STRIKE!!

MACAULAY A SURE WINNER

If ever a list of candidates for public office had a right to a feeling of absolute confidence of success, that feeling is justified on the part of Henry C. Macaulay and the gentlemen who are associated with him on the amalgamated Citizens' and People's party ticket.

A careful canvass of the voters who had previously pledged their support to Chas. Macdonald has been made and it has been found that no less than 80 per cent. of Mr. Macdonald's total strength is in line for Mr. Macaulay and the combined ticket. With this added to the strength which Mr. Macaulay already possessed in the Citizen's party, he will go to the polls tomorrow with sufficient votes to give him and the balance of the ticket as well an overwhelming victory.

The time for argument and canvassing has gone by and it now remains only to see that the voters who are favorable to the amalgamated ticket are at the polls as early in the day as possible and that every one of them votes. If these conditions are observed every man on the ticket is assured of election.

Dawson needs tomorrow the vote of every man who wishes to see the newly organized municipal government conducted on broad lines with proper observance of economy and efficiency in the various departments.

The Kid committee is making one last desperate fight for existence and must not only be defeated but defeated by such a large majority that the wire-pullers, agitators and professional politicians in their ranks will be driven into the oblivion in which they rightly belong. For the safety of the community, these men must be kept from securing a hold upon the positions of trust within the gift of the municipality. With the Kid committee in control of affairs—and the success of the elective ticket means nothing less—Dawson may well tremble for the future. The real power in that organization is scarcely represented in their ticket. It is the powers behind the throne who must be compensated if Dr. Thompson is elected, and their control over the candidates is undoubted.

Dawson expects that every man will do his full duty tomorrow to the end that good government may be guaranteed to the city and Tammanyism and rowdiness be rebuked, by an overwhelming victory for Mr. Macaulay and every candidate who is associated on the ticket with him.

BUT LITTLE BUSINESS

Territorial Court is Unusually Quiet This Week.

The first week in the territorial court since the conclusion of the long vacation has resulted so far in accomplishing but little in the way of the final adjudication of pending litigation. Monday was chamber day and yesterday upon the calendar being read it was found that in most of the cases down on the peremptory list the attending counsel were not ready to proceed and numerous adjustments were taken by consent.
There is no court today and it is doubtful if there will be any further session this week. The following dispositions were made of the cases on this week's list:

- Brennan vs. Smith was settled out of court.
- Howe vs. Greenleaf, Levas vs.
Arnew, and McKay vs. Sullivan, all stand over for one week.
- Edwards vs. Backe, McGrath vs.
Backe, and Campbell vs. Phyllis, were adjourned by consent.
- In Whitlaw vs. Simpson, Mountain vs. Simpson, and Webster vs. Simpson, judgment was given in each of the three cases according to the prayer of the complaint. The cases are for wages earned in 1899 on a Gold Run claim which was being operated by Dr. Simpson, formerly a resident of Dawson.
- Nida vs. Stewart was adjourned.

THE TICKETS.

The qualified electors of Dawson will go to the polls tomorrow for the purpose of selecting a mayor and six aldermen who will be charged with the duty of organizing the new town government, under the provisions of the incorporation charter.

The merits of the two candidates have been thoroughly discussed in the press of the city during the past two weeks and their attitude upon the various questions of public concern is well understood.

Throughout the campaign the Nugget has championed the cause of Mr. Macaulay for the reason that with him and his associates on the ticket we feel perfectly convinced that the many interests of the city will be perfectly safe.

Enough votes are now pledged to Mr. Macaulay to give that gentleman a clear majority of 200. The only thing that remains to be done is to get the voters to the polls.

A REAL SOLDIER OF FORTUNE

Was Thomas Munster, Munstery Recently Deceased.

In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. Kagan, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise.

Such men are offered to the electors of Dawson on the ticket headed by Mr. Macaulay and that ticket will be placed at the head of the polls tomorrow by an overwhelming majority.

The disgraceful manner in which the ringleaders of the Kids tricked the people who assembled at the A. B. hall on Monday night merits all the condemnation it has received.

The issue in tomorrow's election is between good citizenship as represented in Mr. Macaulay and his associates on the amalgamated ticket, and Tammanyism in its worst form as represented in the influences which control the actions of Dr. Thompson.

It will not be necessary to unseat Dr. Thompson by resort to a court of law. He will be everlastingly snowed under at the polls.

