated in the House; the first time in over 100 years that it has received the attention and consideration of the House as a whole. Why is this? Is it because it was not considered of significance and importance in our earlier history? No, indeed. It is because this is the first time a government has failed to recognize the concept of aboriginal rights and has rejected the concept outright.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Previous governments may have failed to fulfil their obligations to the hundreds of thousands of Indian people, but they never questioned the principle. Not until 1969, following the introduction of the government's white paper on Indian policy when the minister stated that aboriginal claims to land were not realistic, was a Prime Minister of this country to say of this question, and I quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau):

> Our answer, it may not be the right one and may not be the one which is accepted . . . our answer is no.

The issue of aboriginal rights is tremendously important. This is not a fad; this is a fact. By our action in this House we acknowledge the significance and importance of aboriginal rights, not only to members of this House but also to the hundreds of thousands of native people in every province and territory of this country. It is these native people, exhausted with constant questions of what aboriginal rights mean to them, tired of telling us of their attachment to the land which once fed, clothed and housed them, who are watching with interest what we do and say in this House. It is incumbent upon us, therefore, to clarify the confusion which has surrounded the whole question of aboriginal rights in the past few years. Simply stated, aboriginal rights, native title or whatever expression the government is comfortable with is simply the right of an Indian tribe or band to use and occupy their traditional lands.

In recent weeks the government has elaborated on its stance. It has elaborated on, but not clarified, its position. For instance, the Prime Minister said at the time of the Nishga judgment:

> Perhaps you had more legal rights than we thought you had when we did the white paper.

The Progressive Conservatives have no such qualifications—no ifs, no ands, no perhaps's. We will not shirk our responsibility by saying we are merely thinking about the concept. We give wholehearted recognition to the concept of aboriginal rights. I may say, we deplore the failure of the present government to boldly face this issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): The Progressive Conservative Party undertakes to settle fairly the outstanding aboriginal claims of Canada's native people. We intend to work toward a negotiated settlement of disputed treaty and aboriginal claims, and we will do so in full and fair consultation with the native peoples involved.

We should not confuse the issue before this House today. What we are debating today is recognition of the principle of aboriginal rights. We are not debating the machinery that will have to be established to work out these claims, the details of settlements involved, the kind of research that will have to be carried out, who and how many persons are involved or the length of time that will elapse before all claims are settled. None of these important aspects will be solved overnight. But they cannot even begin to be solved until the underlying, fundamental principle of aboriginal rights is accepted—and that is what we are debating today.

Let us take a brief look at the historical perspective of this question. The concept of aboriginal rights or title was developed in the colonial context of North America. The first major colonial power, Spain, did not initially recognize native land rights but gradually came to understand that recognition was necessary on practical and moral grounds. In the sixteenth century, Spain enacted its laws of the Indies which established clear, legal recognition of Indian aboriginal land rights. The leading American legal scholar, Felix Cohen, considered that the recognition of aboriginal title in the United States had its origins in the Spanish precept.

It is clear that the recognition of Indian land rights goes back to the early periods of colonial settlement and represents practical experience that non-recognition led to a real sense of injustice on the part of the native which endangered colonial settlement. Today, that real sense of injustice undermines any attempt to develop programs which can meaningfully respond to the problems of native communities of Canada.

The concept of aboriginal title which was developed in the context of North America was later applied to other colonial areas. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Indian Claims Commissioner, Dr. Lloyd Barber, have all publicly praised the native policies of New Zealand. The concept of legal aboriginal land rights was fully recognized in New Zealand and, as a result, a better foundation for race relations was laid there.

In Australia we see the other face of British colonial policy—a denial of land rights and a refusal to make treaties. This has led to public demonstrations and the need for reopening the issues of aboriginal land rights there. The new commonwealth government in Australia has appointed a commission to make recommendations on the entire question of aboriginal land rights. There is clear evidence that a policy which fails to recognize aboriginal land rights sows seeds of bitterness and distrust.

All we can do, to quote a phrase the Prime Minister often uses, is to try to be just in our time. We must, in our time, attempt to redress the omissions of the past and lay foundations for the future, based on recognition of real legal rights of native people to their historic lands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Let us not try to hide from the fact that as a nation we have proudly proclaimed that we have recognized Indian land rights. Let me quote from a new publication of the Department of Indian Affairs, a booklet entitled "The Canadian Indian—A Brief Outline."

> Early in the settlement of North America, the British sovereign recognized, as a matter of policy, an Indian interest in the lands they occupied—which could be extinguished by agreement with the Indians and only to the Crown.

This is similar to statements made in the past by officials of the Department of Indian Affairs in testimony before joint committees and in written statements by the department.

Over and over again during the treaty period in the west, the commissioners speaking for the crown, and the orders in council appointing the commissioners, refer to an Indian title which had to be extinguished. Mr. Justice Hall, in his judgment in the case of Calder v. Attorney General of British Columbia, states that if treaties were not designed to extinguish aboriginal rights, they were a fraud on the part of the government, and, he said, that was not to be presumed.

The treaties stand as a clear recognition of the aboriginal rights of the Indian people who signed them. They have not always been honoured or fulfilled, but the recognition is there. There are significant areas in this country where no treaties were signed and no reserves established for native communities. Much of this territory was covered by the royal proclamation of 1763 which, by its wording, is a clear recognition of aboriginal rights. It does not purport to create the rights; it assumes the rights exist. I quote:

> And whereas it is just and reasonable and essential to our interests and the security of our colony that the several nations or tribes of Indians with whom we are connected and who live under our protection should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our dominions and territories as, not having been ceded to or purchased by us are reserved to them or any of them as their hunting grounds—

According to Mr. Justice Hall, the royal proclamation applied to Hudson Bay territories, or Rupert's Land, and to lands west of the continental divide. Thus we see that treaties which were entered into as a recognition of native title to the land, and the proclamation of 1763 which assumed the existence of aboriginal rights in vast areas of the country not covered by treaties, provide the legal basis for this concept. The federal government was to remain the trustee for this concept, for when the British North America Act was written, "Indians and the lands reserved for Indians" were included under section 91 which sets out the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

So we see the historical position of the federal government was always one of recognition of aboriginal title. This was always the position,—that is, until the government policy statement of 1969. That statement was considered unjust and threatening by Indian people all across Canada. We are only going to make progress in this difficult area if dealings with the native people are placed on a firm and clear basis and not on the shifting sands of temporary policies and programs which are viewed by the government as gifts which can be given or withheld.

I would like to turn now, Mr. Speaker, to some of the convoluted interpretations this government has brought to our clearly defined historical acceptance of aboriginal rights. As I said, the government has elaborated on its stance in recent weeks but still has not clarified its position. If anything, it was further muddled by the appearance of the minister of indian affairs on a national television show last Sunday. At that time he seemed to be seeking a definition of aboriginal rights. He made it clear he would like to hear from the other parties—and he is hearing from them today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I find it ludicrous that a man who has been minister of Indian affairs for five years should have to ask others for a definition of aboriginal rights. What has he been doing for the last five years, if he hasn't learned that? On the telecast to which I referred, the minister said we cannot have a national aboriginal rights policy because different legal situations exist. He might not be able to adopt a national aboriginal rights policy, but let me tell the minister that every government down through the years has recognized the existence of aboriginal rights. How else can we interpret what has gone on in the past?

Mr. Alexander: Right on.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Some of the rights have been extinguished, others have been abrogated; but their existence was never before denied. However, the government, as the minister said on Sunday on television, is not prepared to present its current position, though it has abandoned the 1969 policy paper it tried to force on the Indian people. The minister told us he is devising a position which the government is now analysing. In the meantime the native peoples wait, and hope to be consulted. What we are seeing in the interim is a series of ad hoc arrangements with no over-all thrust. The government is content to hide behind a smokescreen of individual arrangements, ignoring the fact that Indians, through their brotherhoods and national councils, have repeatedly requested recognition of aboriginal rights.

I would like to mention briefly, Mr. Speaker, the minister's comments at that time in regard to the James Bay situation. He clearly stated in the TV broadcast that the rights of the James Bay Indians were "not based on the large concept of aboriginal rights". He did, however, state that they were basing their claims on the royal proclamation of 1763. Mr. Speaker, if the royal proclamation of 1763 is not a clear recognition of aboriginal rights as proven earlier—as stated by the Supreme Court of this country—what else is it? How can the minister say the James Bay Indians are not basing their claims on aboriginal rights when they point to the royal proclamation of 1763 as one of their guarantees?

Time and again throughout the television program the minister referred to the rights and responsibilities of the provincial government in the James Bay project. I would like to hear him refer just once to the constitutional responsibilities of the federal government to the James Bay Indians. He has not once commented on it or dealt with it. He has evaded the issue, avoided, abdicated, skirted around and brushed aside the fact that the government has constitutional responsibility for the James Bay Indians and their claims as aboriginal citizens. He retreats behind grants of money to pay court costs and the explanation that he might be regarded as paternalistic if the government tried to exercise its constitutional responsibility. Paternalistic—when you have a constitutional responsibility involving the way of life and continued existence of a people to uphold!

The minister has the audacity to say, and I quote: "If the Indians win, you know, the Quebec government will be in a very difficult position". Let me tell the minister that if the Indians win, it is because they and the courts recognize the federal constitutional position, something that the federal government of this country has refused to do. And let me further advise the minister not to spend his time worrying about the position of the provincial government; it is the federal government which will be in a tough spot trying to justify its action or, more importantly, its inaction.

The minister also used this TV appearance to lecture the standing committee about its attitudes. The minister claimed outside the House—not to the committee itself or to the House but outside the House to the national media—that the committee is irresponsible in its attitudes. How is it irresponsible? I suppose it is irresponsible because it seeks to reaffirm the concept accepted in this country since 1763—over 200 years ago—and recognized as a valid concept in this country until 1969. And for that he considers the committee irresponsible.

Has the minister really looked at the resolution? We have recommended the recognition of the concept of aboriginal rights as set out in the paper entitled "Aboriginal Title" presented by the National Indian Brotherhood, which says that where treaties have not extinguished aboriginal title, settlements be made; and that where fair and reasonable compensation has not been provided under the treaties, the original terms be relied on.

Is the minister not prepared to rely on fair treaties? Is that what he is saying? Because if it is, it is about time he considered his own responsibility as a minister of the Crown. The minister might consider the committee irresponsible, but was he not being irresponsible in some of his statements on television in dealing with this highly emotional and sensitive issue? What sort of game is the minister playing when he makes statements like, "If it means we have to renegotiate all the treaties in Canada, there are some cities that perhaps have been built on land that is perhaps not Canadian land"? Who is making such claims? None of the responsible Indian leaders I have been talking to. What is he seeking to do by such extreme statements? Is he trying to create fear and uncertainty among Canadians in order to produce an over-reaction in the country among people who are not sure of the concept themselves because the government refuses to make its position known? The minister must know how easy it is to inflame prejudice.

Further, he said on that program, "There are Indians in B.C. who say B.C. is all Indian land and there should not be a white man there". What kind of irresponsible comment is that? He does not document that statement. Has the minister looked—really looked—at the British Columbia land claim submitted by the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs and which has been sitting on his desk since last July having had no formal answer or analysis? I know he has talked to the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs. I also know that the Prime Minister has said, "Perhaps you have more legal rights than we thought you had when we did the white paper". But what kind of answer is that? Has he really looked at the moderate, reasonable position put forward by the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs? It is not the type of extremist statement he attributed to B.C. Indians on national television. Here are some quotes from their brief:

> We are asking for compensation for loss of those rights of occupancy and use of lands for which loss we have never received compensation and for adjustment of the compensation in those few cases covered by treaties where the compensation was inadequate.
> We rely on the sense of justice of the Canadian people and believe that Canadians will insist that their government recognize and deal with our claims because it is just. We have been deprived of valuable rights which we used to enjoy exclusively and of right, and have been deprived of them without compensation. That is not just.
> We have not set a total value on our claim. Our suggestion is that the claim be accepted in principle and that machinery be established by which it can be valued in detail. And that an award or awards be made of the amount so established.

That is what I call a responsible statement. We were pleased when the government agreed to arrangements for a negotiated settlement with the Yukon Native Brotherhood. Their claim was presented in February. The B.C. claim was submitted last July and they are still waiting.

If the minister wants further indication of the responsibility of the Indian organizations, perhaps he has read the statement to the committee last night of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians, who said they seek redress for unfulfilled treaties through negotiated settlement via an appeal to parliament for fair and reasonable compensation. Their presentation was heartily applauded by all members of the standing committee. And what did it basically involve? A recognition of aboriginal title and compensation for those reserves which have been lost to them over the years, 98 such reserves, regardless of their original treaty rights.

Let me briefly commend the chairman of the committee, the member for London West (Mr. Buchanan), for his clear and forthright statement in London ten days ago when he said that the federal government should recognize the claims of Canada's aboriginal peoples to lands never ceded to the white man through treaties. The native people have a moral claim the government must recognize, the chairman said. I say he is a credit to his party and his committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): That is what we have been talking about—the recognition of the concept so long accepted which will culminate not tomorrow, next week or next year but over a long period of negotiation. In our treaties, under our revered British jurisprudence and through Canadian court decision this valuable concept was never in doubt until this government's white paper of 1969.

[Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands).]

Mr. Speaker, I ask you, what are the alternatives before us? One is to continue the present system. This involves making a people increasingly dependent on a giant bureaucracy which, regardless of its good intentions, has not produced any long-term solutions to an increasingly important issue or seen any significant maximization of the potential of our native people. Are they satisfied with their present status? Are we? Why should they suffer a mortality rate five times the rate for all Canada? Why should their average life expectancy be half that of other Canadians? Their housing is hopelessly inadequate and overcrowded. Their school drop-outs are double those of non-Indians. Their unemployment rate is 80 per cent during the winter and 60 per cent in the summer. Surely the costs, social costs like these, are far more difficult to bear than the settlements the native people seek.

I express my thanks and congratulations to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and to the Secretary of State for the encouragement they have provided in helping the native organizations create the remarkable cadre of leadership which is now emerging. The organizations are now of a calibre where they can produce their own research, their own negotiating teams and their own goals for their people.

There is a second alternative. We must see the settlement of native claims as giving the possibility for laying honourable and decent foundations for the future of native communities. It gives us the chance to put the relationship of the government and the native peoples on the basis of rights, not charity. It gives us the possibility of making social capital available for native communities themselves, under their own control. That gives hope for viable, proud and functional native communities, which surely is the common goal we must all strive for in this country.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed an historic day because, so far as anybody knows, it is the first time a formal proposition has been made to the House in respect of aboriginal rights on which there can be a vote. I think we should appreciate the decision made in the country on October 30 last. At that time the people of this land said they did not want a continuation of the power play concept in parliament and placed upon us the obligation to search ourselves diligently for solutions to many of the long-standing problems people have had, but which have been ignored, and the need to recognize that aboriginal rights fall within this category. Had it not been for the decision of October 30 which resulted in a House of Commons of this construction, I suggest we would not be dealing with this subject matter in this way.

The competition for office that took place prior to the last election resulted in the Conservative party moving from a position of aloofness in this matter to one of commitment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: Hon. members say "Oh, oh" about that, but if they look back a number of years they will find that the Conservative party was aloof and apart from this simple question. As a result of that campaign and the election of October 30, the Liberal party moved from a position of absolute rejection to one of qualified consideration. That is not moving very far. None the less, it moved them from the position of objecting to the recognition of aboriginal rights.

I shall read into the record a statement issued on June 12, 1969, about two weeks before the government white paper on Indian affairs came down. It was introduced and made public in an attempt to influence the government and the minister in the development of that so-called white paper. I will read a few extracts from this policy statement issued by the New Democratic Party. I will not read it all, but it is all available. The words I intend to quote have significance today because they have an even stronger ring of truth today than they had in 1969. The statement commences as follows:

> In dealing with Indian affairs today we must do so with a more intense look at history than has been the case in the past . . . in looking forward and providing redress for the multitude of grievances which our native Indian people have, we must always remember the starting point of those grievances—
> The one basic area in which conflict arose was that which related in a general sense to the culture of the native Indian and how that culture was defeated by the European. Between the two groups there was a very fundamental difference in the concept of nature, of land, of the resources. The native Indian had a spiritual and communal concept of life which the invaders could not have, for their quest was to conquer and to claim and to own all that they came across in the name of their mother country and/or their religion.

It continues:

> The treaties imposed one culture and concept of land on top of another and replaced it.
> The treaties were never drafted, prepared or interpreted from the point of view of the native Indian. In fact, his point of view was never really considered—

It continues, but that is the basis of the declaration we made at that time about the need to recognize aboriginal title or rights. I do not want again to go into the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the fall of that year, in which he said absolutely no. It has been quoted by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the minister and the government know of it. I think it is worthwhile to put on the record a statement which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) made in June of last year after he had an opportunity to reflect upon the 1969 white paper position. When speaking of the rejection by the Indian people of the white paper he had introduced on June 26, he said:

> They rejected them on the grounds that they gave no recognition to special rights and status for Indians.

He then made statements as to reasons for the rejection of the white paper and wound up with this very significant declaration:

> If the government had shown willingness to entertain Indian concepts of aboriginal rights and had in place a cultural program to strengthen and reinforce Indian pride in self, their attitude to the proposals might have been different and probably much more favourable.

That was a recognition, in June of last year, by the minister that he and his government had been wrong in 1969 in rejecting the idea of aboriginal rights. On this very day the alternatives or choices available to us are these: First, we can stand and be counted in a vote on this particular motion, declaring ourselves in favour of aboriginal rights. We can recognize aboriginal title. Second, we can continue to debate the motion till the hour of six o'clock, at which time it will slip from its position on the order paper and come under the authority of government orders. Then at the initiative of the government it will be brought forward again or buried forever. Taking into account what happened in the committee on the night this motion was passed there, I accept the prospect that it will be talked out. This will be an indication that the government and the whole of the Liberal party do not want to stand and be counted on the question of aboriginal rights.

I make that assumption on the fact that the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), on the day this motion was before the committee, put his hand on the paper presented by the National Indian Brotherhood and said, "I can accept this. There's nothing wrong with this, and I agree with it". The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) did the same thing; he said, "Certainly we can all agree with this". Then when the vote came in the evening, the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo denied his own inheritance by abstaining from the vote on a so-called, but spurious, procedural ground. I suggest the action taken then by Liberal members of the committee will show itself again today in the fact that those hon. members will talk out this motion. We are prepared to accept that that might happen.

• (1600)

I am prepared right now, if the House would agree, to sit down and we could vote. I will gladly do that. Someone suggested that from the other side. If I could obtain a commitment now from hon. gentlemen on the Liberal benches who were silent on that proposition, could we put the question now, Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent? The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development says no. I will gladly relinquish my time to the minister so that he may speak for the whole 40 minutes. We could vote after he had spoken. Is there agreement to that?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Howard: The minister again says no. An hon. gentleman over here says no, too. He said no in the committee, but never mind that. They say no. It is on the record that the Liberal party does not want to vote on this. They are afraid of it and want to continue to talk out of both sides of their mouths about aboriginal rights.

An hon. Member: Another 100 years.

Mr. Howard: I hope they do not last that long. If we look back, history will show some fundamental things that have happened in respect of aboriginal title. When the explorers from Europe came to this land, they brought with them a different concept of land title than that which existed and which was in the minds and understanding of the native Indian people who lived in this land. The European brought with him the concept of land ownership that was mixed up in a piece of paper and attached to the individual. Before that time and since that time, because this feeling still exists among the Indian people, on the question of aboriginal rights and title—and that is what this question is all about—the concept the Indian person had and still has about land is that it is a communal ownership and we are only custodians of that land for future generations. We only have the use of it and its resources while we are here, and have no right to destroy it in our use of it and thus deny future generations the same approach to it that we have.

There was a spiritual feeling about land. The feeling the native Indian people had about land was one that made it in tune with nature. There was a feeling, which varied from tribe to tribe, of an interchangeability of life and various forms of life. There was a religious feeling about land, about aboriginal title and about the use of land and its resources. There was respect for life forms which does not exist in our society in North America today. There was a companionship about the land, about what it encompassed and about the life of the human being.

When the European came with his greediness, his pieces of paper, his guns and his different religion—with missionaries paving the way—he brought into force a more demeaning concept of land ownership and title. The native Indian person, in the eyes of the explorer, the European, was a subhuman; he was not considered to be a person. Some while ago I was reading about the time that British Columbia was about to enter confederation. I read the debates which took place in this House of Commons prior to 1871. The debate that took place right here revolved partly around the number of Members of Parliament to be elected from the new province of British Columbia, and the number of senators to be assigned to it as it entered confederation.

The people who stood up in this House and debated whether or not the relationship in respect of the number of Members of Parliament and senators to the population of British Columbia was correct or not, in all instances said they were excluding the native Indian population in that province because they had never been counted as people in determining representation in the House of Commons. That was the attitude prior to 1871 about a group of people who have far more integrity and pride than most members in this chamber. They have greater respect for their history and their inheritance than many members in this chamber. But that was the attitude which existed at that time. They were looked upon the same as one looks upon the trees in the forest—as a resource, not as human beings.

Since that time society has perpetuated this attitude, has carried it forward and has ignored the rights of the Indian people in the process. I say that surely today we are more enlightened. Surely today we have more respect for the positions and rights of human beings. Surely we have an obligation today to deny those ancient mistakes. Surely we have an obligation to our integrity and to that of the native Indian people to correct those abuses and the neglect of people.

A responsibility rests upon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, a responsibility set out within the British North America Act and a responsibility set out in the proclamation of George III in 1763. There was a responsibility on the founding fathers of this nation to carry into effect and to respect the principal declarations contained within the proclamation of 1763. Yet the founding fathers of this nation ignored them. However, just because that happened is no reason for the minister continuing to ignore his bounden responsibility, under the constitution, to the Indian people.

We cannot return to the past; we cannot go back 100 years or 200 years and start at the bottom. It is not possible. We are here today. This is where we must commence. We cannot erase the calendar, turn back the clock or say we wish it were otherwise. I think we must admit a couple of very simple, historical facts of life, and in admitting those we will recognize aboriginal title. I think we must recognize those historical facts of life, not in a legal sense as the Prime Minister demands and as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development apparently demands, but in a moral sense as our conscience demands. We appeal to the government on that basis.

It is an historical fact of life that aboriginal rights and aboriginal title to land were not extinguished in some areas. There were no wars, no positions and no treaties. They still exist. If we recognize they still exist, that is all this motion asks us to do. It is a fact of life in those areas that it was simply a matter of imposition and encroachment by the European on the area under the domain of the native Indian. It is also a fact of life that the treaties are extremely sad documents. They were written in a language which the native person could not understand and could not read. They were interpreted to him by an interpreter, and he was asked to sign something he could not read and which was written in a language other than his own. He had no idea what they contained except his bounden faith and trust in people that what he was told was what would be contained in what he signed, or to what he put his "X". History shows that he was misled into thinking something was going to take place, and it did not.

It is a fact of life that the treaties imposed, without explanation, one concept of land on top of another. The treaties were endorsed and supported by the army and the church, with all the force and the power that the Crown, the kings and queens of England, could muster at that time. If the treaties extinguished any land titles, they extinguished them by theft, by subterfuge, and nothing else. And where there were no treaties, it was just straight theft, with indifference to the position of the Indian people.

This motion simply asks that we declare that we recognize aboriginal title and rights. The minister, in this program on Sunday, asked the opposition to tell him what they think about aboriginal rights, to give him some guidance and to spell it out for him. That is insulting and presumptuous on the minister's part and carries with it the old concept of his party and his government, that he knows best what is right for the Indian people.

I am not the least bit interested in trying to spell out aboriginal rights, because I do not think it is the function of this parliament to make one-sided decisions and then approach the Indian people and tell them, "These are our decisions. Do you agree or not?" We have been doing that for hundreds of years. I say we should simply recognize the historical facts which I mentioned previously. Aboriginal rights existed. They were not extinguished. We should sit down honourably with the people affected and identify with them what those rights are, spell them out and seek to negotiate with respect to them.

Parliament today is in an unique position, a position that as far as I know it has never before been in. Parliament has before it an opportunity to recognize the abuses and the neglect of the past and to set a course of redress for the future. The burdens arising from our history cannot any longer be carried on our conscience. We must no longer permit ourselves to hide from our obligations nor to deny the spiritual and cultural inheritance of the native peoples. Qualified consideration of aboriginal rights, of aboriginal title, is not enough. It is not strong enough; it is not honest.

This parliament, today, without seeking to talk the matter out, without seeking to go beyond six o'clock and to deny an opportunity for the matter to come back again only if it suits the convenience of government, must demand of itself the unselfish act of searching its own conscience, its own heart, its own integrity and declare that the native peoples of this land have aboriginal rights, have an aboriginal title. Surely nothing less than that kind of honourable declaration should be expected from a group of men and women who themselves carry the title of "honourable."

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this debate, which seems to me to be very important, for as I listened to the two previous speakers and to passed debates of various length, especially since the beginning of this session. I have realized that there are problems not just in the field of Indian affairs, but also concerning "land ownership" which had until now been attributed to the Indians, to the aborigines.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, this is not a new problem, and it does not apply just to one area of Canada, but to the whole country, and even if I am not too well informed of what is going on in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the other provinces, I think I know a bit more about what is happening in the province of Quebec and in the eleventh province, which I represent, Abitibi.

Mr. Speaker, there is at the moment large scale development in this area, all of it in territory that belongs to the Indians, to the natives. There as elsewhere, the problem is that the government of Quebec simply told the natives: Move over, we are coming!

Mr. Speaker, the House should pay close attention to this point, and the federal government may be right in fearing an almost inevitable confrontation with the government of Quebec, for it is only recently that the province of Quebec has tried to take an interest in the Indians and to do anything for them. In fact, this only goes back as far as the quiet revolution of the Hon. Jean Lesage. A liberal minister who has since been elected leader of an opposition party and who is now sitting in the National Assembly indicated himself that it was time that Quebec looked after the Indians in its territory, but that interest ran short and was of little profit for the Indians.

I have here a newspaper clipping from La Presse; it is an editorial by Mr. Guy Cormier dated Tuesday, July 16, 1968 which recalls statement by Indian chiefs on that subject. The article reflects the concern of the Indian chiefs at that time. Since then, we know that the government of Quebec put the Department of Natural Resources in charge of Indian and Eskimo affairs and the Indians, the interested party did not waste time to voice their opinion through their chiefs. Here are the words of chief Andrew Tanakokate Delisle:

> Quebec also wants to look after the Indians? We will have more offices . . . where as usual, nobody takes responsibilities . . . We are tired to go from an office to another. All we want is to deal with responsible people. Moreover, I note once more that decisions are made without consultation. They talk about our rights. But, in my opinion, the ones who are in a position to speak of Indian rights in this province are the Indians themselves.

Mr. Speaker, when the decision was made by the government of Quebec to develop that large area of the James Bay basin for building a hydroelectric complex, they forgot to consult those most directly affected in that area. They acted with lightning speed merely to fulfil an election promise: new jobs had to be created and it was urgent.

Another chief, the one from Sept-Iles, showed a reaction still less pleasant than that of chief Delisle. Here is what he said:

• (1620)

> Among all provinces, Quebec comes first as far as segregation is concerned . . . If Quebecers, a minority in Canada, wish to be respected, let them begin by respecting the minorities close to them.

Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat the history of the province of Quebec and of Cnada in general. I will limit myself chiefly to the province of Quebec and the James Bay development project, because that question is now in the limelight.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the intelligence of the Indian people should not be under-estimated. Let us not think that the Indians are not cunning. They are aware of the property they used to have.

That vast undevelopped territory may seem unimportant to white people, but if it were developped, we would be surprised to see the wealth it contains. It is not my intention at this stage to give details, as it was done on other occasions and we might have the opportunity to come back to that.

But the fact remains that the inhabitants of that area are aware of the situation. Indeed, the James Bay Indians know very well that they will never be able to stop hydro electric development in that area, especially when it has already been decided by Americans. Nevertheless they want to get at least a compensation for the territory they will lose.

Land has been expropriated for the Forillon park in Gaspesia; I will not question the amount paid but at least we have been paying. Land has been expropriated to develop the Valcartier military base. Once more, we have been paying. Land has been expropriated to build the Sainte-Scholastique Airport and once again, we have been paying.

If land is needed to build hydroelectric plants, we must pay. Let us expropriate, fair enough, but the land should be paid for. Perhaps the land is not as expansive as in other more developped areas but in view of the huge territory which we propose to take from the Indians, I think they should be adequately compensated.

In the February 1972 issued of Le Québec Industriel, it is reported and I quote:

The James Bay area is a huge territory whose southern limits are some 300 miles from Montreal and the northern limits over 800 miles away. More precisely, the area extends westward to the Ontario border, southward to the 49th parallel, northward to the 55th parallel and eastward to the highwater line separating the Hudson Bay basins from those of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Its longest east-west dimension exceeds 400 miles. The total areas of this region is about 125,000 square miles or almost one fifth of the whole province or again more than the four Maritime provinces put together.

And this is only a small part of the federal constituency of Abitibi.

It is all that territory, 125,000 square miles, that is being hit, that the Quebec government expropriated to create under Bill 50 that huge municipality known as the James Bay municipality and which includes the towns of Chibougamau, Chapais, Matagami, Joutel and in the western corner the rural municipalities of Villevois, Val Paradis and Beaucanton; the municipality covers the whole basin to be used for that hydroelectric development.

Mr. Speaker, it is all that territory that is being taken away in one shot from the Indians living in that area. Some say that they are not numerous, roughly 6,000, but that territory is important to them. They own it by right. It is theirs. It is obvious that the project is important but as I said a while ago the Indians know quite well that they will not be able to, and they do not want to, stop that development. But since that territory is theirs they want to benefit from it and I agree with them on that.

In the daily La Frontière of September 25, 1968, there was an article by André Dionne. It is a very interesting article. It deals with the claims of the Indians and there is even concern because it is thought that Indians will claim more and take action to have their rights asserted. It is not known exactly how far that could go. I quote from the paper:

The vast movement of conscience which characterizes the Indian people of Canada will soon give rise to claims they consider essential to their survival.

Talking only about those living in Quebec, they will very soon submit claims to the government of Quebec—

That was written in 1968, it was already started. It goes on to say:

Those territories are so vast in the province of Quebec alone that a very summary and partial assessment could run up to $4 billion.

That is about the amount Chief Max Gros-Louis put forward not too long ago.

It goes on to say:

The Quebec Indian Association which represents most of the 26,000 Indians of Quebec regards land rights as basic rights. Thus, it is the first stage.

[Mr. Laprise.]

To this end, the Indians have prepared the draft of a brief to be presented soon to the government of Quebec.

Through these negotiations, the Indians can get fair compensation for all the territories which have been taken from them since the 1760 Capitulation, as well as some other rights linked to territories and also for some territories which are not occupied.

During the conquest, French people held only a strip of land along the St. Lawrence valley. The rest of the Quebec territory was held by Indians who owned it, except for the northern part which was held by Eskimos.

On these Indian territories, white men exploit the most important natural resources, namely mines and forests.

The legal aspect.

One of the first arguments and probably the most basic: aboriginal rights.

Legal documents state that aboriginal rights are real rights; moreover, it is a right to the land, a right which confers Indians a legal title.

A second legal text reveals that the Indians or native people undoubtedly owned by right a real territory (real property) in the public and private meaning of the word.

Moreover, these territories were "occupied" in the legal meaning of the word: they were divided by real frontiers.

Each of those areas was entirely occupied by a band.

Mr. Speaker, those texts show without a doubt that the native people have some rights which must be upheld and which no government can repeal without any compensation.

Mr. Speaker, the debate deals today with the integrity of the territories rightfully belonging to the native people and I feel that this right must be recognized.

In a recent statement of the minister to the committee, he scarcely referred to the present conditions in Quebec as a result of the James Bay hydroelectric development.

It seems to me that up to now, this government as well as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) did not want to commit themselves more than necessary. They would rather let the native people fend for themselves and provide the necessary funds for their defence.

I wonder whether we could not go so far as to force the government of the province of Quebec to abide by the treaties concluded when the territory was granted through a confederation Act.

Mr. Speaker, I shall go no further with my comments at this stage, but I feel that the proposal submitted to the committee by Georges Manuel, President of the National Indian Brotherhood of Canada, should be concurred in.

• (1630)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am happy this afternoon to have the opportunity to participate in this important debate because, having been in my portfolio for five years, I have been involved in many discussions about Indian rights. It is always with great pleasure that I discuss them because, of course, as usual it is evident that the opposition parties are trying to catch up with what the government has already done. They just do not understand. They are always confused and it is important for us once in a while to come back here and tell them what is going on.

Today the opposition tried to ask the House to pass a motion relating to a committee report. The members of the committee, as I said on television, were entitled to expand a bit on the concept involved and to ask a few questions. There is a lot of sense in the proposition put forward by the president of the National Indian Brotherhood, and some questions have to be put by members of the committee. Of course, some questions are not answered by the report, and some implications relating to this matter were not clear in the minds of members of the committee.

However, I think the members of the committee were entitled to ask a few questions and to listen to other groups of Indians in Canada expressing their views. They were entitled to ask other people what they thought about this question and to see what could be done in some provinces about the situation. Everyone knows that not all provinces of Canada entered into confederation at the same time, and different legal situations exist in British Columbia, on the Prairies, in Quebec, in Ontario and in the Maritimes. Certainly there are many implications in this question. It is easy to be in favour of motherhood, and just as easy to say that the recognition of aboriginal rights is a simple matter.

We have already recognized in this land the rights of Indians and we have acted as never before. As recently as last week we established a committee to negotiate the rights of the Indians in the Yukon. Never before was this done. Between 1957 and 1962 the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was in this House. How did he vote on this question? When his party was in power it completely ignored the situation.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Oh, come on.

Mr. Chrétien: Never before was there a discussion with Yukoners about native rights. Only since last Friday was the committee established to negotiate the rights of natives in the Yukon. For years and years nobody could find a way around some of the difficulties. This government for the first time has found a way to sit down with the Indians in the Yukon, try to correct the problems there and come to an acceptable agreement. We are not only talking, like members of the opposition. When they see that we have made a good move, they come to this House and try to catch up with what is going on. We are not taking our time in talking. We are taking action which will solve the problems of the Indians in Canada.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Oh, come now.

Mr. Chrétien: Just a moment. It hurts to hear the truth, does it not? We are also talking about the B.C. land question. Perhaps the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) can help me in asking that provincial government to recognize the rights of the Indians in the Nishga area. The Indians who obtained a decision from the Supreme Court came to me a few weeks ago and asked me to speak to the B.C. government and claim some of that land for them. I have done so already. I was in B.C. as recently as ten days ago and discussed this matter with the provincial government. I hope the hon. member for Skeena will talk to them too. It is easy for him always to say that he is possessed of all wisdom. I remember only too well that when I was in the House in 1969 to explain the new policy on Indian affairs, the hon. member for Skeena rose and said that the policy was all right; the only thing wrong with it was that it was 25 years too late. Many hon. members heard that. However, when he saw there was disagreement with the Indians, he changed his mind once more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: It hurts does it not?

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you should let the minister make false statements in the House.

An hon. Member: You are not challenging the statement, are you?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing how the hon. member for Skeena, who likes to attack in debate, cannot accept facts. A few weeks after the announcement, when he learned that the Indians were not happy about some aspects of the policy, he did a complete somersault and said everything was wrong.

Mr. Howard: That is not true, Jean.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes it is true. Just read Hansard and you will find out.

Mr. Howard: I have.

Mr. Chrétien: I can send you your statement. The same thing happened with the Tory party. The House leader of the Tories criticized the policy.

Mr. Stanfield: I criticized it myself.

Mr. Chrétien: He said it was too late and that we should have done this a long time ago.

Mr. Stanfield: We said it was wrong, too.

Mr. Chrétien: Never was that said.

Mr. Stanfield: I said it myself.

Mr. Chrétien: No, Sir. I can look back at Hansard to verify that.

Mr. Stanfield: Well, look back.

Mr. Chrétien: There speaks another guy who cannot stand being criticized. I do not know what he will do if he is elected. He cannot stand complaints.

Mr. Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Just try us.

Mr. Chrétien: I do not know who will vote for the hon. member; his party has just lost six points in popularity, according to the Gallup poll.

We are going to talk to the B.C. government and try to establish a policy because we recognize that in B.C. the land has not been covered by treaty and that in some parts of the province the Indians are claiming more land.

They have come to me. I have received them. The government has agreed that we should discuss this with the B.C. government in order to get those Indians some land. They want to have the lands they now occupy. The hon. member for Skeena has conveyed to this House very well the attachment the Indians have for that land. That is why I went to B.C. I wanted to try to correct some of the wrongdoing of the past. I hope the hon. member, who belongs to the party which is governing in British Columbia, will help so that we may make progress there.

When the Nishga people decided to go to court, their action was not against the federal government; it was against the B.C. government. Now the decision has been handed down by the Supreme Court and the government of the day in that province will have every occasion to prove that they support the concept that the hon. member for Skeena has talked so much about. When you are not in power you can make statements like those the hon. member has made. On the other hand, we have done something about the question and we will continue to take action.

Let me now refer to the claim to land title brought by the B.C. Indians. This is another matter I raised with the B.C. government when I was there. I wanted to see what kind of mechanism could be introduced. Everyone knows that it is not possible for the federal government to give back to Indians in any province some land, because lands within a province are controlled by the provincial government. It is not me who decides that land within the borders of a province is provincial Crown land; it is in the Canadian constitution.

I wish to illustrate some of the difficulties we face when trying to resolve these problems. We are not just making speeches in this House. I wish to point out what we have done, what we are ready to do and what we will do. We will keep on working to resolve these difficulties.

• (1640)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I am very proud to see the Indians appear before a committee of this House and make representations such as they have. I am also proud of the fact that the Indian associations are functioning well. The first time in Canadian history that the Indians received any help to become organized and put their needs before the Canadian public and the government was when we started to give them grants to organize. We provided funding money so that they could come before the Canadian government and state their case.

It is easy to make broad, sweeping statements, but I wish to again state the point I made over television last Sunday. The situation is not the same everywhere. Everyone knows that. We would be hiding our head in the sand if we claimed that one Indian policy and one Indian title could solve all the problems. I have been confronted with many different aspects of the problems.

British Columbia was a colony before entering confederation. Crown land was then in the hands of the provincial government. When the Prairies became provinces, the Indians received land from the federal government. There were other types of government in the Maritimes and Quebec long before confederation. This created another legal implication. I do not want to be legalistic about this. It is a fact of life. These aspects cannot be dealt with in isolation. You have to look at the problem and make a decision, such as was made by this government, that you will resolve the problems. We will go all out to find a solution that is acceptable to the different areas of Canada. There has been talk about the James Bay project. I am ready to talk about that.

Mr. Fraser: It is too late.

Mr. Chrétien: It is not too late.

Mr. Davis: It is never too late.

Mr. Chrétien: That case is now before the courts. After negotiating with the Quebec government, the Indians decided to go to court. They were not happy with the response they received from the Quebec government. I said this in this House, I said it to the Quebec government and I repeat it today—the best course the Quebec government could have followed would have been to offer a generous settlement along the lines asked for by the Indians. The Indians are still asking for that. We have helped these Indians. Their problem is now before the court. We have financed them all along. We provided them with expert advice and put at their disposal all the documents we have. Do members opposite want me to go before the court in their place? I do not want to do that.

There is also the case of the Nishga Indians of British Columbia. They went to court on their own. They did not even ask the federal government for assistance. At one point I offered financial help. They informed me that they could finance their own case. They did not accept the money. They felt they had a good case and could defend themselves. A decision was handed down by the Supreme Court. Following that, I was asked to intervene with the British Columbia government. Ten days ago I explained the problem to that government. I hope we can come to terms with the British Columbia government because the Indians are asking for land, not money.

There was also a claim by other groups of Indians in British Columbia who have not signed treaties. I have started talks with the British Columbia government because the cut-off land question was made by the provincial government at the beginning of the century. Those problems have never been resolved. It is a completely different problem and I will have to find another mechanism. We have agreed to negotiations in the Yukon. The mechanism has already been established. I hope it will be a framework for a solution that can be accepted elsewhere in Canada. We cannot move on this for political reasons, as some people claim.

One Indian leader who appeared before the committee was flabbergasted because the committee members did not ask any questions. They wanted to have a vote right away. The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) said that he would at least like the privilege of being able to read the document. Five minutes before the vote, he was delivered a French copy. Members opposite claim they want to defend the minority. Was it an unreasonable request by a member of this House, who does not speak English, to read the document before the vote?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is at least misleading for the minister to raise the inference in this House, as unfortunately members of his party did in committee, that there was an instance of prejudice against French-speaking members of that committee. In fact, what was done by myself and my colleagues sitting in that committee was that we went out of our way to delay the vote. We agreed to delay the vote until the evening, in order that there might be an opportunity for the resolution and the document on which it was based to be brought forward in both official languages. I very much resent the slur on the conduct—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order. The hon. member will be recognized following the minister. If the hon. member thinks there should be some elaboration by way of debate, he can raise his point at that time. I must again ask, on behalf of other occupants of the chair and myself, that members do not use the words "point of order" to raise points which are really points of debate. This practice is becoming more and more unfair as this session continues, especially when a member knows he will be recognized and will have the opportunity to make distinctions regarding what is said by the member who has the floor.

Mr. Chrétien: As I said earlier, I think this debate today is just an attempt to try to patch up the actions of the government.

Mr. Dinsdale: What action?

Mr. Chrétien: To set up committees, to negotiate human rights in the Yukon and to negotiate the rights of Indians with the British Columbia government. That is action, not debate. Over the past five years we have helped the Indians of Canada to put their case. This was not possible previously. We have developed a mechanism of consultation that did not exist before.

Each year we spend $7 million to help the Indians get organized, travel, put their case and have discussions among themselves. We have tried to decentralize. Many people say that we have not made any progress. We have made a lot of progress, and the Indians recognize this. When I became minister of this department there was a white man in every reserve in Canada who told the Indians what to do. This system has been changed. Band managers are now appointed by the individual bands. We have established management courses for those who head the bands. Indeed, a large part of the budget of the Department of Indian Affairs is now administered by the Indians themselves.

We have done our best. Of course, many problems remain. There is nothing more difficult than to face social problems like that every day. One tries to catch up, but it seems one will never succeed in doing so because of the magnitude of the problem. There is one thing of which I should like to remind the House. When I became minister in 1968, the budget was $120 million. This year, five years later, it amounts to $330 million. I heard the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) say something about a great bureaucracy. I am glad to be able to destroy that myth. The number of civil servants in the Indian affairs branch has not increased in the last five years, if one excludes the teachers. There is nothing I can do about the number of teachers because more children are going to school and we have to provide more teachers for them. But excluding the educational side, there are fewer civil servants in the branch than there were in 1965.

This reflects progress, because the Indians are now taking responsibility upon themselves. In a couple of places on the Prairies there are school boards entirely run by Indians. They operate the schools, hire the teachers, and so on. I hope to place before the committee very soon a new education policy. It is based on a positive study, and it has been the subject of discussion with the National Indian Brotherhood. We have agreed on a new Indian education policy. This is real progress. It is not only talk. It is much more than that. I believe we shall continue to progress.

This question of Indian rights is very important, of course. There is a lot of emotion surrounding it. I am glad everyone agrees that we should recognize Indian rights in this land. We have already done so. But there are some very far reaching implications which prevent our going too fast or in too many directions at the same time. We are trying to establish the right course of action, not only in theory but in practice. In the Yukon I am very hopeful we can come up with a solution which will be a pattern for the rest of Canada, that is, for the Indians who have not signed treaties.

Mr. Howard: That is what is wrong with it.

Mr. Chrétien: I understand that yesterday a very good brief was presented to the committee on this very point. Some of the Indians are very emotional about their treaties and do not want those treaties to be changed. Others say the treaties should be renegotiated. There are questions which can legitimately be asked. I believe the committee should go into these aspects before making recommendations. I believe it should not simply make recommendations in general terms after deliberating for five minutes. There are questions to be asked of the Indian leaders about some of the implications. It is not an easy matter. I have lived with this problem for five years. In one part of Canada there is one interpretation of the value of a treaty. In other parts there is another interpretation.

We have said we shall respect the Indian treaties, and we have established a mechanism to help the Indians to obtain remedies from the Crown for the wrongdoing of the Crown. Already we have begun to settle some of these claims. For example, Commissioner Barber has so far negotiated at least 12 different treaty claims with the Indians. One of those has been settled and paid—I think it is with the Blood Indians of southern Alberta. This is something positive, a mechanism which has not been available for a long period. At first, the Indians were somewhat uneasy about the role of Commissioner Barber. Indeed, it was 18 months before he could really start doing his job. This is not because of fault or shortcoming on the part of anyone. It is because there is a big gap of misunderstanding between the white society and the Indians in this land. That is why it is not possible to do anything too quickly.

What I have always avoided doing is creating a situation in which we appear to promise the Indians that we can solve all their difficulties in one shot. That would be misleading. For too long the Indians were told so many things, given so many undertakings, promise and commitments which were not carried out.

Mr. Yewchuk: Especially in the last five years.

Mr. Chrétien: Look at the facts. In the last four years the committee has researched some of the problems thoroughly and come up with a number of good solutions. They took the work seriously and there was very little partisan politics in that committee. Perhaps I used too strong an expression when I spoke on the television program, but I do not believe that five minutes after receiving a brief certain members of the committee should accept it in its entirety without analysing the implications. That is not in accordance with my concept of the way in which a committee should function. It serves no purpose except to score political advantage. I should like the committee to consider all the aspects involved, more especially since, I am happy to say, there is not a member in this House who does not think the wrongdoing of the past should be corrected.

This is what we are doing at the present time. This is the purpose of our discussions with the Yukon Indians, with the Indians of British Columbia and elsewhere. In Quebec, of course, the case is before the courts and it is difficult for me to comment upon the situation. I think the action taken by the Indians there is the consequence of a mature decision reached among themselves. They kept me informed all along of what was happening, and I kept them informed all along of my intentions. They decided to go to the courts and I am satisfied they have put forward a very impressive case. It is up to the courts to decide the issue.

I would not reverse the position I have taken all along that the Indians in Quebec and elsewhere have been reasonable. They have not systematically opposed any development. They wanted participation. They wanted compensation. They wanted meaningful opportunities as a result of this development. And since the Quebec government did not come through with proposals positive enough to satisfy them, they decided to fight their case in the courts. We, as a government, have helped them—and the Indians have not complained about the help given to them. When a decision is made by the court, our advice will be available. It would be premature for me to say anything further at this time, except that in cases of this sort it is better to settle out of court than to go to court. I say this because I think a good settlement is possible, one which will bring advantages to both parties.

Mr. Speaker, I should not like to go on speaking, knowing that many hon. members want to express their views.

As I said at the start, we have already made great progress in recognizing all treaty Indians. We have said and we repeat that we intend to observe those treaties and fulfill our commitments and in such cases where we did not do so, or cheated the Indians the government has stated that it will do its very best to right these injustices. That is why Commissioner Barber and myself are ready to deal with any cases submitted to us in due time and place, and we have already begun to do so.

Concerning non-treaty Indians, on the basis of the rights acquired by them in 1763 as a result of the Proclamation by King George III, the government feels that their problems must be solved equitably. This is a new start in that field, something that has never been done before. We have already started negotiations with the Yukon Indian Association. We have started discussions with the government of British Columbia with a view to setting up tripartite consultation mechanisms to solve the problem of the rights of the Indians who did not sign a treaty in that province.

I trust that different situations elsewhere in Canada can be solved through negotiations based on the fundamental principle of the Proclamation of 1873 which gave the Canadian government instructions that we must follow. That is why we have undertaken negotiations with some Canadian provinces which we intend to pursue until such time as we can collectively offer the Indians, as all other Canadians, an acceptable solution.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the members of the committee on Indian affairs and northern development were right in wanting to study this document in depth, to hear the views of several experts on the matter, instead of merely trying to use this controversial debate to score a few political points.

I for one feel that the committee should go back to work and study once again the overall effects of this document. I know the advisors of the government and others have—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the minister permission to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not agreed.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want to be difficult, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps we could give the minister another minute.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that I should like the committee to make a thorough study of those concepts and to look at all the implications in the different provinces in order to see what can be done in a non-partisan way. After all, there is nothing to gain from being partisan. I wish the House of Commons and this parliament would deal very seriously with the question and back me up if I do something that is right. During the five years I have spent in my present department, I have not found things too easy. But with the help of the House we may still make a lot of progress in this field.

We have tried to offer some concrete solutions, and I hope that in our further study we will not become confused with different terms and with the semantics of the problem. We must try to correct any wrongdoings of previous administrations and offer the Indians a fair deal. Unfortunately, a lot of the implications we cannot escape. This is why I cannot agree with all the briefs that the Indians have presented. After all, these are negotiating positions and they do not expect us to accept them in their entirety. Their submissions are the basis for negotiation, and when your are negotiating you do not ask for the minimum but for the maximum. The committee could probably help me achieve a balanced judgment that would serve the best interest of all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) wishes to ask a question, but he will need the consent of the House since the time allotted to the minister has expired.

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Speaker, it was extended. Would the minister agree to answer a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister's time had been extended, but that does not necessarily imply that all hon. members have the right to ask questions. Does the House agree that the hon. member for Skeena has the right to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not agreed. The hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think that since all parties in the House have now had an opportunity to express their views on this resolution, and since we are all anxious that it be brought to a vote as quickly as possible, if there is agreement in the House that we now proceed with the vote I am prepared to sit down.

Mr. Lalonde: If you have anything to say, say it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I was not in the chair when the hon. member made his proposal, so would he please repeat it?

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my proposal was that if it was agreeable to the House that we proceed immediately with the vote, I will surrender my time and sit down now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member might make that suggestion, but it is not the responsibility of the Chair to find out whether another hon. member wishes to speak. I do not think the procedure that we have followed in the past should be forgotten, namely, that any member of the House is entitled to express his view on any subject matter before the House. If the hon. member wants to take the risk of not participating in the debate, he can do so.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I take it that my hon. friend in the Liberal ranks is rising to speak and thus prevent a vote by talking the motion out, so I shall proceed.

I was interested to hear the minister say that his government had recognized the rights of the native people as never before. I am moved to comment that his method of recognition is so original that it is invisible. Certainly he has not been in touch with very many of the native groups which have made special recommendations. I have just had a note that the Union of British Columbia Chiefs have yet to hear from this government. Although the minister said he has been in touch with the province of British Columbia in regard to their representations, he has not been in touch with the native people themselves.

I also think it was a signal accomplishment for the minister to be able to speak beyond his time in this House without referring for one instant to the resolution that is before us, because what the resolution asks, and all that the resolution asks, is that this House recognize the concept of aboriginal rights so that the proceedings of the committee and the deliberations of this House will have some authority and we can proceed with our discussion knowing we are discussing something that has point to it, knowing that this is not just another aimless study of the matter.

I want to put this debate in context. I think we recognize, as my colleague from Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) has suggested, that governments in other countries are taking native claims seriously and are starting down the road to settlement at the very time that we in Canada, under this government, have been turning away from the road to settlement and backing away from some recognition of aboriginal rights.

I think we acknowledge, and without very much pride, that the native people of Canada in times past were victims of white trickery, when land rights and other rights were often traded for blankets, beads and other pittances. I suggest that the treatment accorded to our native people now is no less shameful. There has been the fraud of consultation in preparation for the white paper, now thankfully withdrawn. There has been the establishment of the claims commissioner who has to his credit now one settlement of one ammunition agreement concerning one treaty in Alberta, but who has clearly been established to delay settlements of claims, not advance them.

There has been the shameful treatment of native people in the area of James Bay, an area where the minister has a clear responsibility to help an unsophisticated group of native people who are threatened by a government-sponsored corporation. The minister's only response has been to give these people a little conscience money to get them into court, so that he and his colleagues can escape discussion of the question on the ground that it is sub judice. I hope that the minister might apply some of his own responsibilities to end native people's representations with the moral fervour that he has brought to the suggestions of the government of the province of Quebec regarding what they should do after the fact.

That is the context of trickery within which we now debate. I think the significance of that is not merely that the government is acting, if I may use the minister's own word, irresponsibly; the real danger is that the native people cannot be expected to put up forever with this kind of duplicity. No group would. But the native people have before them the temptation to respond with violence when gentler methods fail. They have the lessons of other countries where other minorities have felt they were being deceived, and so responded violently.

I think the minister drew a red herring deliberately when he suggested because there are regional differences we cannot act in support of this resolution, indicating a commitment to the principal concept of aboriginal rights. There is a need to establish aboriginal rights under a national policy which recognizes the elementary principle that aboriginal rights exist. It is simply a falsehood, I suggest, to say that we cannot proceed now to enunciate that commitment of having a national policy because individual settlements that might occur will differ from region to region.

It seems to me the one remarkable fact about Canada's native leadership is the strength with which they have resisted the temptation to abandon consultation. They have put up with far more than many other groups in Canada would have accepted. I ask if you can imagine the Canadian Labour Congress or the Canadian Chamber of Commerce coming back in good faith to deal with a government which has consistently deceived them? Yet the native people, with their present leadership, have come back and are prepared to negotiate in good faith in spite of the way they have been treated before. I simply suggest that their moderate response cannot be counted on forever.

There is a matter related to this which I want to raise. It has to do with the fear, by many white Canadians, that Canadian Indians have been so broken down by the paternalism of the department they will never be able to stand on their own feet. If that is true, it is a tragedy. If it is not true and if, as we believe, people who have been victimized by paternalism can be brought back to pride and independence, then surely it is time to start. If we hope to end a system of paternalism whose cost is extravagant both in dollars and in dignity, surely we must begin by dealing seriously with the native people. That is what this resolution proposes, a beginning. It proposes simply the recognition of a concept of aboriginal rights and a recognition that there is a claim here to be settled.

The minister, for reasons of his own, is proposing that the resolution involves much more than that. In his celebrated television interview he said, "There are some cities that have been built on land that is perhaps not Canadian land." He went on to suggest that there might be a claim for the whole of the province of British Columbia. That is simply a scare tactic. It is simply a device, well known in this parliament and that party, of taking the most extreme possible consequence, pretending it is the norm and using it to scare people, thus avoiding honest debate. This is the resort either of a desperate government which knows it has no case, or an arrogant government which does not care about the facts and which would dismiss contrary opinion by saying, as the minister said of one of his colleagues during that television interview, "He does not know very much."

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

The tragedy is that the minister can scare Canadians. If he wants to arouse false fears, this clearly is an issue where he can do so. Not only can he arouse fears, he can animate a prejudice against native people which we would be some time settling down. I personally hope the minister will abandon that course on which he has begun and will focus on the issues we must face, rather than the fears he can arouse.

I want to repeat the fact that acceptance of this resolution means only the acceptance of the concept of aboriginal rights. No cities are in danger. No province is to be given back to the Indians. At this stage there is not even a commitment to dollars; there is simply a commitment to deal in good faith and as equals with people who have claims older than any other claims this parliament considers.

This will be a long process, a process of years rather than months. That is one reason it is so urgent to make a formal beginning now and not to continue to delay.

The issues involved are serious. The settlement, when it comes, could involve the payment of millions of dollars—the end of the costly and colonial dominion of the department of Indian Affairs, the recognition of historic rights and the re-establishment of the dignity and sense of worth of hundreds of thousands of native people whom our society has abused.

These issues are more than serious; they are also inescapable. At some time some parliament of Canada must face the issues involved in aboriginal rights. No magic is going to spirit these issues away and no mere lawyer, even if he is also a prime minister, is going to dismiss them with ingenious argument, because these issues are based on claims which are rooted in the history of the country and perhaps in her conscience. If they cannot be resolved by negotiation, in an atmosphere of mutual trust and goodwill, they will arise in other more inflammatory ways.

So the real question about aboriginal rights is not whether we will face them, but when and in what spirit. Delay might appear to buy time, but it is more likely simply to destroy the good will which still characterizes most of the native leaders of Canada, in spite of the treatment which too often they have received.

Of course, the people who must be convinced about aboriginal rights are not the native people but the whites. The time will come when parliament and the government will have to advise native leaders about certain realities within the white community, namely, what we think we can afford. No doubt that will be difficult, although it will be easier if native leadership is reasonable, as generally it is today, than it would be if we drive out reasonable leadership.

But the case which the government and parliament must make today is to the white Canada, and there is no doubt that many Canadians outside the native community are concerned about the concept of aboriginal rights. I think their concern is based upon two fears: first, a fear that any settlement might be too extravagant for the national treasury to bear; and second, a fear that any payments made under a settlement would be wasted, spent foolishly by people who have not yet learned to manage their own affairs. I want to address myself to those two concerns.

First, it is important, as we begin the formal stage of this debate, to make it clear to everyone concerned that there are limits upon the settlement the national treasury can afford. We do not intend to give away the country, or give it back, depending on your point of view. What we seek is a fair and reasonable settlement and it must be fair and reasonable to both sides.

On the question of costs, the point deserves reiteration that we are involved in costs now, heavy costs. In direct dollar terms, the annual budget of the Department of Indian Affairs, as the minister so readily boasts, involves the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars each year. In indirect dollar terms there is the high and recurrent cost of provincial welfare and other programs serving native populations. In human terms, which dollar calculations cannot compute, we pay the staggering price each year of human potential wasted or destroyed by an imposed system which neither challenges the individual Indian citizen nor allows him to follow the course he would choose.

So there are high costs today, and while a settlement based on recognition of aboriginal rights would not suddenly eliminate those costs, or perhaps even eliminate some of them, it would lead to the extinguishment of some existing claims and could lead to the breaking down of the hand-out psychology which has made too many native people the wards of state instead of contributing citizens.

This brings me to the second fear of many white Canadians, the fear that native people cannot manage their own affairs or do not want to. It is an inescapable fact, in my province at least, that this fear is greatest among people who live closest to reserves. They have simply seen too much evidence of Indian people whose behaviour confirms the unhappy stereotype of the lazy Indian. It is my experience that the anger of the whites toward the lazy Indian is mild when compared to the anger and resentment of industrious Indian leaders and people. It is also an inescapable fact that, while examples can be found of lazy Indians, so can examples be found of industrious and creative citizens. We meet them virtually every time the standing committee assembles and every time we visit reserves. In a sense, the industrious Indian is the more to be marvelled at because he has overcome a system of paternalism which is designed to break down dignity and independence. Anyone acquainted with the treatment of native people in Canada must at least accept that lazy Indians are lazy because we made them so.

This is a condition which white society and the predecessors of this parliament have helped to create. We have established and imposed a system which has locked too many Indian people into the stereotype and into the fact of aimless dependence upon the state, and the architects of that system are at least as much to blame as its victims.

There is no point in laying blame upon the past, but surely we cannot refuse to deal with the just claims of Canada's Indians simply because some of them have slipped into the trap of dependence which our society helped to set for them. To do that would be to guarantee that Canada's Indian people will never escape a welfare trap unless they do it violently. Indeed, that might amount to an invitation to violence, because our refusal to deal reasonably with the moderate men and women who constitute much of the modern leadership of Canada's Indian people would almost certainly undermine the authority of these leaders and set up less responsible replacements.

At the least, such a response would break the growing spirit of Canadian Indian people to stand on their own and make their own contribution as individuals and as a people to the development of Canada. In fact, one consequence of the eventual settlement of aboriginal claims is that Canadian native people will then be forced to stand on their own, because once the settlements are made, the claims are gone. If money received in settlement is wasted, that will be it. There will be no big brother to go back to. Knowing this, knowing that the settlements which are reached will have to be lived with, will itself force native people to face basic questions about their status, about the reserve system, about other matters, and force them to face those questions with a seriousness which cannot exist in the present phony atmosphere of so-called consultation, when they naturally believe their opinions are being sought only to be ignored.

What the settlement of aboriginal claims will mean to the Indian people is not simply money or land but, more important, responsibility in a much fuller sense than exists in the paternalistic system we have today. Beyond that, a recognition of aboriginal rights is a matter of simple justice, made more urgent by prolonged delay. These are the people who first occupied this land. We took it from them, seldom by conquest, sometimes by agreements which were unfair then or are inadequate now, sometimes without settlement at all. After taking this land, we took their dignity and independence. In simple terms, we owe a debt. If we believe in any sort of justice in society, we must recognize our obligation to Canada's native people.

The way to begin that movement toward justice and responsibility is to deal with Indian people as though they are capable of responsibility; to deal with them as we would deal with other Canadians who have a claim. This resolution today asks no more than that, and we in our party believe that the Parliament of Canada can do no less.

Mr. Howard: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have had discussion with some members of this House, obviously not all, to see whether we might reduce the time allotted to speakers from 15 minutes to 10 minutes henceforth. I understand that would be an agreeable course of action. I wonder whether I might put that proposition to the House, through you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). Is there agreement to reduce the time of speeches to ten minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to speak to this motion for concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As chairman of that committee, I would like to spend some time to bring before this House some of the problems and concerns that have been presented to us in our hearings over the last two months and, in particular, those dealing with the subject of aboriginal rights for both status and non-status native peoples.

I think it is fair to say that not a week has passed during this session without some question relating to the native people of Canada being raised in the House. The problems of the native people of James Bay, the Nishga court decision, the question of aboriginal rights, the inadequacies of our present Indian Act and the depressing conditions and circumstances that Canadian natives are forced to live in have all been raised at one time or another. Outside this House, throughout Canada, we have been increasingly hearing the pleas and representations of various native groups, both status and non-status, and those of other concerned citizens, that we correct the injustices that have existed over the past 100 years.

Over the past four weeks we have watched the developments that have taken place at Wounded Knee, South Dakota. To many Canadians this situation is remote and far away. Yet if we listen to Canadian Indians and Eskimos, the grievances voiced at Wounded Knee sound very similar to those voiced here in Canada: recognition of the sovereignty of the Indian people, the enforcement and fulfilment of existing treaties and the restoration of a permanent, non-diminishing land base. For too long we as Canadians have been ignorant or oblivious of the plight of the Indian, the problems that exist and why they are there.

The failure of our economic system to provide justice to our native peoples is accompanied by the failure of our educational and social systems. Until recently almost all our history has portrayed our country's first inhabitants as the ignorant, backward, warring, noble savage. It is with this image that most of us have grown up. But how accurate is it? In the accounts of the early Jesuit missionaries we hear stories of a parental love for children that is unequalled anywhere today. In the testimony and briefs presented to our committee we have been told of a society and culture that far surpasses the idealistic hopes of many today. To give you some idea of how the native peoples of today have viewed their past, I would like to quote from some of the statements that have been made:

> We, as Indian people, has a system of collective ownership of land. We felt that land belongs to everybody and that everybody must benefit from those lands. It was the Europeans who, when they occupied this country, introduced individual ownership . . . (As Indians) we had our own God and our own religion which taught us how to live together in peace. This religion also taught us how to live as a part of the land. We learned how to practice what is now called multiple land use, conservation and resource management. We have much to teach the white man about these things when he is ready to listen.

It is clear that we, the white men, over the past 100 years have failed in dealing with the Indian peoples of Canada. Instead of solving problems that arose in the past, we have created more. However, today in the 1970s we have not only the experience of mistakes to guide us but also many strong status and non-status Indian associations who are committed to solving the present day problems of their peoples. I think if there is any significant accomplishment we have made in respect of the Indian people over the last five years, it is the fact that these associations have been encouraged and developed.

I believe a large degree of the salvation of the Indian people will rest with these associations. In recent years these Indian and Innuit associations have been increasingly voicing the position that only the Indian people will be able to bring happiness back into their own lives. And central to this position was, and is, the need to receive a just and fair settlement and the fulfillment of all existing treaties; and for those Indians that were not covered by treaties, for Indians in most of British Columbia, in the Yukon, in Quebec and the Maritimes, and for the Innuit, a just settlement on the question of aboriginal title. For the native peoples, both status and non-status, land is a very essential and necessary ingredient in their way of life. I would like to quote two passages from two separate briefs we received which, again, eloquently demonstrate this fact:

> Without land, Indian people have no soul—no life—no identity—no purpose. Control of our own land is necessary for our cultural and economic survival. For Yukon Indian people to join in the social and economic life of Yukon, we must have specific rights to lands and natural resources that will be enough for both our present and future needs.

Then again:

> We are people of the land. We have come from the land, and we love the land, but the land is no longer what it was. The land is now a part of the white man's new economy. It is tracked over, marked off, sold and scarred for the minerals and oils that lay beneath it . . . we are accepting that the land is no longer usable in the old way. We must seek a way to live in the new economy for which our land is being used. We are not seeking a way to sell our land. We are seeking a way to use it in the new way. Our culture does not allow us to sell our land. The land is a part of us, and we are part of the land.

Out or an awareness and concern for the position of Indians and Eskimos in regard to aboriginal rights, and a position of hesitancy on the part of the government, the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development set down its terms of reference quite quickly on this question. I shall read from the first issue of the minutes of proceedings of the committee:

> Your subcommittee recommends: that the committee undertake a study of aboriginal rights of the Indian and Eskimo people; that the committee inform the national and major Indian associations across the country of the intention and to hear evidence and receive submissions.

Among some members of the committee, including myself, there was a feeling that under these broad terms of reference, and after a complete and thorough study, we might be able to produce a report that would give the government some concrete guidelines of where and how to move on the question of aboriginal rights. I do not think this was in any way an idealistic thought, because the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development during the last parliament carried out significant work and made useful recommendations, to which the minister has made reference, in the area of Indian and Eskimo education in Canada.

There was also cause for optimism about having a meaningful input after the government continued to pursue the direction it took in 1971 by broadening the terms of reference of Dr. Lloyd Barber's Indian Claims Commission to include non-treaty claims, and when it acknowledged the position presented in the submission of the Yukon Native Brotherhood and agreed to the establishment of a negotiating committee. The non-decision of the Supreme Court in the Nishga tribe's case was also reason for greater interest, not only in the cause of aboriginal rights but also in the need for our committee's report. Throughout these past two months we have received numerous presentations dealing with the question of aboriginal rights. As a result of the presentation of the National Indian Brotherhood we now find our second report before the House. However, we have had several further submissions dealing with aboriginal rights and we expect to hear several more.

The court's non-decision points up the need for Canadian law to recognize the question of aboriginal rights. To do this, some legislative action is required. I think it is generally agreed that parliament, in negotiating with native peoples, should reach a firm decision. It was pointed out by Professor Peter Cumming of Osgoode Hall law school, one of the witnesses before the committee, that "as parliament has complete control over any legislative settlement of aboriginal rights nothing is really 'being given away' through the recognition of such rights and the negotiation of a fair settlement." He feels that "there is much to be gained by the suggested approach. The unquestioned intention of the government is to improve the well-being of the native peoples. The unquestioned fact is that the native peoples remain the most underprivileged minority group in Canada."

The implications of the adoption of a position on aboriginal rights have been widely imagined. First and foremost, native peoples such as the Nishga, who have occupied land from time immemorial, will finally have rights. Secondly, and of major significance, the government and the native peoples will have a starting point from which to negotiate and reach a settlement. Any type of settlement will be worked out by parliament. In all the presentations about the settlement of aboriginal claims there was a real awareness that to achieve justice for all, a great deal of give and take on the part of all parties would be needed. Mr. Speaker, I see that you are on the verge of rising, so I conclude my remarks.

Hon. Walter Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for her contribution to this debate. She has placed into focus, in quite precise terms, the most important issue with respect to our native peoples which faces the government and parliament today. And she did so in a way that makes it possible for this parliament to make a final decision on a basic issue that must be resolved if we are to deal justly with the long neglected native peoples of this country. I can understand the emotional response of the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. Chrétien) to that presentation, because its logic was inescapable.

I would hope, and this is why we have agreed to shorten the debate, that we will have an opportunity to reaffirm the vote that has already been taken by the standing committee. The government supporters who abstained from the vote were obviously confused with respect to the government's position on aboriginal rights. This motion now presents an opportunity for the government to withdraw from the position it outlined in the ill-fated white paper of 1969 and to accept the principle of aboriginal rights.

All hon. members of the House will agree that one of the great social tragedies of Canada has been our treatment of the native peoples. We destroyed their way of life and we gave them no opportunity to become established in the white man's society. As a result, they are marginal people. Because they were disease-ridden for a long time, they were a vanishing people. Demoralization is still rampant, as expressed in some of the indices of social destruction among those people. I agree that there has been an improvement over the past two decades or so. There has been a concerted attack on the health problems of the Indians, so that they are no longer a vanishing people. They now have the largest birth rate of any group in Canadian society.

There have been important breakthroughs in our approach to education. The minister referred to this in his speech as though it were something that happened in the past five years. But I would remind him that what has happened in his department is its adoption of the excellent education program that operated in the Department of Northern Affairs from the mid-1950s on, when Indian Affairs was incorporated in that department. Another important breakthrough gave the Indian population the right to vote in 1959, and the Innuit population the right to vote in 1962. For those who say that the Progressive Conservative government had no interest in these matters, I point out that these fundamental breakthroughs came during the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

As a result of giving the Indian population the vote in 1959, they have now become an important part of the political process. This is reflected in the responsible, intelligent, capable leadership that has emerged, because now they have their day in court. They have been given the opportunity to make their contribution to the political process because they were given the basic right of citizens in a democracy, the right to exercise the franchise.

In 1963, the next major breakthrough in the progress of our Indians towards full Canadian citizenship was to have been the establishment of a claims commission. The resolution was on the order paper. Then the government changed, and for the past ten years the Indians have been wandering in the wilderness in this regard. Admittedly, the pressure had come from south of the border where the principle of aboriginal rights had been accepted without equivocation. But instead of proceeding to deal with the recognition of long neglected claims, the two succeeding Liberal governments resorted to conferences and, I suggest, devious conferences in many respects.

We had a joint parliamentary committee that went across the country over a period of 12 months. One of the most persistent themes presented to that committee was on the question of aboriginal rights. When the minister and other government spokesmen say that this question has not been adequately considered, I suggest there is evidence piled upon evidence that the decision is long overdue.

I would also remind the minister that while it might be possible to establish some rights under the treaties, where treaties exist, this will not be a successful solution of the problems of the Innuit people because they never came under any treaties. Until this parliament and government establish and accept the principle of aboriginal rights, there is no possibility of justice so far as the Innuit people are concerned with respect to their outstanding claims. The alternate solution of the government is to perpetuate the program of paternalism that has caused the perpetuation of poverty and the continuation of degradation among the native people of this country.

I shall not speak any longer this afternoon because my position on this matter is well known. Also, I want to have the opportunity to vote on the motion and endorse the principle that has emerged from the parliamentary committee on Indian affairs, and give the government an opportunity to put into effect a statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who said:

> In a democracy it is all too easy for the majority to forget the rights of the minority and for a remote and powerful government to ignore its requests.

That is a statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada. That government, Mr. Speaker, is no longer a powerful majority; it is a very slim majority clinging, by expendiency, to power. One of the reasons government members on the committee were reluctant to support this resolution is very obvious. It is that he who runs may read—and they have not received the word from this Prime Minister. I suggest to the government that they have the opportunity this afternoon to get themselves off the hook on this subject.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada over native peoples rests on section 91(24) of the British North America Act, "Indians and lands reserved for the Indians." By judicial definition, Eskimos have been included in the category of Indians.

During its two-year study of the Canadian constitution, the Special Committee on the Constitution of Canada, of which I had the honour to be the chairman from this House, heard witnesses from Indian associations across the country. I think it is fair to say that interest among committee members on this subject was high. I understood the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), who just sat down, to refer to the work of this committee. It is unfortunate that he adverted only to the number of witnesses who appeared across the country and not to what they said nor to the recommendations of the committee. In light of the hon. member's comments I think it is worth while recalling what the National Indian Brotherhood said through its official spokesman before that committee. As reported on page 16 of the official report of that committee, he said:

> However, we are not yet in a position to recommend in its entirety the proper legal framework for our development as a people.
> The issues at stake are far too important for unprepared or unwise action. Aware of the principle that they themselves must forge their destiny, the Indian people must be given the time to assess not only in legal terms but in social and modern terms who they are, what they have and where they want to go before any action which will dramatically affect these considerations, including the constitutional change, is taken.

And further on:

> To require us to act in any definitive sense in regard to the constitution at this point, therefore, is premature and unfair. To act without decisions from the Indian people is unacceptable.
> We need time and this is the central message of this brief.

In light of those comments by the National Indian Brotherhood's spokesman, the committee recommended that there should be no constitutional change with respect to section 91(24) of the British North America Act until such time as the native peoples' organizations have completed their research and study into the whole question of treaty and aboriginal rights in Canada.

I heard some of the remarks made by opposition members while I was reading this passage of the report, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members opposite were suggesting that the government was lax in not having answered the problem earlier. In the light of representations of the National Indian Brotherhood to a committee of this parliament when they asked us to wait until they were ready to make their proposals, and the fact that it has only been in the past two weeks that the proposals have come forth, we could not have dealt with this matter earlier. It is appropriate, now that they have had time to formulate their proposals, that we come back to this issue in parliament. I think it is a tribute to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) that she has brought this matter forward, but I wish she had shown more understanding of the resolution she is presenting.

I had planned a considerably longer speech, Mr. Speaker, but in the few minutes remaining of the ten which are now allotted I should like to refer to the recommendations made in the National Indian Brotherhood document which has been endorsed in its entirety by the opposition members of the committee. There is a four-point proposal. The first point reads as follows:

> (a) a recognition of the obligations to deal with Indian claims in non-treaty areas of the country. In the areas where Indian people have lost or are gradually losing the use of the land either the full use of the land must be protected or restored or the claims based on Indian title must be dealt with to the satisfaction of the Indian people involved.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that this says "to the satisfaction of the Indian people involved". This can be interpreted benignly, and we all agree that the claims should be settled to the satisfaction of the Indians. But the Indians are in a bargaining position, and in a bargaining position there is a range of things that people will accept. That is the whole point which the opposition misses.

Do I have to remind hon. members opposite that this is our country too? Would it not be advisable, in a document which they are asking the Parliament of Canada to approve and accept and endorse, that we say what we mean? Do we mean it is only Indians that should approve, or do we mean also the government and Parliament of Canada. Members opposite are indulging in the irresponsibility of opposition, it seems to me.

The second point is as follows:

(b) in the areas where Indian people still have the use and control of their lands, no encroachment is permissible without the consent of the Indian people involved.

The problem here is that it is not clear how this would differ from the first point. It is not clear how one would distinguish between areas where the Indians are nominally still in possession and where they might be seen to have lost or be losing the use of their lands. There is considerable ambiguity in the line to be drawn between this point and the first point. This should be stated in unambiguous language before we can deal with it. You are asking us to give them carte blanche. If we are going to have a document of the kind to which we are giving consideration, I think we should scrutinize it very carefully.

The third point is as follows:

(c) if treaties meet adequate standards of fairness, a recognition of treaty promises as they were understood by the Indian people. If the treaties fail to meet adequate standards of fairness this failure must be acknowledged and fair and adequate arrangements made to the satisfaction of the Indian people involved.

I would agree that it must be to the satisfaction of the Indian people. I trust it would also be to the satisfaction of the Parliament of Canada. The question that arises is how this fairness is to be judged and what mechanism is to be established to judge it.

The fourth point is as follows:

(d) a recognition of the obligation to restore or, with the consent of the Indian people, to compensate for the loss of specific rights (such as hunting, fishing or trapping rights) which are either preserved in treaty areas or which exist in non-treaty areas as part of unextinguished Indian rights and which have been curtailed by government action.

Before we could give our adherence to such a proposal, we would have to know more particularly whether the rights to which the proposal refers are, for example, rights which are extinguished for the benefit of the Indians themselves. In many cases where there are regulations which may limit hunting or trapping, these are made for the protection of the species which, of course, is for the protection of the Indians themselves. Is it being suggested that when there is such legislation which is for the benefit not just of the white man but also of the Indian, there should be compensation given to the Indian? Perhaps that is the principle this House would want to adopt, but I think we should know whether it is or not.

Despite the fact that there are certain over-generalities in these proposals, we must recognize that the very presentation of this document to the committee and to the House, with the assistance, I might add, of federal money which has been given to these people to enable them to do this, constitutes a major event in our country's history. It marks the first time that such a complete statement has been made by what is now, I think, the national Indian organization as to what they want us to agree to. But we must keep in mind that this is a bargaining position which they are putting forward. We must respond to that bargaining position, but I do not think the Indians expect us to respond by agreeing to everything put forward, as the opposition suggests.

I was hoping to discuss at some length the case of Calder v. The Attorney General of British Columbia, and many other matters as well. However, as there are others who wish to gain the floor to speak on this motion, I will yield.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 6(5) I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this sitting continue beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion for concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The motion proposed by the hon. member comes under Standing Order 6(5) (b), which reads:

When Mr. Speaker puts the question on such motion, he shall ask those members who object to rise in their places. If ten or more members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

All those opposed to the motion will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): More than ten members being opposed to this motion, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that the Liberal party opposed it.

Mr. Chrétien: Hon. members opposite are trying to play politics, as usual.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly).

Mr. Reid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It has been the normal practice of the Chair to alternate in the recognition of speakers. As Your Honour previously recognized the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) it seems to me, in all fairness, that Your Honour ought to recognize a speaker on my side of the House.

Mr. Peters: Then they should stand up, instead of sitting on their fannies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member should point out the standing order to which he is referring.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are in the chair, and not the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Joliette on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I realize there are some problems as to whether an hon. member of the opposition or a government member should be recognized. In order to settle the problem, I would suggest you recognize one who is half way between, that is an independent member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I might do so after six o'clock. The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly).

[English]

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, this is my third attempt to speak in this debate. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) indicated in his speech one hour ago that there were white men on every reserve when he was appointed in 1968. Let me tell the minister that there was not a white man on such reserves in 1968, although there were some before that date. I live in an area where there are many reserves, and many of the Indian agents had started disappearing from the reserves in the fifties and early sixties.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is right. Let us keep the record straight.

Mr. Nesdoly: The minister also indicated that Indians of this land have been told many things. I immediately ask, who has told them so many things, if not previous Liberal and Conservative administrations? The minister also mentioned British Columbia and said that the province does not want to settle some of the land claims of the Indians. Let me ask this of the minister: What about the Northwest Territories, where the federal government has complete jurisdiction?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply, if the hon. member wants me to. I have offered the Indians the choice and they have decided to choose their land—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Chrétien: Just let me complete my answer. Do not ask questions if you do not want answers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member for Meadow Lake, in the little time available, should be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Chrétien: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member does not want interruptions he should not ask questions but should make a speech.

Mr. Nesdoly: Saskatchewan treaty No. 6 provides:

> The said Indians shall have the rights to pursue their avocation of hunting and fishing throughout the tract surrendered as herein before described—

That treaty refers to the fact that Indians were being given lands for their use and livelihood in addition to their traditional hunting and fishing rights. Now, it seems to me, the Indian people of the Prairies are pretty well confined to their reserves and have lost the fishing and hunting rights which are part of the aboriginal title of the Indian people. Many groups in Saskatchewan also maintain that they have been robbed of much land in their reserves since the original treaties were signed. Let me point out that the minister, in his memorandum of June 21, 1972 said:

> Some bands particularly in the prairie provinces have not received their full land entitlement under treaties. Some have entitlement in areas which are now wholly settled, others have difficulty in deciding on what remaining land they should select. A separate memorandum will be submitted on partial land entitlement.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that a member of the NDP just killed this debate.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lefebvre: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

Given the importance of this matter to the general question of civil liberties and the question of the privileges and rights of all members of this House, I would move:

INCREASE IN PRICE OF FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion on a matter both urgent and important.

In view of the constant rise in the price of feeds, which contributes to increasing production costs of meat, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe):

That a special debate be held in this House to analyse the real causes that contribute to the astronomical increase in the cost of animal feed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Under Standing Order 43 it requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

April 4, 1973—Mr. Howard:

That the Second Report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on April 4, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to cut into the time of the House set aside today for the important question of the income tax bill. I wonder, therefore, if I could get unanimous consent to have the motion standing in my name put without debate.

Mr. Speaker: This would, of course, require the unanimous consent of the House. I believe the hon. member is referring to the first motion standing in his name. The hon. member appreciates that in view of the well established practice of the House the motion cannot be debated in any event. If the hon. member suggests there might be unanimous consent for the motion, I might inquire.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there is not unanimous consent. The motion, therefore, cannot be put at this time.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

PROVISION OF SAME RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT FOR ALIEN HUSBAND AS FOR ALIEN WIFE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-175, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act (equal residence requirements accorded alien spouses of Canadians).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, at the present time an alien wife of a Canadian citizen may be granted citizenship when she has resided in Canada for only one year, but an alien husband of a Canadian wife must have resided for five years.

The purpose of this bill, therefore, is to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act to provide that there is no difference between the residence requirements for the acquisition of Canadian citizenship by an alien husband and an alien wife of a Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

EFFECT ON PROPOSED TAX CUTS FOR CANADIAN INDUSTRIES OF U.S. PRESIDENT'S PROPOSAL RESPECTING TAXATION OF AMERICAN SUBSIDIARIES ABROAD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the request to Congress by the President of the United States for authority to tax the incomes of U.S. subsidiaries abroad in certain instances at U.S. corporate rates, one of these instances being where lower taxes in the foreign country are a factor in the decision of the subsidiary to invest, has the minister given consideration to this and the distinct possibility that his proposed tax cuts for manufacturing and processing industries could result simply in swelling the treasury of the United States in the case of certain investments by U.S. subsidiaries?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, all we have at the moment is the text of the President's message to Congress. We do not have a text of the proposed bill as we do in the case of the trade reform bill which the President put forward in textual form to Congress. We are, of course, studying this matter very closely. We need a little more precision before an answer can be given to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the Minister of the Finance to contact the appropriate authorities in the United States in order to secure more information as to the precise terms of the bill to be submitted to Congress?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the government intend to proceed with the proposed tax cuts affecting manufacturing operations in Canada even in those instances where the benefit of those tax cuts, or a substantial part of it, will simply go to a foreign treasury?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would think we would have to obtain the clarification the hon. gentleman was seeking before making a final decision in that regard.

TRADE

PRESENTATION OF STATEMENT ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS TO UNITED STATES IN LIGHT OF PRESIDENT NIXON'S PROPOSED TRADE AND TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the light of the Michelin episode, is the government preparing a formal and complete statement on our regional development programs in relation to President Nixon's proposed legislation concerning unfair trade and tax policies and, if so, when will it be presented to the United States government?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think the hon. member should perhaps address his question with respect to regional expansion plans to my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. But as to the broad generality of the question I think it is fair to say we shall be watching the trading impact of these measures very carefully. I am sure the hon. member will welcome, as I do, the decision of the United States administration to enter into consultation with us at an early date in connection with the Michelin countervailing duty finding.

Mr. MacKay: Can the minister tell us how the United States study of the Michelin Tire case is proceeding? Has he received any indication of the progress being made and, if so, will he inform the House now or on motions as early as possible?

Mr. Gillespie: We have received a reply to our formal note presented some six weeks or two months ago requesting consultation. The United States government has stated it will be very pleased to enter into consultation with us and we look forward to these talks taking place at an early date.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain for a last supplementary and then the hon. member for Brant.

FORMAL PRESENTATION TO UNITED STATES OF CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING BURKE-HARTKE BILL

Mr. Duncan M. Beatty (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the fact that the government has presented no formal position, in writing or otherwise, to the United States government in connection with the Burke-Hartke bill, and bearing in mind the serious implications of this bill, if passed, for our trade, can the minister undertake to prepare a formal and detailed position on the bill and present it to the United States government immediately?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As the hon. member no doubt realizes, the Burke-Hartke bill is a bill prepared by a United States Congressman and a United States Senator and presented to their respective Houses. There are various ways in which we can make our views on the contents of this bill known, and I can assure the hon. member we are using the normal channels with efficiency.

MANPOWER

HIRING OF SECRETARIAL ASSISTANCE BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS FROM PRIVATE AGENCIES RATHER THAN THROUGH OTTAWA MANPOWER OFFICE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister inform the House whether responsible officials of Manpower in the Ottawa area have investigated the practice of a number of government departments and agencies in Ottawa which hire secretarial assistance from private placement agencies rather than through the Manpower office, paying $4.25 an hour to the agency which, in turn, pays only $2.65 an hour to the employee?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I shall investigate that situation with all haste.

Mr. Blackburn: When making inquiries about this practice, would the minister attempt to find out why the Unemployment Insurance Commission, for which he is responsible, paid a private placement agency at a rate of $170 a week for secretarial assistance rather than go to the Manpower office for which the minister is also responsible?

INDUSTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SMALL BUSINESSES—COMPOSITION OF CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL—DEPARTMENTAL OBJECTIVES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since it is the task of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to promote employment in the country's poorer areas and also to assist small business, can the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell us how he can help the Department of Regional Economic Expansion achieve this goal when 37 of 40 members of the advisory council are owners or presidents of Canada's major businesses, located in this country's major cities in the most prosperous regions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister might perhaps reply briefly to the hon. member's question. I am sure, however, that the hon. member for Shefford will be the first to recognize that he has expressed an argument rather than a question. However, to be fair to the hon. member for Shefford, I am prepared to give the floor to the hon. minister if he wants to reply briefly.

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, my colleague the Minister of Regional Expansion and myself do not require an advisory council to tell us how we should address ourselves to the problems of small business. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that we are in constant consultation and so are our departments.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell the House whether the activities of his department are in agreement with those of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as regards assistance to small business and especially employment in the poorer areas?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have a basic responsibility for trying to develop the health, viability and competitiveness of manufacturing industry throughout the country and, as well, the health, viability and service of the tourism industry of Canada. I think that our responsibilities and the special but distinct responsibilities of my colleagues are complementary.

COMPOSITION OF CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL—
DISCUSSION WITH MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the statement made by the hon. minister as to existing common interests between both departments, could he tell the House whether there has been consultation with his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, as to the selection of the 37 members of the advisory council who represent large enterprise only?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister was about to answer but the interpretation did not reach him on time. I would like to ask him again if there was consultation between the two departments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already asked this question. I guess that during the last 30 seconds the question must have reached the minister; maybe he can answer right away. I was not under the impression that he intended to answer, but if he wants to, I will recognize him.

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, there is a very high degree of consultation among ministers on this side of the House. The point that I should also like to make clear to the hon. member is that my advisory council is not just composed of big businessmen; it is also composed of businessmen representing smaller businesses situated in all corners of the country.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PETITION FOR CONTROLS ON FOOD PRICES—
GOVERNMENT POSITION—POWERS OF PROPOSED PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the petition presented today from British Columbia residents, and in view of the many other similar requests from both consumer and producer groups, is the Prime Minister now prepared to acknowledge officially that there is a growing demand for direct controls, as has been recommended by the Leader of the Opposition and others?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Equally, Mr. Speaker, I met a group yesterday that was against controls as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: That was the cabinet.

Mr. Trudeau: I suppose there is a growing demand for all kinds of things in this country.

Mr. Reynolds: Is the government going to set out the powers and directions for the prices review board and, if so, when will these guidelines be brought before the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might want to direct his question to the minister who spoke on this subject in the House a couple of days ago.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices be discontinued after the prices review board is set up?

FOOD PRICES—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What action does the government propose to take since receiving the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices to aid and assist the hardpressed consumers of this country, other than setting up a new and equally ineffective prices and incomes commission under the guise of a prices review board?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would refer my hon. friend to my statement in the House on Tuesday.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would he indicate clearly his position on recommendations 2, 4 and 6 of the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, which deal with consumer protection, consumer education and consumer representation, and which clearly apply to all consumer items and not just food which is the only focus of the toothless and misguided recommendation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the minister would have to do that on motions rather than by way of a reply to a question.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

BASIC RATE OF PENSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON JOINT STUDY REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and is a follow-up to a question I asked yesterday. In view of the fact that the joint study report on the basic rate of pension recommended a new formula basing annual increases on the increase in the average wage of the five lowest categories in the Public Service rather than on the cost of living index, would he advise the House whether the government is accepting this formula in considering amending legislation on disability pensions?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this recommendation is now before the government.

An hon. Member: Where it was yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I hope to have a report for the House on this subject before very long.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the minister be able to make a statement on this matter to the House before we rise for the Easter recess?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, if a statement is available to me I will make it available to the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who is running this department?

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, after three months the Minister of Veterans Affairs is learning very quickly from his colleagues how to be evasive. Since this is very important so far as the veterans are concerned, and in view of the fact he accepts the recommendation of the joint study, will he make a statement on motions before we recess for Easter?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I would give the same answer that I gave to the other hon. member. If I have a statement to make I will sure make it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Stay in there, Jack.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REASONS FOR NOT MAKING AVAILABLE ADDRESS BY RCMP OFFICER TO MEETING ON INDUSTRIAL SECURITY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Will he inform the House as to his reasons for deciding not to make available to members of this House the address delivered by a senior official of the RCMP to hundreds of businessmen at a private meeting in Ottawa a few days ago?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have already made available to the hon. member one of the papers presented at the meeting which did not deal with matters that were considered to be security.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not the one.

Mr. Allmand: A second paper did deal with matters that were of a security nature. I must say that this paper was not given to a group of businessmen; it was given to a group of industrial security officers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: —who work in close conjunction with the government on defence contracts and similar matters. I looked into the matter to see if it could be given to the hon. member, but it would be against the public interest to make this information available.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the Solicitor General inform the House whether it is government policy to permit senior RCMP officials to collaborate, and I use that word with care, with private interest groups by divulging to them confidential information about other Canadians?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, when it is in the interest of the government and Canadian security we do so.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Given the profound importance of this question to the existence of civil liberties in Canada, would the minister agree to appear, along with Assistant Commissioner Draper before an early session of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to explain the nature and purpose of the investigation supervised by Assistant Commissioner Draper?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have been ready to go before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with my estimates for several weeks. I am prepared to go as soon as possible. Whether we can discuss matters of a security nature at the meeting is another question, but I am willing to give the committee as much as possible. In this regard I am taking the same position on this matter as former conservative and other governments.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

POLICY RESPECTING RETENTION OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OF BUSINESSES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the announcement earlier this week in Vancouver of the purchase of shares in Ventures West Capital Limited by the Canadian branches of the Mitsubishi and Mitsui companies, which are two of Japan's largest trading companies, could the minister inform the House if the stated policy of the Canada Development Corporation has been changed in respect of foreign ownership of Canadian companies, particularly those in the natural resource field?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the question it seemed to me to be a highly technical one. It is not one I am prepared to answer now, but I would be very happy to seek the information the hon. member desires.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a supplementary and I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North has a supplementary to the previous question. He will be recognized next.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could simplify the question for the minister. Is it the policy of the Canada Development Corporation to encourage the retention of Canadian ownership of Canadian businesses?.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that particular question should be directed to me. I am not the minister who reports to parliament for the Canada Development Corporation.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

NATIONAL SECURITY

ADDRESS BY RCMP ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER TO INDUSTRIAL SECURITY OFFICERS—CLEARANCE OF THOSE IN ATTENDANCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Can he tell the House whether every one of the industrial security officers who listened to the speech by the Assistant Commissioner of the RCMP was cleared by the RCMP or any other agency of government for security so that they were permitted to listen to the speech about security, the details of which cannot be given to Members of Parliament?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check into that. I do know that a good number of these industrial security officers were former members of the RCMP.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister really intended to tell Members of Parliament that there are private citizens who are entitled to get details about security problems in this country that Members of Parliament are not entitled to get?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have taken the position that I will give as much information as possible to Members of Parliament. It is for that reason I have invited the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee to visit the premises of the Police and Security Planning and Analysis Group for briefing. I am also attempting to make as many other reports as possible available, but where the security of the country is involved I do not think we are able to give reports on security matters to all Members of Parliament or to make them public generally.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are many supplementaries on this subject. Is the hon. member for Edmonton Centre rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Paproski: No, Mr. Speaker. This is a new question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

THE SENATE

FILLING OF VACANCIES—CONSULTATION WITH OPPOSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of the nature of the present parliament, would he tell the House whether he is soon going to fill all the vacancies in the other place and, in light of the balance in the House, is he going to consult with the opposition on those appointments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question the answer is, not immediately. On the second part of the question the answer is that such consultations have taken place at times.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED GREATER DIFFICULTY FOR FEMALE UNIVERSITY STUDENTS TO GET SUMMER JOBS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. A survey of 20,000 students conducted by the minister's own department at 64 universities and colleges revealed that women post-secondary school students seeking summer work not only had a tougher time getting jobs but were paid substantially less. Will the minister undertake to make a special effort to see that this inequity does not continue this summer?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the degree it is within my power I certainly would join the hon. member in endorsing equal treatment for women as for men. I know my colleague, the Minister of Labour, who reports to parliament on the government's actions with regard to the status of women, feels exactly the same way. I think we are doing everything in the federal domain that we can to that end.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES—MEASURES TO CURB INFLATION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Finance.

In view of the increase in interest rates of the Bank of Canada and two chartered banks, could the minister state whether the government intends to take other action to curb the inflation due to the causes we are aware of, and what action will it take to completely do away with inflation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already revealed some of the means the government is considering in the budget speech of February 19.

[English]

SUGGESTED STUDY OF MODIFICATION OF BRANCH BANKING SYSTEM TO EASE BURDEN OF HIGH INTEREST RATES ON SLOW GROWTH AREAS

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister consider instituting a study of modifications of the branch banking system designed to ease the burden of universal high interest rates on areas of slow economic growth.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the governor of the bank and I when we were in communication with the banks as a result of the rise in the bank rate made it clear to them that we expected that in their loan policy they would give special attention to small Canadian-owned businesses and to businesses in slower growth areas of the country. I noticed with a good deal of satisfaction that the banks in announcing the increase in the prime rate made those observations and will accord those priorities.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's request that the banks give special consideration to small businesses and slow growth areas, am I correct in inferring that there is in fact a restrictive policy in effect generally, that bank credit will have to be rationed, and that it is for this reason the Minister of Finance has asked that special consideration be given to small business?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Sir. The expansion in loans has never been greater. The banks will be able to respond to any legitimate search for credit, but in allocating this they have deemed it advisable in the interests of the country to give special priority to small businesses and particularly in slower growth areas.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if there is ample money to meet proper loans, why has the minister found it necessary to ask the banks to give special consideration and priority to small business? He cannot have it both ways.

ALLEGED HIRING OF STUDENTS FROM FRANCE TO PICK TOBACCO IN ONTARIO—PROVISION OF EMPLOYMENT FOR CANADIAN STUDENTS

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the employment of students during the summer is a major problem, I would like the minister to state whether it is true, as reported in the newspaper Le Soleil of April 4, 1973, that the Department of Manpower and Immigration pays all expenses for 250 students from France who wish to work in Ontario for the tobacco crop?

Mr. Speaker: I will allow the minister to answer this question since it has been put directly. The hon. member knows that he may not ask a minister to either deny or confirm an item published in a newspaper. Be that as it may, we may agree that the question has been put directly and the minister may answer it briefly.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no such payment of transportation or other costs is being made by the government. Last year there were negotiations to bring in some foreign students which were entered into before the employment visa program was introduced, and it was deemed necessary to honour that contract. But no such expenses are being paid.

• (1440)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. Hales: I should like to address a question—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Is the hon. member for Lapointe rising on a supplementary.

Mr. Marceau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Can the hon. minister assure the House that his department has taken the steps required to prevent this project from causing prejudice to Canadian student labour available for the same kind of work?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, we did introduce employment visas the other day, and I made a statement before the standing committee indicating that, although foreign students in Canada as of January 1, 1973, would be able to seek jobs without employment visas other than under the existing law, future foreign students coming to the country would be subject to the regulation about Canadian preference for jobs where Canadians are available.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Wellington. I believe the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary question and I will come to him in a moment.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that there are only 18 days left for filing 1972 income tax returns, and in view of the fact that thousands of Canadians have found it necessary to hire experts and other consultants to fill out these forms and these sources of assistance are taxed to capacity and will not be able to complete the forms in time, would he consider extending the filing date?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the returns are coming in at the usual rate this year, with an unusually low rate of errors in them. I must say that the indication so far is that a much lower percentage of Canadians are using any kind of tax consulting services—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanbury: —than are the Americans.

Mr. Bell: How about Fred Davis?

An hon. Member: How about Indonesians and Italians?

An hon. Member: How about Eskimos?

[Mr. Andras.]

An hon. Member: How about the weather?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the minister will reply to the question as briefly as possible, and then we will try to proceed.

Mr. Stanbury: The question of the extension of time has been carefully considered, and after considering all the elements of it—

Mr. Stanfield: And the weather.

Mr. Stanbury: —it has not so far been shown that there would be any advantage to the public in any extension.

