On The Way To Manila.

(True Witness.)

So deeply interesting, in view of recent events, has Manila become, that all connected therewith, and especially all touching upon Catholicity in that region, cannot fail to furnish us with instruction of a highly interesting character. Rev. Patrick A. Halpin has contributed under the heading "Penicillings on the way to Manila," a commencement of what will surely be an interesting series of letters, to the "Home Journal and News." We take the liberty of reproducing one of these letters, and we know it will be well appreciated. We could not attempt either to make a synopsis or to omit Mr. Father Halpin writes thus:

"There are many, very many, at this time, in this new American city. I have already endeavored to give some idea of the buildings. No words, however, are adequate to express the impression they leave on a pilgrim from western lands. First, there are the churches and not the least the people. It gives you the illusion that you are viewing objects in a kaleidoscope. There is the same rapid moving to and fro and the same blinding 'razzle dazzle.' They seem to have projected from Ostapaults and the action is always changing. The lines of the picture wear a far-off appearance. I feel, when it comes back to me, as if I were one of the figures in a large canvas, where are depicted quaint forms and striking bright costumes, and where on colors of sea and land and sky blend in color tones like the oriental crush of instruments in some climax or finale of grand opera. There is much to be said of the men and women, of the natives, of the Europeans, and the Americans of the Philippines, and the Chinese, of the civilians and the soldiers. Just now, I forego the temptation to enter upon a detailed account of the growth, from an abyss of savagery to a not unenviable height of civilization, of aborigines, who now are gathered beneath the sheltering folds of our star-spangled banner. But this will be another story. There are the objects of Manila. They are numerous and they are not without legitimate pretensions to architectural beauty. They are landmarks and time-marks. In fact, they divide the city into districts which in many instances take their name from the title of the parish church. I am in the San's Cross quarter and my hotel is on Santa Cruz square. I see Manila daily in the Church of Santa Cruz. It is very large. It is very long without being very high. Whatever may offend the artistic eye on the exterior lines, is atoned for by the structural features of the interior. It is one vast stretch of arched gloom or better, of vaulted gloaming. The darkness is visible. It is in fact the dim religious light we look for in ecclesiastical buildings. It is cool and refreshing and inviting. It tempers the fever in the blood while it moderates the fire of the passions. It summons to rest, of body, as well as repose of mind. It has many charms. They are decorated more by the faith of the people than by fanciful taste on the part of the worshippers. Several Masses are said therein every morning. None of them are unattended. I gave Communion daily, to at least a score of Filipino women. Now and then a man was distinguishable. No matter how often I entered any of the churches, and no matter at what hour, I found adoring. The faith stone out. I had sometimes a Filipino boy, sometimes a Filipino man, for a server. They served a little before only and vociferously, but they served well. At first it was a little distracting to see the brown legs flashing under the short cassock. There is a small organ at one end of the church. It is not unmusical. Its lungs seem to be sound. There is no brocheal trouble and no asthma. The singing is good. Ever fresh in my memory will linger the tones of a boy, an alto, who is the soloist of the choir on all musical occasions. It was sweet and strong and pathetic. Nearly every day there is a Miss Cantata. Marriages are always accompanied by nuptial Masses. The offerings for Requiem Masses are very frequent. They are generous, too. I am reminded of the liberality of the Catholics in New York and other cities. I feel like suggesting to the authorities of Santa Cruz Church a little activity in the direction of cleanliness. In the body of the church there is dust and there is dirt. Of course the doors are open all day and the doors are many, and let in the wind, and what it carries, no matter whence it bloweth. But the altar linen is rich and immaculate. Everything which touches the most Holy Sacrament is scrupulously white, I most noted. Great preparations are already being made in Rome for that occasion. On the 12th of March, 604, Pope Gregory the Great died. It is quite possible that no other Pope, since the days of St. Peter, has been more constantly mentioned than Gregory. The 12th of March next will be the thirtieth anniversary of his death. Much has been written about that wonderful Pope, and he did write, himself, records of the popes' celebration will constitute a historical work. It was he who sent St. Augustine to convert England. He was the first to lower the troy of the Pope going down through the slave market in Rome and being surprised on seeing the fair hair, blue eyes, and clear complexion of a number of young slaves from Britain. When he asked the nationality of these, he was told that they were Angles. He replied that 'Angles' and not 'Angles' should they be called. It was in 596 that he decided to send the great Augustine to teach the Saxons and the Angles. The writings of Pope Gregory are very numerous. His 52nd homilies which our priests read every day of their lives.

