For myself a particular form of address was reserved. Lord Brougham, when he heard that Lord Campbell was writing the lives of the Chancellors, remarked "That he had added a new terror to death." The Tichborne trial has added a new terror to those who, no longer possessing sylphlike proportions, have occasion to run the gauntlet of a London crowd.

Another Claimant.

My kind friends on the other side of the water will remember that there is about me a certain manly dignity of figure, and will consequently not be surprised that as soon as my cab came to a stand still and I was observed reclining in it placidly smoking my postprandial cigar, I was hailed with shouts of "Hallo! here is Sir Roger;" that some of them "wished me luck" and others asked me where I had left the "sealed packet; that some inquired whether I was on my way to Wapping, and that others wished to know at what price per pound I was now selling mutton; in fact that I had to undergo a whole running fire of char, which I bore with that sweet equanimity which is a part of my nature, occasionally hurling a few Parthian shots after my assailants.

THE GUILDHALL has been the scene of events of more or has been the scene of events of more or less importance in English history, and nearly two hundred years ago it seems to have acquired that reputation for gastronomical indulgence for which it is principally known in the present day. For in October, 1653, quaint, gallant, gossiping old Pepys records in his diary: "To Guildhall, and up and down to see the tables, where under every salt there was a bill of fare, and at the end of the table the person proper for the table. I sat at a bill of fare, and at the end of the table the person proper for the table. I sat at the Merchant Strangers' table, where were ten good dishes to a mess, with plenty of wine of all sorts." The side door through which I entered is immediately under the gallery, on the other side of which are placed the enormous wooden figures of the giants Gog and Magog, so that I had a splendid view of the hall from end to end, and the sight was certainly magnificent. The old hall was blazing with gas, covered with admirably executed decoring; the civic functionaries, in their gold chains and gowns, the stewards, to whom the arrangement of the dances is confided (for dancing is a part of the evening's programme, and yonder magnificent gilt throne, raised on a high velvet dais, is the spot from which the Shah is to watch the Terpsichorean evolutions), with their wands of office in their hands, make the necessary preparations, and an ever increasing, gayly dressed, laughing, chattering, whispering, perfumed crowd goes surging to and fro through the old hall. Looking at the beauty of the women and the highbred appearance of the men you would scarcely imagine that these are, comparatively speaking, the lower orders, of those invited, for the creme de lacreme is gathering together, not here, but in the library, where it will await the Shah's arrival.

 THE LIBRARY. THE LIBRARY.

Yes, this is unquestionably the place for observation within the whole building. Here the prettlest women are gathered together, all seated in an unbroken line. Here, standing about among them, and whispering pleasant nothings, are men whose name and fame are world wide. On another occasion one might like to poke about in the library itself, to take down some of the rare books, to look through the rare collection of early printed plays and pageants connected with the city; to examine in its appropriate glass case Shakespeare's own signature attached to a deed of conveyance, bought at a public sale by the Corporation of London; but at present we have enough to do in looking at what Lady Mary Wortley Montague called "the humans" and watching their movements. The short stout individual who stands at the door and roars forth in sonorous tones the name and title of each incoming visitor, is Mr. Hawker,

The genial looking man, with a blazing red beard which spreads fan like over his chest, hiding everything between his nose and the top button of his waistcoat, is Earl Spencer, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. What can he have to say to the big, heavy man with whom he is in converse?—the man with the big Mongolian skull; the half closed, sleepy eye; the sallow cheeks; the coarse, mean, common features—what can there be in common between them? One cannot imagine; for Lord Spencer is a gentleman, and his interlocutor is—Mr. Ayrton. Look now THE OPPORTUNITY FOR THE CROWD, which, ten deep, lined the sidewalks, to terlocutor is—Mr. Ayrton. Look now at another tall and portly gentleman, bending, with somewhat affected grace, over the chair of the lady with whom he is conversing, and mark him well, for he is a character in English sociel life. Not Mr. Surrogate Hutchings himself has more ambrosial curls, not Mr. A. T. Stewart or Commodore Vanderbilt has much more money, for this is Earl Dudley, who has never taken any part in political life or in any of the stirring questions of the day, who is notable for his eccentricity, his wealth and the beauty of his wife.

the reception of the evidence that has effectually exploded them, is the latest illustration of this feature of Canadian journalism. The pertinacity with which the truth of the charges was asserted before a tittle of evidence had been produced, the "hip, hip hurrah" with which the Allan letters, in not one Government in the face of a mass of evidence every particle of which refutes soft, shaven face, a stealthy glance and a general Jesuitical aspect, and near him, a tall, pompous, bald-headed person, "empty and fine," as Mr. Browning has it—We are not sure whether the conductors of the journals really imagine that whether they know they are laughed at, and, as the power of exciting laughter is one of the most profitable accomplishments of the age continue the farce with an eye to profits. Our Railway Scandal and the American Press.