Mr. Fairweather: Paul Martin is in the other place. You don't have to copy him.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister not agree that the reason that more forms are coming in correctly filled is the fact that people have hired experts to fill their forms for them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is obviously an argument between the minister and the hon. member. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary question.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ANY WRITTEN COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND GOVERNOR

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Can he say, in respect of the increase in the interest rate by the Bank of Canada, if there were any formal communications between him and the governor of the Bank of Canada regarding the over-all rate, not specifically regarding the regional development program, any letters, documentation, memoranda or briefs of any sort, and would he be prepared to table such documentation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker; advance consultation was verbal.

Mr. Lundrigan: As this is obviously a major shift in government policy, whether it is done by the back door through the Bank of Canada or with courage if the government had the courage to do it, is the minister saying that this major change in policy, which will have such a restrictive effect as a result of the concomitant interest rate raises, was adopted without any formal communications between him and the governor of the Bank of Canada and that we are going to have this restrictive policy now in regional development without any consultation of a formal nature?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not accept either the preamble or the substance of the hon. member's statement, so the rest is superfluous.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we are getting involved in so many supplementary questions that we are not making much progress. Some hon. members in the fourth and fifth rows have questions. I will recognize the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain on a supplementary question and then the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST BY WESTERN CANADA GROUP TO ESTABLISH BANK

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received any preliminary contact from a group of people in western Canada about the setting up of a western Canadian bank?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Sir, but the hon. gentleman's question is rather vague. The answer is no, so far as I know, in response to the words of his question.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF SHORE-BASED TRAFFIC DIRECTION SYSTEM FOR WATERS BETWEEN VANCOUVER ISLAND AND MAINLAND

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it recognizes the grave public concern about possible future oil spills on both our coastlines. In view of the fact that up to 500 medium-size oil tankers, most of them of foreign registry, and hundreds of towed barges are using the inside passage between Vancouver Island and the mainland of British Columbia each year, when is the minister going to establish a shore-based traffic direction system in that heavily congested region?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the west coast communication system is sophisticated enough and I do not believe that it has caused any serious accident or incident. I wish the hon. member would elaborate on his question.

[English]

Mr. Rose: According to some people who use these passages in this congested area, the bridge to bridge system is definitely not working. I should like to ask the minister if he has instructed or intends to instruct his technical staff to investigate direction systems such as the Decca system used in Europe for adaptability on Canada's west coast?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to look at it and will have the department make a report. We may be able to give a more precise answer some other day.

On March 9 last, the minister made a statement concerning an exchange of land between the federal government and Quebec.

As it was said in the Quebec National Assembly that this statement was premature, could the minister give us more details about this agreement?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a long statement was made at the time as to an exchange, not of ownership of property but an agreement between the province of Quebec and the National Capital Commission for the exchange of administration of land. The province of Quebec and the city of Hull, if one wants to evaluate it, got the administration of about $3 million worth of property, and the NCC got the administration of about $1 million worth of property.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DEVELOPMENT OF DEPARTMENTS OR SERVICES IN WESTERN CANADA OR TRANSFER TO WEST

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the minister's recent statement that the government is planning a $250 million building program in six cities, and in view of the fact that this appears to be mainly a consolidation of existing services there, will the minister state what new departments or services will be developed in or transferred to western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is not up to the Minister of Public Works to direct the inflow or outflow of public servants. We only provide buildings to receive them.

Mr. Roche: My question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the unsatisfactory answers we have been receiving to questions concerning development in western Canada, will the Prime Minister allow Members of Parliament from western Canada to attend and somehow take part in the western economic conference to be held in Calgary this summer?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to examine various ways in which we can get more satisfactory questions from western members.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take this question as notice and advise the hon. member.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and arises from the statement made by the Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission that it had been asked to prepare a study on the totality of passenger needs in Southwestern Ontario. Can the minister tell the House whether the reinstatement of rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario is contingent upon receiving a report in six months time first?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I met last week with the hon. Mr. Carton of the government of Ontario and we discussed this problem of commuter services and trains in southwestern Ontario.

We reached certain conclusions and we are supposed to get together and try to finalize some kind of understanding.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): May I ask the minister when he expects to be able to report to the House what steps that will be taken for southwestern Ontario?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me to say to the hon. member at what time we will be ready because we have to have further negotiations with the government of Ontario, and Canadian National will have to appear before the CTC because before installing a new line or abandoning one we have to have the agreement of the CTC. I do not know how many weeks all this will take.

POSSIBLE INCLUSION OF OPTOMETRICAL SERVICES UNDER NATIONAL HEALTH PLAN

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. LEGAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED TRAINING OF PARA-LEGAL PERSONNEL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the statement by the Premier of Saskatchewan several weeks ago that para-legal personnel should be trained in order to bring down legal costs for the average citizen, can the minister tell the House whether his department is giving any thought, in consultation with the provinces, to training para-legal personnel?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it occurred to me when I saw that statement to ask whether the Premier of Saskatchewan had read my speech to the Canadian Bar Association in Montreal last September. The matter of para-legal service is rather within provincial jurisdiction and, indeed, within the specific jurisdiction of law societies which can, by changing their rules or adapting their rules, make it possible for the development of such services.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Provencher may ask a supplementary and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I asked the Minister of Transport a question concerning the possibility of shuttle services being provided by Air Canada between Toronto and Montreal and between Toronto and Ottawa. The minister indicated that he would hold consultations with Air Canada. Has this been done and what is the result?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I got in touch with Air Canada. As you know, we have a rapid air service between Montreal and Toronto. It has been improved since last summer. However, it has not reached a point where it is done on a non-reservation basis. They are improving their system and looking to its expansion to other cities in Canada, but they are not to the point of establishing such a service for the cities mentioned by the hon. member.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

HYDRO-QUEBEC RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF DECISION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. Minister of National Revenue whether the government is intending to send an official protest note to the Quebec government, as it has received one from the latter, in connection with the increase in the cost of living and the fight against inflation and more precisely about the increase of Hydro-Quebec rates.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): I think this question should rather be directed to my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona wishes to rise on a point of order as I call orders of the day.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, since this parliament began I and other Members of Parliament from western Canada have been asking intelligent questions about the development of western Canada. A few moments ago the Prime Minister put me down by saying I was not asking intelligent questions. I just want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that kind of put-down attitude is what cost the Prime Minister dearly in the last election and will cost him just as much in the coming election.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on the very same matter raised by my colleague. It has to do with the answer to the question I asked the Postmaster General. We are trying to get better services in western Canada. The type of answer we are getting from the Prime Minister simply indicates arrogance and the fact that he is not willing to accept his responsibilities.

[Mr. Epp.]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps hon. member will allow the Chair to call orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, before the first order of business is called, may I ask the government House leader if he will indicate the sequence in which he expects to place government business before the House in the period between now and when the House rises for Easter?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to advise my hon. friend that today we will continue with the committee stage of the income tax bill and, hopefully, when we complete that bill we will turn to the Excise Tax bill and the Customs Tariff bill, to be followed by the CNR financing bill and possibly the crop insurance bill. My hope is that I will be able to call for a short time the debate on the food prices committee report, which was dealt with for one day earlier this week.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the House leader can indicate whether we can expect the new, modified FISP bill to be presented to the House before we rise for Christmas—for Easter, rather.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the family allowances bill will not be dealt with or brought forward before the Easter recess.

Mr. Lundrigan: What about Christmas?

Mr. MacEachen: I hope it will be brought forward soon after our return from the Easter recess.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I notice that today the hon. member for Crowfoot is wearing something over his right eye. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is also chairman of the transport committee. I want to assure you and members of this House that I had nothing to do with it.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. To my friends, colleagues in the House and political enemies may I say I should like to take credit for the handicap from which I am now suffering, which was caused by a piece of metal. It got in my eye when I was putting on my new Alberta license plates. The wild rose, as you know, is our flower and our license plates are very good, but I was handicapped somewhat by a bolt—

An hon. Member: You were hit in the eye.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): —which I had difficulty in removing. However, the eye is in perfect condition. The light bothers it somewhat, but not any light shed by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, April 9, consideration in committee of Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. The House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax. When the committee rose on Monday, April 9, clause 19 of the bill was under discussion. The hon. member for Bellechasse was seeking to be recognized. He is now recognized if he wishes to be.

On Clause 19—Depreciable and other Capital Property of Deceased Taxpayer.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned I was making a few remarks on Bill C-170 and since then, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) tabled an announcement that he will amend certain clauses. Since these amendments generally seem to satisfy the requests which have been made, I will wait until we are studying certain clauses of the bill to make representations.

As for clause 1, I would have preferred more significant advantages to be granted to the individual as regards basic exemptions. I admit that some improvements have been made to the bill but, in my opinion, they are not sufficient and do not match those requested.

Those were the few remarks I wanted to make at this stage; I will again raise certain subjects when the bill is studied clause by clause.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 20—Election by Legal Representation and Transferee Re Reserves.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, there is no difficulty with this clause, although I am wondering about the intrusion of a different principle by this clause. Frankly, I think it should have been included in clause 19. We are considering clause 20, subclause (1), and this ought to have been included as clause 19, subclause whatever. This matter does not affect the Income Tax Act although, so far as clause 20 is concerned, there is no difficulty with it whatsoever.

I should like to ask the minister, when he answers in speaking on clause 20, subclause (1), to deal with something that should have been clarified in clause 19. When we are considering depreciable property and there is the transfer by devolution to the child from the deceased taxpayer, I take it this provision covers all the buildings and improvements to the property of a depreciable nature, save and except the principal residence which is covered by Section 40 of the act. There has been some uncertainty about this. Perhaps the minister could clarify precisely what is going to be covered in this exemption from capital gains, first at the time of death and, second, the inter vivos transfer under the amendments that the minister has introduced. Presumably the same assets are going to be covered.

I will also want a full explanation as to the value of the capital asset which shows up in section 73(3), paragraphs (e), (i) and (ii). This appears in the left hand column of page 3 in Votes and Proceedings under the notice given by the minister where the valuation is deemed to be the capital cost of the transferor, not that of the transferee. I think we will get into a little bit of difficulty there.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I can give the undertaking to the hon. member and the committee that both on the transfer by death and the transfer inter vivos, during the lifetime, pursuant to the amendment I tabled, the free transmission involves all depreciable property, including buildings and equipment, original or improved. As the hon. member has suggested, the principal residence is already taken care of under another provision.

The hon. member's reference to paragraph (e) of section 73(3) is a relieving provision. This simply provides for the continuity of the cost provisions in respect of the depreciable property. I think that I can assure the hon. member that this again is a relieving provision.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question. It involves the transfer of the property of a farm family at death under the projected amendment. Is depreciable farm machinery included in this provision? In what manner will it be replaced or how will this be done? I think this is a very important area because of the high capital cost of farm machinery. I am particularly aware of the high capital cost of farm machinery for western grain growers. I would also like to ask the minister to clarify the distinction between the straight-line depreciation turnover and what I think is called the depreciated balance.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Diminishing balance.

Mr. Ritchie: Diminishing balance. The loss of this straight-line depreciation has been very keenly felt. I have received many more representations on this than on the capital gains tax on the family farm. I would like to see the straight-line depreciation carried on when the asset is passed from the parent to the son or daughter. I urge the minister to reinstate this straight-line depreciation. I believe that more than anything else, it has provided for a very strong economic base in agriculture. I think it is very important that this straight-line depreciation be carried on and expanded at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, these provisions, of course, apply primarily to the diminishing balance standard of depreciation and include that balance as applied to a depreciable property, as I defined earlier for the hon. member for Edmonton West. With regard to the straight-line depreciation, this is covered in Section 13 of the act. It is unaffected by these provisions; not narrowed, not widened.

Mr. Ritchie: Whatever is left can be carried forward by the new owner.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I believe that is the case, Mr. Chairman. We will give the hon. member further confirmation of that. If there is anything different to report, I will let the hon. member know.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, we have covered two cases. There is one point. It was my understanding the minister was also providing for the rollover. However, I now take it that would not now be included. I am referring to the rollover where the farmer, inter vivos, sells farm A in order to acquire farm B. There is no provision for that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is no provision for that. The rollover provisions only apply to depreciables of a prescribed class under the capital cost allowance system, since the farmer can already sell straight-line depreciables with a straight-line capital gain. We do not see a problem there.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Although I know the minister does not want to deal with incorporated family farms, under this legislation he is not providing for the situation where a farmer is going to sell his present farm, which may be too small, or for some other reason, and will immediately acquire a farm down the road. He may be moving from an orchard property to a corn growing property. There would still be the problem of capital gains with respect to this farm land transaction.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is so, Mr. Chairman, because it is not a continuation of the same farm. It is a barter, exchange or sale and purchase of a new farm property.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, when we were completing the business the other night, I asked the minister a question. I do not believe he has answered it. I wonder whether he would do so at this time. It was with regard to the evaluation that is being established on farm properties. At the present time, I do not think there is any provision whereby a farmer can confirm with the Department of National Revenue or the taxation department that his property has been evaluated and that the evaluation will be acceptable in future years and to future governments.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is quite a division of responsibilities in the administration and interpretation of the taxation policy. From time to time the Minister of Finance, whoever he or she may be, has the responsibility for tax policy, brings it forward to the House and committee and interprets it in terms of its own intentions. As hon. members know, those words are not binding on a court of law. The court, the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court will look at the statute as they find it. My words today or the words of any minister are not relevant in the interpretation of the statute. The parliamentary intention must be sought by the words of the statute itself, not only with regard to the tax law, but the Criminal Code or any other statute.

There is also a distinction in responsibility between the tax policy, which at the moment is mine, and the administration of the act, which is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. There is nothing in this bill or the amendment I introduced Thursday evening that bears on the problem raised by the hon. member. There is nothing in this bill, nothing in the amendments I introduced Thursday night, which bears on the question raised by the hon. member. I do not have the authority to respond to his question, except to say once again that I will draw the matter to the attention of my colleague and impress on him the importance the hon. member attaches to it.

Mr. Towers: Thank you. This is an important question. Valuation has to be established upon some basis, and if it is left in the hands of future generations the government will, no doubt, find itself in a position of unfair advantage. It is an issue which the government will be obliged to clear up, either through the Department of Finance or the taxation branch of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask the minister a question in connection with the amendment having to do with capital gains. Will he tell us his definition of a child? Is it the same as the definition here, which reads:

"Child" of a taxpayer includes a child of his child and a child of his child's child.

That is the extended meaning of "child" applicable to this transfer provision. Is the same definition used in the amendment the minister is bringing in? Will it include the grandchild?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not want to begin discussing the famous law against perpetuities which the hon. member for Edmonton West and I could argue, or the cases in British law involving what we used to call fertile octogenarians. The bill says:

For the purposes of subsection (9), "child" of a taxpayer includes a child of his child and a child of his child's child.

In other words, it includes children or grandchildren.

An hon. Member: Or great grandchildren.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Or great grandchildren. If, by reason of accident or predecease, there was a gap in the generations the benefit could go on to a further generation as long as the farm stayed within the family by direct descent.

Mr. Murta: Are farm partnerships, at the present time, or under the amendments, treated in the same way as farm corporations? There are a great many farm partnerships in existence throughout Canada, situations in which fathers and sons, or two or three brothers, are operating under partnership agreements. Would the minister clear up this matter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The rules apply only to individually held farms, since it is the family farm we are trying to preserve. They do not apply to partnerships or corporations.

Mr. Murta: That being the case, is the government prepared to consider a further extension of this principle, because there are a great many important implications here for the farming community?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are certainly prepared to look very sympathetically at the partnership question. The farm corporations pose far greater difficulty for us because they also involve non-farming small business as well. But I can go further into that, if the hon. member wishes.

The Chairman: We have before us Bill C-170, clause 20 which is found at the bottom of page 25 and the top of page 26 of the bill. Then, there is additional material which I presume the minister will ask to be formally moved in a few moments. First, I will ask the committee whether clause 20, as found at the bottom of page 25 and the top of page 26, is agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Now, I will ask the minister whether the material in respect of which the marginal notes are as follows—inter vivos transfer of farm property by farmer to his child; extended meaning of "child"; gain or loss deemed that of transferor; extended meaning of "child"—is to be moved by way of amendment by the minister or one of his colleagues.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sharp: I move:

That Bill C-170 to amend the statute law relating to income tax be amended immediately after clause 20 thereof by adding the following clauses:

'20.1 (1) Section 73 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"Inter vivos transfer of farm property by farmer to his child

(3) For the purposes of this Part, where at any time after 1971 any land in Canada or depreciable property in Canada of a prescribed class of a taxpayer has been transferred by a taxpayer to a child of his who was resident in Canada immediately before the transfer, and the property was, immediately before the transfer, used by him, his spouse or any of his children in the business of farming, the following rules apply:

(a) where the property transferred was depreciable property of the taxpayer of a prescribed class, the taxpayer shall be deemed to have disposed of the property at the time of the transfer and to have received proceeds of disposition therefor equal to

(i) in any case to which neither subparagraph (ii) nor subparagraph (iii) applies, the proceeds of disposition otherwise determined,
(ii) if the proceeds of disposition otherwise determined exceeded the greater of

(A) the fair market value of the property immediately before the time of the transfer, and

(B) that proportion of the undepreciated capital cost to him immediately before the time of the transfer of all of the depreciable property of the taxpayer of that class that the fair market value at that time of the property so transferred was of the fair market value at that time of all of the depreciable property of the taxpayer of that class, the greater of the amounts referred to in clauses (A) and (B), or

(iii) if the proceeds of disposition otherwise determined were less than the lesser of the amounts referred to in clauses (ii) (A) and (B), the lesser of those amounts;

(b) where the property transferred was land of the taxpayer, the taxpayer shall be deemed to have disposed of the property at the time of the transfer and to have received proceeds of disposition therefor equal to

(i) in any case to which neither subparagraph (ii) nor subparagraph (iii) applies, the proceeds of disposition otherwise determined,
(ii) if the proceeds of disposition otherwise determined exceeded the greater of

(A) the fair market value of the land immediately before the time of transfer, and
(B) the adjusted cost base to the taxpayer of the land immediately before the time of the transfer, the greater of the amounts referred to in the clauses (A) and (B), or

(iii) if the proceeds of disposition otherwise determined were less than the lesser of the amounts referred to in clauses (ii) (A) and (B), the lesser of those amounts;

(c) section 69 does not apply in determining the proceeds of disposition of the depreciable property or the land;

(d) the child shall be deemed to have acquired the depreciable property or the land, as the case may be, for an amount equal to the proceeds of disposition deemed to have been received under paragraph (a) or (b), respectively; and

(e) where the child is deemed to have acquired depreciable property of a prescribed class of the taxpayer for an amount determined under paragraph (d) and the capital cost to the taxpayer of the property exceeds the amount determined under that paragraph, for the purposes of sections 13 and 20 and any regulations made under paragraph 20(1)(a)

(i) the capital cost to the child of the property shall be deemed to be the amount that was the capital cost to the taxpayer thereof, and

(ii) the excess shall be deemed to have been allowed to the child in respect of the property under regulations made under paragraph 20(1)(a) in computing income for taxation years before the acquisition thereof.

Extended meaning of "child"

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), "child" of a taxpayer includes a child of his child and a child of his child's child."

(2) This section is applicable to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years.

Income Tax Act

20.2 (1) The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 75 thereof, the following section:

"Gain or loss deemed that of transferor

75.1 (1) Where

(a) a taxpayer has, after 1971, transferred property (which property is referred to in this subsection as "transferred property" to a child of his in circumstances such that subsection 73(3) applied in respect of the transfer,

(b) the transfer was made at less than the fair market value of the transferred property immediately before the time of the transfer, and

(c) in a taxation year, the transferee disposed of the transferred property and did not, before the end of that year, attain the age of 18 years, in computing the transferor's income for any taxation year the amount, if any, by which

(d) the aggregate of the transferee's taxable capital gains for the year from the disposition of the transferred property, exceeds

(e) the aggregate of the transferee's allowable capital losses for the year from the disposition of the transferred property, shall, during the lifetime of the transferor while the transferor is resident in Canada, be deemed to be a taxable capital gain of the transferor for the year from the disposition of property, and any gain or loss taken into account in computing the aggregate described in paragraph (d) or the aggregate described in paragraph (e) shall, for the purposes of computing the income of the transferee for a taxation year, be deemed not to have been a gain or loss of the transferee.

Extended meaning of "child"

(2) For the purposes of this section, "child" of a taxpayer includes a child of his child and a child of his child's child."

(2) This section is applicable to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years.' (English and French).—Sessional Paper No. 291-1/308B.

There are a fair number of amendments, and I thank the committee for permitting me to dispense with reading them all. I have, of course, read the marginal notes applicable to them. They are to be found in the added pages of last night's Votes and Proceedings. This is the material moved by the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and seconded by the President of the Privy Council by way of amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt these amendments?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The only comment I wish to make is this. I am very sorry the government failed to look into the question of the incorporation of the family farm. It is my information, and I take it as being reliable, that as of today there are about 8,000 family farm corporations in the country. Relative to the number of farmers in Canada the figure may seem small, but I put it to the minister that these 8,000 farms could readily account for between 30 and 40 per cent of agricultural production in this country. They are the heart and core of the bigger producers, particularly in the prairie provinces, though I am sure that if the minister would travel through southwestern Ontario he would find that the tobacco farmers, the dairy farmers and, certainly, the beef growers, are almost to a man incorporated.

This has been the thin end of the wedge. I am glad to see the principle has been recognized. It vindicates an amendment I put forward at the time the Finance Committee was making its report to the Minister of Finance. The government has at last recognized the principle that the family farm should, at this stage at least, be exempted from capital gains tax. I trust we shall see an extension so that the whole range is dealt with. Certainly, speaking on behalf of my colleagues, I commend this position as being one we would take.

Mr. Nystrom: A brief comment, Mr. Chairman. We, of course, support the amendment introduced by the minister and congratulate him on introducing it. I should like to say also he was very wise to accept the view of my party in this regard. I believe it was progressive move. We all recall that an amendment to the same effect was moved last year by a former member of this House, Mr. John Burton. It is an important step in keeping alive the family farm not only on the Prairies but throughout the country.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have taken note of the comments made by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I just want to say that the caucus of the party to which I belong was also instrumental in bringing about this decision. I want to give particular credit to the hon. member for Bruce.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister tells us his caucus was instrumental in getting the government to change its mind. Members of my party and members of the party to my left have tried for more than three years to bring some sanity to this legislation as far as the family farm is concerned. All I can say is that if a new caucus on the government side has been able to help bring about changes in this important field, let us have another election very soon so that we can benefit from either a new government or a new caucus, in order that still further changes may be made. It has been a "tax to form" bill, in view of what the Minister of National Revenue said. If these tax conformities are not clarified so there is a further conversion of Paul on the road to Damascus, as the Minister of Finance mentioned today, then they will be by other governments in the not too distant future, so that the Canadian public has a tax law that is not only equitable but sane and sensible, and can be understood by them.

• (1530)

The Chairman: Shall the amendment proposed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 20, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 21.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, perhaps we should revert to the practice we had the other day where, instead of my rising to ask a question, the minister gives an explanation, though I can say to the minister that I have no comment to make on this clause.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, again this amendment is of a relieving nature and will ensure that the capital cost of depreciable property or the adjusted cost base of other capital property would not be reduced a second time where a debt is extinguished or cancelled.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 22—Expropriation assets acquired as compensation for or as consideration for sale of foreign property taken by or sold to foreign issuer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, essentially this section permits a taxpayer to defer the recognition of income for tax purposes until such time as his investment has been recovered. It relates to section 80(1) which is the section providing for rules for determining the income of a taxpayer who has had a business carried on abroad which was expropriated by a foreign government.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, this, then, in essence, is to prevent from being taken into income at one time, or over two years, the total value of a foreign asset that has been expropriated; the resident Canadian taxpayer is therefore allowed to prorate it. He can also elect to take the income, if there are any securities of the acquiring country or authority, and accumulate that income so it becomes capital to the total value of the capital at the time of the expropriation. Thereafter it is treated as income but subject to income tax; is that so?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Basically, that is it.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 23—Navire ou aéronef appartenant à des non-résidents.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to the French version of paragraph 81(1)(c) and removes the word "ou" from the phrase "d'un navire ou d'un aéronef ou qu'elle exploite dans un trafic international". Clause 23(2) is a relieving amendment which exempts from taxation various forms of income accruing from property awarded to a person under 21 years of age in respect of personal injury. An example of persons who would benefit from this provision are the victims of the drug thalidomide.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, about 15 months ago we made an amendment reducing legal age to 18 so as to conform with what is now considered to be the age of an adult, and since in most provinces today the legal age of an adult is 18, why are we reverting to the age of 21 rather than going down to the plateau of 18, as I think we should?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, to look at this from another point of view, we are trying to exempt income building up on a compensation award, leaving it free of tax until the person is 21. So, it is really for the benefit of the child that the income be allowed to accumulate from an award until he is 21, rather than 18. This provision has nothing to do with majority, minority or civil responsibility; it is purely a relieving measure.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, last Thursday night I brought some comments to the attention of the Minister of Finance regarding the section of the act that is being amended by this clause of the bill. If I may refresh the memory of the Minister of Finance, it had to do with disability payments paid under supernannuation or retirement plans. Before I go any further, I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Finance if he remembers the points I made?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman put it in such articulate terms, there is no way I could forget. He raised a question about the taxation of workmen's compensation payments made to injured firemen employed by the borough of Scarborough. I am advised that workmen's compensation payments made to injured firemen employed by the borough are being exempted from tax. Workmen's compensation is a provincial responsibility, but it is my understanding that as a Schedule II employer, 75 per cent of the normal wage paid as workmen's compensation is not being subjected to income tax. The additional 25 per cent amount paid by the employer is being subjected to tax.

In the case of permanent disability, it is my understanding that a similar exemption is being accorded to amounts payable as workman's compensation. Since the administration of the act is involved here, perhaps if the hon. member has any specific case he would refer the situation to my colleague the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Harney: May I thank the Minister of Finance for his compliment about my articulateness, but in spite of my reputation I guess my point was still not made; I am sorry about that. I was not referring to firemen working for the borough of Scarborough; it happened to be firemen who had been working in the past for the Toronto fire department. I understand that Scarborough and Toronto are very close neighbours, so I can see where the minister made the mistake.

I was not talking about people who are receiving benefits from the workmen's compensation board, be it in the province of Ontario or any other province. I understand that they are quite clearly covered by the provisions of the present act in section 81(1)(h). I was talking about people who in the past had received disability payments at a time when their working unit was not covered by workmen's compensation by reason of provincial law. The case I employed as a clear example of this was that of the Toronto fire department.

The Toronto fire department had a very ancient and venerable superannuation, retirement and disability plan of its own, and it was not until the late 1950's that the Toronto firefighters were brought under the workmen's compensation board. Before that time, if the firemen were injured they received disability payments, not from the workmen's compensation board but out of their own superannuation and retirement funds. But these payments were clearly disability pensions.

Since the late 1950s—staying with the example of the Toronto firefighters—firemen who are injured and who receive disability payments from the workmen's compensation board do not have their pensions taxed. The unfortunate persons who worked for the fire department before it came under the workmen's compensation board do have their disability pensions taxed.

The point I was trying to make to the minister was this. Would he consider making an amendment to bring the pensions of these people within the terms of the act having to do with income that is not to be included in any amount that is calculated to be taxable? That is quite a different matter from the one to which the minister just referred.

As I said the other night, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason in simple justice why these people should have their disability pensions taxed. The cases I have in mind are those of people who have appealed to the income tax department and have been told time and time again that nothing can be done because of the law, although their cases are just and will be reported to the Department of National Revenue. They probably were reported in the past, but in effect nothing has been done. I know of 12 cases in Toronto of people who used to work for the Toronto Fire Department. I cannot guess how many other Canadians are affected by the same difficulty in the law, but I would suspect it is many more than the 12 cases of those firefighters in Toronto. There are probably all kinds of people who worked for provincial or municipal governments who fall within that category. I wonder if by my stumbling and awkward manner, and my rather inarticulate remarks, I have managed to convey the point to the minister.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am prepared to look into this further, but in reference to the Toronto Fire Department, it is my understanding that the pension plan in 1954 contained a disability clause and pensions paid under it were subject to tax and contributions by way of premiums are deductible. If that is so, this is fairly normal, but I will look into it again to see whether there is any remedial measure I should take in the way of some further amendment. If that is the situation and contributions are deductible on the way in, they would be taxable on the way out. If this is part of a disability situation it may be different, but I will look into it.

Mr. Harney: I have just one final point. I take it when the minister says he will look into it he means he will do so for the purposes of the discussion we are now having with regard to amendments to the tax act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would need far more precision than I have now to be able to do that, but if there is a legitimate problem here I will undertake to the hon. member to remedy it at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, would it be possible for us to put aside our decision on Clause 23 while the minister has a further opportunity to look into the matter?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that Clause 23 shall stand?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Stand.

Clause 24 agreed to.

On Clause 25—Transfer of property to corporation by controlling shareholder.

[Mr. Harney.]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take the opportunity to make a few comments about partnership rules on the basis of a discussion I had with my own accountant and an article written by Donald R. Huggett which appeared in the Canadian Chartered Accountant. He suggested that in attempting to find a reserve for 1971 receivables it is the individual partners of a partnership who will have the real problem, not because of any particular equity or anomaly but because reserve limitations are so difficult to grasp and computations are virtually impossible to make with any degree of accuracy. He said:

> As stated, individual partners must bring into income in 1972 their share of 1971 receivables which were not previously taxed, but they are permitted to deduct a reserve therefrom which, in the case of expanding firms, may result in the postponement of tax until retirement or later years. It is the computation of the "reserve" that will give many professionals fits—

He goes on to state that the actual cost is not so difficult to calculate, and then states:

> Fair market value of a partner's interest may be a difficult figure to determine and no rules are prescribed (naturally) for its computation. However, it may be significant to note that the proper figure is the fair market value of the partner's interest and not his share of the fair market value of the partnership.

I think this is of some importance in assessing tax equity. Mr. Huggett also states:

> Unlike the computations for cost and fair market value, the calculation of tax equity must be made at the partnership level. Once established, it must then be apportioned among the partners. No rules are provided for the division of tax equity among partners and one can only assume that the number of methods will approximate the number of professional partnerships in Canada. Unfortunately, playing the tax game without rules is almost as dangerous as playing Russian . . . roulette—

He then went on to say in the final paragraph:

> While the various provisions seem logical, there is no doubt that they are extremely complicated and that it would be extravagant for each and every partner of a professional firm to spend the time required to attempt to comprehend them in full.

I think this is an area in which partnerships have a very shady and dim path to follow.

On Clause 28.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, this deals primarily with the valuation of a licence or a permit held by a corporation. In this connection, I am wondering what the minister has by way of an example. To what extent may a corporation hold a permit and what will be the valuation of it? I am thinking of the rights to distribute certain types of goods under a permit issued by a municipal corporation. Would a milk quota, for example, be involved? Perhaps the minister could give us an explanation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is consequential on the amendment which provides for taking into the cost period a government licence, which would include milk quotas and all other types of federal, provincial or municipal licences. This particular amendment provides for including in tax equity of the corporation at the end of this 1971 tax year, the cost of the permit issued under governmental authority during the time, and the cost is defined in 21 of the Income Tax Application Rules, 1971. This is consequential on the basic valuation in other clauses.

On Clause 29.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask why 5 per cent was chosen instead of 10 per cent, as basically that is the change made in this clause? This question has arisen in respect of holdings to become part of an affiliated corporation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This is a relieving clause which allows more corporations to qualify.

On Clause 31—Deduction in computing income of trust.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have had a running battle with the minister by correspondence, and with others, including the Minister of National Revenue, relative paragraph 104(14) whereby it is provided for an election within a prescribed time and in a prescribed manner by the preferred beneficiaries. I think the minister's adviser knows whereof I speak.

• (1550)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have the letter right here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What the minister is doing is that instead of the word "his" he is putting in the words "any beneficiary". That clarifies the wording of the section, but where is the prescribed time and the prescribed manner; where are the regulations? They have not been issued, and I am told it may be months before they are issued. Considering that this is legislation which was introduced in December, 1971 it seems strange that no regulation has been issued. A number of estates of very important size are being prejudicially affected at the present time by this inability to make the election.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman has a different point here. The basic regulations have been issued. On the discretionary trusts, the regulations have not been issued because we wanted to get some idea how the total system works. I understand we are still two or three months away from that. The hon. gentleman has a legitimate point here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In respect of relief for the taxpayers involved will there be a retroactive effect, because in the interval these trusts have been tabled at 50 per cent and they are paying the high rate of tax. I know it is in the minister's interest to bring in as much money as possible, but in so far as the taxpayers are concerned they are not large in number and this is very important in so far as investments are concerned. I do not care whether it involves only 20 taxpayers, because if they are being done in the eye then something must be wrong.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, I think we have had a fair amount of correspondence from the hon. member on these points and we will try to do something.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 32 and 33 agreed to.

On clause 34—Over 65 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, clause 34 is one of the clauses which has made it urgent that this bill be passed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It should have been through in December.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, or two or three years before that. The desirability of getting the clause through, of course, is so that refunds may be made which a number of pensioners have claimed on filing their returns, refunds which we understand have been computed and are ready to be mailed. What this clause does is to raise to $1,000 the extra exemption a taxpayer can claim if he is 65 years or over. For the year 1971, that figure stood at $500. It was raised by a previous piece of legislation to $650 for the year 1972. However, if this clause goes through, that $650 will never have been in effect and instead the figure will be $1,000 as from January 1, 1972.

I suppose there are few pieces of legislation before this parliament that will receive such quick and ready endorsation, but because it is so popular and so certain to be passed I dare to ask a question about it, even at the risk of appearing to question motherhood. If my memory is correct, and I think it is, the first time when an extra exemption for old age was added to the basic income tax exemption was at a time when the government was being pressed to increase the amount of the old age pension. It did not feel it could do so and thus this concession was made. It was my own thought at that time that this was a temporary arrangement and that when the time came for pensions to be made universal, and of a more substantial amount, that the extra exemption which originally was $500 at age 70 I believe, or was it to start at age 65—I think it started at age 65.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was suspended in 1964.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then, for a while it was suspended for those receiving old age security between the age 65 and 70. At any rate, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether this time around any consideration was given to the alternative, namely, that instead of a charge on the treasury of this kind, that is allowing this extra exemption, that the amount of money involved might be used to raise the actual amount of the old age pension. My point is that when you allow this $1,000 exemption it is fine for all those who have income taxes to pay, but what about the million—I think that must be the number—persons over age 65 who do not pay any income tax at all? This extra $1,000 does not mean a cent to them. To those who pay a little income tax this $1,000 exemption may mean a bit, or if you go at it in another way those in the upper brackets receive a fairly high percentage reduction and those in the lower brackets receive a lower amount.

Is the minister familiar—I am sure he must be—with the history of this? Has some consideration been given along the way to using this money to increase the actual amount of the pension? I submit that $15 or $20 added to the actual pension of everyone would be more of benefit to the persons on old age security than this benefit. There are some organizations, notably organizations of women in this country, which have made quite a study of this matter and have recommended this very course. I do not know whether the recommendations have reached the minister, but I hope they have. Even though it may sound a little academic to ask a question about this matter which will be passed very quickly, I should like to ask the minister whether thought has been given to the alternative that instead of the extra exemption, which means nothing at all to one million old age pensioners, the amount involved here could have been added as an additional amount to the old age security pension itself.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, Mr. Chairman, I would have to review the various philosophical thrusts behind the three types of old age pension. The first is a universal pension paid across the board, regardless of need and means to everyone in this country 65 years of age or over. That is in consideration I believe of the productive efforts and initiative that our older people have put into the country, as a reimbursement to them for that effort and also as a means of supplementing their income after their earning days are over. Added to that on a basis of need is the guaranteed income supplement for those whose resources are insufficient. The raising of the exemption, on the other hand, from $500, then to $650 and now to $1,000 is in recognition of those people of moderate means—more than moderate means sometimes—and people of less than moderate means who during their lifetime have sacrificed in order to provide some kind of capital assets from which they derive income. This is as an encouragement to them to set something aside and as a recognition of the fact that such incentive is worthwhile in our society.

• (1600)

If they were to build up a property of $10,000, $20,000, or $30,000, or now in the case of working men and women, capital far in excess of that, then the income they draw from it might be $3,000, $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000 a year in addition to what they have by way of old age pension. I suppose the philosophy is that the exemption should be raised for those people as an extra incentive. For single persons aged 65 or over there would be a basic exemption of $1,500, the optional standard deduction of $100, and the special deduction for age proposed in the bill of $1,000, making $2,600. No income tax is paid by persons over 65 up to $2,600. For married persons there is the $1,500 exemption plus the additional exemption for married persons of $1,350, again the optional standard deduction of $100, and the proposed special deduction for senior citizens of $1,000. So, for someone over 65 who is married, the total exemption is now $3,900 and no tax is paid on that amount.

The purpose of this amendment is to encourage the setting aside of a nest egg, of savings, to encourage the curtailment of consumption for future use. Perhaps that is a worthwhile motive in our society.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to add anything to what was already said on second reading and to all the protests I have made about the pressures now being put by the government to get this bill through now because time is operating to the prejudice of senior citizens, but primarily—and some are becoming most excited about this—to the students who are on the other end of the scale. The polity should be made by the government to the taxpayers concerned because these were provisions that were brought in in the budget of May last year and the bill introduced in June of last year. Here we are in mid-April, and these people are still not able to obtain their refunds.

However, the point that I want to make is directed more to the Minister of National Revenue than to the Minister of Finance. As you know, there is form TD1 wherein the taxpayer is the subject who files with his employer, or the person paying him the income he makes, indicating the extent of the exemptions that he is claiming. We have provisions for people of married status and we have a provision for wholly dependant persons, and we also have provisions for persons over 65, but it was drawn to my attention yesterday afternoon over the telephone by a person who is directly affected that there is no provision for the claiming of an exemption by a disabled person who is entitled to the $1,000 exemption. As a matter of fact, the person in question is an employee of the government of Canada, and that person is not able to file a TD 1 form and obtain a $1,000 exemption but must claim it at the end of the year through a refund. In this particular instance the refund to that person has been held up. If that person has a statutory right to an exemption, why should the TD 1 form not provide for it?

I do not think this is the same sort of thing as one can claim a little later on under section 35 for attendants allowance for a totally disabled person. In this particular case I make a strong recommendation that the Minister of National Revenue take a look at form TD 1, and let us reverse the process for these disabled persons.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, as I indicated when I was speaking a few minutes ago, I do not wish to delay the passing of this clause or even the passing of this bill, but I would like to say that I appreciate the answer which the Minister of Finance gave in response to my comments. He indicated that there are different groups of people and that the purpose of this provision is to recognize the position and the rights of those who have some savings of their own. That is a point of view that I share, especially when we come to the question of universality. It is precisely for that reason that I do not think there should be any means test on old age pensions at all. But that is an argument we can make on another occasion.

The point I would like to make—and I hope the minister will accept it—is that in spite of all the fanfare there is about this, at least one million old age pensioners get no advantage out of this at all. The number of old age pensioners who qualify for the guaranteed income supplement, according to the latest figures I have, is about 58 per cent of the total, or 58 per cent of 1,800,000, which is about 1,045,000. Of course, people who qualify for the guaranteed income supplement are getting money that itself is not taxable, so with these new limits they are not taxable in any case.

I also wish to draw to the attention of the Minister of Finance that the percentage I gave a moment ago, which comes from the latest figures which I have obtained, is higher than it was the year before. In other words, even with the higher rates of pension and the higher rates of guaranteed income supplement, the number of Canadians over 65 who qualify for at least a portion of the guaranteed income supplement is rising. A couple of years ago, it was 55 per cent. Last year, it was 58 per cent. So there is an increasing number of persons whose other income is limited and who rely very heavily on the old age security pension and on the guaranteed income supplement. If the minister wonders about what I said to him I will say again that the percentage of those receiving old age security who have so little that they can apply for the guaranteed income supplement is increasing, and therefore my point is that if he wants to do something substantial for old age pensioners he has to do more than this. This higher exemption is all right, but it is only a token.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I just want to raise one small point with the minister. It is a suggestion which I should like to make that perhaps ways and means could be found to discontinue sending personalized income tax forms to certain categories of elderly people who are not in the taxable bracket and who no longer contribute to the Canada Pension Plan.

I realize that there is a legal obligation to file income tax returns and indicate that you are not taxable, but to many elderly people it begins to be almost a harassment when they receive complicated income tax forms which they are required to file. I wonder if the minister has any suggestion to make on this matter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Malpeque. One cannot know in advance whether any particular taxpayer is or is not taxable on the basis of his income. I suppose that in case of doubt the Minister of National Revenue sends out a form. What we have done under this bill is to recognize that elderly people in particular whose income is less than a certain amount should not have to file by instalment. The bill provides that if the previous year's tax was $400 or less, then they do not have to pay by instalment. That is a relief from the burden that the hon. member mentioned. The Department of National Revenue has the past records to go on at the $400 or less taxable income level but across the board it is a little hard to know whether the particular taxpayer has taxable income until we send out the forms. I do not know any way around that.

Mr. MacLean: I do not know either, but I was thinking of people who had been employed and had been taxed on that basis and who have little or no other income which would put them in a taxable bracket or who are no longer employed, who are retired and not contributing to the Canada Pension Plan. I feel that perhaps there could be a system where the computer could be made to turn off when it gets to that category of people.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): There are some officials of the Department of National Revenue in the House and I hope they will take note of that point.

The Chairman: Shall clause 34 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 35.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, in this clause there are a great number of extensions dealing with students, full-time attendants for the disabled, travelling allowances for medical services and so on. This is an amendment to Section 110(1)(c)(iv.1) which deals with a full time attendant in a self-contained domestic establishment, not a nursing home. This is an extension of the old nursing home full time attendant arrangement. Can the minister explain what is meant by full time attendant? Is that a person who must live in, who works 40 hours a week—if it is a domestic establishment is that a nurse or a male attendant who works eight or nine hours a day five days a week and then the taxpayer is home for the weekend to look after the aged parent or whoever is under the care of the full time attendant?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it is a question of fact.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is easy to say it is a question of fact, but how is it defined? If I were the taxpayer and had an aged parent at my home with a full time attendant is that full time attendance six hours a day or eight hours a day? If the Department of National Revenue insists that it has to be an eight hour day and my arrangement with the attendant is for a six hour day I can get into an awful row.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Worse still, if they call for 24 hours.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it the same if they live in? Is it a five day week?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think it is in the interest of the taxpayer that this be left vague. A full time attendant is a full time attendant. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he asks if it would be 24 hours a day. That would be unreasonable. I think it is in the interest of the taxpayer to have these terms defined generally as full time attendants and allow it. If we were to get specific then anything outside the specific clause would be included. Knowing the drafting process as I do, I tend to feel that my friends define rather narrowly and I would hate to see cases meriting consideration which might be excluded by a narrow definition. I think the taxpayer is better served by a general definition.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, with this interpretation, it may be that, since the evidence of payment or of the employment is to be by way of a receipt bearing the social security number of the attendant and is, therefore, available for income tax purposes—if the attendant were to work six hours during the daytime hours and to work at night in the supermarket, we could get into all sorts of difficult situations. I want to try to determine the wishes of the minister and also what the House thinks about this. It should be as broad as possible so that we do not get a narrow interpretation by national revenue assessors.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think that any assessor who reads this would interpret it generously.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, on second reading of this bill I presented an idea to the minister regarding the expenses incurred for medical purposes when the individual has to travel from his residence to some other spot where the facilities are available. At that time I was not looking at the bill but at the statement the minister made about it on May 8, 1972. Clause 35(3)(viii.1) at the bottom of page 57 of the bill provides that those expenses can be deducted if a number of things happen, one of which is if payment is made:

to a person engaged in the business of providing transportation services, to the extent that the payment was made for the transportation of

In this instance, the taxpayer has to make the payment to a person engaged in providing transportation services; in other words, he has to hire a transportation vehicle when he is 25 miles or more away from the facility. From my own experience travelling around the country, I know that there are a number of places where commercial transportation is not available in any convenient form. In a northern area it is not unusual for people living close to the communities to own their own boats, yet have no medical facilities available in the community. In others, people are disadvantaged by the lack of commercial transportation and have to use automobiles while in the far north it is a question of aircraft. People who own their own aircraft may have to use them to travel for medical attention.

I think the construction of that subparagraph which says that the demand must be made "to a person engaged in the business of providing transportation services" would deny the opportunity for the deduction in cases where there were no commercial transportation facilities to take the patient 25 miles or more for medical attention. I suggest that this subparagraph should be amended. I drafted the amendment and sent a copy to the minister so that he could consult with the people who are in the business of drafting. I do not know whether my suggestion is acceptable, but I think we should remove subparagraph (viii.1) entirely and substitute the following:

to a person engaged in the business of providing transportation services—

Which is how it reads at the moment, and add the words:

or for transportation by a mode of transport owned by the taxpayer at rates not in excess of those provided by regulation for any such mode of transport to the extent that the payment was made for the transportation of

• (1620)

The additional words are, "transportation by a mode of transport owned by the taxpayer at rates not in excess of those provided by regulation". The difficulty I had in trying to adopt language that might be acceptable, in order that an acceptable and reasonable figure might be arrived at, was compounded by the fact that, as mentioned earlier, it is difficult to know how much a mode of transport may cost. For instance, in coastal areas people normally travel by boat, usually their own boat. I do not know how much it costs per mile to run a boat. Cost varies with the size of the boat, and I do not know what a reasonable cost would be. Similarly, varying figures could be used in connection with the operation of a motor vehicle. We are allowed 16 cents per mile, and in other areas the allowance is 14 cents, and so on. It is difficult to spell out these amounts. Again, in the far north or remote areas of the country people own their own aircraft. I do not know how much it costs to travel by aircraft. What the reasonable figure would be I do not know.

I thought that this matter might best be decided by regulation which might spell out what is a reasonable cost for the various kinds of transportation that a person might use. To stretch the point, in the depths of winter, in the northern most points, the mode of transportation would be dog sled, I presume. I do not know what are the cost factors involved in that mode. As it may be necessary to spell out these costs in great detail, that matter might better be left to regulation. I hope the words of the amendment cover the point I am trying to make. If my suggestion is acceptable, I think it may ease what otherwise would be a discriminatory application of this particular concept.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss the clause on page 59 dealing with deductions to be allowed for students and supporting individuals.

Mr. Barnett: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. member is out of order. The hon. member for Skeena has proposed an amendment which, I respectfully suggest, might be put.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair expected the hon. member to raise a point of order, I imagine because the hon. member for Skeena hoped that the minister might comment on his suggested amendment. However, the minister did not rise and the chair did not receive the amendment as yet. I, therefore, recognized the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I handed a copy of the amendment to a gentleman here, because I wanted it to reach you.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I did not get a copy of the amendment either.

Mr. Howard: Members are so interested in it that perhaps there were not enough copies to go around.

The Deputy Chairman: It was the impression of the Chair that the hon. member wanted first to hear the remarks of the minister, or is he definitely asking the committee to consider the amendment immediately?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the normal purpose in moving an amendment, as I understand it, is to have that amendment considered. I did that. If you or members of the committee think it would be more appropriate if this were done in another way, I would be glad to do that. However, I formally put forward the amendment. If the matter needs to be couched in different words, to comply with the sort of language that lawyers use in the writing of statute law, I would be glad to listen to other words, if by so doing we could be more precise. Initially, however, I must move the amendment in order to bring it formally before the committee.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve my right to challenge the matter from the point of view of its being in order, naturally. It may well go beyond the scope of the clause and extend the incidence of the charge on the people defined by the terms of the ways and means resolution as agreed to by the House.

Having said that, let me say that my officials and, particularly, the officials of the Department of National Revenue think there might be difficulty in the administration of this. The argument of the hon. member is well taken. It may be that in various regions of the country where commercial transport is not available by road, air or water, that a private charter arrangement would have to be made for the person to use his own car; he could have someone drive him, or use his own boat, or some other mode of transport. Obviously, the administration problem in this area involves difficulty because of the possibility of abuse. Perhaps we ought to stand the clause and see what we can do by way of drafting to meet the point and provide some protection, so that there would not be an unnecessary incidence of abuse.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I simply agree to stand the matter, but let me say this about the question of abuse. If a person is in business and uses his car in the conduct of his business, and drives 150 miles to conduct business, he keeps track of that cost, and charges X cents a mile, or whatever may be permitted. How can you protect from abuse in that type of activity? Presumably it would be fairly simple to keep track of expenses.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can see a difficulty. If a person is driven in an ambulance or taxi or bus he has a receipt showing that he has paid out some money, and keeping track of expenses is relatively easy. But the trouble arises when there is no record of disbursements. We will ask the national revenue people to see what they can come up with, to cover the point.

Mr. Howard: If a person spends money to earn income and drives his car 150 miles to conduct his business, he does not pay out any money except for gasoline. Can he not charge so many cents per mile for doing that business? Can he not say, "I had to spend that?"

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But we are not talking about business expenditures.

Mr. Howard: I know the minister is not, but I am. I am saying that as, in that situation in which a person makes a business expenditure there is some kind of check to prevent abuse, the same kind of check could be applied in the area I am talking about. That is all I am saying.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I certainly sympathize with the hon. member for Skeena who has mentioned the problems of people living in isolated areas. However, problems of a legal nature may arise out of his proposal. If a charge is made by a neighbour or an individual who is not in the business of transportation, the insurance policy covering the vehicle may be invalidated; no matter whether it is an aircraft or car, the insurance policy is invalidated if a charge is made. If there is only compensation for gasoline, that may be all right. The difficulty only arises if a charge is made.

Second, I find difficulty in justifying the amendment as worded. How would it apply to a populated area, like Ottawa? The wording of the amendment does not exclude such areas. For example, it would be simple for me to run from one side of Ottawa to the other and back, and drive almost 25 miles. I beg your pardon. The distance is to be in one direction; that makes it somewhat different. I object to that amendment to the act, because if I were to live on one side of Toronto and I were to go to the other side, and there may be valid reasons for my so doing, then I would drive not less than 25 miles in one direction. Let me add that the cost of commercial modes of transportation will be far in excess of the cost of taking an ambulance or taxi in a rural or unpopulated area. I know what the hon. member for Skeena wants to do. I agree we should stand this clause to see whether there is some way of arriving at this isolated area proposition. We can take another look at this tonight.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time I have heard a Minister of Finance stand up in committee and say this is a good idea, but we will have to let National Revenue look at it. I sometimes wonder whether anyone from National Revenue in a responsible decision making capacity ever moves out of this capital. Often an essential and sensible suggestion to try to equalize and make fair the application of laws for people who do not live in large urban areas is by-passed on some excuse that it is administratively difficult.

Perhaps the people who live in the communities the hon. member for Skeena was talking about are not as wily as some urban dwellers. I do not know. Why would a thing like this be difficult? It is a matter of geography; more than 25 miles. If that is not enough to satisfy the hon. member for Edmonton West, let us make it 27 or 28 miles. It is a simple matter of geography. There are maps of Canada that show how far it is from point A to point B. Surely, somewhere within the apparatus of the government of Canada there are facts available with regard to where medical facilities are located. If the Department of National Revenue does not have that information, surely it could be supplied by Statistics Canada or the Department of National Health and Welfare.

With regard to the question of evasion, this could be covered by the submission of some kind of voucher supporting the claimed deduction. If it has to be validated by an appropriate medical authority stating that the person was in fact required to travel from his place of residence to a medical facility in order that the claim could be scrutinized by the Department of National Revenue, that would not be a very difficult requirement. I appreciate the minister's remark that he wants to make sure this is administratively feasible. However, I certainly hope what is essentially a sound proposal to achieve fairness will not be sidetracked, as is so often the case. There is a recent example of this in an information bulletin which was issued the other day; it dealt with the question of expenses at remote sites.

We in this chamber must recognize the realities of life in the various parts of Canada. We should try to make the law fair to those people who accept the advice the Prime Minister has been handing out rather freely in recent months to go to the places where the work is and produce the wealth. These kinds of discouragements can be built into laws to prevent people from feeling they are being treated equal if they go into the resource areas and take the sometimes heavy production types of jobs. It is sometimes difficult to understand the exhortations about young Canadians going to the north, going west, or wherever it may be that these jobs are supposed to be available. I urge the minister and his officials in the Department of Finance not to accept a brush-off from the Department of National Revenue because of some imaginary administrative difficulty.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on the same point? If not, perhaps the Chair should put the motion at this time.

Mr. Alexander: If I understand correctly, Mr. Chairman, the minister would like an opportunity to give this further consideration. In any event, Mr. Chairman, if we are just discussing the whole ambit, I would like to know—

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If we are not speaking on an amendment, I believe I have the floor.

Mr. Alexander: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to—

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member would be right if we were in the House, but in committee any member can seek the floor when another member resumes his seat. No one loses his right. The Chairman has recognized the hon. member for Hamilton West. Following that, I will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Alexander: I did not realize my colleague was seeking the floor. I bow to him. If I were sitting on the other side, I would maintain my right but it is my colleague who is seeking the floor.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss some of the clauses on page 59 which deal with allowances for students and ask for some reconsideration so that greater help can be given to students, parents and others from many of our middle class families. The incomes of many of these families are too high for them to receive much of the government aid that is available through grants and loans and, at the same time, are so low they find that financing education for their young people is not easy.

I congratulate the minister on the proposals appearing on page 59. They indicate a great deal of progress in this area, first in recognizing the principle that the cost of university and other education should be deductible and, second, making some very admirable provisions for it. Good as the provision is, I think it ought to go much farther. I hope the minister will give consideration to the comments I will make and to the suggestions I will offer.

I first wish to point out that this proposal only allows for one variable, that is the variable of the student's income. According to this proposal, he may deduct $50 a month times the number of months he is enrolled in the institution. In the case of the sponsoring individual making the income tax return, he may deduct the student's taxable income. A much more important and relevant variable for the student or his family is the way the fees vary. According to the proposals on page 59, considerable advantage is given to a person attending a certain kind of educational institution, such as a community college where the fee may only be in the neighbourhood of $250 a year. A student attending for nine or 10 months of the year can claim a deduction of $450 or more. Compare that with the need of the student who is enrolled in a scientific course that may involve him paying a fee in the neighbourhood of $1,000. He can only claim the same deduction as the person paying a fee in the neighbourhood of $250. Some consideration should be given to providing for this variability in the kind of fees our students and their families are paying.

I suggest it could be covered if the bill were changed so that the student or his sponsor might deduct $50 multiplied by the number of months of the year during which the institution is attended, or the tuition fee, whichever was the greater. This would be of considerable help to students enrolled in expensive courses. These students do not all come from high income families. Many are attending these institutions only through great efforts by themselves or by their families. They do not make up a great number of taxpayers, and I think we would find that the value of the help to them would far exceed the burden it might place on the government.

I should like to comment, now, on another subject. Clause 35 makes provision for students attending universities outside Canada, but as far as I can see not for students attending other post-secondary institutions which do not offer degrees. I find it difficult to understand why non-degree-granting institutions within Canada should be on the list of designated institutions while those outside Canada are not. I think we should take into account the needs of students attending nursing schools, art schools and other educational, institutions, which, if they were in Canada, would be on the list of designated institutions.

It sometimes happens that students need to go outside Canada to attend courses which are not available here, and I do not think they should be penalized for doing so. Further, I would point out that we offer the opportunity to a Canadian taxpayer to deduct where a student is enrolled in a non-degree-granting institution outside Canada if the student commutes to such an institution, but not if he is a full-time resident. Again, it is hard to see why this distinction should be made. A student living within driving distance of the United States border might, for example, be able to attend an engineering school, or a school of technology, or a nursing school, there, and benefit from this concession. On the other hand, if he lived hundreds of miles from the border and was obliged to live near the school of his choice, he could not claim this reduction.

Finally, I would ask that the minister give considerable thought to the possibility of permitting an allowance for parents who send their children to privately-funded schools. According to the most recent figures I have, there are 147,628 boys and girls attending schools of this kind. Many of these children will not go on to universities or colleges. They do not come from high income families. Most of them are in these schools because of profound religious and moral convictions on the part of their parents. The families concerned support the public sector of the educational system through taxation, though they do not necessarily benefit from it. They have to meet, from their own resources, often at great sacrifice, the cost of educating their children at these private schools. I myself am profoundly committed to the concept of the public education system, but I believe we should have equal respect for those who are looking after these private institutions. I suggest that opportunity be given for the parents of such children to deduct all or part of the cost of private education from their taxable income. This would go a long way to assist Canadian parents who because of religious and moral convictions find themselves bearing a very heavy burden.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to consider the question of income from educational trusts. I am informed that such income is subject to taxation even though the money derived from the funds will be going to the children. I have received complaints that parents have to regard such income as taxable and I hope the minister will consider exempting income derived from educational trusts from definition as taxable income.

The minister has done something which will receive support from all parts of the House and of the country in recognizing the principle which characterizes his proposals, but I trust he will give serious thought to improving these provisions so as to help a large number of families and individuals who are making an honest effort to advance themselves.

Mr. Skoreyko: A few comments having to do with allowances in respect of students attending certain types of educational institutions. I have received a number of letters from the Edmonton area where parents of nurses have gone to the Department of National Revenue for a ruling as to whether or not student nurses qualify under the section we are considering. They were given a negative answer. They did not qualify because nurses were not attending a degree-granting university. I should like to point out to the minister that those who decide to become members of the honourable profession of nursing work very hard for five or six days a week without pay for what they do. It is true they may receive some benefit by way of board, but the responsibility for their maintenance is a responsibility of the parents. These students will graduate from nursing schools supported by the departments of education in their respective provinces. These nursing schools are entitled, under provincial laws, to grant degrees. Why, in these circumstances, are nurses not accorded the benefits of this section? I shall have more to say on this subject in a few moments after I have heard the minister's response.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to make a few comments on the subject dealt with by the hon. member for Scarborough East. He may think every member of every party agrees with him, or with the general principle enunciated in this clause having to do with clause 35(6)(h). Speaking as a Member of Parliament and as a taxpayer—and as a taxpayer who benefits from this section—I am less than enthused about this proposal. I have not worked out a detailed calculation, but I have a daughter who attends university for seven months of the year. Based on a total of $350 for the year, in my particular tax bracket I suppose I would save somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100 to $125 a year. I admit that I do not mind getting that saving, but once again it seems to me that we have a relatively new provision in our income tax law that benefits people in the top income brackets of this country who least need the help.

I do not have the actual figures in front of me, but if I say that 80 per cent or more of the young people who attend universities—not community colleges but universities—in Canada come from the upper or middle income groups, I am certain that I am making a relatively conservative estimate. Yet it is precisely this group of people, the young students or their parents, who will benefit from this provision that was brought in last year, I think it was. This is one more illustration of how over the years we have brought into our income tax law special provisions that have eroded the progressive nature of the income tax law and given advantage to people in the upper and middle income brackets. We all know that, particularly since the end of world war II, the gross national income in Canada has risen each year somewhere between 5 and 9 per cent. We know that most people in Canada are living better than ever before, and we all like to think that in recent years we have been moving toward a more egalitarian and equitable society. But that is not the case.

Some questions that I asked both last year and this year and which were answered by Statistics Canada demonstrate conclusively that those in the upper income brackets in this country are each year getting a larger percentage of the gross national product, whereas the people in the lower income brackets are getting a progressively smaller percentage of the gross national product. The question I asked last year and this year was a simple one. I asked what percentage of the total money income was received by the lowest fifth, the second lowest fifth, and so on, of the people in Canada in terms of family units.

What did I find in the answer I was given both last year and this year? I found that in 1957 the lowest 40 per cent of the Canadian people received 16.1 per cent of the total income earned in Canada. In 1967, this percentage dropped to 15.6 per cent, and in 1971, the last year for which there were figures, it went down even more, dropping to 14.2 per cent. On the other hand, the upper 40 per cent of the income earners of this country experienced a reversal of this trend. In 1957, they received 65.9 per cent of the income, in 1967 they received 66.6 per cent, and in 1971 the percentage was 68.2 per cent.

Some people will say: "Oh, but that is before taxes. Our tax system, transfer payments, pension payments and welfare payments work the other way, and people in the lower income brackets receive a higher percentage of the total income and resources of this country". I do not believe that is true. My belief, which I must admit was an intuitive belief, was reinforced by a study released in December 1972 by the Economic Council of Canada entitled "The Pattern of Taxation in Canada". The author of the study was Allan Maslove, and he deals precisely with what taxes the various income groups in this country pay.

For the sake of brevity, Mr. Chairman, I shall paraphrase the question he asks and the answers that are given. His answers are fully documented in great detail, with a whole series of statistical charts that I would commend to the Minister of Finance and the members of this House. One of the questions Mr. Maslove asked was: Who pays for the various governmental activities; and who, in the final analysis, actually pays—bears the burden of—the tax? Mr. Maslove says that virtually all taxes have the potential to affect the relative economic positions of an individual family in two ways: by affecting the income received—the income-sources side; or by altering the relative prices of the goods bought—the income-uses side. The net effect of these two adjustments, according to Mr. Maslove, is to change the real income position of the individual as compared to his pre-tax position and relative to other members of the community.

Mr. Maslove then analyses taxes on the basis of whether they are progressive; in other words, whether they increase in percentage and in amount as incomes rise, or whether people in the lower income brackets pay more of their income in taxes. He says that the extremely regressive nature of the tax system at the low end of the income scale and the lack of progressivity over the remainder is quite apparent. He points out that from 22 to 39 per cent of the people, depending on province, in all family units are in the lower income range, having an income of $6,000 or less per year.

Mr. Maslove then asks who pays for government programs. He says all of us who pay taxes pay, and most of us do. He then asks which group bears proportionately the heavier burden of taxation, and his answer is that it is the lower income families. Who bears the least of the load proportionately? It is those with higher incomes, particularly those with incomes over $12,000 a year. I suggest that the bulk of students attending Canadian universities come from families with incomes over $12,000 a year. I make no secret of the fact—indeed, even if I wanted to I could not—that I am in this category. Yet it is precisely people like me who get the tax break. Someone in the 50 per cent tax brackets who has one child going to university for seven months of the year will save $175 a year, and I suppose that I shall save about $125 a year. Any person making $6,000 a year whose child attends a university—there are some, but fewer than the hon. member for Scarborough East seemed to suggest—will have only a minimal tax reduction.

While I am not going to oppose this, I would tell the minister—

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret interrupting the hon. member, but it being five o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Fisheries—Storm damage in Newfoundland last November—Inquiry as to report and compensation to fishermen; the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney)—Industry—Closing of radio production at Don Mills plant of Philco-Ford—Government action; and the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan)—Unemployment insurance—Expiration of fisheries benefits—Possible equating of benefit period with qualifying period—Request for statement.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

On the Order: Private members' notices of motions (papers).

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there would be agreement to take notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 48 to 73 in one group. I believe the minister has a short statement to make, and then we could proceed to Notice of Motion No. 76 standing in the name of Mr. Latulippe.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary.

[English]

The hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) might want to make some comment as to what the House is about to do.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have read the motions put forward by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Nos. 48 to 73, and have made inquiries concerning the papers he wishes to have tabled in this House. The government has no objection to providing this information. However, it includes an exchange of correspondence and the production of papers relating to the provincial agencies in British Columbia and various private companies. I am still endeavouring to obtain clearance from the relevant provincial authorities and the companies in this connection. I can say that, subject to obtaining these clearances, and with the usual reservations as to confidentiality, we will produce this documentation for the hon. member and the House.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, had the statement the Minister just made been made when this series of motions was first dealt with on Wednesday, February 21, then perhaps a different course might have been followed. These motions might well have been adopted at that stage and not cluttered up the order paper for this length of time.

I am perfectly agreeable to the suggestion of the minister that he seek clearance of the authorities of the provincial government and the companies in view of the jurisdictions involved. There is no objection in that regard. I do think, however, that for parliament to accept the concept that once it has passed a law, the Fisheries Act, and set out in that act—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I hope the hon. member will enlighten the Chair by limiting his remarks to the question as to what we are to do with these motions. The Chair has not noted that the suggestion made has been adopted and that we are to discharge these motions Nos. 48 to 73, or leave them on the order paper. I would invite the hon. member to speak to this point.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I had understood that the House was agreeable to putting notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 48 to 73 inclusive as one motion in order to table the correspondence in respect of them all. That is the motion to which I was speaking. I was also referring to the suggestion of the minister that we do this only after he receives authority from the provincial government and the private companies. In speaking to that motion, I had reached the point of saying I think it is most improper and wrong for this parliament, having passed this law, the Fisheries Act, which declares that it is an offence to place deleterious substances in water frequented by fish—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Again, as far as the Chair is concerned, there is no motion before the House. The Chair is not sure that hon. members have decided to proceed with this group of motions at this time, or whether the hon. member is making his comments in reply to the remarks of the minister. I noticed that the parliamentary secretary was rising in his place a moment ago. Perhaps he could enlighten us as to the procedure the House wishes to follow.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the procedure I suggest is that there be an order of the House to accept motions Nos. 48 to 73 together so that after they are accepted by the House and the minister receives necessary clearance, with the usual reservations, the papers could be tabled in the ordinary way.

There was a change in the position that was taken as a result of the guidelines announced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) two or three weeks ago as to how the government would approach the problem of making available to members of the House papers requested on motions for production. There had been a decision taken by the government and these motions were then transferred for debate. The government would now like to make these papers available and have the motions discharged in that sense, and passed by the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Subject to the comments of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the minister, is it agreed that an order of the House be made that motions Nos. 48 to 73 as appearing on the order paper be put at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope it is clear what we are talking about at this point. I had reached the stage of my remarks where I suggested it is inappropriate for the Parliament of Canada, having passed a law which says that it is an offence to put deleterious substances in water frequented by fish, to then suggest that as of the date of the so-called pulp and paper mill effluent regulations of 1971, those regulations should apply to the pulp and paper mills in spite of the Fisheries Act.

I think it is inappropriate for the minister to now stand in this House and say "we are agreeable", meaning "him", and then ask this parliament to endorse the concept that we should now adulterate or dilute the authority of this parliament by making the law subject to a decision of private corporations. The law of this land was made to apply to every one of these pulp and paper mills referred to in motions Nos. 48 to 73 inclusive. Parliament adopted the regulations; parliament has made the law of the land and I do not think the minister should be allowed at this time to ask us to agree that what parliament said in respect of the law should be subject to what the private corporations want. I do not think we should be asked to allow the minister to apply the law in that way.

Presumably these companies have been approached by the department as to the application of the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations, and I just cannot agree to the idea that we should now ask those companies whether it is all right for them to produce documents which relate to the very point as to whether they are or are not, and to what extent, complying with the law of this land, namely the Fisheries Act.

The other point I wanted to mention comes about as the result of what the parliamentary secretary said in respect of the guidelines for the production of papers. Apparently the government has taken a different view in respect of these particular motions. These motions were transferred for debate at the insistence of the government on February 21 on the ground that the documents sought were papers which were confidential. The guidelines to which the parliamentary secretary now refers were contained in Cabinet Directive No. 45, which was distributed under the signature of R. J. Robertson, Secretary, on February 16, a full five days before somebody stood up in this House saying these matters were confidential and could not be tabled.

I assume that the motion having been put it will be agreed to upon the conditions set down by the minister. I just think it is a wrong principle to establish that a law of this Parliament is subject to a decision by a private corporation which is required to meet the provisions of that law.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations of the minister, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motions Nos. 48 to 73 inclusive?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Speaker: Carried on division.

Motions agreed to.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS RELATING TO GUARANTEED LOAN TO COMMONWEALTH HOLIDAY INNS LTD. OF LONDON, ONTARIO

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the agreement and of all documents concerning the offer of a guaranteed loan from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to Commonwealth Holiday Inns Ltd., of London, Ontario, for the construction of a hotel in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the government has agreed to study this matter. This information will be very useful to us, because a number of hotel owners have heard about this and would like an explanation of what the government has done. This, Mr. Speaker, is why we requested production of these papers.

I should like to protest about one aspect of the loan guarantee program. I am in favour of guaranteeing loans to industry, but I do not think that we should guarantee loans for building hotels. I sincerely believe that the guaranteeing of loans of $675,000 to Commonwealth Holiday Inns Ltd. and $1,460,000 to the Parc Samuel Holland Hotel in Quebec contributes nothing to the Canadian economy, because large concerns can easily obtain capital.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion could use this capital for other purposes, to help a number of other businesses or industries. The Industrial Development Bank in particular could help with financing these businesses, and I think the department need not have gone so far. However, I am aware that this will create a number of jobs.

I know that this can be a labour intensive area but I think the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been established for another purpose, namely to help industry.

Mr. Speaker, big hotel chains have other facilities to find the capital they need. Moreover, these industries get loans for a period of 10 or 20 years. After the expiry date, if they havent made all the payments, the government or the responsible agency is committed to pay back up to 90 percent of the capital which has not been reimbursed when due. The department guarantees up to 90 per cent of the payments which have not been made.

Mr. Speaker, these institutions will not hurry to pay back that money. If after 10 years, there is still $500,000 or $1 million outstanding, the government promises to pay up to 90 per cent of these amounts.

I think that this help should be given to industry rather than to hotel owners. Several small hotel owners told us they had been refused the financial help they were seeking from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. If this help is denied to small hotel owners, it should also be denied to big institutions that need a lot of capital and have facilities to get the capital they need for their development.

On this subject, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government intends to stop guaranteeing loans for the construction of big hotels.

I would also like to know whether it intends to make guaranteed loans available to individuals who would like to take advantage thereof, since in my opinion it would be the best way to restore our capital-starved national economy. Indeed, capital is scarce and everybody deeply regrets it. However, since we have other organizations to assist such establishments, they should act. The guarantees must be satisfactory because it is one of the best trade in the world.

The hostelry trade is thriving therefore guarantees are satisfactory. The Industrial Development Bank should meet those needs and let the Department of Regional Economic Expansion promote those who are unable to get funds to meet their needs and thus encourage the growth of their trade or industry.

• (1720)

If we use the funds of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to provide more beneficial help for those types of businesses or industries I just mentioned, I think the money could be put to better use and the people would benefit from it.

I know the regulations of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion are broad; I also know that the law favours help to big industries, big businesses. But if the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is to be in charge of that, I ask that it do so not only for big industries or big hotels but also for small people. The Industrial Development Bank could intervene instead of the Department, which should receive instructions as to certain reserves. The money could be distributed in a more satisfactory manner to guarantee certain amounts for small businesses and small industries which are in need of money and cannot get it because large amounts are invested in big institutions. Certain industries should have preference over those institutions.

So I ask for the co-operation of all hon. members of this House and I would like those anomalies to be corrected somehow. I would also like to see businesses in need of help benefit more from it and the funds available to the government used in a more direct fashion for institutions and businesses really in need of money.

Again, I think the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) for telling us that the government was accepting in a block the notices of motions for papers Nos. 43 to 76. I thank him for the papers he will be tabling and for the decision. I am happy to see the government decided to release the information on those types of businesses. This has to be known because people, as I say, ask us for information on them. With the production of those papers and all the information required we will be in a position to satisfy those who ask us for information.

I will not say more; I would still have a lot of things to say but since the production of those papers has been accepted I thank once more those who are responsible for it.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks I must point out that the member for Compton (Mr. Labulippe) has misunderstood, because the notice of motion for paper No. 76 has not been accepted. I was extremely surprised that the member did not discuss the notice of motion he presented in the House.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

As for the argument proposed by the hon. member, Mr. Speaker it gives me pleasure to point out that the new program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is of course a new initiative from the government, although the department has been in existence since 1969. The member for Compton will be the first to admit that experiments are still underway, and that the results accumulated until now cannot possibly provide the department with sufficient information for the department to become omniscient.

I would like to point out first that my comments may indicate that there is a lack of understanding about the departmental policy regarding guarantees. In view of the fact that I was not prepared to answer the hon. member's statement, I will give him the information as I understand it.

The guarantee is available for loans of $250,000. It is not a loan but a guarantee offered by the department to the applicant. It is not an application to the department to obtain a loan which would be refundable. The applicant must go to his bank and ask for the funds he needs. The minimum amount for the loan is $250,000. Once the applicant has subscribed his contract with the bank—which of course is not a very popular institution with the hon. member of Compton—the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will review the material to see if it is really suitable to protect the interests of the lending institution. I am sure that the department will not commit itself unless it is convinced that the guarantees offered by the applicant are suitable to protect the interests of the bank.

In the system which has been in existence for a few centuries already, he who stands surety for someone is not held responsible first for paying back the loan. Of course, the applicant is expected to do that.

The hon. member made a few remarks on the fact that some hotel owners whose turnover does not justify a loan of $250,000 are disadvantaged by the present policy. Perhaps, in the very near future, the department may lower the ceiling; at any rate, there will be a change as regards the amount available or at least the key amount which will be the main criterion for the department when granting guarantees.

I should now like to deal with the matter before the House. It bears directly on the production of documents. I am convinced that the member for Compton would be the first to recognize, in agreement with the members of his party, that private enterprise still exists in Canada. I want to insist on the confidential nature of the documents.

Mr. Speaker, we do want businessmen to be assured some discretion with regard to their day to day exchanges. Needless to say, the government has seen fit to advance sums of money to individuals when the public good was concerned. But these amounts are always offered regular businesses. I am sure the hon. member would not want us to invite private enterprise to make requests from the government and that it should, in turn, use that information against them.

Surely the member for Compton recognizes that when there are exchanges between applicants under the DREE programs, the information they supply must necessarily be protected.

Mr. Speaker, this is why the application forms bear at the top a note that the information supplied by the applicant will remain strictly confidential. This does not mean that the information is not available.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member for Compton, with the utmost facility, could obtain information as to the way one should file an application, the criteria under which applications are granted, etc. And I am sure, given the generosity of the department, that such information would be provided to him.

In fact, a monthly report issued by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been tabled in the House. I am referring to the January 1973 issue which gives all necessary information to properly fill the applications.

Such information is made public. Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the January report since, apparently, the hon. member for Compton has not had an opportunity to go over that document and, evidently, he has not seen that of February nor that of March.

The document was tabled in the House in January 1973 and reads in part as follows;

The purpose of this monthly report is to provide Parliament and the general public with up-to-date information on the operation of the regional development incentives program. The report contains summary statistics on administrative actions taken from the inception of the program until the end of the month in question, together with listings of essential facts pertaining to each offer of incentive assistance accepted during that month.

• (1730)

Industrial incentives are available in broad regions and special areas designated by the federal government following consultation with the provincial governments.

Then, from this report, the monthly grants keep on being paid with "Details of offers accepted; and of offers accepted and subsequently revised, declined or withdrawn."

Then, Part III gives a "LOAN GUARANTEE ACTIVITY DURING THE MONTH" as well as details of offers accepted; and of offers accepted and subsequently revised, declined or withdrawn.

Finally, Part IV gives definitions, etc.

I wish the member for Compton would read this report because it is obviously most exhaustive.

Now, I would like to quote this:

Application of Terms to Loan Guarantees

—which is directly connected to the motion of the hon. member for Compton.

The above definitions apply to both incentive grants and loan guarantees, except that there are no payments to applicants with loan guarantees.

This is what I said earlier

And further on:

When providing loan guarantees the department enters into an agreement with the lender to guarantee repayment of a portion of a loan being made to the applicant. Such an agreement can only be executed when the applicant and the lender complete the loan arrangements.

It is just as I said. There must be agreement as to terms; it is the department's duly to ensure that the agreement protects the interests of the Canadian people.

I continue to quote:

The original offer to the applicant by the department is in the form of a letter of intent, a copy of which is sent to the prospective lender.

It goes without saying that the document must remain confidential, because it deals with very private matters which is necessarily confidential information. This is, for instance, the market that the applicant considers, new techniques that they would not want to make public. The financial status of a company is of no concern to its competitors. It goes without saying that these papers must remain confidential, and I am sure that the hon. member for Compton will agree with this.

I keep on reading the report:

Acceptance of the letter of intent by both parties is considered as an "offer accepted". If the applicant fails to complete his loan arrangements, the offer is withdrawn. If the applicant abandons his project or completes his loan arrangements without the guarantee, the offer is "declined".

So, it is quite possible that in such a case the applicant gets a loan without having to submit guarantees; obviously, the lender would be ready to advance money to the applicant if his guarantees are absolutely secure, and only when the applicant cannot get satisfaction from a bank does he consult the department. So, that is it. The report adds:

Once the Department has completed an agreement with the lender, there is a "guarantee in operation".

A loan guarantee applicant discharges his loan obligations directly with the lender, reducing at the same time the potential liability of the department.

Of course.

Mr. Speaker, if I require that all the documentation be tabled in the House, that will directly encourage a procedure which has been always condemned by parliamentary institutions. Since the implementation of the program, the party, the government, the department has adopted the policy whereby the applicant is informed that all information will be strictly confidential. One would not be wise to cause the government to show ill will by asking it to change its attitude. We would no longer receive applications because I am sure that some applicants would not give to the department information which would necessarily be against their interests if it were disclosed.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to the hon. member for Compton that if the government agreed to produce documents now, that would go directly against the principles stated in the House last March 15 which can be found in Appendix B of Hansard. I refer precisely to three of those conditions:

[English]

Exemptions.

The following criteria are to be applied in determining if government papers or documents should be exempt from production:

Commonwealth Holiday Inns Ltd.

[Translation]

Paragraph 5 reads as follows:

[English]

Papers containing information, the release of which could allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or a group of persons.

[Translation]

Obviously the hon. member for Compton will be the first to agree that some of the information he requests could spell economic disaster for the applicant.

Paragraph 10 reads as follows:

[English]

Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded.

• (1740)

[Translation]

Under the existing procedure an offer is made by the department. That offer should lead to a contract and this falls directly under that paragraph. There is no question about it. Paragraph 14 is most important and deals directly with the hon. member's request. It reads as follows:

[English]

Papers that are private or confidential and not of a public or official character.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what is more private in a private enterprise system than information relating directly to the efficiency of this enterprise? I can see nothing here that might be considered public. I never asked the member for Compton to show me his bank account or his arrangements with his bank manager or even with his wife. I do not know what kind of relations he has on the strict economic point of view. Nor would I like him to ask me my financial conditions.

I am also confident that the member for Compton would meet a rather violent response from businessmen in his riding if all at once he asked them: "Gentlemen, will you please let me have your balance sheet so that I can better judge the conditions which might affect you in our riding". Of course, this might be very useful to him, but surely this is not justified under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I will not take any more of the time of the House because, in my opinion, this issue is quite clear. I am sure that having heard my remarks, the member for Compton will admit that this is not at all the acquisition of public property under the requested documents.

As regards representations for wider distribution of information to prospective applicants, either in my constituency or in his, I am in perfect agreement. In my opinion, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) would be the first one to supply to the highest number of applicants the information which could encourage them to use the facilities which are available under the new law.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, I hope that, in view of the interest shown by the hon. member for Compton, sooner or later he will, depending on his political success, second the government when the time comes to develop the department's program and the government in general.

This program is beneficial to my constituency and it would be more advantageous for us if it were more complete. I think the hon. member for Compton will agree, because the regional development program is unique in that it was not established in another country and it must be given as much encouragement as possible. One of the main aspects of this program is respecting the secrecy between the applicant and the government.

[English]

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion before us there are some preliminary remarks I wish to make relating to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. When the present government was first elected in 1968, I was not a member of this House. However, it was my impression that the government espoused two priorities: first, linguistic equality of both of Canada's official languages and, second, removing some of the regional economic disparities that exist in Canada.

May I say that I endorse the underlying principles put forward. I also endorse in general terms the objective of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which is that industrial incentives be made available in particular regions following their designation by the federal government after consultation with provincial governments. Surely, many aspects of economic development must be considered when one talks about industrial expansion. One could mention transportation and geographic isolation. Our transportation system must span these geographically isolated communities as much as possible.

One must also look at DREE programs from the point of view of the capitalization necessary for small and medium size industries. There is great potential in so-called designated areas, but if this potential is to be utilized and realized there must be outside help with capitalization. As the hon. member who just resumed his seat suggested, it is necessary for there to be co-operation between federal, provincial and municipal governments and with private entrepreneurs if this potential is to be realized.

If I may speak directly to the motion, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) wishes specific documents to be produced. I agree that to some extent certain aspects of DREE activity should be made public and come under scrutiny. The activity mentioned in the motion, however, is not an area that should be made public because a certain amount of confidentiality is necessary in connection with the loan application and those who review it. If private entrepreneurs are to avail themselves of government help, specifically that given by DREE, they must be confident that their financial position and other internal matters pertaining to the company do not become the property of the public.

I shall now speak specifically about the convention centre, or the Commonwealth Holiday Inn mentioned in notice of motion No. 76. As I come from Manitoba, may I point out a few factors of which the hon. member may not be aware. As hon. members know, Winnipeg, by virtue of its location in the mid-continent, is uniquely placed for the development of convention and tourist facilities. It is fairly closely related to large metropolitan areas of the United States such as Minneapolis, Minnesota. It is quite accessible from the mid-western United States.

The province of Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg, specifically Unicity, have been able to get together, the result being that private entrepreneurs are now developing what is known as a convention centre in Winnipeg. That centre will contain recreational facilities and will be suitable for the holding of large and small conventions. The Commonwealth Holiday Inn is part of this complex and of the development of the inner city of Winnipeg. I am speaking as a Manitoban who lives 40 miles outside Winnipeg. This centre will be an asset not only to Winnipeg but to all Manitoba. That is the type of development we are looking for from DREE.

The hon. member suggested that the money spent should have been made available to small businesses. I agree. However, a guaranteed loan of this nature does not rule out any loans that might be made to small or medium sized businesses. So I endorse what has taken place with the assistance of local and provincial officials in Manitoba whose work has enabled us to include this Holiday Inn as part of our convention facilities.

In anticipation of the completion of the convention centre we have already seen in the general area of Winnipeg the development of hotel facilities which are second to none in North America. Mr. Speaker, if you relate the hotel facilities and the number of rooms we will have in Winnipeg to the population of Manitoba, you will see why we anticipate economic development as an ancillary effect of the convention centre through the expanded tourist industry.

Almost all of Winnipeg is regarded as a designated area under the DREE umbrella. I refer to the city itself. I have been speaking more of rural areas and their development. I could say that Winnipeg should not be included as a designated area, but I cannot be so provincial. Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal have gained a reputation, in many circles, and if you are holding a convention it is thought it should be in one of those centres. We in Manitoba, specifically Winnipeg, are trying to prove that this is not the case. Winnipeg has facilities which make it a viable convention area.

As an aside, I might say that Commonwealth Holiday Inns have built a facility in Kenora, Ontario, which is just outside my constituency. This is a very modest facility relative to large urban centres, but it is a very fine facility for a town the size of Kenora. The impact the hotel has had on Kenora by reason of one being able to find hotel accommodation has increased the tourist industry, not only in Kenora but in the eastern part of my constituency which depends almost entirely on tourism. It is an expanding industry. In my constituency, which is just west of the Manitoba-Ontario border, we feel the effects of this hotel in Kenora. Ancillary effects are also being experienced in Kenora and eastern Manitoba.

I agree that possibly more grants should be made available to smaller operators in tourist industries, such as rural hotels, lodges, and so on. I do not believe a guaranteed loan of this type would in any way rule out such development. The large, international hotel chains are not necessarily considering moving into the smaller areas. They are not competing in those areas. There is a lot of room for development by the small entrepreneur. A guaranteed loan of this nature would not jeopardize development or expansion in the smaller areas.

I will endorse DREE as long as its objective is the economic development of areas which have been designated, not as areas that need help but requiring special encouragement in capitalization so they can compete. We want to remain on a free enterprise basis and capitalize and utilize our facilities and personal drive. That should be, and I believe it is, the aim of DREE. I endorse what has happened relative to this guaranteed loan and the development of the convention centre in Winnipeg. In conclusion, I invite all hon. members to Manitoba, not only to use the convention centre but to take advantage of the facilities that have been built to house people for the night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make only a few remarks on the notice of motion for papers now under debate.

I wonder why the government refuses to table those papers. Would it have something to hide?

Mr. Prud'homme: That was explained earlier.

Mr. Allard: They said why; they said it is because they are confidential, but I think hon. members should be informed about what is going on in different fields.

That is why I support the request of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe). I wonder if the hon. member who answered him, the member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), supports private enterprise. I wonder if he knows the difference between a private enterprise and cartels.

As to the case before us, it is a chain of hotels. Consequently it is a big corporation which properly deserves to be called a cartel. I want to make it clear to the hon. member that the minimum amount of $250,000 is inaccessible for other firms, small family firms or the sole owner.

This is why I urge the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), on behalf of small and medium hotel firms, to lower the ceiling, in future regulations, to $25,000 for loans granted to innkeepers. I have nothing against the $250,000 loan guarantee. If this is good for big companies, we should also favour those of lesser importance in order to enable them to survive.

In the province of Quebec, numerous places are tourist havens, especially in the Gaspé peninsula, on both shores of the St. Lawrence and in the northern area of the Laurentians. If the government really wants to promote the industry, the second most important in Quebec, it should lower the $250,000 ceiling in order that loans may be more readily accessible to small and medium companies.

Such action would tend to promote tourism in our country and, as I said before, I am in favour of assistance to major businesses, provided the smaller ones are also looked after. As it is six o'clock, I must interrupt my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege.

I shall ask the hon. member if it was really his intention to kill his colleague's motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I have already called it six o'clock and that is why I have decided against the question of privilege.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-170, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at five o'clock it was considering clause 35.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, when I was discussing this subject earlier today I was making the point that while I have no particular objection to this clause which gives tax benefit to a taxpayer who has a dependant attending university, I feel it is just one more example of benefits being given to people in the middle and upper income brackets. I draw attention to the figures made available by Mr. Maslove in the study he carried out for the Economic Council, which showed conclusively that people in the lower income bracket pay a substantially higher percentage of their income in taxation to the three levels of government than do other taxpayers.

Since I spoke earlier this afternoon I have learned that the government of Ontario has announced it will increase sales tax from 5 per cent to 7 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Orlikow: I suppose there are very few taxes more regressive than sales tax. The only example I can think of are municipal taxes which are paid on property without any relation to wealth or income. Other than this, there is no tax more regressive than sales tax. All the studies show that people in the lower income bracket pay substantially more this way as a percentage of their income than do taxpayers in other income groups.

We have made some progress. It is not often I commend the minister, but I commend him now on the very progressive step he took when reducing income tax rates. I commend him for weighting the benefits of these cuts instead of providing a flat rate which would, again, mainly benefit those in the middle and upper income brackets. I have been reading a book entitled "The Rape of the Taxpayer," written by a former senior civil servant in the United States treasury department, Mr. Philip Stern. He gives an illustration of what I have in mind. He points out that if Governor Nelson Rockefeller, for example, were to make a donation of $100,000 to one of his favourite charities, the Museum of Modern Art in New York city, his liability for income tax would be reduced by $70,000. So in effect he would be given $30,000. But if a schoolteacher gave a donation of $10 to the museum, the tax deduction would amount to only two or three dollars.

This is the kind of inequity we have incorporated into our income tax laws over the years by means of special clauses and subsclauses designed to help somebody or other, usually those in the middle and upper income brackets. Consequent upon the income tax reduction which I am sure will be approved by the House—I am thinking specifically of the 5 per cent reduction—every taxpayer will get an immediate reduction of $100. But for many people in the lower income bracket, particularly married men with dependants, the reduction of $100 is, in fact, not 5 per cent but as much as 45 per cent. That is the kind of tax policy thinking that I should like to see the minister not only continue but expand.

May I close by giving the minister an illustration of what I mean by referring to something that was done this year in the province of Manitoba. The Manitoba government put through a program called the education property tax credit plan. They took the view that every person who owns his own house or rents accommodation for himself and his family is paying, in his municipal taxes, for the support of the educational system in his area. The government have taken the view that the burden of local taxes is becoming too onerous; therefore they have devised a tax credit plan under which every person who pays income tax is entitled to a credit of a minimum of $50 and a maximum this year of $147. Next year the maximum will go up to $200.

The difference between that plan and most other tax plans that I know about is that the minimum $50 is given to people in the middle and upper income brackets, whereas the maximum of $147 this year and $200 next year benefits those in the lower income bracket. As one's income increases, so one's tax credit decreases. Not only does it give a tax credit to those who pay income tax; it gives a rebate to people whose income is so low that they are not required to pay income tax. The province is encouraging these people to fill out an income tax form, and has opened offices with staff to help people who are not accustomed to paying income tax to fill out the form and mail it to the provincial finance minister. In return they get a cheque in the form of a rebate under the plan. The Minister of Finance is beginning to think along those lines. I think he has made a good beginning, though he has not gone nearly far enough in his income tax reduction this year.

My last point is this. I tried to make it clear in my remarks before the dinner hour that I did not object to this particular form of tax aid to people with dependants at university. However, it is time we looked at our whole income tax structure in this country and revised the system, wiping out most, if not all, of the concessions given to special interest groups, whether they be in the oil or mining industry or any other industry. We should do what the Carter commission said, which essentially was that we should regard a buck as a buck and people should pay taxes on that basis.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I want to make some comments with reference to paragraph (g) of this clause. This is the paragraph which provides an exemption for students, particularly those who are taking a course that offers a degree. It would appear that somebody has made a mistake and decided that nurses do not receive degrees and thus do not qualify under this provision. The fact is that nurses do get a degree, called an RN. This is just as valid and accepted as a B.Sc., a B.A., a B.Ed. or any other degree.

I suggest the minister take another look at this provision and make a change to entitle nurses to the same sort of privilege as that granted other students. Their expenses are no less than those of other students. Their work is no easier than the work of the students. Also, they are usually very beautiful and should get a deduction for that in itself. Some of them even know more than the minister responsible for housing.

Mr. Basford: Some know more than the doctors.

Mr. Yewchuk: They certainly make a great contribution to the care of patients, and no doubt patients appreciate the services that are rendered by nurses. Most patients would take much longer to get better if nursing services were not available. I wonder whether the minister would give me an explanation for taking this type of unpopular step at a time when he is trying to be so popular in this country. It would be easy to make a change to the wording of the clause. I just wanted to bring that matter to his attention.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I have one question for the minister on clause 35(5)(e.1) which provides a $1,000 deduction for people who are blind or confined to a bed or wheelchair. Has any consideration been given to expanding this provision to include invalids who are not necessarily confined to a bed or wheelchair? Many members get letters from people who are unable to work owing to permanent sickness. Just half an hour ago I came across a case where a fellow had been an invalid for five years and unable to work. As I read this provision, this man's spouse would not be able to deduct $1,000 because he is not necessarily confined to a bed or wheelchair.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To deal with the last point first, Mr. Chairman, it is possible that it has been difficult to define just what "disability" consists of; that is our problem there. We are continuing to widen the exemption as we go.

The question of nurses was brought to my attention by the hon. member for Athabasca's colleague from Edmonton East. I passed him a note across the Chamber with the answer that the nurses' associations ought to get themselves certified under the regulations of the Department of Manpower and Immigration so as to qualify under the deductibility clause. This is something they should be able to do through their association.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, would the minister clarify the exact procedure that is required? Would any other legislative changes be necessary as far as the manpower department is concerned, or is it simply a question of registering with them?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is simply a case of registering the profession of nurse with the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I have had dealings with nurses' associations. At one time, may I inform the hon. member, I had five hospitals in my riding in Montreal, and I found that the nurses were better organized than the doctors. I just put that on the record so that the nursing associations will know what to do.

Earlier there were some comments about tuition fees. May I draw to the attention of the hon. member for Scarborough East section 60, subsections (e), (f) and (g) of the existing act where he will see tuition fees generally are deductible. This is an educational deduction generally for the student, for his spouse or his sponsor. I think when they are read together it will be seen that we have broadened this deduction a good deal.

The hon. member then spoke of non-degree institutions, particularly outside of Canada. I suppose this is a policy decision that will have to be reconsidered at some time, but the impetus has been to try to persuade our students to get their education in this country. He then referred to the commuter problem. We will take another look at that, but at the moment we find there is not enough policy thrust for his suggestion.

In respect of secondary institutions the hon. member is getting into the separate school question. The federal government has stayed constitutionally clear of primary and secondary education. We are involved in post-secondary education, educational manpower training for employment, and recycling. I think I would have great difficulty persuading the provinces that this was not an initiative already in their domain, and I am afraid I cannot recommend to this House that we get into it. The hon. gentleman should direct his question to the Ontario government.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, when the minister referred to nursing associations, did he mean a nursing association, or individual nurses? In the province of Alberta, for example, would they be certified, or could each individual nurse be certified?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Any nursing association anywhere in the country, if it could persuade the Department of Manpower and Immigration to recognize the profession of nursing, or a particular school of nursing, as a qualified institution within the regulations would be eligible and that would be the end of it. I would suggest that the Alberta nurses ought to see what they can do to get the various training schools in the hospitals qualified within the regulations of the Department of Manpower and Immigration; they would then be qualified within the section and the amendment.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on what the minister has said. First of all, under the provisions of the existing legislation, as I understand them, a student is entitled to deduct tuition fees, but I do not recall a sponsoring individual having that right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Stackhouse: My plea was on behalf of the sponsoring individual having an equal right to that of the student. With deference to the minister's remarks, I should think further changes would have to be made to the legislation before us; or perhaps the minister will bring in something new to give the sponsoring person the same right the student apparently now has.

Secondly, in respect of what the minister said about secondary education, I do not think this gets us into the separate school issue per se, because it involves many other institutions. The reason the province of Ontario has not seen fit to pay the costs of students from grade 11 on is that from grade 11 these institutions are regarded as private schools.

Therefore, I was referring to all secondary institutions privately funded, which includes institutions sponsored by many religious groups, Christian, Jewish, Protestant, Evangelical, and other persuasions some of which have no religious reference at all. Parents send their children to these schools because of their own convictions. It seems to me when parents are sponsoring the public educational system through taxation, but because of their own particular convictions have a desire for another form of education for their children, they should have this advantage. In this instance I feel the federal government should agree.

Rather than looking at this matter in the parochial way, I think it is back in the lap of the Minister of Finance. I hope at a subsequent time he will bring forward a measure to give these people as much relief as possible. I think the minister should do this as an example of what might be done in the future. The government has accepted the principle that the cost of education can be deducted not only for students but for sponsoring individuals, and I think we will see steady progress in this area over the years with the government providing more and more assistance year by year. This is very often a technique used by government. It is very much like the salami technique, under which you offer a slice this year, a little more next year, and so on. I think we can look for progress. However, I wish the minister would not be so content to wait, but would give the people, now, what they really need.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I want to pursue the point again with the minister about people who are disabled. Would he have his officials look at this clause once again? It seems to me a bit unfair the way it stands. I am not trying to make a political point here, but a number of people who are genuinely disabled or invalid are not necessarily confined to a wheelchair or to bed.

It seems to me this legislation could contain a clause that would provide for eligibility under a doctor's certificate or statement to the effect a person is unable to work or pursue his occupation. That should be enough to qualify him for the $1,000 exemption on the spouse's income. Would the minister consider standing this clause for the evening and having another look at it to see whether he could possibly include this type of provision to make the legislation more equitable for people who are disabled? Many people in this country have disabilities but do not receive adequate pensions or assistance, either federally or provincially, and a provision such as this would be a small help to them in remedying the situation.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are being quite specific here, Mr. Chairman, in that we are referring to individuals confined to bed or a wheelchair. This is the essential purpose of the relief, and we prefer at this time to leave it at that. We will take the hon. member's problem under advisement, but we are specific in the parameter of relief that we are covering.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether his department has a definition of blindness, because this is very difficult to define. Does he have guidelines he could send to the people who are affected?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is nothing within the statute to define blindness. This, again, involves a question of fact. I suppose it could be by medical certificate.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to be asking more questions on this matter but I am still not clear as to what is required. The minister says nurses know what to do, but it strikes me as rather peculiar that they have not done it. He went on to say they have to persuade the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to allow them registration within the department. Perhaps he could clarify with regard to the apparent stumbling-block in the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It seems to me that a school which is qualified or recognized for training nurses should automatically qualify.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Obviously, the need has not arisen. But if the hon. member would look at page 61 of the bill and the amendment to section 110 of the Income Tax Act, specifically the definition of an educational institution on the third line of page 61, he would see that an educational institution in Canada is a university, a college or other educational institution. Then if he looks down to paragraph (B) he will see that it covers being certified by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration as an educational institution by which courses are conducted that provide or improve the qualifications of a person for employment or for the carrying on of a business or profession.

Since nursing is a profession, all that needs to be done is to have the particular institution qualify within these regulations. That is my advice to the hon. gentleman. The particular association of nurses or the hospital he has in mind just need to apply; and if they meet those general criteria, I cannot see any problem.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, would it not be much more simple if the minister spoke to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and asked him to automatically certify all nursing schools which offer degrees in nursing—that would simplify the matter—rather than having each individual association appear before the manpower group. Would it not be much more simple to automatically recognize them if they offer degrees?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am not so sure of that. I think it would cause more problems than it would solve. We have general criteria which apply, for the purposes of the Canada Student Loans Act, to education, tuition fees and other aspects of education. There are the same general criteria for all programs. There has been a lot of experience with this program and it seems to have worked pretty well so far.

