FIFTY-NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The Annual Meeting, preparatory to the Anniversary Assembly, was held at the Home, on Thursday, November 1, 1894, at eight o'clock p.m.

The President, Mr. Robert Mackay, occupied the chair.
Mr. John Ogilvy, Acting-Secretary.

M. M. Duff, Peter McLeod, Alex. Hamilton, R. M. Esdaile, Ewen McLennan, Jas. Wright, A. G. Thomson, David Seath, W. G. Stewart, W. Alex. Caldwell, Jas. Stewart, Geo. Cameron, Jas. Johnston, G. W. Cameron, R. W. Forsyth, John Allan, W. J. Cameron, Dr. Wanless, Rev. Jas. Patterson, Dr. Proudfoot, Col. Gardner, Col. Caverhill, Rev. Dr. Campbell, Col. Starke, Dr. Hutchison, Dr. McEachran.

The Minutes of last Meeting were taken as read.

Mr. Campbell read the Report of the Charitable Committee, as follows :—

Annual Report of the Charitable Committee, 1893-94.

We beg to present our Annual Report for the consideration of the Society.

The first and most important part of the work is that of the Home, the ample roof of which has covered 147 Scotch strangers during the past year, an increase of two on the preceding one. These have been, with very few exceptions, of a poorer class than ever before, mostly laborers and stowaways. In consequence of the depression in this country, many of these have found their way back to Scotland again in cattle ships. Over one hundred meals have been given to hungry applicants who could not properly claim a shelter, being of the nature of tramps. Your Committee feel safe in saying that no civil, sober Scotchman ever left the door of the Home hungry.

Each Thursday, from November to April, found the Members of this Committee assembled to distribute the bounty of the Society to the needy Scotch of the City. The applicants were more numerous than ever before, 108 families being supplied weekly with food, fuel and clothing. The few ladies who find time to brighten our meetings with their presence have aided us greatly in our work by visiting and personally assisting special cases. Three of our oldest pensioners have been removed by death since our last Annual Meeting, one over 90, and the others over 80 and 70 years respectively. One was buried at the Society's expense, while the other two had sufficient money saved to bury them decently. Four others were buried by the Society, one being a particularly sad case. A young woman, the daughter of a Minister, well educated, and apparently in good health, came to this City to push her fortune. Mrs. Campbell secured a position as mother's help for her in the family of one of our Members, but, sad to say, she was suddenly cut off by heart failure four days after entering her situation. Her remains were interred in the Society's lot.

Knowing, as only your Committee can know, of the extent and character of the aid afforded through this Institution, we each feel it to be a high honor and a blessed privilege to be members of a Society which does so much good. We say, with emphasis, that no man can consecrate his time and substance to a nobler work than that of relieving the distress of his fellow-countrymen in a strange land. Such a ministry brings a rich reward in this life, and has the promise of a still richer in the life to come.

To the City poor we have donated as follows :

2,807 Loaves of Bread.	300 Pounds of Soap.
20 Barrels of Oatmeal.	200 Half-ton Loads of Coal.
6 Barrels of Flour.	150 Half-cord Loads of Wood.
472 Pounds of Tea.	25 Pairs of Boots and Rubbers.
1,584 Pounds of Sugar.

About $300 worth of new and cast-off clothing.

Extra for Christmas Dinner :

2 Barrels of Flour.
 34 Turkeys, Geese and Chickens.
 400 Pounds of Beef.
 25 Pounds of Currants.
 25 Pounds of Raisins.

17 Persons were sent to Scotland at a cost of $207 00
 (Of this $124 was collected from friends and $83 from the funds of the Society).
 Six persons were sent to the country, costing 20 50
 To the City Poor, in small sums 25 25
 Home expenses (per Supt.), Servants' wages, etc. 543 47

In conclusion, we desire to give our most grateful thanks to the many friends who aid us at Christmas and all the year round by special donations, which may be found in detail appended to this report ; to the Allan, Dominion, Beaver and Richelieu & Ontario Lines of Steamers for reduced fares ; the Bell Telephone Company and City Ice Company for half rates on telephone and ice ; Mr. Stewart, of New York, for a weekly copy of "Scottish-American Journal" ; the Physicians and Chaplains ; the Rev. Mr Patterson and Mr. McLeod.