Our Railway Scandal and the American Press.

The ignorant commentaries of the United States press on the Pacific Railway Scandal are disgraceful to journalism. They are, in every instance that has come to our knowledge, superficial, flippant and misleading. The articles show that they have been written without any previous knowledge of Canadian affairs, and without any study of the question treated. Every writer—even editorial writers of the leading New York and Boston papers that claim to lead the world in journalistic enterprise—has evidently based his article on some partisan statement. In no paper is a court fool.

In no paper is there the slightest evidence of a study of the subject and a desire to treat it on its merits. The chief idea running through all of them is joy at the discovery of a Canadian Credit Mobilier, as Allan's Company is termed. Railway jobbers "assisting" their friends to sea.'s in Parliament, and "placing stock where it would do most good," have all been discovered, and our friends are cality on the continent is not confined to the Republic. They are flattered at our imitation of their style, as they were flattered at our imitation of their style, as they were flattered at the promptitude with which Parliament imitated Congress in voting its members an increase of pay last session. We are sorry to see the flippanoy and ignorance with which the great journals discuss this question of ours. It seems to us to be of import ance enough to be treated sensibly and conscienriously, even by New York dallies.

A City of Washington passenger says he frequently warned the chief officer that he was running to far too the northward and advised running 100 miles further South, but the advice was disregarded, though the 2nd officer coincided in it. No sight was taken for seven days notwithstanding the vessel was going through the heavy fog at the rate of 12 or 13 knots an hour. Had she struck at night she would have gone down, or had she gone to the right or left, 200 yards, she would have asneed. The saloon passengers were mostly chattering or playing cards, when, at 1.30 p. m., Saturday, the ship went full speed on Gull Rock. She gave two slight bumps, her. No one had the slightest idea where the ship was. After the lapse of half an hour of terrible confusion the cannon dring, fog horns blowing and women and childran shricking, he heard a human voice. A death-like slience followed and soon two brave men, Cornelius Swanburg and Wm. Ferguson, who had put out from shore in a small boat, climbed up the side of the ship. The latter had risen barking immediately commenced under their guidance, with three of the ship's boats, the 2d officer standing at the gampaway of the stern-post and rudder contained, arousing fears least the ship would break in two. The steerage passengers remained remarkably quiet and no attempt to rush was made. Some of the women displayed great presence or mind and heroism, sitting quietiy till called upon to disembark. A young Irish girl came and asked the narrator whether she should ever see Castle Garden at all On receiving an affirmative reply, she wrapped an Ulster coat round her, gave him a kiss, and descended to the small boat. The ladies were received into the house of Mrs. Harding and Mrs. Lewis, who, with their daughters, cared for them like ministering angels.

Soon many of the poor emigrants were fast asleep lying about in the barns on the beach, under the banks and big rocks.

The cabin passengers raised a subscription of $200 for the heroes, Swanburg and Ferguson, and more will probably be forthcoming. Stores of blankets, beef, and biscuit, were landed all day Sunday, and on Monday the ship was found to lie in fifteen feet of water, apparently as solid as the rock she rested on.

Had she backed off on first striking she would probably have snnk in five minutes. Ten minutes after striking she began to fill and on Monday had 15 feet of water in her hold.

When the narrator left the people were showering every attention upon the rescued passengers, and there were plenty of provisions for all, for two days to come.

He closes his narrative by comparing the navigation of the City of Washington to a man galloping at breakneck speed through the darkness down a turnpike, totally regardless and indifferent whether any gates were ahead or not. Ayers Sarsaparilla.

R PURIFYING THE BLOOD, nothing has ever been offered which can compare with this Extract of Sarsaparilla. It is found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the humors that rankle in the system at this season of the year. Many complaints have their origin in the spring, and in the causes above mentioned, for which no better remedy has ever been devised. By its use multitudes can spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerous sores, through which the system strives to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, or sorest cleanse it when you find it is obstracted and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people en Joy better health, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy, and all is well; but with this pabulum of life disordered, there can be no lasting health. Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO.
