Of J. B. Blanchet, Esq., for the electoral district of St. Hyacinthe ;

Of Honoré Gervais, Esq., for the electoral district of Montreal, St. James ;

Of John W. Daniel, Esq., for the electoral district of St. John (city) ;

Of Horace Haszard, Esq., for the electoral district of Queen's West, P.E.I., and

Of James J. Donnelly, Esq., for the electoral district of the East Riding of the county of Bruce.

The Clerk also said : The following members have signed the roll and taken the Oath, and are entitled to take their seats : Messrs. Lapointe, Daniel, Blanchet, Broduer, Armstrong, Emmerson, Lemieux, Gervais and Haszard.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Flint, during the recess it was the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor General to call to the Privy Council and the Cabinet Mr. Brodeur, who at the first meeting of this parliament after the general election had been elected Speaker of this House. Our first duty, therefore, is to appoint a Speaker. I believe I am expressing the sentiments of both sides of the House when I state that Mr. Brodeur discharged the duties of the high office to which he had been called in a manner which was eminently satisfactory to all sides of this House, and that in the discharge of those duties he displayed the qualities which should be inherent in the office—above all, those of dignity and impartiality. We have reason to belive that the same qualities will be found in a like degree in the person of Mr. Belcourt, member for the city of Ottawa, and therefore I offer the name of Mr. Belcourt as a fit and proper person to be the Speaker of this House. I move, seconded by Sir Richard Cartwright :

That Napoleon A. Belcourt, Esquire, member representing the electoral district of Ottawa, do take the Chair of this House as Speaker.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Flint, before the motion is put I desire to say that I do not rise for the purpose of offering any opposition to the motion which has been proposed by the right hon. the Prime Minister. I believe that the hon. gentleman whose name has been proposed is in every way worthy of our confidence and of the trust which the House proposes to place in his hands. The dignity which is thus conferred upon him is great, but the responsibility is not less great. He represents not only those with whom he has been politically associated, but also those who sit on this side of the House. He thus stands between the majority and the minority as the guardian of the honour and dignity of the House in every respect. It is necessary that he should preside over the House not only with dignity and learning, but also with wisdom and tact. In extending my congratulations to the hon. gentleman, let me say that I do so with every confidence that he will, in every possible sense, fulfil worthily the responsibilities which are thus to be placed upon him.

Motion agreed to.

And the Clerk of the House having declared Mr. Belcourt duly elected, he was conducted to the Chair by the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER ELECT, standing before the Chair said :

(Translation.) The great honour which the House has just conferred upon me does not for one moment cause me to forget or overlook my unfitness and unpreparedness for the performance of the honourable but difficult duties of the Chair. Consequently, I request, and confidently entertain the hope, that the hon. members will on all occasions extend to me their indulgence and support in upholding the honour, dignity and integrity of the House. I shall follow the example of my predecessors, and particularly of the hon. gentleman who has just vacated the seat, and who discharged with such brilliancy the duties which I am now called upon to fulfil ; and I shall endeavour to exercise on all occasions the strictest impartiality.

I wish to offer to the House my humble and grateful acknowledgments for the great honour which they have conferred upon me by unanimously electing me to be their Speaker. The keen sense I feel of my own unfitness and unpreparedness is only relieved by the hope, which I am confident I may entertain, that the hon. members of the House will on all occasions extend to me that indulgence and support, without which I would fail to perform, to the satisfaction of the House and my own, the very honourable and very difficult duties of the Chair. In that expectation and in the determination to exercise on all occasions the strictest possible impartiality, and to follow the example of my predecessors, and more particularly of the hon. gentleman who has lately vacated the seat which I am now privileged to occupy, perhaps I may venture to hope that the best traditions, the honour and dignity and the integrity of the House will be always preserved and maintained.

ADJOURNMENT—ALASKAN BOUNDARY AWARD.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the House adjourns, might I put a question to my right hon. friend. I understoood that all the correspondence and papers relating to the Alaskan boundary question were to have been printed and distributed during the recess. That, I believe, has not been done, and I would be glad to know from my right hon. friend when these papers will be placed before the House. I believe they have already been laid before the imperial parliament, but there are not copies available for the members of this House with the exception of two or three in the library.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may inform my hon. friend that a portion of the papers is now in the hands of the printers and will be down probably this week. Later on I expect to bring down another batch of the same correspondence.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.25 p.m.

Bill (No. 1) respecting the administration of Oaths of Office.—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier (Prime Minister.)

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Excellency the Governor General this day in the Senate Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of parliament, a copy of which is as follows :—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In again meeting you in parliament, it is our first duty to express our heartfelt thanks to a beneficent Providence for the abundant harvest with which the country has been favoured during the past year, and for the general prosperity that prevails in all parts of the Dominion.

It is very gratifying to note that the yearly increasing trade of Canada which has been so marked a feature of the past six years, gives no indication of any abatement, while the number of settlers seeking homes in Manitoba and the Territories is without a parallel in the history of the country. These two very important facts lead irresistibly to the conclusion that long before the Transcontinental Railway, authorized by parliament at its last session, can possibly be completed, its urgent necessity as a medium for carrying the products of the west to our own Atlantic ports will have become apparent, independently of the many benefits that will follow from the opening up for colonization and for various enterprises of the northern parts of Quebec and Ontario.

The agreement made with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company regarding a new transcontinental railway, contained certain stipulations which in effect required the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to become a party to that agreement and to assume heavy obligations in respect thereof.

Further consideration of the agreement by the representatives of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and my government has resulted in showing the desirability of certain amendments to the contract which, having been approved by my government and subsequently by the board of directors and the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, will be submitted to you for ratification.

The sum of $5,000,000 in cash has been deposited in the Bank of Montreal in accordance with the provisions contained in the original and supplemental agreements with the company.

A Militia Bill will be introduced containing several important amendments to the present law rendered necessary by the growth of the force and calculated to promote its efficiency.

A copy of the award defining the boundary between the Dominion and Alaska, and other papers connected with the controversy, will be laid before you.

In view of the widely extended settlements now forming in the Territories, it will become necessary to increase the strength of the North-west Mounted Police Force, and authority will be asked for that purpose.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

The accounts of the past year will be laid before you. I am glad to say that the revenue will exceed the expenditure, leaving a balance to be applied in reduction of the public debt.

The estimates for the coming year will be laid before you at an early date.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

After the long protracted session of the last year, when so many important matters were dealt with, it is not probable that your duties will involve your being detained on the present occasion for any lengthened period. I commend, however, to your best consideration the subjects to which I have referred, and I invoke the Divine Blessing on your deliberations.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE—GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC AGREEMENT.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That the speech of His Excellency the Governor General to both Houses of Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, be taken into consideration on Monday next.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the motion is adopted I would like to bring to the attention of the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the fact that reference is made in the speech to an agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, or gentlemen representing that company ; and I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to place that agreement upon the Table of the House before the address is taken into consideration ? As this is a subject of considerable importance, I should think it only right that the House should have the advantage of perusing the agreement before we enter into consideration of the speech from the Throne.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may inform my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that the message he refers to will be laid on the Table before the end of this sitting.

Motion agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved :

That a special committee of five members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient speed a list of members to form the select standing committees ordered by this House on Thursday, February 13 instant, such select committee to be composed of the following members : Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. R. L. Borden, Sir Richard Cartwright, Hon. James Sutherland and Hon. John Haggart.

Motion agreed to.

Ball, Champagne, Charlton, Clarke, Earle, Gervais, Holmes, LaRivière, Macdonald, Monet, Roche (Marquette), Russell, Scott, Sutherland (Essex) and Taylor.

He said : This is the same committee as last year, with the exception that Mr. Gervais takes the place of Mr. Madore.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Joint Librarians of Parliament.—Mr. Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—SUPPLEMENTAL AGREEMENT RE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) delivered a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows :—

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons an agreement made between His Majesty the King and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company dated March 8, 1904, varying in some respects the provisions of the agreement between His Majesty and Sir Charles Rivers Wilson and others representing the said company, a copy of which forms the schedule to the Act 3 Edward VII., chapter 71, and he recommends the same for the favourable consideration of that honourable House.

Government House,
Ottawa, March 11, 1904.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has had the amended agreement printed, notwithstanding the rules, which otherwise make it necessary to send it to the Committee on Printing ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am informed that the order has been given for the printing of this document, and it probably will be distributed on Monday.

ADJOURNMENT—PAPERS RE THE ALASKA BOUNDARY AWARD.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the motion is adopted, I would like to say that I understood from my right hon. friend yesterday, that the papers relating to the Alaskan Boundary Treaty and Award would be laid upon the Table of the House this week. Perhaps my right hon. friend meant some later date. They have not been laid upon the Table of the House up to the present time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I expected that these papers, a portion of them, the award at all events, would be laid upon the Table this week. It may be that I am mistaken ; at all events, hon. members will have them in their boxes I hope at a very early date.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 14, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903, AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 2) to amend the Railway Act, 1903. He said : Mr. Speaker, this Bill will be found by the House to be necessary on account of a decision of the Supreme Court rendered since the prorogation of parliament last fall. The object is to amend the section of the Act of 1903 in regard to trains crossing the highway at rail-level within the incorporated limits of cities, towns and villages. Until last session the law was that trains were not allowed to run at a higher rate of speed than six miles an hour in the thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages unless protection were provided by watchmen and gates. When we were revising the law last session it had been decided by the Court of Appeal in Ontario that it was for the judge —or jury, in a case tried by jury—to decide whether protection was required at any crossing where an accident happened if the rate of speed exceeded the statutory limit. Last session Hon. Mr. Blair, then leading the government in regard to railway measures, induced this House to increase the limit of speed at these crossings to ten miles an hour. I believe that, had this House known or suspected that the Supreme Court would reverse the decision of the Court of Appeal of Ontario, this Act would have been amended by the unanimous decision of both sides in this House in the way I here propose. It works out in this way : The Supreme Court having decided in the way it has, the section as it stands is of no practical value and should either be removed from the statute-book, or this amendment should be made to it, in order to give it the effect originally intended. The effect of my amendment would be that, if the speed of ten miles an hour is exceeded at a crosing at rail-level within the incorporated limits of a city, town or village, the railway company must maintain a watchman at that point. Too many people are being killed by reason of the speed at which trains run within the incorporated limits of cities, town and villages. There is an outcry because of trains running over these crossings at forty or fifty miles an hour, with no protection for the public provided. I am not advocating the limiting of speed, but only seeking to provide that if they exceed ten miles an hour at crossings within incorporated limits, the railway company shall provide watchmen. They can run without watchmen if they run at no more than ten miles an hour ; but if they wish to increase the speed within incorporated limits, they must have watchmen at all points where they cross the highway at rail-level.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Bill (No. 3) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—Mr. Lancaster.

Bill (No. 4) to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.—Mr. Lancaster.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House proceeded to the consideration of His Excellency's speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. G. D. GRANT (North Ontario). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the Throne. In accepting this task, I do so with a proper sense of the honour done to the riding I represent in this House. But, before proceeding further, Sir, will you permit me, with all respect, to reiterate the congratulations already extended to yourself on your accession to the Chair. And allow me to assure you, Sir, if the assurance may come from so obscure a member as myself, that this House is confident that in your capable hands the historic office will not suffer in either dignity or authority.

It is with feelings of genuine pleasure, too, that we learn that your eminent predecessor is not withdrawing his services from the country, but, on the contrary, is to devote in another sphere of usefulness his very great abilities to the service of the Dominion.

Since we last assembled here—and by the way that is not so very long ago—no event of paramount importance to Canada has transpired. That expression of Thomas Carlyle's, (which I shall slightly misquote):

> Happy that nation whose annals are dull may with some degree of truth be applied to Canada. During the past year Canada has pursued the even tenor of her way ; she has followed her wonted course of peace, prosperity and progress. A bountiful harvest has been safely garnered, as His Excellency so well says in the speech from the Throne. Our citizens have pursued their wonted vocations undisturbed, adding to their own wealth and to the wealth of the nation. While this has been the happy state of affairs with us it has not been so abroad. The dark cloud which for many months and even years had been threatening the peace of the far east has at last broken and devastating war holds sway. Perhaps it may not be amiss to express the hope that the time is not far distant when an honourable peace may be consummated, that war and carnage may soon cease and that those two great nations, at present arrayed against each other can without sacrifice of self-respect, adjust their differences and for the future vie only in the peaceful battles of commerce and the promotion of the happiness of the human lot in that eastern sphere. Whilst in that conflict we in Canada have neither part nor lot, it is perhaps well to remember that our oriental trade is by no means contemptible, and that for the past few years it has been on the increase. We may be assured that all necessary steps will be taken for the preservation of our interests, and I have no doubt also that on the cessation of hostilities efforts will be made for the expansion and enlargement of our trade in what must be for us the very valuable markets of the east. Though, as I have said, Canada has neither part nor lot in that conflict, one cannot premise when, sooner or later, the mother country, Great Britain, may be involved in difficulties in the far east. We hope that such an event will not occur at this juncture, and that Britain will not become involved in the conflict, but if unhappily Great Britain should become involved—which Heaven forbid—how important becomes Canada. It will be the ground over which armies and supplies must be transported to the scene of action. If at some future time a difficulty should arise in that same part of the globe, and Great Britain should become embroiled therein how important become our highways from the Atlantic to the Pacific and of what inestimable value would be a second or third highway across the continent, remote from the frontier, not easily liable to attack and all on Canadian territory. We hear much in these days about colonial contributions to imperial defence, and I should be the last to minimize its importance. But, Sir, what better contribution could we in Canada make to that end than the construction of another safe highway across our continent whereby we both build up our own country and provide a great utility for the empire in time of necessity. But more of this again.

When this House prorogued last autumn, the international tribunal, which had for some months been sitting in London in regard to the Alaskan boundary question reached a decision and published their findings. I shall not say that the decision of that tribunal was not received with disappointment in Canada, but, Sir, I feel that I can say that after the first and very natural feeling of regret had passed over our country no petulant voices of exasperation were heard, and it is reassuring to know from those whose opinions in such matters are worth having, that the two islands in the Pacific awarded by the tribunal to the neighbouring republic are not of paramount strategic importance and do not dominate what may be, and probably will be, the terminus of the new transcontinental railroad. The final outcome of the Alaskan boundary award was received with regret but not without dignity by the people of this country. When the international boundary is finally delimited in terms of the decision of the tribunal, it is satisfactory to reflect that hereafter there can arise no other or further question involving a boundary dispute. We cannot afford either to contemplate or allow any encroachment upon our coast lines, be it on the Atlantic or the Pacific side. After that boundary line is finally determined we shall be sovereign over all territory north of the international boundary between us and the neighbouring republic, except such parts as have already been awarded as the property of other nations. And is it too much to hope that in the near future an amicable adjustment of what has for many years been a difficulty on our eastern coast, the shore difficulty of Newfoundland, may be reached ? True it is that we are not directly interested, but the adjacent colony of Newfoundland is vitally interested, and the excellent relations now existing between Great Britain and old France may lead to an amicable adjustment of that long-standing difficulty and so pave the way for the entry of that ancient and rugged colony of Newfoundland into this confederation, its natural home. Thus, too, will be consolidated all the British possessions in this part of the globe, bound together by a common allegiance and determined to maintain both their own integrity and, as far as in them lies, the integrity of the mighty empire to which we are so proud to belong.

Looking at His Excellency's speech I note, and I come naturally now to the subject—the introduction this session of a Militia Bill. I am not advised what the particular provisions of this Bill may be ; suffice it to say that it is said to be for the betterment and the enlargement of the efficiency of the force. I am not one of those who believe that a standing army is the greatest blessing that a nation can have. We all know, and it is a truism, that modern Europe is suffering to-day from the canker of militarism run mad. For that reason thousands of Europeans are daily leaving the shores of their native lands and seeking, in our western world, homes where they may labour and enjoy the just rewards of their daily toil without the clank of arms ever sounding in their ears. But, there is a sane middle course to be followed and that middle course I trust Canada and the advisers of the government in military matters will take. Canada must be prepared to defend herself at least by land should occasion arise. For that purpose we should not stint our provision for the maintenance of our citizen soldiers.

Mr. Speaker, an occasion such as this is a proper time, I presume, to take a general survey of the condition of the country, both as to its trade, its resources and its prospects When some months ago the trade returns of the past fiscal year were made public and it was found that Canada's foreign trade to June 30, 1903, had reached the unprecedented total of $467,000,000 many persons thought that high-water mark had then been reached. For some years prior to 1897 the trade of Canada had been stationary or showing only slight advances. Each year of the seven last past, the trade returns have recorded a phenomenal growth, but predictions were freely indulged in that the growing time was about spent. Many prophecies were indulged in, dark prophecies of impending commercial disaster were made and we were warned to prepare for adversity. We were told that in the American republic these ominous signs were apparent. Have these predictions been verified by the facts ? Have these predictions in the slightest degree been borne out by what has transpired since they were made ? They have not, but on the contrary, the facts have disposed entirely of these dark prophecies of evil. Let me refer just for one moment, and I shall not weary the House, to the statistics for the current year, the fiscal year which we are now in. I find that already for the first half of this current fiscal year our trade has been as great, and that, Sir, despite these dark prophecies, it has been $12,000,000 greater than that of the corresponding period of the last fiscal year. I refer, of course, to our aggregate foreign trade and if the present ratio of growth be maintained—and there is no reason in the world why it should not be—I do not think that I am going too far in saying that at the end of this current fiscal year we shall likely see the aggregate foreign trade of Canada touching the half billion mark. Now, take the question of our revenues. Have they sagged or diminished ? Do they give any indication that we are going behind as was darkly hinted some few months ago ? By no means. For the first eight months of the present fiscal year the revenues of Canada exceeded by $3,200,000 those of the same months of last year, thereby proving conclusively that those prophets, who told us that unless we mended our fiscal ways disaster must soon overtake us, did not know what they were talking about. I have heard it said, and I believe with correctness, that we are to have a surplus this year vaster that has been.

This is a good time to take stock nationally. Let us look for a moment and see how our trade has grown during the last six or seven years. I find that our total aggregate foreign trade during 1903 was $43,000,000 ahead of the trade of 1902, and I find that it has increased over the trade of 1895 by $244,000,000, or 108 per cent. I am not saying anything new when I point out that our proportionate increase in trade has exceeded that of any of our commercial competitors. Our neighbours in the United States, for instance, in the same period of time that I have mentioned, have increased their total trade by only 47 per cent, while Great Britain, during the same seven years, has increased her total trade by 26 per cent. Nor is this phenomenal prosperity and growth confined to any one branch of industry. I single out particularly the great basic industry of agriculture and I say advisedly, believing it to be true, that never before have the farmers of Canada been so prosperous as they are at the present time. During the fiscal year 1903 the farmers of this country exported of their own produce $114,000,000 worth, there being an increase of $18,000,000 over the previous year's export and an increase of $64,000,000 over the export of 1896. I need not go into the different articles. I need not quote the returns of the different products, but when we remember that in 1903 our farmers and cheese men sold of cheese $24,000,000 worth, of butter $7,000,000 worth, of hams and bacon $16,000,000 worth, of wheat $24,000,000 worth, and of cattle $11,000,000 worth, it will convey to us some faint idea of the growing importance of the industry of agriculture and furthermore of the splendid strides it has been making during the past few years in Canada. Being myself a solicitor, practising in a small way in a country town, I have some practical knowledge of what the farmers, at least of my own province, are doing. I can say from my experience and knowledge of the state of affairs in the province of Ontario at least, and I doubt not but what it is true of the other provinces, that the farmers are paying off their mortgage indebtedness and paying it off very rapidly. Mr. Speaker, if a farmer comes into a solicitor's office to borrow money to-day it is not because he is going behind. It is because he wants to buy the fifty acres next to him or the 100 acres across the road, and the man who has sold the fifty or 100 acres to him is not going away to Dakota disgusted and disgruntled, but very likely he is retiring with a competence to live in comfort in the adjoining town, or if a young man, is going to our Northwest there to join in making a home amongst the many hundreds and thousands who are settled in that fertile country. Why do I quote these figures ? It is not for the purpose, let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, of recording any party advantage, or of building an argument thereon—and I quite confess an indisputable argument might easily be built thereon for the retention of the present government and its policy—but for the purpose of strengthening and confirming, if it were necessary, the conviction of every one, that it is a good thing to be a citizen of Canada in this fair day of hope and progress.

Sir, let me refer to our great western country. The speech from the Throne would have been singularly lacking had it not spoken of the wonderful growth which Western Canada has experienced. I hesitate to quote figures ; I hesitate to set an array of statistics before the House on such an occasion ; but I cannot refrain from giving a few figures which bear on the development of the West. When I state, that the immigration to Canada last year (1903) comprised 128,000 souls, it will be apparent at a glance that there has been a great influx of settlement, and I may add that two-thirds of these new comers were English speaking citizens. These figures show an increase over the figures of the previous year of 44,000, or more than fifty per cent, and they represent eight times the number who came to Canada in the year 1896. Why, Sir, last year, from the United States alone, 47,000 immigrants came to settle in Canada, and so far as we know these belong to the most desirable class that we could possibly attract to our country. And how has this happened ? Has the Canadian west not been there from time immemorial ; have these fertile prairies not been there ever since there has been a Canada ; ever since there has been a government of Canada ! How is it that only of late years has that long dormant land awakened up to settlement ! I trust, Sir, that I am not going beyond the reasonable bounds of courtesy and etiquette to be observed on such an occasion when I say that the credit of that splendid development and growth is due largely to the vigorous policy and generous treatment which the Department of the Interior has meted out to that western country. Why, for the fiscal year 1903, we find that there were 31,383 homestead entries taken out in that western land, being more than double the entries of the year previous and eighteen-fold greater than the entries for the year 1895-6. And, Sir, I have made inquiry and I find that for the first eight months of this year there have been over 16,000 entries, and the great rush which is confidently expected this spring, will no doubt insure that the figures for the current year will greatly outstrip those for the year I have just mentioned. Is it not reassuring to remember that during the year last past, there was made available and open for settlement, in fact disposed of for settlement in our great West, nine and a quarter millions of acres ? In this is included of course the land sold by the colonization companies, the railway companies having land grants, the Hudson's Bay Company, and our own Department of the Interior. The Department of the Interior alone disposed of for settlement over 5,000,000 acres of land last year. This was an increase over the year 1896 of fifty-fold and more. Now, Sir, when we remember that the total yield of wheat in that western country was between 60,000,000 and 70,000,000 bushels last year, we perhaps can form some idea of what a fabulously rich asset we have in Manitoba and the Territories. I might multiply figures and quote statistics further, but I shall have mercy upon the House, and I shall content myself with saying, that the growth and the expansion recorded by our great west during the past three or four years, is unparalleled by any country in the history of the world. There is this to be said : that both Manitoba and the Northwest Territories are, as time goes on, getting more independent ; I mean in a financial way, and nowadays, it would take more than one bad harvest to seriously hamper any of the western provinces. Such, Sir, is the story of our west, and I have but touched the fringes of the more prominent evidences of its growth. This is the land which is calling upon us at the present moment for increased railway facilities. Shall we close our ears to its cry ? Does not the enormous contribution of that fertile land to the wealth of our nation entitle it to consideration, at our hands ? If, Sir, we are to bind the west to us ; if we are to share with the west in the rich fruitfulness of that country, we must hasten to equip lines of communication and means of transportation. I believe, Sir, in fact I know, that such is the purpose and intention of this government.

I now pass to a moment's consideration of what is known as the transcontinental railway question. After the very full consideration given to this subject last session, but little need be said now. The House is already in possession of the proposed modifications of that contract, modifications and alterations that leave the contract of last year in the main untouched. It is not necessary for me to reopen the chief issue. It is the determination of the government to construct or to have constructed another transcontinental railway, and I think I may fairly say that this policy receives endorsement on all sides. West of Lake Superior there are no two opinions on the question and by common consent it would seem that the people of the west entirely disregard politics in their strongly expressed desire for the railway. I take it, too, that in the older provinces of the Dominion there are no two opinions on the main question. Our present needs and future possibilities demand increased transportation facilities. Our political future depends very largely on the solidarity of this confederation, and the unity and solidarity of confederation can be promoted no better, than by the construction of a railway highway from ocean to ocean, touching each province and traversing all Canada. It then comes down largely to a question of method and means. To that issue is the question narrowed down. I do not know that the purpose of the government with respect to the eastern portion of the railway needs any justification from me at this juncture. Already this House has voted its approval. I as a member of this House have endorsed the project by my vote, and I believe that my constituents approve of my action in that regard. But, Sir, there was a great deal said last session touching the wisdom of building through the newer or northern part of Ontario, and we heard much from gentlemen opposite reflecting upon the wisdom of that course. Let me say Sir, that in my humble opinion, lapse of time, and further inquiry have but confirmed and established the wisdom of that policy. More than that ; it seems to me that there is no feature of the whole scheme which can so appeal to a resident of the province of Ontario, as the proposal to build this railroad from the Manitoba to the Quebec boundary, across new Ontario. We have heard the familiar cry ring in our ears that there is nothing for Ontario in the project. Nothing for Ontario in this project ? Is it nothing for Ontario, that our province shall have opened up and placed in the way of development, hundreds of miles of territory now an unsettled wilderness ? Is it nothing for us that the mining, the timber, and the agricultural resources of that long unexplored land shall at length be exploited ? Is it nothing for us, that the undoubted fertile belt of that great northern half of Ontario shall be thrown open to the settler? Is it nothing for Ontario that for a certainty along the line of the proposed new railway there shall spring up towns and villages where the forest and mineral wealth of the great region shall be converted into manufactured products ? Nothing for Ontario! Surely, Sir, it is a narrow and contracted vision that can see nothing for Ontario in such a splendid prospect.

What, Sir, is the only inference to be drawn from such expressions ? Must it not be this—that those from whom such expressions are heard have no abiding faith in their province ? Must it not be that they doubt the wealth of that region, and practically say that one-half of the province of Ontario is worthless ? If, Sir, we are really convinced that the great northern half of Ontario is a barren wild, an impenetrable waste, pledged for all time to the red deer and the moose, to be traversed only by the Indian or by some adventurous trader ; if, Sir, we are of opinion that it is an unkind and inhospitable region unsuited for the habitation of man, then, in Heaven's name, let us admit the fact to each other, and let us sit down with folded arms and confess that we cannot extend settlement to the north, that so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, real progress and development are at an end. But if, on the other hand, we have a strong faith in the resources and possibilities of that region—if we believe, as those about me from Ontario and from other provinces do believe, that New Ontario may, by bold and wise measures, be made a greater Ontario—if we have enduring confidence in the heritage bestowed upon us by Providence, and in the skill and pluck of our people to use these splendid possessions, then, Sir, our duty is plain ; our duty is to go ahead.

We are told of engineering difficulties, of insuperable natural barriers. Where and what they are, Sir, I have yet to learn. They are not to be found on the charts and maps of surveyors and explorers. I fear that they exist only in the mind of the doubting Thomas who lacks the courage to address himself to the problem of his country's development. We are told, too, that the proposed line through New Ontario and New Quebec will be snowbound for four months out of the twelve. How singularly astray is such a prediction, when we remember that this winter, which has been rather a severe one, the northerly railways of Canada have been those most free of interruption by snow and storm. The main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, running through the northern part of the province of Ontario, has been very slightly impeded; and I am told on very good authority that the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, probably the most northerly one in Canada, running for a distance of about 200 miles from Quebec to Roberval, has run every train, both freight and passenger, on schedule time throughout the whole of the year. And that railway, I believe, runs through a country very similar to that which will be traversed by the eastern division of the Grand Trunk Railway. Therefore we may dismiss that bogey from our minds.

The government is to be commended, in my humble opinion, for holding intact the main features of the contract of last year. The variations of the contract are not in any way material, and do not in any manner tend to jeopardize the successful issue of the project. As these modifications and alterations have been published in full, and are on the desk of every hon. member, I shall not weary the House by going into them in detail. Perhaps the most important amendment is that which relates to the guarantee of the bonds of the mountain section. By the original contract the government agreed to guarantee the bonds of that section to the extent of $30,000 a mile. Under the amended agreement the guarantee will be for three-fourths of the cost of construction; it may be more or it may be less than $30,000 a mile. Then the time for the completion of the western division is extended from 1908 to 1911. In view of the delays that have unavoidably taken place, that extension can, of course, be quite justified. The original contract, as you will perhaps remember, did not provide a time limit for the construction of the eastern division. While the Grand Trunk Pacific Company were bound to construct the western division within a certain time, the government were not bound by a time limit for the construction of the eastern division. Under the amended contract, as I read it, it is provided that in the event of the western division being completed and equipped with rolling stock to the amount of $15,000,000 before the eastern division is completed by the government, the company shall be entitled to the return of the $5,000,000 deposit, which, by the way, has been put up in cash as provided by the original contract. It will be noticed, however, that the original obligation to equip the line to the amount of $20,000,000 of which $5,000,000 is assigned to the eastern division, remains to be complied with when the eastern division is completed by the government. These two amendments, with the additional amendment regarding the holding of the common stock by the old Grand Trunk Railway Company, are, to my mind, the three important amendments. But, I repeat, these amendments leave the main features of the contract of last year undisturbed. We had, I believe, an advantageous contract with the Grand Trunk people last year; I believe we have an advantageous contract with them this year. The contract remains in all essential respects just as advantageous a contract for the country as it stood before.

Among other matters of a domestic nature that were freely discussed during the late recess, was the ever-present question of the tariff. Now, Sir, even among those who clamour for a stiff and arbitrary advance of the tariff all along the line, there is by no means unanimity as to what change or changes should be made. Of course, the ultra-protectionists clamour for a very substantial increase all along the line. Other promoters of the agitation single out special industries which they assert are suffering by undue competition from without. The great mass of the consumers of this country have not yet been heard from, nor do they possess any organization by which they can, as a body, make their wants and wishes known. The consuming public have not the opportunity of recording their views at conferences or conventions, as other interests have. The great body of the people can express their convictions and their wishes on this and kindred matters only at the polls.

Now, Sir, I do not for one moment say that the existing tariff is a perfect tariff. A perfect tariff—that is, one to suit all the different sections of this great country, with its frequently changing conditions, and its many diverse interests—could only be framed and put into operation by perfect men; that is to say, by a government composed of perfect members.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I quite admit that the present administration is about as perfect an administration as ordinary human limitations will allow; but, I do not claim for them that they have been able, or will ever be able to form a tariff that will suit everybody, all the manufacturers and all the consumers, always and at all times. I do put forward this claim, however,—and I say it with the assurance derived from the records—that the present tariff, on the whole, has been a very satisfactory tariff for Canada. And on what do I base this claim? First and foremost, our present tariff has been a good revenue producer. It has fulfilled one of the main functions of a tariff in that it has produced abundant revenue. I have already referred in part, to the figures since 1897, and I need not speak further of our constantly enhanced receipts from customs. When I say broadly that the Minister of Finance was able to declare last year a surplus of fourteen or fifteen millions and this year will be able to show even larger surplus, and when I say that we are told on authority that there will, in all probability, be a further reduction of the debt besides the $6,500,000 paid off last year, I think that the claim made for the present tariff that it has been a good revenue-producer is well founded. Therefore an increase in the tariff, an arbitrary advance, is not required for the purpose of raising sufficient revenue. To judge by another, and perhaps equally proper, standard, —the effect of the tariff upon our trade— we find that the tariff of 1897 has been on the whole, a satisfactory tariff. I have already quoted to you the increase of Canada's foreign trade for last year, and have given you the comparison between that and the year 1896, the year before the present tariff came into operation. Since the inception of the present tariff, our trade, as I have said, has well nigh doubled. Surely Sir, the fiscal policy of the present administration, judged by its fruits, is deserving of commendation from the people of this country. It will be hard to convince any reasonable elector that a tariff policy under which our revenue has shown phenomenal increase from year to year, and under which our trade has shown steady and rapid progress, has been a mistaken policy. Were the revenue sagging, were trade at a standstill or declining, there might be some force in the demand for a change in our fiscal policy looking towards an increase in the tariff.

Still, it may well be that, so far as certain branches of industry or manufactures are concerned changes are desirable and proper. I feel sure that, in due time, these cases will have the attention of the government. In seven years' time, conditions necessarily change ; and where such changes have occurred they should be noticed and provided for. To my mind, those who are promoting a high-tariff agitation make a great mistake in demanding extreme measures. I do not think that the manufacturing interests of this country are at all a unit in asking for a great and arbitrary advance in the tariff. The overwhelming majority of the manufacturers at the present time are doing well, they are enjoying prosperity and are selling more goods than ever before and at better prices. Moreover, their financial position is greatly improved, and their collection returns have been more satisfactory than ever before. Then, we should not overlook this fact that constant agitation for tariff change, just like constant change itself, is apt to be disturbing, disquieting, and harmful to trade. Sir Edward Grey, the other day, in a speech on the fiscal question in Great Britain, said truly that repose, and not agitation is necessary to the sound development of trade. In the tariff, in my opinion, permanency and stability are to be desired, but careful attention and relief in special cases are not to be denied. That the tariff should be in Canada a political issue, seems, of course an absurdity. And yet we have it so. On the whole, I believe, considering the geographical situation of the various provinces, our tariff is fairly satisfactory, bearing as it does, not too severely on any one class or section, yet giving reasonable protection to our industries.

During the late recess, the fiscal controversy in Great Britain attracted a good deal of attention in Canada. It did more than that—it attracted to England some of our Canadian public men, who were anxious to enlighten the British elector in his choice of a fiscal policy. Now, we Canadians must always be vitally interested in the trade policy and trade questions of the motherland. Our commerce is affected, our political relations with the old land are vitally concerned. Whether or not our advice to Great Britain in the premises should be given, whether or not that advice can, in good taste, be given, and whether or not that advice, even if volunteered, will be heeded the least bit on the other side of the water, I shall not say. But it still remains that we have much concern with the ultimate outcome of that controversy. To my mind, the attitude of Canada to this great question should be a waiting attitude. As yet, no details of preferential trade propositions have been made known upon which one could offer an intelligent opinion or form a clear conclusion. The programme is yet nebulous. But we can go thus far—we can say that with the idea of closer trade relations with other parts of the empire we greatly sympathize ; but we await particulars ; formulate your plans and we will discuss them. Our union with the empire in heart and in aspiration is already indissoluble. If we are to be more closely united in trade, we in Canada will maintain the attitude of being willing, at any time to discuss such a proposition with the mother country. Such has been our attitude in the past, such was our attitude in the inter-imperial conference. And it is fitting, in this connection, to remember that Canada was the first to extend, freely and of her own accord, preferential treatment to British trade. It is for the mother country to move first for the adoption of what must be for her a fiscal revolution. Have we something substantial to offer the mother country in return for what may prove a sacrifice on her part ? That is a subject for discussion. Our attitude, I say, should be the attitude of waiting, ready, if necessary, to take counsel with the motherland and ready to discuss the furtherance of inter-imperial trade and the strengthening of inter-imperial ties.

But I have already transgressed the limits of the time that I might properly occupy on such an occasion as this. The second last clause in the address I desire to call attention to, and I am sure that my hon. friends on the opposite side will not be annoyed if I should ask their special attention to this clause, which I shall take the liberty of reading :

Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

After the long protracted session of the last year, when so many important matters were dealt with, it is not probable that your duties will involve your being detained on the present occasion for any lengthened period.

I have no desire to make any invidious references or enter into any particulars, but simply throw out the suggestion to hon. gentlemen opposite, in the best of good feeling, that they would deserve well of their country if they would unite with gentlemen on the treasury benches in the endeavour to carry out the wish expressed by His Excellency and thus prove that the hope he indulged is not a vain one. I might perhaps enlarge on this theme, but I find that I am exceeding the limit of time at my disposal. Once more the representatives of the people are gathered together in parliament to devise measures for the good of our country. Never before in the history of this Dominion has its outlook been so bright. With the public treasury overflowing, with the fertile areas of our western country rapidly filling up with home-seekers and home-makers, with settlers and capital seeking our shores, surely it is incumbent on us to devise liberal measures, measures commensurate with the growth of Canada and her prospects, to meet the increasing demands of our rapidly increasing trade. All irritating questions of a racial and sectional type being happily out of the way, clean gone for ever, I fervently hope, Mr. Speaker, —thanks in the main to the master mind which has guided the destinies of this country since the Liberal party have come to office—we may confidently look forward to a lengthy period of national growth and prosperity. The people of Canada need have no fear for the future, if measures bold and wise be devised for our development. In the great task of building up a nation on the northern half of this continent we must see that we lay the foundation strong, firm and sure. Let us be true to our splendid traditions, let us use wisely the magnificent heritage with which Providence has endowed us, and we cannot fail, in our day and generation, to contribute much to the up-building of our beloved Canada.

Mr. L. A. RIVET (Hochelaga). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the task which devolves upon me of seconding the address in answer to the speech from the Throne carries with it a responsibility, the thought of which impresses me particularly. I would have been tempted to avoid it had I not been assured of your indulgence and prompted by a deep sense of my duty towards my province and my country. I must say, however, that the able and eloquent remarks just made by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) have rendered that task much easier for me to fulfil.

At the outset, allow me, Sir, to heartily congratulate you on your election to the exalted position which you occupy. Your choice as Speaker of this House has been welcomed with the greatest joy throughout the country. It was especially gratifying to the two great provinces of the Dominion to which you belong, having been born and brought up in the one, and being a most distinguished representative of the other. All are assured that, following in the footsteps of your predecessor, you will display in the fulfilment of your duties perfect courtesy and a deep knowledge of parliamentary and constitutional law.

My colleague, the hon. member for North Ontario, has expressed intense satisfaction at the prosperous condition of our country. I need not say that I am in this respect entirely in sympathy with him. That prosperity which is apparent not only to the citizens of Canada, but to strangers as well, could not but attract the attention of His Excellency the Governor General, and the reference to it in the speech from the Throne is the mere official recording of the most salient and general feature of this period of our history. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of legitimate pride that every Canadian witnesses the marvellous development of this country since 1896 and the position it has attained in the movement impelling all nations towards social and economic progress. We are proud to point out to that marvellous impetus, to that remarkable spring in all spheres of national activity. I welcome that unexpected increase in our trade, which has more than doubled in the space of eight years. I greet with joy the abundance and comfort enjoyed by our farming community, whose members are no longer, at regular intervals, reduced by emigration. I rejoice at the sight of all these new industries springing up throughout the land, the prosperity of each and all of which adds to our public wealth.

It is also a comforting sight to observe the labouring man, no longer obliged, as in days bygone, to seek under distant climes the means of sustenance which could not be found at home, but enjoying in his own country, through the use of his brains and muscle, better wages and a more pleasant life than could be had in a foreign land. I rejoice at learning that the tide of emigration towards the great republic to the south of us has changed to a return homeward of our people and to a current of foreign immigration directed towards our rich western plains. I am proud to notice that, by means of such development and such progress, Canada has taken a place among the nations which have a part to play at the opening of the present century. But, in the presence of this new manifestation of strength and vitality which breaks forth in all domains of society, in the presence of my country changed into an immense hive, wherein the bees of agriculture and of industry turn out the honey of welfare and prosperity, in the presence of that striking metamorphosis of our national life, after giving free vent to the admiration and joy with which my heart overflows, I feel the need of investigating, and I investigate, the causes of such a sudden and thorough transformation.

Where, Sir, is the magic wand which has effected this prodigy ? With my hon. friends on the other side of the House, I notice in the first place the action of Divine Providence. I agree with them that Providence which has watched over the cradle of our infant nation, watches over its growth and development and visibly takes it by the hand on the road that leads up to the great future which is in store for it. But Providence, which existed previous to 1896, had not waited till then to show its beneficient and protecting hand. There must then be other causes for that marvellous progress ; and in accord, once more, with all the hon. members of this House, I may point out the characteristic qualities of all the races which inhabit this Dominion, viz.: activity, thrift, private enterprise and energy together with the clearest conception of fellowship, imagination and passion tempered by reason ; the daring spirit which makes for progress combined with the notion of present needs ; lastly, a practical turn of mind along with a love of the ideal, and above all,—and that is indispensable in our country,—union and peace among the various nationalities, happy to work together towards the upbuilding of a great, happy and prosperous nation. Add to those various qualities, the development of education throughout the body social, whereby the humblest as well as the greatest, the poorest as well as the richest, are enabled to draw on the treasures of energy and ability that constitute the intellectual heritage of the Canadian people. Therein is to be found, no doubt, one of the main causes of national prosperity.

There is still another cause, and at the risk of drawing both a denial from some of our friends on the opposite side, I shall mention the wise and progressive management of the Liberal government. While our opponents, wrecked by the people's will on the desolate shores of opposition, retained those cut and dried notions and indefinite theories from which the country had suffered so much, the leaders of our great party entrusted with the management of public affairs introduced and pursued a sound policy, founded on a clear perception of the needs of the various classes. Once in power, the members of the Liberal party judged that they were bound to exercise that power for the benefit of the people who had entrusted them with it. They judged that above mean party cravings, above sectional disputes, there should be a national programme, a work of material and social reformation, the carrying out of which required the co-operation of all people of good will and of all talents.

Agriculture was waning ; the Canadian Sully, our clear-sighted minister of Agriculture, enacted in its behalf measures destined to help in a large measure its progress. Imbued with that patriotic idea that farming constitutes in this country the principal source of public wealth, this same minister, through the establishment of a complete chain of cold storage, favoured the sale of our dairy products on the European markets, found new openings for other agricultural products and thus ensured to our farming community an era of progress the beneficent effects of which they feel.

The new trend imparted to our fiscal policy by the hon. the Minister of Finance, by interfering with monopolies, left, however, large manufacturers in a position to reap fair profits. Small industries were threatened with extinction in the weakening atmosphere of excessive protection ; through a wise modification of the tariff, possibilities hitherto unforeseen were offered to them, with a wider range under the sun of competition and liberty than trusts had been willing to allow them.

Under the Conservative rule the workingman was at the mercy of these trusts ; the Liberal government ensured him fairer wages and better protection in cases of unfair dealing on the part of the employer.

The public treasury was no longer the aim and prey of party hacks. The surpluses which replaced deficits were used in equipping our ports, building our canals, improving our transportation system over land and water, in subsidizing great undertakings of public interest and developing the natural resources of the country. The public revenue increased to a surprising extent, was applied to a gradual reduction of the national debt. Public credit was restored, the commercial independence of the country obtained, the sphere of action of the Canadian nation enlarged, thanks to the insight and enlightened patriotism of the eminent statesman who holds the reins of government.

Such is, Mr. Speaker, the part taken by our leaders in the gigantic development of Canada since 1896. Of course, previous to that, there existed in the make up of our people great stores of strength and energy ; but they remained dormant, unsuspected and unused, pending the moment when, under the impulse of an outward force, they would shine in the full light of day and give to the various manifestations of our national life an incomparable breadth and brilliancy. That new factor which has awakened the latent energies in the souls of the people and led them on in the path of an unheard of progress, is the far-seeing management of the men whom our country chose as its leaders on the 23rd of June, 1896, and in whom to-day it has deservedly put its faith.

The most important measure announced in the speech from the Throne is, no doubt, the ratifying of the amendments made to the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for the construction of the transcontinental railway.

I wish, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, to express my deep satisfaction at the fact that these amendments do not in any way alter the original policy of the government on that national issue, and do not alter any essential feature of the agreement originally passed with the company. It is specially gratifying to me to note that the government persist, in spite of some interested criticisms, in their intention to build the eastern section of that great line. The building of that section, the main object of which is to give to our western farmers an all-Canadian railway line operated throughout the year and leading to our seaports, and also to develop those immense regions of northern Ontario and northern Quebec, seems to become more and more a plain necessity. I do not ask for better proof than the statements made before the Canadian Club, on the 24th February last, by Sir Sandford Fleming, our ablest expert in Canada. The statements on which that eminent authority based his approval of the building of the whole transcontinental in accordance with the government plan, have been published in the newspapers, and I need not repeat them here. I shall be content with saying that the force of such testimony is unquestionable. On the other hand, Dr. Bell, the noted geologist, has given recently on the agricultural, mineral and forest wealth of that eastern region an opinion which corroborates the testimony of Sir Sandford Fleming.

We have been apprised, Mr. Speaker, of the motives which have suggested that great plan of a new transcontinental railway. To connect the shores of the Atlantic to those of the Pacific by a new and all-Canadian route, to open up for settlement immense regions abounding in mineral, agricultural and forest wealth, to ensure new outlets for the products of the west, where immigration from Europe and the United States is constantly pouring in; lastly, to ensure the commercial independence and liberty of Canada. Such were the main reasons which the Prime Minister pointed out to the House in commendation of the scheme. These reasons, which the whole country approved of a few months ago, are to-day as cogent as ever. Let the transcontinental railway be built at once, such is the general wish of the people, as expressed by the result of the by-elections and voiced by enlightened business men and our ablest and most reliable experts in Canada.

As regards the amendments made to the agreement, they will, no doubt, have the approval of parliament. Those amendments are of such a kind as to leave no place for conflicting opinions. The terms of the contract were so much in favour of the government, certain conditions were so stringent on the company, that one could foresee how difficult it would be for the company to carry out the whole of its obligations. Unfortunately, those fears materialized. In spite of their good will and good faith, the company were at first unable to make the cash deposit of five million dollars required by law. However, the recent and happy news of the replacing of the interim deposit by a legal one will be gratifying to the country as a whole. The increase in the government guarantee as regards the mountain section, which, as intimated officially a few days ago, forms one of the proposed amendments, will be approved of by all who will take the pains to investigate the immense difficulties which the company may encounter in the building of that part of the road.

The new recourse granted to bondholders is evidence of the wish of the government to protect more effectively those who are willing to invest their funds in the carrying out of this national undertaking. On that point, as on many others, England is letting us have the benefit of her practical ability and of her old-time experience in the management of public affairs. Our leaders could not seek inspiration at a better source or find a nobler example to follow. The additional delay of three years granted to the company for the building of the western section is a change of small importance, which only shows the willingness of the government to grant all the necessary liberty in the carrying through of a work which will last for centuries.

In short, all these amendments are commendable, inasmuch as they are in accord with the spirit of the original agreement, and are further evidence of the government's resolve to carry through an undertaking from which all parties interested are destined to reap great advantage. For those reasons, Sir, it would be desirable that no voice should be heard in this House in opposition to the Act introduced by the government.

My task would be incomplete, Mr. Speaker, if I did not make reference to a question of the greatest interest to the electoral division which has chosen me as its representative. That question, raised by our opponents, old and new, was hotly discussed in the county of Hochelaga, where the manufacturing industry holds a foremost place. I refer to the fiscal policy. As a matter of fact, the platform of the opposition had for its sole feature one plank, which, under a pompous name, trumpeted all over the constituency, became the by-word forced on my opponent; that sole plank was protection.

In the name of that old word, full of magic for those who are ignorant of political history previous to 1896, an attempt was made to secure the endorsement of the electorate for an out-and-out protective policy, slavishly imitating that of the great country to the south of us, where its systematic carrying out is causing the most disastrous of commercial and industrial disturbances. Vote for protection as they have it in the United States ; such was the pass-word of the Conservative, or rather of the protectionist forces in the electoral division of Hochelaga. That riding, Sir, is one of those in Canada where manufacturing has attained the greatest development, a riding where that campaign of out-and-out protection had undoubtedly the greatest chance of success, assuming, as claimed by our friends on the other side of the House, that the country was dissatisfied with the present fiscal policy. The result of that campaign was the return of the Liberal candidate by a strong majority. I have no hesitation in saying that, barring a few minor details, easy of adjustment, the manufacturers and business men of the county of Hochelaga are satisfied with the fiscal policy introduced in 1897. If I needed a better proof than the verdict of February 16th, 1904, I would point to the increasing prosperity of the larger as well as the smaller establishments under the Fielding tariff: I would point out to the considerable increase in the business carried on by these mills and manufactures, the owners of which, previous to 1896, claimed that the country would be ruined should the Liberals come into power.

Must we then say, Mr. Speaker, that the present tariff should not be altered in any way ? I do not think so. As all human achievements, the tariff is perfectible, liable to be improved now and then by changes necessitated by the law of competition and the fluctuations of trade. I know that just now a certain number of manufacturers, in Hochelaga and elsewhere, are calling for some changes in the tariff. I am confident that their representations, if found just and fair, will be favourably considered by the present government, and will be dealt with in that spirit of justice to which they are entitled, and which, thanks to God, has never been refused them.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my deep satisfaction at the remarkable success of the Liberal party in most of the by-elections which have taken place since the last session. The result of these elections clearly indicates the firm faith which the electors have in the government. And how, Sir, could it be otherwise ? Does not the Liberal party embody to a greater degree than any other political group, the sentiments, the opinions and the aspirations of the various races inhabiting the Dominion ? By its traditions, by its battles in favour of popular liberty, by its inception of all movements that have brought about the political, intellectual and social emancipation of our people, by the principles of order, toleration, harmony and progress, which are at its foundation ; lastly, by the integrity, devotedness and political ability of its leaders, is not that party the natural guide of our young nationality towards the great future awaiting it ?

Mr. Speaker, the men who govern this country have a lofty mission to fulfil, that of welding these heterogenous elements into a great, happy and proud nation. That task, on the 23rd of June, 1896—an ever memorable date in our political annals—the electors of Canada have gloriously conferred on the Liberal party, so worthy of that honour. Since that day has the Liberal party acted unworthily ? To that question the great voice of the people, several times consulted, has answered : No. For, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal government, under the guidance of that distinguished statesman, whose name is the symbol of honour and victory, has pursued and pursues the fulfilment of that mission with a measure of success that other nations envy.

May I be permitted to express to that eminent statesman my joy at seeing him once more fully restored to that state of health and vigour required to successfully carry out the work of national reformation and emancipation which he has undertaken with the co-operation of his colleagues. From one end of the Dominion to the other, where he maintains harmony, peace and prosperity, there is an ardent wish that he continue for many years to occupy the exalted position which the best interests of Canada require him to occupy.

My task is over ; but before taking my seat, I wish, on the threshold of this important career which is opening before me, express an altogether personal feeling. Entrusted with the mission of taking part in the proceedings of an assembly which has charge of the future of the nation, I feel a heavy responsibility resting upon me. The task of a public man in a mixed community like ours is both complicated and difficult. Shall I discharge it worthily ? I venture to hope so, by following in the footsteps of the distinguished men who preceded me in this House, and taking inspiration from the lessons in patriotism, honour and loyalty, which they are giving to their fellow-citizens in the exercise of their functions. Under those circumstances, I shall deem myself happy for having accepted the mandate confided to me, especially if, in the carrying out of that mandate, I can contribute in some measure to the enlargement of the social, intellectual and economic estate of our beautiful country.

I have stated in my own tongue, that in undertaking the most important and delicate task of seconding the address in reply to the speech from the Throne, I was prompted by my desire to fulfil a duty to my province and to my country. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, allow me to renew the expression of my deep satisfaction at the prosperity of this country, which satisfaction has been voiced by the speech from the Throne. I am proud to think that owing to the condition of our national trade, which since 1896 has expanded by leaps and bounds—to the springing up of new industries all over the land—to the state of comfort and prosperity which characterizes the farming community—to the increased wages, and steady employment of the labouring classes, and to the marvellous development of all the great sources of public wealth, Canada has taken the front rank amongst the most prosperous nations of the world. But, if it is a source of gratification and pride to see the magnificent progress of this country, it is also a duty to investigate the causes which have promoted such a progress and development. In common with our friends of the opposition, I admit that to Providence who protects nations as well as individuals is primarily due the abounding prosperity of our country. But, Sir, Providence helps those who help themselves; and it must be confessed that, with the assistance of Providence, two other great causes have chiefly contributed to the upbuilding of Canada in the past seven years. These are the sterling qualities of the great races which compose our population, and the honest and progressive administration of the present government. I have already referred at some length, in my own tongue, to the record of the Liberal administration, and time prevents me from again detailing what the Laurier government has achieved for Canada during its seven years of power. I need only say that such a record is written in the comfortable home of the artisan, on the smiling countenance of the farmer, and the swollen bank account of the trader and manufacturer. I have said that the presence of two great races is an element of strength. I am not unmindful that our enemies say that it is a source of weakness. But who can say, Sir, that it has been a source of weakness to the motherland whose people spring from the fusion of many races ? We French Canadians admire the spirit of enterprise of our English speaking brethren, who invest and risk their fortunes in great undertakings which develop the country, as, on the other hand, we are inclined to believe that our English friends may have, in some respects, something to learn from us. Each race has its own peculiar virtues, and peculiar defects, and the more these races intermingle, the more they learn to respect and esteem each other. Sir, it is the duty of the statesman, nay, more, it is the duty of every citizen, to promote the harmony and unity between the various elements of our population, without which it is impossible to build up a great and united Canada. The founders of the Dominion, peering into the future, saw this clearly, and framed confederation on the broad lines of mutual forbearance, respect and trust between all the races. Their faith has been amply justified, for even the slowness of our earlier growth has not been without material advantage, since it has unquestionably given steadiness and maturity to political thought. We have now developed the inspiration of a large national life. Vast undertakings—I have already referred in my own tongue to one of the greatest of them, the Grand Trunk Pacific—are now entered upon, with the keenest confidence that they will be executed with success.

We have established a system of waterways which penetrate from the Atlantic into the very heart of the continent, to prairies which are the greatest undeveloped wheat area in the world.

We are supremely fortunate in our national resources. In the present state of affairs in the east it is opportune to remember that both on the Atlantic and Pacific we possess some of the finest naval bases in the world. On the Atlantic coast, in immediate proximity to harbours open the year round, we have inexhaustible supplies of coal, and in British Columbia and Vancouver Island we have, practically speaking, the only coal to be had on the Pacific coast.

On political lines Canada has been the first to prove, by actual experience on a large scale, the adaptability of the federal system to British methods of representative and responsible government.

Founded, as I have said, on the broad lines of mutual forbearance and trust amongst the great races, each with a glorious heritage of undying achievements, the faith of the fathers of confederation in the great destinies of the Dominion, is now being amply realized, for in material development, in constitutional organization, and in the spirit of her people, Canada has reached a stage that few nations attain before centuries of growth.

Every Liberal reviews with pride and satisfaction the contribution his party has made, and is continuing to make in the work of building up this great Dominion along the broad lines I have outlined.

Before concluding, I wish to say, Sir, that I esteem it the greatest privilege of my life that my fellow citizens, English and French, have given me a mandate to take part in the proceedings of this House, although at the same time I feel deeply the heavy responsibility which they have thereby placed on my shoulders. The role of a public man, especially in a country with a mixed population like ours, is both complex and difficult, I shall, however, endeavour to render myself worthy of it, in following the brilliant example of those great men who have preceded me in this House, and inspiring me with their lofty ideals of patriotism, honour and loyalty.

I desire now to quote an adaptation of the great English poet, Alfred Tennyson :

"Shall we not thro' good and ill,
Cleave to one another still.
Canada's myriad voices call
Sons be welded each and all,
Into one Imperial whole,
One with Canada heart and soul ;
One life, one flag, one fleet, one throne,
Canadians, hold your own."

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, let me in the first place pay a tribute of respect to the memory of one of our colleagues who sat on this side of the House, the late Mr. Simmons, member for the east riding of Lambton, who, although his voice was not very often heard in this House was nevertheless recognized by every one of us as a man of strong, shrewd common sense, excellent business abilities and whose kindly and genial disposition endeared him, I am sure, to every member of this House whether he sat to the right or the left of the Speaker.

Let me also join in the congratulations expressed by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on the complete restoration of his health. I am sure that however we may be divided in our party sympathies or affiliations, there is no man on the other side of the House more ready or anxious to congratulate my right hon. friend than is every member who sits on the left of the Speaker. Let me also say that I desire most sincerely and heartily to congratulate the mover and seconder of this address. My hon. friend Mr. Grant—I beg his pardon, I should say the hon. member for North Ontario—I got into the habit of referring to him as Mr. Grant during a little campaign in that county, and had the result of that campaign been as I then desired, it would have prevented me from enjoying the acquaintance of that hon. gentleman in this House. I became a very good friend of that hon. gentleman on that occasion and I trust that these friendly relations will always continue notwithstanding our political differences. I congratulate him upon the graceful and very well worded speech which he has made today, although I am sure he cannot expect me to coincide absolutely with every sentence contained in it. I desire also to congratulate my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) upon the polished speech which he has delivered in his own language and I trust I am not saying too much in that regard, although I am somewhat a novice in that beautiful language which he speaks so perfectly. But specially let me congratulate him on the fluency with which he has addressed us in the English tongue, and I may say that the command of that language which he has evinced this afternoon almost puts to shame some of the members of this House who claim that language as their mother tongue. Now, my hon. friend from North Ontario seems very desirous indeed that the suggestion in the speech from the Throne that we should have a short session should be fully carried out. Let me point out to my hon. friend and to the hon. member for Hochelaga that they do not seem to be very desirous of accomplishing that end themselves, because, while complimenting them on the excellent addresses they have made, I have not failed to notice that they seemed desirous of arguing all over again in this debate upon the address, the question of the transcontinental railway. I would have thought that my hon. friend from North Ontario, at least, had had enough of the argument of the details of that measure during the last two months of the past session, but it appears that he has not had enough of it, and he has extended a very plain invitation to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to argue once more, in the debate upon the address and before the question has been reached on the order paper, not only the principle but the details of the measure which was so thoroughly discussed during the past session.

I can hardly think that my hon. friend from North Ontario could be sincere in the hope which he has expressed as to the probable length of the session. Let me say however that I do most sincerely congratulate my hon. friend from North Ontario upon the boldness with which he referred to certain matters as to which both my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) should be somewhat sensitive. He referred to a revenue tariff which he says is a great revenue producer, inasmuch as it has produced an enormous surplus this year and will continue to do so in the future. Until my hon. friend had spoken, we had supposed that the perfection of a revenue tariff was to so frame that tariff as to make the revenue equal, and no more than equal, to the needs of the public, but my hon. friend is perhaps a little too young in public life to remember that the hon. Minister of Finance and the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce declaimed against these surpluses in the most strident tones in days gone by. They said that they were simply sums plundered from the pockets of a long suffering people, and that if these surpluses should be piled up in the future in this way it simply meant so much money abstracted from the pockets of the people and the query of these hon. gentlemen was : How long will the country be able to stand a drain of that kind ? My hon. friend from North Ontario referred to the great prosperity of the country and my hon. friend from Hochelaga spoke of the smile upon the face of the farmer. Let me say to my hon. friend that the smile upon the face of the farmer is never broader than when the members of the government and hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House claim that this prosperity is due absolutely to their policy. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we have prosperity in this country, and no one is more thankful for it than the Conservatives throughout the country. No one is more thankful for it than the gentlemen who sit on the left of Mr. Speaker, but let me say to my hon. friend from North Ontario, that I think it is due to causes, for the most part, very much beyond the control of any government and to causes which have created prosperity not only in Canada, but throughout the world. As far as the Northwest Territories of Canada are concerned, let me also say that I would have supposed that the splendid crops which we have had in the Northwest during the three past years have had more to do with the prosperity of the country and with the splendid immigration which has gone into that country than has any administrative act of the party now in control of public affairs.

Now, having said so much, let me, before discussing the matters referred to in the speech from the Throne, call the attention of the government and the country to the fact that this session is once more called at an inexcusably late date. Last year the session of parliament opened on the 12th of March. In speaking in the debate upon the address, I made no reference to the lateness of that session, because we had all been sorry to learn at that time that the health of the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was not all that could be desired. That difficulty has been removed. My right hon. friend has been restored to health and yet this parliament has been summoned to meet His Excellency on the 10th of March this year. We all know that the sessions of parliament in this country cannot be concluded in a few weeks. We all know, as the right hon. Prime Minister said only two years ago, that an ordinary session of this parliament must extend to about five months. That was my right hon. friend's view when he introduced a measure into this House for the purpose of increasing the indemnity of members of this House from $1,000 to $1,500. He has called us here on the 10th of March with every expectation that we shall have a session of five months' duration, according to his own view, and I would like to know from my right hon. friend when he comes to address the House, why it is that this session has been so unduly postponed. Could I suggest the reason to my right hon. friend ? If I am to believe the hon. Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Lemieux) it was the intention of the government at the end of the past year to have gone to the country. My. hon. friend, the Solicitor General, stated in so many words that the right hon. Prime Minister of this country proposed to give as a new year's gift to the people of Canada, a general election. Possibly that may be an excuse for the lateness of the session. I do not know whether my right hon. friend will be inclined to rely upon that as a reason. Possibly he will and possibly he will not, but, however, whether the Solicitor General was correct or not, the government, if they had any such intention, have shrunk from an appeal to the people of the country, and in view of what has taken place during the past few weeks we all conclude that the government shrank from that appeal with very good reason. We have had certain by-elections during the past few weeks and I did not observe in the speech of my hon. friend from North Ontario, or in the speech of my hon. friend from Hochelaga, any congratulation extended to the government upon the results of these elections. We have had these congratulations in very bountiful profusion on former occasions, but I observed that on this occasion these hon. gentlemen wisely kept silence as to the results of these by-elections. A change has come over some of the constituencies in this country. Three years ago the constituencies which have recently been called upon to elect members to this House returned a Liberal majority of 5,300 votes as against a total Conservative majority of 264 votes, while, in the elections which have recently taken place, there was a total Liberal majority of 1,717 votes and a total Conservative majority of 1,060 votes, indicating a reversal of opinion in regard to the policy of the government of very considerable moment in this country. I would have been inclined to have asked my hon. friend from North Ontario why it is that with such an abounding prosperity in the country ; with the wisest government, according to his view, that could be devised under human conditions, this somewhat singular reversal of opinion should have been experienced. I think it was my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) who declared that this government is almost as absolutely perfect as we can expect in this world.

Mr. HAGGART. He shakes his head.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wonder that my hon. friend (Mr. Rivet) disclaims it, and I apologize to him; it was the hon. gentleman from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) who said that the government is as perfect as it humanly can be. And yet with all this abounding prosperity and this immaculate government, what is the secret of this singular reversal of opinion at by-elections which in this country in the past have notoriously gone in favour of the government of the day. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) was very anxious at the close of last session to test this transcontinental railway measure before the people, He was loud in his challenges to us, that on the earliest possible occasion we should come before the electors and debate the Grand Trunk Pacific policy. Well, the hon. gentleman has been in East Lambton, and in East Bruce, and he has had an opportunity of explaining the advantages of this statesmanlike measure with all the force and vigour of which he is so peculiarly capable. But the Minister of Customs only succeeded by his efforts in quadrupling the Conservative majority in East Bruce and in increasing the previous Conservative majority in East Lambton by more than 300 votes. I do not know if the Minister of Customs will be so loudly boastful with his challenges in the future. However, that may be, there is one constituency in Canada which has given its opinion in strong and unmistakable terms as to the merits of this transcontinental railway measure. I refer to the city of St. John now represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel). I suppose that my hon. friends on the government benches are not so sensitive that I may not remind them, that a majority of nearly 1,000 for the Liberal candidate in 1900, has been converted into a majority of nearly 300 for the Conservative candidate in 1904.

And, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that the government of this country paid a somewhat big price for the purpose of endeavouring to save themselves in the city of St. John. We know what took place here last session. We know of the resignation of my friend, Mr. Blair, as Minister of Railways and Canals, and we know of the speech which he made during the past session; and I may say, Sir, that in the appointment of Mr. Blair to be chairman of the railway commission,—a very important tribunal in this country,—we have as extraordinary an incident as ever was known in our public affairs. What was the attitude of Mr. Blair with regard to the scheme which was then proposed by the government ? His attitude is well known not only in this House but in this country. He had been Minister of Railways from 1896 to the summer 1903. As Minister of Railways he had acquired an experience in respect to transportation matters in Canada which was not possessed by any other member of the cabinet. But when the time came for him to decide whether or not he could support the policy of the government, we found him resigning his portfolio as Minister of Railways, and becoming a private member of this House. And we found something more. We found Mr. Blair denouncing, in the most unmeasured terms the proposal which the government brought down and which he could not support. I shall quote a few of the references of Mr. Blair to the scheme. The legislation of last session created a most important tribunal in this country. That tribunal has judicial functions as important as are exercised by any court known in this land. In appointing a gentleman to the position of chairman of that commission, the government ought to select a man of experience in railway affairs, a man of the utmost possible integrity, a man of calm and reasonable judgment, a man, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion. Let us consider the action of the government in appointing Mr. Blair to be chairman of that commission in connection with what Mr. Blair said, not only of the measure itself, but of his colleagues in the government. And let us see what possible excuse there could have been for the government appointing that gentleman with these words unretracted. Last session Mr. Blair said :—

> What does the right hon. gentleman mean when he says :
> We cannot wait because time does not wait.
> I think, Mr. Speaker, and I say it with all respect to my right hon. friend, that it would have been as correct if not so poetic for him to have said : We cannot wait because Senator Cox cannot wait. * * * * It must be because there is an absence of real, good, substantial argument to sustain the case itself, and my hon. friends feel obliged to appeal to the prejudices and feelings, and to arouse the passions of the people of Canada in order to carry through a measure which, on its merits, they would have no hope whatever of carrying.

These are the words of Mr. Blair who has been appointed by this government to the chairmanship of one of the most important judicial tribunals in Canada. And what further have we from the gentleman who has been appointed to this position of trust ; as a man possessed of the experience and judgment necessary to fill such a high position. Mr. Blair continued :—

Now, I want to know also, in all calmness and all frankness, from the members of this parliament, from whence comes this irresistible and compulsive pressure under which we must drive this thing through now ? The thing was never mooted before, and the government took no action, until the Grand Trunk Railway conceived that it would be in their own interest to have the railway project liberally aided by the parliament of Canada which they desired to promote. That is the secret of the whole business ; that is where it originated. All the other considerations fell upon unheeding ears. All these dangers never struck our minds, never seem to have entered into our calculations ; it never occurred to us that we were under such imminent peril ; it never was suggested by any one that the great future of Canada, the very life of Canada was at stake—until the Grand Trunk Railway Company made a call and laid their proposition before my hon. friends and colleagues of the government.

And, Mr. Speaker, how was that language understood by members of the government? There could be but one meaning attached to a portion of these remarks of Mr. Blair. What meaning was attached to this language by members of the government themselves in this House—and I call special attention to the fact that these words of Mr. Blair stand unretracted and not withdrawn before the government and before the people of Canada. Here is what my hon. friend the Minister of Justice said about it ; this is the sense in which he understood Mr. Blair's words. Speaking in the session of 1903, as reported at pages 9017 and 9018 of Hansard, he said this :

> With reference to the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, it seems to me—and I regret he is not here to-night—that he might have found some better explanation of the course adopted by the government than to suggest that we were moving forward at the beck and call of Senator Cox. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman owes it to himself, owes it to this country, owes it to the respect his ex-colleagues bear for him, and which he is presumed to bear for them, to explain what he meant. We should stop here now this cry which has gone forward throughout the country that this scheme is one propounded by Senator Cox for his personal benefit. We should stop the suggestion, the vile contemptible insinuation, that we are acting from unworthy motives.

Mark the words, Mr. Speaker: 'We should stop the vile, contemptible insinuation that we are acting from unworthy motives.' So that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, speaking for the government, attributed to Mr. Blair the charging against his late colleagues not only of an unwise measure, but of unworthy motives ; and, as I said before, Mr. Blair has not withdrawn one word of those charges. And yet this government has appointed him to the chairmanship of that railway commission. What further did the Minister of Justice say on that occasion ?

> If the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals was serious, this is the place, and now is the time to make a charge, if he has one to make and to prove it. It is unfair that that expression should be allowed to travel throughout this country and furnish a text for every Tory scribbler who wants to attack the Liberal party. I say now that I defy the hon. gentleman to make or successfully maintain any charge against the government in this connection, and I say that this is the place and now is the time to make good any charge if he has one to make. On the same day, when the hon. gentleman used the expression I have quoted in this House, in another place, under this same roof, a similar expression was used. One could understand that a gentleman, speaking at the time under the influence of the generous hospitality of the leader of the opposition, should so far forget himself in an after-dinner speech as to make use of an expression of that sort, but it is unpardonable on the part of an hon. gentleman who came here carefully prepared to deliver a speech, and in cold blood make such an unfounded insinuation.

Has that insinuation been withdrawn, Mr. Speaker ? Are the government able to point to one word of Mr. Blair withdrawing it ? Have the government in their possession any written retractation by Mr. Blair of the language he used in that speech ? If not, it does seem to me an extraordinary incident that a gentleman who made charges of that kind against his late colleagues should be appointed to a position of trust and confidence without first being called upon to retract those charges and withdraw those insinuations. But that is not all. My hon. friend, who now so worthily fills the position of Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) at that time, a private member of the House, although known to be in the confidence of the government, referred to Mr. Blair in these terms :

> In fact the temper that permeates the whole speech of the ex-minister shows that the true inwardness of his resignation has not been yet revealed to us. His speech is full of dread and alarm, as it is full of bitterness. It is an onslaught on his colleagues, and it would reflect on the Prime Minister, if we did not know the Prime Minister and his colleagues as well.

Now, let me quote again, in a somewhat different aspect, the language of Mr. Blair, and let us see how far the government were justified, in view of the quotations which I shall give, in appointing this gentleman to the position he now fills. I would have supposed that a man called to act as chairman of the Railway Commission of Canada, a commission with such important duties, such wide functions and jurisdiction, must, at least, in the opinion of the government, be a man whose judgment in matters of transportation would be worth something. I would have supposed that the government would not appoint to that position a man whose judgment was of no value or whose opinion could be influenced by passion or self-interest. We were told during the last session, and we have been told today by the mover and seconder of this address, that this transcontinental railway scheme is one of great value to the country.

We were told by my right hon. friend last session that not only was it a wise and statesmanlike measure, but that it was absolutely necessary for the salvation of the country, that by this great measure we were to guard against the danger of the suspension of the bonding privilege by the United States. By his appointment to the chairmanship of the Railway Commission, Mr. Blair has been certified by the government to be a man in whose judgment and integrity they have full confidence. Well, let us hear the opinion of Mr. Blair, reiterated over and over again, of this statesmanlike measure of the government. He says in his speech :

My quarrel with the government so far as this portion of the undertaking is concerned, rests almost entirely upon the consideration that they are plunging headlong into this thing, in a most unwise, injudicious, and unbusinesslike way, when by a little pause, by a year or two of delay to get information, we might be put in possession of facts which would justify us in proceeding.

Then, he continues :

A more absolutely unworkable, and in the opinion of every railway man in the country, a more senseless suggestion it would be difficult to make.

Further on he says :

We are being led in a kind of hysterical frenzy, it seems to me, to adopt ideas that are wholly and absolutely impracticable.

He continues :

Is there a well-grounded fear that the Grand Trunk Railway Company will not allow us, two or three years, hence, to build and make them a present of this line, that they will not accept it ?

Further on he says :

But, Sir, I maintain that in respect to this duplication of the Intercolonial Railway by the extension from Quebec to Moncton, there is no necessity, there is no reason, there is no justification, there is no object, good bad or indifferent, to be attained. Yes ; it is absolutely useless. It is a total and absolute waste of the public money. It is not only a destruction of the Intercolonial Railway, but it is a sheer unjustifiable squandering of the public money.

This is the gentleman who has been summoned by the government to preside over the deliberations of the Railway Commission and to mete out equal justice to the railway corporations on the one hand and to the people of this country on the other. Again he says :

And now, Sir, the people who live along the Intercolonial Railway are to be deprived of these advantages without rhyme and without reason, without a particle of justification and without a particle of warrant, and while the government is doing this, they are at the same time wasting a vast amount of public money in order to do it.

Further on :

We are saying that we did not know what we were doing—that we did not care what we were doing. It suits our purpose now to destroy entirely what we have done, and to belittle all that has been the result of our last policy. That is what is being proposed in this policy to-day. I protest against it. * * * * This proposal is absolutely unjustifiable, and the people of this country will not stand it. Not all the influence which the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway can bring to bear on the electorate will justify the outrage proposed to be perpetrated.

The experiences of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs in East Lambton and Lambton and East Bruce would seem to bear out the prophecy Mr. Blair then made. Further on he says :

It is not a commercial line we are building, it is a political line. * * * * Put this question how you will, turn it over, turn it back, examine it right and left, inside and outside, it fails to present to me—I do not know how it may appear to other hon. gentlemen in this House—a single redeeming feature in any phase of it from beginning to end.

Then, in conclusion, he says :

We are spending the money and we are getting nothing for it. I know whereof I speak in this regard. I am satisfied that the position I take is sound and cannot be controverted.

Well, Sir, that was not all. The government replied to Mr. Blair. How ? By charging him with unworthy motives. I do not wish to weary the House by reading a number of extracts which I have under my hand, but I may quote at least one or two. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who, I regret to learn, is not in very good health, and not able to be present, but whose health I trust may be soon restored—that hon. gentleman was put up by the government to reply to the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair). And what was the reply of the hon. member for North Norfolk to the charge of unworthy motives made by Mr. Blair against his former colleagues ? I take it for granted that the hon. member for North Norfolk spoke on that occasion with the approval of the government, and I find that this was the reply he made. I find on reference to page 8490 of 'Hansard' that the hon. member for North Norfolk used this language :

His position yesterday, lacking as it did that dignity which ought to pertain to the position of a gentleman who resigns on high patriotic and moral grounds, and the bitterness of his attack convinced me that there is something beneath and beyond the ostensible reason assigned for his leaving the cabinet.

Perhaps it would have suited my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Railways better if he had had the disposal of the contracts for building that road, but I think it will be constructed fully as cheaply under the arrangements arrived at.

The answer, therefore, to Mr. Blair was the tu quoque argument. The hon. gentleman attributed to Mr. Blair motives which are unworthy certainly of any member in this House, and particularly of any member of a cabinet entrusted with the granting of public contracts. Then the hon. member for North Norfolk continued as follows :

There is no subsidy in this contract. Now, Sir, I desire to refer to the wise provisions in the public interests contained in this agreement. Care has been taken in this respect. We have not a Minister of Railways and Canals with carte blanche in the construction of a trans-continental line. This would be a very pleasant condition, no doubt, for a public official to occupy.

And the present Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Emmerson) said :

And in that very attitude, it seems to me, he shows an inconsistency which would almost lead one to conjecture that the real cause of his resignation was not the building of another line from the province of Quebec to the maritime provinces.

And my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Russell) was particularly bitter. I shall not quote his words, but they can be found by any hon. gentleman who desires to examine 'Hansard.' And my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross) used the following language with regard to Mr. Blair.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. And I stand by it now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for Victoria tells us that he stands by these words :

I wonder if he had been asked to be the leader of this great commission that is to conduct this railway policy, what his conduct would be and where we would find him now. Well, let me say to them that an ex-Minister of Railways and Canals does not count much in this country now, and when a man loses his seat in the government he loses his power and his influence.

That was the view of the situation entertained by my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross). The matter, therefore, stood in this position. There was a charge of absolute folly, of an absolute waste and squandering of public money made by Mr. Blair against the government. Not only that, but there was the charge, as interpreted by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), of unworthy motives in the making of this contract, which has been so much lauded. The government proposed to bring on an election. About that there cannot be much doubt. We have it on the authority of my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux). We also have the fact that campaign literature was distributed throughout the country. We also had the government putting up their candidates in the majority of constituencies, and making every possible preparation for a general election. But, if all tales be true, a man came from New Brunswick and told my right hon. friend that that province was not in very good shape, and could not be counted on if Mr. Blair should take a part in the fight. What followed ? It was felt that it would be much better to have Mr. Blair disappear, and negotiations were entered into with the view of procuring his silence. And with all these charges of unworthy motives and absolute folly unretracted and still ringing in their ears, the government appointed this gentleman to one of the highest positions at their disposal. I do not know what explanation my right hon. friend will give us, but this much must be said of Mr. Blair, that if the government have given him this certificate, both of ability and character, by appointing him chairman of the Railway Commission, every one of these hon. gentlemen opposite who attacked him, every one who called him shifty, as the hon. member for Hants did, and who belittled him in every way and imputed unworthy motives to him—every one of these gentlemen must do one of two things. They must either rise in their place and condemn the government for having appointed Mr. Blair to that position or apologize to Mr. Blair for the unfounded attacks they had made on him.

Mr. Speaker, the commission which has been appointed is one which has most important judicial duties to perform, and certain administrative duties also. It will have control over vast public and private interests, and it should be composed of men of the highest ability and absolutely beyond suspicion. Mr. Blair has charged the government with unworthy motives. He has denounced their transcontinental railway scheme as a wanton and senseless waste of public money. Not one of these charges has he ever retracted. On the other hand, the government have declared that Mr. Blair was actuated by unworthy motives. The men they put up to reply to Mr. Blair belittled him in every possible way. They called him shifty, insincere, and even treacherous. Yet the government have appointed this man to this important position. Was it or was it not their object to remove Mr. Blair by this means from their path in the province of New Brunswick and throughout the country ? Can any other conclusion than that such was their object be drawn by any fair minded man in this House or country ? If there be any other conclusion which can be drawn, I have no doubt that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), with that ability and ingenuity which always characterizes his utterances in this House, will be able to devise some reason for the appointment to this commission of a gentleman so opposed to the railway policy of the government.

This commission is an important one, and when the government, during last session, called upon us to vote large salaries for the men who were to compose it, there was not very much opposition from this side of the House. There was not from myself any word of protest. We realized that the men who should be called on to perform the duties of that commission ought to be men who would command a liberal salary. But, if I might venture to make a suggestion it seems to me that when the Appropriation Bill for that purpose was before the House, we hardiy expected that men such as those who have been appointed to assist Mr. Blair would have been selected.

I have not one word to say against either of these gentlemen. My friend, Hon. Mr. Bernier, filled the position of Minister of Inland Revenue very creditably, I think, but I do not know that he is a man who has had much experience in railway matters. And I venture to say, speaking of him and of Mr. Mills, that gentlemen might have been found anywhere throughout this country, equally capable of performing their duties, as members of the Railway Commission, for one-half the salaries voted for the members of this commission last year. I do not know wherein the special strength of the Railway Commission is to be found as at present constituted. Has any of these gentlemen appointed to the commission—outside of Hon. Mr. Blair at least—any special experience in railway affairs? Is there one of them who has studied the question of transportation, who can unravel the mysteries of railway accounts? Or, so far as that is concerned, are we to have, in effect, a fourth member of the tribunal, a man trained in railway work, a man who has not only a theoretical but a practical acquaintance with the problems of transportation, a man who will be able when called upon to perform the duties which should be performed by the members of this commission? So far as I am concerned, I did not expect that the commission would be constituted just in this way, and I should doubt very much, under its present constitution, whether we shall receive from that tribunal all the benefits we were led to expect when the measure was brought before the House.

Now, having said so much, let me come to the question of the transcontinental railway itself. And let me say, first, that I do not understand that this is the time for me to discuss the details of the measure which is to be submitted by the government. I do not propose to follow the example of the mover and seconder of the address in that regard; but I do propose to ask the government a question and to place before them certain pronouncements of their own during the past session. I would ask the government why it was that any changes whatever were necessary in this measure which was heralded to us during the past session as the very acme and climax of statesmanship? Now, there is no doubt that the government, last session, regarded this contract as absolutely fair to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I have under my hand the statement of more than one member of the government in that regard. My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) stated in so many words that this was a contract not only of great advantage to the government, but also very advantageous to the Grand Trunk Railway Company as well. I will quote his words, because he spoke well on in the debate and after mature consideration. He said, as reported at page 9361 of 'Hansard,' 1903:—

> I believe a really good bargain may be one which is to the advantage of both parties. I think that this is notably an instance of this sort.

And I want to press upon the attention of my right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and want him to answer if he can when he comes to address the House, this fact, that the government stated, explicitly and definitely over and over again, during last session, that the Grand Trunk Railway and the gentlemen whose names were affixed to the contract were absolutely bound, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company had had submitted to them every syllable of that contract, and not only that, but, as the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) said the interpretation of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of the provisions of that contract was exactly the same as the interpretation of the government. So, we have two propositions—first that this was an absolutely fair contract to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and, second, that the gentlemen named in the contract, gentlemen interested in the Grand Trunk Railway Company, were absolutely bound by the provisions of the contract and could not possibly get rid of the obligation. Let us see what these hon. gentlemen said. My hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said:

> It required the credit of the Grand Trunk Company of Canada, standing behind the Grand Trunk Pacific, to consummate this bargain. It would have been done, in no other way. We have the entire strength, resources and character of the Grand Trunk Company of Canada behind the Grand Trunk Pacific; the two are united together—a fortunate occurrence of circumstances a rare opportunity which the government has had the wisdom to seize upon; and by seizing upon it they have secured the construction of a transcontinental line upon terms that are, to say the least, surprisingly favourable.

And he said, further on:

> But we have perfected an arrangement which we might not have been able to make twelve months hence. We have got into this arrangement a great company which perhaps might then see the matter in a different light, or possibly not be in a position to take hold of the contract and enter into the stipulations it has done. When you have a good thing, take it.

And my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) said:

> But, Sir, we give them this contract, made in good faith not with empty promoters, not with people who are irresponsible, but with men who are the most capable railway men in Canada, with men who have given every guarantee of good faith, with men who are prepared to back our undertaking in a manner no company ever did before.

And the hon. Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) declared—and I have his words under my hand—that this proposition submitted by the government with regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company was an infinitely better proposition than that which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had, so far as the prospects in the Northwest were concerned. He pointed out that this railway was going through a better country and going through it at a time when the country was being rapidly settled ; and he showed, to his own satisfaction and, I think, to the satisfaction of every member on both sides of this House, that the proposition was one which must result in very great financial profit to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the people interested in it. And he said this also :

> And yet, we are asked to believe that after a little while the Grand Trunk will fail to carry out its contract, and it wont go on. What does that argument amount to ? What is the Grand Trunk going into this scheme for ? It is because it has a magnificent system of railways in the eastern portion of Canada, because there is an enormous and growing traffic in the west, the Grand Trunk wants to get in there, and by means of this railway is going to get in. Moreover, its thousands of miles of railway all over Canada are going to be connected to the growing trade in western Canada, they are going to do a large and profitable business in consequence. * * * * And it is only by carrying out the terms of this contract that they can get any business from the west, or over the western line. So I think it must be clear that we may feel ourselves reasonably safe and reasonably well protected.

And the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) who spoke late in the debate and after mature consideration, said :

> Sir, we make a clean-cut proposition embodied in a contract signed and sealed with a reputable corporation of great resources, which is going ahead with the project as rapidly as possible.

And what did my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) say ?. I have no doubt he has forgotten it by this time. Let me remind him :

> The government's plan is there, in black and white, duly signed—signed by men of repute, signed by the ablest railway men of the world, I believe.

Why did not the government call upon these men of repute to carry out the contract without change ? For—not to go into the details of the contract—every one knows that every single change proposed to be made in the contract is a concession to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. If this is 'there in black and white,' and signed by these able men, why has the government seen fit to throw away a good bargain and make it worse for the people of this country than it was before. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs continued :

> These men are not mere promoters. Mr. Charles M. Hays was declared by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) two years ago to be the ablest railway man on the continent. Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson is known. Mr. Wainwright is known ; Mr. John Bell, of Belleville, is known. These are the men who have signed that contract, and under that contract there is to be provided a line from ocean to ocean, with its steamers on the Pacific to trade with the Orient, with its steamers on the Atlantic to carry the products of our western fields and of all portions of the Dominion to the furthermost portions of the earth. That is what our scheme means.

Why was it not carried out ? These prophecies sound much like the prophecies of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to the fast Atlantic service six years ago. There is a marked similarity between the words of the Minister of Customs which I have quoted and the words of the Prime Minister in Toronto, in 1897, when he declared that the fast Atlantic service was an accomplished fact.

But that is not all, Sir. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) is on record ; when I desired to incorporate into that measure a provision making certain provisions of the contract binding on the Grand Trunk Railway, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said :

> We have no assurance of officials that is not expressed in the words of the contract.

That is to say that everything in the words of the contract, relating to the Grand Trunk Railway represented the assurances of the officials of the Grand Trunk Railway. The language of my hon. friend means that or it means nothing and there are other quotations from the words of the Finance Minister which I have not under my hand even stronger in that regard than those I have just read.

And what did the Prime Minister say ? He said :

> I do not deny that the Grand Trunk Railway is at the bottom of this enterprise, and that being so if the Grand Trunk Company undertakes to manage that line and pay a rent for it, it seems to me that any man of intelligence must see that they must use that road or otherwise they would have to operate it at their own loss. Why should the Grand Trunk go into that enterprise if it does not mean to carry it out? * * * It cannot default upon the eastern part, because if it defaults upon the eastern part, it defaults upon the western part. It cannot default upon one part without defaulting upon the whole, and therefore we hold them tight to their bargain and they cannot deviate from it.

If that provision of the contract was binding surely the whole contract was to be binding and surely the Grand Trunk Railway Company could not deviate from one single provision of the contract if they proposed to carry that out.

Well what happened ? It seems that about the time the government intended to bring on the elections, from which, as I have already said they afterwards shrank, it was considered desirable that the deposit required by the contract should be put up. Accordingly, an official statement was handed out by the government on the eighteenth of last December, was printed in every government organ throughout the country and was commented on in the editorial columns of the government press as indicating that this enterprise was going on without amendment and in its entirety, and that substantially the security required by the contract had been put up. Here is the official statement handed out by the government, which I am quoting from the Toronto 'Globe' of December 19, 1903 :—

The Grand Trunk Railway Company has deposited one million pounds of their guaranteed stock as security for the carrying out of the agreement entered into last session between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company subject to ratification of their shareholders at a general meeting. Inasmuch as the contract requires cash or government securities for deposit, legislation will be required to confirm the acceptance of the securities which have been deposited, though such securities are worth to-day more than par and their value is unquestionable.

Now that was the government's view of the position. The Grand Trunk Railway were prepared to go on, they had gone on by depositing not five million dollars in cash but by depositing their guaranteed securities to the extent of one million pounds sterling, and these were alleged in the government press throughout the country to be worth more than that amount of cash.

What was the view of Mr. C. M. Hays, the able manager of the Grand Trunk Railway ? He confirmed the statement of the government and said this, as reported in a leading organ of the government, the Toronto 'Globe,' after his return from Great Britain. Mr. Hays is quoted as follows :—

The Grand Trunk Pacific will certainly be built, said Mr. Hays. The Grand Trunk never had any difficulty in raising the money, and will not have any in carrying out the transcontinental project. The securities deposited with the government are better than the cash equivalent. They were deposited because of convenience, not because of any failure to raise the money. There was a delay of a few days, but the time allowed by the government was rather limited. Neither have we violated any moral obligations to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk or broken faith with the government. The Grand Trunk possessed these securities for the purpose of the company and they were utilized.

As to the building of the road, the construction will be begun in the spring. Our first object will be to get the east connected with the Great Lakes for summer traffic and then to give Winnipeg connection with the east. The people of the west want more railway facilities and we intend to give it to them as quickly as possible.

Now what does all this mean ? It means in the first place that the government of this country, not only through private members on the other side of the House, speaking with the approval of the government, but through ministers of the Crown as well, declared that this contract was not only perfectly fair but of great advantage and profit to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. In the second place, by an official statement of the government it was declared that the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the 18th of December put up one million pounds sterling of guaranteed securities as the deposit required by the terms of the Act, and the government accepted that deposit ; and Mr. Hays, speaking of the deposit, said it was perfectly regular and within the power of the Grand Trunk Company, and that construction would be begun in the spring, not under the terms of any amended contract, but under the contract as it was approved by this House. What then has happened ? If Mr. Hays and his associates were ready to go on and had deposited these securities, if the railway was to be commenced in the spring, and to be constructed with all possible speed, how does it happen that the government of this country has gone to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and apparently asked them to accept further concessions for which the Grand Trunk Railway Company had never asked. If we are to believe Mr. Hays, and he is a gentleman worthy of every belief, the Grand Trunk Railway did not ask for any amendment at that time ; they had put up their one million pounds of guaranteed stock and the government had accepted that and all that was necessary in order to carry through the scheme in its entirety without any concessions in the future, was legislation in this parliament confirming the deposit with the government of that guaranteed stock. Under these circumstances how can it be that the government is coming to the people and to the parliament of this country and asking that any change whatever should be made in the provisions of this contract which was heralded to us, not only in parliament but out of parliament, as the very acme and climax of statesmanship. The contract has been changed; I will not enter into details, but it has been changed in the very teeth of declarations of this government during the past session, and it has been changed under remarkable circumstances. The first announcement of the changes comes not from the government of this country but from the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, who heralds these changes to the people of Canada. It is he who announces that this contract, made under these conditions, this contract so advantageous for the Grand Trunk Railway, this contract which the Grand Trunk Railway Company is perfectly willing to carry out is not to be adhered to but that further concessions, the effect of which we cannot yet understand or fully appreciate are to be made to the Grand Trunk Railway Company ; apparently without any request whatever from them, if we are to believe the statement of Mr. Hays to which I have just alluded. I think that in reference to all of this, some information will be required from my right hon. friend the Prime Minister.

If this contract was a good one for the Grand Trunk Railway, why should the government give to the Grand Trunk Railway further concessions? If the Grand Trunk Railway Company were bound by the terms of this contract, why should the government amend it? If the promoters of this contract, bound by the terms of the contract, put up £1,000,000 of guaranteed stock, why did not the government avail themselves of that security which they had accepted, and why did they not insist that the contract should be carried out? Why have the government gone to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and pressed further concessions upon them? Have these amendments been made at the instance of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company? Are the negotiations in writing? If so they must certainly be laid on the Table of the House and we must find out whether or not the statements made in December last by the government on the one hand and by Charles Hays on the other hand are true or not. The elections were then impending. The Solicitor General has told us so. I suppose that my right honourable friend will not impute any want of knowledge to a gentleman so soon to be taken into the cabinet? The elections were at that time impending. Then we had this guarantee of stock put up, then we had the assurance of Mr. Hays that the railway would be carried through under the contract without amendment, and then we had the press of the government throughout the country declaring that the contract would be carried out as then contemplated and that no change or amendment was to be made, or was necessary.

My honourable friend from North Ontario very properly called the attention of the government to certain matters which were not mentioned in the speech from the Throne. I do not know whether or not he desired to reflect upon his leaders in that regard, but he found it necessary to mention the acquisition of Newfoundland and tariff revision and one or two other matters which were not referred to in the speech from the Throne. I observe that there is no reference to tariff revison in the speech from the Throne. The year before last the explanation was put before the people of the country that the members of the government were going to attend the colonial conference, and for that reason, it was said, it would be inexpedient to make any revision of the tariff. Last year the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) speaking in the debate upon the address, said that no tariff changes should be made during the session because of the approaching meeting of the joint high commission to negotiate with the government of the United States. This year both these excuses fail unless my right hon. friend is prepared to say that a further meeting of the joint high commission is intended. I do not know whether any such meeting is intended. I really do not know whether that commission is still in existence, or whether it has been expressly dissolved, or has become a nonentity by eflux of time, but it is a long time since its deliberations have been carried on. However that may be, no excuse of that kind appears, and we have heard some remarkable statements from different members of the government as to the tariff. My right hon. friend last session folded his arms and in a somewhat dramatic style gave thanks, that having begun life as a protectionist, he had now become a free trader, and he reproached me, because, as he said, exactly the opposite result had obtained in my case. But, my right hon. friend has spoken since then. The other day in Montreal he told us that he was neither a protectionist nor a free trader, but a practical man. He is not in accord with one of his colleagues and I am astonished that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) still continues to hold his portfolio because he has been preaching a strong protectionist doctrine in the province of Quebec. I think that the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) has also been making some pretty strong declarations in that province, declarations absolutely inconsistent with the doctrines of my right hon. friend, especially inconsistent with the speeches of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the campaign in Yarmouth 15 or 18 months ago, and more particularly inconsistent with certain campaign literature which is being distributed by my hon. friends opposite throughout the western part of this country, where a strong free trade sentiment is supposed to prevail. I have been fortunate enough to obtain a copy of this valuable document. I have no doubt that my right hon. friend has a large supply of this literature, but in case he has not, I may be able to send a copy over to him.

This document consists for the most part of quotations from speeches from myself, Mr. Pope, Mr. Bell, Mr. Northrup, Mr. Sproule, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Clancy, Mr. Blain, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Brock and Mr. Henderson, in which we have expressed our opinion that we should have a policy in Canada which would afford adequate protection to all the industries of this country and would give the Canadian market to Canadians in respect to all the legitimate industries of this country. After quoting these opinions, the document which has been extensively circulated in the west proceeds as follows:

Summarizing the situation, several things are clear.

It is delightful to have my hon. friends on the other side of the House clear on any question that arises, and especially on this question. This, I think, is the first occasion on which there has been any clear statement of their views since 1896. These conclusions are divided up into paragraphs.

It is something like the platform adopted at the Ottawa conference, and for the benefit of the House and to remind my hon. friend of the policy of his party in the west, at least, I will read these paragraphs one by one.

1. The Conservatives by formal resolution and by speeches in parliament, have declared for high protection ; for a tariff according to their leader, Mr. R. L. Borden, as high as the United States tariff, which averages over fifty per cent.

2. The Conservative policy is the same as that of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, whose only purpose is to increase, by means of the tariff, the price of all goods they have to sell.

3. The Liberal policy is directly opposed to the policy of protection. The Conservative papers and politicians recognized this and vilify Messrs. Sifton, Fielding and Fisher and other ministers who have prominently championed the consumers.

4. Support of the Conservatives means support for a policy that will increase the price of all manufactured goods.

It must not be amiss in passing to remind the House that since this government came into power the price of nearly all commodities in Canada has increased by forty or fifty per cent.

5. Support of the Liberals means support for a policy calculated to make necessities low priced.

6. No matter what individuals may say, the two parties stand distinctly divided on the tariff. The Liberals for low tariff, the Conservatives for high tariff, and any voter who is interested in tariff matters can therefore have no difficulty in expressing his opinion at the poll.

We are glad, I may say, to have this clear and distinct exposition of the policy of the Liberal party in regard to the tariff, an exposition which none of the Ministers of the Crown have had the courage to make up to the present time. I trust that my right hon. friend will not pain my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) by repudiating any part of this programme and I should feel pained if my reference to this literature should result in any divergence or any friction between the hon. Minister of the Interior and my right hon. friend. I trust, therefore, that, when my right hon. friend arises in his place, he will at once accept this platform which has been laid down for him by his friends in the west under the guidance of the hon. Minister of the Interior and that he will at last explain to the people of this country in the terms of this document exactly what the Liberal policy is and will be.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, immediately before the House took recess at six o'clock, I had called attention to the absence of any mention of tariff reform in the speech from the Throne ; an omission which caught the eye of my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant), who specially referred to the subject. I regret that my hon. friend is not in the House just now, for I wish to say that I do not think he was quite himself when he was referring to the fact that the Hon. Geo. E. Foster had during the past year gone to the United Kingdom, on request, I believe, and delivered certain speeches there in favour of mutual preferential trade within the empire. I would have thought that my hon. friend (Mr. Grant) might have spared any sneer, if it were intended as a sneer, as to that ; because I think that without regard to party we may all be proud that Mr. Foster, speaking in the mother country as a Canadian, was considered, next to Mr. Chamberlain himself, as the ablest and most eloquent advocate of that great policy of mutual preferential trade.

Now, there is one matter which was referred to in the speech from the Throne in somewhat peculiar terms, and I call attention to it on account of the remarks of my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) last session. We are told in the speech :—

> A Militia Bill will be introduced containing several important amendments to the present law rendered necessary by the growth of the force and calculated to promote its efficiency.

My hon. friend from Haldimand, who speaks with the authority of an expert and who has taken a greater interest in this subject than perhaps any other hon. gentleman on that side of the House did not seem to consider last session that there had been any very effective growth of the militia force. I quote from Hansard what he then said :

> I have said that we are called upon to furnish the skeleton of a skeleton. I now state that we have actually turned out the shadow of the skeleton of a skeleton. Can anything so ghostly be longer called a militia force.

The hon. gentleman from Haldimand thus pronounced himself in the House, and no reply was given to him owing to the unfortunate absence at the time of the Minister of Militia ; but in the face of that, we are told that a Militia Bill will be introduced because it is rendered necessary by the growth of the force. I shall be prepared, however, to give the fairest possible consideration to any measure of the government which will tend to the efficiency of the militia force, and in saying so, I am speaking for my hon. friends on this side of the House, in so far as I at present know their views.

There is another remarkable omission in the speech from the Throne, and that is the utter absence of any reference whatever to the great question of provincial autonomy, which so especially concerns the people of the west. I believe that at the present time the people of the Territories are almost a unit in demanding for themselves the same powers of self-government which are enjoyed by the people of the older provinces. The Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) recognized some time ago—whether he does now or not—the importance of this subject, because on the 21st of March, 1901, three years ago, in writing to the premier of the Northwest Territories he said :

> I may say that I realize very fully the difficulties of the position in which the government and legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories is placed, and I admit that there is very much in the suggestions which are made in your letter and in the memorial regarding the necessity of a change in the constitutional and financial position of the Territories.
> Without at the present moment committing myself to any positive statement I am prepared to say that the time has arrived when the question of organizing the Territories on the provincial basis ought to be the subject of full consideration. It would appear to me that the better way of bringing the matter to a more definite position would be to arrange for a conference upon the subject between the representatives of your government and a committee of council representing the federal government.

That meeting has, I believe, taken place. The matter has been occupying the attention of the government for three years. My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) said that the question of tariff revision was now about to occupy the attention of the government. Well, if the government do not proceed any more rapidly with tariff revision than with provincial autonomy, three years will elapse before there will be any tariff revision and I do not know how much longer afterwards. Sir, the people of the Northwest Territories are entitled to the same rights of self-government as are enjoyed by the people of the older provinces. According to the census and according to the estimate made by the government of the number of settlers who went into that country last year, there are no fewer than 350,000 people in the Territories, and I have no double that by midsummer the population will perhaps be 400,000. Why should not the right of self-government be granted to them ; why should they not have the same rights over their public domain, their lands and minerals as are enjoyed by the provinces of eastern Canada ? Why should not the people of the Northwest Territories be entitled, if they see fit, to incur debt for the purpose of giving to themselves adequate railway development. The railway which is proposed by the government is a single line of railway running across the continent and no such line of railway unless it has sufficient branches, can ever meet the needs of the people of the Northwest Territories. They know best what they desire in that respect. They know what branch lines are necessary ; and if the people of Prince Edward Island, if the people of British Columbia, a province with a small population but with enormous resources ; if the people of the maritime provinces are entitled to deal with their lands and minerals ; if they are entitled to incur debt for railway development and for other necessary purposes ; why should not 400,000 people in the Territories have the same right. On what principle, for what reason is this right denied to them ? At present they have no right to incorporate a railway company ; they have no right to control their public lands or minerals ; they have no power to incur debt; they cannot incorporate a manufacturing company, or a transportation company, or a telegraph company, or an irrigation company, as stated by the Prime Minister of the Northwest Territories, and as I believe stated correctly. This matter has been under the consideration of the government, but it has not been deemed worthy of even passing mention in the speech from the Throne, three years after the Minister of the Interior said that it should receive the immediate attention of the government. And Sir, when last session the right hon. the Prime Minister was quoted as having expressed his belief, that many years should elapse before the people of the Northwest Territories ought to enjoy these full rights of self-government ; he reiterated his approval of that sentiment by saying 'hear, hear,' in response to my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche). On the other hand, the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) led us to believe, so far as one can understand his language, that this question would be taken up by the government during the coming session. An election was then considered somewhat imminent—I do not know whether that fact had any influence on the Minister of Finance at that time—but at all events, we have the usual spectacle that whenever the language of the Prime Minister is quoted as favouring the delay for many years in granting self-government of the Territories; against that is quoted the language of the Finance Minister which points to an exactly opposite conclusion. I would have thought, Sir, that this question of provincial autonomy was worthy of mention in the speech from the Throne, but it may be that I have misunderstood the attitude of the government on that policy. Let me refer for a moment to the attitude of the Minister of the Interior. Last year I advocated in this House that the people of the Northwest Territories might well be entitled to the control of their own public lands and minerals ; and I pointed out cogent reasons why the people of the Territories should not longer remain in tutelage, and should not for ever be under the control of the federal government. I took occasion to refer to certain safeguards which might be employed by this government so that the handing over of these Territories to the control of the people of the province might not be attended with any danger to the public interest. And, Sir, if anything were necessary to make it plain that this government did not intend to give to the Territories that full measure of control, which is intrusted to the people of the older provinces, it is the language of the Minister of the Interior last year in the debate on the Transcontinental Bill. What he said then was that this measure would not be of any cost to the people of Canada, because the sale of certain lands in the Northwest Territories which were not reserved for settlers would more than pay the total cost. In order that I may not do my hon. friend any injustice, let me quote his language, which is reported at page 8680 :

What I desire to say is this : There is probably, out of that 50,000,000 of acres of odd-numbered section—the even-numbered sections are kept for the poor man's homestead—20,000,000 or 25,000,000 at the present so far removed from communication as to be absolutely of no money value whatever. But in my judgment, within ten years from the time this railway is completed, 20,000,000 acres of land owned by the government at present will have acquired a value at least of $3 per acre. That is not a thing about which there is any question. We have seen it happen before, and we know it will happen again. I have quoted this to the House to show that, so far from the railway costing the people anything, the fact will be that the enhanced money value of the property of the government will be four times as great as will be necessary to pay for the road.

And in connection with the same matter he pointed out that he was about to bring in a measure providing for the sale of these lands. Therefore he clearly contemplates the policy of depriving the people of the Northwest Territories for all time to come of that control of their public lands, mines and minerals which is enjoyed by the people of every other province.

There is another matter to which I think we might have had some reference in the speech from the Throne ; and we are entitled to at least some expression of intention with regard to it from my right hon. friend when he comes to address the House. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) last year introduced a Bill for the purpose of amending the election law, and after some debate upon the measure, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) took it up, and spoke very forcibly and very wisely with regard to it. He referred to the evils which had manifested themselves throughout the country in connection with election matters, and appealed to hon. members on both sides of the House to earnestly take up the question and devise a measure which would put an end as far as possible to those scandals which have for years disgraced the proceedings of our election courts. My hon. friend said :

We must recognize, from the revelations of the election courts, that there have been manifestations in connection with elections which must be a cause of regret to men on both sides ; and if we approach the subject dispassionately, with a desire to bring about some improvement, I think something might be done.

Among other things my hon. friend spoke of the evil of trading off, as he termed it, election petitions. His language on that point is so forcible that I think it worthy of quotation :

With regard to the trading off of election petitions, it does seem a public scandal ; but on the other hand one-half of the petitions are filed without any knowledge or information, and there is no great harm in withdrawing them. But with a proper administration of our election laws, we might save a great deal of scandal and trouble that now exists. We should make an attempt in a non-partisan spirit, and if our hon. friends opposite will receive the suggestion in that spirit, we would be glad to meet them in a committee and undertake to bring about a reform in the law, not simply to the extent to which the hon. member for North Norfolk desires, but beyond that in other directions that may make for purity in elections.

I supported my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the endeavour, but I regret to observe that there is no mention of it in the speech from the Throne, and up to the present time we have had no expression of any intention on the part of the government to deal with this very important subject.

There is another matter to which no reference is made in the speech from the Throne, though it was the subject of a good deal of jubilation on the part of my hon. friends in days gone by. I do not know whether it has become so old that my right hon. friend has forgotten it ; but there was a time when we on this side of the House were taunted that this government, in the wisdom of their statesmanship, had solved the fast Atlantic service question in a way which should put us to the very blush. My right hon. friend was not so silent on this subject in days gone by, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other members of the government taunted us on this side of the House with what had been accomplished by the government. And now the subject is deemed of such little importance that it is not even mentioned in the speech from the Throne. Last year the hon. Postmaster General (Sir William Mulock) congratulated himself and the government and the country that not one single step had been taken in the direction of a fast Atlantic steamship service. What was the tone of my right hon. friend a few years ago ? Does he remember the day when he produced before a Toronto audience that famous telegram from the Minister of Finance ? Does he remember what he said on that occasion ?

To-day I have a telegram from my friend and colleague, Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, to this effect : 'Peterson has made to-day the deposit required by the contract.'

We have it announced in the speech from the Throne to-day that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company have made the deposit required by their contract. Well, I trust that more may be accomplished by the present deposit than was accomplished by the former one; because all that was accomplished by the former deposit and by the guarantee was that three or four years afterwards the guarantee was given up, and some five years afterwards we were called upon to vote an appropriation to return that deposit with interest. My right hon. friend on that occasion went further. He said:

> It is with joy indeed that I welcome this explosion of satisfaction at the announcement that this scheme has not failed, but that it is to be carried through. I know that in some quarters this idea of having this passenger traffic amongst us was not popular; but, Sir, let me say to you that if there is a patriotic idea in the land it is the idea that we should not only carry the freight, but carry the passengers between America and Europe. We can do it, we ought to do it, and now it is no longer in doubt.

I may mention for the benefit of my right hon. friend that that speech was made by him on the 7th day of October, 1897, just six years and a half ago. The language of my right hon. friend on that occasion was eloquent. It almost reminded one of some of the eloquent phrases in which he introduced the transcontinental railway measure last year. In fact, I do not know that at any time in his speech of last year he soared to greater heights than he did when he told the country that the fast Atlantic service was no longer a matter of doubt. Well, what have the government accomplished since? Has any step been taken? A good deal of water has run under the bridges since that time; the Boer war has been begun and ended; but nothing has been done for the fast Atlantic service. What do the government propose to do? Have they anything to say to the House with regard to this measure which is important not only to the maritime provinces, but to every province and every individual in Canada?

My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) referred also, and I trust in no fault-finding spirit, to the fact that the government had made no mention in the speech from the Throne of any step being taken towards rounding off this Confederation by including in it the Island of Newfoundland. I commend my hon. friend from North Ontario for the independence he has shown in calling attention to this omission in the speech from the Throne. It is worthy of the high opinion I have always had of that hon. gentleman, that he should have called the attention of the House to the omission of this all-important matter. Newfoundland has been called the 'sentinel of the St. Lawrence.' I should like to see it called the 'sentinel of Canada' in the St. Lawrence, and to see this confederation rounded out by bringing that island in as a part of this great Dominion of which we are all so proud. In the debate on the speech from the Throne last year, I did suggest to the government that it would be a step worthy of our country if Canada would take the initiative and approach the imperial government for the purpose of having settled once for all that troublesome question of the rights of the subjects of France on the shores of Newfoundland, and then submit such terms as would be acceptable to the people of Newfoundland and induce them to enter this Dominion. Indeed some time ago it was announced in the public press that the government were taking some steps in that direction, but there is no reference to anything of the kind in the speech from the Throne. I trust that the government have not been idle, and that my right hon. friend will be able to give us some information on this all-important subject.

I have already referred to the position of the Joint High Commission. It was stated by the hon. member for Norfolk last year in the debate on the address that the Joint High Commission would probably meet again in the near future, that statement was not contradicted by any member of the government, and I would like once more to ask my right hon. friend in what position that commission now stands. Is it still constituted and can it still be called together? If so, is it the intention of the government to take any further steps to have that commission meet again? My right hon. friend's memory cannot be so short that he does not recall the days gone by when he taunted the Conservative administration with not being able to come to a conclusion with the government of the United States about certain matters of interest to both countries. Surely he does not forget that, if the current report were true, a man went from the then opposition ranks on one occasion to Washington for the purpose of informing the government of the United States that better terms could be made with Canada after my right hon. friend came into office. I do not know whether that rumour was true or not, but I do know that these hon. gentlemen boasted of what they would accomplish if they only came into power and presented their sunny ways to the people of the United States. True, my right hon. friend has changed his opinion, as he frankly acknowledged to this House on more than one occasion, and he now finds that the people of the United States are disposed to have in view solely their own interests, and that any one advantage which the people of Canada might be able to offer to them, would be of infinitely more value in bringing about a bargain than all the sunny ways that even my right hon. friend is able to place at the disposal of the government of that country. My right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) still clings to his old delusions, because only a few weeks ago he declared in Toronto that one reason why we might take up this great question of mutual preferential trade within the empire was that it eventually might bring about reciprocity between this country and the United States. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we should approach the subject of mutual preferential trade on a higher ground. I think we should approach it in the hope and belief that by closer commercial ties between the colonies and dependencies of the empire and the mother country herself, we shall strengthen the ties that bind together all portions of the empire; and, if we look at the question merely from a material point of view, surely my right hon. friends the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister must admit that our market is in the mother country and not in the United States. And surely they must know that in the markets of the mother country, the strongest and most formidable competitors we have are the people of the United States. Therefore, when my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) proposes mutual preferential trade within the empire solely as a means of procuring reciprocity with the United States, I for one entirely disagree with him.

Let me now come to another subject, which has been before the Joint High Commission, and as to which my right hon. friend has made some rather important declarations, not only in this House, but on more than one occasion during recess. My right hon. friend says that he stands for greater power to negotiate treaties on behalf of Canada. If I understand him rightly, he wants Canada to have the absolute right to negotiate her own treaties with all countries, and that that right should in no respect be overborne or done away with by any imperial influence. Well, my right hon. friend has not always acted in that spirit because, when I took the ground during last session, and I think in the session before, that this government, in disallowing certain legislation of the province of British Columbia, was going beyond what the public interests demanded, he took the ground that the action of the government was governed entirely by imperial interests. I have never objected to imperial interests being considered, but I pointed out on that occasion that the very legislation which had been disallowed in the province of British Columbia had been allowed by the imperial government itself in other dependencies of the empire. I will stand for any greater powers which may be required for the fuller development of our national life. My right hon. friend looks upon the freedom of Canada as a gift. I consider it a birthright. He says that he gave a preference to the mother country because of the gift to us by the mother country of our splendid freedom. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that our freedom is not a gift but a birthright, and I consider further that the rights we have acquired with regard to the negotiating of treaties are not a gift but our own birthright, which comes to us gradually with the development of the country. Does my right hon. friend not know that in 1871, Sir John Macdonald was a commissioner to negiotiate a treaty with Washington? Does he not know that since 1880 Canada has not been included in any treaty without her consent? That was due to the initiative of Sir Alexander Galt. Does he not know that Sir Alexander Galt and Sir Charles Tupper negotiated since then treaties with France and Spain? Does he forget that Sir Charles Tupper went as Canadian commissioner to Washington in 1888, and that in the Joint High Commission itself, out of the five men who represented Canada, four were Canadians? My right hon. friend is trying to draw a red herring across the trail of the government in this regard.

The results of the Alaskan boundary commission—which I shall not discuss to-night, because the papers are not before the House—have been, in some respects at least, unfortunate for this country and have given rise to great dissatisfaction. My right hon. friend, either in an ebulition of anger or for the purpose of diverting the attention of the country from the question at issue, said we should have greater treaty making powers.

Now, I want to point out to my right hon. friend that the whole question of the Alaskan boundary was confided to Canada for the purpose of negotiating with the United States. A commisison was appointed in which there were four Canadians and one British commissioner, Lord Herschell; and to that commission were entrusted the most full and absolute powers with regard to the negotiations concerning the Alaskan boundary. Does my right hon. friend say that he objected to the presence of Lord Herschell on that commission, or that Lord Herschell in any way hampered or disagreed with the Canadian commissioners in the negotiations that went on? I do not think that he will say that, and I will tell him why. When a commission had to be appointed under the treaty with regard to the Alaskan boundary, it was my right hon. friend and his government who asked that one British commissioner at least should be appointed, Lord Alverstone, the chief justice of Great Britain. Surely, if one British commissioner was demanded by this government in a commission of three, my right hon. friend cannot complain of the presence of Lord Herschell in the commission in Washington. Last year the right hon. gentleman Rt. Hon. Mr. Wilfrid Laurier(was inclined to blame me because I said that I thought it would be well if this government had suggested to the imperial government that three Canadian commissioners should be appointed. He construed that into a charge against Lord Alverstone. I denied that my suggestion involved any such charge, and I deny it now. It is no insult to Lord Alverstone to say that I thought that, under a treaty so greatly concerning the interests of Canada, and relating to a question which was more thoroughly understood in Canada than anywhere else, it would be a proper thing, especially on the invitation of the British government, to ask that three Canadian commissioners be appointed. And I may remark in passing that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) who, I thought, spoke wisely on the question of the Alaskan boundary before the Canadian Club of Ottawa, remarked, in confirmation of my statement, that he would not have regarded it as revolutionary if the request had been made that three Canadian commissioners should be appointed. I agree with the Minister of the Interior that such a request would not be revolutionary. But, returning to the subject, I was discussing what took place in the proceedings of the Joint High Commission in connection with this question? My right hon. friend the Prime Minister laid before this House the protocols which were passed between the British commissioners and the United States commissioners, and the very first subject dealt with by the commission, according to these documents, was the Alaskan boundary. My right hon. friend wants Canada to negotiate her own treaties. But did not Canada on that occasion have the fullest possible opportunity to negotiate a treaty with regard to the Alaskan boundary? There are the protocols quoted in the speech of my right hon. friend two or three years ago, showing that this subject was first of all approached in the negotiations between the British and American commissioners. I would ask him, then, what greater treaty-making powers we could have than those conferred by the appointment of that commission? And what took place? After long delay, long deliberation, long negotiation, my right hon. friend and his colleagues surrendered to the foreign office of Great Britain the powers which had been conferred upon them in this matter. They themselves asked, as no agreement could be arrived at between the commissioners on either side, that the question should be relegated to the foreign office. And it was relegated to the foreign office. Well, while these negotiations were going on—I do not know whether they were going on before the commission or in the foreign office—a very important application was made by the United States. The United States desired Great Britain to make a certain modification of the convention known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. What was the position the British government took with regard to that? I will not quote again the language of Lord Lansdowne, which I have under my hand and which I quoted last year. Let it be sufficient to say that Lord Lansdowne, so far as one could understand his language, took the ground that until some arrangement was made for the adjustment between the two countries of the Alaskan boundary, the British government did not see its way clear to yield to the suggestion of the United States with regard to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. That was, in effect, the language of Lord Lansdowne, and if my right hon. friend denies that that was its effect, I will read what Lord Lansdowne said and leave the House to judge. Well, one would suppose that, in a situation like that the government of this country would at least have supported energetically and earnestly the government of the mother country. But, do we find that to be the case? No, Sir. We find that when this matter was brought to the attention of my right hon. friend in the House he declared that Canada had no direct interest in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and there was no reason why the modification of that treaty should be delayed until the United States had come to some reasonable agreement with regard the Alaskan boundary. I think my right hon. friend lost an opportunity there. Is not Canada directly interested in a canal across the Isthmus? Why is the United States interest in this matter regarded as direct and important? Because the United States has great possessions on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and hopes in the future to grasp a very considerable portion of the trade with the Orient. But is not Canada in the same position? Has not Canada great possessions on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and did not my hon. friend from North Ontario describe in glowing terms this afternoon the share that Canada is to have in the trade of the Orient? Well, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was denounced. Denounced apparently with the approbation of this government, without any further effort being made than to have an adjustment of this Alaskan boundary. And then came the question of a treaty with the government of the United States respecting the Alaskan boundary. I went over this matter somewhat fully last year, and I shall not deal with it at length on this occasion. But there are one or two despatches to which I would invite the attention of the House. We have in the library of parliament correspondence respecting the Alaskan boundary which has been placed before the parliament of the United Kingdom, although it is not in full before this House at present. It is from the correspondence I am quoting. There is a despatch of this government to the colonial office on the 13th of January, 1903, which is, in part, as follows:—

> Referring to the last proposed Alaska Boundary Treaty, a draft of which you submitted to me, my ministers are satisfied with the question to be submitted to the Tribunal, but they still have the same objection to the composition of the proposed Tribunal, and before assenting to it they would hope that another effort should be made to have the questions to be adjudicated upon submitted either to a Board of Arbitrators composed in part of independent jurists, not subjects of either state, as proposed in my despatch to Mr. Chamberlain of November, 1901, or to the Hague Tribunal.

On the 23rd of January, 1903, this government sent a despatch to the colonial office as follows :

My ministers, whilst still regretting that proposed Tribunal will not be constituted so as to insure certainty of a final decision being reached on the reference, being satisfied with the terms of that reference, will agree to accept Treaty as contained in the draft submitted to them.

With regard to composition of Tribunal, my ministers are of the opinion that it is premature to adopt any final arrangement, it is sufficient now to have it clearly understood that members of the court to be appointed by His Majesty shall be jurists of repute, and British subjects.

Now at page 44 of the correspondence brought down you have the treaty, and the last article of that treaty is as follows :

The present convention shall be ratified by His Britannic Majesty and by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in London or in Washington so soon as the same may be effected.

Now, I again suggest to my right hon. friend that after he had told the people of this country that he would in no wise recede from the position which he had taken in the negotiations of the Joint High Commission when he had come to the House over and over again with that assurance—and I have his words under my hand—it is remarkable that he did not take the same precaution which was adopted by Sir John A. Macdonald in 1871, and that he did not have this treaty made subject to ratification by the parliament of Canada as it was subject to the ratification by the Senate of the United States. My right hon. friend had made strong pledges to parliament in that regard. He said :

I have only to say this, however, that the attitude that we have taken has the approbation of the people of Canada generally, and it is an attitude which must and will be maintained to the end.

What was that attitude ? The attitude of the government was that they would not submit this question to a tribunal composed of an equal number of arbitrators on each side, but that they would insist that there should be an umpire for the purpose of final decision. With regard to the composition of the tribunal I did propose that three Canadians should be appointed, and I proposed that for the reason that we had before this parliament the despatch of February 26, 1903, from the Colonial office to this government in which the Colonial office as distinctly and plainly as words could express, it left to this government the whole question of the appointment of commissioners on that tribunal. I shall read that portion of that despatch which is pertinent.