But the name of Gregory has been handed down to us in the wings of music. We all know how our present glorious Pontiff, aided by the Benedictine monks is seeking to restore to its primitive purity the "Plain Chant" of the Church. In the last year of the sixth century Gregory so unified and liturgy that ever since it has been known as the "Gregorian Chant." After Gregory had ceased his labors on earth, two centuries had passed over the world, Charlemagne left two ecclesiastics of his suite in Rome to study the "Plain Chant," which the great saint had established. These two proceeded home and were instructed to teach the "Gregorian Chant" to all the clergy of the Kingdom. While Gregory was a great reformer of the Church liturgy he was not an innovator, nor an inventor. He merely constructed out of existing material that which was most adapted to Divine service in the Church. The 12th March, 1904, will be a great jubilee.

Catholic Celebrations in Rome.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.

While there is persistent rumor of the Pope's illness, and even, occasionally of his death, and while the Holy Father is beginning to feel naturally annoyed at these ungrounded reports, he still goes about with his usual work. Of course, at this hot season, the Pontiff does not do as much, in the line of public functions, as at other times of the year. Still he gives important audiences, prepares for coming consistory, and, in fact, is maturing his plans for various celebrations during the autumn, winter and spring that will follow this vacation.

Amongst other great events upon which he has set his heart, is the worthy celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Immaculate Conception. It was on the 8th December, 1854, that Pius IX. of immortal memory, promulgated that dogma, which has ever been, since then, each a source of strength and such a source of consolation, for the Catholic Church. The idea of the Holy Father is to have the jubilee commence on the 8th December next and to have it close with a most solemn function on the 8th December, 1904.

This means that Leo XIII. will accord certain special indulgences and other privileges to all who will honor the Immaculate Mother of God during these twelve months. He wishes that the entire year be consecrated to special devotions to the Blessed Virgin, and he is confident that such will serve in a marked degree to extend and to intensify the love that men should have for the one who has been given to us all as a mother. No doubt that this jubilee will be one of immense spiritual benefit to the world. It will accentuate the distinction that has ever existed between Catholic and Protestant in regard to what is due, in honor, in veneration, and in affection, to the Blessed Virgin. There is something so chivalrous—if we may employ such a term—in the respect paid to the most perfect of all women, by the Catholic, that it serves to impart a zeal or grandeur to his religion, the absence of which in all other forms of Christianity renders them poor and selfish, ungenerous and small in comparison. Moreover this jubilee will furnish a fitting occasion to worthily commemorate the reign of the great Pius IX. and in a manner after his own heart.

Mr. John A. Mathieson, Leader of the Provincial Opposition returned from his western tour on Saturday forenoon last. His Public meetings in Prince County have been an eminent success from start to finish and have roused unbounded enthusiasm in the ranks of the Opposition party. The meetings were all largely attended and admirably conducted. Many who had previously supported the Government, announced themselves as converts to Mr. Mathieson's political faith, and it is expected many others will follow their example and thus the beneficial results of this arousing will continue. On Friday large and enthusiastic meetings were held at Hamilton and Malpeque in the afternoon and evening respectively. These meetings were addressed by Mr. Mathieson, the Leader of the Opposition, as well as by his colleagues in the Legislature, Messrs McKinnon and Arsenault, M. L. A's, also by Messrs John A. McDonald, John Anderson, W. McNeill Simpson, W. Crozier, W. L. Cotton, J. A. Reedy and Joseph Driscoll. The arraignment of the Government was thorough and the speakers were enthusiastically applauded.