Mr. Skoreyko: You are giving this benefit carte blanche to every university, so why cannot you give it to nursing schools?

• (2030)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, for any type of school, perhaps; but they must meet the standards of the act. I think we found in practice in the past that setting general criteria and having the facts established within them is the better way to deal with it. Every time we specifically add one institution, we thereby exclude every other institution. It is better to have a general set of criteria which apply equally to business schools, recycling schools, manpower training, and so on. I do not think the case will meet much difficulty in being met.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Does this complete consideration of clause 35? I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that the Chair some time this afternoon had before it an amendment suggested by the hon. member for Skeena, who is not in the chamber at this time. It was more or less suspended—it was not put—in the hope that it would be reconsidered and could be moved later. I wonder what the situation is now. Shall clause 35 carry?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In the absence of the hon. member for Skeena, I wonder whether the leader of his party or the House leader could deal with the matter on his behalf. I am prepared to meet the point of the hon. member for Skeena by introducing an amendment. I have not really yielded my point of order, but I am prepared to meet his point by moving an amendment which would read:

That clause 35 of Bill C-170 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after subclause (6) thereof, the following subclause:

I will circulate copies of this amendment in a minute.

"(6.1) Section 110 of the said act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (1) thereof, the following subsection:

'Deemed payment of medical expenses

(1.1) Where, in circumstances in which a person engaged in the business of providing transportation services is not readily available, a taxpayer makes use of a vehicle for a purpose described in subparagraph (1)(c)(viii.1), the taxpayer or his legal representatives shall be deemed to have paid to a person engaged in the business of providing transportation services, in respect of the operation of the vehicle, such amount as is reasonable in the circumstances.'"

Translated into English, it means that if there is not commercial transportation available, and he takes his own car, he gets a reasonable mileage charge for it. I think this meets the point of the hon. member for Skeena in respect of air, water and land. I would be prepared to move that amendment. I do not know whether anyone is in a position to speak for the hon. member for Skeena, but I think it meets his point. Does anyone have the courage?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does my hon. friend the minister know my hon. friend the member for Skeena? I think, Mr. Chairman, this amendment does meet the point. However, I wonder if we should deal with it in this way; that is, that we accept the moving of this as an amendment in substitution of the other one so that we do not have the argument on the point of order, but let the matter stand in case the hon. member for Skeena or the hon. member for Comox-Alberni can get here this evening. I am not asking that it be stood over until tomorrow. I am merely asking that it be stood for a little while.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am agreeable to this. If there is no objection by the hon. member for Skeena or the hon. member for Comox-Alberni to this proposed amendment, then the clause shall be deemed to have been carried; is that fair ball?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Then it is so moved by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, seconded by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am assuming no one is raising the question of whether there need be an amendment to the ways and means resolution. Let us assume that has been taken care of. I rise really for the purpose of having the understanding clear that the amendment will be considered as having been carried, and if my friends do not wish to speak to it we will not return to it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): By ten o'clock tonight.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If they wish to return to it, we will revert to the clause.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will not hang too tough on that.

The Deputy Chairman: The first point raised by the hon. member has been considered by the Chair. In looking at the amendment, it would seem to be more or less an amendment in respect of detail, and I do not think the Chair should reopen the debate. On the other point, shall the amendment be deemed to have been carried, subject to the reservation that has been made by the minister and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Basford) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 35, as amended, be deemed to have been carried, on the same conditions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 36—Application of subsection 115(2).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is the effect of clause 36?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have been asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West to explain the effect of this clause.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Generally.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Section 114 of the act deals with individuals who either become resident or cease to become resident in Canada during the course of the year. The addition of section 114.1, which was put in as a result of this clause, represents a technical change to ensure that a person resident in Canada during a part of a taxation year is not able to avoid tax on certain categories of income earned in Canada during that portion of the year in which he is not resident in Canada. It is a technical amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 36 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 37 agreed to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, if you would call clauses 38 to 48 inclusive, we are ready to agree to them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is fine.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clauses 38 to 48, inclusive, carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 38 to 48 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 49—Beneficiary's receipts that are not deductible.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would like to have a little more explanation from the minister on this clause.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On clause 49, we return to sub-clause 49(1). This is a technical amendment to section 144, subsection (3), paragraph (e) which exempts taxable dividends from an employee's income. Clauses 49(2) and 49(3) relate to distributions from employee's profit-sharing plans. This amendment provides tax relief where a beneficiary of an employee's profit-sharing plan receives proceeds from a plan which includes shares of other property that appreciated in value during the period it was held by the trust for the plan. The amendment also makes clear that any capital loss realized by the trust for the plan shall be taken into account in calculating the portion of the proceeds to be included in income.

• (2040)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, on this point may I ask the minister whether he has received many representations from the major employee groups in the country, for instance from Simpsons-Sears, who at the time of the white paper and Bill C-259 were in the vanguard of it and showed that, frankly, the proposals with regard to deferred profit-sharing plans under the white paper were confiscatory and totally wrong. They were going to completely "zap" any idea of the equity of any employee profit-sharing plan.

What has happened since that time? Have there been further representations, and have the representations been taken into account in these amendments? I must say that there has been a deafening silence from that side, as far as I can see, both in the press and in letters, so we must assume that the proposals contained in this bill meet at least the major portion of their objections.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is so. I issued a press release, which was circulated to hon. members some time ago, saying that I was going to do it; and this clause does it.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 50 agreed to.

On clause 51—Amounts received taxable.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is one of the areas that seemed to give a lot of trouble. I wonder if the minister would explain to the Committee what he has done to meet the objections outstanding with regard to this particular point as it stood in Bill C-259.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The amendments in clause 51 relate to section 147 of the Income Tax Act. The amendments provided in this clause will help taxpayers considerably. They will implement an undertaking given by me in a news release on September 21, 1972. This release promised that where a single payment is made from a deferred profit-sharing plan upon retirement from employment or the death of an employee, and that single payment includes shares or other securities, the taxation of any accrued capital gain attributable to the shares or other securities is included in the single payment and may be deferred until the beneficiary disposes of them.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 52 and 53 agreed to.

On clause 54—Farmers and fishermen.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I think this clause requires an explanation. It brings in considerable changes affecting farmers and fishermen and their way of paying tax. Let us get that on the record.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I know the hon. member knows a good many fishermen. This is an amendment to the provision in the act which allows farmers and fishermen to calculate their instalments of tax during the year on the basis of either an estimate of the tax for the current year or by reference to experience in the previous year. They can elect. In the past, instalment payments which amounted to two-thirds of the estimated tax due on December 31 had to be calculated on the basis of the current tax liability or the previous year's taxable income.

The amendment permits the instalment to be calculated by reference to the taxpayer's instalment base for the previous year instead of by reference to the taxable income. It is provided that the instalment base shall be determined in the prescribed manner. A news release issued by me on July 19, 1972, indicated that the instalment base for an individual would be his tax for the preceding year.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 55—Other individuals.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May we have an explanation of this clause?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think I can respond to the hon. member's request. This is on the point we talked about earlier when I was referring to the question put to me by the hon. member for Malpeque. It is the clause which exempts any individual who might otherwise be liable for a quarterly tax payment from making such payments if the tax payable from the previous tax year did not exceed $400. It also applies for the current year if it does not exceed $400. Instead of persons, and especially pensioners, having to make quarterly instalment payments they are allowed to make one payment during the year. I think this is a release from a lot of bureaucratic entanglement.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 56 agreed to.

On clause 57—Corporations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton-West): I take it that the attempt here is to give a little more flexibility to corporations. It uses a wider period of 15 months. If one looks at section 157 and the requirements about the payment of tax by instalments, this may give them a little more flexibility. I hope that whenever the minister deals with tax and with corporations, whatever steps may be convenient for the Minister of National Revenue will not require an addition to the working capital that will be involved in the corporation, because all I can say is that if you have to borrow the money there is only one person who pays for that, and that is the consumer.

Goodness only knows that the poor old consumer is right on the business end of the rifle-barrel and he gets the blast every time it goes off. I do not care what government triggers off a levy or requirement that involves a greater cost in doing business, it is the consumer who is right there at the end of the muzzle and who gets the full blast. I hope this clause will introduce greater flexibility and will loosen some of the shackles that were imposed on business through Bill C-259. We will be amending this act as we go along, if only to make it more practical for the taxpayer himself rather than just to make it nice and tidy up here in Ottawa.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This clause does what the hon. member hopes it does.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 58 to 69 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes part I, with the exception of clause 23 which was stood. I propose that we call it when we have completed all the remaining clauses. The committee will now consider clause 70, in Part II, which commences at page 110. Shall clause 70 carry?

• (2050)

Clause agreed to.

Clause 71 agreed to.

On clause 72—Goodwill and other "nothings".

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, you will almost have a nightmare when you read the marginal note, because you will recall that you had to concern yourself, at the time of the study of Bill C-259, with "goodwill and other nothings". What is the general effect of the rather lengthy changes that have been introduced here both as to government rights and the original rights?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, clause 72 amends section 21 of the Income Tax Act amendments and rules to ensure that on the disposal of a government right or the renewal of original government rights acquired before 1972, the amount payable to the taxpayer for the purpose of section 14 of the act cannot exceed the amount by which the selling price exceeds the cost. Government right means right or licence acquired from a federal, provincial or municipal authority which enables the taxpayer to carry on that business activity to the extent to which he would otherwise be unable to carry it on.

I think the committee should know that of the amount payable to the taxpayer referred to in the clause, only one half is included as taxable income under section 14 of the act as "eligible amount". Such rights would include transportation rights or licences, taxi licences, truck licences, bus licences, air line licences, boat licences, or marketing regulations for agricultural produce, milk quotas, egg marketing, acreage allotment for tobacco growers and so on, timber cutting rights, radio and TV rights, including cable TV and satellites. The new treatment for government rights was introduced primarily because government protected rights tend to have more loss of value and non-deducted cost before 1972 and this should be recognized in computing the proceeds of sale.

I submit to the Chair that this amendment goes a long way toward satisfying the requirements of the agricultural community on the taxation of quotas and their evaluation.

The Chairman: Shall clause 72, at pages 112, 113 and 114, carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 73 and 74 agreed to.

On clause 75.

Income Tax Act

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment deemed to be based on the ways and means motion. It will be found in Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday, April 11, 1973, at page iv. It reads as follows:

'Inter vivos transfer of farm land by a farmer to his child

That Bill C-170 be amended by striking out lines 34 to 37 on page 123 thereof and substituting the following:

(19) Where a taxpayer owned, on December 31, 1971, and thereafter without interruption until a transfer thereof by him to his child, in circumstances to which subsection 73(3) of the amended act applies, land referred to in that subsection, the following rules apply:

(a) paragraph 73(3)(c) of the amended act does not apply for the purpose of determining the cost to the child of the land, and

(b) subsection (5) shall apply in respect of the transfer of the land to the child as if the references therein to "June 18, 1971" were references to "December 31, 1971".

(20) For the purposes of subsections (18) and (19), "child" of a taxpayer includes a child of his child, and a child of his child's child.'

All this does, Mr. Chairman, is provide the transitional rules to accomplish what we accomplished in an earlier motion, namely, that the transition of the family farm from generation to generation can be accomplished not only by death but during the lifetime if the farm remains in use. These are transitional measures to bridge the original tax reform statutes and today.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister read "paragraph 73(3)(c)". The ways and means motion refers to "(d)".

The Chairman: Perhaps before the hon. member for Edmonton West makes his contribution, the Chair could put the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West is correct. It should read "(d)" rather than "(c)", according to the ways and means motion.

The Chairman: The Chair is grateful that the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Edmonton West agree on what the amendment should be, but the Chair has not quite understood where the change is in the amendment that is found on page iv of No. 70 Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday, April 11. Perhaps this could be made clear to the Chair before the amendment is put to the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, it was just that the verbal presentation made by the minister differed from the textual one in that he used the small letter "c" rather than the small letter "d". I know it is not a big point, but the record of Votes and Proceedings and the amendment that has been given to you should be correct. The minister was just reading the wrong letter.

Mr. Lewis: He can't read.

[The Chairman.]

The Chairman: Then I rather confidently put to the committee the amendment as found at page iv of Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday, April 11. Is the amendment moved by the Minister of Finance, and subject to the correction pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton West, carried?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 76—Exploration and drilling rights; payments deductible.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, could the minister inform the House the reason for the restrictive phrase "and before 1972" which has been inserted in subsection 29(14) of the rules? It appears in the bottom left-hand corner of page 123.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is a technical and relieving amendment to ensure that payments made after 1971 for rights to drill for or take oil and gas from Canada which rights were acquired before 1972, will be deemed to be Canadian exploration and development expenses. This is a technical amendment to ensure that the reference to subsection 29(14) of ITAR conforms to the amendment to that subsection. Under the change made, the expression "before April 10, 1972" will be inserted to replace the expression "after April 10, 1962".

The Chairman: Shall clause 76 carry?

Clauses 77 to 91 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes part II. We shall now consider part III. Shall clause 92 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 92 agreed to.

The Chairman: Earlier in the proceedings of the committee clause 23 was stood at the suggestion of the hon. member for Scarborough West. The committee will now consider clause 23.

On clause 23—Navire ou aéronef appartenant à des non-résidents.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I can only say to the hon. gentleman opposite that I do not have enough factual details to be able to isolate the problem he referred to. We have had correspondence about it, and I said I could not cure this because under the general principle of disability pensions the pension is taxed because the premiums are deducted as they go into the pension. In other words, the deduction is taken off income as the pension is contributed to, and when the pension comes out or is paid it is taxed. The universal principle is, the money is deducted and paid in and taxed when it is taken out.

However, I give the undertaking to the hon. gentleman's colleagues that I will review the matter and there may be a future amendment. At the moment I do not have enough facts before me to warrant a departure from that general principle.

Mr. Nystrom: In the absence of the hon. member for Scarborough West may I say that I believe, on his behalf, that this is all right. I thank the minister for taking this matter into consideration.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, in Toronto during the past year two policemen were killed while on duty and their widows were awarded, shall we say, full salary pensions for a period. Will the minister advise us how it is proposed to deal with this matter? These payments are in part workmen's compensation pensions. Is it the intention to tax the balance in excess of that? I do not know that these are pensions. Here, the municipal authority has decided that a workmen's compensation pension, available under the workmen's compensation provisions, shall be made up to the level of the salary of the policemen who were killed on duty. That is a very proper thing to do since there are usually small children involved. How are we to handle this matter from the tax point of view?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I suppose we shall have to see how the Minister of National Revenue will handle it, as this in part comes under the administration of the existing act. If, on challenge by a taxpayer, an interpretation is called for and if we find that there is some inequity, a policy decision will have to be made. At the moment I believe the hon. gentleman's question is premature because we are still not sure, until an interpretation is made, what tax characteristic should be given to that particular type of compensation.

The Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): By leave, now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the bill should be read the third time immediately. We have made good progress today and I do not think third reading should be expected as a matter of course. Certain things must be commented upon with regard to this bill. Also, certain matters of an income tax nature are outstanding, which must be considered now that the House has passed the bill in detail through the committee stage.

We have now dealt with the increased exemptions for people over age 65 and we have dealt with increased allowances for students. I have found it rather interesting in the last few days to note that somehow or other certain categories of taxpayers all of a sudden are in a great rush. Up to a week or ten days ago there was great silence, particularly from students, about the inability to obtain refunds. This matter was raised in the House. I raised it in a speech, as did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Then there was a statement by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) about the number of files or returns that were banked, shall we say, and that authorization from the House was being awaited in order to pay out the refund cheques or process the files. Some, certainly, may be ready for pay-out; in others, the matter of assessment may be involved.

However, I thought it was not quite in keeping with the realities of the situation when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the other day stood up and solemnly requested from the House early, almost peremptory passage of the whole of this complicated bill. Here he was, expressing considerable sympathy for senior citizens who would need their refunds in order to meet the pressures of increased living costs. Oh, it was a grand scene. I do not know whether the minister watched the Oscar presentations and was trying to emulate them. Perhaps he felt a twinge of regret because he was not able to participate and show how good an actor he can be at times.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would have sent my Indian princess.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hope that with the passage of this bill, I trust tonight, the other place will be able to attend to it with appropriate consideration. Although the minister stated the other day he felt he had substantially complied with the undertakings given to the Senate by the former minister of finance at the time of the indecently hasty passage of Bill C-259 by the other place, I am now told by my connections and those working there that they do not quite feel that way toward the bill. They feel there are some major gaps. It may be these are in the remaining provisions which we will see at some time.

I do not know what the minister intends to do with regard to the corporate tax cuts to manufacturing and processing industries. Incidentally, I want to reiterate something which has escaped the attention of almost all members of this House. All corporations, from the two-man trucking outfit with "Ltd." or "Inc." behind its name to the major corporations in this country engaged in manufacturing and processing, will be faced with a tax increase of up to 7 per cent as of January 1, 1973. This exists on a parallel scale with the potential increase in taxation for individuals because last year the minister said it was impossible to do anything with regard to tax cuts for individuals. He said it would lead the country into bankruptcy. This was totally wrong. Of course, Saul was converted on the road to Damascus.

The government got around the tax cut for the individual, but it has not done anything with regard to the restoration of the 7 per cent tax cut given by Mr. Benson on October 15, 1971, and which was applicable for the last half of 1971 and all of 1972. The grocer, farm equipment distributor, automobile garage, paint contractor, plumber and all others who are incorporated will have a tax increase for 1973 of up to 7 per cent. It is true there is a cutback under the statute from 50 per cent to 49 per cent, and from 25 per cent to 24 per cent, but the restoration of the 7 per cent and the combination works out to about 5.8 per cent. It is strange that no one has mentioned this. The press has said very little about it; the financial writers said very little about it until ten days ago.

I want to reiterate that what is left for the House to consider in so far as individuals are concerned are the goodies of the 1973 budget. There are also leftovers of the corporate tax reduction provisions and incentives of 1972, and there may be some administrative changes. We will have to wait and see. If this tax bill is put through tonight, I invite the minister to let us see the ways and means motion for implementation of the balance of the budgetary provisions. This includes not only income tax but the Customs tariff. There have been some unilateral cuts in the Customs tariff. Attention was directed to these at the time of the budget debate. While the Customs tariff bill proposed by the minister will go through fairly expeditiously, he had better reconcile himself to the fact that the next one will get a great deal more scrutiny and will receive a great deal more criticism.

Some industries have had their guts ripped by the minister's proposals. This is something we should be worried about. I do not know what motivated the government to make these proposals on a unilateral basis when we were just starting on the next round of multilateral trade negotiations. I do not know what kind of gesture it was for Canada to just toss away a great number of its negotiating points. The minister shakes his head. Let him talk to the people in the industries affected. He will get a different reaction.

Some of my colleagues want to speak about the changes that have been made with regard to capital gains as they apply to the family farm owned by the individual taxpayer. The minister confirmed this afternoon that the amendment that was brought in in addition to the provisions to exempt farmlands of a deemed realization on death, if passage was to a child or a descendant of a child there could be an inter vivos sale to a member of the family within that limitation. However, there has been no provision for a roll-over by the taxpayer in selling an orchard property and buying a corn growing property or something suited to a change in his farming practice. Whether the farm is owned by an individual or not has not been included in the legislation. This will prove to be quite a disappointment to the whole of the farming community in Canada.

My colleagues will be making more eloquent pleas with regard to the corporate family farm. I will leave the details to them. The minister has made other changes with regard to the smoother working of Bill C-259, or the Income Tax Act of 1971 and the application rules, particularly clause 78 where he has given a further two years' grace in the foreign, affiliated property inclusion, the FAPI rules, because a great many Canadian corporations will face tremendous administrative problems or potential problems this year. Personally, I hope the minister will scrap the whole idea that gave rise to FAPI.

• (2120)

A Canadian company might have a holding of 2 per cent or 5 per cent in a foreign company, yet the Canadian government was insisting that this so-called foreign affiliate file financial returns in Canada. I wonder at the effrontery of Canadian tax authorities in trying to impose that regulation. If such legislation existed in the United Kingdom or in the United States we would be screaming that a foreign government was trying to make Canadian companies comply with the law in the United States or Britain, even though all we held was an ownership of shares or a joint ownership of interest in a third company.

All I can suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and to his colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) is that some of these foreign companies will not-so-politely thumb their noses, and there is nothing the Canadian government can do about it. I think it is a can of worms of the worst kind.

Mr. Paproski: How does that grab you, John?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would hope that since the minister has already taken 18 months to come up with the idea that he cannot work out the rules, he will decide to scrap the whole blessed thing, because to me it is totally wrong. I hope I have said enough with regard to this matter and, hopefully, we can get the bill through third reading tonight.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): We have had a thorough discussion of this bill, Mr. Speaker, so I intend to take only two or three minutes. We are supporting the bill, as I said earlier, because it deals with individuals, giving individual people a tax break and more exemptions in terms of medical expenses, student allowances, and so on. I should like to thank the minister publicly for amending the bill in the two places he did, concerning capital gains for farmers and the amendment by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I think this is proof positive that parliament is starting to work and that we can make parliament work if we all get down to it as MPs and make up our minds to do something that is good and beneficial for individual Canadians.

The elimination of capital gains tax on farms will go a long way to preserving family farms not just in western Canada but right across the country. I think the minister should be complimented on accepting a very good NDP idea which has been promoted for years—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: Put your rubber boots on.

Mr. Nystrom: —in this House by, among others, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). Hon. members will also recall the amendment moved in this House last year by the then hon. member for Regina East, Mr. John Burton.

An hon. Member: What happened to him?

Mr. Nystrom: What happened to him? After the Gallup poll, I am sure he will be back, with the Conservative party taking a thumping as they did in the last Gallup poll. I should like to assure hon. members on my right that he will be back and that many other New Democrats will be back from the Prairies, British Columbia and Ontario.

With that, I would like to say we support the bill. It deals with individuals. It is interesting to look at the last seven or eight budgets of the government. The first seven gave all kinds of tax exemptions and benefits to corporations. If we add them all up, we find that the first seven budgets reduced taxes to corporations by half a billion dollars and that taxes to individuals went up by $1.5 billion. In the last budget the government ignored corporations and concentrated instead on doing things for the average citizen. This is another example of making parliament work, setting an example that our party likes. I can assure the minister that if he wants to bring in more tax reform measures to block some of the loopholes for the wealthy, tax reforms to tax the resource industries more heavily, he can count on our party to help him make parliament work and pass that legislation as well, because I believe these are things that must be done in order to help the average Canadian citizen, in order to get this country really moving again.

The Conservatives would like hand-outs for the big boys, but this does not really get the economy rolling. If we want to get moving and increase employment, we must help the average citizen, the average worker, farmer and small businessman. That is the way to get this country on its feet and that is the way to create jobs. If the minister is interested in doing that, we will help him make parliament work and change this country in a really profound and significant way.

Mr. Basford: That is the Liberal way.

Mr. Paproski: Who needs Burton when you've got Nystrom?

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I could not let this opportunity pass without mentioning a few things. The main change has been in the family farm tax situation and the roll-over during the lifetime of parent and son. But nothing has been settled about the partnership family farm and nothing has been settled about the corporate family farm. Capitalization of these farms is becoming fairly large, at $100,000 even for smaller ones. Their owners are looking at the limited liability clause that covers corporations. These farms account for a significant part of our agricultural basic production.

We are now becoming interested again in food production. At long last the food glut seems to be ending and we are looking for ways and means of increasing the food supply. The rural population has dropped to a point at which it is probably getting impossible to continue to produce food in a great amounts as in the past, and unless the corporate family farm is dealt with, it will suffer the same liability that occurred prior to the repentance of the government in so far as the family farm was concerned. I think this is especially important because these farms tend to be the most productive in agriculture.

There may be one more important item, one which has been brought to my attention by many farmers who have large amounts of capital invested in their farm machines. This is the loss of straight line depreciation, so-called, which was used by the farmers to keep their machinery at a high level of efficiency. It probably has contributed to the fact that food prices remain low, because productivity was extremely high.

Mechanization on the farm carries through into the service end and straight through into farm machinery manufacturing. This is extremely important, because whereas the capital gains tax will occur only occasionally, fortunately, in a family where there is a death or where there is a passing on from one generation to the next by selling, this straight line depreciation occurs every year, and it is the means by which much of the agricultural industry is able to keep at a high level of efficiency. The loss of this straight line depreciation has been severely felt by all.

Now I should like to comment on the capital gains tax as applied to small businesses as well as farms. It is too bad the government cannot see fit to make a start in looking at this area. I mention this in particular because it is an extremely onerous burden on taxpayers in a province to face both an estate tax and a capital gains tax. I have come to the conclusion that one can live with a capital gains tax or with an estate tax, but it is pretty difficult to live with both and still have a viable small business. I do not think it bothers large corporations, but it is a very serious thing for small business. We have suddenly discovered in this House, and so has even the NDP, that small business is important. Under the foreign takeover bill we are studying ways and means to permit Canadians to own more of their own country, and in this area we often start with the very large corporations. If Canadians are to own their own country, one place where we can make a significant effort is at the small business and small corporation level.

I suggest it is most important that the federal government and the provinces work together on this and cooperate to make sure that an estate tax and capital gains tax together do not bring about the dissolution of small businesses that have to be sold out piece by piece to pay those taxes.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a few moments of the time of the House to register some reservations regarding the measure before us. First of all, I should like to talk for a moment about the 1972 tax return. Much money has been spent on advertising this so-called very simple form which Fred Davis says is easier than you think, but strangely enough never in the history of Canada during the last 100 years have so many people been so frustrated over a new tax policy. Never have so many people had to seek professional help in order to figure out the complex, eight-page document that is presently in the hands of every taxpayer in Canada.

I am reminded of the opposition to the medicare bill which was before the House some years ago. The doctors opposed it vehemently, saying that it was one of the things that would ruin this country. Yet in fact that very legislation guaranteed the medical profession of this country a salary beyond anything they had ever experienced before, for the rest of their lives. This tax measure has done the same thing for the accounting profession; this can be verified simply by talking to accountants. As a result of this bill and others that we have dealt with, the government have guaranteed the accounting profession of this country a pension payable every April 30 from now on.

I am a little concerned about what one of the previous speakers said. He said he was very happy that the problem of capital gains tax on farms had been resolved. I do not think it has been fully resolved at all. This afternoon in the House the minister got to his feet and clearly indicated that so far as the family farm was concerned, he had made concessions to the one-owner farms. However, he did not deal clearly enough with the position of corporate or partnership farms.

I think the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) expressed his concern about the need for clarification in regard to what would happen in a situation where a father and son or three brothers in a partnership owned a farm and one of them died. That situation has not been clarified. Neither do I understand the statement made by an NDP member a moment ago to the effect that that party was delighted at the clarification of the minister. As I say, I do not think the position has been clarified at all, and it needs to be clarified later.

The position of the family farm vis-à-vis capital gains is also not clear to me or to a number of farmers across the country. Neither is it clear in the minds of revenue officials. It is alarming to find so many people telephoning the revenue department in their respective areas and finding officials, who are supposed to be knowledgeable in the law, uptight, close-mouthed, refusing to give information. The only information people can get from the revenue offices is that they must wait a while because there will be a ruling coming from Ottawa.

One other matter that needs clarification was raised in the House previously and has been the subject of much discussion. I refer to the sale of milk quotas in the dairy industry. If a milk quota is sold, is it regarded as goodwill as in the case of a conventional business? I think the minister should be responsible to see that regulations governing the sale of quotas are spelled out clearly.

As a result of the new tax measures, property such as farms, cottages and rental property which is owned by taxpayers is now being arbitrarily assessed for purposes of capital gain at some time in the future. Does the minister not feel that the assessments obtained by the revenue officials should become the property of the taxpayer himself? I understand that when revenue officials assess a piece of property, whether it be a farm, cottage or rental property, attempts are made to secure information for the file of the taxpayer so as to determine the amount of the assessment. It is my understanding that this assessment is then fed into a computer and eventually will be used against the taxpayer. I do not think we need to use this kind of, if you like, gestapo tactic in Canada in order to obtain information on taxpayers which is fed into computers and used ultimately against the taxpayer.

The government today has made inroads into the office of every business in this country. It is a shame the government is not satisfied with the taxes that are paid by business enterprises and leave it at that. I owned a small business a few years ago and required, on average, about one and a half people in the office just to look after the demands of government, such as figuring out deductions for medicare, unemployment insurance and everything else. It is time the government relieved some of the pressure it is putting on the business community of Canada.

[Mr. Skoreyko.]

Although I am quite prepared to go along with the concessions the minister has made up to this point, I hope that by the time the next budget rolls around he will have seriously considered the criticism which members of the opposition, particularly those of the Conservative party, have made and that he will come up with some new proposals in 1973.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-171, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill will implement the ways and means motion relating to excise taxes which I tabled on March 29 of this year. It is the same as Bill C-223 which was introduced following the budget speech on May 8, 1972, which received first reading on June 26, 1972, but was not passed before parliament dissolved in September of 1972. This bill does not contain any amendments to implement the proposals in the budget speech of 1973; it relates exclusively to excise tax amendments for 1972 and following. The bill does not contain any general rate changes or new exemptions that could be classed as major in terms of the effect on revenue. Nevertheless, the changes will be important to those who are directly affected.

Most people would probably regard the three most important amendments in the bill to be these: the exemption from sales tax of eyeglasses and contact lenses; the change from a 6 per cent rate of sales tax to a complete exemption from sales tax of goods produced by the labour of individuals who are blind or who are deaf and dumb and the extension of this exemption to goods produced by mentally retarded persons; and the exemption from sales tax of machinery and apparatus acquired by manufacturers or producers for use by them in the development of manufacturing or production processes or the development of new goods to be manufactured by them. Other exemptions from sales tax provided by the bill include crates for transporting poultry, certain items used in the fisheries, and chemicals purchased by municipalities for use in sewage treatment plants.

The bill does not impose any additional tax burdens. The total effect on revenue of the changes provided by the bill for a full year is estimated to be about $5 million.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as a result of some discussion I think it is agreed, having completed the income tax bill and since we have now had the opening statement of the minister on this short bill, that I call it ten o'clock for the purposes of the formal business of the House. We would then proceed, hopefully, to the adjournment debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). Perhaps I should draw to the attention of hon. members that members whose contributions are awaited in the adjournment debate are the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney), and the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan)—although not necessarily in that order. As we still have a few minutes before ten o'clock, if it is agreed that we call it ten o'clock now we will proceed with the adjournment debate. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When these discussions took place a moment ago, I immediately called the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). He is not here as yet, but he is on his way. I see that the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) is here, so perhaps the order of appearance in the adjournment debate could be changed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It not only may be changed; it will be changed.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Some hon. members on the government side who were supposed to answer these questions may still be at committee meetings, in view of the fact committees are still sitting. I should like to have time to contact them in order that they may be in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps we could agree to hear the hon. member for Scarborough West first. Who was to reply to that hon. member at this time?

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) is here and he will be replying to questions No. 1 and No. 3. Perhaps we might start with those two.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—STORM DAMAGE IN NEWFOUNDLAND LAST NOVEMBER—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT AND COMPENSATION TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think we will ask the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) to make his contribution now, if he has caught his breath after running over here, since he and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) are both present.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that everybody was so efficient. It is so long since I requested the debate at this time on a question I asked in the House of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), seeking a more substantial reply, that the answer is now probably obsolete.

The question I asked on November 19 in relation to storm damage in Newfoundland last fall has been answered, not only by the minister before the committee but in the House after follow-up questions and by departmental officials in the committee. I must say those answers were not much help in any event. My question related to the involvement of the federal government in respect of storm damage, which occurred last fall in western Newfoundland, to fishing gear, stores, longliners and other fishing vessels, some of which were completely destroyed. In answer to my question in the House, to my surprise the minister indicated that so far as the federal government was concerned, his responsibility only arose when vessel insurance was concerned and it was left to the provinces to compensate for losses to fishermen, regardless of the extent.

Even though we have to accept the cold fish attitude of the minister, which is becoming his trademark as well as that of other officials, fishermen were led to believe that compensation would be considered, on a co-operative basis, by the two levels of government. I suppose we must accept the decision of the federal government that unless the damage was on the basis of a national emergency, the federal government has no responsibility.

I refer to the matter again tonight as there is still an area of concern in which the minister can help, and that is in relation to fishermen who did not have vessel insurance because they could not afford it. I refer to fishermen whose longliners were damaged by the storm last fall and still remain unrepaired.

As the fishing season approaches, we find there are no funds available to assist these fishermen in putting their boats back into the water. In addition to this, there is a perennial problem which the fishermen face. They are willing to compete with foreign draggers, but cannot find the means to purchase these vessels because of the restrictions under the Canadian Fisherman's Loan Act and under the Newfoundland fisheries loan board because of the down payment required. Under the loan board, a fisherman or a group of fishermen who want to invest in a longliner, the cost of which runs to $50,000 or more, cannot find the required 10 per cent down payment even though they have the initiative and the knowledge to compete with others and are allowed to compete without restriction.

The government should act out of humane consideration for and faith in Newfoundland fishermen and provide for a review of the restrictions imposed on these fishermen. The government should provide incentives and the opportunity for these fishermen to provide not only for themselves but for neighbouring fishermen. I ask the minister to consider this aspect of the industry. I am not one who criticizes unnecessarily, but I submit this idea which I know the minister will consider, in view of his interest, of providing funds necessary to all Newfoundland fishermen to contribute to the Canadian economy, not only to the benefit of Canada but to their own livelihood. I ask that consideration be given to this matter and that the minister provide answers to my submission.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to the loss of fishing gear in Newfoundland. He refers to the fact, also, that the federal government has refused, so far at least, to compensate fishermen for loss of gear. He refers to me personally as being a cold fish minister. The people of Canada, through the government of Canada, have set up and administered the only insurance program which exists to cover losses of fishermen. There is no such program at the provincial level. The program which does exist relates to commercial fishing vessels and all gear fixed to those vessels. It is a form of insurance available at very low rates. It has been extended at exceptionally low rates to insure fishermen especially in the province of Newfoundland.

There was also an attempt two years ago to include as insurable gear miscellaneous gear, but the fishermen did not see fit to pay the very modest premiums charged for this. Indeed, very few of them signed in the initial stages. That program, therefore, was abandoned because there was no, or little income available to it. It could not work as an insurance plan. It is still a challenge. It is an opportunity for the province because it relates to small gear for small people in outlying places. This is the kind of program which a province could well administer.

I do not know what the Department of Fisheries really does at the provincial level. If it cannot handle this kind of thing, I do not understand how it can handle any larger program. We have joined with the province in many surveys, including surveys of gear damage. The province knows what the damage is. It has also known for a long time that this relatively small program is a logical one for the province to carry out, and it has failed to do its job in this connection.

INDUSTRY—CLOSING OF RADIO PRODUCTION AT DON MILLS PLANT OF PHILCO-FORD—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I managed to get two words across a while ago. They were simply "I wonder". I was beginning to wonder then whether there would be somebody here from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I am glad to see that the parliamentary secretary is here.

My question tonight is an extension of the question I asked last Friday morning at a time when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) was not in the House. It had to do with the partial shut-down of a plant in Don Mills, Ontario, owned by Philco-Ford of Canada. It appears that the plant intends to shut down one part of its operation concerned with the production of car radios for sale and resale to the Ford Motor Company of Canada. It turns out, from all the evidence, that this is indeed a very efficient part of this plant, so it could not be for reasons of efficiency that they are closing it down or for reasons of labour costs. We know the average wage rate in that section of the plant is some $2.90 an hour and that, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, in the Toronto region is no fortune.

However, some excuse is made for shutting down this part of the plant and throwing out about 100 employees on the ground that they are simply assembly-line workers, not many of whom are skilled and, as it says in the article, most of whom are women. I do not particularly like that aspect, but there you have it. I suppose women, in the world of industry, are more expendable.

The reasons for shutting down that part of the plant, as given by the managers and owners of the plant, are for the sake of economy. According to the trade union representatives of the workers in that plant, the total labour cost for the car radios produced in the plant, per radio, is $3. The total cost of labour and materials is $13. The radios themselves sell for $90. It is evident that $3 is a very small part of $90. It appears that the plant operates very well and very economically. But Philco-Ford is going to move this operation to a larger operation it is setting up in Brazil. They intend to produce, apparently, all their radios for all their world sales in Brazil.

So there we have it, a multinational corporation, for reasons of its own—its views on rationalization and economy—deciding to wipe out the jobs of about 100 Canadian workers. Surely this decision was not made with the interest of these workers in mind, and certainly not with the interest of the Canadian economy in mind.

My question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce at the time was simply whether anything could be done under the terms of the auto pact to intervene in this matter and somehow persuade this company not to "rationalize" its operations—I put the word "rationalize" in quotation marks—to the detriment of the workers of Don Mills and to the detriment of Canada. The components for these radios made at Don Mills come from Taiwan. They are not made in Canada. They are brought in duty-free under some aspect of the auto pact.

What we could ask, further, is whether the car radios which will be made in Brazil will be brought in duty-free. We might ask, even further, just how many components for cars to be produced in Canada will be brought in from outside the country duty-free. I have asked these questions in the hope that the minister can say there is something that can be done under the auto pact to prevent this kind of thing. However, I must say I am in despair of getting that kind of answer. I am too sure, unfortunately, that the minister, with regard to this particular pact, is impotent. I do not really think he can do anything.

I wish that in answer to my question he would say it would be possible for him to intervene to preserve these jobs for the Canadian workers. At any rate, I wait with some expectation and perhaps some faint hope that if I cannot get that kind of answer, we can get from this government some day in the future some backbone, some mettle and some spirit to protect the jobs of Canadians.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was reasonable in his question when he asked whether there was something the minister could do under the auto pact. Unfortunately, as the hon. member knows, under the auto pact the auto companies are required, under contract, to keep a fair level of production in Canada in respect of the production of vehicles in ratio to the markets in Canada and the Canadian contracts with CDA. When the companies have complied with that provision, there is no legal authority under which the government could oblige Philco-Ford or the Ford Company of Canada to do anything in respect of its components. We sympathize, of course, with the social dislocation which some people might feel but, unfortunately, in our type of economy, unless there is a legal requirement there is nothing we can do.

I would like to say also that Philco-Ford of Canada is also engaged in the manufacture of stereo and television sets at the Don Mills plant. The company has enjoyed substantial market success over the last five years and the average level of hourly employees at the plant increased from 330 in 1967 to 580 in 1972.

The transfer of car radio production to Brazil will affect 122 workers. The company will retain 47 of these workers in the production of other products at the Don Mills plant, and it is expected that the balance of 75 workers could be laid off in July, 1973. However, the company is hopeful that the market demand for its stereo and television products will enable it to retain a number of the employees scheduled for lay-off in July. So we hope that the markets in the other products will justify keeping the other employees.

I would like to say that it is very unfortunate that multinational corporations do this, but we must admit that in other circumstances we have benefited from such shifts in production. For example, there has been a lot of criticism in the United States that under the auto pact, production has been shifted by these corporations from the United States to Canada. So while sometimes, in this world of international economics we have to give and take, this is one of the "gives", but sometimes we have the "takes".

I am sorry that this has to happen, but the company cites lower production costs as the reason for the transfer. That is the reason the company gave to the department. Also, they have transferred production from the United States. It seems they want to develop some kind of captive production in what is probably the only plant of its kind in the world; so they shifted that type of production from other countries also. We know they shifted it from the United States to Brazil. We are sorry this has happened and we hope the employees will be able to stay on.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—EXPIRATION OF FISHERIES BENEFITS—POSSIBLE EQUATING OF BENEFIT PERIOD WITH QUALIFYING PERIOD—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, is it in order for me to ask my question, since I do not see the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) here to answer it?

An hon. Member: The parliamentary secretary is here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I do not think that question should be asked. The hon. member should say what he has to say. Somebody else is responsible for the answer. The hon. member has seven minutes in which to put his question.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am somewhat discouraged that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is not here to answer the question, which is a very legitimate one. I understand the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis)—

Mr. MacGuigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): There can be no point of order at this time. That is why I pointed out that the hon. member should not start his question in that way, because then the parliamentary secretary would wish to rise on a point of order. We cannot allow points of order at this time. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) has the floor.

Mr. Lundrigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am disappointed that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is not here to answer my question. He is the minister in charge of the department which now has jurisdiction over unemployment insurance for everybody in Canada, I presume. I want to raise a question which is a very difficult one to raise during the regular question period, because it is a somewhat complicated matter and I think most members of the House, and indeed the general public, are not aware of the issue.

If I were to put the issue in the form of a general question, it would be to ask the government and the Minister of the Environment or his representative today, who obviously wants to go to bat for him, what the government has against the fishermen of this country. I will say right now that if I ever become a member of a governing party which will not be able to do more for the fishermen of Canada than the present government, I will not support that government. I make that commitment to the fishermen of this country. I will not support a government that allows discrimination, the worst form of discrimination that I have witnessed in the last number of years, and I will not be satisfied with the minister reading 1,500 words of a prepared text.

I want a legitimate answer and I promise I will pursue this matter as long as I am a Member of Parliament until it is duly rectified by this government or a succeeding government. We have a system of unemployment insurance for fishermen which is at least 100 years old in concept. This year, for example, in our province there will be about $70 million and last year $73 million went into the province in the form of unemployment insurance as a whole. That was the total cost to the federal treasury, minus whatever was paid by the contributors.

In order to rectify the injustice now being perpetrated on the fishermen, it might cost the government another $1 million or $1,200,000 or a little bit more. For two years the minister has indicated before the committee and before the House that they are working on a plan for the fishermen. There are three ways to present a full-blown plan that would improve the lot of the fishermen. At the moment a man working in any capacity in Canada, in the automotive factories or as a carpenter or labourer, who has eight weeks' stamps and is in a very high unemployment area like the Maritimes, can receive approximately one year of benefits. In other words, he can work for two months and get approximately one year's benefits. Some people argue that this is excessive. A fishermen with eight weeks' stamps, the man who catches the fish to keep the fish plants going, gets 6½ weeks' benefits; in other words, only five-sixths of the number of stamps. A labourer or carpenter or anyone else gets six times as many benefits as he has stamps. If you add that up, the stamp that any regular worker receives is approximately seven times as good as the stamp the fisherman receives.

The minister will say that the fisherman is an independent worker and does not deserve any benefits at all. Coupled with the foregoing, however, he is not able to draw benefit until the middle of December and it continues, if he has enough stamps—he must have approximately 30 weeks' credit in order to draw for the full off-season—until the middle of May. Unless he is among the top 10 per cent of fishermen in Canada, he is forced to go on welfare from approximately March until the fishing season starts in earnest, which is approximately June.

On top of that, the fisherman has to average the last 20 weeks' benefits in order to come up with the rate of return that he would get from his stamps if he is really industrious and wants to work through October and November. Instead of being credited for the determination to continue, he gets a lower stamp because his average is down. If he quits at the beginning of September having had eight or ten weeks of very good fishing, he is all right; but if he continues into the stormy fall of the year he is penalized.

These are three or four ways in which the government could amend the present program for the fishermen in order to give them some justice. The government has concluded that the fishermen in Canada are not a very potent force. It is not compatible with the government's political aspirations in the larger urban centres to treat these people with any respect, and consequently they are being trampled upon. That is the reason the government is refusing to move. The minister is aware of the injustice, because I have already moved a motion and have talked to him in committee, and also to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. But they will not budge.

I am going to carry this cause even across the Canadian nation until the people of Canada see that the fishermen are not being given a square deal. I want the minister to give us some assurance that at least the government will move toward making the fisherman's stamp at least partly equal to the stamp given to the regular Canadian worker. I ask that the fisherman be given as many benefit weeks as the number of stamps he has. For most, that would mean four or five weeks' benefits to tide them over until the fishing season starts. I submit that would cost the treasury almost nothing and would give our fishermen at least part of a square deal—a square deal that they are not now getting.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) made several criticisms of our present unemployment insurance scheme as it applies to the fisheries in Canada. One, at least, I think is valid, the requirement that under present law the fisherman can only record his last 20 weeks of fishing in order to determine his benefits. A fisherman, naturally, would want to record for benefit purposes his best weeks and, therefore, under the present system he is tempted to stop fishing when his catch begins to taper off. Under the new amendments proposed and tabled, actually they have received first reading in the House, that problem will be overcome. So I would urge the hon. member to support the legislation in order to overcome the 20-week problem which he mentioned.

The main purport of the hon. member's remarks was that the fisherman is being discriminated against. The fisherman has a difficult time of it, but he is the only category of self-employed person in Canada who is receiving the benefit of unemployment insurance. For example, farmers do not. Farmers, unlike self-employed fishermen, are not eligible for unemployment insurance.

The hon. member concluded that most factory workers can work for eight or ten weeks, or some short period, and enjoy as much as one year of benefits. That, indeed, would be an exceptional case; perhaps 1 or 2 per cent of all factory workers are ever in the position of working as little as eight weeks and then drawing one year of benefits. On the other hand, fishermen every year draw a benefit. Many of the better fishermen draw benefits every year from December 1 to March 15 as a regular practice. As a broad generalization, fishermen pay about $1 into the scheme and get $10 out. They pay, in total in this country, about $2 in each year and get $20 million out. So the fisherman gets a pretty good deal under unemployment insurance.

I am not saying that the unemployment insurance scheme is tailored to his particular circumstances. It is not. It is a scheme which was developed basically for factory workers. We need a better scheme that is tailored to the needs of fishermen. However, the present scheme is much enriched over the one of a couple of years ago. I remind the hon. member that it was the Liberal government that brought in the scheme. The Conservatives were in power for nearly half a dozen years and did nothing about it. It has been enriched several times since. We will, in one year or two when the present unemployment insurance scheme shakes down and when it is working well, develop an alternative scheme that will apply to fishermen. We will develop a scheme that the fishermen will like better. I hope the hon. member will support us in that scheme.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister is against fishermen.

PLANNED NUCLEAR TESTS BY FRANCE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. If the House is disposed to deal with this motion, I feel it could be passed without debate. In view of the fact that Australia is sending its attorney general and New Zealand is sending its deputy prime minister to France and are contemplating international court action to persuade France not to proceed with its planned Pacific nuclear tests, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding):

That this House calls on the government to launch an immediate protest against these planned atmospheric nuclear tests preferably by sending a high-ranking government representative to the capital of France and also to the People's Republic of China to protest that country's forthcoming tests as well.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTED SUBSTITUTION OF PRIME MINISTER'S NOTICE OF MOTION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House in order to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister's notice of motion concerning the official languages, is unacceptable especially with respect to the French-speaking people of this country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this notice of motion be withdrawn and replaced by a more adequate and appropriate one.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair entertains some doubts concerning the admissibility of the motion, but it is simpler for me to inquire of the House and determine whether there is unanimous consent.

The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

DECLARATION OF CERTAIN PRINCIPLES RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

April 11, 1973—The Prime Minister:

That this House,

(i) aware that, as provided in the Official Languages Act, the English and French languages possess and enjoy equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all the institutions of the Parliament and Government of Canada;

cognizant that it is the duty of departments and agencies of the Government of Canada to ensure, in accordance with that Act, that members of the public can obtain available services from and communicate with them in both official languages; while recognizing that public servants should, as a general proposition and subject to the requirements of the Official Languages Act respecting the provision of services to the public, be able to carry out their duties in the Public Service of Canada in the official language of their choice;

do hereby recognize and approve the following Principles for achieving the foregoing:

(1) that positions which are seen, under present circumstances, as requiring the knowledge and use of both the French and English languages will be first identified, and then designated, as bilingual in the course of the period ending December 31, 1978;

(2) that positions will also be identified where English is an essential requirement of the job, where French is essential, or whether either French or English may be used;

(3) that a knowledge of English and French is one of the elements of merit in the selection of candidates for bilingual positions;

(4) that competitions for bilingual positions will be open both to bilingual candidates and unilingual candidates who have formally indicated their willingness to become bilingual;

(5) that competitions for unilingual positions will continue to be open to unilingual or bilingual candidates who meet the language requirements of the job;

(6) that unilingual incumbents of bilingual positions may elect to become bilingual and undertake language training, or transfer to another job having the same salary maximum, or, if they were to decline such a transfer, to remain in their positions even though the posts have been designated as bilingual;

(7) that employees who, as of April 6, 1966, had at least ten years of continuous service and who, since that date, have been employed continuously in the federal Public Service, will be entitled to apply for any job that has been identified for future designation as bilingual without having to indicate their willingness to become bilingual;

(8) that unilingual French-speaking and English-speaking persons from outside the Public Service who are willing to become bilingual may apply for bilingual positions open to public competition;

[Mr. Speaker.]

(9) that language training, at public expense, will be provided to unilingual public servants as well as to persons who are appointed to the Public Service to bilingual positions;

do further approve the Government of Canada, and, in particular, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission, taking the measures required to give effect to the aforementioned Principles; and

(ii) do further approve the taking of measures, after consultation with employee representatives, designed to produce a greater use of the French language at all levels in the Public Service, through increasing where practical, the number of French language units, through further recruitment efforts by the Public Service Commission, through training programs offered in the French language and by developing proposals, in conjunction with the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, to enhance the bilingual character of the National Capital region, thus helping to realize the objective of achieving, within the merit principle, full participation in the Public Service by members of both the anglophone and the francophone communities.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 21 this notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

WAYS AND MEANS

EARLY INTRODUCTION OF REMAINING NOTICES OF MOTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Since the House yesterday disposed of the income tax bill affecting 1972 personal income tax and will be engaged in dealing with the excise tax and customs tariff bills for 1972 today, can the hon. gentleman tell us whether on Monday he will be presenting notices of ways and means motions relating to the 1973 budget measures and anything left over from 1972, particularly the measure relating to personal income tax?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Not on Monday, no, not until after the Easter break.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that some of these measures have been around for a year, and since it is only now that measures relating to 1972 changes announced as long ago as last May are being dealt with by the House at the instigation of the government, I must ask the Prime Minister whether he will not exercise his responsibilities as leader of the government and put before the House notices of the ways and means motions arising out of the 1973 budget, as well as what is left over from 1972, rather than leave the House, the country and personal income taxpayers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am under the impression that the Leader of the Opposition had asked a supplementary question. Perhaps that might be answered and then the Leader of the Opposition might ask a further supplementary.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. Leader of the Opposition had not reached his question mark. I should like to know what he had in mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for the Prime Minister to be funny. I had reached the question mark, and a lot of other people have reached the question mark.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the Prime Minister of this country whether there is any reason why parliament and the people are not being presented immediately with the ways and means motions arising out of those two budgets and are being left in doubt as to the intention of the government despite the fact that some of these measures have been lying around for more than a year.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition for a very worth-while suggestion. I will give it the most serious consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I simply want to ask the Prime Minister whether he believes the people of this country should be left in doubt in this way, particularly since they have already gone through a year of doubt with regard to fiscal measures? Does he believe the people should be left in doubt as to the tax proposals, which are ordinarily presented in a very firm way to the House and the country immediately following the budget, and does the government have any excuse other than political manoeuvring, arrogance, or something like that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Prime Minister seeks to reply to the Leader of the Opposition's question. It seems to me we are getting involved in debate rather than in questions and answers. However, if the right hon. Prime Minister can reply briefly he may do so and I will then recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for the purpose of asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: Try to be straightforward for once.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: It would be a new experience and a very refreshing one.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I see the members of the opposition are not treating this question seriously.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. We are certainly not starting the question period on the right foot this morning. I wonder whether we might try to have some order and proceed in a more quiet and dignified way.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I just want to assure the Prime Minister that, as he could see, I was waiting with bated breath to hear what he was going to say, as were hundreds of thousands of people in this country.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

Mr. Mather: I do not have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We will return to this question in a short while. Perhaps we might try to complete the first round of questioning. If hon. members then want to continue this debate we will do so with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF SAFETY OF FIRENZA CARS—ASSISTANCE TO OWNERS TO RESOLVE COMPLAINTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning motor vehicle safety. Having in mind the hundreds of complaints from unfortunate owners of Firenza cars in regard to the safety-related defects of that car which has now been taken off the market by General Motors, is the Minister of Transport giving consideration to the request of the Automobile Protective Association that his department conduct an investigation or inquiry into the safety hazards of Firenza cars?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, the department has in at least ten instances requested this company to withdraw some of their cars from the market and to return them to the plant for correction of certain flaws in design or construction. On each occasion, we do advise the provinces and publicize such faults as have been detected, and I feel the safety division of the department is most active and deserves the praise of the people of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the minister indicate what, if any, policy of consumer advocacy his department is adopting to help the owners of many of these cars who have suffered a very substantial economic loss through their purchase of Firenzas?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did indicate to the House a few weeks ago that the department was, on behalf of Firenza owners who had brought their complaints to us, dealing with General Motors to try to find satisfactory solutions to their complaints.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CIP PLANT IN TEMISCAMING—STUDIES RESPECTING POSSIBLE REOPENING—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Last week he told me that he was meeting provincial authorities in order to discuss the possible reopening of the International Paper Company plant in Temiscaming. Has there been such a meeting or such discussions this week? Can the Minister say whether the plant will be reopening, and when?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have had conversations with the appropriate minister, I believe the minister of forestry, of the province of Quebec and yesterday a meeting of officials was held in Quebec City. I only had a brief chance this morning to get a report, but I am told that the meeting yesterday went very well, that considerable progress was made and that there is what I might describe as a federal-provincial position on which we are both agreed and which will now be brought to the various promoters of the project in the hope that this might result in the reopening of the mill as quickly as possible. It looks promising.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a supplementary to the first question.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO OFFSET INCREASE IN ONTARIO SALES TAX AND IMPOSITION OF ENERGY TAX

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the minister claims that his budget is expansionary in intent, may I ask him what steps he intends to take to offset the negative effects of the increase in the province of Ontario sales tax to 7 per cent and the imposition of a consumers' energy tax on people who use energy for the heating of their homes?

● (1120)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is something we would have to consider particularly in terms of stimulus. The personal income tax reduction proposed in February here was equivalent to about a 12 per cent or 13 per cent tax cut. If you take the increase in the sales tax in Ontario from 5 per cent to 7 per cent and the expiry of the 3 per cent reduction, that is equivalent in Ontario to about a 19 per cent income tax raise.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that home heating is an important item in the budget of most families, does the Minister of Finance or any other minister intend to carry on discussions with the provinces to see what steps can be taken to offset both the increase in the price of gas instituted by the province of Alberta and now the imposition of a consumer tax on energy in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will take that into consideration in view of the substance of the preamble of the hon. gentleman's question.

FACTORS DETERMINING UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN 1973—MINISTER'S FORECAST

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question concerning the economy and unemployment. In view of the government's annual economic review wherein it is indicated that the unemployment rate for 1973 will depend in part on the participation rate and also the willingness of people to involve themselves in the work force by actually seeking jobs, can the minister say whether he feels these will be the reasons unemployment will be high or low, depending on what he predicts will happen, and, finally, will he indicate to the House whether he has made any prediction about this year's unemployment rate expectation, whether it is approaching the corner, rounding the corner, on the straightaway or whatever he would like to indicate?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have attempted to forecast what the total number of new jobs will be for 1973, given reasonable industrial stability, a reasonable international trade position—

An hon. Member: Good weather.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and reasonable crops.

Mr. Hees: Good luck.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): To arrive at the eventual unemployment figure, of course—

An hon. Member: And the grace of God.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —a number of assumptions would have to be made, including the participation rate as the hon. gentleman suggests. It is because of the variables involved that I have hesitated to give a figure which might be confused by the public and the hon. gentleman as either a target or a forecast or something which would not give the firmness the hon. member expects.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have one final supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind hon. members that we are still on the first question asked this morning. I would hope we might go to another subject soon. The hon. member may ask a further supplementary and then I will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Lundrigan: With due respect for the minister's answer, and not wanting to be unfair to him, is he telling the House and the Canadian people that the government has not made a prediction, a forecast or prognosis about unemployment expectations for 1973?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the House is well aware of my views on forecasts and targets. If the hon. gentleman wants to take that up in more detail, I am again on my estimates on Monday night.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE OPENING OF MILITARY COLLEGES TO WOMEN

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I asked this question about two months ago and the minister said he would give it consideration. I wonder whether he is now ready to give the answer. In view of the tremendous advantages afforded young men wishing to go into the armed forces as a career, is the government now willing to provide the same advantages to young women by allowing them to attend military colleges and attain the same standards with the same advantages?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, although I have explained to the House that it is not now our policy to admit women to military colleges—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Richardson: —I would say that personally I believe the time may now be appropriate for us to re-examine that policy and I will do so following the suggestion of the hon. member with which I agree. If I could have a moment longer, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that even though we do not have women enrolled in the military colleges we do provide opportunities for training at the universities. There are now 42 women enrolled in officer training courses at civilian universities on an equal basis with men.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a supplementary and he will be recognized for that purpose. I believe the Minister of State seeks the floor on a point of order but I will first recognize the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I was not referring to those who wish to upgrade their education and are allowed to go to university because they do not get these advantages at all. As a graduate of RMC I can tell the minister that women would be very welcome at these colleges.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of State on a point of order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HIS BEATITUDE MAXIMOS THE FIFTH, GREEK MELCHITE CATHOLIC PATRIARCH

Hon. EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN TRADE WITH CARIBBEAN ISLANDS FOLLOWING FORMATION OF COMMON MARKET

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that on July 1, 1973, the five-year old Caribbean Free Trade Association, CARIFTA, will officially become the Caribbean Common Market, a union of 13 former British possessions with a common external tariff and unified economic trade and fiscal policies, what efforts are being made by the minister's department to protect the $100 million Canadian market in the CCM, and are efforts being made to open up new markets in this area for Canadian capital goods and raw materials which will be required as industrialization in the CCM creates new demands?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will recognize that his question is very wide in its scope. Certainly the House cannot expect the minister to reply to a question such as that. If the minister wants to indicate that he would wish to make a statement on motions or give the House the information in some other way, he will be recognized for that purpose.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this occasion to wish the Caribbean organization the very best. It is my view that co-operation among these islands is very much in the interests not only of these islands but also of Canada and will provide greater markets than would otherwise exist which we are exploring as a means of expanding our exports.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON LOCATION OF HELICOPTERS CARRYING ICCS PERSONNEL WHEN SHOT DOWN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of reports that an inspection team of the International Commission of Control and Supervision on the spot has made a finding that the helicopters which were shot down in Viet Nam recently in fact were 15 miles off course, which seems to be inconsistent with information given to the House, will the minister make a further statement on motions or otherwise clearing up this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received an official report from our representatives at Saigon about this incident. I have seen, as has the hon. gentleman, the reports that have come through the press. I have reason to believe they are broadly accurate, but we have not yet had a complete report and I would prefer to make a statement or table the report when it is received.

BENEFIT CONTROL—OFFER OF EMPLOYMENT PRIOR TO DISQUALIFICATION—AMENDMENT OF ACT

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

I have in hand a document which I received from someone who is having difficulties with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Benefits were refused because that person has limited his availability to five days a week.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should now hear the supplementary.

Mr. Godin: As the minister indicates that he does not want to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, could he tell us if he contemplates amending the Canada Labour Code in order to restore the 48-hour week?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I would ask the hon. member to send me the details of the particular incident he has described and I will see what I can do about it.

DRUGS

IMPORTATION OF MARIJUANA—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF CHARGES TO TRAFFICKING OR POSSESSION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Solicitor General. It arises out of a question I asked him last week in reference to the act under which the minimum sentence for the importation of soft drugs—I was dealing with university students or other young people who are caught bringing in drugs such as marijuana—is seven years. Can the minister say whether any special instructions have now gone out to his legal officers with reference to that kind of charge and whether the proper prerogative could be used to charge these people with either possession or trafficking?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no further instructions have gone out. I indicated to the hon. member when he raised the matter last that the instructions which were already in the hands of agents seemed to me to be completely appropriate.

Mr. Woolliams: Can the Minister of Justice say, without naming anyone on a particular charge, that the present charge which carries a minimum penalty for a first offence of seven years will be changed to either a charge of trafficking or simple possession?

Mr. Lang: I will not speak about an individual case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: It seems like discrimination to me.

IMMIGRATION

STATUS OF MR. AND MRS. SANCHEZ

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Considering the government's so-called "gentle hand policy" to visitors coming to Canada, could the minister explain why Mr. and Mrs. Sanchez from Argentina were forbidden to work and threatened with deportation by government officials, as reported by various sources yesterday?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. and Mrs. Sanchez came to Canada last fall and had permission to remain until March 31 of this year as visitors. On March 5 they appeared at the Toronto Immigration office to apply for landed immigrant status. They were told that this was not possible and arrangements were made for them to appear at a special inquiry on a date to be later specified. On April 11 they appeared at a Canada Manpower centre in suburban Toronto, were identified as people awaiting an inquiry, and an immigration officer stamped a prohibition to work in their passports. This was stamped in error.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister and to the hon. member that it is somewhat irregular to try to make statements to the House by way of questions during the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question through you to the minister. Could the minister indicate whether this problem has been resolved for these people?

Mr. Andras: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The inhibition has been removed and the couple may be permitted to work. There was no threat of deportation whatsoever.

INCOME TAX

TREATMENT OF RETURNS OF CORPORATIONS CLAIMING CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCE AS PROPOSED IN MAY, 1972, BUDGET

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the changes in capital cost allowances suggested in the May, 1972, budget have not yet been invoked by order in council or by amendments to the Income Tax Act, will the minister advise the House how he is handling returns made by corporations whose year end is now over and who have filed returns and have used the capital cost allowance suggestions in that budget?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the question does not arise unless the corporation is anxious to have an assessment established immediately. In that case, of course, the assessment would have to be established on the basis of the law as it exists.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTED BONUS FOR SURVIVING MEMBERS OF ROYAL NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE AND ANNUAL ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED PERSONNEL NOT YET 60

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. This being the centennial year of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, is the Solicitor General considering a bonus to the pensions of the surviving members of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and can he also say what progress he is making in securing the necessary arrangements so that retired RCMP personnel not yet 60 will have their pensions escalated annually?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, these matters are under study. I do not have any details for the hon. member right now, but I will be pleased to get them for him.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNUAL ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL NOT YET 60

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a supplementary question, which is parallel to the one I just asked, to the Minister of National Defence. Can he say what progress he is making so that retired armed forces personnel not yet 60 years of age will receive the annual escalation in their pensions?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF SAFETY REGULATIONS REQUIRING INSHORE SPORTS FISHING BOATS TO CARRY LARGE, INFLATABLE LIFE RAFTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. I regret that I have not been able to give him notice, but perhaps he could take the question as notice if he is not in a position to answer it now. Will he take action, preferably before June 1, to amend or reinterpret the well intentioned but completely impractical safety regulations which require small inshore fishing boats that take people sports fishing to carry large, inflatable life rafts?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will look into this problem and answer later.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PAY OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL ON VIET NAM SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that the Department of National Defence personnel are working as long hours and under conditions that are as dangerous as the conditions under which employees of the Department of External Affairs are working in Viet Nam, is the minister going to announce an increase in pay rates for the defence personnel equal to that paid to external affairs and other civilian personnel serving in Viet Nam?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the arrangements for foreign service pay are determined by the Treasury Board, not directly by the Department of National Defence or the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Baker: Would the minister care to enlighten the House now as to what the minister's recommendations are to the Treasury Board with respect to this matter and with respect to pay for Department of National Defence personnel equal to that of members of the Public Service of Canada?

Mr. Richardson: Broadly speaking, we have achieved equality of pay for the armed forces and the public service. When we look at something specific, such as the matter mentioned by the hon. member, foreign service allowances, we have to consider other elements in the total package of allowances and benefits. We have to look at the pension plan, at housing conditions and even medical care. There is a lot in the package that has to be weighed, not just one item.

HARBOURS

POINTE-AU-PIC—REPAIRS TO WHARF

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Public Works.

On March 23, a ship damaged the wharf at Pointe-au-Pic. Since that accident there has been no traffic in the port in order to allow repairs to be made. Can the minister advise us whether the work has in fact started and, if so, when it is expected to be completed?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to inquire as I am not now in a position to answer this question. It was probably very difficult to do the work during winter months, but I shall look into the matter and advise the hon. member at the first opportunity.

RESEARCH

PERCENTAGE OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT GRANTS MADE IN WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In view of the statement made in the speech prepared for delivery by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Calgary on April 5 that 25 per cent of all research and development incentive grants are made in western provinces, which contrasts with the statement by the Minister of National Defence reported on page 363 of Hansard that 91 per cent of all such research and development grants are given in Ontario and Quebec, and therefore only 9 per cent for all the rest of Canada, my question is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question, he should not present an argument.

Mr. Andre: My question is, which of these two ministers' statements is correct?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

ALLEGED LOWER PAY TO GENERAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES IN SAULT STE. MARIE COMPARED WITH PUBLIC SCHOOL COUNTERPARTS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the minister's stated intention to keep salaries of federal employees in the general services category competitive with those of non-government employees, can he explain why federal government employees in this category in Sault Ste. Marie must work for 70 cents less an hour than their counterparts in the public school system?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details of this case. I think that currently these rates are under negotiation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BROADCASTING OF GOVERNMENT AND H. and R. BLOCK COMMERCIALS RESPECTING 1972 INCOME TAX FORM

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Does he feel that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is acting in the best interests of Canadian citizens in running commercials by Fred Davis about our so-called simple tax form and other commercials by the H. and R. Block Company calling attention to the need for their professional services because of this same tax form?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CBC does not report to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Bellechasse.

[English]

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is rising on a supplementary.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary would be to the responsible minister, but with the way things are going on that side of the House we never know who is responsible for what.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, I would like to put my question to his parliamentary secretary who was here a moment ago. However, if you will allow me to do so, I shall put my question as soon as he is back in the House.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL—INITIATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES RELATED TO EXPANSION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. A month and a half ago the Minister of the Environment assured the House that environmental studies relating to Vancouver Airport expansion would be concluded within 12 months. Can the minister assure the House that these studies have in fact now been started?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be preferable to put this question to the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, since this is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport, can he tell us whether these studies, which apparently have to be completed within 12 months, have been started? If he does not have the information, would he undertake to let us have it as soon as possible?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of the Environment acts for us in this matter. We asked that department to make the studies. What stage the studies are at the moment I do not know exactly, but I will make inquiries.

INCLUSION OF STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMPUTER COMMUNICATIONS ON CONFERENCE AGENDA—RESPONSE OF PROVINCES TO INVITATIONS TO ATTEND

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Communications. In view of the computer communications green paper tabled today, or another chapter in the green paper policy, is this subject also to be included on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference the minister has called, and what has been the response of the various provinces to his invitation?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Yes, Mr. Speaker, computer communications is obviously one of the subjects covered under a national policy on telecommunications. The provinces' answer on a proposed federal-provincial conference on telecommunications was positive. However, they feel that the proposed agenda for the beginning of July is premature. Most provinces would rather have a conference in the fall, in early October.

Mr. Nowlan: Along with the issue of general policies and principles which will be on the agenda of this federal-provincial conference, will the question of the political balance of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission also be an item for discussion at the conference?

ESTABLISHMENT OF MONITORING MECHANISM TO ENSURE THAT SALES TAX AND TARIFF REDUCTIONS ARE PASSED ON IN LOWER PRICES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has he now established the monitoring devices with regard to price reductions, following the sales tax and tariff cuts announced in the budget, that he said he was studying a few days ago and which the Minister of Finance later said were already in place in several departments?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a mechanism for this purpose has been established within my department and I hope to have further information about the results of its work available to the Minister of Finance and to the House in due course.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the House will presumably be recessing on Wednesday next, will the minister undertake to make a full statement as to the monitoring methods being used and the results of such checks before the House recesses?

Mr. Gray: I do not think I am in a position to do that.

Mr. Stanfield: I guess you are not.

Mr. Gray: I will examine what information I can give. I want to leave the Leader of the Opposition something to look forward to when the House resumes.

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND—MEMBERSHIP AND TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN PLANS

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. It is my fortnightly question on the subject of a second international airport at Toronto. Could the minister report what progress is being made on establishing the commission of inquiry with regard to the expropriations surrounding the second international airport at Toronto, and also with regard to setting the terms of reference for this commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I stated in the House previously, I have to meet with the Premier of Ontario, Mr. Davis. This has not been done yet, but I hope I can meet with him very soon.

Mr. Harney: In view of the fact that officials of the Ontario Department of Transport and Communications recently stated publicly that the second international airport at Pickering will probably not be built in the sense that it has been proposed, is the House to expect that there have been significant changes in the plans for the Pickering airport?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can say is that nobody has been authorized to make such a statement on behalf of the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. Paul's on a supplementary.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the announcement by the government on January 30 with respect to the Pickering airport expropriations indicated that the independent study group would be required to report within one year, and in view of the fact that some ten weeks have passed since that announcement, is the minister still sticking by his commitment to have that group report within one year?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSSIBILITY OF PROVISION OF SECRETARIES FOR MEMBERS IN CONSTITUENCIES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

I asked him a question on Monday about the possibility of setting up secretarial facilities in each riding, so as to provide better service for the general population. Have there been any further developments on this this week? Does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to recommend or take steps towards setting up such offices in each federal riding?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the Social Credit leader asked that question, I have consulted the government leader in the House, who reported to me on discussions he has had with representatives of the other parties.

The hon. member is aware that this is a measure that we would be unwilling to pass if a large number of members were opposed to it, since its aim would be to provide a federal presence in the various parts of Canada that are a long way from Ottawa.

The reports I have had to date are encouraging, and it would seem that the House leader will soon have the support of almost all the parties for this measure; once he has, we will be very glad to implement it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO GRANT CREDIT TO GOVERNMENT OF CHILE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the government's apparent refusal to grant any variety of credit to the government of Chile, and the unpleasant appearance of complicity in some sort of pressure on that government, would the Prime Minister immediately revoke the order apparently issued by some branch of government, external affairs or trade and commerce, and remove this refusal of a discriminatory nature against the government of Chile and allow that government to obtain normal credit, as other governments in South America do, particularly in view of the fact that this is seriously interfering with Canada's trade—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to reply, there is no substance whatever to the allegation made by the hon. member.

[Later:]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The reply to the question I asked a few moments ago was made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and, if I may say so I believe the minister has quite innocently misled the House. When an inquiry was made by myself of the Export Development Corporation, I was informed that there was a government order that no credit was to be extended to the government of Chile. That is the question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege but perhaps a point of debate between the minister and the hon. member.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF NATIONAL REVENUE EMPLOYEES TO IDENTIFY THEMSELVES ON TELEPHONE WHEN ADVICE SOUGHT

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. As the minister is now likely aware that his department will not stand behind the advice it is giving to taxpayers, will the minister tell the House whether refusal by employees of his department to identify themselves on the telephone is an official policy of his department?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member should know, and I think he does, that it has been well established in law that members of the public service or members of the government, for that matter, cannot bind the Crown. Therefore they cannot be expected to guarantee information given over the phone to the extent that it can be used as evidence in court.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises for a supplementary. He will be recognized for that purpose. I will then recognize the hon. member for Churchill and call orders of the day.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question, but I hope he will. Is the reason for withholding names the fact that employees of his department are uncertain about the advice they are giving because of the complexity of the tax laws or fear of being prosecuted by taxpayers who have received bad advice?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question. The answer was no. There is no such instruction and there is no such fear.

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of a previous question asked of the minister concerning Manitoba Hydro development, may I ask the minister now whether he has received an application for the diversion of South Indian Lake in Manitoba from Manitoba Hydro and whether in fact he received an application in respect of the regulation of Lake Winnipeg over three years ago from Manitoba Hydro?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware personally if we have received such an application, but I will inquire of the department and answer.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-171, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-171 is a relatively short bill. The commodities to which it refers have long since been forgotten by members of this House. Actually, many members of the House never knew of the proposals in the budget which gave rise to these changes. These changes are limited to those that the minister announced in the budget of May 8, 1972. Basically they cover a limited number of commodities on which taxes have either been eliminated or on which they are to be reduced.

Before I deal with the particular provisions of the bill which apply to such things as, contact lenses, crates used in transportation, eel traps and a few things like that, I should like to say that the House, I am sure, was very disappointed that even in his last budget address the minister did not announce that there was being undertaken a general review of the entire sales tax, as that applies to the government of Canada. We know that the Carter Commission made some proposals about the whole question, but we have not heard anything about them for several months. I will wait until the minister pays attention.

An hon. Member: He is not paying attention to you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps I could have the attention of both hon. gentlemen who are now conferring, since they are the ones to whom I should like to make these remarks.

An hon. Member: Send the minister a letter, Marcel.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): An hon. member suggests that I should send a letter. It would never get there on time. I am not satisfied that the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) could get it there on time.

The point I was hoping to impress on the minister, and on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if he had stayed in the chamber, is the necessity of a total review of the sales tax provisions that apply at the federal level. Over the years the act has become a mishmash of parts that were repealed, of additions, and of many schedules that are a jungle of inconsistencies. Actually, there is in my mind a very grave question about the efficacy of flat rate consumption taxes. These are imposed on an ad valorem basis. As prices rise, the revenues of the government rise. The federal sales tax is a regressive tax in that it hits more heavily—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): How about provincial sales taxes?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —the persons in lower income brackets. The minister asks, what about provincial sales taxes? I agree with him. That, however, does not alter the fact that leadership for a total review of consumption taxes, such as sales taxes, must be given in this country if tax reform is to have any meaning. If the subject of tax reform in this country has been abandoned by the Liberal administration because it has exhausted in producing the new Income Tax Act, I can readily understand the apparent lack of progress. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is talking now about a guaranteed annual income. This administration more and more seems to be moving in that direction, even though the Prime Minister in 1968 had rejected the whole idea. Before there can be any element of justice with regard to a guaranteed annual income, the question of sales and consumption taxes at both federal and provincial sales levels must be considered.

Having said that, I should like to ask the minister to say what steps have been taken since his predecessor many months ago indicated that this action was to be organized. Has anything been done to undertake the planning for a review of the general sales tax picture? That is the point I now wish to make. I will have something to say about it when we consider the bill in committee of the whole. I will talk about certain principles underlying this bill. After we have heard from representatives in the House, I hope that we will move into committee of the whole to deal with the particular points.

● (1200)

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) I; too, intend to be very brief in speaking on Bill C-171. This bill also deals with legislation proposed in the budget of last year. It removes the sales tax from a number of items which help people such as farmers. In my area, this measure will be helpful because it removes the sales tax on crates for live poultry. After all, Yorkton is the turkey capital of the world. Therefore, I enthusiastically support this part of the legislation. In answer to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), I maintain that Yorkton is the turkey capital, not the Fraser Valley. This bill exempts a whole series of items from sales tax such as chicken and turkey crates, eyeglasses, contact lenses and so on.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He questioned the wisdom of sales taxes in general and asked the government to review the idea of a sales tax because it is regressive. I agree that sales tax is extremely regressive. I wonder what the Progressive Conservative party thinks about the Ontario government which yesterday implemented a 7 per cent sales tax across the board.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about Saskatchewan where it started?

Mr. Nystrom: In Saskatchewan, the sales tax is now 5 per cent. In Ontario, it is 7 per cent, one of the highest in the country. That really indicates where the hearts of the generous Tories are when it comes to the average citizen. It strikes me as funny to hear the hon. member for Edmonton West question the wisdom of sales tax and suggest that it is regressive when his own party in the province of Ontario is increasing the sales tax.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nystrom: I say sincerely that sales tax is regressive. It is imposed across the board and hurts in particular those in the lower and middle income groups. The sales tax in this country should be lowered rather than increased, such as is being done in Ontario. Therefore, I support the bill before us. I am happy to see that a number of items are now being exempted from sales tax. The clause dealing with eyeglasses, contact lenses and other items connected with eye problems is worth-while. The clause dealing with crates for live poultry is very worthwhile, especially in an area like mine, as are other clauses in the bill.

The only question I want to raise at this time concerns providing more exemptions for mining companies in the exploration and drilling for oil and gas. I again want to make the point that the government is handing out another tax exemption to the resource and extractive industries. These industries are already receiving a lot of tax breaks. They are capital intensive. They do not provide jobs. We should look in the opposite direction, plug some of the loopholes and increase taxation for the mining and oil companies. This would entice more money into the manufacturing industry as well as the development of service industries which in turn, would provide more jobs for the people of this country.

The hon. member for Edmonton West may think this rather frivolous. I understand his thinking. He represents, in a very profound way, the thinking of the economic neanderthals of the Conservative party in Alberta, the people who represent the oil and gas companies in this country. What we need in this country is a real change in the tax policy regarding the extractive industries. It is time we did more processing of raw materials in this country. There should be more development in this area. If we did that, we probably would not have the high rate of unemployment that we have today.

In conclusion, we will support the measure before us. During the committee stage, one or two members of this party may have a question or two for the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the bill now under consideration will surely encourage a few sectors of the economic activity in Canada and will not do much for others, while the federal government is on the verge, as an hon. member pointed out a while ago, of abolishing the sales tax on certain drug products and certain other items to help large families. However, at the same time, we hear about tax increases at the provincial level. For example, the Ontario government announced last night that the sales tax would go up from 5 to 7 per cent, while it already stands at 8 per cent in Quebec.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): And the Sacreds in British Columbia raised it to 6 per cent.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): And the Conservatives in British Columbia have raised it to 6 per cent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No. The Conservatives are not in power; it is an NDP government.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The New Democratic Party is in power. In Alberta where the Conservatives are in power, there is talk of a soon to be established sales tax and the hon. member for Edmonton West will probably soon have to confirm it.

Mr. Speaker, oil reserves are all being devoured in Alberta since the Conservatives took over.

The sales tax hits directly big families which naturally have to buy more than small families. Big families are usually those with low incomes; they are the families hardest hit by tax increases in Ontario. But it is not up to the Minister of Finance to tell the government of Ontario not to impose taxes.

This morning I heard the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (M. Douglas) ask with respect to the tax on gasoline or the 2 cent increase in the price of gasoline if the federal government intended to do anything about it.

Mr. Speaker, I was tempted to ask a question at that time to see if in 1944 when the hon. member for Nanaimo-

Cowichan-The Islands was premier of Saskatchewan, the tax on gasoline was removed. Was private entreprise not taxed? For example, were there not oil companies which refused to settle in Saskatchewan because they feared they might be nationalized or controlled by the government? Those are questions which might have been asked this morning had the hon. member been a minister in this government. It may soon come true judging from the way we see the New Democratic Party walk hand in hand with this government. What is now held against the government was applied in Saskatchewan not too long ago and it is still being applied today.

Mr. Speaker, it is not a solution to say: you are blamed for imposing such a tax while everybody is asking for better services in all fields; everybody, especially the New Democratic Party, is clamouring for assistance, as did a while ago the member for Winnipeg North Centre (M. Knowles) who spoke about public servants who should be granted a pension raise, etc. We agree. Why should they get higher pensions? To have more purchasing power!

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we are drawing those increases from the pockets of the taxpayers; we reduce the purchasing power of the general consumer to help a certain class of society. Help a group of citizens, fair enough, but not at the expense of another which is sometimes poorer than the one we are trying to help.

Mr. Speaker, changing the taxation procedure is not new; it has been invented, not by the government, nor by the member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands nor by myself, but by economists who say that the tax basis should be better distributed in order to reach a given social class.

Mr. Speaker, whether they be Liberals, Progressive Conservatives or New Democrats, most economists have studied in the same universities, yet they contradict each other and confuse governments instead of enlightening them.

I do have a grudge against such economist who dwell in the clouds, get lost in the fog and want to distribute taxation through additionnal bureaucracy, which means more administration expenses and fewer services than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, this is why me should not always rely on taxation; from time to time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) says: the only way to get money is to tax or borrow. How empty those words sound, coming from a sovereign government! It does not enjoy sovereignty; then, where does it find sovereignty? In taxation and borrowing. But why does sovereign government, strong legal and able in a country such as Canada find itself unable to create the credit it needs to serve the people?

Mr. Sepaker, after getting up in the morning and saying the "Lord's Prayer" and the a "Hail, Mary", the Minister of Finance should learn by heart the statement made by Abraham Lincoln in the 1860's when he was President of the United States. This would complement his prayers.

Abraham Lincoln said, and I quote:

• (1210)

[English]

I have two great enemies—the southern army in front of me and the financial institutions in the rear. Of the two, the one behind me is my greatest foe. The government should create,—

[Translation]

The Minister of Finance is looking at me; these words are not mine but those of Abraham Lincoln; the minister willingly follows the example of this great stateman in other fields, but not in the financial field. No, we must not talk about that.

I resume the quotation:

[English]

—the government should create, issue and circulate all the currency required to satisfy the spending power of the government and the buying power of consumers.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Island has used the same words in western Canada. In 1934-35, the hon. member drove in Saskatchewan in a 1929 model car; I saw the picture. On the one hand, he was saying: Vote CCF, and on the other hand he was saying: Vote Social Credit. At the time of William Eberhart, he almost became a member of the Social Credit Party.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member none the less recognizes that he used Abraham Lincoln's words.

An hon. Member: Was he not a student that time?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): He was not a student but I must admit he was very clever. Only when he joined the ranks of the CCF did he lose some of his ability.

Mr. Speaker, Abraham Lincoln said, and I quote:

[English]

The privilege of creating and issuing money is not only the supreme prerogative of government—

[Translation]

I hope the Minister of Finance understands. I go on quoting:

[English]

—it is the government's greatest creative opportunity.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Is the hon. member suggesting that he was an advocate of Social Credit?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, but I can say that I agree with him. I wish the minister would agree with him as well. If he did and undertook exactly what Abraham Lincoln suggested, the minister might conclude by saying: At last, that is Social Credit!

[English]

The people can and will be furnished with a currency as safe as their own country. Money will cease to be master and become the servant of the people. Democracy will rise superior to the money power.

[Translation]

Those were the words of Abraham Lincoln. When will the Minister of Finance start saying and repeating those words and, above all, putting them into effect? I am looking forward to that. The sipritual leader of the present Minister of Finance was the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King. That is true!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is tough!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I remind the hon. member that we are considering a specific bill, Bill C-171, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act. I assume that the remarks of the hon. member are introductory to his statement, but I hope that he will soon come to the subject matter of the bill now before us.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am quoting the former president of the United States Abraham Lincoln, and one former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, because they were definitely opposed to this excise tax which is dealt with in Bill C-171.

This tax is to a high degree responsible for inflation in Canada; even if we abolish the tax on candies and on some drugs, it will not do much to improve the financial situation.

Let us take, for example, the effects of excise tax in the field of automobiles. Mr. Speaker, I am an automobile salesman. On a $4,000 car, the excise tax is just under $300; the federal sales tax comes to between $500 and $700 and on top of that there is the provincial tax. What an agglomeration of taxes—

An hon. Member: They benefit the salesman!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): An hon. member says: "They benefit the salesman"! Mr. Speaker, if our profits were that much, we would be rich. Then we would be able to pay more income tax! The excise and other taxes on automobiles and other products are enough. We should at least have exemption from the provincial sales tax.

To come back to what I was saying just now, I know that the Right Hon. Mackenzie King is not behind Bill C-171, but his spirit is there. The Minister of Finance could abolish the excise tax on a number of products if he took the advice of his "spiritual father".

I quote again:

[English]

Once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation. Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred responsibility, all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and democracy is idle and futile.

● (1220)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it was a Liberal prime minister of Canada who made such a statement in 1935, nearly forty years ago. And today, we still have to deal with the same system. Taxes are distributed instead of abundance. We forget the products which exist in Canada; we still hear stupid economists say that there is not enough production in relation to the purchasing power, while exactly the opposite is true. Today, in order to stimulate employment, they say that private enterprise is going to be subsidized, that the excise tax will be removed on some items, holding out to the people the prospect of an increase in the purchasing power and of new jobs.

Yesterday evening, I saw the advertisement for 300,000 jobs. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was wrong as usual and advertised three million jobs. The bureaucrats who do not even have enough time to think what figures they must write down are as strong as 10 years ago. They are irresponsible, as usual.

Mr. Speaker, 300,000 jobs will be created by the Minister of Finance, but they do not say how many new Canadians will join the labour market. The 300,000 jobs of the Minister of Finance remind me of the 100,000 jobs of Mr. Bourassa, in the province of Quebec, where 100,000 jobs became 100,000 layoffs. There are more unemployed in the province of Quebec than at the time when Mr. Bourassa came to power in 1970, and at the national level, there are more unemployed than 3 or 4 years ago. This is the result of such a system! They think that they will improve the well-being of Canadians by giving goodies.

Moreover, automation is increasing every day and shows that we need less and less labour, and human capital. What is needed is automatic capital and I would like the Minister of Finance to find automatic financial capital. Financial capital must work as automation does and then the excise tax would not have to be abolished or altered since the minister would have found a concrete solution. We want to get the economy moving again. There is only one way of making it work: we must increase the consumers' buying power without increasing prices. This is the only way. We will not succeed through the excise tax but through the Bank of Canada and by compensated retail price discounts.

The federal government could use the Bank of Canada so this would not be reflected in prices and in production costs; by decreasing consumption prices, compensated by the federal government, by the Bank of Canada or by a national credit commission, the products would reach consumers and create new jobs through increased demand. Those products would then be made in Canada and not in Japan or Jamaica.

The abolition of the excise tax on certain products is only a drop of water in the ocean. This is not a solution to the problem and if the other parties are happy with that, we are not. We will of course accept the removal of the excise tax on certain products, but this is not enough and the Minister of Finance knows it.

Therefore, I wish, as I said earlier, that in addition to saying his "Hail Mary" or his "Our Father", morning and night, the minister should learn by heart what Abraham Lincoln said in the United States, so that we may establish in Canada a system respectful of all citizens.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-171, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act. Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion I should like to pass on to the minister at this time with regard to a matter I am disappointed to see is not included in this measure. I refer to educational material not available in Canada and imported from other countries, especially the United States. Books and other material come in free of charge, but when we come to print-out cards which are used for testing students, these have to be processed in the United States, not in Canada, and are subject to tax on re-entry into this country. This tax is, of course, passed on to the taxpayer in our already overtaxed educational system.

I should have thought the minister would have seen fit to bring in an amendment to the act so as to include these materials under the free entry provisions. Therefore, I ask him to give consideration to exempting the materials I have referred to from the provisions of the act. I know the minister is busy with his officials, but this is a very serious matter and certainly affects the cost of education for the municipalities. The people who distribute this material find they are not at all competitive as they have to pay this tax on these test forms and other material when they re-enter Canada. This is discrimination when books that are bound can entry this country duty free.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister should pay attention.

Mr. Scott: I do not know whether the minister has been paying attention to me.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is entitled to be heard.

Mr. Scott. Perhaps I should make my case again, Mr. Chairman; I hope his officials will also pay attention. My point deals with books and test cards for computers entering Canada. These are distributed to schools and are used to test pupils. They are then sent to the United States to be run through a computer, and on their return to Canada they are charged tariff entry. This, in turn, is passed on by the different companies to the departments and boards of education in Canada. My plea to the minister is that he see fit to classify this material as he classifies bound material, and admits it in leaf form duty free into Canada.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, in clause 2 there is an amendment to Part IX of Schedule III having to do with marine and fisheries. I have been examining the proposed amendments in relation to the Part as it now stands, and my interpretation of the amendments is that, generally speaking, they are designed to provide exemption from sales tax for the commercial fisheries. In the present section 1 of Part X there is a rather general description of boats bona fide purchased by fishermen for use in the fisheries and articles and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture of equipment or repair thereof.

I have had one or two questions about this asked of me, and I should like to have an understanding that section 1 does, in fact, include an exemption for gill nets, seine nets or trawl nets. I ask this question because one reads down through this part into Nos. 2, 3, 4, etc., certain specific things are spelled out in detail, but nowhere in the present bill are nets of any kind specifically mentioned. I would just like to have confirmed, if I can, that commercial fishermen's nets are in fact sales tax exempt.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Under Item 68200-1 fishing nets of all kinds are exempt, and that ties in with the list to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Barnett: That answers that question. Would the specific amendment contained in Bill C-171, which has to do with the amendment to No. 4, cover this? Certain things are added, namely cod traps, eel traps, articles for binding or wedging lobster claws. As I understand it, this is an attempt to close a gap which has existed in the details of exempt items, possibly because of the development of new kinds of fisheries. I wonder whether the general intent is to exempt all of the items required to engage in a commercial fishery, and whether this form of dealing with it is necessarily the best one. The section would include traps and pots used for catching lobsters, crab and shrimp and the proposal is to add cod traps and eel traps.

The question occurred to me immediately, what about the prawn fishery? If one is going to go into that kind of detail, is it necessary for someone engaged in the prawn fishery, as distinct from the shrimp fishery, to go through the rather exhaustive process of making representations to the government in order to find out that a particular type of gear which may be used is exempt? As I understand this part of the section, it is the gear not attached to or necessarily part of the regular equipment of the boat that is exempt. Must this happen every time some new form of fishery is developed and, if so, has consideration been given to what I might describe as a more generic approach being taken, setting out these items? Can the minister shed light on this question?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have a serious problem here but, as is customary, parliament likes to have a review of specific items with amendments on the floor of the House. These are the only items that have been drawn to our attention in the last year. We have taken care of them, and I have not been informed of any other problems.

As the hon. gentleman anticipates, this is a widening of the exemptions in the whole fisheries situation.

Mr. Barnett: In light of the minister's response I am not going to really press the matter at the moment, but he did refer to items drawn to his attention. Perhaps I could preface what I want to say by reminding the minister, in case it escaped his attention and I know he has not served on the Fisheries Committee as I have, that when the last amendments to the Fisheries Act were before the Committee, we moved an amendment which was approved by parliament as a whole to include all marine plants as being, by definition, fish.

Just to point out the relationship to this particular schedule, in No. 2 we have a reference to Irish moss. This is a form of marine plant which is harvested commercially on some parts of the Atlantic coast. There is an attempt being made, for example, to develop as a commercial fishery operation within the context of the Fisheries Act, the harvesting of what we commonly refer to as kelp on the west coast. This is a product which is used in commercial manufacturing. I know there is a plant, for example, in California, which produces some quite valuable products from this particular marine plant. As the matter stands, it seems to me that kelp, not being mentioned, would not be covered. If the experimental operation which is or has been underway in British Columbia, involving the leasing of certain areas for kelp harvesting and so on, is successful, it would not be covered by this bill. The problem may not have become acute enough for anyone to bring it officially to the attention of the minister, but I cite this as an example of what could happen.

Somebody might assume he was in a fishery if he were dealing in Kelp, but when dealing with the minister's officials, and getting down to the nitty-gritty of dealing with exemptions, might find that this is not included under the schedule of exemptions. Perhaps the minister would agree, since he is widening the area of exemption by way of this amendment, to keep in mind that particular kind of question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak particularly about sub-clause (8) of Clause 2, which is the introduction of new Part XIV of Schedule III and covers goods manufactured in institutions. This is one of the principal applications of the minister's proposal and it would eliminate entirely the sales tax from goods manufactured within institutions caring for the blind, the deaf and dumb and the mentally retarded. I would put it to the minister that this is a step in the right direction but, quite frankly, does not go nearly far enough to cover the present day situation. There is a different method of looking after people who are mentally retarded. They are no longer locked up in institutions or, shall we say, confined to mental institutions. This has reference to the blind and the deaf and dumb, but what is being done about the physically handicapped?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I might help the hon. member by referring him to the later ways and means resolution which I tabled on February 19 of this year, in which there is a further amendment proposed to this part of the schedule to include goods produced by the labour of individuals who are in any other manner mentally or physically handicapped.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right, that meets part of the question. That meets the part in respect of the physically handicapped, but I am talking about the sheltered workshops which exist throughout the country where we have those who are not severely retarded. I am referring to people who do not live in an institution but live in a home and go to a sheltered workshop. This is not covered under this particular amendment.

[Mr. Barnett.]

• (1240)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is not covered unless the minister is referring to the February one. I do not have it before me. I thank the minister for reminding me what he did in February. I am referring to the sheltered workshops and also the rehabilitation centres.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is in the February one.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is good. I think this will shorten the debate a good deal. A number of my colleagues were concerned about this. This is part and parcel of the difficulties of the dog's breakfast type of budget proposals we have to consider.

Now I shall come to the sales outlets. We have a series of shops in Edmonton known as the Marina shops. They handle goods made exclusively by a group of handicapped persons, and are the sole outlets for these products. Naturally sales amount to more than $3,000 a year and therefore Marina does not have the small manufacturers' license. Incidentally, while on that point I hope the minister will do something about the $3,000 limit on a small manufacturers' license. That should have gone out the window ten years ago because the limitation of $3,000 for total output in a year is ridiculous. It was ridiculous ten years ago and now is even more so. These outlets to which I am referring are not for private gain. The proceeds are strictly for the benefit of the handicapped persons whose goods go through these shops. The staff is comprised primarily of volunteers.

However, the goods handled by these outlets are subject to sales tax. There is much correspondence on file relative to this. I have written to the minister, to his predecessor and to others in respect of this particular type of operation. As I have said, there is much to be done in respect of this particular item. If the minister wants to do an efficient job in respect of handling these sheltered workshops, he should clarify the situation in respect of these "rehab" societies as well as organizations such as the Institute for the Research and Training of the Physically and Mentally Handicapped. This institute was originally started through the Edmonton Foundation for the Mentally Retarded. It developed as an offshoot from the Winnifred Stewart School for the Mentally Retarded. Through participation of the province of Alberta, also grants from the government of Canada, and much private help, this major research and training institution for the physically handicapped was established. I have been there. They do a great deal of printing, monotonous and repetitious work. However, this is exclusively for the training of mentally handicapped persons and so on.

This is a program for the development of human resources. I cannot make a strong enough plea for assistance in respect of this particular type of program. We have all sorts of development programs concerning agricultural land, resources and so on, but what do we actually do for the totality of human resources in this country? We have educational programs, training programs and retraining programs for all those people who are physically and mentally able. But what do we actually do for so many of our mentally handicapped people? At one time these people were locked away in a closet. They were placed in institutions by the thousands to live a vegetable-like existence. Society tolerated these people at a minimum level. It was a shame for a family to have a Mongoloid or retarded child in an institution.

Today we have evolved. I have seen the work done in many parts of Canada and by the Winnifred Stewart School. Mrs. Stewart started this school and received help from many people. Her work has been recognized, and is now a member of the Order of Canada. It is surprising what these people can do. When I was a much younger person I saw Mongoloid children whose potential was absolutely zero. But now that has changed. They now know how to readily answer telephones, do printing and all sorts of work. They are great at swimming and bowling, and can lead almost a normal life. We are just entering on the threshold of, shall we say, the development of our total human resources. Not only have we these people, but also the physically handicapped and the aged persons.

So, I make a plea to the minister. One step was taken in the budget of May 1972, a further step was taken in the budget of February 1973, so now let us explore the remaining areas to see whether, either this minister or someone else, in the next budget will take appropriate steps to clear any hurdles from a tax point of view in respect of the development of our human resources.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the minister one question without really flogging the point. It is in respect of clause 2(6) which provides for the new exemptions for machinery and apparatus, including wire rope, drilling bits and so on for exploration and mining. I should like to ask whether or not the minister knows offhand how much this exemption will mean in terms of lost revenue to the government. I am interested particularly in view of the Ontario government's increase in the sales tax on home fuels.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): $100,000.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-172, to amend the customs tariff, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 12.55 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the House for its co-operation in passing the two prior bills so expeditiously. We are now on the third bill relating to the budgetary matters affecting the 1972 calendar year. Bill C-172 is an act to amend the Customs Tariff.

I think it would be fair to say that the most significant provisions of this bill are those relating to the establishment of a general preferential tariff for imports from developing countries. As I said in my budget speech last May, this measure is Canada's contribution to a global effort to help the developing countries improve their exports to world markets. This broad international initiative, known as the generalized system of preferences, has been endorsed by the United National General Assembly as an important element in the international development strategy for the second United Nations "Development Decade" which began in 1971.

Tariff preferences in favour of developing countries have been under discussion internationally for a number of years, beginning in 1964 at the first United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, UNCTAD. At that time a number of industrialized countries, including Canada and the United States, were not convinced that the creation of tariff preferences was an appropriate way of assisting the industrialization and economic developing countries. It seemed doubtful that the developing countries would obtain much more in the way or real benefits from a new preferential system than they would from continued progress towards trade liberalization on a multilateral or most-favoured-nation basis. Of course, not even the developing countries were under any illusion that tariff preferences would solve all their problems or obviate the need for more conventional forms of development assistance. These countries, and particularly the Group of "77" in UNCTAD, were nevertheless convinced that tariff preferences offered them the best prospects for achieving better access to foreign markets, and hence increased exports and higher standards of living.