His Majesty's government are, therefore, virtually in the position of having to choose between breaking off the negotiations altogether or of accepting the American nominations and appointing as their colleagues representatives appropriate to the altered circumstances of the case. The first alternative they would regard as a grave misfortune to the interests of Canada, and they would prefer that the inquiry should proceed in the confident hope that it would not prejudice Canadian or British interests, since, in the event of failure, much important information on the controverted points would be collected and placed before the public, thus facilitating a reasonable settlement of the question at some future date.

I am not now discussing the results of the commission which have been regarded throughout the country as somewhat unfortunate. Let me say, so far as my right hon. friend's demands for greater treaty-making powers are concerned, that I cannot conceive how greater treaty-making power could be given to this Dominion of ours than was conferred upon it when my right hon. friend and three of his colleagues were appointed on that commission and given full power to deal with this question. My right hon. friend is concerned at the action of the foreign office, but when he considers the powers granted to him in this case surely he is precluded from raising this bugbear that Canada in respect to the Alaskan affair has been in any way coerced by the action of the British government. Now Canada must have the right to be consulted, fully and absolutely consulted, in all treaties that concern her interests. I stand as strongly for that as my right hon. friend or any hon. gentleman in this House. But when we speak of making independent treaties let us remember that it is the king who makes treaties and that he makes them upon the advice of responsible ministers. Let us remember that when a treaty is violated and a war has to be declared on account of that violation it is the king who declares war and on the advice of responsible ministers. And let us remember that when peace happily comes it is the king who makes it and again upon the advice of his responsible ministers. The interests of Canada, it seems to me, can be served without in any way breaking through this constitutional usage. The interests of Canada it seems to me have been served by the very rights given to the government in the appointment of four commissioners at Washington. While I am prepared to stand with my right hon. friend for any further treaty powers necessary for the purpose of the full development of our national life, I am not prepared to coincide in something I do not understand and which the right hon. gentleman has not made very plain.

In conclusion I wish to go back for a moment to a subject which I have already mentioned, the attitude of this government in the first place with regard to the amendment to the Transcontinental Railway Act, and in the second place to the appointment of Hon. Mr. Blair as chairman of the Railway Committee. Does my right hon. friend remember his language of last year ? Does he remember his words when he said :

To those who urge upon us the policy of to-morrow and to-morrow and to-morrow ; to those who tell us, wait, wait, wait ; to those who advise us to pause, to consider, to reflect, to calculate and to inquire, our answer is : No, this is not a time for deliberation ; this is a time for action. The flood of tide is upon us that leads on to fortune ; if we let it pass it may never recur again. If we let it pass, the voyage of our national life, bright as it is to-day, will be bound in shallows. We cannot wait because time does not wait ; we cannot wait because in these days of wonderful development, time lost is doubly lost.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire in view of that language of my right hon. friend how it is that when this measure was consummated by the signing of this agreement, when that agreement bound the gentlemen who were parties to it, when these gentlemen declared that this road was to go on, when these gentlemen put up a guarantee representing one million pounds sterling, when they declared through their official head that they were prepared to go on with the railway this spring without amendment, how is it that my right hon. friend has called to them : Wait, wait, wait, till we get before parliament and give you further concessions. What about the flood tide then ? He did not then regard the flood-tide but hastened the opening of parliament in order that there might be further amendments.

But, at that time he said further :

Such is our duty ; it is immediate and imperative. It is not of to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour, and of this minute. Heaven grant that it may not be already too late ; Heaven grant that whilst we tarry and dispute, the trade of Canada is not deviated to other channels.

Then he insisted upon haste. Now he says, " Wait, wait, wait, until we once more go before parliament with practically a new measure, and can insert in this agreement a provision providing that this railway shall be completed not in 1908, but in 1911. He now says wait, wait, wait until we can attach a provision to this contract by reason of which the completion of this road should be delayed for three years beyond the time in which it was to be completed if the contract as originally designed had been carried out.

Last year when he called upon us to ratify this measure he did so in very earnest terms. He said :

I can appeal with some confidence to the judgment of the House to ratify with earnestness and with joy the contract which I have the honour to lay upon the Table.

I suppose my right hon. friend will call upon us to receive with even greater earnestness and with redoubled joy the amendments which he will shortly propose to the consideration of this House. I do not know whether we shall all radiate with joy at these further concessions to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Possibly hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who declared this to be a heaven born measure last year will now declare it to be a measure that it is absolutely necessary to amend in the best interest of the country by giving further concessions to that company. I imagine that will be the attitude of my hon. friends opposite. I remember very well their attitude of last year.

But, passing from that, what must have been the attitude of my right hon. friend when he offered the chairmanship of the railway commission to my friend Mr. Blair ? What was the interview which took place ? No account of it has been divulged to the public. We can only draw upon our imaginations and I would suppose that my right hon. friend must have addressed the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals in some such words as these : Sir, you have impugned our motives, you have declared them unworthy, you have attacked with great bitterness our great transportation project which we regard as absolutely necessary to the salvation of this country. You have assailed it with ridicule, you have declared it to be born of madness and hysteria. You have pledged your faith as a man versed in railway matters that it is a wanton, scandalous and unjustifiable waste of public money ; therefore, we think, that, in the best interests of the country you are the most suitable person to appoint as chairman of the great commission. If my friend, Mr. Blair, showed a little modest hesitation in accepting the position, my right hon. friend could proceed as follows and I suppose he must have proceeded as follows : He could have said : Especially is this a suitable appointment since we also have declared that you are acting from unworthy and improper motives since we have declared that you resigned because we were afraid to entrust you with the expenditure of public money upon a great enterprise such as this, and because you are a man of narrow views, small and shifty, swayed by passion and prejudice and unworthy to unloose the latchet of the shoe of the prime minister. In view of all this your are an eminently proper person to appoint as chairman of this high judicial tribunal. Lest I may be accused of exaggeration in this statement, let me quote the literal statement of my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Russell) who expressed himself as follows :—

It may well be that no more differences of opinion could have inspired the ferocity of his attack upon his former leader, or betrayed him into the mistake of sneering at the man whom this country delights to honour, and whose shoe latchets the hon. gentleman might well consider himself honoured in being permitted to unloose.

Well, I suppose that my right hon. friend the prime minister, having placed all these considerations fairly and fully before Mr. Blair, must sum it all up in this way : In view of all this you are an eminently proper person to appoint as the chairman of this high judicial tribunal which shall deal perhaps more than any tribunal in the country with the rights and even with the lives of the people. This, I suppose, must have been the interview which took place between these two hon. gentlemen; at least, if I have not correctly interpreted the interview it would be well that my right hon. friend should explain to the country what did take place, what led to this appointment. In the absence of this explanation, I believe the people regard it as a somewhat extraordinary and even painful episode in public affairs that the government, after the expressions of opinion by Mr. Blair regarding them and after their expressions of opinion in respect of him, should have appointed him to this high position of trust and confidence which so directly concerns the welfare of this country. Mr. Speaker, I apologize to you and to the members of this House, for having so long delayed them and I take my seat trusting that my right hon. friend will be able to give that explanation to the House which will set at rest all these disquieting rumours which have so much disturbed the people of this country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, even though my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) endeavoured, upon one subject to which he reverted more than once during his speech, to be a little sarcastic, I do not think that after all I can find serious fault as to the manner of his delivery nor even as to the matter thereof even though I have to take exception upon some of the points which he endeavoured to make. Let me, in the first instance, refer to one criticism, not of very much importance, but to which, at all events, it is just as well to give a moment's attention here and now ; that is to say, to the summoning of parliament at a rather late season. My hon. friend has asked us why was not parliament summoned earlier. I think I can give to my hon. friend on this subject some very obvious and adequate reasons. The word 'adequate' is one as to which there has been a good deal of discussion, but I think it has more precision in my mouth than it has in his when it is applied to his own favourite doctrine of protection. My hon. friend remembered that last year parliament was also summoned somewhat late and for reasons which I gave at that time, reasons which do not exist to-day, because I have to say frankly that on that occasion it was due to the state of my health, whereas, on the contrary, I am happy to say that I cannot set down that reason at the present time. Let me say in passing that I have to thank my hon. friend for the kind reference which he made to that matter and I congratulate him upon the fact that in the discharge of the duties which are incumbent upon him he always manages to do so with a proper regard to the amenities of our parliamentary system. My hon. friend remembered that last year we were summoned somewhat late. An intimation came to us from the other side of the House that if we were to present certain measures the session must be protracted for a pretty long time and that if these measures were persisted in before we were allowed to separate the snow would again cover the hill tops. I may say to my hon. friends that they were as good as their word. They kept their pledge. They always keep their pledges——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In matters of obstruction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When the day of prorogation came, and in fact, the snow whitened the tops of the hills and if we had remained a few weeks longer it would have also whitened the vales. Five months have not yet elapsed since the day of prorogation. My hon. friends should allow us some time to breathe. The members of this House, generally, are men of business. They have to earn their living, to attend to their own avocations and five months is not too long for the members of this House to attend to their own affairs before being called again to discharge the business of the country. I apprehend from what my hon. friend has said that it may be that the length of this session called at this moment may carry us into the season when members of this House would perhaps be better employed at their own business. There is a way, however, by which we can correct any inconvenience that may arise from the late summoning of parliament and that is by preparing for an early closing of it. If my hon. friend will not act altogether upon the reproach which he made to my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant), if the speeches are not too long, if the floodgates of eloquence are kept under control, perhaps we may expect that this House shall not have a session of eight months, not even a session of five months, but that we may prorogue in time so that all of us may go to the country and enjoy the pure air in the leafy month of June.

Then, my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) passed to another subject and he was not sarcastic but jocose—jocoseness by the way is contagious on his side of the House. He was jocose about the result of the by-elections. Heaven forbid that I should grudge the joy of my hon. friend or his friends. If they are pleased, there is no reason why we should not be satisfied. There have been 12 by-elections—Westmoreland, Rouville, Gaspé, Queen's, Prince Edward Island, St. John, N.B., Kamouraska, Montmagny, St. Hyacinthe, St. James, Hochelaga, East Bruce, East Lambton ; and out of these twelve the Conservatives actually carried three, and lost nine. Their joy is unbounded, I suppose because they did not lose the whole 12 ; their joy is unbounded because they were simply snowed under a landslide, and not crushed out of existence under an avalanche. They see themselves carried into power upon the wave of a Conservative reaction. Far be it from me to begrudge them their joy ; let them have it to their heart's content. They are wise in rejoicing just now, because if they do not rejoice now they will never have an opportunity to rejoice at all. After the elections it will be too late and therefore let them avail of any little opportunity that they think they may have.

But, Sir, where is that Conservative reaction. Where is the Conservative party to-day ? I can speak for no province with marked certainty except my own, and I can say that there is no Conservative party in the province of Quebec. There is a new party there ; a protectionist party. Men who were to be Conservatives at one time, and who took pride, and properly so, in the name of Conservatives ; they have disappeared and they have been replaced by the Protectionist party. It is a new name. What's in a name ? The rose by any other name would smell as sweet ;—that is true of the rose, but it is not true of the Conservative party. They tried a new game ; they would not go before the electors in the old garb ; they selected a new name and a new garb. We know that in marine matters it sometimes happens that when a craft has been upon the sea for years, and has become disabled, leaky and discredited, then in order to impose upon the public she is put into dry dock, treated to a new coat of paint, the old name erased, a new name put on, and she then is launched upon a new career of deceit. Sir, that is what has taken place in the province of Quebec. The old Conservative hull had been discredited, the old Conservative craft was leaky ; they put her in dry dock, they gave her a new coat of paint ; they scratched out the name 'Conservative' and painted in the name 'Protectionist ;' but whether called 'Protectionist' or 'Conservative' the smell was no sweeter in the nostrils of the independent electorate. I am bound to say, Sir, that it did not smell any sweeter to the members of the Conservative party themselves—it simply stunk in their nostrils, and they would have none of it ; to their credit be it said. But, Sir, not only did they change the name of the craft, but they changed the captain as well. That gallant gentleman who had been put in charge of the ship under very painful circumstances, and who with great courage had taken hold of the helm, he was set aside and the old hull, without a captain on board, but commanded from the shore by a Junta, was launched, and started on its perilous and unknown voyage. Let me ask my hon. friends opposite if there is much to rejoice at in all this. No party, no leader, no policy ; because although they say they have a policy of protection, yet as I may show later on, they are not even agreed as to the kind of protection they want. For my part, I believe that we can view without any alarm the prospect which awaits us when the time comes to consult the electors as to the fate of the two parties in this country.

My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) passed upon pleasanter ground when he referred to the mover and the seconder of the address. My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) came to the House at the end of last session, and although he came to us late he gave a manifestation of his ability as a debater, and the speech which he delivered to-day, is simply a confirmation of the high esteem in which we already held him. As to my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) those who have had the pleasure of listening to him can testify that in the remarks which he made, he gave certain promise of much excellence in the future.

My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) after passing this pleasant episode came to the main point of his speech and he launched at once into an attack on the government for their selection of Mr. Blair as chairman of the Railway Commission. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) asks : what reason could have influenced us in appointing Mr. Blair, after the attack which Mr. Blair made upon the railway policy which we presented to parliament last session. Let me say to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) at once, that it is evident that he and I have not the same conception of the duties which we owe to the public men of this country. If I understood his remarks aright, he expected from us, and especially from me as leader of the government, that in the selection of the chairman of the Railway Commission we should be actuated by spite. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that we selected Mr. Blair because we believed there was not in Canada a better qualified and more competent man to discharge the duties of the office to which we have called him. And, Sir, if I were as good a scrap book man as the leader of the opposition, I could recall the eulogy which was passed upon Mr. Blair last session, from the ranks of the opposition. I could quote from hon. gentlemen opposite as to the high qualities, the great talents, and the marked ability of Mr. Blair. I share in everything they said of Mr. Blair. I recognize him as a man of great ability, as a man of great talent; and I have no hesitation in saying that you cannot find to-day in Canada any one who is better endowed than Mr. Blair to be the chairman of the commission, and to administer the law of which he is the author. But, Sir, in my estimation, Mr. Blair made a great mistake last session. In my estimation he made the mistake of his life. In my estimation Mr. Blair should have risen to the occasion; an occasion worthy of his talents and of his great abilities. He failed to do so, and not only did he fail to do so, but my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) recalled language which I think was unworthy of Mr. Blair. But, Sir, because Mr. Blair had committed a grevious fault in my estimation; because he had spoken language which the leader of the opposition has tried to make out as offensive, whether it was meant to be offensive or not; and even if Mr. Blair had been ever so offensive, would I, as adviser to His Excellency the Governor General and as his chief adviser; would I have been worthy of the trust which is reposed in me by the people of Canada if I had allowed my own private resentment to weigh in the balance against the abilities of a man who was so well fitted for the position? Sir, my hon. friend sought to find unworthy motives for our appointment of Mr. Blair. My hon. friend came perilously near to being unparliamentary in his language. He did not dare to say so in so many words, but he endeavoured to convey the impression that we had appointed Mr. Blair as chairman of the Railway Commission simply for the purpose of removing him from our path, and preventing him from sitting with the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have spoken their thoughts. Well, Sir, this is something we can debate here and now; we can have it out, and leave it to the judgment of both the House and the country. Was it to get rid of Mr. Blair that we appointed him chairman of the Railway Commission, when the fact is that Mr. Blair stated, not on one occasion only, but on many, that he sided with us on everything except the railway policy, and that he could not side with the opposition on their railway policy—why? Because the policy which has been proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition was in his eyes far more condemnable than ours; while in the letter which he addressed to his electors before accepting the office, Mr. Blair stated that he was alone on the question. He could not side with the government on their railway policy, but he could not side with the opposition on theirs, because their scheme was a mad scheme. Therefore why should we try to find motives or make insinuations when we have the plain fact that Mr. Blair could not act with the opposition?

My hon. friend said this afternoon that there were rumours of an election, and that somebody had come to the leader of the government and had said to him that it would go badly for the government in New Brunswick if Mr. Blair were let loose in that province, and therefore, he was appointed so that we should not have his opposition at the time of the election. But my hon. friend knows that there has been no election, and therefore there was no need of finding that motive. A moment later my hon. friend imagined a conversation as having taken place between Mr. Blair and myself, when I proposed that he should become the chairman of the commission. My hon. friend supposed that I had said, 'Mr. Blair, you have been offensive; you attributed to us motives;' and so on, and so on. Let me suppose that I give the true version of what actually took place between Mr. Blair and myself; it will not be very difficult. It is true, I may have said to Mr. Blair, 'I do not think you have acted in a manner worthy of yourself.' Mr. Blair may have said, 'I do not approve of your policy, but I approve still less of the policy of the opposition.' Then, I may have said to Mr. Blair, 'Though I do not believe you did yourself justice on that occasion, still, as I think you are perfectly well qualified to be chairman of the Railway Commission, I offer you the position.' This is something honourable, something that everybody can appreciate, and it is just as well to look for honourable motives when you can find them as dishonourable motives. This is all the explanation I have to give on this point, and it is unworthy of my hon. friend to try to find unworthy motives for a thing which is so natural as that which I have just explained to the House.

My hon. friend objects to the supplementary contract which we have made with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. He stated at the beginning of his remarks, and with some truth, that it was not perhaps opportune at this moment to discuss the supplementary contract, because it must come up later for discussion. In fact, there is already a notice on the paper to take up this question at the earliest possible moment. But after saying that we should not discuss the contract to-day, my hon. friend went on to discuss it, and in a manner which I fail to understand. My hon. friend speaks as if we have been begging the Grand Trunk Company to accept more generous terms than we gave them last year. The truth of the matter is that we had made with them a contract so binding that it could not be ratified by the Grand Trunk shareholders, and we had to make some modifications of it in order to secure its ratification. That is the simple fact of the matter, as will appear when the question is brought to the attention of the House at the proper moment. I am surprised at my hon. friend supposing that we ran after the Grand Trunk Company in order to ask them to accept more generous conditions. Instead of that, representations were made to us by the representatives of the board that they could not finance the enterprise if we adhered to the rigid conditions we had imposed upon them ; and in order to facilitate the work, we came to the conclusion that we should make the modifications which we have placed before the House, and to which we shall ask the sanction of the House in a few days.

My hon. friend referred to several matters which he called omissions from the speech—the admission of Newfoundland into the confederation, provincial autonomy for the Northwest, the treaty-making power, and the joint high commission. There was no omission of these from the speech, because in my opinion none of them are subjects which should be included in the speech of the Governor General. They are all subjects familiar to the House, which will come in review at a later day every one of them, perhaps, except the subject of the joint high commission. As that subject will probably not come up again, I will speak of it now. I have only to say, in answer to the inquiry of the hon. leader of the opposition as to the position in which the joint high commission stands to-day, that it stands to-day just as it did in the month of February, 1899, when it was adjourned. It was adjourned subject to the call of the two chairmen or of the commission itself. My hon. friend wants to know what is to be our attitude—shall the commission be convened again or not ? I have only to repeat what I have stated before on the floor of this House and elsewhere, that it is not the purpose of the Canadian government to go to the United States for favours of any kind whatever. If it pleases the United States authorities to have the joint high commission re-convene—to have better relations established than those which we have had for the last few years, we are always ready to meet them and to receive their advances. But so far as the Canadian government are concerned, we have nothing to ask from our American neighbours. We want to be on good terms with them ; we are ready at all times to negotiate with them on fair terms, but we shall not take the initiative for new negotiations. If new negotiations are to take place, it must be on their initiative. We have received no invitation from them lately, and therefore so far as I know the joint high commission is not again to be convened.

With regard to the treaty-making power, I have only one word to say. I will not discuss that subject this evening ; it is of too great importance for that ; but I will welcome an opportunity later on to discuss it and to present it to the Canadian people. It is not a new subject ; it is a very old one. It has been a plank in the platform of the Liberal party for some thirty years. If I were to go back to the initiation of this subject, I would go back to the year 1870, when Mr. Huntington introduced a resolution claiming for Canada the treaty-making power. The subject was taken up later on by Mr. Blake, by my right hon. colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), and by the late Mr. Mills. My hon. friend asks : Have you not to-day all the powers you want ? Can you not be represented into any treaty which may be negotiated ? But while it is true that Canada would be invited into any treaty which might take place, in which our interests would be concerned, still we have believed in the past that this would not be sufficient for our national development, and that the day was coming nearer and nearer when we ought to have full treaty-making powers for ourselves. But, says my hon. friend, this would carry the right of peace and war. I can tell my hon. friend that he is under a very erroneous impression. We have no intention of acquiring any such right. Take the matter with which we have just been dealing, the matter of the Alaskan boundary treaty. What we want is the right of taking the initiative, of carrying on the negotiations, and of being responsible, but it does not follow that we want to dispense altogether with the power and authority of the mother country. On the contrary, never, in any resolution presented to it, was the Canadian parliament asked to claim the power of negotiating treaties without any reference to the authority of the Crown of England. All that was ever asked was that we should have the power to negotiate. I am sorry that I have not here the motion made on that subject by Mr. Blake in 1882, but I have the motion made by Mr. Mills in 1892, which is substantially the same. Mr. Mills moved :

> That it is expedient to obtain the necessary powers to enable Her Majesty the Queen, through her representative the Governor General of Canada, upon the advice of his Minister, to appoint an agent to negotiate commercial treaties with other British possessions or foreign states subject to the prior consent or subsequent approval of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has that right ever been denied to Canada ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The right of negotiating our own treaties ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has what is asked in that motion ever been denied ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It never was granted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has it ever been denied ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It never was applied for yet.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seemed to me that the growth of the country since 1882 had really given us that power without any formal motion and simply by the growth of constitutional usage.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am surprised that my hon. friend should make any such statement in view of the facts in the case we are discussing. What are these facts? A treaty was negotiated between the British ambassador at Washington and the United States secretary of state, Mr. John Hay. That treaty had to be ratified by the constituent powers—the President and Senate of the United States—and His Majesty the King. Before it was ratified, the Canadian government made the strongest possible representations against its going any further on account of the personality of the men chosen as jurists by the United States. We sent despatch after despatch protesting that the selection made by the United States was a direct violation of the treaty. Nevertheless, the treaty was ratified by His Majesty the King upon the advice of his ministers. But, suppose we had had our own treaty-making power, suppose the matter had been in our own hands, that would never have happened. The reason we ask the power is that we may be the masters of the situation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why did not my right hon. friend guard against that by providing that the treaty should be ratified by the Canadian parliament?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That would not have met the case. The British government could have ratified that treaty against our advice and we would not be any more advanced. We would have the spectacle of the Canadian parliament on the one side and His Majesty the King on the other. That shows the necessity of our having the whole treaty-making power in our own hands, so that, from the first step to the last, we may be the masters and deal with it, subject to the advice of the King of England. However, I do not propose to deal at length with this question at present. The papers will be brought down at an early date, and then we can take up the subject again and discuss it at such length as its importance demands.

But when my hon. friend came to the subject of the condition of the country, on which my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) spoke with so much warmth and vigour, he could take no exception at all to the statement made regarding it in the speech from the Throne. In fact the condition of the country is simply marvellous. In no part of the world has there been any such development as there has been in Canada since 1896. Canada has developed in every direction in a manner which no one could have foreseen some few years ago. True, our hon. friends opposite are not disposed to give us any credit for that prosperity. They attribute it entirely to Divine Providence. My hon. friend says that Providence has been kind to us. I admit that. No one can deny that Divine Providence has been very kind indeed, and we certainly have to thank Providence especially for having inspired us to adopt the tariff we did in 1897. But gentlemen on the other side are not satisfied with the action of Providence. They do not think that Providence has done well. They think they can do better and say that Providence does not understand its business. My hon. friends have different methods from ours of dealing with the tariff. Our method is to revise the tariff when the time comes. My hon. friend blames us for having said nothing about the revision of the tariff in the speech from the Throne. I have only to say to him that I never saw a revision of the tariff announced in a speech from the Throne. That comes properly in the budget speech. Whether there is to be or not to be a revision of the tariff is a question to be discussed by the Minister of Finance when he presents his budget and not before. It would hardly be consistent with a proper understanding of parliamentary government to announce in the speech from the Throne that there was to be a revision of the tariff, or that there was to be no such revision. That would give rise to speculations one way or the other. It is never safe, therefore, to deal with this subject until the moment has come, and then everybody has to take the revision as it is given. But my hon. friend has a way of reforming the action of Providence, and his way of doing this is by providing the country with what he calls 'adequate protection.' But what is adequate protection? My hon. friend has spoken often of adequate protection, but he has always been very judiciously indefinite. 'Adequate protection' may mean everything or it may mean nothing—'you pays your money and you takes your choice.' The man who favours general revision is free to say, 'This is the thing for me; I am to have my most extravagant hopes realized.' On the other hand the man who wants but little change can say, 'I am satisfied with things as they are, and I know that very little change will be made.' But, though my hon. friend tells us little or nothing we know at last what 'adequate protection' means. The cat has been let out of the bag by the newspaper which has become the chief organ of the Conservative party, the Montreal 'Star.' That journal is fighting their battle all over the country and is giving to the electors the explanations which they cannot get from the leader of the opposition. If you will look at the Montreal 'Star' any day for the last twelve months or so you will see at the head of the editorial page a standing pronunciamento :

TO THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA.

Give the manufacturers, workingmen, and farmers of Canada the same kind of tariff as that which has made the United States the home of the most prosperous manufacturers, workingmen and farmers in the world.

'The home of the most prosperous manufacturers, the working men and farmers of the world.' I say the home of factions, combines and anarchists.

TO THE MANUFACTURERS OF CANADA.

Force the government to give you as good a tariff as that which has made the American manufacturers rich. When you get this tariff, pay your Canadian workmen American wages.

I pity the poor Canadian workmen if they get American wages instead of good Canadian wages.

TO THE WORKINGMEN OF CANADA.

Take a leaf out of the book of the American workingman. Help your employers to obtain for themselves and for you a Canada-for-Canadians tariff.

Why, Sir, is it at this moment, when the people and the government of the United States are endeavouring to free themselves from the shackles which have been coiled around them by the manufacturers, the trusts, the combines, which are the direct creation of the tariff that we are called upon to be so foolish and so criminal as to put our limbs into these shackles ? Is it at a time when manufacturers in the United States are closing their mills right and left that we are to adopt the policy which has brought about the distress that to-day exists in that country ? Is it at a time when American workmen have their wages decreased by ten, twenty or even forty per cent that Canadian workmen are asked to be so unmindful, so ignorant of their own interests as to adopt the American tariff ? No, Sir. For my part, much as I admire the United States—and I have never had any hesitation in declaring that I have the greatest admiration for that great people, for they are a great people, and no one can read their history without admiration of the qualities that they have displayed—great as is my admiration for the United States, yet, if we are to seek an example, it is not to the United States that I would look for it. We can do better. I do not want to seek my examples anywhere than in this land of Canada. We have better institutions and a better fiscal policy than theirs. We have a fiscal policy of moderation. Their fiscal policy is a policy of exaggeration. It has brought that country, I will not say to the verge of civil war. But to-day what do you find in the United States ? You find a condition which is not healthy, a condition different from that which you find in Canada. At the top of the United States social system you find the wealthy manufacturers, the monopolists, and combinesters who have made the country simply a tribute payer to their organizations. And what do you find at the bottom ? Almost anarchy, strikes almost in permanence ; you find labour institutions going the length of declaring a penalty against the members of their institutions who become members of the militia, thus refusing the very first duty that the citizen owes to his country. This is the condition which exists in the United States and this is the example which hon. gentlemen on the other side tell us we should follow. Far distant be the day when we shall seek an example of the United States to guide us in fiscal or in other matters. No, Sir, we will continue as we have commenced ; we will remain simply ourselves ; and, to use a good Canadian phrase, we will paddle our own canoe. We will continue the course we have advocated in the past ; we will maintain ourselves as we have commenced ; we will continue the policy of common sense, calmness and moderation which has already done so much for the Canadian people, for their fair name and for their general prosperity.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, if the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was jocose, I must say that the leader of the House was only facetious. According to the speech from the Throne, parliament is assembled at this time of the year mainly to discuss the question of the Grand Trunk Railway. I propose to deal with that question, but first to say a few words in justification of the action of the present chairman of the Railway Commission. I believe that that gentleman was right, but that he did not go quite far enough in the solution of the question. We have been told for years that the transportation problem is the only problem before the people of Canada. And the Bill the government introduced last session is called the National Transportation Bill. Now, is that Bill or is the amendment as proposed here this session in any sense a solution of the transportation problem ? So far as I can gather, it is simply a proposal to build a colonization road through the back country of Canada. That is not a solution of the transportation problem. We have appointed commissions, we have spent millions of money in laying railways and digging canals, and yet the people of Canada from one end of it to the other are demanding to-day some kind of relief in regard to transportation. Hon. gentlemen opposite have made a deal with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. If they desired to improve the transportation of this country, if they desired to solve the great railway problem, they would have adopted as the basis of their proposition the nationalization of the old Grand Trunk Railway, the consolidation of it with the Intercolonial railway and the operation of the combined railway as a complement of our canal system in this country. That would immediately have given the people an improvement in transportation and would have brought relief to the people of Ontario and it is in the province of Ontario and of Quebec that the real transportation grievance exists in this country to-day. They may have a grievance in the west, I grant that and I grant that we should open up our new country, but if you propose to deal with the transportation question, if you bring in a great policy involving the expenditure of $150,000,000 of public money and get only a colonization road in return as I believe you would under the measure now before Parliament, you have done nothing for the solution of the transportation problem. Had the government taken over the Grand Trunk—and I am prepared to verify what I before stated in this House, that the Grand Trunk proper could have been taken over on a rental,—immediately it was taken over it could have been consolidated with the Intercolonial. The combined roads could then have been connected with the Mackenzie & Mann system and this consolidated government system would have been in the Northwest in a single day and would have given relief from one end of the country to the other. This is the relief for which the people are looking; this is the relief for which the farmers are looking, a reduced rate on grain; people in Ontario are asking a reduction in freight rates and have any number of questions to bring before the Railway Commission, but so far as I can see there is no relief for them except by some measure of that kind I propose. It is a practical measure, a measure that gives immediate relief. Let us look at the facts in regard to transportation. We have in Ontario and all over the Dominion of Canada unlimited water powers that are nearly all in the possession of the people to-day and the way to solve this problem is to take advantage of the new discoveries of the day and the application of the principle of water powers to railways owned and controlled by the government; by this means you would give relief to all the people of Canada. There is no relief coming from the Grand Trunk Pacific road; on the contrary the Grand Trunk is getting an immense sum of money, and eventually they are to get the railway, while the people of Canada are getting nothing. There is no visible solution of the transportation problem and that is what the people of Canada want. The people desire relief applied to the existing railways in Canada not to some scheme laid out in the back country, in the wilds of the Northwest almost up to Hudson's Bay. There is no relief except on the lines I have suggested. Even if this Bill goes through—as I have no doubt it will—it will only make the problem harder, so that when we do tackle it—as we will some day have to tackle it—to a solution, we will have to take over this road which we are incorporating to-day and all of the expenditure put upon it. As I have said there is no way to give relief to the people of this country, especially in dealing with the Grand Trunk other than by the nationalization of this road, its consolidation with the Intercolonial Railway and the consolidation of the combined road with the Mann & Mackenzie system. That would give the people immediate relief and it was on just these lines that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways was working, and on which he differed with the government. Instead of making the mistake of his life I believe that the Hon. Mr. Blair took a good course and one that would have redounded to the interests of this country. How can you solve the transportation problem if you do not take over the existing railways? What is the great value of the Grand Trunk Railway to-day or of the Intercolonial as an asset of this country, in the settlement of the transportation question? It is the splendid position these roads now occupy. The value of the old Grand Trunk Railway consists largely in the terminals and ports which it possesses, the switching grounds in all the great cities. Let us take these over and make them a part of the national system and you have the great railway facilities of the Grand Trunk in Montreal and of the Intercolonial in St. John and Halifax and of the Grand Trunk in Toronto and in the other great cities utilized for the benefit of the people, and in this way, you would give the people of the country immediate relief.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have you made an estimate of the cost?

Mr. MACLEAN. Yes, I have made an estimate of the cost, and I may tell my hon. friend that if the government had gone to the Grand Trunk people in London and said: We will assume your liabilities and make some small provision for the common stock, they could have got that road. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that it is not the Grand Trunk shareholders who pay for the maintenance of this road but the people in Canada who use the road. They have paid the debt and are paying the debt and should control the road and use it towards the solution of the transportation problem. My right hon. friend deprecated this action of the present chairman of the Railway Commission in leaving his government on that issue. Hon. Mr. Blair believed or was coming to the belief that national ownership was the real solution of the question. He took that view in this House and was prepared, I believe, to take over the Canada Atlantic Railway for the same purpose, and instead of making a mistake I say that he brought forward a policy which would have done a great deal for the immediate improvement of the transportation facilities of this country. He made no mistake, but on the contrary proposed something that was in the interests of all the people. The characteristic of all the legislation and discussion before the world to-day is that it is moving on the lines of national ownership. Municipal ownership has done everything for the cities of Great Britain and the principle is spreading, in European countries they derive great benefits from the state operation of railways. In the United States they think they can secure a great measure of relief from the high charges of the railways if the railways were owned by the country. It may be impossible for them to accomplish that end now but it would be easy for us to take over the Grand Trunk Railway, to combine it with the Intercolonial and to make a national system not only giving the people reduced freights but making a road which would be a power in reducing the charges of the Canadian Pacific Railway of which the people in the west complain. That is practical politics, earnest politics, an endeavour to solve the transportation problem, and Hon. Mr. Blair was moving along that line but he got no credit for it and to-day is told that he made the mistake of his life. The people of Ontario and Quebec to-day are looking for lower passenger rates. Is there any way to get them other than to take over the railways ?. If the Grand Trunk be taken over and a passenger rate of 2 cents a mile be given on it, we would have every road in this country giving a 2 cents a mile rate. This would be going a long way in solving the transportation problem and in a moderate way it would secure the opening up of the back country of Canada. I think we should have a two cent rate and that it will come. Government ownership to my mind is the only way to obtain relief and I believe it is on lines of that kind that the people of Canada are looking for improvement. They want to have something done and this is the only way to bring relief to the farmer, to the man who raises stock.

We have great stock industries all over this country, in Quebec and Ontario, and the people engaged in these industries wish to get their cattle to market without having to submit to exorbitant rates and there is no way of accomplishing that result except by adopting the principle of government ownership and in that way giving the relief that these people require. The farmers are meeting all over the country asking for railway relief. They are meeting all over the Northwest Territories, and the constant cry is that they want a reduction in transportation rates. We are told in the address that in some way the Bill now before parliament will aid them because it will help to move the grain of the west. It may do so in a very modified form, but the real solution has not been arrived at, it will not come from this measure and it is not likely to come from any measure introduced by hon. gentlemen opposite. We have to nationalize the railways in order to improve the transportation of this country. The time has come when we should not only nationalize the railways but when we should nationalize the telegraphs and telephones of this country. Nothing of that kind is being attempted. We have been promised it for years but it does not come and yet this is a practical question and a question that the people are thinking of. The people want cheaper express rates. They cannot get them. The government have refused to put the express companies under the Railway Act although they introduced a measure last year. The right hon. Prime Minister says the chief work of his life will be the completion of this national transcontinental line. Again I tell him it is not a solution of the transportation question, again I tell him he is offering the people no relief, again I tell him he is giving the farmers no assistance, he is not dealing with the grievances of the people, he has not suggested any remedy, he has only complicated the situation.

Passing from the railway question there is another matter, a constitutional issue that ought very properly to come up at this time. I have read within the last few days with great interest a book recently published in Toronto by the late clerk of this House, Sir John Bourinot. Sir John Bourinot was a man who gave a great deal of time to the study of the public life of this country. In the last chapter of his book on the life of Lord Elgin he gives his conclusions, and just for two or three minutes I propose to direct the attention of the House to them. His findings, I consider, bear in a remarkable way upon some of the questions I have raised in the House. At page 247 of the book on the chapter comparing the American system with the Canadian system Sir John Bourinot says :

> The Canadian Minister—
> Referring to the Prime Minister.
> —having control of the finances and taxes and of all matters of administration, is directly responsible to parliament, and sooner or later to the people for the manner in which public functions have been discharged. All important measures are initiated by the cabinet, and on every question of public interest to ministers are bound to have a definite policy if they wish to retain the confidence of the legislature. Even in the case of private legislation, they are also the guardians of the public interests and are responsible to the parliament and to the people for any neglect in particular.

The right hon. Prime Minister has laid down the rule and that in regard to railway legislation, in some ways, neither he, nor his party, nor the government is responsible, that it is private legislation and we have been frequently told that in Ontario the government are not responsible. I disagree altogether with the doctrine and I am glad to see that the late Sir John Bourinot took the position which I think is the correct one. He also goes on to say :

Responsible government makes the Premier and his ministers responsible for the constitution of the committees and for the opinions and decisions that may emanate from them. A government that would constantly endeavour to shift its responsibilities on committees, even of its own selection, would soon disappear from the treasury benches.

The right hon. Prime Minister has taken the position in this House in regard to the invasion of the municipal rights of the people of Ontario that what had been done had been done by committees of the House and that the government were not responsible. I disagree with him there and I quote this authority to show that he is responsible as are the Liberal party in Toronto where the municipal rights of the people are being equally invaded by the local legislature. In both cases these governments are responsible and must assume the responsibility. Going on to another page I find that Sir John Bourinot very properly points out certain weaknesses that exist in our government, some cure for which ought to be found. He says :

The (Canadian) system has assuredly its drawbacks like all other systems of government that have been devised and worked out by the brain of man. Any one who has closely watched the evolution of this system for years past must admit that there is a dangerous tendency in the Dominion to give the executive —I mean the ministry as a body—too superior a control over the legislative authority. When a ministry has in its government the appointment not only of the heads of the executive government in the provinces, that is to say, of the lieutenant governors, who can be dismissed by the same power at any moment, but also of the members of the upper house of parliament itself, besides the judiciary and numerous collectorships and other valuable offices, it is quite obvious that the element of human ambition and selfishness has abundant room for operation on the floor of the legislature, and a bold and skilful cabinet is also able to wield a machinery very potent under a system of party government. The House of Commons may be made by skilful party management a mere recording or registering body of an able and determined cabinet. I see less liability to such silent though potent influences in a system which makes the president and the house of representatives to a large degree independent of each other, and leaves his important nominations to office under the control of the Senate, a body which has no analogy whatever with the relatively weak branch of the Canadian parliament essentially weak, while its membership depends on the government itself.

There is a clear declaration by our leading constitutional authority as to the weakness of parliament as we have it in this country, and as to the weakness of carrying on the public affairs of this country, when the First Minister and the party in power resort, as they have resorted, —and I am not discriminating between the two parties—to the appointment of members of the House to the Senate and to the use of other influences by which the majority can weaken this House and increase the strength of the cabinet. I believe that the House is gradually giving its powers away to the cabinet in this country, a thing that it should not do. There is not sufficient independence in this House. There is not sufficient independence of the leaders, perhaps, on either side. There ought to be more independence, more respect for the powers of the House and less control by the government as pointed out by Dr. Bourinot. A dangerous condition of things has arisen in this country. The Senate has now a large majority appointed by the government. The government have lost no opportunity of interfering with the independence of this House. All these things are dangerous to the Canadian constitution and ought to have been avoided, and more especially they ought to have been avoided by men who profess to be Liberals and to live up to the old doctrine of responsible government. They are trying to get away from that doctrine. In the province of Ontario they are trying to put the responsibility on committees of the legislature, they are trying to evade responsibility and they are in this way allowing the municipal rights of the people to be taken away from them. An important question that is before the people to-day is the question of the rights of the people as against corporations, and if the Liberals in Ottawa do not intend to protect the rights of the people it will be disastrous to the best interests of the country. All we can see as the outcome of Liberal legislation at Toronto and also in this House is the distribution of the resources of the country among the rich corporations. Everything is given to them ; the people can get nothing. The people come to parliament and say that they want lower railway rates and that they want authority for the municipalities to undertake the management of certain public utilities. They cannot get the rights which they ask for while more money is being taken out of the treasury and handed over to private corporations. One hundred and fifty million dollars is to be given this session to the Grand Trunk Railway for a scheme presumably to solve the transportation problem but which does not solve it at all. The money is handed over, the corporations become more powerful and it is such corporations as these which have caused the degradation in public life on the other side of the line. It is not the tariff and the trusts that the Prime Minister says. It is the great corporations created by legislation to which are handed over the resources of the country.

And yet, no effort is being made in Canada to check that condition of affairs. We are rapidly passing to the same condition as that which obtains in the United States ; corporations control the legislature, they control the governments, they get everything they ask ; the people get nothing. More and more of the heritage of the people is being handed over to the companies and no relief is afforded to the taxpayers. It is discouraging to a Canadian. Just think that this session, we are actually going to give the Grand Trunk easier conditions, under which eventually we will give them the railroad and we are to get nothing in return. What are the farmers of Ontario to get for the $150,000,000 in the way of facilities for transportation. No effort has been made to give them an Atlantic seaport with cheaper rates for their cattle and produce. Nationalize the Grand Trunk, consolidate it with the Intercolonial Railway, make two or three ports in the maritime provinces, take advantage of the splendid terminals and shunting yards of the Grand Trunk, and I venture to say that transportation rates in Canada will come down 33 per cent and perhaps 50 per cent and the government will have conferred a benefit on the whole people. But instead of that, what are we doing? Why, Sir, this session of parliament has apparently been called for nothing else than to reiterate the vote giving $150,000,000 of the money of the people to the Grand Trunk. It is a serious proposition; it is a question the people of Ontario have spoken on at the by-elections. They do not like the Grand Trunk proposition, they do not like it because it does nothing for them; they do not like it because after spending their money on it we are to hand over the railroad to a private corporation. The right hon. gentleman may say it is a grand project; that it is the great object of his life, that it is opening up the back country, but I might remind him that there are people who live in the front country, that these are the people who want relief, and that they cannot get relief from the Grand Trunk Railway. There is another thing I have not heard mentioned in the House or out of it, and the statement of the right hon. gentleman with regard to our treaty making power, brings it to my mind. I go a long way with him on that question, but let me ask him why he did not insert a provision in his bill compelling the Grand Trunk Pacific to have its headquarters in Canada. The feature of the Canadian Pacific Railway was that it was a national scheme, with its management and its directors in Canada. But what happened in the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific. After the contract had been signed, sealed and delivered by the Parliament of Canada, it had to be sent to the other side of the Atlantic for ratification by the Grand Trunk Company. The Grand Trunk Company repudiated the contract which was made by the Canadian parliament. That never should have happened. I trust that before the Bill goes through, the headquarters of the Grand Trunk will be fixed in Canada, so that we may know with whom we are dealing and so that the parliament of Canada may not in future be subject to the humiliation of having its decrees repudiated. It is not a satisfactory thing that the parliament of Canada should have its will subject to the ratification of Rivers-Wilson in London, instead of having the controlling body of the railroad here in Canada, so that we may deal with them as ordinary business sense would dictate.

I shall not refer to the Newfoundland question, but I wish to mention a matter in connection with the Hudson's Bay which I brought to the attention of parliament last session. After the confession the right hon. gentleman has made in regard to treaty making powers and as to how we have been ignored in the old land, I believe it is high time that we should take some steps to maintain our territorial integrity in the Hudson Bay country. Whatever the government may do in that direction I shall be only too glad to endorse it, and in view of the aggressive and outspoken neighbours we have south of the line, we must be up and doing, as we may have to make a fight to hold our own territory.

The right hon. gentleman told us that it was not the custom in a speech from the Throne to refer to the tariff. His memory is short, because in 1897 the speech from the Throne contained this pararagraph :—

> A measure will be submitted to you for the revision of the tariff which it is believed will provide the necessary revenue, and having due regard to the industrial interests will make our fiscal system more satisfactory to the masses of the people.

Are we then to take it for granted, that if there is no mention of tariff revision in the speech from the Throne, there will be no relief granted to the people of this country this session? Sir, the people of Canada demand more protection. They are not satisfied with what they have, and if Canada is prosperous to-day, it is because the Liberal party did not do what they said they would do when they sat in opposition. They then said that they would wipe the national policy off the face of the earth. They did not do so and to-day we have a united Canada in favour of a national policy for building up our own industries. The Liberal opposition antogonized the industries of this country; capitalists were afraid to invest; Canadian workmen were not sure of employment, but when the Liberals came to power they decided to uphold the national policy in a way, and they have since upheld it in a way. To-day we have a united Canada in favour of the national policy, and as I believe, in favour of a much more national policy than we ever had before. Let me remind the right hon. gentleman, that the United States is a difficult country to deal with in regard to trade matters. It is true they have been brought to a sense of their proper position by the threat of retaliation made by the Prime Minister of England. That has had a very great effect in promoting the idea of reciprocal trade among the United States people. They sent the right hon. gentleman empty handed from Washington some years ago, if he had then threatened retaliation he might have accomplished something. It is the only way to bring them to time. The free traders of England see now that the only way to bring the people of the United States to their senses, is to treat them to a measure of retaliation. The tariff is effective, and the tariff will build up our country and build up our national industries. The people of the United States believe in it; England is coming to believe in it, and there should be more of it in Canada. There is ahead of Canada a very dangerous competition in the way of slaughter goods from the United States. They are in a worse plight than we are; their industries are being overworked and they have goods for export which they propose to dump on outside countries. The word 'dumping' is a familiar word to English politicians to-day. The people of England see that it has to be stopped, and a substantial tariff is the only way to stop it.

I am not afraid to say that the sentiment of my province is altogether in favour of increased protection. The farmers of Canada to-day are more and more protectionists. I believe the farmers of the Northwest are more and more protectionists. They believe a tariff can do something for them, and more than all, they believe that some kind of an imperial preferential tariff can do something for them. On that subject let me say just one word. We admit to-day that there is a political alliance between us and the motherland. We have got that far, and we are coming to believe in a defensive alliance, and I give the government credit for taking steps in that direction. It follows that where there is a political alliance, and a defensive alliance there must be a commercial alliance and that commercial alliance can be based on the principle of protection and on nothing else. It is not inconsistent with the principle of protection. We can still have protection in this country and at the same time give a preference to the motherland and all the other portions of the empire. I am confident that what the English people are coming to is the present political alliance strengthened by a defensive alliance and leading to a commercial alliance of some kind. Hon. gentlemen opposite were going in the wrong direction when they proposed to start with a commercial alliance with the United States. The people of this country would not have it, because they knew that if it began as a commercial alliance, it would end as a political alliance. At the present time the people of Canada from one end of the country to the other are in favour of a commercial union with the different portions of the empire, which will not require them to abandon protection, but which will give them a chance of holding their own against protectionist nations like the United States. The people of Ontario, the people of Quebec, the people of the maritime provinces, and the people of the Northwest expect an increase in the tariff to enable them to meet the competition of the United States, especially if they undertake to slaughter goods in our country, and desire to have a preferential arrangement with the mother country. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that the country is prosperous. True, it is prosperous, but it could be made more prosperous. The Northwest would settle up more rapidly, we would have more factories and greater trade in the east, and we would build up Canada just as rapidly as the people of the United States have built up their country if we adopted more and more the principle of protection. As I said before, it is not so much the trusts in connection with the tariff as the monopolies in connection with great public utilities that are to be feared in both the United States and Canada. So long as we vote our money away to strengthen monopolies, as we are doing to-day, we shall do nothing to settle the transportation problem, but will only give monopolies greater power to grind down the people. Let us put a stop to that, and let the people's money be spent for the benefit of the people themselves. That is what I ask for, and that is what the people themselves are asking for. They are not asking for a husk in the shape of a back-country railway. They are asking for something for themselves; and if hon. gentlemen opposite had a transcontinental railway on national lines to offer them, they might reasonably ask for the support of the country. But they have nothing of that kind; they have only a great expenditure to propose in the interest of a private company.

The question of the autonomy of the Northwest Territories has been brought up. I do not know what is to be proposed this session with regard to that; but I stand here in favour of government by the people. The people of the Northwest are ready to assume the responsibility of their own government. They are as ready to do it as we in Ontario are determined to maintain the system we have here. Why cannot the people of the Northwest be given a government of their own? They are prosperous, they have schools and other things to carry on, and they can manage them for themselves as well as this government can do it for them. Why cannot the Northwest Territories be erected into provinces. The people are asking for relief and they cannot get it; but if the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway want anything, you find the great Liberal party who are supposed to be champions of the people, turning handsprings to give them everything they want. There is no legislature in this country to-day doing anything for the people, but every one of them is turning handsprings to distribute the resources of the country among the great corporations. That has got to come to an end. Perhaps the word 'Conservative' and the word 'Liberal' have passed out of usefulness in this country. Perhaps the day has come for a true national party—a party that believes in Canada, in the people, in the nation, and is prepared to do for the nation instead of doing for the corporations. If we are to take on true national greatness in this country, if we are to appreciate ourselves, we must use the resources of the country and the money of the people directly for the good of the people themselves, and not for making rich men and great corporations, who grind down the people. The day has arrived for bringing all that to an end, as you will find if you go about the country. The opposition in this House has declared in favour of public ownership in connection with the Intercolonial and its extension, and the people of the Northwest recognize that there is no solution of the transportation question except on national principles and they are all nationalists in that sense. The phrase is growing, and those who believe in it are increasing in numbers; and I believe to-day, as I have believed for some years, that the only way to solve these problems and to grant relief to the people is to move on national lines. Let us have a national tariff, let us have a national system of transportation, let us maintain the integrity of Canada on this North American continent. National propositions such as these will command the support of the Canadian people. It is on these lines that I have been appealing in my own constituency and my own province, and the people respond; and it is the men in this House who approach public questions on these lines who will be sent back here by the people. They cannot go on the old cries, because the people will not have them. The people are at last alive to the fact that so far the governments and the parties of this country have been working for the corporations, have been throwing away the resources of the country and have been doing nothing for the people directly. This, I trust, is coming to an end. I hope we can see the beginning of a great national movement on this side of the House. If the opposition start to educate the people on these lines, and oppose them to the lines proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, the day of real relief and improvement will soon come for the people. I hope that day is at hand; and whether the election comes this year or next year, hon. gentlemen will find that it is only on these great national lines that they will command the support of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. At this late hour, with the consent of my right hon. friend, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection, but I hope we will be able to keep later hours in the future. I would move in amendment that the following words be added to the motion:

That the order for the consideration of the motion for an address to be presented to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his Speech, have precedence over all other business, except the introduction of Bills, until disposed of.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion (Hon. Mr. Haggart) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILROAD SURVEYS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the House adjourns, I would call the attention of my right hon. friend to the fact that since last session we have had announcements in the government press, which I assume to be authentic, that the line of the new Grand Trunk Pacific between Abitibi and Winnipeg, a distance of over eleven hundred miles, has been surveyed and the surveys turned over to the government by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I am quoting from the Montreal 'Herald' of November 17th or 18th last, and that journal goes on to say:

Last spring, when the Grand Trunk first brought their scheme before parliament, which was then for a road from the west to North Bay, they sent in parties from Winnipeg to Abitibi to work east and west. They have now completed this work, and have placed the information in the hands of the government, which will greatly expedite the commencement of construction.

I would like to know whether any such surveys are in possession of the government, and, if so, whether the government will have any objection to laying them on the Table at an early date, so that they may be of assistance when we come to discuss the measure concerning certain amendments to the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government is not in possession of any such surveys.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 15, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my right hon. friend the Prime Minister when he proposes to lay upon the Table of the House the correspondence with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or with the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, to which he referred yesterday in his speech upon the address ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I cannot say exactly the day upon which it will be brought down, but it will be either before or at the time we take up the question. I shall be able to give an answer to my hon. friend later on.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be more convenient to the members of the House if we could have the correspondence a little before the day on which my right hon. friend proposes to introduce the resolution.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Grant for an address to His Excellency the Governor General, in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, permit me in rising to take part in the debate on the address to first of all pay a compliment to the mover and seconder of the address. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks of both of these gentlemen. The hon. gentleman who moved the address (Mr. Grant), departing slightly from the usual order of things, spoke first of the Alaskan boundary award. He said, and I quite agree with him, that while the award is not the award which we expected, it is not as detrimental to the interests of Canada as was at first supposed. In reference to the award, the question naturally arose at a former session as to the treaty-making powers of the Dominion. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) upon that subject, but I must say that I did not understand him. The right hon. leader of the government stated that he wanted greater power of initiative in arranging treaties with foreign countries. We all know that the treaty-making power is vested in the king, that it is one of his prerogatives. Sometimes a treaty does not even require the assent of the Commons or of the House of Lords. It is only when a treaty deals with commerce or affects the subject in his relations to the Crown that it is dealt with by the British parliament. The right hon. gentleman stated that what he wanted was the power of making or initiating commercial treaties with foreign countries. But surely Canada now enjoys that power to the fullest possible extent. The imperial government in their communications with this government have always excepted from the operation of any treaty entered into by them with any foreign country the people of the Dominion of Canada, and unless we give our assent we are not included in its operation, and the imperial government have over and over again given to the Canadian government the power of appointing agents for the purpose of initiating or conducting such commercial arrangements as we thought best in the interests of this country. I myself last session asked why all of the papers in reference to the Alaskan treaty were not brought down, and the right hon. the Prime Minister said that he was awaiting the assent of the imperial government, and that if the imperial government did not give their assent he was going to bring the correspondence down, right or wrong, for the consideration of parliament. We have not had it yet. What was the fault he found in reference to the Alaskan treaty? The Alaska boundary question, and all the other subjects in dispute, were relegated to the commission which was approved of by the imperial authorities, and on which we had the nomination of two of the commissioners. They would not agree upon a treaty. Lord Herschell, in his statement to the Marquis of Lansdowne, said it was impossible to make an agreement with the Americans at that time, although I presume that every effort was made to come to an arrangement. Lord Lansdowne, in his letter to the British Ambassador at Washington, stated that before the Clayton-Bulwer treaty should be abrogated it was necessary that all of these subjects should be sent to the commission. We had the power in our own hands. Lord Salisbury said the same thing in an address which he delivered in England. He asked why it was that we were called upon to settle off-hand and at once the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, while other treaties and other matters which had been submitted to a commission for settlement had been delayed from time to time. Then the right hon. gentleman says that we had not fair play in regard to the commission. Had not the right hon. gentleman the appointment of one-half the members of the commission ? And did not he appoint two members of the commission who were Canadians, while Lord Alverstone, the third British commissioner, was appointed with the consent, or rather at the request, of the government of this country ? Then what fault is to be found with the imperial government when one half of the members of the commission were appointed under the authority of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government ?

The full charge of the case was given to the Canadian authorities. Part of the communication of the imperial authorities is now down and they stated in the communication that it might be impossible to agree upon the question, but that there might be such a threshing out of the question as would lead to a settlement at some future time. What fault was to be found with the imperial government in reference to the matter? The whole case was under the jurisdiction and control of the government of this country; yet they seem to find fault with the imperial government and make the result of this case a reason for demanding further treaty making powers. When the right hon. leader of the government was discussing the question of treaty making powers what was it that he wanted ?—the initiation of commercial arrangements with foreign countries. Every one of us knows that we have the power already. It is not that we have the power per se, but it is given to us at any time that the request for it is made. When an agent is asked for the purpose of negotiating a treaty with the Americans the request is granted at once. When an agent is requested for the purpose of negotiating a treaty with Spain authority is immediately given to the people of this country. When power is asked to negotiate a treaty with France an agent is appointed by the imperial government and we have all the power necessary for negotiation of such a treaty. That being so what is it that the right hon. gentleman wants ? There is nothing further that he possibly could require. We could not receive the power which he has asked because it would mean the separation of this country from Great Britain. We could not without separation have the full power of making treaties, of alienating territory if necessary and of doing what we pleased in making an arrangement with a foreign country.

I must say that the Bill presented to us at the present time for consideration is one of the most meagre I ever saw presented to parliament. The only question to be considered is that of authorizing some amendments to be made to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway agreement and to consider a Militia Bill to be introduced containing—

> Several important amendments to the present law rendered necessary by the growth of the force and calculated to promote its efficiency.

I see that the right hon. gentleman and the government have put into the mouth of His Excellency the Governor General a statement in regard to a subject that I thought we had thoroughly threshed out in the debate of last session. This statement is that :

> Long before the transcontinental railway, authorized by parliament at its last session, can possibly be completed its urgent necessity as a medium for carrying the products of the west to our own Atlantic ports will have become apparent independently of the many benefits that will follow from the opening up of colonization and for various enterprises of the northern parts of Quebec and Ontario.

Does the right hon. gentleman still stick to the idea that the bulk, or any portion of the products of the Northwest Territories, will be carried by this railway from that country to the sea coast ? Has he read the speeches on transportation made by several gentlemen lately ? Has he read one in particular by the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company delivered before the Canadian Club in Toronto ? Has he read Sir William Van Horne's remarks upon the same subject ? Does he know at what rate grain was carried during last season from Port Arthur and Duluth to Montreal? During the whole season contracts were made for carrying grain from Duluth and Port Arthur to Montreal for 3½ cents per bushel, and in some cases they carried it for 2½ cents per bushel. Does the right hon. gentleman pretend that any railway that is constructed from Winnipeg to Quebec will be able to carry grain in competition with that route ? The fact of the matter is that the railways which have been built for the purpose of carrying that grain a portion of the way complementary to the water route from Port Arthur down to Montreal will find out that next season they will have very little to carry. The managers of these roads are becoming frightened about it. They cannot carry it profitably for three and a half cents or two and a half cents a bushel. The right hon. gentleman proposes some amendment to his scheme. The contract, as my hon. friend says, was too favourable. The right hon. gentleman found fault with my honoured leader because, in addressing the House he said that he was not going into the details of the scheme and that afterwards he did discuss the details of the scheme. My hon. friend did not discuss the details of the scheme at all. He asked why it was, that, after making an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and after the right hon. gentleman's statement to the people of this country that a million pounds of the stock of the company had been deposited for the purpose of carrying out that arrangement, we should be asked to alter the terms of that contract and make them more favourable to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. That was the whole of the argument of my hon. friend because he said that he would wait until the whole of the scheme had been brought down as the right hon. leader of the government has given notice of a motion upon which the discussion of the whole question can take place. I stated in my remarks last year that the road from Quebec to Moncton would never be built. I see a plan proposed under this Bill which may enable the government to abandon not only that section of the road but the section north of Lake Superior. Why is it that the right hon. gentleman is forcing this scheme upon the country at the present time? How does the present position differ from that which existed when he introduced his resolution in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway? When it was proposed to build that road north of Lake Superior he introduced a resolution declaring that through that inhospitable and unsettled country no road should be built and that the money proposed to be expended in that direction could be expended in other directions with more profit to the people? The scheme which he proposes is one entirely differing from that which the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company proposed. The president of the railway company stated in his address: The plan which I propose is one for the purpose of getting from North Bay to Winnipeg, and of enabling us to build from Winnipeg through the prairie section of the country over to the Pacific ocean. The other part of the scheme, he said, was proposed by the right hon. gentleman who leads this government to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to be added to their scheme. There is no necessity for it, they do not need it, it is not part of their scheme at all, it is a proposition of the right hon. gentleman. The right hon. gentleman found fault with and criticised very severely the remarks of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition on the appointment of Mr. Blair as chairman of the railway commission. My hon. friend stated that that gentleman, speaking in this House as to the policy of the government in reference to the transcontinental railway, had insinuated—an insinuation declared by the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) to be unfounded—that this contract was being made for the purpose of benefiting private individuals. My hon. friend has pointed out that the charge has never been withdrawn by Mr. Blair. It still remains in force. But, the right hon. leader of the government says: Oh, because there might be a little private pique, or because he differs from me on a great political question, is that a reason why the country should not accept the services of the most intelligent and best informed man on railway subjects in the Dominion?

I deny that Mr. Blair is qualified for any such position. Judging by his management of the Intercolonial Railway, and the gross extravagance, and perhaps worse that he perpetrated in reference to that railroad, he is the last man that should be selected for a position of that kind. Let us see what is the opinion of the Prime Minister himself on this matter. When he conceived his transcontinental railway scheme did he consult Mr. Blair? Did he ask his opinion about it? The Prime Minister now tells us that Mr. Blair is better informed than any man in the country in railway matters, but the Prime Minister conceived and brought forth his railway project without the advice of Mr. Blair, and even without consulting him. If the chairman of the railway commission is so well qualified for the office he fills; if Mr. Blair is one of the best informed railway men of the country; then the inference is that the Prime Minister considers himself better informed in this respect, because he did not seek to have Mr. Blair reflect any of his light upon him? And as to Mr. Blair's colleagues on the railway commission what shall we say? There is Mr. Bernier, a very respectable man, who was Minister of Inland Revenue, and there is Mr. Mills, a gentleman about whom I know nothing. Even the warmest friends of Mr. Bernier never thought he had any qualifications for such an office. As to Mr. Mills, I never heard his name mentioned in connection with transportation matters; I heard he was connected with the Guelph Agriculture College, but I never heard that he had any qualifications to be a railway commissioner. These are the gentlemen we have had appointed to one of the most important courts of the land. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has suggested that probably Mr. Blair was appointed, because it was expected there would be a general election last fall, and Mr. Blair having an influence in the province of New Brunswick, might exercise it against the government if he were not placated by this office. The right hon. the Prime Minister denies that allegation, but nevertheless it is believed by the people from one end of the country to the other. It is believed, and I think correctly, that Mr. Blair was appointed chairman of the commission in order to silence him during the election. Mr. Blair may be qualified as a lawyer, but as I said before, judging from his extravagant management of the Intercolonial Railway, he has no claim to be considered in any sense as an expert on railway matters. Taking it on the whole, there can be little doubt that the railway commissioners were appointed for political purposes and not because they were qualified to discharge the duties of the office. We have as chairman of that commission a gentleman who charged the government with entering into this transcontinental scheme for corrupt purposes; as the Minister of Justice interpreted his language. We have in Mr. Blair a gentleman with reference to whom the followers of the Prime Minister rose one after another in the House, and stated that the reason he was not continuing to support the government was because he would not have the letting of the contracts for the transcontinental railroad. Let me ask the Prime Minister, if he has ever really considered what the cost of a railroad will be from Winnipeg to Quebec, and from Quebec to Moncton. I wonder if he ever really intends to build any such railroad. Does he know that the railroad from Winnipeg to Port Arthur cost $80,000 or $90,000 a mile for grading? Has he looked at the expenditure on the railroad that the Ontario government is building from North Bay to Lake Temagami ? Does he know that according to a return brought down to the Ontario legislature, that railroad will cost $27,000 a mile, in addition to $3,000 for equipment, making $30,000 a mile in all, and it is nothing but a colonization railroad at that ? It has gradients of from 1 to 1¼ per 100 feet, which is equal to from 66 feet to 67 feet in the mile, and abundance of them. It has curvatures to the extent of ten degrees. If the country from Winnipeg to Quebec were as favourable as the country through which the section of railway is being built by the Ontario government, it would cost $60,000 per mile to build a railway through it. The right hon. gentleman enters into a contract off-hand. He signs an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to build this particular line, and give that company the working of it for a number of years. To my mind a more absurd contract never was entered into by any government. The contractors themselves do not want it. They do not want to operate that portion of the road from Winnipeg to Quebec and from Quebec to Moncton. They know perfectly well that for many years that road will be entirely useless to them. I see that the right hon. gentleman has a notice on the paper of a resolution with regard to this agreement, and when that comes up there will no doubt be an opportunity to discuss the matter fully.

The only other question of importance which is dealt with in the speech is the Militia Bill. We all hope that a proper Bill will be introduced. We on this side of the House believe that Canada should do her share for the defence of the empire. We believe that we should contribute something towards the defence of our sea coast, towards which the imperial government are contributing so much. They have a fleet on the Atlantic and another on the Pacific, and the sole purpose of the garrison at Halifax and the garrison at Esquimalt is to protect this country. While we form part of the empire, which I hope will always be the case, I believe we ought to contribute our fair share towards the defence of this country and to a certain extent towards the defence of the empire. As the right hon. gentleman has said, we should have the absolute control over the expenditure of our own contributions, but having that control, we ought to do something in the way of putting this country into a proper state of defence. In our militia force we should have something more than what was described last session by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) as the shadow of a skeleton of a force. I am with the Minister of Militia in everything he can do to increase the efficiency of the force for the defence of this portion of the empire.

The speech is more remarkable for what it does not contain than for what it does contain. There is not a word in it with reference to the tariff. Surely we are not going to pass another session without some amendment to the tariff. I should judge that we are to have some legislation in reference to that matter, from the remarks of the Finance Minister in Montreal, in which he hinted at a revision of the tariff, as well as from the stronger statement made by his colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine), to the effect that the anomalies which at present exist in the tariff will be removed, and that higher duties will be imposed where necessary for the purpose of protecting our industries. Other members of the government spoke in the same way. I am sorry to say that the speech of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government was not exactly in the same direction. He spoke of the terrible state of affairs existing in the United States, which he called the home of combines and anarchy. He was going to guard the people of this country against any such state of affairs. What he meant, if he meant anything, was that he does not intend to afford any assistance to the industries of this country, which are gradually being destroyed. Why is it that one statement is made by the right hon. gentleman in one section of the country while other members of the government make other statements in other sections of the country ? Is it for the purpose of catching all classes, or being all things to all men? The right hon. gentleman, wherever he is, suits his language to the feelings of the people of that section. The majority of his colleagues, or a great number of them, preach protection, while some of his supporters are against that villainous system, as it was described by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). I tell the right hon. gentleman that the people of this country are in favour of protection to Canadian industries. They know that these industries are suffering. They know that the redundant revenue of this country is partially due to the stoppage of these industries. Take, for instance, the woollen industry, one of the oldest in the country, established about forty years ago, an industry which gave to the people about as good value as was furnished by any other industry to any other people on the face of the globe—that industry has had to enter into competition with the shoddy goods manufactured entirely out of cotton in Yorkshire, and which are sold in this country at prices with which our woollen industry cannot compete, despite the fact that what the purchasers gain in price they more than lose in value. Thus the effect of the policy of the right hon. gentleman has been to close up one of the oldest and most important industries in this country and one which was giving to the people the fairest value for their money. What this government should do is to raise the tariff and thus prevent the importation of cheap, shoddy goods, and save our people this taxation of $15,000,000 or $18,000,000 per year now levied on them in excess of what the necessities of the country require. Let the goods which pay those customs duties be manufactured in this country. The doctrine of free trade is played out, and our people are insisting upon the manufactured goods they consume being made in our own country. The ideal condition of any country is that in which the manufactures are centred in the cities and supply the rural parts in the cities and supply the rural parts in every direction. Those countries which are destitute of manufacturing industries are poor and unprogressive. What we require is varied industries, but, under the policy of the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues, that is most difficult to obtain. They throw out no hope of protection to our manufacturing industries. The words of the right hon. gentleman are in the contrary direction, and I presume it is he who guides the cabinet in that respect.

Then what has become of all the promises made by the right hon. gentleman and his friends? We were to have had reciprocity with the United States and a preferential arrangement with Great Britain. But, according to the right hon. gentleman, the High Commission is not going to sit any more. It is practically at an end. He tells us that, if the people of the United States wish to bring any matter before the Joint High Commission, the initiative must come from them. They, and not we, must make the first move. We may consider, therefore, that that commission is entirely at an end. We are then told to await developments in the imperial parliament. We are to find out what they intend to do in England before we make any move at all. Sir, the people of England are moving in a direction which meets with the approval of the majority of the people of this Dominion. The Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain is giving expression to the opinions and the wishes of nine-tenths of the people of Canada. That right hon. gentleman holds that in order to have imperial unity, we must base it on something more than sentiment. We must have a tariff arrangement between the various colonies and the motherland. But the right hon. gentleman is doing nothing to promote any such arrangement. He will not even make public the views which he and his colleagues expressed at the imperial conference. He refused to give the imperial authorities permission to lay upon the Table of the Imperial House of Commons the correspondence and papers in connection with the proceedings of that conference. Why have we not got those? Why have we not got what the right hon. gentleman said over at that conference? Have we not the right to the views to which the right hon. gentleman gave expression at that conference, so that we may judge whether he then truly represented the views of the people of this country or not? There was nothing objectionable, from the point of view of imperial interests, to the publishing of those proceedings. The Secretary of the Colonies asked the different colonies for permission to publish them, but that permission was refused by the right hon. gentleman, and we are thus without the record. We therefore do not know to what extent the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain is voicing the opinions of the gentlemen who represented us at that conference in England. We cannot tell whether or not he is following in the footsteps suggested by them.

Then what about the economies which the right hon. gentleman promised? What about the reduction of the public debt? What about that excessive levying of customs taxes which the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) was accustomed so vigorously to denounce in those days when he declared that a customs taxation of $37,000,000 was largely in excess of the requirements of the country, and that, if he ever had the power he would reduce it by $5,000,000 or $6,000,000? We hear nothing now of that comparison which the right hon. gentleman used to make when he compared the condition of the United States in 1845, when its population was over 20,000,000 and its expenditure only $26,000,000, with that of Canada. To-day we find a taxation wrung out of the people in the shape of excise and customs duties to the extent of about $15,000,000, or $18,000,000 in excess of the amount we used to levy when we were in office. The total expenditure in 1896 by the Conservative government was $41,702,353. The current expenditure was $36,949,142, which was about the average for seven years. In 1902, these gentlemen expended on current account $50,951,903, and on current account and capital account together $59,931,824. They voted for the purpose of expenditure during the year 1902 no less than $88,000,000. Yet these are the gentlemen who went from end to end of the country declaring that if they got into power they would reduce expenditure and reduce the public debt. Has the debt been reduced? On the contrary it has been increased. Has the expenditure been reduced? It has been increased from $37,000,000 to $51,000,000. I do not know what it will be for the current year, but in all probability, it will be largely in excess of that of the year before. But, to cover all this these gentlemen talk about prosperity. The mover and seconder of the address referred to it and the right hon. leader of the government said that Providence was on his side and there must be some reason for the country being so prosperous while he was in power. And what laudatory remarks we hear from gentlemen sitting behind the treasury benches. They would have us believe that this government was the greatest aggregation of intellect that ever governed the country. I remember that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) in moving the address last year stated that the greatest man that ever lived was the right hon. gentleman who leads the government. Our opinion of these hon. gentlemen is——

Mr. CLARKE. Don't say it.

Mr. HAGGART. Our opinion of this government is not exactly in line with that of their supporters. The right hon. gentleman may think that Providence is on his side in making the country so prosperous. It seems to me that Providence is kind to the country in giving us something to compensate us for having such a government. If we have a government so extravagant as this one is by the confession of its own members, if we have a government that continues customs taxes of so villainous a character that they bleed the farmers white, at least we have the compensating advantage that the country is prosperous in spite of the government. We are often told that Providence tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, and in this we have an example of it.

Now, I have already asked what legislation these hon. gentlemen have to pride themselves upon as being a contributory cause to the prosperity of the country ? Do they attribute that prosperity to their revision of the tariff in 1897 ? That was a reduction of our protective tariff by less than one-half of one per cent. Will they say that this is the cause of Canada's prosperity ? Sir, these hon. gentlemen have done nothing to assist the forces that have made us prosperous, as they have done nothing to carry out any single promise that they made to the people. Have we free trade as they have it in England ? What has become of reciprocity with the United States ? What has become of the preferential tariff with Great Britain ? What has become of the economies of all kinds that we were promised ? Not a single promise have they carried out. What new work have they initiated ? The only thing they have initiated is this proposed expenditure on the new transcontinental railway. We have not heard from the right hon. Prime Minister whether the amount to be paid by the people of the country towards this work is to be increased. He told us that this scheme which was to do so much for the advancement of the country, which was to more than double our available resources and yield us inestimable benefits, was to be had for a total expenditure on the part of the people of $13,000,000. Since then, a new arrangement has been made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Is that amount to be increased or decreased ? Are we still to have this inestimable advantage of a new railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific for $13,000,000, as promised by the right hon. gentleman, and as endorsed by the Finance Minister ? (Hon. Mr. Fielding).

Mr. CLARKE. He said $16,000,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I believe he did. He seemed to think that the Prime Minister's estimate for the building of a road from Winnipeg to Moncton and assisting the building of a road westward from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean was not quite large enough, and so he carefully put his estimate at $16,000,000. That is another question on which the hon. gentlemen differ from the present chairman of the railway commission, Hon. Mr. Blair. That gentleman stated that the cost to the country, if it assumed these obligations, would be $140,000,000. That is a difference, between the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance on one side and the gentleman who then occupied the position of Minister of Railways on the other side, of only about $125,000,000 in the estimated cost of building this road. The remarks of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance on this point were made with apparent earnestness. And yet, I think, more childish statements never were made in this House. The right hon. Prime Minister must have thought that the people of this country—to use a word of his own countryman—were the greatest gobemouches ever known. I venture to say that the expenditure of the country in carrying out this enterprise cannot be less than $140,000,000. We shall have an opportunity of discussing this matter when the alterations in the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme are presented to us. I would like to see the papers on the subject. The right hon. Prime Minister has promised that these papers shall be brought down before we are called upon to discuss the question. It is one of the most serious questions that has ever come before the people of this country—the expenditure at this time of an immense sum of money which might be spent in any of a hundred other ways far more to the advantage of the country.

The right hon. gentleman and his colleagues in this House are occupying a position which they obtained by false promises to the people of this country : not a single promise which they gave to the people of this country has been fulfilled. The people of the country are willing to forgive their change of face in reference to a protective tariff because nothing but ruin could come to the country had the hon. gentlemen carried out their principles. If they had adopted a policy of free trade or of levying taxes only on tea, sugar and spirits, permitting manufactured goods to come in free, they would have flung back the prosperity of this country fifty years. That change of face is to their credit and the people have forgiven them for adopting virtually the principle of protection which was enunciated and carried to its fruition by the gentlemen who preceded them. This country commenced to prosper in 1895 and 1896 and continued to prosper on account of the protective policy of the Conservative party. As I stated before there was no change in the tariff, except a paltry change of not more than one half of one per cent which did not effect any of the commodities which come into the country. At the present moment they refuse to change or alter the tariff where changes are absolutely required in order to prevent several industries, especially the woollen industry, the oldest in the country from being wiped out. In my own county two woollen factories have been closed up for nearly a year, one of them in Almonte, owned by the Rosamond Co., the second largest woollen manufactory in this country, and this factory will continue closed until the tariff is amended. They cannot meet the competition of goods which are sent into the country for the purpose of being slaughtered. An amendment of the tariff will not make this country what he complains of in regard to the United States the home of factious combines and anarchy. That is certainly a complimentary remark to make of the people of the country to the south of us, an industrious people. I have never heard of anarchy in that country and although it may be the home of factious combines there is legislation against combines in the United States and that legislation is being enforced there and could be enforced here. What we want in this country and what we will have when the people again speak out is the preservation of the markets of our own country for our own manufacturers; that is the determination of the people of Canada. They will not be content to remain a purely agricultural and fishing community; they want various industries like other countries. The young men of the country want to engage in different industries. We can manufacture as cheaply, we can furnish as skilled labour as any other land, our people are as industrious as any other people, our resources are as great or greater than those of any other country on the face of the globe. Why is it we have not the opportunity of going forward and increasing the manufactures of our country? When they have an opportunity the people of this country will speak out and say that they will have our industries protected. This is the feeling from one end of the country to the other. Even the agricultural section of the Northwest Territories and Manitoba is in favour of protection of manufactures; my own province to a man is in favour of it, and if the right hon. gentleman had not led his followers to believe that the present tariff was all that was necessary for the protection of the industries of Ontario the government would be swept out of existence when they went to the poll. It is earnestly to be hoped that the people of this country will come to their senses in the election which is near at hand, and that they will punish false promises and broken pledges and will reward the men who speak truly to them, the men who carry out the promises they make.

Every one knows that the Conservative party of this country are in favour of protection and in favour of a closer union of this country and the imperial authorities; we are imperialists to a certain extent. There are in our ranks no members with the same sentiments as those of the hon. member who represents Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and some of his followers. I judge from the remarks of that hon. gentleman that he is against a closer union between this country and the mother country and that he is in fact looking for the separation of Canada from the empire. I do not know that in this he is much in advance of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, whom I have heard state that we must look to the future, that the day may come when the pear will be ripe and will drop from the parent tree, when we will bloom out into a nationality of our own and become a new union or a new United States in this section of the continent. The sentiment of our race is entirely different. We are for a closer union between this country and the motherland. I admired the right hon. gentleman when he said to the people of the motherland: Take us to your councils so that we may become part and parcel of the empire; let us be represented in the councils of the empire.

That is my sentiment and I believe it is the sentiment of the people of this country. It is the sentiment, I believe, of the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), only he intends to carry it farther, not to confine it to imperial interests alone, but to correct the faults and mistakes that were made over a hundred years ago and bring about a closer union between all the Anglo-Saxon peoples, between the United States, Great Britain and Canada. That is quite Utopian, I think. There is no prospect of achieving that end. The only prospect within view is the one of bringing about a closer union between all parts and portions of the British empire. That is the policy of all empires on the face of the globe. All empires striving for existence are controlled by this policy. It is the policy of the Russians, of the Germans and of the French. Their policy is one of concentration and of the advancement of the race in every portion of the globe. Let us then do all we can for the purpose of having closer relations between this and all other countries in the empire. I, perhaps, have spoken at sufficient length upon this question, but I feel strongly in regard to it. I feel that the party in power at the present moment have not performed their duty to the people of this country. An enormous amount of taxes has been levied on the people, far in excess of the requirements of the country. In this House the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and his friends on the other side of the House claimed again and again that there could be no greater crime or blunder on the part of the Finance Minister than for him to overestimate and to take from the people of the country an amount greater than was justified by the requirements of the country. Here we have been told that the surplus in the treasury is $15,000,000 or $18,000,000. Why take this amount of money from the people ? Why not leave it in the pockets of the people ? Why not estimate what the requirements of the country are, and if you overestimate the amount should only be slightly in excess of what you actually require. It is a mistake on the part of the Finance Minister to take from the people more than is required or is estimated for I have heard the fault condemned again and again by members of the government. In conclusion I must say that we hope for a better day. There is going to be an election, perhaps this summer, and we hope that the people of the country will remember those who have proved false to their promises and will be true to those who have carried out every promise they have made and reward them according to their deserts.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the government on the new policy which they have inaugurated this session—the policy of silence. I may tell them that I have seen this policy carried out before under different administrations and it has always proved the presage and omen of their downfall. I hope the omen and presage will be the same this time as it has been in the past. The right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was good enough yesterday to occupy himself for a short time with what has passed lately within the ranks of the Conservative party. The right hon. gentleman is curious to know what is going on in the internal government of the party to which we belong and he was even kind enough to say that in the province of Quebec there is no more a Conservative party, there is no more a programme of the Conservative party and that there is no leader of the Conservative party. I would like my right hon. friend to direct his attention to what has taken place in his own party. We can conduct the affairs of our party, but I would like to inquire as to what has passed within the last five or six months within his own party. I would like to know whether the breaches that have existed in his own party have been healed. Everybody knows that when the hon. member for Montreal, St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) left the administration the important question was put to my right hon. friend as to whom he would take from the ranks of his own party to replace the hon. member for St. Mary's. We still have in our minds the deputations of senators, of members of parliament and of influential men who were sent to Ottawa from the important city of Montreal and from other parts of the province of Quebec to protest against the entry into the administration of, or to confiding of an important portfolio to the gentleman who now occupies that position, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). I would like to inquire from my right hon. friend whether these gentlemen have been satisfied. When the right hon. gentleman looked around him within the ranks of his own party in the province of Quebec it appeared as if he could find nobody in whom he had enough confidence to give the important spending department of Public Works which had been vacated by the hon. member for St. Mary's and it is within the remembrance of everybody that when the present hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries went before his electors in the county of Maisonneuve he had to make the distinct promise and declaration that he was authorized by his leader to say that within a very short time an important part of the Department of Public Works would be confided to him. The election took place. This pledge which my hon. friend made—I am sorry he is not in the House now—to his electors, this promise, has not yet been implemented. There was a rumour last fall of an impending general election and that rumour took some consistence while the House was in session. What did my hon. friends do? They passed a statute chap. 53 of the statutes of last session which provides that.

> The Governor in Council may at any time transfer the management, charge and direction of any public work, or any power, duty, or function with respect to any work or class of works whether public or private, which is assigned to, or vested by statute in, any minister or department, to any other minister of department ; and from the date appointed for that purpose by the Governor in Council, such power, duty or function should be transferred to, and vested in, such other minister or department.

This was done for the purpose of making the people of the province of Quebec believe that within a very short time an important part of the Department of Public Works was to be transferred to the control of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and to implement that promise, that declaration, that pledge which that hon. gentleman had said he was authorized to make when he went before the electors of Maisonneuve. May I inquire of the right hon. leader of the government whether that promise made to the electors of Maisonneuve has been fulfilled ; whether an Order in Council has been passed under the statute of last session and whether my right hon. friend has now enough confidence in the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give him a part of this great spending department which was left vacant by the resignation of the hon. member for St. Mary's? These are questions which affect the internal government of the Liberal party. Probably it is, that, the late hon. Speaker of the House, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) having been taken in to the administration, those people in the province of Quebec who were a little afraid of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries have had their fears appeased, and the respectability of the Minister of Inland Revenue has probably gone far in allaying the fears with which the people of Quebec were impressed when the right hon. leader of the government chose to take into his administration the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Let me tell the right hon. gentleman that if these pledges are to be implemented, if these promises are to be carried out, now is the time and the electors of Quebec will take no more such pledges or no more such promises even if my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says he is authorized to make them.

When I speak of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—and again I say I regret he is not in the House to hear what I have to say—it recalls to my mind what took place last session in connection with the establishment of a line of steamers between Canada and France. Every one knows that when the Prime Minister proposed the adoption of this contract between a certain syndicate formed in France and the Canadian government, he took very good care to say that officially he did not know Mr. Carbonneau. But as soon as Mr. Carbonneau got back to France, he announced in his paper 'Le Canada', that he had been successful in the negotiations which he had carried on with the government of Canada, and that he had established a line of steamers between Canada and France. I would like the Prime Minister to tell me what has been the fate of this contract between the government and Mr. Colombier, or Mr. Carbonneau. The newspapeprs announce that Mr. Carbonneau is now in New York, and that he has come to this continent to perfect the arrangements with the government which he began last year. What has the Prime Minister to say to that?

Let me pass to another subject which is not mentioned in the speech from the Throne but to which the mover and the seconder of the address devoted a good deal of time. I refer to the prosperity of the country. Let me contrast the conduct of the present Conservative opposition, with the conduct of the Liberal opposition in this respect. When the Conservative party was in power and when the country was prosperous, the Liberals went from end to end of Canada preaching blue ruin and prophesying national bankruptcy if the Conservative policy were to continue. Look at the position of affairs to-day. Nobody in the land is more proud of the prosperity of Canada than are the members of the Conservative party in this House, and their followers in the country. And if the policy announced by the Prime Minister in 1895, when he promised to wipe out the last vestige of protection; if he had carried out that policy since he came to power, what do you think would have happened? What would have happened if he had carried out the policy announced by him in Winnipeg, when he declared the doctrine of protection is bondage. What would have happened had he not taken a leaf out of the Conservative book, and continued in a measure at least, the national policy which was inaugurated in 1878, and against which for 18 long years the Liberals ranted in season and out of season. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) and the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) have spoken about the great surpluses of which the Minister of Finance can boast; but, Sir, these gentlemen were not in the House and they were probably not in politics when some of the leading members of the Liberal party had a different story to tell about surpluses. The Halifax 'Chronicle' which at the time I refer to was edited by the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) had this to say, and it is interesting under present circumstances:—

> If these surpluses were created by the government in some magic way there may be in them a cause for thankfulness to Sir John Macdonald and his followers, but when it is considered that every dollar of the surplus is money taken out of the pockets of the people without a shadow of an excuse, money not required even by the reckless expenditure of the government, there is not much cause for rejoicing.
> That millions of dollars should be unnecessarily taken yearly from the consuming classes of the country, and this without being absolutely necessary, is a cardinal principle of the Finance Minister's, to which even his best friends do not unreservedly assent.
> They see that a surplus of millions at the capital is just so much money withdrawn from the trade of the country. How long can the Dominion stand the drain? Certainly not many years longer.

And this is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) said in 1882:—

> I asked how the surplus was got. $1,100,000 was derived from two of the most odious and oppressive taxes which were ever imposed in any civilized country before, under similar circumstances at least, the taxes on breadstuffs and fuel. If he really wants to relieve the people, let him remove the taxes on breadstuffs and coal.

And if these gentlemen want us to believe to-day, that they are the real friends of the country, why do they boast of surpluses which are caused by this most odious and oppressive taxation, and why don't they relieve the people by removing the tax from breadstuffs and coal?

Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have also spoken of the increase of revenue, but this increase of revenue must have been brought about by what prominent Liberals used once on a time to call taxes. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has told us that taxation is an evil which nothing but the requirements of government can justify, but to-day we have more revenue than the strictest requirements of government justify. They tell us that the surplus is $15,000,000, and surely this has not been brought about by a tariff imposed simply for the purpose of raising a revenue. Why does not the Minister of Trade and Commerce abolish this evil now ? Let me tell him that in 1896, according to the government books, the taxation amounted to $3.94 per head of the population. And, although the Liberals of the day told us that this taxation was too onerous, the fact remains that in this year of grace 1903, the taxation is $6.76 per head of the population, or more than twice what it was in 1896. We were told by the two gentlemen who have addressed the House from the other side, that the tariff is as perfect as it possibly can be under the circumstances in which the country is placed. I was surprised to hear this from the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) because he knows very well that whatever may be the opinion in other parts of the country, the constituency whence he comes does not consider the tariff perfect. Let me tell him, that if his majority in the recent election was reduced from 636 (the majority of the previous Liberal member) to 236, that reduction was due to the fact that the manufacturers and the workingmen of Hochelaga are not satisfied with the tariff. If the tariff is perfect, how is it that we have the Minister of Marine (Hon. Mr. Prefontaine) and the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) going down to Quebec and saying that necessary changes are going to be made in the tariff. If the tariff is perfect, how is it that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries during the Maisonneuve election posed as a protectionist, willing to give protection to all the legitimate industries of the country ; although it is true that at the very same time the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) and the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) were in Argenteuil preaching the doctrine of free trade. Do not we know that for the last three or four sessions, deputation after deputation composed of both Liberals and Conservatives have waited on the government, asking that the tariff be increased? Is it not a fact that in this very House, we saw last session man after man rising from the Liberal benches, and warning the government that if the tariff be not increased on various articles, the doom of the government is sealed?

Sir, is it not a fact that certain industries in this country have gone to the wall because the government have refused to raise the tariff ? Is it not a fact that the manufacture of barbed wire in Canada has ceased because they took the duty off that article, with the only consequence that we pay more for it to-day than we did in 1896 ? Is it not a fact that the taking of the duty off binder twine has only had the effect of increasing the cost of the article to the consumer ? Our hon. friends last session sought to remedy the evil to a certain extent by giving a bounty to the binder twine industry. And what has become of the steel industry ? If this industry is suffering to-day, is it not admitted that it is due to the condition of the tariff ? If hon. gentlemen opposite had listened to the wise counsels of those who told them that by raising the duty they would establish this great industry in Canada, we should probably have had to-day at Sydney and at Sault Ste. Marie thriving industries affording labour and good wages to a vast number of our fellow-citizens. What has taken place in the cotton industry? In the very constituency from which my hon. friend from Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) comes, shortly before his election, a meeting of the shareholders of the cotton industry there was held, and what was the declaration the directors of that establishment had to make to their shareholders ? It was that the profits were so small that they could pay no dividend. If hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of sticking to their doctrinaire free trade principles, had come to the relief of the cotton industry, such a thing could not have happened. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has referred to the woollen industry. In the city of Montreal, the woollen mills, instead of thriving as they did in 1896, are now working only four days a week, while in other parts of the country the woollen industry has completely gone to the wall.

I was surprised at what my right hon. friend had to say with regard to the United States. I remember when he had nothing too good to say of that country. I remember when he used to visit Boston, for instance, and tell the people there that there was no country in the world like the United States of America. And yesterday what does he say ? He says it is the home of combines, factions and anarchists, and he taunts us with wishing to make Canada the home of combines, factions and anarchists. What does he found his statement on ? He quotes from the Montreal 'Star,' and says that is our policy. Sir, it is no part of the Conservative programme, as the hon. member for Hochelaga said, to adopt a servile imitation of the policy of the United States. What we want is increased protection for our industries—our manufacturers, our labouring classes and our farmers ; and my hon. friend knows that this is what the country demands. He knows, from the elections that have just taken place, that this is the sentiment of the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Sir, let me quote to you the independent opinion of a man who is not in politics. Let me quote what he said when he was making a business statement to business men. I refer to a statement made a short time ago by Mr. Walker, the general manager of the Bank of Commerce, and I believe a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite. Speaking of the tariff in general he said :

> But if, as seems probable, we are to witness a general decline in prices, we must not be slow to recognize what this may mean. As we said a year ago, we must hold our own against a nation fifteen times as large in people and in industries. We cannot stand against, as we have been forced to in the past, the process of absorbing a large part of the surplus product of the United States. It is not a question of which fiscal policy we like, it is a question of holding our own in a time of war. It will only be industrial war, it is true, but it may be as fierce and unrelenting as ordinary war, although the results cannot be so terrible.
> Deeply interested as we are in Mr. Chamberlain's proposals, the vital question in tariffs for us at the moment is in connection with our nearest neighbours. After we have protected ourselves against the use of this country as a slaughter market for the United States, we must, in some measure, try to meet Mr. Chamberlain's proposals.

Here are the views expressed by a man who was not talking politics or trying to gain the favour of his audience, but a business man addressing other business men ; and I take it that this is the feeling which exists in the country to-day, not only among those who belong to the Conservative party, but among all who really desire the prosperity of Canada. I hold, as I have always held, that the great error in the tariff of 1897 was the one-sided preference which hon. gentlemen opposite gave to Great Britain. My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) spoke yesterday of our enormous exports of butter, cheese, pork and wheat ; but if the government in 1897, instead of giving a one-sided preference to Great Britain, had said to Great Britain. if you give us a preference in your markets, we will do the same to you ; and if to-day we had a preference in the markets of Great Britain for our butter, our cheese, our hay, and all our agricultural products, what a boon it would be for the people of this country.

I see my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) here. I am glad he has come in. It is not by holding Mr. Chamberlain up to scorn that we are going to do any business in this country. Mr. Chamberlain's proposal is a business proposal. I am not, as my hon. friend well knows, in favour of curtailing in the least degree any of the privileges or liberties that we enjoy in this country. I am in favour of the greatest autonomy that can exist in this country. But it is not by holding Mr. Chamberlain up to public hatred, or by ridiculing or denouncing him, that we are going to further the interests of Canada. The propositions of Mr. Chamberlain, if they ever materialize in Great Britain, are business propositions. He comes to us and says, we are willing to give a preference in our markets as you give us a preference in your markets. This is a question for agreement between Canada and England ; and if in the course of making this agreement we come to the conclusion that the agreement is a good or advantageous one for this country, I say, whether the proposal comes from Mr. Chamberlain or from Sir Campbell-Bannerman or from any other man on the other side of the ocean, we should adopt it as being beneficial to the best interests of this country.

The right hon. leader of the government, as I said a moment ago, to show what the policy of the Conservative party on the fiscal question was, thought fit to quote from the Montreal 'Star.' I am going to show how fair it is to make such quotations by making another quotation. A little while ago we had an election in Montmagny, and I am glad to see here, though I would have preferred to see a Conservative, my hon. and young friend (Mr. Armand Lavergne) who represents that county. But what happened? My hon. friend went to the county of Montmagny as the candidate of the government. I believe that he was held over the political baptismal font by a Minister of the Crown. The chief whip of the government in the province of Quebec went down to conduct the campaign, and my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) also pitched his tent in that county and remained there throughout the election. In order to celebrate the victory of my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) there was a meeting held in Montreal of the La Ligue Nationaliste. Both my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and my hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne) addressed that meeting, which was held in one of the public halls in the city of Montreal, and when my hon. friend from Montmagny came to this House to be introduced, he was presented by my right hon. friend, the leader of the government. Now, what is the platform of this nationalist league of which, I believe, my hon. friend from Labelle is the president or the chief organizer or the fac totum, and of which my hon. friend from Montmagny is a very active member as well as a follower and an admirer of my hon. friend from Labelle. Let me just quote the programme of this league. Here are its articles :

> 1. Opposition to all participation by Canada in he deliberations of the British parliament and in any imperial council.

That is a singular commentary on what my right hon. friend said in England when he exclaimed : 'Call us to your councils.'

2. Consultation of parliament by the government when invited to participate in any conference of countries having allegiance to Britain, and the absolute publicity of the deliberations and decisions of the conference.

3. The production at each session of parliament of all correspondence or documents exchanged since the last session between the Canadian government and the Colonial office or the governments of other British colonies.

4. The right of representation at all international conferences where the interests of Canadians are in question.

5. The right to make and to abrogate commercial treaties with all countries, including Great Britain and her colonies ; liberty to name agents who will be able to treat directly on commercial questions with foreign governments.

6. Abstention from all participation by Canada in imperial wars outside Canadian territory; resistance to all attempts by England to recruit in Canada.

7. Opposition to the establishment of a naval school in Canada with the consent and for the benefit of the imperial authorities.

8. The direction of our militia in times of peace as in time of war, to the sole purpose of defending Canadian territory.

9. Absolute refusal of all leave asked by an officer of the militia to take part in an imperial war.

10. Command of the Canadian militia by a Canadian officer, appointed by the Canadian government.

Here is the programme of my hon. friend.

Mr. BOURASSA. That is only a part of the programme. My hon. friend should give the whole of it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am afraid I have not the whole of it.

Mr. BOURASSA. That only shows the dishonesty of the opposition press, which only publishes what it thinks will suit its own purposes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the other part is not any better than what I have just read, there is no use reading it. That is the programme of my hon. friend from Labelle and also of my hon. friend from Montmagny, who was the government candidate in that county, and who was supported by a Minister of the Crown and by one of the chief whips of the Liberal party.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). And elected by the largest majority the county ever gave.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And when he came to this House he was introduced by the leader of the House. May I ask the right hon. gentleman if this is also his programme ? May I ask him if the articles of La Ligue Nationaliste are in the programme of the Liberal party ? Do they constitute the programme of that party for the province of Quebec ? Is this the programme we are to have in the province of Quebec, while my right hon. friend, in other parts of the Dominion, will have another programme and make other speeches ? That is a question to which I ask my right hon. friend to reply between this and the next elections, which we shall probably have shortly.

Let me now come to a question mentioned in the speech from the Throne. In this lenten season I suppose we must not complain of the meagre diet which is given us in that speech. Coming down to the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement, what was the position at the end of last session ? We had been discussing this scheme some two or three months. The House ratified the contract, and in December last, I believe, the announcement was given out that the deposit had been made. But the deposit which had been made was not that contemplated by the agreement, and we were told that legislation was necessary. Legislation for what ? To validate, to regularize, the deposit which had been made. Now, however, we find that we are called together, not merely to legalize the deposit, but to make important, substantial changes in the contract ratified by us last session. Let me quote from the speech of Sir Rivers Wilson to the Grand Trunk shareholders in London, and it is an extraordinary thing that we should learn what changes are proposed in the contract in question, not through any authentic or authorized statement by the government, but in a speech which Sir Rivers Wilson was pleased to make to the Grand Trunk shareholders in London. That, I submit, is a most extraordinary way in which to treat parliament. But what did Sir Rivers Wilson say ? After eulogizing the right hon. gentleman, he went on to say :

> In the meantime, a great and unfavourable change had occurred in the financial position of the markets of the world and the directors, in the interests of the shareholders, came to the conclusion that certain modifications in the agreement were imperative in order to safeguard the credit of the company.

So, therefore, it is not in order to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people that we are called together to-day, but in order to safeguard the interests of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

> The chief modification was that relating to the conditions which were imposed on the Grand Trunk Pacific Company for making the deposit to which I will refer more in detail later on.
> Negotiations were accordingly resumed, and the result is embodied in the second or supplemental agreement which is now in your hands, and which, read together with the first agreement, we now submit for approval. Should it receive that approval, it will be brought before the parliament of Canada, which has been specially summoned to meet on the 10th of March for consideration, and, I hope, confirmation.

So that this session is to be a Grand Trunk session, and this House is meeting to safeguard the interests of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway. We are told that this supplementary agreement, having been ratified by the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, we are bound likewise to ratify it. It is brought down by the government as a government measure, and, of course, the government will go to its supporters and order them to accept it. We may discuss this supplementary agreement as much as we like, we may propose what amendments to it we may see fit, but no change can be accepted, because the government would then have to go back to Sir Rivers Wilson, and Sir Rivers Wilson would have to call together again his shareholders and see whether they would agree to the modifications this House might see fit to make.

In connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme, let me refer to the appointment of my hon. friend Mr. Blair to the chairmanship of the railway commission. It seems to me that the indictment which my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, made against the government was rather a strong one. I was not present last session when the scheme was discussed in this House, and I listened with the greatest interest to the quotations from Mr. Blair's attack on the policy of the government in this matter. I listened also with great interest to what my hon. friends on the other side had to say about Mr. Blair in reply to his attack. And I fail to see that it is any answer for my right hon. friend to say that no better man in Canada could be found than Mr. Blair to act as chairman of the railway commission. It is no answer to say that Mr. Blair is a man of great ability and that no man better endowed could be found in Canada to fill his position. The question is this. Hon. gentlemen on the other side and their press, after Mr. Blair had denounced the scheme of the Grand Trunk Pacific, held that gentleman up to scorn, as a man who was not worthy of the confidence of the country; they held him up as a man not worthy of the confidence of his late colleagues, and one not as able as they had said he was. They held him up even as a man not worthy of their respect. I ask them whether they have changed their opinion with regard to Mr. Blair. If they have not, there must be some reason at the bottom of the appointment of Mr. Blair which is still to be explained to this House. Everybody knows—it has not been denied on the other side of the House—that during last autumn it was almost decided that the elections were to take place. I believe that the only thing necessary to fulfil the rumours which had been in the air was the actual passing of the Order in Council dissolving the House. It struck hon. gentlemen opposite, no doubt, that Mr. Blair was a very influential man in New Brunswick. He had been prime minister of his province and had carried that province time and again. In 1896 he had been elected to this House, and in 1900 he had come back as leader of New Brunswick with a large support from the province at his back. It was well known that he was a man of influence and that he still carried great weight in his own province, and that if he was let loose—to use a rather vulgar expression—he could cause great damage to the government by going into the fight against them. (All I intend to do in this matter is to put the facts before the House and hon. gentlemen will draw their own deductions.) When it was rumoured, when it was almost certain, that elections were going to take place, Mr. Blair was appointed at $50 a day to go down into the United States and study the results of the working of railway commissions there. This was before the railway law came into force. What was the reason for haste? Who was it that could not wait this time? Was it Mr. Blair, or was it the government? Why not wait until the railway law was proclaimed to appoint Mr. Blair chairman of this commission if he was such a great man as my hon. friends say he was? If he was such an able man that it was necessary to have him as chairman of this commission why not proclaim the Railway Act and have it come into force immediately? Why was it so necessary to pay him $50 a day——

Mr. TAYLOR. And expenses.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And expenses, to go to the United States to study the working of railway commissions? These things in the appointment of Mr. Blair seem to me at least suspicious. Let me put this case to the House. Suppose that the elections had been called, and I, going into my constituency, found in one of the parishes an influential man who was against me, and had said to him, if you go away I will give you $100;—if the man had gone away and I had been elected, does not the House think that I would have to destroy a very strong presumption that I had purchased this man, that I had given him $100 to purchase his influence, and sent him away from a parish in which he could have polled a majority against me? Sir, I will not draw any inference, but will allow the House to say whether or not there is a great resemblance between the two cases.

Now, I say that this country is not satisfied with what is going on, that it is not satisfied with the tariff which hon. gentlemen opposite still persist in imposing on the country, that it is not satisfied with the Grand Trunk Pacific policy of the government. My hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Grant) yesterday did not say that this government was the greatest agglomeration of statesmen the country had ever seen, as had been said in 1896 and 1897, but he stated that all things considered, and human nature being what it is, it is certainly the most satisfactory government that could exist. Let me contrast the present government with the government as it stood in 1896 and for some time afterward. At that time we had Sir Oliver Mowat, who had been prime-minister of Ontario and a leading spirit in that province. We had Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière, who had been prime minister of his own province of Quebec. We had Hon. Mr. Blair who had been prime minister of New Brunswick. We had Hon. David Mills, the philosopher of Bothwell. We had Sir Louis Davies. We had the present hon. member from St. Mary's division (Hon. Mr. Tarte). I must say, when I recall the names of these men and when I look at the hon. gentlemen now composing the government, it seems certain that those who have gone were giants ; I shall not say what the hon. gentlemen are who are left. My right hon. friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the House spoke of the by-elections. I intend to conclude with an appreciation of the by-elections, and I am going to try to give the House what seems to me an impartial view of the opinion of the people outside this House as expressed at the polls in those contests. Sir, we must not forget that in the provinces in which these elections took place, the two governments, both the provincial and the federal, are opposed to us with their great prestige, their strong influence and the enormous patronage which they dispense all through the country. And what happened? Let us consider first the elections in Ontario. In East Bruce, in 1900, the Conservative majority was only 43, but in 1903, the Conservative majority was 209. In East Lambton, the Conservative majority in 1900 was 221, and in 1903 it was 556. Take the case of St. John, New Brunswick. It seems to me the verdict which was rendered there is significant in view of the position taken by Hon. Mr. Blair. In 1900, the Liberal majority in St. John was 997. (I am sorry to have to recall these facts to hon. gentlemen opposite; it is not pleasant to them ; but I am not here to be pleasant to them). In 1903, the Conservative candidate, whom we are glad to welcome here was returned by a majority of 264. Now, let us see what happened in Quebec. I take first the case of St. James division. I am sorry, and I know that all the members on this side are sorry, that our good friend Mr. Bergeron was not returned for that division. In 1900, the Liberal majority in that division was 1,641, and this year it was only 636, a decrease of over one thousand. In Hochelaga, in 1900, the Liberal majority was 635, and this year it was under 300. And, Sir, let me tell the House that, if it had not been for the enormous concessions we are called upon to make to the Grand Trunk and for Grand Trunk influence, if it had not been that a great number of the Grand Trunk employees live in that division, my hon. friend (Mr. Rivet) who sits here to-day for Hochelaga would not have been here, but Dr. Bernard would have occupied the seat. Then we come to St. Hyacinthe, the Liberal stronghold, the citadel occupied by the Liberal forces for years. That constituency gave a Liberal majority in 1900 of 1,111, and this year the Liberal majority was reduced to 195.

Is the country satisfied with the tariff? Is the country satisfied with the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme ? Is the country satisfied with the general policy of the government ? Is the country satisfied with the personnel of the government ? I say that these figures are an eloquent indication of the sentiment of the country against this government and its policy. In the province of Quebec, in the three elections of which I have just spoken, the falling off in the Liberal vote was 2,256, but we have had other elections since then; in Quebec we have had four by-elections for the legislature, and let me tell the House that if Mr. Ross, in Ontario, is the right arm of the hon. gentleman who leads this House, Mr. Parent, in Quebec, is his right bower and during these elections some ministers of this government went down into each of the counties where these elections were held and it was stated to the electors that a vote for Parent meant a vote for Laurier. That was the sentiment everywhere ; that is what was said upon every hustings and the people were told that if they voted against Parent they would be voting against Laurier. There were by-elections in Maskinonge and Portneuf, where in 1900 Liberals were elected by acclamation, and in 1897 Liberals were elected by majorities varying form 400 to 500. In Maskinonge the Conservative candidate was elected by over 100 and in Portneuf by over 250. These are signs of the times and indicate that the country is ready to condemn the present administration as soon as it gets an opportunity to pronounce a verdict.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I must beg the pardon of the House if I come wholly unprepared to take part in this debate. It was not my intention to speak either this afternoon or at any other period in the debate, but the representations which have been made by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) as to the programme of 'La Ligue Nationaliste,' and his references to the part I have taken in the recent election in Montmagny, drag me into the debate. Fortunately the hon. gentleman has opened the door wide enough for a reply that does not necessitate any long or protracted argument on my part to show—I am sorry to employ the word—the total dishonesty of the policy of the Conservative party. The hon. member has quoted a part of the programme of the new association formed in Montreal a year ago and called 'La Ligue Nationaliste' This league of which I am not a member, was founded and organized and has been kept up by young men of talent and sterling character who thought that the time had come when there might be some organization in this country through which political questions and especially the problems of the future of Canada, could be studied otherwise than through the narrow gauge generally given to the political ideas in this country by party organizations and by party papers. Now, Sir, that league has been open to men of both parties ; and members of the Conservative party, honest men of the Conservative party, have joined us, have joined other honest men of the Liberal party to uphold and develop that programme. Amongst others, I must mention a gentleman who sat here for five years and of whom the Conservative party was not ashamed at that time and of whom it should not be ashamed at this time ; because if the Conservative party get deeper into the habit they have acquired during the past few years of getting ashamed of the few honest men who remain in their ranks in Quebec, they are getting low. I refer to Mr. Chauvin who represented Terrebonne in this House and was one of the first to address a meeting of the Nationalist League, to endorse its programme and to say that it was for the good of Canada and of the province of Quebec that such a programme should be advocated.

In the month of December last I was asked by the young members of that league to go to Quebec and to put before the people of that city the main articles of their programme. There was a gathering there of which neither the city of Quebec nor the young organizers of the meeting had reason to be ashamed. Citizens from the county represented here by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken were there in great numbers, as well as citizens from all counties surrounding Quebec, altogether some 7,000 intelligent electors of the city and district of Quebec. At that meeting I indicated the ideas propounded by the Nationalist League. Upon that speech and that programme the two organs of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec ' L'Evènement' of Quebec and 'Le Journal' of Montreal passed judgment, and of the part which the hon. gentleman has just given to the House they had not a word to say, not a word of reproach, not a word of disagreement. As to the rest of the programme of which the hon. gentleman has just said that if it were no better than the former part it was not necessary for the newspapers to reproduce it, I was accused by 'L'Evènement and 'Le Journal' of having stolen the programme of the Conservative party. Now, Sir, if the programme is such a shameful thing that it should be branded in this House as a mark of disloyalty, as such a scandalous thing that the Liberals should not approach it, what has the hon. gentleman to say to his organs 'LEvènement' and 'Le Journal' for accusing 'Le Soleil' and the Liberal party there of playing a double game because they had been applauding a man who was too honest for them—and here I may say, they were referring to myself—and was trying to get the Liberals to applaud a Conservative programme. I shall quote the paragraph so that it shall go down in the 'Hansard' and brand the hon. gentleman's speech with the mark which should be placed on so many of the utterances of the Conservative party in Quebec of recent years :—

Les conservateurs n'exploitent pas ; ils constatent qu'un libéral en vue, acclamé par le " Soleil " et le " Canada ", grand partisan du ministère Laurier et de toutes les idées qu'on appelle " libérales ", expose et adopte pour sien un programme absolument conservateur ; ils constatent en outre que ce " libéral ", qui a des idées droites, se fourvoie dans un parti ou on n'ose pas le reconnaître tout à fait, s'obstine à suivre des hommes qui n'ont pas ses sentiments, qui ne comprennent rien à ses aspirations, lesquelles sont les aspirations communes à tous les fervents de la patrie canadienne; ils constatent que M. Bourassa est un conservateur qui s'appelle libéral et qui agit comme un libéral.

I am going to translate it for the benefit of the House.

The Conservatives are no exploiters. They find that a leading Liberal, acclaimed by ' Le Soleil ' and ' Le Canada ', a staunch follower of the Laurier government and of all so-called Liberal ideas, exposes and adopts as his own a programme wholly Conservative.

That is the very programme which has been denounced by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain).

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is it not a fact that the part of the programme to which that article referred consists of those articles of the programme of La Ligue Nationaliste which referred to the policy of the Parent government.

Mr. BOURASSA. And what the hon. gentleman has just said was not worth while mentioning. As to that article, which is a judgment passed upon the whole of my speech, and upon the whole programme of La Ligue Nationaliste, there is not one paragraph, or one sentence, or one word, or one jot, against the part of the programme which has been read by the hon. gentleman, while it endorses entirely and fully the rest of the programme. I say, therefore, that the hon. gentleman has no right to come here as the representative of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec and say a word against that programme.

Now, the hon. gentleman, as well as the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart), have accused the government and the Liberal party of being disloyal and dishonest, because they keep within their ranks such an unworthy man, such an unworthy member of this parliament, such an unworthy representative of British citizenship as your humble servant, while ' Le Journal,' and ' L'Evènement,' the two organs of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec—one, ' L'Evénement,' being more or less the personal organ of the hon. member for Montmorency—give me as an example to the province of Quebec, and say that I am a Conservative who only from inconsistency remains within the ranks of the Liberal party. I am almost ashamed to repeat the nice things that have been said of me by 'Le Journal'; but after having been lectured so severely by the hon. member for Montmorency and the hon. member for South Lanark, I must say a good word for myself, and instead of taking the Liberal organs to enable me to make good my contention, I will fall back upon two of the leading organs of the Conservative party. Still speaking of the Conservatives, 'Le Journal' goes on :

They find out that this Liberal who has straight ideas, is lost in that party where he is not acknowledged entirely. He persists in associating with men who do not partake of his sentiments, and who do not understand his aspirations, which are the common aspirations of all lovers of the Canadian land. They find out that Mr. Bourassa is a Conservative who calls himself a Liberal, and who acts as a Liberal.

I might as well quote also the following paragraph from 'L'Evènement' :

La ligue Nationaliste a toutefois du bon dans son programme et M. Bourassa, qui est un orateur plaisant, a su le mettre en relief. Plusieurs passages de son discours ont été applaudis, avec raison, et il a été particulièrement heureux quand il a dénoncé certains abus du pouvoir et certaines anomalies de notre constitution.

That Ligue Nationaliste has some good things in its programme, and Mr. Bourassa, who is a pleasing orator, knew how to make it well received. Several portions of his speech were rightly applauded and he was especially happy when he denounced certain abuses of power and certain discrepancies of our constitution.

In this article, as well as in 'Le Journal,' not a word of dissent is to be found in regard to that part of the programme which the hon. gentleman has just read so as to make the good people of Ontario shiver with horror at the idea of the disloyalty of the hon. member for Labelle and the dishonesty of the Liberal party in allowing him to remain within their ranks. Yet, the Conservatives of the province of Quebec say that I should be within their ranks, because I am not understood in the Liberal party, which they say is unworthy of myself, and that my aspirations are very noble and of a patriotic character. I am very glad to find that out, because when there is no more regard for me in this party I hope the hon. member for Montmorency will change his ideas and induce his friends to allow me to enter their hospitable ranks.

Now, as to the part of the programme which the hon. gentleman has just read, I will say that neither La Ligue Nationaliste nor myself, nor the honest Conservatives or Liberals who have joined and supported that league, have reason to be ashamed, as Canadians or as British subjects. Have we come to this point of our history that we have no more the liberty to support and to try to make good in this country the ideas that are accepted by millions of British subjects in the old country as being the only true foundation of empire ? I do not deny to the hon. member for Montmorency the right, if he chooses, to come here and try to make himself popular with his colleagues of the province of Ontario by posing as a great friend of the empire and a supporter of contributions to imperial wars; but he should not forget that he went to the county of Kamouraska four years ago and, to raise the feelings of the people there, said, in his most eloquent tones: 'I have only one son; I am ready to give him for the defence of Canada, but I refuse to allow him to be taken to fight in British wars.'

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is not true.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I deny absolutely the accuracy of this statement.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have to accept the denial of the hon. gentleman. I only regret that he has not made that denial sooner, because that statement was printed in 'Le Soleil' of Quebec, and it was repeated in this House by myself on my responsibility as a member. I had the affidavits of citizens of the county of Kamouraska supporting it. I made the statement in the House here in Ottawa three or four years ago. It was after the hon. gentleman had given his adherence to the feeling in favour of the South African war when he was in Ottawa, in the province of Ontario. The only difference between myself and other hon. gentlemen in this House, on both sides of the Speaker's chair, is that I always say at Ottawa, at Toronto or elsewhere, what I say in the city of Montreal, or anywhere in the province of Quebec.

Sir, as far as the programme of that league is concerned, touching only that part which the hon. gentleman has read, and which covers the gist of our relations with the mother country and sister colonies, I say that we have no reason to feel ashamed of it. I aknowledge that any Canadian citizen has the right to be opposed to that programme, the right to think that a better programme can be adopted by Canada, the right to think that the foundations of the empire should be laid upon other principles ; but I say that we have the right, without being denounced as disloyal subjects, to uphold those principles, which have been acknowledged for a century in every part of the British empire as being true principles. I certainly acknowledge the right of the Liberal pary of the Conservative party to change their opinions as far as that programme is concerned : but I claim for myself, and I claim for the patriotic and disinterested young men who have organized that league the right to say that those principles, which were foundation principles of the Liberal as well as of the Conservative party, should still be the principles of this country.

First, speaking upon the question of imperial defence, what right has any person to tax us with disloyalty ? The leader of the Liberal party said in 1891, in the city of Boston, that he would never consent to imperial federation, even on purely commercial matters, because imperial federation in commercial matters might mean the participation by Canada in imperial wars, to which she would never consent. Have we not the right to say in 1904 what the leader of the Liberal party said in 1891 ? When the late Sir John Macdonald, the leader of the Conservative party, refused the British government the right to come here and enlist men during the Soudan war, was he accused of disloyalty by his followers ? Because we still claim that the policy which Sir John Macdonald followed in 1885 is the true policy for Canada, shall we be branded as disloyal citizens and accused of being agitators ? Sir Charles Tupper said in 1893, in Winnipeg, that Canada, by building railways and canals and organizing the country so as to give British troops easier and quicker transport from the motherland to the British possessions in Asia, had made her contribution to the British empire, and more than she should be obliged to do. Because we say the same thing to-day, are we to be condemned as rebels ? Sir Charles Tupper said again in 1893 that those who accused the colonies of not fulfilling their duty because they were not making greater contributions to the British army and navy were giving expression to a slander upon the honour of Canada ; that Canada had done more for the defence of the British empire, had done more, in the right way and upon true principles, for the empire than she was obliged to do, and that she should not be called upon to go farther. If Sir Charles Tupper had the right to say at Winnipeg, in 1893, what we say in Montreal in 1903, why did not the Conservatives of that time accuse their leader of being a rebel ? Is it because we are younger ; is it because we are French Canadian born, that we are not to have freedom to say, without being insulted, what the Conservative and Liberal leaders have said for years and years past ?