Respectfully submitted,

D. CAMPBELL, Chairman.

SERMON

PREACHED BEFORE ST. ANDREW'S SOCIETY OF MONTREAL BY REV. ROBT. CAMPBELL, D.D.

DEUT. 4, 5-9. "Behold I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the midst of the land whither ye go in to possess it. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the peoples which shall hear all these statutes, and say, "Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what great nation is there, that hath a god so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is, whensoever we call upon Him? And what great nation is there, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day? Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes saw, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life: but make them known unto thy children and thy children's children."

I take it that the principle underlying this passage is that it was to fare well with Israel, in proportion as they entertained intelligent views of God and adhered loyally to His commands. They were to serve as an object lesson to all other nations. It was for this purpose that they were singularly dealt with; and not left to go on developing like the rest of mankind, only as the light of nature could guide them. They were called out from among the nations, to become the repository of the great fundamental religious truth, that God is one, that He is the living God, the Great I am, and that He presides in person over all the affairs of the earth, as well as of Heaven. The world having lost a vivid sense of God's presence in the Universe was to be brought back to a fresh apprehension of it, by having the truth in this regard first deeply impressed on the heart and conscience of one race. It was by their clearer knowledge of God, under the name of Jehovah, and by their obedience to His commands, that they were to be differentiated from the surrounding nations; and the outcome, in their history, of His special dealings with them, and of their faithful allegiance to Him, was to constrain the attention of the rest of mankind to their wisdom and understanding and God-fearing character. Such was the intent of the covenant into which God entered with Israel; although alas! they were far from living up to it. But whenever they came short of performing their part in the covenant, they were recalled to their duty by the exhortations of the prophets and by the retributive events of divine providence. They were a perverse people, and had to suffer much before they could be got to seize fully the truth of God's awful presence among nations and individuals: but this great idea we find struggling to the surface throughout their history ; and to-day the entire Old Testament literature is a grand embodiment of this fundamental religious truth ; there is a God, and He bears personal rule over the Universe. We have, we believe, divine authority for thus interpreting the purpose designed to be served by God's singling out the Hebrew race for special treatment. But may we not, even without any revelation from Heaven bearing on the subject, gather that other nations too have been raised up to accomplish definite objects, in the divine plan of government. We know, from Holy Writ, that God made use of Egypt, and Assyria, and Babylon, and Persia for furthering His own ends regarding Israel. But even were this not the case, we could not doubt that the Lord of all holds the reins over all the people that on earth do dwell, and that He prescribes the limitations by which their influence is defined. It is, indeed, confounding to our minds to admit that all things are as they are according to His plan. We are shocked at the thought ; but we have to take refuge in the assurance that He from His high throne, seeing the end from the beginning, with His clearer, larger vision, beholds order where there is to us seeming confusion—that He does not make haste, but, biding His time, He will bring about at length that great far off divine event to which the whole creation moves, of which the late laureate fondly dreamed—when all present apparent irregularities in His government shall have disappeared.

We may, I believe, assume that every nation, which has had a period in history, as well as Israel, has had its lesson to teach mankind, and its purpose to serve, if we could only discern it.

Who can doubt, for instance, that Egypt, and Assyria, and Babylon, and Persia had all of them, in such civilization, and government, and learning as they had attained, much to teach the Hebrews, by which they profited, and by which, through that people, the whole christian world to-day profits ?

Were not the Greeks raised up to be the world's teachers in literature, philosophy and art ? The Romans, too, were unquestionably given universal empire that mankind should learn to be subject to law and order. Their legions made highways for themselves, east, west, north and south, in order that they might impose the weight of the authority of their imperial masters upon even the rudest and most distant tribes.

And has not our own British Empire to-day its functions clearly enough perceived of carrying, in its trading ships, the blessings of Christian light and freedom to the uttermost parts of the earth ?