The issue became as much a political one as an enonomic one, and by the time of UNCTAD II in 1968, attitudes had changed to the point where the conference was able to reach unanimous agreement, in principle, to the early establishment of a system of generalized, non-reciprocal and non-discriminatory tariff preferences for the manufactured and semi-manufactured exports of the developing countries. The details of the system were left to be worked out at subsequent meetings and indeed it was not until the fall of 1970 that a mutually acceptable system was agreed upon in UNCTAD. The system in fact consists of a number of different preferential schemes, each reflecting the particular circumstances of the individual preference giving country. A common feature, however, is that they all contain safeguard provisions under which the preferential rates can be withdrawn when imports reach certain levels or threaten injury to domestic producers. Most of these preferential schemes have now been implemented, and indeed Canada and the United States are the only countries that have not brought their schemes into force.

● (1410)

The details of Canada's proposed new preferential tariff are set out in Clause 2 of the bill that is now before the House, but perhaps it would be useful if I were to summarize its main features. First, it will provide for lower tariffs on most manufactured and semi-manufactured goods imported from developing countries. Certain primary products are also covered by the scheme but these are for the most part already duty free on a most-favoured-nation basis and so, of course, there is not the same scope for tariff reductions on them. The tariff reductions for industrial goods are spelled out in subsection (1) of proposed new section 3.1 of the Customs Tariff. Hon. members will note that general preferential tariff rates will be set at two thirds of the most-favoured-nation rate or at the level of the present British preferential rate, whichever is lower. This will mean free entry under many tariff items. It also means that the general preferential tariff will go a long way towards eliminating the discrimination that has existed in our tariff treatment of developing countries as between those that are members of the Commonwealth and those that are not.

Second, there will be tariff reductions on a selected list of agricultural products. These are set out in the schedule to subsection (3) of proposed new section 3.1 of the Customs Tariff.

A third feature of the new preferential system is the "safeguard" clause which will authorize the governor in council to withdraw the benefits of the general preferential tariff in particular cases. This will be used to deal with any case where imports at preferential rates cause or threaten market disruption or injury to Canadian producers. It is the government's intention to use this authority to exclude from the preferential system at the outset a limited number of sensitive products—mainly textile products for which we have negotiated export restraints or which have been placed under import control. When the legislation is proclaimed, a complete list of the products to be excluded on this basis will be published by order in council.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Finally, the bill would authorize the governor in council to decide what countries should be considered to be developing countries for purposes of the new preferential system. Final decisions in this regard have still to be taken but, as a general rule, any country, area or territory entitled to MFN or BP tariff treatment which claims to be a developing country and which receives preferences from other preference-giving countries will be eligible under the Canadian scheme. Of course, we know what countries are eligible for the preferential schemes that have already been implemented.

None of the countries that have implemented their schemes has extended the preferences to all the countries that claim to be developing countries and some beneficiary lists are longer than others. Most of the members of the so-called Group of "77" developing countries, who now apparently number 97, are receiving preferences under the schemes that have been implemented and dependent territories are also eligible for several of them. However, there is considerably less unanimity as to whether the preferences should be extended to such countries as Spain, Portugal, Greece, Turkey, Taiwan, Israel, Bulgaria and Roumania, all of which claim developing country status. Japan is the only donor country that has given preferences to all these countries.

It is of course difficult to estimate the volume of trade that will be affected by the Canadian scheme. If the preferences were extended to the 88 countries of the Group of "77" who are entitled to BP or MFN treatment, as well as to dependent territories, it is estimated that there would be tariff reductions on around $160 million worth of imports. This estimate is based on 1971 import statistics and does not, of course, include imports from Commonwealth developing countries under those tariff items where the general preferential tariff rate will be equal to the current BP rate. If this figure appears small, it should be borne in mind that close to 70 per cent of our imports from developing countries are already free of duty.

There are three other amendments I should like to mention at this time. The first relates to two textile items in the schedule to the Bill. The British preferential rate for rubber coated woven cord tire fabric under item 56235-1 is increased from free to the 12½ per cent rate which applies under the most-favoured-nation tariff. The duty on knit goods from Britain is increased from a net rate of 18 per cent to 25 per cent under tariff item 56805-1. Both these proposed increases follow upon the implementation by Britain on January 1, 1972 of increased rates of duty on cotton textiles from Canada. These Canadian goods were previously entitled to free entry. The tariff increases which have been the subject of negotiations with the British government were intended to restore the balance of concessions with Britain.

The second change arises out of a Tariff Board decision in May, 1971 on an appeal relating to tariff item 69605-1. This item provides for free entry of certain goods for the use of religious and educational institutions. As a result of the Tariff Board decision, the coverage of the item was considerably reduced. The amendment to item 69605-1 will restore its scope to approximately what it was formerly.

The third change is also the result of a Tariff Board ruling on an appeal. The Board held that live yeast in granular form should be dutiable at an MFN rate lower than had been levied by the Department of National Revenue under tariff items which provided for "compressed yeast". Representations were received from Canadian producers of yeast stating that the Board's decision would have a serious impact on their operations. On the other hand, it was argued that the previous rates were too high. The proposed item 3600-1 will provide for a 12½ per cent MFN rate on live yeast, irrespective of the form in which it is imported.

Those are the main features in terms of importance of the bill and, certainly, when we come to the clause-by-clause analysis in committee I will be glad to expend upon that.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister having made a fairly detailed explanation of a fairly short customs budgetary amendment, I do not think it is necessary for me to dwell at length on the contents of this bill or on the principles involved in its presentation and consideration. I will repeat what I said when Bill C-171 was considered. It is anti-climactic to deal with this particular bill now. It is 11 months since the budgetary proposals were made. At least half the members of this House have never heard of them, and I suppose most of the others have more or less forgotten what the minister proposed. Actually, I do not suppose anybody in this House outside of a small handful have ever known of a class of tariffs known as General Preferential Tariffs.

The minister indicated that there is to be considerable relief for some of the developing countries. I am not too sure about that suggestion, especially when I look at clause 2 which establishes the general preferential tariff. Subclause (2) of Clause 2 reads in part:

> The following goods are excluded from the application of subsection (1):
> (a) the goods enumerated in any of the tariff items in Groups I, II, III, IV and VI of Schedule A . . .

I have before me most of the customs Tariff and the five groups that come under Schedule A comprise the bulk of the tariff. Some exceptions are noted; one is a classical one. Let me refer to the first one that comes under item No. 1210-1, which appears under Part I. Why we are maintaining tariff protection with regard to this item I do not know. It is listed as "sausage casings, synthetic, of paper" and there is a 10 per cent and 15 per cent tariff on that. Somehow we have decided that we cannot import these types of sausage casings free of charge. We cannot extend to them the benefits of the general preferential tariff. There are other things that appear in the tariff, and I know some are of greater strategical importance than others. One sees, on examining this, that there is a reduction to zero under the general preferential tariff with regard to a number of things that one associates with, shall we say, developing countries. Sometimes Canada, for certain purposes, decides that it is a developing country. In terms of our relationship with the United States and our capital requirements, we seem to think we are a developing country.

● (1420)

The free entry of such things as chicory, pepper, cloves, cinnamon, ginger, spices, and spices, nutmegs and mace, nutmegs and mace ground, ground mustard, rice meal, sago and tapioca, fruits and nuts, preserved ginger and coconut loom very large. They have been reduced to zero. Frankly, that is because the rate that would be left would only be 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent. Even unstemmed and stemmed Turkish tobacco comes in at zero rate under the general preferential tariffs. Be that as it may, we do not have much more to say about these changes. We will have a great deal more to say when we are considering the proposals the minister made in February which will affect the horticultural industry and a number of other industries in this country. The sooner we have that bill before us and are able to discuss and clarify the matter, the better off we will be in this country. I do not know whether the minister puts this measure in the same category as some of the very touchy income tax subjects. At the moment, I think he is handling them with 10 foot or 20 foot poles. Which is it? The minister remains discreetly silent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are 20 foot poles tariff free?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): At the present time, the clarifying items are of very little concern. One point we may hear more about is the adjustment vis-à-vis the British preferential tariff arising out of Britain's entry into the common market and Britain's necessary adjustment within that framework. When Britain removes certain preferential tariffs on Canadian commodities, it is only fair to expect that we will do the same. In many ways, I regret this. Lower rates mean a great deal. While events have changed, in many ways we are being left behind in this move. With Britain joining the European common market, we in Canada are standing aloof.

Reports from Europe indicate that the president of Mexico is having a considerable impact on the common market members in so far as Mexico is concerned in this issue. Mexico is in much the same position as Canada, only on the other side of the United States. However, the North American continent is a particular zone, merely three countries in so far as trading is concerned.

Canada should be endeavouring to present a very high profile in Europe vis-à-vis the common market countries today. No matter how good our ambassadors may be, they are still diplomatic representatives. This calls for the highest possible level of representation by Canadians, perhaps a full fledged policy tour this year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of Canada, whoever he may be. The matter of trade relations with our European counterparts should be very seriously considered. There are no two ways about this; it has to be done. If I were to make this suggestion to the minister, I am sure he would admit that he doubts very much that the Prime Minister of Canada would be received in France with open arms at this stage, but something has to be done. The necessary steps must be taken to remove some of the underbrush, thaw some of the ice that exists and remove some of the slick patches on which people have slipped in the past. In so far as my advice to my leader is concerned, it would be and is that Canada's presence at the very top level must be made in Europe.

This may be a bit removed from customs tariffs, but it is related to our trade relations with our partners. As a result of Britain's entry into the common market, we will be in an unsettled period for five, eight or 10 years. We should not sit in the reeds moaning and groaning or run to London or Paris cap in hand to beg for special consideration for a special position. If it takes the necessary steps at the top level, Canada will be in a position to broaden its trade. We need positive action. No one is going to help us. We have to help ourselves. The only way to do that is to go out and state our case. People in Europe are interested in trading with Canada, not merely for sentimental reasons, and we are interested in trading with them, not just for sentimental reasons, but because it is good for business. It is good for the economies of their country and ours.

That is all I want to say at this stage of the bill. When the next tariff bill is before us, we will have considerably more to say.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, we are very pleased to see a trend toward lower tariffs. It has been a long standing position of our party, that not only Canada, but the world should be moving towards less restricted trade patterns. It is natural that we in this party should be concerned about lower tariffs because of the large contingent of members from British Columbia and Saskatchewan who never cease to remind the caucus of the grievances of the western provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: As Your Honour will notice, a couple of western members have been appointed to keep their eye on me so that I will say the right things.

It is important that a country like Canada move in a direction of freer trade for two reasons. First, we have to be competitive in the world. The sooner we come to grips with competition around the world, the healthier it will be for our economy. Second, from the viewpoint of national unity, we must take into account the grievances of the Canadian west. It is important to have the tariffs removed as expeditiously as possible. For a long time the west has felt that while tariffs may have served to promote the so-called industries of Canada, they have continued long past the point of the infant in swaddling clothes. For those reasons, we are generally in support of the proposals in this bill.

I am particularly glad that our country is taking this position. When we look around in the world, we see that our neighbour to the south is moving in the opposite direction. Every indication is that the United States is going to be more restrictive in terms of its trade pattern rather than less restrictive. While Japan does not operate the tariff system as a restrictive system, the effect is as great or greater than if it had high tariffs. I wish I were as sanguine about the possibility of getting into the European Common Market as is the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The Common Market was set up under conditions which make it very difficult for other countries to participate. In some ways, tariffs are becoming less important than they were as an indicator of the movement of goods. There are other kinds of restriction imposed on the free passage of commodities. For example, in recent years we have seen countries contriving to keep the value of their currency unnaturally low. Today, this is of more significance than tariffs. In Japan, difficulties are obviously put in the way of imports. They are not spelled out, they are not obvious, but somehow or other nobody can meet the right person in order to reach an agreement. So, as we look round the world, despite diminished tariff restrictions there are still many obstacles in the way of the free movement of goods from one country to another.

It is popular at the moment to talk about wage and price controls as a means of reducing prices to the consumer. There is very little evidence to support the contention that this would indeed be the effect. But there is evidence to show that the consumer could be helped by the removal of some of the tariff restrictions which presently exist. This help goes beyond the mere saving of the amount of money which the government forgos by way of revenue. He is helped because goods entering Canada free of tariff produce a situation which calls for competitive action in our own marketplace and helps keep the price of goods produced in Canada at a low level. Thus, excise tax reductions would have a greater effect on prices than some of the suggestions which have been made in favour of wage and price controls.

Having said this, I will admit there are dangers facing us as we lower tariffs—dangers the government should take into account. If the government continues, as in the past, to encourage the export of raw materials, non-renewable resources, energy supplies and so on, it will be doing a terrible disservice to the nation. A reduction in tariffs could become a menace, for if we continue to export large supplies of raw materials and energy resources, and the value of our dollar rises as a consequence, the entire trade pattern of imports into Canada will be distorted. It is, therefore, of enormous importance that, in conjunction with tariff reductions, the government should ration in one way or another the export of raw materials and energy supplies. If this is not done, the value of our dollar will rise and a double threat against our industry will develop. If anything, our dollar is over-valued now, for the very reason that we have exported unfinished goods too extensively. In some ways all this has little to do with tariffs, yet it is a necessary part of state policy if we are to fight the dangers which could flow from tariff reductions. There are benefits attaching to tariff reductions, but there are also dangers.

The proposals now before us may constitute one of the most significant parts of the budget as an indicator of the way this country is going. Tax reductions and exemptions are very important, it is true, and I do not want in any to detract from their importance. But as an indicator of the direction in which Canada is going these tariff reductions are even more important. I hope we shall see continued reductions in tariffs. I also hope the government will take counter action to make sure that the value of our dollar does not rise too high as a result of our exporting unfinished goods.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to the minister's statement on Bill C-172 announcing a reduction in customs tariff that will apply to developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party, I say that we are fully support this bill precisely because while protecting the interests of the producers it will certainly meet the wishes of the consumers in that we have found three ways of helping less fortunate countries.

We can help them by granting them interest-free loans. We do this fairly regularly every year. When those loans are granted through new credits from the Bank of Canada we are very happy because they do not affect the worker, industry, or the consumer; they are merely new credits intended to help developing countries.

Secondly, we help them by granting them interest-free loans on money taken out of the budget of Canada. In that case, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of greater concern to Canadians, because it would mean lending their tax money without interest to developed countries. It is to a good end, but the means are rather coude when you consider what has happened in the last few years. On one occasion, for example, we realized that we did not have enough money to lend to a certain underdeveloped country—which I will not name here, but all hon. members will recognize it. And so we had to borrow $25 million at 8 per cent, to lend to the underdeveloped country without interest for 60 years. That is really smart, Mr. Speaker! But is has happened here, in Parliament: we borrow money abroad for no-interest loans to countries we want to help.

I am very pleased about the hon. minister's announcement this afternoon, because I think that the best way to help the underdeveloped countries is not just to reduce our customs tariffs by two thirds, but to abolish them altogether, so that these countries can trade with ours, to the benefit of the whole of Canada, and especially to that of the consumer.

● (1440)

It is well known that some customs duties double the price of food products coming from those countries. If the consumer could buy imported products at half price, I think he would be very happy about it. When the committee on trends in food prices carried out its study, we observed that high customs barriers were one of the major causes of the high prices of imported foods. They sometimes increase food prices by 20, 25 or 30 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fine opportunity for the minister to abolish them completely, on a trial basis.

The minister says that we can trade with 77 countries. It would be possible to eliminate all customs duties; the minister has announced that they would be reduced by two thirds. I argue that these countries could be exempted from all customs duties on food, fruit, and meat. I shall say a few words about it later on.

I suggest that these would mean a healthy competition for our Canadian producers without doing them any harm. Of course this will not come about. If the consumer does not want any competition on the pretent that we are going to protect our industries and Canadian producers, what will happen to a product unable to be fairly competitive? It is allowed to enter our country, but its price will be doubled or tripled in order to protect producers. But who is paying, Mr. Speaker? It is always the consumer. We are going to protect 100, 125 or 200 people at the expense of 20 million Canadians. It is to this point that I wish to draw the minister's attention and even encourage him to entirely eliminate customs duties in our relations with these countries.

As far as the protection of our industries is concerned, I believe that the list which is proposed here, especially as regards agricultural products, is very reasonable. There may be a few farmers will wonder about. I am referring to canned meat. I cannot say for sure, but I think that most of these products, according to a serious analysis, are not competing with similar Canadian products.

Once more, if the minister allows these products to enter our country, as I said earlier, this will serve the consumers' interests. A little earlier, I heard the previous speaker deal with the British preferential tariff. I do not know to what extent England benefits from the preferential tariff, but as far as I know, England is not an underdeveloped country.

That is why I am trying to find out what countries are involved. There was a mention of Spain, Portugal and so on. The main analysis will be made at this stage and I fail to understand, like the previous speaker, that it is normal to forever extend the preferential tariff to England and never to France.

If it is normal, it is a quite irregular normal thing.

Once again, I do not wish to discuss this further. I only wish to beg the minister to push a little further ahead and not to fear to deal with developping countries. This would be a good occasion for Canada to do something for them and to sell our products. Besides, this will prevent Canada from granting them interest-free loans for a 60-year period, when we have to pay 8 per cent interest on the money used for interest-free loans to them.

[English]

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise in support of the measures that are before us, particularly since these changes in our customs tariff will assist parts of the world that are greatly in need, not simply of material aid but of this kind of help. We have moved to a time in our relationship with the developing countries when we should give priority to trade rather than aid, as understood in the sense that was appropriate a generation ago.

The move the government is making through the proposals in this bill is one that I think will receive support from both sides of the House as well as throughout the country. We are part of one world and we want to express this fact in our economic policies as in other things, particularly at this time when we think of the call of some of our spiritual communions and leaders throughout the country for ten days of development. This is a political measure which I think can be taken as a positive response to that summons. One of the best ways we can help developing countries in the world is by giving those countries the opportunity to trade with those who can be their customers.

But we have to think about another side of the coin as well, and that is the way in which the administration of our customs and tariff policies bear upon Canadian business and Canadian working people. This afternoon I want to focus the attention of the House precisely, though briefly, upon one aspect of this, namely the way in which our so-called duty free stores along the border of Canada are administered. I believe they are administered in ways which are injurious to Canadian business and particularly to the gift industry.

We have several of these duty free stores in Canada, chiefly at international airports though also at two seaports. The way in which these stores are administered prevents the sale of many manufactures, particularly the products of the gift industry. Representations have been made by members of that industry to the government over the year, and at times members of the industry have been persuaded that they were being listened to by the government—I think better listened to than this debate is being listened to by the government. Companies participating in the gift industry have still not seen any positive action or remedies taken by the government. Therefore, I am disappointed that the proposals of the government for tariff and excise reform will not, as far as I can see, make any provision for solving the problem to which I have referred. If we were to open up our duty free stores to Canadian manufacturers, particularly to products of our gift industry, we would be increasing the possibility of their development and increasing job opportunities in Canada, because one of the most labour intensified parts of our economy is the tourist industry. With the gift industry dove-tailing into that, the House can readily see how this could be beneficial in helping to solve our unemployment problems.

I would very earnestly suggest that the government listen with renewed seriousness to the appeal of the gift industry throughout Canada that steps be taken to open up our duty-free shops so more Canadian manufacturers can avail themselves of them. I hope as well that they can be opened at more of our border crossing points; that is the kind of duty-free store to which I have referred. At the present time they are located almost exclusively at international airports, yet there is a tremendous amount of tourist traffic across the border by car, by bus and by railroad.

I think the government would be doing more to help Canadian business, the Canadian economy and working people if it took a positive step in this direction. This is not in contradiction to the kind of ideal to which I referred in my opening remarks, also referred to by the minister. The more we can do to stimulate Canadian business, the more we can do to help strengthen our own economy, the better position we are in to reach out a helping hand to other parts of the world.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. The House in committee on Bill C-172, to amend the customs tariff.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

[Mr. Stackhouse.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 2—General Preferential Tariff.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two only about paragraph (b) appearing at the top of page 6. In dealing with regulations, may I again make a plea that we do not use general terms such as "prescribing anything that is to be prescribed by regulations". Parliament does not give carte blanche. All I can say is that perhaps now with the committee on statutory instruments we will be able to watch this situation much more closely. Frankly, this is merely the tip of the iceberg when provisions are described in that way. I do not know how often this has to be repeated, but the drafters of the administration must come up with something that is less general, less accommodating and less free wheeling than these provisions.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule to Clause 2 which is found on pages 3 and 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Schedule to Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the schedule to Clause 5 as found at pages 8 and 9 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Schedule to Clause 5 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): By leave, now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) for having given me the responsibility of piloting this bill in the House and I wish to assure him that I will do my best to have it passed in the shortest possible time. Mr. Speaker, bills on financing and guarantee were tabled every year with the exception of the 1963 bill which applied to 1962-63 and that of 1966 which applied to 1965-66 as well as this one which applies to 1972-73. Hon. members will remember that the 1971 bill—which included certain provisions for 1971 and 1972—had not been read for the second time when the twenty-eighth Parliament was dissolved. This bill brings back those provisions.

This bill for 1973 is basically the same as those for previous years. It sets out in a concised form the capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railway Company for 1973 as outlined in its capital budget for that year which amounts to $225,500,000. This bill also authorizes the company to make expenditures not exceeding $75 million between January 1 and July 1, 1974 for the purpose of discharging obligations incurred prior to January 1, 1974, and to enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1974 for capital expenditures not exceeding $167,500,000 that become due and payable after 1973. These expenditures and commitments are according to the investment budget of the company for 1973.

The bill aims at fulfilling six major objectives most of whom have already been similarly outlined in the previous bills on financing and guaranteed.

First, the bill includes provisions allowing the Canadian National Railways Company to borrow up to $21 million to finance the construction of sidings. This amount includes the financing of sidings more than 20 miles long whose construction is authorized by a special act, as well as the financing of tracks less than 20 miles long whose construction does not require any authority under a special act. By including all sidings, this provision reflects the intention of taking into account, in the bill on the financing and guarantee, all the funds that the Canadian National Railways Company may require.

Second, the bill provides for the Department of Finance to continue purchasing Canadian National preferred shares bearing interest at 4 per cent during 1972 and until the end of calendar year 1973. This provision perpetuates the practice established by former financing and guarantee, legislation. The 1970 act postponed to December 31, 1971 the expiry date of the authorization granted by the 1952 Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act for the purchase of such shares to the extent of 3 per cent of the company's gross income.

Third, as in former years, the bill authorizes the government to extend temporary advances to Canadian National and Air Canada in order to meet operating income deficit for the period of January 1, 1973 to June 30, 1974. These advances will be reimbursed later on in the year from company income. Should such income prove insufficient, the outstanding balance will be met through deficit appropriation by parliament.

● (1500)

Fourth, the bill contains an option similar to that contained in the 1970 Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act which would enable Air Canada to borrow $140 million during the period January 1, 1973, to June 30, 1974, either directly from Her Majesty or by means of a guaranteed public issue. It would also renew the authority for the Minister of Finance to guarantee debentures amounting to £13 million to be issued in the period May 1, 1972, to December 31, 1976, by Air Canada in accordance with contractual obligations assumed by the airline prior to July 1, 1972.

Fifth, the bill contains a section to increase to $1 billion the limit on the amount of substituted securities that may be issued by the CNR in respect of any refunding pursuant to provisions of the Canadian National Railways Refunding Act, 1955. The financing and guarantee act of 1964 raised that ceiling to $680 million. The further increase of $320 million proposed in this bill would make adequate provision should a decision be taken by the CNR to replace with longer term financing the temporary government loans authorized under section 7 of the 1955 refunding act.

Sixth, and finally, the bill would provide, under section 14, for the appointment of auditors for the years 1972, 1973 and 1974.

[Translation]

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention to a proposal for a change in the policy relative to appointment of auditors.

Since auditing the books of the CNR and Air Canada represents considerable work, the government came to the conclusion that this work should not be entrusted to a single firm of auditors, to the exclusion of all others. The government considers rather that this job should be periodically assigned on a rotation basis to large Canadian auditing firms. Thus new method and approaches would come to bear on the operation of these two companies which, according to the government, would be beneficial for all concerned.

If the policy of rotating auditors were adopted, we should have to study carefully the frequency of the rotation. Evidently, the duration of the assignment should not be too short, because, otherwise, the auditors would hardly have enough time to familiarize themselves with the operations of the company and the intricacies of its accounting system, not to mention the special accounting requirements of the Canadian Transport Commission.

On the other hand, the long-term appointments made in the past covered far too long periods. Consequently, it was agreed that a five to six years' appointment would be an acceptable compromise. the first year and the last year to be overlapping periods during which two auditing firms would be hired. That way, during the overlapping period, the incoming auditor for a new term could progressively take over the work of the outgoing auditor, ensuring the necessary continuity of auditing. Section 14 of the bill deals with that situation.

In conclusion, I should like to add that the government intends, every five or six years, to recommend to parliament rotation of the independent auditors.

[English]

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, once again parliament is faced with a bill which purports to ask parliamentary approval for moneys used in financing Canadian National Railways and Air Canada. Before I come to my main remarks I should like to refer briefly to some of the comments the parliamentary secretary just made. He started by asking that parliament adopt this bill as quickly as possible. When we dig into the bill and the circumstances behind it, I can well understand why the government would like to have it passed as quickly as possible and thereby put an embarrassing piece of legislation where it perhaps belongs, under the rug. I say to the minister there is no real urgency to pass this bill. There was no urgency last year to pass it; the government in effect ignored it. This bill provides for expenditures to the end of June, 1974. Therefore, I for one will not be beguiled by the government's plea of great urgency in respect of passage of this bill.

The government has many questions to answer before we on this side of the House would agree to grant it the amount of money involved in a bill such as this. I have not totalled the amounts but I believe they run close to $1 billion. I know $1 billion does not mean much to the government, but in talking of an amount of money of this size I feel it is incumbent on the opposition to examine very closely what kind of monkeyshine has been going on here.

The parliamentary secretary said this bill takes up where the last one left off. We know better than that. It does not take up where the last one left off. The last bill of this kind which passed through this House was the 1970 financing bill. That is the only piece of legislation we have had. Certainly this bill does not take up where that one left off. As a matter of fact, it does not even take up where the aborted Bill C-4 left off, because there is a six months' lapse there which is not included in this bill.

When I first looked at Bill C-164, my immediate reaction was that it was the usual financing bill with the same old wording, and there were no changes except perhaps slight ones in respect of the amounts required. I read the bill through and could not find too many changes until I went back to the preamble. Suddenly the meat of the whole thing struck me. It is in the preamble, which say that Bill C-164 is—

An act to authorize the provision of moneys . . . for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974—

My first reaction on reading those words was that obviously there was a misprint, that it must be intended to be from the 1st day of January, 1971. However, I checked the bill throughout and found that in every place where there was any reference to dates, the same dates appeared. Obviously, the government's drafters are not so stupid as to have made such drafting errors; therefore, the government is asking us now to approve appropriations for the CNR when for the last two years, we have not approved any.

[Mr. Comtois.]

In my remarks last year on Bill C-4 I described the debate on that bill as an exercise in futility. Had I known then what was going to happen, I would have used much stronger language. This is much more than an exercise in futility. It is a downright, deliberate degradation of the rights of parliament to bring in such a bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I think the government wants to forget about Bill C-4, but I do not believe we can discuss Bill C-164 properly unless we discuss it in the context of Bill C-4. Bill C-4 was never enacted. It was introduced in the last session of the last parliament. It was entitled "Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act, 1971". It is rather interesting that the parliamentary secretary made only a casual, fleeting reference to Bill C-4, but he dealt at length with the financing bill of 1970. He probably did that because the financing bill of 1970 was the last bill to give this government any right to appropriate moneys.

Ever since parliament passed that bill, the government has either been breaking the law or circumventing it in such a way as to destroy the rights of parliament to control the spending of money. Whether this was a deliberate attempt to have the cabinet gradually take over all control of spending, or whether it was just a continuation of the slipshod handling of legislation which we saw in the last parliament, is not for me to judge. But the fact remains that this government is continuing the practice which was developed in the last parliament and continued now in many areas. It is an attempt to take away the control of money bills from parliament, where such control rightly belong, and give it to the government and treasury board.

This bill is a crude attempt to fool us into believing that the control of the purse-strings still rests with us. It is a crude attempt to hide the fact that this government is deliberately eroding the right of parliament to control moneys. It is a desperate attempt to camouflage what has been going on ever since this government came into office. There are many examples of this type of action that I could refer to, but I will not go into them now. They have been the subject of debate in this House. My colleague, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has mentioned some of them.

I should like to refer briefly to glaring examples of the type of procedure this government is following. One, of course, is the famous Polymer fiasco where the government asked parliament to give approval to action which they had taken without even letting parliament see the annual report or the audited statements of the company in question. It was interesting to hear the minister state at the time that since Polymer was losing money, the government would bail it out. But it was much more interesting shortly thereafter, when the audited statements of Polymer came out, to see that instead of losing money the company was showing an increase in profit.

The second glaring example was the horrible fiasco created in the Unemployment Insurance Commission's accounts. We all know what happened there and I will not dwell on it. I have spoken on it before. Here, again, is a deliberate attempt by the government to do by subterfuge what they could not do by law. This bill wants us to approve expenditures past and future for two Crown corporations, and in neither case do we have either an audited statement or an annual report.

Some hon. members are businessmen and a good many of them are lawyers. I ask them a simple question: What would happen if they, as directors of or legal advisers to corporations, were faced with a request from the board of directors to appropriate, say, $1 million dollars and they were not given an annual report as to what had happened the year before, or an audited statement? This government asks us to do something we certainly would not do in our own businesses. We are being asked now to approve a large amount of money for these two corporations, but we have neither their annual report nor their audited statements. We do not know what has been done with the money that was granted previously.

After I read the preamble to this bill I wondered what had happened in the two previous years. If these companies need the money to operate—and we know the government always had to bail both of them out so they could at least meet their loan payments—where did they get the money with which to operate? As I remember, in other years we were told the same as we were told today, that there was a great deal of urgency and that if we did not pass the bill the CNR would not be able to meet their payroll, would not be able to buy new equipment, and Air Canada would not be able to buy new aircraft. We were told we had to pass the bill otherwise the wheels of these two great corporations would stop turning.

Therefore I began to investigate where these two corporations got the money to keep them going in 1971 and 1972. This is why I went back to Bill C-4 and reviewed what had happened. Bill C-4 covered the financing period from January 1, 1971, to June 30, 1972. The summary of events is very interesting in light of recent statements by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others on the government side that the opposition has been holding up the business of the House. Here is a classic example of a government with an absolute majority which nevertheless refused to bring in legislation, for what reason we do not know. They refused to allow the legislation to proceed through to passage. When you read the history, it seems there was something about which the government were so embarrassed that they did not dare bring the bill back.

The bill received first reading on February 21, 1972. It came back for second reading on March 6, 1972. On April 21 the debate on second reading was adjourned. The government never again brought the bill before parliament during the life of the last parliament. The annual report and audited statements of the CNR were not tabled by the then minister of transport until May 11. This may be just a coincidence, but it was after the government had cut off proceedings on April 21.

The Air Canada report and audit were tabled only on April 17, four days before the bill died effectively on the order paper. On June 21 the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), as reported at page 3348 of Hansard, asked the then minister of transport to have the government refer these two reports of CN and Air Canada to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The minister replied that such action was for the government House leader to determine, but that he had no objection. The government never made any reference to the committee. This was a bill, we were told at that time—just as we are told today about Bill C-164—that was a matter of some urgency, and we would have to get the bill through the House or these two Crown agencies could not operate because their funds would dry up. But that bill died at the end of that session.

In this session, Bill C-164 was introduced on March 19 of this year. This bill, as the parliamentary secretary has outlined, relates to the financing period from January 1, 1973, to June 30, 1974. I emphasize those dates because they carry a great deal of significance. The only retroactive provision with respect to the year 1972 appears to be in clause 13, but this is not clarified in the explanatory note. I will deal with clause 13 a little later in my remarks, but I would point out to the House now that it has to do with the appointment of auditors. I have been involved in business a little, Mr. Speaker, and never have I heard a board of directors ask for the appointment of auditors after the year has elapsed. The normal thing is to appoint auditors before the year begins. Here we are being asked to appoint them retroactively to January 1, 1972.

With all this time lapse, we have had no bill on CNR financing since the 1970 bill was passed; and the government has not yet tabled the annual report and audit of the CN for 1972. This is why I want to refer to clause 13. Maybe there is a reason for that. Who were the auditors? By what authority did they act? Maybe this is why we cannot get the CN annual report. The annual report and audit of the CN have not been tabled here, but the government did table the CN operating and capital budgets for the calendar year 1972. However, this was done only on February 28, 1973, although the government had approved these budgets on August 28, 1972, by order in council P.C. 1972/1865.

What is the situation with respect to the present bill? We have a period covering CNR and Air Canada financing from January 1, 1971, to June 30, 1974—three and a half years—with a six months' hiatus that extends from July 1, 1972, to December 31, 1972, that was covered in the previous bill. I am not saying that is included in this bill; I am saying that in that three and a half years period there is six months from January 1, 1971, to June 30, 1972, in which apparently nothing happened. It was included in the previous bill, but then there is another six-month period from July, 1972, to December, 1972, that does not appear anywhere. It was not in the old bill and it is not in this bill.

Where did the CN and Air Canada get their money during that six-month period? Personally, I am not going to heed the parliamentary secretary's appeal to rush this bill through the House, because I want answers to these questions. Again the House is asked to consider Bill C-164 with a gun held to its head by the government because approval of this bill is approval, in part, of capital and operating expenditures of public funds which have already been spent or committed without approval of parliament.

If it was not obvious before, it is now clear beyond doubt that the annual CNR financing bill is an exercise in futility, a waste of time and an affront to the House. It is also obvious that the financial affairs of the CNR and Air Canada are controlled by the government, and by the government alone. The annual financing bill is simply a mockery to delude the public and its representatives in this House that they control the public's two greatest and most vital public utilities. Anybody who has sat on committees and spoken to officials of Air Canada and CNR has sensed the feeling of smug superiority and contempt that they hold for parliament because they know we have no power.

It does not matter how much we cry or beg, the decisions, legal or otherwise, are made by the government. This is what is taking place. Presumably the key to the government's financial control is contained in section 30 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter C-10 of the 1970 Revised Statutes, and the Air Canada Act, chapter A-11 of the 1970 Revised Statutes. Section 30 of the CNR act provides:

the National company may also borrow upon its notes or securities or the notes or securities of any such other company—

That is, any other company comprised in the CNR system.

—whether for its own benefit or for the benefit of such other company or otherwise.

In section 13(3) of the Air Canada Act there is provision that the CNR may lend money to Air Canada. There was something interesting about this that I suddenly discovered on reading the auditor's report to parliament for the year ended December 31, 1971. It was an item under the heading "Long-term Debt." On January 1, 1972, a $100 million debenture matured and a promissory note in the same amount was issued to the Minister of Finance to pay for it. When I read that I started to wonder what kind of financing was taking place. It seemed the CNR needed $100 million to retire these debentures held by the government so it said to the government, "We will give you a promissory note for $100 million." We have no way of knowing about this until we see the annual report and audited statements of the CNR.

In essence, the CNR has only to give the government a promissory note for whatever hundred of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money that it wants; and if Air Canada wants money also, it can include that sum in the amount on the face of the promissory note. The result is that the government gains control over the operations of CNR and Air Canada. The real board of directors of both corporations then becomes the cabinet. And, of course, that cabinet control is immeasurably strengthened when the president of the Canadian Transport Commission is invariably a former member of the government. It goes right down the line and you cannot get away from it. But what does the CNR act say about budgets? Section 37(1) reads as follows:

The annual budget of National Railways shall be under the control of the board of directors and shall be submitted by the board of directors to the Minister of Transport.

(2) The Minister of Transport shall annually lay before parliament the budget of National Railways approved by the governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance.

(3) The annual budget of National Railways shall include estimates of the amounts required

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

(a) for income deficits,

(b) for capital expenditures,

(c) for refunding or retirement of maturing securities, and

(d) for additional working capital.

I suppose the government can say that it fulfilled this provision, that it laid the budget on the table of this House. But there it died. Parliament had nothing to do about either refusing or giving consent to these expenditures of moneys which amount to some $1 billion every year.

● (1530)

Considering these facts, one cannot help wondering at the realistic cynicism of the government in deliberately letting the CNR financing bill die on the order paper in the last parliament, in withholding the annual report while the second reading debate was going on in this House, in refusing to refer the reports of CNR and Air Canada to the appropriate committee of this House, and in perpetuating this empty farce of presenting a bill before the House for second reading while withholding from the House the 1972 annual report and audited statements of both corporations.

What does the Railway Act say about the annual report? Section 39(1) of the Railway Act provides:

The board of directors shall make a report annually to parliament setting forth the results of their operations—

And so on. It goes on to say what they shall do. They are to set forth—

—the results of their operations, the amounts expended on capital account in respect of National Railways and such other information as appears to them to be of public interest or necessary for the information of parliament with relation to any situation existing at the time of such report.

No matter how you read that section, there is a definite commitment on cabinet and on the board of directors of the company to submit these reports to parliament for approval. This the government has refused to do. That shows contempt for parliament and contempt for the people of Canada. The government has made only one mistake—perhaps I wrong the government; perhaps it is not a mistake—it has shown contempt for the laws of Canada as enacted by parliament. Section 38(1) of the act provides:

A continuous audit of the accounts of National Railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by Parliament who shall annually report to parliament in respect of their audit.

The same provision is made in section 12 of the Air Canada Act with respect to Air Canada. It provides:

The accounts and financial transactions of the corporation shall be audited by the auditor appointed by parliament—

Then come these significant words:

—to audit the accounts of the Canadian National Railways.

The law, as written by parliament, stipulates that the CNR auditors and, necessarily, those of Air Canada must be appointed each year by parliament. Let us go back to clause 13.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Clause 14.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Clause 14; I am sorry. The number is immaterial; it is the government's actions that disturb us. In the financing bill of last year, a little clause was sneaked in which provided that the firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., of the city of Toronto, be appointed as independent auditors to make a continuous audit of the accounts for the year 1972. I ask, how was an audit carried out? Has an audit been carried out, and what happened?

An hon. Member: Were the auditors paid?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I imagine they were paid.

An hon. Member: How were they paid?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Well, perhaps these promissory notes mean something.

An hon. Member: Should they be paid?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): That may be more to the point. Should the government be allowed to get away with this skulduggery? The law, as written by parliament, spells out that a firm of auditors must be appointed each year by parliament. The government paid no heed to that; they did not lay the legislation before us in that regard. Their refusal so to do shows their arrogance, their contempt for this House and for the people of Canada. Further, they show contempt for the board of directors of Air Canada and the board of directors of Canadian National Railways. The government asks us to pass the bill before us as quickly as possible; I am beginning to understand why it wants it passed without discussion.

In clause 14(2) of the present bill we find this language:

For the purpose of carrying out the audit described in subsection (1), the following firms of chartered acccounts are appointed as independent auditors:

Get this, Mr. Speaker:

(a) for the year 1972, the firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., of the cities of Toronto and Montreal—

I ask, what kind of business practice do we see here, in which directors go to the shareholders and ask them to appoint auditors retroactively? What continuing records are to be used? Where are the auditors to start? Where are they to find the necessary records? As I say, how are they to make an audit? Is that why there is no CNR Annual report and no audited statement? That is what I have asked myself, and I have not found the answer. I hope answers will be forthcoming, for the government's sake. It compounds the confusion and the crime by saying, "Oh, but we have discovered an answer. We will tell parliament that the system of appointing the same auditors year after year is not a good one; we have to spread the business around a little." I am not implying why it would want to spread the business around; I do not know.

An hon. Member: Perhaps Ben has something to do with it.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): The government appointed one firm of auditors for last year, it has appointed two firms for this year, and another firm for 1974.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It appointed both firms for 1973, and one of them for 1974.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I see that the firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. is appointed for 1972 and also for 1973, and in 1974 the firm of Cooper & Lybrand is appointed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising to declare his personal interest?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a personal interest in hearing the hon. member tell the House precisely what is in the clause to which he is referring. He will note that for 1973 two firms of auditors are named; there is one firm named for 1972, and one firm named for 1974.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I am sorry; I did not quite hear what the hon. member said. I will not embarrass the government any more. How far can you go in heaping ridicule on their heads? Here we have one firm appointed for 1972. That firm, with another firm, has been appointed for 1973. From the way this government has been extorting revenue from the taxpayer, I suppose it can afford to hire three or four firms, although I do not think that we as members of the House should authorize it.

I think I have made the point I have been trying to make. Normally, in debates such as this people talk about the debts of the CNR. It seems that the debts of Air Canada are almost in the same category as those of the CNR because many of the things you can say about the operation of the CNR can be applied to the operation of Air Canada. If I had time to make further remarks I would make it clear that I am not as critical of the CNR and Air Canada as I am of the government which refuses to enunciate and formulate a national transportation policy year after year. I raised this subject last year with the president of Air Canada and he complained bitterly that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) would not tell him on what basis the airline should be operated, whether in the public interest or for profit. I was interested to read a report in the Financial Post to the effect that Mr. Pratt, who I believe was chairman of the board, was waiting for the minister to take action, and now he is at the point of throwing up his hands and taking off for sunnier climes.

I have said some of the things I wanted to say. I know that my colleagues will not neglect the CNR in this debate; neither will they ignore Air Canada, the company which is rapidly taking over the position of CNR and which may be instrumental in getting CNR off the hook. Air Canada seems to be doing its best to downgrade service in the field of passenger accommodation, in service in the air and on the ground, and is reducing flights to the minimum permissible. It is doing its best to get the CNR off the hook. I believe that my colleagues and others who will follow me in the debate will express somewhat less than satisfaction with the operations of CN and Air Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And the CPR.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): My final remarks are these. Despite the government's urging us to pass this bill as quickly as possible, so that we will not find out what is in it, I say that so far as I am concerned I will be happy to consider the bill in committee where we can call witnesses and receive answers to our questions. Until we get those answers I will not be prepared to heed the urging of the parliamentary secretary to process this bill through the House as quickly as possible.

● (1540)

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I participate in this debate because of the significance of this financing bill in terms of the operations of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, the spending in terms of the overall effect of transportation in this country, how it affects many regions, particularly the west and the Maritimes and how important transportation is to the development of a strong Canadian nation.

The hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) raised a number of questions of great interest. They can be summed up by asking the parliamentary secretary, or possibly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), one simple question: How did CNR and Air Canada do their financing in 1971 and 1972? That seems to sum up the remarks of the hon. member for Moncton which I believe to be appropriate.

When this bill comes before parliament it gives members an opportunity to review the question of transportation as it affects this country from one end to the other. I hope that members of the government will espouse and outline some aspects of the policy that is needed in the area of national transportation. Further to this, so many ministers of the Crown have their fingers in the pie of transportation that if we were to try to load them all on a streetcar, we would have to hire an additional one to carry them.

I hope the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board will outline how the Canada Grains Council is operating and who is financing it. I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) will outline his area of jurisdiction and tell us what changes we can expect in the area of freight rates and in developing a co-ordinated transportation policy. Also, I hope he will outline the policy related to the development of harbours at the port of Churchill and other places.

The Minister of Finance, who moves this bill every year, ought to outline some of the changes in financing the CNR and Air Canada, and with regard to the CNR debt which occurred as a result of buying-out the Mackenzie and Mann railway, thus getting a private interest out of hock, in the early twenties. The Canadian people have been paying for it ever since.

I hope that within the confines of this debate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) will reflect upon the pension situation of retired railroaders and the question of collective agreements which date back to 1956. Perhaps he has an opinion on this matter and will use his good offices to try to bring about an improvement in the situation of retired railroad pensioners.

Debate on the financing of CNR and Air Canada is an annual event. During these debates there is considerable objection raised to certain aspects of the national transportation policy or the fact that one does not seem to exist. The Minister of Transport was formerly in charge of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I am sure he is well aware of the problems of developing those regions in this country which are at an economic disadvantage in relation to the golden horseshoe of Ontario. As he was formerly in charge of DREE, he should be aware of the effect of freight rates in terms of the kind of growth that is needed in the west, in the Maritimes and in northern Ontario.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) sat for several years as minister of transport. He ought to be aware of the effect of freight rates and transportation upon regional development. These two ministers should be able to co-ordinate a program to alleviate the difficulties in terms of developing a program to end regional disparity. With their vast experience, they should be able to come up with a policy that has some teeth in it to develop the various regions of this country on a basis equal to the golden horseshoe of Ontario.

I wish to deal with a number of points which are significant to this bill. As stated previously by my colleagues, the whole question of allocating certain moneys in relation to the CNR debt, which relates back to the time the Mackenzie and Mann railroad was purchased to get Liberal promoters and developers off the hook, needs revision. There was some change in the relationship of the debt several years ago. There is further need to take this debt off the back of Canadian National Railways. I hope the government will give consideration to this question within the realm of this bill.

Some things are very aggravating to those of us who come from western Canada, northern Ontario and the Maritimes. I refer to the national transportation policy and the disgusting inequity in the freight rates structure. There is no greater burden on western development than the freight rates structure which was initially set up to protect the developing manufacturing industries in southern Ontario. That freight rates structure has been with us ever since. We have lived with the burden of freight rates at the same time as we have lived with the burden of tariffs.

In the Speech from the Throne the government outlined its concern for meeting the discrimination against western Canada in the area of transportation. They have set up a western premiers' conference for July to deal with western economic problems. One fundamental question they must tackle is that of freight rates. I wish to quote some figures to indicate how freight rates affect western Canada. I first wish to deal with commodities purchased from the east. On goods shipped from Contrecoeur, Quebec, to Vancouver, the revenue for the railroads is $1.02 per ton-mile. If the same commodity is shipped to Regina, the revenue per ton-mile is $2.55. On goods shipped from Quebec to Saskatoon, the revenue per ton-mile is $2.59.

Looking at the other side, the rail revenue per ton-mile for eastern steel products terminating at Vancouver is $1.02. The rail revenue per ton-mile to Regina is $2.55. There is a 150 per cent increase in revenue for goods moving to Regina compared with those being moved to Vancouver. In relation to Saskatoon, the increase amounts to 154 per cent. At this point I would refer to an editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail of April 11 on the question of western freight rates. This is a further example of the discrimination we face. It reads:

● (1550)

Rapeseed, which is grown in Alberta, can be shipped raw from Lethbridge to Montreal for 81 cents per 100 lbs; but if it is processed into oil and meal it cost $1.22 per hundred pounds to ship the product to Montreal. Alberta would like to know if there is a cost relationship between the differing rates for the raw and processed product—which it suspects there isn't—or if the railways are setting industrial policy through their rates. The railways refuse to give any cost-relationship information. All this has so annoyed Alberta that it has produced its own transportation policy, covering air—international as well as domestic—highway and rail.

Similar moves have taken place in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. If we are really concerned about national unity, certain important elements in our economic make-up must be fundamentally changed. One of these is freight rates. In the constituency of Assiniboia, with which I am most familiar, we ship our basic commodity, wheat, by rail. Branch lines were built to provide this service. Out of all the rail lines in the constituency, 605 miles of track are scheduled for abandonment by the CN or by the CP. Situated along those lines is elevator capacity sufficient to hold 11.5 million bushels of grain. These elevators are to be closed down. In past years, an average of 22.5 million bushels of grain has been carried over those tracks. In future, this grain would have to be moved by truck. More than 5,100 producers in the constituency would be affected by the removal of these tracks. Every dirt road and municipal road would be affected. Tax losses to municipalities would amount to between 50 and 60 per cent of their total revenue.

The bill before us offers an opportunity to deal with the question of national transportation policy. If the government allows the wholesale abandonment of rail lines in western Canada, it will be carrying an enormous burden of responsibility. I draw attention to the fact that producers living near those lines have been offered no concrete alternative means of moving their grain. We are hopeful that in the course of this debate the minister will be able to give us an undertaking that the final decision to abandon these lines will be deferred beyond the 1975 date originally determined. Certainly, there is the odd branch line which may have to be shut down. I wish hon. members could see a map of my constituency. If these lines are shut down, there will be hardly any left; it will create a gap some 50 miles by 75 miles in extent in the middle of the riding. This is where the greatest burden will fall if services are discontinued in a wholesale manner.

I see I have only about one minute left, and there are a number of questions which I intend to address to the minister and which, I trust, will be answered. If I might be allowed to call it four o'clock, I shall continue next week.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether there is a minister present who can confirm that we shall be continuing this debate on Monday and tell us what item is to follow.

Mr. Drury: In the ordinary course of events we would be continuing this discussion, but whether we continue or not on Monday will depend to some extent on the probable length of the debate. Over the weekend we shall try to discover what the possibilities are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I believe that on April 10 there was agreement that the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) would be brought forward today. We are prepared to debate that bill. It would require an order of the House to change the subject matter for the day from notices of motions to private members' public bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE THAT REPRESENTATIVE OF MUNICIPALITIES SERVE ON NANAIMO HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) moved that Bill C-21, to amend the Harbour Commissions Act (Nanaimo Harbour Commission) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to move that Bill C-21 be given second reading and sent to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, I have two purposes in mind. The first is to provide for local representation on the Nanaimo Harbour Commission. Section 4(1) of the Harbour Commissions Act provides that a harbour commission shall consist of not less than three and not more than five members. Section 5(1) provides that there shall be one representative from the local municipality and, if there is more than one local municipality, that a second representative shall be on the commission.

● (1600)

In the case of the Nanaimo Harbour Commission there are only three commissioners, two appointed by the governor in council and one by the city of Nanaimo. The two representatives appointed by the governor in council are the chairman and a second member who is also the solicitor for the commission. But there is no representative from the adjoining municipalities, despite the fact that the act provides for this.

The provision of the bill which I am now asking the House to approve and to send to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications asks that it be made mandatory to have five members on the Nanaimo Harbour Commission, three of whom would be appointed by the governor in council, one to be appointed by the city of Nanaimo and one by the regional district board.

Some hon. members may ask, why this insistence upon local representation on the harbour commission? I suggest that there can be no intelligent planning of harbour facilities unless the local authorities have an effective voice in determining the course to be followed, the location of streets and access roads, the effect upon the shoreline of any expansion of the harbour facilities, and in the matter of traffic control. All of these are of direct concern to the local authorities. Therefore, unless the harbour commission works in conjunction with the elected representatives of the local council, the result will be chaos.

There has been an example of this kind of lack of consultation and co-ordination in the Nanaimo harbour commission's operations recently. In March of last year the Nanaimo harbour commission made public a program costing some $10 million for a large extension of the harbour facilities. After this program had been announced, the city of Nanaimo's advisory planning commission looked into the matter and registered their objection to the location. The regional district board also looked into this matter and expressed their dissatisfaction with the location. Groups of interested citizens, for a variety of reasons, also expressed their opposition to the location that had been selected and some of the Indians of No. 1 Indian reserve were quite upset about the proposals.

In addition to that, the Department of the Environment expressed some concern. Some of the departmental officials stated in correspondence which I have that they had not been consulted. I have no way of knowing whether or not that is true, but the department and certain conservation groups were disturbed about the fact that the extension of the harbour facilities was going to block off part of the estuary of the Nanaimo River. The department was also concerned about dredging and backfilling and the effect this would have on marine and wildlife in the area.

The result was that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) managed to get a stay of proceedings and appointed a task force to look into this matter. I am not familiar with the report of the task force, but I do know that as a result of its report the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) referred the whole matter to the Canada Ports and Harbours Planning Committee. I commend the minister for agreeing to have this committee hold public hearings in the city of Nanaimo on January 25, at which time various groups expressed their opinions. I think it is safe to say, having looked over the briefs, that the majority of them thought this matter should be investigated further.

I have a press release dated April 10 in which the Minister of Transport said that as a result of the report of the planning committee he has decided to accept their recommendation for an in-depth study of this harbour development. It is expected that this study, which will be conducted by specialists from the Department of Transport, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Urban Affairs and the Department of Public Works, will report before the end of this year.

I cite these facts, Mr. Speaker, in order to point out that lack of co-ordination and consultation prior to a project being launched can cause a great deal of difficulty in a community. It seems to me that there is need for making mandatory provision that there be adequate representation on the Nanaimo Harbour Commission—and I think this ought to apply to all commissions—from local governing bodies. This is why I have introduced Bill C-21.

My second reason for introducing this bill is that I hope the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will give some thought to making recommendations to the Minister of Transport regarding a complete revision of the Harbour Commissions Act. In the years that I have been in this House, I have noted that members with ports in their constituencies have repeatedly expressed dissatisfaction with the Harbour Commissions Act as being archaic and undemocratic. Successive ministers of transport have said that new legislation was being considered, but so far nothing has been done to correct a situation that in my opinion is becoming intolerable.

I have a press release dated March 27, issued by the Minister of Transport, in which he says that the National Ports Council has been asked to make recommendations regarding a revision of the Harbour Commissions Act. That is perfectly proper. These men have the expertise to deal with the technical and engineering aspects of the ports. But engineering is only part of the problem; the people of the community and those planning the affairs of the community are equally important.

I hope the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will take a look at the whole act to see whether or not there is provision in it for co-ordinated effort between the different departments of government, local authorities and harbour commissions.

I am not finding fault with any particular harbour commission or with any particular group of men. What I am saying is that there is a deficiency in the act itself in that there is failure to provide the machinery for adequate consultation and co-ordination.

● (1610)

The establishment of port authorities has grown up like Topsy—small bodies of men clothed with immense power and responsibility, controlled only by the Minister of Transport. These commissions have the power to buy, sell or lease property. They have power to expropriate land and borrow money, only subject to the approval of the Minister of Transport. Each harbour commission proceeds in its own way. Some do better than others, but they have autocratic powers which are at variance with the whole principle of participatory democracy.

The Harbour Commissions Act sets up little autocracies with wide powers subject only to the government granting them funds for capital expansion and guidelines set forth by the Minister of Transport through regulations. Otherwise they can proceed to carry out developments which may be good or bad, which may coincide with local planning authorities or conflict with them. I submit that no other group has such sweeping powers.

There is no provision for co-ordination with other departments of government. The government has very wisely, but belatedly, set up the Canada Ports and Harbours Planning Committee, but this only provides for an input by federal departments and their agencies. It does nothing to ensure joint planning and consultation with local authorities.

I suggest that not only local authorities but local people have a right to be consulted if the harbour commission is proposing extensive projects which could have far reaching effects upon the community. The right to know and be heard is fundamental to democratic government. This act ought to provide for public hearings so that citizens' groups will be able to place their views before the harbour commission, not after the plans are completed and the project is begun but in the planning stage and before final decisions have been made.

At the present time the harbour commissions, provincial governments and local governing bodies are all making plans concerning the same people and the same areas; there is no provision in the legislation to provide joint planning and full consultation between the three levels of government. The Minister of Transport cannot be expected to supervise all these harbour commissions adequately. His department receives their applications for capital funds to extend harbour facilities, and if his officials are satisfied as to the need for expansion and the engineering feasibility of the project, it is approved—without any meaningful input by the people most vitally affected, namely, the people who live in the immediate vicinity of the port.

I submit, Sir, that the day is past when the public will stand for this kind of arbitrary administration of their affairs. From the government's own standpoint it should welcome the participation and co-operation of the local governing bodies and interested citizens' groups. By requiring full disclosure of information and by permitting an input from the people most concerned, the government will get better plans and more co-ordinated projects. At the same time, this will make for finer communities and more satisfied citizens.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to pass this motion and give second reading to Bill C-21, in the hope that it will provide for local representation on the Nanaimo Harbour Commission. I would urge that as an ancillary benefit the committee give some thought to making recommendations to the minister for a general review of the Harbour Commissions Act so that the legislation will help to promote better co-ordination, better consultation and a more democratic way of carrying on the business of operating harbours in Canada.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate rather belatedly, but I am delighted to support the proposals in this measure put forward by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), my neighbour to the north.

In this day of growing government and government involvement more and more in the private affairs of people, it seems to me there is an increasing need to broaden representation on commissions such as the one at issue at the moment. The basis of the amendment proposed by the hon. member is to increase the number of commissioners from three to five. He has suggested a number of amendments to the act which I think are most appropriate.

There is no harbour commission within my constituency, but there is one in the neighbouring constituency to the south, the riding of Victoria. There is, of course, a harbour commission in that city with powers which extend to the inner harbour. I have had some experience with smaller harbours within my constituency and know something of the problems encountered by the municipality and people living in the area. First of all, and this happened only about a month ago, an attempt was made by the municipality in which the harbour, or bay, was located to conclude a lease over a wharf in the harbour to be used for multiple purposes. Basically, it is a federal wharf. This question involves the Government Harbours and Piers Act because these are related acts. This is a government wharf provided for the community. Many people living in the community of Sidney, at the north end of the Saanich peninsula, are fishermen; but in that area there is also a great tourist industry.

We receive many sports craft from Vancouver, from further up the inland passage and, of course, from our neighbour to the south, coming up through Puget Sound, the Strait of Georgia, Hecate Strait and beyond. Frequently they occupy wharf space in this area. The municipality was anxious to ensure that prime space at this wharf was accorded those who live in the community and for whom this facility had been provided.

The community ran up against a snag in concluding the lease, in not being sure that the wharf engineer, who is appointed by the Minister of Transport, had the power to conclude the lease or whether he just had the power to collect the parking fees, if you like, at the wharf. They wanted more than that; they wanted to apply more regulations than were actually applied and they wanted to be sure that the wharf engineer would have the power to apply them.

I believe it was a question of misunderstanding, which I was able to help clear up. Now I believe it will work satisfactorily. The fishermen who live in that area will have the pride of having representation on the board. The sportsmen in the area will be able to come to the wharf. They must pay their fees. I gather the fees previously had been collected rather indefinitely for a time. This emphasizes to everybody in that small inlet the need even for fishermen, perhaps, to be represented on commissions in the case of a fishermen's harbour.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) mentioned environmentalists. It seems to me that the act he criticized, I suppose just through the passage of time, has failed to take into account some of the new interests and concerns of the Canadian people. When fishermen or sportsmen come alongside, there is a tendency to pump out the bilges of their boats and to throw out their garbage. This should not occur. The commission should have the power to prevent it occurring.

It seems to me there is a real problem and there should be on the board the representative of an environmental interest, be it a local representative of the Department of the Environment or a local body concerned with the environment, to ensure that the law is properly observed and that the harbour is kept in proper order and clean for the public. Perhaps one of the members should be drawn from marina operators, sportsmen or harbour people, depending on the use to which the particular harbour, bay or wharf is devoted.

Sometimes representatives of tourism, if you like, representatives of fishermen and of environmental interests have their part to play in the commissions which are established. I note, for example, that the law as it now stands makes provision for the council to have a representative on the commission. I quite agree that the citizens of these communities ought to be represented. However, there is also the question of functional representation about which I have made a plea.

There is another example in an area which to some extent is a boundary link between my constituency and the constituency of Victoria. It is known in Victoria as "the gorge". It is a long, deep inlet of the sea. It is subject to the tides. It brings pollution from the sea into the narrows. There is a narrows through which one must travel; it is barely half the width of this room. There was a time when people could swim in the gorge. That time has now passed. I have asked people why it is that they no longer swim there. The obvious answer is, because of pollution from industries that have been established around the port of Victoria. This matter is being dealt with. The municipality and the harbour commission are working hand in hand, sometimes in the same direction and sometimes in conflict.

I agree that there should be greater provision in the act for regular consultation and also community consultation. The other matter in respect of the gorge is that some of the effluent is carried out to sea. The people who towed me through the gorge are a constituted group concerned with restoring the gorge to its earlier purity. People of this type would be happy to serve on the commission. They told me about the conflict in respect of jurisdiction between the province, the municipality and the federal authorities. How far up into the gorge does the federal authority extend? This has never been very clear. Should the day ever come when Esquimalt harbour could receive civil ships, it would deserve to come under a jurisdiction with the broadest possible base of consultation. Today, however, it is under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence.

I am happy, Mr. Speaker, to support the purpose of the bill to increase the number of commissioners on the Nanaimo Harbour Commission, because it leads the way to further developments, to another study of the basic act so that it might be broadened to take into account the new interests, the new concerns and the new worries of our people.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I should like, through you, to say it is always a pleasure to listen to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). I agree wholeheartedly with the comments he made pertaining to possible amendments to the Harbour Commissions Act. I believe this is a matter of concern not only to that area but other areas. If a change is to be made, and I hope it will, it should include all harbour commissions across our nation; it should embrace them all.

Several hon. members have indicated their interest in this particular field. I could possibly name several but I shall not do so. I am tempted to do so, however. Instead, I will say that the government has no objection to the hon. member's Bill C-21, which primarily is concerned with the administration of the Nanaimo Harbour Commission. We feel, however, that this bill should be recognized by the House as an interim measure. We feel it should be an interim measure because the National Ports Council, which includes representation from the harbour commissions, the National Harbours Board and all the provinces, is now reviewing the structure of all Canadian ports and harbours with a view to making recommendations on new, streamlined mechanisms for the administration of these facilities. We think it is vital to have an input from the provinces and these organizations, and because of this the House should recognize the necessity of this bill being only an interim measure.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in recognition of the unusually productive day we have had, I think there might be consent to rise.

Mr. Bell: This is agreeable to us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At 4.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

APPLICATION OF SECTION 106 OF ACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I solicit the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter or urgent and pressing necessity for applicants for unemployment insurance benefits.

Considering that Section 106 of the Unemployment Insurance Act has not been implemented as promised when the act was considered in 1971 and that officials of the commission seek to trip up applicants instead of attempting to assist them to return to the labour market, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration take necessary measures for implementation of Section 106 of the Unemployment Insurance Act as early as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not seem to be unanimity and the motion therefore cannot be put.

NEW MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,008—Mr. Boisvert:

EXCLUSION OF PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEES FROM BENEFITS OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Reynolds:

1. For what reasons were professional employees on the Federal Public Service excluded from the benefits of collective bargaining under Part V of the Canada Labour Code?

2. Is the government giving consideration to amending the Public Service Staff Relations Act to provide professional employees with a meaningful method of settling unresolved disputes?

3. Will the government amend Section 36(1) of PSSRA to eliminate the requirement of the binding notice by the bargaining agent for arbitration or conciliation-strike as the method of bargaining to minimize the advantage it gives Treasury Board and, if not, for what reason?

4. Will the government give consideration to (a) giving the reasons in arbitration awards (b) appointing an employee representative to the arbitration tribunal to have an input into the procedures for arbitration equal to that of the employer and, if not, for what reason?

5. For what reasons (a) are conciliation board decisions not made binding as for arbitration tribunals (b) is there no legal provision requiring further negotiations?

6. For what reasons are public servants denied the same rights as other citizens covered by the Canada Labour Code?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The Canada Labour Code, Part V does not apply to the Public Service of Canada. Collective bargaining in the federal Public Service is governed by the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Under the P.S.S.R.A. professional employees are not excluded from the benefits of collective bargaining. There are 27 certified bargaining groups in the scientific and professional category of the Public Service of Canada.

2. Yes the government has indicated its intention to improve the method of settling unresolved disputes.

3. Under the P.S.S.R.A. as it now reads, Bargaining Agents unilaterally select the dispute resolution process that will apply to the bargaining unit for each round of negotiations. This is a distinct advantage to the union. The Treasury Board, as Employer, is bound by the Bargaining Agent's selection.

4. (a) Under the P.S.S.R.A. as it now reads, an arbitral award becomes an integral part of a collective agreement. Reasons for the award would be superfluous to such a document; (b) A person representing the interests of the employee sits on every Arbitration Tribunal.

5. (a) In the conciliation process there are no decisions rendered by the Board. Its purpose is to achieve agreement. If there is no agreement it so reports. The Public Service Staff Relations Act provides that after seven days have elapsed from the receipt by the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board of the report of the Conciliation Board, employees who are included in the dispute may participate in a lawful strike; (b) For the P.S.S.R.A. to provide for further mandatory negotiations after a Conciliation Board Report would suspend the right to strike. In fact, negotiations always do take place after a Conciliation Board Report has been received.

6. In essence the provisions of the statutes which govern employees of the Public Service are generally no less favourable than those contained in the Canada Labour Code.

*NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING DANGEROUS LEVEL OF FLUORIDE IN MINERAL WATER

Question No. 1,280—Mr. Grafftey:

Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare received representations about the dangerous level of fluoride in mineral water consumed by Canadians and, if so, what action does the government intend to take?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Perhaps I might suggest that the answer to Question 1,280 be printed in Hansard, since the reply is somewhat lengthy. This might speed up the business of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer to the above question follows:]

Representations have been made to the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding the levels of fluorides in mineral waters. New standards for mineral water were established by order in council P.C. 1972-3074, December 21, 1972 and published in the Canada Gazette of January 10, 1973. However, because of manufacturers' and importers' operational problems, these new standards will not become effective until September 1, 1973. A news release of December 13, 1972 stated that analyses of a limited number of mineral waters carried out by the health, protection branch of the department showed that these products contained from less than one part to more than nine parts per million of fluoride. It was emphasized then that there was no evidence to suggest that the fluoride levels of mineral waters represented an immediate hazard to the health of Canadians. Officials of the department are examining all mineral waters sold in Canada for fluorides, as well as initiating a survey to determine the quantities of this beverage consumed by individuals. When these data become available, action appropriate to the findings will be taken to protect Canadian consumers of this product.

2. How many of those in each category had never been self-supporting prior to the collection of such social assistance?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Provincial governments are responsible for the administration of social assistance programs, and statistical data reported by them do not identify recipients of social assistance by single-year age groups. Hence it is not possible to answer this enquiry at this time.

2. It is not possible to answer this request due to the limitations noted in part 1 above.

4. The Minister attempts to respond to mail from Members of Parliament within 10 working days. A reply may take a longer period if that time is required for research purposes. POST OFFICE CALENDAR, 1973

Question No. 1,701—Mr. Masniuk:

1. Who was responsible for the publication of the 1973 Post Office calendar?

2. For what reason was Dominion Day and other significant religious statutory holidays, such as Good Friday, ignored, and non-statutory holidays more emphasized?

3. Was it the intention of the Post Office not to include these major statutory holidays and, if not, what action has been taken to correct this oversight?

4. Was there a nation-wide tender for the Post Office calendar publication and, if not, for what reason?

5. Was the total cost of the publication $270,000 or were there other costs involved, such as art work etc., which is not included in the total cost?

4. Tenders were called for printing by the advertising agency, Agence Canadienne de Publicité. The agency chose a local bid because of the tight deadlines set and the requirements for close supervision and quality control.

5. The total cost was $269,866.20.

6. No decision taken yet.

CANADIAN YOUTHS HELD IN PRISONS OUTSIDE CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Question No. 1,705—Mr. Reynolds:

1. How many Canadian youths are presently being held in prisons outside Canada and the United States?

2. What steps, if any, are being taken to assist these young people in obtaining either release or legal assistance?

3. What is the present status of Mary Howard-Brown, 18 years of age, at last report being held in an Athens prison and have authorities had any success in locating any of her friends or relatives?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. This statistical information is not available to us. There is no obligation on the part of foreign governments to notify the Canadian government when a Canadian citizen is arrested. Although some Canadian citizens detained abroad do contact the nearest Canadian Consular representative for advice and assistance many do not choose to do so.

2. The Canadian government cannot intervene in the normal administration of justice in a foreign country. Upon request Canadian consuls abroad assist Canadian citizens in obtaining legal counsel by providing names and addresses of reputable local lawyers, by contacting relatives and friends on their behalf for financial assistance when required and by advising detainees to apply for free legal aid when funds are unavailable from private sources. Canadian consuls do what they can to ensure Canadians are brought to trial as promptly as possible and that bail is granted when local laws permit it. Efforts are made unofficially on humanitarian grounds to obtain suspended or reduced sentences for young offenders whenever circumstances warrant it.

3. This young woman erroneously reported to be a Mary Howard-Brown was identified as a Canadian citizen and arrangements were made for her hospitalization in Athens until she was well enough to return to Canada escorted by a member of her family in October 1972.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): The Potato Price Stabilization Program, 1971 was open to all producers but excluded others such as processors who acquire potatoes only by having them grown under contract or other arrangement. 3. (a) Were tenders called for the production overrun which increased the original contract from $173,790 to $269,866.20; (b) how big was the overrun; (c) for what reason was it required?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. Specifications for the printing of the calendar were established and determined by Agence Canadienne de Publicité who were charged with the responsibility of producing a calendar on the basis of the concept and pro forma presented to the Department.

2. According to Agence Canadienne de Publicité (a) St. Lawrence Lithograving Limited did not quote on first quality paper; (b) Ashton Potter Limited included in its bid a reserve clause on the preparation cost. This made the total printing cost uncertain.

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, concerning a number of questions I placed on the order paper on or about January 4 this year, just over three months ago, a period of time which I would have thought was ample for obtaining answers. I ask the parliamentary secretary whether, in particular, I can have an answer to question No. 152 which contains a list of 95 corporations. I want to find out what grants and other forms of financial assistance have been made available to these companies by a variety of government departments and agencies. Can the parliamentary secretary let me know when I may expect an answer to this question?

Mr. Reid: I shall be glad to look into this matter. I would remind hon. members, however, that questions which require answers from a variety of departments often take a good deal longer to answer than those which request information from one department only.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to question No. 180 which was placed on the order paper on January 4 requesting information as to the cost of purchasing an installation of office furnishings. I should like to point out that the same question was placed on the order paper last session and remained unanswered. A period of many months has gone by during which the answer might have been provided. Surely the departments concerned can provide the information requested. I ask the parliamentary secretary to tell me when I may expect an answer.

● (1410)

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this question asks each office and department of the federal government for specific information that is not easily obtainable. All records of the federal government have to be searched in order to provide this information.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to question No. 230 which, as I mentioned last week, has been on the order paper since January 10 and was also placed on the order paper almost two years ago by the previous member for my riding. It has to do with for which insurance companies Air Canada acts as agent. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary when I may expect an answer to this question.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I hope it will be soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, may I ask the parliamentary secretary when I can expect a reply to about 40 questions I put on the order paper on January 4 asking for information on the amount of money spent on publicity and/or information, as well as the amount of money spent on outside contracts by various government departments?

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to try your patience but I have two questions on the order paper in particular, one which has been on the order paper since January 25 dealing with government grants to Bell Canada and its subsidiaries, and a straightforward starred question which was put on the order paper on February 22. Can the parliamentary secretary indicate when I might have a reply to one or both of these questions?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a point of order relating to two questions that I have had on the order paper since January 4, Nos. 171 and 172. Both questions deal with the objectives and evaluation of subsidy programs offered by the government. I have not received an answer to either of these questions yet.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURES TO ACHIEVE GREATER EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN HIGHER POSITIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since it is now two and a half years ago that the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women was presented and evidently less than 2 per cent of the positions rated at $26,000 a year or more are held by women, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to take any significant measures to remedy this situation, over and above the assurance of the President of the Treasury Board that rules and regulations will be reviewed to ensure that there is no discrimination against the female sex?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret I will not be able to answer this question in detail, but there was a statement and answers given by the Minister of Labour to questions on this subject. I am sure that he will be able to give further details if the Leader of the Opposition wants to ask him.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has established any precise targets for or a definition of equitable participation of women in senior government posts?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will gladly take note of the question on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have asked these questions because I thought they would be of general concern to the Prime Minister and the government. I should like to ask whether the government has dismissed out of hand the establishment of precise targets in this area of senior positions for women in the Public Service? In view of the rejection by the President of the Treasury Board of any quota system, has the government rejected the establishment of precise targets to be achieved?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we dislike the quota approach to any of these problems. We would hope we would not have to use it in the case of women. This being said, every effort is being made by the government to ensure that women are considered for the appointments we make.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of supplementaries sought on this question. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and then we will try to complete the first round of questioning. If hon. members think we should have supplementaries on this subject later, we will hear them.

[Mr. Speaker.]

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF STATUS OF WOMEN COMMISSION TO SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, this supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman say whether the government is considering transferring the responsibility for developing programs to give effect to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women from the Department of Labour to the Department of the Secretary of State, which department might be considered as an action oriented department?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed considered this question and I am in the process of discussing it now with the relevant ministers. I might go on to say that at this time I would have a slight preference for not doing what the hon. gentleman suggests because—

An hon. Member: Or anything else.

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS AND TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. He announced the appointment of an inquiry into the aspects of the Pickering Airport on January 30, I believe. I should like to ask whether he has appointed the board, commission or whatever he wishes to call it, and when will he be able to announce the membership of that inquiry?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the board is not constituted yet. We have a series of names and we are attempting to make a selection. As I announced, I will be having discussions with the Premier of Ontario so there will be agreement with him on the constitution of the board.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he has already decided on the terms of reference for this inquiry, and can he assure the House that the board or commission will have the authority to inquire into not merely the narrow field outlined in his statement of January 30 but into the whole matter affecting the Pickering Airport?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the public will be able to make representations on the specific issue of type and timing of facilities and the transportation and planning content. The government has made it clear that decisions to date on need and location may be reconsidered in light of new facts, new information on technology or travel habits which nullify the basis of these decisions. The board will be authorized to inquire into all aspects of the question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear that the board will have that authority. I understand from the minister that he has not yet constituted the inquiry and intends to have discussions with Queen's Park, with the Premier of Ontario. Can he indicate to the House and the people concerned in the Pickering region how soon he expects to set up the inquiry in order that representations may be made?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I hope very early after Easter, Mr. Speaker.

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—RELEASE OF SURROUNDING NOISE LANDS FROM MINISTERIAL ORDER

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In the interim before this group is set up, is the minister in a position to indicate which, if any, of the acres that have been frozen as noise lands may now be released?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): At this moment, no, Mr. Speaker.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ESTABLISHMENT OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES—PRESENTATION OF MEASURES BEFORE EASTER RECESS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Over the weekend he stated that he would introduce this week a proposal for establishing a guaranteed annual income for some categories of people. Has the hon. minister held discussions on this matter with the provinces before making this announcement? If not, will he be meeting the provincial ministers immediately following his announcement this week, and will he be discussing at the same time the matter of pensions for those aged 60 or over?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member no doubt knows, I met all my provincial colleagues when I visited the provinces two weeks ago. I toured the capital cities; I was able to discuss the matter with all my colleagues and we will be meeting in Ottawa on April 25, 26 and 27 to examine proposals for reforming our social security system.

With regard to guaranteed annual income, I have announced nothing more than exactly what is to be found in the Speech from the Throne of January 4, namely the government's basic principle that any reform of the social security system must include a guaranteed income plan for those who are unable to work and who are not expected to work.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Does the hon. minister intend to introduce legislation before the Easter recess or afterwards?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns I hope to submit a working plan for the federal government to set before the provinces, but this working plan will not contain legislative measures at this stage; any bill will have to come after consultations with the provinces towards the end of the month.

[English]

DISCUSSION OF POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PENSIONS FOR BLIND WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his consultations with the provincial welfare ministers, was any specific reference made to the blind who have not had increases in their allocation of funds since the 1960's?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Surely, Mr. Speaker, when we discussed the possibility of establishing a guaranteed income, we did specify that this guaranteed income ought to apply not only to the aged, but also to the handicapped, including the blind.

REPRESENTATION OF PARTIES AT FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the announcement of the anticipated dates for the federal-provincial conference, can the minister advise this House, in view of the minority situation of this government, whether representatives of all opposition parties in this House will be invited to participate in this conference?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is an intergovernmental federal-provincial conference.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again there are a number of supplementaries. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Trinity first and perhaps we might have supplementaries later on this subject.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION—OPINION OF CANADIAN EXPORT ASSOCIATION AS TO EFFECT ON CANADIAN EXPORTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDIES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I should like to pose my question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware of the advice to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce by the Canadian Export Association that the effects of the United States DISC legislation on Canadian exports will be ten times greater than the level estimated by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his officials?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that advice. I am not quite satisfied with the hon. member's analysis of it.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister advise the House whether the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or his own Department of Finance has instituted similar studies to those done by the Canadian Export Association? If so, would he be good enough to table the documents before the Easter recess so that we could study them during the recess?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will certainly look into that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands have supplementaries to previous questions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INTRODUCTION OF FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister prepared to fulfil his commitment to the people of Newfoundland when he announced on October 2 last that if his government was elected the first legislative action that would be taken would be regarding the family income security program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in that speech that the only reason it had not been done in the last session of parliament was that members sitting on the Conservative benches had prevented it from being passed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: And I did say—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was a lousy bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. Perhaps we should not return to that question.

Mr. Marshall: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would ask the Minister of Labour, who was minister of national health and welfare when the family income security bill was before the House, if he would tell him what the opposition said at that time about voting for family allowance bills?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—OPPORTUNITY FOR SURVIVORS OF ATTACK ON HELICOPTERS TO INSPECT CRASH SITE TO DETERMINE WHETHER WRECKAGE MOVED

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the continuing difficulties in determining the accuracy of the location of the unfortunate helicopter crash that took place in South Viet Nam, would the minister inform the House whether Ambassador Gauvin has succeeded in securing approval from the Viet Cong and perhaps others for inspection of the helicopter crash site by the survivors of the crash to determine whether or not the helicopter has been moved from the original crash site?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, Ambassador Gauvin has been trying to get the inquiry extended in this way. So far as I know, up to this moment he has not yet been successful.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In light of the importance of resolving this question at an early date, I wonder whether the minister has taken any direct action at the ministerial level to assist Ambassador Gauvin in arranging such an inspection by the survivors? If such action has not yet been taken by the minister, would he give consideration to doing so?

Mr. Sharp: The difficulty in making the inspection is that the Provisional Revolutionary Government has so far objected and there is no way in which I can make direct representations on that point. Ambassador Gauvin is in a much stronger position on the spot that I would be from this distance dealing with a group of people we do not recognize.

GREECE—HOLDING INCOMMUNICADO WITHOUT CHARGE OF LAWYERS REPRESENTING GREEK STUDENTS—REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having regard to the fact that Canada and Greece are both bound by the universal declaration of human rights and are both signatories to the NATO treaty which speaks about respect for human rights, and in light of the report from members of the International Commission of Jurists and the International League of Rights that lawyers representing Greek students have been held incommunicado for more than a month without being charged with any office, will the Canadian government make representations to the Greek government protesting against this grave violation of fundamental rights?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions, both at the NATO conference to representatives of Greece who were present and privately, I have made representations to the Greek government about the question of civil rights. I shall go on doing so. Our position has not changed.

Mr. Brewin: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs answer my question and say whether he will protest against the particular incident I have drawn to his attention?

Mr. Sharp: I shall, if the occasion arises, speak to the Greek ambassador about this particular incident, but of course this is only one of several incidents. The general position of the Canadian government in relation to these matters is very well known, and I believe we are taking all steps that would be constructive under the circumstances.

AIR CANADA

ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT POLICY AND DIRECTION—DISCUSSION BY MINISTER WITH CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has had any communication with Mr. Yves Pratte, the Chairman of Air Canada, since the interview Mr. Pratte gave to the Financial Post as reported on April 7? Has he been in touch with him, and has he been able to secure the co-operation of the Chairman in meeting the criticism that the government has no policy respecting Air Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, actually I met with the President of Air Canada on Friday morning between 9.30 and 10.30.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now that we have got them together—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —possibly the minister will say whether or not he discussed with Mr. Pratte some of the statements that very estimable gentleman made to the press, among them being "I am not prepared to oversee the decline of Air Canada," and "if the government refuses to make decisions then within ten years Air Canada will be a second airline to CP Airlines"? Did he discuss any of these criticisms, and what is he going to do concerning, among other criticisms, the fact that the minister does not answer any of his letters regarding the objectives of Air Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the right hon. member was not here on Friday. I would have invited him to the meeting and he would have seen that we are in perfect agreement, Mr. Pratte and myself, and that we both want to preserve the pre-eminence of Air Canada not only nationally but internationally. Further, he has received answers to all letters he has sent to me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I still ask the minister the simple question: did he take up with Mr. Pratte the very strong criticisms that Mr. Pratte made of this government, when he talked to him in that tête-à-tête on Friday afternoon?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it was not Friday afternoon; it was Friday morning at 9.30.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we are making progress except in securing an answer. Did Mr. Pratte agree that CP Airlines should have the right to the Milan route? What was said in regard to that, because I notice he strongly criticizes the government for failure to act in that connection?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately we have not discussed the case of Milan at all.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF ACTS AFFECTING EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question, or perhaps a somewhat related question, in the area opened up by the Leader of the Opposition. Because it affects so many areas within government I want to ask the President of the Privy Council whether the government intends to bring forward, during this session of parliament, amendments to a number of acts which at present contain discriminatory sections with respect to the employment of women in the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the legislative program will be brought forward. I understand there is one particular measure under consideration relating to this subject.

DISCUSSION WITH COMMISSION AND DEPARTMENTS OF SPECIFIC PROCEDURES LEADING TO INCREASED RECRUITMENT OF WOMEN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government discussing with the Public Service Commission and the various departments which do hiring, specific procedures which would lead to a much more active program of recruitment of women into the public service and particularly into the upper echelons of the public service, than has been used up until now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if these discussions are going on these days. I do know that the subject has been discussed with the Public Service Commission and that the commission has responded by taking measures to make a particular effort to ensure the recruitment of women. Within the departments instructions have been given to all deputy ministers to ensure that women now within these departments be given every opportunity to advance through promotion.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the fact that the government's policy on the employment of women, just as is the case with its policy on the employment of native peoples, has been clear and very good in principle for several years but the results have shown how little progress we have made, is the government really going to ask the Public Service Commission and the various departments to get on with the job, which they have not been doing up until now?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the hon. member that it is not always sufficient to state principles because very often the application follows at some considerable distance. We had this experience in the application of the Official Languages Act. We are now taking the further step of looking into the application. I will consider the suggestion of the hon. member and see if we can issue some type of directive to ensure that the aims of these policies are carried out.

SENIOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT COURSE—ENCOURAGEMENT OF PARTICIPATION BY WOMEN

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask just one short supplementary of the Prime Minister in keeping with the tone of the questioning. In view of the fact that the senior management development course implemented by the Public Service Commission, designed to improve the administrative skills of the civil servants at the managerial level, has attracted only one woman, can the Prime Minister assure the House that he will discuss this matter with his ministers in order to ensure the encouragement and facilitation of women in this particular course?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policies to which I was referring apply to every aspect of the civil service and its instruction programs. If the hon. member found this example in one program, I am sure he would find other programs where women are indeed coming in and are being encouraged in a remarkable sense.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member sought the floor for what he called one short supplementary, which he has asked. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and then the hon. member for Bellechasse. We will be running short of time. Hon. members should note that it is the first question asked this afternoon on which we are having all these supplementaries.

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST THAT ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORT TO PARLIAMENT RATHER THAN MINISTER

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that there has been very considerable opposition to the government's recently proposed federal advisory committee on the status of women because of the fact that it will report to the minister and not to parliament, as women's groups have requested, will he tell the House whether he has considered the restructuring of the committee along lines which would be much more in accord with the wishes expressed by the majority of women's groups?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we have considered various ways of setting up this advisory group. It is one of the subjects that the Minister of Labour and I have considered together. The decision, for the time being, is to proceed as announced by the Minister of Labour. I do not believe it is right for the hon. member to assume that most of the women's groups prefer her system to the one put forward by the Minister of Labour.

CANADIAN PROPOSALS FOR GATT CONFERENCE—DISCUSSION WITH FARM ORGANIZATIONS AND PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the declaration of the minister at the recent OECD meeting in Paris that Canada looks forward to positive action in the GATT talks to be held this fall to liberalize international trade in agricultural products, is the government preparing specific proposals and, if so, are these proposals going to be discussed with farm organizations and provincial premiers this spring and summer?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the preliminary talks and preparations are well under way, if I understand correctly, and I am sure that the proposals will be discussed with our counterparts. Suggestions have been received from some of them already.

Mr. Murta: In light of our apparent common interest with the United States in reducing barriers to agricultural trade, specifically in the EEC and Japan, is the minister going to hold ministerial talks with the United States on reaching joint goals for the GATT negotiations that will be held this fall?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that we did have several very informal discussions with the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States in Paris.

POSSIBLE EXPANSION OF GATT NEGOTIATIONS TO INCLUDE COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture if ways are going to be found to expand these talks on trade to include those countries that are communist or centrally controlled, which is the term they use, so that the agricultural talks may be broad enough to include the full spectrum of our trading partners?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious from the actions the government has taken and is taking at the present time, that we are trading all over the world more than we ever have in the past, and will continue to do so.

JASPER—POSSIBLE NEW LOCATION FOR CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS DIVISIONAL POINT—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and arises from the minister's stated desire to find a new home for the Canadian National division point at Jasper. Will the minister or the Minister of Transport hold full public hearings in Jasper before July into the feasibility and consequences of moving the 1,200 people involved?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have not decided to move immediately the employees now in Jasper; I merely said that it would be desirable for the CN, if it wants to have better facilities, to try and find another place. Of course, if we reach that decision, we will certainly have consultations with the local authorities; I did not say that everything should be done before the month of July, but merely suggested that we might be well-advised to have that objective.

[English]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Since the minister's statement has caused considerable disquiet in the town site of Jasper and since he gives no indication that he is prepared to hold public hearings on his own at this time when the disquiet exists, would he make his officials available for the public hearings I intend to hold on the subject?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John N. Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of recent colourful posters on family planning put out by his department and showing as many as ten children per family, would the minister advise whether these posters showing as many as ten per family reflect the government's policy for Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think they reflect maybe the policy of the Minister of Justice but I do not know about mine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I am not sure that it is yet the government's policy.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I think I will still take a chance on the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Were family planning organizations across Canada consulted as to the possible effect of these posters in sabotaging their work of family planning?

Mr. Lalonde: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if they have as much effect as some of our posters have we should not worry too much.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I asked a question of the Minister of Transport which was referred to the Minister of the Environment. I will ask it again. In light of the fact that the Minister of the Environment told the House some month and a half ago that environmental studies would be completed on the proposed expansion of the Vancouver airport within 12 months, can the minister now advise whether these studies have begun?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, they have begun and the target date for their completion is December 31, 1973.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister advise the House when and in what manner the public will be given the chance to make representations regarding this matter?

Mr. Davis: First, Mr. Speaker, the consultants involved will be in touch with the municipalities and community interest groups in the area. After the studies have been completed they will be published. Then we will decide about hearings.

Can the minister tell the House whether a survey of the damage and property loss has been prepared and received by him and, if so, what action is he prepared to take with regard to the survey?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, surveys have been carried out jointly with the provincial government, some from the air and some on the ground. We are still awaiting an application from the province for financial assistance.

Mr. Higson: Has the minister considered a program of assistance whereby low interest loans would be made available to lakeshore property owners to repair or construct protective works, the labour input of which might be partly or fully forgiven in circumstances similar to the three-year winter works program?

DARLING REPORT RECOMMENDATION THAT COASTAL WATERS BE RESERVED FOR CANADIAN FLAG VESSELS—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On February 14 I asked a question regarding the two year old Darling report, particularly the recommendation that Canadian coastal waters should be reserved for Canadian flag vessels. At that time the minister said that he was consulting the coastal premiers. Has the minister had any reply from the premiers of the provinces on the west and east coasts, and is he in a position to say what stand the government will take regarding the implementation of this particular recommendation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I met last week with the four premiers of the Atlantic provinces, but I have not had an opportunity to discuss the same subject with Mr. Barrett yet. The premiers of the Atlantic provinces are afraid that, if we implement the Darling report as it is now, the cost of transportation for the Maritimes will be increased. So we are going to study with their officials each of the cases they want us to look into in order not to place a new burden on those provinces in implementing the report.

Mr. Douglas: Does the minister intend to have consultations with the Premier of British Columbia with a view to seeing whether this recommendation can be implemented for the Pacific coast?

ALLEGED REFUSAL BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL TO APPROVE CHARTER FLIGHTS TO HAITI

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

This morning, 500 students and professors were supposed to leave for Haiti by plane. The students have been organizing such annual trips to Haiti for four years. Last Friday I personally phoned the Minister of Transport to see if it would not be possible to allow that flight of two chartered planes to Haiti. Has the minister any power over a Mr. Thomson? This might be a grievance, but Mr. Thomson answered the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) in an arrogant and impolite manner regarding those flights that he said he was cancelling, adding that he would never give his approval for that student trip. Could the minister tell us what action he can take regarding that situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if an official has been arrogant and impolite, I will be the first one to regret it and also try to ensure that he answers the public correctly. However, the hon. member will have to submit a specific grievance because I am not in a position to judge.

As to those 500 young people who were to leave this morning and unfortunately could not do so I regret this and I will see if there is a way to soften the regulations to ensure that there is no repetition of things like that.

Now that the time is again here for filing income tax returns, will the minister assure the House that Old Order Mennonites will not be forced to make these contributions against their will simply because the government did not act?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kitchener has been drawing this matter to my attention as well. Hon. Oral Questions

ENERGY

CANADIAN POSITION ON POSSIBLE TRANSPORTATION OF AMERICAN LIQUIFIED GAS AND PETROLEUM BY TANKER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact there is a Congressional hearing and two bills are before the United States Congress and the suggestion is now being made that tankers may be used to transport liquified gas as well as crude petroleum, has the Canadian government made itself clear with regard to what means of transportation we would prefer if that energy, either liquid gas made from natural gas or crude petroleum, is to be moved?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Sir.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the short answer. I now ask the minister to tell us in two words what route the government prefers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The safest route, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST THAT FARMERS BE ALLOWED TO RETAIN RIGHT TO AVERAGING IF LATE IN FILING RETURNS

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It is further to the question asked last week by the hon. member for Wellington with regard to income tax returns. Has the minister received any representations, from the accounting profession in particular, about farm returns and the fact that those people are required to file capital cost schedules with their returns, which will make it difficult for them to file their returns on time? If he has received such representations, will he give consideration to extending, if not the time for filing, the farmer's right to averaging if he is late filing? He may have to pay a penalty, but can he at least be given the right to retain the privilege of averaging?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we have given careful consideration to the possibility of special dispensation for particular groups, but we feel that kind of discrimination would not be fair. However, I have stated publicly and I wish to reiterate now that if any taxpayer has difficulty in amassing all the necessary information on time, a return with income figures estimated on a reasonable basis will be accepted. Alternatively, payment of estimated taxes by April 30 will eliminate or at least reduce liability for penalty and interest even if the return is filed after the deadline.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. Perhaps hon. members will allow the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich before calling orders of the day.

[Mr. Whelan.]

TAXATION

ENDORSEMENT BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES OF INCREASED FEDERAL REVENUE FROM RESOURCE INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that over the weekend the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is now leaving his desk, endorsed a resolution calling for increased federal government revenues from the resource industries of this country, can the Prime Minister say whether the minister was advocating government policy and, if so, when can we expect the necessary legislative changes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to see exactly what the minister, who is leaning over a desk, said. I am sure he stated government policy in some form.

WILDLIFE

IMPORT OF PUMA AND OCELOT PELTS FOR SUBSEQUENT EXPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. I have given him notice. As a result of my notice, has the minister been able to make himself aware of the adverse publicity being given to Canada because of the ease with which, taking advantage of loopholes in Canadian import regulations, pelts of endangered species such as puma and ocelot are reaching Canada for storage and subsequent export?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, members of Environment Canada have been taking a leading role in international discussions on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed, from Friday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, if I have to live with the New Democratic Party, I am pleased to see the growth in my audience since Friday. This is a rather serious debate concerning the operation of Canadian National Railways and the financing bill.

Last Friday, we asked the minister or his parliamentary secretary that we be told in some reasonable fashion what kind of financing was done in 1971 and 1972, in view of the fact this bill was not passed last year. That was a very interesting disclosure by the government. What kind of financing did Canadian National Railways and Air Canada undertake, in view of the fact the financing bill did not pass parliament last year?

On Friday, I raised what I believe to be a fundamental point. Within the confines of this debate, the ministers of the Crown, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in particular, who have any relationship to the area of transportation should take this opportunity to explain to this House and the people of Canada their position on the matter of transportation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knight: On behalf of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) to explain what steps he is going to take in view of his long history as Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but if hon. members want to hold conferences I suggest they should do so behind the curtains.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take particular exception to members sitting on the arms of chairs or sometimes sitting on their desks with their backs turned to the Chair while a member is trying to address the Chair. I ask the co-operation of all members in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1500)

Mr. Knight: I would think it is particularly incumbent on the government, in a minority situation, to do some listening when transportation is being discussed. I want to say that one minister at least, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, ought to give some consideration to answering questions about the cost of freight rates as they relate to the Prairies and the Maritimes. My hon. friend from Nickel Belt and my hon. friend from Timiskaming have questions to ask about the transport situation in northern Ontario. This debate allows them the opportunity to request an announcement of substantial changes in the freight rate structure to meet the desperate need for a fair and just transportation system across the country, one which equalizes freight rates so that people living in regions such as the prairie region, northern Ontario and the Maritimes can move into secondary manufacturing industries, the kind of industries which are capital intensive and which create employment for people in those areas.

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed at some length the whole question of the debt owed by the Canadian National Railways since they are carrying a debt which they ought not to be carrying as can be seen from this particular financing bill. A few years ago there was a change in the relationship of the debt between the Canadian National and Air Canada. There should be a further extension of that change to remove that debt from the books of the CN. After all, surely Mackenzie and those people who were shareholders back in the 1900's when the Tory party bought out those railways have been paid enough.

Mr. Broadbent: Too much.

Mr. Knight: Too much. I raised the question of the freight rate structure as it relates to many regions of this country and the relationship between it and grain. I brought up very briefly the question of rail line abandonment which faces western Canada more than any other area. I suggested that in lieu of 1975 being the cut-off date in terms of allowing railroads to abandon wholesale, if you like, the rail lines in western Canada, the government ought to consider putting a moratorium on that date in order to come up with a concrete proposal to western producers. In addition, the many hundreds of thousands of people who live in these small communities deserve a concrete answer as to the kind of national transport policy they are going to have and the kind of service they are going to get from the transportation system. The government ought to take the step of letting the producer know what kind of system he is going to have for the movement of his grain, what kind of cost he is going to incur if 610 miles of line in the Assiniboia constituency are abandoned, and over 2,000 miles of line, I believe, in the province of Saskatchewan. Hundreds of smaller or middle-sized communities on the Prairies are threatened by that kind of abandonment at this stage of development. I would hope that some minister of the Crown, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who likes to stick his finger into transportation, would give us some answers to this all-important question.

One other question that needs an answer concerns the closing of the station agencies. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) raised this problem in the question period, and I hope he doesn't mind my mentioning it. It affects southern Saskatchewan as well. What kind of operation is being conducted when a railroad establishes a "servo centre" working out of the two major centres in the province of Saskatchewan, Regina and Saskatoon, then says it is for additional service to the producer and the people in the smaller communities. All the station agents are removed from those areas and then the company takes the opportunity to try to explain to these communities what this service centre is? They all know what it is. It is a telephone line which can be attended to in the city of Regina at a given time by some guy in an office who answers inquiries about some service some producer needs. If the producer is lucky he might get results by the end of the month. That is the kind of servo centre which is being developed in the prairie region. That is the kind of nonsense we put up with from public and privately-owned railroads in this country, and the kind of system we have when there is no national transportation policy whatsoever.

In view of the spending on transportation studies by the Canada Grains Council and such things as the notorious group called the Great Plains project, there ought to be an explanation in this House by the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board to the Members of Parliament as to the allocation of funds for those two projects and an explanation of the kind of work they are doing. The Great Plains group talks about western development. The group is made up of highly established officials of the boardrooms of large multinational corporations and national corporations. There is not one representative of the western producers included, and the group works out of the Prime Minister's office. Where is there an explanation of that particular item in this debate related to transportation?

What is going on in the Canada Grains Council when two major farm organizations, the National Farmers Union and the Wheat Pool withdraw their membership? Why did they withdraw? What is the Canada Grains Council a front for if it is not a front for the private grain exchange in Winnipeg, the friends of the Conservative party, the friends of the Tory party? I am talking about the private Winnipeg grain exchange, something we New Democrats would like to see eliminated from the grain handling business. Bring flax, rye and rapeseed under the Wheat Board and quit fooling around.

That kind of question should be answered by one minister of the Crown. There is a long list of them. For example, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, since he wants his finger in the transport pie, should explain to members of the House of Commons the agreement to pay for the expenses and the depreciation of the hopper cars which are leased to the railway. There is not a producer in the west who does not know that the railroad could improve its rolling stock. There isn't a producer in the west who does not know that the railways could use many more than 2,000 hopper cars. But there isn't a producer in western Canada who doesn't know that for a hundred years or so the old line parties have backed the railways versus the producers by way of grants and money and rates, you name it, Mr. Speaker. They know that $48 million spent on hopper cars is a kind of subsidy to the railroads. Under the Railway Act the railways have to provide proper rolling stock for the Prairies. Anyway, they are supposed to do so. Yet we have had to live with boxcars which are beyond description. So we need hopper cars, but we don't need to encourage the railways to abdicate their responsibilities to the western producer and use Canadian taxpayers' money to provide a subsidy to the railway. The minister can tell us about the agreement on that particular issue. Who is paying for it? Is the producer not paying for maintenance and depreciation of hopper cars?