And now as to the fiscal question. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) has accused me of going through the province of Quebec branding Mr. Chamberlain as a sort of nightmare to the French Canadian. That I never did ; it is one of those legends that has been invented by the Conservative press of Ontario. What I have said, and what I should say so long as we do not have a clear exposition of the proposals of the British government upon this policy is : that the principles of Mr. Chamberlain have not been presented to the Canadian people with honesty and with fairness ; that the member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) and Mr. Foster, and Mr. Louis Philippe Pelletier have wrongly declared to the people that Mr. Chamberlain's proposals simply mean that the British people are ready to tax their bread and their butter, and their cheese and their hay simply because they love the people of the colonies, and that Canadians would be foolish to refuse the offer. That is what Mr. Pelletier said in Montmagny. That is what the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has repeated to-day. What I have said in Montreal and in Quebec and what has caused me to be branded with disloyalty, I repeat now. I am not perhaps one of those talkative loyalists, but I have too much respect for the people of Great Britain to think that they are foolish enough to tax their food and their clothing without asking some compensation in return. I have said also and I repeat : the supporters of Mr. Chamberlain, in Canada, are not honest with the people of Canada, and they tell us but one side of the story. Mr. Chamberlain is far more honest in stating his policy in England, than are his advocates in this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) has told us, that Mr. Chamberlain's proposals have nothing to do with the liberties of the colonies. Well, if any man wants to form a fair and intelligent opinion of Mr. Chamberlain's policy, he will go to Mr. Chamberlain himself to find out what his proposals are. On the 20th of October last, at Newcastle, Mr. Chamberlain accused his opponents of dishonesty, because they pointed out to the people of Great Britain that the question he was raising was only a question of dear bread. Time and again, Mr. Chamberlain has stated that the question of preferential trade within the empire, (which the member for St. Mary's and the member for Montmorency say is the whole question with Mr. Chamberlain) Mr. Chamberlain himself has declared to be only a side issue, and that his main object was the binding together of the empire. And because Sir Edward Grey had accused Mr. Chamberlain of not taking the proper means to bind the empire by the establishment of an imperial council which would have a kind of executive power over the whole empire, Mr. Chamberlain said at Newcastle : I have tried to get from the colonies their consent to the organization of an imperial council and they refused ; I have tried to get from the colonies contributions to the British army and navy, and they have refused ; therefore I have fallen back upon this question of imperial preferential trade because once imperial preferential trade is created then we will require imperial defence to defend it, and an imperial council to administer it. Sir, I respect the liberty of others as I want my own liberty to be respected. I acknowledge that any member of this House, whether French or English, whether Protestant or Catholic, has the right to approve of an imperial federation policy, and of an imperil council to control imperial trade and defence. But, what I say is : that no Canadian worthy of the name, no statesman worthy of the name, has the right to tell the people of Canada, that Mr. Chamberlain's proposals are nothing else than a question of granting a preference to the colonies. Let us understand what Mr. Chamberlain means, and if Canadians are ready to divest themselves of a part of their executive and legislative power so as to organize an imperial council in London ; if Canadians are ready to tax themselves for a system of imperial defence; I say, let the people of Canada do it if they will. But, Sir, I say that so long as Mr. Chamberlain's proposals are not presented to the people of Canada as honestly as they are presented to the people of Great Britain, we, who are opposed to these proposals ; we who think that the principles upon which the British empire has developed and covered the earth with such glory and power for the last century ; we have the right to think that these principles are still the true principles of empire and fight the new movement. And because a number of public men in this country have thought fit to enter into Mr. Chamberlain's fad and to call themselves imperialists, we have the right in Montreal and Quebec—just as well as Professor Shortt of Kingston—to say that we do not want the word 'imperialist' because the word 'imperialist' to us means the curtailment of our liberties. If the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and the member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) approve of the policy of Mr. Chamberlain, then let them be as frank and sincere as Mr. Chamberlain is himself ; let them go to Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Kingston, Halifax or Vancouver, and say to the Canadian people : 'Here are the proposals which are before you. Do you want imperial trade ? Do you want a preference in the British market ? If you do, it means, as Mr. Chamberlain has declared, the constitution of an imperial council which will handle your tariff, because it will be impossible to have an imperial tariff worked out without having some central body to look after it ; and it will also mean a system of imperial defence, because it will be impossible to have the commerce and industry of the empire intermingled, unless there is a common system of defence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is my hon. friend saying that Mr. Chamberlain used that language ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I did not want to tire the House with a quotation, but I will read what Mr. Chamberlain said. This is the language he used at Newcastle :—

> But now I come to the most important of all questions to my mind raised by preferential tariffs. I advocate them because, in the first place, they will stimulate colonial trade. We shall do more trade with our friends, and I do not think we shall do much less with our rivals. But the main thing is that we shall do more with our friends, and we shall do it under more favourable circumstances. I have told you that the increase of this trade is essential to your prosperity. But there is something else. This is the only way. I defy you to find any other. I take all my opponents—those who differ from me, those with whom I am dealing, and those with whom I am not dealing—and I say that there is not a man of them who can give you any alternative to what I am proposing, any alternative for attaining the object which I have in view. You cannot weld your empire together, you cannot draw closer the bonds that now unite us except by some form of commercial union. I say that none of our opponents have put forward any alternative. It is true that a statesman for whom I have the greatest respect, and who lives in the neighbourhood—I mean Sir Edward Grey—has told us that, in his opinion, it would be a very good thing to have an imperial council. Well, who first proposed an imperial council ? It was not Sir Edward Grey. It was I. I mean of late years. It was proposed before me. There is nothing new under the sun. But I have pressed it more than any of my predecessors. I have done everything in my power to bring it about on several occasions—at former conferences, in public speeches, and in private speeches, I have ventured to speak on behalf of my countrymen here and to say to our kinsmen beyond the seas—' We want your aid. We call you to our councils ; come and take a part in them,' and they have decided they will not advance along that line and federate in that way. I do not mean to say they will always refuse it ; on the contrary, I believe that if my proposal were carried a federal council would be a necessity ; but you cannot have at present, at any rate, and I do not see any sign of your ever having a federal council first. The colonies want to know what it is they are to discuss before they come to your council. When you have got a commercial union, that will be something to discuss—but meanwhile this alternative so lightly thrown down by Sir Edward Grey is no alternative at all. You cannot approach closer union by that means. I tried next in connection with imperial defence. Again I was beaten by the difficulties of the situation ; but I did not on that account give it up, and I come back, therefore, to this idea of commercial union which will bring us together, which will necessitate the council, which council in time may do much more than it does in the beginning and may leave us, though it will not find us, a great, united, loyal, and federated empire.

I could also quote the speech which was made by Mr. Chamberlain before the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire in London—which I have not here, but which I remember very well—in which he said in substance : 'You should deal with the question of imperial defence, though you are only a congress of commerce, because the question of imperial defence is only another name for imperial trade, and you cannot have imperial trade unless you have imperial defence.'

As I have said, I have no objection at all to the point being discussed; but I say that we who have different principles, we who believe in the policy of empire as it was understood in this country by Sir John Macdonald, by Sir Charles Tupper, by the present leader of the government, and as it was understood in the past in England by all statesmen except the remnants of the old Tory party which had conducted imperial affairs in such a way as to lose from the British empire its splendid possessions in the eighteenth century—the descendants of the old Tory party of Lord North and Grenville—we who have such principles have the right to organize, form leagues, publish newspapers and do our best to enlighten the Canadian people on the question from our point of view, as much as the hon. member from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) or any other member of this House has the right to follow Mr. Chamberlain's ideas and endeavour to have them carried out. No man who is worthy of a seat in this House, who is worthy to call himself a representative of the Canadian people, should brand as disloyal those men who have ideas opposed to his own, or rather opposed to those ideas which he supposes will bring him votes.

Sir, I have been accused of raising a race agitation. From the beginning of the Boer war to this moment I have never asked a voter in the province of Quebec to vote this way or that way because he was of French origin. What I have said in the province of Quebec and what I have repeated in the city of Toronto, is that we, being Canadians, could not view these problems of imperial policy with the same eyes as those who were born in the old countries of Europe; that we have only one home and that this home is Canada; and that we viewed all these problems in the light of our Canadian citizenship. This is what I have said in Montreal and in Quebec, as well as in the city of Toronto, during the South African war and up to this moment, and what I will go on repeating, no matter what accusations may be made against me by members from the province of Quebec, who themselves raise racial agitations in that province, but once they touch the borders of Ontario, feel scandalized because a French Canadian says that a million and a half of Canadian citizens, who when in a majority preserved this country for the British crown, should not now, when they are in a minority, be trampled upon. What I have said in Montreal, in Toronto and elsewhere, is that this is a British country—yes, but how and why? It is because the French Canadians, at a time when the British citizens of Canada formed only a handful of its population, gave their pledge of honour that they would remain faithful to the British crown, and have maintained that pledge and preserved the integrity of the British empire. Canada is a British country, but it is Canadian before it is British as it is Canadian before it is French; and we being ready every day of our lives to yield our preferences for the benefit of the whole country, being in the minority have a right to say: You are now in the majority, but surely you are worthy representatives of that nation of which it has been said that British fair-play is the greatest foundation of justice, and you should not forget what we did when we were in the majority. What I have said and will continue to say, either in this House or elsewhere, is that this country should be ruled according to the ideals of the people of Canada; that this country is composed of two races and nationalities which have become united to each other under one flag and one system of government, and that it is impossible to have one national sentiment in this country until we acknowledge that these two races and nationalities exist. But once it is acknowledged that Canadian soil, Canadian sentiment and Canadian patriotism are broad enough for two races and nationalities, do not be afraid of the humble movement of myself and those young men of the National League in the province of Quebec. The feeling we are trying to develop is not one of animosity on the part of the French Canadian against the English Canadian, but a feeling of pride and love for this country of ours, a feeling that Canada is broad enough and great enough and rich enough for Canadians of all classes; and a feeling that before our country has grown to its maturity we have no right to ask the people of Canada to yield up a part of their wealth, their population, their trade, their liberties, even to help Great Britain or the empire, because the responsibility we have is the responsibility of developing Canada. Let the people in Great Britain, in Australia, in South Africa do their duty by their own country as we are doing our duty by ours, and the empire will be in safer hands than it will be if placed in the hands of men who are trying to develop a sense of false pride in the empire, and trying to do away with that feeling of attachment to one's own country which is the strongest foundation for the development of a nation.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side may at least congratulate the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bourassa) for the bravery he has displayed in taking part at all in this debate. We could hardly expect that any of the ministers would venture to say anything on the present occasion. Surely it could not be expected that the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Emmerson) in his present dejected frame of mind could have a word to say. The recollection must be still rankling in his mind of his dismal failure, when, a short time ago, after he had gone, flushed with all the power and influence of a Minister of the Crown, into a campaign in the important city of St. John, he received notice from the people of that great city that they thought so little of him and the government that they had determined to consign him to hopeless oblivion. And had it not been, Mr. Speaker, for the fact that Mr. Hays personally went down into that riding and used all his influence in behalf of the Liberal candidate, I have no doubt that my hon. friend who was elected (Mr. Daniel) would have doubled and even trebled his majority. But what shall I say of the ministers from the province of Ontario ? There is the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) who pronounced in the city of Toronto a short time ago his valedictory, when he said that the time had arrived when he would have to hand over the fiery cross to other and stronger hands in that province. And in confirmation of his words we have the fact to-day that fiery cross has been entrusted to the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman). But it is rather hard on the hon. member for London that at the outset of his career as a minister he should have been so badly treated. He lives immediately adjoining the riding of Lambton, and chose that riding as his fighting ground. Supported by a score of members from the province of Ontario he invaded that riding. In his campaign he was supported also by that which has always been a great power in the constituency of London—the machine. The whole concern was moved into East Lambton, and the result was one of the most hopeless demolitions of the Liberal party in East Lambton which we have witnessed for many years. But the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), wise in his day and generation, after seeing a large Liberal majority in Woodstock converted into a hopeless minority in a local election came down to Ottawa and waited for the shock, and certainly the shock came with great violence. The Postmaster General, of course, was out of the country. He was taking the Texas air. But on second thought I find I am mistaken. It was the Texas air which the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) was absorbing, and the Minister of Public Works was refreshing himself with Mexican air. He knew well what was coming and fled to Mexico. The trouble with these hon. gentlemen in Ontario is this, that a discussion of public matters kills their chances. There was a gentleman named Dr. Hart, the candidate for the provincial government in Muskoka, who thus accounted for his defeat. He said : ' It was not that the electors had any fault to find with me, it was not that they did not respect me personally, but I had to suffer for the sins of the government. In like manner Mr. Robb, who was the candidate of the Liberal government in the riding of East Bruce, and who was a newspaper man by the way —thus explained his defeat. He said : ' One reason I was defeated was because the Tory party held a large number of public meetings at the close of the campaign.' That is the trouble with these hon. gentlemen. Wherever public issues are discussed before the people, they must fall to the ground. It is quite possible that the speech of the Hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in Toronto was the one thing which gave a pointer to the people of Ontario and a warning to fight shy of this government. What were his concluding words ? In his last adjuration to the Liberals in the city of Toronto, he gave this warning :—

> But Ontario may undoubtedly very greatly diminish the weight which the province ought to have in the councils of the Dominion. It is possible you might see some things done which would not have been done if Ontario had chosen to do its duty. Now I speak thus because I know the danger which arises from certain prejudices to which I will not allude now. I know what you were treated for before in the case of Mr. Tarte and others. I hope for better things now.

What, in effect, did the hon. gentleman tell the people of Ontario ? He told them that this government is not a government of the Dominion but a government of the province of Quebec, that the province of Quebec has the whip hand, and he warns the people of Ontario that they must endeavour to curtail the power of the province of Quebec in the present government by electing Ontario Liberals who may to some extent counterbalance Quebec influence. Is not that a nice position for a Minister of the Crown to take ? No doubt the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not in a happy frame of mind. He has got his notice to quit definitely. He got that notice when the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) was promoted to a cabinet position. The time has arrived when the Minister of Trade and Commerce must sacrifice himself and leave the cabinet, but he is not leaving it without having provided for all his relations. His last son has just been placed on the Railway Commission as its chief clerk, and here we find this minister warning the people of Ontario to beware of the encroachments and inroads being made on the public exchequer by the people of Quebec and their representatives. But while the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is very brave when he is away from his colleagues, he is very timid when they are present. When free from their presence he pointed out the wrong-doings of Mr. Tarte and others of his colleagues in the province of Quebec. But while they were doing wrong what was the Minister of Trade and Commerce doing ? He was saddling all his relations on the country and drawing his salary and thankful to be allowed to do it. Is it then to be wondered at that the people of the province of Ontario, when thus warned by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, should take him at his word, as they did in the ridings of East Bruce and Lambton ?

We have been treated to a great deal of mock indignation by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House for what he calls our assault on Mr. Blair. But is it not notorious that the opinions to which we have given expression are entertained, not only on this side of the House, but in the party of hon. gentlemen opposite. They are equally shared by the independent press of this country. Let me read, for the benefit of the right hon. gentleman a quotation from the 'Weekly Sun' newspaper, which has not been altogether unfriendly to hon. gentlemen opposite :—

What galls the farmers most in all this is that no one pretends to say Mr. Blair has been selected for the most important public office in the country by reason of his fitness therefor. The farmers of Canada see, as the News sees, that the ex-minister has been given an office for the sole purpose of closing his mouth and preventing further criticism by him of the government's Grand Trunk Pacific project. The appointment has been made, not in the public interest, but as a matter of political expediency—to silence a man who it is feared might render it more difficult for the government to carry the country in the pending election. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has, therefore, deliberately sacrificed the interests of the people in the most important matter now before the country in order to serve his own supposed political interests. We can tell the premier he has made a mistake, even from his own point of view. The feeling of resentment which farmers have naturally entertained towards Mr. Blair because of that gentleman's attitude in the cattle-guard, drainage, and fire matters is turning towards the man who has put the ex-Minister of Railways in a position where he can work still further harm to the farmers of Canada. Sir Wilfrid Laurier might better have the opposition of one man, and a man whose fangs have been largely removed, than the just hostility of the organized farmers of Canada. Even at this late date, he would do well to reconsider the personnel of his railway commision.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman might give the opinion of the other 'Sun'—The St. John 'Sun.'

Mr. BENNETT. It is not necssary, The electors of St. John have given their opinion.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair I was referring to the composition of the so-called railway commission instituted by this government, particularly to the personnel of it, and more particularly to the appointment of the Hon. A. G. Blair as chairman. I quoted from the Toronto 'Sun,' a respectable and widely read journal of the province of Ontario, a strong condemnation of the government for this appointment. I think that article fairly reflects the opinion of the province of Ontario, and not only the opinion of the province of Ontario but that of the other provinces. As was said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) the appointment of the Hon. Mr. Blair can be regarded in one light and in one light only—he was removed from the arena of politics in order that this government might not be embarrassed by his presence. What was the position of the government in appointing Mr. Blair to this office ? When the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway project was under discussion in this House last session no hon. gentleman assailed the project with greater bitterness or with more forceful argument than did the Hon. Mr. Blair. He pointed out in the strongest manner that it was an impossibility as a paying speculation, and that opinion we have reiterated by the independent press of the country. It was to be assumed that, if he continued in his place as a member of this House he would feel obliged to continue to condemn and repudiate that bargain in as strong language as before. Of course this government may not have cared for the expression of his opinions in this House. But there was a time and a place when they would care, and that was during an election in the province of New Brunswick. There has been a test of strength between the government and the opposition in the city of St. John, and what was the result. The speech of the Hon. Mr. Blair in this House was widely circulated in that city and the result of this and of the common knowledge of that hon. gentleman's opinion resulted in the election of a member of the opposition to this House. The people of this country look with suspicion upon the removal of a gentleman who is antagonistic to the government, especially when he is regarded pecuniarily as well as this gentleman has been, this appointment as well as others proving this government to be one that is ready at all times to sacrifice the interest of this country in order that personal ends may be gratified. Why, look at the position of the government from its outset—consider how the positions of the ministers were secured by the most flagrant barter and sale of public offices. The Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) was not returned in the general election of 1896. He had been the prime minister of the province of Nova Scotia, and the position of the minister of finance had been promised him. Yet, though a large number of members had been returned from Nova Scotia to support the Liberal government, not a single one of them was prepared to surrender his seat and give the hon. gentleman a place in this House. What happened ? A disgraceful sale of a judgeship took place, and Mr. Forbes was translated from this House to the bench. And how was it in New Brunswick ? Hon. Mr. Blair had not a seat, and no member from New Brunswick was ready to sacrifice his place. So, Mr. King, who represented one of the ridings of New Brunswick, was approached. That gentleman was ready to exchange his seat in this House for a seat in the Senate. The exchange was made and so Hon. Mr. Blair found a place in this House. And what happened in the case of the then Minister of Public Works, the hon. member for St. Mary's (Hon. Mr. Tarte) ? I do not blame him for doing what other members of the government were doing. He had been defeated in Beauharnois. Observing the example of the Minister of Finance, he said : If this government is prepared to sell, barter and traffic, I am prepared to take a seat in that way, and so he got a seat for St. John's by the translation of the sitting member to the Senate. And this kind of thing has been going on ever since these hon. gentlemen came into power. And not only has this gone on in securing positions for cabinet ministers, but in filling judgeships and positions of all kinds. And the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock), who, when a member of the opposition, with all solemnity and apparently in all honesty, stood up and moved a resolution declaring that no gentleman who was a member of the House should be allowed to accept a position of emolument under the Crown until two years after the termination of his membership in this House, now sits by and nods acquiescence to every move of this government. I am sorry that the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is not in his place. Last night he painted a picture of the Conservative party in Quebec as an old hulk which had been repainted and retrimmed and was now sailing under new colours. Well, what shall we say of the old-time Liberal party of Ontario and of the Dominion ? Not only has all that was good in the old hulk been removed, but nearly all the old crew have deserted, each one to some safe position with fine emoluments. It is true there are a few still remaining, and they may be described as buccaneers. But they are not like the buccaneers of the days of Captain Kidd. Those old free-booters buried their treasure in the sands, but these parade it before the electors of Canada. You see it in their princely mansions, in their holdings of bank stocks and other stocks ; and the people wonder how these gentlemen have become Crœsuses so suddenly who came here not long ago by no means rich men. And the whole public are being contaminated in the province of Ontario by reason of the actions of these men, these leaders of the government. This action of the government in appointing Hon. Mr. Blair to this position is one of the most glaring cases that have come before the people of Canada to bribe and remove from their pathway a gentleman who was distasteful to the government and whose removal was necessary in their own interest. When the question of the railway commission was discussed on the introduction of the Bill some years ago we were told that this was to be a tribunal composed of men whose knowledge of railway questions would make it a very useful body to the public. I am not going to question the ability of Hon. Mr. Blair. I do not think that any man in this House would do so. He was a lawyer of high standing at the bar of the province of New Brunswick. Filling the position of Minister of Railways and Canals he had an opportunity of acquiring a large fund of information relative to the running of railways. Added to that he was a gentleman of great shrewdness and common sense. If I wished to prove that point I should read his speech in this House in opposition to the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill. As to the other gentlemen who compose the commission, who are they ? There had been a demand from the province of Quebec for a rearrangement satisfactory to certain gentlemen. My honourable and amiable—I think he will permit me to call him so—friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) was chafing under the restraint imposed upon him and demanding preferment. He wished to be moved upward, and to effect this some displacement had to be made. Hon. Mr. Bernier was appointed a member of the railway commission, there was a certain moving about of others, and the result was some vacancies which permitted the appointment of a gentleman from the province of Quebec. I am sure that no hon. gentleman in this House or out of it will claim that Hon. Mr. Bernier brings to the position of railway commissioner any special attainment in regard to railway questions. I am not aware that he had any special railway training or railway connection. He was not even engaged in commerce. He was a notary of the province of Quebec in the town of St. Hyacinthe. He had no qualities to specially fit him for the position. But what need I say in that regard ? This government never regards the question of fitness for position. A little time ago they made an appointment to a judgeship. One of the law journals published in the city of Toronto made a rather caustic remark in reference to the gentleman who was appointed. The remark made by this journal in reference to the appointment of this judge was this : We have nothing personally to say of the gentleman in question—and I need not name him—but his appointment recalls to us the case of the death of a notoriously bad man. Among other people who attended the funeral was one very charitably disposed gentleman, and when this gentleman was appealed to for his opinion of the deceased, he said : 'Well, at all events, he was an excellent smoker.'

think we will all concede that Mr. Bernier was at all events an excellent smoker.

What shall I say for Mr. Mills, who was appointed from Ontario? Had a guessing competition been indulged in, had men conversant with trade and commerce in Toronto or any city in Ontario been asked who would probably be the appointee from Ontario, I venture to say that not one in a thousand would have suggested Mr. Mills. What special fitness had Mr. Mills for such a position? He had been for twenty years principal of the Agricultural College, but what connection had he had with railway or transportation questions? None whatever, and the reason for his appointment will always be enshrouded in mystery. I can only suppose that it was a question of throwing out a sop to the agricultural interests in Ontario by alleging that Mr. Mills, having been president of this college, would be supposedly in touch with the farmers of Ontario. Now, Sir, that is the position of the so-called railway commission, and it remains to be seen what the people of Ontario will think of that commission; by their fruits I suppose in time to come they must be judged.

There are gentlemen sitting on the back benches opposite who will not dare to take the stand that has been taken by the premier and the mover of the address, that the tariff as it stands to-day is a fit and proper tariff. I see, for instance, the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie); he will not go back to Guelph and say that this is a perfect tariff. There are in that city some very large manufacturing concerns, and if that gentleman is properly reported in the public press and in private conversation, he is not satisfied with the tariff, and when he again appeals for election this fall, I am sure that he will not stand on the platform in Guelph and say that the tariff as framed by the government is correct in its entirety, and that he is prepared to abide by it in every particular. Then, too, there is the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment); he has been persistent in asking the government to make changes in the steel and iron duties, and why not? For the simple reason that the great industry at Sault Ste. Marie requires further protection, and that gentleman, I am bound to say, has time and again begged and prayed the government to make changes in the tariff. Then, too, a meeting was held at Amherst, in Nova Scotia, at which the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) was present. He is a staunch supporter of this government, and what was his utterance? Not that this tariff was a perfect tariff but that he was a pronounced protectionist, and wished to see the industries of Nova Scotia benefited by an advance in the tariff. When you come to single out these gentlemen, every one of them, talking at home, favours an increase in the tariff. Let us take the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross); only a few weeks ago a large deputation of carriage makers, including Mr. Tudhope, of Orillia, a large carriage manufacturer, interviewed the government, and asked for changes in the tariff in relation to that great industry. There are sitting to-day behind the government a large number of members who go home to their constituents and assure them that they favour increased protection and are urging the ministers to give increased protection, yet not one of these gentlemen has the boldness to stand up and favour increased protection. What does it all mean? Surely these gentlemen have some regard for their political future. I believe the answer lies in this, that the government has given assurances to their supporters that at the close of this session a commission is to be appointed to inquire into the tariff workings of the whole Dominion. Whether that is true or not remains to be seen. If it is done, it will prove that this government are trying to dilly-dally with the electors of the Dominion, holding out in the Northwest, where protection feeling is perhaps not so strong as in the cities of the older provinces, the theory of a moderate tariff. Thus they are endeavouring to blow hot and cold in the various parts of the Dominion. Let us look at the speech delivered by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) at Toronto just prior to the time that it was proposed to hold an election. It will be remembered that the government a few months ago had finally decided to take the cold plunge. There is not a doubt of that. Every member will remember issues of the 'Globe' day after day placarded on the front page with cartoons which were labelled 'Finger posts of prosperity.' These gentlemen were holding nomination meetings in every part of the Dominion, and there was every sign and evidence that an election was impending. Why was it not brought on? Rumour says it was because of the failure to float the Grand Trunk Pacific bonds in the old country. Be that as it may, it goes without saying that the government had decided to bring on a general election. In pursuance of that policy, and in order to stiffen up the backs of their friends in Ontario, the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce was despatched to Toronto, and there made his strong campaign speech. First he dealt with the sins of commission and sins of omission of the Conservative party in the past, and after that he endeavoured to build up a strong case as to the prosperity of the country, which he said was due to the course of these hon. gentlemen since their advent to power. I wish to say, and I challenge any gentleman who may follow me to dispute it, that this government has not placed one clause in the customs tariff law of this country that has increased its prosperity or advanced the interests of any manufacturing concern in this Dominion. The right hon. gentleman's strong appeal, however, was to the farmers. He said that the exports of farm produce had risen from $50,591,000 to $114,441,000, and he made the boast that this was all due to the wise policy of this government. I have taken pains to look into some of the figures. In 1896 the exports of butter from this country amounted to $1,118,768 and in 1903 to $6,958,906. I remember that nearly ten years ago the Minister of Agriculture, under the Conservative administration, brought down a proposition to have a considerable sum of money voted in order to purchase butter to be shipped to the old country. It was pointed out by him that we had not made a fair entry of our butter in the old country market, and that there we had to meet the bitter competition of Danish and other European butter, and that if we wished to compete in the markets of Europe it was necessary to send a good sample there. What was the outcry of gentlemen opposite ? They cried that the government were going into the grocery business, which was an absurdity. Despite the protests and jeers a large quantity of butter was shipped to the old country, a footing was established there, and as a result we have had the gratification of seeing the butter trade of Canada increase by over $5,000,000 in the short space of something like seven years.

These are the gentlemen who, to-day, after decrying the butter of Canada and the chance of working up that trade in the old country are claiming the credit and the benefit of these large shipments. Take next the question of cheese. What have these hon. gentlemen had to do with the matter of the export of cheese ? In 1896, there was an export of cheese amounting to $14,283,825. That export, last year, had risen to $24,776,406. What had hon. gentlemen opposite to do with the cheese industry ? This industry was commenced a number of years ago. It was bound to increase owing to the fact that the Canadian farmer was producing a first-class article. The trade has gone on increasing and these hon. gentlemen were simply, to use the old phrase, flies on the wheel and do what they would they could not stop the increase in the export of the butter or cheese of this country. Then take the question of meats. In 1896, there was an export of about $4,000,000. A matter of history is the opposition offered by these hon. gentlemen when the high protective tariff was placed on bacon. It was announced that there was a possibility of building up a large export trade in bacon and hams from this country. That was bitterly assailed by hon. gentlemen opposite ; yet, that trade has gone on and prospered and we now see an increase of from about $4,000,000 to about $15,456,286 in the matter of meats alone. Perhaps the most marked increase that we have had in the matter of agricultural products has been in the export of oats, wheat and flour. If there is one question upon which hon. gentlemen opposite should be silent it is a question of our increased exports in that regard. What is the reason that, to-day, we have an export of wheat to the amount of nearly $30,000,000 as against $8,000,000 seven years ago ? This is the export of the great Northwest and it is not due to the fact that this country has spent hundreds and thousands of dollars in bringing a lot of Galicians and Doukhobors into the country, but it is owing to the fact that this country has been sending a large number of the best men of Ontario and the other older provinces to the Northwest, that they have taken advantage of the fertility of the soil of the prairies and moreover a great portion of the export of the last two years is due to the fact that the western states have been filling up and that we find farmers from that part of the country coming into the Northwest and taking up farms there. If these hon. gentlemen opposite ask the farmers of this country to believe that they have had anything to do with the development of the Northwest Territories, they must imagine that they are talking to a lot of people who are very innocent indeed. It is a notorious fact that the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite decrying the Northwest Territories were actually printed in the literature of the transportation companies of the United States and heralded all over Europe. These hon. gentlemen who denounced the Northwest Territories as being an inhospitable plain and opposed the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, now seeing the development that has taken place in that country as the result of the efforts of the Conservative party, come forward and seek to claim the credit. In the matter of oats there has been an increase in the exports of nearly $2,000,000. A great part of these oats, no doubt, have been grown in the Northwest Territories. There has been a considerable development in the trade in flour, because, in 1896, we only exported $895,000 worth while last year we exported $4,700,000 worth. Then, coming to the question of cattle, it is a well-known fact that we have a large number of cattle being fed on the prairies of the west.. Any gentleman who has paid a visit to that country must have been struck by seeing the large trains coming out loaded down with fattened beasts. We have had an increase in the export of cattle to the amount of $4,000,000. When these hon. gentlemen take the export trade of the country, when they added it up and arrive at the aggregate they find that there has been a development of nearly $25,000,000 in the export of lumber. What have these hon. gentlemen had to do with lumber exports ? Nothing whatever. That has been a circumstance, a something that happened that they were utterly powerless to deal with. Every hon. gentleman in this House knows that the supply of lumber in the United States has been gradually lessening, and every hon. gentleman knows that, thanks to the fact that we have been preventing the export of logs from the province of Ontario, we have been able to manufacture a much larger quantity of lumber in that country, and that as a result the total aggregate exports of lumber show an increase of $24,000,000. I am here to tell the government that they are not dealing fairly with the lumber exporter of Ontario and that they are not dealing fairly with the lumber manufacturers of British Columbia, that while we allow the people of the United States to bring their lumber into Canada free of duty, we at the same time permit them to levy $2 per thousand on our lumber exported into the United States, and having the honour to represent a constituency which is largely concerned with the question of lumber, I am prepared to second the efforts of every hon. gentleman from British Columbia who, from time to time, has importuned and begged of this government that they will place a fair duty on lumber at least equal to the duty levied by the American government against our lumber. There is a duty devolving upon some of those hon. gentlemen who represent Ontario constituencies and that is not only to go behind the backs of their electors and of hon. gentlemen in this House and importune and beg the government to make changes in the tariff, but, when the question presents itself to them in this way, that they should become the educators of public opinion when we are endeavouring to point out to their fellow members and to the members of the government where changes should be made in the tariff and why these changes should be made, and I hope that before the session closes, by a number of specific motions, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will have an opportunity of voting for raises in the tariff where necessary, or voting in favour of lowering the tariff on certain lines. If these hon. gentlemen see fit to shirk the votes on these occasions they will have to be watched and watched very closely by their constituents.

This session has been very aptly called the Grand Trunk session, and I am here as a humble representative of the people to say that I believe the opposition were justified last session in protesting against this vast expenditure of public money on this so-called transcontinental railway, and that it is the duty of the opposition to endeavour to educate public opinion throughout the Dominion by a discussion in this House of this great question particularly in view of the fact that circumstances have changed and changed very materially since last session in regard to the question of transportation. What does this government propose to do? This government proposes to perpetrate an act of idiotic folly. I think that was the term used by the former member for St. John, Mr. Blair, last session. Hon. gentlemen opposite have told the people of Canada that they are going to transport the grain from Winnipeg to Moncton, 1,800 miles, and that in this they will be able to compete with the present carrying routes. That is the proposition. It has been stated here this afternoon and I know it to be the fact that last season the vessels were carrying grain from the head of Lake Superior to Quebec at the rate of three cents a bushel. Nay, more, grain was carried for as low as two and a half cents a bushel. Let any man look at the transportation business between Canada and Great Britain to-day. No man can go to Montreal or Quebec and see a ship loaded wholly with grain. Why? Because it would not possibly pay a tramp steamer to carry grain alone. All the grain that is exported from Canada to the old country is exported in vessels which have, in addition to their grain cargoes, large quantities of other cargo, and not only have they other freights but several of them have mail subsidies and passenger lists. Last year an American company essayed to carry grain from the head of Lake Superior to Quebec. They placed on that route vessels carrying 60,000 bushels of grain and no man can dispute the fact that that grain was carried from the head of Lake Superior to Quebec for three cents a bushel. The distance from Depot Harbour or Midland to Montreal is 360 miles, and the railway companies have been securing 3 cents a bushel as their share, and have been paying the vessels which carry the wheat from Port Arthur to the Georgian Bay ports, 1½ cents a bushel, so that the charge is 4½ cents a bushel from Port Arthur to Montreal, and in competition with them we have certain vessels carrying wheat at 3 cents a bushel from the head of the lakes through to Quebec. Surely the government cannot argue before the people of Canada, and in view of these facts, that the transcontinental railway is going to be a paying proposition. But no matter what happens, the government seem determined to sink an enormous amount of money in this foolish enterprise, contrary to the wishes of the people of Canada and contrary to the wishes of the Grand Trunk itself. At a recent meeting of the Grand Trunk directors in London, it was openly declared that the Grand Trunk Railway Company never wanted this railway which the government seeks to force upon them. It was declared that their original proposition was to build a line from North Bay, and that the building of the line from Winnipeg to Moncton is an act of supreme folly. That is what Sir Rivers Wilson, the president of the Grand Trunk Company, said, and in the face of all that, this government seems determined to rush on this scheme. Let us not forget the stand which Mr. Blair took last session. We know that the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was put up to reply to Mr. Blair, and his reply was that Mr. Blair was opposed to this scheme solely because there would not be an opportunity presented to him to loot the public treasury. Well, I am not aware of anything that ever happened in Mr. Blair's career, which could cause him to be so assailed by the spokesman of the government, and be it remembered that from that day to this, not a single Minister of the Crown has opened his mouth to say that he regretted this onslaught on Mr. Blair. It is worth while thinking of what would happen if some other members of this government occupied the position of Minister of Railways, and I can only say that from all the signs of the times, the insinuation might have been laid at some of their doors with much better grace. I assume that the construction of the eastern section will be under a commission, but be that as it may, we know there was a proviso inserted in the Bill which practically takes out of the hands of that commission the letting of all contracts which involve the expenditure of any considerable sum of money.

Now, Sir, the government have had a trial of strength in Ontario and in the other provinces, and this afternoon the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) told the House, why they had done so well in the province of Quebec—if what they did there can be called doing well. The hon. gentleman explained that he went into the county of Montmagny and set forth his opinions. And what are those opinions of his. They consist of unceasing hostility to Great Britain, and an attempt to show the people of the province of Quebec especially, that he is inimical to the interests of Great Britain especially should the motherland become involved in war. I do not believe that the member for Labelle represents the feelings of the province of Quebec as a whole ; I should be sorry if he did. I will be charitable enough to assume that he is only endeavouring to get some of that little notoriety which he seeks now and then, by a pyrotechnic display of oratorical fireworks. I do not believe that the people of the province of Quebec will endorse the views which he has announced this afternoon. Sir, there are some great principles which will be up for discussion in the province of Quebec, as well as in the rest of the Dominion when the hour of battle comes. The greatest of these is the question of protection for our industries, and in Hochelaga as well as in St. Hyacinthe there is no doubt that the demand for further protection of our industries, was the great factor in reducing the Liberal majority in these constituencies. In the province of Ontario we await with confidence the fight when it is brought on. The people of Ontario are sick of this government, it stinks in their nostrils. This government is not representative of that province. If the Ontario cabinet ministers were seen to-day on King Street in Toronto, not one of them would be known, outside of Sir Richard Cartwright and they would recognize him from old cartoons. This government is not representative of Ontario, because there is not a single minister from that province who has not made pledges to the people, which remain to-day unfulfilled. Go over to that charnel house for decayed politicians, as the Liberals used to call the the Senate, and look at the array of Liberals there from the province of Ontario. Look at men like McMullen and Gibson and others I could mention, who were rejected by the electors of Ontario the moment they got the chance to turn them out. Well, Mr. Speaker, there will soon be a test of strength in the province of Ontario. The government here is waiting to see what will become of their companions in arms in the legislative assembly. If ever there was an old hulk drifting hopelessly about, with barnacles hanging from its side, it is the Ontario government. Why, it has even been deserted by 'Cap' Sullivan who has been openly discarded by the Hon. John Dryden. The government is tottering to its fall. It has endeavoured by the most disgraceful means to burk public opinion in that province. The House was summoned when five of the government supporters were to go into the courts, and it was summoned because the government knew that every one of these men would be unseated. The courts of the land have been set at defiance in order that the old battered wreck may float for a while longer. It is much the same with the Dominion government here. In East Lambton and East Bruce they got their answer from the people. Although they worked for all it was worth the machinery of the local and federal governments, they were hopelessly beaten in these constituencies.

But to-day the people of Ontario are waiting to give these gentlemen the punishment they deserve for having been false to every promise they have made in the past. True, the gentlemen boast of a gerrymander and of the great things they have accomplished in the province of Ontario in that regard. They had a test of strength in one of their gerrymandered constituencies the other day, the riding of East Bruce, and it did not turn out very well for them, because, gerrymandered as that riding was, they were defeated, as they will be in the next general elections. Go over the province of Ontario from one end to the other, and you will find that each member supporting the government is holding his seat by promises that certain changes are to be made in the tariff, that the government are going to erect public buildings, and other promises of one kind and another ; but one thing we do see, that wherever it is possible each of these gentlemen is trying to fasten himself on to a government job with a fat salary. The government may assume a supercilious air towards this debate, but I can tell them that in the province of Ontario, the centre of intelligence of this great Dominion, there are a great many eyes on this government—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

MR. BENNETT. In view of the fact that this province has been cursed with a liberal government for thirty years, perhaps I should withdraw the statement. I am forced to admit, and I regret it as an Ontario man that political degradation is at a low point in the province of Ontario. Nor has this government tended to raise the tone, for to-day political life in this Dominion is lower than it has ever been before, and every man knows it. A Bill was introduced into this House last year to amend the Criminal Code; but powers behind the Throne interfered, and prevented it going into force. That Bill had in it a clause that would have prevented the combination of certain businesses to deal and traffic illicitly. There was a vast combine in the city of Montreal last year, the American Tobacco Co., that would have been badly hit by that measure, and what happened? A prominent senator, a supporter of this government, appeared before the government, and the result was the withdrawal of that clause; so that it is permitted and allowed to this American trust and any other trust to go on and traffic in businesses as they chose. Where are the liberals of the old school who used to invoke the Independence of Parliament Act? They are all silenced; there is not a word from them. What have the American newspapers said in reference to what is known as the Gaynor-Greene extradition case in the city of Quebec? What happened there? Here were two well-known thieves, or persons accused of theft and embezzlement in the United States, who came to the city of Quebec. Who appeared on their behalf? There was a time in this country when the old liberals used to rise up and condemn any member of parliament who held a brief for any interest which would clash with the political interests of the country; and yet we find that the Minister of Justice's own firm was concerned in shielding these men and keeping them in the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that I had anything to do with the defence?

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman's firm had.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. No firm that I am connected with had to do with that case. My name does not appear in connection with it in any way.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman denies that his firm had anything to do with that case, I will withdraw the statement.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. I say that no firm that I am connected with acted in that case. My name does not appear in the proceedings.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not make the statement that the Minister of Justice's name appeared in the proceedings. I say that the firm with which he is connected acted for Gaynor and Green. Do I understand him to deny that?

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK Yes, I do. Some members of the firm may have acted. The firm I am connected with did not act.

Mr. BENNETT. That is rather gauzy. I suppose that when the division of the profits of the firm was made, the Minister of Justice carefully asked that no part of the profits from the Gaynor and Greene case should be included in his share?

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, I am prepared to make such a statement, and if the hon. gentleman had any professional etiquette, he would know that no such statement should be required from a lawyer.

Mr. BENNETT. In answer to the Minister of Justice, I will say that he is hitting some of his friends pretty hard. I recall the case of the St. Catharines Milling Company, in which the firm of McCarthy, Osler & Co. appeared on behalf of the Dominion government, and hon. gentlemen opposite denounced Dalton McCarthy for permitting his firm to have anything to do with that case, and the 'Globe' newspaper assailed him with the vilest vituperation. And yet we have it stated in the public press that the firm with which is associated the name of the Minister of Justice, the man who has the appointment of the judges of the country, acted on behalf of these accused men in the city of Quebec. The Minister of Justice should have seen that his firm did not act at all in that regard. But the Minister of Justice does not stand alone as a sinner in this respect. What have we heard on the floor of this House? I can recall a case of a few years ago when a man of this House stood up and said that he was entitled as a lawyer to take all the cases he could get against the government. What does that mean? It means that members of this House can advertise: 'I am a supporter of the government, and if you have a case against the government, bring it along, and all the power I have as a member of the House I will exert on your behalf in order to advance your interest.' What has that to do with the Independence of Parliament Act? I say it is most flagrant. This thing is spreading in this country. I will give the House another instance of it. A dock was to be purchased for the government in the town of Midland. The gentlemen who owned that dock were very anxious to effect a sale to the government. My opponent in the last campaign, Mr. George Chew, made an open bargain with the men who owned the dock that if he effected a sale, he should receive a commission of $400. That is the state to which political morality has got in this country. When the deal was made, the gentleman did not receive his money, and he brought his signed paper into the office of the firm of which I am a member as a law partner; and we issued a writ for the $400, and the men paid it. And what do you think was their excuse for not paying it ? It was this, that Mr. Chew had not secured the sale of the dock at all, but that it was secured by a certain member of parliament who is not in his place in the House at present, and to whom they had to pay $600 for putting through the deal. Why, Sir, it is notorious from one end of the country to the other that members of parliament are guilty of acts of this kind. Take the case of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) as heralded in the public press. Has he been reprobated by this government ? I have read of the case in the public press and I have read the minutes of the town council. This government was to build a dock in the town of Digby, and the hon. member for Digby goes to the town council, and makes an open bargain that he will use his position as a member of parliament to get a large grant for the construction of a dock in that town; and, if my memory serves me rightly, he was paid $500 on account, and was to be paid $2,000 more on the completion of the dock. Surely it is the duty of the government to take notice of these matters. Surely this case has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance, who comes from that province. Surely he is aware of it; and when I make the statement that public morality in this country has sunk to a lower depth than ever known, I make a statement well within the mark. This condition of affairs is notorious. The corruption practiced in the various ridings is well known. It is well known that in connection with the whisky permits in the Yukon, vast sums of money were drawn from the pockets of men who made princely fortunes out of the liquor trade in that country, and who were compelled to disgorge a considerable share of their profits in helping to keep the Liberal party in office. It is well known that there was any number of other deals of a similar character, and only one hon. gentleman has had the courage to stand up in this House and declare that he will back up propositions of this kind whenever they come his way. Perhaps some of those hon. gentlemen who laugh when I describe the degradation of public opinion in the province of Ontario are among those who have participated in these illicit deals. But, thank God, there is still a healthy public opinion in our province, which will no doubt assert itself when the time comes, and I shall welcome the day when the fight is brought on. Some day this government will have its history written, and there will be a striking contrast between the record of the right hon. the First Minister of today and the public careers of Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper and other great men who contributed largely to guiding the destinies of this Dominion. History will show that Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper were men imbued with broad national ideas, men who carried to completion the work of consolidating this great Dominion as a vast adjunct of the British empire. And it will be shown that these men did great work in the face of the most bitter opposition. It will be shown that, in the teeth of the most violent criticism of the Liberal leaders, they succeeded in pushing to completion the construction of that great transcontinental railway which now spans this Dominion and the history of which will live in the minds of Canadians for centuries to come. History will show that to the wise policy of these men was due the opening up of our great Northwest and the building up in that great country of the homes of millions. It will show also that they inaugurated a tariff and a fiscal policy, the merits of which are established beyond gainsay by the simple fact that hon. gentlemen opposite, who have denounced that policy for years, felt compelled to continue it almost in its entirety. The unerring verdict of time will show that the leaders of the Conservative party were not actuated by any sectional or provincial spirit, that the policy of Sir John Macdonald was the same in one province as in the other, and that his policy commanded the esteem and the support of all classes. It would be, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of this Dominion as a whole if the present government did not sit there entrenched, as it does, behind a majority, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce declared in Toronto is a menace to the whole Dominion—the majority from the province of Quebec. But so long as electoral campaigns are carried on in the province of Quebec on the lines suggested by the hon. member for Labelle, so long will that menace, against which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce protested, continue. I have the honour to have in the riding of Simcoe which represent, a large French vote, and I regret to say that very little of that vote comes my way. And the reason is this. Whenever there is an election in that district, men like the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and the hon. Mr. Evanturel, Speaker of the local legislature of Ontario, come down there and excite the people, not by discussing political questions but by appealing to their racial and religious prejudices. The sole issue which these men raise is the nationality and religion of the right hon. the First Minister. There was a time in the township of Tiny when the elections turned on political questions, but that day is past and gone. These hon. gentlemen should remember however, that, if they gain a trifling success in the French vote, they run the risk of incurring a greater loss in the English vote.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Let me tell the right hon. gentleman that such is the case. Such a policy cuts both ways, and I can only say that our frequent boast of unity among our people is sadly belied by the almost solid vote from the French speaking districts. We are to have a fight, and the sooner we have it the better. But let the parties meet, as they did in 1891 and in 1887, on questions of fiscal policy or other great lines of policy, and in the name of all that is good, let us put an end, for all time to come, to these racial cries which we hear echoed time and again in this House by men like the hon. member for Labelle and which, I regret to say, are the stock in trade of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec. Why, Mr. Speaker, what did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine) say when the fight was over the other day? Did he say that the policy of the government prevailed? Not at all. He said that it was a question of a French-speaking premier—it was a question of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's popularity. That, he said, was the whole cry and in saying that he gave away the whole case. I would wish that when the history of this country comes to be written it may be said of every premier who ever guided the destinies of this Dominion that he played well his part, that he acted in the interests of the Dominion as a whole, and that the success he obtained was not due to any appeals to prejudice or passion, but to the great measures he instituted for the development of this country, and that it was owing to his wise policy in the general interests that he became entrenched in the affections of the people.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth). It is quite evident, Mr. Speaker, that the policy of silence is that which the government has chosen to adopt on this address, and perhaps in view of the incompetency which they have so signally displayed in the administration of public affairs, that policy is the wisest one they can adopt under the circumstances. I would prefer, Mr. Speaker, having to follow one of these hon. gentlemen on the other side than take up the debate after the effective speech of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, but I promise that I shall not detain the House at any length. In the speech from the Throne, the desire is expressed that the session should be a short one. In that desire I am sure we all agree, but the Opposition would be derelict in its duty if it failed to take advantage of any opportunity to throw the broad light of publicity on the incompetent record of the present administration. The bill of fare given us in the speech from the Throne is certainly a very meagre one—one well befitting, as my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) has said, this lenten season, and, if we should judge the menu by the sparsity of its dishes, we certainly should not be long in disposing of it. There are only four subjects presented to us, and of these some are of a trifling character. The only important one is the amendment to the Railway Bill, which, though an amendment to an important Bill, is, nevertheless, but an amendment. We have also the question of the presentation of the award of the Alaska boundary commission, which is not a proposition of the government but simply a presentation to this House of the award of the commission. We have further a Militia Bill, and in order to pad out the programme we have a proposal to increase the Mounted Police in the Northwest Territories. It is rather to be wondered at that, in order to make the list a little longer, the government did not propose to increase the Civil Service to the extent of a hundred clerks or so, which would have been quite as important a matter as the proposed increase of 100 men in the Mounted Police to insert in the speech from the Throne. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the speech from the Throne is remarkable rather for its sins of omission than its sins of commission. With regard to the Mounted Police, I am sure every one will agree that, if there is necessity in the Northwest for an increase, if crime in that country has gone unpunished owing to the deficiency in that corps, no one will object to the increase; but, it will have to be proved that such increase is neccessary. However, as the Bill is not before us, I shall not discuss it in detail. But, if, in connection with the Mounted Police, there should be a larger number than are necessary to keep order in the Northwest Territories, I for one, would not be sorry if it is considered as a nucleus of a mounted infantry for this country.

Then, we are promised the Militia Bill. We cannot discuss that until it comes before the House. But, for my part, I shall quite concur in the increase in the efficiency, the number and the equipment of our militia. I am sure that no one on this side will object to any reasonable, sane, judicious plan for promoting the efficiency and increasing the strength of the militia of Canada. I am only sorry, in this connection—and in this I speak on my own responsibility alone—that the Minister of Militia and the government do not go a step further. In addition to strengthening our militia and improving their equipment, I should like to have seen a proposal to make a small beginning towards the establishment of a Canadian navy. I know that this is a proposition that has not been discussed very much; still, I believe that there is a large body of people in this country who believe that the time has come when we should take a position more in keeping with our dignity as a growing and powerful country than that which we occupy at the present time. We have a magnificent and growing over sea commerce —over $250,000,000. This is a commerce that is worth defending. At present, we are not spending a cent, we are not doing anything, for the defence of this commerce. Every nation in the world not only has the right but the duty to defend its own. This commerce of ours is a part of our country, and it is just as necessary to defend it as it is to defend our shores. At present, we depend entirely for the defence of that commerce upon the British navy. We know that that is a sure dependence. But, in accepting it, we occupy the position of a child in swaddling clothes, though we are boasting day after day and year after year that we have grown to manhood and are strong enough to take care of ourselves. Now, we have three positions before us as a country—to remain as we are, or to become independent, or to be annexed to the United States. Let us consider for a moment what would be the position under these several circumstances. If we should be annexed to the United States what would be our position with regard to the defence of our trade? We should be called upon to pay our proportion of the cost of the United States navy—about $6,500,000 a year. If we became an independent nation—and there is a small body of men, and I am glad to say only a small body in this country, who seem to believe that this is our ultimate destiny and that we should prepare for it—we should be obliged to provide a miltiary equipment and a navy. The smallest nations that have a coast line and a commerce to defend have to keep a navy proportionately expensive—in fact ours would be more expensive than if we were to pay our share of the British navy on the present basis. Seeing that there is but a small part of our people who would advocate either annexation or independence, and that the great bulk of us desire to remain as we are, a part of the British empire, why should we not be prepared to pay at least a small part of the cost of defending the empire ? Why should we not be prepared to pay a part, even though a small part in the defence of our own commerce and our own trade ? I regret exceedingly that political parties in this country seem to be afraid to take up a question of this kind. It is a question that is bound to come to the front in the near future and must be discussed by political parties. We must decide whether we are to play a part in the British empire. Why should we not make a small beginning ? If we were to pay our proportion towards the cost of the British navy the expense would be about $7,000,000 a year. Great Britain has about twenty ships stationed on the eastern and western shores of Canada, and their proportion of cost is about $7,000,000. I do not propose that we should go to that length, but I say we should make a beginning, we should take the first step. If the Minister of Militia, in bringing down his proposal to improve the militia system, had proposed the first step toward the making of a Canadian navy, so far as I am personally concerned I should be very glad to support him.

Another question mentioned in the speech from the Throne is the Alaskan boundary award. I am sure that enough has been said with regard to this matter. I cannot see what particular good can be done by discussing it at length in this House. It has proven a cause of soreness to many Canadians. I feel sure that, had not this matter been made, to a large extent, the football of political parties in times gone by; if before the award, the people of this country had studied and known the question as experts have done, there would not have been that soreness. I feel sure that whatever may have been the cause of that award, whether it was made judicially or diplomatically, Lord Alverstone, the senior member on the British side of the case, decided the question as he thought it should be decided according to the evidence, and that he did good service to his country in settling that dispute in some fashion once for all.

The other question that is mentioned in the speech from the Throne is the amendment of the Grand Trunk Pacific bargain. This will be one of the main questions that will come before us this session. It was discussed at very great length last session, and will be discussed, I am sure, at very great length this session. The Bill as at first proposed was a very important one, involving an enormous expenditure of public money, an expenditure not asked for by any large section of the people and entirely unjustifiable. The bargain as it was presented to the House a year ago was a very bad bargain for the people of this country as well as for the Grand Trunk Railway Company. A bargain may be bad for both sides, and this was such a bargain. Now we have the amendments of this Bill making it still worse for the people of Canada, still more expensive and still more disastrous. I claim that it is the duty of the government to appeal to the people on this question. I feel that the government has no right to pledge the people to such a bargain, a bargain which, it is evident the people of Canada do not want. We have had a number of by-elections, and in every one the main question discussed was the Grand Trunk Pacific bargain. The result of these by-elections must convince every one who wishes to judge of the matter fairly that the people of this country are entirely opposed to the agreement. What is the result of these by-elections. Not less, but rather more than 4,000 of a reduction in the vote for the Liberal party in eight constituencies—500 on the average, for each constituency. What does that mean ? It means that, in a general election, the hon. leader of this House would come back with a following of less than fifty men.

That means that even after one-half that reduction took place he would have a smaller following than any hon. gentleman who ever led a party in this House. What does that mean? It means that the people in this country were opposed to the bargain as it came before the House last session. How much more then will they be opposed to it when the bargain is made much less advantageous to the people of Canada? What right has the government of this country to bind the country to this bargain which they must see the people do not want? What is the honourable course, the evident duty of the government? It is to appeal to the country before the question is finally settled and before the seal is placed on the bargain. They should appeal to the country and let the people say whether they approve it or not. Who asked for this bargain and for improved railway facilities? There is no doubt that this country, growing as it is, with an expanding commerce, requires and demands, as time goes on, improved facilities. But it has never yet been shown that the railways now in existence, if properly equipped and with a proper system of branches extending from them, could not carry on the trade of the country. The difficulty is that they have not the equipment of cars and power, and have not apparently the executive ability. But leaving that aside, and taking it for granted that railroad facilities are required, what are the requirements? Two chiefly and almost entirely; first, that the people of the west should have greater and better and cheaper facilities to convey the products of their farms to the east; and, second, that the manufacturers and fruit growers in the east, of Ontario and Quebec, should have cheaper, quicker and better facilities to get their products into the west. These are the only things called for. The province of British Columbia has never asked for a transcontinental railway running across the northern part of that province. It may be desirable, but there is no great call for it, nor is there a great call for a colonization railway to Northern Ontario and Northern Quebec, while there are hundreds of millions of acres of magnificent land, yet undeveloped, ready for the plough in the west. There is no call from the people of the maritime provinces for a second line there. The only call has been from the people of the west for cheaper facilities for the shipment of their grain, and from the people of Ontario and Quebec to get their manufactures to the west. Is it necessary, in order to accomplish this, to construct a railway from Winnipeg to Quebec and from Quebec to Moncton? Not at all. The Grand Trunk Railway Company came before the government and offered to build a road from North Bay to Winnipeg and to extend it through the Territories simply for the ordinary bonuses, which would not have amounted to more than $12,000,000 all told. For $12,000,000 in cash we might have got all the country asked for or will demand for many years to come, instead of having an expenditure of over $100,000,000, which will be required to construct a road from Winnipeg to Moncton. A large part of this $80,000,000, or $90,000,000, of unnecessary expenditure, might have been expended to infinitely better advantage, if we have this great amount of money to expend, if it is absolutely necessary that this country should expend this enormous amount of money or any part of it, or in any case let us expend some small part of it in doing some things that are really necessary. One of these things is the provision of better transportation facilities for the commerce of the whole country from Montreal to Britain. What is the condition of affairs to-day? We are subsidizing lines of vessels at enormous expense to come to our ports. Ostensibly we are subsidizing them for carrying the mails, but really to get the vessels to come to our ports. We pay one line $150,000 ostensibly to carry some fifteen tons of mail matter, which could be carried for $300. We are doing that to get the vessels to come to Montreal, and for that alone. In addition to that, we are paying out of the public treasury large sums of money to equip these vessels for the carriage of our products. We are equipping them with cold storage facilities with cooling plants and with ventilating apparatus. One half of this equipment is paid for by the country instead of by the steamship lines. One would think when we are doing this that we should get as low freight rates from Montreal as from Boston or New York, which are farther from Liverpool and Glasgow and London than are the Canadian ports. But is that the case? No; instead of getting lower rates on the boats which we subsidize, and which have a shorter haul, we are paying thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars more on the freight shipped from Montreal than would be charged on the same freight going from Boston or New York. Let me read to you some of the freight rates, lest I may be said to drawing the long bow. The following table will show the difference in the freight rates in the autumn of 1903:

	Per ton. s.	d.
Flour, Montreal to Liverpool	9	9
" Boston "	7	6
" Montreal to London	9	9
" Boston "	7	6
" Montreal to Glasgow	8	9
" Boston "	6	6 to 7

	Per bushel. s.	d.
Wheat, Montreal to Liverpool	0	2¼
" Boston "	0	1½
" Montreal to London	0	2⅝
" Boston "	0	1½ to 2
" Montreal to Glasgow	0	2⅝
" Boston "	0	1½ to 2

	Per ton. s.	d.
Butter, Montreal to Liverpool	27	6
" Boston "	20	0
" Montreal to London	30	0
" Boston "	24	0
" Montreal to Glasgow	31	6
" Boston "	30	0
Cheese, Montreal to Liverpool	22	6
" Boston "	17	6
" Montreal to London	25	0
" Boston "	20	0
" Montreal to Glasgow	26	3
" Boston "	25	0

	Per barrel. s.	d.
Apples, Montreal to Liverpool	2	6
" Boston "	2	0 & 5%
" Montreal to London	2	6
" Boston "	2	0 & 5%
" Montreal to Glasgow	3	0
" Boston "	2	6 & 5%
" Montreal to Manchester	2	6
" Boston "	2	6 & 5%

Extra freight on cheese exports of 100,000 tons at 3s. 9d., say	$ 90,000
Extra freight on butter exports of 17,000 tons at 5s., say	17,000
Extra freight on wheat and flour exports of 40,000,000 bush. at 1½c.	600,000
Extra freight on apples exports of 1,000,000 brls. at 10c	100,000

Thus on these four items we pay out $800,000 more in freight from Montreal than the rates on the same freight would be from Boston or New York. But this is not all; it is but a very small part of the loss which this causes to the farmers of Canada, for the price of these products which are exported sets the price for the quantity consumed at home, and we know that nine-tenths of our products are consumed at home. Thus we lose, not only the $800,000 thus paid in freight, but many times $800,000 because of the lowering of the price at home.

Therefore, I say, we might better take some of these funds that the government are squandering upon building a railway that is not asked for and equip the port of Montreal and the route from Montreal to Great Britain with whatever is necessary to make that route the best in the world. It is the boast of Canadians that we have the shortest route to Great Britain and yet it is the dearest route. That is a duty that devolves upon this government. It is something that was not mentioned in the speech from the Throne. It ought to have been mentioned and it demands the attention and the best ability that the government can give to it. I consider this one of the most important questions that could possibly be discussed. What is sure to be the result if these facilities are not provided? There are patriotic people shipping hundreds of thousands of tons of stuff by way of Montreal while they might get cheaper rates by other ports. A great many are shipping their produce who do not realize that there is a difference in cost in reaching the old country by way of the port of Montreal, but who, when they discover the fact, will not continue to do so unless we provide facilities that will enable them to ship more cheaply, or at least as cheaply, as by a foreign port. The people of Canada will do a great deal for patriotism but there is a limit to it. They cannot be expected to be willing to be placed at this enormous disadvantage and the better course for the government would be to provide these facilities.

There is one other question to which I should like to allude. It is a small matter, perhaps, but still it is a matter of as much importance as the slight increase in the mounted police force which is mentioned in the speech from the Throne. I had hoped, as a fruit grower, to see some mention in the speech from the Throne of the establishment of an experimental farm in the Niagara district. We have at the present time five experimental farms—the same as we had ten or fifteen years ago. They are very essential to the welfare of the farmers of Canada. There is no doubt that a great deal of excellent knowledge is being disseminated from these farms, but these farms represent only a portion of this great country of ours. We have in Canada, fortunately, a climate and soil that will enable us to produce the best fruits in the world. We have in the Niagara district a large tract of territory which is capable of producing peaches, plums and all the fruits in luxurious abundance. But, we have no assistance from the government in the matter of experimenting. These experimental farms are well enough in their way and all right as far as they go, but they deal entirely with matters that are of benefit to the farmers in the northern portions of the country. These farms deal entirely with cattle, grain, dairy products, and with what is of importance only to the people who wish to grow a few trees along the northern zone of fruit culture; that is the introduction of new and hardy varieties that can be successfully grown up to the northern limits of the fruit territory of Canada. These experimental farms are putting the fruit growers in the commercial fruit belt at a disadvantage. They are actually spending money to take away our markets from us. We do not object to this, but we think in all fairness and justice that we who grow the commercial fruits of the country, we who are supplying not only the population which is here at the present time, and will supply, I believe, in the near future a largely increased population, should have some consideration. It is predicted, I believe, that in the near future we will have 5,000,000 of people in our Northwest, that the population of Canada will be doubled and that half of it will be west of Port Arthur. If that is the case what an enormous market will be there for the fruit growers of Canada ! I am certain that this industry, a very large industry to-day, can be extended to almost indefinite proportions. We have at present in Ontario a very large and prosperous industry as the following figures showing the increased production, demonstrate :

Peaches, bushels....	811,721	40,626
Pears, bushels.. ..	487,759	208,887
Plums, bushels.. ..	337,108	171,335
Cherries, bushels..	132,117	106,658
Grapes, lbs....	23,156,478	11,725,284
Other fruits, qts...	17,515,560	6,669,270
Apples, bushels,....	13,631,264	5,043,621

These are large figures, but the business is capable of indefinite expansion if we can only secure the markets of the country. There are a great many things necessary to secure these markets and one of the most important essentials is that we shall grow the varieties of fruit that can be transported over the great distances that we have in this country to transport them over. Our great market is the distant market of the Northwest Territories and we cannot export large quantities of the perishable fruits that we grow in the Niagara district to-day. Our fruits are of a character differing from those grown in California. Their climate is a rainless one and their fruits are of a dry nature. They are capable of being exported. They are not of as good quality as ours, but they can be carried better. It devolves upon the fruit growers to produce kinds of fruits that can be carried to the Northwest Territories. It is the duty of the government to give us an experimental farm in that district and it should be no small affair either. Let us have it conducted on broad lines because it is an important matter. It is a matter worth tens of millions of dollars to this country if we can secure our own markets for our trade. This is one of the most important matters that can be brought to the attention of this government ; that is, to enable us to introduce and grow the kinds of fruits that can be carried to distant markets. We have a few but we lack a great many. We have only one variety of peaches, we have scarcely any variety of plums, and we lack a real good variety of grapes capable of being sent to distant markets. There is room for improvement and development along that line. Private individuals cannot undertake it, the present experimental farms cannot undertake it because they are not now placed where they can do it. They are situated in a different zone altogether from the commercial fruit belt of this country. That is one of the matters that might fairly well have occupied the attention of the ministers of the Crown, and might very well have been mentioned in the speech from the Throne rather than some of these other matters, perhaps, or in addition to these other matters, important as they may be. We should expend in these ways that I have mentioned some of the small part of the enormous amount of money that is proposed to be squandered on a road running through a country that is without population, that is practically unknown, and through which no one has asked the government to run a road at the present time.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I hesitated before I rose believing that some member of the government should reply to the accusations made against them by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). I am satisfied that the government ought at least to have some reply to make to the charges of nepotism and of having violated the independence of parliament in view of the fact that the members of the government used to be so fond of denouncing in this House the very things that they are charged with doing. Some of the gentlemen on the government benches should make a speech, to point out that the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is not telling the truth, or else they should admit that what he said was correct. I am not prepared to believe it until I get further evidence, but I do think that further evidence should be forthcoming. The first part of the speech from the Throne tells us that we are to have a short session, and if that be so we must have short speeches. I intend to set a good example in that respect. I would propose that any member who was not a cabinet minister explaining a policy, or the leader of the opposition, who speaks for more than one hour should be compelled to sit every Sunday listening to the longest winded preacher in the city of Ottawa. I think that would teach him to cut his speeches short, and I would recommend that cure. The next paragraph of the speech from the Throne deals with the transcontinental railway, and most of you will remember that I spoke on that question last session. I took different grounds from the most of those who spoke ; I only spoke for thirty-five minutes, and I had two thousand copies of that speech printed and sent broadcast throughout my constituency. I have yet to meet a man who read that speech, who has not said that the speech was just to the point, and that it was just what the farmers wanted. If that is a fair specimen of how the people feel all over Canada on this railway policy, then, the government instead of calling parliament to renew the charter with the Grand Trunk Pacific, should wipe it out altogether, and commence to build the road themselves. They need not do it in one year, but they can easily complete the railway in the seven years which they have allowed the Grand Trunk Pacific. They tell us that they have a surplus of $15,000,000 this year, and if for each of the next seven years they have a like surplus, they will almost have money enough to build the road. If they follow my advice, then at the end of that time the people and not a private corporation will own the railroad. Since the Grand Trunk refused to carry out their share of the contract, the government can conscientiously get out of that bad bargain. I would suggest that the government should continue the Intercolonial Railway away into the prairies, and then we shall have a truly national means of transportation. I believe that Sir John Macdonald promised the people of British Columbia that within ten years they would have a railway, and even if it takes this government ten years to build a transcontinental railroad they will not be any worse than Sir John. We have paid $145,000,000 of the wealth of the people to the Canadian Pacific Railway, to assist them to build their railway. It is estimated that it did not cost them that amount of money, but whether it did or not, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company own the road, and the people of Canada have nothing to say about it. Don't let us fall into such a trap as that again. If another transcontinental railway must be built let us build it and own it ourselves, and I believe the farmers of Canada will back up any government that proposes such a policy. Let us learn from experience. When the Romans came to Britain, before the Christian era, the first thing they noticed was that the highways of the country were in a miserable state. The Romans built roads all leading to the capital of London, and these roads are in existence to-day, and are the finest highways ever constructed. I myself have travelled over these roads and I know how well they have been built. But the ancient Romans did not give these roads to private corporations to charge toll on ; they dedicated them to the people for the use of the people for ever, and that is just what we should do with our railroads in Canada. And now as to the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair). I do not wish to mention a man's name in this House unless he is here to reply for himself ; it is cowardly to attack a man in his absence, but Mr. Blair is public property now, he is our servant, and I suppose we have the right to criticise him. Last year I was a member of the railway committee, as I expect to be this year. Mr. Blair was very regular in his attendance at that committee, and he watched over the interests of the railway, and he stood with a club over us in order to see that no injustice was done to these railways. He never uttered a syllable in that committee to the effect that he was opposed to the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme. Had he been as emphatic in that committee as he was in this House, I do not believe that the Bill would ever have passed the committee. He had a powerful influence over the members of that committee—he never had much over me. Our farmers were asking in that committee certain rights which we have been demanding for years, but Mr. Blair constantly opposed our demands. I twice introduced Bills with regard to cattle-guards and drainage, but Mr. Blair ignored these questions altogether. I lost confidence in him as a man who would do justice to us farmers and I am sure he was working in the interests of the railroads. That is enough about him. When the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill passed, he took umbrage, and refused to accept the Bill, and finally withdrew from the House, and of course I did not shed any tears.

However, it seems that he was appointed to the first place on that commission by the ministry. And, mind you, I am not one of those who think that the patriotism is all on this side of the House. I believe there are patriots on both sides—men who try to do what is right and just in every particular. But I have seen men get up in this House and sneer at others who were talking good sense, simply because they were not on their side of politics. That is not right ; we want to discuss these matters on their merits. The ministry thought they had selected their best man when they appointed Mr. Blair to the chairmanship of that commission. Well, perhaps they did ; but I failed to see it. I have heard him three years on the Railway Committee, and I have never yet heard him demonstrate how much it was worth to carry a ton of produce from Winnipeg to the sea-board, or what it was worth to run a railroad. I do not think he knows anything more about railroads than I do ; but he has been at the head of the Railway Department, and he has had men to tell him what to do. The farmers in my section of the country are not satisfied with the appointment of Mr. Blair. Perhaps after he reads my speech he will resign.

The Alaska award is mentioned in the speech from the Throne. I suppose I have discussed the Alaska award before a larger audience than any other member of this House. I had an opportunity of addressing some 2,000 people in Rochester, and I gave them my sentiments in regard to the aggressiveness and avarice of our neighbours to the south. When I was through they were as dumb as oysters. However, I must say that the Alaska matter is perhaps better settled than to be kept open as a bone of contention between the two countries. We would rather have had the award more in our favour ; but when we leave a matter to arbitration and the arbitration goes against us, if we cry like children and make a big fuss, it shows that we have not been properly brought up. Let us see that we do not get into such trouble again.

The Prime Minister is very strong in regard to the Canadian people having an opportunity to manage their own affairs and to settle all disputes between themselves and other nations by treaty. What does that mean ? I would like very much to see Canada settle her own affairs. We have a powerful and aggressive nation to the south of us; and suppose they took a notion for a slice of our territory. Suppose we send our commissioners to settle the dispute with them, and they act in the same manner as they did before. Whom are we to call upon to assist us to get our demands? Are we to go to war with them—six million people against eighty million? Would that look like common sense? It would be something like the boy who was going to fight his neighbour. He looked him all over, and saw the brawn and muscle he had, and then put on his coat again. That is the position we would be in unless we had some one strong enough to back us up. It would be like one who uses large words but has a weak stomach. We want something to back our words up. I notice that we are going to have a militia, but we want something more than that. Now, Sir, we are united with one of the strongest and grandest powers the world has ever seen; we are part and parcel of that glorious nation, and I trust that the day will not come for a thousand years when we shall be disunited from it. Instead of the bonds between us being made weaker, they should be made stronger. I do not like such speeches as the one I heard this afternoon. I felt like leaving when I heard it, but I am too much of a patriot to leave when I should stand and discharge my duty. One of the planks of the platform we heard about was that we are not to assist Great Britain in any of her difficulties. That view, it seems, is held only by a little club, and we should perhaps take no notice of it; but I am sorry that one man, much more a club, should believe that Canada should not assist the mother country whenever she gets into trouble, because she has said that she will spend her last dollar and her last man in the last ditch to defend us if we are loyal to her. There are some parts of Europe that are always glad when anything happens to injure Great Britain. I am afraid there a few in Canada who feel the same, but they are very few. Why, Sir, what would happen if Great Britain were wiped out of existence? It would put back the clock of time, and throw civilization back a thousand years. Therefore, it is our duty to stand by her. It is our financial duty, for where could we go to finance any scheme we had to place before the markets of the world? Where would we go to sell our butter, our cheese, our wheat, our lumber, everything we produce? Our best market is in Great Britain. It is our duty and our interest to do all we can to maintain the greatness and strength of that nation, of which we form a part.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Grant for an address to His Excellency the Governor General, in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. JOHN W. DANIEL (St. John City). Mr. Speaker, in rising to address this House in connection with the motion at present before it, I may say that I do so with a very large amount of that diffidence which naturally clings to a member when he first has an opportunity of addressing this House. If anything further were necessary to render me the more diffident, the eloquent speeches which I have listened to for the last two days from members on both sides of the House must certainly have produced that result. Having been elected so recently to this parliament, which has not now a long course to run, I cannot be expected to have that grasp of the subjects debated and dealt with here, which older members of the House possess. But, Sir, having but recently come from the electorate, I have perhaps some advantages which gentlemen who have sat here since 1900 cannot lay claim to. I have had a very recent opportunity of feeling very closely the opinions of the people, and of finding out what their views are on the policy of this government, and more especially that policy of theirs which they have crystallized into the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme. I believe, Sir, that it is usually the rule, that members in addressing this House should confine themselves closely to the question before the Chair, but I have noticed that hon. gentlemen on both sdes have been allowed some latitude in that respect, and that it is not forbidden to treat of matters which have not been alluded to in His Excellency's address. Under these circumstances, I may also be allowed to refer to an event which has been omitted from the speech from the Throne, and that event is the election which has recently taken place in St. John, N.B.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was an oversight to leave that out.

Mr. DANIEL. Perhaps it was. Under ordinary circumstances, I take it that a by-election at which a constituency changed its party allegiance, is not a matter that would be expected to attract any great attention, and more especially when the result of that election does not in any way affect the maintenance of a government in power which has already a very large majority. But, Sir, when we remember that the gentleman who preceded me as the representative of that constituency was returned by a majority of 1,000 votes less three, and that after a lapse of less than four years that majority not only disappeared, but the majority of the Conservative candidate on the other hand was very considerable. I should think that a circumstance of that kind may be considered by gentlemen on both sides, as worthy of at least some little consideration. It is an event that may cause us to think, and especially to give food for thought to the men who are to-day governing this country. It may be prudent for them to give this result a little attention, and to ask themselves why it is, that such a marked change has come over the opinions of the electorate of an important constituency in this country. Until the recent by-election the city of St. John was represented by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair). He was returned in 1900 by a majority of nearly 1,000, a larger majority than was ever recorded for any candidate in the city of St. John, with one exception, since the first election after confederation. Mr. Blair was looked upon as a man of strong personal qualities and great ability; he was in touch with the government; he presided over one of its most important departments and so the people of St. John looked upon him as a most desirable representative. Taking that view, they elected him by such a majority that he could practically come to this parliament and say that he represented the whole people of that city. Well, Sir, as time went on, Mr. Blair found himself out of touch with the government. He could not endorse their transcontinental policy, and he made a speech in opposition to it that may well be called a celebrated speech; a speech which was read throughout Canada and particularly by his own constituents. Mr. Blair declared that the Grand Trunk Pacific policy of the government was designed for no other reason than as a most unjustifiable and wasteful expense of the public money. He told us that scheme would result in the practical duplication and destruction of the Intercolonial Railway, and that so far as the city of St. John was concerned, it would be given the go-by. Those were serious considerations for the people I represent, and they were taken to heart by them. Every day we hear speeches in parliament which carry great weight, and until and unless some one on the opposite side is able to show that the arguments are faulty and the statements incorrect, such speeches are bound to have effect with the people of the country. Of course when one is able to refute such speeches, able though they may be, they fall to the ground. But, Sir, what has been the case in regard to the speech of Mr. Blair. I firmly believe that notwithstanding the powerful effect which that speech had in my constituency, what told against the government still more was the fact, that no one has yet been able to make an adequate reply to it. Neither I nor my constituents have heard any satisfactory reply to this date.

And now, Sir, as to the change of sentiment which has taken place in the city of St. John.

Ever since that election my opponents have been giving all kinds of reasons for the result. I have heard it spoken of as an accident. I have also heard it stated that there were two gentlemen each of whom wished to be the candidate of the Liberal party, and that the trouble which ensued when one of them was not selected was the cause of the overturning of the great majority which the late Minister of Railways had, and giving me my majority. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to give full credit for all the results which these or any other circumstances which were peculiar at the time, had on the election; but after giving them all due credit, I must make the assertion, which is absolutely correct, that all these things put together would never have produced such a result as happened in the city of St. John unless there had been something of a more close and intimate character with which all the people of the city had to do. There is no doubt whatever in my mind, Sir, that the result of that election was caused by the dissatisfaction which was felt by the people of the city of St. John with the policy of the government, as crystallized more especially in the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill. Because, while they did not believe that it was going to be of any special advantage to the country generally, they certainly came to the conclusion that it was going to be an absolute peril to them instead of a benefit. That feeling was general throughout the city of St. John. As far back as last August the merchants of St. John met together and talked over this matter. They wanted to know what effect it would have upon them ; because this is an immense undertaking for Canada, as it would be for any country; and if there are going to be spent in this country some $139,000,000 or $149,000,000—it is impossible to say how many millions are going to be spent before this scheme is carried into effect— if all this money is to be spent in the whole of Canada, where do the maritime provinces come in ? That is what we were saying in St. John—where were we to come in ? We found that we did not come in at all. So the members of the board of trade of St. John met together and talked this matter over. It was stated by my hon. friend the present Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Emmerson), when he was on the stump in the city of St. John during the last election, that the resolutions which were passed by the board of trade of St. John were passed purely for party political purposes. In making that statement he showed as he did on one or two other occasions in that campaign, that he knew very little about the feelings of the people of St. John. I may say that all the resolutions that were passed by the board of trade with regard to the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme were moved by gentlemen who strongly sympathized with the present government of Canada. Every one of them was introduced by a gentleman whom he might designate as a good Grit and was seconded by a gentleman whom we might call a good Conservative ; so that, as far as party politics are concerned, there never was anything of the kind. The first resolution was proposed by Mr. D. J. McLaughlin, a gentleman who has been known all his life to be a strong supporter of the Liberal party. It was as follows :

Whereas it is of vital importance to the development of the over-sea traffic of the Dominion that its exports should be shipped via Canadian ports, and

Whereas, under the terms of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway contract now under consideration by the Dominion parliament routed freight may be shipped via foreign ports, and

Whereas there is reason to fear that a very large portion of the freight from the west by the proposed railway may be routed via such foreign ports contrary to the declared policy of the Dominion government, that the products of the Dominion should be exported via Canadian ports only, both in summer and winter.

Therefore resolved, that in the opinion of the St. John Board of Trade, the contract should be so varied that it be made imperative that all freight originating on the line of the proposed railway or its branches, and carried by the railway for export shall be shipped via Canadian ports.

Further resolved, that copies of this resolution be sent to the senators and members of the House of Commons for the province of New Brunswick.

In moving that resolution, Mr. McLaughlin, among other things said this :

The question was of vital importance to Canada as it pertains to the building up of the Dominion, and in his opinion the United States policy is one which it would be well for Canada to carry out, for if the road were being built in the United States, there is no question whatever that the United States government would insist on having all the freight go through United States ports. He wished to emphasize that there was nothing in the resolution that could possibly give offence to the government or railway company either. It would be an equal benefit to Halifax, therefore there need be no feeling of jealousy between the two cities.

Another gentleman who has been largely identified with the party at present in power in this Dominion, Mr. James F. Robertson, and who took a great interest in the matter, spoke as follows ;

I hope that in moving these resolutions, that all idea of party politics may be put aside. It shall be viewed entirely from a national standpoint, and we shall take into consideration what is of far greater importance to the people of this country than any present party politics that is the great future of Canada, and where the interests of Canada may be jeopardized by the government of Canada building a railroad which will not be entirely under their control.

The resolution which Mr. Robertson introduced was as follows :

In view of the present proposition for a Grand Trunk Transcontinental Railway, and believing that the best interests of Canada would be conserved by the building of a government owned and managed transcontinental line ; and also believing that a subsidy of cash and land grants to a corporation may result in the land passing into foreign control ; and further believing it best for the government of Canada to retain the land for settlers at a fair valuation ; the St. John Board of Trade places itself on record as favouring extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal across the continent through Canadian territory, and the improvement of harbour facilities, particularly on the gulf of St. Lawrence and on the maritime province coast.

Those resolutions show the feeling of my constituency, with regard to this transcontinental railway as at present devised. We believe that if a transcontinental scheme is to be of any advantage to the people of the maritime provinces, the government must retain its hold of the whole transcontinental railway. We believe that if that railway be allowed to pass under the control and influence of the Grand Trunk Railway people or the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—for they appear to be one and the same—it will not be of any benefit to the maritime provinces, because the Grand Trunk Railway will continue, as they have been doing in the past, to route their freight for export to Portland in the state of Maine. In that port, the Grand Trunk Railway have built up great facilities and have every means of extending them, and there is nothing in this Bill to compel that company to do otherwise than carry its freight for export wherever it may please. There is nothing whatever in that contract to compel the Grand Trunk Railway or the Grand Trunk Pacific to bring their freight down to Halifax or St. John or any other Canadian port. That is one reason, and a very powerful one indeed, why the people of the city of St. John and the people of the maritime provinces generally will not endorse the action of the government. Such will be found to be the case when the general election comes on, and those hon. gentlemen opposite will regret that they forced the measure through, as they evidently intend doing. Under present conditions, the city of Portland will no doubt reap all the advantages to accrue from this great transcontinental scheme. That certainly will be the result for a number of years, because, while the time for building the western section is limited, there is no limit whatever to the time which may be occupied in building the eastern section. And while that western section is developing the country and carrying grain and other exports to the coast, these exports will certainly go to United States ports, unless there be some provision inserted in the Bill which will absolutely prohibit the Grand Trunk Pacific from doing so. In this connection, I may say that I understood the right hon. the First Minister to have declared that it was his policy to have every pound of export freight, originating on Canadian soil and intended for export, exported solely through Canadian ports. If that be the case, it appears to me that the right hon. gentleman will be losing a great opportunity if he allows this scheme to go through without making it absolutely compulsory that the freight originating on Canadian soil should be exported through Canadian ports. If it be really the desire of the right hon. gentleman that freight originating in Canada should only be carried through Canadian ports, why does he not insert a provision to that effect in the measure ?

Another thing discussed in the election to which I have referred was the policy elaborated in this House last session by the hon. the leader of the opposition, particularly that portion of it which aimed at making the ports of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax national ports. That policy appealed to the people of my constituency as being statesmanlike and broad, and I have no doubt that it was that policy, coupled with the dissatisfaction felt by our people in the maritime provinces over the fact that their interests were going to be sacrificed, which resulted in bringing many votes to our cause.

I may perhaps be accused of wearying the House and of bringing up matters in which many hon. members are not much interested, but we are all here from different parts of the country to deal with the interests of the country as a whole and especially with the interests of those constituencies which we have been elected to represent, and therefore, I think it is not necessary for me to apologize if I make a few remarks more with regard to the city I represent. I may say that this question of a winter export business is one which is very near to the minds and judgment and indeed the hearts of the people of St. John. Ever since before confederation, at the time when confederation was being argued all over the country, the city of St. John was told that if confederation were established, the port of St. John would no doubt become the winter port of Canada. That idea was ground into the people. They have been fed on it as a baby is fed on milk, it has become a part of their nature, and they have believed in it. What has been the result ? The people of St. John showed their faith in this idea to this extent, that they have spent about a million dollars of their own money to provide permanent facilities to accommodate the western trade of Canada. And they are to-day paying in their annual tax bills the cost of that money. I do not know of any other city in the whole Dominion which has done what the city of St. John has accomplished in that respect. I do not know of any other city which has laid out its own money on what is really a purely national concern. Why did we do it ? We spent that money and constructed those facilities and presented them as a free gift to the vessels and the people who were to use them, and all this we did, not that we might get a direct benefit, but an indirect benefit.

We secure employment for our labouring men at a time when otherwise they would be idle. I look upon that as a good policy to pursue, even if we have to pay something for it. It is my opinion—it is our opinion down there—that a community can be prosperous and advancing only when the working people are well employed. And so it is that in the city of St. John the labouring classes took a great interest in the last election ; and I am proud to say that on the same platform with myself there were two or three of the leading labouring men of the city of St. John taking an active interest in assisting my election, speaking for me, and endeavouring to win the votes of their co-labourers to elect me as the representative of the city of St. John. So that the 'accident' that happened in St. John is one that can be very easily accounted for. It arose from the fact that the majority of the people were dissatisfied with the policy of the government and preferred the policy that had been outlined by the leader of the opposition, in so far as nationalizing the various summer and winter ports of Canada is concerned. Now, in regard to what we have done there, I have already stated that we have spent about $1,000,000. And we have done some business. While on the train on my way up to Ottawa, I read in a newspaper an interview with Mr. Johnson, the well know statistican, with whom, no doubt, all the members of this House are well acquainted. Among other statements made by Mr. Johnson in that interview was one referring to the export business of Canada. He stated that, up to the 20th February last, the city of St.

John had exported 57,000 odd bushels of grain more than the combined export of the same articles from Boston, New York and Philadelphia. That, I think, was an important statement. It might mean much or it might mean little. I think we can all take it to mean that we are pretty busily at work down in St. John exporting the products of Canada. Indeed, so busy are we in that line that we have already utilized to the utmost the facilities we have at our command. We have an application now before the government of Canada with regard to some operations down there, and I certainly hope that the members of the government will look into this matter very carefully and come to the conclusion that, in the interests of true statesmanship they will assist, in so far as they are asked to assist, the city of St. John in providing further facilities for this great work to which I have alluded.

Among the other things referred to in His Excellency's speech is the prosperous condition of the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to belong to a party that has never yet indulged in decrying the country for the sake of making political capital. On the contrary we are proud to acknowledge the prosperous condition of the country. But we know that we have had a period of great expansion during the last few years. And we know that these periods of expansion and depression follow each other. We cannot always account for them. We may partially account for them sometimes by the good or bad harvests and probably these have as much as anything to do with the matter. But we know that good times and bad times come in cycles, and that this condition is not confined to Canada but applies to every country in the world. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Grant) appeared to insinuate that the good times prevailing are the result of the wise government of the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches. I am willing to give them all the credit to which they are entitled, but I think we could not safely give them credit for having produced our present prosperity. I am old enough to remember how, under the government of the late Alexander Mackenzie, it was found necessary to provide soup kitchens for the great numbers of unemployed who thronged the lobbies of this parliament and the streets of Ottawa. I was not willing at that time to ascribe the bad condition of affairs wholly to lack of statesmanship on the part of the Mackenzie government. Canada suffered from a period of depression which affected many other countries besides. And I think that this is a good rule, and, being so must work both ways. But, Sir, if the government of a country have any control over that country's prosperity, it must surely be through its fiscal policy. And, that being so, I would ask hon. gentlemen on either side if due credit should not be given to the great national policy introduced by the late Sir John A. Macdonald in 1879 which is the basis, as I understand it, of the fiscal policy of the present government.

We have heard a good deal too of our buoyant revenue and our overflowing treasury. We are all very glad to hear of these things. But we must remember that, while we have had surpluses for some years past, we have also been increasing the net debt of the country. We must also remember that, whereas in 1896 the expenditure was $7.56 a head, in 1902 it was $9.30 a head. And during the time between these years, it my figures are correct, we have increased our net debt by no less than $14,000,000.

With regard to the Militia Bill that is promised I have much pleasure in stating that I have been a member of the militia long enough to wish it well and to do anything that is in my power to help to strengthen it and give it the standing in the community that it ought to have. I believe that that is the sentiment animating every member on this side of the House. Therefore, the government will find no difficulty in passing any such Militia Bill as they are able to show to be beneficial to the militia. In fact, after listening to the remarks made by the right hon. leader of the government with regard to his desire to have a fuller treaty-making power in this country, I think it of importance that we should have not only this Militia Bill, but many more militia bills and a much more efficient military service than we have at the present time.

I think myself that we ought to have not only this Militia Bill but many other militia bills in order to secure a more efficient and effective militia service than we have at present. More than that I think that it was a grave omission that under these circumstances there was no mention in the speech from the Throne of a navy Bill being introduced, because if we are going to be so independent of everybody, if we are going to make our own treaties, surely we will have to defend them. We cannot make our own treaties and then go to the motherland and say: Here, we made a treaty with some one over there who will not keep it; will you not go and make them keep it for us? Is that the position which a country so large as Canada intends to occupy? Surely the members of the House and the people of this country have more self-respect than to wish to be placed in such a position as that, and if we are going to become independent and have this treaty-making power, let us wait until we have a population of at least 15 or 20 millions, and until we can provide ourselves not only with an army, but with a navy as well, so that we can take our place among the nations, and be able to defend our position and not become a second Panama. I shall not longer occupy the time of the House and I promise the members that in future I shall not overtax their indulgence.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that every member of this House has listened with a great deal of attention and interest to the entertaining speech which has been delivered by our new colleague from St. John city (Mr. Daniel). Many members of this House were no doubt anxious to learn the causes of the change in the political complexion of the commercial capital of New Brunswick, but I am sorry to say that the speech of our hon. friend gives us no light on the subject, and I am still wondering what did cause the change in St. John, N.B. Our hon. friend did mention various reasons for the change, but I am still asking myself what was the chief reason of his election.

An hon. MEMBER. Votes.

Mr. C. MARCIL. Votes, no doubt, but I am told there were nearly a thousand fewer votes cast at this than at the previous election. We are told there had been a division in the ranks of the ministerial party in St. John, N.B., that the people of St. John were afraid that their city was not in it in regard to the transcontinental railway. Therefore this would lead us to believe that the citizens of St. John were practical business people who realized this time that there was something in this transcontinental railway of which they were not going to obtain the full benefit. They stood as it were, in danger of seeing a portion of the trade going to Portland or Halifax. The hon. gentleman tells us that was one of the chief reasons for the change, but in the same breath he condemns this transcontinental railway scheme as being altogether unworthy of the attention of this parliament. This is contradictory. How can the fact of the railway not going to St. John direct, affect to such an extent the commercial interests of St. John city, while at the same time its construction will not be an advantage to the country at large. I have not recently had the pleasure of visiting St. John and therefore am not 'au fait' of the opinions prevailing in that city. But I am led to believe that the verdict there was rendered in a moment of panic and was not the result of deliberate reflection. I believe that at the next general election St. John city will change the verdict which it then gave, and that it already regrets the verdict which it gave on that occasion. I had, however, the pleasure of visiting, a few weeks ago, the railway centre of the province of New Brunswick, Moncton, in company with the hon. the new Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Emmerson), several of our friends from that province and one or two from the province of Quebec. It was interesting to me to visit Moncton the railway centre, where I presume the railway intelligence of the province of New Brunswick is congregated. The reception given to the Minister of Railways was of a most cordial nature. He was tendered an address by the mayor, irrespective of politics, and apart from the honour that was conferred on Moncton and the county of Westmoreland, by the representative of that county being made Minister of Railways, I have no hesitation in saying that nine-tenths of that immense gathering were unanimously and unqualifiedly in favour of the immediate construction of the transcontinental railway. That gives an indication of the opinion in that part of the province of New Brunswick. Our hon. friend from St. John city (Mr. Daniel) says that a contrary opinion prevails in that part of New Brunswick. I may say a word of the opinion in the northern part of New Brunswick from which my constituency is separated only by a river. I have had opportunities of meeting numbers of citizens from the northern counties of New Brunswick which we were told on a former occasion would be greatly injured by the construction of the transcontinental railway. So far as my opportunities have permitted me to become acquainted with the conditions I would inform you that public opinion in the northern part of New Brunswick has altogether changed, if the opinion which we were told last year existed there did exist. The people are satisfied that the construction of this railway cannot injure the Intercolonial but will rather develop and increase its trade. Apart from that there is in the heart of New Brunswick a real necessity for a new railway. However this question was referred to in every phase last session and was thoroughly threshed out, and I have no intention of again going over the same ground. If our hon. colleague from St. John city will ascertain and give us on some future occasion, the reason why New Brunswick, gifted by nature with all that is necessary to make a country prosperous, rich in climate, rich in agriculture, rich in mineral resources, supplied with abundant lakes, magnificent rivers, great timber wealth and an industrious, hard-working, thrifty population, let him tell us on some future occasion why it is that such a country as that has seen its population dwindle year after year, and has seen the Canadian parliament in the year 1903, when this Dominion is passing through the most prosperous period in its history, obliged to decrease the representation of the population of the province of New Brunswick. That, Sir, was one of the questions of last session. There is no man in the northern part of New Brunswick who will not immediately attribute the decrease in the population of New Brunswick to the absence of any railway communication through the interior of that province. That will be supplied by the construction of the new transcontinental railway. Our hon. friend has, however, not found cause for censure or blame on all the acts of the government. He has admitted that Canada is enjoying great prosperity and has even made the admission, which is not often made in this House, that the depression which existed under the Mackenzie administration was not wholly due to the Mackenzie tariff or the alleged mismanagement or misgovernment of those days. That is an admission which is not often made by our Conservative friends, and it is worth while to call attention to it now. I presume that what the hon. gentleman wanted to point out was that the present prosperity is not wholly due to the government of the day. No member of this House has ever claimed that it was. We know that without Providence nothing can be done, but Providence has blessed Canada with great prosperity and we know that the government composed as it is of capable men, have taken advantage of the opportunities offered to us, and the country has benefited as a result of that fact.

I shall not refer to any other part of the speech delivered by my hon. friend except to his closing remarks, in which he admits beforehand that the Militia Bill which it is proposed to introduce is a good measure. After admitting that the programme of our party is a good one in that respect, he tells us in the next breath that the electors of St. John condemned the entire Liberal programme, and the Liberal administration. He admits that the Militia Bill is a sound measure and one worthy of support, and he wonders why we have not now before us a Bill providing for the establishment of a naval force. I hope that will come in proper season, and in that respect, as in all others, the Liberal party will be able to disprove the fiction which has been industriously circulated during the last twenty years by our opponents, that the Liberal party was a party of critics and not a party of government. The Liberal party have shown through all the various branches of the administration that they have in their ranks men who can govern the country, develop its resources, restore the prosperity of the manufacturer, bring back prosperity to the farmer and place Canada in the proud position which she occupies to-day. My hon. friend does not wish Canada to ask for the power of making her own treaties. He is not in favour of progressing so rapidly as that. He would like us to wait until there are a few more million people in this country. Probably that would mean going back to the old time of the national policy, when people came in at the rate of 8,000 or 9,000 a year and left the country at the rate of 25,000, 30,000 or 40,000 a year. It certainly would take some time if, under those circumstances, we were to wait for a large increase in population before asking for the treaty-making power. If 5,000,000 of people have the power to ask England to give us a voice in the making of every treaty which can affect Canada, either directly or indirectly, these 5,000,000 of people have as much right to insist upon that power being given to us now as if the population amounted to 50,000,000. Numbers have nothing to do with the case. The principle is one which is important. It is being studied now. Our leader has submitted it to the country, it has been discussed in England, and it will be discussed still further. It is in line with the general policy of progress and advancement that the Liberal party have inaugurated and carried into effect. I am sorry that I was called upon rather unexpectedly to speak. Not knowing that we would have the opportunity of listening to the hon. member for St. John, I have not wholly prepared myself to discuss all the questions brought up by him.

I intended saying a few words somewhat in the nature of a personal explanation in reply to certain remarks made last evening by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), who, I am sorry to say, I do not see in his seat now. After the charge which had been made against us, that we of the Liberal party have brought about racial and religious discussions in this country, we observe that this subject was introduced into the House yesterday by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), whom the papers of to-day designate as the new Conservative leader of the province of Quebec. Therefore, we cannot be charged on this occasion with having brought up this question of race and religion. It was unfortunate for the hon. member for Montmorency that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) happened to be on hand with all the documents and the necessary information, because the hon. member for Montmorency probably did not expect to get the reply which he got yesterday, to the great amusement of this side of the House. The hon. member for East Simcoe, following up this debate inaugurated by the hon. member for Montmorency and continued by the hon. member for Labelle, used the following language :

> I have the honour to have in the riding of Simcoe which I reprcsent, a large French vote, and I regret to say that very little of that vote comes my way. And the reason is this. Whenever there is an election in that district, men like the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and the hon. Mr. Evanturel, Speaker of the local legislature of Ontario, come down there and excite the people, not by discussing political questions, but by appealing to their racial and religious prejudices. The sole issue which these men raise is the nationality and religion of the right hon. the First Minister. There was a time in the township of Tiny when the elections turned on political questions, but that day is past and gone. These hon. gentlemen should remember, however, that, if they gain a trifling success in the French vote, they run the risk of incurring a great loss in the English vote.

I have always been on good terms with the hon. member for East Simcoe. I have differed from him in politics, but I do not know whether I should be flattered at the particular attention he has devoted to me. He has brought up this subject at least three times to my recollection within the last five years. I was invited once to go to Penetanguishene and the adjoining parish of Lafontaine, where there is a French population of some 3,000 people, who originally came from Joliette and Berthier, and, following the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers and the Georgian bay, finally founded their settlement in the place where they now are. This was in the days of Louis Hyppolite Lafontaine, who gave them a post office, and in return for the compliment which had been paid to these settlers they suggested that the place should be called Lafontaine. Since then the people have shown themselves to be industrious, law-abiding citizens. The parish of Lafontaine is one of the most interesting spots in the province of Ontario. It is a wholly French parish transported bodily from the province of Quebec. They have there the old style of architecture in their dwellings and the French stone church, they have the presbytere, the curé with his soutane, the convent, the dual language, the young people speaking the English language, as all French Canadians do to-day, but the older men speaking only the French language. I am sure my hon. friend will admit that these people have been no discredit to the riding of East Simcoe.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. C. MARCIL. They are industrious, law-abiding, frugal and honest. When election time comes on some of them, not understanding the English language, request the candidates to send for speakers from the province of Quebec who can speak to them in the French language. Could there be anything more natural than that? That was a very natural request, and our Conservative friends could have done the same thing, but I defy the hon. gentleman from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to quote one word that I ever uttered at Lafontaine, at Penetanguishene, or at any place in the seven provinces of Canada, which was even remotely calculated to stir up religious or racial warfare in any shape or form.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a moment. In 1900 I did mention this matter of the presence of the hon. member (Mr. Marcil) at Lafontaine and I made exactly the same statement then, as I did yesterday, and the hon. gentleman did not at that time deny it; and had he denied it I had proof at the time that would have controverted his denial. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Marcil) has now taken three years to make a denial.

Mr. C. MARCIL. I denied the statement when it was first mentioned in the House in 1901, and the denial is in 'Hansard.' The first time I visited Simcoe in a federal election, was the by-election when my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) had been unseated, and had any other man except his opponent been the candidate of the Liberal party at that time, we would have carried the riding.

Mr. BENNETT. It was the Sunday meetings held by your French speakers that helped to kill you.

Mr. C. MARCIL. The Sunday meetings were not only held by Liberals but Conservatives as well.

Mr. BENNETT. It disgusted the English Liberals.

Mr. C. MARCIL. Sunday meetings are held also by the Conservative friends of the hon. gentleman from East Simcoe.

Mr. BENNETT. Never in that riding; they were introduced by you.

Mr. C. MARCIL. The member for East Simcoe will have to find some other reason when he is trying to hoodwink the House, and to throw dust in the eyes of the people of Ontario. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this idea of fomenting a solid Ontario as against a solid Quebec, is not a patriotic work, and I am sorry that some of the gentlemen opposite should attempt in this discussion to convey the idea that the people of Quebec are standing to-day behind that Liberal party and its leader, because of his origin. Such is not the fact. They are standing behind the Liberal party in Quebec because there is no Conservative party behind which they can stand. There was a time when the Conservative party in the province of Quebec was led by Sir George Cartier, and there came to this House a solid phalanx from that province. They were called 'les moutons de Cartier; les moutons bleus.' Cartier's sheep. They kept Sir John Macdonald in power and never was a word uttered, and never was a threat made against the province of Quebec at that time. But, when the immense majority of the people of the province of Quebec, Conservatives and Liberals found that the Conservative party had lost its leader, found that the Conservative party had lost its Macdonalds, had lost its Thompsons, had lost its Abbotts, when they found that Sir Hector Langevin was driven from public life, and Sir J. A. Chapleau refused to enter a Conservative administration; when the people of Quebec had found all this, how could they be blamed for turning around and casting their votes in favour of a man whose career had been unimpeached and unimpeachable, and who has since shed so much glory upon this country.

The hon. gentleman from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) will have to find another reason than the vote of the poor electors of Lafontaine, to explain why his majority of 246 in 1896, dwindled down to 39 in 1900. He will have to tell us how it is that in some townships where (according to the census) there is not a single French Canadian man, woman or child ; in Muskoka township for example where there is not a citizen of French Canadian origin, there was a majority of eight votes cast against him. In Ora township with only eight French Canadians, there was a majority of 51 against the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett). In Medora and Wood with 59 French Canadian men, women and children on the census, representing probably a dozen votes, there was a majority of one against him. These are facts, Mr. Speaker, which the hon. member will have to explain. According to the last census the French population of the whole constituency of East Simcoe is 4,950 and the English speaking population is 31,726. How is it that with only a few hundred French Canadian voters in the riding—not all of whom voted against him, since at Lafontaine he took 47 votes as against 171 cast for his opponents—how is it that the hon. gentleman can make the charge he has made. He will have to find other reasons why it was, that 3,447 citizens of East Simcoe voted against him after he had represented the riding in parliament for seven or eight years. It is no argument to contend, that because he was in a minority in Lafontaine, I had gone up there or any other member of the Liberal party had gone there, to stir up race and religious discord. Sir, on every and upon all occasions I have condemned such conduct as that. In the county of Bonaventure which I represent nearly one-third of the population is English speaking ; New Carlisle, New Richmond, Metapedia, Port Daniel west ; these are all settled by the descendants of United Empire Loyalists, and if I were on any occasion or in any locality in this country to utter one word against English representation, it would be suicidal not only to myself in my own constituency, but suicidal to the party I have the honour to represent in that locality.

Sir, upon all occasions I have stood up for the principle of cementing the different races which inhabit this country. Let us hope that once and for all, that this cry of race and religion shall fall. When I had the honour of uttering the first words in this House in seconding the address at the opening of this parliament, the first wish that I expressed, in the first year of this century, in the first year of the reign of a sovereign who has given us an example in toleration which we may all imitate ; the first word I uttered in this House was, for peace, for concord, and for harmony among all the people of Canada. Do not blame the province of Quebec for the vote it has given to the Liberal party. Do not blame the Conservatives of the province of Quebec for the Liberal votes they have given. Do not blame the French Canadians for the Liberal votes they have given in East Simcoe. Why should not the French Canadian people be proud of the fact that for the first time in the history of confederation, Quebec, the mother province of this Dominion, produced a man who was worthy of occupying the first position in this land. Is it because the leader of the Liberal party is a French Canadian, that the province of Quebec should vote against him ? Mr. Speaker, when the Conservative party offer to the province of Quebec, men who are worthy of the old Conservative leaders, when we have in the Conservative party men who can agree amongst themselves, and not men who though numbering less than a corporal's guard are unable to agree among themselves ; one refusing to appear on the same platform as the other ; then may the Conservative party expect a measure of confidence from the people. Until the Conservative party can offer the electors of the province of Quebec men who are worthy of their confidence, no sane man in this country will blame the independent French Conservative for casting an honest vote in favour of the Liberal candidate, when he finds that that Liberal candidate is the best man, has the best policy, and has the best leader.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). Mr. Speaker, the evolution of political life seems to have produced as its latest phase a policy of silence. But, Sir, I am indeed glad that the cruel castigation the government received last night has taught them the lesson, that while speech may be silver and silence golden, the rule is not of universal application. I hope, Sir, before this debate is ended, that from the other side of the House, we will hear not only speeches such as that to which we have just listened with pleasure, expressing sentiments which must meet the approval of both sides of the House, but that also we may have speeches from the other side answering, or at least attempting to answer some of the serious charges that have been made against the government. I can quite understand that the hon. gentlemen opposite may not be anxious to join in the debate in this House. There are certainly ample reasons for reticence on their part, handicapped as they are by the fact that no matter which side of any subject they may choose to take, not only will they find that heretofore they have said exactly the same thing, but that we can make quotations of previous utterances of theirs, made at one place or another, which were utterly contradictory of their expressions here, no matter what they may be. I quite understand the embarrassment that Ministers of the Crown may have in discussing these questions, because there is not one of them who has not delivered himself in a way that he would not care to hear about to-day. Even in the remarks made by the premier the other evening—and we always listen to him with pleasure—he seems to have shown in small matters as in great that a spirit of carelessness and indifference has settled upon his administration, making it almost impossible for them to do anything under the sun, and do it right. For example, the hon. leader of the opposition called attention to the fact that in the speech from the Throne there was no reference to a revision of the tariff, a question that has certainly excited the public mind as much as any that can be brought before the House, outside of the transcontinental railway scheme; and the right hon. leader of the government, in explaining why the subject had not been referred to in the speech from the Throne, stated that it was not the proper place to mention such a subject, but that the proper place would be the budget debate. I have taken the pains to refer to the few occasions on which revisions of the tariff have taken place. Referring to 'Hansard' of 1879, when the Conservative party was returned to power and introduced the national policy, I find that the speech from the Throne contained this sentence:

> By the application of the strictest economy to the public expenditure, and by the readjustment of the tariff with the view of increasing the revenue, and, at the same time, of developing and encouraging the various industries of Canada, you will, I trust, be enabled to restore the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure.

The next time the matter came before the House was in 1894, when the administration of that day decided to make some changes, perhaps not altogether wisely, but, as they said themselves, for the purpose of cutting off the mouldering branches. In the speech from the Throne on that occasion I find this sentence:

> At an early date a measure will be laid before you having for its object a revision of the duties of customs with a view to meet the changes which time has effected in business operations of all kinds throughout the Dominion.

And in 1897, when the ministry presided over by the right hon. gentleman himself, having come into power, were bound to make some attempt to change the tariff, I find in the speech from the Throne this sentence:

> A measure will be submitted to you for the revision of the tariff, which it is believed will provide the necessary revenue, and, while having due regard to industrial interests, will make our fiscal system more satisfactory to the masses of the people.

So that we find on every occasion on which the tariff has been dealt with to any extent, the matter has been announced in the speech from the Throne. But if on ordinary occasions, with an ordinary government, it is right and proper that such a matter as a fiscal policy should be announced in the speech from the Throne, how much more necessary is it under a government such as this, when no man in Canada can say whether it is a free trade or protectionist government. If the government were committed either to free trade or protection, the manufacturers and business men generally would know the principles upon which a revision of the tariff would be made; the details, of course, must remain unknown until the matter comes before the House. But the government have transgressed a plain and reasonable rule in not even mentioning the matter in the speech from the Throne.

The right hon. the premier referred also to the Conservative party of the province of Quebec as being without a leader, and drew a very harrowing picture of an old hulk drifting out to sea without a captain and commanded by a junta from the shore. I am not going to admit that the right hon. gentleman's description is correct, for I might remind him that the Conservative party has a leader, not only for Quebec but for the whole Dominion of Canada, my hon. friend and leader from Halifax. But admitting for the sake of argument that what he said was true, what must he think of the reputation and standing of his government in the province of Quebec, when, without a leader of the Conservative party to oppose them, their legions were shattered as they were in the elections a few days ago? If against a non-commanded foe the veteran leaders of the government could not do any better than they did the other day, when they merely saved themselves from an utter rout in constituency after constituency, what will they do in the general elections when the people of Quebec, as the people of every other province, will rally around the leader of the Conservative party? I leave it to hon. gentlemen themselves to say.

Then, the right hon. gentleman spoke of Providence having inspired the government in 1897 when they introduced the tariff which has since been in force. I am sure the right hon. gentleman did not speak seriously when he made the reference to Providence. The right hon. gentleman is aware that Providence knows all things, and therefore knows the platform laid down by the Liberal party in their convention in the city of Ottawa. In the light of that platform it seems to me almost a blasphemy to say that Providence suggested to the government that they should violate every promise they made to the people of this country. If they were inspired, the inspiration must have come from the opposite quarter.

I find some other omissions from the bill of fare brought down to the House, which was spoken of yesterday as a meagre bill. The hon. mover of the address intimated that he should be very glad if the government took up the question of the admission of Newfoundland into the confederation. I have no intention at this stage of the session of speaking at any length on this subject; but it seems to me, viewing the position of Canada, of which we talk proudly as stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and considering that Labrador, which most people suppose to be a part of Canada, really belongs to Newfoundland, and remembering how much we have lost by unfortunate arbitrations with our American neighbours, that a time like this, when the mother country and France are on the best possible terms, is the most favourable time for the settlement of that vexed question. It is a matter of regret that the government have not only not referred to this subject in the speech from the Throne, but, so far as we know, have done nothing to bring about what every one would admit to be a most desirable consummation—the rounding off of this confederation by bringing into it the sentinel standing at the mouth of the St. Lawrence. We all hope that the government will show readiness to take up this matter, and do all they can thus to complete our Dominion, which can never fulfil the purpose designed for it until it includes within its territories what is now known as Labrador and Newfoundland.

Then, no reference is made in the speech from the Throne to the subject of granting autonomy to the Northwest Territories. Surely a reform government, after six or seven years in existence, should have found something to reform. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite should be ashamed to come down year after year, and have to admit that they can find nothing to reform, and thereby admit the wisdom and statesmanship of their predecessors. Those who have been to the Northwest and who have heard the complaints of the people out there, as I have done, must feel that they are justified in considering it a hardship that they should be treated as children and as wards of the government, while those in other provinces are treated as adults and allowed to manage their own affairs. And I trust, Mr. Speaker, that among the subjects which have not been referred to in the address, but which we are promised will be brought up later, will be a Bill to grant autonomy to the Northwest Territories.

Of course, we find in the speech from the Throne a reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific, but it would be out of place to occupy now any time discussing that measure, which in a few days will be submitted to the House. I would ask permission, however, to draw attention to one or two general principles, which may fitly be referred to here. Hon. members, Sir, will remember that last session, when the contract between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific was before the House, it was submitted to us as a holy thing on which no one should dare lay a hand. We were told that we had no power to change that contract in any respect. The people of Canada were as powerless as were the people of Newfoundland or of the United States to vary that solemn agreement come to between the Crown and the Grand Trunk Pacific. But although the Canadian people were powerless, no matter what might be the objections urged, yet, when that contract was laid before the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders, they had every power to change it, and they exercised that power just as freely as the original parties to the agreement could have done. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada will feel that an injustice was done them when their representatives were deprived of the right and power which the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway were allowed to exercise so freely. We have not yet a full account of what took place at the meeting of the Grand Trunk shareholders, but I have in my hand a number of the Toronto 'Globe,' which contains a telegraphic report of the proceedings, and according to that report, it is perfectly clear that the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway were almost unanimously opposed to a ratification of the agreement made with this government. I find that Sir Rivers-Wilson was unable to persuade them to confirm that agreement, and it was only when Mr. Hays pointed out, not that the agreement was what they wanted—because he had not a word to say in its favour in that respect—but that the exigencies of the railway were such that, unless the shareholders accepted what was offered, some other rival organization would come in and accept what they rejected, and that such an event would be very detrimental to the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway—it was only when Mr. Hays pointed this out, that the shareholders consented to ratify the contract submitted to them. But when that contract comes back to this House, and when it is found that not one concession is made in the interests of Canada, but that every change made is in the interests of the Grand Trunk, and when it is found that the Grand Trunk Company itself is given what it did not ask, and would rather be freed from the onerous obligations of the contract, we may call on hon. gentlemen opposite to lay aside party prejudices for the time and see whether a better bargain cannot be devised and parties be induced to undertake to build the road for commercial reasons.

The main reason given for introducing the Bill last session was that it would bring about a reduction in the rates of freight. It was intended to help our friends in the west to get their goods to market more cheaply and expeditiously. But, Mr. Speaker, it must be evident that the only effect of building such a road as the one submitted will be to burden our people with heavy taxation, a part of which must be borne by the people in the west, by loading up that road with a tremendous amount of obligation, including debentures and stock both common and preferred, on all of which interest and dividends will have to be paid. This the people will sooner or later realize, and as soon as they realize that every dollar which goes into the construction of that road means an additional charge on every bushel of wheat sent out of the country, they will rise in their might and insist that instead of such a strange, fantastical idea as this, we should have a plain, common sense business proposition submitted to us.

This road is to be built by a commission. Well, we have before us an object lesson in the railway commission; and with that object lesson before them, it cannot be wondered that every one trembles at the idea of entrusting so tremendous a task as the building of this transcontinental line to a commission to be appointed by this same government which named Messrs. Blair, Bernier and Mills as the three most competent railway experts in Canada. I have no desire to say a word against these gentlemen, but hon. gentlemen opposite have given their opinion, and the facts speak for themselves. When we find Mr. Blair telling the members of this government that they knew nothing whatever about this transcontinental road, and that nothing should be done until they could obtain some information, and then, when we find that a day or two ago the right hon. the leader of the House gave a certificate to Mr. Blair as the most competent railway expert on the continent, despite the fact that he had previously refused to be guided by the advice of this railway expert and would have nothing whatever to do with him until the dread of coming elections caused him to change his mind, we are entitled to regard the course of the government as a very suspicious and questionable one. Then look at Mr. Blair's colleagues on the railway commission, Mr. Bernier and Mr. Mills. I have not a word to say against Mr. Bernier. I believe him to be a thoroughly honest and honourable old gentleman, but look at the question from a business point of view. The government induced us to agree to pay the members of this commission a higher salary than is even given the judges of the Supreme Court; and the reason they gave for granting such enormous salary was that railway experts might be chosen who could not be obtained for less money. For my part I was perfectly willing to vote $8,000 or $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 salary, for I believe that it is true economy to obtain for such a position the best possible men, regardless of price. When we find presidents of railways paid $50,000 per annum and bank presidents $25,000 per annum, I would not think it unreasonable to pay a high price for a first-class railway expert, believing that in the long run that would be the truest economy. But, without saying a word against Mr. Bernier, whom everybody on this side respects as a most excellent and honest man, would any body in the province of Quebec attempt to say that his services are the best that could have been secured or that they could not have been secured for less than $8,000 per year? Then with regard to Mr. Mills, the representative on the commission from the province of Ontario, with whom I am not acquainted, but who, I believe, is a most estimable man, and against whom I would be sorry indeed to say a word, he is a gentleman, nearly seventy years of age, who has been for years president of an agricultural college, but I am not aware that he can in any sense be considered a railway expert. Looking at the public accounts for the province of Ontario of last year, I find that Mr. Mills, as president of this college, was drawing the magnificent salary of $2,000 per year. I do not say that that was too little or too much, but, as a business proposition, trying to judge fairly and impartially, I do not hesitate to say that Mr. Mills is not the most competent railway expert that could have been secured, and that his services could have been secured for less than $8,000 a year.

I am sorry to see that no reference is made in this address to the question of imperial preferential trade. I would have thought that that was a subject on which the government would have been able to speak. In 1896, pending an election, the right hon. the leader of the House spoke in the city of London with his usual eloquence on this subject, and I have no hesitation in saying that, of all the speeches made, both in the motherland and in this country on the question of preferential trade, not one was more logical and convincing.

Now, Sir, since that time the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues have been in the old country, and while there they subscribed—as shown by the blue-book—to this principle. Why is it that when a word from this country will assist that principle so much, when the silence of this country must inevitably lead the people on the other side of the water to misunderstand our position—some of them, as a matter of fact concluded that the right hon. gentleman is in favour of the principle and some that he is opposed to it—why cannot we speak out in this House plainly and unmistakably and assent to the principle so ably and eloquently expounded by the right hon. gentleman himself in the election of 1896? I appeal to the right hon. gentleman himself, because I believe that no question that has come before this House equals this in importance. Grave and important as our transcontinental railway question is, it sinks into utter insignificance, it is parish politics as against imperial politics, when compared with the great possibilities opened before this country if we can succeed in attaining a satisfactory scheme of preferential trade between this country and the motherland. Let me say to my hon. friends from Quebec represented by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)—I hope they are not numerous, but perhaps they may be —that if they imagine for a moment that in this scheme of preferential trade, militarism, imperialism, or call it what they will, if they imagine that there is the slightest intention on the part of any member of this House, especially of any Conservative, in this House to interfere to the extent of one iota with the rights or liberties of any Canadian, they never made a greater mistake. But what we on this side cannot understand is this : If England is willing to make a bargain with us for our mutual advantage, why is it that we, a people who are trading every day and making money by trading, should not discuss the terms of that bargain ? Why should not our Prime Minister sit down with the representatives of the mother country and at least try to make the best bargain that can be made in the interest of Canada, when the possibilities are so tremendous ? If we fail, there is no loss ; and if we succeed the gain is incalculable. And so I hope that, among the matters to be brought before this House even though not mentioned in the speech from the Throne, will be a resolution that will unmistakably declare the feeling of Canada in favour of inter-imperial preferential trade. I do not wish to speak at any length on the subject brought up by the hon. member for Labelle yesterday. I am sorry he is not in his place at this moment. It seems to me that it would be unfortunate, perhaps, if too much were said on the subject on which he spoke so eloquently, and, in some respects so well. The hon. gentleman, if I understood his speech—and I have since read his remarks in 'Hansard'—seemed to me to be very much in the position of the class of people known as 'Little Englanders' in the mother country. I must not be taken as speaking contemptuously of my Reform friends, when I speak of the politics of the hon. gentleman on this question as appearing to me to be parish politics. In one passage he said, almost with a whine, that he would not let any one trample on the French Canadians of the province of Quebec. As if any one entertained the slightest intention of trampling on these worthy fellow citizens of ours. I have always held an entirely different view of the people of the province of Quebec from that of the hon. member for Labelle, and that opinion was not changed by the hon. gentleman's speech. Let me show what is the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Labelle no longer ago than yesterday. He wants the people of Quebec to remain as they are without contributing to the maintenance of the empire, without allowing the people of this country, even if they are willing, to assist the empire, without assuming any obligation or responsibility of any kind whatever in relation to the empire—and the moment it pays us better we are to leave the empire and go off by ourselves, or join the United States, or do whatever we like. Is that a view of national life that will appeal to any reasonable man ? I venture to say that it is not a view of national life that will appeal to the majority of the people in the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman said, and said truly that there was a time when Canada was saved to the empire by the loyalty, fidelity and courage of the people of the province of Quebec. No one is more ready to admit that than are we on this side. But I will go further than the member for Labelle, and will say that in my opinion, when these men went forth to conquer and to hold this country for the empire, they did it not merely to hold so much land for themselves and their children, but because they appreciated the terms on which they had entered the British empire, they were grateful for what had been conceded to them, they were loyal subjects of the empire. They fought not only as Canadians, but as British subjects ; and they won not only for themselves but for the British empire. Why, Sir, in that city of Quebec which must be well known to my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa), is one of the best national monuments that could be found to teach English speaking and French speaking Canadians how they should live. In that city of Quebec, where, on the day of the conquest, the gallant leaders of both sides fell, there is a monument erected to the memory of both. Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual to erect a monument to a victorious chief, but where else throughout the world will you find a monument inscribed, as this one is, on one side to the memory of Wolfe, the victor, and on the other to the memory of Montcalm, the vanquished. And their epitaph is there :

> Famiam historia
> Monumentum posteritas dedit.

Their heroism gave them a common death ; history has given a common fame ; and posterity has erected a monument to their joint memory.

