J. O'B

Buddenham, I was sure, was not waiting on the steps this morning, for I was certain the poor fellow had received a certain lecture the previous night; he looked so contrite and so very grieved to his wife during breakfast. Scarcely had the door closed behind Mary, when I heard Mr. Dalton leave his parlour and go out. My curiosity was roused. I knew that before Mary came, he always went up the street in his business, whatever it might be. Now Mary always went down the street; yet this morning he went down the street at some distance from her, to his shop, and with an air entirely unconscious that she was before him put did I know well enough that Miss Grant was the sole cause of his going down the street instead of up.

Mr. Dalton was a very mysterious man. His keen blue eyes saw everything, but they never told any secret. He looked at you, and you for ever that he was reading your secret thoughts. But it was vain to think of obfuscating even thinking of the workings of his mind in his dark impenetrable face. I liked the man, too. There was something fascinating in his manner, something that pleased in the tone of his voice, and I felt inclined to trust him, and was glad that he took no interest in Miss Grant. I had done that would do her no harm.

So unanswerably to herself, Miss Grant was the observer of all my boudoirs. All passing in and out quietly, spoken to no one, thinking herself all unobserved, day after day, week after week passed on.

I visited her occasionally in her room, for I wished to see that she was comfortable; and my heart yearned towards her, she seemed so lonely, so friendless, and yet lost her face, whatever was, and I knew it, was one of her pleasures—mostly and patiently. I sent her little dainties occasionally from the table. I knew not where she got her meals, she never was at home at the dinner hour, but came home directly after, and was busy all the afternoon and until late at night with her work. I knew this because I sometimes went in her room in the afternoon, and I noted her up late at night more than once, and always saw the gleam of her lamp under her chamber door.

I do not, however, was the saying about her, I was sure her heart was pure and true. I asked her no questions—for men did not fully confide in her—but I had my secret, I was willing to respect it, and trust her none the less. I never asked if her heart ached, but if she looked wavy I would send Magpies up with a cup of tea and some light food. I never asked her if she did not feel weary of those dreams pen never hinted that she sat up late at night but I often sent her a nice warm breakfast in the morning when I saw she was up. And soon I knew she began to trust me to her heart, and be ours. I was her friend; for her eyes would brighten when I entered her room, and she would tenderly press my hand.

So I was contented to wait till in its own good time, the mystery, whatever it was, should be cleared up. Meanwhile, matters went on in their common, every day course.

One afternoon, on going up into Mary's room, she brought me a piece of very rich silk, asking me what I thought of it.

"It is very handsome," I replied, surprised at the same time, for I thought it beyond her means to purchase anything so expensive.

"A boy gave it to me with this note, as I came in," said she, at the same time handing me a dainty little billet, which ran somewhat like this:

"Will Miss Grant accept this token of the respect and affection of one much interested in her, and who ardently desires a more intimate acquaintance?"

"Was not it by Miss Stephens? If I only knew so that I could return it?"

"You wish not keep it then?" said I.

"Certainly not; I have no use, no desire for anything so rich; and it is impossible for me to accept a gift from an unknown person."

"I will take it," said I; "if you wish it returned, it shall be done, and you need give yourself no further uneasiness."

So I took the silk folded it in paper, and sent it to the store of Mr. Frederick Augustus Brown with a message which said—

"That Miss Grant concluded there must have been some mistake, and had taken the liberty to return the package."

(Conclusion in our next.)

SEPOYS VOLUNTEERING FOR CHINA.—A long-expected and long-sought-for arrangement has now been made for the new light infantry contingent of the Sepoys. Acting under secret instructions from Government, it is supposed Sir G. Umney assembled the disbanded regiments on Monday last, and in an able and appropriate address pointed out to them a sure way of regaining their faded character, by volunteering for China. He did not require any reply on the spot, but recommended the men to think over it, and then be prepared with an answer.

From the 2nd grenadiers and the 43d light infantry no response has been received; but, on the following Thursday about 200 of the 70th volunteers (unconditionally), and the whole regiment on the sole condition that their officers and colours might accompany them. That this reasonable condition will be complied with there is little reason to doubt, and we may shortly witness the anomaly of our soldiers fighting alongside of Hindostanies at Canton, whilst they are pursuing destruction their brethren in Delli and in Oude. It will be recalled that the 70th is the same regiment which in a former occasion volunteered to march against Delli. The conduct of the 70th, who made the same offer, and took the first favourable opportunity to hinder their officers, alone prevent the despatch of the 70th to the north-west long ago.