As noted elsewhere, Mr. Donald Farquharson, M. P., died at his residence, in this city, at 4.30 o'clock on Friday morning last. He had been in poor health for a long time and took a serious turn for the worse shortly after he had gone to Ottawa for the work of the session. He returned home and gradually sank until death came. Mr. Farquharson was born at Lot 48, in July, 1834, so that he had almost completed his 69th year. Early in life he taught school and subsequently started business at West River, where he built up a large trade. Latterly he conducted business in Charlottetown. He was a very ardent member of the Liberal party, and was first elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1876, for the West River district and continued to represent that district till elected to the House of Commons in 1902. He was for a short time a member of the Davies Government before its resignation in 1879. When the Liberals again came to power in 1891, he became a member of Mr. Frederick Peters' Government, and when Mr. Warburton retired from the Premiership in 1898 to become judge, Mr. Farquharson was chosen Leader of the Government. He retired from the Premiership in 1902 and was elected to the House of Commons for West Queens. His funeral on Sunday was one of the largest ever seen in Charlottetown.

Gamey Vindicates Himself.

As will be seen in another column the report of the commission white-washing Provincial Secretary Stratton was carried in the Ontario Legislature by a majority of four votes, a purely partisan majority. The truthfulness of Gamey's libelous story and the false swearing of the defence, were fully borne out by the affidavits read in the House which exposed the whole plot. During the discussion of the Commissioners' report in the House, no attempt was made by the Government speakers to defend its numerous conflicts with unchallenged evidence. They contented themselves with abuse of the man who made the charges. Gamey himself, who spoke for six hours showed up well in the debate and made many friends by his frank, but forcible presentation of the whole case. The concluding part of his speech is worthy of reproduction, and is reported as follows: "Underhand and despicable means had been used in the endeavor to obtain discrediting evidence against him. They had gone to the Confederation Life, of which company he had been an agent for 15 years, to see if they could not find something discreditable about him, but they were informed that he had been a valued and reliable agent. They had then gone to the Canada Accident Insurance Company for the same purpose. When they were told by the manager of the Company that his (Mr. Gamey's) business relations with the firm were above board, these emissaries of the government replied that that was remarkable, as the manager of the Confederation Life Assurance Company had informed them that his dealings with Mr. Gamey were not satisfactory. This was but an incident which showed the dirtiness adopted by the defence and was no proof that he had had any such dealings and so-called as John A. McDonald to pick up their case. "The Government had also paid men to go to Manitoulin and scour the country to get evidence against him, but they were unsuccessful. Neighbors with whom he had private and business transactions for twenty years had nothing to say against his personal character. The fact that in his own district he had polled the largest vote ever given to a candidate in Manitoulin was another evidence that he was not altogether the peculiar monstrosity that the horse-headed editor of the Globe said he was.

"Mr. Gamey then went into the question of the intimate relations of the Provincial Secretary and Frank Sullivan, a connection which the former had denied. Sullivan, said Mr. Gamey, was the go-between all through, and much of the case depended on his part in it. In the very beginning, the Sullivans were found commencing the negotiations, for the purpose of using his position as a member if he would support the Government. Then it was Frank Sullivan who had introduced Mr. Gamey to the Provincial Secretary, which would have been a curious circumstance if Frank Sullivan had had no previous connection with Mr. Stratton. Then Sullivan had written that he had seen our man and he wanted to go into other deals. This indicated that one deal had been put through, but there had been no evidence that there had been any other deals put through but that with the Provincial Secretary. The 'other deals' suggested were those of obtaining evidence in the Algoma election, and the buying of Mr. Smyth's support.

"Then there was the telegram sent by Frank Sullivan two days before the Globe interview was given, telling Mr. Gamey that it was important that he should be in Toronto on Thursday or Friday. Was it reasonable to suppose, asked Mr. Gamey, that Frank Sullivan should bring him all the way to Toronto to discuss a private deal and never mention it to him.

"All through the case the hand of the Provincial Secretary could be seen directing the movements of Frank Sullivan. Sullivan's letters were sufficient to tie the Provincial Secretary with Frank Sullivan. Sullivan knew too much of letters written by the Provincial Secretary not to be in his confidence. On February 7, said Mr. Gamey, he had written to Mr. Stratton in regard to the approaching meeting of the Executive on February 16. On February 11, Frank Sullivan had written the 'X. Y. Z.' letter, containing an enclosure which proved to be an absolute reply in every particular to the letter written to the Provincial Secretary. How should Frank Sullivan know the contents of the letter of February 7, to the Provincial Secretary if he had not been informed of it by Mr. Stratton? The enclosure was couched in a style and phraseology altogether beyond Frank Sullivan, and one which indicated the work of a man accustomed to the preparation of speeches and interviews. For instance, the 'grasping' of the phantom of power was mentioned. Frank Sullivan would never think of that phrase, for the timber limits he was in the habit of grasping were not phantoms, but realities.