That, Sir, exemplifies the principle which, I think, should underlie all the dealings between the French-speaking and the English-speaking citizens of this country. But if hon. gentlemen like our hon. friend from Labelle, speaking as he did in this House yesterday, will suggest that they are standing up to prevent their French-speaking fellow-citizens from being trampled on, is it astonishing that we, from the other provinces, knowing that there is not the slightest ground of suspicion of any attempt on our part to trample on them, cannot but feel suspicious that there is some ulterior object to be gained other than appears on the face of the words uttered ? As this matter has come before the House, perhaps hon. members will pardon me if I give in a few words the reasons why I think we should have no difficulty in overcoming a race feeling like this if it exists. There may have been a time, as intimated by the hon. member for Labelle, when people going out to fight in defence of Canada felt that they were fighting for Canada alone. But the history of our country since then precludes the possibility of any man regarding Canada simply as so much territory. As its very name implies, it is part of a great empire, made not by Englishmen, or Irishmen, or Scotchmen and not by all together, but an empire for the maintenance of which Canada also has sent her sons who have done their duty as nobly as have the inhabitants of the motherland itself. A hundred years ago, when the conqueror Napoleon had overrun the whole of Europe and it was feared that England would be his next conquest, when the people of England were trembling lest he should secure a lodging place upon their soil, the conqueror's fleet was cut out and destroyed by a little Armada under the command of Admiral Cunliffe Owen, himself a Canadian. And when we come further down in history we find the heroic defence of Kars, in which Sir Fenwick Williams immortalized hmself as, perhaps, no other keeper of a beseiged city ever did. And he was a Canadian, fighting not for Canada, but for the empire's fame. And when we come to the Indian mutiny and the heroic relief of Lucknow, we find that General Inglis, who held that city in spite of such tremendous difficulties, was a Canadian. And even in the charge of Balaklava, which all regret, but which all must admire, it was Colonel Dunn, himself a Canadian who led the gallant band. And, in these recent days Canadians have emulated the deeds of their forefathers in devotion to the empire. Lieut. Stairs, from my leader's city, won victories and gave up his life in duty to the empire in carrying on its work in the centre of Africa. And the very province represented by the hon. member for Labelle has sent her man ; and I would like to know who, to-day, is doing more for the empire, or who stands higher in the empire than Sir Percy Girouard himself. So, Sir, I think we will find that not only in times of peace, when we send our representatives, such as Edward Blake and Sir Gilbert Parker, to the Imperial House of Commons and send peers like Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal to the most august deliberative body in the world, but in times of war, Canada is quite ready to do her part to build up and maintain the empire. If we come to discuss in the House questions as to whether Canada should contribute anything towards the maintenance of the army and navy of Great Britain, I for one would oppose as thoroughly as did any American at the time of the revolutionary war compulsory taxation by Great Britain. I would oppose that, and so would any Conservative in this House as vigorously as would the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) or the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne). While this is true, I think it a misfortune when a society lays down such rules as the society which the hon. member addressed. I feel that a great injustice would be done to those people of the country who are anxious and willing to do their share, but who would be debarred from doing it because some one else objected to serve. We may recall that a session or two ago the right hon. the premier informed us that when in England he had not discussed imperial defence, but was willing to discuss trade, holding that one had nothing to do with the other. I remember calling the attention of the House at that time to the fact that the premier of Ontario, who is a staunch supporter and valued aide of the right hon. gentleman, had spoken in a number of places, and had contended that the true solution of the imperial defence question and of the trade question was the combining together of the two, and it was suggested that although the people of England would not be willing to put a duty of five cents on corn from other countries than Canada, because it would be taxing the people, they would be willing to do so if it was understood that the proceeds of such a tax were going into a war fund, and if we had the same thing in this country we might form a large war fund to assist in the defence of the empire, without really taxing a single citizen of the empire one dollar, as a large portion of the money would be contributed by outsiders paying for the privilege of doing business in our markets. I do not wish to suggest this, but I give it as the view of the prime minister of Ontario, and when a gentleman of his ability and experience entertains the idea that imperial defence could be provided for in this way, surely I cannot be going very far astray when I submit the proposition as one at least well worthy of consideration.

The programme that was introduced into the House yesterday by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) as being that of this society contained several clauses, and I would ask the House to calmly consider the effect of these clauses. The first clause is :

> Opposition to the establishment of a naval school in Canada with the consent and for the benefit of the imperial authorities.

Now, supposing the imperial authorities wished to establish a naval school here and that no one would be compelled to attend it, would it not be an unjust thing if some one living in Ontario or Manitoba wished to attend but would not be permitted to do so, because some one else living in Quebec did not wish to attend ? If attendance was made compulsory, I would join hands with my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), and agree that it would be a gross violation of the constitutional privileges of this country. But when the conditions are reversed, and those who do not wish to attend endeavour to prevent the attendance of those who desire to attend, there is just as much compulsion. The next clause is :

Absolute refusal of all leave asked by an officer of the militia to take part in an imperial war.

Now, I will go as far as my hon. friend and say there should be no provision by which, because a man joins the militia, he should be compelled to take part in an imperial war, but surely in the light of the experience of four years ago, when from one end of the country to the other there was such a unanimous uprising that the government, strong as it was, would have been driven from power if it had refused to allow Canadians to volunteer, it would not be fair to those who wished to serve the motherland to say : We will not allow you to serve because we do not wish to serve. If you do not wish to serve, do not serve ; but in heaven's name do not prevent those who do. The last clause, taken with this one, is the most absurd :

Command of the Canadian militia by a Canadian officer appointed by the Canadian government.

I would like to see the Canadian militia commanded by a Canadian officer, but it is one thing to allow your Canadian officer to gain experience, to acquire training in the service of the empire and then to place him in command of the militia ; it is another and a very different thing to prevent him hearing a gun fired or seeing an evolution except in a parade, and then say that only from this class of officers, which we have carefully restrained from seeing any active service and becoming fit to command a force, the commanding officer shall alone be selected. I cannot go so far as my hon. friend who has just spoken, and say that I will support the Militia Bill, because I do not know its contents, but if the object of that Bill is to make more and more useful our militia forces, and the proposals are likely to produce that result, I will support the measure as readily as any hon. gentleman who sits on the other side of the House.

I do not feel that I owe any apology for addressing the House. It seemed to me, and I do not believe that I was singular in my view, that this question which was brought up by the hon. member for Labelle was a most important one. I myself have never been able to see any reason for having a racial feeling between the two provinces, and yet, as a matter of common sense, surely one is only using the observation every one has when one says that when a general election is held in Quebec and one party is returned with seven followers and the other with fifty-eight, you can hardly expect the people of the other provinces to believe that the election was carried on upon absolutely political grounds, and that every vote was cast as the result of full discussion of political questions and a desire to promote the best interests of the country.

I certainly hope that whatever I may have failed to do, I at least have said nothing that will be offensive either to the hon. member for Labelle or the hon. member for Montmagny.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). Mr. Speaker, I think the government and their supporters are paying a very poor compliment to the people of the country through their representatives in this House in the manner in which they are treating this debate. The people of Canada will draw their own conclusions from the silence of the government's supporters in regard to the questions brought before them in this debate. We have had suggested by hon. gentlemen after hon. gentlemen, during the course of this debate, from this side of the House, that a good many things, all named, all discussed, and all as carefully gone into as the short period of time at our disposal would permit, but clearly and distinctly put before the House, that ought to be attended to by the government and that ought to have been mentioned in the speech from the Throne, or at all events, if not mentioned in the speech from the Throne, ought to have been promised to be dealt with later in the session. We have had hon. gentlemen after hon. gentlemen giving strong reasons why the government ought to do something that is purely public, something that it is purely the business of the government to do, something that ought not to emanate from a private member of this House, but which it ought to be part of the duty of the government to take care of. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) mentioned one important measure after another that he knows ought to have been considered and he was followed by hon. gentleman after hon. gentleman on this side of the House coming from different parts of the Dominion and pointing out to this government in clear and distinct language what they know the people with whom they come in contact desire. I may say that every year that goes by I am more and more convinced that it is the Conservative party that is in touch with the people and not the so called Liberal party. I say that these hon. gentlemen over and over again have brought these things to the attention of the government and yet we find that not a single member of the government will stand up and say wherein these matters asked to be attended to by the hon. gentlemen who have advanced them are fallacious or why there should be delay in attending to them. No reason has been given by any member of the government why they should not be attended to now, or in the future, and no attempt has been made to show that the arguments which have been advanced by this side of the House are not well founded. I do not propose to go into these matters in detail, but I owe a duty to my constituents and to the people of the Dominion at large and I did not think that I ought to have allowed this debate to close without saying that the constituents whom I represent want these matters attended to, that the whole Dominion of Canada wants these matters attended to and the people will not believe that this government has done its duty when its members sit silent and do not say that they will attend to these matters or that these matters should not be attended to. They must do one thing or the other. If they were not ready to proceed with the business of this session they were not obliged to call parliament together at the hour they did. They have called parliament together apparently for the purpose of considering the contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Most of the discussion has arisen in regard to that matter, but they have had pointed out to them over and over again during the last two or three days other matters of equal importance to the people of Canada which should be attended to and in regard to which I submit the only inference that can be drawn by the people is that this government did not call this session with any regard to what the interests of the people demand, because they do not have any reference to the interests of the people except in so far as they relate to the Grand Trunk Pacific contract. They have called this session purely and simply to enable them to stand shoulder to shoulder with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Now, this debate has developed a good many important facts and I propose to touch upon one or two of them. We have had a very practical interesting and instructive, although short address—in my opinion much too short—from the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Smith) who spoke last night in this House. That hon. gentleman touched upon a question that has occupied days and days of every session since I have had the honour of being elected to represent a constituency in this House. The transportation question has received the most marked attention. My hon. friend from South Wentworth yesterday afternoon pointed out that our trade is going through the port of Boston and not through the port of Montreal. We have had hon. gentlemen opposite answering, or attempting to answer some of the speeches made on this side of the House and they all appear to be very anxious to protect the interests of the province of Quebec. My hon. friend from South Wentworth wants the St. Lawrence route and the port of Montreal to get the trade which Boston is now getting. He quoted some figures in this House which were instructive to me. I did not understand the situation as clearly before he did so and I believe the government did not understand it either. If they did understand it they are more to blame than I am because they do not say that this important matter should be attended to. The hon. gentleman pointed out in this House clearly and distinctly that something has to be done by the government in regard to freight rates between the points of shipment and Boston and Montreal and in regard to facilities for shipping our products across the Atlantic ocean. We have had hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec speaking in this debate upon matters upon which they are very fond of talking upon all occasions and upon the slightest provocation, but they have nothing to say in regard to these matters which my hon. friend claims should be attended to immediately. We do not find any member of the government telling my hon. friend that these things will be attended to. We do not find them explaining wherein my hon. friend is wrong in what he says and we must draw the inference that this government has no time to attend to any such question because its time is, in its opinion, more wisely taken up with other matters which is very significant. I can remember that at the last session of this House, summoned a little more than a year ago, the main question in the speech from the Throne was the transportation question. It was not attended to, but the government thought it was important enough to make it the principal item in the bill of fare which we were summoned a year ago to consider. The government promised in the speech from the Throne to inquire into the transportation question. Instead of inquiring into the whole question it made a deal with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and with no other institution. Nothing has been done in regard to the transportation question and we have to thank hon. members on the opposite side of the House for pointing out the needs of the country in this regard as my hon. friend did yesterday. Then, we have the speech of my hon. friend the newly elected member for St. John (Mr. Daniel). I was astonished to hear an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House say that he could not understand why the people of St. John elected my hon. friend. If he had listened to him for five minutes and if he had looked at him for five minutes while he was speaking he could very well have understood from his character, his ability and high standing why the people of St. John preferred him. I do not wish to presume but, perhaps, although I am a younger man than my hon. friend, he will not find fault with me for saying that I welcome him to this House not only because he is a Conservative but because I can see that he is going to be one of the most useful members in the House before he is here very long. My hon. friend pointed out in his speech several important matters that require the attention of this government. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to imagine that the people should be satisfied with what the government choose to give them and that they must not have the impudence to ask for more. My hon. friend pointed out several matters that affect the interests of the maritime provinces which require attention. The hon. leader of the opposition pointed out in his speech a great many matters that should be dealt with. His statements have been reiterated by other hon. members with the object of drawing the attention of the government to these matters in the hope of eliciting some statement from the government in regard to them. They have not been mentioned in a perfunctory way and the government is not in a position to say that its attention has not been drawn to them. These matters have been emphasized by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and no attention has been paid to them.

Yesterday, the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) felt it his duty to bring to the attention of parliament, a question of political morality. I am sure that every man in this House would regret to have to bring before our attention any case which indicated that the highest sense of honour does not exist among the members of the Canadian parliament. I am sure that we must all regret to find that the political morality of this country is going down the scale instead of ascending. The hon. gentleman from East Simcoe, much against his wish, but in deference to the discharge of his public duties, mentioned a matter which has been discussed in the public press of Nova Scotia, and he asked for a pronouncement of the government upon it. But, notwithstanding that many members have since spoken, the ministers have remained silent and there is no reply. The people of Canada are an intelligent people, and the government that thinks it can hoodwink them, or that it can deceive them by remaining mute, will find that it has made a great mistake when at the next election, the electors of Canada have an opportunity to pronounce upon its conduct. Knowing the hon. member from East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) as I do, and knowing that he states nothing but facts in this House; knowing that he is a gentleman who does not flinch from doing his duty although it may be unpleasant, I thought I would inquire into one of the charges that he made last night. I had not time to inquire into all his statements, but I know that the member for East Simcoe is a man of high honour, and if all his statements be as true as the one I did inquire into, then the government is in a very unenviable position indeed. It is a cause of great surprise to me, that the Prime Minister or some of the members of his cabinet, did not announce to the House what they are going to do about the matter. I refer to the statement which the member for East Simcoe made in reference to the Digby public works. The hon. member appealed to the Finance Minister to know what he thought of this sort of thing. The member for East Simcoe told us that the representative of the county of Digby was to get $500 cash, and $4,500 more from the town, when the government had constructed certain public works in that municipality. This matter had been published in the public press of Nova Scotia, and yet the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who comes from Nova Scotia, and who must be aware of what is published in the newspapers there, even, though a special appeal was made to him, did not announce the opinion of the government on this extraordinary transaction. I made inquiries for myself, and I am sorry to say that the case is even worse than as presented by the member for East Simcoe. I, as coming from another part of the province of Ontario, wish to further deal with this subject, because I know that the people of my district, irrespective of politics, desire to see the affairs of Canada administered in an honourable and honest manner. I find in the Digby 'Weekly Courier' of Friday, January 8, 1904, a report of the proceedings of the town council which is as follows:—

'TOWN COUNCIL.'

The adjourned meeting of the council met January 2nd, 1904, at 8 p.m. Present, acting Mayor Hayden and Councillors Titus, Syda, VanBlarcon and Letteney.

Minutes of previous meeting were approved.

The following motion to rescind, notice of which had been given at last regular meeting, was moved by Councillor Letteney.

Whereas, on the 27th day of November 1902, a certain resolution was adopted by the town council of the town of Digby, authorizing the Mayor to enter into an agreement and contract with A. J. S. Copp, for the payment, to the said A. J. S. Copp, of the sum of $5,000, for securing improved wharf accommodation at the port of Digby; and subsequently to wit on the 29th November, 1902, an agreement and contract was entered into under said resolution, and the sum of $500, a portion of said $5,000, was paid to the said A. J. S. Copp thereunder, on account of expenses; and it is deemed desirable that the said resolution should be rescinded, and the agreement cancelled and annulled:

Therefore resolved, that the said resolution be, and, the same is, hereby, rescinded and revoked, and that the said agreement entered into thereunder be forthwith cancelled and annulled, and the said sum of $500 refunded to the town. Councillor Syda seconded the motion.

Now, Sir, there is a statement in the newspaper published in the town of Digby in the province from which the Finance Minister comes. The Finance Minister was premier of that province for years, and no doubt the province feels honoured in having him as a representative to-day, but when the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) appealed to him for his opinion of such a transaction as this, the Finance Minister had nothing to say as to the morality of this queer transaction, and he sat silent in his seat. Now, there is a contract referred to in the newspaper report, and I have been fortunate enough to find a copy of that contract, which I shall read to the House. It is as follows:—

This indenture made this 29th day of November A.D. 1902, between the town of Digby, a body incorporated of the one part, and Albert J. S. Copp, of Digby, in the county of Digby, barrister at law, of the other part.

Whereas, at a public meeting of the ratepayers of the said town of Digby held at the said town of Digby on the 24th day of November A.D., 1902, the said ratepayers of the said town of Digby, authorized the town council of the said town of Digby to expend a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars for the purpose of securing improved wharf accommodation at the port of Digby.

And whereas, it is necessary that the government wharf at the said port of Digby be widened to enable another railway track to be laid down thereon, and that an extension be built to the said, to a length of two hundred and fifty feet, and that the harbour at the ends and sides of the said wharf so extended be dredged to a depth of at least twenty-five feet to enable large ocean steamers to lie at the said wharf.

Now this indenture witnesseth, that the said Albert J. S. Copp in consideration of the payment to him hereinafter mentioned, hereby agrees with the said town of Digby to undertake to secure—

(a.) The widening of the government wharf at the said port of Digby to such a width that a second railway track may be laid down thereon.

(b.) The erection of an ell, or extension of the said wharf at the outer side thereof, of at least two hundred and fifty feet in length.

(c.) The dredging of the harbour of the said port of Digby at the sides and end of the said wharf to a depth of at least twenty-five feet, and also to agree to pay and discharge all costs and expenses that may be incurred by the said Albert J. S. Copp in securing or endeavouring to secure the said improved wharf accommodations.

(d.) In consideration of the above undertaking the said town of Digby hereby promises and agrees with the said Albert J. S. Copp to pay him, the said Albert J. S. Copp, the sum of five hundred dollars on the execution and delivery of this agreement, and the further sum of four thousand five hundred dollars when the said wharf shall be widened and a second railway track laid down thereon ; the said extension of the said wharf of at least two hundred and fifty feet built and the harbour about the ends and sides of the said wharf dredged to a depth of at least twenty-five feet, so that ocean steamers may be able to come to and lie at the side of the said wharf.

In witness whereof the Mayor and Town Clerk of the said town of Digby have hereunto their hands and the corporate seal of the said town of Digby susbscribed and set and the said Albert J. S. Copp has hereunto his hand and seal subscribed and set the day and year first above mentioned.

Signed Sealed and Delivered in the presence of (Sgd.) W. W. Hayden.
Seal of the Town of Digby.
(L. S.)

(Sgd.) Orbin Sproule,
Mayor.
(Sgd.) C. Jamieson (L.S.)
Town Clerk.
(Sgd.) Albert J. S. Copp.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the contract referred to in the resolution of the town council of Digby. Now, we want the government to tell the people of Canada what they are going to do in regard to such matters when their attention is drawn to them. Do they want the people of this country to understand that in order to get public works constructed in a town, it is a legitimate and proper thing to pay some member of parliament for his influence ? I wish the Minister of Justice were in the House at this moment, because this is a matter that he ought to take notice of. The Prime Minister may not have known about it until it was brought forward yesterday by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). I do not know whether the Prime Minister was here at the time or not, but I know that the Minister of Justice was here, and I am sorry he is not here now, because in him is reposed especially the guardianship of the honour of this country in such matters. I have no doubt that the Prime Minister will communicate this matter to him, for, notwithstanding the silence that has prevailed on the part of the government since the hon. member for East Simcoe brought it to the attention of the House, I must believe that the government will take some notice of it. If they do not the people of this country will be justified in drawing the inference that the government, knowing that these things are going on, expect them to go on, and do not think there is any harm in them. Where will this country be if instead of devoting the public money to the needs of the country and the requirements of different localities, it is to be used in such a way as to enable everybody to earn $5,000 by getting a wharf at a certain place ? $5,000 would build quite a pier at some one of the ports in the province of Ontario where we cannot get any now. For instance, it would so improve Jordan harbour in my county as to assist the fruit-growers very materially in shipping their fruit across the lake. If the government do not take hold of these matters the people will understand that the government intend the public money to be expended, not on its merits, but according to the pull which some one may have to get it, and that the man who has the pull, whoever he may be, is justified in charging a price for this assistance. The people of Canada, I believe, are superior in political morals to the people of the Republic to the south of us. I am not so antagonistic to the United States as to be unwilling to imitate them in anything that is good ; but we do not want to borrow their bad habits. In this parliament of Canada, although we are not a church or a Sunday school, we have a right to guard the political morals of this country and to give the people to understand that we do not think these doings are right. If the government think they are right, let it be so understood, so that the people at the next elections may mark their ballots accordingly. I do not know any of the members of the town council of Digby, but they are Canadians and I presume they are sensible men ; and they coolly alot-ted $5,000 of the taxes of the people of that little town, because they thought that was necessary in order to get a wharf built at that place at the expense of the people of Canada, and $5,000 to the people of Digby is perhaps more than $5,000,000 to the people of Canada. I have no doubt that one of the main qualifications of these men for election to the town council was that they would carefully conserve and take care of the finances of the little town: and when they coolly take $5,000 for the purpose of paying a member of parliament a fee to secure that wharf, they do it because, in their opinion, at any rate, if they did not pay that money, they could not expect to get justice in regard to the expenditure of public money. I will not detain the House any longer on this matter. I have spoken for the purpose of drawing the attention of the government to it, because, whenever the campaign comes on, if the government fails to take up the matter and deal with it, I will call the attention of the people to it wherever I may address them. I appeal to the government to take out of our hands that trouble and out of our mouths that argument against them, because we have enough to urge against the present government without making a political issue of a transaction of this kind.

MILITIA ACT, 1904.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 5) respecting the Militia of Canada. He said: I presume the House will expect me to make a few short explanations as to the provisions of this Bill. Let me say, in the first place, that the existing militia law is practically the same law which has been on the statute-book since confederation, and indeed it was on the statute-book of old Canada long before that date. Times have changed since the existing law was enacted; Canada has grown and the militia force has grown, and it has been found impossible to carry on our militia system advantageously under the existing law. Instead of amending the present Act, I thought it better to bring in an entirely new Bill, which provides for the repeal of the existing law, but which, of course, includes and retains many of its provisions. This measure, which I now introduce, deals with the maintenance of civil power within the country and the defences of the country against invasion, and in consequence it is a measure of very great importance. I hope, and I am led to think, that the militia authorities of my department have not lost sight of this fact in framing the Bill. I may say that we have examined, not only the imperial laws and the laws of other colonies of the empire, but the laws of other countries as well, and we have endeavoured to incorporate in this Bill the best there is in them all.

It will be found that in the Bill which I now introduce there have been changes made in certain of the provisions of the existing law; there have been important additions to it, and there have been important omissions from it. Among the more important omissions from the present law is, in the first place, the disappearance of any reference to the naval militia. This is due to the fact that a Bill will be introduced by the Minister of Marine (Hon. Mr. Prefontaine) which will meet all the requirements in this regard. I may say that this is done at the suggestion and under the advice of the Colonial Defence Committee and of the Admiralty.

The next important omission from the present law is that restriction which prevents the appointment of a Canadian officer as commanding officer of our militia. The existing Militia Act provides that no one but an imperial officer, and no one below the rank of colonel in the British army, shall be appointed general officer commanding the militia of Canada. The new Bill omits this restriction and leaves it open to a Canadian or to any qualified person within the British empire to be appointed by the government as commanding officer of the Canadian militia. The next important omission—military men will consider it important, although in a sense it is perhaps a matter of minor importance—the next omission from the Bill is the provision in the present law by which an officer of the British army of the same rank as a Canadian officer, but of junior date of appointment, takes precedence of the Canadian officer in the militia of Canada. This provision is not included in the present Bill, so that in future imperial officers who come here to serve in Canada will rank with officers of the Canadian militia according to the date of their appointment.

The next important provision which is not included in the present Bill, but which exists in the law as it now stands, is with reference to the powers of the imperial officer commanding the imperial troops at Halifax. Under the law as it now stands, in case of war, the imperial officer commanding the imperial troops at Halifax, no matter how junior he might be, would immediately take command of the whole militia of Canada over the head of the general officer commanding the militia of this country. That provision has been eliminated from the present Bill, and no allusion whatever is made to the general officer commanding at Halifax. If he is a man of senior rank, he would in time of war, by virtue of his seniority, take his position as head of the forces in this country.

One other omission is made. There is no reference in the Bill I am now proposing to the King's regulations. Under the law as it now exists the King's regulations are made a part of the law of Canada. This has been found to be troublesome and cumbrous, and to add to the difficulties of the administration of the militia. Therefore, we shall rely in future upon the regulations made in Canada for the administration of the militia of Canada, except that the Army Act will apply. It was at first thought that we might re-enact the Army Act in this country; but it is a very long document and is being changed from time to time; and, after taking the best advice I could get in this country, it was thought wiser to adopt the British Army Act rather than to attempted to re-enact a similar Act here at present.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES. In so far as it is not inconsistent with your law.

Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN. Quite so. Now, I will mention some alterations which have been made in different provisions of the law. First, it is proposed to increase the permanent force of the militia to 2,000. The present law provides for 1,000. In the near future the population of this country will be double the population of the country at the time the present provision was made. The Northwest and British Columbia have since that time become parts of the Dominion. Important settlements are taking place in the Northwest, and gradually as the country becomes settled the Northwest Mounted Police will proceed to other spheres of usefulness and the militia of the country will have to take the responsibility of maintaining order there, and depots will be required. In fact, at the last session of parliament, I explained that we were taking a sum of money to pay for an addition of 500 men to the permanent force. So that I think this increase of 1,000 will be considered to be entirely within the present demands of the country.

Another change which I propose refers to the pay of the permanent force. At present it stands at forty cents a day, with certain good-conduct pay. It is proposed to adopt the rate of pay of the Northwest Mounted Police as that of the permanent force of this country. I need not stop here to argue the point, because this can be better done on the second reading; but I may say that the permanent force is the teaching force of this country, the one upon which we must largely depend for the training of the active militia, and therefore it is exceedingly desirable that it should be composed of first-class men. The pay is to begin at fifty cents a day, and increase at the rate of five cents each year until it reaches seventy-five cents as the maximum.

The next change is in the rate of pay of the active militia. That matter has been discussed here on many occasions. I am happy to be able to say that this Bill provides that while the pay shall begin as it does now at fifty cents a day, there shall be a provision by regulation, which shall be laid on the table of the House, allowing for an increase year by year until at the end of three years $1 a day may be paid to men who have shown by their good conduct and their proficiency in rifle shooting that they have earned it.

Another change which has been made is in the provision for giving aid to the civil power in time of riot. It is proposed to amend the law as it now stands by providing that the active militia shall only be used in the suppression of riots or in aid of the civil power when the permanent force is not available, or not in sufficient number to be utilized.

One other alteration proposes to extend the period for annual drill from sixteen days to thirty days. It is not compulsory, but it will be possible, if occasion requires, to make that extension of time. The present law provides for sixteen days, but it has been the custom to make the period twelve days. It is not probable that that will be exceeded, but it was thought desirable that power should be given to the government if at any time it might be necessary for the drill to be extended in certain cases to thirty days.

I now come to the additions to the law proposed in this Bill. I shall at first call attention to the provisions in reference to cadets. We have had many discussions in this House on this matter, and it was promised that when the new Bill was proposed, provision would be made for the enrolment of cadets. I cannot do better than read the clauses :—

73. The minister may (a) authorize boys over 12 years of age who are attending school to be formed into school cadet corps; (b) authorize boys over 14 years of age and under 18 years of age to be formed into senior cadet corps; (c) authorize senior cadet corps or any portion thereof to be attached to any portion of the active militia for the purpose of drill and training.

74. All cadet corps shall be subject to the authority and under the orders of the district officer commanding.

75. Cadet corps shall be drilled and trained as prescribed, and may be furnished with arms, ammunition and equipment under the conditions prescribed.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the minister mean the cadet corps connected with high schools?

Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN. Yes, and with any school.

Mr. CLARKE. Is provision made for instruction in rifle shooting?

Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN. Yes, under regulations, of course. There is a provision in the Bill for the appointment of officers to rank as brigadier-generals temporarily. This will be found necessary under the proposed increase of the numerical militia at times of camp. There is a further provision that the rank of senior major-general may be conferred upon colonials on retirement, who have held the highest executive appointments on the headquarters staff, for distinguished service in the country. These are the important provisions of the Bill. When the second reading is reached, I shall have an opportunity of going more into detail.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (North Victoria). It is not my intention to discuss the Bill on its first reading, but I must compliment the hon. minister on a number of the changes he has made, especially the change in relation to the cadet corps. That is a matter which has excited interest all over the country for a number of years, and I am pleased to see the hon. minister place the very desirable provision regarding these corps, which he has done in the proposed new law. The provision enabling the general officer commanding in Canada to be chosen from the Canadian militia, while it may appeal to the pride of our people, I must say I do not regard as a great majority of the Canadian public do. Weak as some of the general officers commanding may have been, unfit as some of them undoubtedly were, nevertheless I feel that, taking them all in all, they have done possibly much more good than would have been done if we had selected our commanding officers from the ranks of our militia. There is nothing to prevent an officer of the Canadian militia, qualifying himself for the position by becoming an officer in the imperial army; and I am satisfied that if, for instance, Sir Percy Girouard, should be sent out by the imperial government to Canada as general officer in command, there is not a Canadian in any province who would not welcome his advent. Feeling as I do the desirability of maintaining in every sense our imperial connection to the fullest extent, I do not like to see even this little link snapped asunder. I know that the law still allows the general officer commanding to be taken from the British army, and I trust that for many years to come he will continue to be taken from that army. But I regret that even theoretically, if not in practice, that little connecting link should be removed. I certainly trust that this new provision will be honoured in its breach rather than in its observance.

There is one very proper provision the hon. minister has made. A British officer of any rank on coming to Canada has always taken precedence of a Canadian officer of similar rank. There is no reason why a British major for instance, coming to Canada, should take precedence of a Canadian major, although the former may have been major only a couple of years and the latter be his senior. Let me point out that under the regulations in the Army Act of the imperial service, an officer in the militia of any of the colonies or even an officer in the English militia, if I am not mistaken—but at all events an officer in the colonial militia, should he be placed side by side with an officer in the imperial troops, has to take juniority of rank. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should not only have the change he proposes made in our Canadian law, but go a step further, and as he is a member of the Imperial Defence Committee—and I must congratulate him upon his appointment to that distinguished position—take such steps as will have this anomaly removed from the English law as well as ours. I shall not discuss the question of the position of the general officer commanding in Canada and that of the general officer commanding at Halifax, but it does seem a little anomalous that the general officer commanding in Canada should take a junior position as compared with the general officer commanding at Halifax, although the former may be the senior.

I must compliment the hon. minister on his proposal to increase the pay of the force all around. I am satisfied that this proposal will meet the approval of the people. But a most important question is the calling out of the troops in aid of the civil power. I would have been pleased to find the hon. minister proposing that our militia should never be called out in aid of the civil power. For years I have fought against their being turned out to do police guard in the municipalities and to put down riots, which very often are incited by aldermen and others seeking to gain votes. Young men, clerks in offices and stores, are compelled to leave their employment and do police work along the streets and around the warehouses of our towns, and have to endure the insults of every ruffian and blackguard who chooses to abuse them. While the parliament of Canada has authority to enact that certain magistrates should have the right to call out the militia, I very much question whether this parliament has the authority to provide that Montreal or Toronto shall pay for these soldiers when they are called out. I fail to see the connecting link between the parliament of Canada and the municipalities, and unless the provincial authorities choose to enact that these municipalities shall be responsible for the pay of the troops when called out, I have no hesitation in saying that the municipalities would be absolutely justified in refusing to pay a single dollar. I should like to see the hon. minister remove this anomaly from the law. We will search the English militia law in vain for any provision authorizing any man, from the King of England down, to call upon the English militiaman, as such, to suppress a riot. Our municipalities have sufficient authority for the suppression of riots without giving them the right to call out the militia. Any policeman on the streets of Montreal or the streets of Toronto can step up to any citizen, mayor, alderman or any other, and call upon them to act as special constable. If that is done, the municipality is responsible for it. With such a power, there should be no difficulty about maintaining law and order within the bounds of any municipality. We object, as militiamen, to be called out for police duty, especially when we are not given the powers of policemen. We dare not act as constables, nor dare we take any efficient action as soldiers, unless the disturbance takes the form of an absolute riot. I trust that the Minister of Militia will be good enough to allow us a few days for the consideration of this Bill before it is brought up for a second reading; and, I would like the hon. minister during that time to give serious consideration to the aspect of the case I have just referred to. And I hope he will remove entirely the cause which allows the militia force to be called out in support of the civil power unless the riot takes the form of an insurrection. Why should the militiamen be called upon to do police duty, standing around docks and warehouse doors, to be spat upon, as we have seen them spat upon again and again ? They have to stand there absolutely passive. Special constables would have the right to arrest those who assaulted them. But, as militiamen we dare not arrest a rioter unless ordered to do so. I would like the minister to take this point into his serious consideration, and, if he is going to insist on the law remaining as it is, I would like to have another point fairly considered. The electors of the county that I have the honour to represent contribute to the permanent force as well as do those of the cities and towns ; but we do not have any riots in our municipal districts, for these disturbances are confined to the cities. I can tell the Minister of Militia, as well as the First Minister, that the people of this country object to paying for a police force to be sent about to these various large centres to quell disturbances, unless those disturbances amount to an absolute insurrection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They don't.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Under the law they have to, though.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am only taking the word of the Minister of Militia for it. He says the Bill provides that the militia shall not be called out so long as the permanent force is sufficient to put down the disturbance. The permanent force, as I understand it, are to be called out first, and, if they are not sufficient to quell the riot, the ordinary militia will be called out. I object to contributing a dollar to such a service ; I object——

Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN. The municipalities will still pay the expense. The provision is precisely the same, as to the volunteer force, as it was before.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where will the money go ?

Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN. The government will pay the militiamen and charge it to the municipalities.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no provision for that. You have no authority, I believe, to collect the money.

Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN. That is another matter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I object, anyway, to the ordinary militia being called out to quell a riot. And I want it made clear that the expense in such matters is not to be borne by the people of Canada at large. The people of the riding I represent object to bearing such an expense, and I am satisfied that ninety-nine out of a hundred of the ridings in Canada will object to paying a dollar and to the militia being sent hither and thither at the beck and nod of magistrates who get a scare owing to some disturbance among their people. However, we shall have an opportunity to take this matter up. I congratulate the minister on many of the provisions of this Bill. I trust he will give us a few days so that the officers throughout the country will have an opportunity to consider the measure before it is brought up for a second reading.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COAL-MEASURES OWNED BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON asked :

1. What is the extent of the area of the coal-measures owned by the government of the Dominion of Canada ?
2. Where are the above-mentioned coal-measures located ?
3. Is it known whether coal exists near the route of the proposed line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway ?
4. If so, will all the coal be reserved by the government in the interests of the people ? If not, what proportion ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). I can only give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jabel Robinson) a general answer to his question. I have had a short memorandum prepared by the Director of the Geological Survey, which I will read :

The area of coal-bearing rocks within the Dominion of Canada is very great, perhaps as great as that of any other country in the world. The largest portion of this area is in the Northwest Territories and British Columbia. In these regions, it has not been possible as yet to define the boundaries of the different coal districts with precision. This has been due to their vast extent, the small number of geologists who have been employed upon the work and the comparatively short length of time that these regions have been under the control of the government of Canada.

The coals occur principally in the cretaceous and tertiary rocks, which extend from southern Manitoba westward to the Rocky Mountains and northerly through the region along the east side of these mountains from the International boundary to the Arctic sea.

Long geological basins, containing seams of coal, also occur within the Rocky Mountains themselves and among the other mountain ranges westward to the Pacific coast.

Important coal-fields exist on the inner or northeastern side of Vancouver island and extensive collieries have been worked for many years in the Comox field in this part of the island.

Numerous large coal seams occur in the Crow's Nest coal-field and in the Green Hills coal-field in the southwestern part of British Columbia; also in the vicinity of Blairmore and Frank in Alberta. New coal mines are being opened near the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway near Canmore and Anthracite. Coal is also found in the Nicola valley in British Columbia.

In the Yukon Territory, a good quality of coal exists and is beginning to be mined in the northern part of the Klondike district. The lignite beds in the basin of Moose river belong to the province of Ontario, while the valuable coal basins of Cape Breton and the counties of Cumberland and Pictou are controlled by the government of Nova Scotia. A small quantity of coal is found in New Brunswick.

Fine seams of coal have been discovered on several of our large islands north of the mainland of the Dominion and it is believed that great quantities of coal exist there.

Coal is known to exist in the vicinity of Edmonton and along the North Saskatchewan river above that town, also on the Pacific slope eastward from Port Simpson, near the proposed route of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked :

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior) :

1. The commissioners have reported upon all the work so far undertaken.

2. The subject of further sittings is one which will require further consideration.

One of these, for £500,000, was placed on October 1st, 1903, at a time when the state of the market was one of exceptional stringency This loan was for six months, and the rate of interest was fixed at 4½ per cent. The second issue is for £800,000, and was placed January 1st, 1904, for four months. The rate of interest was 3⅝ per cent. These loans were placed through the government's financial agents in London, the Bank of Montreal.

FLAG ON PARLIAMENT BUILDING.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to have an explanation from the government in regard to a small incident to which some newspapers and people have attached some importance. I noticed on the day of the opening of parliament as well as to-day, which is St. Patrick's day, that the Canadian flag which used to be put up on the tower of the parliament building has been replaced by a Union Jack. I would like to know why the old flag that has been used in Canada ever since confederation should be laid aside.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry to say that I cannot satisfy to-day the rather fastidious curiosity of my hon. friend, but I will make inquiry and try to give him an explanation upon another day.

Mr. BOURASSA. Perhaps the British Empire League has something to do with it.

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). I may explain to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) that the flag hitherto flown on the parliament building has been what is known as the Canadian Merchant Marine flag. It is not the national flag in any other sense. The national flag, as we understand it for this purpose, is the Union Jack. Many complaints have reached the department on previous occasions that the flag floating over the parliament buildings was not the authorized flag for that purpose, and when we were buying a new flag the one which was bought, in accordance with the custom of Canada and of all portions of the empire throughout the world, was the one authorized for the purpose.

Mr. BOURASSA. I know that the red ensign is the merchant marine flag but I know it has always been used in this country——

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not at all.

Mr. BOURASSA—as being the special colonial flag to which we have added the escutcheon of confederation. It has always been used on the building.

POSTMASTER AT WILTON, ONT.

Mr. WILSON moved for :

Copies of all correspondence, petitions and other documents in possession of the government, together with the report of the post office inspector, with reference to the charges against and the dismissal of L. L. Gallagher, postmaster at Wilton, in the riding of Lennox, in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Sir WM. MULOCK (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to the motion going through except that I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) to strike out the words 'together with the report of the post office inspector.' These reports have always been regarded as confidential. I do not know of anything in this particular report, that is confidential, but as a 'matter of precedent, I think it would be well to follow the old practice which has always obtained under this as well as former administrations.

Mr. WILSON. I understand it is not customary to make public these reports and so, with the consent of the House, I will agree to strike out the words 'together with the report of the Post Office Inspector.'

Motion as amended, agreed to.

YUKON TERRITORY—TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Taylor—moved for :

VENTILATION OF RAILWAY CARS.

Mr. E. D. SMITH (Wentworth) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence and agreements to date, between the government of Canada and any railway companies, in regard to ventilation of railway cars.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). I cannot find any record in the department of any correspondence between the department with respect to the ventilation of cars. It would, therefore, be futile to have the motion pass.

Motion dropped.

MR. P. V. SAVARD.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Taylor—moved for :

Copies of all Orders in Council, Ministerial Orders, or other documents appointing Mr. P. V. Savard, advocate, formerly a member of this House, to a position under the government, during the course of the years 1902, 1903 or 1904 ; of all correspondence relating to such appointment ; and of all detailed accounts, memoranda, etc., for salary and fees as well as for travelling expenses and all other expenses presented by the said P. V. Savard ; and statements showing how much has been claimed by the said P. V. Savard, for such salary and expenses, and how much has been paid to him.

Hon. CHARLES HYMAN. I wish to say that Mr. Savard was not appointed by Order in Council, but by a letter from the minister, dated 14th of May, 1903, and his last report was made on the 23rd October, 1903. There is no objection to the motion.

Motion agreed to.

FLOODS IN ST. JOHN, IBERVILLE AND MISSISQUOI COUNTIES.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation). Asked :

For copies of all correspondence, petitions, claims, and other documents, in the possession of the government, relating to the damages sustained by the farmers of the counties of St. John and Iberville and Missisquoi, by the floods in the Richelieu river.

Mr. Speaker, in submitting this motion, I wish to make a few remarks. The question is one of interest to the people of the three counties of St. John, Iberville and Missisquoi. It is a well known fact that the banks of the Richelieu river, as far down as St. John's, are low. Every year there are freshets covering wide areas on both sides. These floods extend beyond the limits of St. John and Iberville, reaching into the county of Missisquoi, and it may be assumed with certainty that 25,000 acres of land, to say the least, are under water every year.

These lands are considered as being among the most fertile in the province of Quebec and they remain submerged for such a length of time, that crops cannot be grown on them. In the parish of St. George d'Henryville, for instance, a whole range had to be deserted. The fact of these lands remaining under water so late in the season is due, in the first place, to the action of the government, who, in building the canal from Chambly to St. John's, took possession of the old river-bed of the Richelieu, opposite the island of St. Theresa. The river at that point is thirty feet deep, while on the east side of the island it forms a rapid. The government had selected that location in order to save the expense of building the canal for a length of three miles. The result was that the waters flowing off more slowly, remain too long a time on the land to permit of its being cultivated. Formerly, the floods, far from interfering with farming operations, were a help, insomuch as they increased the fertility of the soil.

I must say that the government, since I have the honour of representing the county of St. John and Iberville, have caused surveys of the locality to be made. Reports have been forwarded. Unfortunately, the suggested works have not been carried out, and the farmers claim, and rightly so, that matters should be set right or some compensation granted to them.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). There are no such documents on record in the department.

Motion dropped.

Mr. BARKER—by Mr. Taylor—moved for :

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The government have no persons employed on the eastern division of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and, of course, the other information is not in the possession of the department.

Motion dropped.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—THE MEMBER FOR DIGBY.

Mr. A. J. S. COPP (Digby). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I rise to a question of privilege. Certain statements reflecting upon my conduct as a member of parliament were made in one of the journals of the Dominion some time ago. The circumstances in connection with the matter referred to were so thoroughly understood in my own constituency that I did not deem it at all necessary to make any reference to them in this House. Nor would I have ever considered it to be necessary had the matter not been brought up, in the course of debate, by two hon. gentlemen. During the present session the hon. member for East Simcoe, from his place in the House, on the 15th day of March, in the course of the debate in reply to the address, made the following statement :

> Take the case of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) as heralded in the public press. Has he been reprobated by this government ? I have read of the case in the public press and I have read the minutes of the town council. This government was to build a dock in the town of Digby, and the hon. member for Digby goes to the town council, and makes an open bargain that he will use his position as a member of parliament to get a large grant for the construction of a dock in that town ; and, if my memory serves me rightly, he was paid $500 on account, and was to be paid $2,000 more on the completion of the dock. Surely it is the duty of the government to take notice of these matters. Surely this case has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance, who comes from that province. . . . . Surely he is aware of it ; and when I make the statement that public morality in this country has sunk to a lower depth than ever known, I make a statement well within the mark.

On the 16th of March, during the same debate, the hon. member for Lincoln supported the charge made against me by the hon. member for East Simcoe, and proceeded to read from the 'Weekly Courier' of January 8th, 1904, published in the town of Digby, N.S., what he alleged was an account of a meeting of the town council of Digby. He also read a copy of a contract between the town of Digby and myself, dated the 29th day of November, 1902.

I purpose giving a statement of the facts in connection with the transaction referred to, and I think I will be able to convince the House that neither of these hon. gentlemen had the slightest warrant for placing upon the facts and documents which they have presented to the House, the construction which they have endeavoured to make them bear.

For some years previously to the date of the said contract the residents of the town of Digby were most anxious to secure increased wharf and dock facilities in that town, in order to accommodate the industries near the town and to promote its material interests. Owing to the large amounts of money the expenditure of which, in the town of Digby, I had urged upon the government during the several years preceding the execution of said contract, I was not in a position to ask the government to undertake further expenditures to any very considerable amount within the town at that time; and I therefore deemed it more desirable to enlist the support of private individuals and companies interested in the matter. The Sissiboo Pulp Milling Company at this time were operating a very large business at Weymouth, which is about eighteen miles distant from Digby upon the Dominion Atlantic Railway, and were seriously complaining of the disadvantages they were labouring under in the shipment of their products. They were for this reason most anxious to secure increased shipping facilities at Digby. The matter was discussed most earnestly throughout the town and by the officials of the said Sissiboo Pulp Company, as well as by other shippers, and a consensus of opinion was developed to the effect that it would be desirable to build an additional strip along the north side of the government pier, with an 'L' running northward from the end of the pier, and to have the dock thus formed dredged. This would permit of an additional track, and so provide the extra shipping facilities required. Part of the discussion among the citizens of the town was directed to the question as to what amount the town of Digby would be willing to pay so as to secure the construction of said improved wharf accommodation, in consequence of which a public meeting of the ratepayers of the town was called by the then mayor, at which the question was fully discussed, and the resolution cited in the contract was unanimously adopted. The whole project embodied in the said contract was placed before the said public meeting in all its details; and among those present, along with many others of my political opponents, was the gentleman who had opposed me at both my elections in the county. No dissent from the project to be embodied in the said contract was expressed by any of the persons at the said meeting, which was large and enthusiastic. I was present at the said meeting, took part in the discussion and gave my advice as to the best course to pursue. Many schemes were proposed. and it was conceded that it would be necessary for the town to aid in the undertaking, and furthermore that it would be necessary to enlist the interest and support of the companies and shippers. I had the assurance, previously to the calling of the meeting, that a large amount of extra business could be secured for the extended wharf if suitable facilities could be afforded. Previously to said meeting I had written the following letter to the town council:

Digby, November 12th, 1902.

To the Town Council of Digby:

Gentlemen,—I understand that you are about to call a public meeting of the ratepayers of the town to take into consideration the question of having proper wharf accommodation provided and the bringing to the port of Digby steamers to carry freight across the Atlantic. I have the following proposition to make in connection with these matters, which I would ask you to submit to the said meeting:—

I will undertake to provide the necessary wharf accommodation and to bring steamers to Digby, provided the town council will enter into an agreement to pay five hundred dollars cash when the said agreement is signed and executed, four thousand five hundred dollars when the necessary wharf accommodation is provided and ten thousand dollars when the first steamer is tied up to the wharf at Digby for the purpose of carrying freight across the Atlantic.

I remain, yours sincerely,

(Signed) A. J. S. COPP.

In making this proposal my intention was to interest capitalists in undertaking the work and if the proposal should be accepted, I contemplated handing over the contract to any one person or persons who would carry it to a successful conclusion. It was my belief, and I so expressed it at the said meeting, that the enterprise in the hands of a company would be of greater benefit to the town than if the extension were made merely as a government work and managed by a department of the government. I was not anxious or even desirous of undertaking the matter myself and suggested to the meeting the names of several gentlemen whom I thought more competent than myself, particularly Mr. George Robertson, of St. John; but the meeting were of opinion that they would rather deal with me. The contract was accordingly entered into after the said meeting between the town of Digby and myself, which is the document read by the hon. member for Lincoln. In pursuance of the said contract I did a great deal of work and spent a great deal of time and money in the endeavour to float the scheme. I visited Montreal twice in connection with the matter, secured guarantees for freight and made up an estimate of figures showing the profit that would accrue to the company constructing and operating this work. I submitted the matter among others to Mr. R. Wilson Smith, of Montreal, the president of the Sissiboo Pulp Co., and received considerable encouragement from him. My proposition to him and to the others that I approached in the matter was that the town of Digby would pay over to the company constructing the work the remaining $4,500 mentioned in the agreement with me, and that I would secure the payment of the said sum from the town to the company or person completing the work. The $500 which I received were paid to me to cover any expense that I might be put to and the disbursements that I should make in the course of the negotiations and I was to receive no further compensation for my services. I have kept no precise accounts of the expenditure of the said $500, but I am confident that my expenses and disbursements in connection with the matter have greatly exceeded said sum.

It was perfectly understood that I was not to receive any portion of the remaining $4,500 for my personal benefit, but that it would be a payment by the town in aid of the construction of the work. I had no idea of going to the government for assistance in the undertaking nor did I ever apply to the government for aid in the prosecution of the work. My efforts were directed solely to the enlisting of capital from private individuals or companies, as it was perfectly well understood in the negotiations that they would be. The reference to the meeting of January 8th, published in the weekly 'Courier,' and a portion of which only the hon. member for Lincoln read, contains the following remarks :

The acting mayor said he would make a brief statement before putting the resolution. It was supposed he said, when the ratepayers voted for the expenditure of this money that they were sincere ; it now appears that some, at least, of them were insincere. It seems they have been willing to vilify their own conduct in the endeavour to make some political capital, and that they have anything but the welfare of the town and surrounding country at heart. But it is better the agreement should be cancelled, than that it should be misrepresented, and an entirely false construction put on it throughout the length and breadth of the land, merely to gratify the spite of the few insignificant would-be politicians.

I have made this plain statement of the facts for the information of the House, not merely for the purpose of justifying myself in the matter, but to remove the imputation which the remarks of the hon. member for East Simcoe and the hon. member for Lincoln were calculated to cast upon my constituents, the town council and the citizens of Digby, who unanimously endorsed the whole transaction. The said town council consisted of three Conservatives and three Liberals and was presided over by a Liberal mayor. The said meeting of the citizens of Digby, as already stated, was composed of Liberals and Conservatives in about equal numbers. The whole transaction was placed before these two bodies and if it were capable of bearing the construction placed upon it by the hon. members for East Simcoe and Lincoln, they would be as deeply involved in the impropriety as myself. No such construction was intended nor can such construction be given to it in view of the facts and circumstances, which I am prepared to prove in the usual way before the Privileges and Elections Committee if any hon. gentleman should desire to challenge my statement.

PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the government to a report—an official report, I believe—of the proceedings in the New Brunswick legislature on the 15th of March, according to which the Hon. Mr. Pugsley, the Attorney General of New Brunswick, is said to have made the following statement :

The Quebec resolutions had expressed the opinion that the Dominion government should bear the expense of administering the criminal law, and our government had deferred coming to a decision until the Dominion government had dealt with the subjects mentioned in the Quebec conference. He was glad to be able to say that he had brought from Ottawa a message from the leader of the government to the leader of the provincial government which had given them the strongest possible assurance that the resolutions of the Quebec conference in regard to additional subsidies for the provinces would be carried into effect.

Might I ask the right hon. gentleman whether or not this statement is correct, and whether he has any information to give us on the subject.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The premiers of the several provinces have applied to the government for a reconsideration of the terms, which reconsideration would involve a readjustment of the financial arrangements between the Dominion and the provinces. The matter has never been taken up officially yet by the government, but speaking for myself personally, I said to Mr. Pugsley that I was of opinion this matter should be taken up at an early date, without stating at all in what direction.

SUPPLY.

The Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the Auditor General's Report been brought down yet ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Not yet, but my hon. colleague, the Secretary of State, expects it will be ready on Monday.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is somewhat awkward to go on with the estimates to any extent without having the Auditor General's Report before us. That was recognized last year by my hon. friend in a similar condition of affairs.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I quite admit that it is quite proper for my hon. friend to urge that we should not proceed until we have the Auditor General's Report, but if he has no objection we might take up non-contentious items and begin with civil government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection to our going on with the items of civil government, but it must be well understood that, according to a well-known rule laid down in the past, this shall not be regarded as a precedent.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Inasmuch as the hon. gentleman who made that historical remark is now associated with my hon. friend, I think he is quite right in reminding us of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think that the hon. gentleman spoke for the government on that occasion.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Charges of management, $240,250.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING. (Minister of Finance). These are the usual and ordinary charges in connection with the management of the public debt. The items vary little from year to year. In this case, it will be found that there are a few small increases, and some decreases. There are several small items in the increase column which are needed for the offices of the assistant receivers general, chiefly for contingent expenses. For instance, express charges are increasing on account of the increased volume of circulation. Out of one of these items may be paid small increases in salaries of certain officers. There is a reduction in the item of commissions for payment of interest on public debt, purchase of sinking funds and transfer of stock, due to the fact that some portion of our funded debt will be paid off during this year, and consequently we shall have so much less on which to pay commissions. The only other item in which there is a change, is that of expenses in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, in which there is an increase of $3,300. We are each year increasing that item, and, in doing so, I believe we are conforming to the wishes of hon. members on both sides of the House. The object aimed at is to have cleaner Dominion notes in circulation. I think hon. members will agree that, within the last few years, there has been a decided improvement in this respect. There is room for improvement still. We are cancelling more old notes than in the past, and, though it costs us one or two thousand dollars more, I believe that it is an expenditure that hon. members on both sides will approve.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Finance does not object we will take this amount item by item.

Charges of management—office of the Assistant Receiver General—Toronto, $7,300.

Mr. CLARKE. There is an increase here of $200. Will the hon. minister say what it is for ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is for the general purposes of the office. We shall feel free to use some portion to increase one or two salaries, if we so desire, and I think part will be so applied.

Mr. CLARKE. To whom is it intended to give increases of salary ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I am taking the vote without specifying the names. There are one or two officials who have been there for a number of years and who have not had increases. I think that the increases will probably be given to these gentlemen. But it is not yet officially determined, and I would rather not mention the names. The amount in any case is small—only $200, and if it were all applied to the general purpose of the office it woud be but a moderate allowance for the purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a little irregular to mix up the general expenses of the office with salaries in this way. If we knew how much was to be given for one and how much for the other, it would be better.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The whole increase is only $200, so there is not much margin for one or the other. There are only one or two gentlemen to whom it is at all expected that increases will be given. They are officials who have been there for some years and who have had no increases. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will accept that explanation.

Mr. SPROULE. I am only objecting to the principle, and the principle is the same whether the amount is $200 or $20,000. This mixing of current expenses of the office and salaries is what I call attention to.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. If the amount were large I think the criticism would be sound.

Office of the Assistant Receiver General, Montreal, $5,800.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is an increase here of $150. Is any part of it to be used in increase of salaries ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. There are no increases of salaries covered by any of these items besides that of Toronto, these others are for small incidental expenses.

Commission for payment of interest on public debt, purchase of sinking funds and transfer of stock, $31,500.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think this is an opportune time—as I do not observe any other item under which it could be brought up so properly—to ask the Minister of Finance to give us some explanation with reference to an item which appears in the public accounts for 1903. At page 11, I find the following statement :—

While the net debt shows a decrease of $10,222,100.75 on the 30th June last, it is well to bear in mind that of this reduction the sum of $3,305,450.24 is represented by a decrease caused by a readjustment of the assets and liabilities in connection with the settlement of accounts outstanding since confederation between the Dominion and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

It is a matter of a good deal of interest to many hon. members to know just how this sum was arrived at. I confess that from the examination that I have been able to make of the public accounts of the Dominion as well as the accounts of the province of Ontario, I have not been able to reach any conclusion as to how this particular sum was arrived at. While it appears as a reduction of the public debt of the Dominion, it appears to me that it must still in some way stand as an increase of the liabilities of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. But, so far as I have been able to investigate the matter the whole seems to be enshrouded in considerable mystery. As financial matters are always of interest, I think it is well that the minister should give us some information as to how this settlement was brought about and what this particular item consists of. I do not apprehend for a moment that it forms any part of the old trust fund held by the Dominion of Canada from the time of confederation, such as the Upper Canada Building Fund, the Grammar School Fund or the Common School Fund. I do not see that any of these items are disposed of by this government in any way, in accordance with the terms of the award of 1893 they are still intact; and where this particular item comes from, where this balance arises, I am absolutely at a loss to determine, and I have not been able to glean from what has been said by the provincial treasurer how this matter was arranged. I trust that I am not asking too much of the minister—we have plenty of time—that he will be able to give us some explanation that will make the matter plainer to those on this side of the House who have no access to the papers in his department, and I am quite sure it will be interesting to know how this matter was arrived at.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The account to which my hon. friend refers is one of long standing and somewhat complicated, and I would hardly be justified in giving an answer off-hand. I would rather prepare a detailed statement showing the different items of the account, and how this change comes about, and I will be glad to bring that down at an early date. The essence of the whole matter is that in the accounts between the Dominion and the provinces, there were certain things assumed that had not been absolutely determined by the arbitrators, and when the ultimate determination was made, by which the provincial accounts had to be readjusted, there were some sums of money due on one side and on the other which differed from the amounts as they had been standing in the books for some years. It is a complicated statement, and I will be glad to bring down at an early day such statement as will show the exact operation of the account, and how this difference is brought about.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am obliged to the minister for the information he has given to the House. I had an impression, and I think it is borne out by what the minister says, that this balance was what might be called a paper balance, practically there was no money passed one way or the other. The Dominion is not richer, and the provinces, I trust, are no poorer, it was simply a matter of bookkeeping so far as I can learn. But I should not discuss the matter further. I am glad that the minister proposes to give us an explanation, and I know that there are other members on this side of the House who will be glad to hear it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Can the minister state whether any money was actually passed ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The only question is, as to the rate of interest to be paid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I notice that the question has arisen in the provincial government. The provincial government claimed 5 per cent against the Dominion government on the balances due. The Finance Minister says, no, I won't pay you 5 per cent, because I can borrow money for less. Is this a part of the transaction ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The question to which my hon. friend refers relates entirely to the interest and not to the principal sum. The transactions are connected, but the question which my hon. friend refers to, is entirely in relation to the interest, there is no dispute about the principal sum. There is a certain sum which is determined to be due the province of Ontario. The province desires that we should continue to pay 5 per cent, while we are legally advised that the item is not one of the class in which the Dominion is, under the constitution, obliged to pay 5 per cent. There were certain sums upon which originally 5 per cent was to be paid ; but we are legally advised that that item is not one which properly bears 5 per cent. It is like any ordinary debt, we can either pay it off, or we can let the item stand at a rate of interest to be agreed upon. We have urged that we should not be obliged to pay 5 per cent. The premier of Ontario claims that we are bound to pay 5 per cent, and it is quite likely that in one form or another there will have to be a judicial determination of that point. It does not affect the principal sum, it is entirely a question of the rate of interest to be paid.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the amount of the sum for which this interest was to be paid ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is upwards of two million dollars of trust funds.

Mr. SPROULE. Did that involve any reduction of the debt ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It relates to the reduction of the debt. On the question of the principal sum there is no dispute, it is now purely a question of the rate of interest to be paid.

Mr. SPROULE. If you have not determined the exact rate of interest that should be paid, then it cannot be anything that accounts for the reduction in the debt, it must be something else, and what is it?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. We have to determine the principal sums, and they affect the reduction of the public debt. The principal sums have been determined, but the rate of interest to be paid on these moneys is the point at present in dispute.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that the sum on which the Ontario government claims they have a right to pay only 4 per cent is that sum of $1,800,000 which was found by the arbitrators to be due to the Dominion of Canada by the province of Ontario as a part of the debt of the province, which we are told so frequently does not exist. I understand the province of Ontario is only expected to pay 4 per cent on that money. I understand also that the Prime Minister is setting up the pretension that he should not be called upon to pay more than 4 per cent on the old trust funds that have existed since confederation, namely the Common School Fund, the Grammar School Fund and the Building Fund, amounting to between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. I also understand that under the British North America Act and under the award which was made away back in 1873, the Dominion was bound for all time to pay 5 per cent on these moneys, and that was considered a portion of the revenues of the province of Ontario. I regret very much that any proposal has been made either by this government or by the Ontario government to pay over these moneys. I think it is well that the province of Ontario should not be allowed to receive that money and appropriate it for any other purpose than that for which it was originally designed. It was for the support of the public schools and asylums and other charitable institutions that the funds were created more than half a century ago. I think it is well these should remain intact. The province of Ontario will have a continuous revenue, independent of her other resources, and that will postpone the time when more direct taxation will be called for the purpose of providing revenues for that province. I hope the Dominion government will not press this matter, and that they will continue to pay the 5 per cent to the province of Ontario rather than see that fund absolutely destroyed. May I ask the minister whether, in this question that is being raised between the province and the Dominion, there is any proposal to pay off this $2,848,000, which is properly a capitalized subsidy that was granted in 1894, and which I do not think was ever intended as capital when it was originated? As far as I can judge, the Acts of parliament creating it never designed it as capital, but I am aware of the opinion of the Finance Minister that it is capital and also that the province of Ontario treats it as capital. If that subsidy is to be capitalized and the capital sum handed over to the provincial government of Ontario, then in the course of a few years Ontario will be stripped of a very large part of its annual revenue. The provincial government would not be able to invest the money elsewhere as profitably, and I fear that the money will find its way in a short time into some other investment; possibly $2,000,000 of it might be laid out at the Sault or in some other scheme which the province would have cause to regret in a few years. I think the money is much safer in the hands of the hon. gentlemen on that side of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Than in the hands of even the present government of the province of Ontario, and I would express the hope that the government will retain the money and give us the annual revenue that accrues from it and will not consent to treat the subsidy of $142,000 as anything but a subsidy, and will continue to pay it as a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I think that as regards the funds referred to in the latter part of my hon. friend's remarks there is no question as to whether or not the province could legally withdraw that amount, because while they receive 5 per cent interest on this money it would be very foolish on the part of the province to withdraw the principal, and I think that the province will be only too glad to let these funds stand bearing 5 per cent interest. The only portion in dispute is the other item, and although my hon. friend, with a loyalty to his province which we should admire, thinks we should go on paying 5 per cent, it is after all a question of what would be a legal and fair interpretation of the transaction and I think this should be decided by the proper authorities. There is no desire to drive a hard bargain with the province, but simply to get a fair and proper interpretation of the arrangement.

Mr. OSLER. Are steps being taken to submit the question, which has been in dispute for a great many years to some tribunal, in order to get it out of the way.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The differences in past years have been in regard to the principal sums involved. These differences have been disposed of and cleared up and while we are not making rapid progress, we are making good progress. We have reached a point when we can say that the principal sums have been determined. The only large question remaining now is in regard to Treaty No. 3, the Indian Lands Treaty. There is a question in dispute there which possibly could not have been legally dealt with by the arbitrators. There was doubt as to what should be paid in this case and we have mutually agreed to have the issue referred to the Exchequer Court. This other question of the payment of 4 per cent or 5 per cent interest on a certain sum is a matter of negotiation between the two governments at this moment. No steps have been taken to have a judicial determination of the matter but we agree that we should have in some form or another a determination of the question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does that refer to the item on page 11 of the Public Accounts:

Sundries, settlement of accounts between the Dominion and the province of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, $2,305,450.24.

—or is it included.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the item to which my hon. friend refers covers that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it put in there as a credit ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is a summary of various items and of course details must be given. In view of the discussion which has arisen and the question raised by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) I think it better that I should have a detailed statement prepared showing how these changes are brought about in the accounts, and at an early date I shall lay on the table a statement showing how these results are produced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me the item at page 11 would represent an indebtedness payable by the province to the Dominion instead of an indebtness payable by the Dominion to the province.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. There are items on both sides of the accounts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you include it on that side of the account it must represent in the end a balance owing by the provinces to the Dominion. It is there put in as a credit to the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. These are various sums which as a result of arbitration have been placed to the credit of the Dominion.

Mr. INGRAM. I am not quite clear as to the explanation given. I understand the Dominion government is anxious to reduce the interest payable to the Ontario government and afterwards the hon. gentleman says that instead of the $142,000 annual subsidy to Ontario, that the Ontario government can collect a capitalized account. The question then arises as to what is legal. This government is insisting on the Ontario government reducing their interest on the trust funds. Then I would say why not be consistent and ask them to reduce their interest on the capitalized amount, and if they fail to do that and it is a legal item why does this government not insist on paying the cash and thereby save the extra interest paid by the government in this $142,000 ? I do not think they can legally collect that capitalized account ; in the first place, that was given as an annual subsidy to the province of Ontario, but the Ontario government are taking advantage of that by capitalizing it and using it to figure out a mythical surplus, and I think the hon. gentleman is rather putting it in the mouths of the Ontario government to use that argument by the statement that he has made here to-day. As similar statements have been made in this House before I do not think this government is doing their duty unless they insist on a settlement of this upon a cash basis.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I did not say that the Ontario government could legally collect that amount. I said that that question would not be worth our while to debate, because as the money is earning five per cent it would be very foolish for the Ontario government to endeavour to remove it from our treasury even if they could. Whether they could do so or not is not a profitable subject of debate. As to the other part we have claimed that a certain portion of these moneys do not stand in the same position as subsidy moneys, and now that the amounts have been determined it is an ordinary question of account as between two parties. It has been found that as respects that class of account we owe Ontario so much and we say that as we owe Ontario that money we can do as any private person, pay the money and square the account, or arrange that Ontario shall leave the sum in the Dominion treasury at a rate of interest mutually to be agreed upon. We have proposed that at present, they leave the money there at four per cent. The Ontario government claim that we have no right to pay that money off but must pay them annual interest upon it at five per cent, whether we wish to do so or not. If we cannot effect a settlement by mutual agreement, I presume that we will have to submit a case for adjudication.

Mr. INGRAM. What about the other item ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Nobody is asking to withdraw it and therefore we are not called upon to say anything about it.

Mr. INGRAM. Would it not be in the interest of the Dominion that the capital amounts be paid, so that we would not have to continue to pay as high interest as 5 per cent ? Why does not the government do that ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Because the matter has only recently come up as an issue, and we have not determined what is the best method of settling it. We have presented our views to the Ontario government and they have objected ; we have referred our views to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice advises that we are not bound to pay 5 per cent. We have so informed the Ontario government, and I suppose the next step will be that we shall have a reference to the court, or to some counsel amicably agreed upon, or that we should agree upon some other arrangement with reference to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am surprised to hear that the Minister of Justice has ventured the opinion, that we are not bound to pay 5 per cent. I cannot understand upon what authority he can possibly base any such opinion. He may say that it is more than the ordinary rate of interest, but that cannot interfere with a contract made forty years ago and which is as binding to-day as it was at the time of confederation. The Upper Canada Grammar School Fund, the Building Fund, the Common School Fund; these were left in the hands of the Dominion at confederation on the distinct understanding that the Dominion should pay the province 5 per cent interest, and there was no time fixed when they could pay the capital sum over. There is no possibility of getting a release from that obligation unless this parliament and the Ontario legislature should pass joint legislation authorizing the respective governments to make such an arrangement. I do not see how, under any other circumstances, the Minister of Finance can insist on the province of Ontario accepting 4 per cent instead of 5 per cent. As to the balance of $1,815,848.59, that was found to be due by the province to the Dominion on the settlement of the various accounts by the arbitrators, there is nothing binding on either government as to what the rate of interest should be, and the Dominion government has the right to say to the province: You must pay us that capital sum to-morrow or we will insist on 5 per cent. It does seem strange, however, that the Dominion should only collect 4 per cent on the money due by the province, while at the same time they have to pay 5 per cent on the money they owe to the province; but one is under a solemn agreement made many years ago, and the other is under no agreement other than possibly some arrangement that may have been come to between the Minister of Finance and the provincial treasurer which I do not think has ever been crystallized into legislation. I again express the hope that the Minister of Finance will not press the payment of this money on the province of Ontario, even though the Dominion government, the wealthier of the two is obliged to pay 5 per cent. The province of Ontario wants the revenue, and as they would not be able to invest such a large sum of money at 5 per cent, there would be a shrinkage in their revenue. I repeat in all sincerity, that in all confidence that money will be better taken care of in the hands of the Dominion government as trust money, than if it were handed over to the province of Ontario, and possibly used for purposes that it was never designed for. I shall await with interest the statement the Finance Minister has promised us with reference to this sum of over $3,000,000, which we are told has been deducted from our national debt, because I confess that as far as I can understand, it is a mystery where it has come from, and whether it really existed as money at all or not. I think when we get the facts, we will find that it was simply a book-keeping balance that came down from our ancestors of fifty years ago, and that it practically had no material existence as money.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Under the Act of 1884 which gave an allowance to those provinces which were not indebted to the Dominion, the province of Ontario was entitled to an annual subsidy of $140,000 a year. The government of Ontario claims that interest capitalized as an asset of the province, and that they are able to get the money at any time. They make that claim upon a statement made by the Finance Minister. I denied that statement and I contend that it is an increased subsidy given to the province, and should be treated in the same manner as any other subsidy. I have contended that it is not an assessment that should appear in the assets of the province.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I cannot undertake to enter into any discussion as to how the accounts of the Ontario government are kept. I presume they will have to be responsible to the legislature for that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They rely on your authority for that statement.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. If my hon. friend will call attention to any statement in which I so alleged it, I think he will find that the reasons are given in the document which sustains the contention. There is an Act of the Dominion parliament passed in the 70's I think, which provides that sums of money at the credit of the various provincial governments may be withdrawn on certain conditions for the construction of public works. I know that capital sums which have stood to the credit of some of the provinces were withdrawn under that Act. My hon. friend from Halton is a layman the same as I am, and I am afraid that we will have to submit to the judgment of the lawyers as to whether there is a contract or not.

I am inclined to think that if one province could withdraw a portion of the money to the credit of its capital account under that Act and use it for public works, another province could in the same manner withdraw the sum of money which is to its credit; but, as I said before, that has never presented itself to my mind as a practical question, and I do not think any good purpose could be served by arguing it out now. The government of Nova Scotia many years ago withdrew money from its capital account under the authority of the Act to which I have referred; but in later years, when the conditions of the money market changed, it would have been a supreme act of folly for the province of Nova Scotia to have continued that policy. There is $1,000,000 in round figures to the credit of the province of Nova Scotia to-day in that fund, standing in precisely the same way as other moneys stand to the credit of other provinces, and under that Act I have no doubt the province could come here and obtain a portion or all of that money; but although it adopted that policy in former years, when interest was high and the credit of the province was not well established, it would be a foolish thing to do it to-day. I do not pretend to discuss the legality of the proceeding, but it would be such an exceedingly foolish thing for any province to withdraw money which is drawing 5 per cent at Ottawa that I do not think it a practical question.

Mr. INGRAM. For years the province of Ontario did not capitalize its subsidy, but simply had placed to its credit $142,000. But the brilliant idea struck those hon. gentlemen in the Ontario government of placing the $2,848,289 in their accounts as an asset. That was a subject of contention between the two political parties in Ontario, and to get round the difficulty, the Ontario government opened up correspondence with the hon. Finance Minister. It is true, the hon. gentleman stated in the correspondence what he has stated to-day; but I venture to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who knows all about the transaction, will not express the same opinion. If it is a legal and proper payment, this government are not doing their duty if they do not insist on paying less interest or else paying the money over. It would be just as consistent to capitalize the subsidy granted to the province in the first instance, or to capitalize the subsidies granted to other provinces, and place them among their assets, and thus enable them to claim surpluses. That is why we in the province of Ontario who are opposed to the government there, believe that their system of keeping accounts is incorrect and misleading, and we ask no better proof than the fact that that government have found it necessary to appoint a commission to find out whether they have a surplus or not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not at all understand this item of $3,305,450. I do not expect my hon. friend to make any further statement about it to-day; but if he is going to have a statement prepared, I think it should be as full as possible, because this seems to represent a liability from some province or provinces to this government. I would like to know what it really represents or what it means, and whether we are getting any interest on it?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. We are getting interest on these adjusted accounts, according as the items are charged on one side or the other.

Mr. OSLER. Looking at the statement of the public debt in the estimates, there appears to be a decrease of $34,500,000. I do not see any reason for that in the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. This, of course, my hon. friend will see is our estimate for the year beginning next July, and in the meantime we are contemplating paying off a portion of the debt. This is our estimate of how the readjusted debt will stand on the 1st of July.

Mr. OSLER. Do I understand the minister to say that he expects to make a cash payment of $34,500,000 out of the subsidies of the country between now and the 1st of July? I understand that some $25,000,000 will fall due within that time, but surely that will be renewed.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Some portion of it will be renewed and some portion will, in all probability, be transferred into a temporary loan, because in the present state of the money market it may not be deemed expedient to issue permanent debentures.

Mr. OSLER. It is rather a startling statement to go out, that the estimates show such a decrease.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The whole statement taken together is all right.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, of the $3,305,450 mentioned on page 11 of the Public Accounts as paid to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, how much has been paid to the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I am not quite sure that my hon. friend has quite correctly comprehended the meaning of that item; but I have stated that I intend to bring down a statement at an early day giving the details. This sum is not to the credit of the province of Quebec, but is payable to the Dominion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the item of $700,000 on page 6 represents interest on a portion of the public debt which is converted from a funded debt into an ordinary debt, should you not have something in the capital column to represent that?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. There will be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that the observation of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) is justified, that this hardly shows the actual condition of affairs. You are apparently reducing the liabilities of the country by a very large amount, but in reality you are not.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. This is only intended to show the amount of interest we will have to pay. The actual amount of the public debt, which we will owe on the 1st of July, it is now difficult to determine, and we can only state it approximately. In any statement of the public debt, the temporary loans must of necessity be included. Otherwise the statement would be misleading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When does the loan fall due to which my hon. friend refers ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. A large loan of about $20,000,000, falls due in May.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have arrangements been made to convert that into temporary loans ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The Deputy Minister of Finance is in London to arrange matters and the details are not yet public, but substantially what is proposed is that the duration of the loan shall be extended for three years, with the option during that time on the part of the shareholders of converting it into a new issue. I prefer not going into more details at present with regard to rates and so forth, as the transaction is not officially before the public, but the plan is to extend the duration of the loan for three years at rates to be agreed on, with the right to the shareholders to convert during that period the old loan into a new issue of stock at a rate to be fixed. The idea is that financial affairs will rereadjust themselves during that interval, and we will then be in a better position to issue permanent debentures than in the present state of the money market.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the present rate of interest of the loan now maturing.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The loan expiring is a four per cent loan.

Mr. OSLER. I think that the proposition of the hon. minister is the only possible way to be adopted just now, in the present state of the money market, but it seems to me rather risky to have left the renewal until within two or three months of the maturity of the loan. That large loan should have been provided for some time ago. It would be very risky for any ordinary corporation to leave such a large amount at the risk of the money market without arranging for its renewal.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I may say to my hon. friend that we have not been neglecting this matter, but that it has been engaging very carefully the attention of the department for quite a number of months past. I sent Mr. Courtney to London long before the loan matured in order to make preparatory arrangements, but my hon. friend is aware, that, bad as the money market is now, it was worse then. We have been keeping in close touch with the market and seeking the most available moment to have the transaction placed upon it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The first despatch seemed to indicate that the matter had progressed further than my hon. friend mentions to-day, but possibly the despatch may not have been accurate. I think it was stated that the government was obtaining a three years extension, with the option on the part of the debenture holders to convert their bonds now maturing into a permanent loan at four per cent, at 105.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The rate is three per cent. We are not getting 105 for a three per cent loan.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I meant was that the debenture holders were to get £105 for every £100 they now hold.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. They would get £105, or thereabouts of the new loan for £100 of the old loan, which would mean that the government would float the new loan at about 95. The despatch to which my hon. friend refers was published before the transaction was really concluded, although in the main it indicates the plan correctly.

Brokerage on purchase of sinking funds, $5,600.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is that ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is the customary charge of the banks over there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the actual transaction ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. When we purchase securities for a sinking fund, the custom of the market is to make the purchase through a broker and a small commission is paid—one-eighth of one per cent. As we will have less sinking funds to provide for, owing to some of the loans maturing, a smaller sum will be paid for commission.

Expenses in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, $13,300.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. minister explain the increase ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is due to the increased circulation and the desire of the House to have the old notes destroyed and new ones issued.

Mr. CLARKE. How many bills of one and two dollars did the department destroy last year ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. We have destroyed a great many, and I will have a statement prepared later.

Mr. CLARKE. What steps have been taken by the department to secure similar action on the part of the chartered banks ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The only thing is the force of a very good example. With the knowledge that we are giving cleaner Dominion notes, the banks will be induced to treat the public similarly. I think that the bank circulation has been improved.

Mr. CLARKE. Have the government taken any steps to bring this matter to the attention of the banks ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is a subject of frequent conversation between the officers of the department and bank managers whenever opportunity occurs. We have not taken any formal action.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not a matter over which the Canadian Bankers' Association has any jurisdiction ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Not specifically, but they can do a great deal. I hope that through their instrumentality something may be accomplished in that regard.

Mr. OSLER. I think that the banks are endeavouring to improve their circulation and that is badly required. I must say that the Dominion notes have improved in the last year or two, but they still fall very far short compared with those issued by the United States government. You cannot go to any hotel in the United States and get change without getting practically new one dollar bills. Our Dominion notes have improved very much, but they are far short of the condition of the bills issued all over the United States, and I think that the hon. minister would be quite justified in asking for a larger appropriation to make our one dollar bills, at all events, up to the standard of cleanliness that prevails in the United States to-day.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Has the hon. minister taken any steps to issue bills of a larger denomination ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. No definite action has been decided upon. We are contemplating a five-dollar bill, for which there is some demand. The four-dollar bill is regarded with a measure of disfavour by the banks ; we are told that it is inconvenient.

Mr. CLARKE. The five-dollar bill is more convenient than the four.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. I have observed that many people would rather have the five than the four.

Printing Dominion notes, $110,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the rate of cost for printing these Dominion notes ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. It is fixed under contract, which has been before the House. I could not tell my hon. friend the rate from memory, but will look up the contract and tell him the facts.

Mr. OSLER. The contract has some years to run ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Yes ; it runs for a term of years.

English bill stamps, postage, &c., $10,600.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does that really mean—'English bill stamps' ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. The stamp duty there is quite heavy on all financial transactions. This is a sum we have to vote every year in connection with the stamps on treasury bills and everything of that kind.

Expenses in connection with the conversion of the public debt ; payments may be made to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service and Superannuation Acts, $5,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of that ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. This item was put in last year in anticipation of certain events. I anticipated that Mr. Courtney would probably retire immediately, and I was anxious to retain his services in an advisory capacity for a year or two longer—certainly for a year—pending certain large financial transactions. It was contemplated that we might use a portion of this money in retaining Mr. Courtney's services. All that has been changed, and the only charge against the item has been the expenses of a couple of trips to England in connection with the transactions. If Mr. Courtney should retire at the close of the present fiscal year and I should carry out the policy then contemplated, of asking him to remain connected with the service in an advisory capacity, we could pay for his services out of this vote. Whether that plan will be carried out as contemplated some monthe ago, I am not able to say. Mr. Courtney is in England, and I do not know whether I can retain his services. I have thought that it would be well to take the vote in the same manner as last year.

Civil Government—Governor General's Secretary's Office—salaries, $11,250.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the increases in this item ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. There are none, except the ordinary statutory increases.

Governor General's Secretary's Office—contingencies, $15,100.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend now comes to items as to which it would be useful to us to have the advantage of reading the Auditor General's Report. The expenditure on this service is given in that report, is it not ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps it would be as well to allow those items to stand, in the consideration of which we require the assistance of the Auditor General's Report. But if there are any of these items as to which the Auditor General's Report would obviously not be of much importance, we might go on with those.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Each branch of the service has items of contingencies, and so each would be open to the same remark.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there nothing else we can take up ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING. Not so far as civil government is concerned, and that is all we expected to touch to-day. If the hon. gentleman would rather not go on, I have no objection to the committee rising. We have made good progress for the first day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am anxious to go on, but I do not want to deal with items as to which we may require information contained in the Auditor General's Report, which is not yet before us. I may say that my hon. friends on this side would like to see the Auditor General's Report with regard to this particular item, and perhaps we could not make much progress with regard to such items to-day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). The matter has not been finally settled.

2. The date of actual commencement of work by the Dominion government was the year 1880 ; portions of the canal had, however, been constructed before confederation.

DRY DOCK SUBSIDY—PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Sproule—asked :

1. Has the government received any communication during the past two years with respect to creating or enlarging dry dock facilities on the Pacific coast ?
2. When were such communications first received by the government ?
3. Has the government promised a subsidy to any person or persons for the construction or enlargement of dry docks on the Pacific coast ? If so, to whom has such promise been made ; and if the promise has been made to a company or corporation, who are the persons interested in such company or corporation ?
4. If a subsidy has been promised, what information has the government received with respect to the financial ability of the person, persons, company or corporation who have been promised the subsidy ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. On the 18th of May, 1903.

3. Yes, the Vancouver Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Limited. The initiative steps were taken by S. Thompson, the names of the other parties interested are not known to this department.

4. Extract from report of G. A. Keefer, resident engineer, under date of October 8, 1903, as follows :

As to the solvency and responsibility of the Vancouver Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Limited, as a firm, I have no means of knowing further than a favourable personal knowledge of its representative, Mr. S. Thompson. Mr. Thompson is a marine and mechanical engineer of high standing, has been a resident of Vancouver for 16 years, and in business for himself for the past five years, and the valuation of his property, plant, &c., in Vancouver is placed at $100,000. He is in touch with and known to the firm of Clark & Stanfield and the constructing firm of Clark & Hunter, designers and builders of the Bermuda, Havana, Algiers, Maryland, and numerous other floating docks, of which they make an exclusive specialty, to whom the work of the Vancouver dock will be given. Mr. Thompson's references are: Evans, Coleman & Evans, Bank of Montreal, Canadian Bank of Commerce, and Molson's Bank, all of Vancouver, so we may assume that his business standing is all right. It is his intention to proceed to England immediately on obtaining the necessary permission to construct from the Dominion government, where he anticipates no trouble in floating the company, as he states the necessary capital has been secured contingent on government assistance and permission being obtained.

QUEBEC BRIDGE PAYMENTS.

Mr. MORIN asked :

1. Has the government paid any amount, since the 1st July, 1903, on the million voted for the Quebec bridge ?

2. What amounts were thus paid, and to whom, and on what dates ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. No amount has been paid since 1st July, 1903, on the $1,000,000 voted for the Quebec bridge.

2. The answer to number one answers number two.

MAIL SUBSIDIES—MONTREAL AND BRITISH PORTS.

Mr. HENDERSON—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

What was the total amount paid by the government during the year ending 31st December, 1903, as mail subsidies and steamship subventions for ocean and mail service, or other steam communication, between the port of Montreal and any port or ports in Great Britain ?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that almost all the steamship subsidies paid for steamers from Montreal cover a double circuit, from Montreal during the summer, and from Halifax, St. John or other ports during the winter. Consequently, there may be a question of subdividing. With this qualification I would say that the total amount paid was $110,656.25. That will have to be divided hereafter.

PAYMENT OF MILITIA AT VALLEYFELD.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Have the Valleyfield municipal authorities paid to the government of Canada the sum demanded for the services of the militia who were called out on the occasion of a strike in Valleyfield ?

2. When was the sum paid over ?

3. What was the amount demanded by the government ; and what was the amount paid by the municipality ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I beg leave to read a memorandum on this subject, prepared by my deputy :

This case now stands as follows :

On the 10th instant His Excellency in Council approved of the settlement of the case on the basis of an offer by the municipality, viz.: To pay the cost of transport and pay for the first and second day the troops were out.

At the end of the second day (26th October, 1900) seven magistrates had ordered the withdrawal of the troops, and the department is advised that the power which can order the troops out can also order their withdrawal.

They were not, however, withdrawn on the 26th, as the officer in command thought it inadvisable to do so.

Some of the troops were withdrawn on the 27th and others later, until on the 30th all had been sent home.

Sum advanced out of consolidated fund—$4,481,01.

Total cost of transport, and pay for two days, which is the amount to be repaid by the municipality under the above arrangement, $2,040.24.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL — ALIENS ON SURVEYS.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

Have any protests been received from or on behalf of the Society of Canadian Civil Engineers, or from any person or persons, respecting the employment of aliens on the surveys being made in connection with the proposed National Transcontinental Railway ; and if so, from whom were such protests received, and when were they presented to the government ?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). A protest has been received from the Dominion Institute of Amalgamated Engineering for British Columbia, Manitoba and Northwest Territories, respecting the employment of aliens on the surveys being made in connection with the proposed National Transcontinental Railway. The protest was received on the 16th of March, 1904.

FARM DELEGATES TO GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE asked:

1. Who were the farm delegates sent by the government from Canada to Great Britain and Ireland during the year 1904?
2. What amount was paid each delegate by way of salary and expenses?
3. What was the nature of the duties performed by each delegate, and in what part of the United Kingdom were such duties performed?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior):

1. A. P. Stewart, John A. McPherson, James Dale, A. G. Hawkes, O. B. Fysh and Ben Chubb.
2. An advance of $100 on account of expenses each was made to Messrs. James Dale, A. P. Stewart and O. B. Fysh, but nothing has been paid for salary to any of the delegates as yet.
3. As the delegates have only recently left for the old country, their duties have only commenced, but their instructions, generally, are to promote immigration to Canada by means of lectures and personal interviews, in such localities as might be assigned to them after consultation with the Canadian Commissioner of Emigration in London.

FOREIGN MONEY ORDERS—POSTMASTER AT SYDNEY, N.S.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. Does the postmaster at Sydney, N.S., receive any remuneration or salary from the government of Newfoundland for or in connection with his postal work?
2. Has the government of Canada made any representations to the government of Newfoundland requesting that government to pay any portion of the salary of the postmaster at Sydney, or otherwise, with respect to the remuneration or salary of the said postmaster?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). In the absence of the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) I beg to read the statement prepared by the department in answer to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Taylor's) question:

The postmaster at Sydney receives $50 a year from the Newfoundland government for acting as intermediary for and agent of that government in the transaction of its money order business between the United States and Newfoundland.

The postmaster acts in the same capacity for the Newfoundland government in its money order relations between Canada and Newfoundland, but Canada bears the expense of the service thus rendered.

The government of Canada made no representations to the government of Newfoundland requesting that government to pay any portion of the salary of the postmaster of Sydney. When the arrangement under which the postmaster at Sydney became the agent of the Newfoundland government in the payment of orders drawn in Canada, proved itself a success, the Newfoundland government desired the postmaster at Sydney to act in the same capacity for the payment of orders drawn in the United States upon Newfoundland, and in asking Canada's consent to this arrangement, expressed its willingness to pay the postmaster at Sydney the sum mentioned. This department communicated with the postmaster at Sydney and on receiving his consent to act for Newfoundland, on the terms mentioned, communicated the fact to the Newfoundland government, which pays the postmaster directly.

EXPORT GRAIN TO HALIFAX VIA INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. KEMP—by Mr. Clarke—asked:

1. How many bushels of grain have been hauled by the Intercolonial Railway during the six months preceding March 1st, 1904, for delivery at Halifax for export?
2. What was the proportion delivered in each month?
3. What lake ports was it shipped from?
4. What was the rate per bushel from such lake ports to Halifax?
5. What was the mileage of each railway over which it was hauled?
6. What was the earnings per bushel of each railway?
7. What was the estimated cost per bushel for the service the Intercolonial Railway performed?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals). The information necessary to answer this question will have to be secured at Moncton. I am waiting for it to be sent.

Mr. CLARKE. The question stands?

Hon. Mr. EMMERSON. Yes.

COLLECTOR OF CANAL TOLLS, CARDINAL, ONT.

Mr. TAYLOR—by Mr. Sproule—asked:

1. Who is collector of canal tolls at Cardinal, Ontario?
2. What salary is paid him, and what is the total cost of maintaining said office?
3. What were the receipts last year from said office?
4. Is it the intention of keeping an officer as collector where no canal tolls are now being collected?
5. Who is the sub-collector of customs at Cardinal?
6. What is the salary paid him?

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Dr. J. D. R. Williams is the collector at Cardinal.

2. His salary is $700 a year. The total cost of maintaining the office is $1,020.29.

3. The receipts from the office for the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1903, were $1,561.91.

4. The tolls were only suspended for two years; pending the experiment, the officer has been retained for the purpose of collecting statistics. The matter of future employment is now under consideration.

PAY TO THE MILITIA OF CANADA.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, that the general officer commanding the militia shall be paid at the rate of $6,000 per annum; the adjutant general, at the rate of $3,200 per annum; and the quartermaster general, at the rate of $2,200 per annum.

2. Resolved, that the permanent force shall be entitled to daily pay and allowances at the rates prescribed by the Governor in Council; and that the pay of privates shall not exceed 75 cents a day, and of buglers under 18 years of age, 40 cents a day.

3. Resolved, that officers, warrant officers, and non-commissioned officers of the active militia, other than the permanent force, shall be entitled to pay at rates prescribed by the Governor in Council; and that the pay of privates therein shall be at the rate of 50 cents a day on appointment, which may be increased to a maximum of $1 a day during the third year of service.

4. Resolved, that an allowance of one dollar per diem, or such other rate as may be prescribed, will be paid to each officer and man for every horse actually and necessarily used by him, when on active service, during a period of annual drill and training, or when otherwise on duty as aforesaid.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask my right hon. friend what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. To-morrow we intend to take up the Militia Bill, and after disposing of the Militia Bill we will go into Supply. I am informed that the report of the Auditor General will be laid on the table to-morrow morning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope my right hon. friend will not forget to bring down the documents and the correspondence between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company respecting the amendments to the agreement.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I expect to be in a position to lay that correspondence on the table of the House at a very early date. Then I would like to make an arrangement with my hon. friend to take up the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill on a date to be agreed upon by the two sides of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That would be quite satisfactory, except that I would like to have a day or two to consider the correspondence after it is brought down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I would ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government to introduce a Bill in regard to Sabbath observance?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The government have been approached by the Sunday Observance Association and asked to introduce a Bill upon that subject. There is a much involved question as to the jurisdiction of this parliament which may come into conflict with the jurisdiction of the provinces. This matter has been referred to the law officers of the Crown for their advice, and until we get their advice I am not able to answer the question of my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 22, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

IRREGULARITY IN PETITION.

Mr. SPEAKER. The Clerk of the House informs me that a petition was presented from James E. Taylor, applying for a divorce, and that there is no name of a member of the House attached to the petition. I would remind hon. gentlemen that it is the rule of the House that a petition shall bear the name of an hon. member, because some member should assume the responsibility for each petition presented. I would ask the hon. gentleman who presented this petition to give his name to the Clerk.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal.—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier (Prime Minister).

MILITIA ACT, 1904.

Bill (No. 5) respecting the Militia of Canada was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1.

Mr. CLARKE. Before proceeding with the consideration of this Bill, might I ask the hon. the Minister of Militia if it is intended to take this stage to-day ? The hon. gentleman very kindly said he would supply the members of the House with sufficient copies of the Bill to enable them to meet the demands of their constituents for the Bill. So far we have not received these copies, and have not been able to supply the demands which have been made upon us. Until we have heard from those who are interested in this measure, we are not in position to pronounce upon it. The Bill was only brought down on Thursday, I think.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I thought we were merely going to take up the resolutions to-day, I did not suppose we were going on with the Bill itself. For myself I have not been able to read the Bill even.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think we might make some progress with the Bill to-day ; but we will let any clauses stand that hon. gentlemen wish to see stand.

Mr. CLARKE. We do not know what clauses may be objected to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It might be arranged in this way : There are several sections of the Bill which are exactly in the same form as the law stands at present ; there may be others as to which there can be no possible question. There will no doubt be a third class which will elicit some controversy. Possibly we might go on with those sections that belong to the first two classes, and leave the others to stand until communication can be had with gentlemen throughout the country who are interested in this measure, and until hon. gentlemen on this side have had some opportunity of studying the provisions of the Bill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly, and in addition, the Bill will remain in committee, so that it will be quite possible to make changes at a subsequent meeting.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I think it would facilitate matters very much if the minister would point out the changes in the Bill. For us to find them ourselves would entail considerable labour. In public and government Bills it is usually for the mover or the minister to point out the changes. If the hon. minister could do that without too much trouble, it would certainly lessen the labour of those who are not conversant with these changes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am ready, as I proceed, to indicate the changes, and I have sent to the leader of the opposition a carefully prepared statement. If it is necessary, of course these could all be reprinted, but I think it is scarcely necessary to do that.

Mr. McCREARY. What is the increased expenditure per year entailed upon the people of Canada by reason of this Bill going into force ? What will it cost per year more than it costs at present to maintain the militia ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the increase in pay, which is by no means the whole expense for the militia, would probably amount to between 33 per cent and 50 per cent. For instance the pay of the permanent force now is 40 cents a day and under this Bill we provide a maximum of 75 cents per day, which, however, is only reached after 5 years service. So that, as far as the permanent force is concerned, the increase in pay would probably be not more than 33 per cent. As to the active militia, I think it would probably be rather more. The maximum is increased from 50 cents to $1, subject to good conduct and to regulations which may be provided in that regard. But I should say that the increase altogether would amount to from $150,000 to $200,000 in the matter of pay for the militia, possibly $250,000.

Mr. McCREARY. I think under these circumstances that a proposition to increase the burden on the people of Canada for maintaining the militia by $250,000 a year, which sum may possibly be exceeded, should receive our serious consideration. For my part I never heard of the Bill until I came down here this session, and I do not think many people in the west have heard of the proposition to make this very great increase in the cost of the militia of Canada. I submit to the Minister of Militia that he should let the Bill stand before the members for at least two weeks to enable them thoroughly to understand it and to consult their constituents. The expenditure is so large that the Bill should not be sprung upon the House at a moment's notice. I am not going to say that I shall oppose the Bill, but I would have serious thoughts of doing so if it is going to involve so great an increase in the expenditure. Is there any necessity for it ? Have the people made a demand for it ? For my part, I would like to see the Bill stand for two or three weeks in order to give us ample time to study it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. With reference to what my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) says, it is quite evident that he could not have been in the House during the last two or three sessions, when this important question was under discussion, or he would have heard from every side of the House a demand made upon me and upon the government to increase the pay of the militia. I have no objection to my hon. friend asking the opinion of his constituents, but I am positive that so far as the other constituencies of Canada are concerned, the vast majority of them are in favour of justice to the men who are prepared to sacrifice themselves in defence of the country.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not think there is any necessity for that remark of the minister. I am willing to pay every man a fair wage for his work. But I am here responsible to my constituents, and I understand, though I have not seen the Bill, that it not only provides to increase the pay of the men actually engaged now in the militia, but to increase the number of soldiers in the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It increases the permanent force, that is, it gives power to increase the permanent force, but it does not mean an increase in the active militia.

Mr. McCREARY. I say then that we ought to know what the actual expenditure is going to be by virtue of this Bill being passed, and for that reason I would ask that the Bill be allowed to stand until we have time to study it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If I may take the opportunity of intruding in this family quarrel, I would suggest that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) is not intending to be a candidate in Winnipeg where the militia is very strong. I would also suggest that his remarks would come with more force when we take up the resolutions a little further down on the order paper which deal directly with the question of pay and the increase in the pay of the men. This matter has been before the people for the last two or three years. I suggest that the minister should proceed with the Bill to-day and discuss it, and any section that is found debatable should be left over, which will give an opportunity for the gentlemen interested in this matter throughout the country to study it.

Mr. CLARKE. I am sure it would be a great advantage to us to have more time to consider the Bill, and if the Minister of Militia could see his way to implement the statement he made the other day in introducing the Bill, and to let us have printed copies of the Bill, we would be enabled to consult the gentlemen engaged in the active militia force throughout the country, and these might have an opportunity of advising their representatives, and of suggesting such amendments as they might desire to see made. As to the proposition to increase the pay of the members of the force, I for one, and I think I am reflecting the opinion of those I represent, heartily concur in the proposition of the minister. I think the men have been scandalously underpaid. The wonder has been that the government have been able to procure men for the miserable pittance that has been paid to them in times past. But apart altogether from that question, there is the question of giving those who are actively engaged in the militia forces of this country an opportunity of studying the provisions of this Bill. It is true we have had discussions here, and have read the discussions which have taken place in this House during previous sessions as to the advisability of improving the status of the militia, and the necessity of giving increased pay to the militia, as well as of increasing the number of men who are to make up the strength of the force. But, apart altogether from that, now that the views of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and those who have advised him have been crystallized into a Bill, I think it is not unreasonable that those who are interested in the subject in all parts of the country should have an opportunity of having this Bill before them to consider its provisions for a few days before its discussion passes beyond this stage. I think if the hon. minister would make a further statement, if he has one to make, and then allow the Bill to stand at the present stage for two or three weeks, a reasonable opportunity would be given to militia officers and others who may be interested to present their views or suggestions as to any amendments which they proposed. I make this statement with the desire not of impeding the progress of the Bill, but rather with the view of accelerating its progress.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to make any further statement except as it might be necessary to make explanations upon the individual sections of the Bill. The statement which I made the other day, although it was very brief, I thought covered very fairly the salient points of the Bill and pointed out the differences between the law as it now exists and the Bill which I have introduced. So far as the opportunity for studying the Bill is concerned, I may tell my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) and the committee that I have taken every opportunity possible that I could conceive of, of possessing myself of the views of the leading military men throughout the country. I may say to my hon. friend that every district officer commanding in Canada has been asked to give his views in reference to the proposed draft which we prepared over a year ago.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have those who are not of the permanent corps been consulted ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Many of the district officers commanding are only theoretically members of the permanent corps. In addition to that I may tell my hon. friend that I brought to Ottawa such officers as Colonel Otter——

Mr. CLARKE. A good man.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN—to assist and also such men as Colonel Henry Smith.

Mr. TAYLOR. Another good man.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A former district officer commanding, and I think one of the ablest authorities on a matter of that kind in the Dominion of Canada. These men were members of a committee composed of six or seven officers which for days, and I may say, weeks, had the subject under consideration, and the Bill which I now propose is very largely the result of the consultation which these gentlemen held. Of course, I have had the opinion of the general officer commanding and I have had the opinion of certain members of the headquarters staff whose opinions I thought would be of value. I merely mention this to show that this is no slip-shod measure, but that it is a well digested measure to which, I think, we all, the members of the headquarters staff and the officers generally of the militia, have given our very best attention. Now, I am very anxious indeed that it should be considered by the leading military men throughout the country, but at the same time I think it could better go on pari passu with our discussion here. I accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, that this Bill should remain in committee. The discussion of it will be reported to the public, the Bill will be distributed and we will not complete its consideration. It will remain in committee and it will be open to any one to go back over the sections which have been considered and make suggestions before the Bill reaches the third stage. I do not persist at all in this view, but it seems to me that there is no reason why we should adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), but that on the contrary, there is every good reason why some progress should be made at this sitting of the committee.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I think we all fully agree with the object which my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has in view and which no doubt is that the greatest possible amount of accurate information in respect to this Bill should be given to the general public—

Mr. CLARKE. And to militia officers in particular.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, but I think my hon. friend's object would be more easily attained if we were to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, myself and the hon. leader of the opposition have very carefully prepared briefs in our possession in which the clauses in the law as it stands now are set forth as well as the changes suggested and the reasons for these changes. If my hon. friend will permit me we might take each clause of the new Bill, point out in what respect that clause varies from the law as we now have it, and indicate the reasons for the change, and while not adopting any one clause but going right on through the Bill from beginning to end the House will be well informed and get all the information which we have in our briefs at the present time. Without adopting any one of the clauses we might indicate in what respect a particular clause differs from the law as we now have it, giving the reason for the change, and then allow the matter to stand in abeyance to resume its consideration at a later date. In the interval every member of the House of Commons will have all the information that can possibly be desired and this information will, of course, go to the country. I trust my hon. friend will understand the object we have in view and I think that if we adopt the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition that object will be attained.

Mr. TISDALE. The question which I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence might well be asked now, because if he has had any communications from the imperial government I would like to have them put upon the table. Have the government had any communications from the imperial government in connection with this Bill?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. Are these communications in writing? I remember when we made a change before that you were kind enough to hand in all of these communications except one or two that were confidential. If there are any that are not of this character I was going to ask you at the first opportunity to produce them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have no authority yet to lay anything on the table of the House, but I think there is no objection to my stating substantially—in fact I did state substantially in what I said on the first reading—what had occurred. The only matters which were considered were four in number. First, there was the omission from the present law of all reference to the naval militia. That was agreed to on the explanation made by me that the naval militia would be provided for by a separate Bill to be introduced by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Préfontaine). The second point was in reference to the question of the limitation existing in our present law as to the appointment of the general officer commanding. It was agreed that the limitation by which a Canadian officer may not be appointed should be omitted, with the understanding that in time of war—and this is provided in the present law really—when the militia is called out to act jointly with regular troops, the Crown, shall appoint a senior general officer to command the whole force including the militia. That was the understanding although there is no clause in the measure to that effect. It was omitted——

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think you mentioned that in your explanation of the Bill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps I did not. It was an oversight and it was overlooked in the preparation of the Bill, I understand, but I have in my hand a clause providing for that, which I propose to introduce later on.

The third point was in reference to relative rank. It was agreed that the clause in the present law, which places an imperial officer of junior date of appointment in the same rank over the head of a Canadian militia officer in the same rank, should be omitted.

Mr. CLARKE. From the statement made by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence on the occasion of the introduction of the Bill on Friday last, if I may be permitted to refer to it, I was led to conclude that a fuller and more detailed statement would be made by him when the stage for the second reading of the Bill was reached. The minister is reported in 'Hansard' of Thursday last to have said : When the second reading is reached I shall have more opportunity of going into detail.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly, and what I meant was that I would give the explanation upon each section of the Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. The members of the militia force throughout the country did not have an opportunity of reading the exact statement made by the minister in introducing the Bill, and the only way in which they can learn the exact scope of it is, to have an opportunity of perusing the Bill itself. We have not been able up to the present, to obtain enough copies of the Bill to meet the demands made upon us. Under these circumstances it would expedite the passage of the Bill if we could send copies of it to our constituents, and allow them a week or ten days to consider its provisions. If they have any objections to offer, then we can present them to the minister, and if necessary, amendments can be made. I have no doubt that the greatest possible care has been taken by the minister and his advisers in the preparation of this Bill, but there are men in the country who take a great interest in the welfare of the militia and who have made great sacrifices on its behalf, and they should have an opportunity of considering the provisions of such a measure. I have no desire at all to impede the progress of the Bill, but I think that those interested in the militia in our constituencies should have an opportunity of seeing it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree with the spirit of the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) but if the suggestion of the leader of the opposition is adopted, the object the hon. gentleman has in view will be best served. I may explain further, that a number of errors have occurred in the printing of this Bill. There are clauses which are not necessary, and there are other clauses which it is proposed to change, so that the Bill as printed does not correctly convey the intention of the department. If we go on with the discussion, I shall be able to tell the House, and through the House the country, exactly what the position of this Bill is up to date. My object is to get this matter before the country, and I quite agree that those interested in the militia force should have a couple of weeks' opportunity to consider the provisions of the Bill. They will best secure that opportunity by proceeding with the discussion now.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that the object of my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) would be very fully served if the Minister of Militia would put upon 'Hansard' the brief which is in his hands. We can discuss the Bill, and we need not pass any clauses at all, but the discussion being upon 'Hansard,' showing the differences between the Bill and the law as it stands, will afford the country the information which it desires.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then I presume that provision could be made to distribute extra copies of 'Hansard' to those who are interested in the Bill throughout the country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If that be done, then those who take an interest in the measure will understand it better than they possibly can at present.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I quite accede to that proposal.

Mr. INGRAM. Some of us are not ourselves military men, but we represent constituents who are, and I know that when the minister returned from England, the four prominent points in connection with this Bill were published in the newspapers. But statements in the newspapers are not always reliable and for that reason probably the militiamen did not take them into serious consideration. In order that I may be relieved of any charge of being negligent with regard to this Bill, I enter a solemn protest against such a measure being proceeded with before our constituents have an opportunity of perusing it. If the minister proceeds, I have no objection, but he must take the responsibility of proceeding without giving our militiamen an opportunity of understanding the Bill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) need scarcely have taken the trouble of making the observation, in view of what his leader has said. I do not believe that there is any one in the country who suspects me of being capable of doing anything that is derogatory to the militia. I am prepared to go on in the way that is suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. INGRAM. It does not become the Minister of Militia to be quite so touchy at the remarks I have made. I have a responsibility to my constituents and in discharging that responsibility I did not reflect upon the character or aims of the minister. When I have anything to say with respect to the minister and his department, I am manly enough to say it in good plain English; I will not do it by insinuations.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman did not intend to say that there were insiuuations——

Mr. INGRAM. Certainly not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then we understand each other.

Mr. CLARKE. Since the discussion commenced I have been favoured with an extra number of copies of the Bill, and I shall place them in the hands of my constituents with the least possible delay. If it is the desire of the minister to go ahead, I trust that he will make his explanations on this important Bill as fully as possible, so that our constituents may have an opportunity of ascertaining what the Bill contains.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand it you are not going to pass any of the clauses at all; the minister will simply place upon the pages of 'Hansard' a distinct statement as to any clause which differs either by omission or by addition from the law as it is at present. Having done that we shall be a little better informed than at present as to the object and scope of the Bill, but shall not have made any progress in the passage of the Bill.

Mr. McCREARY. The right is reserved of discussing any part of the Bill on the third reading.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Bill will remain in committee and not a single clause is to be passed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is all. We are simply following the suggestion of the hon. member for Toronto, Mr. Clarke, at the outset, namely, that I should give a little further information.

Mr. CLARKE. I am very glad we are going to have an opportunity of hearing more as to the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The understanding is then that we shall have a discussion on each section of the Bill, but that the section shall be allowed to stand.

On section 1.—Short title.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The old title was Militia and Defence Act. It seemed to me that, as the naval militia is to be withdrawn from the control of the Minister of Militia, it would not be a correct description to call the department the Department of Militia and Defence. Consequently the word 'defence' has been dropped. The old title seemed rather long and although a good many suggestions were made to call it 'the Department of Defence,' and to call the militia 'the forces of Canada' and so on, it seemed to me that 'the militia of Canada' is a name for which the people of Canada have a very great regard. It is a force which has taken a conspicuous part in the history of this country from 1776 down to the present day, and I felt that even although some of the officers might not like it as well, the people generally would probably be better pleased by continuing the old name, 'the militia.' Therefore we shortened the title from 'The Militia and Defence Act,' to simply 'The Militia Act.'

On section 2.—Interpretation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The interpretation is changed but it seems to me that the change is so obvious that it does not require any further explanation except to say that it is much more complete than the interpretation clause in the present Bill.

On section 3.—Interpretation Act to apply.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The same remark would apply to section 3.

On section 4.—Command in chief vested in His Majesty.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This section is practically unchanged.

On section 5.—Duties of the Minister of Militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 5 is practically the same as the present law.

On section 6.—Deputy and officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 6 is the same except that the words 'and defence' are omitted as I explained a moment ago.

On section 7.—Minister to have control of military buildings.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 7 is the same except that it provides in addition that the Department of Militia has power to construct forts and fortifications. There is no such power under the present law.

On section 8.—Certain works for defence declared public works.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 8 is the same as section 9 of the old Act with some modifications.

Mr. TISDALE. What are the modifications ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The law is shortened.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The changes are merely verbal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand it, section 9 of the Act as it is at present, referred to the Public Works Act and to expropriation and compensation by official arbitrators.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Exactly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Since the passage of the present Act, the law has all been changed and we have provision for expropriation in an Act called 'The Expropriation Act.' Therefore there is in the present Bill a short reference to the Expropriation Act which fulfils the same office as the somewhat longer clause in the law as it stands at present.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Sections 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Bill will be omitted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are rendered unnecessary because the Criminal Code deals with them.

On section 13.—Conversion of property on emergency.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Clause 13 is a new clause and I shall read it. It is as follows :—

Whenever an emergency exists, the general officer commanding, or any officer duly authorized by him, may, subject to the regulations, enter upon and occupy with troops, or other persons, any buildings or land for defence purposes, and may dig trenches and throw up fieldworks on any such lands, and may fortify any buildings, and may, for the purposes aforesaid, destroy or desolate and lay waste any such buildings or lands and destroy food, crops, fodder, stores, or other things, and slaughter live stock, or may take or cause to be taken any such food, crops, fodder, stores or other things; and may drive or cause to be driven, any live stock to some place of safety ; and may also impress any horses, mules, oxen or other animals required for military purposes.

2. Any person injured by the exercise of any of the provisions of this section shall be compensated from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Powers under this clause arise only in the event of war or insurrection.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would make the suggestion that in connection with the impressment of horses, mules, and oxen, it might be well to give the general power to impress foods and to issue certificates for the materials taken.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 14 is similar to section 10 of the present law. It provides that all the male inhabitants of Canada over 18 and under 60 years of age, being British subjects, and not otherwise exempt or disqualified, shall be liable to service in the militia. It provides further that the Governor General may require all the male inhabitants of Canada, capable of bearing arms, to serve in the case of a levée en masse. By a subsection it is provided that any male inhabitant, under 18, may be enrolled as bugler, trumpeter or drummer.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not put in bandsmen as well ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will make a note of that.

Section 15 is practically the same as section 21 of the present law, providing what persons shall be exempt from service. It extends the exemptions to members of the Privy Council, members of the Senate and House of Commons, members of the executive councils of provinces, members of the provincial legislatures, and deputy ministers of federal and provincial governments. There is also a new clause, subsection 3, added, which reads as follows :

No person shall be entitled to exemption unless he has, at least one month before he claims such exemption, filed with the commanding officer within the limits whereof he resides, his affidavit, made before some justice of the peace, of the facts on which he rests his claim.

Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand that there is no important difference in this respect between the old law and this Bill ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The exemptions are extended by this Bill to members of the Privy Council, Senate and House of Commons, &c.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. These are only exempt in the case of a ballot.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They have the right to serve if they choose.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. They are not incapacitated, but are exempt.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 16, which provides for proof of exemption, is the same as section 21, subsection 5, of the present law. Section 17 is the same as section 21, subsection 6, of the old law. It provides that exemption shall not prevent any person from serving in the militia if he desires to serve and is not disabled by bodily or mental infirmity. The only difference is that mental infirmity is not provided for by the present law. Section 18, which provides for the constitution of cadet corps, is taken from the Commonwealth Defence Act.

Mr. TISDALE. This is new.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. Section 19, which provides that cadets shall not be liable to service in the militia in any emergency, save only in the case of a levée en masse, is adopted from the Commonwealth Defence Bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This principle was advocated in Canada long before the Commonwealth Bill was ever printed. The Commonwealth Defence Bill is copied from Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Very likely. Just as the Commonwealth, I believe, copied our Ballot Act, which goes now by the name of the Australian Act, although it is really the Canadian Act.

Section 20 is practically the same as section 11 of the present law. It divides the militiamen into four classes. Section 21 is the same as section 12 of the present law. It provides that the militia shall be divided into active and reserve militia, and that the reserve militia shall be raised and maintained under regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council. Section 22 is the same as section 13 of the present law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the Interpretation Act, the militia of Canada is said to mean all the military forces in Canada, while section 21 says that the militia shall be divided into active and reserve militia, and that the active shall consist of corps raised by voluntary enlistment and of corps raised by ballot, and the reserve militia shall be raised and maintained under regulations prescribed by the Governor in Council. Is it understood that the active militia includes the permanent force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then certain language a little further on is perhaps not very appropriate. I refer to clause 30, in which reference is made to the permanent force as if it were not part of the militia at all. It says that the permanent force shall furnish schools of instruction for the militia and provide instructors therefor. It might be better to use language which would do away with an apparent contradiction.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. There is another clause in which it is provided that the active militia shall drill not less than 12 or more than 30 days, but no provision is made anywhere for the existence of the permanent force during the 365 days of the year. There is no provision that the permanent force shall be continuous. I presume that is an omission.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think I have a clause to propose with reference to that. Section 22 is the same as section 13 of the present law with additions. It provides that the period of service in time of peace shall be for the active militia three years and for the reserve militia such period as is prescribed. The time for which the reserve might be enrolled may be for a short period or a long period as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council. Section 23 is the same as section 14 of the present law, but about one-half of the old section is eliminated because it was found unnecessary. This section provides for the continuance of the present corps. Section 24 is the same as section 15 of the present law, except that it gives power to the Governor in Council to dispense with the services of any officer or man of the militia at any time. The section reads :

> The Governor in Council may dispense with the services of any officer or man of the militia at any time; and any officer or man may be permitted in time of peace to retire from any corps on giving to his commanding officer six months' notice of his intention so to do.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the section of the old Act say 'Governor in Council ?'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. It simply provides that any officer or man, in time of peace, after giving his commanding officer six months' notice, may retire. This gives the Governor in Council power to dispense with the services of any officer or man at any time.

Mr. HAGGART. Why did the hon. minister put in 'In Council,' ? I thought it was the prerogative of the King and the Governor General to appoint and dismiss, independent of council.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will consider that suggestion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not at all. If it means the Governor on the advice of his responsible minister, that is all right ; but if it means the Governor acting of his own motion, it is not right by any means. Of course, in England, when it speaks of the King being supreme, it does not mean the King, but the King on the advice of his responsible minister. If that is the case here of course it should go. Otherwise, let us keep the old form.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose the hon. member for South Lanark meant the same thing—the Crown.

Mr. HAGGART. What I meant is this : It is the prerogative of the Sovereign to appoint an officer or to confer an honour of any kind. That is independent of the advice of the minister. Of course, if the Sovereign makes an appointment contrary to the wish of the minister they have the right of resignation, but prior advice of the minister is not necessary. You interfere with the prerogative when you put in 'In Council.'

Mr. HUGHES. I would be very sorry to have the remarks of the hon. member for South Lanark taken as constitutional law.

Mr. HAGGART. I stand corrected by the overpowering authority of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes.)

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I must say I am very pleased to be able to teach my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) something.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 25 is new. Section 26 takes the place of sections 16, 17 and 18 of the present law, divisions and changes to be made by regulation. This is found by experience to be absolutely necessary.

Mr. CLARKE. How are they made now ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are prescribed in certain cases by the statute. But, in view of the development of the country, the change in centres of population, the new provinces being carved out and so on, it is very desirable, in fact necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the militia, that these matters should be placed in the hands of the Governor in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. Orders re-adjusting the districts I suppose, will be available for parliament ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The committee will see that the country is taking no risk in giving this power, because the regulations become part of the law and must be laid on the table of the House within ten days after the House meets each year.

Mr. CLARKE. And the Militia Reports, too, I suppose.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, and the 'Canada Gazette' contains these changes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is really no change in the law, because under section 17 all this can be done as it is to be done under this new Act. It is simply better drafting—I think that is all.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 27 is substituted for section 22 of the present law. The section of the present law reads :

The active militia force shall consist of regiments and troops of cavalry, regiments and field batteries of artillery, companies of mounted infantry, companies of engineers, regiments and batteries of garrison artillery, battalions and companies of infantry, and naval and marine corps——

That of course, will be struck out.

—in such proportions as Her Majesty appoints ; and the strength of each such regiment, troop, battery, battalion, company or corps shall be regulated and officers appointed to from time to time, by Her Majesty.

The clause in the new Act reads :

The active militia shall consist of such corps as are from time to time named by the Governor in Council ; and the Governor in Council may, at any time, disband any corps or portion of a corps, if he considers it advisable so to do.

Section 28 is substituted for section 24 of the present law, section 23 of the present Act being omitted. Section 24 provides for an oath to be taken before a commanding officer.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is a little change in the oath. Will the minister explain what the object in making that may be.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To make it more——

Mr. CLARKE. To make it more binding ?

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I do not think it can be that. Would the minister be good enough to read the two.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The present law provides :

Every active militiaman shall sign a service roll in which the conditions of his service shall be stated ; and every officer of militia, on appointment, and every man on enlistment, or re-enlistment, shall take an oath in the form following, that is to say :—

'I, A. B., do sincerely promise and swear (or solemnly declare) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty.'

Which oath or declaration may be administered by the commanding officer of the troop, battery, company or battalion, as the case may be, who has taken the same oath before a justice of the peace.

And the change proposed, so far as the oath is concerned is :

I.....swear that I will well and truly serve Our Sovereign Lord the King, his heirs and successors in the..... for the term of.....years or until lawfully discharged, dismissed or removed, and that I will resist His Majesty's enemies and cause His Majesty's peace to be kept and maintained, and that I will in all matters appertaining to my service faithfully discharge my duty according to law. So help me God.

That is copied, I think, from the English oath. Is there any objection to that form ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The only objection is that whereas the old oath was simply a promise to bear true allegiance to the Sovereign, which is plain, practical and democratic, this oath reads to ' Serve our Sovereign Lord the King.' Perhaps the hon. minister's trips across the water have put these notions in his head. Where did he get the phraseology ?

Mr. CLARKE. Is the King our war lord under the constitution ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will look into that ? Section 29 refers to the permanent force, and replaces section 28 of the present law, subsection 1. It is re-drafted, and simply increases the force from 1,000 to 2,000. Section 30 replaces subsection 2 of section 28 of the present law. Sections 26 and 27 of the present law are left out—there is no need of them, as the power they confer is given elsewhere. Subsection 3 of section 28 of the present law is omitted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does that subsection provide ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would point out here, as I did before that there is no provision for continuous service during the year. The hon. minister has made no provision for the existence of the permanent corps beyond a period of thirty days.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 26 of the old Act is as follows :

Her Majesty may accept the services of corps of volunteers, under such regulations as are made from time to time.

Section 27,

Any volunteer corps may enter into articles of engagement and make regulations not inconsistent with this Act.

That is provided for. Section 3 is the one to which my hon. friend refers. 'Officers, non-commissioned officers and men of such corps'—that refers to the continuous service of the permanent force, and the hon. gentleman is quite right. A clause is being prepared now which will be in accordance with the language of the new Bill, and which will practically embody the provisions contained in that subsection.

Mr. CLARKE. Was it the headquarters staff who prepared this Bill ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They assisted in it. A section is proposed to be substituted in place of the one printed in the Bill.

Clause 31 reads :

The Governor in Council shall, from time to time, make all regulations necessary for the enrolment of men liable for military service, and of persons liable to drill and training as cadets and for all procedure in connection therewith, as well as for determining, subject to the provisions of this Act, the order in which the persons in the classes fixed by this Act shall serve and such regulations shall have the same force and effect as if they formed part of this Act.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Before proceeding further, I would ask the minister what standing have the cadets of the first and second class who have passed through the military schools ? What standing will they have in the military service ? Will they go into the ranks as full privates, or will they be entitled to get positions as officers of the militia ? Will they have any privilege at all ? They have devoted their time and labour to acquiring a knowledge of military law, they have passed their examinations and have received certificates—very nice some of them are on parchment—giving them the title of passed cadets of the military school, in the first class or the second class. Will these certificates give them a rank in the militia service ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a provision in this Bill by which they may be attached to the active militia.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What if they are drafted and forced to serve ? Have they any privilege at all in the ranks ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria).