Found the Pay Streak. J. C. Shafer, who took a lay on one of Kirkpatrick & Munroe's claims No. 30 above on Hunker, and who did not begin work until after the first of January, has put two holes to bedrock, in both of which he was so fortunate as to strike the pay-streak.

In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. Kagan, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise.

Such men are offered to the electors of Dawson on the ticket headed by Mr. Macaulay and that ticket will be placed at the head of the polls tomorrow by an overwhelming majority.

The disgraceful manner in which the ringleaders of the Kids tricked the people who assembled at the A. B. hall on Monday night merits all the condemnation it has received.

The issue in tomorrow's election is between good citizenship as represented in Mr. Macaulay and his associates on the amalgamated ticket, and Tammanyism in its worst form as represented in the influences which control the actions of Dr. Thompson.

It will not be necessary to unseat Dr. Thompson by resort to a court of law. He will be everlastingly snowed under at the polls.

Found the Pay Streak. J. C. Shafer, who took a lay on one of Kirkpatrick & Munroe's claims No. 30 above on Hunker, and who did not begin work until after the first of January, has put two holes to bedrock, in both of which he was so fortunate as to strike the pay-streak.

Story of the Magic Cards

At the house of Naroumov, a cavalry officer, the long winter night had been passed in gambling. At five in the morning breakfast was served to the weary players. The winners ate with relish, the losers, on the contrary, pushed back and sat brooding gloomily. Under the influence of the good wine, however, the conversation became general.

"Well, Sourine?" said the host inquiringly.

"Oh, I lost as usual. My luck is abominable. No matter how cool I keep, I never win."

"How is it, Herman, that you never touch a card?" remarked one of the men, addressing a young officer of the Engineering Corps. "Here you are with the rest of us at five o'clock in the morning, and you have neither played nor bet all night."

"Play interests me greatly," replied the person addressed, "but I hardly dare to sacrifice the necessities of life for uncertain superfluities."

"Herman is a German, therefore economical; that explains it," said Tomsy. "But the person I can't quite understand, the Countess Anna Fedorovna, the Countess Anna Fedorovna."

"Why?" inquired a chorus of voices.

"Can you understand why my grandmother never gambles?"

"I don't see anything very striking in the fact that a woman of eighty refuses to gamble," objected Naroumov.

"Have you never heard her story?"

"No."

"Well, then, listen to it. To begin with, sixty years ago my grandmother went to Paris, where she was all the fashion. People crowded each other in the streets to get a chance to see the 'Muscovite Venus,' as she was called. All the great ladies played faro, then. On one occasion, while playing with the Duke of Orleans, she lost an enormous sum. She told her husband of the debt, but he refused outright to pay it. Nothing could induce him to change his mind on the subject, and grandmother was at her wit's end. Finally she remembered a friend of hers, Count Saint-Germain. You must have heard of him, as many wonderful stories have been told about him. He is said to have discovered the elixir of life, the philosopher's stone, and many other equally marvelous things. He had money at his disposal, and my grandmother knew it. She sent him a note asking him to come to see her. He obeyed her summons and found her in great distress. She painted the cruelty of her husband in the darkest colors, and ended by telling the Count that she depended upon his friendship and generosity."

"I could lend you the money," replied the Count, after a moment of thoughtfulness, "but I know that you would not enjoy my money's return until you had returned it; it would only add to your embarrassment. There is another way of freeing yourself."

"But I have no money at all," insisted my grandmother.

"There is no need of money. Listen to me."

The Count then told her a secret which any of us would give a good deal to know.

The young gamblers were all attention. Tomsy lit his pipe, took a few whiffs, then continued:

"The next evening grandmother appeared at Versailles at the Queen's gaming-table. The Duke of Orleans was the dealer. Grandmother made some excuse for not having brought any money, and began to punt. She chose three cards in succession, again and again, winning every time, and was soon out of debt."

"A table," remarked Herman, "perhaps the cards were marked."

"I hardly think so," replied Tomsy, "with an air of importance."

"So you have a grandmother who knows three winning cards, and you haven't found out the magic secret."

"I must say, I have not. She had four sons, one of them being my father, all of whom she devoted to play; she never told the secret to one of them. But my uncle told me this much, on his word of honor: Tchaplitzky, who died in poverty after having squandered millions, lost at one time, at play, nearly three hundred thousand roubles. He was desperate and grandmother took pity on him. She told him the three cards, making him swear never to use them again. He returned to the game, staked fifty thousand roubles on each card, and came out ahead, after paying his debts."

"As day was dawning the party now broke up, each one draining his glass and taking his leave."