"Mr. Gamey then commented on the fact that Sullivan, a mere clerk, had gone to another department and said in effect to an official there: 'Here, Ford, get a suit on and type this for me.' It was peculiar that when the Provincial Secretary wanted two important confidential documents typewritten he had left his own department and gone to that same official.

"Anyone who had read the letters that had a bearing on the case, Mr. Gamey said, could not help but see that there was collusion between the Provincial Secretary and Frank Sullivan. In those letters there was corroborative evidence enough to hang the biggest rascal in the Province, even if he was a cabinet minister. At the piano factory interview it had been proved conclusively that there was something between Frank Sullivan and Mr. Stratton.

"The Government had also paid men to go to Manitoulin and scour the country to get evidence against him, but they were unsuccessful. Neighbors with whom he had private and business transactions for twenty years had nothing to say against his personal character. The fact that in his own district he had polled the largest vote ever given to a candidate in Manitoulin was another evidence that he was not altogether the peculiar monstrosity that the horse-headed editor of the Globe said he was.

"Mr. Gamey then went into the question of the intimate relations of the Provincial Secretary and Frank Sullivan, a connection which the former had denied. Sullivan, said Mr. Gamey, was the go-between all through, and much of the case depended on his part in it. In the very beginning, the Sullivans were found commencing the negotiations, for the purpose of using his position as a member if he would support the Government. Then it was Frank Sullivan who had introduced Mr. Gamey to the Provincial Secretary, which would have been a curious circumstance if Frank Sullivan had had no previous connection with Mr. Stratton. Then Sullivan had written that he had seen our man and he wanted to go into other deals. This indicated that one deal had been put through, but there had been no evidence that there had been any other deals put through but that with the Provincial Secretary. The 'other deals' suggested were those of obtaining evidence in the Algoma election, and the buying of Mr. Smyth's support.

"Then there was the telegram sent by Frank Sullivan two days before the Globe interview was given, telling Mr. Gamey that it was important that he should be in Toronto on Thursday or Friday. Was it reasonable to suppose, asked Mr. Gamey, that Frank Sullivan should bring him all the way to Toronto to discuss a private deal and never mention it to him.

"All through the case the hand of the Provincial Secretary could be seen directing the movements of Frank Sullivan. Sullivan's letters were sufficient to tie the Provincial Secretary with Frank Sullivan. Sullivan knew too much of letters written by the Provincial Secretary not to be in his confidence. On February 7, said Mr. Gamey, he had written to Mr. Stratton in regard to the approaching meeting of the Executive on February 16. On February 11, Frank Sullivan had written the 'X. Y. Z.' letter, containing an enclosure which proved to be an absolute reply in every particular to the letter written to the Provincial Secretary. How should Frank Sullivan know the contents of the letter of February 7, to the Provincial Secretary if he had not been informed of it by Mr. Stratton? The enclosure was couched in a style and phraseology altogether beyond Frank Sullivan, and one which indicated the work of a man accustomed to the preparation of speeches and interviews. For instance, the 'grasping' of the phantom of power was mentioned. Frank Sullivan would never think of that phrase, for the timber limits he was in the habit of grasping were not phantoms, but realities.

"Mr. Gamey then commented on the fact that Sullivan, a mere clerk, had gone to another department and said in effect to an official there: 'Here, Ford, get a suit on and type this for me.' It was peculiar that when the Provincial Secretary wanted two important confidential documents typewritten he had left his own department and gone to that same official.

"Anyone who had read the letters that had a bearing on the case, Mr. Gamey said, could not help but see that there was collusion between the Provincial Secretary and Frank Sullivan. In those letters there was corroborative evidence enough to hang the biggest rascal in the Province, even if he was a cabinet minister. At the piano factory interview it had been proved conclusively that there was something between Frank Sullivan and Mr. Stratton.