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of course, if they are drafted, there is no question at all that the officers commanding men of that kind will select the best men, and their certificates will at once bring them to the notice of the officers. There will be regulations issued.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Would there be anything in the law giving them that privilege ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may explain that it is impossible to deal with details of that kind in the law, but regulations will be issued dealing with these matters and others, and these regulations become a part of the law and have the force of law. These regulations will be published and laid on the table of the House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the minister referring to the Royal Military College cadets?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I mean cadets of ordinary military schools.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think they should take their place as well as anybody else in the ranks and work their way up.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 33 is practically section 32 of the present Act. Section 34 is the same as section 33 of the present Act. Section 35 is the same as section 34, subsection 1, of the present Act with slight verbal alterations. Section 36 is similar to subsection 2 of the present law. I wish to call attention to what I am about to say. I propose to alter some words in section 36 in the Bill now before the committee. Instead of saying as at present :

Provided always that the permanent force is not available and in sufficient numbers for the purpose.

These words will be put in :

Provided always that the permanent force or any portion thereof, if available and in sufficient numbers, is invariably to be employed upon this duty before resort is had to other militia corps.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will there be any possibility of confusion in connection with that ? For example, three justices of the peace or any two justices of the peace and the warden or mayor of the municipality are authorized to call out the active militia. Well, you may have active militia in that district not a part of the permanent force, then either the district officer commanding or the senior officer of the active militia is to act. Suppose the senior officer of the active militia is not in command of the permanent force, then the statute requires that the permanent force shall go, though the request is addressed to some one who is not in command of that force. Will there not be a possibility of some confusion ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That contingency could scarcely arise, because the permanent force is in every instance located where there is a district officer commanding. But I will be glad to consider the point, and put in some words that will meet such a contingency, the absence, for instance, of the district officer commanding from the country. But even in that case, some one will be acting for him.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is another point along similar lines to the one brought up by the leader of the opposition. Supposing a riot occurs in the city of Ottawa, the district officer commanding is here, but there is no permanent force here. I think the district officer commanding in this district has no permanent force under his command. What is he to do, and where is he to get them ? Supposing a riot occurs where there is a major, or captain, or lieutenant, and the lieutenant has authority to call out the militia ; how is he going to get the permanent force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The effect of the law will be, I think, that the permanent force will only be called upon in the great centres of population, or at points where the permanent force is stationed. In the city of Ottawa there would not be time perhaps, in the first instance, to call upon the permanent force. In the city of Toronto the permanent force is there on the spot, and will be the first called upon in the event of trouble. In remote country districts, or in the city of Montreal, perhaps, it will be impossible to utilize this force.

Mr. CLARKE. The power is vested in the district officer commanding, in case the requisition is served upon him, to call out the permanent force. It might be a serious thing to give power to two justices of the peace to call out the permanent force, who do not bear the same relations to the populace that the militia force does. I think it is wise to call for the service of the permanent force rather than of the militia. Has the district officer commanding any power in the matter ? Has he any authority himself, and can he exercise any discretion as to whether he shall obey the orders of these two justices of the peace ? Because I apprehend that cases might arise where it would not be wise or judicious to call out the permanent force unless the responsibility was placed with the Minister of Militia as the proper authority. I can apprehend that a case might possibly arise in which it would not be well that the calling out of the permanent force should rest entirely with two justices of the peace.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The district officer commands within his district.

Mr. CLARKE. Has he any right to exercise any discretion?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Take Toronto as a case in point—the district officer at Toronto commands the permanent force and the troops within that district.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the meaning of this section ? He has no discretion except to call out the permanent force. I think it is a matter that should be very seriously considered. I should like to have an opportunity of discussing that question further.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There will be lots of opportunities.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. Minister of Militia and Defence has given utterance to the very point that struck me when I spoke on that matter a day or two ago ; that is the permanent corps are to be the force that are to be utilized in cities and towns, but that in rural districts the militia have to bear the discredit of turning out and suppressing riots. It is for that reason that when the matter comes up for discussion I propose fighting the whole business from start to finish.

Mr. TISDALE. It seems to me that the whole section, to be of any practical use, will have to be more definite. What I mean by more definite is as to who controls the permanent force, who controls the active militia and where the distinction is as to which shall be called upon. I think this is very important. I happened on one occasion in particular to be placed in a position where I had to act myself and it is a serious responsibility for any one to take upon himself to call out the force. You do not know what your powers are and it is necessary that they should be clearly defined so that prompt action can be taken in case of a riot suddenly breaking out. From reading that clause myself I could not advise as to where the power rests, or as to which force should be called out except in one case and that is where the permanent force is available. It is quite clear then because the machinery is simple. I think there should be some more definite description to help the civil officers who have the responsibility of starting the machinery in motion. When they once start it the military officers of the force must bring out the force for which they are responsible. You say that in a particular case the permanent force would be called out, but how are you going to determine as to whether the permanent force is available. Are you going to take into consideration the question of distance and other surrounding circumstances ? I cannot read this section so as to be sure that the civil or military authority would be right in acting except in one case and that is where the permanent force is available.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I understand my hon. friend to say that he wants a more definite statement in regard to the occasions upon which the permanent force shall be availed of and as to the occasions upon which the active militia shall be utilized. It seems to me that the wording of the Bill is clear enough. Let us suppose that a riot occurs in the city of Toronto ; there is no question whatever that under this Bill the permanent force would be called upon. But, if a riot occurred at Ottawa, hundreds of miles away from the permanent force, it seems to me that there can be no doubt in the minds of the civic authorities that they would call upon the active militia, or rather that the district officer in command would immediately utilize the active militia at Ottawa. I do not know how you could make the Bill more definite than that, because it might turn out, for instance in Toronto, for some reason or other, particularly during the time of the camp, that the permanent force would be absent and it would be absolutely necessary to call upon the active militia. If it were provided in the Bill that certain places such as Toronto, London, &c., should only be served in this matter by the permanent force, it might put these cities in a very awkward dilemma if the permanent force were absent.

Mr. TISDALE. There is no difficulty in the two cities the hon. minister speaks of, but suppose you take the case of a country town intermediate between these two places, it might be a question as to whether the permanent corps or the militia force should act, and yet the permanent corps might not be as near to the scene of the disturbance as the militia force. There are two difficulties which have to be met. You will find that the volunteer force will be very reluctant to perform this duty. I think something should be put into the section to make it clear that when the militia are ordered to turn out they must turn out ; otherwise, you are going to have the same condition as exists in the United States. The question, when a riot occurs there, is as to whether the United States troops should go or whether the state militia should go, and the consequence is that the riot and bloodshed have taken place before the troops get there, because there is a reluctance to order the state militia out. The present law, whatever objections there may be in any other respect, is definite enough now. The magistrates have authority to order out any force necessary for supressing a riot.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is no change in that respect.

Mr. TISDALE. In this clause you say that if the permanent force is available the militia force shall not be called upon. Under the present law you can order out either one of them. What I am looking to is the safety of the people because I agree with my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that it is a very unpleasant duty for the militia to perform. The active militia is composed of volunteers, but, at the same time, one of the strongest reasons for the maintenance of an efficient militia force is that it is available for assisting the civil power in maintaining order when it is necessary, and there should be no shirking in the performance of this duty. While it is an unpleasant duty I want it well understood that when the members of this force are called upon they must go out. They should understand that it is no insult or disgrace to them. One of the most difficult duties that any class of soldiery can undertake is that of dealing with riots. It is a mighty poor soldier who will not fight, but when he has to go out and control himself under very aggravating circumstances, it calls for the exercise of great self restraint ; yet, this is a duty that the volunteer must perform. It is a duty that he owes to the people amongst whom he is sent to restore order and who more particularly will be injured by disorderly acts if the disturbance is not quickly suppressed.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Under the law now authorizing the militia to act in aid of the civil power, the civil power must first determine as to the necessity for calling out the militia. There is no change in that respect in the Bill. The civil power will still continue to act, but when the civil power makes a requisition upon the military authorities, that requisition is forwarded to the district officer commanding or the senior officer of the active militia. Then there is a change in this respect, that when a requisition is made upon the senior officer commanding he must call upon the permanent force if the permanent force is available. It is only in the absence of the permanent corps, that it is possible for him to avail himself of the services of the active militia. The only change here is that the permanent corps must first be called upon. I understand the difficulty of my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) to be, that you leave it in the discretion of the district officer commanding to determine what is meant by the word 'available ;' because the district officer commanding must determine whether at the time the permanent corps are available or not. Well, you must leave the discretion to be exercised by some one and surely that discretion should be vested in the district officer commanding to say whether the permanent corps is available, within the meaning of this section, and if it is available it is his duty to call upon them. He can only call upon the active militia in default of the permanent corps, but when the active militia is called upon, it is bound to respond under the new Bill as it was under the old.

Mr. CLARKE. I take stronger ground against this clause than is taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale). The practice has become too prevalent, of calling out the militia in the case of petty civic disturbances and it must be put an end to. I apprehend that if a riot takes place in the city, and there are any members of the permanent corps available it is the duty of the district commanding officer to call them out first. It may be that the government will not expect a municipality to pay the wages of these men for the time they are on this special duty. I think that the responsibility for suppressing disturbances should first rest with the municipal authorities and that they should be obliged to employ special constables if necessary. I, for one, emphatically protest against any two justices of the peace or the mayor of a city, being authorized to call out the permanent force without the approval of the district commanding officer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The civil authorities have nothing to do with it; when they make the requisition then the whole power is vested in the district officer commanding.

Mr. CLARKE. What I want to know is whether there is any discretion in the district officer commanding or any responsibility on him? If I read the section aright he is a mere automaton, and when a request is sent to him by certain justices of the peace or the mayor of the city, he must act.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is right.

Mr. CLARKE. And if he has not the permanent force available he must call upon the active militia. I think there should be something else required before either the permanent force or the militia should be called out to suppress these riots which sometimes take place in cities.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This law has been in existence for many years; in what respect would my hon. friend wish to see it changed?

Mr. CLARKE. It is because the law has been in existence and because certain municipalities have been permitted to shirk the obligations imposed upon them under that law that a change should be made. Under the old law they were penalized, except in certain cases, to pay the maintenance of the militia when called out on such duty, and that rule, has been departed from I understand.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that will continue.

Mr. CLARKE. My desire is that the district officer commanding shall have some discretionary power, or that before he can exercise the power vested in him to call out the militia, he shall have the assent of the responsible head of the Militia Department. I present this suggestion for the consideration of the Minister of Militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The word 'riot' has been interpreted by magistrates and fellows who get a scare all over the country, to mean any petty disturbance, and the consequence is that we have seen troops brought from different parts of Ontario to the city of Toronto without any reason whatever.

Mr. CLARKE. A perfect farce.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Because a few boys were responsible for hooraying on the street, the troops were called in and the city of Toronto was saddled with great expense. I believe that the whole row in Montreal last year could have been settled by one level-headed fellow in ten minutes and the Valleyfield riots could have been put a stop to without any trouble at all. These municipalities should appoint special constables under such circumstances and then there would be less calling out of the militia to be used as a sort of police force and to be spat upon and brought into discredit. When a militiaman is standing on duty in the time of riot, any pup of a boy can walk up and spit on him, and he cannot resent it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Yes; that has been done and I have seen our men insulted and they dare not move. If the militiaman were a constable he could arrest that person, but being on duty and in the uniform of His Majesty he cannot punish those who insult him. I object to having the militia force of this country called out for anything short of an insurrection or something of a very serious nature.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know any better way of guarding against an unnecessary calling out of the militia, than by making the parties who are responsible for it pay the bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I agree in that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the law, and I propose to continue it, and if the permanent force is called out in any city the bill will have to be paid. I shall read, later on, a section which will make that clearer than it is in the printed Bill. I agree that it is exceedingly undesirable to call out the militia force on such occasions, but we must not forget that such a provision existed in the Militia Acts of the different provinces before confederation, and I do not think we can now say that the militia shall not be called out to maintain the civil power. That being so, where are you going to draw the line? To whom shall we give the authority to invoke the militia? Surely, we must give it to the municipality where the riot is said to exist?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. At present you can have the militia called out by three justices of the peace who may not in any way be concerned with the government of a municipality. I think there should be some amendment made in that regard. There seems to be a good deal of force in the argument, that if the municipality have to pay for the services of the force, they should have a voice in saying whether the militia shall be called out or not. That is not the law at present.

Notwithstanding what has been said by the Minister of Justice, it does seem to me that there may be some confusion under this statute. For example, you have a permanent force in the province of New Brunswick, and riots should take place in the city of St. John and a requisition were made on the senior officer in that city, is he to call out the permanent force from Fredericton or the force under his command at St. John ? The Minister of Justice says that the statute means the district officer commanding, or in case of his absence the senior officer of the active militia present. It does not quite say that. It says :

> The district officer commanding or the senior officer of the active militia present at any locality.

Now, to whom is the requisition to be addressed ? I know that practical difficulties have arisen under this statute because I was professionally engaged in a suit in connection with the calling out of the militia, and I think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick), should give his attention to this section, and also to one subsequent section. A very serious question arises under the provisions of the statute which enables a suit to be brought by the commanding officer. In one case the commanding officer happened to die after the suit was brought. Finally a divided court held that his administrator could maintain the action but there was a great deal of difference of opinion and two very able judges dissented. Then supposing the commanding officer should die before the suit was brought, a difficulty would be presented which I do not think would be covered by that decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. After all the suit is brought on behalf of the government, as is shown by the fact that there is a provision that the government may advance the pay and allowances pending the litigation. Would it not be better that these suits should be brought in the name of the Crown, or that some provision should be made whereby difficulties such as these should not be raised in the courts when these payments are demanded. It would also seem to me that we might very well guard against an unwise use of this statute by providing a form which must be signed by the persons who call out the militia. The order calling out the militia is prepared by three justices of the peace or by the mayor, warden or other municipal officers. They use their own language in the requisition and great difficulty has arisen in more than one case as to whether or not the terms of the requisition so drawn were in compliance with the terms of the statute. It would seem to me desirable to provide by statute a form which would acquaint those who sign it that they are undertaking a matter of serious import. No question could afterwards be raised as to the legality of a form so signed. There are a few matters of this kind which I think might well be taken into the consideration of the department, pending the full discussion of the principle of the Bill which I shall not touch upon now.

Mr. TARTE. I desire to call attention to a case of undoubted hardship that has been called to my notice. During the unfortunate strike in Montreal last year some labour associations protested to me against the calling out of the militia in case of strikes. Some of them represented to me that when they were on strike, their friends and even their brothers, who were members of the militia, were called upon to act against them. Could not my hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) find some means of preventing the brothers and friends of men who were on strike acting on the militia in such cases ? This is a matter which I think is worthy of consideration.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest to the minister that section 36 would be just as strong if the words 'the district officer commanding' were omitted, because the district officer commanding would be the senior officer present. In the case brought up by my leader (Mr. R. L. Borden) the district officer commanding the corps at Fredericton, if living in the city of St. John, under the interpretation of the Militia Act could not order the permanent corps at Fredericton to go to St. John but must take the St. John militia.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The points raised by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) are worthy of consideration. As to the person in whose name the suit is to be brought that is an existing difficulty that can be dealt with. With respect to the form to be used by those acting on behalf of the civil power to call the militia to their aid, the difficulty would be to draft a form that would meet all the cases likely to occur. I must confess that I am always very anxious to allow those who have to exercise discretion in such difficult cases to have the widest possible latitude. The matter is worthy of consideration and I shall endeavour with the permission of my hon. friend (Sir Frederick Borden) to see how far such a form can be prepared. The hon. member for St. Mary's division (Mr. Tarte) has mentioned a case of extreme hardship. These are cases that constantly occur and my hon. friend will remember that in 1878 just such cases as he indicates occurred, but I cannot, for the present at all events, see how it is possible to avoid them. Of necessity our active militia are recruited more or less from the ranks of the labouring classes, and it necessarily occurs, particularly in labour riots, that those who are engaged in the riots are members of the labouring classes. So that unless we want to restrict the field of recruiting for the active militia I do not see how we can avoid this difficulty. It is a very serious hardship and something to be absolutely avoided when it is possible to do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister not think also that the municipality should have some voice in the calling out of men when they are responsible for their payment ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite realize that, but sometimes those on whom the payment depends are not as active in such cases as they might be. Possibly those in charge of the city might feel that under the circumstances they were not anxious to burden the municipality with the responsibility for the obligations to be incurred as the result of calling on the militia. I think possibly we might put it that only in case of default by representatives of the municipality would it be possible to call upon the justice of the peace. The point is worthy of consideration but my hon. friend might very well admit that it is not absolutely free from difficulties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. With reference to the very painful cases referred to by the hon. member for St. Mary's division, Montreal (Mr. Tarte) I might point out to him that, to some extent at least, the provision which we are here making to avail ourselves of the permanent force in the first instance relieves that situation.

Mr. TARTE. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And I think that is, perhaps, as far as we can go. With reference to this question of placing checks upon the power or authority of magistrates to call out the militia, I happened to read this morning the King's regulations for the army with reference to this matter. Unfortunately we cannot apply that here because it would be ultra vires, but these regulations make the very excellent provision that the magistrate who sees fit to invoke this authority shall accompany the troops and stand as near the commanding officer as possible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Those regulations contain, as I have said, the very excellent provision that the magistrate, who sees fit to invoke the military authority, shall accompany the troops and stand as near the commanding officer as possible. I think that, if we could put some salutary provision of that kind in our law, it would be well. My hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, will perhaps devise some clause which will make the magistrates come out and take their share of the responsibility.

Mr. TARTE. And of blows.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. minister consider the suggestion that some discretion should be left with the district officer commanding in case the permanent corps or militia should be called out ? Should he not satisfy himself first that the municipal authorities have exhausted every means at their disposal ? Very often what is called a riot is but a trifling affair which could be quelled by a couple of dozen constables ; but when the militia is available and there is the probability of the municipal authorities not having to pay, two justices of the peace, may, on their own responsibility, take the initiative and ignore the municipal authorities and the facts of the situation. Some stop should be put to abuses of this kind. Should the permanent corps be called out, I presume the municipality would not have to pay, as the pay of the men always runs on and they would not be given double pay.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is a special provision to make the municipality pay the expense.

Mr. CLARKE. There ought to be some cast-iron provision so that the municipalty could not escape responsibility. This power of calling out the troops has been abused in the past. Neither the permanent nor the active militia should be called out unless the commanding officer is reasonably satisfied that the occasion demands their interference. I do not think that the decision should rest entirely with two justices of the peace. Should not some power be vested in the district officer commanding ? Should he not have something to say before the troops are called out ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall consider all the suggestions made, but I would like to point out that the machinery which we have continued is the same as has existed for half a century.

Mr. CLARKE. We want to improve the machinery.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There are some old things that cannot be improved.

Mr. TARTE. This law can be.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If there had been any means of improving this section, it seems to me it would have been hit upon during all these fifty years.

Mr. GALLIHER. The suggestion of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) if carried out, might result in a conflict of authority. Suppose the mayor of a municipality and another justice of the peace should deem it necessary to call out the militia and the district officer commanding should have a contrary opinion, you would have a conflict of authority at once. In that case, who would decide ?

Mr. TISDALE. You cannot hold the military man responsible. He has to obey orders. But you might require that a higher civil authority than a magistrate or two justices of the peace should have the calling out of the troops. You might require, for instance, a requisition from a judge of the superior court. But it is essential that the civil authority, and not the military authority, should be responsible.

Mr. CLARKE. When the hon. gentleman speaks of civil authority, I presume he means the authority of the municipalities ?

Mr. TISDALE. No, the administration of justice.

Mr. CLARKE. What I contend is that the municipal authorities should have something to say. Now practically they have nothing. The militia can be called out by two justices of the peace, not responsible to anybody in particular, and without consulting the municipal authorities.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In most cases, it is the mayors of the municipalities who call for military aid. At Valleyfield, Montreal, Toronto, London, Sault Ste. Marie the requisition was made by the mayors.

The next section, 37, is the same as the present law. Section 38 is the same as section 34, subsection 4 of the present law. Section 39 is the same as section 34, subsection 5 of the present law, except that the rates of pay and allowance are increased.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister has increased the pay per horse, but he has left the pay of the men at fifty cents per day. He is giving the horses $1.50 per day, thus increasing their pay fifty cents, but does not increase the pay of the men. I would like to see that in the case of these riots, the officers and men should get five dollars a day and each horse as high as you want to pay him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In order to be able to secure horses quickly, it was thought desirable to make this special provision.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The men are much more difficult to obtain. Lots of these young men lose from two to four dollars a day by being called out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The men are enlisted and obliged to go, but the horses are not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. minister to return to section 36 ? I think that the Minister of Justice will agree with me that some revision of that clause will be necessary. Look at the first two or three lines.

The district officer commanding or the senior officer of the active militia present at any locality shall call out the same or any portion thereof as he considers necessary for the purpose of preventing or supressing any such actual or anticipated riot or disturbance, when thereunto required in writing by the chairman or custodian of the Quarter Sessions of the Peace or by any three justices of the peace, or by any two justices of the peace, and the warden, mayor or any other head of the municipality or county in which such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated as aforesaid, provided always that the permanent force is not available and not in sufficient numbers for the purpose.

The first portion of this section is not intended to apply to the permanent force at all. The minister has proposed an amendment which says the permanent force shall be employed, but he has not provided any machinery for calling them out. If that is to be workable, it must be amended in some way.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is probably quite correct. The fact is, the proviso was a separate clause and the attempt was made to put the two together, and I dare say it was not very skilfully done. That can be changed.

Section 39 is the same as section 34, subsection 5, of the present law, except that there are some changes in the rates of pay. Now, it is proposed to add to section 39—

Mr. HAGGART. Before we pass from section 38, would the minister tell me if I am to understand that this was in the old law ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Then a soldier could act as a constable under the old law ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The second line below says that they are to act as a militia body only.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Now, it is proposed to add to section 39 the following subsection :

2. Any sums collected from a municipality under this section in payment of the services of the permanent force or any portion thereof, shall be forthwith deposited, by the officer or other person by law authorized to receive the same, in some chartered bank, to the credit of the Receiver General on account of the permanent force.

That makes it absolutely clear that the expenses of the calling out of the permanent force must be paid for by the municipality.

Section 40 is the same as the present law, in subsection 6 of section 34.

Mr. TISDALE. This is the section which the leader of the opposition referred to. I remember a case which was up in the House, which satisfied me that this is a most unfair clause to the commanding officer who may be unfortunate enough, against his wish, to be obliged to go out on this unpleasant duty. In addition to these disadvantages he must take the risk of suing. While we are making improvements we should suggest some way of relieving the officer of this unwelcome, unsought and unfair consequence of doing his duty. I would suggest that the government should sue, or some official of the Militia Department—so as to centralize it. Surely it is hard enough for the soldiers to be called out on this duty, especially considering the insults which my hon. friend from North Victoria speaks of—and what he says is undoubtedly true, that the soldier must submit to these insults and not resist—without being compelled to depend upon the municipality for their pay. I hope the minister will consider the matter and prepare a remedy.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think it would be proper to take the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition with regard to the manner in which the suit should be brought, but I fear there might be some difficulty in substituting another official. However, these are things to be considered, and will require to be considered before we can give an answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should be inclined to think that the men should be paid by the government at once. In the past, there has been a great deal of delay. And I know of cases in my own experience. The government is authorized to pay, but not obliged to do so. I think the statute should be made to provide that the government shall pay at once and collect from the municipality. If there is delay, the men should not suffer for it. I have known them to remain without their pay for two or three years because litigation was going on.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Of late, it has been the custom to pay almost immediately. There was some delay in the case of the city of Montreal which could not be avoided. It was the desire of the government to pay the bills at once, but owing to the delay in forwarding the accounts we were unable to do so.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is to determine what the amount of the account is to be, the municipality or the military authority ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The military authority sends in the account.

Mr. CLARKE. But who is to determine whether it is right or not ? I notice that in one case that we have had recently before us, when the municipal authorities served the usual request, the militia were called out: but when it was suggested by the municipality that the militia should be withdrawn the officer commanding the militia, who ought to be a competent judge of the circumstances, kept the militia there. But, his advice or recommendation was overruled, so far as payment was concerned. What position does the military authority occupy under such conditions as this ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The question was before the Department of Justice, and it was decided there that the same authority which called out the militia was competent to dispense with its services, and that the officer commanding, when he was so called upon to withdraw the troops, should have done so, perhaps. But, in any case, as the law was, the municipality were not liable beyond the days for which it required the troops and during which they agreed that the troops should serve.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the municipal authorities, then, to be the judges as to whether or not a state of riot exists, and when that state of riot ceases ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. And the military have nothing to do with it ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. CLARKE. So that men who have had no experience in handling men or putting down mobs have nothing to say under the circumstances, but the justices of the peace who invoked the aid of the militia can say when the time has come to dispense with the services of the militia ? The officer commanding has nothing to say as to when the troops should be withdrawn ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Clearly.

Mr. CLARKE. Surely that is not satisfactory ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The militia only come to the aid of the civil authorities, and they have nothing to do with it except support the civil authority. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) should take one horn of the dilemma or the other. A little while ago he desired that the civil authorities should have control, that the mayor should determine when the militia are to be called out. If we wished to put the burden on the mayor, surely the mayor should have power to say when the militia should be removed. For my part I am not disposed to agree that this power should be left absolutely to the municipality. I think there are occasions when large public interests may be jeopardized, and it may be important in the public interest, without regard to the municipality and without regard to the mayor, that the militia should be called out. It may be that the mayor, for his own purposes, may not be anxious to call on the militia authorities. For instance, it may be that he does not wish to burden the municipality, and so may hesitate to act. There is no reason why three justices of the peace should not act.

Mr. CLARKE. I am sure the hon. gentleman, Mr. Fitzpatrick would not wish to misrepresent anything I said here. I was rather chary about the right of the civil authority—these two justices of the peace —to call out the permanent force without the district officer commanding the permanent force having some discretion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is right.

Mr. CLARKE. That is the position I took, and I maintain it still. I say that in case of riot, if the aid of the military authorities is invoked, those authorities should have something to say as to when the services of the troops should be dispensed with. I think it is anomalous that persons who have had no experience in these matters should have the right to call out the troops whether their services are really required or not, and that the same person should have the right to say that the troops are no longer required—perhaps because these civil authorities have had an opportunity to consult the opinion of their constituents, and have found it averse to continuing the services of the militia. If more discretion were given the commanding officer of the troops in calling them out or withdrawing them, there would be less likelihood of the local or municipal authority being led away by the sentiments which might prevail among the majority of the people at the time. I agree with the Minister of Justice that there are occasions when, no matter what the local opinion may be, the services of troops may be required to protect the public interests. But I think in the condition of the law at present there is too much power given, on the one hand to the civil authority, and too little power given to the military authority. It is because of those anomalies that I have drawn the attention of the minister to them, and to what I consider defects in the law which I think ought to be remedied.

Mr. TISDALE. We must be very cautious in making legislation dealing with these matters. We do not want to confound the municipal and the military authorities. It would be going too far to say that the military authorities should turn out the troops whenever they pleased. We must be careful to keep the military power in check, and make it, so far as consistent with public safety, secondary to the civil power, otherwise there would be danger to our institutions. That is the principle upon which our legislation has gone, and it should be continued, in my opinion. That is the principle which has prevailed for ages in the mother country, and it has been found to work promptly and effectively. It is well that lawless elements should understand that there is a power behind the civil power strong enough to make them obey the law. The trouble in the United States is that it is an elective machinery that controls the militia. The militia of the states are the forces called upon to suppress riots, and they are under the command of the governor, who is elected by the people. The military authorities of the United States can only act when the country is in danger from foreign enemies. The beauty of our system is that no politician, be he municipal or parliamentary, has any voice in starting or stopping the machinery of the militia force, and in my opinion that is the only safe and proper system to allow. Though I have been for many years connected with the militia, and am still connected with it in a way, still I should resist by all means in my power the slightest interference with the civil authority on the part of the military authority. We want it well understood that the military power exists for only one purpose, or two purposes, namely, for the defence of the country and the protection of our civil rights.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In answer to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke), I may say that it seems to me clear that if we condemn the municipality to seek the aid of the militia and to pay for that aid, we must give them the right to say when they will dispense with that aid. I cannot very well see how you can delegate to the officer commanding, the power to maintain the troops in service under pay, in defiance of the wishes of the authority which has invoked their aid and who is responsible for their pay.

Coming now to clause 41, that is the same as section 37 of the present Act, amended in 1898, omitting the restriction as to the imperial officer. That is one of the important clauses, as it opens the door to the appointment of an officer of the Canadian militia, or in fact the appointment of any officer within the British empire. As I have stated before this afternoon, we obtained the consent of the imperial authorities to this change.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there any general complaint made by the militia authorities, by the officers and men of the militia corps of Canada, that the general officer commanding, who hitherto has been a British officer, did not discharge his duties satisfactorily? Has there been any good reason advanced why the scope of the selection should be enlarged?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the question should rather be put the other way: Is there any good reason why a country like this, with six millions of independent people, capable of governing themselves in every respect, should not be permitted to place at the head of its defence forces an officer of its own force? It seems to me there is absolutely no good reason why that door should not be open, giving us a wider choice, or why that invidious reflection upon the capacity of Canadian officers should remain any longer in our statutes.

Mr. CLARKE. Has there been any complaint made as to the efficiency of the general officers commanding hitherto, any objections made by the officers and men of the militia force? Is there any record available of any discussion of this matter to show that these distinguished officers who have been appointed from time to time have not discharged their duties satisfactorily?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I refer my hon. friend to his hon. friend who sits in front of him (Mr. Hughes, Victoria).

Mr. CLARKE. I have consulted my hon. friend in front of me on many occasions where militia affairs were in question, and I have never yet regretted having done so. He has always given me sound advice. But the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) is not responsible for this Bill. I think it was a reasonable request to make of the Minister of Militia when I asked him if there had been any complaint that the efficiency of our militia force had not been subserved and advanced in the highest possible degree by the appointment of a British officer as general officer commanding. Has there been any demand for a change on the part of any responsible person in the militia force of Canada ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. As the minister has referred to me, I might point out to him that under the system whereby a British officer was appointed we were able to get rid of an objectionable man ; whereas under the system as proposed we cannot get rid of him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Admitting that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) has put a fair question, still I do not think it is involved necessarily in this matter at all. The question is rather : Has Canada assumed such a prominent position by her growth, by the heroic acts of her militia officers at home and in the South African war, as to entitle her to appoint one of her own sons to the command of her militia ? Has she not assumed a position when at least there should be removed from the militia of this country the reflection that we cannot rear a man competent to take command of our own forces ?

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman surely does not assume that the growth of the country has been checked in any way by the fact that hitherto her forces have been commanded by a British officer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will my hon. friend contend that it is a reflection upon the capacity of British officers to say that Canadian officers may hereafter occupy that position ? Is it necessarily a reflection upon them ? What is the object of the question ?

Mr. CLARKE. I am asking the minister with the greatest possible respect if there has been any complaint, any objection made to the appointment of British officers to occupy the position of general officer commanding. What is the reason for this change ? I ask upon what ground is the change being sought ?

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to assume that the statutes of this country can be changed without any complaint or demand for such change ? Is that the attitude the Department of Militia is going to take ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am quite prepared to submit this change to the judgment of the people of Canada to say whether it is a sound change or not. I do not think I am called upon to say anything as to the service of distinguished imperial officers in this country. They have served the country well according to their lights. I have nothing to say against any of them. I have had experience with quite a number and I have not a single word of reflection to utter, but I do say that it seems to me that it is high time the provision in the Canadian statute which involves a reflection upon the capacity of our own officers should be removed. It does not follow that we shall appoint a Canadian officer at once. It will be a matter for the administration to consider whether he shall be appointed this year, or next year, or the year after, or ten years hence, but that the ban, the reflection upon the capacity of our Canadian officers should be removed from the Canadian law, seems to me imperative at this period. I may say that the imperial authorities concur in that view.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Without discussing, for the present, the question of principle which has been raised, I would like to ask whether the words in this section have been very carefully considered. It seems to me that it might be at least open to argument that they confine the appointment to an officer of the Canadian militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not intended.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Bill deals with the active militia, including the permanent force and the reserve militia, and then it says that :

> There shall be appointed an officer of rank not lower than that of colonel to be the general officer commanding the militia.

I would be rather inclined to think that the selection of the general officer commanding would be confined to the Canadian militia, with which alone the Bill deals and if you wish to leave it open to appoint an officer not in the Canadian militia, you would require to say so specially. This, however, is only a question of drafting, but still it would not be well to pass a statute in words which would afterwards be constructed to mean something that we did not intend.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall consider that because the intention of the section is to open the command to the whole empire.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understood that.

Mr. TISDALE. I did propose to and probably will say something on the effect of this clause at a later period. I did not propose to say anything to-day, but when the Minister of Militia and Defence made the extraordinary statement that he made to-day about a reflection being cast upon the Canadian militia by the old statute, which says than an imperial officer shall be appointed to the command, I felt it was rather incumbent upon me, feeling as I do upon the question, to make some remarks in reply. This has been the law for a very long time and if the hon. minister will look back at the debates and especially at the speeches of two of the greatest men who have ever lived in Canada—Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Cartier—giving the broad reasons why such a provision is placed in the statute, he will understand better the justification for it. The reasons given by these statesmen are given by men of greater knowledge than I could ever dream of being and by men, who equalled in knowledge the best men that we can find in the world. If we turn back to these reasons we will find something broader on this question than a mere question of there being a reflection upon the militia. I am as proud of the militia as any hon. gentleman here. I have felt in it all the interest that it was possible for a plain man to feel in the militia, especially in the early days, and yet I fail to see where this is any reflection at all upon the militia. I should be sorry to think that the best officers in Canada felt it to be a reflection upon them, to say that there were officers superior to them in capacity and in the knowledge of actual warfare in the great imperial army. I am proud to know that they are so much superior to anything we hope ever to be, because the world, in my opinion, does not hold their equal. The history of the greatest empire of the world has proven that. But there is a broader question than the one which the hon. minister has raised, and this is why I regret having heard the hon. minister make the statement that he has made. This question of Canadian militia has more than one side. The first duty of the militia is the defence of Canada, but there is a broader side, as time passes, its imperial side, which was disclosed not long ago, when the sons of Canada joined the great imperial army and did credit to their country and the empire. If we are ever in a war, it will be a war of the empire and not a war of Canada. We are a very potent part of the empire, but in the preparations for war, the formidable expenditure and everything that is necessary to protect the empire, we are very small compared with the British empire, and if we fight at all, we will be fighting with the British army, either in defending other parts of the empire or because the British army have come to our defence when we are assailed here. How futile, how small would be the efforts that we could make as against a great nation if we had not the British army with us ? I cannot understand why it should be considered a reflection to have a British officer in command of the Canadian forces. We have proved the wisdom of having an imperial officer of great experience and capacity, although we have not always got one of that character, but we expect to, and I am sure that we have one now that we are all satisfied with. It seems to me that this is not a fitting time for making this change, and that there is no present necessity for it when we are so well provided as we are now with the gentleman we have in command of our militia. I say then that I regret that the hon. minister had no stronger arguments than those he has presented to justify this change. If I had attempted to do as he has done, I think I could have found some broader arguments in favour of such a change, or at all events looking forward to such a change as that he now proposes to make. In 1898 this proposal came up incidentally in this House, and the hon. minister was then, as I was, against it. He was the gentleman who was in power. I expressed my views and they are in 'Hansard.' When we were on that side of the House, and when we proposed anything in regard to the militia, we were opposed by the hon. gentlemen—not by the hon. minister himself—who then sat on this side of the House, and I will further say that when we were on the side of that House, we dealt with the militia without raising any political questions.

In the remarks which I made then, I admitted that the time would probably come when it would be wise to discuss the question. We then raised the pay of the imperial officer commanding our militia, and we did so because it was found that we paid much less than was paid by the other colonies, which in most cases had a smaller militia force. The correspondence which we then had with the imperial government was published in 'Hansard,' and I am glad to say that the increase of pay was agreed to unanimously. Our chief justification in raising the salary then, was the fact that it was conceded that we needed an imperial officer, and I want to know what has since occurred that has changed the necessity for that. To be a true soldier, and especially to be a true militiaman, you must be a true patriot, and I have sufficient faith in the patriotism of the officers of the Canadian militia to believe, that if they thought that a better man could be got from the imperial army—considering the greater experience he must have in war and in military matters generally than a Canadian could have, our Canadian militia officers would vote to retain the imperial officer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This Bill does not aim to prevent an imperial officer being appointed.

Mr. TISDALE. Of course it does not debar an imperial officer but I am afraid that in time such will be the result of it. As has been pointed out many a time, Canadians can now win their way to the position of general officer commanding through the British army. Canadians are now becoming prominent in the imperial service, and I hope to see the day when a Canadian officer of the imperial army will command our militia force. I would be the first to hold up my hands for such a man. That is the kind of man I want to see in command of the militia. I know, and the minister knows, that political pressure has been brought to bear upon him to do things that he sometimes resisted, and that sometimes he had to submit to. It does not matter what party is in power, once you get this law on the statute-book, the politicians are not going to be easy until they force upon the country some friend of theirs, whether he be fit for the position or not. We on this side of the House, as true Canadians will support the minister in this splendid scheme for the strengthening of our military forces, but we want to take no chances, that there can be any manœuvering of any sort to prevent us keeping such a capable general officer commanding as we have now, or to prevent us from getting one equal to him from the imperial army. I was relieved to hear the minister say to-day that there would be a provision in the Bill, so that in case of war the command of the forces would be given to an imperial officer.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I undestand that in case of war, if the general officer commanding was a Canadian, he would be superseded by an imperial officer ?

Mr. TISDALE. That is the intention, I believe, and I cannot imagine any greater slur on Canadian officers. The imperial authorities have seen that danger of this move, but generous as they are in their dealings with us, they simply said : We tender our advice, you can go your own way but we will take care to remove one of the danger points, and we will take the precaution that we shall have a thoroughly competent officer in case of war. The Minister of Militia has conceded my argument, because he did say that it might be a long time before they would put this provision of the Act in force. If that be so, why should we bring up such a disturbing element ? I am afraid that if we pass this provision, it will not be very long until we will find some one, who is perhaps incompetent, forcing his way to this position.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) stated that he knew that political pressure was exercised, and that the minister had to resist it.

Mr. TISDALE. Sometimes ; yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I should like to know where there is not pressure of that kind brought to bear, whether it be in the British army, or in any other army of the world. And with reference to the British army, possibly it may not be improper for me to say that there is a very strong suspicion that influence, very much below the level of political influence, is exercised in regard to appointments. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) fears that if we take this power to appoint a Canadian or a New Zealander or an Australian, or some one outside the charmed circle of the British army, political influence will be brought to bear. I should like to ask, Sir : Are we not fit to govern ourselves ? Is it possible that we can govern ourselves in everything else but in this ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) would be deeply offended if it were suggested that we in Canada were still unfit for self-government in any other respect.

If we are able to appoint a Deputy Minister of the Interior and a deputy minister of every other department, even to Deputy Minister of Militia, and are able ourselves to govern each of these great departments successfully, is it possible that we are unable to govern ourselves in the matter of defence ? If it be true that we cannot, then the sooner we get the experience and learn to govern ourselves in this respect the better it will be for this country. This is one of the means by which we propose to acquire that experience. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) says :—Oh ! but you can get a Canadian officer now. That is true, but he must perforce pass through the ordeal of being an imperial officer. While I have no objection whatever to an imperial officer, I do object to a restriction which will prevent us from utilizing, for instance, a man who has served with distinction in quelling rebellions in our own country or who has served with equal or greater distinction along with British officers on the battlefields of South Africa. I do not think that my hon. friend's position is well taken when he says that this is a most inopportune moment to raise this question. Why is it an inopportune moment ? My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) has not told us. I consider it an exceedingly opportune moment. I will say, without hesitation, that I have been strongly of the opinion for the last four years, during which time I have administered the affairs of the Militia Department, that that restriction ought to be removed, and I am happy that the hour has arrived during my administration, when that restriction will be removed.

Mr. HAGGART. It is removed only in time of peace.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I was coming to that. My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) says that in time of war we are still to have the benefit of the services of an imperial officer. Certainly we are, how could it be otherwise ? A provision will be introduced here, that when the Canadian militia is called out to serve in time of war, to serve jointly with the imperial forces, then His Majesty should have power to appoint a senior general officer who should command the joint army. What other provision than this could you have ? It is absolutely essential that the King shall have that power in time of war, but so far as insurrections or rebellions within this country or the repelling of an attack that might ultimately result in war are concerned, the officer in command, whether he be an imperial officer or a Canadian officer, shall have complete control of the militia and, as I said a moment ago, it seems to me desirable, if we are to learn the art of self-government in respect of defence as we believe we have learned it in other respects, it is desirable that we should begin at once or as soon as it may be convenient to do so, by placing the Canadian militia and the development of that militia under the control of Canadian officers. No reflection on anybody is intended ; there is simply the desire to assert ourselves upon this point as we assert ourselves on other points. There is simply the desire on my part to remove what, I repeat, is a reflection, an undeserved and undesirable reflection existing on our own statute books upon the character and capacity of our officers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the hon. minister (Sir Frederick Borden) kindly answer the question I submitted in reference to the term of office of this officer and the method of his removal.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is appointed by Order in Council and the power which appoints him can remove him. The term of office will be fixed by regulations.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And what becomes of him afterwards ? When a general officer commanding in Canada a few years ago was retired from this country he was shipped elsewhere in the service of the empire, but what will become of a Canadian officer under such circumstances ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If in the future we should happen to have a general officer commanding who was not to the liking of my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) and we desired to remove him, the situation might have its inconveniences, but I do not think that will be put forward as a good reason for not taking the step we propose.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. Is the $6,000 salary an increase ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I did not intend again speaking on this question of the selection of a general officer commanding were it not for the fact that, judging from the tenor of the hon. minister's remarks, there is no disposition to do otherwise than obtain as heretofore our general officer commanding from the imperial army. There are many reasons why, I think, the law should not be changed. While I have absolute faith in the ability of Canadians, when given the opportunity, still it must be admitted that the field from which to select here is very limited. Suppose the office were to fall vacant to-morrow, upon whom would the hon. minister call if he wanted to choose an officer from the Canadian service ? He would undoubtedly select his man from the permanent corps, and that corps is very limited in number. While many of the officers in that corps are very excellent men, they are still in nearly every case but office men, executive rather than administrative men. Then there would be great rivalry among them, and the chances are influences would be brought to bear on the minister which cannot now be brought to bear. I am inclined to believe that any little balm there might be in making our lads feel that any one of them might become the general officer commanding, that would be more than neutralized by the evil influences that would be introduced. For my part, I care not in what part of the world a man is born so long as he is a good man ; but if it be deemed essential that we should select a man who was born in Canada, we could easily find in the British service to-day competent men possessing that qualification. Let me point another drawback, and I am only supposing cases because I accept the statement of the hon. minister that we will still follow the old tradition of taking our general officer commanding from the imperial service. But let us suppose that he will take a Canadian officer. After that officer will have served his four years term, what will become of him ? He will be retired on half pay, and he will thus be a burden on the treasury. But in the case of a British officer, when his term expires in Canada, he returns to the old land and is there taken care of. And suppose we should find that the Canadian officer appointed was unsuitable, as some imperial officers have been, under the present system, we can request the imperial officer to resign, as was done in one case a few years ago, and he will go back to the imperial service, but in the case of a Canadian officer, we would not find it so easy to get rid of him. What we require is a practical, competent field officer rather than a mere executive officer, but if we were to choose our general officer commanding from the Canadian forces, we would have to select him from one of the various executive departments of the country, and our selection would be very limited. Then there is another point, and that is the independence of the general officer commanding. In this connection I make no reference to the present minister, because I have always had very great pleasure in endorsing the many good measures he has brought in from time to time for the benefit of our militia, and, as was pointed out by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) to-day, the Liberal-Conservative party have set

hon. gentlemen opposite an example by the very fair and non-partisan criticism which they have given the administration of our militia by the minister now in office. But we must not lose sight of the fact than an imperial officer can always return to the imperial service. It is known here that Lord Dundonald is not acting in his own interests by remaining in Canada, but is sacrificing himself for the benefit of the empire. Had he remained in active service in the old land, he would no doubt be in a much higher position relatively than the one he now occupies, and in saying this I know whereof I speak. Such an officer is certainly in a better position to stand by what he considers right than possibly could be a Canadian officer more under the control of the minister, and one who might be appointed for political purposes. The hon. minister has hinted to-day that in England these military appointments are sometimes demanded for other and less noble motives than political, but certainly an imperial officer must be in a better position to assert himself than one who has no future once he leaves the Canadian service. I maintain that an officer commanding who would be in a position semi-independent of the minister is the one who can do best service in the interests of our militia. But the most important feature of the whole matter is this. This change, coming at the present time, may be regarded by very many as a reflection upon our present very excellent general officer commanding. The public will not stop to consider that it is the outcome of the conduct of past general officers commanding in Canada, but will look upon it as due to something that occurred in the regime of the present general officer commanding. I know that the minister to-day has a better idea of his power and duties in relation to the general officer commanding than he had a few years ago, and I do not think I am divulging any secret when I say that the Minister of Militia and two-thirds of the parliamentarians of the Dominion, from the present minister down, used to be of the opinion that there was some little unwritten or mysterious power which the general officer coming from the British service had in Canada—in other words that he had a little power in himself outside of the people of Canada which he could exercise independent of the Minister of Militia; and I claim to have had a little to do in giving these people a proper conception of the functions pertaining to the general officer commanding. My good friend the minister told us this afternoon that while he was in favour of this change, he had a high opinion of the British officers. Well, I am not in favour of this change, and I have not such a wonderfully high opinion of the British officer as some people have. Nevertheless, the great point in the whole Bill is that you remove the connecting link between the Canadian militia and the imperial army. However, there is one clause that may be a kind of saver to the minister, and that is that when the colonial forces are serving with the imperial forces the imperial appointee shall command. That, of course, will preserve the union of the two forces in the mind of the people of Canada, and to that extent will offset the evil done by this clause. I could not let the remarks of the minister this afternoon pass without pointing out that there were arguments, and very strong arguments, in favour of preserving the law in its present form, so far as this section is concerned.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I doubt very much if the clause which we are now discussing was framed because of the inefficiency of previous general officers commanding the Canadian militia. To my mind, this is nothing more or less than a declaration—and a very fitting one—that there is no honour in the gift of the Canadian government too good for a Canadian, provided that Canadian, by attainments and experience, be worthy of it. Nevertheless, I sympathize deeply with a great deal of what the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has just said. I would take second place to no man in wishing the continuance of the close connection between the motherland and this country. But I cannot, for the life of me, see why this should weaken the tie in the least. I believe that it would have the effect, if anything, of strengthening that tie. If there is one thing more than another that would tend to build up in Canada the feeling of independence and the desire to become a separate power, it is that we should consider ourselves inferior to the people of any other part of the British empire. We wish to speak in no braggart way; we do not wish to assume that we are superior to or better than the people of other parts of the empire. But that we are their equal, I think we may say without boasting. And as an example of that, I would give the hon. member for North Victoria, who acquitted himself with such credit in South Africa, proving himself fully the equal, I think, of the imperial officers with whom he came in contact. I do recognize the difficulty of opening the door to political intrigue. That is the strongest point, possibly, that the hon. gentleman has made. But I have confidence in the strength of this government and in the strength of the present Minister of Militia, and I believe that, for some time to come at least, the power to appoint a Canadian general officer commanding will not be exercised unless we are so happy as to have a gentleman so well qualified by experience and ability that he is, so to speak, ear-marked for this high post. We must not leave out of consideration the fact that we have in Canada an excellent educational institution in the Military College at Kingston, and that graduating from that institution, year by year, we have some of the brightest young men in Canada. We would like to attract them to the permanent service of the Canadian militia, and it seems to me we should hold out the inducement to ability of possible appointment to fill the highest military post which is in the gift of the Canadian government. We do not tie ourselves in any way to do this. But suppose that at some future time, in further participation in the wars of the empire, some Canadian should come forward and prove himself fitted to command. Take Sir Percy Girouard himself. His name was mentioned by the hon. member for North Victoria in an earlier debate. Why should Sir Percy Girouard be debarred simply because he is of Canadian birth ? It seems to me that is an excellent reason why he should be appointed, not debarred. And so I am in sympathy with the change proposed by the Minister of Militia, and will support it when it comes to a vote.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 42 is unchanged——

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. If the Minister of Militia has anything to reply to these gentlemen I will take my seat, but if he has no reply, I would like to say a few words. I notice that every hon. member who has discussed this question has been a captain or a colonel, and probably an aspirant for the generalship. Now, I am neither. But I was a soldier once, for ten days. We organized a company in our town to learn the use of arms that we might repel the invasion of our country which took place some forty years ago. So I think I have some claims to speak on this question, since I have been a military man. But I do not wish to discuss the question further than this : I think that we should be free to select from among British subjects, no matter where they were born, the man who has the ability to lead us in the defence of our country in case of war or trouble. I do not think we should be confined to the men who happen to have graduated from Kingston, or to those who happen to have been born in Canada, but we should have the whole British empire to select from. I hope that if this clause reads otherwise, you will change it, so that we may be free to select the best man and the best Britisher that lives. You should not for a moment say that you will confine your selection to a Canadian. I think that would be an insult to all us British soldiers. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) said he had not much to say in favour of the British officer. I have a good deal to say. We owe this country to the British officer. Had it not been for the British officer, we would all be Canucks or some other nationality here. They fought for us at Quebec and everywhere. Wherever the British officer is called he does not run away. He does not help the British army to conquer and then run off home, but stays to the end. He goes to the place where his duty calls him, to stay and to die, if necessary, for the cause he believes to be right. Britain has given Canadians work at home and abroad. Hon. members will remember that General Williams was a Nova Scotian. He was selected by the British to lead their army, and he defended Kars to the last. When they are ready to give us Canadians employment, should we hesitate to give them any position we have to give ? I think not. Suppose we had war between Canada and any other country. We have a militia of fifty or one hundred thousand men ; suppose they are ruled by a Canadian officer. We call upon the British people to give us help, and they will give it readily, and will send to our assistance one hundred thousand men or more. Are you going to say that the British army coming over to help us must be commanded by a Canadian ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I should think not. So you should give every Britisher a chance to be commander in chief of your army. Let us strengthen this grand empire, and not insert the thin end of the wedge, which, if driven home, will rend it asunder.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 42 and section 43 are word for word as in the present law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But since these sections were enacted, other heads of departments have been created. The minister is very properly reorganizing his department, and now we have the director general and other chief officers on the staff, and I would ask why these officers should not be included ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. After consulting the best authorities on this point, it was thought best to leave these two officers, without whom it would be utterly impossible to organize an army. As to the other branches—the Intelligence branch, the Director General of Ordinance, the Engineer Department, and so on—they have all been organized under general authority given under the present law, which is continued in this new Bill. The form here proposed gives more elasticity to the organization and more authority to the Governor in Council to make changes such as may be necessary from time to time. We follow, in the organization of the Canadian militia, very much the lines of the British army, and it is therefore desirable that we should not be, so to speak, tied up too tightly, by statute, but should be free to follow the lines of the British organization or any other that we may desire to follow. That is the only reason. We shall never have an army without an adjutant general and a quartermaster general. Therefore, these two were left in. There is no stronger reason than that.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. In section 41, the salary of the general officer commanding is said to be $6,000 per annum in full of all pay and allowances; but in clause 43 the pay of the adjutant general and the quartermaster general is said to be $3,200 per annum, but without the statement that it is in full of all pay and allowances. I understand at the present that these gentlemen are in receipt of $2,800 per year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $3,200 at present.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. May I ask the minister if they receive any allowances at present besides that?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, that is a portion of the present pay they receive. The statute I think provides for $2,600.

An hon. MEMBER. $2,800.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Perhaps it is, and the difference between that and $3,200 is allowances, at present.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Does that put these gentlemen in any better position, as far as pay goes, than they were before?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Probably it would.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. It is to be hoped it does, because their positions are important, and they have been rather underpaid I think in times past.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It may be pointed out that this is just the same pay as similar officers in other departments receive. But the minister knows that these officers must have very expensive uniforms, they must support the dignity of their position. The minister knows that these officers are called upon to perform certain functions whenever visiting officers come to the city, and are called upon to do more or less informal entertaining otherwise. The minister knows that as well as any one living. He knows the incidental expenses of these officers are much greater than they are in any other branch of the service for corresponding positions. I would be pleased, and I am sure the country would be much pleased, if the minister could see his way clear to make the salary what it is stated here, with certain allowances.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The pay is fixed at $3,200, and it is open to the Governor in Council, by regulation, to add to this in the way of allowances. The next section, 44, is the same as section 40 of the present law. Section 45 is the same as section 41 of the present law as amended in 1900.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In connection with section 45 of the proposed law the minister provides here:—

> In and for each of the military districts there shall be appointed by the Governor in Council an officer, of rank not lower than that of lieutenant-colonel, who shall, subject to the regulations, command the militia in his district.

I presume these are intended to be the district officers commanding.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister used the term 'district officer commanding' in section 36 of the present act. But this is the first notification he has given that there is such an official in the district. It is not defined in any way.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It would be defined in the regulation, but I will take note of that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This is an important clause. As the minister knows, I have previously advocated that these district officers commanding should be tied up, so to speak, office men, executive men, who would be responsible for routine, for the correspondence, for forwarding requisitions, for inspection, for arms and accoutrements; in other words, to see that the various corps throughout the various districts were preserved in a state of efficiency so far as the office work might go, so far as making up shortages and keeping everything in good form and so on; in other words, that these should be office men purely and simply. In addition to that I would suggest for the minister's consideration that there should be besides an officer who will take command of the troops when they go to drill. Let one officer be responsible for the maintenance of the efficiency of the equipments and the routine of the office work, and let the other officer be held responsible for the efficiency of the various corps in drill. The minister knows well that a man in an office gets to be a good office man, and a man in the saddle gets to be a good field man. I am satisfied that the minister will consider this proposition as of great advantage.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree entirely with what my hon. friend says, and I hope to overcome that difficulty and to render these men less office men, as he calls them, than they are now, by increasing the district staff so that they will be able to perform the real functions they were intended to perform, the functions of command. Besides that I may say that the general, Lord Dundonald, has a scheme which I think has been promulgated, at any rate it has been mentioned, by which he proposes to group one, or two, or three districts together for the purpose of higher command, so that there will be over that group of districts an officer of the type which my hon. friend describes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But the minister fails to catch the point of the debate. These men are now permanent corps men. Now there are many men who are occupying positions in the various corps of the active militia throughout the country, and outside the permanent corps, there are any number of them, who if given a chance, would be as competent to command the militia, each in his district, as any of these district officers commanding. My point is this, that under the present system which has prevailed in this country for so long, an officer who does not get a chance to be of the regular district staff, of the regular permanent corps, has scarcely ever a chance of commanding a brigade. I maintain that there are officers who can command brigades and divisions, and have done so, as well as any gentlemen of the district. These gentlemen have had experience of the district. I think the minister should give every opportunity to such men of commanding brigades in the various camps. Let those gentlemen be in any official position they choose, but give officers other than of the permanent force an opportunity to command these brigades. As it is now, officers of the active militia have scarcely any opportunity of filling any position out of the ordinary routine. When the minister sent the last force to South Africa he complained that he was at a loss to get officers to command, he told me so. I reminded him at the time that he had not commenced to touch the fringe of the class of officers who were competent to command. In the early corps that were sent out the officers were largely taken from the permanent force of the country. I pointed out that I could get him two or three men from my own regiment capable of commanding, and I did get officers from my own regiment who were sent out as commanding officers, and sailed from Canada for South Africa. One of them was so highly regarded in his own force and in the field that he is still retained in South Africa, at a salary fully equal to that which the minister is paying the general officer commanding here by this Bill. The country is full of young men and middle aged men who are capable of taking any command he may place upon them.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. At the last camp in Niagara there were two brigades of infantry and one of cavalry, all of which were commanded by members of the non-permanent force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That plan has been adopted by a former general officer commanding, and in this Bill there is authority taken to create a higher grade of offcers temporarily, that of brigadier general.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. They will be permanent corps men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not necessarily.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. My point is to give these appointments to active militia officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In nearly all the cases to which my hon. friend has referred and to which I have referred, officers of the active militia were selected.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Speaking of the remark made by my hon. friend from Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) that these positions at the Niagara camp were held by certain officers last year I am glad to hear it. I was not at that camp last year but I had the honour of being there in former years, and I saw scarcely any officers of the active militia of the country filling these positions. I did see last year serious complaints in the Toronto press to the effect that certain favoured officers, not of the rural militia, but of the cities were placed in these various positions at the Niagara camp.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I must say that while this is the case I would be very glad indeed to see the position of brigadier filled sometimes by men from the country corps who are rattling good men and not given exclusively to men from the city corps.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This complaint was made by the member for Haldimand and Monck himself.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In regard to the men selected for several years I have absolutely refused to interfere in the slightest particular with the selection of these officers by the general officer commanding. Whoever is chosen, is chosen by the general officer commanding, and he is responsible. I felt that this was the proper course to pursue and I have pursued it.

Section 46 is the same precisely as section 42 of the present law. Section 47 is the same as section 44 of the present law. Section 48 replaces section 45 of the present law. Section 49 is new :

All commissions and appointments in the militia of Canada existing when this Act comes into force shall be deemed to have been issued and made in the militia under this Act.

Of course, the reason for that is obvious. Sections 50 and 51 replace section 47 of the present law. Section 52 is new :

The honorary rank of major-general may be conferred on retirement upon colonels who have held the higher executive appointments on the headquarters staff or in the department for valuable services to the country.

This is simply taking power on special occasions for very meritorious service to confer this rank. For instance, in the case of the general officer commanding it may be availed of. Take the case of the late general officer commanding, General O'Grady-Haly, or of other officers who have held a similar position and who would like to have their names retained upon our establishment list ; this will give the government of Canada an opportunity of conferring this honour, or it may be applied to men who have served with honour on the staff in Canada.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why should not the hon. minister go a little farther than the headquarters staff? I can speak feelingly on this subject because I am a member of the headquarters staff and I can speak for those who are not of it. Why not make it applicable to the whole militia? There are men who might distinguish themselves in the field to whom it might be applied. Suppose that an officer in command of the force in the field were to distinguish himself after which he desired to retire, why should this honour not be conferred upon him?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it might be dangerous to extend it beyond the present limitation, but I will think that over.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The insertion of the word 'or' after the word 'department' making it read 'or for valuable services rendered to the country' would meet the case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 53 is substantially the same as section 48 of the present law. Section 54 replaces sections 49 and 50 of the present law. That is one of the clauses to which I referred at the beginning of this discussion to-day, as one of the subjects which was under discussion and in regard to which I received the approval of the imperial authorities to make the alteration. Under the law as it is now, an imperial officer coming to Canada, of junior date of appointment, would immediately take precedence over a Canadian of senior rank. Take the case of a captain. A captain in the Canadian militia whose appointment dated back ten years is on parade; an imperial officer of the same rank, a captain appointed perhaps a month ago, or just before he crossed the Atlantic, would immediately take precedence and would command the Canadian captain although the latter ten years his senior.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is only provided he took his service in the Canadian militia. The English captain per se has no control in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The present law prescribes that he has.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Only where he takes service in Canada.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Suppose he took service?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Well he would have to come and be gazetted here. I agree that this is a very proper provision. He has to be gazetted but the custom was to gazette these officers to a rank senior to that which they actually held.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The next section, 55, is the same as section 52 of the present law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Before leaving section 54 which is in connection with commissions, the question has arisen about the position of royal military college graduates. I know that under the College Graduates Act a royal military college graduate upon graduation is made a lieutenant in the engineers. It may not be necessary, inasmuch as that Act is continued in force, to embody it in this Bill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that is provided for in the Royal Military College Act. Section 56 is the same as in the present law with the exception of:

Mounted corps, to whom saddlery may be issued as prescribed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The words 'mounted corps' in the original draft appeared as 'mounted militia.' Why not change the word 'corps' to 'officers'? Why not take in all mounted officers?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is worth considering.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It will never do to make a distinction. Why should an officer of a cavalry regiment get any consideration that the good colonel of the 37th regiment would not receive? A great many officers have great difficulty in securing proper equipment. Why not make it include horse equipment instead of saddles because horse equipment includes bridles and saddles?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Saddlery includes that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Make it apply to all mounted officers irrespective of corps.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think that is a good suggestion.

Section 57 of the Bill will be dropped. It is unnecessary because the Customs Act and an Order in Council framed thereunder provide for this clause. Section 58 is practically the same as ection 53 of the present law. Section 59 is the same as section 56 of the present law, except that the following words are omitted:

And he shall be entitled to quittance by certificate, and to see such quittance recorded in the book of his corps on returning such article.

These words are considered to be unnecessary.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is a great deal of difficulty experienced by officers in getting the equipment of men who are not leaving Canada, but only their own regimental district. Would it not be advisable to amend it by saying: 'About to leave Canada or about to leave their own regimental district.' The officers have great difficulty in finding men who go to the Northwest and elsewhere.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am aware that that is a source of great trouble. I had a communication recently from Major Lydon, of Montreal, in regard to the difficulty he has in connection with the clothing issued to the cadets. I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes), would put his suggestion into writing later on.

Section 60 is the same as section 57 of the present law slightly modified. The word 'permission' in the Bill is substituted for the word 'order' in the Act. It reads: by 'permission' of the commanding officer. Section 61 is new.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where did the minister get that?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. From the Commonwealth Defence Bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is very badly worded.

Sir. FREDERICK BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman object to the sense?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it provided by the imperial regulations?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not in the Imperial Act, but I think it is in the regulations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There must be some army regulations about it, because I think the question arose in Halifax, and the permission of the general officer commanding had to be obtained before some of the men could be allowed to appear on the stage.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It seems to be necessary to make some provision of the kind.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Lest there be some question about it, I would suggest that the minister, in addition to the stage play, and music hall, and circus performances, would also include the Salvation Army.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You want to get me into trouble.

Section 62 is also from the same source, and I suppose it would be subject to the same criticism. Section 63 replaces sections 51 and 59 of the present law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Section 62 is all right, and I think it was the one referred to in the Halifax case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 63 is a change from the present law. The number of days specified in the present law is from 12 to 16, and it is changed now to read: 'not less than 12 days or more than 30 days in each year.' I might repeat the explanation in regard to that which I made in introducing the Bill. If a central camp, as is now proposed, should be established in Canada, 16 days would be altogether too short to carry out the necessary instructions, and therefore we are taking power here to increase the number of days to 30 for a specific reason. I may say, however, there is no intention at present to increase the term of the annual drill beyond the 12 days.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The point I raised earlier in the debate about the permanent force being continuously on service would have to come in here.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I want to get all these proposed amendments into 'Hansard' of to-day, and I want to say now that it is proposed to amend section 29, so that it will read:

> The permanent force shall consist of such permanently embodied corps, not exceeding 2,000 men, enrolled for continuous service, as are, from time to time, authorized by the Governor in Council.

That will meet the point which my hon. friend has raised that we have nowhere in this Act, provided that the men of the permanent force shall be continuously employed.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Inasmuch as the interpretation clause defines 'militia' to mean 'all the military force of Canada;' would it not be better to use the words 'non-permanent militia' in this clause?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. His Majesty may order as few or as many as he chooses; he is not compelled under this law to order the permanent force. As a matter of fact, it is intended though, to send the permanent force to the central camps very largely for the purpose of teaching the officers who may be assembled from all parts of the Dominion.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And parliament has always recognized, ever since the permanent force was organized, that that very distinction should be avoided.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is, not to let it be regarded that the permanent force is in any sense a regular force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is active militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is part of the active militia.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. I ask the hon. the Minister of Militia if he has made any provision for rifle practice by the militia?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend will find that later on.

On section 64.—Pay of permanent force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is a new clause, in that it differs materially from the present law. The present pay for the militia is provided for in section 59 of the present law. Section 64 of the new Bill reads as follows:

> Officers, warrant officers and non-commissioned officers of the permanent force shall be entitled to daily pay and allowances at rates to be prescribed.

2. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, fix the sums to be paid to privates of the permanent force, regard being had to length of service, good conduct and efficiency; but such sums shall not exceed the amounts following that is to say:—

	Cents.
For privates per diem	75
" buglers under 18 years of age, per diem..	40

I propose to make a slight change in section 64. Instead of the words 'such sums' in the fourth line of subsection 2, I wish to put in the words 'the ordinary pay.' I do this because we have recently incorporated into the permanent force what is known as the stores branch. It was necessary in transferring this branch from the civil side of my department to the military side to put them into the permanent force. These men receive special pay, $1, $1.25 and $1.50, per day, and under this clause as drafted it might be doubtful whether they could be paid more than 75 cents per diem. The members of the permanent force are provided with rations and with barracks, while the stores men of the permanent force in the ordnance branch are not so provided. Therefore it would be manifestly a mistake and not the intention of this Act, or of parliament I am sure, to limit these men to 75 cents per diem. To makes it absolutely clear, I propose to put in after the word 'but' the words 'ordinary pay,' which will make it clear. It will then read:

But the ordinary pay shall not exceed the amount following, that is to say:

	Cents.
For privates, per diem..	75
" buglers under 18 years of age, per diem..	40

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Now I come to section 65, to which I propose to add the following section:

An allowance of $1 per diem, or such other rate as may be prescribed, will be paid to each officer and man for every horse actually an necessarily used by him when on active service during the period of annual drill and training or when otherwise on duty as aforesaid.

This clause is in the present law, but was omitted from the Bill by error. The only change is that I have put in the words

Such other rate as may be prescribed.

This is done because it is found to be more difficult every year to get horses in certain districts, especially in the cities, and therefore the power is given the minister or the general officer in command to, if necessary, increase the rate of pay.

With regard to section 65, I observe that some newspapers have misinterpreted the intention of this clause altogether. The scheme I have in mind is not that the pay shall be limited to 50 cents during the first year, shall be increased to 75 cents in the second year and to $1 the third year. The idea is that the pay shall begin at 50 cents and at the close of the first camp, to such men as have no black marks against them and as have shown reasonable proficiency in learning to shoot with the rifle, an increase of 20 or 25 cents for the first year shall be at once given. Then at the beginning of the next year they will come to camp entitled to 50 cents plus the 20 cents. At the end of the second year if they still continue to conduct themselves well and to make further progress in the use of the rifle the pay will be increased by, say 15 cents, so that it will be 85 cents, and so on, the third year beginning at 85 cents and at the end of the third year reaching the full limit of the $1.00.

On section 67.—Provisions as to drill.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 67 is the same as section 63 of the present law except that certain words are left out.

In such cases the daily pay shall be for each day of 24 hours, and the drill and duty to be performed in camp, or in going to and from camp, shall be as ordered by the commanding officer for the time being.

It was thought that could be better regulated by the regulations.

Section 68 is the same as section 69 of the present law.

On section 69.—Shooting privileges.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 69 is new and it provides:

For the purpose of erecting works of defence, artillery ranges, or rifle ranges, shooting privileges only may be acquired on land, adjoining such works of defence or ranges; and compensation therefor shall be subject to the provisions of the Expropriation Act.

This is a power which it is in the public interest to acquire.

Section 70 is the same as section 71 of the present law. Sections 72 to 75 of the present law are omitted, they being provided for by section 30 of this Bill. Section 71 is similar to section 76 of the present law, concerning which the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Jabel Robinson) made inquiry a moment ago. In this section rifle associations and clubs are provided for.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would take the liberty of suggesting again that in addition to the long range rifle, each company headquarters should be furnished with a miniature rifle range and a couple of small rifles, so that during the winter, or even the summer months, the volunteers in the locality might have regular practice. There is no use pretending that these little ranges are useless. The best shots in Canada to-day are men who in the olden days learnt, with the old muzzle-loading rifle, to blow out candles with caps. This practice accustomed the men to pulling the trigger and steadying the rifle, and the miniature gallery shooting would serve the same purpose. It would only cost a couple of rifles for each company, and after they had indulged in that practice the men would readily go to the long range.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 72 is a new section :

In case of emergency the members of rifle associations and clubs shall become members of the militia and shall be under the direction and instructions of the district officer commanding ; and so long as the emergency exists and until lawfully discharged, all members of such associations and clubs shall remain members of the militia, and shall be subject to drill, training and discipline to the same extent as other members thereof.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How will the members of rifle clubs become aware that an emergency has occurred ? I suppose, whether or not an emergency has occurred, depends upon what view the authorities may take. If a riot should occur somewhere in Canada, would every rifle club in the country become forthwith a part of the militia ? If so, some provision should be made for informing them, by proclamation or otherwise, that they are part of the militia and liable as such.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall take a note of the hon. gentleman's suggestion and see that it is done.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In this connection, there is no means, unless defined by regulation, by which an officer commanding a company is to notify his men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That will be done by regulation.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have known of instances where the men claimed they had not been properly notified to attend drill, and in that way got off their penalty.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would like to ask the leader of the opposition whether he thinks it would be possible to deal with the question he raised in section 72 by regulation, or should there be an enactment ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There ought to be an enactment.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I suppose these rifle associations will be uniformed and equipped?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. I might perhaps say that I doubt whether this clause will be really necessary, because it is the intention, under the scheme which Lord Dundonald has put forward, to practically abolish the present rifle associations and make the members immediately members of the militia.

Section 73 is new. It provides :

The minister may—

(a) Authorize boys over twelve years of age, who are attending school, to be formed into school cadet corps ;

(b) Authorize boys over fourteen years of age, and under eighteen years of age, to be formed into senior cadet corps ;

(c) Authorize senior cadet corps, or any portion thereof, to be attached to any portion of the active militia for the purposes of drill and training.

Section 74 provides that all cadet corps shall be subject to the authority and under the orders of the district officer commanding. Section 75 provides :

Cadet corps shall be drilled and trained as prescribed, and may be furnished with arms, ammunition and equipment under the conditions prescribed.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not provide here for this miniature rifle equipment for these boys ? It is much cheaper and will answer the purpose quite as well as the longer range.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That will be a matter for regulation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it the intention, under section 73, to deal with each individual case as it arises, or make some general regulation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. A general regulation, which will, of course, require the co-operation, I presume, of the provincial governments. Section 76 is the same as sections 78 and 79 of the present law :

The militia or any part thereof, or any officer or man thereof, may be called out for any military purpose other than drill or training at such times and in such manner as are prescribed.

Section 77 is to be amended. This is the section which includes the provision with reference to the command, in the event of the militia being called out in time of war to serve conjointly or in conjunction with His Majesty's regular army. The provision is subsection 2 :

In time of war, when the militia is called out for active service, to serve conjointly with His Majesty's regular forces, His Majesty may place in command thereof a senior general officer of his regular army.

I think myself it might stop there, although the clause has been drafted with these words in addition, 'who shall be senior in rank to the general officer then commanding the militia.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That would only refer to the officer in command of the whole force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is all.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Suppose there were an isolated post with a colonial and an imperial regiment, does this mean that in such a case the imperial officer would command ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No. It means that the conduct of the war shall be placed under the control of an officer of the regular army ; that is all.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I trust that the minister will make that wholly clear in the clause. Because, there are a good many colonial officers who would object to serving under an imperial officer under such conditions as I have named.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There will not be the slightest danger.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the minister says he does not regard the last clause as necessary why does he include it ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The words 'the senior general officer' would seem to govern. But, if the words are necessary, we will leave them. In reading it I thought the words 'shall be' not very scientific either. Perhaps it should read 'must be'. Otherwise, it would seem that we are, by this statute giving senior rank to one who might be of inferior rank.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know what would be the effect of the expression 'serving jointly.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the event of war here in Canada and of a British force being sent to take part in that war, the two forces will be serving jointly. Then the contingency would arise under which His Majesty would naturally, properly and necessarily name the officer commanding the whole army, including the militia as well as the regular force.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But what would be the effect under the clause as proposed and with the intention expressed by the minister ? Take an instance. War breaks out to-morrow. The general officer commanding the imperial forces in Canada is Major General Sir Charles Parsons, of Halifax, who is many degrees junior to the general officer commanding in Canada, Lord Dundonald. Under this proposed section, the general officer commanding in Canada would be placed junior to some other officer. I am satisfied that if war broke out to-morrow Lord Dundonald would command the whole outfit in Canada. It may be that the minister was thinking of one of his own officers whom he has in mind as the future general officer commanding, and he would not desire to place him over Lord Dundonald.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It does not matter who may happen at the time to command the Canadian militia. At the time when war breaks out there is an officer in command of the Canadian militia, and whether he is an Australian, an imperial officer or a Canadian does not matter. When the Canadian forces, and the imperial force, are to act together, the intention is that His Majesty shall appoint the officer to command the whole army, and that that officer shall be senior to the officer commanding the militia.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. It might be the same man. The hon. minister had better re-draft the clause.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Well, the point will be considered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not sure how it would work out in the present condition. If war should break out, with the British forces at Halifax and the west, would the command of the whole force pass to Lord Dundonald, or would the British troops be commanded by——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The officer at Halifax, no matter how junior.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, under the provisions of this statute he would not take command of the whole, because he would be inferior in rank to the officer commanding the Canadian militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is the intention.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. After all, the object aimed at is this—is it not ?—that, where the Canadian militia serve with the imperial forces, they shall be under command of the imperial officer, if he is senior in rank to the Canadian officer, but the converse is not true ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For instance, if war occurred, and there were a lieutenant general in command at Halifax, under the clause that I propose he would command. If he were junior to the officer commanding the militia, he would not command, but it would be within the power of the Crown to name an officer who should be senior to the officer commanding the militia.

Mr. SAM HUGHES. I have not the clause as proposed before me. But why not leave it to read that His Majesty should appoint the officer that should command the united force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is just what we are doing.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This says that he shall be senior to the officer commanding the Canadian militia. But he may be the same man. That is the point I am making.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Take the case of my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) suggested a moment ago. Suppose there is an imperial officer of senior rank and war breaks out, would he think that we should give power to the Crown to place over the head of Lord Dundonald an officer of inferior rank ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. No ; but what I want to point out is that if the hon. minister will make the clause provide that in case of joint action, His Majesty may appoint as commander of the whole force a senior general officer of his regular army, that would be sufficient.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am inclined to think that it is the best way.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no need to say 'Who shall be senior in rank to the general officer commanding.' Lord Dundonald would fill the bill exactly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is right.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. But if you put in these last words, you rule Lord Dundonald out. If the minister would stop at the words 'regular army.' Lord Dundonald might be the officer selected by His Majesty.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The point did not occur to me. I will reconsider the section.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) suggests is that the imperial officer might be the general officer commanding the militia—he might command both forces.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no intention to interfere with the power of the Crown to appoint the general officer commanding the militia to command the whole force.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will the minister let this stand ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We are not passing this, we are simply discussing it. Section 78 is precisely the same as section 80 of the present law. 79 is the same as 82.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does section 78 refer to the permanent force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Because there is a special clause governing the permanent force.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am aware there is a special clause governing the permanent force, nevertheless the permanent force is included in the word 'militia' as defined in the interpretation clause. I think it will be necessary to look carefully into this Bill all the way through to see whether, by the use of the word 'militia' you are not applying to the permanent force certain provisions which perhaps you do not intend to apply to it. For example, you have a provision in one clause here that any man can obtain his discharge from the service on giving six months' notice. Is that intended to apply to the permanent force ? I do not know. Nevertheless, it seems to me that under the language of this Bill it would be held to apply to the permanent force, because you define the word militia as including the permanent force, and then you make this general provision with regard to all the militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This was copied from the present law which has governed the whole militia including the permanent force, and never gave rise to ambiguity. But I see the point and will have that looked into.

79 is practically the same as 82 of the present law. The King's regulations are omitted and do not apply under the new law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. A point in connection with this clause has given rise to a good deal of speculation. There is no doubt that is the interpretation of the clause, and it is one on which I have acted myself. The officers of the Canadian militia are exempt from the Army Act while they are not on service. An attempt has been made by one general officer commanding in Canada to hold every officer of the ordinary active militia under the Army Act throughout the year, and I heard it whispered last year that the minister intended to make that specific by putting a definite clause in the Act, stating that the militia officers of this country should be under the Army Act throughout the year. I am glad to find that he has not placed that clause in the present law. I know it has been decided by one of the courts in the province of Quebec that this does not apply. The paragraph in the question reads as follows :

> In any drill shed or other building or place used for militia purposes, and also during any drill or parade of his corps when he is present in the ranks or as a spectator in uniform, and also when going to or from the place of drill or parade——

I suppose that also means in uniform.

> —and at any other time while in the uniform of his corps.

In the Montreal case it was held that the words 'as a spectator' did not bind the officer because he was not in uniform. Now the interpretation usually placed upon this is that he is there as a spectator in uniform, or he is on the drill ground and should be held under the law. I draw the minister's attention to the ambiguity in the wording of that section. In my own case I have no doubt as to where I stood in the matter, but I want it made clear for others ; it cannot be made too emphatic that the individual liberty of the officers of the Canadian militia when they are not on service must not in any case be interfered with.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I call the hon. gentleman's attention again to clause 71 of the new Bill which I omitted to refer to. The last four lines of section 71 I presume my hon. friend will object to, and I propose to strike them out. They refer to the subject to which he has just alluded. They are unnecessary. If the part of section 79 to which he has just referred remains, then the last four lines of 71 are unnecessary, and I propose to amend the Bill by striking them out. I merely mention this now so that it may go into the 'Hansard.' I also propose an amendment to section 79. Subsection 2 will read :

Officers and men of the permanent force and members of the permanent staff of the militia shall be at all times subject to military law.

This is absolutely necessary, I am informed, to maintain discipline. It is a continuance of the provision contained in subsection 3 of section 28.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. With regard to doing away with the King's regulations, I would like to ask the minister if he expects very shortly to publish the new regulations ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is absolutely necessary that the new regulations should be prepared before this Bill becomes law, because we would be in a terrible jumble if that were not done.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. If that be the case, I would call his attention to the fact that when the regulations were published the last time the issue was so restricted in number that only two were available for each regiment ; the commanding officer and the adjutant, I think, got a copy each. The inconvenience was very great, for these two books were lost not long after. I think when we spend so much money in printing we might at least supply enough for each officer in a regiment.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I can promise my hon. friend he will have two or three copies. The first issue of which he speaks was exhausted, and we did not issue any more because we knew then that the present law could not remain very long on the statute ; that it must be thoroughly amended or a new law enacted. It was my intention to carry a law through a year ago or more. That is the reason why the regulations were not issued in larger numbers. The new regulations are now being prepared in accordance with the provisions of this Bill, and when it becomes law they will be issued immediately.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I thought it was a case of the economy which is so strikingly characteristic of the Militia Department.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Might I ask the Minister of Militia if that section he intends putting in the law now would have any bearing upon a case such as the one that arose in Montreal and was decided by the Court of King's Bench, the case of Cook and Cole ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It will meet a case of that kind.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The minister remembers that there was a good deal of difference of opinion between the judges and those members of the bar who belonged to the militia in reference to this question, and I think it would be well, if possible, to settle it for all time to come.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This clause has been drafted with special reference to meeting difficulties of that kind.

Section 80 is the same as section 82, paragraph 2, of the present Act. Section 81 is the same as section 84 of the present law. Section 82 is the same as section 85 of the present law. Section 83 is the same as section 86 of the present law, with very slight modifications. Section 84 is the same as section 87 of the present law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. minister whether the regulations which it is proposed the Governor in Council shall enact are to take the place of the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Instead of using the Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, we will have regulations and orders of our own ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Quite so ; instead of dealing with two authorities, we will be dealing with one.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Previously we had both.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I observe in the law that it is provided that Her Majesty in Council may direct that the provisions of the Army Act shall not apply to the militia force. That has been omitted from the proposed section. Does the hon. minister think it is wise to omit it ? We know what the Army Act is at present, but we do not know what it always will be. Might it not be wise to reserve a power of that kind ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The application of the Army Act to the Canadian militia is continued by this Bill, except in so far as it may be incompatible with the enactments of the Bill. Clause 79 deals with that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In the law as it is at present there is a provision by which Her Majesty may direct that any provision of the Army Act shall not apply to the militia. That provision has been omitted in the proposed section. Might it not be possible that there might be certain provisions of the Army Act which, although not inconsistent with our own statute, might nevertheless, to some extent, be inapplicable to the militia of Canada ? Would it not therefore be wise to retain the power existing at the present time ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it would. I will look into that. I think that change is unintentional.

Section 85 is the same as section 88 practically, with the omission of certain words which are not considered necessary.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is not section 85 a relic of pre-historic days ? Why is it necessary to have either 85 or 86 ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think they do any harm.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would suggest the insertion after the word 'females,' in line 3 of section 86, of the words 'and children.' What is referred to there is very clear and it is necessarily guarded, but why should a farmer's wife, if the farmer should be off fighting at the front, be liable to have troops billeted at her house any more than any one else ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then we come to transport. Section 88 of the present law seems to have been divided into sections 85 and 87 of the new Bill. The present law says that :

> The Governor in Council may make regulations for the billeting and cantoning of troops and militia when on active service, for the furnishing of carriages, horses and other conveyance for their transport and use, and for adequate compensation therefor.

These words are made the subject of section 87 of the new Bill, giving power to the Governor in Council to make regulations in reference to transport. Section 88 of the new Bill is the same as section 89 of the present law with a slight modification. Section 89 is copied from the British law. Section 90 is new, copied also from the English Regulations of the Forces Act, 1871, Part iv, section 16.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not also take control of steamship lines ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Evidently that was not done in the law from which this was copied, but in view of our inland navigation it might be very proper in Canada. It is a good suggestion.

Sections 91, 92 and 93 are taken from the same source. Section 94 is the same as section 91 of the present Act, except that these words are omitted :

> But no officer of His Majesty's regular army on full pay shall sit on any such court martial

Section 95 is the same as section 92 ; section 96 is the same as subsection 2 of section 92 of the present law ; section 97 is the same as subsection 3 of section 92 of the present law ; section 98 is the same as section 93 of the present law, except that certain words are omitted. It is proposed to amend this draft Bill now before the committee, by inserting after the words 'court martial'; the words 'except on active service.' The reason for inserting these words is obvious; in time of war the decision would be delayed and the Governor in Council would have his hands full. Section 99 is the same as section 94 of the present law except that wherever the phrase 'commanding a corps of militia' occurs it is omitted and at the end the words are omitted, 'and shall also be liable to be tried and punished by court martial.' Sections 100 and 101 are the same as section 95 of the present law slightly modified. Section 102 is the same as section 96 of the present law ; section 103 is practically the same as the present section 97 ; section 104 is the same as the present section 98 ; section 105 is the same as section 99 of the present law; section 106 is the same as section 100 with slight verbal changes; section 107 is the same as section 101, slightly modified ; section 108 is precisely the same as section 102 of the present law ; section 109 is similar to 103 of the present law ; section 110 is similar to 104 of the present law, except that the amount of the fine is reduced.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It appears to me that that would bring a man under the control of an officer when he is not subject to military law, and that should not be the case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is the same as the present law.

Section 111 is the same as 105 of the present law ; section 112 is exactly the same as 106 of the present law ; section 113 is the same as section 107 except for the words :

> If an officer, not exceeding $100, and, if a man of the militia——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Returning to clause 110, it is apparently taken from the British army regulations which deal with regulars continuously in service.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is precisely the same.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I suppose it was all copied from an old book of the Duke of Marlborough's time. I am anxious to guard the liberty of the individual as far as possible. Years ago these regulations were drawn up for men who were altogether soldiers. A member of the militia to-day is a member of the militia when on active service or when at home on his farm, and under this section a man is brought under this clause whether on service or not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Will my hon. friend draft a clause and send it to me.

Section 114 is the same as section 108 of the present Act.

Section 109 will be omitted because it is covered already by the Criminal Code of 1892, section 75.

Section 115 is the same as section 110 of the existing law, and section 116 is the same as 111.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the hon. minister noticed that under this section he may be convicting some poor unfortunate fellow on the evidence of one witness, and before one justice of the peace ? I do not know why that is, and I can conceive of cases where witnesses would go before one justice of the peace and the accused would not have much show. I should say at least two witnesses would be required.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There may have been only one witness.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Men have been found guilty of murder on the evidence of one witness, and one witness might be as good as a dozen.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At the same time an officer might think he was insulted and when a man would be brought up before one justice of the peace, the trial might be one-sided.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You might have two justices of the peace.

Section 117 is the same as section 112 of the present law, except that the words 'made under the authority thereof' are omitted.

Section 118 is the same as section 113 of the present law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no provision in this for the Territories. There are no counties in the Territories.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I should make a note of that.

Section 120 is the same as section 115 of the present law.

On section 121.—Execution of warrants and sentences.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 121 is new and deals with the execution of warrants and sentences. It is copied from the Commonwealth Defence Bill, section 115, and reads as follows :—

The governor, keeper or warden of every jail, prison or penitentiary in Canada, shall receive and detain, according to the exigency of any warrant under the hand of any district officer commanding, or other person authorized under the regulations to issue a warrant, any person mentioned in such warrant and delivered into his custody, and shall confine such prisoner until discharged or delivered over in due course of law; and every such governor, keeper or warden shall take cognizance of any warrant purporting to be signed by any such officer as aforesaid.

Section 122 is new and provides for special places of imprisonment.

Section 123 is similar to 116 of the present law, but the wording is more specific.

Section 124 is practically the same as section 117.

Section 125 is similar to section 126 of the present law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The law at present requires also a report of the state of the militia to be laid on the table of parliament.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The Act dealing with the organization of the department of militia compels the minister to lay a report on the table of the House.

On section 126,

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 126 is new and is as follows :—

For the purpose of legal proceedings, all moneys subscribed by or for, or otherwise appropriated to the use of, any corps, and all arms, ammunition, clothing, equipment, musical instruments, or other things belonging to, or used by, any corps, shall be deemed to be the property of the commanding officer of the corps; and no gift, sale or other alienation, or attempted alienation, of any such thing by any person shall be effectual to pass the property therein without the consent of the said commanding officer.

That is new and is copied from the Commonwealth Defence Bill. I think it is necessary.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think it is a very proper thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might it not be better to have the property referred to in this section regarded as being the property of the Crown for the purpose of legal proceedings. Why should you regard them as the property of the commanding officer? They are for the public service of the country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is for the purpose of enabling the commanding officer to deal more easily with questions of theft or the collections of arms that may be issued by him.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the advantage of calling the arms, ammunition, equipment and clothing, which are really the property of the Crown, the property of the commanding officer, for the purpose of any legal proceedings? I do not see that there is any advantage in doing that? I cannot see that it would expedite or facilitate legal proceedings in any way. You are really departing, in respect of those articles, from the facts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The property might not be vested absolutely in the Crown. The commanding officer might give certain articles of equipment to the corps, for instance, the headgear or musical instruments, which would not be vested in His Majesty, but rather in the particular corps with which he is connected.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You might have the instruments provided for the purposes of the band, but in respect of nearly everything in section 126, you find it is the property of the Crown. It would be more fitting to call everything the property of the Crown than call all these articles, which are really the property of the Crown, the property of the commanding officer. It is only a matter of detail, which I hope the minister will look into.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, the commanding officer might die or become insolvent.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 127 is the same as section 118 of the present law. Section 128 is practically the same as section 119 of the present law. Section 129 is the same as section 120 of the present law.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I think we should strike out that part of the provision which requires the posting of notices on the door of every place of public worship. There are many places of public worship, the congregations would not want to have defaced by these posters being pasted on the doors.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will look into that. They might be put on the fence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That might give offence.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Section 130 is the same as section 121 of the present law, and section 131 is the same as 122. 132 is the same as section 123 of the present law except that the expression 'Governor in Council' is substituted for 'Her Majesty.' Section 133 is the same as section 124 of the present law, and 134 is the same as 125. The last section, section 135, repeals certain acts.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Before we leave the consideration of this Bill, I do hope that the suggestion of the hon. the leader of the opposition will not be overlooked and that an unusually large number of to-day's 'Hansard' will be printed. Like many other members, I have received requests for copies of the Bill, and the discussion we have had upon it this afternoon is undoubtedly a complement of the Bill as printed. I hope that a sufficient number of copies of to-day's 'Hansard' will be printed to enable each member to have twenty or thirty, if possible.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903, AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Explain.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, this Bill proposes to amend the Railway Act of last session in several directions. The first amendment I propose is one to bring express companies within the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. The express companies have an intimate relationship with the business community and the public at large. They make extensive charges for their services, and as the tolls and tariffs of railway companies come within the jurisdiction of the commission under the Act, I think the tolls and charges of the express companies ought also to come within the control of the commission, especially as the express companies are owned by the railway companies. I tried to have this amendment introduced last session. The question has been discussed since then, and the public have expressed themselves as being in favour of the jurisdiction of the commission applying to express companies, and I propose to make another attempt to have this made the law this session.

Another clause has reference to a question which was discussed last session, and deals with the two cents a mile passenger rate over all railways in this country. I do not propose to go any further into that question to-day, but I do propose to explain two other clauses that I am bringing in to-day.

Section 10 of the Act reads as follows:

> Not less than two commissioners shall attend at the hearing of every case, and the chief commissioner, when present, shall preside, and his opinion upon any question, which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law, shall prevail.

In my amendment I propose to take away that special jurisdiction of the chief commissioner, and give complete jurisdiction on all questions to the three commissioners. I base my argument in favour of this proposed amendment on the decision given by the commission the other day in regard to the telephone question that came before it. The chief commissioner arrogated to himself the right to be the sole judge of the law, and his co-commissioners lacked the courage to disagree with him. I believe that as the Act stands they were fully competent to disagree with him, and I say that they should have disagreed with him on the ground that it was not a question of law so much as it was a question of policy. The decision of the two other commissioners which they gave in favour of the public should have overridden the opinion of the chief commissioner, and they should have taken the ground that if there was a question of law, it was involved in the public interest, that they were competent judges of what the public interest demanded, and I believe that under these circumstances the opinion of the two commissioners should have overridden that of the chief commissioner. Whether that is a good opinion of mine or not, I propose to remove that doubt by taking away the exclusive jurisdiction of the chief commissioner. I do not see why his co-commissioners, men of ripe experience as they are said to be, men who have been members of this House, who have taken part in making the laws of the country, should not be competent to discuss a question of law. We have too much law in this country and not sufficient administration. There is too much consideration given to the letter of the law and not enough to the spirit and effect of it. What the public are looking for to-day is not law. They want relief in regard to this telephone question, which I am sorry to say they are not getting in this case, because there is only a question of law raised and the claims of the people are sent to the courts.

The other amendment which I propose deals with the same question. If hon. gentlemen will remember, after a long fight here last session in favour of the public having some relief from the monopoly of the Bell Telephone Company, the then Minister of Railways and Canals introduced a clause which reads as follows :

Whenever any municipality, corporation or incorporated company has authority to construct, operate and maintain a telephonic system in any district, and is desirous of obtaining telephonic connection or communication with or within any station or premises of the company, in such district, and cannot agree with the company with respect thereto, such municipality, corporation or incorporated company may apply to the board for leave therefor, and the board may order the company to provide for such connection or communication upon such terms as to compensation as the board deems just and expedient, and may order and direct how, when, where, by whom and upon what terms and conditions such telephonic connection or communication shall be constructed, operated and maintained.

Now, we had a hard battle with the then Minister of Railways and Canals last session on that clause and, after a great deal of hard fighting, he came to the House and assured the House that he had a clause which would afford relief to the people and remove their cause of complaint. He said that if the people in any portion of the country desired to have access to railway premises, and they made out a good case, the board would grant their request. He led me to believe, as he led the whole House and the country to believe, that the compensation would be simply for damages caused by the entrance of a new telephone system into a railway building and the expense of maintaining it there. There was no idea ever conveyed to the House or to the country that the Bell Telephone Company and the railway company were to be in a position to obtain enormous damages for interference with what they claim is a monopoly privilege enjoyed by them. Let me read the decision of the chief commissioner, so that you may see how far-reaching it is :

Our decision, therefore, is to make the order under clause 193, granting leave to the Port Arthur municipality to connect, operate and maintain their telephone systems within the passenger and freight stations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Port Arthur, upon terms as to compensation for any actual pecuniary loss the Bell Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall satisfy us they, or either of them, will sustain by reason of, or consequent upon the interferences with the existing contractual rights of the parties, and also such charges and expenses as may be occasioned by the construction, operation and maintenance of the connection in the stations at Port Arthur of the telephones of the municipality.

There the chief commissioner lays it down that before the people of any municipality can have telephone connection with a railway station, they must pay such compensation as the Bell Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company can establish that they have sustained through their contract, all rights whatever they may be, having been interfered with. The two companies came before the board and they put up an argument that they would sustain hundreds of thousands of dollars of damages, and that the people of Port Arthur and Fort William or any other community, would have to pay compensation for these enormous damages before they could have telephone connection with the railway stations. I do not care to say; or I will not say that I was deceived by the statement made by the Minister of Railways at that time ; but I must say that I was not sufficiently alert to the workings of the legal mind. We were certainly led to believe in this House that something was to be done by the government to remove the grievances which existed, and that the people were to be given telephonic access to these railway stations. In order to make the law clear, I propose to amend that clause by putting in these words :—

And such compensation shall be limited to the direct and immediate local damages actually suffered by reason of such construction, operation, and maintenance by the railway company at such station and premises ; and not from any cause, matter, or business extending beyond the same.

I think that is a very reasonable amendment, and that it will carry out what was the expectation of parliament at the time this Act was passed. In order to show that this is the view the public take of it, I wish to read from the decision of Mr. Commissioner Mills. I have not the judgment of Mr. Commissioner Bernier, but I gather that it was in the same line as that of Mr. Commissioner Mills. I think hon. gentlemen will do well to pay attention to this statement of Commissioner Mills, who says :—

In all the cases cited one thing is clear, viz., that the fundamental and guiding principle is the public interest, and that no restraint upon trade or restriction upon legitimate business in any part of the country should be regarded as reasonable and in harmony with public policy unless it can be clearly shown that it does not interfere, or tend to interfere, with the rights and interests of the public in that locality.

It may be said that an exclusive privilege such as that in the telephone agreement, does not interfere with the public interest, because the public will be better served by a strong well equipped organization, such as the Bell Telephone Company, than it would be served if free competition were allowed. That may or may not be so. One thing we know, viz., that this is the argument of all monopolists. We know, also, that generally speaking, the people are the best judges of their own interests, and on a well established principle of government in free countries they should be allowed to decide such questions for themselves—whether to depend wholly on an organization such as the Bell Telephone Company, or establish a municipal system of telephones for their own use.

There is a clear cut decision by one of the commissioners, saying that it was in the public interest that the people of Port Arthur and Fort William should be allowed telephonic access to the stations of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But unfortunately this was made a question of law, and the opinion of the two other commissioners is worthless, because the Act says that the opinion of the chief commissioner is everything on a law question and that the opinion of the other two commissioners is nothing. That is not a condition of things we should have in this country. We wish to have that exclusive privilege taken away from the chief commissioner, and if this question of compensation is to arise, we say that it should be strictly limited to the damages by the entrance of the wire and the maintenance of the wire, and that there should be no compensation for any monopolistic clause. Let me put it in this way to the government. Suppose that the government should decide to introduce a national telephone system without buying out the Bell Telephone system, would the government for one moment let the Bell Telephone Company, and the Canadian Pacific Railway say: you shall not come on our premises with your national system until you compensate us for any loss we may sustain in the monopoly we have created by the contract? And who are these two companies that seek to create a monopoly against the people of Canada? Both have been created by this parliament; they are the creatures of the people of Canada, and yet they think it well to make a long contract in order to create a monopoly against the people of this country. The Canadian Pacific Railway has received over $100,000,000 of the people's money. It has received enormous land grants, and when it was in dire distress for money and credit, it came to the people of Canada and had an enormous credit voted to it. I am glad the Canadian Pacific Railway paid back the money, but nevertheless it got millions and millions of the people's money when in dire distress, and yet it has the hardihood to say to-day, that it will join with the Bell Telephone Company to create a monopoly, objectionable to the people. The Canadian Pacific Railway should be above that. I grant that the Canadian Pacific Railway may say to the Bell Telephone Company: we will give you passes; we will carry your freight free in consideration of reciprocal advantages. But the Canadian Pacific Railway should never have allowed itself to be a party to a monopoly which is against the interests of the Canadian people. Take my own community of Locust Hill for instance, the people there are all customers of the Canadian Pacific Railway; they give all their freight to that railway; and before the Bell Telephone Company was in that country, the people offered to build their own telephone line to facilitate business, but they were denied access to the Canadian Pacific Railway station.

That is not in the public interest; it is not what we were led to hope last session would be the case when this clause was put in the Bill; and I appeal to the government for their assistance to have it made clear that the only compensation to be paid shall be compensation for entering upon the premises of the railway company. Now, we are going a roundabout way to afford relief to the public in regard to telephones and other matters. There is an easy way to grant the relief, and that is made clear by the despatches in the papers of this morning, which state that Lord Stanley introduced a Bill in the British parliament yesterday to take over the National telephone service. The reason for this is that the telephone service, which has been nationalized in England, has been a great success, and now they propose to nationalize the telephone service. Lord Stanley yesterday asked for a credit of £3,000,000 for the purpose, and a small select committee to consider details, and he said that the scheme would result in telephones costing the people £2 less than the cheapest now in use. In this House two years ago, the Minister of Justice gave his solemn word that he would introduce a Bill to regulate telephone companies, and I took for granted, as every one else did, that it would contain provisions preventing discrimination by any telephone company against any portion of the public. We have not that Bill yet, and the relief that was promised has not yet been granted. Representatives of the people of Port Arthur and Fort William are now on their way here, and will be here to-morrow or some other day this week, to ask the government to give them relief. The easy way to grant relief is to nationalize the long-distance lines, and to let the municipalities own the local lines. Look at what is happening at the present time. Last night the Bell Telephone Company, through distress, offered to give the people of Ottawa domestic telephones for $20 a year, though in other places they charge a great deal more. Why should they be allowed to discriminate in this way ? If the law is unsatisfactory it is because the government have not kept their pledge and do not look with favour on the idea of nationalizing so important a public service. I would like the Minister of Railways or the Prime Minister to state whether or not the public may look for relief this session. For two years there have been people in different parts of the country desiring to establish a telephone service for themselves where the Bell Telephone Company do not supply it, and where they have no access to the railway stations. I would remind the government of what the members from the Northwest said last session, that a huge monopoly threatened them through the Bell Telephone Company, that they wished to have access to the stations, to learn about the movements of grain, when they could ship, and other matters, and that they could not have access unless the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Bell Telephone Company were dealt with. The people want an answer immediately. They want to build independent lines all over the country, and they are restrained by reason of this agreement. The hope was held out last session that as soon as the Railway Commission was formed, there would be an opportunity afforded to establish independent systems. Instead of that, a most discouraging decision has been rendered by the commission. A question of law has been raised, involving enormous damages. We do not want law in this country ; we want service for the public. It is easy to hang up a question of this kind in the courts for fifty years ; but let us give immediate relief. Let us say that the only compensation to be considered shall be compensation for the damage caused by entrance in and upon stations by the telephone wires. That is not a serious damage, either to the Bell Telephone Company or to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. These claims of theirs for immense damages are merely pretentions ; there is nothing behind them. They may appeal to lawyers and courts, but to business men they have no solidity or argument behind them. They are merely attempts to strengthen the monopoly of these two companies who have conspired together against the public interest. If the question before the Railway Commission, was a question of law, as the chief commissioner said, the two other commissioners should have maintained that it was a question involving the public interest. The chief commissioner is evidently concerned over his decision, because he has issued an explanation, which is published in the papers of this morning. If it is only a question of law, parliament is above law or the interpretation of law. Parliament is competent to grant relief, and it is in that view that I introduce this Bill to-day.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 7) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act. He said : This is the Bill which I introduced last session, I trust hon. members distributed it throughout the community and obtained an expression of opinion upon it from their constituents. It simply increases the standard of engineers and also prevents American tug boats doing business in Canada with engineers who have not obtained certificates from the Canadian government. The same remark applies to dredges. The present Act allows an uncertificated engineer to work in a dredge ; but under this Bill an engineer employed on a dredge must have a certificate from the Dominion government. It also seeks to do away with the permits which at present may be granted by the Department of Marine to men who act as engineers for a season, and creates a fourth class of engineers to whom certificates may be granted, in the event of the owners of steamers being unable to obtain engineers of the 1st, 2nd or 3rd class.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT ST. JOHN, N.B.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. Who is the collector of customs at the port of St. John, N.B. ?

2. Has the government been informed of the demise of W. A. Lockhart, collector of customs at the port of St. John, N.B. ?

INSPECTION AND SALE OF SEEDS.

Mr. LENNOX asked :

1. What steps have been taken since 23rd July last to acquaint the farmers of Canada and other interested parties, with the provisions of Bill (No. 200) an Act respecting the inspection and sale of seeds, introduced and discussed last session ?

2. What information has been obtained from farmers or farmers' associations ?

3. Is it the intention of the government to enact a law in the terms of the said Bill, or any similar law, at the present session ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Some thirty thousand copies of the Bill, substantially in the form in which it was introduced and discussed last session, were printed in pamphlet form, with explanations of its several clauses and comments thereon, and distributed among the farmers of Canada and other interested parties. In addition to this distribution, at many of the Farmers' Institute and other agricultural meetings, held throughout the Dominion during last autumn and winter, the Bill was explained by lecturers of the Department of Agriculture and others, and generally discussed.

2. The principal information from farmers has been obtained through the lecturers at the above meetings, who report that at those meetings resolutions approving of the Bill and urging its passage at this session were, with hardly an exception, unanimously passed. Some copies of resolutions in the same sense, passed at the meetings of Farmers' Institutes or farmers' associations, have also been received by the department.

3. It is the intention of the Minister of Agriculture to introduce a similar Bill at this session.

COLD STORAGE EQUIPMENT ON ATLANTIC STEAMERS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

What is the total amount that has been paid from the 1st of July, 1896, to the present time for the equipment of steamships sailing between the port of Montreal and ports in Great Britain, with cold storage and cool air facilities, and ventilated storage, for the carriage of Canadian products from Canada to Great Britain ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). $231,875.28.

DOMINION VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

What has been the total expenditure for preparing and printing the Dominion voters' lists since the adoption of the Franchise Act of 1898; also the total expenditure for each province ; and the expenditure for the counties of Peel and Cardwell, respectively, in each year ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Under the Franchise Act of 1898 the voters' lists are not prepared by the Dominion government, except when there is no provincial voters' list prepared within a year, available for an election about to be held. Copies of the provincial lists are bought from the local custodians. The outlay for the purchase of these provincial lists since 1898 is as follows :—

Ontario	$10,907 92
Quebec	11,368 95
Nova Scotia	3,052 03
New Brunswick	1,724 48
Manitoba	108 00
British Columbia	2,394 52
		$29,555 90
Preparation of voters' lists for use in by-elections :
Winnipeg, 1900	$ 872 21
Lisgar, 1902	6,634 49
		7,506 70
Total		$37,062 60

Outlay for purchase of voters' lists of county of Peel :

1900-1901	25 48
1901-02	25 64
1902-03	25 17
	$128 45

It is impossible to determine what proportion of the amount paid for lists belongs to the federal electoral district of Cardwell, as it includes parts of three counties.

I. C. R.—EMPLOYEES DISMISSED AT ST. JOHN.

Mr. DANIEL asked :

1. Is it true that two Intercolonial Railway employees, viz. : James P. Demill, a checker and delivery clerk, and Oscar Pederson, a foreman car cleaner, in the round-house at St. John, have been summarily dismissed ?

2. How long has each of these men been in the employment of the Intercolonial Railway ?

3. For what reason or reasons have they been dismissed ?

4. Is it proposed to hold any investigation into the cause of these dismissals ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). It is true that two of the railway employees at St. John have been dismissed. The name of one was James P. Demill and the other Oscar Peterson—not Oscar Pederson as named in the question.

2. James P. Demill was first employed in 1879. Oscar Peterson was first employed in 1900.

3. They were not deemed desirable employees to retain in the service.

4. No.

EXPORT GRAIN TO HALIFAX VIA INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. KEMP asked :

1. How many bushels of grain have been hauled by the Intercolonial Railway during the six months preceding March 1st, 1904, for delivery at Halifax for export ?

2. What was the proportion delivered in each month ?

3. What lake ports was it shipped from ?

4. What was the rate per bushel from such lake ports to Halifax ?

5. What was the mileage of each railway over which it was hauled ?

6. What was the earnings per bushel of each railway ?

7. What was the estimated cost per bushel for the service the Intercolonial Railway performed ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works).

1. The number of bushels of grain hauled by the Intercolonial Railway during the six months preceding March, 1904, for delivery at Halifax for export was : Wheat 87,826½ bushels. Corn 59,611 bushels.

2. Proportion delivered each month was :

	Bushels.
November, wheat	47,836
December, wheat	23,990½
January, wheat	16,000
February, corn	59,611

3. All of it was shipped from Depot Harbour.

4. The rates from Depot Harbour to Halifax were :

	Per bushel.
16,000 bushels wheat	5·15
31,836 bushels wheat	4·90
39,990½ bushels wheat	5·40
25,718½ bushels corn	4·94
33,892½ bushels corn	5·00

5. The mileage of each railway over which it was hauled was :

	Miles.
Canada Atlantic Railway	346
Grand Trunk Railway	34
Intercolonial Railway	828

6. The earnings per bushel of each railway was :

	Cents.
Canada Atlantic Railway on 16,000 bushels wheat	2·27½
Grand Trunk Railway on 16,000 bushels wheat	·60
Intercolonial Railway on 16,000 bushels wheat	2·27½
Canada Atlantic Railway on 31,836 bushels wheat	2·15
Grand Trunk Railway on 31,836 bushels wheat	·60
Intercolonial Railway on 31,836 bushels wheat	2·15
Canada Atlantic Railway on 39,990½ bushels wheat	2·40
Grand Trunk Railway on 39,990½ bushels wheat	·60
Intercolonial Railway on 39,990½ bushels wheat	2·40
Canada Atlantic Railway on 25,718½ bushels corn	2·19
Grand Trunk Railway on 25,718½ bushels corn	·56
Intercolonial Railway on 25,718½ bushels corn	2·19
Canada Atlantic Railway on 33,892½ bushels corn	2·22
Grand Trunk Railway on 33,892½ bushels corn	·56
Intercolonial Railway on 33,892½ bushels corn	2·22

Mr. KEMP.

7. The estimated cost per bushel for the service performed by the Intercolonial Railway was 2·27 cents. There was thus a slight loss on the export business, but having regard to the inward cargo and passengers obtained for the Intercolonial, the business was not considered unprofitable.

RETURN ORDERED WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Return showing the names of all persons employed on the Bronte Harbour improvements, in connection with the construction or repair of the pier, during the year ending 30th June, 1901, as foreman, time-keeper, carpenters, labourers, or workmen of any kind. Also the several amounts paid as wages to each of such persons. And a similar return giving the like information for each of the years ending 30th June, 1902, and 1903 ; and for the six months ending January 1st, 1904, respectively.—Mr. Henderson.

ANTI-CIGARETTE LEGISLATION.

Mr. W. S. MACLAREN (Huntingdon) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

He said : Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to detain the House at any great length in connection with this subject. The House will remember that it was very fully debated at the last session when a similar resolution with the same object in view was proposed and was carried by a vote of 103 to 48, or a majority of over 2 to 1. This resolution was not carried into effect as the Bill based upon it was subsequently ruled out by the Speaker on the ground of its having been irregularly introduced in the House. The discussion of last session and the information that was then given on the matter, very much reduces the task which I have to perform to-day. I am not one of those members who believe that the eloquence of members in the House of parliament very often affects a vote in the House, nor would I care to employ eloquence if I were possessed of it in order to move people to vote in a manner different from what their convictions really are.

The Bill of last session was divided into different sections. The first of these is one on which I fancy there is no difference of opinion in this House, viz.:

That the object of good government is to promote the general welfare of the people by a careful encouragement and protection of whatever makes for the public good; and by equally careful discouragement and suppression of whatever tends to the public disadvantage.

The question is as to whether the cigarette evil is of such a nature as to require this legislature to do what they can to lessen it. I am not going to give you my own opinions regarding the evil effects of cigarette smoking, more particularly on those of tender years; but I will quote for you opinions of those who have made a study of this matter. In selecting opinions regarding the evil effects of cigarette smoking, I have tried as far as possible to select them from people that I know something about myself, believing they will have more weight upon the House than the opinions drawn from foreign sources. I propose to deal with these opinions under three different heads. The first class comprises the opinions of people who are engaged in education in this country.

I will read first a statement from Mr. F. J. Johnston, M.A., assistant master, Richmond high school, Ont.

After a few years observation it is my firm conviction that the cigarette is not only injurious to the system, but is also demoralizing in its tendency. A vigorous crusade against the habit should be welcomed by every one who is interested in young Canadians.

Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, D.D., president of Armour Institute, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A., says:

I do not believe there is an agency more destructive of soul, mind and body, or more subversive of good morals, than the cigarette. The fight against the cigarette is a fight for civilization. This is my judgment as an educator.

Dr. C. A. Clinton, of the San Francisco Board of Education, has made a special study of the effect of cigarette smoking among the public school children of that city, and expresses himself in the following unmistakable language:

A good deal has been said about the evils of cigarette smoking, but one-half the truth has never been told. I have watched this thing for a long time, and I say calmly and deliberately that I believe cigarette smoking is as bad a habit as opium smoking. I am talking now of boys, remember. The effect upon grown men is, of course, not so marked.

These are opinions of gentlemen who are engaged in the education of the youth, and who know something of the effect of cigarette smoking upon boys particularly those who are attending school. I will now give you something from a medical standpoint, and I will first quote the opinion of Sir Wm. Hingston, of Montreal, a senator of this Dominion, one whom everybody knows:

'To youth generally, hurtful, sometimes disastrous, never beneficial.' When asked in what way or on what organs, replied, 'the digestive, nervous, and circulatory, chiefly.'

Dr. Sheard, medical health officer, expressed a most emphatic opinion on the injurious effects of cigarette smoking:

'You can say that the whole trend of medical opinion is diametrically opposed to boys smoking cigarettes,' said he. Dr. Sheard described how the cigarette got in its deadly work, exciting certain functions and nerves at the most critical period in a youth's existence, giving him illusions which he should never have. 'Such a youth,' said the medical health officer, 'is next door to an insane asylum. I can give you case after case where the cigarette has got in its work with ruinous effect.'

Dr. Benjamin King, of Philadelphia, who was a military examiner in four states during the war of rebellion, has given this testimony:

I have been inspecting the papers in a number of cases under the present recruiting Act (Spanish American War) and I observe that most of the men who failed to pass the medical examination have weak hearts or lack the vitality necessary to make a good soldier. I had expected that the percentage of rejections would be greater now than in 1861, but I did not dream for a moment that it would be about three times as great. The examining physicians with whom I have talked have generally told me that the excess of rejections is due to the large number of young men applying for enlistment who have become victims of the cigarette habit.

Now we find a good many large employers of labour taking up this question, more particularly in the United States, and are refusing to have boys in their employ who are confirmed cigarette smokers. I find this statement issued by the chief of the United States weather bureau:

Since our cigarette order was issued many business concerns in Chicago have taken the same course as that taken by the Weather Bureau. Cigarette smoking is not permitted in the office of the Board of Education; Montgomery Ward & Co. have refused to employ boys addicted to the cigarette habit; Marshall, Field & Co. now provide bi-monthly lectures on the evils of the practice for the benefit of their employees, believing the physical energy and mental acuteness of their working force are injured by the use of the cigarette.

In an interview with President Harriman, of the Union Pacific Board, he is quoted as saying that the new rule has been found necessary, because cigarette users become 'dopy' and worthless. He said that the company might just as well go to the county lunatic asylum for its employees as to retain cigarette smokers in its service at big salaries. When our boys and young men begin to realize that the use of cigarettes erects a barrier in their path of promotion in business, it may be they will come to their senses and abandon the offensive habit.

The action of the officials of the Rock Island Road in placing a ban on cigarette smoking on the part of employees will not fail to impress the public mind with the fact that the movement against the cigarette is one of business and not of sentiment.

Here is a quotation from the Farmers' 'Advocate,' of London, Ont.:

Acts like that in Ontario, against the sale of tobacco to minors, have been found to be practically inoperative.

In Canada in 1900 there were consumed 116 million cigarettes, 121 millions in 1901, and 134 millions in 1902, so that the habit is increasing with frightful rapidity. Productive of evil, and only evil, and without a single redeeming feature, the manufacture, importation and sale of the cigarette should be absolutely prohibited by the Canadian parliament, and a government measure to that effect should be brought down at the approching session. It ought to have the unanimous support of the political parties.

At the 26th national conference of Charities and Corrections, held in Cincinnati, the section on reformatories and industrial schools, was addressed by George Torrence, of Pontiac, Ill., superintendent of the Illinois state reformatory, on 'The Relation of the Cigarette to Crime.' After reciting his experience with boys coming to his institution, Mr. Torrence said :

'I am sure cigarettes are destroying and making criminals of more of them than the saloons.'

In his reformatory now there are 278 boys. Of 63 averaging 12 years of age, 58 were cigarette smokers. Of 133 averaging 14 years of age, 125 were cigarette smokers. Of 82 averaging 15 years of age, 73 were cigarette smokers. This demonstrates that 92 per cent of the whole number were cigarette fiends at the time of committing the crimes for which they were committed to the reformatory. The general discussion developed a similar experience with others connected with reformatories for boys.

Now let me show you what legislation has been passed by different states in the union for the purpose of doing away with this evil :

Forty-two out of the forty-six states of the union have enacted anti-cigarette laws. Many cities and towns have passed prohibitive or restrictive by-laws. Last year a wave of education, produced by attempts to secure legislation, passed over the country and as a result more than one billion less cigarettes were sold in 1899 than in 1898.

To show what methods have been used the following may be of interest :—

Two states, Nevada and Montana have cigarette license laws : the first is with, and the second is without an age limit. One state forbids sale of cigarettes to those under 14 years of age another to those under 15. Sixteen states forbid sale under 16 years of age ; one under 17. The Indiana, Iowa, Georgia, N. Dakota, S. Carolina and Wyoming laws prohibit sale to 'minors' ; while Maine, Nebraska, Nevada and Wisconsin put the prohibitive limit at 21. Florida rules out the sale altogether, except under certain specified circumstances. Massachusetts prohibits sale and manufacture, and Tennessee, which has no manufactures within its borders, caps the legislative climax by putting its bar upon sale and importation.

The lowest fine permissible ranges, in various states, all the way from $2 to $100. The highest from $20 to $500.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the only opinions regarding this matter which I intend to produce before the House at this time. If it can be shown that the use of cigarettes, especially by children, is hurtful to them, the question then arises whether it is the duty of this parliament to pass restrictive legislation in the form of a Bill which may be based upon this resolution, prohibiting the manufacture, sale and importation of cigarettes. Is it to the public advantage to do this ? Of course we know that objection is made that you are depriving grown-up people of the privilege, or the pleasure, whatever you may call it, of smoking cigarettes. Well, I appeal to the good sense of this House. There are many other forms in which tobacco can be used, and if gentlemen cannot forego the pleasure of smoking cigarettes for the purpose of helping the boys of this country, I am mistaken in the calibre of the men who occupy seats in this House. As I said, there are other ways in which people may use this narcotic if they feel inclined to do so.