The Countess Anna Fedorovna was seated before her mirror in her dressing-room. Three women were assisting at her toilet. The old Countess no longer made the slightest pretensions to beauty, but she still clung to all the habits of her youth, and spent as much time at her toilet as she had done sixty years before. At the window sat a young girl, her ward, sat at her needle-work.

"Good-afternoon, grandmother," cried a young officer, who had just entered the room. "I have come to ask a favor of you."

"What, Pavel?"

"I want to be allowed to present one of my friends to you and to take you to the ball on Tuesday night."

"Take me to the ball and present me to me there."

"A few more remarks the officer you, was able to pay his gaming-debts."

An expression of interior agitation passed over the face of the old woman, then she relaxed into her former apathy.

"Will you tell me the names of the magic cards, or not?" asked Herman after a pause.

The young man then drew a pistol from his pocket, exclaiming: "You old witch, I'll force you to tell me!"

At the sight of the weapon the Countess gave a second sign of life. She threw back her head and put out her hands as if to protect herself, then they dropped and she sat motionless.

Herman grasped her arm roughly and was about to renew his threats, when he saw that she was dead!

Seated in her room, still in her ball-dress, Lisaveta gave herself up to her reflections. She had expected to find the young officer there, but she felt relieved to see that he was not. Strangely enough, that very night at the ball, Tomsy had rallied her about her preference for the young officer, assuring her that he knew more than she supposed he did.

"Oh, whom are you speaking?" she asked in alarm, fearing her adventure had been discovered.

"Oh, the remarkable man," was the reply: "His name is Herman."

Lisa made no reply.

"This Herman," continued Tomsy, "is a romantic character; he has the profile of a Napoleon and the heart of a Mephistopheles. It is said he has at least three crimes on his conscience. But how pale you are!"

"It is only a slight headache. But why do you talk to me of this Herman?"

"Because I believe he has serious intentions concerning you."

"Where has he seen me?"

"At church, perhaps, or on the street."

The conversation was interrupted at this point, to the great regret of the young girl. The words of Tomsy made a deep impression upon her, and she realized how imprudently she had acted. She was thinking of all this and a great deal more when the door of her apartment suddenly opened, and Herman stood before her. She drew back at sight of him, trembling violently.

"Where have you been?" she asked in a frightened whisper.

"In the bed-chamber of the Countess Anna Fedorovna," was the calm reply.

"By God! What are you saying?" cried the girl.

"Furthermore, I believe that I was the cause of her death."

The words of Tomsy flashed through Lisa's mind.

"Herman," she said, "tell me all. She listened with a feeling of terror and disgust. So those passionate letters, that audacious pursuit were not the result of tenderness and love. It was money that he desired. The poor girl felt that she had in a sense been an accomplice in the death of her benefactress. She began to weep bitterly. Herman regarded her in silence.

"You are a monster!" exclaimed Lisa, drying her eyes.

"I didn't intend to kill her; the pistol was not even loaded."

"How are you going to get out of the house?" inquired Lisa. "It is nearly daylight. I intended to show you the way to a secret staircase, while the Countess was asleep, as we would have to cross her chamber. Now, I am afraid to do so."

"Direct me, and I will find my way alone," replied Herman.

She gave him minute instructions and a key with which to open the street door. The young man pressed the cold, inert hand, then went out.

The death of the Countess had surprised no one as it had long been expected. Her funeral was attended by every one of note in the vicinity. Herman mingled with the throng without attracting any especial attention. After all the friends had taken their last look at the dead face, the young man approached the bier. He prostrated himself on the cold floor and remained motionless for a long time. He rose at last with a face almost as pale as that of the corpse itself, and went up the steps to look into the casket. As he looked down, it seemed to him that the rigid face returned his glance mockingly, closing one eye. He turned abruptly away, made a false step and fell to the floor. He was picked up, and, at the same moment, Lisaveta was carried out in a faint.

Herman did not recover his usual composure during the entire day. He dined alone at an out-of-the-way restaurant, and drank a great deal, in the hope of stifling his emotion. The wine only served to stimulate his imagination. He returned home and threw himself down on his bed without undressing.

During the night, he awoke with a start, the moon shone into his chamber, making everything plainly visible. Some one looked in at the window, then quickly disappeared. He paid no attention to this, but soon he heard the vestibule door open. He thought it was his orderly, returning late, drunk as usual. The step was an unfamiliar one, and he heard the shuffling sound of loose slippers.