And now, to come to the special subject of to-day, has not Scotland, our mother country, also had its lessons to teach the world ? We are met to-day as Scotsmen, or the descendants of Scotsmen, and of course we recall our country's past. Scotland is lovely to travel in, during the soft and balmy days of summer and early autumn. The air on its heathery hills is then bracing, the favourite haunt of the modern sportsman and tourist. But it is a very bleak country in November, and, taken as a whole, it is only a small and barren land, with an inhospitable climate. Yet it has given a good account of itself, and its children may dwell on its history with pardonable pride. Scotland can take rank with Palestine, Greece and Italy, for the amount of interest centred in its story. In none of these, does the same number of square miles, that go to make up the compass of Scotland, embrace a larger variety of instructive associations. No city, no village, no loch or strath but has its romance. The whole land is alive with antiquarian or poetical references. Every foot of ground has its story to tell, and it is this which invests it with so great a charm for travellers from more prosaic lands.

And then, its people have a peculiar stamp physically in appearance, bearing and accent, and a character all their own, being serious, self-reliant, patient, frugal and law-abiding. In not a few respects, they resemble the Hebrew race, as their country, in its physical features, and in some notable passages in its history, also bears a resemblance to Palestine, the original home of the children of Abraham. Like the Hebrews, too, while fondly attached to their own country and its peculiar institutions, so that its very dust is dear to them, they have the faculty of finding their way to other lands, wherever there is a chance to push their fortunes, and of adapting themselves easily to their new surroundings, and yet at the same time preserving their national characteristics. Proving themselves wherever they go, to be honest, self-governing and useful citizens, they are welcomed to all lands in which such qualities are a passport to favour. Now, how are these phenomena to be accounted for? The facts will be generally admitted; but as all effects must be traceable to adequate causes, where are we to look for the sources of the Scottish national characteristics? They must have resulted largely from the elements which entered into the people's history.

Some of their peculiarities may have been shaped by the comparative poverty of the country's national resources. Their environment set them upon practising economy; while the severity of their climate contributed to make them both active and hardy. The eagerness with which they were necessitated to pursue the means of subsistence, and the frugality of habits which ensued, will account in some measure for the reality stamped upon their character and their disposition to make the most of life. But these circumstances are not sufficient to explain how the Scotsman comes by those qualities of mind and heart which distinguish him wherever he goes. Not every poor country, with an inhospitable climate, produces a thrifty, self-governing, provident, and law-abiding population. Whence, then, has the Scotsman derived the moral, social and spiritual qualities which mark him out from other races? When I speak of the Scot, I also include the Scotch-Irishman; for, indeed, those of our countrymen resident in the green isle, often display many of the features of the Scottish character in a most pronounced form.

The position which we occupy, as Scotch Canadians, is perhaps as favorable a one as we could desire, for estimating the causes which have contributed to mould our national type. We view the country from a standpoint outside it, and some of us at least are a generation or two removed from the parent stock. We are interested spectators, indeed, but we may claim to be not unduly partial to the land of our fathers; nor ought we to be charged with undue self-complacency, when we find so much to commend in Scotland and its people.

We have to look for the main source of the characteristics of the Scottish race in the peculiarities of their religious history, Something has to be credited, no doubt, to the race qualities of the people. In them there was a blending of Saxon and Celt, of Briton and Fleming,—producing a type which inherited the best qualities of them all. The religious element brought to bear on them had, therefore, a fine foundation on which to build.