I believe that the members of this House will be as satisfied as I am that cigarette smoking is doing a great deal of harm to our boys and to our young people, and that the sentiment of the House will be in favour of this resolution calling for the prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes. I think that in nearly every province of this Dominion they have restrictive laws of some kind regarding the sale of cigarettes, principally fixing an age limit. It was stated here last session, that, whatever the reason may be, these laws have proved practically inoperative in all of the provinces. These laws are not enforced and that is one of the reasons why it is necessary to adopt such legislation as I have proposed. A good many members of this House and others seem to be in favour of restrictive legislation but not in favour of prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale. I do not wish to detain the House at any greater length in connection with this matter. It is one which has been fully discussed in this House as well as in the public press and it is a matter upon which most people have made up their minds as to what is the best course to pursue in regard to it. We are all proud of the fine country which we possess. We are proud of the prosperity of Canada and we are proud of our great Northwest Territories which have been so rapidly filling up. We should be very careful, and I hope we are, about the kind of immigrants we bring into this country to be citizens of this great Canada of ours. We must remember that the wealth of the nation does not always consist in the prosperity of the nation, but that it consists largely in the character and the mental and moral qualities of the people who compose the state. We cannot always judge of the prosperity of the country by the amount of its exports and imports ; we have to look sometimes below that and find out what is the trend of the character of those who are the citizens of the country. We have a young country here, and in some parts a cold country. This is a country in which we need a good deal of brawn and muscle in order to do the best for the country and I think it can be clearly demonstrated that the use of the cigarette is sapping the vitality of our young people and that it is high time that we should take some definite action in regard to this matter. I know that there is a feeling against drastic legislation of this kind. Many of our people are perfectly willing that restrictive measures should be adopted. Now, the argument used is that if you pass a law of this kind and it is not observed, it will give our young people who are growing up a contempt for all law. I have had some experience in regard to restrictive legislation and my opinion is that if there is an evil in the country it is pretty hard to license and restrain it. Talk about people having a contempt for the law and violating the law! I would ask any hon. member of this House if there is any law more persistently violated that the license law designed to restrict and restrain the liquor traffic. I have had some experience with these matters and my opinion is, after thinking it over, that if you have an evil in the country it is almost impossible to license and restrain it. The best thing to do is to stamp it out. That is why I have taken up this matter in connection with this cigarette business. It is not because I have very much personal knowledge of the subject. I live in a rural constituency, in a small village in which I do not think there is so much harm being done as in larger places. I am sincere in the view which I am upholding because I think that we should not handicap our boys in the struggle of life. I think everything should be removed from them that will injure them or which will interfere with that physical ability which is necessary to enable them to undertake any position in this democratic country, which may be open to young men and that they may have the mental and moral qualities which will enable them to fill creditably any position in which they are placed. There are a great many people who shrink from the word 'prohibition.' I am not afraid of the word 'prohibition.' Is not all legislation in restriction of that which is wrong, prohibitive in its character? Upon all legislation of that kind from the decalogue to the present time is written large and full the memorable words 'Thou shalt not.' That is nothing more than we are trying to introduce by this legislation and I trust that a large majority of the hon. members of this House will be in sympathy with the resolution which is brought before them and vote for it as they did last year, and that they will vote for the Bill based upon this resolution so that we may stamp out this cigarette habit which is admittedly an evil in our country.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interfere with this discussion but merely to try to get at it in some regular way. I rise to a point of order to inquire whether this is regular or not. The notice paper contains a motion which says:

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

The motion which was put from the chair as I understood it, was that this House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to bring in a Bill. In the first place I draw attention to the fact that the motion on the Votes and Proceedings must be in accordance with the notice, or the notice in accordance with the motion, and in the second place if it is claimed that the notice which the hon. gentleman gave the other day when motions were called should be regarded as a notice of motion, I draw attention to the fact that he did not withdraw his original notice, which was on the paper, and that he cannot anticipate it by another motion dealing with the same subject and that while the notice on the paper deals with the abstract question the motion to which the hon. gentleman is talking now is that the House resolve itself into committee to bring in a Bill on some subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren), after giving the notice of motion which is to be found at page 4 of the order paper the other day, substituted for it the notice of motion which I find printed in the Votes and Proceedings of March 21st, and which is as follows:

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon)—On Wednesday next—Will move that the House do go into Committee of the Whole—To Consider the following resolution:—That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

I understood that this motion was in substitution of the motion of which the hon. member had previously given notice. The only question before the chair is the one that I do now leave the chair to enable the House to go into committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Should that motion not have been dealt with when you called 'motions'?

Mr. SPEAKER. The only order on the paper was the motion which I have put that I do now leave the chair to enable the House to go into committee to consider the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Huntingdon.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask you whether the notice on the motion paper covers that?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may explain again. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) evidently did not understand me. The hon. member for Huntingdon first gave notice of a motion as printed on the order paper of to-day. His attention having been called to the fact that this was irregular he substituted a notice of motion that he would move that the House go into committee to consider the resolution. I take it that the motion is now quite in order and that the hon. member, having given notice of it, was privileged to move it to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). We should give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclaren, Huntingdon) every possible facility to introduce the motion and if I intervene it is only with the desire to have the proceedings of the House absolutely regular. It would seem to me that either one of two things must be concluded, that the hon. gentleman should have introduced his motion when motions were called or that the order paper should have been amended so that when the motion was called it would correspond with the motion which the hon. gentleman makes. I think that would logically follow from the rules of the House. I am not saying this with the slightest desire to prevent my hon. friend from proceeding with the resolution because I am desirous that he should have an opportunity to do so, but it is desirable that we should follow the rules of the House in reference to this resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. If any violation of the rules has taken place it has been in printing on the order paper the notice of motion which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclaren, Huntingdon) gave the other day. That is the only error as far as I can see.

Mr. M. K. RICHARDSON (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, in rising to second the resolution which has been moved and so ably supported by the hon. member for Huntingdon, (Mr. Maclaren) I recognize the fact that the subject which is brought to the attention of the House is one of a unique character differing from those which ordinarily occupy the attention of the House. It is a question which rises above the din and the dust of ordinary partisan political strife; one which makes for the highest well-being of this country for the present and for the future. This resolution appeals to our highest instincts. If the cigarette habit is the evil which we believe it is; it is an evil that demands a prompt and effective remedy. I recognize that the application of a remedy presents difficulties, but I believe that the difficulties are not insuperable. I do not believe, that they can prevent legislation doing away with the evil as it at present exists. I myself am a non-user of tobacco in any form. I do not, however, presume to make an attack on the use of tobacco in general, because I recognize that many of my own friends whom I esteem very highly use it, and I have every occasion to respect these gentlemen for their mental and intellectual attainments; for their good judgment and for their manly qualities. Were I to attack a habit to which these friends of mine are addicted, I might be regarded as one of those who

> Compound for sins they are inclined to
> By damning those they have no mind to,

I may be asked, why I should favour legislation not only of a restrictive character, but of a prohibitive character as this resolution proposes. The objection has been taken in this House often, that prohibitory legislation is generally ineffective and is vicious in its character. But as has been wisely observed by the member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) we find prohibition in every page of our statute-book. All law, human and divine, has in it more or less the character of prohibition. Thou shalt not, is written in the Divine Law and we, putting it in other words say, that the citizen shall not do so and so without rendering himself liable to certain penalties. A good deal is said about liberty; a good deal is said about interfering with the liberty of private judgment in matters pertaining to personal habits. Let us ask, what is liberty? There are many different notions as to what liberty consists of. I believe, Sir, that all liberty is law, because liberty is protected and ensured by law, and being so ensured and protected by law, then law is liberty in its highest form. Then, Sir, we need to cast aside that bugbear of interference with personal liberty. We know that the very foundation of society essentially interferes to some extent with personal and private liberty. I believe that this resolution will meet with the support of men who use tobacco in certain forms; men of high, noble, wide, liberal patriotic views, who recognize that this is a great evil which demands a drastic remedy. I believe that there are thousands of men in this country who now use cigarettes, and who would be willing to make some small sacrifice for the general well-being of the nation. The law of self-sacrifice appeals to the highest characteristics of humanity. Only by self-sacrifice can the highest ideals of life be obtained, and all the blessings which have been conferred by mankind on society, have something more or less of the character, of self-sacrifice. What do we admire most in the statesman who gives his life's efforts, and the best of his abilities, mental and physical to the well-being of his country? We admire most in that man his spirit of self-sacrifice. We admire and revere men and women in every walk of life who are willing to subordinate their own habits for the general good of their fellow creatures. It may be asked, is this evil as great as it is represented to be; does it really exist to the extent we have been told; are we to believe or are we to discard the expert evidence which has been adduced again and again to prove that it is an evil and an evil that is widespread in our country? We have the evidence of medical men; we have the evidence of men engaged in education; we have the evidence of men in charge of public institutions such as asylums and hospitals; we have the evidence of men in large business enterprises; we have the evidence of men in various walks of life, that the use of cigarettes is an evil and an evil which is widespread. I may be excused if I adduce some of this evidence. The first authority I shall quote is a well known physician, a gentleman who for nigh twenty years was a member of this House. I refer to the late Dr. Christie, M.P. He says with regard to the cigarette habit :

I believe it is the almost universal opinion of medical men that the cigarette habit is most deleterious to the young, producing impairment of growth and physical degradation before the full maturity of the system is obtained. Even the smallest amount of smoking is hurtful, as it often produces nervous functional diseases of the stomach, debility and irregular action of the heart, impaired vision and irritation of the throat, sometimes called 'smoker's sore throat.' I am fully convinced that it is a baneful habit, which should be denounced in trumpet tones, by all who have the welfare of humanity at heart.

This the evidence of a gentleman who was well known to many of the members now sitting in this House ; a man standing high in his profession ; a man standing high in public opinion. Then, looking at it from the physical standpoint, Dr. Benjamin King, of Philadelphia, who was military medical examiner in four states during the civil war gave this testimony.

I have been inspecting the papers in a number of cases under the present Recruiting Act (Spanish-American War), and I observe that most of the men who failed to pass the medical examination have weak hearts or lack the vitality necessary to make a good soldier. I had expected that the percentage of rejections would be greater now than in 1861, but I did not dream for a moment that it would be about three times as great. The examining physicians with whom I have talked have generally told me that the excess of rejections is due to the large number of young men applying for enlistment who have become victims of the cigarette habit.

This is startling testimony and it is well it should be paid attention to by the members of this House. I shall now adduce that evidence of men engaged in education, and I could quote more from them than this House would be willing to listen to this afternoon. J. M. Palmer, M.A., principal of Mount Allison Academy and Commercial College, Sackville, N.B., a gentleman well known in this House says :

Having had an experience of nearly twenty years as teacher in the schools and academies of New Brunswick, a large number of boys and young men from the ages of twelve to twenty-one years have passed under my direct notice. On such youths the evil effect of cigarette smoking have been very evident in the impaired physical development and especially in the retarded mental growth and deranged nervous system. Students addicted to the tobacco habit have less power of application and concentration of thought than those not using this narcotic.

As to its effects upon the vitality of youth, I would adduce the testimony of the principal of the Iowa State Normal School, who says :

Tobacco, used in any form, destroyed the ability to apply one's self to study, and prevented his comprehending or remembering his lessons. The mental faculties of a boy under the influence of the narcotic seem to be in a stupor, and since depraved nerve power stultifies and weakens the will power, there is but little use for the teacher to seek to arouse the dormant, paralyzed energies, or to interest and foster the fagged desire. I have not met a pupil that is addicted to the habit who will go through a single day's work and have good lessons. I have never had one whose scholarship record was good, and in almost every case the deportment was below the average standard.

I might read much more to the same effect ; but I would turn to another aspect of the case. I will show how the habit is regarded by men engaged in directing some of the largest business enterprises on this continent. The following railways prohibit the employment of cigarette users : the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Central Railway of Georgia. Director Harriman, of the Union Pacific, makes this remark :

A railroad company might as well go to the county lunatic asylum for its employees as to continue to engage cigarette smokers.

General Manager Parker, of the Rock Island Road, says :

In my judgment it is impossible for a cigarette smoker to make a good railroad man. As a rule they are dull and half asleep most of the time. These are not the kind of men the Rock Island wants to operate its trains and its great system, which is daily responsible for the lives of thousands of people.

George Baumhoff, superintendent of the Lindell Railway, St. Louis, Mo., says :

Under no circumstances will I hire a man who smokes cigarettes. He is as dangerous on the front end of a motor as a man that drinks ; in fact he is more dangerous. His nerves are bound to give way at a critical moment. If I find a car beginning to run badly and getting irregular for any length of time, I immediately begin to investigate the man, to find out if he smokes cigarettes. Nine times out of ten he does, and then he goes for good.

Much further evidence along this line might be adduced. The Chicago post office, a very large institution, bars out cigarette users. At a conference of the Chicago post office authorities it was decided to hereafter employ no boy who smokes cigarettes or who is known to have been addicted to the habit. Heretofore there has been a rule in force that boys employed by the office could not smoke while working, but, believing that smoking has a demoralizing effect, and because of the need of the most intelligent and active boys, it is thought wise to make closer restrictions.

Then, we might look at the question from a still higher standpoint—the moral effect of the habit upon the youthful users of the cigarette. I have here evidence adduced at the 26th National Conference of Charities and Corrections, held in Cincinnati. The section on reformatories and industrial schools was addressed by George Torrence, of Pontiac, Ill., superintendent of the Illinois State Reformatory, on 'The Relation of the Cigarette to Crime.' After reciting his experience with boys coming to his institution, Mr. Torrence said :

I am sure cigarettes are destroying and making criminals of more of them than the saloons.

Here are some statistics which he gave on the subject. In his reformatory there are 278 boys. Of 63, averaging 12 years of age, 58 were cigarette smokers. Of 133, averaging 14 years of age, 125 were cigarette smokers. Of 82, averaging 15 years of age, 73 were cigarette smokers. This demonstrates that 92 per cent of the whole number were cigarette fiends at the time of committing the crimes for which they were sent to the reformatory. This is surely very pregnant evidence demonstrating the evil effects of the habitual use of cigarettes on the morals of those who become addicted to the habit. Dr. C. A. Clinton, of the San Francisco Board of Education, gives the following testimony :

A cigarette fiend will lie and steal, just as a morphine or opium fiend will lie or steal. Cigarette smoking blunts the whole moral nature. It has an appalling effect upon the system. It first stimulates and then stupefies the nerves. It sends boys into consumption. It gives them enlargement of the heart, and sends them to the insane asylum. I am physician to several boys' schools and I am often called in to prescribe for palpitation of the heart. In nine cases out of ten it is caused by the cigarette habit.

Other evidence as to its effect in tending to produce insanity might be adduced, but I do not wish to weary the House. I am pleased to notice that this question is attracting widespread attention, not only in our own land and throughout the United States, but in England. Some of the states of the Union have adopted legislation imposing restrictions upon or prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarettes, and now the movement is assuming form in Great Britain. I received yesterday an English paper, by which I notice that a large meeting had been held at Bolton, in the north of England, by an association called the Anti-Tobacco and Anti-Narcotic League. The member for the county, speaking on the subject, said :

They had not yet been successful in the ballot for the introduction of a measure in parliament dealing with juvenile smoking, but he was convinced that the time was coming when no government, Liberal or Conservative, would dare to refuse their claims. They would meet with opposition from interested quarters, but it was becoming more and more widely recognized that great harm was done to the rising generation by the indulgence in cigarette smoking which, he felt sure, was a contributing cause of the physical deterioration in this country. He hoped that before Whitsuntide a resolution on the subject would be introduced in the House of Commons.

It has been said that national deterioration has been a marked result of the widespread use of tobacco. One hon. member speaking in the House of Commons in England not long ago, made some reference to the cause of the ignominious defeat of the Spaniards in the recent war with the United States. He attributed the loss of their manhood, their virility, and courage largely to the widespread excessive use of tobacco in the form of cigarettes among the youths of that country. This question is one that appeals to us on moral ground. I know that it has been stated in this House that improper attempts are made, not only here, but in various legislatures to relegate to the state the duties which ought to be performed in the home, such as the education of the morals and the religious teaching of our children. But, Sir, what is the use of giving that teaching and instruction in our homes, if immediately the boys leave our homes, they are surrounded with temptations and with examples that tend to break down all the teachings they receive in the home. A boy goes to school and sees four-fifths of his companions indulging in the habit. He is tempted to indulge in it too, and if facilities for that indulgence are furnished in the cheap and convenient form of cigarettes, it does not matter what the teaching of the home may be, temptation is too strong and he gives way to it and becomes subject to the habit. This resolution appeals to us very strongly on moral grounds because we wish to save our boys, to save them from all degrading tendencies, from everything that will lead them unnecessarily into temptation. We want to make it as easy as possible to do right and to live right in this country and as difficult as possible to do wrong. It appeals to us on patriotic grounds. We love our country, I believe that every man, whatever his political views may be, he has a strong and earnest desire for the well-being, prosperity and advancement of this great Dominion. We have great hopes for the future of this country, but if we would further advance its best interests and secure the realization of these hopes, we must pay attention to large questions like that which is before us to-day. Our future well-being as a country will not be entirely determined by the development of its material wealth, by the extension of its commerce and by populating it with immigration or by other material influences. It will be determined by none of these things, so much as by the character of its people, and of the boys who will take our place in the near future, who will be in future the leading citizens and will have the direction of the material interests of this country. Therefore it becomes our duty, as far as possible to realize all the difficulties that lie around this question, and so to speak on it to-day by our votes on this resolution as to endeavour to support our government in legislating upon it, and in trying to secure the prohibition of this evil. I say 'trying' because I recognize the difficulties that surround it. I recognize that so long as tobacco is used, people can make cigarettes, but, Sir, it is the cheap, convenient and handy form in which the cigarette can be obtained by boys, which leads them into the injurious habit. I hope that this resolution will meet with the hearty support of the members on both sides of the House. It is not a partisan or political question at all, but is one which appeals to our highest and best instincts in the effort to make for the highest and best interests of the people of our country. I take great pleasure in seconding this resolution.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I believe the cigarette is an evil, a very great evil, and I also believe that if this resolution is adopted and a law based upon it enforced, no one who now smokes cigarettes will thereby be worse off and every one who now smokes them will be better off. I am therefore compelled to vote for the resolution. At the same time I do not consider this is a matter that should be dealt with by this parliament. As I understand the principle of confederation, all such matters should be left with the individual provinces to deal with as they see fit. The justification for bringing the question up in this House, is that under the letter of the terms of confederation, the provinces have not the full power necessary to make their legislation effective ; that is, they have the power to regulate but not to prohibit. Only the federal authority has that power.

Regulation of the liquor traffic, of Sunday observance, and of the cigarette evil has been tried by several of the provinces, but has proven a failure, because of the lack of final and complete authority. Therefore in this case parliament is asked to prohibit. The responsibility of voting on this question having been placed upon me, and believing as I do, I have no choice in the vote that I shall give. But the difficulties in the way of securing the passage of the national legislation asked for by the resolution are very great, if not insurmountable. The difficulties of national enforcement would be much greater. There would be no such difficulty, either in securing the legislation desired as a provincial matter or in afterwards securing its enforcement, provided the paramount authority in the case now held by the federal power through an unintended application of the terms of the Confederation Act, were transferred to the provinces by an amendment to that Act.

While supporting the resolution, I would respectfully suggest to the opponents of the cigarette, of the liquor traffic, and of the non-observance of the Sabbath, that their first efforts might be best put forth to have all these matters placed absolutely under provincial or territorial jurisdiction,—as the liquor traffic in the Northwest Territories has been,—as the first and most necessary step towards effectively dealing with all of them. The authority changed with the regulation of an admitted evil should have the right to prohibit as well as regulate.

Cigarette smoking is only a national evil, in so far as it affects the individual. It is therefore essentially a matter for local or provincial regulation and control, if there is any purpose in having local or provincial authority separate from that of the Dominion. But so long as only the Dominion has the power to prohibit, as a member of the Dominion parliament, I vote to prohibit. In my belief, that which is admitted to be an evil, should as far as possible be prohibited, not regulated or in other words licensed, or sanctioned, by authority of law.

Mr. ROBT. HOLMES (West Huron). I think that my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is slightly astray in some of his conclusions. One of the reasons why the promoters of this legislation and legislation of a similar character—such as the Lord's Day Bill and Liquor Bills—are so very earnest is because they realize that the legislation passed by the provinces is not effective. The provincial legislatures have not the power to entirely prohibit, and the promoters of this Bill, realizing that local restriction has been a failure, desire a Dominion enactment which will absolutely prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes. It was admitted in the debate last session, and I think it will be conceded by almost every hon. member, that the cigarette habit is an evil, but I am afraid that we do not realize the full extent of the evil. Let me quote from the figures of the Trade and Navigation Report to show how this pernicious habit is growing. In 1899, 106,000,000 cigarettes were manufactured in this country. In 1900, that number increased to 123,000,000. In 1901, the amount had reached 125,000,000, and in 1902 the manufacture ran up to 138,000,000. And, notwithstanding the agitation which took place in the country and the debate in this House—which, one would suppose, would have had a beneficial effect—we find that during the year 1903 no less a quantity than 178,000,000 cigarettes were manufactured, or an increase of 40,000,000 over the year 1902. When we find this evil thus increasing by leaps and bounds, surely it is our duty to take some action to check it. Every medical man in the House last year, I think, admitted that the habit of cigarette smoking by our youth was very injurious, and as in the discussion this afternoon that fact has again been brought out most clearly, I need not take up any time in making any proof in this respect. It does seem to me that the only way by which we can check this habit is by a Dominion Act. It is of the greatest importance to the public welfare that our Canadian youth should develop into the very best manhood. If we thought that our boys were diseased in any way, we would bring them to medical men in order to have, if possible, the disease removed. And if we desire that growing generations should attain their best development, physically and mentally, we should not hesitate to take the most effective steps to root out this evil, which, if unchecked, will sap their manhood. We have realized the importance of keeping the health of our people free from all taint by preventing undesirable and diseased immigrants coming into the country. It is quite possible that in time immigrants infected with disease might overcome their ailments and develop into desirable settlers, but the Dominion government, realizing the necessity of safeguarding in every way the health of the community, have passed legislation absolutely prohibiting the entry of settlers infected with disease. I submit that we are equally bound to take steps to prevent the deterioration of our youth and enable our boys to attain their best development by removing from them this growing evil. We cannot too much commend the exertions of those who are behind this legislation. They are not governed by any sordid motives. They are not actuated by any desire to make dollars and cents out of this movement, but are moved by the best motives in the interests of society at large, and I am of the opinion that the best interests of our population demand that legislation of this kind should be placed on our statutes.

Mr. ARMAND LAVERGNE (Montmagny). As I am not proficient, Mr. Speaker, in the use of the English language, and am besides more at home on the hustings than in discussing public questions in parliament, I feel bound to preface the few remarks I intend making by appealing to the indulgence of the House. My only apology for taking part in the debate is that, being a cigarette smoker myself, I find it difficult to let this resolution go without saying a few words. We have been told by a number of hon. members that the smoking of cigarettes is a very great evil. Well, this is an opinion which is very much contradicted by many medical men and scientists. There are many authorities who take the view that cigarettes are the purest form of tobacco, and that, consequently, if smoking is to be prohibited at all, it would be much better to prohibit the use of pipes and cigars. But there is another point of view which should not be lost sight of. It is the parents, after all, who are responsible for the education of their children. You cannot take from the parents the right to give that training to their children which they consider best for them, and if a father should see that the smoking of cigarettes does not harm his son, if he finds his son, on the contrary, full of life and health, and doing well at college, I do not see why the law should step in and tell him that he must not let his son indulge in what he, from his experience, finds to be a mild and innocuous pleasure. I am a cigarette smoker myself, and I am not aware that the habit has had any evil effects on my system, or that my record so far has been a very bad one. I may say that I started smoking not long after I was ten years of age, and have never found that it hurt me in any way. My course at college was not worse than that of the average boy, I have had the good fortune to have been elected to a seat in this House, and I intend going on smoking cigarettes, not simply because I find pleasure in the habit, but also because it is good for my health. No doubt an excess in this indulgence, as in any other, would be an evil, but if we are to prohibit everything that may become an evil, if overdone, we should prohibit a great many things. For instance, we should prohibit the eating of fruit, because if you eat too much fruit you will do yourself a lot of harm. My experience is that the use of cigarettes in moderation is not harmful. If you smoke too many pipes and cigars, you will do yourself just as much harm as if you smoked too many cigarettes. It is not the cigarette itself that is to blame, but the excessive use of tobacco, and what may be injurious when used to excess may be beneficial when used in moderation. There are no men better endowed physically, there are none who have greater physical endurance than the Indians, and they are all great smokers. They smoke in their councils, and in fact nearly the whole time. What has been the experience in the South African war? I have heard Miss Pope, who was one of the nurses, say —and that was the general opinion of the nurses—that when Tommy Atkins came to camp nothing could do him more good than a cigarette. This parliament should not prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes. It would be much better to prohibit smoking by youths up to a certain age. The proposed legislation aims at the liberty which every man should enjoy to do what he pleases, provided it is not against the law and his conscience. I heard the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) say a moment ago that the Spaniards were defeated in their late war because they smoked cigarettes. I thought it was the smoke of the guns and the smoke of the powder that lost the battle to the Spanish arms. But it appears now that it was the smoke of cigarettes. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I would propose in amendment that we supply cigarettes to the army, so that our soldiers, instead of fighting the enemy with guns, may fight them with cigarettes. It would be a more humane way of conducting warfare, and a more effective way, apparently, to send a package of cigarettes to the enemy than by fighting him with bullets. Mr. Speaker, I merely rise to say that I propose to vote against this resolution, because I think it is an interference with our liberty. I do not think that cigarette smoking is as great an evil as some hon. gentlemen have contended. I think that the use of tobacco in any form is not an evil, but is, on the contrary, a source of innocent pleasure to mankind.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). This is a matter which is certainly agitating the constituencies in the province of Ontario, at all events. I have received a great number of communications, both last year and this year, in reference to the matter. There is no doubt that cigarette smoking is an evil for the younger generation; there is no doubt also that there are numerous other things that are likewise evils, both to the old and to the young. It may be true that we have not yet been able to legislate so as to prevent these latter evils; but if we were able to legislate in such a manner as to prevent the evil which cigarette smoking is undoubtedly doing to the younger generation, we would be doing a work very commendable on the part of this parliament. Just how that is to be effected is another question. Prohibitory legislation may or may not be good, it may or may not be an advantage to the state. In this case I do see some difficulty, because it is not sought to prevent the importation of tobacco, it is only sought to prevent the importation and to prohibit the smoking of cigarettes. However, so far as this parliament can go I am in sympathy with the movement. Any movement which will tend to do away with an undoubted evil, which is undoubtedly injuring the youth of this country, I am prepared to support.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman give up his cigar?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have not yet heard it stated that I smoked a cigar. So far as the records of this House go, it does not appear. I do not, however, propose to be cross-examined on the subject. Now the question just asked by the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) undoubtedly suggests the real difficulty. Some hon. members of this House and many people in the country enjoy their cigars, and undoubtedly derive from them some comfort. At the same time, there may be some constituents in a cigarette that work evil to the constitution of the youthful generation; and that, being so, if by legislation even of a prohibitory nature that can be prevented, I think we would be doing our duty to support it.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I would be sorry to find that the only protest against this proposed legislation should come from the youngest member of this House, the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Lavergne). I take this opportunity of congratulating him upon his maiden speech, and I venture to say that if he speaks in future on weightier subjects as well as he has spoken on this subject, he will be a credit to this House and to the country. If I thought this Bill would accomplish the end its advocates have in view, even though it might prevent me smoking a cigarette myself, I would vote for it. But I do not believe it will accomplish this end. I do not believe that legislation of this class does good, on the contrary I believe it does harm. Granted that evil is done to the youth of this country by the early smoking of cigarettes; still I do not think the remedy should be sought for in this House, it should rather be sought for from the parents of these boys, and from teaching in the day schools and Sunday schools. We all know that some of the boys' schools are loosely and laxly managed, and if they are not under proper supervision, worse evils even than cigarette smoking creep in, and are not stamped out until they are taken hold of by a man who has knowledge of and sympathy with youth. Now, I venture to say that if the energy that has been and is being displayed in bringing in Bills of this nature was exercised directly upon the youth of this country, upon their parents, or upon the schools they attend, infinitely better results would be attained. Some of the speakers have referred to the fact that smoking cigarettes produces indigestion. Might I be permitted to suggest to my lady friends who are so interested in this matter, that there is more indigestion produced in Canada, more evil wrought among the youth of this country, by bad cooking than by the use of tobacco. Fortunately, I live in a city constituency and have not to do election campaigning in the country. I make the assertion without hesitation that the best education you can give to the farmers' wives of this country is to teach them how to cook and economize. Not long ago it was my pleasure to attend a meeting in the east end of Toronto, though not in my constituency, where I could make no votes; but there I found two or three ladies had established a school for teaching girls how to cook. They found that a great many girls enter factories at 12 or 14 years of age and marry at 18 or 20 years of age, without having had an opportunity to learn how to cook a potato or to make a cup of tea. Now these ladies are engaged in teaching girls how to do housework, and I understood there were girls there who were to be married within a few months, and they were working as late as the regulations would permit in order to learn how to do a little cooking. I believe you will benefit the morals of boys more by making them healthy than you will by legislation looking to the prohibition of cigarette smoking. As I said, if I thought this Bill would do any good, if I thought it would have any effect in stopping the smoking of cigarettes by young boys, I would vote for it. But I do not believe in this class of legislation. I do not believe that this Bill if passed would have the effect its supporters expect from it; therefore I must reluctantly vote against it.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I do not propose to offer any extended remarks on the resolution moved by the hon. member for Huntington (Mr. Maclaren). I do not think it requires any elaborate argument to convince the hon. members of this House and the people of this country, or the majority of them, that evil attends cigarette smoking. To my mind it is apparent wherever we go. We see it in going up and down the streets of our towns and villages, and I do not think that any member of this House would fail to recognize a cigarette smoker wherever he met him.

There is no question in my mind that the evil is a very great one in Canada. It is very injurious to the youth of our land, to growing boys and young men. Notwithstanding the declaration that we have heard to-day from the youngest member of the House who, perhaps, has not yet been a cigarette smoker for any great length of time, I am not prepared to accept the statement of the few. I base my opinion on observation from year to year and the more I have watched young men and boys indulging in this habit the more convinced I am of its extremely injurious effect upon their health and therefore I have no hesitation in stating to this House that if the resolution is pressed to a division I will vote in support of it. I trust that the resolution will carry if for no other purpose than as a means of educating the people of the country. I think it is well to agitate this question, to draw the attention of our young people to it and point out to them the injurious effects to which they subject themselves by indulging in this, what I call, very pernicious habit.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). Mr. Speaker, as I understand it the question now before the chair is simply a formal resolution that we go into Committee of the Whole so as to permit this Bill afterwards to be introduced. I would have no objection to voting for the motion although I would not promise that my vote for that motion would carry with it a vote for the Bill which is brought in unless the Bill is far broader than this resolution. Last session when this matter was brought up, the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) proposed, in connection with the criminal code amendment, what appeared to me a far better plan of dealing with this evident evil existing in the country to-day, a plan which I believe would be more sensible because that which is advocated to-day is not in accord with the general sentiment of the people of the country. I do not believe such legislation would be sufficiently well observed.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I am not a cigarette smoker or user of tobacco in any form, although sometimes gentleman say to me: You do not know how much pleasure you have lost. Well, I do not regret that which I never knew, and as far as I am concerned I am healthy and happy without it. I have some medical knowledge and I believe that any stimulant that is given to either man or animal in an unmatured state, in an imperfect form, is sure to be objectionable, it arrests growth, causes the constitution to deteriorate and destroys the texture and strength of the brain matter. I had the opportunity of listening to a lecture in this city on a very grave question, and one aspect of the question which was dealt with was the educational question and the possibilities arising out of the present statistics in connection with education in the United States, both the common school and collegiate education. The lecturer who was well qualified to speak, having had large experience in the United States, said that it was not at all improbable that the day might come when they might have a lady president of the United States. He based his argument on the use of tobacco. He said that there was no getting around the difficulty that in educational circles the young women of the United States were far in advance of the young men in the acquirement of knowledge and this is just another evidence that the use of tobacco in early life is injurious to the human system. I do not want to dwell upon the evils of the use of tobacco, but, while I have had no personal experience of it I have the advantage of my observation. There is a great deal of agitation in society on the question throughout the country generally, as has been manifested in the circular which reached the members of this House. I believe in the principle very strongly that we cannot make people good by legislation, that we cannot bind the human conscience by a man-made law. It is a principle that I hold to be everywhere applicable, but our duty, notwithstanding, is to make it difficult for people to go astray or to injure themselves in any form. The tobacco evil is not the only one we have. There is the use of cocaine, the morphine habit, and there are other habits—private habits—that are most destructive to the development of the physical frame of our race. As we have heard others speaking patriotically and very kindly in reference to the youth of our land I would also say that we all wish them well and I am sure that it will be admitted that if we can supplement the paternal influence which is such an element of human strength by making it difficult for our young men to go astray in any practice or habit that will interfere with their physical growth and development, it is our duty to do so. I am in favour of the Bill and will vote for it. I know it is surrounded with difficulties and that the prohibition which we may make may not prohibit. A great many people are very shy of the word 'prohibit' but in society we cannot do without the word 'prohibit.' It is a word which is continually in the fore front. As has been seen in this debate the statute-books of Canada are overrun with this word 'prohibit' and why should we be afraid to prohibit what we believe to be wrong or injurious? If we prohibit the use of something that is good there might be room for complaint, but I think we are all of one opinion in reference to the use of tobacco by juniors and that is that it is injurious. Why then should we not recognize the evil and adopt every means to make it as difficult as possible for our youth to go astray?

Mr. R. G. MACPHERSON (Burrard). Mr. Speaker, I did not purpose taking up the time of the House on this question but a suggestion made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Douglas) in reference to this matter has called me to my feet. I am not a cigarette smoker nor do I object to any body else smoking cigarettes. I would say, however, that a boy who smokes cigarettes could not be employed by me. I made it a principle while in business never to employ a boy who smoked cigarettes because I have always found that a small boy who smokes cigarettes will almost do anything to get cigarettes. There is no question that it is a drug which the young man is bound to get when he once acquires the habit. I do not think there is much danger of a man of 21 years or more hurting himself by the use of cigarettes but cigarette smoking is injurious to small boys and for that reason I shall very strongly support the resolution. There is one point which the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat brought out and that is in connection with the cocaine and morphine habits. I have had an opportunity of knowing something of a most pernicious habit that is prevalent throughout Canada at the present time. I wish to tell the House that we have on the market a patent nostrum for the cure of catarrh which contain 5 per cent of cocaine. The rest of the compound is boracic acid. I have known women and men to become useless, to lose their positions and to lose their minds as a result of the use of this nostrum. I know of one household that was entirely broken up by the use of some of these patent nostrums which contain cocaine. I think this is a point which might well be driven home with a reasonable amount of hope that some good might be done by such a disclosure. I do not think that in my position as a member of parliament I should specialize the article I refer to because I do not wish to say anything here that I cannot back up outside, but I know very well that the catarrh cure I speak of which contains cocaine and others as well containing cocaine are being used largely by a good many people in the country who have gone into the thing very innocently indeed. I know of one case in which 240 bottles of a preparation of this kind were used in one month by one person. It ruined the man, and killed him in the end. This, Sir, is a very serious question. My experience is that the morphine, the cocaine, and the cigarette habit all go together. I never yet met a person who came to me and asked for cocaine, who did not smoke cigarettes. I do not say that the logical conclusion is that a person who smokes cigarettes will necessarily have the cocaine habit, but I say that I never knew a cocaine fiend who was not an habitual user of cigarettes as well. I believe that the government should do all that it can to stop our young Canadians from smoking cigarettes and I believe also that something should be done to investigate these nostrums in the shape of certain drugs, that are sold throughout the country.

Hon. WILLIAM ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). This question should be looked upon with great seriousness. It is all very well to say that this is a thing which should be left to parents, but parliament is here to protect the best interests of the country and in safeguarding the welfare of our young men we accomplish that result. Certain people who have not had the good fortune to have children, will describe to you how children should be brought up, but I wish hon. gentlemen to remember, that the young cigarette smokers take good care that their parents do not see them. They not only practice the habit beyond the sight of their parents, but as has been known in the city of Halifax, sometimes they steal money to buy cigarettes. The young member (Mr. Lavergne) who has spoken, is not old enough yet to experience the disadvantage of cigarette smoking, but I may tell him that I do not believe that I would have arrived at my ripe old age, had I practiced the use of tobacco in any shape or form. Of course most of us are old sinners in the use of tobacco, and we do not look upon the seriousness of this evil as we should. Reference has been made to good cooking, and I think progress has been made in that art in the Dominion. I do not think that any of us suffer from bad cooking; perhaps we suffer more from eating too much than from eating too little. It has also been said that this question should be dealt with by the different provinces. It is my opinion that the laws passed by the provinces are not so effectually carried out as those passed by the Dominion parliament. For instance if the Customs Act and the Inland Revenue Act were provincial Acts, they would be abused to some extent, but because they are enacted by the parliament of Canada they are enforced to the fullest extent. It may be true that we cannot prevent the evil, but there is no doubt that we can reduce it, and if we succeed in bringing the evil to the minimum, then we would be doing service to our country. If we trace the history of those who find their way to our penitentiaries, you will find that many of them had taken to cigarette smoking during their youth, and had gone from bad to worse until at last they disgraced themselves and their families. I shall have great pleasure in supporting the motion introduced by the hon. member (Mr. Maclaren) with which I am heartily in accord. I trust the House will deal with this question in that seriousness which it demands and not treat it flippantly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I quite agree with my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Ross) that this is not a subject that should be treated in a flippant way, because if we are to believe the opinions of medical men of eminence, a great deal of injury is done to youths of an immature age who use cigarettes to an excessive extent. The difficulty that I have about the resolution proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclaren) is that I cannot see that it strikes at the root of the evil. The resolution is: that it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes. Now, the importation, the manufacture and the sale of cigarettes are not in themselves a danger to the youth of this country; you have not got to what the lawyers call the proximate cause of the evil. The proximate cause of the evil to use a legal expression, is the use of cigarettes to excess by persons of immature age. I speak with diffidence on the subject as having perhaps not studied it as much as those who are promoting this legislation but speaking with diffidence, it seems to me that you do not get to the root of the evil, because if you permit tobacco to be manufactured and sold in this country, you do not prevent youths from making cigarettes themselves, so long as you permit them to buy tobacco and paper. Any one who knows anything about the rolling of a cigarette knows that any child can in half an hour learn to manufacture cigarettes if he has the tobacco and paper. There does not seem to be very much doubt that if parliament did pass the legislation in exactly the form in which it is proposed, you would still have great difficulty in suppressing this evil; presuming it is the evil it is said to be. I understand that medical men say that some of the cigarettes sold in this country have other constituents than tobacco which are injurious to the health. The point we have to touch in the first place is the selling of cigarettes to persons of immature age, and in the second place, the all important point is that persons of immature age should not be allowed to smoke them. How shall you accomplish that? You shall accomplish it in the first place by parental influence. I am willing to concede that parental influence may not be sufficient. There may be mothers and fathers in this country who cannot give their children sufficient care to prevent them from smoking cigarettes, and it may be that the state should interfere so far as these are concerned; and indeed so far as all of immature age are concerned, and should say: you shall not sell cigarettes to a boy or girl below a certain age, and having gone that far the state might go still farther and say: the boy or girl of immature age who is found smoking cigarettes shall be admonished in the first place, punished in the second place and probably sent to the reformatory in the end if the habit has reached such an aggravated form that it cannot be cured in any other way. I am prepared to concede that it is a subject that should engage the attention of parliament; but I submit to my hon. friends who have introduced and seconded this resolution that there are difficulties in the way of reaching the evil by the method they have suggested to the House.

Let me point out before I sit down that the government seem to have had a policy on this subject last session, which they promised the House would be carried out. My hon. friend from St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike) introduced a Bill which was ruled out of order by the Speaker because it had not been preceded by a resolution in Committee of the Whole. It is to avoid that difficulty that my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren) has adopted the procedure before us to-day. I find that after the Bill of last session had been ruled out of order, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice introduced a Bill, No. 215, to amend the Criminal Code, which contained a section dealing with this matter. That section was as follows:

> Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding $50 and not less than $10 or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for thirty days, or to both, who, either directly or indirectly, sells or gives or furnishes to a minor under the age of eighteen years, cigarettes, cigars or tobacco in any form: Provided that this section shall not apply to the sale to a minor for his parent or guardian under a written request or order of such parent or guardian.

When that part of the Bill came finally before the House, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice explained that this provision had not found favour either in the eyes of those who were agitating the legislation introduced by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence division or in the eyes of those opposed to any legislation of this kind. The latter thought it extreme; the former thought it did not go far enough. After a great many hon. members had protested very strongly against the withdrawal of this section, my hon. friend the Minister of Justice said he thought it would be possible for the government to introduce legislation that ought to be satisfactory to all persons, even those holding such conflicting views as had been expressed. The final observations of the Minister of Justice on the subject are to be found in 'Hansard,' at page 10758, where he said:

> It is understood, of course, that I drop this clause for the purpose of re-introducing another clause, which I think will better meet the real necessities of the situation. I am not going to allow myself to be influenced too much by those who are interested in the sale of cigarettes, nor on the other hand, by those who think that because they do not smoke themselves, nobody else should do so. I wish to introduce legislation with reference to the use of cigarettes by children.

My hon. friend went on to say that the legislation to which he made reference would be introduced by the government last session. A great many matters of importance occupied the attention of the government during the succeeding part of the session, and I am not now making it any reproach against my hon. friend that he did not overtake this question. But there was a distinct pledge that legislation of some kind would be introduced by the government to meet this evil, and I would like to ask the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister what the policy of the government is with regard to the question. I do not think we should be called upon to vote upon this resolution before us without some expression by the government as to how they regard this evil—whether they think it should be met by legislation, and if so, what direction that legislation should take. I am disposed to think that it is a matter of some seriousness. Although there are some gentlemen who perhaps have smoked cigarettes for many years and from a very early age, we must not argue from the particular to the general. Many articles might be mentioned which are used with impunity by some but are admittedly injurious to most persons. It does not do to argue that this man or that man has smoked cigarettes from the age of ten years and is now enjoying good health. The question is whether this habit is injuring the health of any great number of young persons throughout Canada. There seems to be good ground for supposing that it is an evil; but I have not yet been able to see that in order to meet that evil it is necessary to prohibit the sale of cigarettes, cigars and tobacco of all kinds to persons of mature age. I think that the evil can perhaps be reached by means which would be more effectual than that proposed by my hon. friend who has introduced this resolution. Therefore, I hope that the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice will give the House some information as to whether it is proposed to proceed this session with some such legislation as that promised by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice last year.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Mr. Speaker, there is abundant evidence, which is not controverted in this age, that the use of tobacco in any form is deleterious to immature humanity. At the same time, it is, I suppose, not disputed that the use of tobacco by grown-up men is an innocuous habit, and I understand that it is conducive to enjoyment. I have never been able to understand, however, that the use of tobacco in the form of cigarettes is any more noxious than in any other form. I have never seen any evidence that tobacco enveloped in paper is more injurious to health than tobacco smoked in the form of a cigar or in a pipe. But if it be true, as stated by my hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Macpherson), that cigarettes not only contain tobacco, but are treated with cocaine or morphia or some such noxious substance, it is quite evident that the use of such cigarettes would be injurious not only to youth, but to grown-up people as well. If such cigarettes are on the market to-day, there is, as I am informed and believe, no need of any legislation to prohibit their use or manufacture. We have on the statute-book to-day legislation which is sufficient to prevent the manufacture of such noxious substances. But the resolution which has been placed before the House certainly goes too far. I do not for my part see how it can be accepted in view of the debate which we have had and the opinions which have been expressed. My hon. friend from Huntingdon asks the House to agree to this proposition:

> That it is expedient to bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of cigarettes.

If it be admitted, as my hon. friend himself would not deny, that cigarettes can do no harm to anybody who is grown up, and are simply injurious to immature boys, it is neither logical nor practical to ask that tobacco in the form of cigarettes should be prohibited altogether to every citizen of the country. If it is not injurious to men, but simply to boys, the proposed remedy goes too far. If those who take an interest in the health of the young—and I claim to be one of those—would direct their legislation simply to reaching where the evil exists, I would subscribe to such legislation, but any legislation which not only prohibits what is an evil, but also that which is not, goes too far. I think we should be careful not to enact legislation which would not be observed by the community. I have always been opposed to prohibition, simply because the experience of mankind shows that if you prohibit a thing, which is not in itself an evil, your law will not be observed, and I think it is always an evil to pass enactments which will not be accepted by the respectable part of the community. If a man can smoke a cigarette with no more injury to himself than the smoking of a cigar, why should you prevent his indulging in the luxury ? If he prefers a cigarette to a cigar, why should you interfere ? I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that in our legislation we should try to reach the evil where it exists, and the admitted evil is the smoking of cigarettes by boys. I would prevent boys from smoking, not only cigarettes, but tobacco in any form. I do not hesitate to say that it grates on my feelings to meet a boy ten or twelve years of age with a cigarette in his mouth, and I always wish that the parents would look sharply after such a boy. But to say that because the habit is injurious to a boy, it shall not be allowed a grown-up man, is going altogether too far. In my opinion the peculiar obnoxious feature of the cigarette is its cheapness. Nowadays when a boy gets five cents, instead of spending it on candies, as they used to do when I was a boy, he invests it in a package of cigarettes. How are you going to prevent that ? The remedy, to a large extent, is in the provinces, and I would call the attention of the House to the fact that there is a tendency to-day to come to Ottawa for legislation which should not be asked for at Ottawa but in the provincial legislatures. There has been lately a reaction against that practice, and last year we had on the floor of this House several members on both sides protesting against the invasion by the Dominion parliament of the rights of the provinces in the matter of legislation. There are many subjects on which the provinces and the Dominion parliament have a concurrent right to legislate, but in all these matters I think we should endeavour to maintain the autonomy of the provinces. The legislation now sought for exists already to some degree in most of the provinces. There is in most of the provinces legislation dealing with this very evil, but we are told that the laws are ineffective and not enforced. I submit, with all deference to those who are asking us to legislate, and whose motives I sincerely respect, that if they would see to the enforcement of the provincial laws, the evil could be checked. I agree to a large extent with the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) that the ladies who are promoting this legislation could do more good by giving their attention to the matter of education than by seeking legislation on this subject. More can be done by the beneficial influence of women in teaching and educating our youth than in seeking legislation in this respect. The subject engaged the attention of parliament last year, and my hon. friend the Minister of Justice attempted to cope with it, but unfortunately, as he said himself at a later day, with very indifferent success. He introduced a measure which did not satisfy anybody, but he has been since looking into the matter. I am not prepared to say, however, that he has yet found a remedy. That something should be done goes without saying. Legislation to be effective should reach the man who supplies the noxious weed to the boys and prevent the sale to boys of tobacco in any form, but I do not see how we can undertake such legislation. It will be, however, the duty of the government to apply itself further to this question, and perhaps at some later day my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will be able to give information to the House on the subject. The question is not a party one, and I think that the best interests of those who seek this legislation will be served by our not voting for this resolution.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

UNDESIRABLE IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to call the attention of the government to a paragraph which appeared in the morning 'Citizen' which says :

> Fifty Russian Jews have been deported from Fargo, North Dakota, to Winnipeg by United States immigration authorities.

I would like to ask the government what they intend to do with these immigrants. Are immigrants who are not good enough to become citizens of the United States to be allowed to settle in this country or do the government intend to have these immigrants sent back to the country from which they came ? The matter is one of importance and we should have an answer from the government.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). In the absence of the Minister of the Interior, I would suggest that my hon. friend bring the matter up again to-morrow. In the meantime I will mention it to the attention of the minister so that some statement may be made.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MIDLAND WATER LOTS.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Before the orders of the day are called I desire, in view of the fact that charges, or rather insinuations, of improper conduct are becoming somewhat prevalent in this House and are becoming particularly frequent from one individual member, in reference not to one but to several members of this House, and attacks of this character have been made for some time past. I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a short time and if necessary I will conclude with a motion in order to put myself in order. The subject to which I particularly desire to address myself this evening is a grant made by the government for the construction of a dock at the town of Midland, in the constituency of East Simcoe, and also the purchase by the town of Midland from Messrs. Burton and Brothers, of Barrie, of the site upon which that dock was to be erected. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) in addressing this House on the 15th instant made certain references to that transaction which appeared in the 'Globe' newspaper and in the 'Mail and Empire' on the following morning. The 'Globe's' report is as follows:

MR. BENNETT'S CHARGE.

THAT A MEMBER WAS PAID FOR MIDLAND DOCK SALE.

MIDLAND DOCK PURCHASE.

Mr. Bennett accused members on the government side of the House of failure to observe the provisions of the Independence of Parliament Act. A dock was, he said, to be purchased by the government in Midland and the owner of the dock was very anxious to effect a sale. His opponent in the last campaign, Mr. George Chew, made a bargain with the owner that if he effected a sale he was to receive $400. When the deal was made and Mr. Chew did not receive his money he brought his agreement to the law firm of which Mr. Bennett was a partner, and a writ was issued to collect the amount. The money was paid, but the excuse offered by the former owner for not paying the $400 was that Mr. Chew had not secured the sale of the dock, but that it had been secured by a certain member of parliament, who, Mr. Bennett said, was not in his place in the House while he was speaking, to whom he had to pay $600 for putting the deal through.

The 'Mail and Empire' referred to it as follows:

Another matter of a similar nature was that relating to the dock at Midland. The owner sold it to the government, and Mr. Chew was to get $400, if the deal went through. Mr. Chew was Mr. Bennett's opponent in the last election. He did not obtain his fee and asked Mr. Bennett's firm to collect the money. It transpired that a Liberal member had received $600 for putting the deal through. The owner, therefore, objected to paying Mr. Chew's fee, but the firm, however, had succeeded in obtaining the money.

This charge or insinuation, so far as it affects a member of this House, applies to every member of the House who was absent at the time the speech was made. It is made anonymously, it is not made specifically, and as one member of a firm of solicitors who have acted for Messrs. Burton and Brothers for the last 20 years, I desire, so far as I am concerned, to say that my firm did act in connection with an application made by Burton and Brothers for the completion of the title of their water lots in Midland harbour, and did complete the transaction, acting as their solicitor. But I hurl back at the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) any charge that there was any deal in the transaction. I say to him that the charge is as false as the hon. meember is narrow and small. That hon. gentleman has for some years in this House sought to pose as a paragon of political morality. I would rather say to you, Sir, and to the members of this House that he has proved himself, in the speech he made last week, to be the conduit pipe by which the garbage of political scandal mongers is conveyed to the public. The hon. member makes that charge under the protection of the statute of this parliament in that behalf which protects him from the law by which if a man makes such charges outside the House he would be susceptible to the law and would have to pay the damage therefor.

As I said in opening, the Midland dock matter was not the only subject to which the hon. gentleman addressed himself. Most hon. members, if they had any belief in the charges which were made, would have contented themselves not to have dragged irrelevant scandal into the discussion upon the address in reply to the speech from the Throne. Most hon. members would have said: I am possessed of information upon which I will make certain specific charges upon the floor of this House upon my responsibility as a member and I will have those charges investigated. But, Sir, I say that is not the usual method of the purveyor of scandal in this community. What did he do? He first talked about the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and his relatives; then he let out and spoke about the whole government. They were buccaneers and free-booters, but there was no evidence to support the charges except the statement of the hon. gentleman himself.

Then he attacked the Minister of Justice.

Third, he attacked his late opponent Mr. George Chew, in reference to an alleged improper or immoral contract and sought by what I venture to say was an insinuation of the meanest kind to convey the idea that that gentleman had had to do with a transaction whereby certain property was sold to the government, whereas, the hon. gentleman well knew that this was not the fact as I shall show conclusively. The hon. gentleman knows that it was a sale of property from Burton and Brothers, the owners, to the town of Midland, of which he himself was the solicitor. And yet he allowed the statement to go forth to the public without contradiction and without a fair statement of the case, that that gentleman who had been his opponent and yet, Mr Speaker, was his client, had made a deal, an immoral deal, in reference to the sale of certain property to the government. I would not go so far with the hon. gentleman as to say that if Mr. Chew had entered into an engagement whereby he was to get a commission on the sale of the property that he was debarred from doing so by any act of which I have knowledge, though I do not mean to say that I would approve of such a transaction.

Fourth, the hon. gentleman assailed anonymously, without name, every member in this House, be he on the Conservative or the Liberal side who was absent from his seat at the time. He said that some member who was not in his place—he did not mention his name—had received $600 for putting the deal through, and later on we shall learn what the deal was.

Fifth, he assailed the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) who has already made his statement on the floor of the House and so I need make no reference to it. These are all serious matters and must be treated seriously. It is not right—and I appeal to the fairness of every hon. member in this House. In a debate such as the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne, it is not right or proper for hon. gentlemen to make such insinuations and not to back them up with charges. I say and I say it without fear that a man who does that sort of thing and lays no charges is a man who has a degree of narrowness and smallness which is very difficult of description unless it be described as despicable.

Now, Sir, I have no fear of an investigation so far as I am concerned, and I am going to lay all the facts before this House this evening, in order that if it is thought by the House that I have transgressed, the facts can be taken by admission and the hon. gentleman can move and have my seat vacated. I make no bones about the fact. The firm of McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin and Harcourt acted for Burton and Brothers until the sale was completed and for a part of the time for one Jeffrey and one Playfair in reference to the application made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries to confirm the title of these three parties to the water lots. My firm was first instructed to make that application in the beginning of July, 1900. Burton Brothers had registered title to that property since 1875. James L. Playfair was the owner of 12 water lots on the Midland harbour and he or his predecessors in title held registered title since 1870 as the hon. gentleman well knows.

The father-in-law of the Messers. Burton Brothers, who is their predecessor in title, was the founder of the town of Midland, the title to these specific lots was very complicated, or rather the description was more complicated than the title by reason of the fact that small bits had been granted, rights of way had been given to the Midland Railway and to others, and therefore the work of describing these lots was somewhat laborious. However, an application was put in on behalf of Burton Brothers and James L. Playfair by my firm in September. Nothing more was done in connection with it except that certain correspondence and attendances at the department took place until January, 1901, when I personally took the matter up. Until then the work had largely been done in the office by persons much more expert in matters of that kind than I am. I made application in person to Sir Louis Davies, who said he would not dispose of it unless the other parties thereto were notified. On the 18th of January, Mr. Steers, representing the town of Midland, and myself representing Burton Brothers, appeared before Sir Louis Davies and Hon. Mr. Tarte and made application for these water lots. Up to that time I do not admit for a minute that there was any breach of the Independence of Parliament Act in the work which my firm did, and which I personally did on those occasions ; in fact I maintain that I have a right to do it, and I shall continue to do it until I find an Act of Parliament saying that it is improper or unlawful.

Mr. COCHRANE. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will show you before I am done that the hon. gentleman made more than one, yea, two, and perhaps more applications to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, in the name of Bennett and Finlayson, for the water lots of one Drummond and one Little in that harbour. And, Sir, those applications were heard. Nothing further was done in the Burton matter, and it drifted along. Mr. Steers, a month or so later, prepared a written argument that was submitted to the minister, and I replied to it. Then in the month of February or March, 1901, Mr. Steers came to Ottawa, and he made the first suggestion to me that the town of Midland was thinking of buying this site in order to get rid of this difficulty. He told me then—the correspondence will show that I did not know anything about the value of it nor did I engage in negotiations with regard thereto—he told me the price they were asking was $10,000. I said, I know Mr. Burton has a very high opinion of the value of that property, and for that reason had maintained the title intact in himself. Then soon after my hon. friend delivered himself in this House in these words, on the 9th of May, 1901, 'Hansard' page 4806 :—

> I can tell the hon. minister that if he is asked to construct a dock in the town of Midland, he is being asked by certain heelers of the hon. gentleman, who want to unload a dock of their own on this Dominion. That is the point in the town of Midland. Party friends of the hon. gentleman have a dock that they want to unload on this government, just like this man at Hilton.
> The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am asked to build a new dock.

Mr. BENNETT. That means that he has to buy the old dock first, because the government does not own a foot of frontage in the harbour of Midland where they could build a dock. Now, since the hon. gentleman has made this statement, I want to know who asks for the dock; is it the corporation of the town of Midland or a private party?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not asking any money from this parliament for that dock this year, and I am not going to make any statement. I say there is a suggestion to build one. I am sure there are many other parts of the hon. gentleman's riding where they would like docks very well.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, it was not a piece of braggadocio on the part of the minister to say that he was asked to build another dock. I know that certain parties there are endeavouring to unload on the Dominion their dock property at fancy prices——

Mark you Mr. Speaker, 'fancy prices.'

—and if that proposition ever comes up here, that the government shall pay an extravagant sum for it, I shall object to it. There are private docks there, the Grand Trunk Railway Company and other parties have docks, and let the people who use them pay a proper rental to the parties who own them.

Then the hon. gentleman delivered himself again two or three weeks after, on the 20th of May, page 5703 of 'Hansard':—

The hon. minister is taking some votes in Ontario that I intend to condemn, and I shall do so when we reach those items. The hon. minister stated the other night that an application had been made in my own town for the purchase of some property there from a party interested in the property. I quite accept the statement of the minister, because I know it is a fact that these people are endeavouring to foist their private property on the Dominion.

Mr. McCARTHY. Who are the parties who are doing that?

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman knows them perhaps he may be able to state.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, I would like to know who they are. I doubt that it is so.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman has an idea of them perhaps.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When we come to that we will have the facts.

Mr. BENNETT. This business of asking the public to intervene and construct these docks is reprehensible. It was tried on in my own riding and it failed.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, speaking from his place on the 20th of May, 1901, stated it was a reprehensible idea for the government to construct a dock there, that the purchase of this property for $10,000 was iniquitous. Now, so far as I am personally concerned—the hon. gentleman waves his hand.

Mr. BENNETT. To another hon. gentleman who is amazed.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will realize that from this time on, I had nothing more to do with the matter—and I think the documents show it conclusively—except in endeavouring to get the department to straighten out the title of Burton Brothers. I was not successful in that, and the affair drifted on until about November, when, as every one knows the Hon. Sir Louis Davies gave up the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and the Hon. Mr. Sutherland then became the head of that department. On the 6th of December, 1901, the Town of Midland, evidently not sharing the views of the hon. gentleman, had expressed some six or eight months before, obtained from Burton Brothers an option to purchase this property for $10,000. Now note the peculiar coincidence. I find upon looking into this matter, because I have spent considerable time on it in view of the charges that were made, and I think that when hon. gentlemen view it in the light of subsequent events they will be equally amazed with me. I find that in January, 1902, the town of Midland appointed by formal resolution the firm of Bennett & Finlayson as their solicitors, and the town made application for the grant of a sum of money to construct a dock. The answer made to them was not reassuring. Then the town of Midland, of its own free motion, so far as the correspondence in the department shows—and I have gone into the matter very carefully—on the 11th of March, 1902, the town of Midland sends this letter to the Minister of Public Works:—

Dear Sir,—I have been instructed by the town council of the above named corporation to state, that they are now so strongly impressed with the fact that a wharf or dock is of much vital importance to the property of our town that they have finally decided to purchase water front sufficient for this purpose at a cost of $10,000, an option on which they have for thirty days dating from March the 6th, provided the department at Ottawa, of which you are the honoured head, make such a grant as will build a suitable and efficient dock thereon.

Kindly note that the option stands good for thirty days only. We trust, therefore, that the matter shall receive early consideration by your department.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) THOS. I. TRUEMAN,
Town Clerk.

Now, Sir, that has reference to the very option to purchase the property given by Burton Brothers to the town of Midland. The then Minister of Public Works answered that letter by saying that he understood the importance of the town of Midland and that he would endeavour to have placed in the estimates the sum of $10,000 for the purchase of the dock. That scheme seemed to have appealed to him. And in May of that year, just twelve months from the time the hon. member was shrieking in protection of the public, as he put it, saying: I will protest if any such grant is made for the foisting of this property on the public at a fancy price, the grant of $10,000 went through the House without a murmur from him as is shown by the records of the House. It is not for me to impute motives, it is not for me to suggest, but, had the retainer of the town of Midland anything to do with that? That year was a most important year in the history of the town of Midland as far as litigation was concerned. There were looming up in the near future arbitration proceedings between the town of Midland and the Electric Light Company out of which the hon. gentleman has made a considerable sum of money.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear, and made a good win for the town, too.

Mr. McCARTHY. 'Hear, hear,' the hon. gentleman says. If the hon. gentleman can say 'hear, hear,' in reference to anything that took place in that arbitration, I am sorry to hear it, because it shows that his skin is even thicker than I thought it was. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman, being the solicitor of the town of Midland from January, 1902, to the 29th September, 1902, whether he ever had any communication with the firm of McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin & Creelman, as it then was, or with myself, in reference to the purchase of the dock property at Midland. He answers 'no,' and he cannot answer truthfully, yes. There was a communication between him self and myself or between his firm and my firm during those dates. The by-law which was submitted by the hon. gentleman who says that this is foisting property on the public at a fancy price, was prepared by the firm of Bennett & Finlayson, they were paid for it a fair price by the municipal council of the town of Midland, it was submitted with the support of that hon. gentleman to the ratepayers of the town of Midland.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, he says he supported the purchase which he had condemned twelve months before and it was carried by the people of the town of Midland by 160 majority. Mr. Speaker, hon. members, where is the impropriety in connection with this matter? Where is the deal? Here the municipality, supported by a gentleman who had condemned this measure, supported by a gentleman who had called it a deal, carries the by-law by a majority of 160. Under the legal guidance of the firm of Bennett & Finlayson, debentures were issued for $10,000, these debentures were cashed and the money paid over as I will hereafter describe. The hon. gentleman does not say that he had any communication with me or with my firm in connection with the matter up to the 29th of September. I have been careful to go through the correspondence which took place between my firm and the Department of Public Works and even at the risk of wearying the House in order that there may be no doubt about the matter, because a charge or an insinuation of this kind is not to be lightly treated, I will read some of it. I had never seen this option up to the 29th September and I only knew of it then. I wrote Mr. Burton on the 29th September, 1902, as follows:

> I have never seen the agreement between you and the town. I understood from you that you gave them an option. If you have a copy of it I would like to see it.

On the 1st October, Mr. Burton wrote me in reply, as follows:

> I am in receipt of your favour 29th ult., in re water lot patent, together with plans and copy of your letter to the department. In reply we would say, we are more than surprised at the proposed change; we understood the whole matter was satisfactorily arranged between those acting for the town of Midland, Jeffrey and ourselves. In view of this we think the best plan now is as you first suggested, we to make deed to the town and to sign our rights from the Dominion government. We herewith send copy of the option given the town, together with description and also return plans sent yesterday. You better communicate with Bennett & Finlayson with regard to accepting deed and assignment of our rights from government on payment of $10,000.

I got a copy of that option and I found that it covered a description of property to which I had some doubt whether Burton & Brothers could deliver the title. I therefore advised them that they should withdraw that option and submit another. My firm came into it then, advised them and prepared another letter which was written by Burton & Brothers to the town of Midland on the 4th October, setting out fully the option which they were then making upon the withdrawal of the other option and the option which they then made was the one which was finally accepted and carried into effect. That letter is dated the 4th October. On the 7th October, the letter which I had prepared was sent. Then on 11th November, I was advised by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) that the grant which he had made in the previous March was not to be confirmed in the way that I had anticipated. I had thought that an order had been made whereby the title of this property on the part of Messrs. Playfair, Burton & Brothers, and others was to be confirmed in accordance with their applications. The hon. minister said that was not his order, that was really the reason why the option given by Burton & Brothers in 1901 was withdrawn and another substituted. Then comes a more interesting part. On the 14th November, I wrote this letter to Bennett & Finlayson. I saw Mr. Bennett's partner in Toronto prior to the writing of this letter and I said to him: Don't you think the wisest way to carry out the purchase of the property would be for Burton & Brothers to give to the government a quit claim or surrender deed as might be agreed upon and thus save the necessity of giving a deed to the town of Midland, and the town of Midland giving a deed to the goverment as per arrangement made with the Minister of Public Works ? After that conversation this letter was written. I am not certain whether I wrote it myself or not. It is as follows :

Nov. 14, 1902.

Messrs. Bennett & Finlayson,
Barristers, &c., Midland.

Re sale of water lots, Burton Bros., to town of Midland.

Dear Sirs,—Messrs. Burton & Bros. advise us that the by-law raising $10,000 for the purpose of completing the purchase on behalf of the town of Midland of their dock and water frontage has passed council and that the town is in a position to pay the money over at any time upon their making title.

Referring to the writer's conversation with you in Toronto a week ago, we would suggest as the most expeditious way of putting the matter through, that upon Messrs. Burton & Bros. assigning or giving a quit claim to the government of all their rights in respect of this property, and upon the Minister of Public Works expressing himself as satisfied with this title that the town would thereupon pay over the consideration for the property, namely, $10,000. There will then be no necessity for title deeds being granted by the government to Burton & Bros. and assigned by them to the town of Midland and by the town of Midland assigned to the government.

The method suggested by us avoids the preparation of many documents and attains the same result.

We purpose interviewing the Minister of Public Works on Tuesday for the purpose of ascertaining whether he would acquiesce in this being done, and if he seems inclined to favour it we will telegraph you on that day asking you to meet us in Ottawa on Wednesday for the purpose of arranging that the matter be closed in that way.

Kindly advise us whether this suggestion meets with your approval.

Yours truly,
McCARTHY, OSLER, HOSKIN & HARCOURT.

Then, I think, I came to Ottawa and found that Bennett & Finlayson had written to the hon. Minister of Public Works, and that on the 19th November the Minister of Public Works wrote Bennett & Finlayson as follows :

Referring to your communication of the 3rd inst., re Burton & Bros.' property on the water front, Midland, I beg to suggest that the most expeditious way to carry out the transaction referred to therein would be for Messrs. Burton & Bros. to assign a quit claim of all their rights direct to the Crown, and upon their doing this, then the town of Midland should pay the consideration agreed upon, and upon that being satisfactorily carried out I will give directions to proceed with the work upon the lot, as arranged.

I think it would be advisable for you and Messrs. Burton & Bros.' representatives to come here on a date you arrange to suit the convenience of all. I am to be away for a couple of days, and, therefore, suggest Thursday, the 27th inst. as being suitable.

You to bring with you certified cheque in favour of Burton & Bros. for the consideration money, and their representatives to bring with them satisfactory assignment and quit claim to the Crown of the property agreed to be transferred. The whole matter can, in this way, be closed without any further delay or trouble.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Then Messrs. Bennett & Finlayson answered that letter as follows to the Minister of Public Works :

Midland, Nov. 24, 1902.

The Honourable Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa

Dear Sir,—We have your letter of the 9th inst., suggesting that Messrs. Burton Bros. give a Quit Claim Deed to the Crown of their interest in the property purchased by the town.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, 'purchased by the town.'

and upon this being satisfactory the town to pay the consideration to Messrs. Burton Bros., and the work to proceed under the direction of your department.

We will lay this matter before the town council and advise you at the earliest possible moment, but we will be unable to attend before you on Thursday the 27th inst., as suggested. We shall consult with Messrs. Burtons' solicitors and endeavour to arrange some suitable date within the near future.

We have to thank you for your kindness in the matter.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) BENNETT & FINLAYSON.

There is a clean acquiescence on the part of my hon. friend's firm, acting for the town of Midland, and my firm, acting for Burton & Brothers, to meet before the Minister of Public Works and close the transaction.

Mr. COWAN. What is the date of that letter ?

Mr. McCARTHY. November 24th, 1902. Then the document was prepared in my office, and my firm wrote Messrs. Bennett & Finlayson on the 24th November :

Nov. 24th, 1902.

Messrs. Bennett & Finlayson,
Barristers, &c., Midland.

Re sale of water lots, Burton Bros., to town of Midland.

Dear Sirs,—Following up our letter to you of 14th inst., we interviewed the Minister of Public Works, who seemed inclined to favour our suggested method of carrying out the transfer of the property to the Crown.

We are unable to see him in time to telegraph you to meet us in Ottawa on Wednesday last. The minister, however, suggested that it would be wise for you, to meet him in Ottawa some day this week, and wrote you, we understand, to this effect, suggesting Thursday, the 27th inst., and also advised us that he would like us to be present at the interview (representing Burton & Bros.) when he hoped we would be able to satisfactorily arrange the matter—we to bring with us Assignment and Quit Claim of the property in question to the Crown and you to bring with you certified cheque for the consideration money.

We inclose you herewith for perusal a copy of the grant and surrender to the Crown, and will have the originals duly executed by the Burtons with us in Ottawa on Thursday next.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) McCARTHY, OSLER,
HOSKIN & HARCOURT,

Messrs. Bennett & Finlayson answered that by saying :

Midland, Nov. 24, 1902.

Messrs. McCarthy, Osler & Co.,
Barristers, &c.,
Toronto, Ont.

Re Burton & Brothers and Midland.

Dear Sirs,—We have your favour of recent date.

We have received a letter from the Minister of Public Works suggesting that the matter be put through by your clients executing a Quit Claim Deed to the Crown and our paying over the consideration. The minister also suggests that we attend before him on Thursday, the 27th inst., in order to get the matter closed.

It will be impossible for us to go to Ottawa on the 27th inst., as the matter has to come before the council, and we have an arbitration pending here which will be going on on that date. We will, however, bring the matter before the council at once and obtain instructions so that there may be as little delay as possible. We will try and arrange some convenient date with you to attend before the minister.

In the meantime it may expedite matters if you would be good enough to submit to us a draft of the proposed Conveyance to the Crown.

Yours truly,
BENNETT & FINLAYSON.

Which draft conveyance we had sent them on that very day, and which they, as solicitors for the town of Midland, approved and acquiesced in as being satisfactory. I think, Sir, I have read nearly enough to show the position which is occupied by the firm of which I am a member and by the firm of which the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is a member, in reference to the professional aspect of this matter, except so far as the conclusion is concerned. With that I propose to deal, and have yet a volume of correspondence which I do propose to weary the House with. The matter drifted along—as the hon. gentleman explains in a personal letter of his own to the minister—owing to some friction between the lawyers acting for the people who were buying the debentures and the hon. gentleman's own firm, and consequently the money was not raised upon the debentures until January. Then, on the 2nd of January, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), over his own signature, writes as follows :

Midland, January 2, 1903.

Hon. Jas. Sutherland,
Minister of Public Works,
Re Town Dock.

Dear Mr. Sutherland,—After the usual amount of defections as to form of debentures, &c., between the lawyers they have been finally signed and inside of a week the proceeds $10,000 will be with your department to hand over to the vendors for the Dock property when you will take over deed to the Crown.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, over his own signature, the statement which he made in this House is denied. He knows full well, and so he wrote there, that the purchase of that property was by the town of Midland from Burton & Brothers, and the money is sent to the Minister of Public Works to pay over in that way. He goes on in this letter to speak of the winter slipping away, and he trusts that the minister will endeavour to have that work constructed. The minister answers that letter, and then, on the 31st January, Bennett & Finlayson wrote to McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt :

Messrs. McCarthy, Osler,
Hoskin & Harcourt,
Barristers, &c.,
Toronto, Ont.

Re Burton & Midland.

Dear Sir,—Referring to our former correspondence with you in reference to the grant of $10,000 by the Corporation for the purchase of the Burton property in the town of Midland for the erection of docks thereon by the government.

We have to-day transmitted to the Minister of Public Works a certified cheque for the sum of $10,000 in accordance with his suggestion which is to be handed over upon a conveyance of the property satisfactory to the department, being delivered.

We trust this will be satisfactory to you. We may add that at the request of Mr. J. L. Burton over the telephone some days ago we have written him advising him that the money has been sent to the minister.

Yours truly,
BENNETT & FINLAYSON.

Then, Bennett & Finlayson again write to the Minister of Public Works on the 31st January, as follows :

Midland, January 31st, 1903.

The Honourable James Sutherland,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Referring to our former correspondence with you in reference to the grant by the Dominion government of a sum of money for the construction of a dock in Midland harbour, and also for the grant of $10,000 by the corporation of the town of Midland for the purchase of the property upon which the said dock is to be constructed from Messrs. Burton & Brothers, of Barrie.

In accordance with your suggestion, and under the instruction of the municipal council of the town of Midland, we send you herewith certified cheque of the corporation of the town of Midland for the sum of $10,000, being the amount granted by the town of Midland for the purchase of the Burton property in Midland harbour.

Under instructions from the town council we also inclose herewith a memorandum which we have prepared—that is Bennett & Finlayson have prepared it—in reference to the matter showing certain matters which the council would submit, ought to be considered in preparing the plans for the proposed work.

We may add that when the department's engineer, Mr. Sing, was here a short time ago we went over the matter with him as fully as possible, and he is fully aware of all the circumstances connected with the matter. If there is any further information or material we can supply you with we should be glad to do so.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) BENNETT & FINLAYSON.

Hon. gentlemen will note that the firm of Bennett & Finlayson are communicating professionally with the Minister of Public Works on behalf of a client in reference to a grant made by the government for the construction of a dock. Now, the memorandum that the hon. gentleman's firm prepared and sent along was this :

1. The marked cheque of the corporation of the town of Midland for the sum of $10,000, the purchase money of the Burton property, payable to the honourable the Minister of Public Works is submitted herewith.

Can there be any doubt in anybody's mind that the purchase was by the town of Midland, and from Burton, to be given to the government ? Then, in paragraph 5, he said :

2. In accordance with the suggestion of the minister the consideration money is paid herewith in order that the conveyance may be given directly to the Crown——

And mark you, Mr. Speaker :

—and that the department may investigate the title directly and make all adjustments directly with Messrs. Burton & Brothers.

Now, whether the hon. gentleman's firm sought to entrap either myself, my firm, or the Minister of Public Works by the way he worded this, I do not know ; but any way I think he entrapped himself if his own theories are correct, because paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 are communications entirely written by his firm, especially in reference to grants made by the government to the town of Midland for the construction of the dock. However, the Minister of Public Works made it very clear in the letter he wrote in reply to that. On the 2nd February, in answer to that letter, the minister wrote to Messrs. Bennett & Finlayson as follows :

Yours of the 29th ultimo, with inclosure, received. We don't understand why you should send us a cheque. What we want is a deed of the property as per arrangement. I did suggest in a previous letter that, if it would expedite matters and save the town trouble and expense, there would be no objection to a deed of the property to be acquired by the town, being made from the present owners direct to the Crown and that as soon as this was done and the matter closed up, the work would be proceeded with.

I wish the town would have this attended to at once, and closed up because, if we are to go on with the work this season, we will have to commence without further delay.

We will hold the papers sent us for a few days until a reply is received from you as to whether the matter is to be promptly closed up.

And then, if there was any kind of a trap in the mind of the hon. gentleman or his firm, they immediately dropped it, because they write to the hon. Minister of Public Works as follows on the 3rd of February :

We have to thank you for your favour of the 2nd instant, acknowledging receipt of our letter of the 29th ult. inclosing cheque for $10,000, the purchase money of the Burton property in Midland harbour.

This cheque was sent you in pursuance of your suggestion and with the object of expediting the closing of the sale, and to save trouble and expense in that way.

Could anything be clearer than the words written by the hon. gentleman's own firm, that the matter was put through in this way for the purpose of expediting it and saving expense ? And the hon. gentleman has the audacity to insinuate—for he has charged it —that it was a sale of property to the government. I will not weary the House with any further correspondence, although there is considerable more if I chose to read it, both with my firm and the hon. gentleman's firm and the Minister of Public Works. I make this statement candidly, that my firm acted in the matter in the way I have described. If it is improper, I challenge the hon. gentleman to make his attack, and let it be decided once and for all whether gentlemen of our profession have a right to act in matters of this kind or not. If they have not, I venture to say that not only the seat of North Simcoe, but the seat of the hon. member for East Simcoe will be vacated for the same reason.

The hon. gentleman says there was a deal whereby some hon. member of this House got $600. Neither my firm nor I received $600. It is none of the hon. gentleman's business, nor is it the business of any other hon. member of this House, how much we did receive. But I am not going to stand on any such technicality as that. I am willing to tell the hon. gentleman that for nearly three years' work in connection with these water lots and the closing of this transaction my firm rendered their accounts every six months, and were paid in the ordinary course of business for the legal services rendered to Burton & Brothers the sum of $400 or thereabouts, and that my personal share of that was about $60. The hon. gentleman may compare that with the Bill which he rendered to the town of Midland. His bill, I have ascertained, for closing the matter was only $40.

Mr. BENNETT. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman did nothing except draw the by-law and write these letters which I have read. He had nothing to do with the searching of the title or with drawing the document ; that was all done by my firm, and involved a considerable amount of work. Prior to that there was two years of work in connection with the water lots ; and the sum I have mentioned was paid for all that work. However, my firm were satisfied with the remuneration and our clients were satisfied. This is a frank statement of the case, and if that is a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, the hon. gentleman has only to make his motion, and we shall have an investigation of the matter. But, Sir, the position the hon. gentleman occupied was the position which I or my firm occupied. He acted for the town of Midland, we acted for Burton Brothers, and the government was between us. But that is not the view of the hon. gentleman. I think, Mr. Speaker, you will remember that some years ago in this House the hon. gentleman held up his hands in holy horror so far as expression by words is concerned, and said : 'No hon. member of this House should dabble at all in departmental matters—it was most flagrant.' He repeated that in this House the other night. This is what he said :

What have we heard on the floor of this House ? I can recall a case of a few years ago when a man of this House stood up and said that he was entitled as a lawyer to take all the cases he could get against the government. What does that mean ? It means that members of this House can advertise : 'I am a supporter of the government, and if you have a case against the government, bring it along, and all the power I have as a member of the House I will exert on your behalf in order to advance your interest.' What has that to do with the Independence of Parliament Act ? I say it is most flagrant. This thing is spreading in this country.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is spreading. But it has spread before the hon. gentleman spoke. On the 11th November, 1903, over the signature of W. H. Bennett, this letter is written to the Department of Public Works :

Some considerable time ago my office filed the necessary papers for the grant of a water lot in Midland harbour to Mr. Thomas J. Drummond, of Montreal. The papers were all found to be in order and an Order in Council made approving of the grant. I understand from the Department of Marine and Fisheries that the papers have all been sent over to your department for approval, and I should be glad if you would be good enough to have the matter put through as rapidly as possible.

Apparently there was not expedition enough to suit the firm of the hon. gentleman, and he enters into that arena, which he had before held up his hands in holy horror at any member of this House having anything to do with. Such pharisaical denunciations and hyprocrisy we had better be done with in this House. If any member has charges to make, let him make them, an investigation will be granted, and we shall be done with them. If the hon. gentleman has anything against me, I hope he will have the nerve to make a charge direct, and not simply indulge in innuendoes and insinuations. The hon. gentleman has said there was a deal. I ask him to-night to state wherein there was a deal. If there was a deal, the hon. gentleman's firm, as solicitors for the town of Midland, were a party to it. If there was any deal, neither I nor my firm knew anything of it. If there was a deal, the hon. gentleman was the dealer, for he is the only person who knows anything of it.

But the hon. gentleman was not content with that. The hon. gentleman's opponent in the last election was Mr. George Chew, and in the same speech he made a charge against that gentleman in these words :

A dock was to be purchased for the government in the town of Midland. The gentlemen who owned that dock were very anxious to effect a sale to the government.

In this statement the hon. gentleman was conveying an incorrect idea, for the dock was to be purchased by the town of Midland and for the government, not by the government for itself. I do not believe the gentlemen who owned the dock were very anxious to effect a sale to the government, except for the fact that the town of Midland had been holding them up as to their title which by reason of the decision of the Privy Council in the fishery decision, Burton Brothers had to get confirmed, they never would have sold the dock for $10,000. It was the only bit of property in Midland harbour which was available for the purposes of a dock, and the property was valued, by the hon. gentleman himself, at over $10,000. He goes on to say :

The gentlemen who owned that dock were very anxious to effect a sale to the government. My opponent in the last campaign, Mr. George Chew, made an open bargain with the men who owned the dock that if he effected a sale, he should receive a commission of $400.

Is this the condition into which political morality has fallen in this country ?

When that deal was made the gentleman did not receive his money, and he brought his signed paper into the office of the firm of which I am a member as a law partner ; and we issued a writ for the $400 and the men paid it.

Now, I ask the hon. gentleman whether that is a true statement. Is it true that he issued a writ ?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, a writ was issued.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no record of a writ having been issued in the county of Simcoe against Burton Brothers, at the instance of George Chew. I am advised by people in Barrie who know that no writ was issued, and I make this allegation, that in May, 1903, the hon. gentleman did threaten to take proceedings, but no writ was issued, or rather, I should say, a writ was drawn up in the high court and sent to his agents at Barrie. But it was improperly drawn, as the hon. gentleman should have known, in the high court, the matter being in the jurisdiction of the county court. The hon. gentleman was telephoned to that effect and the writ was never served.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. gentleman will allow me a moment, this was done by my partner. I always understood that a writ was issued, but I had nothing personally to do with it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation that he made a statement concerning something he knew nothing about. Then I ask him, did his firm recover $400 from Burton Brothers for Mr. Chew?

Mr. BENNETT. I understood that the amount was paid over.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, my understanding is that there was a counter claim set up in the adjustment of accounts, and $300 was received in settlement. Whether that be true or false makes no difference. The salient fact is the intention of the hon. gentleman to divulge to this House something made known in his consultation room as attorney or solicitor. I never heard of anything of the kind before, and cannot find language too strong in which to characterize such a proceeding. The hon. gentleman, taking advantage of the privilege and cloak thrown round himself in this House, tells us that a client came to him with an immoral bargain, something that was illegal, and then coolly tells us that he is going to divulge what was disclosed to him in his consultation room.

Mr. COWAN. And after collecting it.

Mr. McCARTHY. And after collecting it. If the hon. gentleman advised his client that it was an immoral and an illegal bargain, no writ should have been issued, or if a writ was issued, the hon. gentleman is nothing more or less than a blackmailer. He can take which ever horn of the dilemma he chooses. Either this was a proper bargain which could be recovered in court, or it was blackmail. It was simply a commission on the sale of property from Burton Brothers to the town of Midland. The hon. gentleman took advantage of his position here to divulge what he never should, if I know anything of the ethics of the profession or of the law of this country. I say that what a man tells me as an attorney, or counsel is his property, and it is his privilege to say whether that shall be divulged or not, and not mine. In a court of justice the hon. gentleman could not have made the statement he did. The law of the land would not have allowed it. It would have been his client's privilege to say : your mouth is closed and you shall not open it. But the worst has yet to come. Does the hon. gentleman know what became of that money which he recovered ? I would like him to tell me if he does. This was a county court case, and the hon. gentleman charged $31, being ten per cent on the amount recovered. Mr. Geo. Chew said : 'I do not want that money, give it to the parson of the Methodist church in Midland, give him $245 to dispose of for charitable purposes.' This was something which transpired between the solicitor and his client which the hon. gentleman did not see fit to divulge. The hon. gentleman must have known that this money—which he says was got in a deal—was by himself or his firm handed over for charitable purposes. Why then, in the name of common decency, did he not likewise divulge that fact to the public ? I have known the hon. gentleman a long time, and the hon. gentleman knew that I was connected with this matter, and I would ask him now to be frank and say whether I am the hon. gentleman to whom he referred in the speech he made on that occasion ? Let us have no misunderstanding about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Answer ; name.

Mr. McCARTHY. Apparently the hon. gentleman will not even now answer, but I must say that I did not expect him to. I know his disposition. I know how, if I had not put on record in this House the actual facts, they would have been misrepresented, and how they would have been howled about in the constituency I have the honour to represent. But I have stated the facts, and shall be glad to have an investigation into them. I cannot understand why this hon. gentleman should desire to take to himself the role of public disseminator of political scandal. But he seems to pride himself on that role and to rejoice in giving evidence on every possible occasion of a narrow and bitter spirit. But even to gratify that spirit, I do not think he should have gone so far as he has done. Let him make a charge if he has one to make, but if he has only insinuations, let him keep his scandals to himself. It would be more in accord with his dignity as a member of this House that he should cultivate a better reputation, and he would stand higher in the esteem of the public if he would cease disseminating scandals and make straight charges, if he has any to make.

This is my sixth session in this House, and I think it is the first occasion on which I have felt compelled to indulge in any personalities or make ill-natured remarks, but when I have been made the butt of insinuations such as the hon. gentleman has indulged in, I could not, with any respect to myself, refrain from replying to the hon. gentleman in the way he deserves, and I have done so in as temperate a manner as I could under the circumstances. So far as any of my actions are concerned, since I have entered this House, they have all been open and above board and I invite investigation into each and all of them.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I must plead the absence of the hon. gentleman, Mr. McCarthy, from the House when I spoke the other day, as my excuse for not naming him then, as I do now, as the member to whom I referred. I came into this House in 1894 ; I then had perhaps no stronger supporters than the firm of Burton Brothers, Barrie, lumbermen, and they were even stronger supporters of my hon. friend opposite ; in fact they were his political god-fathers, they were his wet nurses, and here we are told by him frankly, fully and fairly, that when they asked for a little departmental work to be done, $400 is the price of his services.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman states that the sum he received was $400. If Burton and Brothers, will look over the files of their office from 1891 to 1896, when I had the honour of being a supporter of the then Conservative administration, they will find that there were many offices performed by me for them in departmental work, for which I did not charge them a single cent.

An hon. MEMBER. Bribery.

Mr. BENNETT. And the services by me performed were of more importance to them than the services performed by the hon. gentleman. Now Sir, what is all this to do about. I started out with a statement and I am prepared to stand by it now. I discussed it with the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and stated that it seemed necessary to-day with the low state of morality that if you want anything put through with the departments, there are certain impecunious lawyers, who, for a consideration are prepared to do it, and who receive by reason of what they do fees that are grossly in excess of what they should be.

In 1886, I was reeve of the town of Midland, and continued to be reeve for a number of years. I was elected reeve a year or two after I went to the town. I continued in that position and had a great deal to do for the town with the then Conservative administration in connection with public matters, and from that day until the Conservative administration went out of power, the books of the town of Midland will not show that I ever charged one cent for duties of a public nature.

Mr. COWAN. You dare not, as reeve of the town.

Mr. BENNETT. And I did not ask for it.

Mr. COWAN. You would have disqualified yourself as reeve.

Mr. BENNETT. Some two years ago George Chew came down here and asked me what stand I would take in the House, if the question of the erection of a public dock in Midland was brought up. I then told him that I was in favour of such a dock, but that I was opposed to buying either of two docks, that I understood the owners intended to unload on the government or the town at fabulous figures. One was Burton and Brothers dock, and the other Jeffrey's. I might add that Burton & Brothers with the shifting of political waves had become good Liberals. Be that as it may, I assured Mr. Chew, that I was prepared to support his proposition of a town dock in Midland. We saw the hon. member for St. Mary's division (Mr. Tarte), who was then Minister of Public Works in connection with the matter. At that interview, Mr. Tarte gave us very little encouragement that the government would be prepared to build a dock. I think that after that occasion, Mr. Chew stated to me that Burton & Brothers would sell this site at $10,000 and he asked me if I was prepared to support the purchase. I may say that I am one of the largest individual tax payers in Midland, outside of the two or three companies. The figure at first was not known, but later, when I was told that Burton & Brothers were prepared to sell at $10,000, I then said that I was prepared to support it and did support it ; I also asked my friends in the town, and the result was that the by-law for the $10,000 was carried almost unanimously. I shall now explain where the difficulty arose in the town. There was a dock owned by a gentleman named Jeffrey, and there was a piece of water frontage adjacent to that dock and also to the property of Burton & Brothers. This piece of water frontage had never been deeded to any person, and the fee was vested in the Crown.

Mr. McCARTHY. It was owned by Burton and Brothers.

Mr. BENNETT. There was a piece in dispute referred to in the letters.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will find in an Ontario patent that the whole piece in dispute was conveyed to Burton & Brothers or their predecessors in the title, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that it was not fair to grant that lot to Burton Brothers and shut out the Jeffery lot.

Mr. BENNETT. That proves what I said. There was a piece of water frontage in dispute; Burton & Brothers asked in the department that they might have this, and at the same time Jeffrey was working for the same thing. Now, the town did not wish either of these parties to secure this piece of water front, but said : If we buy this Burton property, the Crown, now owning the piece in dispute, then if we give the Burton dock property to the government and have the new dock built upon it, the government will retain the piece of water frontage to which Jeffrey and Burton both lay claim. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) says that he had been for twenty years solicitor for the firm of Burton & Brothers.

Mr. McCARTHY. If my hon: friend will pardon me, I did not. I said that the firm of which I am a member had been solicitors for Burton & Brothers for more than twenty years.

Mr. BENNETT. It is rather a reflection on his firm that when Burton & Brothers have big lawsuits, they go elsewhere for the conduct of their cases.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BENNETT. I recall having seen Mr. W. A. Boys, of Barrie, acting there, with Mr. Aylesworth as senior counsel, in probably one of the largest suits that Burton Brothers ever had.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will know that the firm of McCarthy, Pepler and McCarthy, were sollicitors for the county of Simcoe in that case, and McCarthy, Osler and Co. could not therefore act for Burton & Brothers.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I can recall to recollection the further fact that when they had another large suit, about a very extensive timber limit, they——

Mr. COWAN. Peanuts, peanuts.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) please deport himself for a little while ?

Mr. COWAN. Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not usually interrupt that hon. gentleman. When the firm of Burton Brothers had one of their largest suits on their hands, involving a considerable amount, the firm of McCarthy, Osler & Company were not called in at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was consulted before that action was brought by Mr. J. L. Burton, of Barrie, and I said that as we had up to that time acted as solicitor for Mr. Playfair, I was sure that Mr. Creelman would not like it, and I refused to take it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Come again.

Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) was concerned in a case in the Supreme Court the other day in which the Burtons were interested, and the hon. gentleman's firm were not called in then.

Mr. McCARTHY. Will the hon. gentleman ask the hon. the leader of the opposition if Mr. Christopher Robinson had not up to that time held a brief in that appeal ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind hon. gentlemen that this discussion is becoming rather unseemly and is very much outside of the record.

Mr. BENNETT. I notice also that Messrs. Hewson & Creswick, of Barrie, have been for a long time acting for Burton & Brothers in the town of Barrie. Be that as it may, Burton & Brothers were anxious to sell their dock, and unless an appropriation was granted by the government for the construction of a dock at Midland there would be no sale, as the town would not buy the dock unless there was a guarantee and an assurance that the government would spend a large sum to build the dock ; it was therefore necessary to put leverage and power behind the government, in order that the announcement might be made public that the government would build a dock, and then the town would go on and complete the purchase. Mr. Chew and I had appealed to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and he had assured us practically that there was little prospect of the dock being built, and the people of the town had been told so, and did not expect that the dock would be built owing to the fact that the Minister of Public Works had not been able to encourage them. But a change came about. Burton & Brothers were anxious to sell the dock, and apparently enlisted the services of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and what happened ? The sale of the dock went on, and a promise was then made that the money would be expended in the purchase of this dock. Did not the hon. member for North Simcoe have something to do in the prompting and helping the progression of that grant ?

Mr. McCARTHY. If the hon. gentleman is asking me, I say no ; and I challenge him to show that I had any connection with it, good, bad or indifferent.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, Sir, what happened next ? Leverage was exerted by somebody, and the result was that an announcement was made publicly that a dock would be built at Midland, and at the same time the town went on and made a purchase of this property. Now, I am here to say that I do not believe the hon. member would ever have been called in by Burton Brothers had he not been a member of parliament, and merely for drawing up a deed he gets this large sum of $400. My position was this : I was a member of a firm in the town, and the town consulted my partner and myself—most of the business was done by my partner because I was away. But acting for the town in this and other matters, any little business that was to be done on behalf of the town was done through my firm to the value of some $40, and we had a great deal more to do than the preparation of a deed. But what happened next ? The question that was in dispute was this piece of water frontage, and the town was anxious that it should not be handed over to this gentleman named Jeffrey, but that it should be kept by the Crown so that the Crown might have the benefit of all that frontage. I called on the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), who was then acting as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and he told me the matter had been before him, and very courteously handed me a file of papers, some six inches high, and said: You can look these over, and call my attention to any that you wish me to look at. I commenced to look over them and the result was that I found a number of these water frontages were in dispute between the government and certain applicants. And who was the solicitor acting on behalf of all of them? There were several from the town of Parry Sound. These gentlemen in the town of Parry Sound had sought the services of the member for North Simcoe, Burton & Brothers sought the services of these people too.

Mr. McCARTHY. I acted for all of them.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh, yes, they wanted somebody with a pull. I now come to the town of Collingwood, and what do I find there? I find there a meat company who are claiming a certain water frontage; I find that the town of Collingwood are asking for some water frontage too, and I find that the member for North Simcoe is arrayed against the public interest in favour of a private interest; and I have been assured by one of the gentlemen connected with one of these concerns in the town of Collingwood that they had to pay the hon. gentleman pretty handsome fees for what he did, and judging from the fact that he gets $400 for drawing a deed, goodness only knows what he got out of these other companies.

Mr. McCARTHY. So far as Collingwood is concerned, the moment that the town objected to the grant to the Collingwood Beef Company for whom I acted, I withdrew from the matter entirely.

Mr. BENNETT. Now, what happened? A deputation came down from the town of Collingwood, and I was met by some of these gentlemen on the deputation who said to me: There is a dispute as to a valuable water frontage in the town of Collingwood. The town of Collingwood wishes to secure that from the government so that we can give it to a large industrial concern which proposes to settle in that town. But we are met at the threshold of the Department of Marine and Fisheries by the hon. member for North Simcoe and this meat company, and we cannot do anything. We claim that he is acting against the interests of the town, although he is the representative of that district, and we claim that he is being paid handsome fees for his services, and unless Mr. McCarthy withdraws all opposition we will to-morrow place in your hands certain papers which we deem it in the public interest should be brought forward in the House of Commons so that the whole matter may be shown up. I started out with this statement the other day, that it is notorious that members of parliament are collecting these large fees. It is true, I stated, that the sum of $600 was paid in one case. That gentleman had some qualms of conscience, but there will be no qualms of conscience in the hon. member for North Simcoe. But that is the way that Burton Brothers, the political godfathers of this hon. gentleman, get little services performed for them in these departments. Now, the Minister of Justice the other day gave an opinion on professional ethics, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will understand it and act upon it. Speaking of a similar matter he said: I am prepared to make such a statement. The statement in effect was that no part of the profits that were drawn from a certain matter were included in his share. But the hon. member for North Simcoe is not so sensitive, I am bound to say he will accept his share.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does the hon. member mean to say that he did not accept his share in regard to the Drummons, the Little, and this transaction?

Mr. BENNETT. Certainly I did, but I was on a different footing in this way, that when the smelter company was established at Midland a few years ago, they employed my firm and have done so ever since they came there. They have been clients of mine for a number of years. These people did not seek my services because I had any leverage with the government at all. But the hon. gentleman's services are sought because he has a pull with the government. Now what is the position we find him in? He cannot deny that Burton Brothers have been his political stalwarts from the outset. What the hon. gentleman should do, and what I believe 99 out of every 100 in this House would do in a similar case, would be to say: Seeing I am your representative in the House, seeing you are warm political supporters of mine, anything I can do for you in the departments, I will do freely without making any $400 charge for it.

Mr. COWAN. That would disqualify you in any election trial.

Mr. BENNETT. I suppose the hon. member for South Sussex (Mr. Cowan) thinks this charge too low. I am prepared to say now, and I say it in badinage, that I have never heard anything disreputable in the conduct of the hon. member for South Essex in steering business through the Railway Committee or in any of the departments.

Mr. COWAN. Have you or has anybody else?

Mr. BENNETT. I think the hon. gentleman has heard it himself. It is a question the hon. gentleman and I have discussed.

Mr. COWAN. Let us settle this before we go any further, because we are both here. Will the hon. gentleman tell me exactly what he means by that statement? Does the hon. gentleman mean that since I became a member of this House, for any work done in this House, I have ever received a three cent piece—work done either in the Railway Committee or anywhere else? Don't shirk it, but say whether you do or not.

Mr. BENNETT. I just said my remark was jocular—that in all my acquaintance with the hon. gentleman, I have never heard of his doing anything improper, and I reiterate that statement.

Mr. COWAN. I accept that.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman and I have had some heart to heart talks as to the conduct of other members of this House—that is between ourselves, however. Now what is the position of this whole matter? It is disclosed by the statement made by the hon. gentleman to-night, that his services were secured by gentlemen in the town of Barrie, who employ the firm of Hewson & Creswick, and I leave it to gentlemen there to draw their conclusions as to why Burton Brothers did not employ Hewson & Creswick to act in the matter of drawing up this deed instead of leaving it to the hon. gentleman to do, for which he was paid the large sum of $400. I say this, that the hon. gentleman's services were presumably sought because he was a member of parliament. I say that his relations with these people of Parry Sound, with these people in the town of Midland, with Jeffrey, Playfair and the Burtons, were openly discussed by members of the town council of Collingwood, and they made it so very interesting and so very warm for the hon. gentleman that he was forced to recede from the position he had taken against the interests of the town of Collingwood, and they dismissed him from their employment.

I can only say that it is a very vexed question as to what position the hon. gentleman occupies towards his constituents on the one hand and his pocket on the other. I say the time has arrived in this parliament when every man on both sides of this House should endeavour to stamp this thing out, that it should be known that every member of this House would spurn the payment to him of a fee of $400 for doing some trifling thing in one of the departments. If you are going to apply the principle that any man who has an honest matter to bring before a department or the House has to pay an extortionate or exorbitant fee then you are going to tell the whole country that if any one has a Bill before the Railway Committee, or before any other committee he will have to encounter men standing with open hands—and thank God there are not very many of them in this House—demanding the payment of fees in order that their voices and votes may go for the Bill. If any hon. member of this House to-night can feel that it is right and proper for any member to ask a fee of $400 for the services which have been performed by the hon. member for North Simcoe I can only say that he is sinking very far the dignity of a member occupying a position on the floor of this parliament. The right hon. leader of the government recalls to recollection, and other hon. gentlemen opposite know it full well, than on the occasion of the case being dealt with that I referred to the other day, the case of the St. Catharines Milling Co. the declaration was made by those hon. gentlemen who were then on this side of the House that the fees and costs paid to the firm of McCarthy, Osler, & Co. were an indirect bribe to the then sitting member for North Simcoe, the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy, and they denounced it as strongly as it could be denounced. I believe they were right in their denunciation of it and if these hon. gentlemen——

Mr. McCARTHY. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that under the last administration the government ever paid to the firm of McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin & Creelman fees direct for work done by the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy?

Mr. BENNETT. They paid fees to the firm.

Mr. McCARTHY. The costs incurred were in respect to the constitutional fight conducted by the firm of McCarthy, Osler & Co. on behalf of the St. Catharines Milling Co., and these costs were guaranteed by the government.

Mr. BENNETT. I do make this statement that the hon. gentleman who then sat on this side of the House took the position, that, Mr. McCarthy being a member of the firm, the fees should not have been guaranteed.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent the late Mr. McCarthy. The government never gave the fees or had the power to give the fees to Mr. McCarthy in any case. His clients were the St. Catharines Milling Co. who fought the case and it was only when it went to the Privy Council that the government guaranteed the fees. The matter has been threshed out over and over again.

Mr. BENNETT. I say that it was denounced by the then opposition as something unseemly and indecent for a member of parliament to do. Now, as far as Mr. George Chew is concerned he lives in the town of Midland and he will be my opponent. He has been nominated. I can only say that I do not think that if Mr. Chew had to do this over again he would have taken this $400 or $300 as it is said to be. It is a matter between Mr. Chew and the public and I do not know that any of his friends are very proud of the fact that he entered into the arrangement that he did enter into with Burton & Brothers. I understand that he gave a part of it to the church just to ease his conscience to that extent. I say that if the government is going to reprobate the conduct of members of this House taking matters into the departments and charging grossly excessive fees, all well and good. I do not think it will raise the tone of the parliamentary institutions of this country and I do not believe that such a thing would be tolerated in Great Britain or in any other country. If it is right and honourable for a member of parliament to take a departmental matter up and charge a fee for it, it is equally right and honourable to go up into the Railway Committee and demand a fee for advocating a claim there. I have nothing to take back in regard to what I have said and I can tell the hon. member for North Simcoe that in the township of Oro which will form a part of the constituency of North Simcoe he will have an opportunity in the next election, although it is not in the riding I have the honour to represent, of hearing these matters discussed on the public platform, and I would invite him to ask the electors to decide whether such conduct in a member of parliament is to be reprobated and condemned or whether it is to be admired.

Mr. McCARTHY. I accept the challenge.

Mr. BENNETT. If the sole duty of a member of parliament is to see what he can make by trucking around the departments then I say that the dignity of parliament will sink to a low depth. The hon. gentleman has evidently been scouring everything. I am not going to throw back names; he can call me what he likes, but he should remember that:

> Immoderate words admit of no defence
> For want of decency is want of common sense.

I am prepared to discuss this case upon its merits and I am not afraid to say that I believe that the right hon. the Prime Minister regrets that the matter has been made public and hopes with hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who are actuated by a high sense of public duty that a recurrence of such an incident will not be heard of for many years to come.

Mr. M. K. COWAN (South Essex). Mr. Speaker, I think that the House, one and all, will agree with the last expression which fell from the lips of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and that is that an incident of this kind will not occur again in the Dominion House of Commons. I sat within sound of the voice of that hon. gentleman on March 15th, when I heard charges made which seemed to me decidedly dark against two hon. members of the House of Commons under which they must have lost the personal respect of every member of this House who felt that they must either clear their skirts or compel the hon. gentleman who laid the charges to make them good. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) each and all felt, was the hon. gentleman who was referred to as being a party to a deal between some gentlemen named Burton & Brothers, in the town of Barrie and the Dominion government, and who had used his parliamentary position in order to pocket $600 which he otherwise would not have received. I say that there was no member upon this side of the House or upon that who did not feel that the dignity of this House was lowered if that statement were true. They also felt that a man with the parliamentary experience and with the position and standing which the hon. member for East Simcoe had in this House ought not to stand up and traduce the character of men of the standing of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Copp) and the hon. member for North Simcoe, unless he had the documents in his hands and is prepared to prove that statement and make it true or get out of the House, because one of two things ought to occur—either that the hon. member for North Simcoe ought to be drummed out of it for having done what he is charged with—or the hon. member for East Simcoe ought to be drummend out of it for having made a statement which was untrue. We have waited until the return of the hon. member for North Simcoe for the purpose of clearing his character which was traduced by the hon. member for East Simcoe that night. In order that there should be no misunderstanding in this matter, in order that this House may know that I have read aright, I propose to turn up 'Hansard' of March 15th, page 146, not the unrevised, but the revised 'Hansard,' to show the impression which the hon. gentleman sought to convey and it is this:

> I will give the House another instance of it. A dock was to be purchased for the government in the town of Midland.

There is a clear statement made by a man who was living in the town of Midland, a man in whose constituency it is; yea, the man who acted as the paid counsel for the town of Midland when that dock was purchased. And when he made the statement that the dock was to be purchased for the government in the town of Midland, intending to convey the impression to this House that it was being paid for by the government, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) was making a statement that he knew was absolutely untrue, absolutely far from the fact.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. Let him go on.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) is exceeding the rules of debate.

Mr. BENNETT. Let him follow his inclination.

Mr. COWAN. I quite appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that a man speaking on the floor of parliament, with all the safeguards provided to make this a dignified body, may possibly use language that is not parliamentary. I endeavour to keep myself inside the rules, but apparently I have failed, and I therefore withdraw the language most kindly, and I apologize to the hon. member for East Simcoe.

Mr. BENNETT. Not necessary.

Mr. COWAN. Then, Sir, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) goes on :

My opponent in the last campaign, Mr. Chew, made an open bargain with the man who owned the dock that if he effected a sale he should receive a commission of $400.

Well, as I understand the case, the town of Midland made a proposition to the government of Canada, that if the government would build a wharf in the town of Midland the town would supply the site. That was the proposition that emanated from the town of Midland, and that is the proposition that came through the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), I have no doubt, as solicitor for the town of Midland, or with his full knowledge and consent. Then comes the purchase of that site from the Burton Brothers ; the gentlemen to whom he referred to with pride to-night as being his supporters in the earlier days and apparently his clients, but who are not his supporters or his clients now. I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that if a physician divulges the weakness and the illness of his patient he is guilty of gross unprofessional conduct, so a solicitor, if he dare divulge the secrets of his clients, is subject to be repudiated by the profession and castigated by the courts. I am not surprised that the clients that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) once had, and the supporters he once had, are neither his clients nor his supporters now.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) and myself may perhaps have records in the courts of Ontario, and I have no such record in the courts as he has.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. That's right ; that is absolutely true.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman knows what I refer to.

Mr. COWAN. I would be extremely sorry if I had the same record as has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett). The courts of this country have no record of me, but they have of the hon. gentleman in connection with transactions and in reference to the hon. gentleman's dealings. I am not here to discuss the private life of the hon. gentleman, or my own. I would not want to compare mine for a single instant with his. At the same time I want to tell him, that if he got the information from George Chew, that he was to receive a commission of $400, it was a perfectly legitimate transaction because George Chew was buying between the town of Midland and the Burton Brothers. It has nothing to do with the government at all. More than that the town of Midland was to supply the site for the wharf. Then I say, that if that was a wrong or an illegal transaction, the firm of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) were willing to take it up and collect the money. If it were a fair and an honest transaction it was unworthy of the hon. gentleman of East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to try to make political capital against a man whose voice cannot be heard in this House in his own defence. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) makes the statement that George Chew got less than $300 for negotiating a transaction between Burton Brothers and the town of Midland in respect of which the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was acting for one party, and the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) acting for the other party. If it were wrong for the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to act, then it was doubly wrong for the member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to act because the property was situated in East Simcoe and not in the constituency of North Simcoe. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) stated that Mr. Chew got $400 and that he issued a writ. It turns out that he (Mr. Bennett) does not know whether a writ was issued or not, although he said in his speech that it was issued. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) says Mr. Chew did not issue a writ, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCarthy) goes further and says, that it was not $400, but that after paying Mr. Bennett's fees, Mr. Chew directed Mr. Bennett's firm to give the balance to charity, and that a cheque for him went out from Bennett & Finlayson for $245. If that be true then the cheque of the hon. member for East Simcoe, or of the firm to which he belongs, went to the Methodist parson to be used for charitable or church purposes as authorized by Mr. Chew. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) must have known that on the 15th of March when he made that speech charging George Chew with pocketing $400. In point of fact George Chew did not pocket $400, but after paying Bennett and Finlayson's fees, Mr. Chew gave the balance to the Methodist church. The hon. member for East Simcoe did not give that information to the House, but he gave the impression to the House, that George Chew had sold a dock to the government, in which statement the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was not strictly wedded to the fact. The hon. member for East Simcoe gave the impression that George Chew had made $400 from dealing with the government, and again I regret to say the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) was not wedded to the facts. George Chew had asked his firm—I do not know why he asked the firm of Bennett and Finlayson to give their cheque to the Methodist church; whether he thought this matter would ever come up in parliament; and he wanted the signature of the member for East Simcoe on the cheque in order to show where the money went to;—but what I want to say is, that it was not an honest statement such as we would expect from the hon. member for East Simcoe, or from any other member of this House.

I do not care what the hon. member for North Simcoe charged Burton Brothers for selling to the town of Midland any more than if they had sold to the city of Montreal or the city of Ottawa. In a matter between the hon. member for North Simcoe and his clients, his own clients are the best judges of whether or not the charge has been excessive; and they apparently paid the bill without remark, something that had nothing to do with the government at all. But, Mr. Speaker, if it had anything to do with this government it was perfectly proper. If the hon. member for North Simcoe acted improperly, the hon. member for East Simcoe was the first sinner in that respect, because after he was a member of this House and before the hon. member for North Simcoe was a member, he was dabbling in water lots in the town of Midland and along the shores of the county of Simcoe. I am not here as solicitor or counsel to say that is wrong for one single instant. The Independence of Parliament Act does not say it is wrong; the hon. member for East Simcoe had a perfect right to do it. But the hon. member is getting to a depth to which few men will descend when he tries to smirch a member of this House by first making statements which the Speaker has decided I must not say are untrue, but which are not strictly in accordance with the facts, and then places a wrong interpretation upon the facts for the purpose of striking at a man who is a political opponent, but who is not a member of this House and therefore cannot be heard.

Motion of Mr. McCarthy withdrawn.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does my right hon. friend propose to bring up any government business to-morrow? If so, what will it be?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I need hardly remind my hon. friend that to-morrow is a private members' day. There are several Bills on the paper, and if we get through with them in a reasonable time, we shall take up government business and go into Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

Mr. COWAN.

QUESTIONS.

EXPERIMENTAL POULTRY STATIONS.

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked:—

1. Has the following copy of a motion taken from the minutes of a meeting of the Manitoba Poultry Association, held in Brandon on January 28th, 1904, been received by the hon. the Minister of Agriculture:—

'That, realizing the good results derived from the experimental farms to the agriculturists, but as these farms do not make a specialty of poultry breeding, we feel that one or more stations for this purpose, together with the fattening and dressing of poultry for market, should be established in the province of Manitoba ; which would prove to be of great benefit to those who are unacquainted with this branch of farm work ' ?

2. Is it the intention of the government, in compliance with the recommendation contained in the above motion, to establish one or more stations in Manitoba for the purposes therein mentioned ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. Yes.

2. It is the intention of the government to endeavour to meet the wishes of the members of the Manitoba Poultry Association, as expressed in the resolution.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE COMPANY.

1. To what extent have the conditions or obligations set forth in the agreement entered into on the 19th day of October, 1903, between His Majesty the King and the Quebec Bridge Company, been carried out ?

2. Has the said Bridge Company fulfilled any or all of the conditions set forth in the said agreement ; and if so, in what regard or to what extent ?

3. Have any of the bonds, debentures, or other securities, authorized by the said agreement, been issued by the said company ; and if so, to what extent, and on what date were they issued ?

4. Have the government guaranteed the payment of interest and principal on said bonds or other securities ?

5. What amount of the said bonds of the company have been issued ?

6. Have any of the said bonds of the company been sold ; if so, to whom, at what price, and on what date ?

7. Have any of the bonds of the company been delivered to the said company, or to any other person or party ; if so, to whom, what amount, and when were such deliveries made ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. An agreement has been entered into between the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, the Royal Trust Company, and the government providing for an issue not to exceed $6,678,200, of first mortgage bonds of the Bridge Company under the Act of last session and the agreement therein ratified, and on the security therein provided for, the principal and interest of such bonds being guaranteed by the government of Canada.

2. The conditions required by the Act of last session and the agreement thereby ratified before the issue of such bonds and the guarantee thereof by the government of Canada have been fulfilled by the said Bridge Company.

5, 6 and 7. See answers to foregoing questions.

IMPROVEMENT OF ST. ANDREWS RAPIDS.

Mr. PUTTEE asked :

1. What amount has been paid to the contractors under the contract for the improvement of St. Andrews rapids ?

2. Has any extension of time not yet expired been granted to the contractors ?

3. Are arrangements being made to proceed with the work when the season opens ?

4. Will the Public Works Department complete the work, or will a further contract be let ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works) :

1. $75,800.

2. No.

3 and 4. The matter is under consideration.

CHINESE LABOUR IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. PUTTEE asked :

Has the government received any information that the Chinese government demands free entry of Chinese at Vancouver, in return for its sanction of the peonage system of Chinese labour in South Africa ?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). The government has not received any information on the point.

SALE OF MODELS BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. PORTER asked :

1. Have the models deposited by inventors in the Patent Office Department been sold ?

2. If so, under what right were they so sold ?

3. How many models were sold ?

4. Were they sold by public tender or private contract ?

5. To whom were they sold ?

6. Were these models catalogued or listed, or were they sold en bloc ?

7. What was the gross and what the net amount realized from such sale ?

8. How many of these models were full size, or commercial machines or articles ?

9. Was any restriction placed upon the purchaser or purchasers to prevent these full-sized or commercial machines or articles coming into competition with the product of the inventor, or interfering with his rights as such inventor ?

10. What is the wholesale or retail value of the total number of models of full size or commercial machines or articles so sold ?

11. Was the consent of the inventor, or any assignee of the inventor, of these various models procured for the sale thereof ?

12. Was any opportunity offered to each inventor to procure by purchase or otherwise his own model, without acquiring by purchase all other models ?

13. Has any compensation been made, or is it the intention to make any compensation to the inventor for his labour and expense in producing these models ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. Yes.

2. 3 Edward VII., cap. 46, sec. 15.

3. It was estimated that there were between 25,000 and 30,000. The sale was made without any warranty as to number.

4. By public tender.

5. T. G. Brigham, of Ottawa.

6. They were sold en bloc.

7. The gross amount was eight hundred dollars. The net amount was four hundred and ninety-nine dollars and sixty-five cents, the difference being the expense of advertising.

8. The records of the department do not show what models were full size or commercial machines or articles. The only requirement of the law and the regulations has been that the models should be working ones of convenient size, not to exceed twelve inches on the longest side ; and the only entry in the records respecting them it is of their deposit or filing.

9. The sale was made under the law above cited, and in accordance with the terms of the notice calling for tenders, which was as follows :

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

SALE OF PATENT MODELS.

Tenders are invited for the purchase en bloc of the models heretofore deposited in the Patent Office by applicants for patents of invention.

The models are some twenty-five to thirty thousand in number, and are made of every variety of material.

The sale will be made for cash, and without any warranty as to the number of the models or their condition.

The purchaser must remove all the models from the premises in which they are stored within two weeks from the date of notice by post of the acceptance of his tender.

The lowest or any tender will not necessarily be accepted.

Sealed tenders addressed to the undersigned and endorsed 'Tenders for Purchase of Patent Models' will be received at this office until Tuesday, the 1st day of March, 1904, at 1 o'clock p.m.

By order.

A. L. JARVIS,
Secretary.

Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, 21st January, 1904.

(N.B.—Newspapers inserting this advertisement without authority from the department will not be paid for it.)

10. The department has no knowledge of the value of all or any of the models, except that placed upon the lot en bloc by the tenderers for the same, whose tenders varied from one hundred and forty-nine dollars to eight hundred dollars.

11. No, as they were the property of the Crown.

12. No. Owing to lack of space, for some years the models have not been displayed, but have been stored in different public buildings, the greater part of them being packed in large cases. In order to give each patentee an opportunity of selecting his model, it would have been necessary to procure a large building where the models could have been exposed to view. A large staff would have been required to rearrange and classify and select the models as they were required. As it was not recognized that the inventors had any right of property in the models, and rarely showed any interest in them, it was not considered that the expense that such a course would have necessitated was warranted

13. No. The production and furnishing of the model was a condition imposed by law of obtaining the patent.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY DEPOSIT.

Mr. BARKER asked :

1. Was the deposit mentioned in clause 12 of the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act made in accordance with such clause, or in any other, and what manner ?

2. Was any other deposit made for the purposes mentioned in said clause, or in connection with the agreement forming such schedule ? When was such deposit made ; where, and with whom, and on whose behalf ?

3. Of what securities did such deposit consist ? What was the amount of it ? Were the securities examined, approved and accepted on behalf of the government, and by whom ?

4. Are the securities still in such deposit ? If not, when and by what authority were they released, and at whose request ?

5. Was there any agreement between the government and any company or person as to the conditions on which such deposit was actually made ? What were the conditions ? Were the agreements or conditions in writing ; or partly verbal and partly written ? With whom were they made ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) :

1. A deposit has been made under the provisions of the original agreement respecting the National Transcontinental Railway as modified by the subsequent agreement now before parliament. Such deposit is in the form of a deposit receipt issued by the Bank of Montreal, March 9th, 1904, certifying that there has been deposited in the bank by or on behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, the sum of five million dollars for the purpose of the said agreements ; which sum the bank agrees to account for, without interest, to the Minister of Finance, and Receiver General, six calendar months' notice to be given of withdrawal.

2. A previous deposit was made for the same purpose on the 17th December, 1903, in London by the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada in favour of the government of Canada.

3. Such deposit consisted of a certificate for one million pounds 4 per cent guaranteed stock of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, with an endorsement that the said one million pounds stock had been allotted subject to the condition that unless such allotment was sanctioned and approved by a general meeting of the company the allotment was to be null and void. The certificate was not approved and accepted by anybody on behalf of the government.

4. The said certificate for one million pounds Grand Trunk guaranteed stock is still in such deposit. It has not been released, but will be, now that a cash deposit has been substituted for it.

5. There was no agreement between the government and any company or person as to such deposit, except the agreements that are before parliament.

The deposit under the agreement, was to bear interest at the rate of three per centum, as the companies arrangement with the bank is for a deposit without interest. No interest were to be paid by the government.

PAYMENT OF TROOPS RE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE AT MONTREAL.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Have all the demands made upon the municipal authorities of Montreal, in connection with the calling out and maintenance of the militia in that city on the occasion of the recent disturbance been satisfied ?

2. What was the amount demanded by the proper military authority from the municipality ?

3. What amount has been paid by the municipality of Montreal, in connection with these military services ?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Nothing has been paid to the military authorities.

2. $18,850.42 was the amount demanded.

3. No amount has yet been paid by the municipality. The city has been sued and judgment recovered for the above sum. An appeal has been entered which appeal it is expected will be heard shortly.

INSPECTORS OF HAY.

Mr. LEONARD asked :

1. Is there an inspector, or inspectors, of hay appointed to inspect the hay exported to the United States ?

2. If so, who are those inspectors ?

3. If not, is it the intention of the government to establish such inspection ?

4. Has the government ever been, in any way whatever, asked to establish such inspection ?

5. If so, when, and by whom ?

Rt. Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT (Minister of Trade and Commerce). There are no inspectors specially appointed to inspect hay exported to the United States, but Mr. Bickerdike, of Montreal, and Mr. Adamson, of Toronto, can inspect hay. As to the other three subsections of this question they are answered by numbers 1 and 2.

WEIRS AND FISH-WAYS.—RIVER JESUS

Mr. LEONARD asked :

1. How many weirs or dams are there in the River Jesus, or the Mille Iles river ?

2. Are these weirs supplied with fish-ways, according to law ?

3. Does the government purpose having the law respected in this regard ?

4. When were these weirs or dams inspected the last time ?

5. What report was made, and by whom was it made ?

6. Why does not the government oblige the owners of these weirs to erect therein fish-ways as the law requires ?

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. Two dams have been reported to the department as existing in the River Jesus.

2. One dam has the means provided for the ascent of fish, in the form of a natural pass or opening. The other has practically no effective fish-pass.

3. The Fisheries Act leaves it optional to require the construction of a fish-pass. If a fish-pass is necessary in the public interest, the owner or occupier may be compelled to erect one ; but for the reasons stated in answer to question No. 6, extreme measures have not been adopted.

4. On the 24th June, 1902.

5. Inspector Belliveau made the inspection, and his report is attached.

6. There are four reasons why urgent action has not been taken. A reliable fish-way could not be prescribed for these two dams, pending an experiment with some new models. Litigation pending as to the ownership of the upper dam. The impassable obstruction at the Carillon dam, in Lake of Two Mountains, and the small importance of the local fishery.