The door of his room opened and a woman in white entered. She came close to the bed, and the terrified man recognized the Countess.

"I have come to you against my will," she said abruptly; "but I was commanded to grant your request. The tray, seven and ace in succession are the magic cards. Twenty-four hours must elapse between the use of each card, and after the three have been used, you must never play again."

The phantom then turned and walked away. Herman heard the outside door close and again saw the form pass the window.

He rose and went out into the hall, where his orderly lay asleep on the floor. The door was closed. Finding no trace of a visitor, he returned to his room, lit his candle, and wrote down what he had just heard.

Two fixed ideas cannot exist in the brain at the same time any more than two bodies can occupy the same point in space. The tray, seven and ace soon chased away the thoughts of the dead woman, and all other thoughts from the brain of the young officer. All his ideas merged into a single one: how to turn to advantage the secret paid for so dearly. He even thought of resigning his commission and going to Paris to force a fortune from conquered fate. Chance rescued him from his embarrassment.

Tchepkalinsky, a man who had passed his whole life at cards, opened a club at St. Petersburg. His long experience secured for him the confidence of his companions, and his hospitality and genial humor conciliated society.

The gilded youth flocked around him neglecting society, preferring the charms of fate to those of their sweethearts. Naroumov invited Herman to accompany him to the club, and the young man accepted the invitation only too willingly.

The two officers found the apartments full. Generals and statesmen played whist; young men lounged on sofas, eating fies or smoking. In the principal salon stood a long table at which about twenty men sat playing faro, the host of the establishment being the banker.

He was a man of about sixty, gray-haired and respectable. His ruddy face shone with genial humor; his eyes sparkled and a constant smile hovered around his lips.

Naroumov presented Herman. The host gave him a cordial handshake, begged him not to stand upon ceremony, and returned to his dealing. More than thirty cards were already on the table. Tchepkalinsky paused after each coup, to allow the punters time to recognize their gains or losses, politely answering all questions and constantly smiling.

After the deal was over, the cards were shuffled and the game began again.

"Permit me to choose a card," said Herman, stretching out his hand over the head of a portly gentleman, to reach a livret. The banker bowed without replying.

Herman chose a card and wrote the amount of his stake upon it with a piece of chalk.

"How much is that?" asked the banker, "excuse me, sir, but I do not see well."

"Forty thousand roubles," said Herman coolly.

All eyes were instantly turned upon the speaker.

"He has lost his wits," thought

AT LAST NIGHT'S MEETING

By 7.45 o'clock last night every available inch of space in the Standard theatre and saloon from the stage to the door was occupied and late-comers were scrambling for a toe-hold on the threshold, the occasion being a meeting of the Citizens' People's parties, to which the Electives were invited. The latter accepted the invitation, that party being represented in its entirety.

Shortly before 8 o'clock Alex. Macfarlane stepped upon the stage and stated that a list of speakers, candidates and supporters of each party, had been selected and when they had been heard the audience could call on anyone whom it was desired should be heard. He stated that N. F. Hagel had been selected as chairman. On being introduced Mr. Hagel requested that, on account of ladies being present, there be no smoking. The chairman invited the various candidates and speakers to take seats on the stage and Messrs. Macaulay, Thompson, Bossuyt, McKinnon, Shepard, Davidson, Murphy, Robertson, Vachon, Landreville, Frank Slavin and others responded to the invitation.

Mr. H. C. Macaulay, candidate on the Citizens' People's ticket for mayor, was the first speaker introduced. He was greeted with deafening and prolonged cheers.

Mr. Macaulay opened his address by explaining away the great bugaboo of the opposition in regard to the meeting which had been announced and afterwards postponed, such postponement having been duly announced both verbally and in print, the cause of the postponement being the coalition of the Citizens' and People's parties and the necessity of revising the aldermanic ticket. The opposition however, had, while being aware that the meeting had been duly adjourned, attempted to make capital of the matter and with such end in view had distorted facts.

Mr. Macaulay eulogized his associates on the ticket and promised them safe, honest and economic administration of public affairs, and that he and they would stand together for good government. He promised to see to it early in his administration that equal fire protection is accorded the various parts of the city, South Dawson especially being in great need of such protection. He further stated that he will oppose the granting of large contracts and will see to it that labor employed by contractors big and little be paid the highest scale of wages. Mr. Macaulay took his seat to thunderous cheering.

Mr. Macaulay took his seat to thunderous cheering.