HON. MR. FISHER'S TRAIT. The scandal arising out of the payment of the Sullivan's... James McMillan, one of the strongest Liberal party men in the country. But he cannot close his eyes to the hideous spectacle of a concern of which Hon. Sydney Fisher is a leading member, drawing such a vast sum from the public treasury. If such a condition of affairs were to be discovered in England, the offending member of the government would be forced to retire from public life in disgrace, and under the Laurier regime it is different, and is a common practice for Canadian ministers to maintain their personal organs, largely at the expense of the people. Mr. Fisher, however, is by far the worst offender. Recently the Auditor-General refused to consent to the payment of bills sent in by printing companies for work done outside of the government printing bureau. Mr. McDonald found that the papers owned by Mr. Fisher and his fellow ministers were charging more than it cost the government to do the work. He properly refused to concur in the arrangement, and a special bill has been introduced to legalize the payments. Such practices are utterly opposed to the primary principles of pure government, and cannot be too strongly condemned.

A Fool And His Dory. Howard Blackburn, with his 16-foot dory, America, from Gloucester, to France, put in at Clarke's Harbor, N. S., last Wednesday, worn out with his rough experience. Since sailing on June 7th, he had encountered three heavy easterly storms, the last one coming on Sunday, 25 miles off the port. The dory had been well lying to, but drifted westward the following day. While Capt. Blackburn was asleep a heavy sea struck the dory and turned her over on her side, filling his sleeping place and washing his lantern and compass overboard. Another sea righted the dory, thus saving Blackburn's life. He baled out the water, but found his charts and stores almost destroyed. The gale continued until Tuesday when Cape Sable was sighted. The lone mariner reached land exhausted. The dory was not injured and no gear was lost. He was putting the boat in shape again, and says he will make another start when the weather is favorable.

The first division was on Rickard's amendment to ensure Gagey, this was carried by 41 to 37. A NASTY shooting accident took place at Georgetown on Saturday evening about six o'clock, but it is hoped that nothing very serious will be the result. Roy McDonald, the little seven year old son of Mrs. Joe R. McDonald, was standing at McCormack's Corner. James Hession, a young man about twenty, living right across the street, was endeavoring to shoot a cat with a shot gun. The cat ran out of the yard. Hession missed it and fired. He missed the cat, but two of the shot entered the front of Roy McDonald's right leg above the knee. The little chap walked to Dr. Stewart's office. The doctor dressed the wound and sent him home, and Monday morning accompanied by his mother, he was brought in to the Charlottetown hospital. An endeavor to locate the bullets was made that afternoon. The boy is suffering, has no fever, and it is hoped that nothing very serious will be the result of the accident.—Ex.

SCHOOL EXAMINATION.—Thursday the 25th day of June, was a memorable day among the pupils of Balfour's "Boys" school—the event being the half yearly examination. The schoolroom was tastefully decorated for the occasion with lilacs and ferns, many of the young ladies of the district assisting the teacher in the work. Upwards of forty neatly attired, and well behaved children were in attendance. Among the visitors present were Rev. I. B. A. McDonald, pastor of St. Teresa's, the trustees and almost all the ratepayers who had children attending; evincing by their presence the lively interest taken in the education of the youth of this place. The sixth class was examined by the pastor in the various subjects usually studied by pupils of this grade. The other classes were taken by the teacher, assisted by some of the gentlemen present. At the close of the examination a vote of thanks was read by Master Terrence McKenna, to which the Rev. Father made a suitable reply. He expressed his satisfaction at being present, and with the work shown in map drawing and penmanship by the one word "faultless." The Rev. Father also spoke of the reading and arithmetic as very satisfactory. He spoke cheering words to the teacher and children, encouraging them in their good work. After granting a well earned holiday to the teacher, Miss Maud Mollaly and her pupils, all dispersed, feeling that they had secured the services of one of the most painstaking and industrious teachers in the province.—Ox. A Legend of St. Anthony.

A Franciscan Father of the monastery of St. Lawrence, at Naples, tells the following story:

In a peaceful little cottage by the seaside there lived a young fisherman and his mother. One night while they were performing their night prayers, they were started by a desperate outcry as that of a man in terrible agony...