Inspector Belliveau's report is as follows :

The local overseer at Lachenaie complained to me re certain dams at Terrebonne, and as it recalled departmental correspondence of years ago, I took the first opportunity while in the vicinity of visiting the locality last week.

There are two dams barring River Jesus on either side of an island called Masson island. The first one on the north channel is about 300 feet long and is owned by the Masson estate of Terrebonne. While it is not provided with a regular fish-way, there is on the island side of the channel a sort of natural pass, which in high water, during the spring time, might permit the ascent of fish. When I saw it at the end of June the water was getting low, and I doubt if any of the fresh water species frequenting that stream would have surmounted the obstruction ; but I noticed that it could be easily improved by the removal of a few large stones to deepen the pools, thus enabling the fish to rest while ascending the obstruction.

The other dam about an acre further up, is on the south channel of same stream, abutting on the said Masson island. It is even higher than the first one and is owned by the Messrs. Meuniers. I was informed that there is certain litigation going on re its ownership.

This dam is not provided with a fish-way. There is merely a cut of about six feet wide on the island side of the dam, which would make a very strong current at high water and little fall at low water, both useless to the ascent of spawning fish.

While no doubt it would be beter to have these dams provided with good fish-passes, I hesitate to urge their construction before the department decides to build one in the Carillon dam; otherwise the Lake of the Two Mountains alone would benefit by fish-ways in the Terrebone dams. The department should also endeavour to test fish-ways of different models and adopt the one best suited to our inland streams, so exposed to heavy ice and strong freshets.

With the above obstacles removed, efficient fish-ways in the Terrebonne dams would permit the St. Lawrence fishes to ascend the Ottawa as far as the Chaudière. The fish now found in River Jesus consist chiefly of coarse fish, suckers, sturgeon, carp, catfish, eels, bullheads, and perhaps a few pickerel.

UNDESIRABLE IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the government to a paragraph which appeared in the morning 'Citizen' of yesterday, which says:

> Fifty Russian Jews have been deported from Fargo, North Dakota, to Winnipeg by United States immigration authorities.

I would like to know what the government intend to do about this matter. Will they allow these people to stay in this country, having been turned back from the United States, or will they send them back to the country from which they came? I think it is very desirable that this matter should be looked into and that we should not be burdened with this class of people. If they are not fit to be citizens of the United States, I think they are not fit to be citizens of Canada.

Sir WILFRED LAURIER. I am sorry that I have not the information to give my hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) to-day. But I will endeavour to have it to-morrow.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903, AMENDMENT.

On the order being called for:

> House in Committee on Bill (No. 2) to amend the Railway Act, 1903.—Mr. Lancaster.

Mr. SPEAKER. There has been a mistake in connection with this item. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) moved the second reading the other evening. But I did not understand that the second reading had been carried, and certainly not the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. I understand that the hon. gentleman desired to speak on the second reading. To correct the error that was made, I would ask him if he would move again the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). Mr. Speaker, at your instance I am willing to move again the second reading of the Bill, but you will remember that when the matter was up before, I asked the question whether the motion for the second reading had been carried, and when I was informed that it had been carried I saw that it was not necessary to speak. However, I am quite willing to explain the principle of the Bill if the House desires it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not intend to shout in order to make myself heard. My voice is not considered to be very weak and if hon. gentlemen wish to hear me, let them prevail upon those who are near them to refrain from carrying on conversation, and then, probably, we shall all get along better. This Bill is required, as I explained on the first reading, because of a decision of the Supreme Court, delivered by that body since the close of the last session of this parliament. When we were in committee on the Railway Bill last session, the question of providing protection for life at those points where the highways and railways cross at rail-level came up. At that time the law was as it had been decided by the Court of Appeal in Ontario, and it was decided in accordance with what I believe every hon. member will say was the intention of parliament when the law was passed years ago. The section in question has been changed in wording twice since the consolidation of the Act in 1888. But I may say at the outset, that the principle of the section was not affected by the changes in the wording made by either of the amendments. The first amendment is in section 8 of the statutes of 1892. But first I had better read the section as originally passed in 1888:

> No locomotive or railway engine shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the track is properly fenced.

In 1892, that section was amended by section 8 of the Act of 1892, so that it read:

> No locomotive or railway engine shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than six miles an hour, unless the track is fenced in the manner prescribed by this Act.

The only change made there is the substitution of the words 'fenced in the manner prescribed by this Act' for the words 'properly fenced' in the original section. Then, last year, in consolidating the Railway Act, using the section that I have used as a basis, we passed the following as section 227:

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a speed greater than ten miles an hour——

I pause here to remark that, at the instance of the Minister of Railways of that time the maximum speed was increased from six to ten miles an hour.

—unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permision is given by some regulation or order of the board. The board may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.

I think that every hon. member of the House is aware that, entirely outside that section the fullest powers are given to the board to regulate the speed of trains and prescribe the protection at highway crossings. Therefore, when the legislature on these three different occasions passed this section, particularly dealing with crossings at rail-level in thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages, they intended to provide special protection for life at these crossings all over the country. But, under the decision that has been rendered, if this amendment that I propose or something like it is not passed, this section will be nugatory so far as the purposes for which it is intended are concerned. It is unnecessary, because it is overriden by the decision of the Supreme Court and because the other sections of the law give the necessary power. To leave it as it is will be merely confusing; it will create uncertainty, and will not accomplish what parliament intended to accomplish. This, as will be seen, is not a question of the fencing of the track, or of turning in the fence as provided for at cattle-guards, but it is a question of the protection of the public at highway crossing. There is a grievence here that is not provided for by the law and the Supreme Court say that it is for the legislature to cure it. This has to do with the crossing of highways in cities, towns and villages where buildings obscure the view and prevent a person on the sidewalk or on the road from seeing the train approaching, while the noises characteristic of a centre of population prevent him from hearing it. In order that the hon. members may understand the position in which the law stands, and appreciate the danger to the community, I would read the judgment of Sir Louis Davies, who gave judgment for the court in this case. This decision has not yet been printed in the Law Reports, so I am not able to refer hon. members to the volume, but I have obtained a copy of it from the registrar of the court, and any hon. gentleman is quite welcome to examine it. I propose to read some parts of the judgment given on that occasion. Sir Louis Davies said:

> The negligence which did cause or lead to the accident was found by the jury to be the speed at which the train was running over the street crossing and the absence at such crossing of a flagman or gates. The contention of the plaintiff is that the speed at which the train was running was a violation of the statutory provision of the Railway Act because it was of a greater speed than six miles an hour through a thickly peopled portion of the town of Forest; the railway track at the crossing of the street not being fenced as he contended in the manner required by the Act. The plaintiff further says that even if the Act has been complied with as regards fencing, the rate of speed in the absence of gates or watchman at the crossing was a matter at common law open to the jury to pass upon, and if they found it, under the circumstances, a dangerous rate and a cause of the accident the defendant company would be liable.
> The Court of Appeal reached the conclusion that the proper construction of statutory provisions with regard to the fencing required at the crossings and the rate of speed at which a train could run through a thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, requires either a fencing across the highway at the crossing, so retaining the travelling public in a place of safety while the train is passing, or the stationing of a watchman or the maintenance of a reasonable fence sufficient for the purpose, or the reduction of the speed of the train to the permitted maximum of six miles an hour. As the company had not adopted any of these precautions which the court decided were obligatory by statute, they held it liable under the findings of the jury and dismissed the appeal.

Before I read any further I wish to point out that in my opinion parliament intended exactly what the Court of Appeal decided. Although we are bound by the decision of the higher court, it is exactly, in my opinion, what parliament intended and what the Court of Appeal has decided they intended, although they may not have framed the legislation as the court thinks they ought to have done; that is, that the railways must either have a watchman, or fences, or gates, at the crossings, or else bring down their speed to the prescribed limit at these places. Sir Louis Davies goes on:

> A careful reading and consideration of the whole Railway Act and its general scheme and purpose has led me to the conclusion that the construction placed upon these sections by the Court of Appeal in this case was not the proper one and that the sections relied upon by that court in its judgment do not either require or authorize railway companies, without the previous order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, to fence highways or place gates across them where they are crossed at the level by the railway, or compel them to place flagmen at these crossings to warn the public when trains are crossing.
> In my judgment parliament has by the 187th section of the Railway Act vested in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council the exclusive power and duty of determining the character and extent of the protection which should be given to the public at places where the railway track crosses a highway at rail level.

Now if that is so we must change it, and we must assume that it is so when we have the judgment to that effect of the highest court in the Dominion of Canada. It is therefore up to us as representatives of the people to enact such legislation that that decision will no longer be the law. That decision means that if you do not get a special order from the Railway Commission—which you can get in any case, that is to say, you can apply for it—if you do not get that order, there is to be no difference between the rate of speed at which these trains are run in cities, towns and villages and the rate at which they are run in the open country where everybody can see them for miles. If this parliament is of the opinion that the law should be as the Supreme Court has by this judgment decided it is now, then I wish to point out that they are repealing and undoing a provision in that respect that has existed since 1888, and I am satisfied that never was the intention of this parliament; it was not their intention in 1892 when they amended it and substituted the word 'fenced as required by this Act,' for the words 'properly fenced'; it was not their intention last year or they would have drawn up that section in a different manner. True it is that under that section as interpreted by Sir Louis Davies the Railway Commission can always be invoked in respect to any particular crossing to order some protection, but what does that amount to? It means that every village, town and city where there is a crossing which they regard as dangerous would have to go to the commission with a special application for a special order and that means considerable expense on their part. One thing that parliament intended was that there should be one general law for thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages, that the railways should be compelled either to keep their speed down to ten miles an hour until they get outside the corporate limits of a municipality, or to put a watchman at these crossings that are on the rail level. Of course we know that a limitation to ten miles an hour practically means more than that; limiting them to ten miles an hour is practically allowing them to run fifteen miles an hour, because you have only the evidence of the trainmen to rely on, and they would not likely admit they were going faster than ten miles an hour, unless they were going about fifteen. If this judgment stands, and the only tribunal that can reverse this judgment, namely this parliament, does not enact the admendment which I propose then the law will stand amounting to this, that the railways are not bound to bring down their speed to ten miles an hour nor to give any more protection at thickly peopled portions of cities, towns and villages where they cross at a rail-level, than they give in the open country. Now, I am satisfied that never was the intention of parliament. The intention was to make a class of cases which would cover the general needs of the public interests. I have mentioned the objection on the score of expense, where you have to come down in each instance to the Railway Commission and ask for special protection. Now I hold that the 214 members of this House are better judges of the needs of the public in this respect than any Railway Commission. It is not a matter which should naturally come before a railway commission it is a matter that applies to every city, town and village from Halifax to Vancouver, and I maintain that the 214 members of this House are better qualified to decide upon a general rule of that character and to apply a general rule of that character, than any three commissioners, I care not how able, or how industrious, or how little time they may have to bestow upon each case on account of the multiplicity of other cases coming before them. These matters do not require the special and peculiar abilities of gentlemen such as compose the Railway Commission they are matters which can be better dealt with by the common sense of the 214 members of this House. No doubt it was to save the municipalities from expense that this section was retained in the law in 1888, and enacted again in 1892, and then re-enacted with the additional language which I have read, giving the commissioners power to limit the speed and to order any other protection necessary. A general rule should be adopted applicable to all cities, towns, villages and thickly populated portions of the country where the vision of the track is obscured and where the noise of the approaching train is deadened. The question must be asked: Why should not the railways be required to provide gates as well as watchmen. I am not contending for that. I am trying to be fair to the railways but I am also trying to save the lives of young and old, a great many more of whom are being killed than is necessary, particularly in the province of Ontario of which I speak with a good deal of knowledge. Too many people are being killed at these level crossings because of the violation of this enactment by railway companies. These accidents occur by reason of the railway train rushing on at such a rate of speed that the traveller has not time to avoid it. Some of these cases occur while people are walking on the sidewalk, sober people, young people going home from school or church. Three people were hurled into eternity a year ago at the village of Grimsby while they were going home from church on Sunday evening—proper living people—two young ladies and a young gentleman escorting them. None of these people could see the train coming. It was rushing along at the rate of 45 miles an hour, as the train hands said, at the rate of 50 miles an hour, as others said, and, of course, they could not see it approaching. A freight train had passed just before the express at the rate of 30 miles an hour and these young people had waited until it had passed. The express train rushed along at the rate of 45 or 50 miles an hour and there was no chance for these young people to see or hear it because the buildings in the vicinity obscured the vision, and the freight train made so much noise that they could not hear the express coming. There was no watchman to warn them that the express was coming. Another case occurred with a farmer who was driving out in the daylight, who was perfectly sober and there was no suggestion that there was anything wrong with his hearing or his eye sight. He could not see the train which was rushing along at the rate of 25 miles an hour. The accident which resulted in the case of McKay vs. the Grand Trunk Railway Company, decided in the Supreme Court, occurred in the county of Essex or Lambton. A man, his wife and two children were going home at six o'clock in the evening when the train came along at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, rushing around a curve with nobody to warn these people of their danger and the result was that they were killed. These lives would all have been saved if proper precautions had been taken to protect these travellers, and these illustrations go to show that the travelling public are entitled to protection. In the year 1888 trains did not run half as fast as they do now. We recognize that the exigencies of travel require trains to run at a faster rate of speed than they formerly did, that the travelling public are calling for trains that will get them to their homes an hour or two, or eight or ten hours earlier than formerly was possible with the result that trains must run at a higher rate of speed than they used to do. I would also like to point out that the railway companies would not carry the travelling public at a faster rate of speed if it did not pay them to do so. They are making money by running these fast trains and they would not do it if it did not pay them. They have the benefit of running their trains at a faster rate of speed, because, in our legislation, we recognize that trains must run faster than they did eight or ten years ago. The rate of speed at which they can run their trains without being restricted, or without being compelled to provide protection, has been fixed at ten miles an hour instead of six miles an hour as formerly. It used to be that they could not exceed six miles an hour without providing protection, but that rate of speed was increased by the legislation of last session to ten miles an hour. They will be permitted by the law, as I seek to amend it, to still retain a rate of ten miles an hour without any protection whatever, but if they exceed ten miles an hour they surely ought to be required to do something to protect the lives of the people crossing the railway track. If this amendment is not adopted under the judgment of the Supreme Court, the railway companies as the law now is, are not required to take any further steps to protect the public. I wish to point out that although I was taking a more or less active part in the consolidation of the railway law last session the alternative of the provision of this section escaped my notice. I thought the word 'and' was there instead of the word 'or'. If the hon. gentlemen will read the Bill they will see that I propose to strike out the word 'or' and put in the word 'and.' Perhaps the word 'and' was omitted because we were passing the sections towards the end of the Bill a little faster than they probably ought to have been passed. We did not make as rapid progress in consideration of the earlier portions of the Bill as we hoped to make and perhaps at the end of the Bill we were not as careful as we ought to have been. But, speaking for myself, I thought the word 'and' was in there and not the word 'or'; otherwise I would have moved an amendment at that time, notwithstanding the decision of the Court of Appeal which has been reversed by the Supreme Court and for a reason outside of that which influenced the Court of Appeal. The Act, as it was adopted last session, provides that:

> No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board. The board may limit such speed in any case to any rate which it deems expedient.

You will see that if the railway company fence their track and provide cattle-guards they do not have to do anything else. 'Or' they have to protect the track. They do not have to do both. They can exceed a rate of 10 miles an hour if they do either one or the other and it seems to me that it goes without much argument that they should do both. They should fence the track as required by the Act, they should keep stray animals off the track, they should fence against the adjoining proprietors and they should also protect. By this section as it stands to-day no protection is provided for people crossing the railway tracks at rail-level by the fences and cattle-guards which the section requires to be provided. We should require them to protect the lives of the people by guarding against collisions with the trains on the highway, because, to say that if they have fences they need not do more, is idle. Every hon. member of this House who considers the question for a moment will agree that the word 'and' should be there in place of the word 'or.' In the consolidation of the railway Act last session no manner of proceeding was prescribed by the Act except to say that you must go to the Railway Commission of the Privy Council to get a special order in each case. As I have said, the Railway Commission of the Privy Council do not know how to deal with these matters as well as members of this House on general principles applying to every city, town and village. They would probably, in some cases, on a special application do a great deal more than we might ask them to do in this legislation; they would doubtless in some very busy or thickly settled section of this country order both a flagman and gates. We are not asking for that. We are asking for a reasonable measure of protection in regard to everybody at these crossings within the incorporated limits of any city, town or village, and I have yet to hear any one tell me that this request is unreasonable. We have to ask in regard to this legislation, as we have in regard to all other legislation: What is the evil to be remedied ?

The evil is that the people who have a right to use the highway, and who are the prior users of that highway as against the railway corporation, cannot enjoy the use of that highway without being subject to the danger of being killed through the operation of that railway. The Supreme Court of Canada has decided that the common law is superseded by the restrictions in the special statute, and when we override the common law by special legislation passed in this parliament, we should be careful to preserve that same measure of protection that the common law afforded to the public. In the case of McKay and the Grand Trunk, the jury found that the rate of speed was excessive at a particular crossing, but the Supreme Court decided that they had no right to so find, because the common law could not operate in the face of the special statute dealing with the matter. Now, what fairer remedy can be provided against that evil than the one which I suggest ? If any member of this House, on either side, will suggest to me a more reasonable remedy from the railway standpoint, I shall be glad to adopt it, if it is a remedy. I do not want to put the railway company to any more expense than is necessary, but I do want protection to be given to the public ; protection which they cannot get without such a law as I now submit for adoption to this parliament. The people who use railway crossings are not trespassers ; they have a perfect right to use them, and they must use them in the transaction of their ordinary business. I do not wish to get sentimental, but I do say that when a man goes out to work in the morning, his family expect to see him come home alive at night, and as a member of the community that man has a right to be protected from being killed by a railway train. The fathers and mothers of children who go to school in the morning, expect them to come home alive at night, and not to be brought back as little corpses. Too many people are being killed in Canada at these railway crossings, and the railways will not do anything to stop it unless the law of the land compels them. Our courts have decided that we will have to come here to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council (now the Railway Commission) to get a special order for protection at a particular crossing before recourse can be had against a railway company for not putting that protection in. We have always understood that in thickly populated places the speed of a railway train should not exceed ten miles an hour unless the track is fenced in the manner described by the Act. The Court of Appeal in Ontario held—and it seems to be the common sense—that tracks should be fenced so as to protect the travelling public on the highway. The Supreme Court has, however, held that the legislature simply required fencing to the right and the left of the highway. In my opinion that is not protection to the travelling public on the highway. Now, the legislature has increased the speed from six to ten miles an hour, and to provide against the evil which I have pointed out, I have amended the section of the present law by adding the following words :

> And wherever in a city, town or incorporated village a railway crosses a highway at rail level, the said speed of ten miles an hour shall in no event be exceeded, unless the railway company keeps a watchman at such crossing to warn all persons using the highway of approaching trains.

Crossings that are not on the level are not dangerous, and it is level crossings that we propose to deal with. I propose to ask the railway companies, when they cross on rail-level, to protect the public in some inexpensive way, as the legislature always intended they should protect them. If there is any less expensive way to save the lives of the people than that which I propose, I shall be quite content to adopt it when the Bill gets into committee. I contend that it would be much better to strike the whole section out as it now stands in the law, rather than to have it remain unamended, because, as the section reads now, it is nugatory and confusing. It is our duty not to permit to remain on the statute-book either a nugatory section or an ambiguous section, which only leads to litigation and expense. I would point out to the House that Sir Louis Davies, in his judgment, said :

> In my judgment parliament has by the 187th section of the Railway Act vested in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council the exclusive power and duty of determining the character and extent of the protection which should be given to the public at places where the railway track crosses a highway at rail level.

I am not finding fault with that as good law, but if Sir Louis Davies is correct, then this section is of no effect, and its only mission in the statute-book is to confuse the public. Sir Louis Davies continued :

> In a thickly settled country like Great Britain, parliament has thought fit explicitly to provide that wherever a railroad crosses a highway on a level it shall maintain good and sufficient gates across the road on each side of the railway and employ proper persons to open and shut them.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I stand by the British constitution, first and last and all the time, and I would ask this House if Canadians are not entitled to the same protection as their fellow-subjects in Great Britain ? Should we Canadians not look to our own parliament in Canada to protect the residents of thickly populated portions of the country, just as the British parliament protects the residents of Great Britain, which is a thickly populated country. Although I am a Britisher, first, last and all the time, I am also a Canadian, and I think we ought to be able in Canada to pass legislation to protect Canadians, just as much as the parliament of Great Britain is able to pass legislation for the protection of the people in the British Isles. Later on, Sir Louis Davies says :

I think the proper construction to be placed upon these sections of the Act is that the powers therein given are exclusive, and intended to vest in the tribunal selected plenary statutory powers, the exercise of which, excepting as otherwise provided, are final.

I want the exception 'as otherwise provided' carried out in my amendment, so far as cities, towns and villages are concerned ; and to make the matter quite clear, I have drawn the Bill so as to limit its application to them. It means that the railway, even within the limits of cites, towns and villages, can increase its speed to more than ten miles an hour, if it has a watchman only at the level crossing ; but if it has not it must keep its speed under ten miles an hour. I do not think we are asking anything unreasonable in this, particularly as it was always intended by the legislature of Canada that there should be some provision of this kind for these thickly-settled localities. Sir Louis Davies goes on to say :

The exceptions embrace the power of reviewing its own decisions from time to time by the tribunal as circumstances may change and the power of appeal to the Governor General in Council as provided by section 21.

Could there be anything more mischievous or dangerous to the community than that ? Sir Louis points out that this matter is delegated to the Railway Commission, and but that delegation includes the power of reviewing its own decisions. What does that mean ? If the village of Grimsby went to the expense of going before the Railway Commission, and after a hard fight with the railway corporation, it obtained an order to the railway company to protect a certain crossing by a watchman this year, the next year that decision might be reversed. We would have uncertainty as to the law, and lawyers could never advise people what their rights were. Surely this parliament wants to enact something different from that for the protection of the people. Surely it is right that within the limits of cities, towns and villages, there should be gates or a watchman to protect the level crossings, and that the railway corporations should be ordered to provide more protection wherever a special case is made out. I submit that this is what parliament always intended. You cannot have any cheaper protection than watchmen ; and we always intended that in addition, at certain dangerous places, there should be some special protection which the Railway Commission could always order. Sir Louis Davies then quotes the section providing that 'at every public road crossing at rail-level of the railway, the fence on both sides of the crossing and on both sides of the track shall be turned into the cattle-guards so as to allow of the safe passage of trains,' and then goes on to say :

As I have already said, these sections neither authorize nor empower the railway to place fences or gates across the highway, and their object was not to provide for the protection of the public travelling along the highway, which was provided for by the 187th section of the Act.

The decision of the court is that this enactment that I am seeking to amend was not intended to protect the people at the railway crossing, but only required the fencing to be done at the side of the roadway and turned into the cattle-guard in order to keep animals off the track. It seems to me that we should not allow legislation of that kind to remain on the statute-book. It cannot be successfully contended that that is the meaning it was ever intended to bear. It is true, it is so worded as to cause a majority of the highest court in the land to decide that it does not go far enough to provide for the necessary protection in thickly settled districts. To enable the section to give any protection at all, I cannot conceive that we could adopt legislation that would be more fair to the railways than what I am proposing.

In conclusion, I want to say a word about the uncertainty of the law in this country. In this case of McKay vs. The Grand Trunk Railway, Mr. Justice MacMahon, who is pre-eminently a safe and fair trial judge, decided that the man had a right to recover. He put that construction upon the Act which the legislature intended it should bear. The case was appealed to the highest court in the province of Ontario, the Court of Appeal, which unanimously decided that he was right. The railway company then brought the case down to the Supreme Court, where we have Mr. Justice Girouard agreeing with Mr. Justice MacMahon and the full Court of Appeal of the province : we have Mr. Justice Sedgewick deciding in favour of the railway company, but on different grounds from Sir Louis Davies : and we have Chief Justice Taschereau and Mr. Justice Davies agreeing and giving the judgment of the court. So that the decision which controls this case, unless we in this parliament rectify it, is the decision of two judges of the Supreme Court, agreed to by Mr. Justice Sedgewick on different grounds, and dissented from by Mr. Justice Girouard. What does that mean ? We have decisions of all these eminent judges, every one of whom we know to be a man of the highest ability, both in the Supreme Court, in the Court of Appeal of Ontario, and at the original trial of the case. Still we have these judges disagreeing on the meaning of that section and on the exact rights of the people and of the railway. I appeal to this House to frame this legislation in some certain way so that when a man goes to his counsel, his counsel will be able to tell him that there is no doubt what the section means; that he cannot recover because parliament has said he cannot, or that he can recover because parliament has made it quite clear that he can. Let us have certainty in this matter and we shall save a lot of money for the people, and render the laws more easy to administer. We are not doing justice to the people of this country if we do not clear the statutes of these indefinite laws.

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice) Mr. Speaker, this whole matter was very fully discussed last session in connection with the Railway Act. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) then took a very large part in the discussion of the Act generally, and more particularly in the discussion of this section. I notice by 'Hansard' that he spoke at least four times respecting the amendment. I think the result was that the House came to the conclusion that under all the circumstances it would be necessary to give adequate protection——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FITZPATRICK—at highway crossings, but that highway crossings must of necessity vary and that protection must vary in accordance with the conditions of each particular crossing. As a result of that discussion it was decided that adequate protection should be given, but that the protection in each case would be a matter to be decided upon by the Railway Commission. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has deemed it necessary to bring the matter before this House again because of the judgment in the case of McKay and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I have no desire to criticise that judgment, but I think my hon. friend will bear me out when I say that in effect the judges of the Supreme Court decided there that the Railway Act contained the whole law with respect to the management of a railway, and that the common law obligation with respect to the protection of life and property would be eliminated if the statutory requirements were complied with. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has no doubt considered that judgment. He has the great advantage of having the notes of the judges before him; but he, I am sure, has not overlooked this fact—and as I said before I have no desire to criticise the judgment—that the judgment goes very much further than the same court went in Fleming and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also goes further than the same court went even more recently in a New Brunswick case, and I cannot understand, how it is possible to imagine that if the statutory requirements had been complied with, the common law obligation ceased to exist in view of the statements made by the Lord Chancellor in the case of Roy and Canadian Pacific Railway. That, it seems to me, is an authority exactly to the contrary of what the Supreme Court has held. However, perhaps my hon. friend would not overlook this other fact which is of importance; that the Supreme Court decided, the case Mackay, on a statute that has been amended and that is not now the law at all, on an entirely different statute from the provision of the present law.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not want to prolong a discussion, but I would point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice that the part I am proposing to amend remains the same.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend will bear in mind that the words 'or properly protected' were not in the old statute; that is a provision of the new statute. My hon. friend agrees with me, I am sure, that 'adequate protection' will not give to the public that certainty which a litigant is entitled to expect. 'Adequate protection' may mean anything; especially when dealing with a railway crossing adequate protection must necessarily vary in accordance with the conditions which exist at each particular crossing. At one crossing it may be necessary to carry the road overhead, and at another to carry it underground. At one crossing it may be necessary to have gates as well as watchmen, but my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) provides merely for watchmen. The law now provides that you shall have protection, and that you can go to the Railway Commission and that the Railway Commission will decide in each case what protection is necessary. What more does my hon. friend want? That is what the law now gives him; all you have to do is to go to the Railway Commission put the facts in connection with the particular case before that commission, indicating what are the circumstances connected with the crossing, and the Railway Commission will determine what protection is necessary in the public interest at that particular place.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why should it be necessary to go to the Railway Commission for a watchman? If my Bill passes, we will have a watchman at each level crossing and any further protection that may be required will be given to us by the Railway Commission.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. By your Bill you must have a watchman, although a gate is perhaps a better protection. Why insist upon a watchman, if it is necessary to go to the Railway Commission for further protection. Why not leave the whole matter with the commission and permit the commission to determine whether a watchman or a gate, or both, are necessary.

Mr. LANCASTER. Because in many cases we do not require more than a watchman, and we do not wish to go to the Railway Commission unless it is necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not interrupt the discussion except for the purpose of obtaining information. I fear I do not quite apprehend the point in dispute. I find in the Act:

No train shall pass in or through any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village, at a speed greater than ten miles an hour, unless the track is fenced or properly protected in the manner prescribed by this Act, or unless permission is given by some regulation or order of the board. The board may limit such speed in any cases to any case which it deems expedient.

Could my hon. friend the Minister of Justice tell me whether there is any specific provision in the Act as regards protection at a highway crossing? It seems to me a great deal would depend upon that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will look at section 25 he will find:

The board may make orders and regulations; (a) limiting the rate of speed at which railway trains and locomotives may be run in any city, town or village, or in any class of cities, towns or villages described in any regulation; and if the board thinks fit, the rate of speed within certain described portions of any city, town or village, and allowing another rate of speed in other portions thereof.

It is always within the scope of the Railway Commission to determine the rate of speed and in addition to that, my hon. friend is aware of the fact that no crossing of a highway either at rail-level or overhead or underground can take place without the permission of the Railway Commission. The railway must come to the commission to get permission to cross and when application for permission is made the commission determine the conditions under which the crossing is to take place and the amount of protection necessary in each particular case. It appears to me under these circumstances that we have in the existing Act all that we require, that is to say a certain amount of elasticity. We have a proper tribunal and a certain amount of elasticity which enables the tribunal in each particular case to determine what is required. For example if it is intended to cross at rail level a highway over which no road had been carried before, permission can only be granted by the Railway Commission which at the same time determines the conditions under which such crossing may take place. If the crossing is already in existence then on application to the board, the board can determine the conditions under which it is to continue. The board shall determine what is meant by 'properly protected,' and they will determine what proper protection under the particular circumstances of each case as desired. Now, this is a matter of importance. I grant to my hon. friend that it is a matter that ought to be looked into. And, in the absence of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Emmerson) I would suggest, if there is no objection to it, that this Bill be referred to the Railway Committee, where we may have an oportunity of going into the matter more fully, and, perhaps, of getting some further light and information on the subject.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK moved that Bill (No. 2) to amend the Railway Act, 1903, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before that resolution is carried, I desire to say a word or two about it. We have had a good deal of experience in the last two years, in the way of referring the matters of general law to the Committee on Railways, and I am bound to say—perhaps it would be better if some one else said it—that I think that what I said three years ago was well founded, and that no progress is made by referring Bills of this general character to that committee. I have never known progressive legislation to be passed in this House except in Committee of the Whole. We do not find that the Minister of Agriculture, when he introduces a Bill relating to some agricultural question referring it to the Committee on Agriculture. And, when we undertook to consolidate the Railway Law last session, a work that occupied the Committee of the Whole for seven or eight weeks, nobody suggested that it should be referred to the Committee on Railways. My hon. friend from St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers) several sessions ago, introduced a Bill which I thought a most proper piece of legislation, dealing with fires started by railway locomotives. That Bill was referred to the Railway Committee in two sessions, but no result was gained by following that course. But when it was proposed last session, to deal with this matter in Committee of the Whole and to incorporate the provisions suggested by the hon. member for St. John and Iberville in the general Railway Act, the provision became law. In the same way, my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Cowan), introduced a Bill which I myself strongly favoured, to enable farmers to drain their property across railway lands. It was referred to that Railway Committee on two different occasions, but, as in the other case, nothing came of it. The Bill was smothered, or chloroformed, or died a natural death in the Railway Committee. But when we were in Committee of the Whole on the General

Railway Act, this reform also was embodied in the statute. And last, but, I think, not least, there was the cattle-guard legislation. I introduced a Bill and it went through the same formalities, went to the same cul de sac, went into that opening which leads nowhere, and at last it had to come back to the Committee of the Whole House as the only channel through which it could reach a place in the statute-book. For every Bill referred to the Railway Committee must come back to us. It is not with these public measures as it is with private Bills. If a private Bill is reported adversely by the Railway Committee, it ceases to have existence. But the most that the Railway Committee could do with a public Bill of this nature, would be to send it back to this House with an unfavourable report—and that report would not be unanimous in this case, because I am a member of the Railway Committee myself. To refer such a measure to the Railway Committee is merely to give us unnecessary work and waste our time. When these matters come up in the Railway Committee we argue and discuss, but the party that is outvoted is not satisfied. I know I shall certainly not be satisfied if some reasonable measure of protection—some 'adequate protection'—is not granted to the people in regard to this matter. I do not wish to discuss again the merits of the Bill, but I would remind the House that this is a Bill that affects the whole community and not a matter requiring some special technical knowledge for its discussion. It is a matter that must be discussed on the floor of the House in any case. And so I ask the House not to agree to the proposal of the Minister of Justice. That hon. gentleman and I are the best of friends, but it seems clear to me that it is unreasonable to go to the Railway Committee with a law of this kind when, in any case, it must be dealt with on the floor of this House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There might be some advantage in having this measure discussed in Committee of the Whole; and yet, perhaps there are interests involved that should be heard in some way before the amendment passes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There are municipal interests and corporate interests affected by the Bill, which, I think should be heard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I appreciate that. I was going to make a suggestion to the Minister of Justice and to my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara. I would like to discuss this Bill in Committee of the Whole to see what its scope is and whether it would not be possible, with due regard to the interests of the railway companies, to amend the statute so as to provide greater security for life. Would it not be possible to go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill in any case? The Minister of Justice would have the right at any time to move to discharge the order and not send the Bill to the Committee on Railways. Thus we should have the opportunity of discussing it more freely than we can with Mr. Speaker in the chair, and, later on, we would have the advantage, if thought desirable, of sending it to a committee where those who are interested could be heard. Would that course be acceptable to my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara.

Mr. LANCASTER. I was about to say, as I have already said, basing my opinion on experience, that we do not make any progress in the Railway Committee. The Railway Committee has other matters to deal with, and we cannot concentrate our minds on this. The party that is defeated comes back to the floor of the House, where he ought to have been all the time. I think we shall discuss the matter much better if we remain in the Committee of the Whole House. By that course, also we avoid delay. I am not saying that delays are intentional, but they are unavoidable. It is not reasonable to send public Bills of this nature to a committee having a multitude of private charters to deal with. It is mainly to deal with these private corporations that the Railway Commission is appointed. One in charge of a public Bill before such a body does not like to find fault because of matters involving corporate interests being put ahead of public and general legislation. With all deference, I am against the principle of sending such Bills to Standing Committees.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps it could be arranged in this way, without prejudice to my hon. friend's (Mr. Lancaster's) right to oppose the sending to the Railway Committee or the right of the Minister of Justice eventually to propose sending it to that committee. We might go into committee of the Whole on the Bill in order that I might discuss with the Minister of Justice the possibility of improving the wording of the statute.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not myself see any objection to the suggestion of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) that the Bill be first referred to the Committee of the Whole for further discussion. But I feel confident that we shall have to insist on its ultimately being sent to the Railway Committee. There are technical matters involved which cannot be sufficiently discussed on the floor of this House. For instance, it is possible that the railway companies and the municipalities may have a word to say. But they could not very well be heard before the bar of this House, while they could easily be heard before the Railway Committee. I would like to confer with the Minister of Railways on the matter. But I am disposed for my part to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend to have it further debated in Committee of the Whole, eventually to be sent back to the Railway Committee ; but in the absence of the Minister of Railways I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 3) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the object of this Bill ?

Mr. LANCASTER. It is to protect the young people of this country to a still further extent than it was sought to do in the debate of yesterday, with all deference be it said to the supporters of that motion.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I lost the benefit of nearly half the remarks the hon. gentleman made on his previous Bill because I was unable to hear him. Will he come down a little closer ?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Take him over on the Treasury benches.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is only a question of time.

Mr. LANCASTER. Won't you take my leader with me ? The object of this Bill is to provide protection to young men and young women, or boys and girls as you may prefer to call them, when they are charged with a criminal offence. The section I wish to amend is that which requires the magistrate in certain cases which I need not particularize, to ask the defendant whether he elects to be tried by a judge and jury or by the magistrate. Now what I seek to do by this Bill, in case the child is not represented by counsel, is to allow his guardian or his parents to elect for him. I am not dealing with the Juvenile Offenders Act, I am dealing with any crime which a person under 21 years of age can be charged with, be it a case of theft or assault or anything else. We have had a great many such cases in my part of the country where young people are charged with offences, such as boys charged with assault or domestic servants with theft, and where they have been convicted and are now serving terms of imprisonment, and they would not have been convicted if they had been tried by a superior or county court, or by a jury. It is a question of animus furandi, of distinguishing between a tort and a crime, and the question arises, where the child does something wrong but does not commit a crime, whether the act was done with the wicked intention which is necessary in order to make the act a crime. I propose that when a person appears to be of the age of 21 years or under, the magistrate shall not call that person to waive his right to a trial before a jury or a higher court, but shall first call upon his guardian or parent to advise him, in case he is not represented by counsel. Of course if he is represented by counsel, my amendment would not apply. I propose to amend the section by which the defendant is called upon to elect whether he shall be tried by a magistrate, and if convicted, whether he shall be sentenced by a magistrate, or whether he shall waive what, since King John's time we have all got, the right to trial by jury. My Bill has only one section and it reads as follows :

Section 786 of the Criminal Code, 1892, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection :—

'2. Whenever the person charged appears to be about the age of twenty-one years or an infant under that age, and is not represented by counsel present at the time, the magistrate shall not proceed under this section without first asking the person charged what his age is ; and if such person then states his age as being less than twenty-one years, the magistrate shall defer any further action, and shall at once cause notice to be given to the parents, living in the province (or if none, then to the guardian or householder with whom the person charged resided at the time of the alleged commission of the offence), of such person having been so charged, and of the time and place when such person will be called on to make his election as to whether he will be tried by the said magistrate,—which notice shall allow reasonable time for the said parents, guardian or householder to be present and advise the said person charged before he is called on to so elect.'

Now speaking as an active practitioner in these matters, the most important thing to decide with regard to any young person who is charged with an offence, is what should be done with him if convicted. If there be a doubt, by all means give him the benefit of the doubt ; but if convicted see that you do not dishearten him by compelling him to herd with criminals worse than himself, or by placing a stigma upon him that will shut him out from good society afterwards. Therefore I say the most important thing is the choice of the tribunal which shall try him. Sometimes there is more harm done in the sentence than in the conviction. It does not do so much harm sometimes to convict with a suspended sentence, although it brands the young person perhaps improperly as a criminal, and compels him to associate with other people worse than himself. If the young person is allowed to go under suspended sentence with a warning from the magistrate, he keeps that warning in mind and may grow up correctly enough afterwards. In our part of the province, and I am told it is the same in many other parts, we have a good deal of fault to find because the magistrates are not restrained by statute. They think their first duty, when a child is brought before them, is to make them elect by what court he shall be tried. Complaints of this kind come from St. Catharines, from Grimsby, from Smithville, Welland and other places. Whenever a young person is brought in the magistrate says: 'I suppose you want me to try you,' or, 'Do you want me to try you'? The child says that he does not know, or it does not make any difference. He has no counsel, or parent or guardian. But it does make all the difference in the world. These are cases where the offender should be represented by some one.

As the hon. Minister of Justice knows, nearly all of the offences which are apt to be committed in early life can be tried by a magistrate, and directly the young man or young woman charged with one of these offences is brought into court the magistrate asks the accused: Do you want me to try you? Then, he is called upon to elect. If he says that he wants the magistrate to try him, the magistrate tries him, and he disposes of the law and of the sentence. In a great many of these cases no lawyer would decide them in the way in which the magistrate decides them. In many cases the magistrates are laymen. If we were appointing magistrates, I could suggest a way of getting over this difficulty outside of this proposed amendment, but the provincial authorities appoint magistrates, and I am sorry, not because I am a lawyer, that they are not professional men. I think they ought to be, because they would then understand where the mischief is done in these cases. A lawyer or a judge would take care that a child brought before him had the advice of some one competent to advise him before he would ask him to elect. We do not in any province—at least, I know we do not in the province of Ontario—allow a child's property to be dealt with until he is twenty-one years of age; yet, the young man or young woman of sixteen or eighteen years of age is called upon to make an election affecting his or her liberty and whole reputation without advice from anybody. Because such people cannot afford habeas corpus proceedings they go down. There are in the reformatory at Penetanguishene boys that I am satisfied would never have been sent there if any lawyer had been called upon to deal with the case. There are those who have been condemned who have been guilty of nothing but a tort, and no crime at all. They were charged with stealing when they were simply guilty of a conversion of property, believing that they were entitled to use it for the time being. I know of a case where a gun was said to have been stolen, when, as a matter of fact, it had been borrowed and returned, but because the man wanted to be smart, he went on with the case and sent the child who was accused of stealing the gun down to Penetanguishene for three years. He was a boy just out of the high school who had borrowed a gun to take with him when he went out with some other boys hunting squirrels. I have had to deal with cases where servant girls were charged with theft, when, as a matter of fact, they took the articles alleged to have been stolen believing them to be theirs. No judge would have believed that there was any intention on their part to do wrong. No jury would have convicted them of any intention of committing a crime. These people are convicted because they elect to be tried without proper advice, they become branded as criminals, and it is a bad thing in this country to lightly brand young men or young women as criminals. We might better give them a chance until they are twenty-one years of age, when they are better able to judge for themselves the course which they should pursue. Living near the border, I know dozens of instances of young men and women who formerly lived in the neighbourhood of my county who are now earning their living in the United States, because they prefer to live in a country where there is no record against them. They are not Canadian citizens, and they would be good Canadian citizens had they not become disgusted with their country because they were harshly treated when they were young. This proposed amendment can do no harm. This probably will commend itself more strongly to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice than my proposed amendment which we have just been discussing to protect the lives of people at railway crossings, because he might say that by its adoption the railways would be hurt by having to pay a little. Nobody is hurt by this amendment. The prosecutor cannot be hurt; he may have to wait a week before he is able to have the child convicted, but if the child is guilty a conviction can then be secured. In the meantime the child can remain in custody, and nobody can possibly be hurt by this legislation, while, on the other hand, we will do an act of justice to the young people of our country who are now labouring under a great injustice. If the hon. Minister of Justice can propose any other remedy, I am ready to accept any suggestion he may make in that respect. My object is to so amend the law as to provide that these young people, when they appear to be under twenty-one years of age, shall be asked their age, and if they are under twenty-one years of age, a reasonable time shall be given so as to allow their parents, or guardians, or the householder with whom they resided at the time the offence was said to have been committed, to come and give them their advice before they are asked to elect as to whether they shall be tried by the magistrate and thus waive their right to have a trial by a superior court judge and a jury. I propose that they shall not be called upon to waive that right without the advice of their parents or guardians, if they have no counsel present. I trust the matter will receive the careful consideration of the hon. Minister of Justice. I believe the hon. Minister of Justice is just as anxious to protect the children of the country as I am. I believe that we can do no harm, but that we can accomplish much good in this matter. Nobody, as I have said, can be hurt by it. It cannot cause any trouble to any one. There may be a little expense incurred by having a policeman deliver a notice at the door. If the hon. Minister of Justice wants a special form of notice to be appended to the Bill, I have no objection. I would be willing to leave it to the magistrate to draw up that notice, but if the hon. Minister of Justice thinks that to make it clear and complete we had better give the form of the notice, I see no objection to that.

Mr. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) is aware that our criminal code is filled with provisions designed to protect those who are charged with crime. I must confess that, to my mind, we surround criminals with more than adequate protection as far as the trials of these persons are concerned. What is the procedure in cases that arise under the circumstances indicated by my hon. friend ? A man is brought before a magistrate charged with an offence against the criminal law. The first thing that is done is to examine the witnesses.

Mr. LANCASTER. They ask him to elect first. That is how the law is carried out.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not saying how they carry the law out. When my hon. friend tells me of the laymen who administer justice in the province of Ontario, I have nothing to say. We have lawyers administering justice in our province. I can only tell him what the law is ; I cannot tell him how the law is administered in the province of Ontario, but I do know how it is administered in my own province, where I have had the opportunity of practising. The law, under section 786, provides that the accused shall be brought before the magistrate. Then, there must be what is called a preliminary investigation, and it is only after the preliminary investigation is held that the accused is asked to make his option. My hon. friend is aware that the option is the second step in the proceedings. The first step is to bring the prisoner before the magistrate, and after the preliminary investigation is held the man is asked to make his option. That is only after the magistrate has determined, having heard the witnesses, that there is some case for an inquiry and that the man should be put upon his trial. My hon. friend asks that when the time comes for the man to declare his option as to whether he shall proceed in a summary manner before the magistrate or have a jury trial, he should have the assistance of a guardian. It seems to me that my hon. friend, with his experience, will corroborate the statement that criminals progress very rapidly. I have known criminals under twenty-one years of age, who were real experts, I have known repeaters under twenty-one years of age, and there are many of them in the penitentiary at the present time. There are men eighteen, nineteen and twenty years of age who are amongst the most dangerous criminals in this country, especially amongst the class addicted to thieving. I have given this matter some consideration in connection with the amendments that I prepared for the criminal code, and if my hon. friend will look at section 810, which has reference to punishments for stealing, he will realize with me that, perhaps, when we have reduced the age to sixteen years, we will have gone as far as it is necessary for the protection of youth. Youths are protected pretty fully in this country, and if it be necessary to have such legislation as this at all, surely we need not go beyond the age of sixteen.

Mr. LANCASTER. That protection only deals with theft.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, in connection with theft the age is fixed at sixteen. If the hon. gentleman would adopt a suggestion as to the age of sixteen, it might be possible to do something to come to the relief of those to whom he has referred, but the section would be required to be drawn in a different form than in the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot see why we should draw the line at sixteen years. I think, with all due deference to the minister, that we have no expert criminals in this country under the age of 21, whereas there are a very large proportion of youths between sixteen and twenty-one about whom we should be very careful to see that they get fair-play. Magistrates have told me that they have a perfect right to ask a man to elect, that there was nothing to prevent them, and that once having elected the prisoner could not elect a second time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Can you refer me to any reported case in Ontario where such a point was decided.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have several of them in my mind. It often happens with persons over twenty-one years, but I think a man over twenty-one ought to know enough to send for his lawyer before he elects. Not long ago an express package was lost and a young man about twenty-five was charged with stealing it. He telephoned for me, but before I got there the magistrate had asked him to elect, and said he did so. I had to threaten the magistrate with all sorts of things, and the Crown Attorney had to assist me before the magistrate would give that young man another chance to elect. I thought that the age of twenty-one was reasonable, but if the Minister of Justice wishes I will compromise at eighteen years.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If the hon. gentleman will withdraw the Bill, I shall endeavour to draw an amendment myself.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose we can adjourn the debate.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Very well.

On motion of Mr. Lancaster, the debate was adjourned.

CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES.

On the order being called for :

Second reading of Bill (No. 4) to amend the Act respecting certificates to Masters and Mates of ships.—Mr. Lancaster.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that this Bill stands.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Marine has asked me to allow this to stand, because he says he is going to introduce legislation which will cover all that is in this Bill. I am quite willing to allow it to stand on that understanding. I have not agreed to withdraw it, but if I have the understanding that the Minister of Marine will introduce and pass a Bill that will cover all that is in this Bill, I shall do so. The Minister of Marine assured me in the corridor, that he only wanted to have this stand until he brings in his Bill, and of course I would expect him to bring it in within reasonable time. The masters and mates who are interested, sent a deputation who went into the matter carefully with me, and they are anxious to have this Bill passed as it is. It is because the Minister of Marine has a majority of the House behind him, that I am willing to let this Bill stand until he brings in his own Bill covering these points.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is absolutely impossible for the government to introduce a Bill that would cover all the points mentioned in this Bill. My hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) has overlooked the fact that we cannot make British subjects in this country.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am not asking that the government should make British subjects.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. I beg your pardon. I am asking in this Bill, that a man who is not a British subject should not get a license to run a boat as master or mate in our waters when a man who is not an American citizen, cannot run a boat owned by American people in the same waters.

Mr. SPEAKER. The discussion is out of order.

Mr. LANCASTER. I am answering what the Minister of Justice said.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Bill stands and will be called again.

Order allowed to stand.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

RETURN ORDERED WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

Copies of all contracts entered into between the government of Canada and any corporation, company or person, during the past five years, for the carriage of mails between any port or ports on the St. Lawrence and the United Kingdom ; and copies of all such contracts for the carriage of mails, during the period aforesaid, between any port or ports in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick and the United Kingdom.—Mr. R. L. Borden.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before you proceed with any item, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is yet prepared to bring down the statement respecting the indebtedness of the provinces to the Dominion ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I have not yet been able to have the statement prepared. It will require a little time ; but I will endeavour to bring it down in good season, before any other matters relating to the Finance Department are dealt with.

Office of the King's Privy Council of Canada —salaries, $35,610.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The only changes are a promotion from the first-class to a chief clerkship, and a promotion from the second-class to the first-class. All the others are statutory increases.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Have all the clerks received their statutory increases ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, all who are eligible under the statute.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who are not eligible under the statute ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In my department I think they were all eligible.

Mr. COCHRANE. Messengers too ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Office of the King's Privy Council of Canada —contingencies, nothwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $9,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the meaning of that provision ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say that the meaning of it is that we have been employing for a great many years persons to do temporary work who are not qualified under the Civil Service Act. The only justification I can plead for that is that it has been so ever since I have been in office, and before.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How many persons are employed in that way ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The total amount expended in that way last year was $1,955.19.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That was not exactly the information I wished to get. How many persons are employed in that way ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are their duties ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think the duties are chiefly copying.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not understand why we cannot have these duties performed without creating exceptions to the terms of a statute. The matter was up last year, and I expressed the opinion that instead of having these perpetual exceptions for persons who have been employed as temporary clerks for a great many years, we should amend the Civil Service Act so that they might be employed under these exceptional conditions without having continual recourse to an exception to the terms of a statute which has been passed by both branches of parliament.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I can give some explanation as to that. There is for the Department of Privy Council an expropriation for the copying and classification of old records, and $1,100 was paid last year to Miss Macdonald for that work. Miss Macdonald could not receive that money if we were to apply to her the provisions of the Civil Service Act. She is a very old lady. When I came into the department there were two of these old ladies, who were employed by Sir John Macdonald, but one of them has since died.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not suggesting that the work should be withdrawn from old employees, but rather that where you have an employee who as a temporary employee has discharged certain duties for a great number of years, we might have a provision in the Civil Service Act which would bring that person within the terms of the statute and in that way obviate the necessity of these continual exceptions.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are the departmental messengers employed temporarily or permanently ? I understand that a young man in one of the departments here who served with distinction in South Africa found on his return that his position had been filled, notwithstanding the pledge of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that all those who went to South Africa would have their positions retained for them. The young man has since been temporarily employed as a messenger or junior third-class clerk.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Under the law as it was until last session messengers could be appointed only temporarily. I am not familiar with all the intricacies of the old Civil Service Act, but I understand that under the new Act these messengers can be appointed permanently.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I notice on page U—2 of the Auditor General's Report, there are three private secretaries to the Premier. Would my right hon. friend tell me how long these have been employed, and what the practice has been ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that there is any practice ; I have three secretaries, two of whom have been employed since I have been in office. The third, Mr. McDougall, has been in my department and acting as my secretary for the last two years.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can only say to my right hon. friend that he made it rather a matter of reproach to me last year when I suggested that my accommodation in this House for the purpose of doing my work was not very good, and he seemed to think that it was a perfect answer to me that very eminent men in days gone by had got along with the same accommodation as I now have. I suppose I might say that there have been very eminent men in his place who got on without three private secretaries. I say this to my right hon. friend only to suggest that comparisons may be made on both sides if he desires to make them ; I am not suggesting that the three secretaries are unnecessary. They may be necessary by reason of the greater amount of business, but the comparison is as fair as that which he made last year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Perhaps those who were in my place were more diligent than I am and did not require so much assistance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my right hon. friend desires to take that position I am sure none of us will wish to dispute it.

Department of Justice—Salaries, including John Chisholm at $1,650, and allowance to private secretary of the Solicitor General, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $39,090.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the cause of the increase ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The first item of the increase is caused by an increase in the salary of the deputy head, Mr. Newcombe ; he comes under the Civil Service Act of last session and secures $1,000 increase. In addition to that there are the usual statutory increases of $50 per year for two chief clerks. The first-class clerks, Mr. Leslie and Mr. Coté, receive $50 increase each and there is an increase for Mr. Chisholm of $150. I promoted Mr. Chisholm to the position of first-class clerk, which necessitated an increase of $150. Then there are other statutory increases. Mr. Mullen has an increase of $100 and Mr. Verrett also has an increase.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why is it necessary to make this exception from the Civil Service Act with respect to private secretaries?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The reason for the provision with respect to the private secretary of the Solicitor General is that under the Civil Service Act it is not permitted to pay anything extra to a member of the civil service, and in the creation of the office of Sollicitor General there was an omission in regard to a private secretary which does not apply to the secretaries of ministers; therefore, in order to justify the extra payment to him, it is necessary to have this provision.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why is there an increase of salary?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. My hon. friend will remember that the practice has been to make an employee of the department a private secretary and to give him the allowance for a private secretary in addition to the salary by him received from the department.

Mr. COCHRANE. But this practice was sometimes very strongly condemned by hon. gentlemen when on this side of the House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would ask the Minister of Justice if the Solicitor General is a member of the cabinet under this administration?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No change in that respect has taken place.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Surely after the language used by hon. gentlemen opposite when in opposition, they are not going to keep a gentleman of the distinguished legal attainments of the worthy gentleman who occupies that position knocking at the door, but will make him a minister?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am afraid in that respect we suffer from the misfortune of bad example.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a pity my hon. friends are so susceptible to bad but not to good example. I would like to mention a matter in connection with the administration of the Department of Justice, but I shall not discuss it now and my remarks to-day may be taken rather as an intimation that it will be discussed later on. I do not know the present practice with regard to the professional work of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, outside of the department. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General will understand, of course, that my remarks are entirely impersonal, that I am speaking without regard to the gentlemen who occupy these positions to-day, and only with a view to what should be our conduct with regard to this matter generally. In Great Britain it was the practice, as I recollect it—I have not refreshed my memory recently—that the law officers of the Crown were considered quite at liberty to engage in private practice. They have very large fees. If my memory serves me well the Attorney General of Great Britain has a salary of £8,000 a year, with fees pertaining to his office of about £4,000 a year. The Solicitor General in England has a salary of £6,000 a year, with fees pertaining to his office of about £2,500 a year. Yet, notwithstanding these very great emoluments, under the practice in the mother country these gentlemen were at liberty to take briefs and to engage in private practice. About ten years ago this came to be regarded as rather an abuse and a change in the practice was made. I do not think it was made by any law or regulation, but by what came to be regarded as the established practice of the office.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And a change made at the same time with respect to salaries, I think.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps so. At any rate as I understand the matter the Attorney General and the Solicitor General are not supposed to engage in private practice or to appear in court, except in cases where they are called upon to appear as law officers of the Crown. I realize that the condition of affairs in this country is very different so far as the emoluments of the officers are concerned. Still, I would like to know whether my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has had under consideration the question as to whether or not it has not become, or may not soon become, desirable that some such rule should be adopted in Canada as has been adopted in England, and if necessary for the purpose of having these offices properly filled that the offices, perhaps, should be attended with greater emolument than those now afforded. I have had brought to my mind certain considerations, which, perhaps, might make that a very desirable step in this country. I will not enter into the considerations to-day, but if the Minister of Justice has not had the matter under his attention I would be glad if he would consider it because it is probable that on some later day in the session I shall consider it my duty to discuss the matter—of course in a respectful way and in a manner which my hon. friends who now occupy those positions will consider quite impersonal so far as they are concerned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of course, I have had this subject under serious consideration for some time, I was forced to consider it as the result of the position I find myself in at present. The position of Minister of Justice is one which necessitates the practical exclusion of the man who holds it from practice at the bar. So far as I am personally concerned, since I have accepted the office I have absolutely declined to take any briefs in court. I have at times, advised as counsel in connection with the business I was engaged in before I took this office. The restriction of income to which I am obliged to submit by the change caused me to consider the whole position. I have never accepted a brief since I took the position of Minister of Justice. I do not think it quite fair that the Minister of Justice should be excluded from practice in the court, nor do I think it quite advantageous to the profession or to the position itself. It was a good thing for the Minister of Justice to be in touch with the courts and to know something of what was going on in that arena. It would be a benefit to the country perhaps, if he could be more in touch with the courts than I can be at the present time. But, so long as the Minister of Justice is expected to advise with respect to the appointment of judges it is difficult for him to appear in court. Judges who depend upon the Minister of Justice for their appointment or promotion might possibly by some be regarded as being influenced by him. That is the determining cause that affected me and excluded me from the courts. All this, my hon. friend will see does not apply to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General has no place in the cabinet and has nothing to do with the appointment of judges. It seems to me absolutely fair that he should be free to practice——

Mr. COCHRANE. Don't we pay him a salary ?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes, and for the salary he is paid he performs services. But that does not prevent him from rendering services to others without interfering with those for the rendering of which he receives his salary. And I would say to my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane), if he will allow me to speak in the light of my experience, that the Solicitor General is better able to perform the services to the country if he keeps in touch with his profession. He keeps himself in touch with his profession, and commands to a large extent the confidence of the bar and of the bench. However, I have put the case of the Solicitor General by itself. So far as I am concerned personally, I have never appeared in court since my appointment as Minister of Justice, except for the Crown, and never even in that capacity except in the Supreme Court. I have made an exception of that court because the appointment of Supreme Court judges is the exclusive patronage of the Prime Minister.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Solicitor General). I appreciate the remarks made by the leader of the opposition and those of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. As to the Solicitor General's work I can say this, that when I was called to this office I had. I will not say as extensive a practice as the Minister of Justice, but still a fair practice. It is not very long since I assumed this office, but I have been in it long enough to learn that it is not necessary to put in the law anything to prohibit the Solicitor General from attending to his private practice. I find that there is quite enough work in the department to keep the Solicitor General very busy. And, in the future, following the example of the Minister of Justice, I intend to attend to the business of my office and to make it an office which will be a credit to the country and to the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux) has said was very much what I had in my own mind. As this country grows and develops the work of the department of Justice must necessarily increase. I shall not go over certain matters that have been discussed in days gone by as to the work that should be performed by the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General in connection with litigation in which the Crown is engaged. All I have to suggest at present is that I entirely agree with the view the Solicitor General has expressed when he says that ample work can be found in the Department of Justice to fully occupy his time. I will go further and say that very probably the remuneration afforded by the country to the man who gives up his whole time to the work of the country is not up to the standard of what he might expect. But I think that when we have a Minister of Justice, and Attorney General and a Solicitor General, we should require them to give their whole time to the work of their department, and we should give them such a salary as would induce the acceptance of those offices by men qualified to fill them at all times. That is the view I take. As I said before, I will not discuss it further at present, but I may have a private conversation with my hon. friend the Minister of Justice in regard to it. Possibly, as I said before, at some later date in the session I may take occasion to discuss this matter in connection with certain other matters in relation to the Department of Justice.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to draw the attention of the hon. gentlemen opposite to what they used to say when the party I support was in power.

An hon. MEMBER. Dispense.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, I won't dispense. You don't like to swallow yourself, but you do it very often. You made as much noise as any man in the former opposition when they sat on this side of the House. I know you don't like to hear of these things now, but you must take your medicine like a man. I dare say the Minister of Customs will remember very well when the Conservative party was in power, how the opposition used to talk about us in the House and in the country. I am sorry the Prime Minister has gone out, because I recollect very well when he made as a text of speeches in the country the enormous expenditures of the Conservative government in connection with the administration of justice.

Hon. Mr. TARTE. He won't do it again.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, I don't think he will. Still, they have got a good deal of cheek and can do almost anything. Even the Minister of Justice tells us they are very ready to accept good sense, especially where there are dollars and cents. Now is it not a sad comment to think that the Prime Minister of this country used to go around preaching of the enormous expenditures alleged to have been made by the Conservative government, and now we find that his government is doing even worse? I am not finding fault with them for doing this, but I am finding fault with them for condemning us for doing what they are now doing. They said that we were doing wrong. I say with the leader of the opposition that if the salary of the Minister of Justice is not sufficient he should have a sufficient salary to pay him for all his time, and the same with the Solicitor General. The premier when in opposition used to complain that we were paying enormous amounts to outside parties to do business that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General ought to have done. What do we find to-day? I have not added up the figures, but I think I am safe in saying that they have spent $40,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. $72,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, that is worse still. I do not blame the Minister of Justice for he was not in the House then, but I daresay he supported these gentlemen at the time, and now when they are in power we find them perpetrating the same thing. I consider they are doubly guilty, because they are now doing what they said was wrong when we were in power. I am glad to see the Minister of Customs looking serious. I know that when he reflects on what he used to say with reference to this matter, if he has any conscience at all it must upbraid him. He has made me uneasy sometimes when I was on that side of the House by his strong denunciations of the government on those lines; now he sits complacently here and sees his colleagues do the same thing. They are doubly guilty now in doing what they denounced us for doing. $70,000 is an enormous sum, it is more than we ever spent.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I quite agree that we pay a very large amount for lawyers' fees. We paid a large amount before, and we pay a large amount still. At the same time let me draw attention to this fact—and I am sure the hon. gentleman will give me credit for it—that in 1893 we paid $143,000, while this last year he will be glad to learn that we have reduced the general legal expenses down to $72,000. In 1894-95-96, the amount paid to solicitors in Ottawa for services rendered varied from $17,000 to $19,000 a year; whereas last year, finishing the 1st of July, the amount paid was only a little over $5,000. I am sure he will agree that although we still spend a large amount, we have been endeavouring, as far as possible, and successfully, to reduce that expenditure. We shall continue in the same direction, and I can assure him that we shall do even better in the future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Minister of Justice ought to have stated also that we have to make an allowance to certain officers of the Department of Justice for performing the same duties that were formerly performed by outside solicitors, so the difference is not as great as he suggests.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I added that we had increased the salary of the deputy by $1,000. Let me also add this, that there is no man in this country who has more effectively co-operated in this work of reduction than the Deputy Minister of Justice. That reduction could not have been accomplished without his effective and loyal co-operation.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Department of Public Works—salaries, $53,150.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, perhaps at this stage it would be well for the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to make a general explanation as to how the Department of Public Works and the Department of Marine and Fisheries stand now, so that we will know whether the money to be voted in the main estimates is to be expended by the hon. Minister of Public Works or transferred to another department. I see by the newspapers that there has been a general shakeup, that the Department of Public Works has been practically robbed of all its powers and that they have been handed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The Department of Public Works might as well shut up shop, because it has practically nothing to do except to look after a few public buildings, and, under these circumstances, I think it is right and proper that we should have from the hon. minister now a full explanation of what changes are to be made.

Mr. CLARKE. Make a clean breast of the whole affair.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). There will be an opportunity of making an explanation in regard to that matter on another occasion. I shall not ask the committee to vote any money that is to be spent by any other department than by the Department of Public Works. There may be one or two items in the estimates referring to the hydrographic surveys and to some improvements relating to the St. Lawrence channel, upon which an explanation may have to be given later on. I am not now asking the committee to consider any appropriation that will not be spent by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. HENDERSON. We certainly do not expect that the hon. minister is going to ask for any money that is not to be spent by the Department of Public Works, but what we want to know is: Who is the Minister of Public Works, who is going to spend the money? As has been so well said by my hon. friend the member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), there has been such a shake-up in these two departments that I am quite sure we on this side of the House, as well as those on the other side of the House, have no perfect knowledge at all of what is under the control of the hon. Minister of Public Works and what is under the control of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I fail to see why this information should be withheld. It seems to me that if we are going to do the public business, we must have a reasonable understanding of the matter with which we have to deal. I am glad that my hon. friend brought this question up. It is a matter that I had thought of myself, and I have been wondering how we would succeed in getting the information, because, doubtless, as the session goes on, we will from time to time require to know what minister we ought to appeal to for certain appropriations, if we should make an appeal at all, in regard to something we thought was required, and to my mind, when we are considering these estimates at this early stage of the session, it is very desirable that we should have a clean breast made of the whole thing. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works, or the hon. gentleman who is acting to-night as the Minister of Public Works, is not ashamed to tell the committee how much of his prestige and authority have been taken away from him by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine). I sympathize with the hon. gentleman, because my own impression is that he has not been very fairly dealt with, and we in the province of Ontario would prefer that the Public Works had not been dealt with with the iron hand, as it must have been, under the direction or under the pressure of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think it is better now that the hon. Minister of Public Works should make known to us exactly how the matter stands, and then we will be able to discuss each item intelligently.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson), I may say that I am still the Minister of Public Works, not having resigned, and I may possibly be for the balance of the year for which these estimates are asked. If there is a general election and a change is made, my hon. friend may take my place, and I am sure he will see that this money is applied in the best way possible. I will try to see, while I am Minister of Public Works, that the country gets value for it. There is one item under the head of the Department of Public Works for hydrographic surveys, and when we come to that I will explain that the vote to be taken will be under the jurisdiction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the coming year. That is a change which I announced last session. It is a very small vote of something like $20,000 or $30,000. The only other item of a like character upon which the change may be discussed is the appropriation for the St. Lawrence river improvement. My hon. friends, having taken my assurance last session that the money voted would be spent by the Department of Public Works, I am sure will be willing to take that assurance again, because any money voted for the Department of Public Works will be expended by the Minister of Public Works. There is no change in regard to any of the items in the estimates for which I am now asking a vote. There is some proposition to make a change in regard to the two items I have mentioned. I am not keeping anything back from the committee in regard to them.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the Department of Public Works remain in the same position as it was twelve months ago?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Just the same.

Mr. CLARKE. Does it exercise the same jurisdiction over the works and services as it did twelve months ago?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What is going over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, because it was given out in the press that the Department of Marine and Fisheries would deal with certain public works which seemed more appropriately connected with that department than with the Department of Public Works? Was the country misled, or was it intended that the Department of Marine and Fisheries should take charge of these works?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I think there may be a wrong impression as to what I said last session that in my opinion the hydrographic surveys would be better carried on under the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and it is only recently that that change has been made. We were then really at the end of the season during which that work can be done, and it was not thought well to make the transfer until the opening of another season. I have given instructions to transfer that work to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for the coming year. There may also be a change in regard to work in the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. CLARKE. What will be the nature of that change ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That is as to the improvements which are being made in the St. Lawrence river. That with the hydrographic survey is the only change, and I do not think there is anything kept back, or that there is any misunderstanding in regard to that matter. When these items come up, either in the estimates of the Department of Public Works or the Department of Marine and Fisheries, a full explanation will be given in regard to them.

Mr. CLARKE. What works are being carried on under the authority or supervision of the Department of Public Works in the way of improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence which it is intended to transfer to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The improvement of the channel between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. CLARKE. Of what nature ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Almost altogether the dredging and sweeping of the channel. Lighting and all other aids to navigation are now under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It has been thought that perhaps a saving might be made if that work was done under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That is the only change that is under consideration now.

Mr. CLARKE. All the dredging was formerly done under the superintendence of the hon. gentleman's department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Not at all ; none whatever, except what refers to the main channel.

Mr. CLARKE. All the dredging connected with the improvement of the channel on the St. Lawrence which has been done under the hon. gentleman's department is to be taken away ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No, there may be a misunderstanding. Any dredging that is properly under the department now in regard to harbours or any other improvements that may be made to wharfs along the St. Lawrence will still be retained under the control of the Public Works Department. It is only the improvement of the ship channel that is given over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr CLARKE Then everything connected with navigation will be taken away from the hon. gentleman's department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. In the channel.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that done formerly by the Public Works Department or by the Marine Department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The Public Works Department.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that gone also ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I said that no change has been made and that there would not likely be any change this year.

Mr. CLANCY. When the minister speaks of the St. Lawrence, does he mean the whole of the St. Lawrence or only that below Montreal ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Only the channel below Montreal.

Mr. TAYLOR. All the work done by the dredges has for years been done under the Public Works Department, but now it is to be divided between that department and the Marine Department. The Public Works Department had at Sorel a large plant for building and repairing dredges, and I should think that the change which is now proposed would not only have a tendency to confuse the accounts, but would entail extra expense on the country. I believe that this change is a great mistake in the interests of the country. The Public Works Department will have to send certain dredges to the Department of Marine and the Department of Marine will have to man them, and if they are to be repaired they will have to be repaired by the Public Works Department, or else, more costly workshops will have to be built. I do not think that any business man would manage his business in that way. I believe that the work could be more efficiently and more cheaply done, if it were done under the one head.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. These matters will all come up for discussion when we come to the appropriation for that purpose later on.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it intended that the Sorel establishment shall be taken from the Public Works Department and handed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That was the proposition, but if any vote is asked for that purpose, full information will have to be given.

Mr. CLARKE. And if that is done, then the dredges of the Public Works Department will be handed over to the Marine Department for repairs ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Not necessarily.

Mr. CLARKE. How will it be done ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It will be done as the great bulk of it is done at the present time. The dredges will be repaired wherever they are working whether they are in Nova Scotia or Ontario. There has been considerable work done at Sorel on plant that is not used on the channel, but all these details will have to be given later on.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year the minister asked a vote under this head for $51,800, and this year, notwithstanding the fact that the Department of Public Works is to be less important than it was, the minister has increased this vote to $53,150. For years that work has been done by the Department of Public Works, and there must be some good reason, or there ought to be some good reason for making the change. This matter was fully discussed last session, but parliament has never yet been told how it is that this change in the departments has come about. This is the proper time for us to have an explanation.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. None of the officers paid out of this vote are at all affected by any change that may be made. I may say that the increase in the amount this year is almost altogether made up of the annual increases of $50 each which have been allowed on the report of the deputy minister to the officials he considered were entitled to it. Of the thirty-two officials in the department, twenty-seven have been allowed an increase of $50 each, which practically includes all the officials entitled to it, outside of the deputy minister, the chief engineer and the chief architect. I think that my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) will see that it will be far more convenient to discuss this matter when we are considering a vote which is affected by any change proposed.

Mr. INGRAM. We must conclude that this change was made, either because the Minister of Public Works was not competent to administer his department, or else that another minister had to be satisfied at his expense. A reflection is cast upon the Minister of Public Works by the change, and if the explanation is a good one it ought to be made now.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. My deputy informs me that the special vote which had been expended under the late minister, was taken out of the vote for the ship channel, and that is the only item in connection with these estimates, which will give rise to any discussion on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two things which in my judgment should be given to parliament at the earliest opportune time : one is the change of the portfolios, and the other is the changes of work in the departments. The former should be given as soon after the opening of parliament as possible, and the latter as soon as we begin to vote moneys. If you do away with half the work of a department, it necessarily follows that you will not require the same number of hands to do the smaller amount of work ; and now that we are voting money for the Public Works Department, we want to know whether half the work which has hitherto been done by the Public Works Department is in future to be done by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It is important that we should know how the work is to be divided between the two departments, so that we may judge whether it is necessary to vote this amount of money or a smaller or a larger amount. For that reason, this is the opportune time for having a full explanation not only with regard to the Public Works Department, but every other department of the government, where it is proposed to transfer any of the work from one department to another.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I fully agree with the policy laid down by my hon. friend ; but I thought I made it clear to the committee that not one cent of the salaries of any of the officials or men employed in connection with any of the work that is being transferred will be paid out of this vote.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the question. If you require much less work to be done, do you require all this vote ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I leave the hon. gentleman to infer, when I say that the full amount of expense to be affected by the change which will be made at the beginning of this season will be about $500,000 which is not a large amount out of a total of between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000, and would not greatly affect the size of the staff at headquarters, especially as the staff in connection with these particular works are not located at Ottawa, and are not paid at all out of these appropriations.

Mr. HENDERSON. During last session power was taken by the government to transfer by Order in Council from one department to another, various works which were formerly under the control of either the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We have now at length succeeded in getting the information that about $500,000 of work is to be performed under the direction of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which would otherwise have been under the control of the Minister of Public Works. It is quite possible that before the 30th of June, 1905, some material changes may still be made. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works, whether the transfer of work to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries which has thus far been decided upon has been made at the suggestion of the Minister of Public Works, or was the demand made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ? I shall expect when I sit down to get an answer to that question. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), a few moments ago drew attention to the fact that the minister was asking for the staff this year $1,000 more than was required last year.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Only the $50 increases, as I have explained.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite understand so. But what I want to draw attention to is this, that while the department has been relieved of some of its work, involving less office work, less engineering, less work for the architects, the amount asked for the payment of the staff has not decreased. To my mind, if there is a decrease in the expenditure, the cost of the staff ought to decrease. Now, I turn to the estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I find that a very material increase is to be asked for by him ; and no doubt, when we reach those estimates, we shall be told by the minister that the increase is all owing to the fact that a considerable amount of work that was formerly done by the Minister of Public Works, is now to be carried out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. If the whole of the work to be performed by the two departments is simply equivalent to what is done by the two departments to-day, there should be no increase in the staff, whereas we find that for the Department of Marine and Fisheries provision is made for an increase of the staff from 52 to 56. Now is the time when all these matters should be explained, because if we vote this sum, a sum in excess of what we think the minister requires for his staff, we shall be handicapped when we come to vote the salaries for the department of Marine and Fisheries, which amount to some $4,500 more than those of the previous year.

Now, I think that perhaps the Minister of Public Works has not been very fairly treated in this matter. Of course if the change has been made at his own request, if he has asked that a certain amount of his work be transferred from his department, then I have no fault to find with the head of the government. But if a demand has been made by another minister, his junior in the government, and that demand has been acceded to, I think there is some unfair treatment of the Minister of Public Works and it is just as well that we who are voting this money should know just whence the pressure came that brought about the change that seems to have occurred. That there is a change is perfectly evident from the fact that the Minister of Marine is asking for a very large increase in the vote for his staff whilst the Minister of Public Works is asking for practically no increase.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will look at this vote he will see that it provides for no engineers except the chief engineer of the department. As to the architect he never had anything to do, and would not have anything to do, with any of the changes that are proposed. On a previous occasion I stated in this House that in my opinion the work of the hydrographic survey should be transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that all that has been transferred ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It is.

Mr. HENDERSON. Ten years ago the hydrographic survey was under the Department of Marine and I was not aware that it had been transferred.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) had taken it over and established a boat and staff for the purpose of doing hydrographic survey work. I stated last session that in my opinion this was a mistake and that the work should be under one department as in that way it could be done more cheaply and more efficiently. I think I then stated that it was too late to make the transfer that season but the deputy has now taken steps to transfer it. The balance of the vote applies to the improvements in the St. Lawrence channel and none of these votes can be effected in any way by that transfer.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the argument of the minister is correct with reference to the hydrographic survey, it certainly is a great deal more applicable in the case of dredging. He thinks the surveys can be carried on more efficiently when all under one department and how can he say that it will be in the public interest that the dredging, which requires a large and expensive plant, should be divided between the Marine and Public Works Departments ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This is the change that is being made now and in the event of any changes being made in the future that would be a fair matter for discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. We must accept as gospel the statement of the Minister of Marine in Montreal before the last election. He said that this was all coming to him ; he was to have control of the dredging plant, and the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel. If the plant at Sorel and one half of the dredging is to be handed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, surely the Minister of Public Works should hand over six or eight of the clerks employed in the Public Works Department ? If a man were engaged in a wholesale and a retail business and sold out the retail business he could dispense with a great deal of his help and in the same way the Minister of Public Works could cut down his staff. We know that as soon as the work is divided up the cost to the country will be nearly doubled.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) does not seem to under stand that there is a complete, separate staff connected with that work and the officers for whom this vote is taken are not in any way affected by the change. When a vote is asked for that purpose then we can give it consideration, but I am sure my hon. friend will take my word that not one of the staff here will be affected by the change except in so far as the deputy minister and chief engineer may have had the matter under their jurisdiction.

Mr. TAYLOR. The staff at Sorel are paid through the Public Works Department, their cheques are made out in that department, and all of this has been done by the regular staff. Now the staff will be relieved of that work. The deepening of the channel was also under the Public Works Department but now the clerks will be relieved of that correspondence, &c. Therefore, I think some of them will be dispensed with and handed over to the Marine Department.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I do not think so. My hon. friend will see that the work of the department is not materially affected. Cheques are made out here by the Public Works accountant, but we do not make up the time or check the accounts or anything of that kind. That is all done at Sorel. The accountant will be relieved of the mere making out of the cheques for the payment of these men but the chief accountant and his assistants will still have sufficient work in the department for the staff for which we are now asking this vote. This work is done by technical officers who have no connection with the head office at Ottawa. So far as the works at Sorel are concerned the specifications, plans and so on are made there and not by the department here.

Mr. SPROULE. What department attends to the lighting of the St. Lawrence and the putting in of buoys and lighthouses ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The Marine Department.

Mr. SPROULE. What department had this work previously ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I believe it was in the hands of the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not the Public Works Department at one time build lighthouses ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. They have not had that work in hand for years.

Mr. SPROULE. How is it in the case of the harbours on the upper lakes ? It is desirable that we should be informed on these points in view of what has appeared from time to time in the newspapers. We see it stated here and there that work formerly done by the Public Works Department and by the Railway and Canals Departments is to be handed over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If we are to discuss these things intelligently, we must know how the departments are being divided so that we may understand who is to be in charge of the expenditure of money.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) must leave out of account the things he sees in the newspapers. But he knows that power was taken by the Governor in Council to make such changes. I can only speak for myself, but I can say that in asking for votes I do so with the expectation that no change will be made during the year for which the vote is given. That ought to satisfy the House that when they vote money they know what department it will be spent by. I have gone further and have intimated in a general way what would be the result if the proposed arrangements with regard to the St. Lawrence channel are carred out. If the change is made, it will not affect this vote or any other I ask the House to grant.

Mr. CLANCY. I have listened with some interest to the hon. gentleman's explanation in answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), namely whether the changes that have been or are about to be made have been or will be made on the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works himself. I do not wish to do the hon. gentleman an injustice, but perhaps he will take what I am about to say as a compliment. He seems to have the art of answering questions that are not asked. The hon. gentleman was asked if he had made such a recommendation. His answer as I understood it was that he had stated on a former occasion—last session I believe—that the vote of the hydrographic survey should be placed under the department of Marine and Fisheries to which it had formerly belonged. But apparently that did not cover the point. For, the hon. gentleman said that half a million dollars at least would be involved in this change. If I understand it aright we are not spending half a million on hydrographic surveys. What we are spending a part of this money for is the improvement of the channel below Montreal. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I will repeat the question in a narrower form :—Has the hon. gentleman recommended changes with regard to the expenditure of money for the improvement of the channel as well as for the carrying on of the hydrographic surveys ? Has it been under the hon. gentleman's recommendation that these changes have been made ? He has just had a second conference with the Minister of Finance (Hon.

Mr. Fielding) and surely he will be able to make it clear this time. And I am sure the Minister of Finance will assist his colleague the Minister of Public Works in giving an answer to my question.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I do not know whether that is a fair question or not. Of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) understands the constitutional practice. Personally I have no objection to answer, and I thought I had done so. I said I had suggested although I did not recommend one change—it had to be recommended by the Prime Minister. I suggested one change, but not the other. It is a matter for discussion at a future time.

Mr. CLANCY. Then the hon. gentleman I understand, agrees to this change in his department. He will be willing to give back the Marine Department what he thought properly belonged to it. But, since the hon. gentleman did not recommend the change, it would seem that his department is being dismantled without his consent. Some hon. gentlemen on this side say that this is a reflection on the hon. gentleman himself. I am not willing to believe that he is not capable of doing the work of the department. I believe the Minister of Public Works shares my opinion. Let us be perfectly frank about this. Here is a great spending department under the control of the hon. gentleman. Another hon. gentleman wants more patronage than he has. I do not think I am going too far when I say that the Public Works Department is to be cut and carved to suit the wishes of this other gentleman. I think the country will be gratified with the frankness of the avowal of the Minister of Public Works that a portion of the work that has been conducted for many years successfully under his department is to be taken over not in the public interest—because I am sure he considered the public interest as well as the proper jealousy for his own department—by another department. And he refused to give his consent to the change. I think the House and the country have a right to the fullest explanation not only as to what has been done, but as to the policy of the government in future. Is the Public Works Department to be reduced by a supposedly painless process of taking small portions at a time to gratify the hunger for patronage of the hon. gentleman who presides so ably over the Marine and Fisheries Department, or is this the last change that is to be made in this direction? As has been stated by one or two gentlemen on this side there is a large increase of expenditure on civil government disclosed on the face of the estimates I think mainly due to this change. So, I think the hon. gentleman can scarcely hope that he should proceed with any of these estimates—knowing as he knows better than I do that he is responsible not only for his own department but for the policy of the government of which he is a distinguished member—until he is ready to go further and tell us what the policy of the government is in this respect.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) asks, as he said, a more direct and pointed question than was asked by the hon. member for Halton. I thought it my duty to try to answer the question put by that hon. member (Mr. Henderson). The hon. gentleman has taken advantage of my answer to make it appear that I had intimated something which I did not intend to. My hon. friend well knows that if any change were made it would have to be done by authority of the Governor in Council. If I remained a member of the cabinet I would assume the responsibility for the change, with my colleagues. The hon. gentleman knows that. But I do not think it is necessary or desirable for the government to take any notice of reports in the newspapers such as these. There is only one question perhaps that can come up for discussion, and that is whether any change would be in the public interest. That question would come up more properly and could be discussed more effectively when the vote is being asked for that purpose. The hon. gentleman does not expect me now to explain newspaper reports that I have not seen, or any that I have seen. I have merely stated the actual facts as I know them to be.

Mr. CLANCY. I have not been interrogating the hon. gentleman in regard to newspaper reports, I made no reference to newspaper reports. The hon. gentleman is aware that authority was taken last session by an Act of this House giving unlimited power to the government of which he is a member to change the divisional work of the departments. They could practically hand over the greater portion of the work done in his department to the Department of Marine and Fisheries had they thought proper to do so. Now I think we have a right to know whether there is one dollar being expended under the Department of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries other than that which belonged to it previously. As the minister of the Crown especially responsible for the expenditure of his own estimates, I think he should give us that information at this time. I asked the hon. gentleman if it was the policy of the government—he certainly knows the policy of the government—if it was the policy of the government to continue to make such changes from time to time in his own department as they would have authority to make under the Act passed last session.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I have endeavoured to make it clear to the House that no change was proposed except what I have intimated. I think I am able to state positively that so far as the government is concerned no change will be made during the year for which these appropriations are taken other than that I have intimated.

Mr. CLANCY. That is not quite answering the question. The hon. gentleman says that during the present year for which the vote is taken there will be no change. But there is more. The hon. gentleman says that this year there will be an expenditure of half a million dollars ; what about the next year ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will see that we are dealing with this year's estimates, and he could not expect me to declare the policy of the government for all future time. I do not mean to keep anything back. No such policy as he intimates is under consideration—I do not know how I can give a franker answer than that. I have never heard of any other policy being considered by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the minister desires to withhold from us as full information as he is able to give, or whether he has not got the information. I do not think his information is as full as the House is entitled to. We passed an Act giving the government certain authority, and we want to know whether they have acted on that authority or not. He has not told us whether they are going to do it in the future or not. We ought to know whether they have done it in the past, and we ought to know whether they propose to do it next year. That is not an unreasonable request. Knowing that, we will be better able intelligently to discuss the expenditure of the money that he now asks for. He told us the hydrographic survey was under the Marine Department. Am I correct in understanding that the hydrographic survey which was to be carried on on Lake Superior has been transferred to the Marine Department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That has always been under the control of the Marine Department since it was established.

Mr. SPROULE. What surveys did the minister refer to ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That which is being done on the St. Lawrence river. That is the only survey under the Public Works Department that is being transferred.

Mr. SPROULE. And that which was being done by the Railway Department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That will all be consolidated in the Marine Department.

Mr. SPROULE. We are still without the information we desire. There are two things parliament is entitled to at the earliest possible moment. First, we are entitled to an explanation regarding ministerial changes. That I am informed we have not got yet. In the next place, when we commence to vote money we are entitled to an explanation of what changes have been made in the various departments in the way of transferring work from one to another. I think we ought to have that explanation with regard to all the departments, because when we are dealing with one it indirectly affects another.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No other changes have been made, and none others are under consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood some changes would be made during the time this money was being expended.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. One cannot tell what may be done more than a year hence. Something may occur which may render other changes necessary. But no other changes have been made than I have stated, and there will be no other changes made until parliament meets again.

Mr. SPROULE. But the law provides that changes may be made at any time by Order in Council, it becomes a matter of importance to know whether it is contemplated to make any during the present year.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I wish to make it clear that so far as my department is concerned, and so far as the policy of the government is concerned, of which I have any knowledge, there is no intention of making any change.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to bring up another question. I notice in some of the departments some of the officers have received their statutory increases under the Civil Service law we passed last year. Looking over the Act I cannot understand very clearly when it will come into force. I am told that in some departments it has already been enforced and that some are enjoying the benefits of the law while others are not, that some have got them in the past and that some will get them in the future. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance would be good enough to give an explanation as to what the operation of the law is at the present time, what departments have been brought under it, and what civil servants are enjoying the increases provided for by it ?

Mr. FIELDING. The Act was an enabling Act authorizing the government to do certain things. As respects some portions of the Act I think all the departments—I am speaking from memory—have availed themselves of the privileges of it. There are some parts of the Act that have not yet been put into operation, for example, that portion of the Act which creates a class known as grade 'A.' The matter is under consideration as to what officials in the departments are entitled to receive the promotion of the character which is contemplated by the Act. I think I am correct in stating that all of the departments have availed themselves of some of the provisions of the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know how the Act is worked out because I am not sufficiently familiar with it, but I am told that by the estimates which are before us there will be a doubling up of the salaries of some civil servants and not of others, that while some will receive an increase of $25 only, others will receive an increase of $50 and that the Act is not in operation along the same lines in the various departments. In looking over the estimates I judge that may be the case because I find in some cases where they have the same number of civil servants this year as last, there is only an increase in the amount asked for which would provide for the ordinary statutory increase, while in other departments there appears to be no statutory increase provided for. For instance, in the Department of Public Works there is an increase of $1,350 and the number of employees is 32, the same as last year. I take it that the $1,350 will represent the statutory increase that is given to these civil servants under the new law.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The number is 27, and if you multiply the amount by that it will give you the amount of increase that each will receive.

Mr. SPROULE. I assume that in the Department of Public Works they are getting it while in some other departments, I am told, they are not getting it. Why is it that some benefit and others do not?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The deputy minister informs me that all are to be benefited under the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. There are others who do not benefit outside of grade 'A.'

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. All in the Department of Public Works who are entitled to it under the Act get the benefit.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that in the Department of Public Works they get it but in some of the other departments they do not.

Mr. FIELDING. We will have to deal with the question as each department comes up. The operation of the Act may not be uniform in this respect, that although the Act empowered the government to do certain things each department would have to take the initiative as respects its own officials and that initiative may not have been taken at the same moment. I think I am correct in saying that all the departments have availed themselves of the general provisions of the Act. I know that in my own department each official got the benefit of the Act in all matters outside of grade 'A.'

Mr. SPROULE. That which may have been done by one department may not have been done by all at the same time. If the Order in Council was passed last year bringing the Act into operation as respects one set of civil servants, and it was not brought into operation in another department until this year, it would be a great injustice.

Mr. FIELDING. It would all be within the same year. I do not mean to say that it was brought into operation in different years.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not before me a particular instance, but I am told this is so, and of course I thought the hon. Minister of Finance would be able to explain it. I think still there has been a blunder in regard to it in some way or other.

Mr. FIELDING. There were one or two features of the Act which were open to debate as to their possible interpretation and there was some delay as to that, but I think I am quite safe in saying, that, as respects the well established classes of civil servants in all the departments, they have received the benefits of the Act. They may not all have received them on the same date but they have received them. If there are exceptions there must be good reasons for them and of course the hon. gentleman would have to point to a particular case before we could give the explanation.

Mr. SPROULE. The Act was passed in the current year but it was after the commencement of the financial year. Would the civil servant get the advantage of one-half or three quarters of a year or how much?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I understand the Act would come into force as soon as it became law.

Mr. SPROULE. It does come into force but here is the only thing that I can find that bears upon the subject:

All sums of money voted by parliament for the financial year ending on the thirtieth day of June, 1904, and applicable for the payment of the salaries or the increases to the salaries of any person in the public service, shall, in the event of the promotion of any such persons to higher classes or grades, or on their transfer to other positions in the public service, or other becoming entitled to, or being granted, increases of salary under the provisions of this Act, be applicable in or towards payment of the salaries or increases to the salaries of such persons so promoted or transferred, or becoming entitled to or being granted increases as aforesaid.

The money is available whenever the government do a certain thing, but the question is whether the government have done that certain thing to enable all civil servants to take advantage of it at the same time, or whether some have been able to take advantage of it for a half year, or three-quarters of a year, while others have not received any advantage from it up to the present time.

Mr. FIELDING. The Act took effect, I think, on October 23.

Mr. SPROULE. It was assented to then.

Mr. FIELDING. On the day of prorogation.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. My recollection is that the Act took effect from that date and that it would apply to each civil servant just as soon as the minister of the department would deal with the matter. I would take it that there must be a difference of some weeks owing to the absence of the minister, owing to the minister being otherwise engaged. The dates on which these promotions might take place might vary to a small extent but I do not think they would be to a sufficiently large extent to make any material difference in the salaries of the different officers. It may be that one department took advantage of the Act promptly while another department may have delayed for a few weeks before the Act was brought into operation by the minister of the department, but I do not think there was any material difference in the time.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the salary commence from the date on which the Order in Council was passed, or from the quarter of the year, or the half of the year ?

Mr. FIELDING. That would depend on the action taken in each case. As a general rule salaries take effect upon the date at which the appointment is made. If the increase were made early, to date from the passage of the Act, I suppose the Auditor General would pass the account, but if it were delayed for a considerable period I fancy it would take effect from the date of appointment. We would be obliged in each department to look into the action taken under the Act before we could give a fuller statement.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon minister is referring to one thing and I am dealing with another. The hon. minister is dealing with those special classes that have been created under the Act while I am dealing with the ordinary statutory increase that is provided for all of them.

Mr. FIELDING. Of course the ordinary statutory increase is one thing and the special increase of last session is something additional. The ordinary statutory increase was provided for before. In some cases the the scale of salaries adopted under the new Act would entitle the official to something beyond the statutory increase and in other cases perhaps not, but wherever he was entitled to statutory increase already provided for, I think I am safe in saying that he has received it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Going back to the question that we were discussing before in reference to the change in the Department of Public Works and the Department of Marine and Fisheries I have been endeavouring to find the Act to which I referred a short time ago, but the indexes made by the well paid government officials of these statutes are so extremly vague that I am always at a loss to find anything that I want to get. I wonder that some Minister of the Crown does not take this matter up, and suggest a better system of indexing the statutes. There are indexes scattered all over the book and you have to look here and there and everywhere before you come across, accidentally in the end, what you want to get at. Now, Sir, the government having acted upon that Act of Parliament in one instance, by transferring under Order in Council to the Marine Department a portion of the attributes of the Public Works Department ; can they go on from year to year passing Orders in Council, based upon the authority of this Act, and constantly change the duties of one department to another. I am sorry that the Solicitor General is not here to give a legal opinion on the question. It is my belief that once having exercised their power under that Act, the power of the government is exhausted, and they have no right to go on from year to year making constant changes. Probably the fact that I did not know what the minister meant by a hydrographic survey, led me to make comments which were not necessary. We have had hydrographic surveys in the Georgian Bay under the Marine Department, but these were surveys of the bed of the lake for the purpose of charting the obstructions to navigation. I never understood before that dredging would come under a hydrographic survey, and I do not think that most other people understood it either. The fact is, that the minister was speaking of a hydrographic survey, when we were speaking of dredging, and that is where the difficulty arose. I believe that we were right, and that a hydrographic survey is not a proper description of that dredging work.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I would not go so far as to say that there should be no hydrographic survey on the St. Lawrence river. Of course the department will have to carry on surveys which are quite different from the ordinary hydrographic survey, for the purpose of charting. The surveys of the department for dredging purposes will be carried on as usual wherever that work is to be done. There was established under the late Minister of Public Works, a hydrographic survey, which I thought might be better handed over to the Marine Department.

Mr. HENDERSON. I agree with the minister that anything in the nature of a hydrographic survey should come under the Department of Marine, but I do think that there was no good reason why any change should be made in the dredging even in the lower St. Lawrence. I am sure the House would have been better satisfied if the whole work, which had been assigned to the Department of Public Works for years had remained with the department. I am rather happy to know however, that the Minister of Public Works was not an assenting party to the change that was made. I notice here that there is an item of $600, for allowance to a private secretary. As I understand it, the minister selects a civil servant who has a certain salary, as his private secretary, and on account of the additional duties, or on account of the greater responsibilities that attach to the position of private secretary, he is allowed an extra salary of $600. I presume that is what the item refers to, because surely the minister does not pay his private secretary the paltry salary of $600.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) is quite correct, subject to the qualification, that in some instances the $600 may be divided between two officials. That has been the practice for generations.

Mr. HENDERSON. If that be so, then why is it that in regard to this $600 for private secretaries, you have the words 'notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act' in most cases, while they are not connected with this particular vote.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The explanation probably is that the gentleman who is acting as private secretary to the Minister of Public Works, is qualified under the Civil Service Act. It is quite possible that a minister might appoint as private secretary, one who has not passed the examination, and then these words would be necessary in order that he be paid.

Public buildings, Ottawa, Astronomical Observatory, $35,0000.

Mr. SPROULE. In what stage of advancement is this work now ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It will be completed during the coming year.

Mr. SPROULE. Building, fittings and everything ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Building, fittings and everything are supposed to be completed this year, and this is to provide for its completion.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the building and equipment expected to cost ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. In round numbers $96,000 including equipment and fittings. The original contract for the building was $74,999. The rest is for equipment and fittings.

Mr. SPROULE. When do you expect to have your arrangements all complete ?

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. During the current year.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. minister give us some information in regard to the instruments and equipment generally ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The instruments are not included in this vote. They will be furnished by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. HENDERSON. Why by the Department of the Interior ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Because they carry on the work. We simply complete and furnish the building for them. We do not furnish the technical instruments.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where is the connection between the Department of the Interior and an astronomical observatory ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Because all the staff connected with that work are in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that it would be more naturally connected with the Marine Department, and I am surprised that it is not handed over to that department. I presume that a part of the observatory has to do with warning mariners of coming storms. If the power of transferring work from one department to another is to be exercised, the Department of the Interior may be next attacked in order to bring prestige and patronage to the Department of Marine.

Mr. SPROULE. I see it rumoured from time to time in the press that the observatory at Toronto is to be moved to Ottawa. Is that the intention ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The two observatories are not in connection with the same branch at all. The Toronto observatory is under the Marine Department now as it always has been, and it will remain as it is.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no vote being asked for, to move the meteorological office from Toronto to Ottawa ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No, there is no vote being asked for.

Ottawa Royal Mint, $50,000.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I may say that we hoped last session to have provided a site for this building before now; but owing to the very late prorogation, we have not yet been able to settle upon a satisfactory site. I understand that it is necessary to have a level point about three hundred feet square. We had thought a lot might be obtained down beside the printing bureau; but when the matter was gone into, that was found to be impracticable. The plans are prepared, and we are ready to go to work as soon as we can secure a satisfactory site.

Mr. SPROULE. It is some time since the Act was passed giving the government authority to build a mint, and the question has been dangling before the people both here and in British Columbia, and has done service in two or three elections. How much longer may we expect it to be before the government begin operations ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. When I took the vote last session, I expected that the contract would have been let before this winter ; but as we were unable to obtain a site, that was impossible. There is no intention of having any unnecessary delay. The intention of the department is to have the work proceeded with early this spring.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is the site ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The site will be settled on very soon.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. gentleman a site in his mind's eye now ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this mint expected to cost when completed ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. From $250,000 to $275,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, none of this money has been expended up to the present ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will see, from the way I take the vote, that we expect to spend $20,000 before the 30th of June. So he will see that we are quite in earnest in asking for the vote.

Mr. BLAIN. I remember that two or three sessions ago the hon. Minister of Finance gave us a pleasing statement with reference to the establishment of a mint. Perhaps he can give us some information now. I find, on looking over the debates, that he said then that the contract was let or was about to be let.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend will find that he is mistaken in that. No contract was let. The matter made some progress and it was contemplated to place the building on Nepean Point, possibly not a very wise decision. While the matter was under consideration, and about completed, in fact I think after tenders had been invited, the military authorities raised objection to the placing of the mint on that site. The matter had then to be reconsidered, and since then the Department of Public Works has been negotiating for sites, but I am sorry to say has not been very successful. There is no other explanation to be given than that.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask when we may expect this work to be completed and the mint established.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) assures me that he will press the question of site almost immediately, and as soon as that can be secured tenders will be invited. I suppose it will take a year after the contract is let before the building can be completed.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume that about the time that a Liberal candidate for Ottawa is chosen we will have the announcement of the choice of a site ?

Mr. FIELDING. I can assure my hon. friend that the high-minded electors of Ottawa are not influenced by such things at all. They realize that this is the capital of the whole Dominion and take no notice of these things.

Victoria Memorial Museum and other buildings, $170,000.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. A site has been purchased, and I shall ask for a revote of the balance not taken last session. The plans now are almost completed, and I expect to be able to lay them on the table of the House within a very short time. The site purchased is the Stewart estate at the foot of Metcalfe street. It contains nine acres and cost $73,500. I believe that the selection of this site has met with the general approval of the members of this House, as well as of the citizens of Ottawa. Along with the other members of the government, I have given the matter considerable attention, and after a full discussion of the whole subject we thought that in the public interest this particular site, which has a fine large plot of ground about it, would be better than any other site available.

Mr. COCHRANE. What do you mean by 'other buildings' ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. We had several other buildings under consideration, such as the erection of a fire-proof office for the records of Canada, for which there is now no proper accommodation.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does this include rent of buildings ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No ; this is only for new buildings. The present buildings are so overcrowded that we have been compelled to rent office room.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am surprised to hear that the buildings are crowded. When the Conservatives were in power we heard a great deal of the buildings being all crammed from cellar to garret, but now I see the buildings are filled, and almost every second block I ask about in the streets of Ottawa I am told is rented by the government.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. There is no doubt that with the increase in the business of the country the departments have been so crowded that it has been necessary to find more accommodation.

Mr. COCHRANE. If, as the minister has said, the decrease in the work of his department does not relieve the country of any expense, why should the increase in the business of other departments entail additional expense ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I have several times stated that the Public Works Department at Ottawa is not affected by any of the proposed changes. I may say that the Public Works Department, as far as my experience is concerned, is pretty well crowded, and after all the changes that have been made in that building we have not secured an extra room, and I can assure my hon. friend that we have not too much accommodation.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have seen two or three men sitting in a place where there would be only one under the Conservative government. I have seen two or three men to wait on a minister where one was sufficient when we were in power.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was the property purchased by tender, by public auction or by bargain and sale ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. By court sale. I am not sure through what officer, but I believe it was the Master in Chancery.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was there any commission, retainer or other sum paid besides the purchase price ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. There was a commission, I think of 2 per cent paid to Mr. Taggart, the real estate agent.

Mr. SPROULE. What would be the size of the building it is proposed to construct ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I did not furnish myself with the details, as it was my intention to lay the plan on the table. The building will be 280 feet front, with two wings 126 feet in depth.

Mr. SPROULE. Will it be fireproof ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It will be of stone, and practically fire-proof.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do I understand the minister to say that he gave some gentleman a commission of 2 per cent on the $75,000 over and above what was paid for the property ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. An arrangement had been made by the previous minister to have an option on this property. Negotiations had been carried on and a bargain was practically made with the owner, but I was informed by the solicitors that the owners could not give a title except through the courts. So, the purchase had to be made in that way. But the bargain had already been made, and morally and legally the man was entitled to his commission.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see that. It would seem that this agent undertook, for a commission of 2 per cent, to secure this property for the government, but was obliged to come to the minister and say that he could not carry out his agreement.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It was the solicitor for the owner who informed me that a court sale would be necessary in order to give a title. I took advice, and was assured that, the negotiations having been placed in the hands of the agent, and he having made arrangement, we were liable for the commission.

Mr. LENNOX. Was this a compromise ? Was the original claim for commission higher than this ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I think it was 2 per cent originally—no compromise about it.

Mr. LENNOX. Was there any other bid at the sale except that of the government ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I think not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was the amount paid over by the government as commission over and above the amount of purchase ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The amount of the purchase was paid into court, and besides that the government paid the agent $1,500 for commission. The owners I may explain wished me to pay $75,000 for the property and the commission in addition. I objected. The arrangement had been made, and I was not willing that the property should cost more than the amount stated.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that negotiations for the purchase had advanced to a certain stage, and the amount to be paid agreed upon—$75,000. Then, because there was some difficulty in making the title, the solicitors for the vendors suggested that there would have to be a court sale. As I understand it, then, it would hardly be fair for the minister to say that this was in any proper sense an auction sale. It was a private contract after negotiation, and the matter was put through at a formal auction sale for the purpose of completing the title.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That is as I understand it.

Mr. LENNOX. The amount agreed upon was $75,000, and the government paid that into court. I am not quite clear as to whether this 2 per cent was paid in addition.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The amount was paid less the 2 per cent.

Mr. TAYOR. Then, the parties only received $73,500L, instead of $75,000?

Mr. I. SUTHERLAND. The negotiations brought us to a basis of $75,000 including everything. It was late in the negotiations when I learned that there was an agreement to pay a commission. I said I would not increase the price by the commission and that the parties would have to pay that, and that if I had to buy it in court I would take the commission from the amount.

Mr. LENNOX. What steps were taken by the department to ascertain the actual value of the property?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This gentleman furnished me with a number of valuations made by some of the most prominent men in the city dealing in real estate. I cannot now recall the names, but I remember that some of them I knew personally. I may say that the great majority of them valued the property at over $75,000. I thought myself it was a pretty high price. It was quite a large lot of land, between eight and nine acres, beautifully situated. Probably not another lot of land could be secured anywhere in the city so well suited for this national building of that size. The real estate men valued this property upon the basis of what it would be worth if it were sold out in building lots at the present market value, and not with a view of selling it to the government. The property was assessed at the time in the books of the city at $46,000.

Mr. BIRKETT. I can fully bear out what the Minister of Public Works says. I know for a fact that the property was held at $80,000; that was the valuation put on it by several real estate men in the city. I think I had something to do myself in getting it at the reduced figure. Mr. Taggart, I think, was one of the valuators, with Mr. McDermott and several other real estate men of good reputation, and who know the value of property. Any person knowing where that property was situated would not hesitate to give $75,000 for it. It is large enough to make sixty or seventy town lots worth $1,000 to $1,500 each or more, according to the situation. The property is high and dry, and one of the most valuable in the city. The reason why the government could not get the title was owing to a mortgage which had to be taken to the courts and foreclosed.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does Metcalfe street run through the property?

Mr. FIELDING. No, it only runs to the property. The property lies between Elgin and O'Connor streets.

Public buildings—Nova Scotia—Halifax immigrant building, $11,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the minister to allow this item to stand, in the absence of the leader of opposition. He might want to ask some questions.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I do not think this is a contentious item. I think we might go on with it on the understanding that if the leader of the opposition or any other gentleman wishes on a future occasion when the Public Works estimates are under consideration, to discuss it or to ask any questions, he can do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) is here. Perhaps he will know something about these Nova Scotia items.

Mr. BELL. I do not see that any great advantage would result from taking up these items now and then going back and discussing them again at a future time.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. There is this advantage, that we would be getting on and doing some business.

Mr. BELL. We might take up the next item.

Prince Edward Island—Charlottetown Dominion building, improvements, additions, &c., $5,000.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like some explanation of this item.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the improvements and additions that are being made to the Charlottetown Dominion building. The repairs are going on at the present time.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Would the minister tell me if this contract was let by tender?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It was let to H. & S. Low for $11,155. Theirs was the lowest tender. In addition to the contract there were some fittings.

Mr. LEFURGEY. When was the contract to be finished?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It was to be completed on the 16th of February last.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I understand there are many complaints from the people who have to use a small building in the upper part of the town. In this contract were there some repairs to the roof to be made for the $11,000?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No, they were not included in the contract.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Do you contemplate any repairs to the roof of the building?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect informs me they are not included in this vote?

Mr. LEFURGEY. Have you got anything in coming estimates?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The matter is now under consideration. If the chief architect reports that it is necessary to make these improvements to that building there is no doubt we will have to ask for a sum in the supplementary estimates and have them carried out.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have advices from different people in Charlottetown that the work now being done on the inside of the building, which is quite elaborate, will certainly be destroyed if the building is not repaired as it is in a very bad condition at the present time, and as my informant says, leaks like a sieve. If the hon. minister will take this matter in hand he will find that the repairs to the roof should have been done before the repairs to the inside of the building.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. My deputy informs me that the report has reached the department within the last few days in regard to the matter and it will be attended to.

New Brunswick—Campbellton public building, $12,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to have an explanation from the hon. minister as to this item.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This is for a public building in Campbellton, N.B. The site has been purchased from Mr. Archibald Mackenzie for $4,000. It is on Water street and is 100 feet square. It is reported to be advantageously located in the central portion of the most important thoroughfare of Campbellton. This vote of $12,000 is for the purpose of erecting a building on the site already purchased.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the site purchased by a bargain between the department and the owner ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It was a bargain between the owner and the department.

Mr. FOWLER. Who acted on behalf of the department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Waterbury, of St. John, one of the officers of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. Will this $12,000 complete the building ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. We are having the plans prepared and advertising for tenders. I should say that to complete the leading building it will cost between $15,000 and $18,000. We had a vote last year to pay for the site. The amount we are asking for now is probably as much as we will be able to spend this year.

Mr. FOWLER. What were the expenses of securing the title ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. They were very small. The work was done through the Department of Justice.

Mr. FOWLER. You have not let the contract ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No, we are just advertising for tenders now.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for the post office and custom-house ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Richibucto public building, $3,500.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the building at Richibucto under contract.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

Mr. FOWLER. When was the contract let ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. In November, 1902.

St. John Dominion buildings—improvements, repairs, &c., $3,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if this applies to all the government buildings in St. John and if it is just for ordinary repairs.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It is just for ordinary repairs to all the buildings.

St. John quarantine station—water service, drainage, heating, &c., $20,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the hon. minister if this is intended to complete the building and also as to whether it is the intention of the department to make such changes in the present building as will make it fairly safe in case of fire ? I have heard very great complaints made in the city of St. John in regard to this building. In the winter, as the hon. minister will know, it is filled to overflowing with a large number of immigrants and the complaint is made, and I believe it is justly made, that the building has been erected in such a way that it will be extremely unsafe in case of fire and that it will certainly imperil lives of the men, women and children who may be in it at such a time.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) speaking of the building on Partridge Island ?

Mr. DANIEL. No, I am speaking of the building at Sand Point.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This vote applies altogether to the water service and improvements being made to the buildings on Partridge Island. The other building will come up again under another item.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are you getting the water from ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. From St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. How are you carrying it ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Pipes are being laid under the bay.

Mr. FOWLER. What is going to be the total cost ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I think this will complete the work.

Mr. FOWLER. Was it found impossible to obtain water by boring on the island ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Absolutely so. I am told that the department have expended a considerable sum and that they have always failed. This more expensive scheme was adopted as a last resort but it is the one which will be the most satisfactory when completed.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems a large expenditure for water supply for that one station.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It is a large amount but it is necessary to have the water.

Mr. FOWLER. How much have you expended altogether ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I think the total is about $23,000 ; $10,000 of this is a revote.

Mr. FOWLER. $15,000 was voted last year of which $5,000 was expended and this year you are asking for $20,000, making $25,000 altogether.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Pretty nearly.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the whole amount ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. That is for heating too ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The laying of the water pipes is very expensive.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give the committee separately the cost of each service, namely, water, drainage and heating ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The water service is estimated to cost $22,000 and the balance of $3,000 is for the improvement of the lighting and heating.

Mr. FOWLER. How did you get the water heretofore ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. By boat.

Mr. FOWLER. As I understand it, this is used as a quarantine station in case there is infectious disease on board ship.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I am not familiar with the quarantine practice there but I understand that the station is to St. John what Grosse Ile is to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. DANIEL. If a vessel comes in carrying any sick with an infectious disease, the patient is landed at Partridge Island and frequently others of the passengers are landed who have been exposed to the contagion. Can the minister say how much of this $20,000 is paid to the city of St. John ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. $4,725.

Mr. FOWLER. Was this work done by contract ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No. It was done under the supervision of Mr. Shewan, the resident engineer.

Mr. TAYLOR. According to the Auditor General's Report there was an expenditure here last year of $1,565, and I find that Mr. G. R. Beatty was clerk of works and he was paid for 117 days at $3.50 per day, making an expenditure of $409 for inspecting a work that cost $1,100. And besides, there was a permanent officer there who, the minister says, had charge of the work.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Shewan is the resident engineer for the whole province, and of course there had to be a foreman in charge of that particular work. My hon. friend knows that quite considerable work has been done there, and he is only quoting from the Auditor General's Report up to 30th June last, which is nearly a year old.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is quite fair in criticising the minister for having expended $409 for supervising a work that cost $1,100. That was a public work in my own county on which the expenditure was something like $3,000—I would not be sure as to the exact figures but the proportions are all right—and out of that $3,000, about $2,000 was paid to the clerk of works, and the balance went into the work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why that is worse.

Mr. FOWLER. If the minister has succeeded in this particular case in getting $1,100 expended for $400 to supervise it, he is to be congratulated on the improvement.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. There is improvement going on all the time.

Mr. FOWLER. I refer to the Sussex armoury and as I say, the salary of the clerk of works amounted to about two thirds of the total expense, but in that case they forgot to discharge the clerk of works ; and he was getting $3.50 or $4 a day for months and months after the work had been completed. Not only that, but there might be some criticism as to the fitness of the clerk of works for such a job. There was carpenter work, and masonry work, and plumbing to be done, and the House will understand that the clerk of works was well qualified to superintend this, when I state that by occupation he had all his life followed the business of a merchant tailor. However, he had one qualification in a very high degree ; he was perfectly capable of drawing his salary. He supervised the work so well, that one night the windows of the basement were left open, and the pipes froze and burst and it cost the department $700 or $800—I do not say that these are the exact figures but they are approximately correct, to repair the damages caused by this gentleman's neglect. I would not ask the minister whether it is his intention to charge the clerk of the works with the damages caused by his neglect.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I believe they were paid for by the department.

Mr. FOWLER. The department paid a man to supervise the work for twelve months after it was completed, so that he drew over $2,000 on a work the total cost of which was less than $9,000, and considering the particular part of the work that he had to inspect, his pay was in the proportion of two to one ; two parts going to the clerk of works and one to the contractor. Therefore, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), instead of criticising the minister for spending $400 on the supervision of an $1,100 job in this case, should have commended him for the economy which he is practising.

Mr. DANIEL. I would ask the minister, in regard to the Sand Point building, whether the insecurity of that building in case of fire has been brought to his notice, and whether it is his intention to remedy the defect ? This is a very urgent matter indeed, and the minister should give it his attention at the earliest possible date.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I shall make a note of the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daniel) and have it inquired into. It has not been brought to my attention before.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) has rather censured me for referring to what the minister has done in connection with the St. John quarantine service, but I want to tell him that the only item in the expenditure they would require a clerk of works for was the building of the steward's house which cost $364, and for superintending that job they paid the clerk of works $409.50.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. He must have been in charge of the whole works.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, there were bedsteads bought, and there was the travel to Ottawa of John Cowan, which cost $64.85, and it did not require any clerk of works to supervise his trip. The only thing the clerk of works had to do was to supervise the building of the steward's house, which cost $364, and for that he was paid $409. That is worse than the Sussex armoury job.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. They laid half a mile of inch pipe there, and that had to be superintended. Seriously speaking, I believe that this is one of the weak spots in the conduct of work away from the centre. Delays take place that are perhaps sometimes unavoidable in the erection of these public works, and the foreman cannot very often be discharged after he has undertaken the work. It is impossible to get a man at all competent to oversee a work like that for less than $3 a day. In fact, I find that we have sometimes to pay more for men of practical knowledge. I know it is one of the weak points about having works carried on at a considerable distance from head quarters ; but since I have been in the department I have endeavoured to see that only qualified men are employed.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) says the clerk of works at Sussex was a tailor. Perhaps the hon. minister can inform us what was the occupation of Mr. Beatty, who was superintending the construction of this building at St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. He was a baker.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I have no personal knowledge of the matter.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that there should be some record in the department as to the occupation of these men. Surely the department does not take the mere recommendation of the person who has the patronage without inquiring whether the person recommended has the necessary qualifications or not. It seems to me that in the case of a little public building that is only going to cost $364, it would be better to take chances on the contractor doing his work honestly rather than to pay more than the actual cost of the building for the supervision of its construction ; because, even if the contractor would try ever so hard, he could not cheat the country to the amount of more than about $100, so that the country would be ahead $264. I think the minister had better take this matter to heart, and put an end to this practice in connection with this class of works. It is generally done for the purpose of giving a sop to some hungry man who has been a ward politician. I do not wish to speak harshly of that class of men, who sometimes do useful work, especially at election times, and are often very worthy people. But it seems to me that the system should be done away with. In the case of large works costing $10,000 or $15,000, it is perhaps necessary to have a clerk of works ; but it is not necessary in the case of these small buildings. Then, it is a perfect farce to appoint a man who has no building experience whatever to superintend the construction of a work about which he can possibly know nothing. It is a criminal waste of public money. It would be far more honest, if you wish to reward a man for services to the party, to vote a sum of money directly to him out of the treasury. We on our side would be more ready to vote it than we are in face of the pretense that it is for superintending the construction of a work about which the man knows absolutely nothing, however clever he may be in his own line of work.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if it is the custom of the department to appoint bakers and tailors to superintend works under construction. I see that it prevails very generally. Is that a mere accident, or is it the practice of the department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It is not the practice of the department. Since I have been in the department, I have endeavoured to get the best qualified men. In almost every case where I could do so, I have employed an architect and paid him by fees, so that the delay of the work does not materially increase the cost of superintendence. It is very unsatisfactory to the department to have a man who is not well qualified to see that the specifications are carried out.

Mr. CLANCY. That I shall not of course take exception to; but I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if, when he is seeking to get men who are qualified, he inquires what their former avocations in life have been, and whether they were such as would render them fit to superintend works of that kind. I am not questioning the respectability of the callings of the gentlemen who have been referred to. That is not the question. They are both very respectable callings; but are they such as would fit the men to superintend the construction of buildings? Is it not rather that the member for the county suggests certain men for appointment, and the appointments are made? I would like to know from the hon. minister whetner these occupations are such as would lead him to appoint these men to overlook a work of that kind?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I should think that any member who represented a man to oversee a work in his constituency who was not well qualified would lose a good deal by such a recommendation. Is there any disqualification because a man may have been engaged at a previous period of his life in some other occupation? My hon. friend and myself would not like to have a standard applied to us by which, because we are farmers we would not be qualified to oversee certain works or conduct business outside of mere farming operations. A man's qualification would depend on his experience and ability. In a general way it is true that a man with no experience would not be well qualified and I can hardly imagine any one so foolish as to recommend a man who was not qualified and who was not known in the community in which he lived to be qualified. There is little complaint about the qualifications of the inspectors; and the difficulty we have to deal with as was well pointed out by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), is that these works, especially where the appropriations are small, are often delayed for a long time, and the man goes on drawing his pay for months although little if anything is being done. In this way his pay becomes a large amount in comparison with the amount to be expended. That is the real difficulty with which we have to contend; I have seldom had complaints of the incompetency of the men appointed since I have been Minister of Public Works. Latterly we have taken every possible means to have men of the highest possible qualifications appointed, and generally, where there is a building of importance if there is an architect in the town we have him engaged to oversee the work and pay him the usual commission given by mercantile houses.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has disclosed that he has no will of his own. He trusts entirely to the good judgment of the man who represents the riding, and if the member recommends any gentleman, no matter what his previous business in life has been, the minister assumes at once that he is a first-class man and appoints him. I notice that no farmers are appointed to positions of that kind. As far as I can discern they are regarded as too stupid a lot. I happen to belong to that class and I do not know but what it might be a standing grievance that they are not recommended to positions of that kind. I was, probably falsely, under the impression that we were as intelligent as butchers and bakers, and I do not see any reason why farmers should be excluded. We could safely adopt the rule that no man should be appointed to a position of this kind unless he was qualified by some previous experience. I do not think, to repeat the words of the hon. minister, that any member of this House would be so foolish as to recommend a man not fit for the position, but I do not think the members generally concern themselves whether he is fit or not, the thing is to get the appointment, it seems that the hon. minister is very amiable and that if one of his supporters in this House makes a recommendation he concludes at once that it is a capital appointment. The minister should at least make inquiries and not have a man placed in charge of a work who is not thoroughly qualified.