We could go down a long list of questions on which I wish to spend a few moments, questions on which I am sure my colleagues will expand and to which the government should give answers during this debate on second reading of the bill before us. One of the most fundamental ones, and one which was raised again today in the House, is the question which has been asked in the past by the leader of our party relating to the future of Air Canada and landing rights in Milan. Further to this, the minister could talk about the carving up of the world in terms of the private CP line and the Air Canada line. As far as I am concerned, when it comes to air transportation and air service, Canada needs, like most of the western world countries, only one publicly-owned airline. It does not need the CP whatsoever.

Aside from that, there ought to be an explanation during this debate as to the future of Air Canada if we are to continue to put money into it. Mr. Speaker, I have raised before the question of one of the ministers of the Crown, namely, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), answering a question in relation to the CN continuing to carry a debt it should not necessarily have to carry. Further to this I suspect my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), will raise a question related to—if anyone can guess—pensions of railway workers who retired prior to 1956 and are not covered by collective agreements. That is the key point I wanted to make—those who are not covered by the collective agreements with the railroad. I am sure my hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) will bring up the question of freight rates, regional development and rail line abandonment and will seek some answers. I am sure my colleague from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) will wonder about the kind of agreement that the Canadian Wheat Board and the railroads have chosen to adopt in regard to hopper cars. I am sure he will be interested in receiving answers to the questions he has asked in the House.

The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) will be interested in having some answers about the investment procedures used by the pension funds of the CNR and CPR, the manner in which workers' funds are used and the kind of corporations in which they are invested. In addition, I am sure the hon. member for Scarborough West will be asking questions about the CN needle, the 1,800-foot monstrosity to be erected in the city of Toronto to scare the life out of those unfortunate people from the prairies who happen to land in Toronto on their way to Ottawa.

There is one fundamental matter that concerns the Minister of Transport and I am sure my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar will be interested in this question. I refer to a reinterpretation, a reassessment if you like, of the MacPherson commission report on transportation and its ludicrous proposal that what is needed is competition. What is really needed is one large public utility bent on servicing the people of Canada and not on private profit.

The hon. member for Assiniboia, as he has already pointed out, will be interested in having some substantial information about, and answers to, the question of rail line abandonment. I am sure that some of our colleagues from the maritimes and the prairie regions will be interested in having answers to questions they have asked about the future of passenger services. I am also sure the premier of British Columbia, Mr. Barrett, will be interested in some answers to questions concerning the possibility of using the railways to transport oil and gas from the Mackenzie region. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) could use this opportunity to take a few moments to disclose to the House what possibilities there are for transporting oil and gas.

I believe the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) would like to raise in this debate some very important questions relating to the situation in the yards of the city of Vancouver, a matter I have also raised, and the question of working to rule. A number of workers there are upset about working conditions and the kind of work crews there are. Perhaps the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Transport will take an opportunity to answer these questions.

I am sure the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and myself, both of us being members in good standing of the Hudson Bay Route Association, will be most interested in hearing what is going to happen to the port of Churchill in regard to movement of grain. Prairie members of the New Democratic Party are vitally concerned with transportation questions and are extremely interested in the possibility of the government becoming involved in the development of an alternative route through the Rocky Mountains. My colleagues have pointed out to me that my good friend and faithful colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has raised questions relating to freight rates and costs in northern Ontario.

Further, I have outlined to the government a number of subject matters that call for serious consideration. If this country is to develop in a cohesive way, and if there is to be national unity, then some fundamental questions that arise in the regions of Canada must be answered. For 100 years representatives from the constituency of Assiniboia and from southern Saskatchewan have come to this House and put the case regarding the very inadequate transportation system in their area. They have described the lack of service offered by the CNR and CPR. They have discussed in this House rail line abandonment, the question of freight rate structures, the question of alternative routes through the Rocky Mountains, more adequate use of the port at Churchill, and public transportation facilities offered by Air Canada and the CNR.

It is time that the government of this country took the opportunity that is afforded to it in this minority situation, not of setting aside answers for a future debate on a CN financing bill for another year, but of outlining to Members of Parliament and the people of Canada a clear and concise national transportation policy, letting the people of western Canada and those in the regionally disadvantaged areas know what policy the government has for meeting the serious needs of national transportation.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see Bill C-164 before the House, because I have a few comments to make before it is referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The bill is entitled, and I quote:

An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada.

CNR and Air Canada

Mr. Speaker, every time a bill like this is introduced, I have the impression of watching a poor comedy. For in the past, whenever we have tried to draw the minister's attention to the administrative deficiencies of the CN, and point out to him the monstrous mistakes made by the officials who administrate railways which have caused millions of dollars of damage in all kinds of derailments throughout the country, especially the province of Quebec which has the shortest railway mileage in proportion to its population and where the service leaves more to be desired than anywhere else in Canada, we have always received the impression that those in charge of the corporation wanted to cut off all passenger services in the province of Quebec, so as to get all it could in taxes from its population of over six million, and improve services in other provinces, if only by doubling its office staff, who would only be there to wait for the trains. At the rate we are going, there will be no more passenger trains in a few years because we will have managed to put off even those who are still stubborn enough to use this service.

What has been, what is and what will be the minister's response to repeated appeals and denunciations, and to the demands of the population in these areas? "The CN is a Crown corporation and I can do nothing but receive its annual report" is the minister's systematic reply. But we have reached the point where even the high-ranking officials of this company no longer need to come before the Standing Committee of Transport and Communications and condescend to keep the House informed as to what is going on in the field of transportation.

What happened during the years 1970, 1971 and 1972? And where are the 1973 estimates? I remember the time when Mr. Donald Gordon, the former president of the Canadian National, was so often called to account, and spent hours answering hon. members' questions but, at least, we had someone to give us information. Today, the president does not even dare come and face ordinary members of Parliament.

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Comtois) seems to introduce an unimportant bill whose passage according to his own words, is nothing but routine work that we should approve without any problem. That is typical of the hypocritical way the government proceeds. Besides, it is not the first time that I claim this proceeding to be improper. Every time the government introduces a bill which provides just one more dollar for the taxpayer, in services that are being claimed for years, they seem to believe that they are doing wonderful things.

I might give the ridiculous example of the $13 a month increase in the old age security pension, and the $100 yearly increase in basic exemptions for income tax purposes. You would have thought that the government was about to grant $2,000 to all Canadians. It was said that this bill was not like any other, that it would bring to the former law unsuspected amendments, that those increases were simply fantastic and a lot of publicity was made about those minor increases.

However, the same government is introducing Bill C-164 involving almost one billion and a half dollars which Canadians will have to pay with their taxes. In fact, this bill will allow the CN to invest $225 million in 1973 alone and $75 million during the first six months of 1974 so as to pay, before July 1, 1974, a debt amounting to $169,500,000.

Moreover, with workers' taxes Air Canada will be paid $140 million to meet its commitments from July 1, 1973 to June 30, 1974 and a very small amount of $13 million as a guaranty on its debentures for all the rest, namely anything not involving administration since 1971 about which we have been given no detail. All this is only peanuts. In fact we are told: The House is burning down but otherwise everything is going fine. This is a picture of our puppet representatives in front of technocrats who do not give a damn about parliament as they are protected by the government.

If you read the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary of the Minister of Finance, you will find all the candor which senior civil servants can use to render the situation even more tragic.

The parliamentary secretary of the minister said and I quote:

> Hon. members will remember that the 1971 bill (which included certain provisions for 1971 and 1972) had not been read for the second time when the 28th Parliament was dissolved.

This means that this bill covers 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974, so I wonder how the Canadian National and Air Canada got the necessary funds during the past few years. And when we ask why this government has not taken any measures, why Bill C-4 has been nipped in the bud, it simply cannot lay the blame on obstruction by the opposition since it had an absolute majority in 1971.

This government was more concerned at that time by all the omnibus bills they had passed by all their "yes men" rather than introducing and having passed by this House bills which are necessary for the good operation of our country's administration.

Will the minister tell us, when this bill is considered in committee, what the government had to hide in all this matter of the CN.

It is indeed unexplainable that a Crown corporation receives such protection from government. Why was the minister not satisfied only with tabling the CN budget in previous years, without ever giving Parliament the opportunity to approve or reject it. Why did the government deliberately leave the CN money bills on the order paper after having refused to table the annual report and the auditor's report at the stage of the second reading?

As sixth objective, the parliamentary secretary of the minister announced the appointment of auditors for the years 1972, 1973 and 1974.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in business for over 30 years and it is the first time I have seen auditors appointed after three years of hiring. I have already said that if all private enterprises or the other Crown corporations used the same criteria as the Canadian National to administer themselves, they would all go bankrupt within six months. A Crown corporation can only survive because its administrative deficits are always made up by the workers' taxes and this is the principle which I have been struggling against since I first sat in the House. I do not want the poor, the family head, to pay for a small group of inefficient bosses.

If Crown corporations cannot hire efficient people who decide to get to work instead of sleeping in the offices the workers have offered them with their taxes, I say these corporations should be transferred to individuals who would be able to operate them efficiently. I have already said it and I say it again, the administration of a government business costs three times that of a private enterprise. Why? Because in private business there are responsible persons who are personally interested, while nobody is responsible in a nationalized company because no one is specially concerned.

● (1530)

This is why the management of Crown corporations is so expensive. In addition, the technocrats who are directing the country are always too much interested in their own comfort and security to have enough time to consider the services which they should provide to the people.

In connection with those services, I hope that the minister will deem it advisable to ask the officials of the CN, including its president, to appear before the standing committee of the House, to give an account of their management and say why it is impossible to meet the responsible persons when an emergency occurs.

Last week, for example, I again witnessed an unfortunate incident. The train had left Montreal at 8 o'clock p.m. for Chambord, when it had to stop because a freight train had derailed eight miles farther. This happened at five a.m. and I was waiting, with all the others, for somebody to come to our rescue; around eight o'clock, I asked the conductor whether the authorities of the Canadian National had issued the required orders so that all passengers could reach their destination. That is when I learned that no one dared take any decision, in spite of the recommendations of the conductor and his assistants that first they had to feed the 84 passengers and then hire buses to take them back to civilization.

There were, I said, 84 passengers on the train and there was no cafeteria car between Montreal and Chicoutimi; they had removed the cafetaria car, in short, they had taken away everything. There was only a little bar where they served nothing but beer and other alcoholic beverages. That does not feed anybody, Mr. Speaker. I am telling this to hon. members so they may be aware of the stupidity of those responsible for the passenger service of the Canadian National in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area and know that this little bar is in the same car as the few bunks available on that train. Train technocrats call that a "sleeping car", Mr. Speaker, but bottles, screams, songs and music disturb everyone. I guarantee one thing, Mr. Speaker: if ever you travel on that train, you will get no sleep.

My time is almost up. Back to the derailment. I want to say that the Quebec authorities had decided, in their wisdom, not to give anything to eat to the 84 passengers and not to give bus service. Everyone was therefore condemned to spending 15 to 16 hours, in some cases even 24, waiting in the forest.

When the news came out, I took it upon myself to get in touch with the Quebec office and tell the people in charge what I thought, adding that if the required services could not be given, I would call up Ottawa to get some action. That is when the person in charge in Quebec decided a sandwich and coffee would be made for each passenger and two buses would be sent. And so we got to Chambord—because we were about 100 miles from there—around three o'clock that afternoon, and in a school bus.

In passing, I would like to congratulate the train personnel for having done their best to help the passengers. But they had nothing, so what could they do?

Mr. Speaker, for many years now we have been telling the government that our area is shockingly being discriminated against as concerns transportation. In all the province of Quebec, ours is the area which brings to the Canadian National almost the largest freight revenue and yet we are unable to obtain a single sleeping car on the Montreal-Quebec line. Still, they will come to the committee and say: The service is perfect. It is so perfect that everybody is fed up and nobody wants to travel on that train. And yet, 20 years ago, we had not enough of 20 cars on that line. Today, there is one to be divided between Chambord and Dolbeau. I am saying that at the present rate, within two or three years, there will no longer be passengers because nobody will care to take the train.

I avail myself of this excellent opportunity to make all the members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications aware of such situations.

I have provided just one example; all the derailments that have happened over the last ten years in the Saguenay-Lac Saint-Jean area have cost millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, not to the Canadian National but to the taxpayers of this country.

That is why I was saying a moment ago that the Canadian National authorities are practical jokers who enjoy making fun of the Canadian people. As far as I am concerned, the joke has ended. Either some cleaning has to be done in the CN or everything has simply to be sold. Let the government sell that Crown corporation to some private enterprise, and then we shall be sure to have at least equitable service adapted to the needs of the people.

Once more, I invite all the members of the committee to request its chairman to send for the responsible people as witnesses, to have them questioned and have this matter clarified once for all. Let them at least tell the committee that they have sworn to have this line disappear. Then, we shall know what to expect, and grants might be curtailed. Once more I appeal to all committee members for a serious discussions of this question.

I would have something to say about Air Canada but as there was too much to criticize about the CN, I think I will leave to others the task of dealing with Air Canada. But I want the case to be brought before the committee, to have these incompetent people appear before it in order to learn about certain things, make a clean-up and attempt to appoint at least a few qualified people.

[English]

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join in this debate since it affords me the chance to discuss, in a fairly general way, rail transportation problems as they affect the economic life of western Canada and, in particular, the economic life of the province of Saskatchewan. Much has been written and spoken in the past by prairie groups and western Canadian politicians on the prejudicial impact the existing freight rate structure has on the resource and industry development potential of the prairie provinces. Without the availability, however, of an efficiently run rail transportation and product handling system designed to meet shipper needs, making maximum use of the advantages rail technology has on the economic development and marketing of prairie natural resources in terms of costs to the producer, any success in achieving a downward revision of the existing freight rate structure will have limited impact on prairie resource development. The level of rail freight rates, relative to other producing and consumer areas in Canada, has long been a matter of vital concern to the prairie provinces and more particularly Saskatchewan.

● (1540)

Saskatchewan, historically and currently, is plagued by the handicap of paying a disproportionate share of transportation costs in marketing products in common world and domestic outlets. Saskatchewan residents also pay a high price on transportation of consumer goods purchased, predominantly in the major producing areas in eastern Canada. Geographically, Saskatchewan's continental location—approximately 1,200 miles to tide water at the west and about 800 miles to the lakehead—results in the provinces' wheat producers paying the highest average rail rates on export grain, and potash producers paying the highest inland transportation cost to place potash at tidewater, compared with other world wheat and potash producers and exporters.

It is, therefore, obvious when looking at a map of Canada that Saskatchewan has a real transportation cost differential to overcome because of distance when buying and selling in major domestic and foreign markets. Distance, however, is not the only factor affecting the level of freight rates in Saskatchewan. Competitive factors are also important. The railways' practice of charging different rates for the same service has been justified by some because of competitive forces. The existence or non-existence of competition is probably the most widely applied reason for the differential price of transportation, and I accept that the railways should not be denied the right to meet competition.

There is, however, no doubt that the lack of competitive forces in parts of Canada, particularly in western Canada, has had an impact on railway revenues. The availability of water competition in eastern Canada has, from the beginning of the railway era, exerted considerable influence on the freight rate structure in that area of Canada. Saskatchewan recognizes that, to some extent, for a portion of the long hauls inbound and outbound from eastern Canada, the existence of the waterways has eased somewhat the burden of over-all costs for the movement of Saskatchewan products and consumer goods. As water competition, however, is concentrated exclusively east of the lakehead, except for the existence of transcontinental rates which benefit British Columbia and disadvantage the Prairies, the complete lack of water navigation on the Prairies places eastern Canada in a much more favourable competitive position. As compared with the situation on the Prairies, a very large proportion of the total productive output in eastern Canada is moved under the influence of water competition. Practically all of the large industrial centres in eastern Canada are located on natural waterways.

Proportionally as well, the development of road transport in the east and its consequent competitive impact on the railways has benefited eastern shippers to a much greater extent than has been the case on the Prairies. The railways have been forced to establish relatively low rates in eastern Canada to meet this competition, thus placing a heavier transportation burden on prairie shippers who lack the advantages gained from the availability of this competition. The lack and dispersion of population in the prairies and the nature of the outbound traffic—relatively low value, long haul and heavy loading—is not conducive to the development of comparable trucking competition.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the west pays dearly for its position as captive shipper to the railroads. In eastern Canada, water and truck transportation pose serious competition to the railroads, and rail rates are consequently held down. But the railroads have compensated for these relatively low revenues by charging high rates in the west. Between 1948 and 1958, the rate disadvantage to prairie shippers was fostered by a series of horizontal or percentage increases authorized by the transport commissioners. The increases applied predominantly to commodities and areas lacking in alternative modes of carriage. Consequently, the prairie provinces suffer a competitive disadvantage for marketing raw and manufactured commodities in terms not only of distance to markets but of higher rates per ton mile than eastern shippers pay.

The net results has been the favouring of industry in Ontario and Quebec and the retardation, particularly of secondary industry, in Saskatchewan. The railroads have co-operated with eastern industrial interests in maintaining this disparity. The rapeseed crushing industry is a case in point. The present rate structure dictates that it costs only 65.7 cents to transport one hundred pounds of unprocessed rapeseed from Saskatoon to Montreal, while the combined cost of transporting the crushed products, oil and meal, from that one hundred pounds is 102.3 cents.

Although for a number of reasons it is more economical to produce oil and meal on the Prairies, this 34.8 cents cost differential per one hundred pounds makes it cheaper to ship rapeseed east for processing. Eastern crushers, in short, enjoy a competitive advantage due solely to the existence of discriminatory freight rates. When the prairie crushers applied to the Canadian Transport Commission for rate modifications, their application was opposed by the two railways, the eastern oilseed processors, and the province of Ontario.

Present developments in the rapeseed industry dangerously parallel the situation of the flour milling industry in eastern Canada, similarly caused by discriminatory rate structures. As a Saskatchewan Member of Parliament, I accept the point of view that our geographical disadvantage, in terms of distance to markets, is a fact to be lived with. But the west cannot be expected to subsidize low water and truck competitive rail rates in other regions of Canada where high rates prevail at the expense of diversification and development of local industry. The situation is particularly intolerable in view of the fact that the west is largely cut off from natural trading areas to the south and across the Pacific by protective tariffs. Our agricultural produce is sold in an international competitive market, yet, we must buy the manufactured products of eastern Canada. It is patently unjust that the west be hampered with discriminatory freight rates in developing its own secondary industry.

The national policy is explicitly opposed to the exploitation of one region by another. The evident tendency of the railways to persist in instituting rates prejudicial to industrial development in the west calls for stricter government control in rate setting. From this standpoint, the national transportation legislation of 1967 which allows the railways more freedom in instituting rate changes is a step backwards. As instruments of national policy, the railways cannot be permitted a role in the maintenance and promotion of regional disparity, by whatever device. The province of Saskatchewan has the most unfavourable transport position of the three prairie provinces, both from an import and export point of view. Our closest port is Churchill, at present limited to an 85 day season. Our main domestic markets for potash, pulp and lumber are in the mid west United States, a long all rail haul. Because of our central, land locked geographical location, our weak truck competition, and because the railways have been given the freedom under the National Transportation Act of 1967 to vary rates without reference to the regulatory authority, Saskatchewan makes the highest contributions to rail overhead costs on all rates, except export grain, of any province in Canada.

The railways perform certain services in the public interest for which they are paid subsidies. Since the passage of the National Transportation Act, some $410 million has been paid to the railways to the end of 1971. In addition, freight rates have been increased anywhere from 29 per cent to 67 per cent. In the intervening period, the railways have been confronted with enlarged export movements of coal, potash and grain. In fact, the railways have been unable to cope with the demand for certain freight services because of equipment shortages. Thus, potash sales go by the board because we cannot move it in sufficient quantities to Vancouver, and the federal government has to purchase 2,000 hopper cars for grain.

This brings me to a discussion of the National Transportation Act and some of the consequences of the removal of regulations in the railway system. The nub of the National Transportation Act of 1967 is expressed as follows:

> Regulation of all modes of transport will not be of such a nature as to restrict the ability of any mode of transport to compete freely with any other mode of transport.

Released from regulation of rates, except when the Canadian Transport Commission might be asked by a shipper to review a rate, the railways have adopted an almost automatic formula for rate increases—one in the spring and one in the fall—without having to account to any regulatory tribunal. Since 1967 the general freight rate level has increased, as I have stated, from 29 per cent to 67 per cent depending on whether or not the rates are between eastern and western Canada or within western Canada.

The reason we in western Canada are suffering a 67 per cent maximum increase in rates can be understood more readily if we examine the following figures relating to the province of Ontario. It has been estimated that in Ontario 65 per cent of all freight loaded is transported by truck, including well over 80 per cent of all manufactured goods. No such comparable situation exists in western Canada, and particularly in Saskatchewan. In Ontario and Quebec, competition has acted as a brake to increasing transport costs. In the west, longer distances, small plants and low production volume of secondary industry, sparse population, plus a dependence on primary agriculture and resource industry, have militated against a breakdown of the rail monopoly and we pay the penalty in higher rates.

What can we do about excessive freight rates? As I have mentioned in my brief summary, a shipper can appeal to the Canadian Transport Commission to review a freight rate if the rate seems "to prejudicially affect the public interest". If the shipper makes a prima facie case to the commission, the commission will hold hearings and conduct an investigation. The rapeseed crushers of Western Canada and the Prince Albert Pulp Co. are cases in point. In fact, they are the first major cases placed before the commission since the new act was put on the statute books.

The rapeseed hearings lasted five weeks in Saskatoon, plus additional hearings in Ottawa. Legal counsel represented the three prairie governments, the governments of Ontario and Quebec, the eastern and western crushers and the railways. The total cost will run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. Without the support of our three provincial governments, the rapeseed crushers could not have processed their legitimate case. The Prince Albert Pulp Co., seeking reductions in rates into the United States, had to proceed before the interstate commerce commission in the United States as well as the Canadian Transport Commission. Here, too the total costs will be in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. You can see that only large companies or governments can successfully cope with appeals against unjust freight rates at the present time. The dice are loaded in favour of the railways in so far as the average shipper is concerned and unequal-handed justice is dispensed from Montreal or Winnipeg.

I submit that the Canadian Transport Commission has shown, to date, a pro-rail bias. I had hoped that when Mr. Pickersgill retired, a person familiar with regional transport problems would be appointed chairman. In fact, representations to the federal government to this effect were made by western Canadian provincial governments. What happened? We got Mr. Benson. I do not want to prejudge the new chairman but we from the west, and people in the Atlantic provinces as well, are sick and tired of having our vital problems of transportation decided finally by retired Ontario politicians. We demand that amendments be made to the National Transportation Act to simplify appeals against unjust rates so that the average shipper has access to the commission. We want a bridle to be put on the seemingly insatiable demands of the railways for high rates. We want the railways to maintain an adequate level of service to western Canadian communities.

CNR and Air Canada

What is required, Mr. Speaker, in western Canada and in Saskatchewan specifically, is a national transportation policy which is directed toward regional development. Instead of milking the west and keeping it as a source of raw material, a determined regional and national effort must be made to broaden our industrial base. When present transportation policy is a deterrent, as it now is, that policy must be changed. We must use our transportation policy as a vehicle of regional development.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the hon. members who have spoken on this important subject this afternoon, and I am surprised that once again government members are not interested in what is happening with respect to the financing of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada. Apparently they believe that we should pass this item and proceed to another order of business. If this matter is not important, then obviously there is really not any point in discussing it.

I note that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Comtois) is here, but really this is a transportation matter and concerns something that has been the cause of a lot of problems to a lot of people over an extended period of time. A great deal of it centres around the financing of the railway. I have been glancing over some of the figures, and really nothing has changed. The last financial statement I have for the Canadian National is the annual report for 1971. All one needs to do is to read the general survey of the report. It shows gross revenues less non-rail revenues at $135 million. It shows operating revenues of $1,148.8 million, and expenses of $1,119.5 million. Net railway operating income was $21.3 million, other income $22.9 million, and net income before interest on debt $44.2 million. Net interest on debts totalled $68.5 million. That is the crux of the problem, Mr. Speaker. Are we going to be stupid enough to allow the government to continue something that has been recognized by most Members of Parliament for years as being in itself completely stupid? Or are we going to change the situation?

In the last parliament most of us decided that we would not pass the next financing bill of the Canadian National. So, an election took place. That situation does not exist now. I would like to know from the government how the hell it got around that situation. It has an obligation to tell us. What kind of tool did it use to do something it was not able to do in parliament? Did it use treasury bills to finance the Canadian National capitalization debt? Or did it just let the debt accumulate? It may seem as if this bill is a small item. My arithmetic is not good, but I have added up the figures and they come to approximately $486 million for the Canadian National and $270 million for Air Canada, which is about half a billion dollars for CN and a quarter of a billion dollars for Air Canada. To a Liberal government, the way it plays around with figures, that is not a sizeable amount of money, but we have not been given an explanation of what happened to the debt last year. It came to a total of $70 million. We did not pay that.

The reason that I and other members are interested in this is that the Canadian people have been told that they own the Canadian National, ever since the days of the Grand Trunk and the other railways that went broke.

That happened long before my time. But, Mr. Speaker, we have never paid for it. It is like buying an automobile and never becoming the owner of it. You pay the interest on the debt, and eventually the automobile wears out, so that you end up not owning anything. We still do not own anything in so far as the capital debt of the Canadian National is concerned. One does not have to go through the whole financial report to understand this. Most members are not competent to understand the financial report, and I confess to being one of them, although I have studied the CN report for a number of years and do know a small amount about it.

I know that in 1970 we paid $75.5 million as interest on debt, but before making that payment the railway had a net profit of $45.8 million. In effect, we have not reduced the debt at all. Some of that debt is owing to people who are long dead. Some of it carries an interest rate of 3 per cent in perpetuity. Bonds are still held by people in England and still carry an interest rate not unlike the previous one. This year the Canadian National Railways made a profit of $44.2 million, so it could have bought the hopper cars or established some branch lines or put a line into the Arctic if that were desirable. However, it could do none of those things because this year we have payment on the debt of $68½ million. In times of war or other times when we find that we cannot pay off the principal of the bonds we put that amount into the national debt and pay out of national revenues the amount necessary to carry that debt. The debt is to buy the railway, not to operate it. Is it not time that we decided to write off the debt so that we can look at what the railway is supposed to be doing?

This bill indicates that the loan to Air Canada will be limited to $1 billion. We are going to lend Canadian National $270 million, but this gets mixed up with what was originally the capital for the purchase of the railway and what is normal operating expenses. An examination of the financial structure will show who owns the shares in Canadian National Railways, and the exact interest rates being paid, but there is a division between capital expenditures being made for current operating purposes and the capitalization originally provided to buy the railway on which we pay this huge amount of interest.

Some hon. members have mentioned problems in their particular areas. In my riding of Timiskaming there is the wholly owned Northern Ontario Railway, the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Most of us know that the railways are not operating to the advantage of many areas in this country. They are not doing the job they should in the Maritimes or in northern Ontario. In fact, I believe they are not doing the job that they should in any part of Canada.

I was amused by a question which was asked today about amalgamating the services in Regina and Saskatoon. Many members from Ontario wonder what the improvement would be in the new service, and whether the service centres were going to eliminate the people working at the stations. Apparently a telephone service would enable you to order a boxcar or arrange for carload freight. It can all be done by a telephone call to the service centre. It has not worked to our advantage—the rates keep going up and the service keeps going down.

[Mr. Peters.]

Yesterday I boarded a plane at six o'clock and arrived in Ottawa a little after eleven o'clock. That is the kind of service that is provided in northern Ontario. It would only have taken an extra two hours to drive the distance. Most of my travel is around Ontario. Years ago I used to be able to get on a train, go to bed, and wake up in any of the major cities of the country. The other day I ordered a bedroom and I found that it cost $28. What do I get for that? I am sure I am not interested in the porter—they do not even have stewardesses on the train. I am not sure what I get for the $28 except that I am getting rooked. The price of a bedroom is a disgrace when nothing has been added since it used to cost $12. The railways are pricing themselves out of the market.

The annual report mentions that Canadian National has applied for abandonment of most of the passenger services in Canada. This is not because they want to get out of the passenger business but because the CTC said that unless they make the application for abandonment they are not entitled to the 80 per cent subsidy the government will provide. Mr. Speaker, we can do something about putting the Canadian National Railways on a sound national basis. We can pay off that debt so that we know what the railway is making. The railway is making a profit of $44 million, but the interest payment on the capital debt is $68½ million, leaving a deficit of $25 million. It seems to me that we must make some changes.

We have done some other foolish things in the area of transportation, Mr. Speaker. In this bill there is a reference to paying for an aircraft in sterling. Obviously, this would be one of the large superjets that we contemplated buying several years ago, the supersonic aircraft. No consideration has been given to building an airport for this type of aircraft which travels at three times the speed of sound. We have made no attempt to provide ground transportation to cope with such a modern society. We are still in the horse and buggy days—perhaps we have moved one step ahead, since we are no longer firing boilers with coal but have diesel engines now. However, that is all we have done. I am sure there is some Canadian National rolling stock still around which is steam driven and which has not been upgraded. I suggest that much of it is in the passenger service.

We are going to buy STOL aircraft to fly from Ottawa to Montreal. If we had a rapid transit system similar to the monorail in Japan which travels at speeds up to 300 miles an hour, it would be possible to travel from downtown Ottawa to downtown Montreal in one half the time required for STOL. There would be half the disadvantages of STOL. There would not be the dislocation of people and that sort of thing. We would not have to buck the traffic, nor would we have to drive on a speedway to the airport.

This is most amusing. In Ottawa, we built a speedway to the airport to facilitate traffic. We then allowed the National Capital Commission and the RCMP to use it as a source of revenue. In the city, the speed limit is 35 miles an hour and on the airport speedway, the limit is 30 miles an hour. Possibly the minister thinks that is a scenic drive and people will want to look around. I thought it was designed to speed up airport traffic, but that is not true. We drive faster in the city than on that blooming parkway. That is the way we run our transportation system. Everything is backwards. This is what is happening in all fields of transportation. We have not faced the major problems. We have not faced the problem of financing the railway. Until we solve our major problems, many other problems will remain unsolved.

There may not be much support for building a railroad to the Prudhoe Bay area. It may not be possible to haul gas and oil by tankcars. It may not be possible to build a line along the west shore of Hudson Bay into the high Arctic. It may not be possible to extend the railway from Pine Point to the Arctic. History will show that this is by far the most advantageous way of opening our north.

I know something about northern rail lines. There is one in northern Ontario which was built through 100 miles of muskeg. If you got off the ballast track there, you would have difficulty walking. This line goes through many miles of low land before reaching Moosonee, but it has not disrupted the ecology of the area. It is a year-round facility that meets the needs of that area and, in my opinion, it should be expanded to meet other needs. I am not suggesting the CNR should have three or four lines into the high Arctic. However, we should be considering a railway line into this area. Already there is talk about using air tankers to bring oil to Montreal. We should be considering a ground facility. However, the general public would not support such a proposal as long as we do not have the brains to eliminate the financing problem that has been carried on for almost 100 years since we bought the bankrupt railways at an exorbitant price. We have never been in a position to pay off the principal. We are still trying to carry the interest.

We should look at this financing bill in a realistic way. The government should have enough gumption to tell us how the problem was solved last year. If the government does not need parliament to pass this bill, then let us move on to another order of business. It the government is really interested in the development of transportation, they should be honest enough to tell us what is being financed. Does the government intend to use this money to give a 3 per cent or 4 per cent cost of living increase to the widows of those who retired from the CNR many years ago? Do they intend to increase the pension of retired railroad workers? Do they intend to purchase new equipment or are they going to continue to pay the debt under the guise of other methods of financing? Obviously, the government has used other methods in the past. Last year parliament did not pay $75 million. This must have been paid in some other way or added on to something else. Before considering this bill, we need answers to some of these serious questions.

I have often said that we in this party are not interested in maintaining a second Senate, the Canadian Transport Commission. This Commission has been totally unsuccessful in handling the problems of the railways and other transportation problems. We have the idiotic situation where a second airport is being built outside of Toronto. Because one was built near Montreal, we must build one near Toronto. Because a white elephant was built at Ste Scholastique, we must build a white elephant at Pickering. Surely, there is more to this country than satisfying the idiosyncrasies of the people who live in Toronto and Montreal. If one city gets something, the other must have the same.

If the Canadian Transport Commission is going to do anything, it will have to solve some of these idiotic problems. Parliament should make the commission deal with some of the problems which face individual Members of Parliament. The transportation system is not satisfactory in any part of Canada. All kinds of deals have been made over the years that no longer apply. Many concessions that were made are no longer applicable. If some of these problems were solved, it would help the disadvantaged areas of this country. Whenever I attend a meeting in northern Canada or the Maritimes, I am always informed that it is the transportation problems that retard development. If that is true, every member who represents those areas should violently object to the passage of this bill until the government tells us what the transportation policy of this country is.

Although there are only slightly more than 20 million people in this country, we have two international airlines, plus the charter airlines. It was decided that CP should service one half this country and Air Canada the other. Any reasonable government would amalgamate these two airlines. There are reasons for not amalgamating the railways. They have been around a long time. They have built-in peculiarities, and have been given all kinds of benefits. There may not be any equality in rail transportation unless we take the whole Canadian Pacific and the whole Canadian National and unite them. But that is not true of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines. This is the only country to my knowledge which allows itself the luxury of two international airlines, one going to the east and one going to the west. If Mr. Pratt has guts enough to stand up to the government it will be a surprise to me because he has never done so before. I congratulate him and I hope he wins in his fight to see that Air Canada goes into Italy. Why not? This area does not appear to me to be in Asia or the far east. It appears, to me, to be close to Central Europe. If the old agreement were in force, Air Canada would have control of all the developments in the western area.

We should amalgamate those two air services. They should be considered as one agency, an agency of which Canadians should be proud and which they could use to make travel arrangements whether they were going east or west. We could call it whatever we liked. One of the largest airlines in the world is BOAC. Just a few months ago it amalgamated with its domestic counterpart. These companies, in England, were handling overseas, domestic and charter business. The decision has now been taken to amalgamate for the sake of efficiency, and I believe this decision meets with the approval of most people around the world who have become accustomed to using BOAC and identifying it with Britain.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to Canadian Pacific. If Canadian Pacific wants to take over Air Canada I would probably not have much objection. However, I think it is idiotic to allow these two large airlines, one in the east and one in the west, to operate as national airlines when we are such a small population in such a large area, and when so little service is provided in certain areas. I am sure that even some of those who would not like to see Canadian Pacific taken over would agree that we in Canada are not getting service in feeder line areas. A while ago we decided to give northern Ontario to Nordair. Nordair does not want it. Nordair wants the line into Toronto because it is a paying proposition. But they don't want to go into northern Ontario. They don't want to go into Val d'Or. They don't want to go to Rouyn. They don't want to go to Timmins. They don't want to go to Sudbury. They want to fly from Montreal to Toronto.

If Air Canada had all the air routes in Canada, I am sure that what they lost on the apples they would make up on the oranges. They could run the overseas flights and they could run the trans-Canada flights—yes, and they could run flights into the areas represented by the hon. members to my right and give them better service to the main distribution points. I am sure that since it is a northern riding the minister is aware of many places from which people find it difficult to find scheduled flights to the north or south. That is true all across this country.

I am, personally, of the opinion that first things should come first.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Most members of the House in the last parliament were agreeable to the proposition that the first thing to be done involved the financing of the Canadian National Railways. Then, we would decide what was to be done about the company's capital structure. There is no question that Canadian National will need to borrow money. But any money borrowed to expand the railway should be money that the company is capable of repaying. But when we saddled the company with a debt which the company inherited when it came into being,—and, remember, it is parliament which always picks up the interest on this debt—it occurs to me that we did not buy this service; we just borrowed it from somebody and are just keeping up the payments. It is high time we did something about this situation.

Mr. Speaker, the government does not appear to be interested. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is not here. I do not know whether the parliamentary secretary is here or not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. Peters: I don't know who he is, so naturally I do not know if he is here or not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Mr. Peters: Well, he may have to travel back here by rail and in that case we may not see him until after Easter. If he does travel by rail, he will be doing his job. I am sure most Members of Parliament have not been on a train for years and years. I am sure the Minister of Transport has not been on a train for years. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has just disillusioned me by saying the parliamentary secretary was here earlier in the day and that he is therefore unlikely to be traveling around in the train finding out about the system.

What I am saying, though, is that there does not appear to be much interest in the subject we are discussing. Yet it is an important subject. I am of the opinion that Canada has not outgrown the railways, that there is a need in this country today for railways and that this need will continue for a long time to come. In particular, those who come from northern areas are well aware that when an area is developed by railroad there is a permanency to the development which cannot be brought about in any other way. It has certainly not been achieved by highway development. I believe this is true of the developments in Labrador, of the developments in Newfoundland, of the developments in northern Ontario and other regions.

It is interesting to note that northern Ontario developed and became a recognizable area only when the government of Ontario was forced to build the Colonial Railroad. When they did so silver and cobalt were found, and that is how Toronto was born. Before that, there were cabbage towns with few people and little money. After the railroad went into northern Ontario, nickel was found in Sudbury, gold was found in Kirkland Lake and Timmins, copper was found in the area and for years we supported the people of Toronto out of these resources. All this came about as a result of the Ontario Northland Railway. I am sure this is equally true of the developments in western Canada, of the developments in the Northwest Territories, in the uranium field at Pine Point and I am sure it is true of the development in Wabush. Lake St. John, I am sure, has a similar story to tell and I suggest there will be other sagas of railroading to be written in days to come about extension into the high Arctic in the centre, in the east and through the Yukon. They will make very interesting reading. They will make much better reading if we take from around the neck of the Canadian National the debt we hung there a hundred years ago, make it part of the national debt and make the interest payment direct from the treasury.

Obviously, this is a debt which the railway company cannot pay, one which it will never be able to pay, and one which is now being compoundied through bills of the kind before us which ask for specific amounts of money, in this particular case half a billion dollars, which appears to be required for capital expenditure. According to financial statements of the past, the company has been able to undertake capital expenditures in the past from its own funds after allowing for depreciation, the writing off of assets, and so on. But the railway has never been able to write off the debt which it inherited when the company was founded. In fact, the government has usually assumed the burden of the interest payments. It is true that in recent years the company made a payment of $25 million. Most of the money, however, comes out of general revenue, and it seems that this is the major problem we face.

The present government will, I am sure, make no change in transportation Policy. No change will be made for two reasons. First, the government will not admit that the Canadian Transport Commission which it devised, and which parliament established, and which I voted for because I thought it would serve an important purpose, has, in fact, failed to do the job for which it was set up. The Commission has failed to set any kind of reasonable policy. The CTC has also failed the general public in its approach to Bell Telephone and its tariff rates. It has failed the general public with regard to making mandatory, service to the population in areas that need service. It has been used as a kind of Senate for retired politicians who did not want to return to their former practice, and has really met Dawson's requirements for politics in Canada that there must always be a body to which politicians who have served their usefulness can retire without getting into any difficulty.

● (1630)

Mr. Baldwin: I thought he was in the NDP.

Mr. Peters: When I studied Dawson there was no NDP, so I cannot be accused of using that. I suggest that the government take a serious look at the Canadian Transport Commission and at our whole transportation policy. We should take a look also at road transportation policy and at some of the legal decisions that have been made which allow interprovincial transportation to flow along our highways. Obviously, we must provide some rules and regulations governing this flow, and in this field I suggest we have totally failed.

Why does the government not look in the mirror and ask itself why it has not proclaimed Part III of the National Transportation Act? Why has it not got around the proclaiming what, in effect, was to be the guts of the National Transportation Act? I was one of those who supported the legislation. We did not set up the Canadian Transport Commission just to be an agency for retired politicians, or to decide whether Bell should get another five cents on its telephone bills, or whether it was just and reasonable that people in remote areas should have rail transporation available to them. Neither did we set it up to decide rail abandonment. We set it up so that it and not parliament would decide our transportation policy for the next 30 to 40 years.

The commission has the necessary expertise and we gave them legislation which allowed for greater leeway than most other agencies have been allowed. Yet it has failed totally. In fact, problems have got worse rather than better. I suggest—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-164, I want to say at the outset that I concur with a number of the remarks which were made by my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), particularly with his reference to the failure of the government to implement Part III of the National Transportation Act which, in essence, constitutes the spirit of that legislation. I also concur with his remarks in respect of the manoevring and manipulation that have taken place in regard to Bill C-4, the previous CNR financing bill which died on the order paper in the last parliament, and the introduction of this particular piece of legislation.

I believe it is rather disturbing that, after a lapse of more than a year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has now introduced Bill C-164 to cover the financial operations of Air Canada and the CNR for the period January 1, 1973 to June 30, 1974, and then implies through his parliamentary secretary that it should be disposed of without delay. The previous bill Bill C-4, covered the operations of the CNR and Air Canada for the period January 1, 1971 to June 30, 1972. As hon. members know, it was never ratified by parliament. It was not even submitted to committee for study. As a result, a number of questions arise. I suggest that this bill should not be proceeded with or sent to committee until some of the questions that arise have been answered.

The first question is this. If Bill C-4 was to have been the vehicle providing for the authorization of certain sums of money to meet capital requirements for the operations of Air Canada and the CNR for the period January 1, 1972 to June 30, 1972, how was the business of Air Canada and the CNR transacted during this period without the ratification of parliament? Or is this bill simply a "nothing" matter which is used as a piece of filler legislation?

The second question is this. Inasmuch as Bill C-4 covered the period from January 1, 1971 to June 30, 1972 and Bill C-164, the bill we are now dealing with, covers the period January 1, 1973 to June 30, 1974, what has happened in regard to the six-month period of July 1, 1972 to December 31, 1972? Were no moneys expended during this period, or is there some other form of interim financing of carte blanche approval granted which in effect nullifies the necessity for these bills being presented annually? I suggest that this indeed is a very frustrating exercise and a questionable manoeuvre. Surely, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) should explain their actions in this regard.

We all are all frequently reminded of the days when this government had a huge majority which on many occasions it exercised to circumvent the will of parliament. We experienced the failure of the government to pay necessary sums under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and also the difficulties with the Unemployment Insurance Act. Therefore, we ask ourselves whether this is simply another example of the type of arrogance that has been displayed in past days. I ask the government what held it back from proceeding with this measure in the last parliament. It had a huge majority and certainly had ample time to bring the bill forward and push it through committee.

As near as I can determine—I stand to be corrected since I am not a legal expert, a lawyer, or an authority on the operations of the Financial Administration Act or the CNR financing act—it appears to me very clear that the government has circumvented the role of parliament and acted in a manner which, in my opinion, is contrary to the provisions of the CNR act and the Financial Administration Act. If there is a legal loophole in this connection, I believe that one of the ministers of the Crown owes it to the House to explain what the loophole is; then, and only then, can we judge the importance of and the priority that should be given to this bill.

A third question arises, Mr. Speaker, and that is the question of the appointment of auditors, a matter alluded to by members who have spoken before me. Bill C-4 provided for the appointment of new auditors. However, as a result of that bill not being ratified to we have that section in this bill. Section 38 of the Canadian National Railways Act reads:

CNR and Air Canada

● (1640)

A continuous audit of the accounts of National Railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by Parliament who shall annually report to Parliament in respect of their audit.

I simply want to ask what firm is now doing the auditing for the CNR and Air Canada. Are they being paid and, if so, under what authority? The parliamentary secretary offered an explanation in his submission when introducing the bill in the House last Friday. He pointed out that the auditing would be done on a rotating basis, and also that the rotating auditors would be appointed for a five to six year term. This would probably be an acceptable compromise.

No mention was made in Bill C-4 of the possibility of rotating auditors; there was simply a section dealing with the appointment of a new firm of auditors, namely the firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company, a change from the traditional group of Touche, Ross and Co. There was no explanation as to why the change was being implemented. Of course, parliament never really had the opportunity to deal with the matter in any great detail. I would simply ask whether this was a decision taken unilaterally by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, and was it a reward for services rendered in past years to the firm of Peat, Marwick & Mitchell. We all know that the government looks after its friends and that it also looks after its defeated candidates. I am wondering what the government is trying to hide.

An hon. Member: Patronage.

Mr. Mazankowski: If everything is above board, Mr. Speaker, why has the government failed to produce the documents to which I have referred in notice of motion for papers No. 77 which reads:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents between the Minister of Finance and/or other responsible Ministers, and the auditing firms of Touche, Ross and Co., Peat, Marwick and Mitchell, in connection with the auditing services for Air Canada and Canadian National Railways.

This question has remained on the order paper since January, 1973, yet to this date I have received no reply, nor have I received the documentation in question. I simply ask what the government is trying to hide and what is going on here.

I should like to know why the 1972 budget for Canadian National was not tabled in this House until Thursday, February 8, 1973. If that is a normal occurrence, I suppose the government can offer that explanation. I simply ask in all sincerity why there was that kind of a delay, and why we have not had either an audited statement in respect of the CNR and Air Canada for 1972 or the annual reports. Is this because we do not have a firm of auditors ratified by parliament which could provide an audited statement and an annual report? What happens if parliament, in its wisdom, decides not to approve Clause 14 of Bill C-164, which provides for the appointment of two auditing firms? In view of the type of explanation we have been getting in respect of this particular facet of the bill, parliament may not see fit to pass this clause. Let me reiterate the fact that under the provisions of Bill C-4 there was simply a change in the firm of auditors to be appointed.

When the parliamentary secretary introduced this bill he said, as reported at page 3297 of Hansard for April 13:

If the policy of rotating auditors were adopted, we should have to study carefully the frequency of the rotation. Evidently, the duration of the assignment should not be too short, because, otherwise, the auditors would hardly have enough time to familiarize themselves with the operations of the company and the intricacies of its accounting system, not to mention the special accounting requirements of the Canadian Transport Commission.

On the other hand, the long-term appointments made in the past covered far too long periods. Consequently, it was agreed that a five to six years' appointment would be an acceptable compromise, the first year and the last year to be overlapping periods during which two auditing firms would be hired.

Under Clause 14 of Bill C-164 we find that the firm of Peat, Marwick and Mitchell will be the auditors for the year which has concluded, 1972, and for the year 1973 we have the firm of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company and the firm of Coopers & Lybrand, both of the cities of Toronto and Montreal. For the year 1974, we will have the firm of Coopers & Lybrand. Those facts do not coincide with the policy enunciated by the parliamentary secretary. I should like to know if this is a makeshift change which came about as a result of an embarrassing situation which the government found itself in, or is this simply a form of corruption?

An hon Member: It is Liberal corruption.

Mr. Mazankowski: Those are some of the questions in respect of which I believe this House requires an explanation. In my opinion, if these financing bills have any legal connotation whatever, then no firm of auditors, whether it be Touche, Ross and Co. or Peat, Marwick and Mitchell, have the authority to carry out the auditing services for the CNR and Air Canada. That being the case, I would ask the appropriate ministers of the Crown to explain this situation. Is this simply another example of this government's arrogance and inability to bring forward its legislation in an orderly manner? Whatever the answer, we should have some explanation.

Let me now turn to the nitty-gritty of the bill, and deal first with the operations of Air Canada and CNR. It should be clearly established that these two organizations form a vital and integral part of our transportation network in this country, and provide as suggested in Section 3 of the National Transportation Act:

—and economic efficient and adequate transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to protect the interests of the users of transportation and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada, and that these objectives are most likely to be achieved when all modes of transport are able to compete under conditions ensuring that having due regard to national policy and to legal and constitutional requirements—

When examining the operations of the CNR and Air Canada, I believe we must examine their performance in the light of this statutory statement of policy. There is no question in my mind, nor I am sure in the minds of hon. members in this House, that air transportation is a vitally important aspect of the development of Canada with its problems in respect of distance, sparse population and the development of various regions including the north.

At the present time it is interesting to note the game that is taking place between the Chairman of Air Canada and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Much has been said in the House and in the press about the desirability of cutting up the aviation pie, as it has been referred to by my friends to the left. We should be under no illusions in this House that the Chairman of Air Canada is anything but one of the government's boys. I am sure that during his numerous discussions with the Minister of Transport, to which he has alluded on a number of occasions, everything has been rosy. I am sure they are dedicated to the same purposes and principles. I do not believe there is any conflict between the two.

● (1650)

The chairman of Air Canada is concerned about profit and protection. He believes competition is bad. Well, one can wonder how much less competition he really wants. After all Air Canada controls 75 per cent of Canadian air passenger service while Canadian Pacific Air Lines gets 25 per cent. Therefore, the growth of Canadian Pacific Air Lines and its penetration is predicated upon the growth and penetration of Air Canada. So, why the concern? Whatever Air Canada's competition may be, it will never exceed more than 25 per cent of the Canadian market because of the present policy. As a businessman this is very difficult for me, and I am sure for anyone who has ever been in business, to understand, especially in view of the remarks of the chairman of Air Canada who suggests that competition is bad for business. He suggests it is bad for the customer and bad for the company. This is particularly difficult to understand in view of the fact that Air Canada is assured of a 75-25 per cent allocation of the market.

I believe basic business principles apply equally to big business and small business. I sincerely believe competition is the lifeblood of business. In my opinion, it creates innovation and attracts technological advancement. I believe competition can provide a higher standard of service for the customer, in this case the travelling public. I believe customer satisfaction is a key to profit. I submit that the chairman of Air Canada, rather than running around in an effort to generate a certain amount of sympathy for Air Canada, would do better to examine his organization and direct his effort toward improving the service. He should be broadening airline service to more Canadians in this country. I also believe that competition can serve to reduce waste and inefficiency. If waste and inefficiency were reduced, this also would be beneficial to the customer and indeed to the corporation. Moreover, competition can create a challenge which in turn would help improve harmony and morale within the organization. This is something which obviously is lacking in the general structure of Air Canada.

I think competition creates a desire, if you are number one, to remain number one or if you are number two to try harder because you are aware that there is someone else knocking on the door. If a person has any dedication or loyalty to the company for which he is working, he will try harder if the company should be in the top spot to retain that position or if it should be in the second spot he will try harder to get it to the top. I think this is a situation which places everyone on their toes. It creates a climate in which people pull together in an effort to do the job and serve the public. This is what Air Canada should be directing itself toward.

An hon. Member: It does.

Mr. Mazankowski: Some one said "it does". I just want to refer to a situation which developed in the Ottawa region last fall. I do not know which of the 19 or 20 vice-presidents is responsible for this. I refer to the method of placing a reservation in Ottawa. After midnight it can result in a real fiasco. With the advent of Tel-Pack, which was introduced last fall, all reservations, I understand, are now placed through the city of Montreal. This has resulted in what must be one of the lousiest reservation services in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Anyone who has had the experience of attempting to make a reservation after midnight will know that he may have to hang on to a telephone for periods of from a half hour to an hour. I am sure my friend, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), who I am sorry to say is not in the House at the present time has had this experience. He has been conducting a little campaign to draw this situation to the attention of the appropriate authorities. This is an absolute disgrace. When one cannot contact the national airline after midnight at its home base without this kind of a delay something is certainly rotten. To me, this is an example of a big league airline operating with bush-league business practices.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are quite right.

Mr. Mazankowski: Whichever vice-president is responsible for this situation and has not had the common sense to overcome or improve it should have his ears chewed off. Furthermore, the chairman of Air Canada should acquaint himself with the situation and provide the necessary staff to do a proper job in order to ensure the calibre of service the public really deserves. I suggest that this situation will not be improved simply by a reduction of competition and more protection for Canada's national airline.

We wonder also about the effect of the decentralization of Air Canada's operations. We know that part of the servicing organization was moved from Winnipeg to Montreal.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order No. 40, to advise the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour)—

Pollution—Qu'appelle Lakes, Sask.—Implementation of recommendations in report; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Income Tax—Practice of discounting tax rebate cheques—request for government regulation; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Canadian Culture—Multiculturalism—policy of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): May I call it a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker? Reference was made to the fact that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) and I were not in the House this afternoon. I should like to have it on the record that the reason both of us were not in the House this afternoon was that we were meeting a very important delegation from western Canada pertaining to the same matter that has been under discussion in the House this afternoon.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF LAND AND BUILDINGS AT CANADIAN FORCES STATION LADNER TO MUNICIPALITY OF DELTA, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of transferring the Crown lands, commonly known as the Canadian Forces Station Ladner or the Old Boundary Bay Airport, together with the buildings thereon, to the municipality of Delta and, in co-operation with the municipality, develop the areas as an industrial-recreational complex of pollution-free secondary industries, parkland, ocean beaches and sports stadia for the benefit of Delta, Richmond and the Lower Mainland and as an example to other medium-sized urban and suburban communities of the value of such a complex.

He said: Mr. Speaker, possibly no greater opportunity exists for the government to contribute to the over-all development of an area with a minimum capital investment than in the Boundary Bay area of the municipality of Delta in British Columbia. In co-operation with the municipality of Delta, there exists an area with potential for development as an industrial-recreational complex comprised of pollution free secondary industry, parkland, ocean beaches, and sports facilities. This complex would benefit not only the residents of Delta and Richmond, but also the entire lower mainland of B.C. and could serve as an example to other medium-sized urban and suburban communities.

We have already seen the federal government propose multi-million dollar developments for the Toronto waterfront and we have an idea of the benefit that will be accorded the citizens of the entire metropolis. We have seen how multi-million dollar expenditures on Montreal's Expo have served to benefit the citizens of Montreal by completely changing an area that previously offered very little. Benefits of similar proportion can be accomplished in the area to which I am referring with an investment of one fraction the amount of money. But the government must take positive steps now if these goals are to be achieved.

For example, at this particular site there is an airport hangar which at the present moment is of little value. With modifications, and again limited expenditure, this facility could be turned into an arena to serve the needs of the thousands of children and sports enthusiasts in one of the fastest growing areas in Canada. The miles of beaches that are presently not being used for recreational purposes could be transformed into one of the finest beach areas in the province with limited federal spending. In addition, the very real possibility exists of turning the entire Boundary Bay area into a vital tax resource for all levels of government. With limited government investment, the existing Boundary Bay airport could become the lower mainland's principal airport for small private aircraft in the years to come. The tendency over the past decade has been to segregate the larger aircraft from smaller aircraft used for business and utility purposes. One of the most costly items in the construction of any airport is in the initial acquisition of land, but in this case the land, with an existing airport, is already there. The principal cost now is in maintenance rather than in acquisition.

It would be in the best interests of all who carry on business from the Burnaby-Richmond-Delta and lower mainland area to have an active local airport for small private aircraft at this location. In addition, the advantages are obvious to those interested primarily in the recreational facilities which could be incorporated virtually hand in hand. New businesses would be attracted to the Delta area by virtue of the fact that they could locate near an airport which could effectively and efficiently carry personnel to their branch plants. The airport would thus aid in the growth of the area and offer greater employment opportunities in the entire mainland area.

New facilities will be necessary to support this industry and thus contribute to the over-all economy of the area. Possibly some of the smaller firms presently located at the Vancouver international airport will move due to the high lease rates and the overcrowding. This, in turn, will permit an orderly expansion of the present facilities at the Vancouver international airport. Boundary Bay airport is already built and is served by good access roads. There is no other area that is so capable of incorporating the airport, an industrial complex and a recreational complex all in one, each one nurturing the other, and each one complementing the other.

Possibly, the former Centralia air force base could be regarded as an example of an industrial development which became successful because of its airport. But no such undertaking can be successful without a proper environmental impact study carried out with respect to the implementation of this proposal. It is appreciated that an environmental impact study cannot be completed overnight, but the long-range program in this case is of such importance and of such over-all benefit to the people concerned that virtually everyone is prepared to accept the fact that time is required. But what is most important is that the government consider this proposal, consider the advantages, consider the need for a recreational area, consider the need for additional job-creating light industry, consider the quickly disappearing waterfront recreational land available and commit itself to an in depth study with the minimum amount of delay. The corporation of Delta is prepared to assist in the establishment of a joint environmental study of the available facilities, and the council will render all possible assistance and co-operation to the federal authorities.

In conclusion, given the existing ingredients and the land availability, and given the spirit of co-operation among all levels of government as well as between ministerial offices, there is herein the opportunity not only to set an example in this field but to provide jobs through the creation of pollution free light industry and to afford a recreational facility for thousands of residents of the entire lower mainland. Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to consider and act upon this motion.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this motion, I should like to associate myself with the mover and seconder. I think it is a splendid idea that a motion such as this should be brought forth at this time, and hon. members should have an opportunity to debate it briefly on the floor of the House of Commons for it is my hope that we will see the motion sent to committee for study. I do not know the coastal part of B.C. as well as I know the interior where I have lived for many years but, having lived in the Vancouver district for a considerable period of time, I do know that the Boundary Bay area could be made into one of the outstanding environmental playgrounds on the Pacific coast. Having been a member of the B.C. legislature, I am aware of the fact that on numerous occasions over the years we have had briefs from various groups in the area urging that action be taken provincially to preserve many of the fine beaches to which the mover of the motion has referred.

A subject, in which all members are clearly interested and which was mentioned in the address we just heard, is the environmental studies. I urge the federal government to look into this part of the motion without delay. There is no reason why a sound environmental impact study could not be launched at this time, and I agree with the mover of the motion that it will take some time for an adequate study to be undertaken and for the results of that study to be assessed. We should not delay. Time is of the essence. The growing community of Vancouver and the whole Fraser valley area is in need of further recreational facilities, and here is an opportunity for the government to do something which would assist in setting this area aside for all time for the purposes outlined in the motion.

I know that it takes time for the wheels of government to get rolling and for the government take action. But again I am going to suggest to the government that they refer this motion to the appropriate committee for the necessary studies and I hope that it will pass the House of Commons this afternoon. Our group is certainly interested in seeing studies of this nature carried out, and we will certainly endorse the resolution which has been presented to the House this afternoon.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the motion. The Department of Transport accepted the transfer of the former RCAF station, Ladner, in June, 1972. Discussions concerning the future of the airport have been held and representations have been received involving the corporation of Delta, the Canadian Owners and Pilots Association, Walter Industries of Canada Limited, officials of DOE and the Department of Transport.

● (1710)

I see no objection to considering the advisability of transferring the land to the municipality of Delta for the use described in the notice of motion, at the same time as consideration is being given to the feasibility of a number of alternative uses of the property. However, I wish to make it clear that by agreeing to the motion neither I, the minister nor the government is giving any undertaking that the lands will be transferred to the municipality or, if they are transferred, will be used as suggested in the motion.

A careful study, and here I agree with the hon. member, will be carried out into desirable uses of the property, bearing in mind all the conflicting interests which are involved, and the interest of the public in those uses, before any final decision is arrived at by the department.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I see two hon. members rising on points of order, the hon. member for Assiniboia and the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any other motion to be dealt with during private members hour today, and in view of the importance of the motion just passed and of the springtime nature of the day, I think we might come to agreement to adjourn at this time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in view of the considerable amount of business dealt with this afternoon, I must agree with the hon. member.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, it would seem appropriate, on a day like today, when a motion like this has been passed concerning what we call sunny Delta, the sunshine capital, and since this is the sunniest day in Ottawa since I have been here, that we should adjourn.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently everybody sees it as six o'clock. It being six o'clock, or thereabouts, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At 5.16 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURE AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Prior to private members' hour, Mr. Speaker, I touched briefly on the matter of Air Canada and its policy of centralization, particularly in respect of the servicing and maintenance of aircraft. It seems to me that a number of questions arise as a result of this policy, particularly with the advent of the wide-bodies jets, the L-1011 and the 747. I believe these aircraft lay-over in the Vancouver area, and in my opinion it would make for a very efficient operation to carry out a certain amount of servicing and maintenance in Vancouver.

The other question is, what happens to the Dorval facilities when Ste. Scholastique goes into operation? There will be a certain amount of cost and inconvenience in ferrying aircraft from one airport to the other in order to carry out necessary maintenance. On the whole broad question one can only ask whether the concept of centralization has given the greater degree of efficiency in service and maintenance to Air Canada. Also, is the policy of centralization consistent with the policy of the federal government which has announced in many areas its attempt to decentralize operations.

I would be remiss if I failed to point out a matter which rather alarms me in the 1971 annual report of Air Canada. Are the huge costs of sales and promotion justified? Something in the order of $75.6 million was spent on sales and promotion to move 7.4 million passengers. That works out to $10 per passenger ticket. We might also ask whether Air Canada is utilizing these funds to take quarter-page ads in the Globe and Mail to push air traffic to Hawaii via Los Angeles through the Pan American system. We also wonder whether the administrative cost of $23.8 million, which works out to approximately $3 per passenger ticket, is justified. We question whether there could be any shaving of administrative expenditures, particularly in light of the fact that there are 19 or 20 vice-presidents on the Air Canada board of directors.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

We also wonder about the desirability of the purchase of Wardair by Air Canada. It has been said that it was purchased because of its leadership in the charter field. But, Mr. Speaker, Air Canada controls 34 per cent of all charter traffic in Canada, while Wardair has roughly 27 per cent and Canadian Pacific approximately 10 per cent. In short, Air Canada handles more passengers on a summer weekend than Wardair does in a year, yet in putting its case before the Air Transport committee the argument was that Air Canada required a great amount of expertise in the movement of large numbers of people.

This argument seems to me invalid and I wonder what the real reason was for Air Canada's purchase of one-third of the interest of Wardair. Was it simply because the IDB has a huge investment in Wardair and the loan was to some extent in jeopardy? These are questions that must be answered, Mr. Speaker, because the argument put forth by Air Canada, namely, that it needed to acquire Wardair's expertise in the movement of large numbers of people, does not hold water in my opinion. On the broad picture we wonder whether this monopoly will bring about cheaper air fares for the travelling public, or will it breed more inefficiency and protection for Air Canada while in effect depriving passengers of freedom of choice?

I turn now to the matter of air service as it pertains to western Canada, particularly the cities of Edmonton and Calgary. I note with interest that Air Canada plans to expand its regional air service in northern Ontario. I have no argument with that because I realize it is important to have adequate air service in all parts of Canada. However, it seems to me rather inconsistent with Air Canada's policy, because over the years it has been attempting to get away from handling regional air traffic. It gave up the route between Calgary and Edmonton and left a void which was very successfully filled by Pacific Western Airlines.

I believe that Edmonton and Calgary deserve a direct link to the nation's capital; indeed, I believe that every provincial capital deserves a direct link to the nation's capital. What we in western Canada need is greater frequency of service. We do not necessarily need huge jets like the L-1011 and 747, but more DC-8 and DC-9 jets to connect with eastern and western Canada. We need more flights and additional international links with the United States.

● (2010)

Bilateral talks have been going on for some time. Edmonton is desirous of obtaining a link with Minneapolis-St. Paul. This has been talked out for years. The time has come when this service should become a reality. The advent of wide-bodied jets such as the L-1011 and the 747 will undoubtedly cut down further on our frequency of service. We do not want the frequency of service decreased. With these large jets, Air Canada will be more concerned about moving larger numbers of people rather than increasing service for these areas.

The cities of Calgary and Edmonton have grown and matured to the stage where they should have a direct link with Ottawa, rather than going through Toronto. There is quite a campaign going on in the city of Toronto about who wants airplanes flying around, and who does not. The travelling public in western Canada who are heading to Ottawa would very much appreciate going around the bottleneck that exists at Toronto airport.

I want to summarize my presentation on air service by quoting from a study which was conducted by the Transportation and Development Authority of Calgary. The study is entitled "Air Service Requirements of Calgary, 1972-1976." I believe there are some valid points in this report. The report can be applied to many areas throughout Canada. I want to put this on record for consideration by the minister and others who are interested in the air transportation industry. I wish to quote from page 9 where the recommendation is as follows:

First, there is a growing tendency for regional carriers to assume responsibility for regional services, thus relieving Air Canada of that responsibility and weakening the agreement that Air Canada's financial position must be protected from serious transcontinental competition.

The next factor is something I pointed out earlier:

Second, there are numerous benefits to be realized from allowing competition. These include increases in frequency, quality, and efficiency. Third, the analyses upon which present restrictions were developed were conducted six years ago. Fourth, there is no certainty that the transcontinental market, given better service, would not be capable of supporting competition. Fifth, the present restrictions will not permit the gradual implementation of effective competition as the transcontinental markets expands.

These are good recommendations and should be considered when reviewing the over-all air transportation policy both in Canada and in respect of our international air service.

Throughout my presentation I may have sounded somewhat critical of the operations of Air Canada, but I want to say that I am very proud of Canada's national airline. There are a lot of dedicated people who work for that airline. However, I want to assure Your Honour that there has been a great deal of degeneration and deterioration in the service and, indeed, in the morale of the people who work for the airline.

The management should take a very close and hard look at their operations. I urge the chairman of Air Canada and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to stop playing this superficial game of cat-and-mouse and get on with the job of serving Canada's air travelling needs. They can encourage a greater degree of pride, initiative and dedication for the people who have worked so hard and have dedicated themselves to making Air Canada an efficient and proficient airline.

I want to deal briefly with the servocentre concept as it relates to Canadian National Railways. Much of what has been said about the implementation of the servocentre concept has been negative. I want to go on record as being totally against the concept of the servocentre. It is a sophisticated computer network. Canadian National have advised that the concept is not being initiated simply for economic reasons. If that is the case, we must ask for whose benefit the servocentre concept is being developed. Certainly it is not for the patrons of the railways.

Over the past number of years we have witnessed the closing of railway stations in smaller centres throughout western Canada. The business has not been funnelled to the larger centres. It has been lost. We do not have anything now to prove that it will be transferred to the larger centres. When station operators are taken out of communities of 4,000 and 5,000 people, there is a drop in business accruing to the railways. There has been a great deal of centralization, with a number of smaller communities losing their station operators. The customers expect personalized service. They want a representative on hand, particularly with the degree of rationalization that has taken place to this date. How can anyone expect from a centralized computer center the kind of personal service he deserves? CN representatives say they will improve service by offering a Zenith telephone number and periodic visits by the customer representative. This has not worked in the past and it will not work now.

CN and CP are guilty of deliberately withdrawing from their responsibility of providing express service and passenger communications service to hundreds of small communities in Canada. I believe it is deliberate. If one looks at the stations now in existence, they see that they are the most run-down buildings in the communities. This is really disheartening, because to lose the CN or CP agent is to lose a very prominent citizen. He is one who has actively participated in the various activities of the community. To lose an on-hand representative is certainly very discouraging.

An application for a servocentre concept has been made in my community of Vegreville. Upon examining the revenues derived from that particular station, we found that one-third of the revenue generated was derived from passenger sales, express and communications services. One-third of all the revenue from that station comes from this source. I believe the CN should have an on-hand representative to properly look after this business and promote additional services.

In view of the fact the minister and the government have undertaken to examine the transportation needs and the economic opportunities of western Canada over the next year or so, I recommend that while this review is going on there should be an indefinite postponement of any further abandonment of station operators and the closing of these facilities. We cannot allow this to continue without having some knowledge of what the future holds with regard to the total transportation picture and the matter of rail line abandonment. We now have a number of studies which relate to the abandonment of a number of lines and elevators. This will ultimately result in reducing the number of elevators and the number of serviceable lines by approximately one-third. I urge the minister and this government to use their good offices to encourage CNR to stop this deliberate degredation of rural Canada. I see my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, since Friday, I have been carefully listening to my hon. friends' speeches and unlike most of them, I do not feel compelled to use all my time, because I intend to clearly state my views instead of hearing myself talking and putting hon. members to sleep.

We are now studying Bill C-164, an act to authorize the provision of moneys for two Crown corporations. As it is asked by the government, we have to approve capital expenditures for the CNR and Air Canada.

Through the Governor General's recommendation we can evaluate that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is requesting an aggregate amount of $225,500,000 for the capital expenditures of the CN in 1973, $75 millions for the capital expenditures for the six first months of 1974, $167,-500,000 to enter into contracts for new equipment, and finally, $21 millions for branch lines loans, and I do not know whether those $21 millions will be used by officials to branch out or only to take root in a foolish administration. Mr. Speaker, we are asked to approve $489 millions to maintain a business which is poorly run, without convenient service, which is 25 years behind and to perpetuate a stupid administration.

We heard Western members—conservative members because there are no liberals in those areas—members from Central provinces and Eastern Canada, and all of us have explained with numerous examples how rotten the present service is, the decrease in passenger service and the incompetency of CN officials.

Mr. Speaker, considering the way in which the government manages that type of undertaking, we wonder whether the people in charge of the CN are even slightly competent. It may even be that they are so incompetent as to be unable to carve out a peg to plug up a hole.

Mr. Speaker, this company is said to be responsible to Parliament. It is quite willing to ask for credit, but what control does the government exercise over it? None whatsoever, to the extent that towards the end of the recommendation in the bill, it is said, and I quote:

> . . . such loans to be repaid from revenues of the Railway Company and Air Canada or . . .

And here go the government controls—

> . . . or, if revenues prove insufficient by subsequent deficit appropriation by Parliament.

In other words, the government guarantees $489 million today, and if that proves insufficient it will give more. The government could not care less how it is spent, whether it is thrown out the window, spent on bubble gum, or what have you. It gives $489 million today and if in six months or a year from now that proves not to be enough, it will give more without exercising any control. Let it be spent on anything at all, or even thrown out the window, for that matter. And if you are short of money, we government idiots will give you more to replenish this $489 million petty cash.

Mr. Speaker, I shall say like one of my friends that this is not disgusting, it is damned disgusting to see such an administration. And through the Canadian Transport Commission, we try at a certain time to get justice. And what about these jerks who go beyond limits, beyond the government's authority, even Parliament's? These are arrogant officials like this chap, Thompson, who tells us stupidly: When I say no, it is no.

Here is proof that these corporations are in no way under government authority. They are only playing the hypocritical game of a mitigated democracy. These officials say: To hell with you. And I would not be surprised if they used the picturesque language of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to tell us to eat something.

[Mr. Caouette (Charlevoix).]

Is it known that officials like those of the CNR and even of the government, delight in managing in the most "honourable" jumble.

Let us think about it. The CNR makes $42 million in profits but the interest on the debt amounts to $68 million. Finally, it reports at the end of the year a $20 million deficit. That is the management of a company that we cannot control. What progress has the CNR made? What modern method of transportation has it adopted? What did the government do to force it to improve its means of transportation? Absolutely nothing. Now, Canada developed according to the rythm of the railways at the turn of the century. Nowadays, means of transportation are still the same as they were at the beginning of the century. They do not want to create or improve the systems, they will delay their development.

This afternoon, we heard members from all sides of the House say it is badly operated. The CN does not want to improve the transportation systems while it is so important nowadays for example to consider more and more the needs to curb pollution. The government does not do anything to force these companies to improve their systems of transportation while complying with scientific data. Before approving moneys, why does the government not force these companies to allocate a fraction of the moneys to the improvement of means of transportation? Canada is the ideal country for that: Why not force the companies such as the CNR for example, to use faster trains? They do exist. Everyone has heard about them. In Japan, for instance, trains travel at 200 miles an hour which would be ideal for Canada, because of the distances involved. It would even solve the problems of requirements for increasingly larger airports, such as Pickering, or Sainte-Scholastique, and the resulting problems facing the people. Fast trains would be an ideal solution for travel from one city to another. Why does not the government compel the CNR to work in that direction? It does nothing about it.

We still pass the time voting funds and assuring the CNR that if it does not get that money, it will get some through special warrants. We have heard about the service provided to passengers on the Ottawa-Quebec, Quebec-Montreal or Montreal-Lake St. John lines or to people who travel on those 1890 cattle cars where no attention is given to passengers. However, on the Ottawa-Montreal line, there is an hourly bus service. Why could we not offer the same services through rapid train systems? No, we are satisfied with old systems which are kept going through legislation authorizing the granting of funds without compelling the recipients to do some development.

Such are the comments which I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. My remarks relate not only to the transport system as such but also to its financing. As I said earlier, interest is up to $68 million and profits up to $42 million, so the deficit is down to $20 million. That is exactly the type of administration that we deplore and to which we are opposed.

The same thing happens at the government level where there exists a deficit system due to interest. We see the government decry inflation. Inflation is eating away at us.

The expenses of such crazy systems where you pay more interests then you can make profits are precisely a cause of inflation. When interests will have eaten away more of the profits of a company like the CN or the government it will be realized that inflation is still growing without being able to solve the problem.

We say that any new production must be financed through new credits and as long as the government does not admit that we will be caught in crazy systems such as those we have now, deficit systems, systems where prices steadily go up while quality goes down, where prices go up while easier access to consumer goods is being destroyed. Interest goes up, costs go up in such systems.

Creditists have said and repeated for many years that any new production must be financed through new credits and not through crazy loans to pay interests on fictitious debts as can now be seen with respect to the CN. As long as the government does not understand that, as long as it does not accept to consider in a positive way the suggestions we make, as long as we are presented with small bills such as the one before us to try and make us believe that the government is deciding more or less what decisions are to be taken by Crown corporations—because, in fine print, they are promised money by the barrel—we shall never see the end of it.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to make and I hope that the government will wake up once and for all and acknowledge with us that the present system is debt oriented and not tailored to efficient service. It is about time to ensure that this objective is reached.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with Bill C-164, I want to make it abundantly clear at the outset, as I have in the past, that I am not prepared to use Canadian National Railways as a whipping-boy. Nor am I in any way condemning the employees of the CNR. These are hard working, conscientious men and women dedicated to their task. Any criticism of transportation in Canada belongs at the door of this government, and particularly the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are operators. They carry out the policy, or lack thereof, to the best of their ability. Where this policy is outdated or completely lacking, we cannot possibly blame the operators for the deplorable situation in which we find ourselves.

Railways are the backbone of this country, both literally and figuratively. Properly operated, Canadian National Railways has, in my opinion, a far greater potential for the reduction of regional disparity in this country than the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or any other program developed by this government. The key words are "properly operated". The present administration has not, to date, demonstrated any ability or inclination to bring in any policies consistent with the present needs, never mind the future; instead, they use exactly the same indifferent and arrogant approach that they have used in the past.

For the moment, let us consider the recent financing bills of the Canadian National Railways starting with Bill C-186, which was passed in 1971, covering the financing of the railway system and Air Canada from January 1, 1970, to June 30, 1971. Bill C-4, which was never passed, was intended to cover the financing from January 1, 1971, to the first day of June, 1972. Then there was an overlap of six months, and finally we have Bill C-164, which covers from January 1, 1973, to June 30, 1974, leaving a gap of six months completely devoid of covering legislation. Was this overlap and gap of six months an error? Did the people in the department who prepare the legislation not know or not care? In any event, the whole time period was left without covering legislation and I will be interested in finding out in detail how this was and is to be handled.

We have the further irony of changing auditors after having accepted the seemingly satisfactory services of one company for many years. The change of auditors was announced in Bill C-4, which was of course, as I have said, never passed; and in Bill C-164 we find confirmation of the 1972 auditors, two separate firms of auditors for 1973 and one of those two firms for 1974.

As a new member, I cannot review past practices from experience, but I have had very detailed experience with auditors at another level of government and in private industry and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this whole deal smells. It literally reeks to high heaven. Without questioning the capability of any of the auditors mentioned, I know that you do not change auditors without just cause, and having a former senior official with one audit company now a highly placed government employee, while I deplore and question the situation, is not just cause. Furthermore, under no circumstances do you appoint auditors, either new or in a continuing capacity, without the approval of the senior body, in this case the parliament of Canada. Appointing the auditors for 1972 retroactively in 1973 is highly questionable from a legal point of view, ridiculous from a practical point of view and smacks of arrogance in the extreme from the point of view of responsibility to the parliament and the people of Canada.

In 1973 we are asked to approve two sets of auditors. Obviously, one company is sufficient to complete the audit. Why, when, do we need two? The extra cost must be staggering. How much extra will probably be very difficult to ascertain. If the need for the third auditor is transitional, that is to say, while changing from one firm to another, surely we could have stayed with the second firm for a little longer since we have been adequately served by the first firm for many years.

If, on the other hand, the firm appointed for 1972 and jointly for 1973 has not been adequate, then the government should say so. If their services are adequate, even considering the involvement, directly or otherwise, of a past member of that firm in the Department of Transport, they should be kept on for a minimum of five years so that we can take advantage of their cumulative knowledge. These firms are of the highest calibre, and to be in the position of moving them around like pawns in a political chess game places them in an untenable position to the shame of the minister responsible. Or is the minister responsible? That is another question I shall expect to have answered.

For the moment, I do not intend to deal with the individual clauses of the bill; rather, I will go along with sending it to committee. But I assure the Minister of Transport that it will not be reported out of committee before I or a number of my colleagues have had answers to each and every question I have raised, and many more contained in the legislation. The continuing arrogance of this government in asking for quick passage of legislation such as this, without justification, will not be condoned.

[Translation]

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): At the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that I have listened with a certain awareness to the comment of the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Caouette) and I must note, concerning his proposals, that the dynastic aspect of politics are simply not transmitted through consanguinity, but through similar ideas. As we often say, like father, like son!

[English]

● (2040)

Before I begin my remarks, properly speaking, I might be allowed to make a couple of comments on what has gone on. I was intrigued by the intervention of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) proposing in some way that Air Canada be permitted to carry the can when it comes to air travel in Canada so that CP can pick up the chips. This reminds me of debates in the past with regard to the efficiency and profitability of the CN in relation to the CP. The poor old CN has always been the whipping-boy.

Canadian National is a public-owned railway. How useful it was for parties in this country, and I do not mean just political parties, to be able to refer to the CN as one horrible example of the effect of public ownership. Year after year we were told, "That is not the way to run a railroad; and besides, it loses money." Of course, it was never pointed out that the CNR does make money on the operational side but because it has to carry the debts of long ago its profit is quickly erased, so the poor old CNR winds up in the red.

My hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) gave the reasons this afternoon. Back in the twenties and early thirties, the government of the day picked up the can for a lot of its friends who had invested not too wisely in a number of railroads which were going into bankruptcy. It also picked up the tab to cover the losses of the private investors. To this day the CN is carrying the interest on these advances of a long time ago. It is no wonder the CN can rarely show a clear profit in its annual statements. Surely we could get around this business of partisan or political flummery by having the people of Canada, through this parliament, pick up this ancient debt and take it off the shoulders of the CN so that we can see once and for all whether a publicly-owned railway can operate efficiently.

However, even a cursory reading of the annual reports of the CN—and in case hon. members have not seen them, there is a resumé at the back of the latest annual report—will show that as a publicly-owned corporation the CN is managing to show an operating profit. By comparison one can always point to the CP whose major function over the years has been to stick its fingers into the Canadian pie and pick up the plums. No wonder it is successful. With a deal of that kind, dating back to the early days of confederation, one would have to run an absolutely inefficient operation in order not to make money. The CP cannot help but make money. When I hear of the government offering yet more plums to the CP by way of airline routes to Milan, I can see the past repeating itself; I can see members of the opposition in years to come—and members of the government party, too, when it is their turn to be in opposition—berating the CN and Air Canada in relation to the profitability of the CPR and the CP Air operation.

Many years ago an American gentleman spoke forcefully about what was then called social democracy—socialism, as we know it today. He was asked whether he was in favour of government ownership of the railways. This is still a radical idea in the United States. This man, Eugene Debs, then said, "Gentlemen, I would rather have government ownership of the railroads than railroad ownership of the government." That is the nub of the question. This is the picture we have seen in Canada: set up the CN so that it can act as a whipping-boy or strawman. Set up the CN in such a way that it can never, or rarely show a clear profit and we shall always be able to show that public enterprise does not work. I, for one, believe that public enterprise does work. As a member of this parliament, I would not be able to use this little card which was given me, a pass on the railways of Canada—

Mr. Alexander: What does it say?

Mr. Harney: It says:

—is a member of the House of Commons of Canada and is entitled by law to free transportation with his baggage on all railway trains in Canada.

For years I tried very hard to become a Member of Parliament. I looked forward to sharing this chamber with representatives of various parties—the usual standard government of Canada, the Liberal party; the oxymorons to my immediate right—

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Harney: —my hon. friends, and members of the Social Credit party. This was my major objective in trying to become a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Woolliams: Nice to see you here.

Mr. Harney: An added attraction was the thought that I would be able to ride free on all the trains. But now that I am a Member of Parliament there are no trains to speak of. If it were not for the CN there would be hardly any chance of my being able to use this pass at all.

An hon. Member: Try the baggage car.

Mr. Alexander: When did you last use it?

Mr. Harney: I used it in Sackville when I tried to bring socialism to the people of south eastern New Brunswick.

An hon. Member: There is no train long enough for that.

Mr. Harney: I should like to speak for a few minutes about the investment policies of the CNR. Just because I believe in public enterprise does not mean I approve of everything this publicly-owned company, the CNR, does. As a matter of fact, there are many things it does of which I disapprove. As a matter of fact, there are many things about this railway which I abhor. There are many aspects of the CNR which make it very hard to distinguish between it and a privately-owned enterprise. It behaves, in the main, like a privately-owned corporation no more evidently than in its investment policies.

● (2050)

A few weeks ago I had occasion to ask questions in the House about the CNR which was involved in investment in a project in Toronto established by Fidinam (Ontario) Limited. At that time the CNR pension fund had invested some $33 million in this particular development project. This $33 million was accompanied by a loan on the part of the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario in the amount of $15 million, all of which contributed to a total of $48 million supplied on the one hand by the public of Ontario—or, to put it more specifically, the working people of Ontario—and on the other hand by the public of Canada; or, to put ir more specifically, the working people of Canada, and even within that specificity, the people who work for the CNR.

Here we have an amount of $48 million for the purpose of building yet another high-rise office complex in the city of Toronto, as if we did not have too many already. One might say these moneys were advanced to a private corporation which in turn supplied a rather large amount of money of its own to build this project. But, surprise, surprise; this corporation which is totally foreign-owned—and for once it is not operating with American money but Italian money, although it is foreign money—received loans from the Canadian people, not from the stock exchanges, not from private dealers but from our publicly-owned corporation at the federal level, on the one hand, and a public institution at the provincial level, on the other hand, in the sum of $48 million to build this building the total worth of which is to be in the order of $53 to $55 million. That left a difference between $48 million and $53 million, so they turned around and went to Canadian private lenders to borrow this money.

We have here a situation of a foreign-owned corporation coming to this country, with nothing but gall and the stupidity and gullibility of parliament and the legislators of Canada, and setting up a development which it will control totally, having used almost none of its assets and mainly the assets of the Canadian public, and, more specifically, the assets put away for the old age of the Canadian workers across this country or the assets put away by workers in Ontario for protection against their disability at work.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Harney: I asked the question in the House and, of course, it received some attention because the situation was known. It had been not only reported in the newspapers but had been the subject of a public inquiry by the legislature of Ontario. It was known that Fidinam Corporation had, in consideration for the loan it received from the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario, made a grant of $50,000 to the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harney: My point received attention then, as I am sure it is now, because it is a massive, old-style political scandal. It was probably felt by members of the government party that I was insinuating that they, too, probably received some kind of benefit from the CNR pension fund loan to Fidinam. Nothing of the kind; I am sure they are clean. As a matter of fact, in answer to my question in the House the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Guay) said it was a perfectly legitimate transaction. Indeed it was. Under the law of Canada it was a perfectly legitimate thing for the CNR pension fund, which by the way is totally controlled by the investors of the CNR, to invest the workers' money in this enterprise without asking the workers.

What exactly was the scandal? It was not the fact that they may or may not have given something to the Liberal Party. I suspect they did not. As a matter of fact, if I were a member of the Liberal party I would be a bit annoyed if I did not get a cut of it. But that is not the point. The point is there are workers in Canada who need housing. As we all know, and as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has said time and time again in this House, there is need for investment in housing.

Here we have a public fund that is dishing out money to a foreign corporation so it can set up yet one more totally useless high-rise office building right in the middle of Toronto where we do not need it. We have before us a bill which has to do with the capital allocation that this parliament is being asked to approve for the CNR. I think it is totally right and proper for us to ask just what the CNR intends to do with all this money. Sure, it would be very nice to say that it intends to offer better service to Canadians, that it intends to finally deliver the hopper cars to the west so that western farmers can move their wheat, or that it intends to bring back the old railway dining car.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I am getting on myself; I am well into my forties now. I look forward to the day when I can tell my grandchildren how it was in the good old days when we could travel on the railway and have a meal in the dining car. Those days are gone forever. Members of this House will be able to recount this story to their children, their grandchildren or their great grandchildren. But it is gone forever.

Sure, it would be nice to talk about the capitalization of the CNR for the provision of this kind of service. However, what I want to do tonight, and what other members of my party want to do in the days and nights to come, is to ask to what socially useful purpose for the benefit of the people of Canada will this money be used, because we have already had some horrible examples of the way the CNR uses its capital. A short while ago, had it not been for a mass reaction on the part of the people of Vancouver, the CNR, through its investment policies, would have lent money to a private corporation, the Four Seasons Hotel Corporation, to build a hotel on government property, which it would have bought from the government, right on the frontier boundary of Stanley Park in Vancouver. This is an example of total insensitivity to the needs of the people of Canada and to the value of a piece of property such as Stanley Park. So we must ask ourselves what the CNR intends to do with this money.

CNR and Air Canada

● (2100)

Recently the people of Canada, and particularly the people of Toronto, have been apprised of another wonderful project on the part of the CNR and its investment policies, namely, the Toronto CN tower. It is going to be a marvellous, wondrous project sticking up some 1,800 feet above lake level, whatever that is these days in Toronto, an it may not be very high as the lakes keep rising. It is to go up some 1,800 feet above lake level and it will be the first aspect of this vast development, backed by CNR, called metro centre right on the lakeshore of the city of Toronto.

I know that we the members from Toronto are accused of being parochial, that we are always talking about Toronto, but I would ask members of this House who come from other parts of the country to look very closely at the expenditure that CN investment policies intend to put into the city of Toronto. If I were from somewhere else I would be a little jealous, because that project now is slated to cost hundreds of millions of dollars. The CNR is in a kind of partnership with a private corporation, and Lord knows what the offspring of that coalition, if I may call it that, will be.

As the very first aspect of the project of metro centre, this obscene structure is to go up, namely, the CN communications tower. What is the true use of this tower? Oh, yes, we are told it is to be a wonderful new device to aid and abet electronic communications in the Toronto area. The CBC, I am told, will make use of its facilities. We could ask ourselves in this House why it was that as recently as two years ago the CBC spent so much money to refurbish and ameliorate its transmitter and antenna facilities in Toronto if it was simply going to move in as part of the CN tower a year or so afterwards.

The CN was supposed to go along with a partner in the building of the CN tower, but somehow or other the partner dropped out; perhaps because it was not a viable financial project. So we have the CN doing it alone. As you know, statements have been made by the pilots' associations of Canada to the effect that this tower will present a very real danger to air traffic over Toronto, particularly air traffic using Toronto island.

I do not have to tell you that if we intend to develop short take-off and landing air facilities in Canada, we will have to seriously consider using the Toronto island airport. I wonder how many members of this House from the Toronto area would like to take off in a STOL aircraft in what we call a misty day in Toronto, or come back late some Friday evening in mid-winter when the sky is somewhat unclear, knowing that the aircraft will somehow have to negotiate this tower which sticks up some 1,800 feet into the sky. The safety of this tower is really questionable, as is its presence in the Toronto air space.

The aspect of the tower with which I want to deal, however, is how interesting it is that the CN should decide that as the very first part of the metro centre development it should not build the new transportation centre, it should not build the new office complexes, it should not build the new residential housing which is supposed to go into that area—and I will have more to say on that later—but it should put up this tower. It is a cheap publicity trick.

[Mr. Harney.]

Once the city of Toronto gives its approval, CN will begin building this tower in the spring. It was proposed that it be finished by 1974. That is a pretty hasty erection. The object of it is so that the people of Toronto will be told. "Look at the tower. Look at what we can do for you. Aren't you the proudest people in the world? You have this tower. We can build the rest of metro centre for you." This is a publicity gimmick, and nothing else. Millions of dollars will be spent to build this tower which will not be of any use to either the people of Toronto or the people of Canada.

How much will the tower cost? I do not know. As I read this bill, I see the amount on page 2. It reads: "CN Tower Limited, $8,800,000". I suspect that this bill is not up to date, because other figures have been quoted such as $18 million. I suspect that the figure of $8,800,000 includes only the part that was originally to be paid by CN when it was in partnership. I suspect that now we will have to carry the whole pack and it will be much more than $8,800,000 even at its inception, let alone at its completion.

I have said a few words about the metro centre and this is really what I would like to come to tonight. For members of the House who do not have the happy accident of being representatives of ridings in Toronto or the Toronto region, I think it is worth while pointing out that metro centre will cost several hundred million dollars. A development company has been set up to develop metro centre. For those of you whose familiarity with Toronto may be slight, let me point out that metro centre will be established south of what is now known as the Union station, which may be shortlived, and will extend to the lake. To the west it will be cheek-by-jowl with the park that was promised to us in Toronto as one of the election goodies of the present government.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It is a French station.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: Union Station.

Mr. Harney: —Union Station, gare Union, please! What is the meaning of the word station in French? We say a station of the Way of the Cross, but—

An hon. Member: Les gares—

Mr. Harney: —CN stations, better still.

[English]

I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. This will be an extremely large project. It will take many years to complete. I think it is important for members of the House to realize that CN is a major partner in the development company which will build and develop this project. Many questions have to be asked about this project. First: What consideration has been given by the developer, of which CN is a major partner, to the total urban development of the city of Toronto?

Any city has to bank upon its natural assets. The city of Montreal takes pride in having a mountain. In Toronto we have to look to the lake, and when I say "look to the lake" I mean it because in most areas of Toronto you have to look very hard to be able to see the lake. We the residents and citizens of Toronto are separated from this great natural asset by highways, railways, warehouses, factories, bakeries and commercial enterprises of many kinds.

Metro centre could be an extremely valuable and humane development if it were built so that families could live there, not just residents; because there are residents in Habitat, Montreal, right by the harbour but there are not many families. There are some real questions that have to be asked about the kinds of residential development which will be allowed in metro centre. There are other kinds of questions that have to be asked as to whether the city of Toronto really needs that much more office space. It is now a fact that in the city of Toronto the renting price of office space in older buildings is going down because we are beginning to have a surplus of new office areas. We have had a lot of building in the office realm and we should really ask ourselves whether it is really wise for the CNR to invest yet more money in this area.

There are questions to be asked about the location of the transportation centre itself in the metro centre development. At present we have a rather nice gare Union in Toronto. It is a place acclaimed by architects all over the continent as one of the finest examples of railway architecture in North America. It is a very fine building. There are very few buildings in this country, indeed on this continent, which have the sense of generosity of space that Toronto's Union station has. It is a superb railway terminal. The proposal contained in metro centre is to abandon the Union station as a railway station and to build a new transportation centre, as I understand it a little to the south and a little to the west of it.

The city of Toronto has built itself a subway which connects directly with the Union station, and it is an extremely useful arrangement that you can take the subway and go to the train terminal or to the Royal York hotel and take the bus to the airport. Mr. Speaker, let us ask ourselves how useful it will be for the people of Toronto to stop using the Union station as a transportation terminal and to have to go from the subway, from the main road arteries down to the new centre which will probably be extremely convenient for the CNR but not for the people of Toronto.

There are many questions of that kind to be asked about the capital project of the CNR involved in metro centre. But the last question I want to ask is perhaps the most important one. I ask: Where is the CNR going to get the money for the metro centre development? I have looked through the annual reports of the CNR and I have been trying to find some information about its investment policies. I find myself rather short of information. If I look at the list of officers, I can see that they have officers in charge of the investment division, including a chairman of the division and the general manager of the division. I looked through the annual reports, the latest of which I have is for 1971, and I find statements with regard to various aspects of the CNR financial operations. But I do not see very much about the CNR investment policies.

I challenge any member of this House to tell me whether he has been able to get out of the CNR any detailed information at all about the corporation's investment policies. As a matter of fact, you can probably get a little bit of information, if you are a good gleaner, from the statement on page 44 of the last report with regard to the pension trust fund. It gives a statement of its financial position as of December 31, 1971, and in very skimpy detail gives us the bare bones of CN's investment policies as far as its pension fund goes.

Globally, we have presented to us the figure of $255 million for mortgages. There is no more detail than that. If you tried to run a company in the private realm and presented a statement of this kind, you would be hauled before the securities commission of whichever province in which you were operating. This is not a statement. It is a fairy tale. And no wonder it has to be a fairy tale, because the CNR does not dare to detail to the people of Canada, to this parliament and to those workers whose money it directs to its own particular purposes the specific aspects of its investment policies. If it did, there might not be a resolution in Canada but there would be series of riots and rebellions in all centres of this country, rebellions which could not possibly be put down by any act of this parliament because they would be justified.

I want to end on this note, Mr. Speaker. Surely, if we have a public corporation which is responsible to this parliament we, as members of this House, should know in detail what its investment policies are and what are the purposes of these policies. And we should be able to decide the direction of the investment policies of this corporation. First of all, it is a public corporation. Secondly, it is a large corporation; and when I say large, I want members of the House to realize that just one aspect of this corporation, the CNR pension fund, has control over some $1.36 billion at this time—and that ain't hay!

Mr. Speaker, I hope to hear later from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), whose bill in a sense this is, and from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand)—I would even be willing to hear from the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport—on the investment policies of the CNR and what it is doing in particular with the money it has gleaned over the years from the men who have dedicated their lives to the operation of this publicly-owned corporation in Canada.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am glad I received a little clap when I rose to speak, because I do not think this is going to be a very exciting speech. I want to say something tonight about my home city, Calgary, in reference to the depot there. That city, in my opinion and in the opinion of the 450,000 people living in it, serves the southern part of Alberta, the resource industry, the ranching industry, the farming industry; and we have been neglected.

On January 23 last we saw some light. An announcement was made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in which he said a new $57.7 million air terminal complex would be built in Calgary over the next three years. No one can quarrel with that. But I ask, when will it be finished? The need is great. The initial work is scheduled to begin in the summer of 1973 and it will not be complete until 1976. I plead with the minister to start the project now. There is unemployment in Canada, but above all there is serious need, in the heart of what we call the oil capital of western Canada, for a new air depot because of the inadequacy of the present one to serve the travelling public and the people who work in Air Canada, CPA and the Department of Transport.

Here is the history of the present depot. At the beginning of the 1950s the air depot was owned by the municipal body. The airport, like other airports, was owned by the Department of Transport. It was a nice depot; in fact, it was the talk of Canada at that time. Because it suited the existing need, nothing further was done. Since that time, all across the country—at Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, London, Windsor, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Vancouver, Regina and Saskatoon—the DOT has built new depots to serve the travelling public who use Air Canada and CPA. Then in 1965—it might have been in 1964—an agreement was made between the city of Calgary and DOT by which the latter purchased the depot from the municipality.

At that time the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill was minister of transport, and he promised that Calgary would immediately get a new air depot because of the inadequate size of the existing depot. The deal was consummated, the money was paid to the city, and the city looked to the federal government of the day—and is still looking to the federal government—for action. This air depot is something like the Saskatchewan dam. For years Jimmy Gardiner promised a dam for Saskatchewan, but it was not built until John Diefenbaker became prime minister. We have been waiting and waiting for action on the air depot.

In 1969, things became desperate. When I read the figures, hon. members will understand why. I am going to make a good case and, I hope, influence the minister. I put the following question on the order paper, which was answered by the minister on February 19, 1973. Question No. 428 reads as follows:

1. When will the construction of Calgary's new federal air depot at the international airport commence, and when will it be completed?

2. How many people used the Calgary international airport depot for the year 1972, for the purpose of leaving or coming (a) into Calgary (b) into Edmonton (c) into Winnipeg?

3. In 1972, what was the number of commercial airplanes that landed and took off from the (a) Calgary international airport (b) Edmonton international airport (c) Winnipeg international airport?

The answers can be found at page 1393 of Hansard, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton has such a large airport, and it is built so far out of town, that you could almost say it was in Red Deer. The only figures available are for 1971. These were given to me by the Minister of Transport, and I know they are accurate because I checked them. At Calgary international airport 985,375 people either took off or landed. Edmonton airport has a corridor where you walk so far that you can never see the end of it. It is deep in the country. There were 100,000 less people leaving than arriving, and 866,340 people used the airport for both arrivals and departures. Winnipeg, which is called the gateway to the west, was used by only 856,000 people.

These figures show that Calgary is a very busy international airport. In 1969, the situation was so desperate that you could hardly move in or out of the airport, and since then several millions of dollars have been spent to erect temporary buildings. Everybody here knows what that means; the Department of National Defence is still using the temporary buildings erected in the Second World War.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker, I invite every member of the House to come to Calgary for Easter—come to Lake Louise or Banff and enjoy the beauty and the atmosphere. But what is happening today? Under the new rules of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), 44 RCMP will be stationed in the depot at all times. The congestion is such that when you walk up some sort of ramp to the second floor, only six chairs are available for 112 people. The government must have thought they were building cattle pens. The area is heated by an electric heater which is likely to burn you.