We have seen that the whole course of instruction and discipline through which the people of Israel were brought was designed and calculated to beget a belief in the personality of God, and a clear apprehension of His active interference in the affairs of both Earth and Heaven. Scotland more than any country of modern times, except Geneva perhaps, endeavoured to realize a corresponding relation to the Christian's God. It also entered into covenant with God in Christ, at a formative stage in the development of the modern Scottish people. The action of the majority in adopting the principles they did, and imposing them upon others, has been often severely criticised and sometimes loudly condemned; but whatever we, from our different experience and circumstances, may think of those proceedings, we must at least admit that they left a profound impression upon the national character. On the whole the Covenanter's principles made for righteousness. Knox was a far-sighted statesman as well as a religious reformer; and when he planted parish churches at convenient intervals throughout the country, where they had not previously been in existence, and erected a school in every parish, he took the steps which helped more than anything else to make the Scottish type of character of to-day. The great body of the people were taught to read, and the book put into their hands, as a text book, was the Bible. They then acquired a knowledge of the contents of that blessed book; and on Sundays they were instructed on the spiritual bearings of what they read in the school on week days. Add to this that, from the days of the covenant onwards, they were instructed in the contents of the Westminster Assembly's shorter catechism, and you will be in a position to estimate the forces which contributed to the formation of the Scottish national character. When it was stated that this compendium of religious teaching was designed for children and those of weaker capacity, we may imagine what was expected of the matured minds of the people of that generation. The result was that everybody grew up to be a theologian. The common people could discuss the most obtruse points in Divinity; and, indeed, the ordinary topics of conversation in social life came to be largely theological. And thus a stalwart religious character grew up in Scotland. Especially did religious matters dominate the people's life, during the fervid period when they espoused, first, the National Covenant, and, afterwards, the Solemn League and Covenant. They were as fully penetrated with the religious sentiment, as the Hebrew race was in the devoutest period of its history. The State and its concerns were of less importance than the Church and its interests. A closer alliance existed between Church and State than was ever approximated by the most favourable concordat, agreed upon between the papacy and a civil government. Spiritual matters were declared to be of the first importance; and although there was afterwards a relaxation of the rigours of the Covenant never did the spiritual interests of the nation sink so low relatively to their civil affairs, as in most countries; so that when the union between England and Scotland was effected early in the last century, the very foremost of the terms of the compact insisted upon the continuance of the special cherished religious principles of the Scottish nation. The persecutions which they had to undergo from the sovereigns of their own race, but now reigning over England as well as Scotland, instead of lessening their attachment to their religious ideas, rather greatly deepened it. The trials they had to endure for the continued possession of the ordinances of religion, in a form that commended itself to their judgment and conscience, made their views doubly precious to them. And though many may think that the alliance between Church and State, having served its day, may now be out of date, no one need wonder that the Scottish people as a whole should cherish the time hallowed arrangement, and especially that they should resent the threatened disruption of the long existing order of things, through the help and co-operation of a people of an alien faith and race. They had to contend even unto death for the situation as it is now; and they are not likely to surrender it without a struggle. Their religious rights they have always deemed of paramount importance, and this has been the chief factor in the production of the Scottish national character. They have been a God-fearing people, first of all, and that fact has stamped upon them their peculiar type.

But in addition to the predominance assigned to religious affairs in the nation's history for three centuries, there was a special feature in their belief that was probably not without its influence in making them the people they are to-day. The late Mr. Froude cannot be charged with any prepossession in favour of that system of doctrine which has obtained in Scotland since the days of Knox, yet he bore this testimony to it, in his renowned rectorial address at St. Andrews, in 1871—that it has “borne ever an inflexible front to illusion and mendacity, and has preferred rather to be ground to powder like flint than to bend before violence or melt under enervating temptation.” It represented God as “the actual living ruler of real every day life,”—as an “unsleeping, inflexible, all ordering just power; and this power governs the world by laws which can be seen in their effects.” It declares that “men will be tried by the moral law before a perfectly just judge, and that no subterfuges will avail,” and therefore it had a tremendous influence upon human conduct. It further taught that man was in the hands of God, like clay in the hands of a potter, and that the Divine Being interested himself in each individual whom He called, overcoming man's baser tendencies by the omnipotence of His Grace. It made little of man but much of God; and yet the thought that God cared for him and was arrayed on his side made him ten times a man, paradoxical as it may seem. It is not by flattering men, by puffing them up with a conceit of their own greatness, that you make heroes of them, but by taking them out of themselves and filling them with enthusiasm for some patriotic or religious object beyond their own immediate interests. And so, Mr. Froude remarked, “where we find a heroic life appearing as the uniform fruit of a particular mode of opinion, it is childish to argue, in the face of fact, that the result ought to have been different.” Facts are God's logic, however much they may seem out of joint with man's limping, though often pre-tentious logic. Robertson, of Brighton, speaking of the effect produced on the mind by reading Edwards on the "Freedom of the Will" quoted Sir James MacIntosh as to the robustness of nature resulting from such studies—they imported iron particles into the blood." And what Calvinism did for Scotland, the kindred Puritan leaven did for New England—that portion of the great neighbouring Republic which has given a character to the whole.