Mr. Macaulay eulogized his associates on the ticket and promised them safe, honest and economic administration of public affairs, and that he and they would stand together for good government. He promised to see to it early in his administration that equal fire protection is accorded the various parts of the city, South Dawson especially being in great need of such protection. He further stated that he will oppose the granting of large contracts and will see to it that labor employed by contractors big and little be paid the highest scale of wages. ## DRUGGIST DISCHARGED

No Evidence Connecting A. S. Reid With Scandalous Story.

Mr. A. S. Reid of the Miner's Drug Store, who was on trial before Police Magistrate Macaulay yesterday afternoon charged by Mrs. Lameir of publishing obscene and libelous matter derogatory to her character, was honorably discharged on motion of the crown prosecutor, there being no evidence connecting him in any way with the charge.

Two witnesses were examined for the prosecution, the first being Henry Wolf, who was asked to identify the handwriting on the label of a bottle of medicine. He stated that he had taken a prescription to Reid's drug store which had been filled by Mr. Gibson, and he identified the bottle and the writing as the one he had received from Mr. Gibson.

Peter Thompson was next called and was asked whether he had carried a parcel from the Miner's Drug Store to Mrs. Lameir, and he replied that he was not acquainted with Mr. Reid and that he had never carried a parcel from the drug store to Mrs. Lameir.

In making the motion for dismissal the crown prosecutor said that there was no evidence to connect Mr. Reid with the affair in any way, but that he did not intend to allow the case to stop because a perjury had been committed and he intended to run the case down to its true source and obtain a conviction.

The magistrate concurred in the view taken by the crown prosecutor that there was no evidence to connect Mr. Reid in any way with the case and therefore dismissed it.

The balance of the evidence for the prosecution was taken and one witness for the defense was examined in the theft case of Edward Mortimer, at the conclusion of which an adjournment was taken for one week, during which an inspection is to be made of the mine where Mortimer claims to have obtained his money. Pending the investigation Mortimer is held on $6,000 bonds—$3,000 personal and 2 sureties of $1,500 each.

RETURNED YESTERDAY

Well Known Attache of the Gold Commissioner's Office Back.

Among the passengers arriving on last night's stage from the outside was Mr. F. A. H. Fysh, well and favorably known from his long connection with the gold commissioner's office. Mr. Fysh left for the outside the first of last October, his family preceding him several weeks. He went direct to Ottawa and visited some time in that city, also his old home in London, Ontario, leaving for the Pacific coast early in November and spending a few days in Chicago en route. Vancouver and Victoria were in turn visited a short time, and the middle of November found Mr. Fysh with his family in Southern California, in the land of sunshine and flowers, enjoying life in a manner known only to those who have spent several years in the Klondike. Most of his winter has been spent at Long Beach, a short distance below Los Angeles.

where snow, ice, and even frost are unknown. Sea bathing was indulged in every day and huge, luscious strawberries were picked fresh from the vines in the middle of January. The trip inside was devoid of anything of particular importance, the party being eleven days from Vancouver and six from Whitehorse. The ride over the ice was not one of hardship, though the thermometer stood at 55 below when Selkirk was passed. Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Thompson were met at Skagway.

"One meets Klondikers everywhere," said Mr. Fysh, "no matter whether in the east or the west, and they are always glad to see each other though they might have been total strangers inside."

Mr. Fysh and children will arrive shortly after the opening of navigation.

INVEST BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

Lone Star Stock is the Best Investment Ever Offered to the Public.

We claim we have the mother lode. Can you deny these facts. The mines are situated at the head of the two richest creeks on earth—Eldorado and Bonanza. Gold is found on every claim on Bonanza creek, and up Victoria Gulch to the quartz mines. If it did not come from this ledge, where did it come from?

The gold found in the creek is the same as that found in the ledge.

The gold is found in slide matter on Seven pup. Where did it come from?

The best pay found in Gay Gulch is at the head of the gulch, below the quartz mines. There are eight gulches heading at the Lone Star mines. They all carry gold. Where did it come from?

Lone Star stock is the best investment ever offered to the public. Buy now. The books will soon be closed and you will be too late. Don't let the man who knows it all tell you that there is no quartz in this country. The fools who make that statement have no bank account, which is the proof of their wisdom.

Every placer camp in the world turned into a quartz camp. Cripple Creek was a placer camp. The men who knew it all were there. They made the same statement. A carpenter found the quartz after the wise men had left.

Have you ever visited the Lone Star mines? If not, you have no right to even think. Go up and satisfy yourself. Years for business and a quartz camp. LEW CRADEN.