The security check is impossible. Passengers are crowded in like cattle and are told that anyone without a handbag or briefcase can go through; they separate people into carriers and non-carriers. Passengers are then herded into this pen, and as a Member of Parliament you pray that you get on first-class. You wait days to get a reservation out of Calgary and I am told you wait four or five days to get out of Regina. For two summers there was no air-conditioning. Employees did not want to petition because some were employed by DOT, some by Air Canada and some by CPA and all are dependent on the government to get things organized. I must give credit to the former minister of transport, because when I complained last summer they did get some form of air-conditioning.

There are no facilities for the aged, the infirm or the sick. There are no wheelchairs and anybody who cannot walk must board the plane on a stretcher. I see that the minister is rubbing his eyes. I wish he had been here when I congratulated him for at least making the statement to which I referred. I am very serious, Mr. Speaker. I know the minister is a hard worker and a dedicated man, but I hope he will make a personal visit at Easter if possible. I will see to it that he gets the best hospitality from the Chamber of Commerce and from the mayor. I am told that the mayor is a Liberal. I hope the minister can promise to get matters moving during 1973, and completed before 1976. The present conditions are not the fault of this minister; he inherited the problems. But the one million people using the airport are trying to get service.

The working conditions there are a disgrace, not only to the city of Calgary but to the province and to Canada. It is worse than the airport we used to have at Ottawa. When President Eisenhower landed here and looked around, he thought he was in the wilderness. Calgary is the centre of the resource industries, people come there from the United States, France, Germany, Britain and all over the world to deal in petroleum and natural gas. The airport is busier than Edmonton or Winnipeg, and is as busy if not busier than Vancouver, yet it has the poorest facilities. It is totally inadequate for the people being served by the airlines, and it is totally inadequate for the employees. No other city would put up with it. It is totally unacceptable to the workers, to Air Canada and to CPA and should be totally unacceptable to the DOT workers in Calgary or to any other corporate body.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot wait until 1976. In the minister's news release of January 23, 1973, he said:

Initial preparatory work is scheduled to begin in the summer of 1973.

I am always frightened by that word "begin".

When it is completed early in 1976—

If I know anything about government projects—it does not matter whether they are NDP, Conservative or Liberal, provincial or federal; they are all the same—it is generally two years later.

—the terminal will be capable of handling up to two million passengers a year.

I believe that will be 1976 or 1978. We have one million passengers now, and by then there will be two million. They will have to truck them to the planes because they cannot use this depot. I cannot speak with any more feeling than I have tonight. We are spending $2 billion on unemployment insurance; everybody is crying about it and making politics out of it. We should take that money and get this project moving. In 1939, when this country was at war, things were built overnight. If this can be done in times of crisis, why can't it be done in peacetime? Why do we have to drag our feet?

● (2130)

Calgary needs an airport. We have the money and the know-how, and people are looking for jobs. Why does the minister not show that he is a man of aggression and that he loves western Canada? If the airport is built, even Pat Mahoney will not lose his deposit the next time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The minister also said:

Projected increases show that by 1980, 3.1 million passengers will be processed annually; by 1985—4.6 million—

If the minister means "processed", we have processing plants in Calgary of various kinds. I can name them. Instead of having me and several others represent them, I wish all the people of Calgary could come here personally to express their feelings of frustration when they try to get on Air Canada and CPA planes.

I wish to leave with the minister one other thought. This has been said before, but because of my humility and modesty I think I can say it stronger. As a westerner from the city of Calgary, I am tired of being funnelled into Toronto and being told that although a plane will be leaving for Ottawa in 30 minutes, because of some rule or regulation which states that if a plane lands for less than 30 minutes, even if the seats are empty, you cannot get on it. I have been engaged in that kind of fight. If a fellow from Toronto takes on a westerner, he knows he is taking on someone. They folded, and put me on the plane. I should not have had to go through that frustrating experience. Why should the travelling public?

Edmonton, the capital city of Alberta, the oil capital of the world—of which the NDP seem to be so jealous—should at least have a direct connection with the city of Ottawa rather than being funnelled through some other city with a delay of one hour to three and a half hours. I must relate what happened to someone I consider to be a fair minded man. He became so frustrated that he left a suit of clothing in the depot. The following day he contacted Air Canada and they located the suit. The only way he could get the suit from Air Canada was to pay an express charge of $8. Do you know who that gentleman is? Me. I was not very hospitable toward those dedicated public servants.

The people at the Toronto airport have a great sense of humour. During the course of the argument a fellow came up to me and said that if I had any trouble I should take it up with my Member of Parliament. I finally realized what little power and what little force we have. Maybe the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was right when he referred to strawmen and said they were nobodies. What about the people who have not been elected to parliament? What kind of service do they get?

In conclusion, I ask that the situation at this air depot be remedied. It is most disgusting for a busy city of that size. Second, the minister, by himself or with a whole body of people, should straighten out Air Canada so that we can get some decent service in this country. This is not a political speech. If this project is left to 1976, I can promise that Pat Mahoney and any other Liberal candidates in Calgary will see even less of the horizon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, for me this is the fifth annual event on the CN financing bill. I know the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has taken part in this debate for many more years than that. I have been party to this kind of debate four years out of five, because in one year the bill was not passed. What strikes me as strange is that we always lose sight of the main thrust and purpose of the bill. I have been as guilty as any other member in complaining about the schedules, the terminals of Air Canada and the train service. This is a good opportunity to do that. However, the real point is not mentioned. Each year we go through this exercise and vote funds, not only for the capitalizing of the Canadian National Railways' system and Air Canada but to cover deficits of the CN system.

Under successive old-style governments it has been a tradition since 1923 to establish a public corporation to which they pay lip service and then refuse to let it function as it can and should. They handicap it with a debt structure that makes it impossible for it to succeed in any meaningful way in terms of providing service to the public. The hon. member for Calgary North wonders and worries about the inadequacies of terminal capacity, baggage handling, and so forth, in his city. I defy him to name any private corporation that could or would operate under the financial handicaps the CN system has had since 1923.

We are saddled with a corporation, regardless of whether it is privately or publicly-owned, which started off with the deck stacked against it. In its beginning it was saddled with the debts of bankrupt railways which private enterprise could not operate. We are still paying those debts. In the course of being saddled with the debts of five or six bankrupt railroads which were brought into the CN system, including the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific. On top of having their annual capitalization, they have always been saddled with the original debt of these bankrupt companies.

I do not pretend to be an expert in this area, but it seems that the remaining $1,900 million public debt on the CNR books should be taken over by the government of Canada in return for shares that may or may not pay 3 per cent or 4 per cent per year. They should remove forever the handicap that our publicly-owned rail and air transportation system have had, particularly CNR.

We go through this exercise every year. In previous years I have heard the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) talk about the glories of the CPR because it makes a profit. He and some members of the official opposition seem to forget that most years CN has had an operating profit. I believe the last figures shows a net operating profit of approximately $50 million. However, the interest on the debt which goes back to 1923 was $72 million. Parliament had to vote an additional $22 million or $23 million because the interest on that debt ate up the net operating funds plus an appropriation from parliament.

● (2140)

In 1923, the railroads of the day, all of which were privately owned, were in financial difficulties; they were going belly up. That is the problem we were faced with. But why pass this burden on to a succeeding railroad which is owned and operated on behalf of the people of Canada? If we feel that as a nation we have some kind of financial obligation to pay off the bonds of bankrupt railroads—and I do not agree we have—why impose this liability on a succeeding railroad which is publicly-owned?

Believe it or not, there are still $4 million worth of bonds on the books of the CN which can never be paid off unless a special act of parliament is passed, because they are held in perpetuity—3 per cent interest in perpetuity. That is a long time. It is even longer than never. But these bonds of indebtedness are still a burden on the back of the CNR.

No corporation, public or private, can operate outside the limits of government policy. It can only operate as well as government policy will allow. And while we all have complaints about rail services, branch line abandonment, station agencies, air terminals or air traffic schedules, these are only a small part of the total picture. Unless and until parliament is prepared to make fundamental changes in the direction and purpose of national transportation policy, we shall continue to go through this exercise each year, and each year we shall vote $20 million or $30 million more to pick up the deficit of the CN system to pay off the indebtedness with which the railway was saddled, almost $2 billion, in 1923.

Another aspect of the tragedy brought to mind by the annual exercise we go through in considering the CN financing bill is this. The CN, which is publicly-owned, is a convenient victim of all the brickbats and complaints of Members of Parliament and the public. The CP has yet to answer for some of its actions perpetrated at the expense of the public. We cannot get at the CPR. I would hope that in this parliament, with the help of an excellent and respected chairman of the transport committee, officials of the Canadian Pacific will appear before the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications, for the first time in about seven years, because we have some questions to ask these gentlemen. It is entirely unfair. I must confess to some feelings of guilt about this myself. We tend to take too much out at the expense of the CN because of the occasion provided by the annual CN financing bill. Too often it is the CP which has led the way in abandoning branch lines or making applications to close stations.

I think we have been very fortunate in the kind of employees and managerial people we have in both the CN and Air Canada. We are fortunate they have not quit on us. What we are doing to Air Canada right now, in terms of national air policy vis-à-vis Canadian Pacific Airlines, is equivalent to what we have been doing all along to the CN vis-à-vis the CPR.

Air Canada is supposed to have exclusive access to Europe, the Caribbean and the Atlantic routes and supposedly CP Air, under the Orwellian-Pickersgillian policy, was to have exclusive rights in the Pacific and South America. But over the period of years since the fifties the picture has been altered. CP Air has been given rights to Lisbon and Madrid. By golly, the next thing we knew it obtained rights to Amsterdam. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is likely to recommend to the cabinet that it be given the route to Milan, Italy, In fact, I would be prepared to bet the minister a crock that this is what he will do. I would be happy to lose that bet.

Air Canada should be getting the new routes to Italy, the new landing sites in Germany, and extended routes the government could negotiate to Greece, the Middle East and to Asia. I doubt they will get them. I suspect they could get exchange routes with the Russians to Moscow and maybe to Siberia. But this landing site in Italy will go to CP, I will bet a nickel. I will take that bet up with the minister as well. But when Air Canada asks for a share of rights in the Pacific, the answer is; "Oh, no; those are reserved for CP Air," after all, that has been national air policy for the past 15 years. Surely, if it is logical to let CP Air erode the viability and the profitability of Air Canada in the Atlantic and on European routes, Air Canada is entitled to routes to the Pacific rim countries. We cannot get a word out of the minister or the government on that score.

It seems to me it would be logical to let Air Canada take routes to the Philippines and to India in both directions or, if you like, in one direction all the way around the world. The government and its predecessors of both stripes, right and far right, have continually handicapped our public corporations by imposing policies which make it impossible for them to succeed. We have continued to syphon off some of the best routes Air Canada had, giving them to CP Air or to regional carriers which have government heelers on their boards of directors. Air Canada suffers as a result, and the public complains about its usefulness.

I wish this government, or some government, would leave a clear field for a publicly-owned corporation answerable to parliament to operate under conditions of really open competition with private carriers answerable only to their boards of directors. I should like to see that kind of fight. I was hoping that the Minister of Transport would have been willing to engage in that kind of fight. Our national transport policy since 1967 mitigates against the publicly-owned corporation and on every occasion the CN or Air Canada have been succeeding, or on the verge of succeeding, there seems to have been a move to say, "Well fellows; that is far enough. Let somebody else have this, the CP, or Trans Air, or Quebec Air or Nordair." They would not operate when they could have had the routes by themselves, but they came in afterwards to get the gravy.

This is what the bill before us is all about. We can raise questions in committee about terminals or schedules or branch line abandonment, but unless there is a national transportation policy which allows publicly owned carriers to function as they could and should function, the things we are complaining about are only the results of the failure to approach the subject in a basically satisfactory way. Since confederation, the Canadian economy as a whole, and more particularly Canadians isolated or nearly so by their geographical situation, have had to pay too high a price both individually or as part of an enterprise for transportation either of themselves or of their goods to other areas in Canada.

Where transportation is privately-owned, it must operate on the basis of making a profit. If it is publicly-owned, it has to operate on the basis of profitability first, and the provision of services has to come second. Privately-owned enterprises have to make a profit. That is the only reason for their existence. If transportation enterprises are publicly-owned and are required to operate on the basis of profitability, they cannot provide adequate service in a country with our kind of climate and geography. It is an illusion to think we can maintain a national air and rail transport system when the motive for operation is profitability. I submit this has resulted in an inefficient service to the public and a discriminatory transportation system which fails to meet the needs of the Canadian economy as well as the convenience of individuals. Our publicly-owned air system has been prevented from doing a better job by depriving them of lucrative routes. The government has already helped private carriers by handing them new routes, particularly international routes, which really means CPA.

I have been here for only five years. Many members in this place have been here for 20 or 25 years. It has been our repeated plea that we need a national transportation policy which is made in Canada, one which takes into account our geography and climate. Our 1967 National Transportation Act needs to be drastically revised to the point where the provision of transportation services—I emphasize the word "services"—rail, air, pipelines, etc., takes priority over whether or not those services are economic or profitable. A national transportation policy that takes into account the geography of the country, as I have said, a transportation policy that equalizes costs to as great a degree as possible for the delivery of goods and people, is what is required.

We must also include in this policy, communications, equalized and/or subsidized freight, express, telecommunications and passenger fares. Other countries have been doing this—northern countries—for decades. We are still trying to operate a transportation system on policies out of the 1890s taken from our neighbour to the south. Even there the great private enterprise system of the United States has been going belly up over the last ten years. They now have a system that is publicly-controlled and operated so far as passenger services are concerned in a complex of seven or so large U.S. railroads, but even this is not succeeding because they have gone about it by adopting half measures.

We must treat transportation as an essential public utility and think of it in that way, because public utilities operate best for the public, in that it takes priority over the demands or considerations of boards of directors, shareholders, or for that matter members of Parliament. If we are not prepared to have a National Transportation Act that has this central theme and thrust, we will continue on down the road we have been travelling and lose three or four thousand miles of rail lines on the prairies. We will lose upward of five to six hundred agencies all across Canada. We will lose a viable air transportation system that is publicly-owned because it will continue to be eroded. We will see our publicly-owned transportation systems paying attention to shopping centres and high-rise office buildings while trains are later and airports cannot handle our baggage. All of this calls for the public ownership of rail and air transportation facilities and pipelines. Many other countries that have been very strongly free enterprise-oriented did this years ago and have transportation systems from which we can learn something.

My second point, which I should like to hear about from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) before the debate on second reading concludes, concerns the government giving some kind of undertaking or commitment that some $1,900 million of the old debt of the CNR will be taken over by the government of Canada in return for an equivalent value of shares in the Canadian National system, so that the system is entirely owned by the public of Canada through this parliament. Thereafter, there will be no more interest on debts amounting to $20 million to $30 million a year in excess of the operating profits of our own rail transportation system.

Further, I submit that our air transportation systems, both national and international, have to be publicly-owned and operated. Further, we want a commitment or undertaking from the Minister of Finance before this bill receives second reading that there will be a further moratorium on rail line abandonment, as well as a moratorium on the closure of agencies and the establishment of the so-called customer service centres. There must be a massive expenditure to improve transportation facilities and to substantially expand their capability, as well as use made of ports like Churchill and Prince Rupert. We will expect to hear something about all these matters from the Minister of Finance before concluding the second reading stage of this debate.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I should like to ask the government House leader what business he proposes to invite the House to deal with tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I hope to have the House adopt on motions the adjournment motion which will permit the House to rise after the business on Wednesday. Tomorrow I should also like to call the report stage of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act and the Export Development Act. There are no amendments listed, so probably we could take third reading tomorrow. I suggest we might spend from eight to ten o'clock tomorrow on the conclusion of the debate on food prices curbs and concurrence in the committee report on food prices.

Following these items, so far as we can complete them, I should like to call at some point a short amendment to the Public Service Staff Relations Act of which notice has been given,—it will be on the order paper tomorrow—followed by crop insurance and the Aeronautics Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

POLLUTION—QU'APPELLE LAKES, SASK.—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN REPORT

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on January 30 I directed two questions to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) concerning the implementation of the Qu'Appelle board study report, a study carried out by the department in co-operation with the governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. At that time Mr. Speaker indicated that if there was urgency, the subject could be debated at the time of adjournment.

The Qu'Appelle basin study was started in 1970, the report was completed in 1972 and it was made public in January, 1973. The report makes two main types of recommendations, long-term recommendations and those which require swift implementation. That report makes clear that sewage from the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw, and the Canadian forces base is the principal cause of the decay of the lakes in the Qu'Appelle River system.

It is estimated that about 2.8 million pounds of nitrogen and 2.2 million pounds of phosphates are being dumped into the system annually, 70 per cent of it from these sources. This is a situation that must be remedied if the Qu'Appelle lakes are to be saved. What is required is that these two cities upgrade their sewage treatment facilities in order to remove these nutrients from the effluent before it is discharged into the river system.

The report estimates the total cost of effluent control for which immediate action is recommended at $15 million, half of which would be required to instal the necessary treatment facilities at Regina and Moose Jaw. Clearly, a financial commitment of this scope will be difficult, if not impossible, to manage at the municipal level.

The Qu'Appelle valley and its lakes and rivers represent an irreplaceable national asset as important to the people of Saskatchewan as the Fraser River system is to the people of British Columbia. However, the financial burden of solving the pollution problem of the Qu'Appelle is for the most part being left by the federal government to these two cities.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The minister can boast, as he did in Vancouver on February 5, that his department has spent almost $40 million on sewage treatment works in British Columbia since 1970, but when asked what he intends to do in Saskatchewan he remains strangely silent. Is it any wonder that the federal Liberal party has become a rejected and discredited political party in the prairie provinces of western Canada, given this kind of attitude by its ministers?

The situation calls for leadership from the Department of the Environment and a sense of urgency in the implementation of this report. What is being demonstrated is not a sense of urgency but a sense of inertia and drift. The citizens of Regina will pay their share of the cost of these facilities and more, but to expect them to provide sewage treatment facilities at a higher level than any other major centre in Canada, which is the case, without substantial assistance from senior government is just not reasonable.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my minister answered this question in the House on February 1 but I should like to elaborate on that answer at this time. At a press conference in Regian on Saturday morning, January 20, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), speaking for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), announced that the federal government would indeed participate with the province of Saskatchewan in the implementation of the recommendations made by the Qu'Appelle basin board.

To facilitate the arrangements, a negotiating team was appointed to enter into discussions with Saskatchewan to work out details. In connection with the recommendations for the installation of tertiary sewage treatment plants in Regina and Moose Jaw, I should like to advise that the environmental protection service is already taking steps to establish an adequate treatment plant for the Canadian armed forces base at Moose Jaw as part of the government's previously announced $60 million program to improve waste treatment at all federal installations across Canada.

The Hon. Jack Davis is prepared to recommend that we make available to Saskatchewan the same assistance that we have provided to the province of Ontario through the Great Lakes agreement, that is, to ensure that sufficient funds are available through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation fund so that the loans to the municipalities, which have a 25 per cent forgiveness feature, will be readily available.

In addition, as with the Great Lakes agreement we are prepared to share on a 50-50 basis with the province of Saskatchewan any costs which might be involved in pilot plant construction and operation that may be required to determine the most efficient type of treatment to deal with the nutrient problem at Regina and Moose Jaw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps hon. members, in making their contribution, would refer to other hon. members by either their ministries or the seats they hold.

INCOME TAX—PRACTICE OF DISCOUNTING TAX REBATE CHEQUES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT REGULATION

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, over a year ago I first drew the attention of this House to a practice which members in all parts of the House found deplorable. I refer to the practice of discounting government cheques. I think it would be worth while to take a moment to explain this term. It is possible in most major centres in this country, and it would seem especially so in western Canada where such enterprises advertise in daily newspapers, if someone is in desperate need of money and is guaranteed receipt in the future of a government cheque such as for unemployment insurance, old age pension or as an income tax rebate, to secure what amounts to a loan with the anticipated cheque as security. However, the procedure followed is for the lender in effect to purchase the cheque at a reduced amount. That is the reason for the term "discounting".

Thus, if someone anticipates receiving an income tax rebate, say in the amount of $500, and there is solid evidence to support his expectation, a discounting operation might offer such a person $350 in cash, half now and half on receipt of the cheque, in return for the total cheque being turned over to the business offering the cash. The amount discounted, if computed as interest on an annual basis, would customarily amount to 1,000 per cent to 2,000 per cent.

The operator of such a discounting operation encounters little or no risk because before providing the cash he requires definite guarantees that the government will, in fact, be issuing the cheque in question. Moreover, he usually requires that arrangement be made for the cheque in question to be sent to his address rather than to the address of the person to whom it is nominally payable. Interest at the rate of 1,000 per cent to 2,000 per cent for a loan involving no risk to the lender can only be termed usury.

I raised this question last year in connection with the discounting of unemployment insurance cheques. I am sure that other members, while they may not have done so in the House, have made private representations to the minister. As a result of these efforts, the Unemployment Insurance Commission established new regulations which had the effect of preventing the use of an address not that of a claimant under the unemployment insurance plan without the permission of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. This did much to correct the situation with respect to Unemployment Insurance Commission cheques.

Further, I am given to understand the government instituted legal proceedings against one such loansharking operation in Alberta as a test case. One of the series of question which I asked on March 7 which has given rise to the debate this evening was of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) asking him the status of that case. He took the question as notice and undertook to report to me privately. I am still waiting for the information and would hope that whoever replies this evening will present it to the House.

Beyond that I asked, in order to end such deplorable practices as they affect income tax rebates, if the Department of National Revenue was contemplating action similar to that taken by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. My question received a very sympathetic but unenlightening response from the minister. If I had time I would quote his answer because it provokes three further questions which I hope might be answered this evening. First, does the prevention of such practice require an amendment to the Income Tax Act and, if so, does the government intend to introduce such an amendment, and when?

Second, can charges be laid against such usurers? However, such a question is not permissible since one cannot demand a legal opinion of a minister, so I would simply ask whether the government intends pressing charges against such operators? Third, has the Department of National Revenue taken steps to prevent the mailing of an income tax rebate cheque to an address other than that of the intended recipient without departmental approval, in line with the action of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, as opposed to preventing the making of cheques payable to anyone but the taxpayer?

I ask these questions because each of them involves action which the government could immediately undertake to curtail these usurious practices. Their elimination, I believe, could be accomplished by amending the Small Loans Act in the manner I have suggested in a bill now before the House. Bill C-57, standing in my name, would change the definition of a loan in the definition section of the bill to include the practice of discounting an amount of $1,500 or under. Thus, the interest on loans against the future receipt of the government cheque under the amount of $1,500 would be limited to 2 per cent a month, or 24 per cent a year, as opposed to the 1,000 per cent to 2,000 per cent per annum now customarily charged in such transactions.

Thus, my final question is: Is such legislation being contemplated by the government? The BNA Act, section 91, subsection 18, "Bills of exchange and promissory notes" and subsection 19, "Interest", clearly gives the federal government authority so to act, and I hope they will.

To recapitulate, my questions are as follows. First, what is the current status of the legal proceedings against discounters instituted by the government of Canada? Second, is an amendment to the Income Tax Act required to prevent such practices with respect to income tax rebates and, if so, when may we expect to receive such legislation? Third, if the Income Tax Act already permits charges to be laid against such loan sharks, when may we expect such action to be taken? Fourth, has the Department of National Revenue taken steps to prevent the mailing of a rebate cheque to an address other than that of the taxpayer concerned? Fifth, is the government considering an amendment to the Small Loans Act having the effect of bringing the practice of discounting on amounts under $1,500 under its provisions and, if so, when may we expect such legislation?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) for raising this question and giving me the opportunity to indicate the concern, which the government shares, about the practices of discounting government cheques. I wish that the answers and the solutions to the problem were as simple as those suggested by the hon. member.

There are, of course, a number of alternatives, one of which he suggested and which I have asked my officials and those in other departments to consider, because I do agree with him that it is a deplorable practice in many cases. But there is, of course, a possibility that people will innocently and in all good faith wish to enter into transactions with regard to government cheques as they do with other financial paper, and there is a question as to how restrictive we should be in preventing this practice. There are obviously some Canadians who wish to deal with government cheques in this way. Personally, I think they are unwise to do so.

In the case of income tax refunds, we are now aiming for the fastest possible processing of them, and in cases where income tax returns are properly completed there should be a refund in the hands of the taxpayer within approximately six weeks of the filing of the return where a refund is called for. Therefore, I might say to any taxpayer who has attempted to discount his refund that there is no reason to do so, the refund will be in his hands almost as quickly as if he were to deal with the discounter.

I have asked my officials to watch closely the returns which appear to be filed by discounters. It is questionable whether we should prevent refunds being sent to addresses other than those of the taxpayer, because there are many financial institutions in Canada in whose hands taxpayers have placed their financial affairs. There is some question about whether or not we should prevent their doing that.

Of course, one possibility is that provincial governments, including that of the province from which the hon. member comes, could deal with this matter on the basis of licensing and provincial law which, I might say, is somewhat clearer than the jurisdiction of the federal government in this respect. There was a prosecution by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, as the hon. member mentioned, which I believe was unsuccessful at the first stage and is under appeal. This illustrates the difficulty, under federal legislation, of proceeding against these practices.

I would urge the hon. member to exercise his influence on the provincial government of his own province to take action within its jurisdiction to curb such practices. In the meantime, my officials are exploring all possible avenues, including the one suggested by the hon. member, and if it appears that the federal government can properly restrain this kind of practice, I hope to propose a method of doing so or have one of my colleagues do so in the House at a later date.

It is matter of some complexity. We want to be sure that we do not unfairly restrict or restrain the ability of Canadians to deal with their own property, and particularly we want to avoid infringing upon the powers of the provinces in this respect. But I share the hon. member's concern. We will keep it under very close observation and we hope to achieve the same objective that he has in mind.

[Mr. Stanbury.]

CANADIAN CULTURE—MULTICULTURALISM—POLICY OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on the matter of the sale of radio station CKSB, St. Boniface, to the publicly-owned Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It is not that I want to question or criticize the sale, but rather I want to take this opportunity to present to the Secretary of State responsible for multiculturalism, some of the viewpoints that multicultural groups have in respect to the use of the CBC and the broadcasting of multicultural programs.

CKSB was a privately-owned French station in Manitoba. In fact, it was owned by the parish of St. Boniface. In the last number of years, because of financial difficulties and other reasons the board of directors of CKSB sold air time to various multicultural groups for the broadcasting of programs which were specifically directed to multicultural groups in the Winnipeg and southern Manitoba area. Communities such as Polish, Ukrainian, German, Jewish, Portuguese and Italian used the radio station for these purposes, and the co-operation between the radio station and these various groups was exemplary.

There is a need for a second language radio station in Manitoba, a need which radio station CKSB was fulfilling. But because of the financial difficulties which the station was experiencing, the CBC stepped in and made a purchase offer to the board of directors and on March 29, 1973, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission approved the sale of the radio station. CKSB, now being a CBC-owned radio station, is to fulfill the following requirements:

> The commission will therefore expect the station, as will be specified in the conditions of the licence, to complement network service with a substantial amount of programming originating from and designed for the French-speaking residents of this area.

I endorse this policy because the people in my riding have among them proportionately the second highest number of French-speaking Manitobans, and radio station CKSB, broadcasting in the French language, serves a vital purpose for these people. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, because of the policy of the CBC that it can only be used in the French or English language as far as broadcasting is concerned, these various multicultural groups which availed themselves of the services of CKSB now find themselves having to look elsewhere for broadcast privileges.

● (2220)

On February 22, 1973, as noted at page 1547 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of State in charge of multiculturalism (Mr. Haidasz) the following question, in part, with regard to the sale of CKSB:

> As there are no hearings scheduled for Winnipeg on this matter, can the minister indicate to the House what alternatives he is proposing which would preserve the established customary rights of multicultural groups in the Winnipeg area?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of government policy and if anything is to be done it will be announced in the usual way.

I am still waiting for that policy, Mr. Speaker. In a sense, the CRTC made policy on an interim basis, because on the announcement of the sale of CKSB to the CBC the commission stated:

The CBC has informed the commission that, in view of this long standing practice, broadcast time will continue to be made available on a similar basis to any of these groups desiring it for a period of 12 months in order to provide sufficient time for those groups which have not already done so to make other suitable arrangements for their programming in the Winnipeg area. The commission considers this to be a reasonable and equitable proposal.

I commend the commission for giving the government 12 months to set its house in order. But I am still waiting for the government to clearly state its policy on CBC in relation to its position on multicultural programming.

I have a recommendation to make which I hope the parliamentary secretary will convey to the Secretary of State. It is that the CBC should establish a policy whereby these various multicultural groups could use a certain number of broadcast hours for the purpose of multicultural broadcasting. I know that the Secretary of State has been approached by various multicultural groups with this request.

There are radio stations in southern Manitoba such as CFAM-CHSM, which has been exemplary in giving time to multicultural groups to broadcast in the language of the background of the people. We are asking that the people who came here and who are not Francophone or Anglophone, but who became Canadians and good citizens, have the right to some time on CBC in order to maintain their cultural heritage. This is not divisive but is simply a matter of maintaining a heritage. I suggest that in western Canada, at least, these are the groups that have given us a cultural mosaic and a special identity which should be preserved. I suggest that the government should seriously consider a policy whereby the CBC, within a relatively short time, should make time available for multicultural broadcasting.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in replying to my hon. friend's question, I could easily refer him to the reply given by the Secretary of State, but I think to reply thus would be inadequate, and in view of the importance of this matter, I ought to add a few comments.

Although Section 38 of the Official Languages Act deals with the rights and privileges of other languages, I would point out to the hon. member that, in the case he is particularly concerned with, the multilingual broadcasting privileges that this population enjoys were not given to them by the government organization but by a private station. The broadcasting act is explicit on this point, and CBC policy follows it closely. The member is also aware that a lot remains to be done in the field of broadcasting in the two official languages of Canada: there are places where there is no service in French or English, or where these must be improved, which are assignments of major importance for the CBC, and will continue to take priority until all such projects have been realized.

The CBC Board of Directors is acutely aware of the growing need to fulfill the special needs of the different regions, and there is a close link between regional and ethnic programming. The CBC considers that at the present time, its national broadcasting service is not suitable for multilingualism and that the best solution to the problem of programs of an ethnic nature would be for the ethnic groups to continue to try to obtain broadcasting time on a local basis, from stations that do not belong to the network, so that the CBC can concentrate on its major obligations.

The hon. member stressed the CRTC's decision to extend these rights for a year, and I do not intend to comment on this. I can assure my hon. friend that I am convinced, from the way that he dealt with the problem, that he has made some very serious suggestions, and that I shall hasten to inform the minister tomorrow of all his remarks, and we will try to find an equitable solution to the really serious problems which he has brought up.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HALIBURTON—MANNER OF RELEASE OF REPORT ON OFFSHORE LOBSTER FISHERY

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege this afternoon in connection with a matter of extreme interest and concern to my riding of South Western Nova. The matter relates to the fishing of offshore lobsters.

In this House on April 5 I directed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about a certain study that was supposed to have been undertaken nearly two years ago. Subsequently, both in the House and in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, I raised this issue. On April 4, in response to a question, I was told by one of the officials of the Department of Fisheries that the report should be available within a few weeks. May I stress he said it "should be ready within a few weeks' time".

Within a week, namely, on April 10, the report that I had been asking for for a month or five weeks was released to a newspaper reporter in Halifax and reported pretty fully in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of April 11. The publication of the contents of that report and the stories that went out on the wire press have caused serious embarrassment to me since this was a matter occurring within my constituency in which, as I say, I had great interest. It caused me additional embarrassment since I had, after all, been requesting this report and the people there knew I had been requesting it. Indeed, it was in fact released on April 10 as a result of the pressure that had been brought to bear on the government through my questions. Further embarrassment attaches because of the fact that I was asked to comment on the report by various members of the media.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this matter and the nature of the procedure for releasing such statements be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Speaker: Before the motion could be put to the House for debate and disposition the Chair would have to rule that there was a prima facie case of privilege. Although the hon. member may have a grievance or complaint, I have serious doubts whether his point would amount to a question of privilege which ought to be referred to either the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections or another committee of the House. I think the hon. member has made his point in his presentation to the House in relation to the grievance of which he has complained, but I doubt that the interests of the House would best be served by having a debate at this time.

Mr. Haliburton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns on Wednesday, April 18, 1973, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, May 7, 1973, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF NORAD AGREEMENT FOR FURTHER PERIOD OF TWO YEARS

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, two major objectives of our defence policy are to protect Canadian sovereignty and, in co-operation with the United States, to make an effective contribution to the defence of North America. These objectives are achieved in part through Canada's participation with the United States in the North American Air Defence Command agreement which is known to all of us as NORAD.

The NORAD agreement was originally signed on May 12, 1958, for a period of ten years. On March 30, 1968, the agreement was renewed with some additional provisions for a further five years. As the end of the five-year renewal period is on the 12th of next month, the Canadian and American governments have been giving consideration to the renewal of the agreement.

The United States government has been actively engaged in the development of modernized air defence systems. Canada has been kept fully informed of the progress being made and has actively co-operated in some aspects of the work being done.

Although development of the new systems is now at an advanced stage, it has not reached the point at which the two governments are able to decide upon the extent to which the systems for the air defence of North America should, at this time, be changed and improved.

As further time is required before decisions can be reached by either country, it has been determined that the best course of action to meet the requirements of both governments is to extend the present NORAD agreement for a further period. It has, therefore, been agreed between Canada and the United States that the NORAD agreement will be extended in its present form for a further period of two years commencing May 12, 1973, and that an appropriate exchange of diplomatic notes will shortly be exchanged for this purpose.

Hon. members already know that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence has made a special study of the NORAD agreement and has tabled a report in the House on this subject. I am particularly pleased to be able to point out that the government's decision to renew the NORAD agreement is consistent with the recommendations contained in the report tabled by this committee.

As I have described in some detail the policy of the Canadian government on NORAD before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, and as the reasons for the government's decision to renew the agreement for two years are already in the public record as a result of evidence given before this committee, I do not believe it is necessary to elaborate further at this time.

In this statement I do, however, wish to emphasize that the government's decision to renew the NORAD agreement for two years will assist Canada in a meaningful way to achieve the central objectives of our defence policy.

● (1410)

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, first of all, may I express our appreciation to the minister for having made his statement available to us a good hour before the House met this afternoon. I also want to welcome the statement and to indicate to the minister that it is at least the minimum position acceptable to us in respect of sharing of responsibility for North American defence.

The importance of maintenance by Canadians of the sovereignty of our northern air space requires this minimum position. Our role should continue to be that of surveillance, detection and identification. Whatever the outcome of the present testing by the United States of such technological advancements as over the horizon, back scatter radar, AWACS and the improved manned interceptor programming, Canada will have to go it alone or go via this route. In other words, one way or another we must ensure that the means of maintenance of our own sovereignty are within our own control. We feel strongly that such planning can only be done, and we hope it will be done during this two-year period, not in the context of the NORAD agreement alone but also in light of our over-all bilateral defence arrangements with the United States. We hope the contingency plans in respect of what Canada does at the end of the present two-year agreement will take that into consideration.

[Mr. Richardson.]

It is my hope that the standing committee will exercise its investigative prerogatives and call before it witnesses and all the agreements, protocols, notes and memoranda that exist—I imagine there are some three or four dozen—for the purpose of coming up with an integrated role for Canada in the defence of the North American continent which will achieve the purpose of serving our own national interests as well as the interests of our collective responsibilities. We recognize that our responsibility is not only to ourselves but also to our neighbours. We welcome this announcement and express the hope that the long-term implications of NORAD and continental defence concepts can be taken under very active consideration not only by the minister's department but by the standing committee in the months that lie ahead.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we in this party did not accept the recommendation of the majority of members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, and we do not accept the statement of the minister as satisfactory. In our view Canada should take advantage of the termination of the NORAD agreement and let NORAD die a natural death.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Our reasons are simple. NORAD was founded in 1958 and renewed in 1968 to meet an apprehended threat of an attack on North America by manned bombers from the U.S.S.R. Defence against the bomber was and continues to be the most important of NORAD's objectives according to General Lane, Deputy Commander of NORAD, who gave evidence before the committee as recently as March 2 last.

It is our conviction that the threat of attack by manned bombers is non-existent, again for simple reasons. In the missile age when both superpowers possess the ability to destroy the society of the other, even after an all-out attack by the one, in a response to the original attack, or second strike, there is no possibility of an attack by manned bombers, because to send over bombers to attack would be madness and, indeed, suicide as it would invite the destruction of the country that made such an attack. The minister recognized this in the statement he made to the committee the other day. Let me quote just one sentence from that statement:

> The deterrence of an actual attack depends not on air defence capability, but in assured retaliatory capacity.

We agree entirely with that statement.

The contribution that Canada can make should be through detection and identification which may require surveillance and interception. This is an entirely different concept from that of NORAD. Canada should control and survey its own air space. It should co-operate with the United States and give information to the United States. But it is not necessary for this purpose for Canada to be locked into NORAD.

It was suggested by the minister before the committee that the committee report, and, indeed, the committee accepted the suggestion, that if Canada withdrew from NORAD this could seriously harm Canada-United States relations needlessly and antagonize the United States administration. This is dangerous timidity and a denial of Canadian sovereignty as well as being insulting to the United States. Of course if we withdrew from NORAD on the basis that we wanted no truck or trade with the Yankees this would cause difficulty, but if we demonstrate, as we can, that a new framework is needed for Canada-United States co-operation in air defence of North America and that NORAD is outdated, there is no need to assume there would be resentment by the United States.

Lastly, we take issue with the way the decision was made. In fact, the decision has been announced in a casual way by the minister. He did not even see fit to give the reasons for it but merely referred to his evidence before the committee. This is a serious matter. This engagement in a treaty with our neighbour involves in monetary terms alone hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet at this time we have this announcement in a casual way respecting the agreement which is to be perpetuated by an exchange of notes. It is true it is only for a two-year period. In our view, details in respect of international and defence relations are for the executive, but when substantial and durable commitments are made this should be propounded in parliament. If this has not always been so in the past it should be so in the future. The government should submit the renewal of the NORAD treaty by resolution for debate and ratification by this parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to thank the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) for sending us copies of his statement in the two official languages an hour before the House convened. I think all ministers who have statements to make when the House resumes its sitting should take such an initiative.

Mr. Speaker, the minister just announced what everybody was expecting, that is the two-year renewal of the Canada-U.S. agreement on NORAD.

I was somewhat surprised by the position taken by the members of the NDP as expressed by their spokesman who would have liked to see an end to this agreement with the United States. Up to now the danger of an attack would have apparently come from the U.S.S.R. and it is in that direction that Canadian control and defence measures were oriented.

I might compare this means of surveillance and defence with the measures taken by someone who had a beautiful house containing valuable jewels, paintings and ornaments, and protected by three watchdogs to keep off burglars. As long as the watchdogs were there, the enemy would not be tempted to break in, but the moment they were gone, you could expect to be robbed.

This is somewhat like the attitude that must be taken to NORAD. There are powers that might like to come and cause trouble in our country. But as long as we have a lookout system, they are reluctant to put their schemes into action.

So far, we have two main blocks: the American block, on the free block, and the Soviet block. But there is now a third block in the making, that of Communist China, which is becoming a major military power, which will soon be as strong as, if not stronger than, the other two. We have just heard that China's military budget has doubled in only seven years and that over 10 per cent of this budget goes towards the purchase and development of military materiel. That is worth thinking about. I should like to repeat something that was said by Mr. Camilien Houde, the former mayor of Montreal, that armaments were not made to be put on Christmas trees.

The committee was also informed that Russia is now building up a fleet of 180 heavy missile-bearing bombers capable of flying anywhere in North America and returning to base without refuelling.

I therefore think it is important to have a highly developed warning system and we know that the United States are at present developing an even better system than the one we have now.

Given those facts, Canada would be wise to renew this agreement for a two-year period, which would give us sufficient time to get acquainted with improvements which the United States intend to make to their warning, control and defence system and to review our financial participation of $150 million to that system, which is about 12 per cent of the total budget of NORAD. I think that it is not excessive and it would be much more costly if Canada alone assured its defence.

Therefore, the members of the Social Credit party approve the renewal of this agreement for two years. By that time, we will be in a position to see what our southern allies could provide for the protection of Canada, so that we may avoid the fate of France which during two world wars was used as a battlefield for Europe. Indeed, Canada should not be used as a stepping-stone by any country which would decide to attack the United States.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PRERETIREMENT LEAVE PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis), concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity with regard to the Cape Breton Development Corporation's preretirement leave plan.

In view of the fact that the then minister of regional economic expansion, the present Minister of Transport, stated on December 9, 1968, in reply to a question posed by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, as found on page 3700 of Hansard:

> ... I think that we can do like the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and say that the pension is not high enough. There is a lot to be said for that.
> I also find that $3,000 a year is no fortune, as I said earlier. But the amount can be discussed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether that is part of the motion. As the hon. member knows, he should not submit argument in support of the motion which he is proposing for the consideration of the House. I am sure the hon. member appreciates that.

Mr. Muir: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I just laid that foundation for the benefit of the newer members who were not here in 1968.

In view of the fact that the preretirement leave plan still provides the same amount as in 1968, and in view of the tremendous escalation in the cost of living that has placed such a burden on persons such as those under the preretirement leave plan, many of whom were forced into retirement, I would urge the government to take immediate steps to have the Cape Breton Development Corporation initiate a re-examination of the amounts available for both married and single recipients under the preretirement leave plan—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether that is the motion, that the hon. member is urging the government to do something. To me that appears to be argument. Perhaps I did not hear the hon. member correctly. Perhaps that is the motion he is inviting the Chair to put before the House, but it does not appear to be in the form of a motion. I apologize again to the hon. member for having to interrupt him.

Mr. Muir: As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis), that this take place, that the government initiate a re-examination of the amounts available for both married and single recipients under the preretirement leave plan so that an amount can be made available that would provide to those in receipt of this allowance an amount not less than an amount equal to the purchasing power that was available when the plan was first initiated and, further, that an escalation clause be attached to the allowance to cover the actual increase in the cost of living on an annual basis.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity on which I rise is related to the story that emanated from Washington today to the effect that the government of Canada, in the present negotiations on the auto pact, has proposed the phasing out of the safeguards in that agreement. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman):

That this House instructs the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to negotiate for an improvement in the production safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement in order to establish the principle that Canadians shall have, by agreement, the right to produce in dollar value that level in North American automotive products which we actually consume.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is also proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

ATLANTIC CANADA—CIRCULATION OF QUESTIONNAIRE BY PRIVATE CONSULTANT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of an extensive questionnaire being widely circulated in Atlantic Canada by Nicolas Matossian & Associates, based in Brome County, Quebec, requesting information on service industries in Atlantic Canada by the end of April, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie).

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development and that the committee be instructed to inquire into all matters surrounding the appointment of the consultant, the costs involved, and the reason the inquiry is not being conducted by departmental personnel or the Atlantic Development Council.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

BANK OF CANADA

AMENDMENT OF ACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that section 18 of the act authorizes the Bank of Canada to grant loans or advances to the provincial governments for periods not exceeding six months and that this period of six months is much too short to enable the provinces to take full advantage of those loans or advances, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That this House ask the government to amend the Bank of Canada Act in order to authorize the Bank to grant loans for periods not exceeding 20 years.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion of the hon. member cannot be put.

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS ON GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43 to move a motion arising from the long-range forecast which indicates the possibility of renewed damage to property along the Great Lakes in the coming weeks, and also arising from the fact that parliament will be adjourning tomorrow. I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin):

● (1430)

That this House instructs the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on motions tomorrow indicating whether arrangements or agreements with the Ontario government have been satisfactorily concluded and are now in effect with respect to compensation for property damage, and the sharing of costs arising from the use of Canadian forces personnel, and if not, by what date such arrangements will become effective; and further, whether the federal government is considering sharing short term capital costs for preventive works.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION OF BOARD TO PROVIDE FOR NOT MORE THAN THREE DEPUTY CHAIRMEN

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to ask leave of the House for consent to give first reading to a bill which appears on the notice paper today having to do with the Public Service Staff Relations Act. If we could give this bill first reading by consent we might be able to give it passage through all stages later today so that it could be dealt with by the Senate before the Royal Assent tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: We are agreeable to that, Mr. Speaker. On all those rare occasions when the government brings in good legislation we always facilitate it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is an acceptable bill and we would be glad to facilitate its passage through all stages today.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the House leader of our party also advised us that he was in favour of this bill.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen moved for leave to introduce Bill C-178, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? Later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TRENDS IN FOOD PRICES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I do so at this point because we are dealing with the business of the House for the rest of the day. I think Your Honour will find that as a result of discussions there would be unanimous agreement with respect to government order No. 31, the order having to do with the report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, namely, that this order might be resumed for debate at eight o'clock tonight with a House order that the debate conclude and any votes necessary be taken at ten o'clock. There are certain understandings, the details of which do not need to be spelled out, about the possibility of an amendment, about who will speak and so on, but I think there is general agreement for this item to be called at eight o'clock tonight and for any necessary votes to be taken at ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—INDICATION OF U.S. ATTEMPT TO ABROGATE—CANADIAN PROPOSALS FOR MODIFICATION—PRESERVATION OF SAFEGUARDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce arising out of one of our concerns about the future of employment in the country. We were pleased to see the improved figures for March.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the concern arises from the revelation that there may very well be an effort on the part of the United States Senate to abrogate the auto pact between our two countries. I should like to ask the minister whether he has presented to the United States government or any of its officials a proposal to modify the auto pact?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I had discussions with Secretary Shultz about a number of outstanding matters of mutual interest to our two countries, bilateral matters and multilateral matters. In the course of these talks we also had an exploratory exchange with respect to improvements that might be made in the auto pact.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the assurances the minister has given both inside and outside the House that changes in the pact with regard to the safeguards would be made only if they were improvements, can the minister give the assurance to the House that any proposals he has made do in fact constitute improvements in the protection afforded to the automotive industry in Canada?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, on earlier occasions I have given assurances to the House that if there are changes which can be mutually agreed upon they will only be agreed upon from our point of view if they provide some kind of built-in mechanism so that we can have our fair share of the production of North American vehicles consistent with article 1 of the auto pact.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the vagueness of the minister's assurances and in view of the ominous situation that seems to exist in the United States Senate, would the minister and the government agree to the automotive agreement being referred to a committee of the House to, among other things, review the positions of the two countries in the negotiations and to assess the operation or effectiveness of the agreement as well as the desirability of retaining and improving the present safeguards in the agreement? Will the minister agree to a reference to a committee for this purpose and others?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that at this particular moment a reference to a committee would be in the best interests of the House or the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Gillespie: For one very good reason. As I have indicated before, in talks of this kind I think we are more likely to be able to make useful progress if the negotiations or discussions do not take place in public.

Mr. Baldwin: You have not been doing too well so far.

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the tremendous importance and the significant value to this country of the auto pact, would the minister consider or agree to the referral mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition provided that consideration were in camera before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would expect that there would be other opportunities to discuss the operation of the auto pact when my main estimates are called again. I believe that I will be meeting with the committee early in May and of course it will be the committee's decision whether they want to raise this matter with me at that time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—CANADIAN PROPOSALS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Putting aside the question of general benefit to Canada that the government may or may not be trying to obtain in negotiations, I should like to ask the minister specifically whether the government of Canada has proposed the removal of the 15 per cent duty requirement that consumers must pay if they bring a car in from the United States? If it has made that specific proposal, has it attached to that the requirement that the production level safeguards in the pact must be maintained?

• (1440)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am, perhaps, repeating myself when I say that these were exploratory talks.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Gillespie: It would be overstating it to say that that proposal had been made, but I can assure the hon. member that if there are any changes agreed to, as I have already indicated on past occasions, they will only be agreed to if there is a mechanism to protect existing and future Canadian jobs based on article 1 of the agreement itself.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REPRESENTATIONS TO AMERICAN SENATORS THROUGH CANADIAN EMBASSY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that in the American constitution there is a radical separation of powers between the presidential wing and the congressional wing, and the threat at present seems to come, according to news reports, from the U.S. Senate, can the minister inform the House whether or not the Canadian Embassy in Washington has been instructed to keep in close liaison with the key American senators on the important finance committee to make sure that they know the Canadian position?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I have also indicated on other occasions, there are various channels by which Canadian views are made known to key figures in Washington, and undoubtedly Canadian views have been made known to legislators by Canadian officials. I cannot, nor am I going to, indicate whether Canadian officials at the embassy specifically have made these views known, but I can say that Canadian officials have made our views known to a variety of important figures on the Hill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Richmond wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Beaudoin: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I shall recognize the hon. member shortly.

USE OF UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM BY CANADIAN CAR MANUFACTURERS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he inform the House if Canadian car manufacturers are taking advantage of the United States DISC program and, in view of the fact that they have the privilege of free trade, has the government, through the minister, lodged an objection?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Speaking to the last question first, we have on earlier occasions made our views known on DISC. My predecessor, I think, very clearly stated our opposition to this particular proposal. As to the first part of the question, if the automobile companies themselves have taken advantage of DISC, it is my information that they have applied and been granted DISC status. Whether they have in fact taken advantage in any unfair way is not a question that I can answer at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MILITARY ACTIVITIES IN CAMBODIA AND LAOS—REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AND OTHER PARTIES—CONTINUANCE OF CANADIAN PARTICIPATION ON CONTROL COMMISSION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the resumption of bombing raids by the United States Air Force in Laos, and in light of the clear provision in article 20 of the cease-fire agreement to which the United States is a party that foreign countries shall put an end to all military activities in Cambodia and Laos and totally withdraw from and refrain from reintroducing into these two countries troops, materiel, etc. what representations has the Canadian government made or will it make to the parties in question and the United States in particular in respect of this continuance of hostilities?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in so far as Canada is a member of the International Control Commission, that particular article quoted by the hon. member does not fall within its competence. In general, I think it is pretty well known that there have been many violations of the peace agreement not only by the United States but by others.

Mr. Brewin: In light, however, of these breaches of the peace agreement referred to and the danger to the fragile peace in southeast Asia, will the government reconsider its position in regard to the continuation of Canada as a member of the International Commission of Control and Supervision and convey to the government of the United States and others that if this situation continues we will have to withdraw?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for us to reconsider. The whole matter is under continuous consideration. This is one of the factors that will have to be taken into account when we make our decision whether or not we will continue.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister had an opportunity to give consideration to the possibility of consultation with our colleagues on the commission with respect to the reconvening of the parties in Paris?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have been awaiting a report from the International Control Commission on the helicopter tragedy and until we receive that report we think it would be inadvisable to go any further.

SUGGESTION THAT CANADA ASK UNITED NATIONS TO IMPOSE SANCTIONS AGAINST BURUNDI

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the minister say whether he intends to suggest to the United Nations that trade sanctions or other reprisals be taken against the military government of Burundi which is made up of members of a minority tribe and which have executed in the most cruel fashion from 100,000 to 200,000 members of the Hutu majority tribe?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to raise this question in the United Nations in the form suggested by the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In these circumstances, does the minister not think that the Canadian policy regarding South Africa, which has been much more democratic, could also be applied toward this military government which has been extremely cruel to the majority of its citizens?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is supporting his question with an argument.

CANADIAN CULTURE

ADVERTISEMENT RESPECTING POLICY ON MULTICULTURALISM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism. I have before me an advertisement of several pages that appeared generally in ethnic papers concerning the policy on multiculturalism, which has all the appearance—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —of patently naked partisanship for which the Canadian people are paying a quarter of a million dollars. I ask him, in the preparation of this advertisement was it an intentional omission in not letting the people know to whom the advertisement is directed that of the $90 million being spent this year outside Quebec, according to the figures I secured this morning, for biculturalism, the total amount that these ethnic peoples will secure will be approximately 3.4 per cent of that sum? Was it just a lapse on his part that that information was not passed on?

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Minister of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure the right hon. gentleman that that was not the purpose of this information bulletin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, the purpose was to get votes. Was the purpose intended to be a partisan one, to get votes by false pretences in not giving the figures?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure the right hon. gentleman again that, in response to a very wide demand from the spokesmen of the ethno-cultural groups of Canada for information about the multicultural policy and its programs, I thought it was necessary to inform them as soon as possible in the most comprehensive way, and non-partisan as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The devil can always quote scripture. I ask this simple question: Was it inadvertance or something else that caused him, in the preparation of the advertisement, to forget to tell the ethnic peoples that they are getting about 3½ per cent of the total expenditures?

• (1450)

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, it was always my good intention to inform the readers of this information bulletin of the facts of the multicultural policy and its programs.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFIT CONTROL—NATURE OF REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE—STATUS OF BILL C-125

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I have it on authority that the minister now has a report from the advisory committee containing the results of its inquiries in connection with the investigative blitz and other related matters. Can the minister advise us whether the report confirms the allegations that benefit control officers were overzealous or used questionable methods during their investigations?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I did receive that report yesterday afternoon. It is not a complete report. There will be more information forthcoming from the advisory committee. In response to the second part of the question, the answer is that it did not confirm that the benefit control officers had been overzealous.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the importance of this document, can the minister assure the House that he will table the report in its entirety—he will notice that I say "in its entirety"—on Wednesday before we adjourn for the Easter holidays so that not only the hon. gentleman and his officials but members of the House and all the people of Canada may know what it contains?

Mr. Andras: As I indicated to the hon. member privately yesterday, that is my intention.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the report probably went into certain areas set up by way of criteria or terms of reference—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Why not table your copy?

Mr. Alexander: I am talking to the Minister of Manpower, now; I will get to you later—can the minister advise whether in fact the terms of reference have now been sufficiently completed that, after study, he can bring in a revamped or amended bill C-125, or does he have to wait for a further report before he can get down to business on this very important subject?

Mr. Andras: The report I shall be tabling tomorrow relates to benefit control operations and is not related to the second portion of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has already asked three questions. We have to proceed. I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West for a third supplementary and then the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said "That's enough." I respectfully say to the Prime Minister that he does not sit in the chair. His position over there is only temporary.

An hon. Member: He said he was there for keeps.

Mr. Alexander: You know, it's amazing how one percentage point can bring back that same old arrogance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am just trying to get information for the benefit of hon. members. If you have patience you will see it is very revealing. I am trying to ask the minister whether he now has sufficient information by way of the report from the advisory committee to enable him to proceed with the long-awaited Bill C-125 or an amended version thereof, or does he have to pussyfoot continually—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: —and acquire another report in order to stall this important bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SPORTS

1976 MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES—ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Postmaster General.

Since it is so important for the Montreal Olympic Games Committee to be able to arrange for the sale of a 1976 commemorative stamp which would provide an income which would enable them to implement part of the project, may I ask whether the Postmaster General can tell us when the stamp will be available?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I understand a bill on the Montreal Olympic Games is now being prepared and I can assure the hon. member that as soon as parliament has approved the legislation the Canadian Post Office will be prepared to give a positive reply to the committee's request.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—RENEWAL OF HOSTILITIES—MEASURES TO RECONVENE PARIS CONFERENCE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members seem to have a somewhat early attack of Easter fever. I would invite them to allow the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe to ask his question.

Mr. Wagner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to address my question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Further to the other questions which have been asked this afternoon, and which reflect the concern of hon. members over the resumption of hostilities in Indochina, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate what steps Canada has taken to reconvene the Paris conference?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I answered earlier in reply to a previous question, we felt it would be advisable to get a report on the helicopter tragedy from the International Control Commission before we proceeded to consider whether we should try to invoke a reconvening of the Paris conference. At the present time we do not think an undertaking of that sort would be successful. We would prefer to sound out the grounds in advance.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Since the bombardments in Laos and Cambodia have nothing to do with the helicopter incident, is the minister considering the possibility of reconvening a conference in Paris so that peace in Indochina could be achieved once and for all?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that as a member of the International Control Commission we would have a responsibility to call the conference into session in regard to matters related to the operations of the commission itself. The breaches of the agreement which have been made by the bombing and by the intrusions of North Vietnamese troops and so on are of a more general character. Our membership in the conference derives from our position as members of the commission. Otherwise we would never have been there. So it seems to me we should take initiatives when the subject relates to the commission itself and not to these more general breaches which it would be more appropriate for the great powers to raise.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I do not know whether I heard the minister clearly. Did he indicate that by the bombing on the part of the United States and because of the bombing there has been a breach? Is that what he meant when he referred to bombing a moment ago?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If I may read the section of the peace agreement, hon. members will find it is very explicit:

Foreign countries should put an end to all military activities in Cambodia and Laos—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I continue:

—totally withdraw from and refrain from reintroducing into these two countries troops, military advisers and military personnel, armaments, munitions and war material.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That being so, and the minister having won applause from these people over here who have always condemned South Viet Nam and the United States, I ask him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for York South rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: I certainly am, Mr. Speaker. Oh, keep quiet over there!

There is no one in this House who respects the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert more than I do. But I respectfully submit to him that he has no right to use his position and the affection that hon. members of this House have for him to make speeches about various things constantly during the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I want to tell the right hon. gentleman that we have condemned the communist activities as well as the South Vietnamese.

Some hon. Members: When?

● (1500)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We should try to proceed in a more orderly fashion. The hon. member has the floor on a point of order and he should indicate as quickly as possible what his point of order is so we may return to the question period.

Mr. Lewis: I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a perfectly legitimate point of order which I have been on the verge of making for weeks. If you, Sir, cannot, for reasons that I can understand, make certain that every member of this House used the question period for the purpose for which it is meant, then it is my duty to rise on a point of order when the question period is abused in the way in which the right hon. gentleman has abused it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the statement that I made concerning the NDP was true in substance and in fact. They have done nothing but condemn the United States and South Viet Nam over and over again in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see the hon. member for York South rising again, I assume on another point of order. I would hope that we would set aside the argument that has arisen between the hon. member for York South and the right hon. gentleman. Since we are running short of time for the question period, I would think it would be helpful if we returned to questions. There are a number of members seeking the floor to ask questions, but I have to recognize the hon. member for York South if he is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: This is precisely the point, Mr. Speaker. If this were a debate, then we would have the chance to show the right hon. gentleman that his statements are untrue and improper. He gets to his feet during the question period and makes statements in the knowledge that no one can answer him in debate, and I do not intend to stand for that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: You might inform the right hon. gentleman that I still have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: Stand up then so we can see you.

Mr. Lewis: I know I am not as conspicuous as the hon. member who said that. I merely want to say that if Your Honour wishes to go to questions, we will agree. But if the right hon. gentleman continues with his improper and inaccurate statements, there will be more points of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I immediately say to you that I am sorry; I thought the hon. member had sat down but he was waiting for applause. In so far as accepting advice from him is concerned, I do not intend to join the ranks of the government, which apparently allows him to dominate them.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure how the point of order has been settled but the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

MANPOWER

INTERNATIONAL NICKEL COMPANY—PROJECTED PRODUCTION AND EMPLOYMENT LEVELS—PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister obtained from International Nickel Company projected employment and production levels at this company over the next few years? If not, is it the minister's intention to ask INCO to provide his manpower consultative services with such information?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the International Nickel Company has advised officials of my department that production cutbacks are not anticipated at this time in the Sudbury area. Consequently, no lay-offs are expected. I am assured by company officials that press reports regarding expected lay-offs and cutbacks are entirely without foundation.

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the minister about lay-offs but about work force levels.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope we do not get involved in another point of order. The hon. member might like to ask a supplementary and he will be recognized for that purpose, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that I did not ask the minister about lay-offs but about projected employment and production levels, would the minister please answer the question?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's representation under advisement and reply later.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING APPLICATION OF SECTION 106 OF ACT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since section 106 of the act is difficult to enforce in many offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, could the hon. minister indicate whether he intends to brief commission employees on the provisions of section 106 of the act so that they may co-operate with the department to improve the situation of many unemployed?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski wants to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, can the minister say according to which decision the Unemployment Insurance Commission officers attach more importance to the high pressure enquirers who try by every means to catch applicants napping instead of helping them reintegrate the labour market?

[English]

BENEFIT CONTROL—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO DISENTITLEMENT WITHOUT PERSONAL INTERVIEW

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to the investigation just mentioned by hon. members opposite. Can the minister now assure the House in regard to the unemployment insurance investigations that nobody who is receiving unemployment insurance is disqualified unless he has had a personal interview with one of the officials at a UIC office?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, an unemployment insurance benefit recipient can be disentitled to unemployment insurance if he is not fulfilling his obligations under the act. The benefit control operation, as I indicated in a statement several weeks ago, when it goes into operation involves a personal interview, but there can be disentitlement arising from other reasons.

WELFARE

POSSIBLE USE OF PUBLIC RELATIONS FIRMS TO PUBLICIZE WHITE PAPER ON POLICY RATHER THAN GOVERNMENT AGENCY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Darmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare having to do with whether or not the minister or his office in a very direct way have engaged a number of public relations firms across the country for the purpose of publicizing his release tomorrow of the white paper on welfare policy. If this is so, why did the minister's office not use the existing instruments within the government service for this purpose?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the department's information officers, when they do work in the regions of each province, have undertaken to organize an information session for regional newspapers. They are assisted by experts in that field to ensure that newspapers and information media can obtain the required information.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: So that I may properly understand the minister, is he telling the House that he has not engaged outside public relations firms for the purpose of carrying out what should normally be a departmental activity?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker. My answer clearly indicated what the situation was.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a supplementary?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. member for Scarborough East, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East on a supplementary.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask the minister whether he considers this to be an ethical method? Why is he, like his colleagues, seeking partisan support for programs that have not yet been discussed with the provinces, as he has undertaken to do?

SUGGESTED NEED FOR CHANGE IN TEMPORARY ABSENCE AND PAROLE SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Solicitor General. In light of an incident that happened yesterday in the province of Quebec in which a prisoner from Cowansville Penitentiary on leave of absence so-called forced a citizen at knife point to take him 50 miles to the city of Montreal and the escape by that prisoner, and in view of the suggestion in the Speech from the Throne that greater priority would be given to the protection of society, will the minister give consideration to changes in the administration of the leave of absence program that will prevent the kind of incident which happened yesterday and has happened all too often since the beginning of this session?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that incident is now under investigation. As I mentioned to the House, we are preparing proposals to change the parole and temporary absence system, and these will be given to the House shortly.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General how many incidents of this kind we must experience before he stops investigating and starts to act?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PAROLE OF WOMEN—POSSIBLE IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMISSION ON STATUS OF WOMEN

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in view of the recommendation in the report on the status of women concerning women and the Parole Act, and in particular the closing of the women's quarters at Kingston Penitentiary, would the Solicitor General indicate whether he has taken any action on these recommendations?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing these with the provisions provinces and have certain proposals to make to them. We hope to have some announcements to make in due course.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—EFFECT OF POSSIBLE CHANGES

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce [Mr. Forrestall.] and is supplementary to a number posed earlier. Is he really optimistic that the possible changes in the U.S.-Canada auto pact will result in an improved Canadian position?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is not in order.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED ISSUANCE OF 1972 T4 SLIPS FOR WORK PERFORMED IN 1971—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General of which I have given him notice. Has the Post Office recently issued T4, 1972, statements to a number of persons in the Toronto district, including Mr. H. Griesdorf, 32 Alberta Avenue, for work performed during the Christmas rush of 1971?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question, but I should like to remind him that payments and deductions for tax purposes do not come under my jurisdiction but rather under the jurisdiction of the minister responsible for the Central Pay Division of the Department of Supply and Services.

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Is it the practice of the government to issue 1972 T4 forms for work performed in the fiscal year 1971, does this comply with the law of the country and, if not, will the minister look into this matter and make whatever restitution is necessary so that these people will not be taxed in 1972 for income earned in 1971?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I shall surely examine the matter as suggested by the hon. member.

SHIPPING

DAMAGE TO SHORELINE PROPERTIES ON LAKE ONTARIO AND BAY OF QUINTE BY WASH FROM LAKE VESSELS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and I have given him notice. It is pursuant to my question of April 11 and pertains to the hazard of damage done to the shoreline, particularly in the Bay of Quinte, as a result of lake vessels moving at full speed in confined waters. I asked him for a ruling in respect of a speed limit. Can he now inform the House regarding new restrictions on the speed of vessels plying the lower Great Lakes and the Bay of Quinte area during this period of high water emergency?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I asked the hon. gentleman to be a little more precise as to the region he wanted covered. As the hon. member knows, in some parts of the area to which he is referring perhaps ships cannot decrease their speed because of the danger of currents. As soon as I have the specific information I will be happy to send someone to see if a speed limit can be established.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED USE OF MANPOWER OFFICES TO SUPPLY STRIKEBREAKERS TO POTASH MINE IN SASKATCHEWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will he inform the House whether it is the policy of officials or counsellors of manpower offices to interview and provide prospective workers to industry and employers in circumstances where a labour dispute is in being? More specifically, are manpower offices being used to supply strikebreakers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not listening to the earlier part of the question. Perhaps the hon. member would repeat it.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister whether it was the policy of officials or counsellors of manpower offices to interview and provide prospective workers to industry and employers in circumstances where a labour dispute is in being and, more specifically, is it the policy for manpower offices to interview and provide strikebreakers?

Mr. Andras: Most certainly not, Mr. Speaker, and if there is any evidence of such a suggestion I would like the hon. member to let me have it.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the minister is ready to investigate the specific circumstances of this being done through the offices in Saskatoon for the potash mine owned by Duval?

FLOODS

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN GREAT LAKES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ASSISTING ONTARIO RESIDENTS SUFFERING PROPERTY DAMAGE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, subsequent to representations made by the Ontario Provincial Secretary for Resources Development at the beginning of March of this year—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: Wait for it, fellows. Subsequent to those representations and representations by his provincial Ministers of the Environment and of Agriculture and Food, has the federal government decided to change its present position of refusing to assist those suffering from flood and erosion damage in the province of Ontario until the province has spent a minimum of $8 million, and assisting only to the extent that by the time total expenditures were $40 million the federal contribution would still be only 50 per cent?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when the provincial ministers were here they were impressed by our policies and they went home saying they would be developing policies which would fit in with ours. I have yet to hear officially from them.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, the minister has on numerous occasions referred to the fact that he has had no contact with the province of Ontario on the matter of erosion. I am surprised to hear that he has had this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a supplementary question.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PRERETIREMENT ALLOWANCES OF MINERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that a motion earlier today which would have arranged to assist financially preretired coal miners was rejected by the government, may I ask the minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation whether he would immediately contact the president of that Crown corporation and members of the board and urge them to take the necessary steps to bring preretirement allowances up to a decent level, at the very least commensurate with the high cost of living?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I not only will, Mr. Speaker, but I have on several occasions been in touch with the president of Devco, most recently last evening at approximately five o'clock. There is a meeting tomorrow of the board of directors and I asked specifically that this matter to which the hon. member has referred be considered at that time.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBLE GRANTING OF WORK PERMITS TO THOSE WITHOUT CITIZENSHIP STATUS IN VIEW OF LOWER UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the remarkable drop in unemployment rates announced today, and particularly the rate of 4.8 per cent in Toronto, for which the government is to be congratulated, will the minister tell the House whether he intends to relax his present policy in order to grant permits to work to those people seeking them?

● (1520)

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to the degree that the lowering of unemployment means that Canadians would not be available or looking for particular jobs sought by visitors, yes; the policy has a self-relaxing portion built into it and permits would be granted.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will he inform the House what he or his department is doing to explain the tax act, particularly that section affecting multinational corporations such as Massey-Ferguson, so that they would retain their head offices here in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said during the debate earlier that we are reviewing foreign accrued income and we hope to allow a moratorium on this until 1975. We also hope to have an announcement to make well before that time.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Under that vague assurance can we, as Canadians, rest assured that this once proud Canadian company which has done so well internationally will retain its head office in Canada?

[Mr. Caccia.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I made that very point to Mr. Thornborough, the head of the company, when I saw him last week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

EXTENSION TO JUNE 30, 1976

Hon. Jean Chrétien (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-130, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien (for Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before this bill receives third reading, a stage which I anticipate will be reached very shortly, I should like to comment on some of the explanations that were given at the committee stage which made it unnecessary for some amendments to be moved at the report stage which otherwise might have been moved. Over a period of time there had been considerable discussion concerning whether or not the first clause of this bill or, in fact, the title should be amended to make it a permanent feature. It was pointed out, and I think rightly so, that the "Emergency" part of the legislation carried with it an acknowledgement that there was not an intention to keep this industry under government subsidy indefinitely, and that world conditions probably would make any payments under this bill unlikely. I, for one, and the committee in general, were very appreciative of the deputy minister who outlined in some detail the method of calculation of emergency gold mining assistance. The committee was also appreciative of the work the deputy minister has done in relation to co-ordination with other government departments.

The suggestion was made that some publicity should be given to the federal contribution in those communities which have been dependent on gold mining assistance since 1958. Many of them have passed into limbo. Many of them are no longer communities. However, some of the communities in northern Ontario and northern Quebec are still in existence—and I think this is particularly true of Timmins today—with a totally different industry, partly because of the ability of the mining industry to survive with the assistance of this particular piece of legislation. The deputy minister also indicated that, in co-operation with other government departments, progress had been made in respect of the establishment of an interdepartmental committee to work with the communities, with community leaders, with the unions and with the management of the gold mining industry, to assist wherever possible in the introduction of other industries into that area which originally had been totally dependent upon gold and the emergency assistance.

It is very interesting to note, with the increase in the price of gold on the open market and the unfortunate—I think it is unfortunate from a Canadian point of view—unacceptability of the International Monetary Fund's plans to introduce a new economic unit, that gold may again be one of this nation's most valuable commodities. It may be that the fact we have spent $300 million since 1958 in order to keep this industry in operation will keep us in the forefront in respect of any changes which may take place necessitated by the inability of the world to accept any international stability of currencies other than gold. The fact is that gold is now selling at $100 an ounce. In some countries it is selling for considerably more than $100 an ounce on unofficial markets. I presume it is worth more than $100 an ounce in the United States where technically it is illegal for anyone to buy gold other than a numismatist. It is reported that such people are selling gold for upwards of $200 an ounce. Not only is our silver being drained off, but also any coins we have been able to produce have found a ready market south of the border.

As has been mentioned previously, there is an indication that a world gold standard will be established. If a gold standard is established—and I think there are many reasons we in this country should hope it is not—it would obviously mean that Canada, so far as production is concerned, will probably be the third largest producer of this very strategic metal, either for industrial purposes or for the purpose of stabilizing international transactions. I would predict that if a world standard is established for gold, that standard will range somewhere around $300 an ounce. It will mean that in the northern parts of Canada a great impetus will be given to the development of the gold mining industry, which over the past 20 years has been a liability to the nation and, in many instances, has been a liability to the community where the gold mine is located.

Personally, I am pleased that the act will be extended. I did not press in the committee, nor did other hon. members, for a change in the formula to include the production of new mining developments because of the uncertainty of the role that gold will play in the industrial and monetary markets of the world. I think that some progress would be achieved in the development of new mines in the northern areas if a stable price for gold were established for a long term and the fluctuations in the price were to cease.

It is a fact that our gold mines are not taking advantage of the provisions of this act. This act is an insurance against a calamity which may at any time occur in the international monetary situation, an insurance against any calamity that might befall the gold mining communities if the price of gold were to drop to the United States price of $38. If the price of gold could be stabilized above $100, obviously new mines would open. Money for development is readily available, but this money could not be expended in the amount that would be necessary for the development of existing properties and of other known deposits unless the investors also had the assurance that there would be a period in which they could use the floor price set in the act to wind up their operation.

In northern Ontario—and I believe this is true of northern Quebec as well, with the exception of one or two new mines that came into production in the last four or five years—we are not witnessing the type of growth in the industry that we might have anticipated in view of the fact gold is now selling on the open market at from $75 to $90. I am sure that this has made much of previous mining development feasible. Therefore, there could be some merit in the government giving consideration to amending the act at a later date, in view of the possibility of new gold mines being developed throughout the northern area, which would provide those mines with the same type of safeguards that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act provided to mines that were in existence before 1958.

I think that all hon. members representing gold mining communities sympathize with the position which the government has taken in not wanting to extend the act to include new producers. It has been the policy in Canada not to encourage the gold mining industry, but I suggest that if any long term stability in the price of gold is achieved in the international market so that there will be a steady demand, it will be a worthwhile project to encourage the development of gold mines and the extension of the communities in which they exist. Most of these communities are developed, at least to some extent. There are few known gold deposits in my area that are not within close proximity to already established communities, and therefore we are not envisaging a repetition of what happened 30 or 40 years ago when the total community was dependent on the gold mining industry. I suggest to the House that the assistant-deputy minister of mines, in conjunction with representatives of other departments, has made some progress in ensuring that gold mining communities are not wholly dependent on gold mining but are able to take full advantage of and receive full co-operation from, other departments concerned with development, such as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

Canadians no doubt are aware of the fact that although Canada does not hold gold, that although Canada has always transferred its gold faithfully to the United States, we have at present a small amount of gold in our mint to cover the cost of assistance under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which, if sold, would bring to the Canadian public a profit of probably well over $1.5 billion. I am not suggesting that we do that. However, I am suggesting that in the total context of the Canadian economy and, the gold mining industry, the service that has been provided under EGMA to those communities that are totally dependent on the industry has been vindicated by the fact that the value of the gold which is now being held by Canada is far in excess of the subsidy that we have paid. If it is our wish to put small quantities of that gold on the international market, Canada not only stands to recoup the cost of the assistance which has been so kindly provided for those communities to ensure their survival but will also make a very nice profit, something that seldom happens with any other commodity that has been stored, either in the agricultural or the mining sectors.

I suggest that the Canadian people can rest assured that emergency gold mining assistance to date has been a blessing to those communities which have a large labour force predominantly in the upper age levels, often with a relatively low educational level, and has been able to provide them since 1958 with employment. It has enabled the communities to exist where in other circumstances their existence would have been totally impossible. This act has averted the almost total collapse of the community in Kirkland Lake, in Val d'Or and in Timmins, and I think in some other areas with which I am not nearly as familiar.

So, on behalf of the people of those communities, I wish to express my appreciation to those hon. members who have supported the EGMA when the act was costing money and when the general opinion of the Canadian public was that the gold mining industry was not worth supporting. I thank those hon. members who saw fit to support the act, not so much for the sake of the industry but for the sake of the people in the mining communities who were totally dependent on the gold mine. In many cases the application of the provisions of this act has resulted in additional development, and it appears to me that a new era may be dawning in gold mining within the very near future. Canada may yet find gold to be a very valuable and influential commodity which may put our country in the forefront in international circles so that we will no longer have to go begging for a market for a commodity which was selling on the international market for $35 when our costs were averaging close to $50.

I hope that the officials who have agreed to co-operate in the orderly development of the gold mining communities will continue to do so, and in fact will accelerate their assistance to those areas. I hope that through this co-operation, mainly resulting from the work of the deputy minister of mines, who has done an excellent job, there will be further development not only in the mining industry but in tertiary industries that can be developed through the type of co-operation that we have enjoyed.

I am therefore pleased that this legislation is being passed, and I anticipate that the next time I have an opportunity to participate in a debate on emergency gold mining assistance we will be talking about gold that will be worth several hundred dollars an ounce, that gold again will be a commodity reaching its zenith, and that due respect will be paid to those communities which at one time were the life blood of most of Canada.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was presented for second reading on March 29, I had the opportunity to speak in support of early passage of the bill, and said it should be referred to committee without undue debate. I am now pleased to be able to join in the debate on third reading, and I would point out that it has taken only 14 days to give the bill second reading, have it examined in committee and returned to the House for third reading. Surely, this is an indication that those who are so fond of saying that there is obstructionism in this House do not have a foundation for that statement. Given proper legislation and a fair hearing in committee, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no intention on this side of the House to obstruct good legislation.

However, Mr. Speaker, I also spoke on another bill amending another act, namely, the Export Development Corporation Act, and I would have to say that the story with respect to it is anything but similar to that with respect to the bill which is before us today. We were met with evasion, procrastination, and the desire to conceal facts wherever possible.

When dealing with the Gold Mining Emergency Act, we found that in the committee there was an excellent presentation of the government's position, the main witness being Mr. Drolet, the Assistant Deputy Minister (Mineral Development) in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Before concluding my remarks, I feel I should reiterate some of the points that were raised in committee and also at second reading stage.

When we are dealing with this legislation we should remember that it is one of the best examples of a government program which has been extremely beneficial for an industry. In fact, it not only has benefited the industry but in each of the years 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971 it resulted, through the sale of gold on the open market, in several millions of dollars of profits. More than that, Mr. Speaker, Canada was fortunate enough, because of its gold reserve holdings, to have a windfall of $1 billion as a result of our activity in the gold field. That alone is sufficient justification for this act being extended.

As has been mentioned by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), we are number three among world countries in the production of gold. Number one, of course, is the Republic of South Africa, and number two is the USSR. However, I believe that we could do better as far as production is concerned if certain modifications were made to the act. Perhaps I could now summarize our five proposals with respect to this legislation.

First, we believe that the government should give consideration to extending the life of this legislation until 1980. This would ensure that the gold mining industry would have a full understanding, for the next seven years, as to what assistance it can get, and what floor pricing the government will supply to the industry if it decides to go ahead and expand.

Second, we believe that the amendment which was made to the act in 1963, and which contains a restriction on eligibility for assistance in the case of old gold mines to only those communities where it could be said that approximately 50 per cent or more of the persons employed in the mines resided in the established mining communities listed in a schedule to the act, is not necessary today. It would be better to have the act apply to all gold mines, irrespective of whether they are existing, and irrespective of whether they are in communities listed in the schedules to the act.

Third, we also believe that the formula which the act provides for the assistance plan should be reviewed with a view to increasing the amount, or the price at which it becomes effective, to a more realistic level in terms of today's inflationary prices. This would mean that instead of the act becoming effective at roughly the $49 to $50 per ounce level, it could become effective at the $59 to $60 level. We suggest that the government give serious consideration to this proposal.

Fourth, we believe the act should be designed to encourage more actual exploration and prospecting for gold mines in Canada. Geologists tell me there are many areas that could be developed with respect to gold mining, and with the proper legislation in force prospecting and exploring could be undertaken at a much faster rate.

Finally, we believe that the name of the act is a misnomer in that it should be more of a stabilization act. With that in mind we have suggested that the name be changed to "Gold Mining Stabilization Act". At the committee stage it was suggested that that amendment would be accepted, but we felt it was better not to change the name without changing the general philosophy and policy of the act at the same time. In short, we believe that the long-range objective of the legislation should be to stabilize the gold mining industry in Canada. If the five points I have outlined were adopted by the government, we believe that the legislation would have a stabilizing effect on the gold mining industry and lead to a growing mining sector in our economy.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTION OF BOARD TO PROVIDE FOR NOT MORE THAN THREE DEPUTY CHAIRMEN

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-178, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take very much of the time of the House in explaining this bill but I believe it is of some interest to make a number of statements in order to advise members of the House and members of the Public Service of what is intended.

The present bill to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act has the objective of strengthening the board by allowing for the addition of not more than three deputy chairmen. This is an interim measure which is required in order to strengthen the board and permit it to deal effectively and expeditiously with matters coming before it.

One of the advantages deriving from the passage of this bill will be an easing of the demands on the chairman of the board, Mr. Jacob Finkelman, thus permitting him to undertake a report on further amendments required to the act. Mr. Finkelman, who has been with the board since its inception in 1967, has witnessed the actual day to day operation of the existing legislation. Therefore, if we can provide relieving additional vice-chairmen, we will ask Mr. Finkelman to make a report on further amendments to the public service staff relations board. In exercising his function, Mr. Finkelman has gained the respect of both the employer and employee representatives before the board for his impartiality and good judgment.

The government has decided to take advantage of Mr. Finkelman's expertise in this area by requesting that he prepare a study based on his experience under the present act and make recommendations for change where he feels they are necessary. Although Mr. Finkelman's study is not to be restricted to any particular aspect of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, it is envisaged that his internal knowledge of the requirements of the board will be of great assistance in determining what administrative framework is required for the effective administration of the act. In the preparation of his report, it is the government's intention that Mr. Finkelman shall have available to him any relevant internal documents, including the Bryden report, which may be useful to him.

It is hoped, therefore, that the House will see fit to pass this bill as quickly as possible so that Mr. Finkelman will be able to begin his task as soon as possible. If the chairman of the board is successful in recruiting the necessary deputy chairmen required for the board, it is anticipated that his report will be available to the House early in the fall for consideration. It has been the government's posture that no major amendments would be made to the Public Service Staff Relations Act without a full opportunity being given to the employee representatives to openly participate in any proposals which are made. It is anticipated, therefore, that the employee representatives would be invited to comment on Mr. Finkelman's report to the standing committee charged with its consideration, and in addition, of course, there would be full consultation between the government and the employee representatives before the government bill making major amendments to the act is brought forward.

Although this proposed procedure is open to the criticism that it will further delay any proposed amendments to the act, I think it is fair to say that all parties involved in the application of the act will agree that it has worked reasonably well thus far and is considered to be among the most progressive and successful legislation of its type in the world. For this reason, I think it is essential that any further major amendments to the act be fully considered and agreeable to the parties affected by the legislation. Only through the good will, confidence and voluntary agreement by all the parties involved to "make the legislation work" can we expect any amendments to the act to be successful and an improvement.

The proposed bill before the House today would strengthen the public service staff relations board by adding "not more than three" deputy chairmen. These deputy chairmen would be neutral members of the board appointed by the Governor in Council for a term not exceeding ten years. The addition of these deputy chairmen would permit the board to dispose of cases before it more quickly and to deal effectively with the existing backlog. The existing balance at hearings of the board whereby, in addition to an equal number of representatives of both the employee and employer, only one "neutral" member of the board would be permitted to vote will be continued. This is provided for in subclause 5(2). It is anticipated that these additional members of the board would be incorporated in any new administrative framework proposed when the major amendments are made to the act in the future.

This is an amendment which all parties affected by the legislation have requested, and I would hope that it could pass the House today so that it could be dealt with by the Senate and given Royal Assent before the House rises for the Easter adjournment.

In order to complete my information to the House, if and when the bill passes, the government will formally ask Mr. Finkelman to conduct this study or examination. For purposes of putting it on the record, I should like to read the draft terms of reference that have been proposed. It is recommended that Jacob Finkelman, Q.C., be authorized:

to examine the Public Service Staff Relations Act and its administration and to make recommendations, having regard to the experience gained since that act came into force, as to how it should be amended or revised in order to meet adequately the needs of the employer and the employees in the Public Service and the employee organizations that represent them, and to serve the interest of the public. An integral part of this review will be a consideration of the administrative framework required for the effective administration of the provisions of the act.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, the House leader (Mr. MacEachen) has asked for speedy approval of this measure. We are in favour of that and the terms of reference seem to be in order. The House Leader spoke of three neutral deputy chairmen. I hope when he uses the word "neutral" that is what he means, and that he would not have in mind the appointment of any more defeated Liberal candidates!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: I hesitate to say that because I am one of those who, for many reasons, was not against the appointment of defeated candidates to political posts. I have found that some political candidates, and in nearly every case I would think they were government candidates, who have been appointed to departments have been very co-operative. At least we know them when we call them on the telephone, but I must say I have still to get much satisfaction with the problems I present. At the moment, however, I believe that the public considers we are at the end of the list, and the minister should assure us that we have just about run out of possible Liberal appointments—at least until the next election.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) for putting on the record quite clearly the purpose of this bill and we are happy to agree to it. I may say that there have been discussions among us about the bill so that the information the minister has given today is already known to some of us. However, I think it was proper for him to put the full story on the record.

● (1600)

As a matter of fact, I believe a case could be made, even apart from the extra duty to be assigned to Mr. Finkelman, for an increase in the number of persons comprising the Public Service Staff Relations Board, in view of the work load of that board. But the particular reason that prompts the bringing in of this bill, and the request for it to be passed quickly, is a very real and pressing one. As the minister has implied, there has already been regrettable delay in bringing forward amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We have had the experience of the Bryden study and the Bryden report. There have been a number of things about that which have been unsatisfactory. We were never completely happy with the way the hearings were held. Too much was done in camera, and then we had the long struggle in trying to see what was in the report. Added to that is the fact that it is a couple of years old and probably, in view of some of the new thinking which has been evident on the part of the minority government we now have, there might be a disposition to move in a direction different from that which I suspect was proposed in the Bryden report. Therefore, we welcome the suggestion that Mr. Finkelman, whose reputation for impartiality has been so well established, should be given the job of making this study of the operations under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the operations of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. He will do this, not as an academic outsider, but as one who has been very closely involved. The minister is quite correct in saying that the staff, associations and those concerned all welcome the proposal that Mr. Finkelman make this study and present his recommendations for changes in the act.

It is quite clear that, because of the work load facing the board, if Mr. Finkelman is to do this job he will need to be relieved of some of his duties as chairman. That is the reason for this bill and that, also, is why we are prepared to expedite its passage. As a matter of fact, we do not see why it cannot pass all stages today.

I was glad to hear the suggestion that Mr. Finkelman should be able to make his report not later than the fall. I hope, therefore, that whatever government sits across the way when that time comes, we shall then be dealing with proper and appropriate amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Not only are we willing to see this bill passed quickly; we welcome it. We have examined it, to make sure that there are no jokers tucked away in it. It seems to me a straightforward, honest piece of drafting and we therefore hope this bill will be passed very quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears that the House is ready for the question. Pursuant to special order made earlier, the motion is that Bill C-178, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations act, be now read a second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. MacEachen moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the House is in this mood to do things quickly, would the Minister of Veterans Affairs like to bring forward his bill to amend the Pension Act.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I should love to, Mr. Speaker.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

INCREASES IN AUTHORIZED SHARE CAPITAL AND IN CEILING ON LOANS AND GUARANTEES BY CORPORATION

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-3, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

An hon. Member: Now, by leave.

Mr. Gillespie moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in speaking in the debate on third reading of Bill C-3, I think various matters should be put on the record of this House. I feel that the activities of the Export Development Corporation should be reviewed in two basic respects. First, its activities should be reviewed in a national Canadian context. In short, in this corporation serving the businessmen and, in particular, the exporters of this country as productively and effectively as it might be doing. Second, this corporation should be reviewed in the context of what it is doing in terms of world trade. In particular, we must ask what is it doing to, or possibly for, underdeveloped nations in the world.

In considering the bill I think it is important for the House to take into consideration the general policies of the minister responsible for this bill. I am referring to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie). In a speech delivered yesterday to the Canadian Club in Toronto, I believe the minister clarified much of the confusion that exists with respect to government policies as they are communicated from department to department and as understood within departments. In the course of his speech he makes the startling observation that it is impossible to develop an industrial strategy in Canada. This is a statement by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) a member of a government which has been in office for some ten years. He is now telling us that they cannot develop an industrial strategy for this country. Instead, he says, what they propose to do—and I emphasize that this is still in the future—is develop a strategy for sectors of the economy on an industry by industry basis. This, presumably, is the philosophy of the government. Then, he tells us, the time to start getting into shape for the game is now. It was not last year, or five years ago, or ten years ago, but now. The unfortunate thing, however, is that the indecision of the minister's department and of associated departments, is causing tremendous hardship to businessmen in this country.

It has been said before in this chamber that such industries as tanning, electronics, and shoe manufacture are being severely hurt by the absence of import quotas and the resulting flood of imports into this country from overseas. Spokesmen for these industries have appealed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the minister for relief. But to date no relief has been forthcoming. Asked what he intended to do to relieve the plight of these industries, the minister said the question had been referred to the anti-dumping tribunal and that he was still awaiting a report from this tribunal. When members of that tribunal appeared before the appropriate committee of this House they admitted a report had been requested from them as long ago as November of 1971 but that as of today no report had been made to the minister.

In the meantime, the industry is in a state of serious decline. Its spokesmen say that if the present situation is allowed to continue until 1975, the tanning industry in Canada will be extinct. I emphasize that when I refer to the tanning industry, I am referring to a 100 per cent Canadian-owned industry which the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, through its indecision and incompetence, is allowing to die. On the other hand, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has introduced Bill C-132, in which he proposes to set up an agency to scrutinize foreign take-overs and the expansion in certain circumstances of existing foreign subsidiary companies in Canada. I shall refer to this bill in the course of later debates, but I think it is safe to say now that these proposals amount simply to window dressing. I say this on the basis of the known history of the Export Development Corporation. That corporation has been signing up financing contracts to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars with absolutely no reference, as was shown during the committee hearings, to the ownership or control of the companies in Canada which received the benefit of this financing.

The fact is that some $1 billion had been committed by this corporation up to the end of December, 1972, of which amount approximately half had gone to eight corporations in this country. And of those eight corporations approximately half were foreign controlled. During our committee hearings a representative of the Canadian Export Association gave evidence that the total membership of the association amounted to some 400. On subsequent questioning of Mr. Aitken, the President of the Export Development Corporation, we were startled to find that only 15 Canadian companies had received direct assistance in the past year from the same Export Development Corporation. In other words, less than 4 per cent of the total membership of the Canadian Export Association received direct assistance from this plaything called the Export Development Corporation. I say it is a plaything; you should witness the signing of these contracts to which I am referring. The minister leaves this building in his chauffeur-driven limousine; an ambassador in a car comes in from the other side. They meet in the luxurious offices of the Export Development Corporation. They drink champagne, they sign big deals, and they drive back to their respective offices feeling they have done something of significance. I am referring to the fact that it has become a champagne circle as far as world activity is concerned.

Mr. Breau: You have not got to the hoochy-coochy girls yet!

Mr. Stevens: The government has often been accused, rightly, I think, of adopting yesterday's solutions for today's problems. Here, the opposite is happening. Now, it is creating tomorrow's problems today. I can guarantee that within five to ten years time a committee of parliament will be reviewing the deals which have been signed by this corporation and they will be trying to figure out why we were so stupid. The committee will be trying to ascertain why these deals were entered into by the corporation without more precautions being taken, and I would remind hon. members that when I speak of deals I am speaking of deals which are made not for one year only but, as the President of the Export Development Corporation told us, are operative for up to 20 years.

Let me return to an earlier point I made. How desirable in terms of world trade is the activity of the Export Development Corporation? In this regard it is important, I believe, to read various references which are available in a world context on this subject. The first I should like to mention is a reference in an article by the late Lester B. Pearson entitled "Partners in Development". This is a report of his commission on international development and, as recorded on page 119, Mr. Pearson makes some very relevant statements. Incidentally, the Berne Union which he mentions, is the name given to a loosely knit association into which all or most of, the export associations belong. He states:

> The Berne Union understanding that credits should not normally be extended for periods exceeding five years has effectively been abandoned by all major capital goods exporting countries and maturities frequently exceed eight, and sometimes even ten years. Virtually the entire net flow of export credit to developing countries in 1967 involved credits with maturities of more than five years.

And here we are, in 1973, being told by the President of the Export Development Corporation that they are now considering loans for 15 years in the same field. In the review Mr. Pearson points out that export credits have a part to play in development, but that their imprudent use involves very real dangers. First, export credits are usually an expensive form of external finance. This may be true, he says, even where the nominal rate of interest is low. However, this is offset by adjustments to the price of equipment purchased. Cases were reported to the commission involving price adjustments exceeding 100 per cent of the world market price. Although these cases are presumably rare, smaller adjustments are understood to be common.

● (1620)

In that connection, I think it is interesting to note that when he appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on March 9, the Most Reverend Edward W. Scott, Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada, referred to the problem of international financing activities. He pointed out that he was convinced from experience and studies that two crucial areas required much more attention and action: one was trade policy and the second was population. Mr. Scott made it clear in his remarks that he knew of examples where what he called fast selling salesmen were able to sell to persons in underdeveloped countries merchandise at over 100 per cent above the going market price for such merchandise.

Coming back to Mr. Pearson's article, his second caution is that the excessive use of export credits has created serious balance of payments problems for developing countries which have relied on short-term borrowing to finance long-term investments. Since the mid-1950s an undue accumulation of short-term suppliers' credits has been a major reason for the need to reschedule the debts of a number of countries, namely Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Ghana, Indonesia and Turkey. With the exception of Ghana, our Export Development Corporation, either on their own account or as agent for the government, have been actively giving further credits to each and every one of those countries referred to by Mr. Pearson. When I say "credits", I am referring to credits aggregating almost $250 million, approximately a quarter of a billion dollars of the total $1 billion signed up to date by the Export Development Corporation.

Mr. Pearson goes on to say that export credits are frequently used to finance industrial projects in the public sector, because in general neither international aid agencies nor the main bilateral aid donors are eager to finance industrial projects in that sector. Instead, credits are used as the next best alternative.

Mr. Pearson then comments that, as a rule, proper investigation is not made before these credits are granted, and that often they are probably motivated by an awareness that the project at issue might not pass rigorous economic reliability standards. Mr. Pearson recommends that the World Bank group draw up ground rules which would guide various contries in this field in order to avoid what he felt was a key problem in the field.

Nevertheless, Mr. Pearson comments, some restraint on the part of creditor governments is indicated. They, themselves, have an immediate interest in avoiding excessive use of export credits which is likely to lead to default or to a rescheduling of debt. Then he says:

> We recommend a strong early warning system based on the external debt reporting which is being evolved by the OECD and the World Bank. The World Bank should be charged with the responsibility of issuing definitive recommendations against further encouragement of export credits to countries which are in the danger zone from the standpoint of debt liabilities and interest burden. It should fix ceilings which should not be exceeded.

Not only does the Export Development Corporation not adhere to any such ceilings, but the fact is that in evidence given to the committee it turned out that it has no internal guidelines even as to the amount of credit it might extend to any country in the world.

If I may, I feel I should point out that the Export Development Corporation was likely born, as much as anything, out of the report on Canadian financing facilities for export by J. W. Gibson, issued on May 14, 1968. This is an interesting report. Unfortunately, the various things that Mr. Gibson expected to happen with respect to the Export Development Corporation have not, in fact, materialized to any great extent. I am referring, for example, to his wish to see Canadian chartered banks participate in export activity to a much greater extent. He mentioned the various means by which the Export Development Corporation could enhance export activity in the country. In short, I believe that what has happened is that a good idea has been warped, and this matter will become a problem child with which future Canadian governments will have to live.

I suggest it is being warped because Crown corporations, as they are administered by this present government, become a law unto themselves. I am amazed to find there is virtually no orientation in a Crown corporation toward making a profit. For example, when questioned as to why CMHC's profits have fallen in three successive years, I was startled to find the minister in charge of the corporation say: "As far as I am concerned, the lower the profit, the better". When I asked him whether he was on record as saying that, he replied yes, the lower the profit, the better, as far as he was concerned. Surely it is a strange thing that we have corporations that are almost invited to run at something less than significant profitability.

Be that as it may, when this bill was first introduced by the minister he said that he hoped it would get speedy passage through the House. Subsequently, he stated that there would be ample opportunity to discuss the bill during committee stage. I would suggest that that was not so in actual fact. What we found when we got to the committee stage of the bill was that every attempt was made to be secretive and not reveal information to which I believe we in this parliament are entitled. For example, it was not until literally the opening of the first committee meeting that we even received the annual report for 1972 of the Export Development Corporation itself. I would also point out that the Export Development Corporation took it upon itself to tell various exporters who had commitments from that corporation that we were holding up the passage of the legislation both at the committee stage and in the House.

● (1630)

I think what the President of the Canadian Export Association, Mr. J. M. McAvity, stated in a written submission to the committee in Item 5 should be on the record. He said:

> At this time, some companies are being cautioned by EDC that their commitments for long term loans and guarantees are approaching the authorized ceiling and, until Bill C-3 is passed, they are not in a position to give any assurance that a loan will be available for new business.

When I questioned Mr. McAvity he indicated it was the Vice-President of the Export Development Corporation, Mr. Chapin, who made that observation to him. I suggest that surely this is a very irregular proceeding when we were invited to make a deep and thorough investigation of this corporation, and in particular this bill at the committee stage, yet we find that those who are guiding the Export Development Corporation take it upon themselves to create a lobby to pressure the bill through the House. Just who is running whom? I feel the minister should not have tolerated that type of behaviour on the part of the executive of the Export Development Corporation.

Then, we come to the first little bit of illegality concerning the corporation. When the bill was first introduced it was stated that the ceiling in respect of the financing Section 29 was $850 million, and there was the request that the ceiling be raised to $1.5 billion as stated in the bill. On further questioning, the minister was very definite in stating that in any event the ceiling at no time had been exceeded. That view was maintained right down to the point of handing in the 1972 report to the committee. This is very strange because if you compare Note 2 in the 1972 financial statement with Note 2 in the 1971 statement, you will see that the terminology in respect of what is included in loans under the ceiling was changed very conveniently. It now turns out that the total of the loans committed was not even close to the ceiling. In fact, the figure suggested for the total liability defined under the act was only $502 million, and there was lots of room under the ceiling of $850 million.