Brethren, these are the things that made the Scotland of the past, and that have moulded the Scottish type of character; and now, in conclusion, what lessons do we learn from this review of the record which our fatherland has made for itself, and of the sources of its strength, though in itself so small and poor a country?

Well, with that adaptability by which the national character can easily adjust itself to its surroundings, while cherishing earnestly the memories of the old land, let us be loyal and true to the land of our adoption, and bring to it what is suitable of those elements which contributed to Scotland's greatness, and graft them on to our Canadian institutions, if we may. The most enthusiastic Scot can scarcely hope ever to see in Canada an Established Church, or a National Covenant of the Presbyterian type. But if he cannot get his fellow-citizens to unite in a symbol of national devotion to God, there is nothing to hinder his entering into a covenant with God, on his own account; and, if we as individuals have the fear of God continually before our eyes, we shall not be found wanting in our duty to the new land to which we have come—making common cause with all the races that go to make up the population of our fair Dominion.

Let us cherish the same love of learning and liberty that animated our fathers and be ready if need be, to make sacrifices for them. Let us keep the rights of conscience sacred and extend the same rights to others. So shall we be fitted to act well our part as citizens of this great Dominion. And when I say to those still cherishing the belief of their fathers, not to be in a hurry to lay it aside, I hope I shall not be thought to take undue advantage of the position to which your kind partiality has raised me today; for I give this advice, not as a theologian or as the champion of any particular creed, but as an historian. And as even those who may have outgrown, as they think their fathers' faith, owe far more to it than they probably are aware of; even they will, I am sure, join me in saying that a system of doctrine which contributed to make Scotchmen what they are in their own country, may at least claim respectful consideration in Canada. And its avowed friends may be pardoned in even enthusiastically applying to their cherished institutions the pathetic longings of the Hebrew exile; "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if I remember thee not; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

Moved by Mr. A. F. Riddell, and seconded by Mr. Jno. Ogilvy, that the Caledonian Society be hereby tendered a cordial vote of thanks for its generous contribution. Carried.

The following report was subsequently read by the Convener of the Committee appointed to report on deceased members for the past year :

Our Society has had, during the year just past, to mourn the loss of an unusually large number of members by death. No fewer than nine gentlemen, all prominent and esteemed citizens, have gone over to the great majority since St. Andrew's Day 1893. 1. Duncan McIntyre, who filled the presidential chair in the years 1891-92 and 1892-93, and ever took the warmest interest in all the life and work of the Society, especially in the acquisition of the present extensive and commodious St. Andrew's Home. Mr. McIntyre rendered yeoman service and placed our Society under a deep debt of gratitude for his energetic activity. 2. John McLennan, one of Glengarry's most able and respected sons ; his fellow-countrymen conferred on him their high honour by electing him as their representative to the Dominion Parliament. A well-read and gifted man, Mr. McLennan's death is a great loss to our young Canada. 3. Alexander Smith, a worthy and exemplary Scotsman. 4. J. G. Sidey, the last survivor of a fine Scottish family, one of whom attained to eminence both as a physician and as a man of letters in the city of Edinburgh. The brothers Sidey, as we knew them, were genuine Scotsmen and loyal members of this Society. 5. James Burnett, a popular and successful Fife-man, and always a liberal friend to this Society. 6. J. Murray Smith, local manager of the Bank of Toronto. A friend to and a helper in good work, Mr. Smith's death has created a blank in our city's life, which will not be easily filled. Consistent in Christian character and unassuming in his piety, our departed brother was one of the excellent of the earth. 7. Henry Morgan. — For fifty years the trusted, successful and honourable merchant, Henry Morgan died in the cordial esteem of his fellowmen and did not leave a single foe behind him. 8. Thomas Davidson,—a man of sterling character and reputation, and an office-bearer in Crescent Street Church. 9. Hector Buie,—a successful teacher of whom many pupils speak with much respect.