The police had heard the cry, the body was still warm, no one was near but him. The testimony of the mother was of no avail in this case...

warrant to day for a young fisherman who was found at the corpse of a murdered man. A lordly nose seemed to tell against him, and yet he is entirely innocent.

"I am sorry," said the king, "I can do nothing in such matters. The courts are there for that, and when the court passes a sentence I cannot change it, nor can I presume that the sentence is not just."

"I will vouch for the innocence of my client," said the monk with a positiveness that impressed the king. "I beg your majesty to write a few words of pardon below this petition."

The king spontaneously reached for his pen, but, reflecting again, he stopped and asked the monk, "Where do you come from?"

"From the monastery of the St. Lawrence, your majesty," answered the monk.

"But even if I do grant your petition," said the king, "it will be too late, for he will be executed before you can reach him."

"There is no time to be lost, it is true," said the monk, "but I will see that the document is delivered in time; pray just write a few words of pardon here," and the monk pointed with his finger at the blank space where the king was to sign.

The king did sign, and with a few words of courtesy and thanks the monk left the room.

The whole affair made a wonderful impression on the king. He tried to continue his work, but, reflecting again, said to himself: How could this man come in here at this hour? He asked the chamberlain and all the servants, but nobody had seen any one enter or depart. They searched, but no traces of the monk could be found.

The king resolved to go to the monastery early next morning and find the solution to this mystery.

The scaffold on which the young man was to be executed had already been erected and the poor young man in his cell was expecting his executioner to enter, when the doors of the prison opened, and instead an officer of the king appeared with the pardon. The young fisherman was at liberty to return home to his mother.

At the dawn of day the state attorney was terrified to see a document of pardon signed by the king, the day previous lying on his table. He supposed that one of his servants had laid it there and forgotten or neglected to tell him about it. He was in a terrible predicament. Snatching the document, he rushed to the prison to save the young man's life. We already know that he was not too late.

In the course of the forenoon the king appeared at the monastery of St. Lawrence. He had all the brothers assembled in the refectory and asked the Rev. Prior who of them had been to see him in the palace the night before. The astonished Prior replied that he knew of no one to leave the house at so late an hour.

The king ordered the monks, and not seeing his man, told the prior what had happened.

The Prior suggested to call the mother, who might inform them to whom she had given the petition. Meanwhile the king was shown around the monastery to pass the time, and was also taken to the church. The king passed from one altar to another until he finally came to the shrine of St. Anthony. Instantly recognizing the man, he pointed to the statue and said, "that is the one who came to see me."

In consequence of this incident, the city of Naples selected St. Anthony as one of its patron saints.

An Italian Poorhouse.

(Secret Heart Review.)

The following account of a "public almshouse in Sicily," evidently written by a non-Catholic, we commend to erudite and philanthropic Bostonians:

"Of my own varied experiences in Italy and Sicily that which still recurs to me as the oddest was my visit to an alleged 'poor house' in Palermo, but which must have been one of the charitable foundations of the Catholic Church, and is managed by Sisters of Charity. I had told my landlord of the Palazzo hotel at Palermo—Enrico X., who was rich and had a European reputation for entomological science—that I wished to visit the public almshouse of the city, to which the neglected of the poor are sent; and he said, 'You will find it a little way outside of the city gate by the Palazzo chapel, and my card will admit you.' So I took a carriage and presented myself, on a fine April afternoon, at a large building in pleasant surroundings, where I was courteously received by a gentleman who seemed to be one of the committee of management, and by the Sisters of Charity, one of whom, though she had spent a year or two in New York in some similar establishment, had learned no English. The gentleman spoke French rather indifferently, and my Italian was not sufficient for the technical terms to be used in asking my questions, which as an old inspector of charities, I had ready. So an inmate, an old French woman, rather deaf, was summoned to act as interpreter,—to her I addressed questions in French, which she passed on in Italian to my courteous guides. They took me through the whole establishment, day-rooms, dining-rooms (well supplied with attractive viands and wine), dormitories, the chapel and the music room, in which two of the girls performed a duet on an excellent piano, and the prettiest dams in the house, who might have been a model for Raphael's Madonnas of the Annunciation, was called in to turn over the music. Finally I was taken to a school room, where a professor in the local university of Palermo was lecturing to a class of girls from twelve to sixteen on literature, and particularly, that day, on the difference between the classic and the romantic schools in poetry, citing Dante, Ariosto, Tasso and many recent authors. The girls, perhaps twenty-five in number, were taking notes, and probably were to be examined by and on the subject. I had seen poor-house schools in New England and New York, but never one where literature was studied to that extent, nor where the inmates, mostly children and elderly women, with some young mothers,—had so little the pauper air. Yet Sicily, general, and Palermo in special, then and since have abounded with cruel poverty; so that I must think that my entomological host sent me to what we should term a home for the deserving poor. But, like most Italian things, it had the charm that all foreigners find in Italy and which is more attractive in Sicily than even on the mainland."