ORIGIN OF BETWEEN HINDOOS AND MAHODANAS.—An officer writing from Nyaie Tal, says—since I wrote yesterday, news has come that the Hindoos have risen against the Mahomedans, and seized Mahrashad and the guns there, and that they have also split, and are ready to go at one another's throats at Barcily. The Mahomedans have been oppressing the Hindoos terribly, and the war has turned—The Hindoos are numerous enough to win the day. They are stanch, and are also well affected to us (at least in this neighbourhood) and have been sending us constant messengers to come back again, which we should have done if we had had any force at all—I mean over 2,000,000 of men, and 200 or 300 cavalry, to go with the Cheekas and us. The Hindoos really seem to mean fighting now. This is the best news we have heard for a long time. The Indian spirit will prevail over the British—into Delli, etc., in all probability, and whence to us. Hindoo or Mahomedan, we ought to win. It makes me sick. Nyaie Tal quite scared from attack, for some time to come at any rate. I have sent a copy of this letter to my mother.

ONE WEEK INTERVIEW FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

INDIA.

GENERAL PACHA HAS BEEN APPOINTED GRAND VIZIER.—Blas Pachia, Minister of War, Nachit Pachia, to the Imperial Guard, and other officials of the Army.—The Duke of Oporto, Duke of the Kingdom of Portugal, spoke so highly of the conduct of Pachia as to regard that the question of the Union has gone so far, because serious complications must arise between Austria and Russia on the subject.

SUPREME COURT.

The Court of Oyer and Terminer was opened on Tuesday, His Honour Judge Ritchie presiding in the room of Judge Parker disengaged.

In his charge to the Grand Jury he learned Judge, who manifested deep feeling on the occasion, said that they had come together to administer criminal justice, and on this occasion their duties would be of an unusually painful character. Wiltshire had been the pride and the boast of this country, that it enjoyed comparatively a happy exemption from all the more enormous crimes; that the influence of the law was still and its protection extended to all, and that whether a man was rich or poor, lived in the heart of a city or the most remote and unpeopled district, he was under the protection of the law, safe—himself, his family, and his property. But within a few days a tragedy, almost unparalleled in the annals of crime, had been enacted in our midst, and six human beings had been hurried into eternity by the hands they were committed. He stated that from the talk between them, he learnt that Breen killed Mr. McKenzie with an axe, by striking him four times on the head—but he afterwards murdered Mrs. McKenzie, and then destroyed the children, who were crying bitterly at the time, on seeing their parents destroyed. The body of Mr. McKenzie was afterwards placed in the chimney corner, and Slavin ran across the house, collecting the money and all the valuable articles to be found, while his son Patrick held the candle, and that after having gathered up all the booty, they set fire to the house and descended.

The wife of Slavin, who was again examined on Thursday evening, after the revolting scene had been witnessed, denied all knowledge of the offence, and there was no doubt that four other children had shared their fate. Whatever the original purpose and intention of the parties who caused their death was, even if they had gone there to rob without meaning murder, it was evident that a foul and fatal murder had been committed, and that the murderer was also guilty of the great crimes of burglary and arson, so that in this one case the parties were charged with three of the most serious offences known to the law.

On reading the depositions in this case it appeared that Robert M. McKenzie, his wife Eliza, and one child had certainly so perished, and there was no doubt that four other children had shared their fate.

Whatever the parties may be, the law is clear, and that the murderer was also guilty of the great crimes of burglary and arson, so that in this one case the parties were charged with three of the most serious offences known to the law.

The nomination of Redshill Pachia as Grand Vizier is hailed as a triumph for the movements of the Patriotic party, and it is said more definitely that the Prince will be supported in his policy by England and Austria.

A French despatch says that the Stock Exchange Money was in good supply at $5 to 1 1/2 per cent. on Government securities, and at the Bank and discount market there was an absence of pressure.

The Times of Liverpool, dated Wednesday, October 25, 1857, is opposed by the Russian propositions relative to arrangements of frontier.

LATE.

By telegraph from Liverpool, London Saturday Morning.—The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says that the overthrow of the Turkish Cabinet had long been foreseen, the late minister having found his financial difficulties beyond its strength.

The Consul at Leghorn, Tuscany, has advised to Persia a division of an army of Caucasians to assist in the pacification of Khorasan.

A serious clash had taken place at Frankfort between soldiers of different corps. It is thought that several regiments may be removed to the frontier of France, and the remainder of the forces of the Empire to the frontier of Italy.

Vice-Admiral Sir R. Beaufort, Naval Lord of the Admiralty, will be succeeded by the Earl of Dartmouth.

THE ARAGO FROM SOUTHAMPTON, TO DAY.

Nothing later. The steamer Arago arrived at Southampton on the 22d with a heavy portion of the last Indian mail and numerous passengers who had made their passage from the 25th. The Indians arrived at Southampton in the 26th.

GENERAL BRITAIN.

Financial matters are still the most interesting portion of the news. To London, on Wednesday, the 21st, the funds showed diminished firmness, as a slight advance over Tuesday's rates on the Stock Exchange. Money was in good supply at 5 to 1 1/2 per cent. on Government securities, and at the Bank and discount market there was an absence of pressure.