These were all worthy Scots who did much to maintain in Montreal the credit of our national name, and who, though dead, will yet speak to all who knew them well. Their memories will ever be dear to St. Andrew's Society, which mourns their loss.

The Society desires to tender to the friends and relatives of the deceased its heartfelt sympathy with them in their bereavement.

J. EDGAR HILL,
Convener.

Moved by Mr. Robt. Mackay, and seconded by Mr. R. M. Esdaile, that the Report of the Committee on deceased members be adopted. Carried.

Moved by Mr. R. M. Esdaile, and seconded by Mr. A. F. Riddell, that a vote of thanks is hereby tendered to the Telegraph Companies, viz. : The Great North Western and Can. Pac. Telegraph Cos. for their kindness in transmitting the Society's messages gratis, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Messrs. Powell and Hosmer, representing the G. N. W. and Can. Pac. Cos.

Moved by Mr. Jas. Tasker, and seconded by Mr. A. F. Riddell, that a hearty vote of thanks is hereby tendered the Rev. J. Edgar Hill for his kindness in sending the Society congratulatory messages and his report on the deceased members.

The Treasurer reported that the floating debt of the Society, amounting to $530.22, as per Treasurer's statement for year ending 31st October last, has been extinguished through kind contributions from the following members of the Society :—Hon. Sir D. A. Smith, Messrs. Robert Mackay, W. W. Ogilvie, Hugh Paton, John Cassils and James Ross,

And on motion of Mr. R. M. Esdaile, seconded by Mr. Jas. Tasker, it was resolved that the thanks of the Society be tendered to these gentlemen for their liberal contributions.

The meeting then adjourned.

GRAND BALL AT THE WINDSOR.

ST. ANDREW'S SOCIETY "GIE ALL THE FOES OF SCOTLAND'S WEAL A TWEL' MONTHS TOOTHACHE."

For blithe we'll be a',
As long as we hae breath to draw
And dance till we be like to fa',
The reel o' Tullochgorum.

Fair fu' your honest sonsie face,
Great Chieftain o' the puddin' race!
Aboon them a' ye take your place.
Paunch, tripe, or thairein,
Weel are ye worthy of a grace,
As lang's my arm.

The "whirligig of time" brings many changes, but the dear old Scotch music and the good old Scotch dances are ever in the hearts of the people, and from one generation to another are handed down. The soul-stirring lilt or reels and strathspey are irresistible, they get into one's blood and make one's very toes tingle. The St. Andrew's ball is dear alike to the debutante and the matron; it is as much for one as the other, and long may it flourish as a regular institution, and should there ever be a discussion as to the individual merits of a dinner or a dance, may there always be a dancing elder in the council with the courage of his opinions to throw in his weight for terpsichore.

Last night the Society scored another success. There were quite enough present to make dancing enjoyable without crowding, and the floor and music were all that could be desired.

THE DECORATIONS

Were quite different from last year, both in Beullac's and Campbell's departments. The flowers were grouped very effectively in mounds, both in the ballroom, in the vestibule and upstairs in the passage ways. In the halls there were festoonings of smilax and asparagus round the gasaliers and from one to the other. Under the gasaliers were placed balloons with flowers and plants. Each mantle was festooned with smilax and bore plants of growing heather, the first time they have had such a decoration. Palms, callas and chrysanthemums were used plentifully through the corridors to the ballroom. Evergreens were used for the screen on the staircase and around the doors. The dais and band stand were bowers of green and white, and on the windows were grouped pots of flowering plants. Trophies of small flags, the Union Jack, the Scotch and the Dominion, were used throughout the corridors with bunting and the St. Andrew's Society shields. These shields, large and small, were profusely used in the dancing hall. This shield has the St. Andrew's Cross in silver on a pale blue ground, with the Society's initials on it. Scotch flags in trophies and alone were also in requisition; in fact lions rampant, couchant, and every other kind were out in full force. The Scotch lion is a very combative-looking animal.