In support of this position a copy of a cable was handed to the committee dated November 30, 1972 showing that if a projection were taken right up into 1976, at no time, including all disbursements and repayments, would they exceed that magic ceiling of $850 million. A further schedule was tabled subsequently, dated in January of this year, which showed that in fact that schedule had been offered to the committee for a purpose. The true projections of the corporation were contained in the subsequent January 1973 schedule which showed that there was a substantial over-run as far as the ceiling was concerned.

Let me refer to the specific comment of the president of the corporation during the hearing. He was asked whether in fact the total of loans committed would be over the ceiling now if the same terminology were used in 1972 as was used in 1971 in respect of what is included, and his very clear answer was yes. He was then asked why the terminology was changed and he said it was because of the misleading implications of the statement the year before. In short, we have the President of the Export Development Corporation admitting before a committee of this House that the corporation published a misleading statement the year before. I suggest that, in their hearts, the management of the corporation did not feel the 1971 statement was misleading, but believed they had to cover their tracks in order to ensure that, within the terms of that definition, they were not over the ceiling and the committee could deal with the bill.

Various references were made to the misleading effect of the wording in the earlier statement. Perhaps it is sufficient to say there is no doubt these statements have been put in a most convenient form to serve their own purpose. What was done was illegal, yet rather than admit the illegality the corporation asked for, and apparently received a convenient legal opinion which allowed it to calculate the ceiling liability in a different way than it had been calculated in the previous year. One might wonder why the corporation was so urgently trying to get this legislation through. As the President of the Export Development Corporation admitted to the committee, if the corporation used its own definition of the ceiling, the total of loans committed would still not be above the $600 million ceiling the corporation asked to have increased back in 1971. How ridiculous can you get? They came to this parliament in 1971 asking to have the ceiling increased from $600 million to $850 million. This year they asked that it be increased from $850 million to $1.5 billion, yet they admit they were still not over the ceiling which existed in 1971.

Let us consider another odd thing. In the 1972 report we find significant qualification by the Auditor General of Canada. The Auditor General pointed out that the corporation was involved in the provision of financing to the extent of $485 million for the purchase of a replacement aircraft without seeking a parliamentary appropriation.

That qualification is made after the Auditor General describes a certain transaction involving the Canadian Commercial Corporation. To show you how arrogant this corporation, the minister and this government is, the chairman of that board has the audacity to then state that the Auditor General has misinterpreted the facts. The board does not even believe the Auditor General who has been empowered by this parliament to check on what they are doing.

When I ask what the rush is all about, I think it is significant to realize that the Auditor General's report for 1972 is still not before parliament. Members of this parliament will be extremely interested when they read the description of this transaction in the Auditor General's report. This bill should not be ramrodded through this House before we have an opportunity to review what the Auditor General has to say in his report about this fancy transaction. I would point out that, while the country of destination in this deal is Venezuela, the Bank of Nova Scotia is involved with a company, BNS International Bahamas Limited, which is the actual borrower. I would also point out that of the $28 million involved in the deal, $25 million has been advanced, and that over 25 per cent of the total amount of money put out by this corporation in 1972 under section 29.

Perhaps one of the most interesting things which transpired in the committee hearings was that when asked what, under the new formula, would be the total amount of contracts they could sign if this bill should be passed, the president of the corporation admitted it would be $2 billion. They have roughly $1 billion signed now. If this act should go through they will have roughly a $2 billion capability so far as signed contracts are concerned. I have indicated that there are very few companies in Canada receiving the benefit of this money. The majority of the companies are actually foreign controlled. So, one would ordinarily expect that after the quack-quack-quacking Mr. David Lewis did during the last campaign concerning corporate welfare bums there would be a strong protest at the committee hearing over the fact the government was getting ready to give $1 billion of extra financing to a few corporations which were lucky enough to have the inside track.

Here is what happened. While the Export Development Corporation witnesses were in attendance there was not one question from an NDP representative. Their financial critic sat through the entire hearing doing nothing but his daily crossword puzzle. There was not a question. So, here you have it. In his book the leader of that party, at page 116, lists what he calls various rip-offs totalling $955 million. At other places he lists various rip-offs, LIP grants and things like that, and yet when members of that party have an opportunity to do something of a concrete nature they just do nothing. I feel that the people of Canada should understand this and should note the insincerity of their position, and also the insincerity of the minister's position when he indicated that he seriously intended to deal with the foreign ownership question in Canada with his Bill C-132, yet at the same time he allows a corporation to give, with absolutely no reference to ownership, tremendous financial assistance to such corporations as General Motors, MLW-Worthington and many others.

[Mr. Stevens.]

In dealing with the question of risk, during the committee hearing the question was asked of the president if, for example, he wished to sell the $17½ million worth of paper the corporation had placed in Argentina, what price would they get. I must admit that the president was very candid. He did not think there would be a market. So I asked him, if he could find a buyer what would be the likely discount. He indicated that they had a deal in respect of financing in Turkey and they were offered 33 cents on the dollar. This is the type of paper the corporation has been signing to hand out hundreds of millions of dollars.

I should like to list, in summation, ten positive things which should be done before this corporation is allowed to continue with its champagne exploits. First, we believe that the administration of the corporation should be thoroughly reviewed. There are very nasty rumblings of tremendous frictions within the ranks of the corporation, including senior personnel. We believe that under this heading there should be a thorough investigation as to the security which is actually being taken with regard to each deal the corporation ends up financing.

We believe there should be a review of the effect this type of financing is having on the underdeveloped countries or the other countries to which we are giving the financial assistance.

We believe that the corporation should be required to report to a standing committee of this House of Commons at least twice a year. The United States counterpart is required to report to the Congress in the United States twice yearly. Surely, it is not too much to expect that there be the formality of this corporation appearing before a committee of this House in a similar manner twice a year.

We believe that the corporation has only given lip service to raising a relatively large portion of its financing from the private sector. At the present time there is less than $50 million in short-term loans. The United States counterpart, on the other hand, has been able to raise every 90 days substantial debenture money from the private sector rather than relying on the treasury of the United States.

We believe the corporation should have more offices in order to assist exporters to deal properly with the corporation across this country.

We further believe there should be a sector set up within the corporation with a ceiling of perhaps $1 million per deal which would be designed to assist small businesses to get into, and remain competitive in, the world export markets. The United States counterpart has a very successful sector in this line at the present time. They tell me they anticipate it will be the largest sector in their entire operation. At the present time they are able to give financing in amounts of less than $1,000 in over 100 countries in the world in respect of exporters who wish the facility.

We believe there should be guidelines established for the corporation concerning how high the ceiling should be in respect of financing in any country. There should be guidelines concerning some privilege to be given to companies in Canada which are not foreign controlled and there should be guidelines concerning the amount of any single deal that will be entertained by this corporation.

We believe the chartered banks should be influenced and guided into more active participation in conjunction with the corporation than has been the fact to the present. The United States, the counterpart, requires in every deal a 50-50 participation with commercial banks. Our institution, the corporation, has shown no desire to do this. This corporation and this act should be reviewed in 1973 in a manner similar to the Gibson review of 1968.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He can continue only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Stevens: I have one final point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: I was saying that the United States counterpart enters into a 50-50 financing arrangement in respect of every deal. Finally, we believe the majority of the directors of the Export Development Corporation should not come from the public service but rather from the private sector.

• (1650)

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Now, I have the green light again, Mr. Speaker. There is a certain hazard in having a seat in the "lobby of the Chateau Laurier". It sometimes happens that you are not seen although heard by the people who control the loudspeaking system here.

On this reading of the bill I have a few remarks to make with regard to the future of the Export Development Corporation, and I hope that these remarks will be noted against the time when parliament will be considering the role of this corporation again. We must realize that this particular bill has to do with only one section of the Export Development Corporation Act and not with the whole act. Unless my memory serves me badly, the minister concerned indicated that at some future date we will have a chance to look at the act again and to reconsider the purpose of the Export Development Corporation. It is against this future date, which I hope will not be too far away, that I want to address these remarks.

Before I begin with the Points that I want to make, I would like to make a remark or two in reply to a couple of the comments made by the hon. member who has just completed his speech. The NDP has been accused of being unconcerned with the workings of the Export Development Corporation, particularly with regard to the way in which it aids and abets the encroachment of foreign ownership in Canada. The point was made that the corporation tends to deal with the big companies and that therefore, since it tends to deal with big companies which in Canada are very often in foreign hands, the corporation aids and abets the encroachment of foreign ownership in Canada. This is a rather indirect and tortuous argument. I think it has been pointed out time and time again that it is difficult for the Export Development Corporation under section 29 to advance loans of any significance to Canadian industry through the medium of small companies because small companies are simply not in the business of dealing with capital exports on a large and international scale.

Listening to the speakers from the Progressive Conservative party makes one think sometimes that their view of the productive system of this country is that it is essentially similar to a nineteenth century general store. In other words, all you have to do is to help the little company in a small village and the local chamber of commerce will stop singing Rotarian songs, then somebody will charge off to Brazil or Zambia and take out contracts for capital machinery or what have you. That is not how it works at all. It gives the NDP some comfort at any rate to have to deal with or against members on the government side who are somehow in this century, rather than having to deal with members on your immediate left, Mr. Speaker, who are just beginning to perceive that the world did enter the twentieth century some 73 years ago.

At the very least we would like to tackle the problem where it lies. I am reminded of what Andrew Undershaft, the character in one of George Bernard Shaw's plays, once said about the Salvation Army: "They're great, their souls are in the right place and they are out to fight the devil, but they don't have his right address". In a sense that is what the Progressive Conservative party is up to. They are out to fight the devil, but they are knocking on the wrong door. When we come down to the question of who gets the benefits of the largesse of the Export Development Corporation, we find some homegrown enterprises of our own zeroing in for what they can get, and none more busily and effectively than Brascan Limited which is one of our very old multinational corporations. We know how big it is and we know that it is getting bigger every day.

It was pointed out clearly enough on second reading that the $26 million loan by the Export Development Corporation to Light-Servicos of Brazil was, in effect, a loan to Brascan, a Canadian owned corporation. What is striking is that Brascan has been availing itself of this relatively cheap money backed by the public of Canada while at the same time it was making rather a lot of money by itself. I want to point out here that we are not helping a small corporation in great need of funds. In the report for the last year we discover that Brascan chalked up a very respectable profit indeed. I quote from the business section of the Montreal Star. It might startle some members to my immediate right that some of us socialists over here read that section of the newspaper, but we like to keep up with them and see what they are doing. It reads:

> Brascan Limited has chalked up 1972 year net of $97.4 million or $3.80 per share, against $83.8 million or $3.27 a share a year earlier.

That is not bad. The profit picture of Brascan for 1972 was good. It was better than the profit picture for the year 1971 which was also good. The article goes on to read:

> Company said the increased earnings resulted from better utility income. Net electric utility income rose to $87.1 million from $70.5 million in 1971.

And where is the better utility operation to be found but in Brazil where it owns the major chunk of the electric generating capacity of that country. They have made a lot of money out of Brazil. Our own form of Canadian imperialism is not to be ignored and is certainly very effective imperialism. Here is this little company, which is begging for funds, coming to the Canadian public for a substantial loan of some $26 million, while at the same time it is making rather gargantuan profits out of its operations in Brazil.

The article goes on to read:

> The high level of economic activity of south central Brazil served by Light S.A., the electric utility, is reflected in increased electric sales—22.4 billion kilowatt hours . . .
> Company's Brazilian investment income in 1972 was $7.5 million against $8.2 million. During the year the Brazilian investment unit took on two major new ventures—meat packing and brewing.

It is into brewing in Canada, why should it not brew in Brazil? I take it that here they are talking about brewing alcoholic beverages, not just brewing business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I understand that perhaps there have been some developments which will have him back on his feet in about 20 seconds from now. The parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have been in discussion with hon. members through the usual channels, and I think there would be a disposition to dispense with the private members hour today and to continue this fascinating debate.

Mr. Baldwin: The usual channels agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there is agreement in the House that the private members hour be dispensed with today and that the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) continue his speech.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, it is a rare day when this house is caught in an act of flagrant agreement, so we should note it.

I was just going on to meat packing and brewing. Of course, we know that Brascan is involved in brewing in Canada and one of its major subsidiaries is a small firm called Labatt's Incorporated. We discover from more recent news items that Brascan operates in Brazil, and indeed has spread into meat packing in that it has taken over the Swifts (Brazil) meat operation, which again is no mean enterprise. I just want to put these points before the House so that we can understand that we are not dealing with an impoverished company, but with a very wealthy company which knows exactly on which side its bread is buttered, or at least where part of its bread is buttered, and can easily come to the Export Development Corporation for money.

● (1700)

It is interesting to see what has been happening over the past few years to the loans made by the Export Development Corporation. When I look at the annual reports for 1971 and 1972, I find some very interesting figures. In the report for 1971 we are told that the total signed financing agreements between the EDC and the country of Chile amounted to some $24.68 million. This is not all the money actually lent, but the total of the agreements entered into. For some mysterious reason which I cannot understand the total signed financing agreements, as reported for the year 1972 and before, between the EDC and Chile, or between corporations and the E.D.C. amounted to $24.67 million. I just wonder if it is possible for items to shrink. At least it is obvious that this one did, but it is not so much the anomaly in the figures which intrigues me as what has been happening to the direction in which money is lent, particularly to South America.

If we go back to 1972 and compare the moneys advanced to Chile and Brazil over the years, we find that Chile, which is a relatively small country, signed agreements with the EDC in the sum of $24.68 million, whereas Brazil up to that time had only signed agreements in the sum of $13.17 million. But in 1972 magical things begin to happen. Chile is still at the same figure but Brazil has suddenly jumped to $62.4 million. Why the shift? What happened over that period of time? Could it be that the shift in lending patterns which we witness here has something to do with the political developments on the South American continent? Could it have something to do with the fact that Chile began to expropriate with, and without, compensation some of the international corporations involved in mining and development in that country? One is led to wonder.

One does not like to look for conspirators in these things, but one can be led to believe that there may have been some influence on the EDC which said, "Look here, Chile isn't a good bet any more because it has a Marxist president, and besides Chile has done the nasty thing of expropriating or nationalizing large American corporations in Chile. Brazil, on the other hand, is safe. Brazil has a fine, stable government. It is not a very democratic government but it is a very stable government, and we are going to lend our money there. Besides, we have Canadian friends who are operating there."

While I am on this point I want to underline one thing. We must not assume that the Export Development Corporation sits here in Ottawa waiting for customers to arrive from Brazil or Chile. That is not what happens at all. It is not the corporations or companies outside North America that come up to Ottawa to ask for a loan. As we all know, this has been stated and admitted. It is a matter of fact. It is the Canadian exporting company which arranges for the financing by approaching the Export Development Corporation. So, Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about here really takes place in Canada. The important part of it goes on in Canada and not in some far away country.

The Chilean situation is a particularly interesting one because, for one thing, the natural conditions of industry in Chile are very much like our own in Canada. It is a country which depend for its well being upon the proper exploitation of its natural resources, just as we do. As a matter of fact, much of the exploitation is like our own. It is an economy which is heavily dependent on extractive industries, mining in particular, and here I mention copper mining. We also happen to be involved in copper mining. We have a certain amount of expertise, which is fairly vaunted when it comes to our ability to develop techniques and the machinery for mining. Chile has a great need for this expertise and the capital equipment involved. We could supply it.

Why is it that a South American country which received a very considerable amount of the loans extended by the EDC over 10 years from 1951 to 1972 finds itself suddenly cut off, and another country starts to receive the lion's share? We can certainly ask ourselves a very legitimate question. Are there political considerations that enter into the decisions of the EDC? When I say political, I hope the House will understand that I am not talking about our partisan political considerations here in Canada but major political considerations having to do with the view that the EDC has of the worth and value of certain regimes in other countries. There is no doubt that there has been a major political change in Chile. And it seems to me that there has been a major change in the assessment made by the EDC as to the worthiness of Chile as a recipient of the largesse of the EDC. What I want to put before the House is really very simple. It consists of two or three points.

First of all, we should not kid ourselves that the efforts of the EDC cost the people of Canada no money. Of course, they do. The EDC lends money at a very cheap rate. It uses the borrowing ability of this parliament to advance relatively cheap money to private corporations, and of course they avail themselves of it. As has been pointed out time and time again, particularly by the officers of the EDC and the Exporters Association of Canada, it advances money for ventures which the private money market would not necessarily support. Otherwise, they would go to the private banks, the chartered banks, to get the money. But the chartered banks say, "The venture you are asking us to support is too long term, and too uncertain for us to advance the money at low rates. We would rather not be involved in that at all."

Let us make that point quite clear. We, the people of Canada, are supporting certain ventures which are uncertain, which are perhaps risky, and it is costing us something. If it is costing us something there must be a payoff; there must be a benefit, and the justification given to us by the government is that it creates jobs in Canada. But we have to ask ourselves a very important question. Does it create the right kind of jobs in Canada? Does it create the jobs in the right places in Canada? Do we not have in this country programs that have to do with ridding ourselves of regional disparities?

If it is the case that the Export Development Corporation lends money to corporations which use it in the central provinces of Canada and not in the less favoured provinces of Canada, it seems that it is working at cross purposes with another agency of the government and that these programs might cancel each other. Perhaps that is an indication why some of the regional expansion policies of this government did not work, if one department tries to do something and other departments are working against it, in effect. Let us lay this clearly on the line so that the next time we look at the Export Development Corporation Act we will be able to read into it certain safeguards to protect the regions of Canada which need this kind of capital investment.

The other point that I want to make is that in this country we have often made very fine commitments to the developing world and then, when the occasion arises to make great speeches at university convocations or on the hustings at election time or even addressing banquets, conferences and meetings we have made the point that aid to developing countries should not be tied to our political considerations but should be freely given with the welfare of the recipient in mind. Let us ask ourselves if any consideration of this kind is brought to bear in the act which controls the Export Development Corporation. It is not. What we have, Mr. Speaker, is an arrangement to allow for the export of capital goods, and an arrangement which permits the expansion of Canadian corporations in Canada. Related to that point again, might we not aks ourselves if one department of government is working at cross purposes with another. We have the CIDA which has fairly explicit terms of reference and is involved in more or less the same kind of operation as the Export Development Corporation, so may we not have here two departments of government whose efforts cancel each other? This is something else which should be looked at when the act is before us again.

It would not do for me to fulminate against this bill, Mr. Speaker, because having made our point we are going to support it. We have decided, however, that we will support it on the clear understanding that certain questions will have to be answered, on the clear understanding that this whole act will have to be brought back at a fairly early date and that the kind of considerations I have raised will have to be brought to bear in future. I hear a thumping from the Liberal benches, Mr. Speaker, but I think there is an interloper over there.

If this is not done, Mr. Speaker, all the pronouncements that we make about being neutral in our involvement with the developing world are false. All the statements that we want to make to the effect that we are interested in seeing the third world develop in a way of its own choosing are also false. It is all very well to make general statements at convocation time or at election time, but when it comes to dollars and cents we operate with our self-interest in mind and not only Canadian self-interest but the self-interest of particular aspects of our community.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the last speaker, particularly those concerning Chile and some of the antics that have been going on in the Export Development Corporation and in the practise of other branches of government as well. Some hon. members may recall that I brought this subject before the House on second reading of this bill and asked questions the other day as well. There is very little doubt in my mind that economics are obviously not the only consideration taken into account in financing the sales of Canadian products abroad. It is quite clear that there are political considerations as well, particularly the number of jobs created in Canada.

On the one hand the government tries to promote good will in Latin America. I remember that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), with I do not know how many ministers and aides, went to Latin America a couple of years ago. There was much partying on both sides and a great deal of goodwill. These things are fine but they cost a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. I am not objecting to that, but I am objecting to the government spending the taxpayers' money when some branches of government are negating the whole thing by a piece of foolishness such as has gone on with respect to Chile.

I am not only referring to the minister's recent tour of Latin America, but to some things that have gone on in the past, even at the United Nations when entertaining Latin American countries hoping to build up good will in that area. I am in favour of that, and I remember too that when there was a terrible earthquake in Chile a few years ago with great loss of life and property, Canada contributed a great deal of aid. Chile has noted this and remembered it. I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that Canada contributed the aid merely to help build future business; I do not think that was the intention of the government or of anybody in Canada but nevertheless it did create a good deal of good will in Chile.

So, what happens? There is one firm that I have referred to before in this House whose application to the Export Development Corporation was turned down under very strange circumstances. The corporation had earlier agreed to this particular loan but later refused it. I, personally, made a phone call to find out the details and was told by a senior official of the department that it was government policy not to make any further loans, directly or indirectly, to Chile. Of course, one wonders why because in the past the record of that country has been good. We have to deal with these matters on a very sound economic basis and Chile has very little credit anywhere in the world. That is true and it is probably for some of the reasons suggested by the hon. member who proceeded me.

I am aware that Chile's credit is probably not very good but other branches of government have not hesitated to extend loans to countries like Pakistan and others of questionable political value in southweast Asia. I do not know what the purpose is here. Apparently the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not even know what was going on when I asked him this question last Friday, I believe, because he suggested it was absolutely untrue that credit was being refused to Chile. As I have said previously, one hand of this government does not seem to know what the other hand is doing. Certainly, I think the activities of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be more closely linked with those of the Department of External Affairs when loans are to be made abroad. Apparently the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not know anything about this and I think this is significant. Perhaps he would not have agreed to the sort of performance that has been taking place.

Sometimes, when one raises matters in this House, there is some effect. Whether what I am about to raise involves cause and effect I do not know; perhaps it may. I have learned, after making certain inquiries, that officials of the Chilean government are to be here, I believe this week, to have discussions with the Export Development Corporation and perhaps discussions at somewhat higher levels of government. They will try to arrange new terms of credit for Chile. I hope the minister can give us some further information in this regard in a few moments. The information I was able to obtain was, frankly, second hand. I was not told this by the Export Development Corporation. Perhaps what I have been told is true and perhaps the minister can give us some information in this regard in a few moments.

Is the Canadian government as sincere and honest as it says it is because, as has been noted, governments, like Caesar's wife, must not only be pure but appear to be pure. Certainly, the circumstances surrounding this Chilean operation cannot help but leave the impression, or at least make people draw the conclusion, that some kind of sleazy international interference is going on and that perhaps our government, perhaps with some foreigners, is interfering in the internal affairs of another country.

In days gone by, and I had some responsibility at that time for export development being parliamentary secretary to the minister responsible for trade and commerce, when the Cuban situation arose we never put any restrictions, to the best of my information and knowledge, on exports to that country, provided they were not in strategic materials. I do not think anybody in Canada agreed with the internal activities of the Cuban government, or with that government's foreign policy for that matter, but that did not prevent us from dealing with them.

Here, we have a somewhat different situation in that the government of Chile, or the presidenté, was democratically elected. I have received letters on this subject saying that we are helping communist regimes. Mr. Speaker, they are there and they are there to stay, wherever they may be, and no amount of local or outside interference is likely to overturn them. Now, we find that we have established excellent trading relations with China and the Soviet Union and, to a smaller degree, with the Cubans. These are the sorts of things that sometimes lead to a lessening in misunderstandings in the present world and perhaps to cooling things off, if one wants to put it that way, Mr. Speaker. However, the kind of meddling I have spoken about cannot help but create a great deal of resentment not only in Chile but in Latin American countries; and the Latin Americans, as I am sure hon. members in the House who have visited those countries will know, are sensitive about any interference or domination from any government, particularly the United States.

It seems that a great many people are under the impression that sometimes we are a kind of puppet of the United States, and when that country puts pressure on us to do things we do them. I do not think our cause in Latin American will be helped with this kind of activity. It will not be helped one bit. I hope the minister, in a few minutes, will be able to tell us that arrangements are underway to re-establish Chile's credit, or that Chile's credit has been re-established in Canada and that assistance arrangements will be entered into. I will be glad to turn the floor over to the minister, in the hope he may be able to give us some information in this regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before I recognize the minister I ought to inform the House that if the minister speaks at this time he will close the debate.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to speak for very long. There has already been considerable debate with respect to the amendments before us to the Export Development Act. There was considerable debate on second reading, and there was further and very comprehensive discussion in the standing committee.

I have listened carefully to the views of hon. members opposite and have reflected on the debate which started many, many weeks ago. It seems to me that many of the misconceptions which I noted in certain quarters when we debated the bill on second reading have been stripped away. There was, for instance, the misconception that the Export Development Corporation was making direct loans to Canadian firms, that is, was making direct loans to large firms and making direct loans to foreign-controlled large firms. I think hon. members will be aware, after the committee examination, that loans are made to foreign buyers for one reason: they are made when the foreign buyer wants to buy some capital goods and, if he does not buy them from a Canadian source, he will buy them from a foreign source. In other words, the purpose of Export Development Corporation direct loans is to place Canadian capital goods manufacturers on an equal footing with those of other countries.

Then, there was the question, how does the financing assist small business? To a large extent the participation of the small Canadian businessman is important. He fits in because he is supplier to the large or prime contractors.

It was also interesting to note, as pointed out in committee, that Canadian controlled firms and their employees were the major beneficiaries of these direct loans. It is true that a number of foreign controlled subsidiaries operating in Canada have, through these loans to foreign buyers, been the beneficiaries, or more accurately, their employees have benefited. Yet, 62 per cent of the value of direct loans made have been made to Canadian controlled corporations. Second, of course loans are only made to a foreign buyer if the foreign buyer's purchases include at least 80 per cent Canadian content.

I think the debate has also cleared up the misconception with respect to the ceiling. Having listened to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), it seems that he has not yet accepted the view of the auditor general. He referred to Note 2 of the annual report of the Export Development Corporation for 1971 and again to the same item in the 1972 annual report, and he noted that the language was different. He was quite correct. The alteration made in the language was to remove, as he himself indicated by quoting the words of the president of the corporation, what might have been a misleading statement in the earlier statement. That is a correction which the Auditor General of Canada has accepted, as I believe I ought to make clear. I therefore reject out of hand what I consider to be an irresponsible statement by the hon. member for York Simcoe when he used the phrase "the first little bit of illegality". I do not think that phrase is worthy of him in the light of the evidence which has been placed before the committee.

● (1730)

Reference has been made to the credit worthiness of the great country of Chile. Concern has been expressed that loans have not been made to Chile in recognition of the fact that repayments have not been forthcoming on schedule and of the difficulties which this has created. I should like to provide more information to the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) and to the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) on this point. I cannot give any information at the present time as to when Chile may again be a full-fledged candidate. I would hope that arrangements could be worked out very shortly so that Chile may again take its position alongside other nations.

There may still be confusion in some minds as to the role the Export Development Corporation should be playing as an agency of foreign aid. I think we should distinguish clearly between foreign aid and foreign trade. Our foreign aid agency is CIDA—the Canadian International Development Agency. This agency has made many substantial loans to developing countries. The EDC is not an aid agency. It is an agency which is supporting Canadian trade—supporting the export of capital goods manufactured in Canada. And I may say its activities have been responsible for creating roughly 125,000 man hours of employment in Canada for Canadians. It is worth underlining that a direct loan of $1 million to a foreign buyer is the equivalent of roughly 120 man years in terms of the employment impact back in Canada. As I say, over the life of the Export Development Corporation, the figure of 125,000 man years of labour in Canada can be well supported.

The debate has been a lengthy one. There has been a comprehensive examination of the subject in committee. I believe the House is satisfied that the Export Development Corporation has been doing a quite remarkable job since it was established by parliament roughly four years ago. To those who wonder whether it is as effective as it might be, one should answer, I think, that in the nature of things no agency can afford to be satisfied with its progress. There is always more that can be done. But the record will show that the volume of export credit insurance has doubled every five years and that the amount of long term financing since the 1960's has increased from $60 million to $285 million a year.

It is my pleasure as minister responsible for introducing these amendments to move the third reading of Bill C-3 now before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Nowlan: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we might call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.38 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

FOOD PRICES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) that the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, presented to the House on April 2, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity of speaking to this resolution. The last three times I have been cut off with about five or seven minutes to go, and having prepared a speech I should like to put it on the record. I should like to detail, in the short time allotted to me, some reasons why the price of food has risen substantially and to suggest some areas we might look to which, with some modification, might bring some relief to the upward spiralling of food prices.

First of all, I do not think the producers can be blamed for the rise in food costs. There are many reasons for this. For many years there has been a steady migration from the land in rural Canada. My riding is one such area. Not only has there been, in the rural areas, the natural increase in population which had to be sent off to the cities but there has also been a consolidation of many farm units into much larger farms.

Whereas years ago there were many farms producing a variety of grains, along with beef cattle, cream, eggs, poultry and pigs, there is now a much more specialized approach and many farmers produce only one type of grain or a certain type of livestock. This trend will likely continue. Large production of livestock seems to be concentrated in large herds of cattle. We have the almost factory-type, hog raising establishments. Chickens and turkeys are raised in like manner. This has certainly changed the whole concept of farming and perhaps has changed the ability of the industry to respond to sudden changes in demand.

In the late 1960s the price of food was abnormally depressed by the glut of grain in the world market, especially in Canada. The frantic attempts by farmers to diversify, aided and abetted by many governments, caused an oversupply of eggs, hogs, chickens and turkeys, with disastrously low prices. This led to demands for the setting up of marketing boards to curtail supply and thus bring about market stability. When finally the surplus of grain was sold and the world market for grain expanded, Canadian feed grains rose in price. But the situation was aggravated by a fall-off in animal protein from the Peruvian fisheries which resulted in record feed prices for protein supplements which are fed to animals. Flax and rapeseed rose in price, flax to its highest point in 20 years, due to the demand mainly for meal.

The resulting rise in food prices has caused widespread cries for something to be done. I think food prices will remain at a new high for the foreseeable future. Notwithstanding chronic concern with the high cost of meat, the per capita consumption of meat has risen sharply across the board; there has been an increase from 60 pounds per capita to 90 pounds per capita in beef over the past decade. Similar increases have been posted for other meats, such as pork.

In the current context of increasing food prices there are many forces at work in the market. A notable one is the fact that Japanese food buyers, by buying pork in the market, have raised the price to the highest point ever. We exported approximately 110 million pounds of pork in 1972, with Japanese imports increasing from 20 million pounds in 1971 to 45 million pounds in 1972. The Japanese have been buying great quantities of wool, lumber, plywood, rapeseed and pork around the world. However, since April their buying has reduced, with a resulting decrease of 20 per cent in the price of pork, a decrease in the price of lamb and a drop of 20 per cent in the price of wool. It is expected that the Japanese will come back into the market in May. This increase in buying may have been the result of enormous amounts of surplus yen which the Japanese wanted to get rid of in order not to be accused of contributing to monetary instability.

There are many areas which we should consider in studying possibilities in food production and food marketing. I do not think food prices will go down, because there seems to be no way that food can be produced more cheaply. If we wish to maintain the required food production we must ensure that there is sufficient manpower on the farms. We have witnessed such an exodus from the farms in the last 25 years that it seems doubtful that farmers remaining will expand their production of food to the desired limit. I think the number of Canadians still living on the farm is down to about 7 per cent. Canadians will have to be more concerned about the viability of the farming community.

The farm population at present is barely replacing itself, and it seems inevitable that further concessions and inducements will have to be made before there will be an increase in agricultural production. These inducements should take the form of recognition that payments for livestock, machinery and other capital investment in earlier years represent a direct charge on the income of the farmer. This should be recognized in our tax structure. It would create a much greater inducement for young people to go back into agriculture than the conventional way of giving large sums in loans, which results in a young farmer being in debt till he dies. The recent tax changes were very inimical to the accumulation of the capital necessary to carry on farming. For the western grain farmer, the loss of straight line depreciation is keenly felt. Also, the loss of the basic herd concept is bad, and it was only partially rectified by a recent amendment.

There is another area which I feel has contributed to the rising cost of food and has not been fully approached. This is the area of government regulations in respect of grading, and health laws. These have acted to put many small processing and slaughtering facilities out of commission. I have had experience with health authorities. Some seem to be especially vigilant and often make conditions so unreasonable or expensive that the small butcher or slaughterhouse cannot operate.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

One of the difficulties is that in areas where large slaughtering operations take place, health regulations must be rigid; but in small establishments more leeway might be allowed. Indeed, good and reasonable care is more important than elaborate equipment. I wish to give an example of this. A man who operated a small butcher's store and slaughterhouse told me he was put out of business because of grading regulations. He had to get the grader to come from 40 miles away, but could not afford to pay him the mileage involved. When you consider that those who sell meat, including chicken, must have it graded before slaughter, it is easy to see how this situation could come about.

This situation has meant the loss of local processing to rural communities. The animals are now transported hundreds of miles to the city and slaughtered, then the meat is returned to the rural community. This means additional loss of industry to the rural community and more expensive meat; and what is most important, the loss of industry occurs in the community where the livestock is grown.

Government grading may be important, but we have to recognize that it represents an added cost and the mechanics of it virtually put the small slaughterhouse out of business because of the impossibility of arranging adequate grading. The demand for protection for the consumer by grading and health regulations has markedly increased the cost of meat in small villages and has detracted from their self-sufficiency. As a result of putting the small slaughterhouses out of business, the checks and balances on large meat processing plants have been removed because there is no longer automatic competition.

Let me refer to an article in the Globe and Mail of April 10 which lists three main packing plant companies across Canada in which one can buy shares. This indicates that much of the industry has been centred in these three large companies. This is an important fact when we consider how small slaughterhouses acted as an efficient deterrent to the increasing charges associated with meat processing.

Mr. Speaker, I could not discuss the question of food prices without mentioning the effects marketing boards can have. Marketing boards must necessarily be restrictive in nature. They are designed to prevent overproduction. Those in charge must aim at supplying the market, and no more. Excess production is followed by a great many problems. Marketing boards tend to apply quotas. These become more and more rigid and, in the interest of so-called efficiency, tend to create larger and larger producers.

This concentration in the hands of fewer producers closes the door on new entrants, and when abnormal conditions arise with either production dropping unexpectedly or demand being greater than foreseen, shortages develop. In this regard, one must remember that on the small farm one needs a quota to produce milk, raise chickens, produce eggs, turkeys and even to raise pork. One can see how this is discouraging to anyone considering entering the industry. It is difficult, if not impossible, to acquire a quota at a specific time. This raises the question of whether, if we have marketing boards, they can manage things in a better way and how they will do so. I suggest much will depend upon the individual handling of a commodity. As marketing boards move away from the free market and are not subject to any of the normal marketing forces, the problem of supply, price and the pattern of an industry will become more difficult to manage. Part of the reason for this can be related to the lack of guidelines.

These are some of the areas in respect of which I suggest we have to be careful when assessing the influence marketing boards can exert on prices. We must ask ourselves whether a marketing board should work in the interest of the producer or the consumer, and then we must decide where the saw-off should occur. These are some of the areas in respect of food prices that will have to be considered.

Generally speaking, wage and price controls have been successful in the short term, but often they are followed by periods of rapid inflation as controls gradually begin to weaken. Wage and price controls are initially successful because of the automatic squeeze on profits. This is a difficult situation because when profits are frozen, wages tend to rise somewhat. When wage and price controls become necessary, it is important that the government should maintain a reasonable economy so that the forces of inflation do not necessarily destroy the advantages created.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of speaking on this important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of this opportunity to make a few remarks on the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices.

I am a member of the committee and I was much concerned by the study we carried out and which was to culminate in the presentation of a report at an early date.

I can assure the House that presenting a first report after such brief sessions is quite a feat. I realized that when you begin to look into the causes behind the rise in consumer prices, attending a few committee meetings is certainly not sufficient to reach conclusions.

● (2020)

There are several causes of the rise in consumer prices and when these causes are scrutinized at the respective levels of primary production, secondary production, processing, packaging, marketing and transport, one realises that so many factors influence consumer prices that a standing committee should be created, made up of experts who, jointly with hon. members, would carry out control and research functions. In fact, hon. members should be on the committee in order to follow more closely all stages through which foodstuffs go from production to consumption.

Just to give you an idea of causes of rise in prices of farm products, for instance. People say that today the price of beef and other meats is spiraling. And they seek the reason for this at levels of production, slaughter-house and marketing. During the consideration in committee, I believe we forgot that there is something which influence even more the price of beef or other food in Canada and particularly in the province of Quebec. I refer to the price of feed grains, a factor that no one had suspected so far.

During the study in committee, there was talk about control of production, wages and consumer prices. It is very difficult to talk about control of production when we see what has taken place, for instance, concerning feed grains. We saw that western farmers were being paid for not producing any wheat. And I do not blame them because, to a certain extent in all fields, what we are looking for is maximum profits.

Everything will be sacrificed in order to maintain the price of wheat. Over the past years we saw western farmers let thousands of bushels of wheat rot on the field for the only reason that if this wheat was put on the market, this would lower the price. It is useless to say that we want to fight the increase in consumer prices if the primary producers start by saying: We must first keep a maximum price for our products, even if we must destroy half of them. Worse still, when they thought that we would have too many products, they paid farmers not to produce.

Look at what is happening in the province of Quebec. The prices of chicken and butter are going up, but farmers have been paid to destroy their production. Farmers were being paid a 90 cents subsidy for each laying hen that they slaughtered, because there were too many eggs.

Five hundred thousand laying hens were slaughtered on this basis, and now there is a shortage of eggs and prices are shooting up. We do away with the producer, and then we grumble that wholesale and retail prices are going up. We will have to be a little more logical than that, Mr. Speaker!

I was saying just now how interested I was in the evidence brought before the committee; I was taken a back by all those stupidities I heard and I wondered whether a group of 22 or 24 members of Parliament might not try to take a more extensive look at the subject, instead of concerning themselves exclusively with the profits of the dealer who is there for the customer's sake.

Also, we are today witnessing the warning of the large corporations. Chain stores, large producers and meat packers are drawing up their lines of battle. The government is all for it, even among farmers. Rather than work towards a pitched battle, it should help farmers, and family farms, by making up for the lack of funds. That would prevent the dereliction of 40 per cent of family farms, as I have seen it happen in my constituency. The same thing has happened in the West, to make way for large agricultural industries. Prices will not be decided by demand, but by the producer. You either pay up or you close down.

Mr. Speaker, this is no way to help the population. As long as we fail to examine the source of this problem, we will not do more than we did in committee: review small aspects of the problem one by one in an effort to blame the businessman, the packer or the consumer's whim. One says: the customer is too hard to please nowadays. Basically, that is true, but that is not all. The customer used to buy sugar in one hundred pound bags and it cost then a lot less than buying it in six or ten ounce packages, or in fine, extra fine or extra coarse texture. It is evident that all this is reflected in higher consumer prices but if the client or consumer cannot benefit from modern technology, I think there is no need whatsoever to insist on improved techniques, automation and electronics.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

We recognize the existence of that evolution, we also recognize that everything costs a little more, but I believe that there is something to be done, as I said earlier, at the level of the large associations which control production, in the same way as there are controls at the monetary level. Everything is imposed upon us and, at the end, we say: It is expensive. Prices are spiralling because the government has not taken the necessary steps to check that. Far from it, the government often promotes those price increases and we can see it interfere outside the field of consumption.

Let us take the control of Hydro Quebec and Bell Canada. But the oldest members are saying: Go ahead, approve the increase, we are for it. In fact, if we truly want to protect the consumer, all these organizations will have to be closely watched. They will have to be controlled by a standing committee of the House which at all times will be empowered to summon the officials of big companies and trusts and demand from them the reasons for such increases whether at the marketing or production level.

Instead of trying to stabilize prices through demand, this committee should determine for example a margin of profit for transportation, packing and marketing. I think this could be used as a basis which, without correcting everything else, could at least give some results. Instead of relying solely on competition, we could use a benefit basis.

At the committee, certain members have suggested absolute control over consumer prices. As the hon. members have already stated, we have had enough controls during the war and no control should be imposed on the Canadian population during peace time. I think Parliament, with a devoted committee which would work throughout the year, can impose its will on those who must supply satisfactory services to the citizens and live from their industry and trade. But at the same time, I think it is possible to impose conditions which, while ensuring adequate services, would allow them to live with largely sufficient incomes. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that my allotted time is exhausted.

[English]

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, we in the Conservative party believe that this country is in the grip of a cost and inflation crisis that can only be termed a national emergency and cries out for national leadership and strong governmental initiative. Old age pensioners and those on fixed incomes in both urban and rural communities in all parts of Canada are especially hard hit, not just by food prices but by the escalating cost of all essentials, namely, shelter, transportation, health and personal care, fuel—

Mr. Reid: Energy costs.

Mr. Baldwin: High government costs.

Mr. Lawrence: —and especially the high cost of government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: If my hon. friends want to dispute that there are grave disparities in some sectors of our economy, disparities that are readily apparent not only geographically but on an occupation basis as well, then that is obviously up to them. Our farmers are an excellent example of those caught on the inflationary treadmill which exists today. The higher costs to farmers of all of their inputs—their fuel, equipment, capital investment, all their maintenance and running costs, even their own food costs—have grown beyond belief in the last few years. These costs have accelerated in the last few months. Even though the price at the farm gate—by that I mean the selling price by the primary producer of his raw, fresh, unprocessed product—has risen. The farmer on this accelerating treadmill has never been quite able to catch up.

However, the farmer is not unique in this situation. The fisherman, the small manufacturer, the retailer, those in the service industries—everyone is on that escalating treadmill; and the harder the individual runs, the sooner he finds that his goal of a more comfortable existence and a more efficient operation is just as far beyond his grasp. Left far behind, without the means or ability to even run to keep up, but with the treadmill working against them as against all others, are those on fixed incomes, those on pensions and the so-called working poor. Clearly, this situation has to be brought under control before further unfair disparities are created.

Against this background, and clearly because it was unwilling or unable to act in a constructive manner two months ago when conditions were slightly better than they are now, this government set up the food prices committee. Those of us on this side of the House in the Conservative party said at that time that this was an unfair and discriminatory move, that only one extremely complex industry was being singled out by the government for publicity and investigation at a time when obviously the whole consumer price index was rising, not just the food price index. We said that government action, not parliamentary investigation, was needed. We said at that time that it was a barefaced government delaying manoeuvre, and we were right.

This is why we in this party wish to dissociate ourselves from the first interim report of the committee studying food price trends. The report should deal with the whole problem of inflation, of which food prices are only a part. In recommending a toothless, awkward and obscure food prices review board as its main proposal, we believe that the Liberal and NDP members of the committee are certainly not facing the facts of life in Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Such a body would only be unrealistic and administratively cumbersome and expensive. But, more important, it is unreal and unfair to deal with food prices alone when the basic problem facing Canada is the high cost of government and rising prices in all sectors of the economy.

I think it might be of interest to the House, and especially to the loud-mouthed individuals to my left, to find out just how the NDP were sucked in. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—I am glad to see that she is in the House tonight—came to that committee with a preconceived idea of exactly what she wanted. I bear her no ill will for that. She wanted, and she has always wanted, a food prices review board.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): And so has our party.

Mr. Lawrence: But the Liberal chairman—I am glad to see him here tonight also—obviously fearful of his government's inactivity and the fact that that inactivity was starting to hurt, came up with the idea of a food prices monitoring board—that was the name of it—which would have no real powers but would look at food prices, would report to the minister and would be an information gathering body. The trap was set. The NDP grabbed at the bait. The deal was made, even though the NDP had been speaking about a food prices review board which would have the power to investigate, which would have the power to make a decision and which would have the power to roll back a price increase when the board felt the increase was unwarranted. All of this went out the window. What we have is a toothless, supposedly independent board but one which reports to the minister and is dependent on the minister for funds. Some independence! It is an advisory body only; it makes no decisions itself; it has no power to make anyone do anything.

● (2040)

In my own view, the powers originally requested by the NDP would be too great for such a body in any event. But this façade as presented to us is simply a toothless body, a charade, something like Dr. Young's Prices and Incomes Commission, which is designed to give the appearance that something is being done. Nothing could be done by this group. What it did, Sir, was to suck in the NDP. It really is a monitoring board, but simply because the name was changed the NDP agreed to it and apparently are going to be agreeing to it even tonight.

It will do nothing to alleviate any price increase. It has no power. Indeed, the recommendation is so vague, and the minister's reply that "a review mechanism will be announced before the end of this month" fits in so perfectly with his equally woolly-worded response, that it is no wonder that this procrastinating, dilly-dallying government would agree with the report as presented to us tonight. The Liberals agree with it because there is nothing in it, and obviously the NDP agree with it because they are afraid to disagree with the Liberals.

I just want to say this to you, Mr. Speaker. There has been much talk around here lately about elections. If the government is looking for an issue to go to the country on, this is it. This is their golden chance, their golden opportunity. And by golly, Sir, I challenge them to do so. Look at how it fits in. They sucked in the NDP. They have got the Social Credit on their side. If they are looking for an issue in an election, why not this—a toothless, awkward prices review board? The NDP irrevocably committed themselves to it. The Social Credit has done the same. If the government thinks it is a good idea, then it has those two groups with it. We differ, and we are quite willing to meet this challenge on the hustings. If the government has got the intestinal fortitude to back up this move, then all right, on this issue it must feel that it can clean the slate.

What is our position? Our main criticism of our colleagues' report must be that it attempts to centralize the inflationary problem as essentially one of food costs alone. This is discriminatory and unfair to the farmer whose prices have to reflect his diversified input, to the processor who has to pass along all his costs, to the packager whose final product sometimes includes a greater charge for the container than for the contents, to the distributor who has as a main expense his labour, his transportation and his warehousing costs, and finally, to the retailer who we were told works under a harshly competitive system that some of us wish explained in far greater detail.

Out of all this the Conservative party members can only conclude that the problem is not only rising food prices, but rising prices in all sectors of the economy, including the government. Food is an important and visible factor but is not the sole element in the rising cost of living. Food products are not the worst performers in today's marketplace. While food prices have increased 41 per cent since 1961, many other products and services have increased even more. For example, housing costs have increased by 46 per cent, health care by 50 per cent and local transportation by 78 per cent.

Our position is that we believe only a comprehensive, co-ordinated governmental package can adequately deal with the cost crisis this country is now in. This package must deal with an over-all economic policy. It must involve much closer liaison between government departments. It must co-ordinate and reform taxation, tariffs, transportation, agricultural and manpower policies in order to approach the problem in an over-all manner.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that, number one, there has to be a reversal of the present Turner economic, monetary and fiscal policies. Number two, there should be an immediate but temporary 90-day freeze on all income, including dividends, fees, wages, salaries and commissions, and on all costs and on all prices except food at the farm gate. We believe that during that 90-day period a comprehensive package program can be worked out. Sir, I believe my time is almost up. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

> That the motion for concurrence in the interim report of the parliamentary committee studying price trends in food be amended by
> (1) inserting after the word "be" the word "not" and by
>
> (2) deleting the period after "in" and adding thereto
>
> "and that the said interim report be referred back to the said committee with the instruction that the committee recommend to the House that
> (a) its terms of reference be widened to include a study of all prices and costs, and not just food prices, and
> (b) the government consider the advisability of instituting an immediate 90-day "freeze" on all incomes, costs and prices, exempting only the price of food "at the farm gate", and
> (c) the government consider the advisability of taking measures to stabilize costs in the Canadian economy and to halt the rise in the country's cost of living, after the period of the 90-day "freeze".

I make one final point. If the government, the NDP and the Social Credit party firmly believe that a food prices review board is the answer to everybody's prayers in respect of the escalating cost of living, may I point out to them that it will merely be an advisory group. It will produce only information. Therefore, why in the world are we even continuing this silly business of having a parliamentary food prices committee?

[Mr. Lawrence.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has very serious doubt as to the procedural acceptability of this amendment. I am prepared to hear argument from hon. members, either in support of the procedural aspects of the amendment or in opposition thereto. I might say that my main reservation is that this appears to be an entirely new question, and I cannot think that that can be considered as an amendment at all. I will listen to hon. members, but I suggest they would have to do quite a bit of convincing before they would satisfy the Chair that this can be considered an amendment. Hon. members who may want to guide the Chair may, at the same time, give me any precedents that they can cite for this kind of amendment to a motion for concurrence in a report of a committee.

It appears that hon. members are reluctant to take part in a procedural debate. At the same time, I appreciate that there is a difficulty in that we are operating on a time limit and hon. members are anxious that everyone should have an opportunity to participate in the debate after which, by order of the House, there is to be a division at ten o'clock tonight. I can also understand why hon. members might find it difficult to submit arguments which would support the acceptability of the motion.

If there were any way that the Chair could accept the amendment, then because of the fact that we have been proceeding by consent, by unanimous agreement and under an order of the House I would certainly be pleased to prepare to accept it, that is, if there were unanimous consent that the amendment should be accepted despite its procedural difficulties. But I have to rule at this time, subject to discussions that may take place later between members, that this is a new question.

The motion before the House is one for concurrence in the report of a committee. Hon. members may want to go back to the original terms of reference, which are quite limited and, of course, the report which we have before us is based on those terms of reference which set up the committee. In the amendment that we have before us is an entirely new question, suggesting that the committee report be not concurred in but that the committee be instructed to consider a number of alternatives which were not referred to in any way in the original terms of reference given to the committee. For these reasons, I would think it would have to be a new question, and I do not see how procedurally it can be accepted.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with you: I could talk for half an hour on the procedural aspects of this amendment, but I am not anxious to deprive hon. members who have such great contributions to make. I would suggest to Your Honour that, while there may be hon. members who have slight doubt as to the procedural acceptability of this motion, their silence at this time is an indication that there is a desire to divide on this issue.

There are two issues before the House and before the country. One is the proposal contained in the committee's report, and the other is the suggestion that the committee should ask the House to recommend wider terms, including the provisions in the original terms of reference and all factors which are involved in the trends in food prices.

I think the country needs, the House needs, and even Your Honour needs, to have the House give a clear decision on this issue. I am sure Your Honour would like to know what this House feels about it and I think, under the circumstances, would accept the fact that silence is acquiesence and is, in effect, a demand that the House should have this opportunity. I could argue the technical aspects of this matter, but I would rather leave it at that for the time being.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise for only half a minute to explain my silence. When we arranged for this two-hour debate tonight, one of the things I agreed to was not to waste any time on a procedural argument even if an amendment were moved. That is the reason for my silence. I accept the views Your Honour has expressed, and if you were to ask the unanimous consent of the House to debate an amendment which is clearly out of order, I would have to say no.

Mr. Lawrence: Are you open now, Your Honour, for argument on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that in view of the fact there is agreement, we should try to complete the debate and it might be better that we do not hear further argument. I had the feeling that the amendment was out of order. It was a gallant attempt to introduce an entirely new question. There might be another opportunity for the House to consider it, and there might be a division at that time. I suggest that hon. members be satisfied with dividing on the main question, which is the one which will be put to the House at ten o'clock.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I deliberately withheld making the argument that I thought I should make. I made it quite plain that I was anticipating, by the silence expressed, that there would be acceptance of the procedure. I know there is very little silence. There is so much for the other side to be silent about, but they do not often take the opportunity, especially when they are answering questions.

Let me put this to the House: Is there not the possibility that when this House considers a report of a committee, it could recommend that the committee take it back and ask for wider terms of reference? That is what it amounts to. The original terms of reference stem from the House; the House is the repository of the authority. It has been suggested by a motion—I want to emphasize this to Your Honour and to members of this House—that all the factors involved in the trends in food prices be examined. Surely the question of wages, the question of transportation costs and every factor which is involved in any way in the question of the cost of food should be considered.

What my hon. friend has done in this admirable motion is to say to the committee, "Take it back and review what you have done. Then ask the House to give you terms of reference which cover all the aspects, every concept, every element involved in the question of food prices. Do what you should do. Do what the House should have done in the first place".

I hear some rude noises from the other side, Mr. Speaker. I know that hon. members opposite are afraid to face this issue. They do not have the intestinal fortitude to stand up and vote on this issue. We think the country demands that this opportunity be given their representatives in the House of Commons to divide on the issue, and we think the committee should ask the House for wider terms of reference.

Some hon. Members: Hear,hear!

Mr. Speaker: I would indicate to hon. members that if they want to have argument after a ruling has been given, then perhaps we will have to hear argument from all sides, not only from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). But I realize that would be somewhat irregular. There is an hour before the vote, and if hon. members want to spend it in argument after a decision has been rendered, then that is their decision.

I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Peace River. I think that is one of the arguments which could have been submitted in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. member, but he himself recognizes that what he has put before the House is a new term of reference and, therefore, a new question. Certainly, the House is entitled to consider a new question. However, if it is a substantive motion which is proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, then he has to satisfy the other requirement of the Standing Orders, which is that 48 hours' notice of any new question or new motion shall be given unless the motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and there is unanimous consent. That is why I asked if there might be unanimous consent to consider the motion, and apparently there was not.

For all these reasons, I would think it is not possible to accept a motion which in my view is clearly irregular, although I recognize well-intended, and a motion on which there might be a desire to divide. But I suggest, again, that perhaps that division should be limited to the main question. I believe there was also agreement among hon. members as to the order of speakers. I believe the agreement was that the next speaker would be the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier).

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of concurrence in the committee report and urge all hon. members to do likewise. The issue before us and before the committee has been a difficult, a complicated and multi-faceted problem, but I believe a start has been made toward its solution in this report. I say that partly because the report embraces the concept of a food prices review board. I recognize that in the recommendation of the report that board is to focus on the problem of food and I make no apology for supporting it on those grounds. The people of Canada have made it clear that while their concern ranges wider than the price of food, nevertheless it focuses sharply on that question and I think it is incumbent upon this House to deal with it.

The prices review board recommended in the report is an independent board; it provides the framework upon which it is the responsibility of the government to construct, through legislation, specific and muscular powers dealing with food prices. It is true that the report does not contain any specific reference to powers with teeth, to powers for which we in the New Democratic Party have asked for some years. I must say that although members of my party on that committee tried to have established a board with teeth, we received precious little help from hon. friends to my right.

● (2100)

Mr. Alexander: Stick to the script.

Mr. Grier: However, I think it is significant that nothing this report says places obstacles in the way of the government's assuming the responsibilities that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) says that it must assume, and nothing in it prevents the provision of teeth. In her speech last week, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) told us in detail what kinds of powers should be given to that board. It is now up to the government and to the minister to respond. I say to the minister that this is no time for the establishment of a token review board; this is no time to back away from this concept; this is not the time to refrain from giving it the powers for taking the action that we all know is necessary. I urge the minister not to confuse caution with wisdom. In this case, the path of wisdom lies in taking action.

The powers which we of my party have sought for this board, and which we look to the government to provide, must include the powers of effective analysis, which involves an adequate budget, an adequate staff and adequate powers to require statements, material and evidence. I must say that I had some real doubt as to whether the special committee had those powers, but let me say that the board ought to have them.

I want to see this board holding hearings in public and making its recommendations in public. We should prefer that this board be empowered to take action on its own. However, if it will sit more easily with the minister, we believe that the recommendations of the board must be made public and that the minister ought to respond to those recommendations within a period of two or three weeks. As well, Mr. Speaker, the board must have the power to suggest a wide range of action, including in specific or selected cases the power to roll back prices. It must be given the power to provide the consuming public with all the publicity which up to now it has been denied, and the power to recommend that projected price increases not be proceeded with.

I suggest that there are real advantages to the approach involving a prices review board as against the proposal of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. In the first case, Mr. Speaker, it is intended that these powers be exercised selectively, that is to say, in such a way as to enable swift and searching examination of specific areas of the food industry in which corrective action can most quickly and effectively be taken. It follows that the prices review approach does not penalize, as the wage-price freeze approach penalizes, the fair dealers, of which there are many in this country, and small wage earners who comprise the majority of our population. The prices review board approach does not legitimize and does not freeze the inequities which we all know exist in the system. It is all very well to freeze, but that only makes permanent the unfairness which we have already seen and which we all know exists. The freeze involves a crude, across the board measure which offers no hope for fairness or equity.

Moreover, I believe that a combination of public disclosure and, where necessary, corrective action taken by the board in a few well-publicized cases in which some element or other of the food chain, which may be a food processor or another part of the food industry, is not playing fair with the public will quickly break the so-called inflation psychology which is supposed to be abroad now and will assure the public, as it has not yet been assured, that we will not tolerate and that the board on behalf of the public will not tolerate a situation in which any element in the food chain is prepared not to play fair with the public.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham referred to the prices review board approach as being bureaucratic. I invite him to envisage the kind of bureaucracy required to support the wage-price freeze and the consequent policies which have never been spelled out but which have been alluded to by the hon. member. Let me say that if the prices review board involves some staffing, the wage-price freeze approach involves a gigantic bureaucracy. I think we would do well to acknowledge that we are facing a difficulty and complex problem which is not susceptible of simplistic solutions. I do not think the prices review board is the whole answer, but I believe it is a step—a most important step—in finally coming to grips with the problem of rising prices on behalf of all Canadians.

We have heard for some time from the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and his colleagues about this wage-price freeze, but we have not yet been provided with any details of what it involves. Let me remind the House that not until the budget debate did this become the official policy of the Conservative party, when the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) apparently changed his mind. He talked in the budget debate about a freeze followed by consultations with the provinces which would lead, he hoped, to something which he calls cost stabilization policies. We do not know any more tonight than we knew then as to what is involved in these cost stabilization policies, or why we should expect from this nebulous process of consultation results which we have not received in the past from an equally nebulous process of consultation. The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) last week talked about meaningful policies to fight inflation. Perhaps some of his colleagues know what those are. Certainly, we have not heard about them from the hon. member's party.

Ten years ago, Mr. Speaker, the then Liberal government offered this country 60 days of decision, and it took us a couple of years to recover from them. Now the Conservatives are offering us 90 days of dithering, at the end of which we will be in the same position we are in today.

Mr. Lewis: Worse.

Mr. Grier: I suggest that it is irresponsible for a party to ask anyone to support such an empty proposal which it has placed before us in the last couple of months, a proposal so bereft of detail. It would be irresponsible for this House to adopt or support it. That proposal is so bereft of detail that, leaving aside today's high pork prices, it is far too expensive a pig in a poke. There is a vast accumulation of evidence to show that price-wage freezes simply do not work. When you take the freeze off, prices go up. Ask the boycotters in the United States, where the food boycott started. Ask the residents of Detroit who go to Windsor to buy their groceries. Ask the residents of Texas who go to Juarez in Mexico to buy their meat. Mr. Speaker, that is no solution.

This leads me to give my impression—because I want to be careful not to attribute motives in this House—of the approach taken by the Conservative party to this committee from the very beginning. As the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham reminded us, it has been consistently negative. His party has accused the government of trying to duck its responsibilities and expressed doubt all the way through as to whether the committee could accomplish anything. This negativism, it seemed to me, was carried over to their contribution to the committee itself. It was reflected, among other things, in their constant discouragement of attempts to get the committee a staff to enable it to examine the kinds of questions we all agreed needed to be gone into.

I did not get the impression that members of the Conservative party were making a serious effort to persuade other committee members to their point of view. In any event, they did not reveal that point of view in any formal way until the end of the committee hearings nor, in my judgment, did they seriously attempt to adduce evidence in support of it. I can assure the House there was very little evidence to support it.

Now they take the view that the government did not have a policy. So what? That is not new. But surely the committee afforded Members of Parliament an opportunity to try to construct a policy, instead of falling back on empty and sterile accusations of a political nature such as we heard again tonight. Therefore, it has often seemed to me that some members of the Conservative opposition are more interested in making food prices the political issue which the member for Northumberland-Durham promised it would be, than in trying to find answers for the Canadian people.

It has seemed to me, too, that some commentators in the mass media have shared or even fostered a general feeling of futility about the committee's work and, indeed, until a few days ago, about parliament itself. That is their privilege, but it has not made it easier to come to grips with a problem whose solution has so far eluded all Canadian governments of whatever stripe. If the accusation of futility is too harsh, I say they have encouraged an expectation that something sweeping and dramatic can be done, an expectation which in view of the acknowledged complexity of the subject is not a fair one to hold out to the public. There is no shortage of simplistic, dramatic suggestions. But are we after theatre, or solutions? For theatre, I give you the speech of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. For solutions, Mr. Speaker, I give you a prices review board.

If the Canadian public is expecting from parliament or from the committee, or from any party, miracles in connection with rising costs, and rising food costs in particular, they will be disappointed. None of us can offer that. But we have an obligation to try to put some fairness, some equity, some justice into the entire system under which food is provided to the Canadian people. And I am prepared to broaden this to the whole element of prices. If we can get the government to approve a food prices review board set up to take effective action, we will have taken a bigger step toward fairness in costs, and food costs especially, in the last three months than parliament has taken in the past three decades.

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for affording me the opportunity to make a contribution to this debate. Before I go further, I should like to comment on the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence); or perhaps I should refer to it as the amendment which was ruled out of order.

Unlike the speaker who preceded me, I shall not refer to the thespian-like qualities of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, but the argument was the very one which the committee faced a week or week and a half ago; and this, indeed, was the decision of all members of the committee with the exception of the Official Opposition. We felt we were given certain terms of reference and had the responsibility to follow them. It would be easy politics to go beyond them, not so much for our own party, which surely would stand with the government, but for two other parties at least. Yet they at least were sufficiently responsible to recognize the character of the terms before us and to follow through and do their best to confront the trying problem we faced. Also, in making reference to the amendment which was ruled out of order by the Chair, I should like to say that if the opposition cannot draw up an amendment, how could they possibly draw up wage and price controls and make them work effectively?

Public concern about the trend in food prices in Canada is certainly no secret. It has been ventilated in the press for many months, for long before the committee began its sessions. It is experienced by every citizen, rich or poor, from a small family or a large family, in rural Canada or in urban Canada. Weekly they go to stores and in most cases when they buy food products they must pay cash. When there is the kind of inflationary trend which the entire western world faces, nothing focuses more on this problem that we all must try to cope with, and all parties are honestly, in their own way, making an effort to do that or suggesting ways in which they feel it should be done. But surely there is no more central focus than when people go to buy food and see prices creeping up. No one denies this, certainly not members on this side of the House.

The committee held intensive meetings, between four and five meetings a week for more than two months. I am sure all members can appreciate the workload involved, especially since all sorts of other committees were meeting in an attempt to meet problems facing this country and to resolve them. It is a very heavy workload shared by members on all sides of this House. To say that a committee of this kind if futile begs the question. All countries in the western world have tried desperately to find a solution, but none of them has yet done so. Surely, the concentration shown by the members of the committee represented an honest effort, and I believe the recommendations the committee made were the very best possible in the time allowed. It was certainly not a futile exercise. We did learn some hard facts, and this is what I should like to discuss in the next few moments.

First, wage and price controls. We had before us during those intensive meetings over a period of eight or nine weeks representatives of anti-poverty groups, consumers' associations, of labour and business. There were wholesalers and advertisers and, in addition, representatives of government. And not one of those people who appeared before us suggested the solution they wanted involved wage and price controls. There were one or two witnesses who said perhaps price controls were the answer. They said, "Price controls, but we know that won't work; it must be both". Sitting on that committee as well as ourselves were members of the Official Opposition. Not one of the representatives of the groups I have mentioned advised us that wage and price controls were the answer. Even if it were within our domain to do so in conformity with the directions given us by parliament, how could we possibly come forward, as a responsible committee, with a recommendation of that kind when not one group said we should?

Wage and price controls have been tried in two countries to which Canada is very close. They have been tried in Britain and they have been tried in the United States. In both cases they have been hopeless failures. In Britain they have led to massive strikes. They have forced the nation almost to its knees already, economically, and placed it in jeopardy not only internally but in trying to compete in world trade. If that is a problem in Great Britain, with its small size and heavy concentration of population, imagine what would happen if there were similar repercussions here in Canada, with our small population and vast territory, particularly since we depend so heavily on trading and exporting in order to survive while maintaining our standard of living.

In the United States the attempt to control prices on a temporary basis was a hopeless failure. The three-phase system is now in its first phase. When the controls were lifted only a month or so ago, we found that in fact the consumer price index for food had risen, not by fractions of a point but by four points in one month. Yet the Official Opposition suggests that temporary wage and price controls are the answer. They should know better. It is a phrase which might easily appeal to a public which is preoccupied with its personal affairs, jobs and families, and which cannot find time in which to stand back and study the situation in depth. But anyone who has even a shallow knowledge of the subject knows that price controls of this kind cannot work and that we should not jeopardize the nation by doing anything as irresponsible as adopting them.

[Mr. Fleming.]

A temporary freeze of the kind suggested could give rise to a number of other repercussions which would be extremely serious. Later in my speech I will touch upon the real hardship caused by high food prices to people who must live on fixed incomes, people with large families, to people living in poverty, compounded by the constant inflationary factor we face. One difficulty is this. If wage and price controls are imposed on a temporary basis, the primary producer might well be encouraged to withhold supplies. This might have the effect, later, of forcing up food prices still further.

● (2120)

Who are the people who would not be able to buy these goods if they were being sold on the black market illegally? Why, the poor, those with large families and those on fixed incomes. So, Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of anything more dangerous or irresponsible, anything that has less backing in world experience or which our committee heard more opposition to, than wage and price controls.

When you suggest that you can have wage and price controls but that you do not apply them at the farm gate, that again is a facetious argument. Because if your control begins at the top, it will work its way down to the bottom. The middlemen will say to the farmers; "We don't have the money to pay your prices", and this will hurt the farmers. It just does not make sense.

In our arguments before the committee and in our discussions it became obvious that part of the increase in the cost of food in Canada in the last year has indeed been a result of increased prices paid to the primary producers. But members on all sides of the committee agreed that that was not unfair. If there is any group in Canada that earns less or has a lower average income than any other, it is our farmers. Our farmers work long hours. They are dedicated people. In fact, they represent the principle on which this land has been built. So I do not argue, and I do not see how anybody else can argue, that they are receiving more money unfairly, even if it is reflected in the increased price of food.

With regard to the processors, because of the time limit that was put upon the committee to bring down an interim report, we were only able to talk with associations. I am satisfied that we do need more discussions with these groups, and I believe that this is in the making. The processors argued, and all evidence before us suggested, that their profit margin was somewhere between 1 per cent and 7 per cent. That certainly is not a profit margin that is considered excessive.

In the case of the retailers, their actual net profits range between 1 per cent and 1½ per cent and that certainly is not acceptable although I do believe there are many problems, which I will talk about in a minute or two, going on at that level which may in fact affect food prices.

There are several areas involved here. Volume discounts are one area which I hope the special or independent review board will consider. For instance, I know one wholesale company will offer, according to the volume taken by the retailer, as much as 15 per cent discount. In shipping and selling their goods to retailers in Canada, if those large retailers make up the principal part of the people they are selling to, you can imagine how that 15 per cent discount in fact disadvantages the small, independent retailer. In fact, it may bring about pushing that person out of the market place, and meanwhile still be reflected in higher food costs to the general public. Then there are cash discount payments. In other words, if large retailers will pay their bills immediately to the wholesaler, they are given a discount. Yet in practice, even when they get this discount they do not pay the cash on time. There are advertising gains and exchanges so that you have a few people in the market place competing against each other, each of them forced by the other to stay in this very expensive game of grabbing public attention. The price of this may well be passed on to the consumer unnecessarily.

There is also the simple kind of business scheme, bonus trips based on amount of sales, and costs like that which run up food prices. I look forward to investigating that in the committee, and hopefully the independent review board that I am optimistic the government will appoint will also examine the situation.

We have also learned there are world shortages of food commodities. There is especially a very high demand for feed grain, grain and beef and these are all interrelated. People are willing to go out and buy steaks, not only in the United States to which we export a considerable amount but here in Canada, for $9 or $10 a time. This simply means that there is both demand and shortage. It takes three or four years to increase your stock of beef. Prices increase and people on limited income and large families in the poverty area simply cannot have that part of their diet which is nutritious.

We have seen Canadian incomes go up in the past five years some 50 per cent. I can remember that there was some discussion in this House at an earlier time about the fact that taxes have gone up in the last five years. So they have. But higher taxes reflect the fact that incomes also have gone up 50 per cent. Instead of people spending about 25 per cent of their income on food, as they did five years ago, they now spend about 19 per cent. Those higher incomes have gone to people along the food chain, as they should justly. All of this is reflected in higher prices.

Transportation costs have gone up for all of us, the producer as well as the wholesaler and the retailer. This is a general trend. But our real crisis is for those people, the poor, the large families, the people on fixed incomes, where increased costs have not gone from 25 per cent to 19 per cent but perhaps from 40 per cent to 45 per cent. This is a very real crisis indeed, and I think the government must face up to it.

I would like to note, before talking about several areas where it has been faced up to, that the party opposite sitting as government in another House, where apparently there is such concern for the poor and those on fixed incomes, has deemed it proper to impose a tax upon one of the largest populations and wealthiest provinces in this country which will hit hardest those people with the least money. This is an energy tax which they claim will eventually not be visited upon poor people. We have a system difficult to understand, and especially the poor have difficulty understanding it. I remember how we were attacked for our tax forms. I say it is the most regressive action I have seen by a provincial government for a number of years. I have followed the course of events as a journalist, and I do so now sitting as a member of this House.

In contrast to increasing a sales tax which hits hardest at the poorest, imposing an energy tax which is a regressive tax on a basic service, the government has attempted to take strides in certain directions. I think they have taken some very positive strides. There is always more to be done, of course, but we have increased pensions, and raised the exemption level for income tax. Hopefully, we will soon have an announcement from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) regarding family allowances and other general plans to help the people in this country who need it most.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I talk briefly about the committee's recommendations. The review board is not the "be all and end all;" it is not the final answer. But it is a chance for people, especially those who pay cash for food, when they see something they think is wrong to go to somebody and find out whether it is wrong or not. It is going to be part of an education process. It is also, hopefully, going to be a part of finding out who the offenders are and where they are. It is a chance for government to be answerable to people and for a responsible group to say, "yes, that is fair," and, "No, that is not fair."

The members of the NDP have some concern about putting teeth into legislation. The members of the government party felt that to pass a resolution or to put forward recommendations to be brought back to this House to roll back prices simply does not make sense. You simply cannot handle this problem legislatively the way our country is set up.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Fleming: Because of the constitutional breakdown between municipal, provincial and federal responsibility. I say it is just not possible, and I have yet to hear any constitutional expert come forward and say it is possible. If that is the stand of the NDP, I invite them to bring this person forward so he can tell us about it. If we are going to have a review board, and if it is going to be effective, then I am pleased that within the recommendations is the suggestion that there be an opportunity given to the review board, whether through the vehicle of a standing committee or a special committee, at a hearing open to the press, to focus attention on those offenders and exert in this way leverage upon them to fall back into line. With this kind of publicity and confrontation, in the business world you just do not fight it; you back off.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the nutrition recommendations—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Although the Chair might find itself ready to listen to the hon. member, other hon. members wish to participate, and in view of the limited time I do not think I can give the hon. member an extension.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, at the end of this debate, I should like to make a few remarks after having heard all kinds of views, mostly divergent. I carefully listened to several speeches. At one time. I became aware that hon. members were saying that Progressive Conservatives did not make any contribution, that Liberals did not have any new ideas, that social Credit did not have any serious propositions to make and that the NDP was satisfied with saving the government's life.

Mr. Speaker, what is important is not to discuss the particular subject under consideration, namely the report of the special committee but, perhaps, to wonder why we had to set up this committee, why the government or hon. members were lead to recognize the importance of the committee and to what extent the committee will suggest anything concrete and worthwhile for the consumers. I know that Canadian consumers are very worried and expect this committee, a creation of Parliament, to suggest corrections. the committee made the following recommendation:

> That the government give consideration to the advisability of introducing the necessary legislation to establish an independent Food Prices Review Board equipped with such powers as are necessary to review prices, and that it report to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The hon. member who had the floor before me declared that we were not to expect this committee to have the powers to bring back the prices of past years. Then it seems that there are doubts about the efficiency of the committee, that one wonders if the consumer will finally benefit from decent food prices. Surely, all essential products could be affected.

As I said a while ago, why is such a committee necessary today? I do not think that I am wrong when I say that almost everybody expected the difficulties now facing us. And this does date back to yesterday; I think that even the government realized the danger when it referred to the fight which it has led against inflation for five years. there was therefore a danger. It was impossible to solve the problem due to a lack of proper measures, but this brings up today to recognize that as far as food is concerned as well as in all other fields, appreciable increases occurred as a result of hundreds of factors. I will be brief but will surely not be so bold as to say that this government is responsible for that problem. Surely, some circumstances and reasons explain why prices have increased. On the one hand, it will be said that this is because of the unions and on the other hand, that this government did not apply adequate measures.

We must still recognize that we are in an extremely difficult situation, and this is why the committee is prepared to make recommendations to the responsible minister. We recognize also that we are all in the same mess because of a host of factors, and later on, of course, we could blame Tom, Dick or Harry.

What matters for the consumer is to find a solution. I remember that, the other night, the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Morin) said that the committee would have to check and analyze, for instance, the often misleading publicity aimed at the consumer. I think that this is one of the excellent recommendations that the committee has retained. And I think that in such a field much need to be done. Moreover, it is what were doing those who some time ago were in favour of the inquiry on advertising which often prompts the consumer to spend much more than necessary.

[Mr. La Salle.]

On the other hand, I think that people expect results from that committee. and it is important to ask ourselves what exactly will be its powers and if it will limit itself, for instance, to making recommendations to the minister?

Will they be as decisive as they were about the Bell Canada rate increases? Will the committee that studies this question even report on why prices have gone up? I suspect that the consumer will be justly disappointed.

I therefore think it is important for the committee to have the power to look into the reasons behind the price increases, but if someone at a higher level decides to say no to that, whether because the reasons are inadequate or because of an increase that is excessive for the consumer, that will be that, and things will not go any further.

A suggestion by the Progressive Conservative party, namely a freeze on food prices, and a general price freeze, was rejected out of hand. This suggestion, which deserves some attention, might have been submitted to the government—I know that the government looked into it in any case—and they could have imposed a price freeze two years ago.

With regard to the 90 cent hind quarter of beef, large companies selling meat would certainly be glad to see prices frozen at that level. I consider that it would be doing the consumer a disservice to freeze prices now, without undertaking to bring them down to a reasonable level.

We have no right to reject this suggestion without giving it serious thought. We know very well that a 90-day price freeze might be acceptable without there necessarily being a wage freeze, but we also know that a long term price freeze would bring about a wage freeze.

There are all kinds of difficulties involved, but how can the government reject such proposals without examining them thoroughly, when it has found no way of stopping abrupt price increases that are putting the consumer in real difficulties? And the proof of this is that the government is relying on that commission to improve the prevailing situation.

I also listened to a proposal made by the hon. members belonging to the Social Credit Party of Canada, involving compensated discounts. At first sight, that concept might fascinate the consumer because of the prospect of reimbursement to them of 25 per cent of retail prices. But nothing was said of the way in which such a compensated discount can be granted. We know quite well that if the government implemented such a policy manufacturers and dealers would naturally take the biggest bite into the cake.

The retailer would therefore be far from receiving the 25 per cent discount proposed by Social Credit. I therefore conclude that consideration of a measure involving so many problems is premature as far as benefiting the consumer is concerned.

In view of the government's position, we must fall back on the committee and rely on it to a great extent because it will be able to scrutinize prices and make recommendations.

In the circumstances, the public is clearly expecting action. It recently reacted by boycotting prices, refusing to buy some types of meat. This action did have some influence and, of course, is distasteful to many. It is also fraught with the danger that, in the long run, this would result in prices rising still more as dealers could readily, in view of such instability, transfer their business or dealings outside Canada.

Therefore, this reaction from the public is quite justified, because they feel they are being exploited to a certain extent by dealers or by methods likely to increase prices. Well, the retailer is not necessarily the one who makes the biggest profit with these prices which have reached an intolerable level.

I expect a lot from this committee and so does the consumer.

I admit that all the problems we have had during the last few years, though they were expected, could not be avoided. As a matter of fact, I wonder whether this committee will reach the objective and I hope it will get into action without delay, and make recommendations so that the minister may take efficient steps to prevent this increase. And I think that the solution we are looking for and that no one has found to date is to bring prices back to a reasonable level on par with consumer income.

I suggest that this is our aim. And of course this will require much co-operation from all hon. members and understanding between parties. We will have to aim at a common objective for the sake of society rather than restrict ourselves to criticism. I admit nevertheless that each hon. member tried to make his own contribution. Perhaps some hon. members showed too much partisanship but, in general, I suggest that they have tried, by giving their views, to find a solution likely to safeguard the consumers' interests.

I therefore hope that the committee, in view of the difficulties which we know, will bring something positive to consumers. And the greatest deception which could befall consumers would be that the committee, which is now being publicized in every newspaper, and that study, which is being made by Parliament, would have no aftermath, for the consumer still has great hopes. Yet that is what would happen were the committee to confine itself to recommendations which would not result in efficient measures.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, even at the best of times, even when there is no inflation, unemployment or poverty the price of anything is always too high in the opinion of some people and too low in the opinion of others. To the farmer, for example, the market price of his produce is always too low and the wages he has to pay his hired hands are always too high. To the hired hand the wages he receives are always too low and the prices of the groceries he must buy are always too high. It seems that even in the best of times no one is ever satisfied, but that is human nature. Because we do not live in the best possible circumstances but live at a time and place in which the government has been causing considerable inflation, unemployment, and poverty, the Canadian people are highly dissatisfied, and rightly so.

Food Prices

Last month in a debate in this House I mentioned some of the ways in which a government can cause unemployment and poverty. The Canadian people are completely justified in complaining about these policies and demanding the eviction of the government that sustains them. The Canadian people are also very upset about this government's inflating the money supply to fill its budget deficits and thereby causing a terrible inflation of prices which affects not only the price of food but also the prices of land and housing and in fact of all consumer goods. During the housing debate, when the rising prices of land and housing were discussed I put the blame for the paper money inflation where it belongs, on the federal government and its Bank of Canada. But this government does not listen and it continues to inflate the money supply, as evidenced by the Bank of Canada's own figures in its weekly financial statistics.

Both parties of the coalition government say that they want to force manufacturers to disclose more information about their products. Perhaps the government should print a disclosure on its own paper money which would warn the holder that its future value is questionable. Perhaps some hon. members think I am not serious when I warn of the dangers that lie ahead on the government's course of paper money inflation. These hon. members should study history. Then they would see what disasters paper money inflation has brought. One example is the destruction of the French economy after the paper money inflation that began in 1789. The collapse into chaos led to the rise of Napoleon who, despite all his vices, learned from the very conditions that brought him to power never to tamper with the soundness of his country's money, which was gold coin. More recently we saw the destruction of the German economy after the paper money inflation of 1923. The collapse into chaos and the rise of Hitler who, like Napoleon, unfortunately enjoyed the support of the people because the people considered even these dictators preferable to the chaos that followed the paper money inflation and economic collapse.

Genuine Conservatives can rarely find points of agreement with Lord Keynes, but I have found one. In 1919 Keynes wrote:

> There is no subtler, no surer means of overturning the existing basis of society than to debauch the currency. The process engages all the hidden forces of economic law on the side of destruction, and does it in a manner which not one man in a million is able to diagnose.

A similar remark was attributed to Lenin to the effect that the best way to destroy the capitalist system is to debauch the currency. We must learn from history. We must stop this paper money inflation before we too relive the disasters of the past.

This is part of the problem of high and rising food prices. The other part of the problem is monopoly. Before I say very much about this I should perhaps define the word because many people are confused about its meaning. Lord Coke's definition of monopoly is most clear. He said:

> Monopoly is a grant of special privilege by the state, reserving a certain area of production to one particular individual or group.

In a paper entitled "1776 to 1984: The Decline and Resurgence of Monopoly", Yale Brozen, professor of business economics at the University of Chicago, elaborates as follows:

> When Adam Smith wrote "The Wealth of Nations," there was no doubt in the mind of anyone that monopolies were the result of governmental power. Few felt they could flourish absent government support . . . They were difficult to maintain despite the use of governmental power. Competition kept breaking out in spite of governmental attempts to suppress it. . . .
> The very word monopoly was . . . a label for a special privilege granted by the monarch—the privilege of being the sole supplier of some commodity or service. The royal grant of a monopoly was usually made to the subject of a monarch who, for some reason, the monarch felt deserved enrichment, and it was cheaper for the monarch to award such a privilege than to make a direct grant from the royal purse.

Crucial to the understanding of monopoly is the realization that monopoly has nothing at all to do with the number of firms operating in an industry. It has to do with whether or not the government is restricting competition. Sometimes there is only one firm in an industry simply because that firm is more efficient than any potential competitor and continues to offer consumers lower prices than any potential competitor thinks he can match. This situation is not a monopoly because the government is not restricting anyone from entering the industry and competing with the existing firm. Anyone who is willing to bet his capital that he can operate more efficiently than the existing firm is free to try. In contrast, although there are 363 licensed taxi cabs in the city of Vancouver, there is a taxi monopoly. It is a monopoly shared by the owners of the 363 taxi cab licences, because the city government will not issue any more licences. These monopoly profits are now so high that taxi cab licences recently changed hands at $30,000 each.

Some time ago this federal government introduced a so-called competition act which, it said, would bring greater competition and thus benefit consumers. If a private enterprise were to make a statement as outrageously false about one of its products, all its directors would go to jail. The competition act would not have repealed the Vancouver taxi monopoly or any other monopoly anywhere in Canada. If passed, however, it would have given the government arbitrary powers for which there is no place in a society supposedly governed by the rule of law, arbitrary powers to enable the government to restrict competition on behalf of its friends.

● (2150)

It is interesting to note that the legislation which creates monopolies in the food industry, the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, specifically exempts these monopolies from the Combines Investigation Act. What is the combines law for, if the government is going to suspend its operation every time it wants to create a monopoly for some of its friends? One of the arguments that the government presented on behalf of its so-called competition act was that the present combines laws were inadequate. But it is obvious that any inadequacy lies simply in the failure of the government to respect the law. Of course, even if the government's so-called competition act had been passed by parliament, it would have had no more effect on these food monopolies than on any other monopolies.

[Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra).]

In May, 1971, the Consumers Association of Canada presented a brief against the establishment of marketing boards. They said:

> From the point of view of consumers it is dangerous legislation which allows such sweeping power over a total industry to rest in the hands of a small group of people however selected, and however well intentioned . . .
>
> That a producer-controlled agency which has sought national marketing legislation because of an inability to successfully manage its own production capacity could be given control over other sectors of the food industry . . . is to consumers a horrifying prospect . . .
> When, however, a national marketing body, able to control all supplies of a commodity, is exempted from the provisions of the combines act, the consumer . . . is powerless to protect himself except through the time-consuming and very unsatisfactory political process. This is a situation which cannot be tolerated.

But the government ignored consumers and went ahead to grant monopolies over the supply of food. I agree with the Consumers Association of Canada that this is a situation which cannot be tolerated. The government is exploiting defenceless consumers of food in an attempt to get the vote of those inefficient farmers who want to be protected from competition.

According to an article in the Vancouver Sun of March 3, 1971, Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, called for greater controls on Canadian farm production and marketing. He said:

> Cut-throat competition just doesn't work. It's murder on profits.

I think he was referring to effective competition. Effective competition is indeed murder on profits. It's supposed to be. It is the purpose of effective competition to ensure that producers earn their profits by providing consumers with the best products at the lowest attainable price. Free enterprise does not guarantee anybody a profit. Socialism and other monopoly systems provide unearned incomes to the friends of the government, but free enterprise certainly does not.

Whenever the government interferes with people's freedom to compete in a free market, it favours one group—inefficient producers—at the expense of two groups: consumers and efficient producers. Inefficient farmers claim that they want marketing boards as a means of smoothing out price fluctuations. But planning production so as to smooth out price fluctuations is a task that is performed by the competent, competitive farmers themselves. What the inefficient farmers really want is a quota system of allocating production so that they can be protected from the consumer, who buys the best product at the lowest price and who has no interest in supporting hobby farmers.

Now, there is nothing wrong with hobby farming, any more than there is anything wrong with yachting. Some people get their pleasure out of yachting, while others prefer hobby farming. The consumer rightly objects, though, when called upon because of a quota system, to subsidizing the hobby farmer. Why should the government, by restricting competition, force the consumer to subsidize the hobby farmer any more than the yachtsman?

Sometimes we hear the hobby farmers say that they want a fair price or a fair rate of return. But there is no such thing as a fair price or a fair rate of return to the farmer or to all farmers. The more efficient farmer will always enjoy a higher rate of return than that enjoyed by the less efficient.

What is the result of marketing board monopolies? A constituent of mine tells me that one day last year as he left Vancouver, the price of cut-up frying chicken was 59 cents a pound. A day or so later, in Los Angeles, he saw that the price of chicken was 29 cents a pound; less than half the Vancouver price. In California there is free enterprise; in British Columbia there is a chicken marketing board. By the standards of inefficient British Columbia chicken producers, California producers are unbelievably efficient. But those of us who understand economics are not surprised: ever increasing efficiency and lower prices are the continuing consequences of geniunely competitive free enterprise. In British Columbia we are forced to pay twice as much for chicken because the government denies freedom of enterprise in chicken production.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there are really only two types of politic-economic systems: first, the presence of free market competition and, second, the absence of free market competition, that is, the presence of restrictions. There are basically two types of restrictive systems. The first is the state socialist system, in which the state owns the means of production and the bureaucrats and politicians own the state. The bureaucracies are protected from legal competition because freedom of enterprise is denied. The other is the corporate socialist or fascist system, in which private ownership is maintained in name but the state is exceedingly powerful. The state uses marketing boards or variations thereof to protect members of select groups from competition.

The difference between the two is that the corporate socialist system features nominally private ownership of the means of production, although final control lies with the state through the marketing board; it fixes prices and grants or withholds quotas. Perhaps the freedom of the Canadian people is presently threatened more seriously by corporate socialism than by state socialism.

In contrast, the foundation of the free system is simply that if someone thinks he can produce goods or services more efficiently than those already in the industry, he is free to risk his labour and savings; he is free to compete. Competition—to make a long story short—will result in ever increasing efficiency and lower prices.

SOCIAL SECURITY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING RE-EXAMINATION OF PROGRAMS—TABLING OF WORKING PAPER

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it has become increasingly apparent that the Canadian people are questioning the effectiveness of the nation's social security programs. It was this same concern that brought the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces independently to the same conclusion that a joint federal-provincial review was called for—a review which would embrace not only what each individual government is doing in the field of social security but also what the governments together are doing.

In November 1972, the provincial ministers of welfare called for a federal-provincial conference before the spring of 1973 to establish better mechanisms for consultation on social security programs. And in January 1973, in the Speech from the Throne, the government of Canada called for a joint federal-provincial review of "Canada's total social security system", beginning in April 1973.

The government of Canada has prepared a working paper as its contribution to the launching of such a review. It is not designed to present a panacea for every weakness in Canada's welfare system. Nor is it meant as a set of fixed proposals put forward by the government of Canada to parliament and the provinces, for early legislative implementation. Rather it is designed to outline the broad directions of policy which would, in the view of the government, lead to a more effective and better co-ordinated system of social security for Canadians.

We have sought, in developing our proposals, to comprehend the whole sweep of social security policy and to develop a comprehensive, logical, and hopefully imaginative approach to this field. We have sought, too, to exercise our ingenuity in finding new, and if necessary radical, federal-provincial or constitutional arrangements, in order to achieve the kind of integrated social security system which will best serve the needs of the Canadian people.

The framework for our thinking was set out in the five principles enunciated in the Speech from the Throne of January 4 and elaborated upon in my first speech to this House on January 11; they are here embodied in a number of propositions, in five critical strategy areas.

First of all, we are proposing an employment strategy. By removing from existing programs disincentives to seek training and employment, by improving government-provided counselling, training and placement services, and by establishing an on-going program of community employment in socially useful activities, we hope to improve the potential of Canadians who have been unemployed for an extended period of time to obtain an employment income.

Next we are proposing a social insurance strategy. To meet the contingencies of short-term unemployment and to provide for retirement, disability, and the support of survivors, we recommend the maintenance and strengthening of social insurance programs. In this regard, we advance two specific proposals in relation to the Canada Pension Plan which we would like to embody in legislation this year—subject to a provincial consensus. This involves an increase in the level of yearly maximum pensionable earning to $7,800 by 1975, and the removal of the ceiling on cost-of-living escalations of Canada Pension Plan benefits.

Thirdly, we are advancing an income supplementation strategy. We recognize that the earnings of people who are working may not always be sufficient to meet family income needs. This may be because of the size of the family—wage levels not being related to the numbers of children—or it may be because of the nature of the breadwinner's employment—it may be low paying self employment or intermittent work. To meet these problems of the "working poor", as they are often called, we are advancing two propositions.

First we are proposing a significant increase in the universal family and youth allowance benefit, from an average of $7.21 per child per month to an average of $20 per child per month. To effect a significant measure of income redistribution, we propose to make the new family allowance taxable—although I should point out that practically all Canadian families should realize a net increase over their present levels.

[English]

In the budget of February 19 we provided for an appreciable reduction of income and other taxes in order to increase the net disposable incomes of Canadian taxpayers. By this additional measure we are effecting a substantial transfer of funds to Canadian families. Such a measure will be of great benefit to people with low and middle incomes, but the greatest benefit will accrue to the working poor. This change will result in a net increase in payments to Canadian families of over $800 million in a full year.

Second, we are suggesting that where income from employment plus the higher family allowances still does not provide the family with an acceptable minimum income, consideration should be given to a single general income supplementation program. Such a program would have the advantage not only of providing more acceptable incomes to the working poor, but also of providing them with an incentive to continue to work rather than to go on social aid.

The largest groups of people, however, who do not receive an acceptable minimum income—whether from employment or social insurance—are those who are old or disabled or otherwise not employable. And there are the large numbers of single parent families—largely widowed or separated mothers with dependent children—who choose not to seek or who are unable to find employment outside the home. We suggest that additional income supplementation should be provided to these people, thus assuring them a guaranteed income.

In the case of the aged, we propose that they enjoy an option to choose between this guaranteed income and the existing OAS/GIS system. Finally, to accommodate cases of special and emergency need, we suggest a "back-stop" program of supplementary social assistance.

To make the employment and income supplementation strategies fully effective, we advance a social and employment services strategy, based on two propositions. The first is that necessary training, counselling, placement, rehabilitation, and child care services should be extended and improved. The second is that the costs of special services in areas such as nursing home and child care should be covered under the plan for those in need of them but who are unable to meet these costs themselves.

The review of the social security system upon which we are embarking is, as I have consistently stated, a joint federal-provincial venture—both the review and ultimate implementation. It is for this reason that we are setting out propositions rather than fixed proposals, and why we have not sought to make proposals concerning jurisdictional and financial divisions of responsibility.

We have, however, a general format to suggest—a flexible and creative approach to the federal-provincial dimension. This proposed format includes major innovations in the field of federal-provincial or constitutional arrangements.

First, subject to certain national minimums, we suggest that provinces should have the power to vary the levels of allowances and income supplements paid under federal programs. Within prescribed limits, the provinces would be able to reduce the allowances paid under one federal program and transfer the savings to increase the allowances paid under another program.

Second, we suggest that, as a condition of this flexibility, there should be a framework of national norms and national minimum standards to ensure a basic equity to all Canadians affected.

Finally, we propose that the entire review be completed within two years, and that the implementation of such an approach should be regarded as a three to five-year process starting from the April conference of ministers of welfare and calling for the gradual implementation over time, within existing levels of taxation, of the approach which is agreed upon. However, early priority should be given to the adoption of legislation this year for increasing family allowances and for those changes in the Canada Pension Plan which the provinces can agree upon. It would be our hope that the increased family allowances would come into effect in January, 1974.

It must not be thought, I should like to conclude, that the launching of a critical review such as this is a sure sign that Canada's present social security system is fundamentally unsound and in need of a total transformation, for this simply is not the case. The truth is that Canada's system is one of the most advanced in the western world and that it provides a solid foundation upon which to build in the context of today's needs. For this the present ministers of welfare are indebted to their predecessors.

It is our hope that what the government of Canada has presented in this working paper for purposes of discussion will contribute to a reasoned and sympathetic debate as to how best to provide for the security of income for all Canadians.

I need not remind hon. members that I have undertaken to have the working paper referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs where I welcome the fullest possible discussion.

We hope that this debate will not be limited to members of parliament and governments only but that voluntary organizations and the public at large will take an active part in the discussion of our proposals, as well as of any other proposals that my provincial colleagues may want to put forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I would like to table the Working Paper on Social Security in Canada, in both official languages.

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I want to say—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of members on the government backbenches as I begin my remarks. I want to say that I have had a very busy hour. I have never had so much paper thrust upon me at any time since Mr. Benson launched his white paper a good many months ago. We all know what happened to that white paper and what happened to Mr. Benson.

I am glad to have had a copy of the minister's statement and of the papers, but I must say it is difficult to deal with such a vast assemblage of words in 45 minutes. I might also say that my representative was excluded from the locked-up press briefing the minister gave, a discourtesy which I did not particularly appreciate. I also understand that across the whole of the land today there will be press conferences given by representatives of the minister in various regional offices.

Mr. Bell: They are really milking it.

Mr. Macquarrie: I hope there is no lack of consideration here on two grounds, namely, that those of us who speak for the opposition do in fact speak for the majority of the people of Canada, and also that there is no loss of the balance between those who are government officials and those who are partisan people. This is a very serious matter and I will leave it there.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, I welcome any move which will benefit the people of Canada, far too many of whom are living on or near the jagged edge of poverty.

In separating the concrete from the vaguely projected, I salute the substantial increase in family allowances. An improvement in this area is long overdue. As a measure of income redistribution the pressing need for revision is shown by comparison with the situation in 1945 when the allowance was established. At that time payments represented 1.45 per cent of the gross national product. In 1973 the allowance represents .5 per cent, or roughly a third of what it was in the good old days of Mackenzie King, God rest his soul. Had we just kept abreast of that amount we would have had $17.40 instead of $8 and $13 instead of $6. So the figure of $20 is not overly generous. Indeed I would repudiate anyone who would suggest that it is too much. Far from it.

I trust that the minister, although he does not quite say so, has put away that administrative monstrosity introduced in the last parliament as the FISP bill. How awkward that would have been had it come into law. We would not have had this new dawn that has been visited upon us today.

If I can speak over the chortling of the Liberal backbenchers, may I say that I think this is an important matter and not one for merriment at all. It is a matter of great concern. I said to the minister on March 1 that if he would bring in a more generous bill, one which would be less an administrative jungle than FISP, we would support it wholeheartedly and expedite its passage as much as we could, and I say so again today. We will do our best to facilitate such a measure.

In so far as I detect a genuine and general thrust toward an incentive society in the minister's statement, I cannot but agree. Indeed, if I disagreed I would be disagreeing with what my party said last October. The minister states that he has an employment strategy, and then talks of government-provided counselling and an ongoing program of community employment and socially useful activities. I read that with great care. This is an area I want to hear more about. What is this new talisman for finding work? Certainly the government has not distinguished itself up to now in the fight against unemployment. I trust that we are not at this stage dreaming up some temporary make-work programs which will give the illusion of destroying the devil of unemployment that has shadowed this country for a decade. The people of Canada deserve the opportunity to have meaningful work.

By its mishandling of the economy the government has laid far too heavy a burden on the whole welfare structure in our society, to say nothing of the terrible social costs resultant from the non-utilization of the creative capacity and ability of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I for one want no part of any phony make-work projects which fail to challenge the Canadian people or which will degrade them into mechanistic non-utilitarian routines described as welfare employment.

It is the right of every Canadian to have meaningful employment and it is the responsibility of government to ensure that all Canadians have permanent jobs—jobs which hold something for their future and for the future of the country. This is the kind of new deal we want; this will bring greater prosperity and opportunity than any tinkering with the welfare programs.

I agree with the proposals in reference to the Canada Pension Plan. We do need higher ceilings. I am sure that, like me, every member of this House is receiving letters from people whose payments are being diminished because of income from some other area or some other pension. That was not the intention of the Canada Pension Plan.

On an occasion like this it is always difficult to avoid that rather crude expression, "I told you so". I do not want to do that, but I am delighted that we now find enshrined in these proposals something we have always believed in, that the actual and real cost of living should be built into all these pension plans. It was a disgrace, before the shock of last October, that we had, in the face of inflation, an artificially lower increase built into our pension plans so that we were really taking it out of the old people.

For far too long in this country welfare has been a political football. I think this is one area that should transcend politics. I have no intention of seeking to win office by bribes, promises or threats to the old people of this land. I will not enter the auction room. I will not knock legislation for the sake of knocking, nor will I hesitate to commend any good move made by this minister or anyone else.

It is extremely difficult in such an expanded statement as the minister's to find precise commitments. I would have liked to know more clearly what the minister is going to do for the blind and the handicapped. I would have liked the minister to indicate that he intends to follow the example of the British parliament which has produced some splendid legislation for people who are permanently handicapped and have difficulty coping with life's basic needs.

I agree with the minister's reference to flexibility. I listened to him very carefully when he said:

> We suggest that provinces should have the power to vary the levels of allowances and income supplements paid under federal programs. Within prescribed limits, the provinces would be able to reduce the allowances paid under one federal program and transfer the savings to increase the allowances paid under another program.