Dominie Megapolensis

(From the New York Evening Post.)

The close of the city celebration calls to mind the fact that the name of the Dominie Megapolensis as Governor Kieft, the Director-General, preceding Peter Stuyvesant, are held in reverence by Roman Catholics throughout the United States. It was during Governor Kieft's tenure of office, in 1624, that Isaac Jogues, a Jesuit priest, was captured by Iroquois Indians and brought down through Lakes Champlain and George to the Mohawk River. For fourteen months Father Jogues remained a slave, and while in captivity at Aurieuville was dreadfully tortured. His body was mangled, his fingers crushed and burned until only the stumps were left, and finally his white companion, Rene Goupil, was killed.

Hearing that the Indians had with them a French prisoner, Dominie Megapolensis and other Dutch residents of Albany, then Rensselaerwyck, offered to ransom the captive, but were unsuccessful. Finally Father Jogues came down the river with his captors on a fishing expedition, returning at Albany was persuaded by the Dutch to board a vessel which was soon to sail for Virginia and the Bordeaux. After some difficulty he eluded the guards and boarded the vessel. For two days the priest remained in the hold of the ship, and when he went into hiding, living six weeks in a loft behind a number of barrels.

Emaciated and weakened, Father Jogues was brought down the Mohawk River by the Dutch minister, the Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, who had been his friend, the voyage to New Amsterdam (New York) consuming six days. The priest was entertained by Governor Kieft, who gave his guest good clothing in exchange for the savage costume he wore. They were then only two Roman Catholics in New Amsterdam, a Portuguese woman, the wife of the English merchant, and an Irishman from Virginia, and both received abolition from the first priest of their faith who had ever visited the town.

Three months later Father Jogues sailed for France, arriving there on Christmas Day. Owing to the mutilated condition of his hands the priest could not observe the rubrics, and he journeyed to Rome to obtain permission to conduct Mass, which was granted. He remained but a short time in Europe and again started for the New World, arriving at Montreal, he was sent again to Aurieuville to conclude a treaty of peace with the Indians. In this he was successful.

Then Father Jogues went back to Canada, but soon was granted permission to begin missionary work among his former torturers. He barely started, on his journey when the war broke out afresh, and he was captured and this time condemned to die. At Aurieuville the plucky missionary was put to death, his body being thrown into the river.

The first priest to visit New Amsterdam was not forgotten, and to-day there is a shrine at Aurieuville to which thousands of Catholic pilgrims journey each year.

"Say, me good man," exclaimed the city youth, who was undecided whether to buy shrimp or minnows, "what do you catch fish with around here?"

"Give me a quarter and I'll tell you," granted the ruralite with the new-out pole.

"Here it is. Now, what do you catch them with?" "Hooks!"

Life.

The poet's exclamation: "O Life! I feel thee bounding in my veins," is a joyous one. Persons that can calmly or never make it, in honesty to themselves, are among the most unfortunate. They do not live, but exist; for to live implies more than to be. To live is to be well and strong—to arise feeling equal to the ordinary duties of the day, and to resist and overcome by them—life's life bounding in the veins. A medicine that has made thousands of people, men and women, well and strong, has accomplished a great work, bestowing the richest blessings, and that medicine is Food's Sarsaparilla. The weak, run-down, or debilitated, from any cause, should not fail to take it. It builds up the whole system, changes existence into life, and makes life more abounding. We are glad to say these words in its favor to the readers of our columns.