On the left, on entering the hall, the first large shield was that of Prince Edward Island, with its motto, "Parva sub Nigenti"; a large one of the Dominion was over the orchestra. New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, with a lovely silver codfish on a blue satin sea, and the City coat-of-arms follow in succession, all the spaces between filled with small and large society shields, banners and trophies, all culminating at the head of the room, where were beautifully grouped four large Scotch flags and the Royal standard surmounted with the British coat-of-arms; at the base the Scotch coat-of-arms, with the thistle pushing its way out and the legends "In Defence" and "Nemo me impune lacesset," typical down to the ground of "A man's a man, for a' that," and "What he has he'll keep, and what he hasn't got he'll fight for." On each side of this centre were ancient Roman ensigns very handsomely mounted. Below these again were the ancient shields of the Society. Then came the Province of Quebec coat-of-arms, "Je me souviens," and so on with the rest of the provinces, each in succession, broken by the throne, which was draped in velvet embroidered in gold, and more flags. Above the dais was again the Royal coat-of-arms, and at the base the Scotch. The centre of the gallery held the shield of the Fifth Royal Scots.

Around the gallery was placed a handsome red velvet lambrequin, embroidered with golden Scotch lions and trimmed with heavy bullion fringe and tassels, the first time this decoration has been used. Above this was a red and white bunting.

The corridors presented a brilliant sight with the many beautiful women in their fresh ball gowns, charming young débutantes and pretty brides. The kilts and other uniforms added their quota to the gay scene. Her Excellency was announced by the skirl of the bagpipes, and shortly after half-past nine the procession was formed for the dancing room, Her Excellency, who had as train-bearer her little son, the Hon. Archie Gordon, heading it with the president, Mr. Mackay. The opening reel was danced and then the lancers, the sets of honor being as follows :

Her Excellency, Mr. Robert Mackay, President of the Society.
Mrs. Esdaile, Mr. J. A. Cantlie.

The quadrille of honor was danced by :

Her Excellency, Major-General Montgomery Moore.
His Worship the Mayor, Mrs. Mackay.
Mr. Selater, Miss Villeneuve.
Mr. Robert Mackay, Madame David.

After this the dancing was kept up with much spirit until supper, and after that the dancing was renewed and continued until three o'clock.

REPORT UPON MEMBERSHIP OF
ST. ANDREW'S SOCIETY, MONTREAL,

ON 6TH DECEMBER, 1894

WITH

ALPHABETICAL LISTS OF LIFE AND ORDINARY MEMBERS AT THAT DATE.

MONTREAL, 15th January, 1895.

ROBERT MACKAY, ESQ.,

President, St. Andrew's Society, Montreal:

DEAR SIR,—At the adjourned annual meeting of the Society held at the St. Andrew's Home on the evening of Thursday, 6th December, 1894, a special Committee consisting of Messrs. John McDonald, A. F. Riddell, Robert Adair and Donald Campbell, was appointed for the purpose of rendering a list of the members of the Society on that date.

The Committee of which I was chosen Convener has now completed its duties, having based the revision of the previous lists upon a list of members formally adopted on the 5th May, 1881, to which they added all the names of new members admitted since, striking out all the names of those who either by death, resignation from membership, or other causes, had ceased to be members.

The annexed alphabetical lists show the membership on the 6th December, 1894, to have been a total of 368.

Composed of Life Members	21
“ Ordinary Members	347
Total	368

The Committee think it advisable to state that, while they believe these lists to be exact and accurate, it is possible that errors may exist; and should such prove to be the case, any members of the Society discovering such errors will greatly oblige by communicating to that effect with the Society's Secretary, Mr. Robert Adair.

The whole respectfully submitted.

JOHN McDONALD,
Convener.