Oh, flexibility! Oh, conversion! I am all for it. Had this attitude prevailed months ago we would have had a more harmonious dominion-provincial relationship in this country. I commend the minister for the following paragraph in which he says that there should be a framework of national norms and national minimum standards to ensure a basic equity to all Canadians affected. We must never lose sight of the goal and aspirations so clearly set forth by the Rowell-Sirois report many years ago that Canadians in rich provinces, small provinces, Canadians in the north, in the south, all Canadians, should expect a decent standard of social services and that they need not live in a wealthy, large province to get that basic standard. I would advise the minister not to lose sight of that paragraph. We must have national norms.

● (1430)

I should also like to say that we do not want the development of a welfare jungle in Canada. I should like to think that Canadians can expect a good standard, an ever-improving standard. I hope that the paper we have received today will bring forth real legislation and concrete advantages for the Canadian people, and that it will not join on the book shelves all the reports of commissions that are gathering dust in all our offices. We must wait, it seems, for further discussions, further exchanges and further points of view. I say to the minister, we cannot wait too long. Too many Canadians are having it too hard to allow for such administrative and legislative leisure. I say that in so far as these measures are helpful we will help their thrust and get them into legislation. That is a commitment from this party. But in the long run, and before too long, the country must gather together all the strands of its welfare programs. We must get something that is more unified, more efficient, more coherent and more compassionate. Even if all the aims that we can see in this paper are realized, that goal will not be achieved.

So we may have to wait for a new day, for new men with new ideas. In the meantime, however, we will make the best of what the minister has brought forward. For that I congratulate him. I want to say he almost tempted me, when he spoke about family allowances, to move away from my plan of three children and try to emulate the Minister of Justice, but I think that I will need to enter into further consultations at home before I can commit myself.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): October 30, 1972! What a difference that day made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is an important statement which has been given to the House by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and we welcome it. I have already had occasion to admit that the minister is one of the few in the cabinet who has given the impression that he means business. I trust that he will not disappoint us but that he will do everything he can to see that the program forecast in this statement is implemented just as early as possible.

I am happy to underline the words the minister used when he said that our social security system in this country, for all its weaknesses, provided a solid foundation on which to build. In saying that I have in mind, in particular, the extent to which we have established universal programs. I believe that on that foundation we can build a really satisfactory and adequate system of social security.

I want also to agree with the thrust of the minister's statement, in his making it clear that a social security program has to be a co-operative effort, particularly between the federal government and the governments of the provinces.

In all the things that have been presented to us today there are just two that the minister has labelled as "to be implemented quickly". The first has to do with the increases to be made in family allowance payments. We warmly welcome the conversion of the government back to its earlier position on universality. I well recall the castigation that we in this party took some months ago, particularly from the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), because we voted against the FISP bill on second reading in the last parliament. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that that was one of the most useful negative votes that we ever cast. Our action in seeing to it that that monstrosity was not imposed upon the Canadian people, plus the election of a minority parliament on October 30, 1972, has produced now the proposal that family allowances shall continue to be paid on a universal basis, and that those payments shall be subject to income tax, as we ourselves argued in the last session, although in vain, with the present Minister of Labour.

Times without number I have contended, as have my colleagues, that there is real virtue to the principle of universality, for, it ties us together in some sort of social unity, into some sort of community, as opposed to the divisiveness that a means test or income test always produces. That was the position we took last year. I welcome this gentleman who has moved from the back room into the cabinet and who has now presented to us the old idea improved upon, that family allowances shall be universal and that they shall be in the order of $20 per month, and that they shall be taxable in the hands of those who receive them, so that those in the higher income brackets will pay back a portion of what they receive.

While I am welcoming this increase in family allowances and this sticking with an important principle, I must also say that in our view the principle of escalation should be made to apply to family allowance payments just as we make it apply to many of our social security benefits. I know that it was argued in committee last year that a small percentage increase on a small amount is not very much; however, I believe the principle is a valid one. Just as we contend that old age security payments and others should be escalated, so we think there should be a provision for the automatic escalation of family allowance payments. I say here what I have said with respect to other benefits, namely, that that escalation must not be limited simply to enough to cope with the rising cost of living. It must be an escalation that is in line with the rising standard of living, reflected in such indices as the wage index or the increase in the gross national product.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that raising the family allowance and making it taxable could have the effect of bringing a considerable increase in tax revenues to the provinces of this country. If family allowances become taxable and if the provinces base their taxation on a percentage of the federal tax, there could be a considerable increase in provincial revenues resulting from this program. I hope that somehow or other that is tied in with the minister's thinking on federal-provincial co-operation. I am glad to see him nodding his head up and down. I hope that the extra money the provinces will get because family allowances are to be on a universal but taxable basis will be used by them for the improvements that they wish to make in their social security programs.

The other of the items announced by the minister which will be acted upon soon has to do with the Canada Pension Plan. I welcome the proposal to increase the maximum yearly pensionable earnings by 1975 to $7,800 a year. That means that in 1975, or within a year or two thereafter, maximum pension payable under the Canada Pension Plan can go as high as $1,950 a year. This is a good move. We welcome it and we trust that there is point to the minister's statement that this depends only on a provincial consensus. I was glad he did not say that it would require unanimity on the part of the provinces, but simply a provincial consensus. We also welcome the proposal to remove the ceiling on the annual escalation under the Canada Pension Plan, that escalation now being limited to 2 per cent. Again, Sir, although I welcome most warmly the minister's statement, I must say that it is not good enough just to remove the ceiling, the result of which will be that Canada Pension Plan benefits will only escalate by the amount of the increase in the cost of living. The fact is that wage standards go up more than the cost of living. The gross national product goes up even higher. The time has come for all of these escalation formulas to be based on the wage index or on the gross national product, not simply on the cost of living. The report on the war disability pension recommends this formula. We think it should be introduced in other schemes as well.

When the Minister of National Health and Welfare brings in legislation to remove that ceiling, in other words, to permit escalation to go at least beyond 2 per cent, I hope the same thing will be done for retired civil servants, retired RCMP personnel, retired armed forces personnel and all those who receive a pension as a result of any government pension operation.

Those are the two areas in which immediate action was promised, namely, family allowances and the Canada Pension Plan. The minister will not only have our support and co-operation, but he will have our persistent prodding to see that these things are done quickly. There is no use simply having so many words, announcements and press conferences across the country. What is needed is action.

We have already demonstrated that with a majority of members wanting this kind of a parliament to work we are able to produce more in three or four months than is sometimes produced in three or four years. We want this kind of co-operation on the part of parliament and the minister to continue. We want those things which the minister promised for immediate consideration to be dealt with without delay.

Since the other things listed are only for consideration over a period of time, I will not spend as many minutes on them. May I welcome the suggestion of flexibility for the provinces with regard to the way in which they establish social security standards for their people. The idea is good, particularly now that the provinces are more active and more concerned in this field. But, like the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), I warmly welcome the statement that there should be norms or standards that apply right across the country and that they should be set by the federal parliament, albeit after the minister has consulted with the provinces.

There is another whole area which I most warmly welcome and on which, if I could, I should like to spend more time than I am permitted. That is the idea that social security payments should not be available only to people who do not have anything, those who are unemployed, sick or old, but that there should be supplementation available to those who are sometimes called the working poor, those who are employed but who do not receive enough to meet today's cost of living or to enjoy today's standard of living.

In so far as the minister talked about a new employment strategy and a new income supplementation strategy, he has our wholehearted support. The idea of a guaranteed annual income, the right to live and to enjoy what our society can produce, is something we must establish if we are going to build on a good foundation the kind of social security system we can build. I am completely with the minister in his innovativeness and newness of ideas in this area. Again, he will receive not only our support but our persistent prodding.

I am just about through, Mr. Speaker. I accept the fact that it will take two or three or maybe even four or five years to put all of this into effect. However, that is too long a time for some of our people to endure the poverty they are now suffering. Therefore I urge the minister to do the two things he has promised immediately, namely, to bring in the changes to the Canada Pension Plan and to the Family Allowances Act right away.

I also urge the minister to do something about our senior citizens between the ages of 60 and 65 without further delay. There are several ways this can be done. The minister must not think that because the Old Age Security Act has been amended that this will do for all time. We want a further increase in old age security, and we want pensions at 60 years of age.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I have to remind hon. members that, although this is a very important matter and we have had a very lengthy statement from the minister and very lengthy comments from hon. members, the rule is still there that comments made by members on behalf of the opposition parties ought to be brief. The remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Hillsborough were so interesting that they appeared to be brief to some hon. members, but it is still my duty to remind hon. members of the Standing Order.

Mr. Baldwin: Stanley's speech from the throne.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I accept the suggestion that I should be brief, Mr. Speaker, but if Your Honour thinks that my remarks are that interesting, maybe I could extend them even more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am just about at the end of my statement, Mr. Speaker. I started to say that we want action soon on family allowances and on the Canada Pension Plan. We want further improvement with regard to our senior citizens, both a lowering of eligible age and a higher pension. We also think there should be early action for the blind and the disabled. It is a disgrace the way these people have had to wait. If these things are done soon, the minister will have won the reputation which he has already begun to establish as a man who means business. In conclusion, I simply say, even though this comes under another minister, that we also want action soon on the basic rate of the war disability pension.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to thank the minister for sending us, at the beginning of the sitting, copy of his statement. I wish all the other ministers would adopt that practice.

Mr. Speaker, the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is most agreeable to our party because it deals, among other things, with the national income and the security of the citizens. If our party has shown concern in this House for any subject in the last few years, it certainly has been for social security.

That is why I should like to have as much time as the spokesmen for the other parties to make remarks on that extremely important statement. Indeed, it does not happen very often that we are in agreement with the government on the principles it sets forth before the House.

Mr. Speaker, before going into the technical aspects of the measures announced today by the minister, I should like to point out that today's statement would not have been made by this government has it had a majority. That is real proof that a minority government is much closer to the people, that it has to give more consideration to the will of the people, and that it cannot depend solely on a majority to impose its views upon the citizens.

Mr. Speaker, on page 2 of his statement, the minister says, and I quote:

> ... a more effective and better coordinated system of social security ...

I agree with the minister, but we would have preferred that more orderly system of social security to have been implemented before today.

As a matter of fact, the minister's statement tells us nearly nothing, because what it is promoting is exactly what we have been advocating in our program during the last election campaign. Indeed we have said this: Social Credit will replace the present government programs on social welfare by programs on social and economic security.

Although the figures tabled in the House today by the minister are far from representing the social security requirements in Canada, they nevertheless represent in my view an important step by the government towards the establishment of a program of guaranteed annual income. In fact, we were the only party to include in our platform during the last election campaign a system of guaranteed annual income.

● (1450)

I also see that during the weekend in Montreal the official opposition party was urged to pass a resolution on guaranteed annual income and apparently, according to newspaper reports, it was rejected.

We have been advocating it for a long time in this House and we are quite pleased to note that the government is beginning to pick our fine administrative and economic principles to arrive to better solutions.

Indeed, those sound programs and principles could unfortunately be spoiled or destroyed by complex red tape which the minister's statement makes us foresee. It would be very bad if the best social security programs in Canada were drawn up and if the federal government made bureaucrats responsible for administering them in such a way that their aims would be competely missed.

We do not have all the details of the implementation of the social security program that the hon. minister means to propose, which is understandable, because he says that he is going to consult the provinces and try to come to an agreement with them on the details of its implementation.

Before ending, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that it seems to me that there is more cream than cake in the minister's statement, since the minister said that the increase in Canadians' net income will be $800 million.

Incomes totalling $800 million are quite inadequate in the present economic situation if any attempt is to be made to settle the problem of a guaranteed annual income for those who need it, for Canada now needs at least $30 billion worth of purchasing power for her unsold production. If $800 million are all we have to buy a $30 billion national production, which is unsold because there is no purchasing power, I get the impression that there is a lot more cream than cake, and that the solutions that the government recommends, though very fine in their intention, will achieve very little in practice.

The minister does not say—I thought he had in his statement, for I had time to read it—where he is going to get the money for an $800 million increase in net incomes. The minister does not say he is going to get it in taxes, deficits and debts.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk of increasing purchasing power by $800 million, it is very important to know whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury) are not going to introduce in the next few weeks direct ou indirect taxation totalling a billion dollars or a billion and a half.

To increase the gross national income, and taxes at the same time, is taking away with one hand what you are giving with the other. As far as social security in Canada is concerned, that means you have accomplished nothing, other than formulating principles to give to the House, for the minister's statement today looks pretty good; he copied some ideas from our election program, but he has not yet described the techniques that we recommended in that program.

Mr. Speaker, there is nevertheless one basic principle in today's statement about which we are pleased, namely the right of every citizen to earn a living, although we are not told if this legislation applies to all Canadians.

In fact, this is a first step in the implementation of a principle recognized by us, the individual citizen'a right to live, whatever his income or his occupation. We have been recommending it for years and the minister also recognizes it when, on page 3 of his statement, he says:

By removing from existing programs disincentives to seek training and employment, by improving placement services . . .

Mr. Speaker, we know that the whole social security system of Canada is negative and disrupts initiative. That is why, for many years, we have been denouncing it in order that an individual receiving a guatanteed annual income or welfare benefits may at the same time seek employment, which could stimulate his initiative and allow him to contribute his talents.

Mr. Speaker, to close my remarks I congratulate the minister on having finally initiated application of human principles, too late, unfortunately, but better late than never. I hope that next time the minister will come up with a formula allowing full coverage of social security in Canada, for which much more than $800 million is required, And moreover, it has not been mentioned that citizens are going to be made to pay for achieving this objective.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

April 4, 1973—Mr. Howard.

That the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on April 4, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this is the day for unanimous consent on motions, and since I am sure there is a desire to clean up some business before the Easter recess, I wonder whether, by unanimous consent and without debate, this motion could be put.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon member for Hamilton West rising on a point of order?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I may be out of order in view of the fact that the report by the unemployment insurance advisory committee that is to be tabled has not yet been tabled, and therefore if there is a point of privilege to be raised it may have to be raised after the paper has been duly tabled.

I have just been advised by the hon. member of the NDP who is the spokesman in terms of the rules that the document has been tabled. My point of privilege is this, and I think it is one that affects all members of the House. As far as I am concerned, the directive that went out to the advisory committee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission gave instructions in no uncertain terms to look into allegations of questionable conduct, abuses of procedure and harassment of claimants. I have not had this report too long, but as I read it it seems to me that the advisory committee has not done a job that I can find acceptable without raising a question of privilege. Let me refer the House to the second last page on which it is stated:

● (1500)

The committee has, therefore, completed its review of the benefit control program, based on the evidence received from the officers of the head office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

I would now refer to page 1 of this document. I am embarrassed inasmuch as I do not want to quibble with those who have attempted to discharge their duties, but it appears to me, and I use this phrase advisedly, an attempt is being made to perpetrate a whitewash job on this House this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: On page 1 of the report we find this statement:

The committee convened in Ottawa on March 13, 1973 and again on March 19, in Montreal to interview and examine various officials of the head office of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in order to review the procedure carried out by its benefit control branch and to touch briefly on related matters.

This whole matter came about as a result of problems that existed in the city of Toronto, but I do not see the city of Toronto mentioned in this report. The three referees in the city of Toronto were primarily the ones who made this complaint, and it is in that area where the trouble began.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Alexander: Just a minute. I am speaking to a question of privilege, and I think I have a very good one because I say this is a whitewash job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: The minister stood in his place on several occasions when questions were raised in respect of particular areas of abuse and said the committee was looking into them. When reference was made to the city of Toronto and the complaints of the three umpires there, all appointees of labour, as I recall, the minister said the committee was looking into these matters.

On another occasion there was an incident drawn to the minister's attention in respect of a storefront social agency which had indicated that benefit control officers were using language that was detrimental to the claimants. The minister is shaking his head, but I recall very distinctly what happened.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. While the hon. member is catching his breath, perhaps I might say a word or two. I have some doubt whether this is a question of privilege. The hon. member claims it is a good question of privilege. In my opinion the statement the hon. member is making to the House now is more the type of statement or comment made by hon. members following a ministerial statement being made to the House. Obviously, the hon. member is not satisfied with the contents of the document tabled by the minister. However, if there is a question of privilege the hon. member should indicate to the Chair as soon as possible in what way he thinks there is a question of privilege in order that the Chair may decide whether we ought to have a debate this afternoon on the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, in terms of establishing a prima facie case of privilege before this House I must be allowed to continue. My question of privilege is based on the fact that the advisory committee has not discharged its responsibilities as contained in the terms of reference, unless I have badly misread those terms of reference.

If I have the consent of the Chair, I should like to direct the attention of the House to what is stated on page 2 of this report:

The discussions and interviews were open and frank and the Chairman and his officials are to be commended for their unreserved co-operation in answering all questions and providing up to date data and statistics.

Where is there any reference to the referees in Toronto who started this whole thing?

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Alexander: That is what I am asking about, and those members over there can yell all they want. On page 5 of the report—

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: There has been no order in this place this year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he is not acting in conformity with the traditions of the House. I suggest that the hon. member has a grievance, legitimate or otherwise, and is using a question of privilege as a guise under which to make a speech on a point of substance to the House. If this were a rule of the House, I suggest to the hon. member for Hamilton West and all hon.

members that that kind of complaint or grievance could be found every day and we would spend the entire time of the House considering presumed or suggested questions of privilege.

If the hon. member feels there is a question of privilege, he should make his point as quickly as possible. He has before him a document and has referred to certain pages. I understand he has now reached page 5 where there is another statement to which he takes exception. My interpretation of what he has said up to now is that he may have a complaint, but I still do not see how this can be considered a question of privilege that ought to be referred to a committee or investigated by the House, or that should be the subject of a debate this afternoon.

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, you know I always abide by your rulings, but this is an extremely important matter which constitutes a question of privilege. If this were a general investigation implemented by the government I would have to sit down, and I will do so in any event if you suggest I should. But this was an investigation carried out as a result of specific terms of reference which called not only for an investigation of one side of the question but of both sides. My point in respect of this report is, Sir, that it seems to me only one side of the matter has been investigated. That is my question of privilege. I am sure hon. members would like this to be a fair report, but I must say that the report is unfair and misleading to the House. This is so because when a report is tabled and no one stands up to question it, it is immediately put out on the street and everyone thinks it is all right because the members of the advisory committee have investigated the situation. I say they have not done so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the advisory committee has not investigated the whole situation. I do not want to abuse the rules of the House. I did yesterday because I was carried away, but in this case I believe I have every right to bring this point to the attention of hon. members.

Yesterday the minister, for the first time, referred to disentitlement rather than disqualification. Hon. members apparently did not catch the drift of that. I know how it started but I will not point my finger at the hon. member who wanted it cleared up. There is a vast distinction between disentitlement and disqualification. We did not ask for an investigation in that regard; the advisory committee was not asked to make such an investigation. I suggest that is very clear.

I think I have made my point, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to thank you for the indulgence you have shown to this point. I do believe that when the government requests the advisory committee to look into allegations it should look into all the allegations, as the minister said it would. I respectfully suggest it has not done so. In view of the terms of reference, the least the advisory committee might have done was study both sides of the matter, and particularly those complaints in the city of Toronto which initiated the whole matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has risen on what he considers, with respect but very strongly, to be a question of privilege. I have not been convinced that it is a question of privilege. In accordance with our practice, the minister or another member to whom the question of privilege is directed is allowed to comment. I have no objection to the minister commenting now, although I doubt that whatever he may say will change my view as to whether this is a question of privilege.

I would hope that we might try to get on with the business that is before the House, which I believe was a motion by the hon. member for Skeena. It was somehow sidetracked. The minister is seeking the floor and I will recognize him. I will then recognize the hon. member for Skeena who had the floor before this suggested or alleged question of privilege was raised. For the moment, I will recognize the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

● (1510)

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, point of order, or whatever you want to call it, I find that the most incredible, the most significant and most interesting omission in all the bombastic rhetoric we have heard, with all these quotations from this document I have just tabled, is the failure of hon. members to read the final paragraph in its entirety, although the hon. member came close to it. I quote:

> The committee will now undertake the second phase of its study and concentrate its efforts on a review of the operations of the program, from the standpoint of the claimant, and examine the appeal procedures available to the claimants and other related matters. These considerations will constitute the second part of the committee's interim report of its review of the benefit control program.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the peaceful and non-controversial member for Skeena.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

April 4, 1973—Mr. Howard.

That the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on April 4, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): With the sort of precise recognition you have just given me, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but get unanimous consent for what I asked earlier.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the hon. member for Skeena was seeking unanimous consent for the submission of his motion for concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Absolutely no.

Income Tax Return Deadline

Mr. Speaker: I feel sorry to have to report to the hon. member that there is not unanimous consent.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the hon. members for St. John's East, Gander-Twillingate, St. John's West, Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, Burin-Burgeo, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, Assiniboia, Cape Breton Highlands-Canso and Dauphin has been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Newfoundland.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that the text of the objection be printed as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. In view of the fact that an extremely large number of people find it necessary to seek outside help to complete their income tax forms and that a number of firms whose business it is to prepare these returns have stated that they will not be able to complete all their customers returns by the April 30 deadline, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House urges the government to extend the deadline for income tax returns by one month.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair would have doubts about the procedural acceptability of the motion. Hon. members know that even a motion submitted under the terms of Standing Order 43 ought to conform with the practice of the House. Again I suggest to hon. members it is perhaps easier to ascertain whether there is unanimous consent and if there should be unanimous consent then we might consider the procedural implications of the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have heard, as I did, that there is not unanimous consent with respect to his motion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RETURN OF LAND TO ARMENIANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

It will be 58 years ago on April 24 next that 1,500,000 Armenians were the victims of a first genocide. But the treaty of Sèvres, to which Canada had adhered, provided for the restitution of their lands to the Armenians, and because the purposes of this treaty have not yet been achieved, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the preparation of the Canadian position for the United Nations convention on genocide, take into account the Armenian viewpoint to recognize the humanitarian gesture of thousands of Armenians who generously give blood to the Canadian Red Cross.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

Question No. 1,447—Mr. Horner (Crowfoot):

1. In the years 1969, 1970, 1971 and 1972, how many grants under DREE were paid out to assist industry in the production of camper trailers and mobile homes?

2. What was the total amount of money provided?

3. How much money did private industry have to put up in order to receive the grants?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Statistics have not been maintained by industry classification for the Area Development Incentives Act and payment detail is, therefore, not readily available. The following, however, is the applicable information for the Regional Development Incentives Act.

	Calendar Years
	1969	1970	1971	1972	1973 (to Feb. 28)
Number of Applicants Paid	—	2	14	9	4
Amount of Payments	—	$157,952	$1,176,332	$771,673	$238,353

These figures include initial or interim payments made to 25 applicants. In addition to these cases, however, there are 23 projects for which incentive offers have been accepted although no payment has yet been made.

2. As shown in the response to question 1, the total amount paid out is $2,344,310. The Department's total estimated commitment in the full 48 cases, however, is $5,741,594. The projects are expected to create an estimated 2,644 jobs.

3. Private industry put up or arranged for the financing of the balance of capital requirements. Based on the total incentive offers accepted (48) there could be at least $33,832,883 calculated as follows:

Eligible capital costs (fixed assets)	$17,332,107
Grants	5,741,594
Working and other capital	11,590,513
Balance of capital requirements	22,242,370
	$33,832,883

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,465—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What number of high school and university students were registered with Canada Manpower Officers for summer employment in the months of May, June, July and August, for the year 1972?

2. Of this number, how many were placed for employment and how many was the Department unable to place for employment in each of the above months?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. This question cannot be answered from available statistical data.

2. Placements on a cumulative basis for the months in question were: 43,177, 90,216, 141,933, 174,709; the percentage increases from the corresponding months of 1971 being: 42.9 per cent, 20.5 per cent, 28.5 per cent, 23.7 per cent. As active registrations cannot be broken down month by month, the latter part of question 2 cannot be answered. However, in addition to providing special placement facilities for students during the summer, my department encourages the students to use their own initiatives to secure employment. The results of a survey carried out in the fall of 1972 indicate that of the students who ostensibly remained on the active files during the summer, approximately two-thirds had found jobs on their own. In addition, some 25 per cent of those who found jobs on their own said that their contact with a Canada Manpower Centre had materially assisted them to do so. Although high school and university student registrations are not broken down separately, a post-secondary survey of summer employment experience, also carried out in the fall of 1972, indicates that 91 per cent of the post-secondary students who sought work in 1972 succeeded in finding a job for at least part of the summer. This figure of course includes those post-secondary students who were placed in employment by Canada Manpower Centres.

With respect to the ship building program planned for Fisheries and Marine Service as announced by the Minister of the Environment on February 22, 1973, are any of the ships under that program to be built in British Columbia and, if so, which ones?

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows: In awarding contracts for shipbuilding, efforts are always made to obtain them at the lowest possible cost. It has been the practice of the government nevertheless, if possible, to buy the vessels in the area where they are to be used.

(d) Gross National Product (per capita)	$ 3,147	3,314	3,597	3,871	4,067	4,423

Source of data: The estimates of Gross National Product, National Income and Personal Disposable Income have been derived by summing the calendar quarterly estimates, unadjusted for seasonality, to a fiscal year total. The population estimates used to derive per capita Gross National Product are the estimates as of June 1 of the calendar year ending in the fiscal year.

Does the Industrial Development Bank provide a consultation service when no loan is given?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): In the course of considering an approach for financing and in processing a loan application, the experience and skills of the IDB staff are available to the potential borrower who often avails himself thereof. Thus, even when an application is declined the IDB may have been of some assistance. Not infrequently the IDB is able to suggest how a weakness in a loan proposal may be overcome. In a more general context, the IDB in 1972 established an Advisory Services program to help promote good management practices in small business. To this end it is holding business management seminars in smaller centres across Canada and will have conducted about 120 by June. All of these costs were exclusive of 12 per cent sales tax, but included conversion compartments, $385,000 worth of spares and 400 hours of flight simulator time. When all aspects of the acquisition were completed, the total program costs were $64,900,000.

2 and 3. These aircraft were purchased to meet the Department of National Defence's need for deployment and support of Canada's military forces in fulfilment of defence and foreign policy commitments. No recapitulation of flight details or passenger lists are maintained on a continuing basis although flight documents and passenger manifests are kept for one year. To provide an accurate answer to these questions would require additional staff to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to compile the requested information. The Department does not have the resources that would be required to employ such additional staff.

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the time schedule for compliance with the pulp and paper mill effluent regulations which the government is attempting to negotiate with MacMillan Bloedel Limited, Port Alberni, British Columbia.

CANADA-BRITISH COLUMBIA POLICY LIAISON COMMITTEE ON COLUMBIA RIVER—EXCERPTS OF MINUTES

Motion No. 201—Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the International Joint Committee Draft Principles of October 31, 1959 and the Canada-British Columbia Draft No. 2 of November 26, 1960 mentioned in the minutes of meetings of the Canada-British Columbia Policy Liaison Committee on the Columbia River.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the papers requested by the hon. member were prepared as internal working documents by United States-Canada and Canada-British Columbia negotiating teams. The disclosure of documents of this nature would reveal negotiating positions taken by both Canadian and United States negotiators at confidential meetings. Under those circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have already put forward a motion to obtain the original documents, the minutes of the liaison committee which disclose all the things the parliamentary secretary has mentioned as being confidential discussions and positions. I cannot see any difference between having half the material out and the other half not out. I have to ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

MANPOWER

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF WORK PERMITS TO IMMIGRANTS AND SUBSEQUENT FAILURE TO PROVIDE QUALIFIED CANADIANS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister aware of complaints from employers and the Canadian Manufacturers Association that employers frequently send immigrant workers to manpower offices to apply for a work permit, and their applications are vetoed or turned down by manpower officials on the ground that there are qualified Canadians to do the job, and yet the same manpower offices are unable to supply the Canadians to do the job? Has the minister any explanation for this?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if there are no Canadians available to do the job and a visitor or foreigner who is in this country is not otherwise disentitled from doing it, we will issue work permits. There are odd occasions when this has not worked out. I have had a conference with the directors general of immigration and manpower officials from across the country this morning on this matter, and any rough edges that may have occurred putting this into practice are being smoothed out. We have no desire to impede the operations of employers where work permits can be issued.

COMPLAINTS THAT COUNSELLORS OVERWORKED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Have the minister or his officials made any response to the overwork grievances that have been received from a number of manpower offices in respect of Canada Manpower counsellors being overworked, and is this the reason for the situation that was described in my first question?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I think that the situation described in the first question of the Leader of the Opposition would be narrowed down pretty much to the Toronto area where there was a heavy volume. With regard to the workload of manpower counsellors, we have been aware that they are facing a generally heavy work load with all the additional programs they have taken on this past year. All grievances have been considered in accordance with the required grievance procedures. In fact, the staff resources of the department's field offices have been considerably strengthened to take care of increased workloads. Man-years allocated to field offices in the 1972-73 estimates amount to 8,672, which is an increase of 1,017 man-years or 13 per cent.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister has admitted that he has received overwork complaints in respect of manpower counsellors. Would the minister indicate what steps he is taking to enable the manpower officers to discharge their responsibilities, having instituted a work permit system and now presumably going ahead with new programs such as LIP? What does the minister propose to do to enable manpower officers to discharge the responsibilities that he has placed on them?

Mr. Andras: I think I just indicated to the Leader of the Opposition the increase in man-years in this year's allocations which are considerable and recognize the problems they are facing. I might say, with regard to the additional burden of work permits, that obviously there has been a special and I think short-term, one-time workload by virtue of the introduction of the system. I might say that 16,677 applications have been received for visas and approval was given and 10,624 visas were issued. Another 2,500 have been rejected. The rest are being processed. I think we will be over that hump very shortly and will return to a more normal stream, but it did create an extra burden for a short time.

INCOME TAX

APPLICATION OF CERTAIN SECTIONS OF ACT TO BENEFITS ENJOYED BY EMPLOYEES IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue which I ask him at the request of my colleague, the hon. member for Northwest Territories who could not be here today. It arises out of widespread concern in the Northwest Territories and, I understand, in the Yukon as well, over the application of certain sections of the Income Tax Act dealing with benefits enjoyed by employees and paid for or subsidized by employers. I should like to ask the minister whether this matter is being studied by his department and other relevant departments.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there is a review going on about what subsidies, in particular housing subsidies, in the north might properly be subject to income tax. Further information has been requested by my officials from the territorial government, but I can assure the hon. member that until this review has been completed no territorial residents will be assessed or reassessed to include such subsidies in their incomes, and I will undertake to consult with the hon. member for Northwest Territories before any action is taken.

● (1530)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question. If the minister has not already done so, can he make certain that the representative of his department in Edmonton, which office services the Northwest Territories, is informed of the fact that there is such a review and that there will not be any re-assessment until the review is completed, so that Mr. Marlborough, or some name like that—I don't quite know the name—will not give the people in the north the impression that they come under the act immediately?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I have so instructed.

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE INCREASE—REPERCUSSIONS ON ECONOMY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Finance.

In the light of higher Bank of Canada interest rates and the attendant uncertainty amongst Canadians, can the minister say if this increase will encourage bankers to raise their own interest rates while tightening credit restrictions?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather debatable question and I would gladly answer the hon. member in more details on another occasion.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Would the minister not agree that this is one of the first sectors where interest rates and prices should be frozen in order to prevent investment restrictions, economic paralysis and spiralling consumer prices?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary is rather a recommendation to the minister and he must assume that the latter will consider it.

[English]

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF TWO LEVEL RATE OF INTEREST—PROFIT POSITION OF CHARTERED BANKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Since he did not discuss with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shultz, the guaranteed exchange of international reserves, I wonder if he is considering with the Bank of Canada the problem of a two level rate of interest, one rate for large corporations and a different rate of interest for loans to small business and small farm people?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I met with the Governor of the Bank of Canada today and with the chief executive officers of the Canadian chartered banks, and reiterated the wish of the government, and I suspect of parliament as well, that priority be given to Canadian-owned small business in the allocation of loans. We did discuss the potential of a two level rate of interest but there are some difficulties, particularly in view of the fact that the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in the United States was forced to make that type of arrangement because of price control in the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, without debating with the minister that part of his answer, has he given very strict terms of reference to the banks as to their potential profit level, and what are the guidelines for the profits of the chartered banks in view of their flexibility under the amendment that we had?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, after the bank rate was raised, I indicated to the Chairman of the Canadian Banking Association that if they were to raise prime rates I would like to see the spread remain the same. That was done, so that the profit potential of the banks has not been increased by virtue of the rise in the prime rate.

Oral Questions

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSED COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It refers to Proposition 3. Here I feel I am talking to Euclid. This has reference to the community employment program, which I find in the orange paper, followed by a number of questions and a reference to LIP. Has the minister anything in mind more than an extended Local Initiatives Program when it comes to the matter of the provision of community employment?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which I would like to discuss with the provinces. In fact, I have already had the opportunity of discussing it with my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and we are now working at it together.

[English]

PROPOSAL WITH REGARD TO PENSIONS OF RETIRED RAILWAY AND ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE PERSONNEL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have one more supplementary from the orange paper. Could the minister advise what he has in mind to alleviate the problem of pensioners who are retired railway men and retired RCMP men?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this document deals with the establishment of a guaranteed income plan for all those who are unable to work, whatever their condition or the nature of their previous employment.

[English]

SUGGESTED ADVANCEMENT OF DATE FOR FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with the family allowance program. In view of the fact that the program, as announced, is simplified, and in view of the need of those children in this country who are living in poverty, could he at least consider advancing the date from January 1, 1974?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first I will have to discuss that matter with my provincial counterparts, have legislation passed in this House and, on top of that, obtain from the provinces a statement of intent as to how they would like to vary the payments made by the federal government. I think that the implementation of such a program and the consultations that will have to take place with the provinces in that respect will surely take a few months, and I can hardly see how we could look forward to implementing such a program before January 1, 1974.

[English]

POSSIBLE LOWERING OF AGE OF ELIGIBILITY FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that there was not any reference in the orange paper this afternoon to lowering the pension age to 60 years, I would like to ask whether or not he is still considering this, as he mentioned before the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if during the Easter recess the hon. member can take the time to read the whole paper he will see that certain questions are raised with regard to that problem. That question is not ruled out in the working paper.

ALLEGED DELAY IN COMPLETING RETURNS BY TAX CONSULTANTS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In light of the fact that some income tax consulting firms have stated that they will not be able to complete a large number of the income tax returns entrusted to them, and in light of the fact that taxpayers will be the ones to suffer from the delays caused by these firms, can he assure the House that he will extend the April 30 deadline for returns, or that at least he is seriously considering that possibility?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member did not hear my answer, a couple of days ago, to the hon. member for Palliser. I indicated that this course had been considered, but that we did not feel it was desirable. I would point out that there are certain other ways for people to avoid penalties and interest. It is quite simple, really.

Hon. members might be interested to know that already close to 7 million Canadians have filed their returns, and more than 2 million have already received refunds totalling some $300 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING TO PERMIT FARMERS TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF SYSTEM OF AVERAGING

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that farmers have to file their income tax returns on time every year in order to take advantage of the system of averaging, would the minister extend the April 30 deadline in case of late filing by farmers, due to the lateness and complexity of recent tax changes?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the same information as I gave to the hon. member for Palliser applies to all taxpayers including farmers, but it should be noted that it is not the T1 form but form T2011 which must be filed by April 30, so far as the right to average is concerned. And of course where the farmer files a return with estimated figures by April 30, and his T2011 form by the same date, based on estimated figures, there should be no problem.

AGRICULTURE

ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF CATTLE CONTAINING DIETHYLSTILBESTROL—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that, to protect the health of Canadian consumers, the federal Department of Agriculture has since last January 1 banned the use by beef producers of DES, or diethylstilbestrol, as a stimulant to the growth of slaughter animals, can the minister say if he knows that we are now importing from the United States beef containing DES? If so, what does he intend to do to improve the situation?

• (1540)

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that beef in the United States contains DES. We know that Canadian users are still using DES and Canadian beef still contains DES. It might be of interest to note that the import of cattle into Canada this year at this time is about one third what it was last year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of hon. members seeking supplementaries on different questions. The Chair will first recognize the hon. member for Richmond on a supplementary, then the hon. member for York-Simcoe has a supplementary to a previous question and then the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. minister did say that Canadian users are still using DES and that his department did ask that DES be no longer used as a stimulant for the growth of animals, can the hon. minister say what he intends to do to put a stop to it?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have worked very closely with the United States and we have already allowed the use of Ralgro for implant by Canadian beef producers which has the same effect on the cattle. We are hoping that the United States will make an announcement shortly on what they intend to do with DES, and we will be guided along those lines. It might be of interest also to point out that exports of cattle to the United States were up by 130 per cent over last year as of April 14.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

INQUIRY AS TO ESTIMATED COST OF NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister estimate for the House the cost of the program announced today in its interim and wholly developed stages?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, concerning the cost of the family allowances program, I indicated in my statement that it will exceed $800 million, taking into account the recovery of taxes by the government and some reductions payments now made in other forms.

As to the balance of the program, it is impossible to give any definite figures right now, at least not before we have discussed the matter with the provinces to determine, if not final figures, at least the range of payments which will enable us to establish exact amounts.

The total amount will depend on the level agreed to between the federal and provincial governments.

ENERGY

APPLICATION OF INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY TO EXPORT OIL—REQUEST THAT CABINET WITHHOLD APPROVAL UNTIL NATIONAL ENERGY POLICY ESTABLISHED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Acting Prime Minister arises out of the application which is before the National Energy Board from the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company for additional capacity to ship crude oil to the United States. In view of the fact that the additional capacity is not required for Canadian needs during 1973 or 1974 and the main thrust of the application is for the shipment of some additional 98,000 barrels per day to the United States, I should like to ask the minister, in the event that the National Energy Board approves this application, if the government would give consideration to withholding cabinet approval until such time as the long awaited national energy policy has been designed and implemented?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question appears to be hypothetical and I am not sure that a reply is required. Perhaps the hon. member might ask a supplementary or rephrase the question.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is not hypothetical. We are going to leave here today and by the time we return the National Energy Board may have indeed reached its decision. I am asking if the government will withhold approval until such time as parliament has dealt with the national energy policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question does not sound as hypothetical as the first one. Perhaps the minister might like to reply to the hon. member's rephrased question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will assume it was not hypothetical but that it was a suggestion to the government which will be taken into account.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are leaving here today until May 7, could the Acting Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the cabinet will not give approval to the application of the Interprovincial Pipeline Company until at least parliament has reassembled and the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works has had an opportunity of discussing this matter both with the minister and the chairman of the National Energy Board?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that undertaking but I will give serious consideration to the suggestion.

PRESIDENT NIXON'S SUGGESTION FOR CO-OPERATION ON ENERGY, RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is closely related to the one asked by the member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and is directed to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is, I presume, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of President Nixon's statement on energy this morning, has any decision been reached yet by the cabinet on responding to his suggestion for international co-operation on energy, research and development?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, President Nixon made his statement this morning and we have received it just before the question period; we did not have time to examine all implications. At first sight, we are satisfied that this will not change the Canadian position concerning oil exports. With regard to the hon. member's suggestion, I will advise the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

ALLEGED ERRORS BY DEPARTMENTAL ASSESSORS IN VERIFYING CORPORATION RETURNS—POSSIBLE DELAY IN HEARING APPEALS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It has been the experience of a number of corporations who have filed their income tax returns that errors have arisen in the verification of the returns by departmental assessors. Since there is a 90-day period during which appeal must be made and it is also a fact that the department is short of officials to hear the appeals, can the minister look into this matter in order to clear that difficulty and remove the possibility of injustice to the firms affected?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): I should be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST MEN IN APPLICATION OF CHILD CARE EXPENSES PROVISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. In reply to a question which I asked the hon. minister on March 1, 1973, regarding discrimination toward male parents under the "child care expenses" provision he was kind enough to send me a letter stating that this was a requirement of the law as passed by parliament and not as he would like to see it. In light of this blatant admission that discrimination toward the male gender does exist, could the minister inform the House whether he will take action to ensure that all parents faced with the difficult task of raising children on their own have equal opportunities to deduct reasonable child care expenses?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this question should more properly be directed to the Minister of Finance because the Department of National Revenue is obliged to administer the law as parliament passes it. I think the hon. member will understand, if he reads my reply to him carefully and for that matter if he looks at the law, that it is not just a matter of discrimination but an attempt to be sure that there is fairness in the application of this privilege and that one spouse does not take advantage of the other.

CHILD CARE EXPENSES—POSSIBLE APPLICATION OF PROVISION TO FARMERS' WIVES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. In light of the fact that working mothers are permitted allowances for child care, will the minister provide the same allowances to the wives of farmers who have to assist their husbands in the fields during the harvest and have to employ someone to take care of their children?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be glad to look into that question for the hon. member, because I think his wife certainly deserves any consideration of that kind that is possible.

TRANSPORT

RECALL ORDERS ON MOTOR VEHICLES—POSSIBLE LEGISLATION TO COMPEL DISCLOSURE OF DETAILS OF DEFECTS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Could the minister tell the House if the government has any authority to compel Canadian automotive manufacturers to disclose the details of motor vehicle recall orders and if not, could he tell the house if the government contemplates bringing in such legislation?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the subject of the hon. member's question falls more particularly within the responsibility of the Minister of Transport. I will be happy to discuss it with the Minister of Transport.

● (1550)

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could direct the question, then, to the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I really believe that a question to any minister in this House should be answered by the ministry and if ministers are not paying attention, I suggest to them that they should.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: My question to the Minister of Transport, Sir, is whether he or anyone in the government has the authority to compel Canada's automotive manufacturers to disclose details of automobile recall orders and, if not, can he tell the House if he contemplates bringing in such authority or legislation soon?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the minister to reply. I certainly do not want to complicate matters, as the question has been asked twice, but I was tempted in the first instance to suggest to the hon. member that in the first part of his question he was seeking a legal interpretation and to that extent the question was not in order. However, the question has been asked twice and the minister might like to reply to the second part starting with "if".

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that many hundred times a year we visit the automobile plants, check designs and check everything that is related to the safety of passengers. In addition to that, when we know that there are defects in any cars, we notify not only the industry, but the provinces and the public, so that everybody is aware that there is danger involved in those cars. Last year I think more than 800,000 cars were recalled and checked by the industry because of defects.

Mr. Fairweather: Did any cars work well?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not know about that. I do not know if—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the minister kindly resume his seat. The hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary. He will be allowed to ask it.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering. Obviously—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please resume his seat. He will be recognized in a moment. I am trying, and I am wondering if the hon. member will allow me, to remind hon. members that we will soon be running short of time if we spend four or five minutes on every question. There are a number of members in the back benches who again will not have the chance to ask questions. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is recognized.

Mr. Lawrence: Sir, I am afraid I cannot let that go without challenge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Are you suggesting, Sir, that the delay of five minutes here is my fault?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Selkirk.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-5 AIRCRAFT—REASON FOR ADDITIONAL PURCHASES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services and relates to an answer received in response to Question No. 1277 on the order paper which was answered today. From the answer the House received the information that of the initial order of 115 CF-5 aircraft, over half are not now in use by the Canadian Armed Forces but are, rather, sitting uselessly in storage or have been sold. In light of that fact, may I ask the minister why an additional 20 have been purchased?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will first study the question and then give an answer to the hon. member.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but since he has left, I will ask it after the Easter recess.

POLLUTION

LAKE SIMCOE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER POLLUTION BY PHOSPHOROUS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture has recently released a report indicating that phosphorous has become a major pollutant in Lake Simcoe, may I ask what action is being contemplated by the Department of the Environment to prevent further pollution of this lake and, in particular, of the Holland Marsh area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Environment Canada is working closely with the Department of the Environment for Ontario in an attempt to solve the problem. We have, ourselves, taken action with respect to detergents. The research facilities of the Canadian Center for Inland Waters are also involved. This is a co-operative federal-provincial program.

ESCAPE OF JEAN MOISAN WHILE ATTENDING HOCKEY GAME—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON TEMPORARY ABSENCES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General, and is with regard to the escape last evening of Jean Moisan from Cowansville Prison while he was attending the hockey game in Montreal. I wonder if the minister can explain to this House the circumstances under which Mr. Moisan was attending the hockey game?

An hon. Member: He was washing the rink.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, two inmates from Cowansville Penitentiary were granted a pass to attend the hockey game under escort.

Mr. Reynolds: How did they get the tickets?

Mr. Allmand: At the end of the game, one of the inmates disappeared and the guard returned to the penitentiary with the other inmate. I am afraid that we do not have a report on the inmate who disappeared.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who won the game?

An hon. Member: Montreal won the game.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I am quite happy that the series has now moved to Philadelphia.

Mr. Reynolds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realize that this can make a funny story, but I do not think it is a joke. Can the minister explain, inasmuch as there are colour TV's in prison, if it is government policy to give $15 hockey tickets to inmates, to enable them to attend hockey games?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the tickets were bought by the penitentiary service. What we are trying to do in the penitentiary system is set up a series of incentives—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: —whereby men can earn privileges like these from time to time. It is regrettable that this incident happened. On the whole, as I pointed out last year, we issued 63,000 temporary absence passes and less than one half of one per cent ended in failure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HIGHWAYS

FORT NELSON-FORT SIMPSON ROAD—INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF FEDERAL PORTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is he aware of a statement made by the Minister of Highways in the province of British Columbia recently regarding the Fort Nelson-Fort Simpson Road? Has the minister now, in light of that commitment by the provincial government of B.C. to immediately begin construction of their portion of the highway, realigned his priorities and committed the federal government to complete that section of the road that is under federal jurisdiction?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the government of British Columbia has again changed its mind, but I am in a rather difficult position, since it had stated last fall that nothing would be done. I therefore set up the departmental priorities accordingly but since the government of British Columbia has changed its mind, I will reconsider the problem. However, I cannot promise to alter this year our construction plans in the North. If they had not changed their minds, I would not have to change our plans.

POSSIBLE PHASING OUT OF PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CROP INSURANCE

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder if the minister can inform the House whether or not the government intends to carry on with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act program this year in light of the moves which have been made in relation to crop insurance. Last year a conflict developed in that many producers bought crop insurance, realizing that if they gained anything under it they could not collect from PFAA. Can the minister inform us about the future of the PFAA program this year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is still our intention to follow up the announcement of the government in 1972 that PFAA would be phased out. The program is only being carried out in one or two parts of the province of Alberta this year. Crop insurance is what we advise people to take out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind hon. members that there are too many supplementaries. I am trying to see as many members as possible before the end of the question period.

POSSIBLE USE OF PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE FUND AS DISASTER FUND

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund under PFAA now contains some $14,910,000, can the minister inform the House if this fund is to be revised, in the sense that it is to be used as a disaster fund, as farmers all across southern Saskatchewan and Alberta face the real possibility of drought and a grasshopper plague this coming year.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a disaster fund is probably a very good suggestion. When you check the record as to what the government has paid out in disaster areas in which farmers have not taken out crop insurance and where PFAA has been inadequate, you will see that the fund certainly could be useful.

SAFETY REGULATIONS FOR SMALL BOATS—POSSIBLE MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND OPERATORS TO DISCUSS CHANGES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. It is following up on one I asked him recently. Can the minister inform the House if he will have the regulations governing passenger ships amended so that small boats operated for pleasure, such as taking people out sports fishing, will not come under the regulations which require such vessels to carry self-inflatable life rafts, provided the other safety regulations are not diminished? In this connection, will the minister have the officials of his department meet with the operators to see if some common ground can be arrived at?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since we can make regulations, there is no doubt we can change them. The problem is whether it is wise. Will changing the regulations show the people in those craft how to swim? We must make inquiries to ensure that if we change the regulations, the safety of the people will be assured.

FERTILIZER—ALLEGED SHORTAGE CREATED BY UNITED STATES PURCHASES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is of some urgency since prairie farmers may well be starting to plant their crops. Is the minister aware that American interests are buying up large amounts of fertilizer in western Canada and that our own farmers are unable to obtain sufficient supplies for their needs?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is a new matter that has been brought to my attention. I have been checking reports about fertilizer supplies not being available. Most of the inquiries we have made have shown that this is not so. If the hon. member has new evidence, I would be glad to look at it and take the appropriate action. Canadians must be served first, especially by those plants which received DREE grants—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DIFFERENCE IN BANK RATE BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Due to the fact that one of the major reasons for the rise in the bank rate in Canada is the differential in rates between Canada and the United States, does the minister believe the change in the United States today will require a rise in the bank rate in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member would want me to speculate.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REMOVE DRUG TRAFFICKERS FROM ROCHDALE COLLEGE

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the public's tolerance and patience respecting Rochdale College in Toronto is almost at an end, and that an open confrontation between citizens and ratepayers groups of metro Toronto and residents of that college is developing this very day, and in view of the fact that Rochdale has clearly defaulted on its CMHC mortgage and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has refused to take action, will the Solicitor General advise what action he is prepared to take to clean up this place and convert the building into something more useful than the haven for drug traffickers which it is now?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The question stated by the hon. member is totally without foundation. The federal government, through the instrumentality of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has been taking every possible action to take possession. We have to obey the law and the order of the Supreme Court of Ontario which refused to give us possession. It was at our suggestion and request of the courts that a receiver was appointed to act on behalf of the creditors. That is the position we are enforcing in order to foreclose with all possible diligence.

Some hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister rose on a question of privilege. I suggest it was a point of debate. I must remind the hon. member for St. Paul's that his question did allege facts and to that extent it was not in order. The hon. member might like to rephrase his question or ask a supplementary.

Mr. Atkey: To the extent there is evidence available to the government to the effect there has been a substantial amount of drug trafficking in Rochdale College, what action is the Solicitor General prepared to take?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, whenever there are infractions, the RCMP does its best to enforce the Narcotics Act. I will have to get a report with regard to all cases involving Rochdale College. I will do that and give the report to the hon. member.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—CANADIAN PROPOSALS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the Canada-U.S. auto agreement. In view of the tough line the Americans seem to be taking with regard to the agreement, does the minister have an alternative plan to the present agreement that he can put into effect as a bargaining lever?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday, as I have on previous occasions. I indicated to the House that we are prepared to entertain improvements in the working of the auto pact, provided there are the necessary protective devices to ensure that Canadians will have a fair share of the North American market.

GOOSE BAY AIR BASE—LAY OFF OF CANADIAN CIVILIANS—POSSIBLE REPRESENTATIONS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the layoffs of Canadian civilians at the Goose Bay air base on Monday and the problems with regard to pensions and severance pay, can the minister inform the House whether an approach was made to the government of the United States and what was that approach?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that few Canadians are to lose their jobs as a result of the new arrangements at Goose Bay, because the Ministry of Transport will be hiring virtually all the civilian employees now working for the United States air force. A small number of what the United States air force calls "non-appropriated fund employees" may become unemployed. This group is not entitled to the same pension and other benefits as those employed directly by the U.S. air force. However, we have asked the United States government, through diplomatic channels, to give sympathetic consideration to their case.

TARIFF ON IMPORTATION OF BEEF AND BEEF CATTLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RE-INTRODUCTION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the minister's intention to re-introduce the tariff which he unilaterally took off on February 20, 1973, on the importation of beef and beef cattle to Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing all manufacturing and agricultural products that may or may not be adversely affected, either by way of employment or production. We are reviewing cattle and beef along with the rest of the items.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot and then call orders of the day. I apologize to the hon. member, but he will notice that we have gone beyond the time allotted for the question period. I was trying to recognize a number of hon. members without supplementaries. That is why I will recognize the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On the last occasion on which I asked a question in this House, I rose on nine consecutive sitting days before I was able to do so. Before I was able to ask this question I have risen on five consecutive days. Following the recess, Your Honour might consider the possibility of looking into the corners of the House more frequently.

Mr. Speaker: I look in all corners, including that of the hon. member. I certainly have no objection to allowing the hon. member a supplementary. The Chair will then recognize the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Dick: I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister made representations to the Minister of Finance to have the tariff on beef and beef cattle imports reintroduced?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have discussed this on many occasions. We in the Department of Agriculture are watching for evidence that there may be some damage. As I stated earlier in reply to a question, the movement of cattle to the United States is far greater than ever before and the movement into Canada from the United States is far less than ever before.

CATTLE—POSSIBLE RE-INSTATEMENT OF USE OF DIETHYLSTILBESTROL OR PROHIBITION OF IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Because most members of this House who represent rural areas in Ontario, including I presume the Minister of Agriculture, are presently being inundated by correspondence from constituents who are beef producers, will the minister advise if he proposes to reinstate the use of DES implant or, in the alternative, to refuse entry to Canada of U.S. live slaughter cattle and dressed beef, one of which decisions appears necessary by May 1, the end of the 120 day withdrawal period?

• (1610)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have stated before that we would not see the beef producers of this country hurt in any way, and they are not being hurt. Some of the statements that are being made by members are more likely to hurt members of the beef industry than anything else since most of them are not accurate.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Timiskaming rising on a point of order?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order with the President of the Privy Council concerning the question period and its operation. I think my point of order affects most of the members of this House.

Since the advent of research assistants we have had two parts to the question period. There is the formal part of the question period consisting of written questions prepared from other sources which are presented to Your Honour in the form of a list. Then, there are other questions. I suggest to the President of the Privy Council who acts as government House leader, on behalf of the Speaker, that he meet with the other political parties and either formalize this arrangement or eliminate it. As an individual member of this House, my privilege is the same as that of any other individual member. There are no lists of members who are supposed to be first since that is your choice, Mr. Speaker. I think it is an affront to Your Honour, an affront to me and an affront to a lot of Members of Parliament, that you are given a list by the parties and are expected to call the names in the order listed so that prearranged questions can be asked.

If it is the wish of the House to follow this practice, I suggest that the President of the Privy Council, as House leader, should prepare a formula to implement this arrangement so that Your Honour is no longer abused. I think this would eliminate much of the dissatisfaction that is apparent. I raise this point, not because there has been any particular abuse today, but simply because this is a device that is being used by the parties rather than by individual members of the House. Your Honour is being asked to do something that may be in conflict with your obligation to each and every member as equals in this House.

Mr. Speaker: I will not comment on the point made by the hon. member for Timiskaming, but I cannot resist commenting that the Chair has never felt bound by any list submitted to it. When whips or other representatives of parties have made suggestions to the Chair as to the order in which the original questions ought to be asked, I have received such suggestions as suggestions only. Hon. members whose names do appear on these lists know that this is not always a guarantee that they will be recognized. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CROP INSURANCE ACT

REIMBURSEMENT TO PROVINCES FOR PARTIAL ADVANCES ON CROP INSURANCE PREMIUMS

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-129, to amend the Crop Insurance Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate because of the importance of crop insurance to the constituency of Assiniboia and to western producers in general. Since the crop insurance program was introduced major changes have taken place, mostly at the provincial level, to make the program more attractive to the producers. The members of this party look forward to getting this bill through the House in order to reduce the premiums paid by farmers for crop insurance. Already farmers are purchasing crop insurance for this year, hoping that federal Members of Parliament will pass this legislation and reduce the premiums.

I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) some questions today pertaining to crop insurance and the difficulties being experienced by farmers in my area. When the crop insurance program was introduced, the intention of the government was that it replace the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to a large degree; I am sure the minister agrees with that. Many farmers found that particular act to be inadequate for their purposes. Once every five years my area dries out, and the farmers found PFAA to be of advantage to them.

With the introduction of the crop insurance program, it was assumed that PFAA would be phased out. Nevertheless, it continued in force last year, though the government had ceased to take the 1 per cent dockage, if I may call it that, on bushels of grain moved by western producers. In some areas the federal government paid out, and although one cannot complain at any pay-out made by the federal government, it did create some complicated situations.

The major problem was this. Under the Crop Insurance Act the benefits might be somewhat limited compared with amounts collected under PFAA. With the government holding up its decision on PFAA last year, many western producers in south and southwest Saskatchewan, not knowing whether it would be in operation, bought crop insurance. Then when the fall came the federal government decided, it being an election year, to continue PFAA in operation, and many farmers found they could not collect. Farmers all through the Bengough and Minton areas in my constituency were caught in a cross-fire between the two programs. I think this is one of the major reasons the percentage of votes gained by the Liberal party in this area was no higher than 14 per cent.

If PFAA continues in force, this complication will still exist. I have placed a motion on the order paper in my name which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending legislation to enable farmers to receive the benefits under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, whether or not they are receiving at the same time benefits under the Crop Insurance Act, and to provide for additional funds to be made available for the grassland incentive program.

The reason I am moving that motion is to try to clear up the situation if both PFAA and crop insurance are available in any one year. The latter part of the motion relates to the grassland incentive program, and I am pleased to see that the government has answered the plea for increased funds for that program. Now many young producers in my area wishing to go into beef production can take cultivated acreage out of production.

In the area of crop insurance you have PFAA being phased out and the crop insurance program coming in. As I pointed out during the question period today, the sum of $14,910,286 is left in the prairie farm emergency fund under PFAA. What we should be examining this year, particularly this spring, is a program that overlaps with crop insurance if there is widespread disaster. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would be able to tell the House about the disaster in his area last year. We in southern Saskatchewan have experienced a winter of very little snow. I am told that the Souris River, which runs through part of my constituency, is down by at least a foot and a half this spring since there has been no run-off. Producers in the Scout Lake area of Saskatchewan are saying that their dug-outs have gone dry, and I can well believe them. We are facing one of the driest springs on the Prairies this year that we have faced for a long time. Because of lack of snowfall, we had one of the must unusual winters in a decade. We are also faced with an outbreak of grasshoppers in isolated areas. We cannot expect any assistance from the federal government in this regard. As a result of these two facts and the predicted drought this year, we are facing potentially one of the worst years in decades.

● (1620)

This government should move now to ensure that the PFAA remains constituted in such a way that if we are hit with an over-all disaster this year, there will be some relief forthcoming. This may require amendments in respect of crop insurance. In southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta, in what is known as the Palliser triangle, we have no grain left to move. This is mainly the result of the Lift program. I know the Minister of Agriculture does not like that program which encouraged the farmers not to produce. We appreciate that fact and hope the minister will make sure that such a program is not attempted again.

The PFAA now has an emergency fund of over $15 million which could be used as a catalyst in setting up an over-all emergency program in the event that we in fact face the kind of year that is predicted for western producers. They are an optimistic lot and are still looking forward to some rain in the month of April. In spite of that, the producers on the Prairies face the real possibility of a drought this year as well as an outbreak of grasshoppers. In addition, the world situation lends itself to the belief that we will have a food shortage on a worldwide basis. If we are serious about keeping producer incomes at reasonable levels to ensure that they stay in business we must follow the lead, in respect of crop insurance, provided by the kind of amendments adopted by the government of Saskatchewan under its minister of agriculture, Mr. Messer. Those amendments represent substantial changes and have resulted in a greater number of farmers taking out crop insurance.

We need an over-all disaster plan or insurance fund in order to meet the situation should we be hit with a disaster this year; and this is a potential danger. I am sure the minister has difficulty in obtaining additional funds from Treasury Board, but there is an emergency fund in existence now under PFAA. Perhaps he could use this fact to persuade Treasury Board to give him more money for the establishment of an emergency fund for the assistance of producers in this country. I am sure that if the minister followed this suggestion he would go into the annals of this country as having done something very real for the western producers.

As the hon. member for Assiniboia, I would be more than willing to give the minister at least part of the credit: I would not take it all. If he followed this suggestion, I am sure he would be invited to attend the farm forum again next year—he attended this year—and could then give an excellent speech on the creation of the disaster fund. I seriously urge the minister to consider crop insurance in that context and the concept of a disaster fund.

Crop insurance is one mechanism used in creating adequate incomes for the producers. Crop insurance is selling well this year in Saskatchewan, particularly in my area. I suggest this is the result of the substantial changes made by the Saskatchewan government. However, there are other problems relating to farm income in respect of which change is required, and the change I have suggested should be initiated by the federal government.

I want to be positive about these matters. As an indication of that desire I compliment the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) for the increase in funds to build larger dug-outs under PFRA. This was a very good move and indicates what can be done when the minister is willing to listen and accept suggestions of members of the opposition.

An hon. Member: Now, we need water to fill them.

Mr. Knight: Yes, we now need water to fill them. If the minister can accomplish that for us, we will be indebted to him. I compliment the minister for listening to that suggestion and making the necessary change. Let me also compliment the Minister of Agriculture for his announced changes in respect of the grassland incentive program. I spoke with at least a dozen young people after the last election who informed me they will be taking advantage of this increase in funds. They are interested in diversifying their operations by going into cattle production. I do not like to take all the credit, but I think I should take some as a result of the increase in funds under PFAA for dug-outs and the increase in respect of grassland incentives.

Let me point out some very serious problems in respect of grasslands. I hope Air Canada does not mind that I used my boarding pass for making notes of what a producer told me during my trip to Ottawa. He pointed out that in order to stabilize farm income, producers were diversifying their operations. Many of them are beginning to raise cattle. In this regard I must point out that farmers are facing serious problems in respect of community pastures. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Agriculture must take this fact into consideration in relation to stabilizing the income of western producers.

As an example of the situation I would point out that 1,200 head of cattle were turned away from the community pasture land around Mount Hope, in the Semans district, because of lack of space. I hope the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) does not mind my using figures in respect of his area: I know he is concerned about the community pasture situation around Nokomis, where 1,100 head were turned away. This area is very good cattle producing country. However, it is not nearly as good as the country in my area of Saskatchewan. If 1,200 head have been turned away from pasture land at Mount Hope and 1,100 head at Nokomis, I suggest that is peanuts in comparison with the number of cattle that will be turned away from community pasture land in the southern part of the province. This is becoming a very serious problem and the government should move under PFRA to increase the funds to be used for the purchase of additional community pasture land.

Let me give the House an example of what I have in mind. A large ranch in the Carlyle district recently went bankrupt. It had been financed by the Industrial Development Bank which is operated under the auspices of this government: it does not do much for small or medium size businesses but it did finance this large operation which recently went belly up. The Industrial Development Bank took back this large unit of land. Here was an opportunity for the government to purchase this large unit of land through PFRA funds and turn it into community pasture land. Had this been done, the pressure would have been taken off community pasture lands in south central and southeastern Saskatchewan. Such action would provide a considerable degree of assistance. This is not a big thing in the sense of national over-all policy, but it is fundamental if we want to be sure young people undertaking the raising of cattle will have some hope of success.

I know of another rancher of long standing in another area who is prepared to sell out a very large unit of land. This land could be purchased with PFRA funds and used for community pasture. The provincial government has made some progress in this direction. However, a great deal more progress could be made if the provincial and federal governments co-operated in this regard as well as in the establishment of a national, farm disaster plan initially using the emergency funds of PFAA.

I take pleasure in the fact that the bill will bring down the cost of crop insurance to the farmers. I am pleased to see the increase in the funding of the grasslands incentives program which is a voluntary program. I am glad to see also the increase in funding to permit larger dug-outs under PFRA and the increase in funding to allow for the establishment of more community pastures wherever they can be established. These provisions will contribute in a substantial manner to the development of a diversified, well-planned farm operation in western Canada. A producer of beef who wishes to expand his herd, and is told by government to diversify, will know that the government at least is moving in the direction of auxiliary programs to ensure that he can diversify. He will have an opportunity to obtain pasture land, and should there be a disaster in southern Saskatchewan or southeast Alberta, he will know that there is a national farm disaster plan with large contingency funds to meet that disaster. This knowledge should be especially comforting this year in view of the danger of a very severe drought as well as a severe outbreak of grasshoppers.

In conclusion, I say that westerners are always optimistic. We have had to be like Newfoundlanders in that we have had to depend on the weather so much that we have learned to be very optimistic and to live with the weather. We are still optimistic that, in fact, this year we will not face a disaster in the form of a drought. The minister's speeches are piled up in my office and I have been diligently reading them in search of some action which I have not found. After diligently reading them, I hope to see the piles of paper turned into an over-all comprehensive program which will protect the producers in this country should they face a real disaster in the form of drought and grasshoppers.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in what I believe to be the conclusion of the debate on crop insurance legislation, I should like to say to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that I regret that the government has seen fit to use in crop insurance legislation as what is commonly called in this House "filler" legislation. It seems to me this piece of legislation is too important to be treated in this manner. It is also unfortunate that when the legislation was introduced some weeks ago the government did not see fit to continue the debate of the following day, so that the bill could have been dealt with in the House of Commons and moved on to the Agriculture Committee. I know from talking to some ministers of agriculture across the country that this legislation is being awaited at the present time. A good many programs and possibilities hinge upon what the provinces will be doing this coming spring. Also I believe the farmers are looking forward to this legislation as possibly being a little better vehicle than we had before in Canada for at least a form of crop insurance.

The way in which this piece of agricultural legislation has been brought in I think is, to some extent, typical of the attitude the government has had toward agriculture. We have a Minister of Agriculture who has done a good deal of speaking across the country of late. Like the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), I have read his speeches but I have not been able to find much in them. He seems to have been patting farmers on the head and saying that everything is all right, that he would stick up for them. However, that really is as far as he has gone. It seems the government has the attitude that while prices are high, as a result of the supply and demand situation, this is the time to sit back and not really look to see whether any improvements can be made in the field of agriculture. I think this is too bad. I certainly hope the Minister of Agriculture realizes this. After reading his speeches, I have yet to find that he has given any direction to farmers' programs or agricultural policy.

The farmers of Canada are asking questions. They are asking questions individually and also within their farm organizations. They are continuing something this year which started last year and which I believe is very good. They are starting to challenge some of the systems we have had over the past few years. This really is the time to challenge these systems. I refer to the marketing system, the transportation system, the feed grain system and the system of marketing within a world or global context. If the inquiring and searching were done in times of low prices, there could be a tendency to look at it as a panic situation or a very emotional situation. If this were to happen it could cloud our whole thinking. The only thing the minister has come up with has been that this year he wants the farmers to grow all the grain possible. I think he used the statement "to beat the band". There has been no clear, definite direction, except by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, as to what the government would like.

Statistics Canada published an indication of what the farmers intended to plant this year. It revealed that the farmers do not have the kind of confidence we would all like to see. I think the attitude taken by the Minister of Agriculture towards Canadian farmers is not good enough. The minister seems to be woefully lacking in his duty to the Canadian farmer. I say in all sincerity that he must give an indication of the direction in which the government is going. He must start raising questions of a challenging nature with the people engaged in agriculture concerning what should be done. It is my thinking, and I certainly think the thinking of the Conservative party, that the basic philosophy behind any approach to agriculture—and I say this because crop insurance is certainly a part of it—must be that the total expansion of our agricultural output here in Canada should be directed toward three areas. The first would be exports. What can we do to increase our exports above what they have been to the present time? Markets which are given to us are easy to secure, but markets which one must search for and hold through aggressive marketing, are another thing.

The second area is secondary processing. I think it has become an accepted fact that the number of Canadian farmers on the Prairies will not increase by any significant amount. If we want to have rural areas—and there is not one member in this House or a person anywhere who does not wish to have viable rural areas—we can only have them if we have a secondary processing industry linked closely with agriculture. This can be done. There also must be greater producer incentive. I do not believe the Minister of Agriculture has given any incentive to producers. The government itself has done little in this area.

There will also have to be a drastic reorganization of the Department of Agriculture. We have found over the past few years that the department should become more producer oriented, less bureaucratic, and less rigid. It must be able to co-operate more effectively both with the provinces and with private business, to seek out and expand new markets, and also to prepare legislation such as the bill now before us. I think the Department of Agriculture headed by the minister, along with other government departments, should be aware of the fact that a balance must be achieved between primary producers and secondary processing industry in the rural areas of the country.

I have made these comments because I think it is time that they were made in the House of Commons. Many people assume, probably rightly so, that the federal goverment is still using the psychology of Lift, in other words, withdrawing productive areas in times of over supply. It is time that this idea was expelled from the Department of Agriculture, and this can only be done if the minister decides to give direction and to do more than just talk to farmers to soothe them or to pour oil on troubled waters. In fact, this is all that he is really doing and that is why there has not been any leadership from him.

So far as crop insurance is concerned, we in the Conservative party find no insurmountable objection to the legislation that has been presented, but when the bill goes to committee we certainly intend to put questions and make suggestions with regard to the general objective of the legislation. It is significant that the number of farmers participating in crop insurance has actually dropped over the past year. In 1970-71 there were 55,000 but in 1971-72 the number went down to 46,000, The question that must be asked is why only 20 per cent of the total farming population is making use of this kind of insurance. There must be some glaring faults in the program. The question that must be asked is whether the 25 per cent increase in the federal government's contribution to this program will overcome the faults in it. Frankly I do not believe so.

I think that one of the faults which can be found with the crop insurance program is that until this time at least—I hope this will change, and once again it is up to the Minister of Agriculture to provide the necessary stimulus—the Department of Agriculture has not promoted the program sufficiently in various provinces. This is part of the job of the federal government. If it wishes to sell the insurance, it must do so on a businesslike basis and it must be done more efficiently and knowledgeably. Also, I believe that insurance legislation must be tailored more to managerial ability. A few years ago this may not have been necessary, but at present farming can no longer be called a way of life; it is a highly complex business involving a great amount of money.

The ability to manage a farm, demonstrated through records or through some other device over a period of time, should be seriously considered by the government in assessing crop insurance. I also think the over-all administration of the program should be improved so that a larger number of farmers can gain a greater degree of confidence in it. This is another aspect that has not been referred to. The federal government is deeply involved in the program, but its administration is left up to the ten individual provinces. At times this becomes very confusing, not only from the federal point of view but also from the provincial point of view. Once again this is where the minister should provide the necessary impetus to improve the administration of this program, at least at the federal level. It is my opinion that if this program is to be acceptable it should include hail insurance, fire insurance and also wildlife damage because we find that these three factors contribute to a large extent to the lowering of the yield and in some cases they virtually wipe out the yield in various parts of Canada. I certainly think that such additional insurance would make the plan much more acceptable to the entire farming community.

It was mentioned by the hon. member for Assiniboia that a disaster or emergency plan should be included in the legislation. Judging from what happened in the Peace River area this year, this request is justified. I am referring to a disaster or emergency plan being administered in such areas as the Peace River area. I have had some discussions with the Minister of Agriculture on this, and I think that what the government has been doing until now has at times been totally unacceptable. The farmers in the Peace River area have experienced crop failures because of the location and because of the climate more often than any other areas in the country.

The crop insurance program as proposed at present, even with the amendment which the government has brought in, I do not believe will allay the fears that farmers have. Special compensation for crops that are damaged under snow, for example, should be given serious consideration. Perhaps as much as 50 per cent of the value of the crop should be payable when it is under snow. The minister is aware, I am sure, that even if a crop is damaged by snow and the farmer is able to recoup some of it in the spring, its quality and weight as well as its market value have deteriorated. There is a definite justification for the setting up of some kind of disaster or emergency plan in these cases. I think such a plan could be worked out, and I do not think it would have any significant effect on crop insurance. I think that if the emergency plan were worked out properly, crop insurance would still remain the number one plan for protection. I think the minister should give serious consideration to this suggestion.

As I mentioned before, total emphasis is put in the bill on the provision of an extra 25 per cent in premiums. This seems to be the basis of the government's assumption that the program will work. The government is just going to pump more money into this insurance program and believes that doing so will make it more acceptable. Once again I say that I question this assumption. Anything we did in the past along this line of pumping money into a program did not really have that great an effect.

● (1650)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take note of some of the points I have raised. It is very important that agriculture be given some direction, because at present we have just been fortunate enough to benefit from the misfortunes of others. Crop insurance is one area that is being looked at at present as it relates to a total agriculture policy, but it is a very small area, although a necessary area. As I said before, insurance is a vital thing in agriculture, as in any other occupation. I hope that the suggestions I have made this afternoon will be brought to the minister's attention. When the legislation comes before the committee I hope we will get some answers for these problems, and possibly we can work together in committee to make the bill more acceptable and better adapted to farming in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say at the outset that I was very anxious to take part in this debate on behalf of the farmers of my constituency. I believe it is a duty for me to do so, for I had formally committed myself in that respect, and I have also had the opportunity to take part many times in the committee proceedings.

As the minister is in the House as usual, when we deal with important agricultural questions, I should like to make a few observations that were suggested to me by the farmers of my constituency, as well as by the farm organizations with which I am regularly in contact. And those meetings have enabled me to secure very useful information. I often get good advice from certain colleagues who have more experience than I have in agriculture, but I believe it is in this way that I can better serve those I represent in this House.

I see that the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) glanced at me. It is true that I seek advice from him from time to time, and I do the same with the Progressive Conservative member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). Both of them often gave me excellent advice and information and I avail myself of this opportunity to thank them.

I am also pleased to see a member from eastern Canada. A year ago, I had asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he was considering the possibility of appointing a Minister of State responsible for the Department of Agriculture, to represent Eastern Canada, in view of the fact that the farmers' problems are quite different from one region to the other, I realize that after the election of October 30, we not only have a Minister of State but a Minister from Eastern Canada and who will naturally have a better understanding of Eastern problems. Moreover, I do not think western farmers can be shocked since the minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) is from the West. Therefore, I think this distribution is quite fair.

I would like to speak about the federal government contribution which will amount to 50 per cent of the premiums. I think that the change made this year, to the effect that the provinces will only pay for administration costs, was desirable. This is a considerable advantage for the provinces and I must support the passage of this bill as all hon. members.

I would also like to invite the Minister, in the light of the information I have secured, as I said earlier, to discuss possible changes which, in my opinion, must be made.

For instance, it is regrettable that the evaluations made of damages sustained a few years back are obsolete because the yield per acre has of course increased thanks to processes which are today much more positive. I think it is our duty and in our interest to review these evaluations and have them match the yield per are which, as I said earlier, has considerably increased in certain cases.

It is also regrettable that the increase in the number of insured people is not felt as desired. Many producers or farmers showed some concern about the viability or the security of such an insurance and we are aware that many of them are not protected because they refused to pay an insurance premium.

There are reasons that explain why the number of insured farmers has gone down. It might be time to seriously consider setting up a universal insurance policy. Of course, several reasons would warrant a certain education which would make the merits of an insurance evident to the farmer. This is absolutely necessary but, as I said, evaluations being out-of-date, the policy-holder's dissatisfaction with some results, often incited him to drop this insurance. It is unfortunate that, when damages occur like those we witnessed during the past months, producers should find themselves without insurance and without protection.

I think that we would benefit in devising an insurance that could be universal, recognized as such for any producer in Canada. The minister should pay special attention to this possibility, and I know that it would be advisable, once more, to discuss the establishment of such a policy with the provinces.

I should also like to point out to the minister the importance of having all the farm products protected and insured. Often, in some provinces, people complain when they see such or such products not being protected. Again, I know that this is a question often falling under provincial jurisdiction and, in that respect, I suggest to the minister that he meet with his opposite numbers in the provinces to set up an insurance program that would reach all producers of whatever commodity. I believe that it would be above all in the producers' interest to convince them that they should pay 50 per cent of the premium for the protection that the legislation could provide them, to the extent, once more, that it would amount to the expenses incurred.

I should also like to touch upon a point which caused many difficulties to the producers last year, that is the establishment of a more orderly insurance plan or a much more valuable guarantee than that now in existence against disasters. Last year, as other hon. members have pointed out, Quebec and Ontario experienced damages that result from disasters which put the farmer in a really difficult situation.

We do know the consequences of the disaster which occurred last summer, and we know also the regulations which have been set up. I know that an amount of $9 million has been distributed among 22,500 farmers, which meant $400 per farm. We are perfectly aware of the fact that many producers have lost a lot more, and in some cases, it amounted to thousands of dollars. Therefore, these $400 were welcome. No one could refuse $400, but we know as well that this way of compensating damages was very unfair, considering these loss differences on the evaluations that we should have done.

● (1700)

Is it possible to correct this situation through the implementation of a policy to provide for a compensation fund which would be available to producers affected by a disaster? I speak on behalf of all Canadian producers who would wish have the assurance of this government that they will have a fund at their disposal should a disaster occur, according to their losses, and I suggest that we should consider the fact whenever such a disaster occurs, that it is absolutely necessary to assess damages to the crops, which are nearly non-existent, in some cases. In such cases, the labour and warehouse costs for some products must be paid, which means additional losses, for various reasons.

All these aspects should be taken into account when assessing a loss due to a disaster, and I suggest that it is important that the minister consider seriously the establishment of such a fund that could be used to meet in a fairer and more equitable way all losses incurred, which would eliminate forever difficulties and insecurity for the producer. He is entitled, like any other citizen, to this security. It has been said time and again that it is thanks to unions that several thousands of people have a security they did not enjoy a few years ago.

The farmer has been neglected and he is always faced with insecurity. The crop insurance program insures part of the crops to the extent the farmer can unfortunately be misinformed, but it is not comprehensive. A universal program would perhaps be less expensive and would make it possible for farmers to have this security. I also know that farmers are always a little embarrassed to pay a premium on following autumn's crop. I wonder if the minister could not negotiate to a certain extent with companies so that they allow farmers to pay their insurance premiums at harvest time and I also wonder whether the insurance companies could not accept such a point of view, because if the crop is good, there will be no problem; the farmer will be able to pay his premium, if it was payable within six months. If there was no crop because of bad weather or for any other reason, the insurance company would pay. As the government already pays 50 per cent of this premium, the insurance company would not have to finance 100 per cent. It would be in a better position to finance the 50 per cent which make up the share of the farmer who would have to invest a lot until harvest.

I make these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, because these are subjects which I am occasionally reminded of, and because these are arguments that every farmer would like to explain personally to the minister.

So I am speaking on behalf of a group of farmers in my riding, who will be very happy to learn that I made these representations to the minister concerned.

Before concluding my comments I should like to say a few words about young farmers who may be more involved than many others while their role becomes increasingly important. The department should allow them to take over the family farm with much greater advantages.

I know that there is a farm loan program and I should like the minister to give a special attention to the possibility of exempting the young farmer from paying back the interests during the first five years of operation. That would enable him to benefit from the insurance premium referred to in the bill we are studying today—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, although I acknowledge his interest for agriculture—undoubtedly a wide subject—and particularly for young farmers. Still, I should like him to advise the Chair how the point he is dealing with now and on which he seems prepared to speak at length relates to the bill which bears specifically on crop insurance.

I invite him to come back to the subject under study.

Mr. La Salle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall make a few remarks, as other hon. members before me have expressed rather general views on the importance of the farmer.

When I speak about benefits that we should make available to young farmers, I know that the minister is aware of the problem and anxious to help young farmers even more. As for me, I believe that they should be able to afford this insurance premium because this insurance is absolutely necessary for them. I think that would enable us to increase the number of those insured, for not only the government but all who are concerned with agriculture seem to be worried about how few farmers are taking advantage of this insurance.

I sincerely hope that these few remarks will enable the minister to understand my point of view. I shall end by repeating the requests I made on behalf of the farmers in my constituency, and I hope that the minister will take them into consideration. I add my voice to those other hon. members who intend not only to support this bill, but to ask the minister, insofar as is possible, to do more for our farmers, for that could only benefit the rest of the nation's economy.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have but a few brief words, to draw the attention of the House to my point of view on Bill C-129.

I shall be short so that the government can pass another bill this evening, if possible. I think that Bill C-129 is certainly in the interest of farmers, and I congratulate the minister for having introduced it; it will give more money to the provinces and enable them to provide farmers with a more adequate insurance program.

I should, however, like to ask the minister to introduce next year a bill to provide more adequate insurance for farmers.

I was an insurance salesman for some years, and sold crop insurance during the first two years of this program. I was greatly dissatisfied to see that when a farmer had suffered a loss, too large a proportion of his loss was not covered by the insurance.

I believe the act provides for 80 per cent loss coverage of volume and 80 per cent of value.

Thus, a farmer who should harvest 100 tons of hay does not get a penny if he harvests 80.

I suggest that is one of the main reasons why farmers, those of Quebec particularly, do not avail themselves of the Crop Insurance Act.

Any settlement for a loss starts off by deducting 20 per cent of the insured amount, and another 20 per cent for security coverage, as compared to the value of the crop. I consider this is very unfair to the producer unless the act is amended next year—the minister just told me he agrees with me—we will still have farmers not availing themselves of its provisions.

Mr. Speaker, insurance is designed to protect people liable to accidents. With regard to car insurance, that is right, but with regard to crop insurance, the government goes further than that. If the crop loss is predictable six, seven or eight months before hand, the farmer is not insurable, whether he pays premiums or not.

Therefore, the Crop Insurance Act does not operate the same way as ordinary insurance. An accident is something that cannot be foreseen, it is purely and simply an act of God. However, crop insurance goes much further. Crop incurance can be figured out up to one year beforehand, for instance, in the case of hay losses due to frost.

I think that crop insurance should also provide 100 per cent coverage when grain is destroyed by hail storms. At the present time, crop insurance covers only 60 per cent of such a loss, and only after the crop has been harvested or is ready for harvesting. This means that if on my 10 acres I have barley starting to ripen—barley falls readily when the wind blows—and then there is hail storm, I lose about 35 per cent of my crops, because I have to leave it there and wait for those inspectors to come. When they come, half the fallen grain has rotten on the ground and I am left with nothing.

I have paid premiums, I send for my broker, Mr. Léonel Beaudoin. I blame him but in fact he is not the one responsible, since the program does not cover the crop adequately against an actual loss and this is very detrimental to the producer.

These are the only remarks I have to make. I reiterate my congratulations to the minister and also to the government for having appointed a minister for Eastern Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before I recognize the minister I wish to inform hon. members that if the minister speaks at this time, he will be closing the debate.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make my remarks lengthy. I just want to make a few comments on some of the things which have been said in the debate, and I wish to make it clear that PFAA is to be terminated. I would not want to build any false hopes for farm producers in western Canada who may think that that program would take the place of crop insurance. Crop insurance is still their best buy today. That is the best form of insurance to guard against total losses from which they may possibly suffer. Crop insurance sales for this year already have surpassed those for last year. In the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan the authorities are putting out a real sales effort to increase coverage and to take advantage of our proposed legislation. They are counting on this legislation being passed.

I have been criticized for making all the speeches I have made across Canada, yet I doubt if there is one in which I did not mention crop insurance and ask for suggestions from farmers, farm leaders across this country and even from politicians. I wanted them to make suggestions as to how we could improve the crop insurance plan. One could compare what I have been doing with building a road. When you build a road, you first make a survey, then build the base, pave the road, and allow people to use it. That is what I tried to do with crop insurance. I wanted to make sure that this and other legislation will be beneficial to agricultural producers. I am sure they all realize that is what all those speeches I have been making were about. I wanted to ascertain from the farmers of Canada their views on our legislation. That is what I have been doing. I have been ascertaining farmers' views, and I think this course of action will pay dividends for agriculture in the long run.

I do not think there is much more that I can say. Let me say this to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). I guess what I am about to suggest is not so old fashioned. We should pray a little for rain. That will not hurt us at all. We can also pray for good weather, because the whole world is counting on North American farmers, on North American cereal producers, to produce the food that the world needs this year. So, it will not hurt us one bit to pray for good weather. Let me end by saying, Mr. Speaker, Happy Easter.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

JUDGES ACT

PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR CERTAIN COURTS

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-177, to amend the Judges Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will make only a few remarks in view of the co-operative attitude of hon. members, which I appreciate very much, and which will facilitate sending this bill to the committee.

The bill before us would authorize additional salaries for judicial positions involving 15 judges throughout the provinces of Canada and additional positions as well as salaries with respect to four judges in the case of the federal court. In view of the increase in the workload in the federal court, there is a requirement for these judges to be available in order to keep up with appeals which may reach that court and with applications which may reach it in connection with a variety of boards and tribunals.

With respect to the 15 judges throughout the provinces, the legislation matches the positions which have been created by provincial legislation. The positions have been created in accordance with the judgment of the various attorneys-general of the provinces, as confirmed by our own investigations with respect to requirements and needs.

In this bill we are adding an additional feature in the creation of a group of potential salaries that will be available for matching with future positions that may be created by the provinces. We want thereby to be in the position to move relatively expeditiously when it appears that there is a need for an additional judicial position as determined, as usual, by the judgment in the first instance of the provincial attorney-general, after which we can make the necessary appointment in order to expedite the handling of judicial matters which are so important to all our citizens.

The additional feature in the bill is an amendment to the supernumerary provisions which were introduced in the last amendment to the Judges Act. Here, we propose to recognize the desirability on occasion of making it possible for judges who have reached the age of 65 and who have served for at least 15 years in the court to move into the supernumerary category and thereby, although no longer being called on to assume a complete load of work, to be available still at the call of the chief justice to serve the court and, therefore, to further expedite justice. It seems, in view of the younger appointments which have been made, that it is appropriate to move the supernumerary provisions in that direction. We must recognize that, on occasion, judges who have reached that age may find it most desirable to remove themselves from the necessity to carry a full load. Under these provisions, however, they are still to be available to the court to do a portion of the work, as the chief justice may find suitable. I commend the bill to members and its study in committee for the facilitation of judicial causes throughout the country.

● (1720)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is an example of allocation of time by consent, a consent that I am very glad to facilitate on behalf of our party.

As the minister said, the purpose is very simple, namely to add certain judicial positions and salaries to the federal, provincial and county courts. We are not discussing jurisdiction. If we had been, perhaps many of us would have wanted to speak at a little greater length.

[Mr. Lang.]

I think the minister agrees that some of the terminology now in the bill does not make very much sense in modern times. My own province of New Brunswick has to all intents and purposes abolished the word "county". I agree it is up to the provincial legislatures to make the changes to their statutes to accommodate this. However, I am always struck by the anomaly in contemporary times of having this divided jurisdiction, that is county or district judges and Supreme Court judges. I hope we will soon move to the position where there will be a supreme court or a superior court. As a matter of fact, I think this division goes back to the days when travel was difficult. It was a good idea to have an identifiable justice near the scene of litigation, so to speak. Nowadays, there is much more mobility and flexibility. Perhaps some of the problems would be overcome if we moved from the provincial courts straight to the supreme or superior court of the particular province.

I commend the minister for clause 10. I think it is an excellent idea. It will mean that the provinces will not be at the beck and call of this institution when they feel they need additional judges. Except for one or two days of emergency debate last September, we had the experience of not having a parliament from June to January and the minister vying with other ministers to get his legislation considered by parliament. This additional judge provision in clause 10 will give the minister and the provinces a needed flexibility. It is interesting that it has taken so long to think up what seems to me to be a rather sensible and simple proposal.

I hope the government, particularly the minister, will look at a bill standing in my name which discusses in statutory form the matter of judges taking on additional duties. I am in no way to be understood as commenting on the very special work being done by the Law Reform Commission. However, I have long felt that if governments could avoid making judges sort of whipping boys on rather difficult labour negotiations, conciliations, arbitrations and so on, the country and the independent judiciary would be better served. It has been a curious thing about our development of jurisprudence that we have always gone to the judges. We have the other place with very distinguished Senators and people in the academic community and many other walks of life who could fulfil this independent role that is so essential and at the same time move judges out of the hurly-burly of things that may have political overtones.

We will be glad to help move along the bill and will await its more deliberative discussion or examination in the committee.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, will attempt to be as brief as possible. We support the bill. We wish to expedite its passage here today so that it can go to committee for a more detailed discussion.

We particularly welcome it because we know something about the backlog of trials that have accumulated, both in the federal courts and in the courts of the provinces. I checked the situation in my province of British Columbia today. If you set down a trial in the Supreme Court today, you are given a date in February, 1974. That assumes all the pleadings have been done to this point. With regard to divorces, in my city of New Westminster, no uncontested divorces can be set down until the fall. That indicates the need for additional judges in this country. It certainly gives emphasis to the old saying about justice delayed is justice denied.

There are many methods that can be considered to facilitate the disposition of trials in this country. I am still concerned about the fact that court house facilities are not used during two months of the year. I realize this is not the responsibility of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), but I am hopeful that he will urge upon his provincial counterparts consideration of the whole question of the use of facilities so we can get to the point where they are used year round. Holidays can be staggered. There would not be any problem for lawyers or judges.

I realize appointments are made upon recommendation from the provincial attorneys-general, but four new county court judges are being appointed in the province of British Columbia. Some time ago there was a move to abolish the county court in my province and have only a superior trial jurisdiction, a supreme court. That seemed to be eminently sensible.

When one examines the jurisdiction of a county court in British Columbia, he will find that it has a monetary jurisdiction of $3,000 on the civil side. However, on the criminal side, it is given the right to sentence a person to life imprisonment. I submit that is a very poor allocation of responsibility. Surely one court of trial jurisdiction, with one court dealing with small debts claims, would more expediciously serve the public's legal business. I also wish to comment on speeding up the process of file procedure. The provincial law reform commissions are all presently studying ways to improve procedure. I know the minister is interested in seeing that process sped along, because that would be another way to make improvements.

The mystical process of judicial appointments continues. I am hopeful that appointments will be made on a non-partisan basis. I hope that members, regardless of their political affiliation, are all being considered for appointment to the bench. I take some satisfaction from the fact there have been a few appointments from the New Democratic Party. I think there have been too few, but nevertheless, it seems to be a step in the right direction. It is an indication that the government is being a little more broad-minded on the subject than in the past.

I want to close with a comment made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) this morning. He said the significant thing about this bill is at least the number of judges that will be appointed will reduce the number of judges in the country. As a lawyer, I say that facetiously. In any event, we hope the passage of this bill will be expedited.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

AERONAUTICS ACT

PROVISIONS OF SECURITY MEASURES AT AIRPORTS

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-128, to amend the Aeronautics Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the last few years, practices which are not only wrong but even criminal have developed especially in airports. What used to be a dangerous means of transportation in itself, because travelling in the air always involves the possibility of an accident, has become even more dangerous.

Today we know that certain groups or individuals use this means of transportation for illegal purposes, or in an attempt to get things that they cannot obtain otherwise. In other words, some groups, perhaps less in Canada than in Europe—but it will probably come to that in our country as well—resort to threats against passengers or aircraft crews in order to obtain either money or the discharge of prisoners, or for political purposes.

Highjackers usually threaten either the stewardess or the pilots and if they do not get what they are asking for, they of course threaten to blow up the aircraft or force it to make for another airport than that of destination. For a few years, these tactics have developed to such an extent that they represent a real danger.

A few months ago, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of meeting not only the presidents of the big Canadian airline companies but with those of regional companies to see what could be done before Bill C-128, which is now before us, may be amended, so that we have authority to act in this area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under the law, the only power that exists is that of the air carriers, the airlines, to refuse access to their planes to a passenger who has a ticket if this passenger will not agree to a certain check. The federal government, the RCMP, or any other agency that we could empower does not have the power to search people and their luggage, nor to prevent them from boarding a plane. The airlines alone, under a contract that appears on the reverse of the ticket—a contract written in print so small that hardly ½ per cent of Canadians manage to decipher it—reserve themselves the right to refuse a passenger, without conditions.

It is under that power of the companies, Mr. Speaker, that we can now search passengers. In Canada, at all major airports, as you know, there are security agents searching people and luggage to prevent anybody from coming aboard a plane with offensive weapons, whether it be firearms, knives or explosives.

Of course, that method is of rather limited efficiency and we would like to be in a position to systematize the searching of passengers by granting the strict right of searching people and luggage when there are reasonable grounds to believe that someone might be trying to come aboard and threaten to divert the plane or even threaten the lives of people aboard.

That is the purpose, Mr. Speaker, of Bill C-128. We now have an arrangement and it was agreed with the airlines that it would be temporary, that is to say that the companies expected that by the end of March we would be in a position to take the responsibility as a government, to search individuals and luggage when necessary at airports. We also want major airports to be protected physically, that is by fences, to prevent anybody from coming in either to threaten the lives of people and to board a plane to threaten the pilot or the passengers.

Bill C-128 is nothing new. That power is being given by the federal government. As to the way we proceed there are all sorts of complications, one of them being cost. Of course, airlines are not interested in paying for the wages of the security officers who must search people and luggage. We are studying how we may share these costs, and the experience of these last two or three months will probably show us how to distribute these costs between the federal government and airline companies.

Some people might fear that the federal government or its agencies may abuse this power. Of course, each time such a power is granted to the government, there is a danger of misuse but if we are asking for this power, it is for a reason. A very small number of Canadians are opposed to it. As far as I am concerned, I have never been informed that people object to being searched. Canadians know that we act this way not to impinge on their freedom, but to protect their fundamental freedom, their lives.

That is the reason of the search and we do not want to perpetuate the present system, because it is essentially temporary and has been voluntarily accepted by the airlines. At present, they defray the costs, but we think that under the Aeronautics Act, the federal government should have such powers.

The R.C.M.P. is training people especially to perform this work. Officers will thus be assigned to airports and they will try to prevent the persons I referred to earlier from boarding the aircraft. It is clear that they will not achieve 100 per cent success; perhaps other accidents will occur in the future, but what we are trying to do is to decrease their number so that Canadians or foreigners travelling aboard Canadian aircraft will enjoy maximum security.

Eventually, if this results in a certain amount of abuse, we know that we could use other democratic methods; the Parliament is in Ottawa, the members of Parliament and the government are still there. We will try to prevent any abuse if ever some occur. We are now giving special training to avoid harassment so that inconvenience does not result in provocation or an untolerable embarrassment for all passengers.

Mr. Speaker, that is the purpose of Bill C-128; we are only confirming what is done at the present time to maintain the procedure, but in a better way through specially trained agents.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister would agree that there is still something pretty good about the fact that searches, no matter whether they are for our safety or for the safety of others, have to be by statute and not by government fiat or some sort of administrative decision. I think this is a very reassuring and comforting thing about this issue. Once again, though, we find ourselves in contemporary times really having to revert to the middle ages, and the highwayman of stagecoach days has become, if I can say so, the skywayman of the jet age.

Speaking personally, I am particularly glad that most of us being searched are still somewhat embarrassed by the whole procedure, still uncomfortable about it and still not sure whether to say please or thank you when the geiger-counter goes up and down various layers of largesse, speaking personally. I think this, too, is a healthy sign and I would hate to see the day when this embarrassment about the whole search process becomes somewhat institutionalized in our system with officials, rather than being embarrassed as they search, becoming officious and grim faced, with us just thinking this is one more routine procedure. I, for one, will never accept the fact that it is a routine procedure to be searched because I want to go from this parliament to my constituency, or some other Canadian or anybody else wants to go around the world on his private business or private occasion, to put it more eloquently or elegantly. I am glad, therefore, that the minister has to bring this issue before us in the form of a statute and that we have to debate it.

Some may think the line I have taken is on the philosophical side. I do not intend it to be. I rather think it is one of the ironies of our age that we have the technical ability to get from point "A" to point "B" rather quickly, but we have not yet found a way to do it safely because of the vagaries of other people in the world. Earlier, I raised the civil liberties matter, and whether the searchers might be persuaded, and perhaps that is not the right word, or fall into the trap of carrying out a sort of general fishing expedition. Really, what they are doing is insuring our safety; they are not vetting our reading material, and I hope they are not looking for other things. There are other methods that can be used by the police and law enforcement agencies.

This is an inconvenience about which we are all slightly embarrassed but that we accept, I suppose, with the rather selfish idea that the safety of many of us and our fellows is involved. Speaking personally, and I hope others would agree, I hope that we will always be nervous about it and slightly embarrassed, because when we take it as routine then I think we will have lost a very precious part of our liberty.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) pointed out, just at a time when technicians seemed to have assured reasonable safety in the air, at least from a mechanical point of view, we find ourselves faced with this tragedy of air piracy and other threats to the lives of those who travel by air. The result is that some method does seem to be necessary to protect the safety of passengers and flight personnel, and on that basis we are prepared to agree to second reading of this bill so it can be referred to the appropriate standing committee.

I am particularly pleased that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) made the statement he has just given to the House. It is good to remind ourselves, as the hon. member said, that even for our own safety we cannot be searched or put to other forms of embarrassment without there being a legal basis for it. We understand that there is such a basis for the searches which are being made at the present time, but this legislation is to make it possible in respect of all passenger aircraft in Canada. It is also to provide the necessary legal basis for any costs that may be involved, if that becomes necessary.

Sir, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal has said what needed to be said on this occasion, and with that we would be quite happy to let this bill have second reading at this time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

CREATION OF OFFENCES RELATED TO INTERCEPTION OF PRIVATE COMMUNICATIONS BY CERTAIN DEVICES

On the order:

April 13, 1973—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-176, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act—the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps if I can spin it out my point will be met. We did agree to give the minister an opportunity to start this measure, but is there any point in starting it now?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have been waiting for 30 years to be speaking when the knock came on the door.

Mr. Bell: They will take you away one day, Stan.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I just mention to the House while we are waiting that when we resume following the Easter adjournment we might consider on the first day the bill to which we were about to give second reading, wiretapping, to be followed by an act respecting wildlife, the fisheries development act and then CNR financing. These bills might ease the House gradually into the more controversial items that may be coming later.

Mr. Bell: Is there any word about corporate taxation?

Mr. Paproski: What makes you think we will be back after Easter?