Mr. FOWLER. There should be no difficulty of the kind the minister mentions, caused by these men charging for time when the work was not in progress. If the department refused to pay the account, as they would have the right to do, the matter would be settled. There should be some check over the clerk of works and he should not be able to obtain more money than he is entitled to. The minister does not go far enough in simply urging that certain things should not be done. It is his duty to insist on the appointment of competent men. In the case to which I have referred this man had never followed any other occupation than that of a merchant tailor. This building was being erected in my own town, and this man's place of business is directly opposite my own. I know, as a matter of fact, that that man never spent much time at the building, when drawing his $3.50 a day. He never spent two hours a day at the building. His custom was to go up to this work at noon hour and then to come back to his place of business and follow his ordinary vocation during the rest of the day. The department forgot that they had appointed him and although the contract lasted only four months he continued to draw the pay for two years. That is a fact that can be ascertained by the minister. That has happened, I have no doubt, in many other places. In this case the only work he could do would be to supervise the erection of a house which would cost only $300 unless he may have supervised the putting up of some of these beds. The total cost of the beds was six cents a bed, or about $10 in all. Add that to the $367 which the house cost, and you have $377 and he is supposed to have worked 117 days on it. If there were only one carpenter on the job a house costing $367 ought to be built in less than 117 days. This may seem a small matter, but if this kind of thing is going on all over the country it means that a very large sum belonging to the public is wasted. It seems to me the minister should do something more than urge. He should inquire into the matter and hold the engineer in charge responsible. I suppose the engineer must certify this account. Is that the custom of the department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Of course, the minister cannot undo what has been done, but he should see to it that such waste is not repeated. The minister cannot say he has not had warning.

Mr. CLANCY. What has the minister to say to this very serious charge made by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler)? Is this the first intimation he has had of the matter ? If so, the hon. gentleman owes it to himself to ascertain why it was that the case was not called to his attention before. If this case is an index to the general condition of affairs, it is evident that very large sums are wasted, and the minister should give us an explanation.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The case the hon. gentleman refers to is quite old.

Mr. FOWLER. It is not out-lawed yet.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I think we could hardly collect what has been paid out. I have endeavoured to have economy in these matters, and have found serious fault where there was evidence of waste. It is true that cases do occur where a good deal more is paid out than is necessary. It may be that the resident engineer or other person in charge should be hauled over the coals. But in that case, one excuse or another is given, and if a man is a good man and well up in his business, you do not want to deprive the department of his services by discharging him. I have made every effort to have well qualified men, and to have them paid by commission rather than by the day, as I believe that saves a good deal. I will ask Mr. Waterbury, who is in charge of these matters, how this large amount was paid out. This work went on right in St. John, where he lives and he could not help but know whether this man was at work or not.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to correct the misapprehension as to the Sussex Armoury. I think that until the first of last July, this gentleman was on the work. And the course of the department is all the more reprehensible because I drew attention to the fact once before, that this man was drawing pay and yet was unfit for his work. The contract price for the armoury was a little over $4,000. When the building was finished, nothing was done with respect to the plumbing for five or six months, but during this time the clerk of works, though he had no occasion to visit the building, still drew his pay. His services should have been dispensed with when the building was completed. When the work of plumbing was gone on with, the same man who had supervised the work of erecting the building, was continued and supervised the plumbing. Whatever knowledge a man may have acquired of building by having buildings of his own erected and so on, he could not possibly have acquired any knowledge of plumbing without special training. That is work that it is far more difficult to acquire knowledge of, than the ordinary carpenter or mason work. For three years or more this man was drawing $3.50 a day. Or rather, I believe that while superintending the building, he received $4 a day, and while superintending the plumbing, $3.50. I called attention to the case, and yet it was allowed to go on. A part was under the hon. gentleman's predecessor, but a part was under his own administration. I would like to ask if the hon. gentleman made inquiries when attention was called to the case ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Speaking from memory, I believe that as soon as I heard of it, I made inquiries and the matter stopped as soon as completed. I recollect it now—it stopped immediately I heard of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I called attention to it months before it was stopped. It must have taken a long time for the hon. gentleman to hear of it. This gentleman's employment did not stop until the 1st of July last year, although I had referred to the matter early in the session.

Mr. DANIEL. Before this item is passed, I would like to call the attention of the minister to the question of the proposed drill shed at St. John. We were under the impression that the drill shed was to be built there this season. A short time before the election that took place there on the 16th of February plans for a drill shed were sent down, examined and descanted upon. Yet, I do not find in these estimates any appropriation for that purpose. Yet, I assume, from the next item in the list, that this is a matter that would come under the Minister of Public Works. I would like the hon. gentleman to state whether there will be an appropriation in the supplementary estimates for this work, and also whether he knows what site is selected for the drill shed. St. John, from the militia standpoint, is an important city. We have a great many militiamen there, and the drill shed which they are obliged to use now is entirely inadequate. It is in a part of the town very inconvenient for the members of the militia to use. A few days ago they held a public meeting in St. John for the purpose of discussing this very important matter of a site for a new drill hall, and every one of them present was of the opinion that the present site was entirely unsuitable. I understood a year or two ago, when speaking to the Minister of Militia, that it was within the power of the government to take any site they might consider advisable. I would like to have an assurance from the hon. minister that this matter of a new drill hall is not being lost sight of, and that in the supplementary estimates some provision will be made for it.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I will bring the remarks of the hon. gentleman to the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence. But I am not prepared to state now whether there will be any vote proposed in the supplementaries for a drill hall.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood that just previous to the election some plans were sent down to St. John for the erection of a new public building, and these plans were circulated in the city during the election.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. My department had nothing to do with them, and I have no knowledge of any such plans.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not insinuate that they originated with the hon. gentleman; they might have originated with the local organization of the party in St. John. I was going to suggest that as St. John is a seaport, and as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is going to become a sort of lord high admiral, and is going to start a navy, perhaps these plans may have emanated from his office, and that he intends to make a naval station at St. John. I understand he is going to establish a fleet, and perhaps it will be necessary to have a coaling station or naval depot there. I do not see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries present. As a matter of fact, these plans came into the hands of the district officer commanding at St. John as being the plans of a building that was to be erected by the government in that city. These plans came down during this election contest. It might have been merely a coincidence, because surely no member of the government would wish to influence the constituency in any such a way as that, because it might be called a corrupting influence. Nevertheless, these plans came down there, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to erect a building such as this in the city of St. John? If the government sent the plans, they must have the erection of such a building in contemplation; if the government did not send them, then somebody is responsible for a huge fake. I think the minister ought to be able to tell us whether the government at any time has had in contemplation the erection of this building?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt it was their intention, and is still their intention, to erect a public building in St. John.

Mr. FOWLER. How soon does the government propose to put that intention into effect?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman must see that this matter does not come up properly under the item which we are discussing.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not asking for details. I am simply asking whether in the near future such is the intention of the government.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. In a general way, I have no doubt that it is their intention. But my hon. friend will understand that the Department of Public Works will only erect such building at the request of the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. FOWLER. Does your architect draw the plan?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. They furnish us with sketches and outlines of what they require before the matter is taken up by the chief architect of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOWLER. Have the Department of Militia and Defence an architect of their own?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. They are not called architects. They are engineers. They have graduates of the schools who are capable of drawing plans.

Mr. FOWLER. Would it be possible that the Department of Militia and Defence through their engineers prepared these sketches and sent them to the district officer commanding at St. John for his approval before they were submitted to your department?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. That is quite possible, because I know that sketches of this kind are sent to the local officers commanding and that they come to our department with the remarks and information furnished by the Department of Militia and Defence. I think it is usual to consult the officers of the militia in regard to any work of this kind that is going on.

Mr. FOWLER. Then these sketches would be sent to the district officer commanding for his approval before they were submitted to your department ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. It is customary to do that. That might be done before the plans were drawn and before the matter came to our department at all.

Mr. FOWLER. The engineer would prepare a sketch, send it to the district officer commanding for his approval and then it would come back to your department?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it customary to prepare plans before any money is voted for a public building ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. As a rule the plans are prepared in order that parliament may be intelligently asked to authorize a vote.

Mr. FOWLER. These plans were something like the telegram that came down to St. John at the same time from the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway applying for berths. But, he missed fire ; he did not know on which side of the harbour the railway was going and therefore he applied for berths on the wrong side.

Woodstock armoury and gun shed, $15,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Kindly explain that.

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. This vote is expected to complete that armoury. If I remember aright the explanation given last session was that the rink was purchased at the request of the Militia Department. They have a very large field battery there. The rink was purchased, I think, for $6,000. I am only speaking from memory. This amount is taken to fit up the building in accordance with the request of the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. FOWLER. You bought the rink and the land it stood on for $6,000 ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. I am speaking from memory. In round figures it was $6,000.

Mr. FOWLER. You did not spend any money last year ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. No.

Maritime provinces—Dominion public buildings—renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $12,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How much did you spend last year ?

Mr. J. SUTHERLAND. About $9,000. We have a few months to run yet before the end of the fiscal year.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY CORRECPONDENCE.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns, I would like to remind the government that I think it was a week ago Tuesday that I requested that the correspondence connected with the proposed amendments to the contract between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company should be brought down at an early date. The subject has been mentioned two or three times since. I understood from the right hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the documents would be brought down some days before the discussion would be taken up. I would like to suggest that it would be desirable that they should be brought down at an early date, because, if they are as voluminous as would seem to be indicated by the time necessary to bring them down, it would necessarily take some time to peruse and consider them. I presume they must be of some considerable volume or there would not have been this delay in bringing them down and I would therefore ask the hon. Minister of Finance, who is leading the House in the absence of the right hon. Prime Minister, to bring the matter once more to the attention of my right hon. friend and to suggest to him that it would be desirable in the interests of all concerned that they should be brought down at as early a date as possible.

Mr. FIELDING. I will do so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would also like to know what government business we shall take up to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a notice on the paper of a motion in connection with the Militia Bill, which, perhaps, is of a rather formal character and it will probably be moved to-morrow. Then we will proceed with Supply.

Mr. HENDERSON. What supply ?

Mr. FIELDING. Continuing with the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

THE EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Fielding :

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday next it stand adjourned to Tuesday, the 5th day of April next.

This is the usual motion for the Easter recess. I take advantage of this opportunity to say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that on Monday next I will place upon the table of the House the correspondence with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company in reference to the contract entered into last session, and it is my intention, when we meet again on the 5th day of April, to take up the resolution to ratify the supplementary agreement with that company, and to go on from day to day until that order is exhausted.

Motion agreed to.

UNDESIRABLE IMMIGRANTS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would say to my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), with regard to the statement published in the 'Citizen,' to which he called my attention, that fifty Russian Jews had been sent back from Fargo to Winnipeg, that the information sought for is as follows. Mr. Obed Smith, our agent at Winnipeg, wires to Mr. W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration at Ottawa :

Only family deported from Fargo that we know of is one Russian Jew family consisting of father, mother and four children who had lived in Winnipeg four years and went to the States a year ago. The father is unable to provide for his family and has been returned to Winnipeg, claiming they are Winnipeg citizens. Have refused to interfere in matter.

THE MILITIA ACT—RATES OF PAY.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions, in connection with the Bill respecting the militia of Canada :

1. Resolved, that the general officer commanding the militia shall be paid at the rate of $6,000 per annum ; the adjutant-general, at the rate of $3,200 per annum, and the quartermaster general, at the rate of $3,200 per annum.

2. Resolved, that the permanent force shall be entitled to daily pay and allowances at the rates prescribed by the Governor in Council, and that the pay of privates shall not exceed 75 cents a day, and of buglers under 18 years of age 40 cents a day.

3. Resolved, that officers, warrant officers, and non-commissioned officers of the active militia, other than the permanent force, shall be entitled to pay at rates prescribed by the Governor in Council ; and that the pay of privates therein shall be at the rate of 50 cents a day on appointment, which may be increased to a maximum of $1 a day during the third year of service.

4. Resolved, that an allowance of one dollar per diem, or such other rate as may be prescribed, will be paid to each officer and man for every horse actually and necessarily used by him, when on active service, during a period of annual drill and training, or when otherwise on duty as aforesaid.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). As these are the resolutions on which the Bill now before the House is based, I thought it would be convenient to have them put through the committee before we again take up the consideration of the Bill. In the first resolution, as a result of the discussion which took place the other night, I want to make a slight change. I want to add the following words : 'and the director general of ordnance, at the rate of $3,200 per annum.' At the time the present law was passed the stores were in the hands of the civil side of the Militia Department. The ordnance branch is now on the military side of the department, and is one of the important divisions, and the rate of pay is the same as that officer is receiving now. I hope the committee will allow this change to be made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The change will require the assent of His Excellency, I presume ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have His Excellency's assent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The announcement should be made with the Speaker in the chair. It is not a matter of very much moment, but we should proceed regularly.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the pay now received by non-commissioned officers and men of the permanent force ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Forty cents a day is the pay of the men. The pay of the non-commissioned officers differs ; but that is not affected by this resolution. It is left to be fixed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the pay commence when the men enter the service at forty cents, and does it increase until the maximum of seventy-five cents is reached ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How long will it take a man to reach the maximum ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I explained, on introducing the Bill, that we intended to adopt, by regulation, the system of the Northwest Mounted Police, which is this : On enlistment he will receive fifty cents a day and five cents per day additional each year until it reaches seventy-five cents per day.

Mr. CLARKE. The private will have a minimum pay of fifty cents per day when he enlists in the permanent corps ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes, instead of forty cents.

Mr. TISDALE. If they remain on after their pay reaches 75 cents per day, they keep to that rate ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. Does that apply to the ordinary active militia when they get up to one dollar a day ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. Is the Act so worded as to carry that interpretation ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If my hon. friend will make a suggestion when we get into committee again, we will fix it that way.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I have no objection to the amendment, but would ask the hon. minister what the pay of the general officer commanding in Australia may be.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have not the figures, but it is very much higher than this.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is it not about $12,000 and allowances ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What is the pay of the general officer commanding in South Africa ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I gave all these figures to the House two or three years ago, and they will be found in 'Hansard,' but I did not expect to be asked them to-day. I can give them at a later stage of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER put the amendment :—That the following words be added to the first resolution : 'And the director general of ordnance, at the rate of $3,200 per annum.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not rise to object to the amendment for the proposition is my own. I endeavoured to see the hon. minister in order to talk this matter over with him instead of taking up the time of the House, but was unable to do so. I would point out to him that if he will look at the salaries paid officers occupying similar positions in colonies greatly inferior to Canada, he will find in many cases that these officers get double the pay. When the Bill was introduced the other day, I did not think it was going to be as much discussed as it was, or I would have drawn attention to the very first clause, and would have pointed out that the general officer commanding in Canada, instead of having the rank of a colonel, should have the rank of a major-general. The pay of a lieutenant-general in England amounts to $13,000 a year, and in Scotland, where the lieutenant-general commanding, has only a force of some 9,000 under him, compared with a force of from 40,000 to 100,000 in this country, his pay is $13,000 per year. An adjutant-general in England gets $12,000 per year and major-general upwards of $7,000. The pay of Sir Percy Girouard in South Africa is over $20,000 ; and when I made the suggestion that Sir Percy Girouard might possibly be induced to accept the position of general officer commanding in Canada at some future time, I had forgotten the fact that he is in receipt of a salary nearly three and a half times as much as he would receive here. The general commanding the forces in India has about four times the pay we are offering our general officer. I respectfully draw the attention of the right hon. the first minister to the fact that a salary of $6,000 in lieu of all allowances for the general officer commanding in Canada is altogether too low. When we find men of no superior qualification, and certainly with less expert qualification, placed on a railway commission at $10,000 a year and all expenses, the salary we are giving the general officer commanding in Canada seems very small. Such an officer must be an expert in his profession, far more so than any of these gentlemen on the Railway Commission can possibly be. He must of necessity be much superior to these men, and when we object to the removal of the link connecting the Canadian and imperial forces by this provision that our general officer commanding may be selected from our Canadian militia, we do so, not because we do not think that a Canadian cannot be found capable of filling that position, but because we want to give our Canadian militiamen an opportunity of gaining command throughout the whole length and breadth of the empire, for I want it to be understood that, in my opinion, a Canadian is absolutely fit to be commander in chief, even in Great Britain for that matter, if given the training and the opportunity. I would like the hon. Minister of Militia to state frankly to the House whether he thinks $6,000 a year, in lieu of all pay and allowances, is sufficient? He need not be afraid of the gentlemen behind him who are kicking. All he has to do is to brush them aside, and the country will endorse his action. If he will come out and take a manly, straightforward stand in the matter, the House and the country will stand by him, as they have stood by him in what he has already done in the way of improving the forces and increasing the pay, and I am sure that the right hon. the first minister would be one of the first to endorse him if he will accept my suggestion. If not, I shall have something to say about our paying $10,000 to second-class clerks on the Railway Commission. Is $6,000 sufficient for the general officer commanding in this country? He has to purchase an expensive uniform and do a great deal of entertaining, and in my opinion the amount is not sufficient to enable him to keep up the dignity of the position as the people expect he will.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would point out to my hon. friend that it was during my administration that fifty per cent was added to the pay of the general officer commanding.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I gave the hon. minister credit for that.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When we came in, the pay was $4,000, and we increased it to $6,000, inclusive of allowances. Possibly that phrase may be somewhat misleading, because the general officer commanding costs this country considerably more, as you will see by the Auditor General's Report, than $6,000. His travelling expenses in coming to this country, and going from this country, his travelling expenses to and fro while he is here, and many other things are paid for by the country. I do not know exactly what amount they would reach, but that amount is not inconsiderable. Now, as to whether $6,000 with the additions I have just referred to be enough or not, I am not quite prepared to say. It would depend a good deal upon the character of the officer. There is no doubt that my hon. friend is quite correct in saying that much higher pay is given in other parts of the empire. But I do not think it is fair to compare the command in this country with the command in the British islands where, in addition to the British troops to which my hon. friend has referred, there are many thousands—amounting to perhaps 100,000 or more—of militia and volunteers embodied under each command. The forces in this country being purely militia, there being no standing armies here, there must be a difference in pay as compared with the imperial army. I do not think it would be expected that we should keep up the high rates of pay which prevail over there. However, since the hon. gentleman has brought the matter up, I shall be very glad to consider it, and when we have the Bill under discussion the matter can be referred to again.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister will be good enough to remember that I was fair enough to give him absolute credit for increasing the salary up to the present standard. But now the matter has been brought up, he will be fair enough to admit that I drew his attention to the matter long ago. When I was in Australia I found that the little colony of New South Wales paid its general officer commanding more than we pay for the whole Dominion. The minister will also note that every officer in the departments, when he travels on the business of the country, has his expenses paid. We have only to turn up the Auditor General's Report to find that thousands of dollars are paid out for the travelling expenses of ministers, ministers' secretaries and other officers. Therefore, it cannot be regarded as a concession to the general officer commanding that, when he travels from place to place in the execution of the duties of his office, his expenses are paid. In that respect he receives only what every other officer receives. Now, the officer in command in Scotland, who has only 9,000 troops under him—as against some 40,000 or 50,000 in Canada—receives $13,000 a year. All these figures that I have given can be found in the Statesman's Year-book.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Would not that be 9,000 regulars? In addition there are the militia.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. About five regiments of militia and volunteers. I have had the privilege of seeing every one of them on parade. We do not ask that the general officer commanding here should be paid any such salary as the officer in command in Scotland. But, let us hope that when the minister brings his measure down we shall find that that clause is eliminated which intimates that this increased salary is in lieu of other allowances, so that the general officer commanding may find that expenses that are forced upon him by reason of his position will be borne by the nation. I think that is fair.

Mr. CLARKE. May I ask the minister if this sum of $6,000 per annum and expenses to which he has made reference covers the total obligation to be imposed on the country by the appointment of such an officer? For instance, when his term expires does he receive any pension or allowance, such as half pay?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not from Canada. If he is an imperial officer he returns to his service in the imperial army. If it should turn out that a Canadian is appointed, as will be possible under the Bill if it becomes law, then, of course, he would be provided for by Canada. He will, no doubt, be a member of the permanent force of the militia for which a Pension Law was provided by parliament three or four years ago, and will be pensioned under the provisions of that law. Or, possibly—what I think is much more likely to happen, if he were a young man and a good man—by a system of exchange which is now under consideration as between the War Office and the government of this country, he might be given a position on the staff, or some other important position in the British service, if he wished it.

Mr. TISDALE. Does not the general officer commanding draw his pay as an officer of the imperial army while he holds this position ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, I think not.

Mr. TISDALE. I think he does.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, there is some scheme in contemplation whereby Canadian officers occupying superior positions in the active militia shall be transferred, under certain terms to the imperial service?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That might be done ; I do not say it will be done.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the minister to suggest that if it should happen that a Canadian were appointed as general officer commanding, if he were a young active man, he might be sent to obtain further military knowledge in connection with the imperial forces.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will explain further. At present, we give to imperial officers a number of positions in this country. The commandant of the Royal Military College and, I think, at least four professors of that college are officers drawn from the imperial army. We at present draw our general officer commanding from that army. It has been the custom frequently to appoint to the position of quartermaster general an imperial officer. And, at this moment the position of chief intelligence officer of this country is held by an imperial officer. It has been pointed out to the imperial authorities that it would be a fair thing to them to give to Canadians who are qualified the same number of positions, or a certain number of positions temporarily in the British army. That question is being considered, and I think it very likely that some arrangement will be reached.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am pleased to learn that the minister is reviving that movement. In 1894, when Major General Herbert was general officer commanding in Canada he took similar steps. I have every reason to believe that, at that time the objection came from Canada. The proposal was to exchange men as well as officers at that time and it was believed by certain gentlemen with small, antediluvian ideas—a class not confined to one side of the Atlantic—that it was impossible to overcome the difference in pay of the private in the Canadian and in the imperial service. But the proposition met with some favour from many gentlemen, fossilized though they were, on the other side. I do not speak in this way of all who favoured it, but only of those who are set in office. Such men, on whatever side of the Atlantic they may be, get fixed in one idea and fossilized. These gentlemen being the only ones consulted, it was decided that the idea could not and should not be carried out. I am glad that the minister is now going to carry it out. There is no reason in the world why the militia of Canada should not still continue to be part and parcel of the forces of the empire, a connecting link between Canada and the empire. I should like to see that old link retained and I wish to have it understood that we who oppose the removal of the clause which enacts that the commanding officer shall be an imperial officer are not minimizing Canadians but wish to perpetuate the union between Canada and the empire so that perchance a Canadian might become commander of the imperial army in London.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If the good feeling and the unity to which my hon. friend refers, and which I hope will continue, is to depend upon a provision in a Canadian statute by which an imputation is thrown upon the character and ability of the militia of this country, I do not think that unity can be preserved.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We may just as well understand that a great many citizens of Canada have never regarded this provision as an imputation cast on any Canadian, for as I have pointed out any Canadian has the field open to him. He can go through the Royal Military College of Canada and enter the imperial service as many of the graduates of that college have done, or he may obtain a professorship in the college, and these avenues to the position are open to him. I regard this proposal as a pandering to a certain cry in this country that Canada must have her own independence and must cut entirely free from the British empire. We may as well understand each other now; let the gauntlet be thrown down and we are ready to take it up.

Mr. TISDALE. I think that there is some misunderstanding which the hon. minister might clear up, although he has so far omitted to do so. There is a general impression that under the existing conditions no Canadian can command the Canadian militia. I have been surprised since this discussion commenced the other day, to find that some of the leading men in this city seem to have this impression. I wish to repeat that any Canadian who becomes an imperial officer may be appointed to the position. When the militia was founded it was thought wise that no man, whatever his qualifications, should be considered sufficiently qualified to take command of and train the Canadian militia, unless he was an officer in the imperial service of a certain rank. It was considered then and is not controvertable now that the opportunities of military service, and the experience and military education necessary, particularly in regard to the important military movements in the British army, were required to qualify a man for the command of the Canadian militia. The Liberals and Conservatives of those times, the two greatest of whom, Sir George Cartier, and Sir John Macdonald, I mentioned the other day, discussed this question and passed this law which has remained in force so long Now for the first time in this parliament the Minister of Militia has seen fit to give out the impression that this is an indignity or a slur upon officers of our militia.

The second qualification—and under present conditions I believe this is the more important—was that politics should not in any way influence the appointment to this high office which is so essential to the well-being of our militia. I say that both of these arguments are as strong to-day as when the law was first introduced, because, while I will admit and do admit and will maintain as strongly as any one, that our militia officers are most capable and that some of them in South Africa distinguished themselves and filled high and important positions with credit, we must remember that we are now going upon a peace footing, and that while on a peace footing, Canadian officers would not have that opportunity to acquire experience in the large operations of an army that imperial officers would have in the operation of the imperial army in various parts of the world. Yet this is just the experience that is requisite for a commanding officer of our militia. I would go further and say that no officer, whether he be an imperial officer or a Canadian officer, should be permitted to remain in command of the Canadian militia for a longer period than five years, because, with the rapid advancement in the development of explosives and projectiles an officer in command in Canada for five years, not in constant touch with military matters in England would become rusty and would not be sufficiently abreast of the improvements to properly fill the position. The Minister of Militia does not say when he is going to put this provision into force but he is so sensitive of the character of the force that he does not want them to remain under this ban, under which we have built up this country and under which our young men went abroad when necessity called them. Having had some actual experience in my early days, and having been closely connected with the militia of Canada, I declare that the active officers of our militia are broader than ever to think of such a thing as this restriction being a slur or to make a great question of its removal as if it was some great boon and honour to the militiamen and officers of our forces. I know that I may be taking a stand which will not be the most popular side of this question. The hon. minister (Sir Frederick Borden) says that he is anxious to remove the indignity which is cast upon the Canadian militia.

When the time comes that the hon. gentleman will come to this House and say: Here is a Canadian who has the knowledge to fill this position and I am going to pass this law, then, I am prepared to consider the proposition. But, before that time arrives, to say that it is an indignity and a curtailment of our self-governing powers that he wants to remove is to say something for which there is no foundation whatever. We want to be broad and large enough to take an imperial view. What is the best for Canada is best for the empire and what is best for the empire is what I stand for. That is what we must all stand for, because, while we are able to take care of ourselves as regards the principles of government, while Britain has given us, as the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has said, 'the splendid liberty which we enjoy,' she will also give us millions of wealth and will give millions of lives to assist this colony if need be with her assistance should a foreign foe attempt to vanquish us. I stand for the broader idea. I stand for what is best for Canada and what is best for Great Britain and particularly for what is best for both in reference to this defence question. I have always given my assistance to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence in carrying on the work of his department. Some of my constituents have not been quite satisfied that I should help him as I have done. That hon. gentleman's first action was to rescind contracts which I had made during the few months I had the honour of presiding over that department and afterwards he had to admit to me that he was obliged to fall back upon the principle which I had been guided by and make similar contracts. I never mentioned the subject again except upon one occasion and I merely allude to it now to show that in whatever influence I have endeavoured to exercise I have carefully abstained from anything political. I have carefully abstained from offering any criticism except of a nature that I thought would tend to promote the efficiency of the force so as to help to keep it alive, and keep it in touch with the British army that we might make the British army the model of our force, excelling it if we could but in no way doing anything that might impair it even in appearance and especially in actuality. When we have at the head of the Canadian forces an officer unequalled in the world, one of the best officers of the British army, receiving a salary less than his emoluments at home and devoting his time and ability to the improvement of our forces, it is a most inopportune time to say that the present system involves a reflection upon our Canadian officers. I am surprised at the persistence of the hon. minister in trying to make the people of this country believe that this is an infringement upon our independence. Until a man who is capable to fill this high place is presented to our consideration and until it is put beyond question that the position may be free from the influences of politics I believe it is for the best of the militia and of the empire that this thing should not for the present be done. I am not satisfied with the explanation of the hon. gentleman. I have even spoken twice when I only intended to speak once because the hon. minister reiterates that we are standing up for something that involves the lessening and dignity of the position of our officers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) has become unnecessarily warm over this question. I am very sorry indeed that I am forced to repeat so often the argument which I have ventured to address to the committee on this subject two or three times. I am rather inclined to suspect, however, that these arguments must be of considerable cogency, otherwise, my hon. friend would scarcely get so excited.

Mr. COCHRANE. It was not the argument that excited him.

Mr. CLARKE. It was the lack of argument that excited him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh. Now, one or two words in reference to what has fallen from my hon. friend from South Norfolk. First, as to the relation of the fact of this amendment to the law being introduced at this particular moment; my hon. friend seems to be determined to draw the inference that this is intended as some reflection upon the distinguished gentleman who at present occupies the position of general officer commanding. It seems to be useless for me to deny that suggestion, but I will once more and for the last time say that there is absolutely no foundation in fact for any such statement as that. The relations between the general officer commanding and myself are of the most cordial character. I appreciate his great ability and his distinguished services as a soldier, and I think this country has profited very much from the fact that we have such an able officer helping to conduct the affairs of our militia at the present time. But, is the presence of that distinguished gentleman in this country any reason why we should hesitate to amend the law which we believe is, in its effect, injurious to the character and standing of our officers? I do not think so, and I believe that that distinguished gentleman would be the last man to ask us to hesitate for any such reason. Why, one would infer from the warmth and the line of argument of my hon. friend that we were passing a law to prevent the appointment of an imperial officer. What are we doing? We are simply saying that the restriction which now operates against a Canadian officer being appointed shall be removed, and it is open to this government and successive governments under this law to select from the British army, or from any part of the British empire, the best officer who can be found to administer the military affairs of this country. There is no restriction. On the other hand it is removing a restriction and my hon. friend must not find fault with me when I repeat that I am surprised that he should be so excited because it is proposed by this Bill to remove from the statute-book of Canada a reflection upon the Canadian officers.

My hon. friend says that I have given an erroneous impression to the people of this country as to the meaning of the present law; he says, that I am trying to deceive the people of the country by saying: that no Canadian can be placed at the head of the militia of this country, when I know full well that by passing through our Royal Military College, and thence through the British army, a Canadian can be appointed in a roundabout way. Now, as a matter of fact what I did say was, that under the present law no Canadian officer can be appointed to the head of the militia, and that is a fact. When the hon. gentleman tells us that Canadian officers have not opportunities of fitting themselves for this responsible position, let me tell him, and he ought to know it, that we are spending thousands of dollars every year to send officers from the permanent force and from the active militia of Canada to the military schools of England. At the present moment we are spending money to send an officer to Japan, so that he may watch what is going on at the seat of war. The hon. gentleman knows very well, that the imperial authorities are always ready, and will always be ready to permit Canadian officers, as Canadian officers, to join the British army in order that they may see what is going on in any of the wars which Great Britain may be engaged in. In view of all this, is there any good reason why on our own statute-books, this reflection, as I call it, and as it is—against the character of Canadian officers per se should remain. But my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) says: politics; there is danger of political influence.

Mr. TISDALE. Hear, hear.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. And he repeats that statement now. A few evenings ago I asked the hon. gentleman, that even if that could be the case, are we to be forced to the humiliating admission that although we can govern ourselves in everything else, we are incapable of governing ourselves in this most important question of the defence of our country. Is not such a contention absurd and humiliating ? I hope this is the last we shall hear of any such argument as that.

Mr. CLARKE. I wish to ask the minister who makes the appointment of the general officer commanding now, and who will make the appointment of the general officer commanding, if a Canadian officer should be appointed ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The actual appointment now is made by the Governor in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. Of the present commanding officer ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Of course the same power would continue in the Governor in Council ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the Minister of Militia is making a little too much of the argument, that the present law is any reflection on Canadian officers. It is not the time to discuss that subject under this resolution ; I propose to discuss it later on, but I cannot allow the argument to pass without a protest. There is a provision of the law that no barrister who has not been admitted to the bar for ten years shall be appointed judge of a Superior Court ; and would any one say that is a reflection on all lawyers who have not been ten years at the bar? No; it is simply a provision requiring certain experience from these gentlemen, just as I understand the provision of our militia law requires any man who is to be general officer commanding our militia to have a certain experience in a regular army. This experience is just as open to be obtained by a Canadian as it is to any subject of the British empire, and therefore it does not do for us to say, as has been said already, that this provision has the effect of casting a reflection upon the officers of the Canadian militia. It simply has the effect of making it necessary that a Canadian, or any one else who is to fill this position must have acquired a certain experience in the British army. That is all it is, and nothing more.

My hon. friend the Minister of Militia surely knows, that the law as it stands at present does not allow an officer of the English militia to become general officer commanding in Canada. Is that a reflection on the militia of Great Britain ? Not at all. It is simply a provision that any man appointed to fill the position must have experience in a standing army. The Minister of Militia says that this Bill leaves it open to an Australian or to a New Zealander to become general officer commanding in Canada. If by that he means, as I understood him to mean, that an Australian officer as such, or a New Zealand officer as such, could become general officer commanding the Canadian militia, then the Bill has not been drafted to meet his views, because it does not say anything of the kind. I have a very strong suspicion that the Bill as drafted confines the appointment to officers of the Canadian militia alone. Does not the Minister of Militia know, that there are capable and competent officers in the Northwest Mounted Police, and does he say that this Bill is a reflection on the officers of that fine force, because it does not enable them to fill the position of general officer commanding. We must regard these matters a little reasonably, and not select a mere captious argument as a basis for our proceeding. It may be—I am not pronouncing an opinion on it at present—it may be that the officers of the Canadian militia have now acquired that degree of experience which would justify the government in selecting a general officer commanding from among them. That is a good argument ; but it is not a good argument to say that the mere fact that under the statute you must select an officer of the regular army, casts a reflection upon men who do not happen to be officers of the regular army or have no experience such as service in the regular army would give. It seems to me that a stronger argument might be made than that advanced by the Minister of the Militia. However, that subject will have to be discussed when the Bill comes up, and as the chairman has repeatedly put this motion to the House, I would like to ask him whether he does not propose to recognize the rule to which I called attention a moment ago. It would be a dangerous precedent to have this proposed amendment put through the committee, without the assent of His Excellency the Governor General, having first been announced to the House, with the Speaker in the Chair. If this precedent were established, it would permit any private member of the House to move that this salary should be $8,000. It is one of the safeguards of our constitution that private members of parliament cannot do that, because they are not advisers of His Excellency, and cannot get His Excellency's consent. The gentlemen who are on the treasury benches are the advisers of His Excellency, and they must declare his assent to the House upon their responsibility as ministers of the Crown, before they can propose a resolution of this kind, and before they can submit any amendment which would involve a further charge upon the public treasury. While I do not wish to obstruct this measure in any way, still I think that it is wise to proceed regularly in these matters. I am willing that the Minister of Militia should have the chairman rise, and without a moment's delay, that he should announce with the Speaker in the chair that his Excellency's assent has been obtained to this amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point taken by the leader of the opposition is well taken. The rule is clear and it would be better to proceed according to the rule.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The suggestion was made the other night by my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes), and upon thinking it over, I concluded that it was desirable to do so.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am quite as anxious as the hon. leader of the opposition that we should proceed regularly, and I should be very glad to take advantage of his suggestion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The point of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is well taken, but it does not affect the present resolutions. We can pass these, and my hon. friend the Minister of Militia will bring down another resolution.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister stated that officers of the active militia, besides those of the permanent corps, had been sent at the expense of the country to England. I have not heard of any.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There have been one or two medical officers, and one or two others of the active militia, whose names I forget.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is nothing here to prevent any of the officers of the staff receiving allowances.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Nothing.

Amendment of Sir Frederick Borden withdrawn.

Resolution 1 agreed to.

On resolution 2—pay of permanent force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I wish to insert, in the third line, before the word 'pay,' the word 'ordinary.' I explained the other night, when the Bill was in committee, that the stores branch has been transferred from the civil side of the department to the military side, and has been made a part of the permanent force. The stores men are in receipt of from $1 to $1.50 a day. They have no barracks and get no allowances, as the men of the permanent force do. The transfer might have the effect of reducing their pay to seventy-five cents, and if the word 'ordinary' is inserted, this rate will be limited to the regular service of the permanent force.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. This may be the proper place to say a word in reference to the pay of the officers of the permanent force. The minister knows that the pay of these officers, when compared with the pay of other officers in any department of the government, is entirely inadequate. An inspector of artillery or a lieutenant-colonel in command of a district is not paid as well as the high school masters throughout the province of Ontario. Besides, these men are subjected to extraordinary expenses. The House and the country will back the minister in increasing their rate of pay, and I trust he will give no attention to any little criticism that may arise on either side of the House in reference to the matter. They are men who deserve well of the country, and it is all they can do to keep body and soul together on the small pay they receive.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no doubt a good deal of truth in what the hon. gentleman says. Some of the officers are very well paid, while some are underpaid. I think some of the officers commanding districts are miserably paid. Some rearrangement of pay should be made, and it is my intention to proceed with that work immediately. When the scale of pay is arranged it will be passed by the Governor in Council, and if the House is sitting, it will be laid on the table. In any case, it will be published in the 'Gazette,' where everybody will be able to see it.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister knows that when a graduate of the Royal Military College is asked to take a commission in our force, he looks at the pay and refuses. There is not a chainman or rodman engaged on any of the surveys of the Dominion government who does not get twice as much pay and allowances as the highest lieutenant in the permanent force of Canada. I am not finding fault with the minister, who has done his best in the circumstances surrounding him. But I trust that he will see that the young fellows, and the old fellows too, in the permanent force are properly looked after.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The rates of pay are fixed by the present law, as my hon. friend knows, and the government have no power in the matter. I may add that I think the pay of our lieutenants in the permanent force is quite as high as that of lieutenants in the British army.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Lieutenants in the British army are members of wealthy families, and their pay is kept down on purpose to keep out of the army young fellows of the middle class who might otherwise make soldiering a profession and a means of sustaining themselves.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. minister if there are not some immunities or privileges now enjoyed by imperial officers serving in Canada, such as the remission of customs and excise duties, which are not extended to the officers of the permanent corps throughout Canada? As I understand it, at Halifax, Esquimalt, and other garrison points where imperial officers are serving, they enjoy some remissions of duty which are not extended to officers of the Canadian regular force.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I believe that British officers serving in garrisons in Canada, at Halifax and Esquimalt, in command of British garrisons, have the right to import free of duty the goods they require, but I do not think that that law applies to the general officer commanding, even though he be a British officer. I do not see how that exemption could be granted to any portion of our community. It would be very much better to meet the case by increasing the pay of our Canadian officers. Possibly this privilege should be withdrawn from the imperial officers, and that is a point to which the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Customs might be drawn. There was no intention to discriminate against Canadian officers, and I presume that matter was arranged at the time of confederation between the imperial and the Canadian authorities. I just wish to say a word in reply to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. He disputes the position which I take, that the law, as it now stands reflects on the ability of Canadian officers. Possibly that may not have been the intention of the Act, but it undoubtedly is the effect. My hon. friend must admit that when a Canadian law prevents a man who makes soldiering his profession from getting to the top of that profession, it creates a disability and is a reflection upon the standing of the Canadian officer. Such a provision would never have been made, had there not been some idea that a Canadian officer was not fitted or could not become fitted to take command. Whatever may have been the case in the days when that statute was framed —and I believe it was passed at a time when throughout this country there were imperial garrisons and officers, and when it would have been very inconvenient to pass the legislation now proposed—it certainly was intended to prevent a Canadian officer from taking command, and thus the legitimate aspiration to which every man is entitled, who adopts a certain line of life, was denied him. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition would think it very hard if some law were passed which prevented a Canadian lawyer from occupying the position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada. If the law of Canada provided that although a Canadian lawyer might practice in every Canadian court and occupy subordinate judicial positions, he should be debarred from the position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of his own country, and that position should be reserved for a lawyer imported from Great Britain, my hon. friend would justly consider himself very much aggrieved. This is a very much more analagous case than the one my hon. friend mentioned.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not so regard it. The statute reads as follows: 'There shall be appointed an officer holding the rank of colonel or rank superior thereto in Her Majesty's regular army.' That does not discriminate against any Canadian. It simply requires that any man appointed, be he Australian, Canadian or British, shall have a certain experience. It would be a perfectly good argument if my hon. friend would argue, as he has not yet done, that Canadian officers have now the experience which is equivalent to that gained by an officer in the regular army of Great Britain. That is an argument I have not yet heard, and to which I shall give due consideration when it is made, but in the meantime there is no more discrimination in this case than there is against a lawyer who has not served ten years at the bar, and who, however able he may be, he cannot be appointed a judge on account of his not having the requisite experience. Does not the provision my hon. friend proposes discriminate against the officers of the Northwest Mounted Police? Are there not in that corps able and efficient officers? My hon. friend says the law now discriminates against the militia of Canada. It is no more a discrimination against the militia of Canada than against the militia of Great Britain or Australia or any other country. The case he brings up about the appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada is not an analogous one, because a man who has served ten or fifteen years at the bar of this country has necessarily all the experience required to make him competent to fill the position of chief justice. But is there not a distinction between service in the militia and service in the regular army? If you can show that the service of an officer in the Canadian militia gives him substantially as good an experience as service in the regular army of Great Britain, then it goes without saying that the measure which the hon. gentleman is introducing ought to be carried. There should not be any discrimination against Canadians, and I do not regard the present law as discrimination of that kind, but as providing that a certain experience on the part of any man, be he a Canadian, British or Australian officer, shall be necessary before he can fill the position of general officer commanding in this country.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I think that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, in advancing the argument that the militia of England and Canada are in the same category, is labouring under a mistake. We have in Canada in reality a regular army, small though it may be. But we still call them the militia. We do not distinguish between our permanent and non-permanent force by calling one the regular army and the other the militia. In England the direct contrary is the case. To permit an officer of the militia in England to assume a high command would be to open the door to the appointment of men of inexperience, I admit. And it may be that here in Canada the door is open to the appointment of inexperience. But, at the same time we have available in the militia—in the permanent part thereof—men whose experience is probably as good, and in the future, it will be as good, as that of the officers of any regiment in the regular army at home. That being the case, I really fail to see why we should not give the highest appointment in the gift of the government in military matters to a Canadian, if he be fit for it. And, if he be not fit for it, let us hold the government responsible. What is the meaning of responsible government if that be not it? Why this government could accept as commander of our forces some gentleman from the English regular army utterly incompetent for the post—for there are some incompetents there; without wishing to cast slurs upon the service we can say that that is undoubtedly the case. Where, then, is the danger in opening this office when we can hold the government responsible? It has been urged by some gentlemen on the opposition side that this is severing another link with the mother country. I fail to see that. I recall the lessons of history and I remember that, about a hundred and twenty-five years ago, the thirteen colonies broke away from the motherland, and some historians of undoubted authority say that it was more the way British gentlemen treated colonial gentlemen that caused that severance than any question of the duty on tea. If we are to continue our close connection with the motherland, it must be on terms of equality. That is the only thing you can ask worthy sons of worthy sires to stand for, and it is the only thing that Canadians are ready to admit. It is not a reflection on British officers that this change should be made, but it is undoubtedly an acknowledgment of ability and fitness on the part of Canadians.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The argument of my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) if carried to its legitimate conclusion would lead to this—you could appoint any one to this office whether connected with the militia or not, because the government is responsible. Will the hon. gentleman say that that is not the legitimate conclusion of his argument? The reason why you provide in the law that a man may be appointed from the militia, and not from among the ordinary body of citizens, is that you require for this office a man of a certain experience.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, I have conceded—I do not know whether I made myself clear—that it is a perfectly good argument, which has not been put forward in the House, unless my hon. friend from Haldimand put it forward, to say that the experience an officer gets in the Canadian militia is substantially equivalent to the experience he would get if in the regular army.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. In the regular part of our militia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am coming to that in a moment, but I am not discussing it now. So, according to my hon. friend's argument some experience is necessary. He does not suggest, for instance, that a clerk in a wholesale dry goods store, an employment which has nothing to do with the militia, should be appointed simply because the government is responsible. Well, some experience is necessary. Then, I say point out to me give me reasonable ground for believing, that the experience of an officer in the Canadian militia is equivalent to that provided for in the statute, or is sufficient in itself, and I shall not oppose the measure. But I do oppose it when the only argument in support of it is that the statute in its present form excludes Canadians. It does not exclude Canadians but it requires a certain experience. The hon. member for Haldimand has spoken of the militia of Great Britain. He knows more of these matters than I do, but I have understood from some of these gentlemen themselves, that there are men in the militia of Great Britain who have served in the regular army.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. That is right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then, I suppose we might conclude that such men would have as much experience and be as fit for the position as a man in the active militia of Canada outside of the permanent force. My hon. friend's argument proves too much. He says: We have a permanent force which can supply very capable officers who would have all the qualifications by reason of experience which could be supposed to be possessed by an officer in the imperial army. That being so, my hon. friend should ask the Minister of Militia to limit this Bill to appointment from among these men.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Not at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is his argument. He says that you are to appoint from the active militia in Canada.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman mistakes my argument. I said 'may appoint' not 'are to appoint.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, let us say 'may appoint?' You may appoint from the permanent force, which, according to the argument of my hon. friend, contains officers who have the necessary qualifications for the office. Well why should you extend the right of choice to the whole force instead of confining it to this portion which he himself says is especially capable? It would be quite as good an argument for him to say that there are capable men in the active militia of Canada and therefore the Bill should provide that you should choose your man from the entire population of Canada. That is the absolutely logical deduction from what he has said. That is what his argument means, if it means anything. I am not suggesting that Canadians should not be appointed, or that the general officer commanding could not be chosen from the active militia of Canada. But I object to the captious argument—for it is nothing more than that—that the present law is a reflection on Canadians. Show me that Canadian militia have experience to fit them for officers in this office and I am satisfied. But that has not been discussed. Until we have a discussion along that line we have not touched the real question that the House should consider. It is not right, it seems to me, to say that this law casts any reflection upon Canadians. It only requires that a Canadian as well as any other citizen of the British empire shall have a certain experience in the regular army before he can be appointed to this office. If the experience that he can get in this country is as good or nearly as good as the experience he can get in the regular army, I am quite willing that the restriction should be removed and the government should be free to appoint from the Canadian militia.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. I almost fear to mingle in this debate further, Mr. Speaker, because I am hardly able to recognize the argument I thought I was advancing as it comes from the mouth of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). Still, I am saying what I have to say in no captious spirit, but with a desire for free, frank and fair discussion of the question now before the committee. I do think that the leader of the opposition rather warped my argument, to put it mildly. I think that if he will look at the provision of the Act he will see that there is no danger of the appointment of a linen draper to the position, because it is provided that the man to be appointed must have the rank of colonel. That would be a man of some experience.

Mr. COCHRANE. You make colonels by Order in Council.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. They are a rather different kind of colonels—honorary colonels. Now, the leader of the opposition has said that if we can convince him that the members of the permanent force have the requisite experience he will hold up both hands for the Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Or of the active militia.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. Or of the active militia. And so it should be a question of fitness, undoubtedly a question of fitness. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that we have now in the militia men who have fought through campaigns in three continents, who have had very considerable experience indeed. I am not prepared to name these officers as I do not wish to drag their names into this debate, but I can give their names to the hon. gentleman privately. These are men of wide experience who could fill acceptably that position. But that is not the point; we are not here arguing that a Canadian should be appointed. The whole thing comes down to this, that out of self-respect the power should be obtained to appoint a Canadian if he be fit for the post, and the responsibility for the fitness rests on the responsible officer, the Minister of Militia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. A. T. Thompson) does not quite see the point I make, and I have no doubt that this is absolutely due to my inability to express myself as clearly as I should. He says there are many officers in Canada who have had experience that would qualify them for this position. I am not objecting for one moment to so amending the law that you shall select your commanding officer from such men, but I want you to show me that when you authorize a certain selection here, you are confining that selection to those who have had that necessary experience.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. But there is no similar restriction in the choice of a man from the old country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is, because he must have attained a certain rank in the regular army.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. And this Act requires the same thing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No it does not.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. That he shall have attained a certain rank.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That he shall have attained a certain rank in the active militia of Canada, and I have said over and over again that if you once point out to me or if you show me by any reasonable argument that that experience in the active militia of Canada is put to the standard required by the statute, I will hold up both hands for this measure. All I have been suggesting is that the argument shall proceed along that line and not on the line that there is any reflection on Canadian officers. We quite agree on the line the discussion should take, but it has not proceeded on that line, and I rose in the first place to protest against it going on any other line than that which the hon. gentleman now suggests.

Mr. TISDALE. I wish to call attention to a matter which I have already discussed with the minister. When the House passed the measure providing for increased pay for this officer, it was on the assurance of the government that within a very short period, in accordance with the correspondence between the Canadian government and the imperial government, we were to have a commanding officer of the rank of general. If the hon. minister had brought in a motion to strike out from the Act the word 'colonel' and to put in 'general of the British army,' I would have been with him, because I am of the opinion that the rank of colonel in the British army is not sufficient. However, we had the assurance on the good faith of the government that we would have a general in command and since then they have acted upon that, but now my hon. friend the minister has changed the whole law, and has made the position open to Canadians, but there is not a general in Canada at the present time and there will not be until he makes one. He will have to make him with the fitness and qualifications necessary to be a general in the British army. As to the remarks of my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. A. T. Thompson) I would point out that while we have competent men in command of our permanent force, that force is not in any sense a regular army. I wish to call attention to the wording of the resolution about the pay. My hon. friend will notice in the third resolution that there is to be 50 cents a day on appointment which may be increased to $1 a day during the third year of service. I will call his attention to the fact that that might be taken to debar from the increased rate of pay the men who re-enlist for a longer term.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) will find in the Bill that that is covered.

Mr. TISDALE. I understand that if the resolutions do not cover it the Bill cannot.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is a wrong conception in the minds of the House that Canadian officers are not to receive their uniforms and equipment free of duty, and the inference has been drawn that English officers do. I understand that this refers only to supplies for the officers on the two coasts.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Only that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I would like to refer to the drill of the English militia. Those who have seen English militia drill will readily admit that they are a very finely drilled body of men and that it will be hard to find in the regular service any better drilled soldiers. The English militia man drills for thirty days every year; that is as much as a Canadian would train in three years. They have all the command and duties of a regular army corps. In our permanent force, with all due respect, the officers have no training in the command of large bodies of men. I am told that the artillery at Kingston can hardly muster more than two or three guns, and the force at Toronto is mostly required for servants. How do these officers get any experience in handling vast bodies of troops or in doing what is generally necessary in large military operations? Many of our country captains have nearly as much experience in drilling as have officers of the permanent corps, and certainly officers commanding rural battalions have as much experience as any of the permanent corps officers, and more than some of them.

On resolution No. 3, pay of active militia.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved:

That the resolution be amended by striking out the word 'appointment' and inserting the word 'enlistment.'

He said: I am not a lawyer and cannot say if the effect of this resolution will be to limit the payment of the $1 a day to the third year, but if so I would like to have it amended. The provision in the Bill in regard to the pay is this:

For privates, on enlistment, at the rate of 50 per cent per diem which rate may, by regulation, be increased for good conduct and efficiency, until the third year of service, during which a maximum rate not exceeding $1 per diem may be paid, and such payment continued on re-enlistment during the continuance of such good conduct and efficiency.

Mr. TISDALE. The Bill is undoubtedly right but the resolution is doubtful.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The point which is very well taken by my hon. friend for South Norfolk is that there is no provision for the gradation in pay that the hon. minister intends.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) suggest any words to be added.

Mr. TISDALE. I think it is all right.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is no provision in the resolution to enable the minister to give a man 75 cents or 85 cents the second year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is provided for in the Bill.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The hon. minister proposes that on enlistment the soldier shall have 50 cents a day and that if he conducts himself properly and is efficient at the end of the first year's camp, he will get 65 or 75 cents which sum may be increased to 85 cents at the end of the second year's camp, and that at the end of the third year's camp it will be a dollar a day. Does the resolution cover that?

Mr. TISDALE. I think if you added to the resolution the words 'and continued thereafter,' it would cover the case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This resolution was drafted by the law clerk of the House and he had the Bill before him.

Mr. TISDALE. If you are satisfied I have no objection.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We may add the words 'and continued thereafter.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no need of it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be rather inclined to think that it would be necessary, The Bill reads as follows :

For privates, on enlistment, at the rate of 50 cents per diem, which rate may, by regulation, be increased for good conduct and efficiency, until the third year of service, during which a maximum rate not exceeding $1 per diem may be paid.

The resolution is practically in the words of the Bill up to that point, but then, the Bill continues as follows :

And such payment continued on re-enlistment during the continuance of such good conduct and efficiency.

I would be inclined to think that these words ought to be in the resolution as well.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The only necessity of this resolution is to enable us to deal with the money part of the matter. If there is not enough in the resolution to carry what is intended by the Bill, we will have to have another resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman is absolutely right in regard to that, but I was discussing the question as to whether or not there would be sufficient to found the Bill upon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems to me there would be. If there is not enough to warrant the Bill we must have another resolution. We cannot amend it here.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If you are imposing any greater burden upon the country you must have a new resolution, or have this resolution amended, and you must have the amendment made with the assent of His Excellency. You cannot found a Bill on a resolution which does not go as far as the Bill. When the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence comes to pass his Bill it will be the right of every hon. member to see that there is a resolution which goes as far as the Bill. Then, when you go to look at the resolution you will find that it does not go as far as the Bill because the Bill would impose a greater burden on the revenues of the country than is provided for by the resolution.

Mr. TISDALE. You speak of a dollar a day, but you limit the dollar a day to the third year only.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It seems to me that the point taken by my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is altogether too minute. Certainly there is no intention to limit it to one year only. It must be for the third year and the years after. I cannot conceive that it is to be limited to the third year or the fourth year, because, otherwise, you would have to commence again.

Mr. CLARKE. What would be paid during the sixth year to a soldier who re-enlists ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The soldier would receive the pay which he is entitled to at the third year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I cannot construe the language of this resolution in the way the right hon. the leader of the government does. There is a distinct statement that the pay shall be increased to the maximum of a dollar a day after three years service. There is no provision for the payment of that amount in the resolution while the Bill does make provision. The Bill distinctly states that :

Such payment shall be continued on re-enlistment during the continuance of such good conduct and efficiency.

If these words are necessary in the Bill, they are necessary in the resolution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think so, but I will not quarrel with my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would suggest that we pass the resolution as it is, and the amendment if necessary can be made when the hon. minister's further amendment is brought down.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have given notice of one amendment and I can give notice of another.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be a very simple matter to have the chairman go out of the chair and have the whole question settled at once.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I think we will have to give notice.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that the interpretation clause of the Bill does not define what is meant by a 'private.' It uses the word 'man.'

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The word 'man,' I think, includes 'private soldier.'

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It does not say so in the interpretation clause.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That can be amended.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. 'Man' includes non-commissioned officer, but when using the word it should be determined what a private is. If you define the word 'officer' in your interpretation clause, it seems to me that you should also define the word 'private.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Any one who is not an officer is a private.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not explain to my right hon. friend that in raising the point I did, I referred to a man being enlisted in the first place for only three years, if he were enlisted for six years I think the hon. gentleman is correct.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have no objection to an amendment to make doubly sure.

Resolution No. 3 was amended by adding to the end thereof, after the word 'service' the words 'such payment to be continued on re-enlistment.'

Resolution, as amended, agreed to.

On resolution 4, allowance for officers' horses.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Every one knows that there is almost as much diffierence between a trained and an untrained horse as there is between a trained man and an untrained man. The minister has adopted a splendid idea in regard to the men, and I think he should adopt it also in regard to the horses.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is left open to give any rate you like.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is all right.

Resolution 4, agreed to.

SUPPLY—PROVINCIAL SUBSIDIES.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of the government a clause in the speech delivered at the opening of the Quebec legislature on the 22nd day of March, by the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, in which reference is made to the subject of the application of the provinces for the readjustment of the provincial subsidies. The clause I refer to is as follows :

> My government has every reason to believe that the importance of the readjustment of the provincial subsidies, the conditions whereof were approved by you last session, is being seriously considered by the government of Canada.

I gather from what has already been said by my right hon. friend, that the matter has not come under the consideration of the government at all thus far. I conclude therefore that the person who drafted this speech for the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, must have been under some misapprehension. Has the right hon. gentleman any further statement to make to the House in regard to it ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, Mr. Speaker, I stated the other day, the whole matter as it stands at the present time. The premiers of all the provinces have approached the government on two or three occasions, but especially last fall, with the object of having a readjustment of the subsidies as defined by the Act of Confederation. The subject has not yet been taken up by the government, but I stated personally to one or two of the premiers, and amongst others to Mr. Parent, that in my judgment it would at an early date be the subject of serious consideration on the part of the government. Nothing more has been done.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public buildings, N.S.—Halifax immigrant building—additional story over the one story portion, &c., $11,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this work being done by contract after public competition ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The work was originally done by contract and any improvements that are being made are being made by day labour.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not quite understand—is this additional story being constructed by contract or by day labour ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I misunderstood my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke). The additional story has not been built yet. The plans have been prepared and they are now standing for consideration before the Department of Immigration. When the work is let it will be let by contract. We made some small improvements some time ago by day labour, and that is what I have reference to.

Mr. DANIEL. What material is the building built of ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Wood. The building originally cost $37,116,47. The repairs cost $2,916.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend stated that the plans had been prepared, but that the contract had not yet been let. It appears, however, that this includes a revote of $5,000. That would seem to be hardly consistent with his explanation. Would he be good enough to tell us just how that is ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Plans were prepared and submitted to the department of immigration. We were asked not to proceed at the present time, but it is expected that the work will go on early this season, and that with the revote of $5,000 and the new vote of $6,000, it would be completed during the coming year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No part of the vote of last year has yet been used ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No.

Halifax—new public buildings, $100,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to give us a statement as to the present position of the construction of this building? I would like to know at what date it was to have been completed according to the terms of the contract; whether or not it has been completed in accordance with those terms; if not, what is the reason for the delay; and on what date it is expected that the work will be finally completed.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract requires the work to be completed on the 15th September, 1904. The chief architect of the department is not of opinion that it will be completed by that date, but he thinks it ought to be completed within a very few months afterwards. The principal reason given by the contractor for the delay has been the difficulty of getting skilled workmen.

Mr. CLARKE. Has he any difficulty now in getting them?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know how that is. I understand from the chief architect that the work is proceeding very fairly.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost of the building?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The amount of the contract was $250,000. The total cost, including site, heating, furniture and fittings, is estimated at $320,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What did the site cost?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $24,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was there more than one tender?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think there were several. As the matter has been discussed so frequently, I hardly expected that question to-day; but I will give my hon. friend a list of the tenders.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the government should insist, as far as it is practicable to do so, on the completion of this building at a very early date. The accommodation for the public service at Halifax is at present very inadequate, and both the public and the officers of the government suffer a good deal of inconvenience. At what date did the contractor begin his work?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract was awarded in April, 1902, and the contractor began operations at once. Immediately after my hon. friend brought this matter to my attention last session, I gave instructions that the work must proceed faster than it had been doing.

Mr. HAGGART. How much has been expended?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total amount to December 31, 1903, was $111,382. We expect to spend before the 30th of June, $50,713.

Sydney, public building—addition to, $24,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this work being done by contract?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The contract was let to the lowest tenderer, Rhodes, Curry & Co., of Amherst, N.S., on the 27th of February last. It is intended to be completed by 1905. The addition consists of two stories, attic and basement, 41 feet by 30 feet. It is required especially for additional accommodation for the post office.

Sydney Mines, public building, $15,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this work being done by contract? When will it be completed?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. A site has been secured, the plans have been prepared, and we are now advertising for tenders for the work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. About $20,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that include the site?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, the site cost $4,500. Total cost about $25,000.

Actonvale, public building, $12,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. A site has been procured, plans are now being prepared, and tenders will be called for at an early date.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population of that place?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. About 1,175.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the hon. gentleman have any objection to taking up the Ontario items, as many of the Quebec members are absent? They usually go away Friday afternoon.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I shall be pleased to accede to my hon. friend's request, and would renew the proposition I made when he was absent. I was asked to allow certain items to stand, and I proposed that we might go on with the items on the understanding that, when members interested are absent, they could ask the information on other items. I wish to consult the convenience of hon. members in that way and at the same time expedite the public business.

Alexandria, Ont., public building, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total estimated cost is $15,996, including the site, which cost $3,500.

Mr. BLAIN. When this matter was up for discussion last year, the member representing that county said that two sites were available, one of which could be procured for $2,000 and the other for $2,500. How is it we are paying $3,500 ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. After full consideration, I came to the conclusion that the site we purchased was better than either of the other two. It is a corner lot and more central.

Mr. CLARKE. From whom was it purchased ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. From a man named Macdonald.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a very vague description to give of a man in Glengarry.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the size of the lot ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Sixty-five feet frontage. My hon. friend from Lanark says I gave a very vague description of a resident of Alexandria, but it is the best description I could give. Mr. Macdonald is a well known prominent citizen of that town.

Mr. BENNETT. Were there any buildings on the lot.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and they had to be removed by the owner.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the depth ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Forty-two feet, I think, on the other street.

Mr. CLARKE. And that lot cost $3,500. That is a pretty stiff price.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that it is an extraordinary high price for a corner lot in the best situation in the town. That was the valuation made by the officers of the department, and it was on their report that a decision was come to.

Mr. CLARKE. How far is this site from the others ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. One of the others is across the river in a different section of the town, and the other is in the same block, but not a corner lot.

Mr. BENNETT. Did the chief architect visit Alexandria and make a report ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, personally.

Mr. CLANCY. Is not the lot a small one for a public building ? It is a mistake to put a public building on a small lot, because later on it may be found necessary to enlarge the building and acquire other property, and you will have to pay whatever price the people may ask. I cannot imagine a suitable building—it is true this is not to be a very expensive building—on a lot with a total measurement of 65 feet by 42 feet. The lot would be nearly, and perhaps wholly, covered by the building. It is true this is a corner lot, and, of course, there would be ready access to the building. Still, I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to say that it is not the rule of the department to buy lots of that size for the purpose of erecting public buildings.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there a lane at the rear of the premises ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No ; but it is a corner lot.

Mr. BENNETT. I have been in this town or village of Alexandria, and I must say that this seems a very high price to pay—about $50 a foot. I would like to be sure that we have the figure correct as to the depth of the lot—42 feet. The surveys in the ordinary town or village make lots of one-fifth or one-quarter acre, a depth of 165 feet or 175 feet. It seems fair to infer that the owner has simply moved back the buildings from the main street to a rear part of the lot. May I ask the minister if that is the case ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect tells me that he does not know.

Mr. BENNETT. What style of building was it that was on this lot—stone, brick or frame ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. An old wooden building.

Mr. BENNETT. That tends to confirm my suspicion. If this was the principal corner in the town or village of Alexandria, the owner would hardly think so little of the property as to leave it occupied by a miserable old building——

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I did not say it was a miserable building, but a wooden building.

Mr. BENNETT. An old building, I understood the minister to say.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It must have been old.

Mr. BENNETT. What was it used for ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect tells me that his recollection is that it was used as a residence, but is not sure.

Mr. BENNETT. Was this close to what is known as the principal hotel ? If I remember the locality well, it is directly opposite a newspaper office.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect's recollection is that it is about half a block from the principal hotel, and on the same side of the street.

Mr. BENNETT. It is some time since I was in Alexandria ; but, as I recollect it, near the principal hotel there were stores. If this building was used as a residence, I think it fair to infer that the site was not a desirable one for a store.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have been in Alexandria, and I understand that this is the corner of the west block where the stores are—the best corner of the best business block.

Mr. BENNETT. We are paying $50 a foot for a piece of vacant land in the town or village of Alexandria. It can hardly be a business location, because the owner maintained on it an old frame building used as a residence. Had it been a desirable business site, he would have removed the building long ago and put up a store or other business premises that would yield a better return.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) knows that he can go into Toronto, Montreal or any other large city and find some of the best corners occupied by very inferior buildings. There is nothing in that argument of the hon. gentleman. When we purchased the cornor lot there was a building which, according to the recollection of the chief architect, was used as a dwelling house. But I can tell the hon. gentleman—there is nothing about the purchase to conceal—that this is the corner of the principal business block in the town.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely the minister will wish to qualify that statement. If it had been such a desirable corner, the owner would not have continued to occupy it with an old frame building. When the chief architect was there, was the building occupied as a residence ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have no information as to whether it was so occupied at that time or not.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to prolong the discussion or press the minister unduly, but I have not heard what seems to me a proper explanation of the reason for the change—why the minister set aside the other two sites proposed last year and purchased this one. Perhaps he would tell the committee how far the new site is from the two that were proposed.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) knows that a few minutes ago I gave that explanation. I suppose he asks the question for the purpose of having me repeat it. He will remember that I said that one of these sites was across the river and a few blocks further west, while the other is in the same block and not far from the site we are now discussing.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sorry the minister thinks I ask the question merely to have him repeat his statement. I assure him that that is not the object. If it were, we could easily keep this thing going all evening. But last year the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schell) representing the county made a statement that one of these lots was a corner lot of a size much larger than the one that has been purchased. It was 66 by 90 feet, and could be purchased for $2,500. Now, the minister has purchased a lot 65 by 42 feet for $3,500. This seems to me to call for further explanation. The minister now tells us that the other lot is in the centre of the block. It would seem that either he or the gentleman who is representing the county must be mistaken. I presume the hon. gentleman representing the county would know all the facts ; and he stated that it was a corner lot and could be purchased for $2,500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site across the river, the chief architect informs me, was a corner lot but it was too far out from the centre of the town to satisfy any person there or to satisfy the department. That is the reason the change was made.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the depth of the other lot in this same block ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have not the size of the other lot but it was much larger, however, we consider a corner lot where you can have light on three sides of much more value than a deeper lot when you cannot use the rear portion. I think the depth of this lot was 90 feet.

Mr. CLARKE. Was the rear end of this 90 feet lot owned by the same gentleman who sold the department the 42 feet ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I could not answer that question.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the size of the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Speaking without the plans it will be built flush with the front street, and I think the main part of the building will be 28 x 30 feet frontage.

Mr. BENNETT. What kind of a roof will there be on it. Will it be a flat roof, sloping to the back as most buildings of that kind now have ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is not a flat roof.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister have a man standing on the roof to shovel off the snow ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, we shall not appoint a man.

Mr. BENNETT. With a roof of the kind that is evidently intended, the government may be liable for damages for injuries to passers-by. I am really surprised the chief architect should recommend a building of that class.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I presume the building as designed by the chief architect is satisfactory. He is a man of great experience and has built most of the public buildings in Canada. We have had no complaints.

Mr. BENNETT. But the chief architect is not a free agent. You give him a lot of a certain size and say : Put a building on it.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect knew the requirements of the building before he purchased the lot.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the 12 feet at the back to be used as an entrance ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It will probably be used for that purpose.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister will understand that we have great difficulty in criticising this item because we have not been able to get the information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is not fair ; if my hon. friend will put any question he thinks relevant, then if I have the information I will give it to him and if I have not the information I will be only too glad to bring it down.

Mr. CLARKE. What about the buildings on the back part of the lot ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. They were removed from the lot.

Mr. CLARKE. Were they pushed back from the rear of this lot.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am sorry to say I have not the information.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the hon. minister under his hand any report from the chief architect advising the purchase of this particular site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The lot was bought by Order in Council on the recommendation of the chief architect in writing.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. gentleman kindly bring down any reports which he may have recommending the purchase of this site or adverse to it ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There are no adverse reports, but I will bring down the report recommending this site.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. When the committee rose at six o'clock my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asked me for the report on which the site for this building was purchased I have it here.

Mr. CLARKE. Probably if the hon. gentleman would pass it over to me it would save him the trouble of reading it.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. minister to say that this building when completed would cost $18,000 ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Including the site.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the building to be used for a post office solely or for the customs-house and inland revenue also ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The post office, customs-house and anything else needed there. I am not sure whether there is an inland revenue office there or not. The contract price is $10,750. The contract is let and the work is under way.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, for several years past I have drawn the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a special feature in the construction of public buildings, especially for the use of the post office in small towns throughout the country. I have called attention to the fact that I think a good deal of money could be saved to the public by incorporating in the building a residence for the postmaster. In this way the government would save considerable money, inasmuch as the postmaster would be entitled to allow the government for the rent of the residence, he living in the building. At the same time the postmaster would be the caretaker of the entire building and thus save the government the expense of paying the caretaker. When the hon. gentleman's predecessor undertook to erect a post office building at Clinton, in the county of Huron, he gave us an assurance that he was going to adopt the suggestion which I had made and I am inclined to think, from what I recollect, that he did to a certain extent carry out that understanding. I have no very definite information about it, but I still contend that the only way in which the government could, without going to too large an expense, meet the views of the people throughout the country, more especially in the small towns with a population ranging from 1,500 to 2,500, would be to take advantage of this circumstance, to provide a residence for the postmaster and thus save the allowance which they could collect from him as rental, at the same time saving the expense of a caretaker for that public building. I hope that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Sutherland) on this occasion is following up what I understood to be the policy that was laid down by the hon. gentleman's predecessor, the one that he had decided to adopt and that in this economical way he will be more free to expend the public money in counties that have not the advantage of a large town or any town exceeding 1,500 or 2,000 people, and where the revenue of the post office could not be expected to compensate the government fully for the expenditure of a large amount of money upon the erection of a post office. In this instance I understand the entire cost of the building with the site is to be about $18,000. To my mind it is quite possible for the government in a town of 1,500 population for less than half that money to put up a good substantial brick building on a good foundation sufficiently large for the purposes of the post office, with a door for entrance and one for exit to prevent crowding and include in it a vault for the protection of registered letter and other property of the government, and also to include in it a residence for the postmaster. Private individuals in the country can construct for $8,000 or $9,000, a good substantial building. I am aware of the fact that it seems an impossible thing for the government to succeed in erecting a building as cheaply as it can be erected by private enterprise. They seem to be, from time to time as the construction goes on, induced to add one thing after another until the cost of the building far exceeds the original estimate, and to my mind it frequently exceeds the necessities of the case. I do not see that there should be such a large expenditure on fittings as sometimes takes place, notably in the matter of the Clinton post office. I would urge upon the hon. minister that he endeavour in the construction of this building, if it has not gone too far in the way of the letting of the contract, to take advantage of these suggestions as far as practicable, to include all that I have suggested, because, if he did, we would have less hesitation in pressing upon the hon. minister the erection of public buildings in other counties that have nothing but small towns. I am quite sure the hon. minister would be anxious that all the money of this country should not be expended in the ridings that have large towns, but that he would be willing to extend his generosity to other counties that have only small towns and to give them the advantage of this expenditure of public money as well and not only the advantage of the expenditure of public money, but to give them that reasonable accommodation to which they are just as much entitled as the larger towns. It is frequently the case, and I know it is notoriously so in the county that I have the honour to represent, that our post offices are all too cramped. In the evening and morning when the mails are being distributed, there is a perfect crush and it is only with the greatest inconvenience that people are able to get in or out, there being simply the same door for entrance and exit. The buildings in some cases are not of that substantial character they ought to be for the purpose of guarding against loss by fire, and I am quite sure that it would not take anything beyond the most ordinary safe for the protection of the public property. I hope that the hon. minister, even if he is not able in this particular case to adopt my suggestion, will bear in mind these facts when he comes to the erection of a public building in some other town of the same size, and that he will show the country what he can do in the way of economizing public funds and give the people the best accommodation possible.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) knows that on a previous occasion I fully sympathized with the views he has expressed and in this particular case I have endeavoured to come as near to that policy, in contra-distinction with the expenditures of the past on public buildings of this kind, as I possibly could. My hon. friend will see that the contract for this building is $10,750. During the past few years the cost of building has increased from 25 to 40 per cent. We have now a schedule of wages attached to each contract which are the wages current in the district in which the building is being erected and they are not the lowest wages either. This with the increased cost of material increases the price of the work. Instead of erecting a building in a town of this size at a cost of $40,000 or $50,000, as was done in the past, we are going to put up this building for $10,750. The estimate which I have given of $18,000 includes the site and also the cost of heating, fittings, furniture and letter boxes. These come to $8,000. Wiring, fixtures, fencing and sidewalks are included in this estimate, so that there is no reason to believe that we will not come as near to the policy that the hon. gentleman advocates as is possible under the circumstances. It also provides for the post office and customs house and has rooms for residence.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am surprised to hear the minister say that the construction of a vault would cost $1,000. I should think that there is no difficulty in constructing a good vault for $200. but this is just on a par with the construction of all these buildings ; if there is a possibility of adopting any extravagant system it is sure to be adopted instead of the economic one. I am also surprised that the post office boxes should cost so much. Apparently, no attempt is made to keep down the expenditure on those public buildings. It is quite true, as the minister says, that the cost of building is greater than it was a few years ago owing to the increased price of labour and materials, but I should think that forty per cent is an exaggerated estimate of the increase. I am glad to know that the minister is aiming at providing here some of the accommodation I have suggested, but as the member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) says, he is still aiming too high. I regret very much that in this case, he has not made provision for a residence for the postmaster who might be the caretaker as well, and thus the annual expenditure for a caretaker would be saved.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the principal street in this town Main street or St. Catherine street.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Main street.

Mr. CLARKE. Then this lot has only a frontage of 42 feet on Main street while it has 65 feet on St. Catherine street. I notice that the architect says that price is reasonable, but a casual observer can notice that the price is a very stiff one for property in such a town. The architect reports that he examined this lot in 1902; did he make any report in writing to the department when he made that examination?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I discussed verbally with the officer the different sites he had seen. I suppose the only way a person could obtain a proper knowledge of the value of property in a town or city is by looking at the sales made, and taking the opinion of leading citizens.

Mr. CLARKE. I notice that there was a good deal of expedition in putting through this proposition. Mr. McDonald made the offer on June 12, 1903, at the suggestion of the hon. member for Glengarry as is stated here, and on the 24th June the report is made by the chief architect and the whole business closed up. That was expeditious.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I can explain that. The different sites were under consideration, and this is the site the people wanted. We always have an offer in writing before we decide, so that there may be no difference of opinion about it afterwards, and I told the member and when this was sent in it was decided at once.

Mr. INGRAM. You can buy lots for less than that in cities of 12,000 inhabitants.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am negotiating now for a site in one of the cities, and they want $1,000 a foot. I should think that the price we paid in Alexandria is the average price in flourishing small towns throughout Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT. Before dinner we understood that the principal frontage of this lot was on Main street, but it now turns out that there are only 42 feet on the Main street. You are paying $80 a foot for a shallow lot of 65 feet in a little place like Alexandria. I should like to know what that property was assessed for. I will be bound to say that the whole lot was not assessed for $2,000.

Mr. INGRAM. And. I notice that the arrangement is that the building on this lot is to be removed, which would go to show that it is of an inferior character. If that lot were worth $3,500, there is no doubt there would be a building of some value on it, and the fact that the building is to be removed shows that the lot is not as valuable as the government try to make out. I venture to say that half the price the government paid would be ample for a lot of that character in a place like Alexandria.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister know of a single industrial firm in Alexandria; the population is under 2,000.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am not familiar with Alexandria, but I think there is considerable business done there.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On what evidence does the architect base his opinion that this price is reasonable.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The evidence that the architect gets when he visits a place is to obtain information of experts in real estate and the principal citizens, and to look at the sales which have taken place. I have no doubt that was done.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any written valuation from any person who is an expert in real estate values in the town? I do not suppose that the architect would profess to be an expert in land values in all the towns throughout Ontario, and one would suppose that the proper course would be to obtain a written estimate from those who might be considered experts. Has this precaution been taken in this case?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There was no written estimate of a value received in this case, but in some cases I have demanded it, where I thought there was any doubt as to the price being the ordinary price in the town.

Mr. CLARKE. Did the architect make any inquiries as to the assessed value of the property?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There was no inquiry made as to the assessment.

Mr. SPROULE. I repeat now what I have said on many former occasions: that the government are not justified in putting up an expensive building in these small places where they can rent and care for a building for much less money than the interest charges on the capital sum required to erect a public building. It may be said that this building is not only for a post office, but for a customs-house as well, and that the rent which is now paid is therefore scarcely a fair basis for comparison. But I see by the Postmaster's General's Report that all that is paid for rent, fuel and light for that post office is $120. If that is the case, why should we spend $15,000 for a building for which we shall be obliged to employ a caretaker at $300 or $400 a year, and pay for repairs, fuel and light in addition. The interest on the cost of the building alone will amount to five or six times what we now pay for a building with fuel and light included. It seems to me that it is very doubtful wisdom under these circumstances, to spend so much money to erect this building.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that in the city of London, one of the leading cities in western Ontario, a site for a drill hall was bought which the hon. gentleman representing that city said was bought from eight different parties; all it cost was $15,507, and the government proposed to erect a drill hall upon it at a cost of $180,000. And now the hon. minister is purchasing a site in a town of less than 2,000 inhabitants at a cost of $3,500 for a building which is to cost $15,000. The hon. gentleman must have been imposed upon by some of the gentlemen in that town in the purchase of this lot.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not think there is any reason at all for that suggestion. I have no reason to believe that I was imposed upon in any sense. The lot in question was desired by the people as the most suitable in the public interest, and we had to pay the price of that lot. The hon. gentleman I think must be mistaken as to the cost of the site in London. Though it is not in as expensive a part of the city relatively as this lot is, my recollection is that it cost between $15,000 and $20,000. However, that may be, my hon. friend knows that in a large city some lots may be worth $1,000 per foot frontage, while in other parts of the city you might buy several acres for that amount of money. So that there is nothing in the argument unless we know the position of the property.

Mr. BENNETT. But the minister must know that the site on which the armoury is built in the city of London is a splendid site. It is on a corner, and there are very handsome dwellings near it. Surely property in the bright city of London must have a very low value if it is to be compared with property in a town like Alexandria. I am sure the hon. minister has never been there or he would not have concurred in this price.

Mr. HYMAN. I do not know where the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) got his information in regard to the cost of the London site for the drill hall; but my recollection is that it cost over $20,000. It is quite true that it was purchased from seven or eight different people.

Mr. BLAIN. I will read the words of my hon. friend from London, which will be found on page 641 of 'Hansard' of last year. He said:

I fancy the site was bought from eight or ten different people who owned different portions of this land.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a memorandum that the site was purchased from several different parties. The total cost was $5,507.

Mr. HYMAN. Is that what the hon. minister said, or what I said?

Mr. BLAIN. That is what the hon. minister said.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The reporter left out a 2. It should have been $25,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is very kind of of my hon. friend to put it on the 'Hansard' reporter; but is he sure that he did not read it that way last year? I believe it is in the revised 'Hansard.'

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Whatever I might be guilty of, I would not be guilty of making a mis-quotation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The policy of the government in regard to the erection of these buildings seems to be a little peculiar. In a small town or village in the country, where it would be cheaper to provide for the public service by renting, the project is to build and increase the public expenditure as much as possible in that way. In large cities, where it would be much cheaper to have a building instead of paying enormous and sometimes excessive rents, the government propose to pay rents in order again, I suppose, to increase the public expenditure. I cannot conceive any other reason for it. Perhaps the hon. minister could state what the policy really is. I am stating what it seems to be.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend was in the House last evening when we were discusing the appropriations for the city of Ottawa, he would know that the policy of the government as announced then was that we should purchase the ground and erect these buildings as soon as possible. I am inclined to think that we should make a very special effort to procure ground in the city, where we may from time to time erect the buildings we require.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have been in Alexandria myself, and was very much surprised to hear it called a town. It is a very ordinary village, and has not a single manufacturing establishment. I do not know what land is worth there, but in the village of Brighton, on the Grand Trunk Railway, which is one of the most prosperous in the county I have the honour to represent, and in which there is one of the largest canning factories in the Dominion, and where there is storage capacity for fruit greater than in any town or city in the Dominion, land is worth much less than the price paid for this lot. I was at a sale there not long since, where there was offered for sale nearly an acre of land, with house, comprising one-half acre of orchard, well cultivated, and the price obtained at auction was $1,650. I would advise the hon. minister, when one of those villages which nobody knows anything about except the residents, wants a public building, he should impose the condition that the municipality should furnish the site. If he would do this, he would get rid of a good many of the applications of friends who want to dispose of lots to the government. In Campbellford, East Northumberland, we have several manufacturing industries and a population considerably larger than that of this village, and if the hon. minister will put a vote in the estimates to build a public building there, I will venture the assertion that the town will furnish him with the site, and he won't require to put anything like $18,000 in the estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. Coming back to this question in connection with the city of London, I find that the size of the lot that was purchased is 252 by 120. Did the hon. minister say that the figures in 'Hansard' were a mistake ,and that the total cost of the site was $25,000 ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site was purchased before I took office, and I have my information from my deputy minister. The total cost of the site was $25,700.

Mr. BLAIN. If that be correct, we are to understand that the total cost of the site in London, on one of the chief streets—a corner site—is about $80 a foot, and that a site in the town of Alexandria, where the population is less than 2,000, cost more than $80 a foot. I have here the figures of the purchase of the site in London : B. Caravella, $3,000 ; H. E. Crouch, $5,000 ; H. J. Durkin, $1,462 ; D. Fraser, $3,000 ; J. Howe, $1,838 ; total, $14,300.

Mr. HYMAN. That is only a part of the site. There was some ground purchased afterwards.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the hon. minister state how much the site did cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes. If my hon. friend wants a lot of figures. I can give him nothing better than the figures furnished by the accountant of the department, showing what was actually paid out. That will be more reliable than taking what is paid out in one year and another or in taking quotations from 'Hansard.' I shall be glad to furnish the hon. gentleman with the exact figures.

Mr. HENDERSON. If property purchased by the government is to cost the price paid in Alexandria, then the government had better not erect any more public buildings in any part of the country. I do not see why we should compare a site in Alexandria with one in London. We can find other places which will furnish a much fairer comparison. In the village where I live, there has not been any sale of property similar to that in Alexandria for some years, but some five years ago a property was sold in the very centre of the village for $1,000. It is possible that property has increased there in value since, but it has not increased to the extent of 50 per cent, and that particular site to which I have referred would not sell to-day for $1,500. I do not see, therefore, how property in Alexandria, which cannot compare, as an enterprising village, with the village of Acton, in which I live—in which we have one industry alone in which there is fully three-quarters of a million dollars invested—can be worth so much more. The hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) knows something of the extent of the Beardmore tannery and the number of people they employ, and can therefore form some idea of the village to which I refer. I remember that a few years ago that industry had in one instance no less than sixty-eight car-loads of hides on the road from Boston to Acton at the same time, and it is not unusual for forty cars to arrive there in a single day for that firm—forty car-loads of raw material, hides and bark. A village with an enterprise of that kind would be one in which we would naturally expect property to have a fair value.

This is not the only enterprise. There is another establishment employing from 150 to 200 hands. It is devoted to the manufacture of gloves, was established twenty years ago and has a reputation from one end of this Dominion to the other. It is a permanent institution, on a sound financial basis, and has a great effect in giving a permanent value to real estate in that village. So, I say that in no way does the town of Alexandria compare favourably with the village of Acton as a place where property would be likely to have a permanent value. I think this is a fair way to arrive at a conclusion as to whether this property was bought at a fair valuation or not. About five years ago, a property in Acton was sold at $1,000. It had a frontage of 66 feet on the main street of the town, and a depth of 90 feet. Reducing these lots to square feet, for the purpose of comparison, I find that five years ago 17 cents per square foot was paid in the village of Acton, while for land in the town of Alexandria the government is actually paying $1.27 per square foot. Even granting that this Alexandria property is situated in the central part of the town, yet it is not so enterprising a place or one in which properly should have so high a value as the village of Acton. It does seem to me that a difference of $1.10 per square foot in favour of Alexandria is more than should be allowed even by the government. I admit that property in Acton to-day has probably a greater value than it had five years ago, but I do not suppose that any man would expect an advance of more than 50 per cent in that time—say $1,500 for a lot to which I have referred, or about 25 cents or 26 cents per square foot—as against $1.27 per square foot in Alexandria. I am afraid the Minister of Public Works has allowed some one to impose upon him. I do not pretend to say that it is any officer of his department, nor do I say that it is the member of the riding. But I do say that we on this side of the House are perfectly justified in spending two or three hours of the time of this committee in drawing public attention to what I must characterize as a positive outrage. I am not going to reflect upon the minister, because I think that, with the numerous duties he has to perform, he has had no opportunity to look into the matter. His officers, I think, possibly, were engaged in many ways, and may not have had time to warn the minister against being imposed upon by persons interested in getting more from the government than they are entitled to. I am sorry, for the credit of the hon. gentleman, (Mr. James Sutherland) for whom I have every respect, and who, I am sure, desires to manage his department in the public interest, that this purchase has been made, for it reflects very much upon him and upon the good name which he has borne throughout the country.

Mr. CLARKE. I made some inquiry last year about the awarding of contracts upon tenders sent into the department, and was informed,—and very accurately—by the Minister of Public Works that the contract in that case was not given to the gentleman whose tender was lowest, and that this had been decided, upon the advice of the chief architect. Of course, I absolved the minister from blame when he presented the recommendation of the chief architect as his justification. In this case we are presented with another report from the chief architect. Of course, I do not question the accuracy of that gentleman's statement. But, I think that when we are asked to depend upon these statements, we should have the fullest information. We should have full information as to the assessment of the property, the size of the site, the rate the government is paying for premises now occupied in the town, and so on. It is hardly fair to ask the opposition to accept the bald statement of the chief architect and let it go at that. It is not unreasonable to ask that, if the hon. minister is going to refer us to the chief architect, he should give instructions to that officer that much fuller information should be brought down than we have received in this case.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I can say in all candour that no political influence was brought to bear in the purchase of this lot. Nor do I wish to avoid the responsibility for having certified the purchase after hearing the explanations of the chief architect. I believe he did the best he could to get the property at a fair price. I am not prepared to speak definitely at the moment, but I believe I am correct when I say that the present owner of the property is not even a supporter of the government. The purchase was made after full and careful investigation, and, we believe, was in the public interest. I assure my hon. friend that there is not the slightest ground for any suggestions that any personal or political considerations influenced the choice of this site in preference to any other. I confess that I was a little disappointed in the remarks of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). I thought that when I was able to show that I could erect two buildings, if not three, for the sum originally spent in one, he would give me credit for moving in the right direction. However, I have been doing the best I could. I am sure that hon. members will agree with me that mere comparisons of prices of property do not justify us in coming to a conclusion on such questions as this. We all know that there are locations in every city, town and village the prices of which are much higher than those of adjacent lots, owing to the location. There is no doubt that the prices at which the government can buy property are apt to be high. This is true not only of the government, but of corporations and even of some individuals. Every hon. gentleman knows that when a bank wants a favourable location in a town or village, or even when a merchant wants a favourable location, they have to pay the price that is asked, and that price has not always a very clear relation to the price of property alongside. The price in this case is high, there is no doubt. It might have been a few hundred dollars less, or even one half less, if there had been other sites available. But the other sites were built upon. In this case, the owner took his buildings off to give us the lot. I do not think it reasonable to characterize as an outrage the paying of such a price as this for property in any reasonably prosperous village in the province. However, it was bought upon its merits, in the belief that it was the best lot that was offered.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of course my hon. friend (Mr. Jas. Sutherland) will remember that a government has always a check by reason of its power to expropriate so that it is not driven in the same way as a private individual is driven, to buy a lot at the price at which it might be offered. If my hon. friend will consider for a moment what this price really amounts to, when compared with the price paid in London, he will see that this lot, which is 42 x 65 feet, has an area of 2,730 square feet, while the lot in London which is 252 x 120 feet contains 30,240 square feet. The area of the London lot is more than eleven times greater than that of the Alexandria lot, whereas the price paid for the London lot is only a little more than seven times greater than the price paid for the Alexandria lot. In other words you paid for your lot in Alexandria, a comparatively small village, $1.27 per square foot and in London, a city of, I suppose, 50,000 people, you paid 85 cents a square foot. That is to say you are paying in the village of Alexandria 50 per cent more than you are paying in the city of London. That seems to be a very extraordinary position of affairs and I cannot understand it. I am not suggesting any political pull, but I do suggest that the prices do not compare with one another in the way they should. You would suppose you could get a lot in Alexandria for one half what you can in London, but you are paying 50 per cent more. I am sure that will strike the Minister of Public Works as a very curious thing.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will inquire into the price of land per foot in the business part of the city of London he will find that land as centrally situated in London as this is in Alexandria is very much more expensive.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Jas. Sutherland) mean that the price in London is very low ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, but the site for the armoury in London is not as central, comparatively, as this site in Alexandria. I have not had any experience lately in the frontage prices of some of the best corners in London, but I am sure if my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will take the trouble to ascertain the prices at which land is now changing hands there he will find that a lot similarly situated will cost seven times more per square foot than this lot in Alexandria.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Nevertheless, I understand that this site in London is not very far from the centre of the city. You would suppose that land even in that part of the city of London would be much more expensive than in this village or town of Alexandria.

Mr. INGRAM. What principle guides the hon. minister (Mr. Jas. Sutherland) in selecting a village, town or city where a post office or public building is to be erected ? Is it population or revenue or what.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is a pretty hard question to answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why not be honest and say there is no principle.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I might be more honest and say we are following too closely the principle that was practised in the past. We endeavour to have regard to the importance of the town.

Mr. INGRAM. I am afraid the principle governing the hon. gentleman is rather elastic and depends chiefly on the political complexion of the district for which the building is asked. If it is a matter of revenue I see that in Alexandria the receipts are very limited. I see the salary of the postmaster comes to $780, allowances $80 and rent, fuel and light, $120. What the hon. minister proposes to expend there is, first, $3,500 on a lot and then $13,000 on a building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, no. My hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) is very critical when he thinks that $3,500 is outrageous, and yet he makes a mistake in that one quotation of nearly $3,000. I have said some ten or twelve times that the contract price of the building is $10,700.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not hear the figures before. Now there is $3,500 for the lot, and $10,700 for the building. Does that include the fixtures in the building ? I venture to say I am well within the mark when I speak of $13,000 for the building and fixtures. I think that my figures will be found more correct than those of the minister.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have said that the estimated cost was $18,000 and the cost of the building is $10,700.

Mr. INGRAM. I have been trying to get at the principle which guided the hon. minister in selecting Alexandria as a place in which to build a public building. It certainly is not revenue because there are other places that should receive a public building ahead of Alexandria. Alexandria certainly does not come first on the ground of necessity, because during the past ten years it has increased in population only by some 210 people all told. Therefore it cannot be on the ground of an increasing population that you want extra accommodation. In my own constituency of East Elgin we have a live, up-to-date town, Aylmer West, which is a perfect little city with all the conveniences of a city, and yet I find the government have a rented post office there with an allowance for rent, light and fuel of $180. As between Aylmer and Alexandria, if it is a question of revenue or necessity, Aylmer should certainly be placed ahead of Alexandria. If the hon. gentleman says it is because Alexandria sends a supporter of the government and East Elgin sends an opponent, then we can understand the reason. I remember a good many years ago the hon. minister found a great deal of fault with the Conservative government for not erecting a public building in Woodstock, and perhaps the hon. gentleman was justified in doing so, but he charged the government with erecting public buildings for political effect, and that it was by reason of Oxford not sending a supporter of the government of the day that they refused to erect a public building at Woodstock. Now the chickens have come home to roost and my hon. friend (Mr. Jas. Sutherland) is in exactly the same position as that for which he blamed the Conservative party in those days, when he said that these buildings were located on account of political pull and not on account of necessity. We understand it now and shall not profess to expect anything else than what was carried out under the old regime, namely, the pull.

Belleville armoury, $10,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is this ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am sure my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) will not accuse me in this case of asking parliament to vote a sum of money to provide a public building at Belleville on account of political pull, or as a result of the support we receive in West Hastings. The plans are being prepared. We own the site in Belleville, or at least, there is some exchange being made with the city. I am not sure whether this has been completed or not. It is being done through the Department of Militia. The estimated cost of this building, including heating, boilers, fittings, furnishings and all that sort of thing, will be $49,000, or under $50,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the size of the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The plans which are under preparation will call for the construction of a building with walls of not less than 75 x 100 feet with a lean-to armoury 75 x 54 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. Minister of Public Works carrying out what the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence said last year was the policy of the government in regard to the repairs of drill sheds throughout the country ? I see that there are several armouries that are provided for in these estimates. There is one at Belleville, Chatham, Cobourg, Guelph, London, Stratford, and some other places. Years ago there were very respectable drill sheds built all over the country, but for many years they have been allowed to become dilapidated or destroyed and no effort has been made to keep them up. I have many times thought it unwise to allow these buildings to remain as they were. They are valuable property, but through some change in the Department of Militia regulations, the arms are stored at one place instead of being kept at the headquarters of the different companies and the result has been that these buildings have been allowed to go to waste. The hon. minister said last year that the government intended to fix them up. Would the duty devolve upon the Department of Public Works or the Department of Militia and Defence, and is there any money provided for that purpose ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The buildings of the class to which the hon. gentleman refers are under the Department of Militia and Defence. In many cases they were built in conjunction with the municipal authorities, the title remained with the municipal authorities and that is one of the reasons why these frame buildings were not kept up as they should have been. The votes which the hon. gentleman refers to are for buildings in the larger towns and small cities throughout the country. We are trying to provide a moderately priced building which will give the necessary accommodation to the militia force in these different places. In this particular case there is the 15th Regiment of Argyle Light Infantry, and No. 7 company of the 49th Hastings Rifles. In some of the other places they have artillery also. The buildings are all intended to be substantial and permanent while the cost will be much lower than that of buildings which we have been in the habit of erecting for this purpose. The vote my hon. friend refers to is the vote of $35,000, for small armouries many of which have been built throughout the country in outlying places to provide quarters for one or two companies and for the protection of the equipment. These buildings have become especially necessary on account of the improved rifles that are now being used. This rifle costs $22, and if it is not taken good care of it will soon be destroyed, so that a number of buildings are now being erected where required throughout the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister has given no information in regard to what I desire to find out.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I said these buildings were under the Department of Militia and Defence. My hon. friend can get a list of these that are being renewed.

Mr. SPROULE. You put one class of buildings under the Militia Department and the other under the Department of Public Works. Why do you separate them ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. At the time of confederation some of these buildings existed under the provinces, they were then placed under the control of different departments, and there has been no particular effort to consolidate these works under the Department of Public Works, with the result that some of them have been retained under the care of the Department of Militia and Defence. I will mention this matter to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and he will no doubt be able to make a statement in regard to the class of buildings to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is only $15,000 to be voted to repair these buildings all over the province, the sum is quite inadequate. For instance, in my own district there are Meaford, Thornbury, Flesherton, Durham and various other places where there are drill sheds and very respectable companies, and I think their arms should be stored at these places. These buildings have all been allowed to go into decay and no effort has been made to repair them. I understood the hon. minister to say last session that it was the settled policy of the government to repair these buildings, but they have done nothing in regard to them, because I notice that all these large votes are being taken for the armouries and there is nothing said about the drill sheds throughout the country. The companies that belong to the country villages, to my mind, are always starved for the benefit of the cities. The great eclat of military life is found in the cities, larger expenditures are made on armouries, equipment and everything else there, and the sterling rank and file of the militia which is always drawn from the country has very small pay, has very little money spent upon it and has very poor accommodation.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. As far as my memory serves me there is not a new vote in these estimates at all. The votes we are considering now are renewals of amounts voted last session or such portion of them as, within the opinion of the architect or engineer of the department, we would not be able to expend before the 30th June.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think it makes the slightest difference whether they are new votes or revotes. I am talking about the policy.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I did not intend that as an answer to the hon. gentleman but I wished to make the statement because some hon. members have spoken to me in regard to some applications for the consideration of estimates. I make this statement so that hon. members of this committee may understand that none of the new applications are being considered in the present estimates. I will get the hon. gentleman a statement from the Department of Militia and Defence.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works what policy the government has in regard to the distribution of this expenditure that we are dealing with in this vote. For instance, I see that all the important places in the province have been favoured with either a drill hall or an armoury. Is that in accordance with the policy of the government or is it merely the result of party pressure? I would like to ask a question referring to what my hon. friend who sits beside me (Mr. Ingram) said in regard to a political pull. The town of Sarnia would be very glad to share in the distribution of this patronage. It has now the pull. We have an able and amiable gentleman representing the riding now and I hope he will be able to enlist the sympathies of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Perhaps he will tell me what the policy of the government is in regard to such expenditures.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The policy of the government is set forth very well in the estimates. My hon. friend will find that the majority of these votes for armouries provide for expenditures to be made in constituencies not represented in this House by supporters of the government so that these votes cannot be said to be based upon political influence. As far as these votes are concerned they have been put in at the instance of the Department of Militia and Defence and the policy of the government is to grant them where they are most required, irrespective of politics.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. CLANCY. Take the city of Chatham, the town of Cobourg, the city of Guelph and the city of London, and they are represented by supporters of the government.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am sure my hon. friend would not object to armouries being built in the places he mentioned. In the vote now under discussion we have Belleville, Stratford, St. Catharines, all represented by gentlemen who do not support the government. It is hardly fair to mention the other places, because they have been under consideration for several years. The votes passed this session and last are at all events sufficiently divided to show that the policy I have spoken of has been carried out. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has any place to point out to the Department of Militia where buildings are required, and if the Militia Department recommends them, I will be most glad to carry out that recommendation irrespective of any political consideration.

Mr. CLANCY. If I can have any assurance that the fact that I indicate these places will not endanger a vote for them, I will take an early opportunity of informing the minister as to some places which are quite deserving. I do not complain of the votes which are now being passed, and I will take the minister at his word and trust that I will not be disappointed after having received such a kind invitation.

Mr. INGRAM. In the report of the Minister of Militia of last year mention was made that the Militia Department would take charge of the building of these military structures. Has the government decided to take that away from the Public Works Department, too?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I never heard of the proposition before. Do you refer to the erection of buildings?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If that is in the report, it escaped my notice. It is not the policy of the government to make any change in that direction at present.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Has any application been made to the minister to fix up the grounds around the armoury at St. Thomas? These grounds are in a very bad state and unfit for the soldiers to drill on. Has that been brought to the attention of the minister, and will he have the work done?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I had no requisition with regard to that.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON. Very well, I will make the request now.

Berlin, public building, $6,500.

Mr. CLARE. I can compliment the Minister of Public Works on the work that has been done in improving the post office in Berlin. I must say, however, that that building should have been enlarged to a greater extent than it has been. The town of Berlin is a fast growing town of 12,000 inhabitants, and in a few years it will be absolutely necessary to further increase the post office accommodation, if the money which is now expended is to be of any avail. I may mention to the minister that I understand that the town of Galt has asked that the post office in that town should be enlarged to a considerable extent. It is too small as it now is, and I regret that there is not an item in the estimates to improve it. Is it the intention of the government to enlarge the post office at Galt ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is very pleasant to hear from my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) that the town of Berlin is growing so fast that we will have to spend still more money in enlarging its post office. I trust that the improvements which are now made will meet the immediate requirements of the citizens. This is one of the cases in which the government cannot be charged with spending money in the constituency of a supporter, because my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) is certainly not a supporter of the government. When the hon. gentleman can show us that Berlin has outgrown the present building, we will take that into consideration and perhaps give him a new one, if the old building cannot be further enlarged. I may state that a representation has been received from the city of Galt with regard to the state of the public building there, and the representation will be considered. There are no new votes for the year 1904-5 in these estimates. Whatever is done in that year will be brought down in the supplementary estimates. I am not in a position now to make any promise, because I do not know what the Council may decide to do, but I have under consideration the request that has been made from the town of Galt.

Bowmanville, public building, $15,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How much has been spent on these buildings, and how much will be required to complete them ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total expenditure is about $15,000, and the total amount required is $14,701, making the total cost of the building, to complete, $29,701.

Mr. HENDERSON. The question was raised a short time ago as to what policy the government had as to the location of public buildings. Whatever may have induced the government to erect a building in Alexandria, or Belleville, or Berlin, there is no question as to their policy in erecting this building in Bowmanville. Two years ago there was an election in West Durham, and the chief appeal to the electors was : Support Robert Beith, the Liberal candidate, and secure a public building in Bowmanville. It was a bribe or inducement held out to the people to elect Mr. Beith ; the inference being that if they did not elect Mr. Beith there would be no public building in the town. I am glad to say that in this one instance the government have kept their pledge.

Brantford, drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is a revote of $10,000. Some years ago the city of Brantford granted $10,000 and the government $10,000, and an armoury was built in that city. There is a splendid corps in Brantford, and that armoury is found not to be large enough. It is now proposed to increase it.

Bridgeburg, public building, $8,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is a vote that was authorized last session.

Mr. CLARKE. Was the site presented to the government ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, but I do not think my hon. friend will criticise me in this case, because we succeeded in securing a site 76 feet by 134 feet for $700.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the population of that place ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have not the population ; but this building is not being erected on account of the population of the place, but on account of its being a border place where a large customs business is being done.

Mr. CLANCY. I should imagine that village property is very high there. I am told that the population is 1,350, and the hon. gentleman seems to be prepared to congratulate himself on having got a lot there for $700. Perhaps by comparison with Alexandria it is a capital bargain, but I should imagine that you could buy half a dozen lots in most of these small places for that amount of money. Why do you require a public building in so small a place as that ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend authorized this as a member of the House last session, when a full explanation was given. It is a kind of station between Canada and the United States. The building is required for the accommodation of the staff of customs officers kept at that point, and we are utilizing the lower floor for a local post office.

Mr. CLANCY. How much is collected at that port ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The postal revenue is $8,598.39 and the customs revenue $285,349.75.

Mr. BENNETT. Will there be any quarters for police fitted up in this building ? I think it is at Bridgeburg that the prize fights under the patronage of the Ontario government are carried on.

Chatham, armoury, $10,000.

Mr. CLANCY. What progress has been made with this armoury? This is a revote which has been taken on two occasions?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I understand that the city has furnished a site. Plans are now being prepared.

Mr. BENNETT. I saw it stated a little while ago in one of the newspapers of Orillia that an armoury is to be built there by the Dominion government. Is that correct?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have no information as to that.

Clinton, post office, $1,500.

Mr. JAS SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the cost?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total cost, including the site, is $17,245. The site cost $2,500. It is 168 feet by 60 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the post office gone in occupation of the building?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, it is fully completed.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the salary of the caretaker?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The postmaster is the caretaker. He resides in the building, and is allowed $50 for taking care of it.

Cobourg, armoury, $20,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What is this to cost?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total cost in round figures will be $50,000. The amount of the contract is $35,550.

Mr. CLARKE. Was the site given by the town?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, it was purchased at a cost of $4,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Are all the companies of the Northumberland and Durham battalion accommodated at this armoury, or will it furnish accommodation simply for two or three companies?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It will accommodate the field battery, the garrison artillery, and an infantry battalion, but I do not know how many companies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the Minister of Militia can tell us how many men are to be accommodated in this armoury?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the infantry regiment has eight companies, which would number 320 or 330 men. The artillery would probably number 100 men. I cannot give the number exactly from memory.

Mr. INGRAM. Last year or the year before, in the report of the Minister of Militia, the suggestion was made that the care of all the armouries should be transferred from the Public Works Department to the Militia Department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The acting engineer of the Militia Department suggested that that would be desirable, but it has not been done.

Mr. INGRAM. The reason I ask the question is that if the Minister of Public Works is to be robbed in this way both by the Department of Marine and the Militia Department, I am afraid he will have very little left; and having a good deal of respect for him, I protest against his being treated in this way.

Mr. CLANCY. How is it that in Cobourg the government purchases a site while Chatham gives a free site? Has the hon. gentleman made it a condition in some places that before they can get public buildings they must offer a free site, or is it a matter of bargaining? Has the government any policy in dealing with municipalities as to the acquirement of sites?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There seems to be no rule followed. As the hon. gentleman suggests, it is a question of bargain. Where an offer of a suitable site is made, it is usually accepted by the department.

Mr. CLANCY. Does it not seem proper that when Chatham furnishes a good site free, Cobourg should do the same?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I understand I was quite right in saying that Chatham had offered a site for the purpose.

Mr. CLANCY. Was any demand made on Cobourg?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not think so.

Mr. CLANCY. Then the burden is placed on the shoulders of those who are willing to bear it. Either Chatham got too much or Cobourg too little.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is quite possible, that the town of Chatham would rather give the site and have the building located on that site than have another one purchased, but there has been no hard and fast rule adopted by the department.

Mr. McGOWAN. I understand that in the town of Guelph where you are building an armoury, the department insisted on the city furnishing the site.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend will bring that up when that particular item is submitted we can discuss it.

Mr. CLARKE. What property was purchased, and at what price and what are the dimensions?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The property is known as the Gowan property, and the price, I think, was $4,000. The size of the lot is 58 by 292.

Mr. BLAIN. How much will be the total cost of the armoury ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In round numbers, $50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year the hon. gentleman said that $20,000 would complete the building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If I did say so, I was misinformed. It is quite possible, if I referred to the Cobourg armoury last year, that I might have said I expected the building would be erected for $20,000 to $25,000, but since then we have changed the plans and decided to furnish accommodation for the artillery.

Mr. BLAIN. But according to the first estimate given last year, the original cost was to have been $15,000, but, owing to the increased accommodation necessary, the hon. gentleman said he would have to ask for $20,000. Now we are asked for almost $50,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It was not intended then to make provision for the artillery, but only for the infantry.

Mr. CLANCY. Last year the hon. minister obtained a sum to erect a public building which was to cost $15,000, and this year he asks us to vote $50,000 for that same building. If he had not spent any of last year's vote, I could understand his coming back and telling us that the plans were changed and asking for a larger vote, but when he decided to change the plans and erect a much more expensive building, he should have waited for the consent of this House to the change before spending any money.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Of course, it would be wrong, when asking for a vote, to misrepresent the total cost, but I take my estimates to a great extent from the officials of my department, and I have always endeavoured to give most accurate information. I had no intention of deceiving the House, and if the original plan had been carried out, the amount voted would have been sufficient, but the changes made, I am satisfied, this House will unanimously support as being in the interests of the different branches of the militia, and I felt warranted in going on with the work as the House had consented to its being undertaken.

Mr. CLANCY. I understand that the government had purchased a site suitable for the erection of the building and the total cost was to be $15,000, but that since then they purchased a new site and abandoned the old plan. In that case they should have submitted a new vote and not done anything until that vote was passed.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do think that, when we were authorized to go on with a certain work, we were warranted in using our best judgment in the public interest, and I think that we took the best course in the interests of the public.

Mr. CLANCY. I am not criticising the relative advantages of the two plans, but the conduct of the hon. gentleman in entering upon new expenditures without previously submitting it to the approval of the House.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the government own an old armoury in Cobourg separate from the premises we are now discussing. Has the government disposed of that armoury ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not recollect any such property, nor do the officials of my department.

Mr. BLAIN. It was brought out in the discussion of the question last year and the minister said it had not been sold. As to the increased cost the reasons which the minister gave to-night are reasons that were given last year for an increase from $15,000 to $20,000. This is what the minister said :

> The original contract was $15,000, but since that time the headquarters of the Durham field battery were moved to Cobourg. This makes it necessary to provide for more accommodation in the armoury, but the amount voted, we expect, will complete the work.

Now, instead of $20,000 the minister asks for nearly $50,000, without any further explanation than he gave last year.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. As I understand it, the building we had under consideration would not suit at all and we have not taken it. This is a new site and a new building.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand the explanation to be that the minister found that that site and building were not suitable, and so he proceeded to do something for which he had not received the consent of parliament and which involves the expenditure of about $20,000 more. I do not know whether this is the practice or not, but it seems to me hardly reasonable to incur expenditure until explanations have been made to parliament and a specific sum voted.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I agree with that.

Deseronto, public building, $500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. What is this work to cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total expenditure in connection with this is $40,808.04.

Dominion public buildings—rentals, improvements, repairs, &c., $12,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is the usual vote covering the whole province of Ontario for maintenance of public buildings.

Mr. INGRAM. Has any report been made about St. Thomas post office and any proposed change there ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We have spent about $225 lately on repairs around the St. Thomas building.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the department were going to make some change in the entrance, because, as the building now is, a very few people crowd the building so that it is difficult to get at the delivery wicket.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I will look into that matter.

Fort William, public building, $8,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the building.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the total cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total cost, including heating apparatus and furniture, will be $33,608.

Mr. CLARKE. What did the site cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site was contributed by the municipality.

Mr. BLAIN. What was the contract price of the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract price of the building was $20,400. Additional work had to be done on the foundation. Piles had to be driven, and the contract price for this was $2,340. The heating apparatus was furnished by contract, the amount of which was $1,705. The tender for the fittings was $3,600.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister seems to have difficulty in making himself heard because of the hoarseness from which he is suffering. We have done a pretty good day's work, and I think we should stop at this.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I admit that I have a pretty severe cold and I apologize to the hon. gentlemen for the difficulty they have in hearing me. But I would appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), who is leading the opposition that, as the votes that have to come are not controversial, and practically all of them were discussed at great length last session, we might get through with them before we adjourn. I am ready to give full information as to these matters. I thought that, perhaps, having given away last night to oblige some of our friends opposite, and having postponed the consideration of items to accommodate our Quebec friends to-night, we might proceed with some more of these items.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not out of consideration for members on this side, but because of the state of the minister's throat that I suggested that we might stop now. There is a good deal to be said about some of the items we are approaching, it may be necessary for him to talk a good deal. I think if we vote this item and the next one, that for the Guelph armoury, we shall have done very well.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If that is the desire of the hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not wish to press the matter.

Guelph armoury, $20,000.

Mr. McGOWAN. How much is this building to cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. After some negotiation, an agreement was made to purchase the site from the city for $5,000. I understand that it is worth much more money.

Mr. McGOWAN. Do the government get the whole block where the old armoury was ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, I think we shall require the whole of it. The different branches of the militia at Guelph require a good deal of room for their accommodation. There are two field batteries, I understand, besides the city corps.

Mr. McGOWAN. How much is this building to cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am unable to give the hon. gentleman a clear statement of cost, because of the exceedingly large accommodation required for the guns. Although not a particularly expensive part of the building, so much room must be provided for the guns, that it increases the expense very much.

Mr. CLARKE. There is only an ordinary field battery there ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Two, and I am not sure that it is not intended to have the headquarters of another one there.

Mr. INGRAM. I thought one company was at a place called Morristown, ten or twelve miles from Guelph.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am told that the guns are to be kept at Guelph. My hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden) may know.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there any guns kept in Guelph ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. INGRAM. I thought there were some kept about twelve miles out.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They may be now but I think the intention is to bring them in.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. They have the 30th Regiment there, one of the best rifle regiments in Canada.

Mr. McGOWAN. What is the necessity of any such expenditure as this in Guelph ? I was discussing this matter with some of the officers there and they thought it would be better to make the expenditure at the headquarters of the company. There is no company belonging to the regiment in Guelph at all. I think the hon. minister ought to give us a little more information as to what the cost is likely to be.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. These buildings are erected at the request of the Department of Militia and Defence to meet the requirements of the forces. I have not the information complete and not having the plans prepared I am unable to give a fair estimate of what the cost of this building will be.

Mr. McGOWAN. Then leave it over until we get some information about the cost.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to allow this item to stand if my hon. friend would like to have the estimate of the cost made up. It must necessarily be somewhat rough but it will be very nearly the mark. After a consultation with the officials of the Militia Department I think the chief architect of my department will be able to give a very fair estimate.

Mr. CLARKE. How much is the building to cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am allowing it to stand until I have the estimate made up.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman has promised that before undertaking any public building he will give an estimate to this House of what the cost is to be.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is right, and that is what I propose to do.

Mr. CLARKE. Has there been any change in the programme since last session ? There was a vote of $10,000 last year. Has there been nothing done during the last twelve months except to pay this $5,000 for the site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The balance is a revote.

Mr. CLARKE. There has been no progress made apparently.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No progress except that the site has been deeded to the Crown.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a very loose way of putting sums in the estimate. One would naturally suppose that when this question was submitted to council there would be some conclusion reached, first, as to the needs of the place, and second, as to the cost of the building and the land that would be required to accommodate the needs, and that the hon. minister would then be able to submit these facts to the House. This has evidently passed council without any estimate whatever. We voted last year $10,000 and we are asked this year to vote $10,000 without knowing what the building is likely to cost.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. When my attention was called to the fact that I had no estimate here I said that I was quite willing to allow the matter to stand until that was furnished.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that, but the surprising part is that it has reached this stage without the cost being figured up. We are willing to allow it to stand until you get that information ; in fact, we desire to have it stand, but the surprising part of it is that it should get so far, and yet the government not know what they intend to build nor what the expense is that we are committing ourselves to when we vote the item.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the size of the site that has been deeded to the government for the armoury at Guelph, and what is the size of the sites at Cobourg and Chatham ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The dimensions of the site at Guelph are 178 feet on Huskisson street, 467 feet on Farquhar street and 380 feet on Freshfield street.

Mr. CLANCY. Would the hon. gentleman give me the dimensions of the site at Cobourg ? My object in asking is to ascertain whether there is any uniform rule as to the quantity of land required.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, there is a very great difference.

Guelph public building—addition to, $14,000.

Mr. McGOWAN. What was the original contract for this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The total amount required for this work is $41,303.

Mr. McGOWAN. Is that the amount of the original contract ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That includes the new post office, fittings, heating apparatus and all.

Mr. McGOWAN. Would the hon. minister tell us the amount of the original contract ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $30,595. This vote completes the work.

Mr. CLARKE. How much has been expended ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $28,000.

Mr. McGOWAN. There were a lot of extras were there not ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. They could not be said to be extras, because this additional amount is made up by the additional work required upon the new inland revenue offices, the second story, the post office, fittings, letter boxes, additional heating apparatus, wiring, and fixture for electic light.

Mr. McGOWAN. When is this building likely to be completed ? It was under way last summer.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract calls for completion on the 30th June next.

Mr. McGOWAN. The contractors plant is all around there.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend must know that you could not carry on a large improvement to a big public building without having some plant on the ground and taking some considerable time, but the contract is let to be completed on 30th June.

Mr. McGOWAN. Why was the plant allowed to remain there all winter ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Have they not done work, been working during the winter?

Mr. McGOWAN. They have been working, but not all winter.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I thought they had been working all winter.

Mr. McGOWAN. No, the stone work is not finished.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have not had any complaint from the people of Guelph.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that this is not a new building at all. It is simply raising an old building, putting an additional story to it, and otherwise refitting a building which was erected somewhere about 1875, 25 or 30 years ago. It does seem to me that $42,000 without extras, and I do not know what they will be yet, to refit a good substantial building even in the city of Guelph, is an extraordinary amount. My own impression is that the cost of this addition is one of those extravagant things that are occurring from time to time throughout the country. The hon. minister has not yet held that grip upon the expenditure that he should have. $42,000, to my mind, would have erected a new building on that site. Forty-two thousand dollars is no small sum of money. Building material is not expensive in Guelph. It can be obtained almost within the limits of the city. There is stone, lime, and whatever is required. The lumber may have to be imported from some distance, but Guelph is not a very expensive place to erect a building in, and it does seem to me that an expenditure of $42,000, and possibly $45,000—it may be more—is a very large sum indeed for the character of the improvement which I understand is being made at this place. It is just one of these things that deters members from approaching the government to get some slight improvement in their constituencies, because they feel that the money will be thrown away for lack of proper care and management. My impression is that in the city of Guelph, this building is looked upon rather as a sink hole for money than as an actual improvement. When it is completed, I do not know that it is going to add much to the beauty of the city ; it will be an old building at best and it will not be as ornamental as it might be to the beautiful site in that city which it occupies. I believe it would have been better, had the government torn down the old building and erected a new one, and I am not sure that in the end it would not have been money in their pocket.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot agree with my hon. friend. There is an extra story being put on this building, and the building is being made about half as large as it was before. I must say that for a building of that description, the tender appears to be low in comparison with other tenders which have been received at Ottawa and elsewhere for similar work. I will be surprised if the representation made by all the citizens of Guelph, irrespective of politics, that the accommodation was insufficient and that the improvement was urgently necessary in the public interest, was not well founded.

Mr. INGRAM. The additional expenditure is for putting another story on the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. And increasing the size of the building about one half.

Mr. INGRAM. Well, the building is situated on a gore and unless you buy additional property, you cannot enlarge it without going higher.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The statement I have made is on the authority of the architect who made the plan and specification, and I have no doubt it is strictly correct. I have not been in Guelph for many years, but I should think that the size has been increased just as the architect says.

Mr. INGRAM. I can tell the minister and the architect that I know the place just as well as either of them, and I know that you cannot enlarge the post office at Guelph on the ground.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite agree with the hon. member (Mr. Ingram). The post office in Guelph fronts on St. George's square, and on one side is Wyndham street, a leading street, and on the other side is another street. There is no possibility of its extension towards Wyndham street because it is built to the Wyndham street line ; and there was no possibility of extending it on the other street because they had reached the limit of land that was available. The only possible way it could be extended was to the east, and my recollection is that on that side valuable buildings were erected within a short distance of the post office.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend will permit me to read the description in the contract he will see that he must be labouring under a mistake.

For enlargement of public building Guelph by carrying up the outside walls an additional story, surmounted by an attic and to lengthen the building by 12 feet, and in building a tower, 14 feet square by four stories high, exclusive of the clock and cupola.

Mr. INGRAM. How wide ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The whole width of the building, 12 feet.

Mr. INGRAM. You could not lengthen this on Wyndham street, nor on the other street, nor on the square.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend must be mistaken because the work is going on.

Mr. INGRAM. The two members from the Wellingtons know the place as well as I do, and I have been in the building frequently and have entered it from the small street-going in the back door of the post office. I would like to know where the 12 feet come in.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not think there is any doubt about it, and if my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McGowan) thinks it worth while, I will bring down the plan on Monday, and he can see for himself the improvement made. If the item passes now, and the description is not in accordance with the plan, the discussion can be reopened.

Mr. BLAIN. How much did the building cost without the fixtures ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $30,995.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to point out to the minister that some one is leading him astray. Last year the minister stated that he had sent the chief architect to Guelph to look into the matter, and the chief architect had reported that the total cost of the new building would be $21,000. Let me read what the minister (Mr. Sutherland) then said ('Hansard,' p. 637) :

Guelph—public building, addition to, $21,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For many years the accommodation for the public has been altogether too small. I asked the chief architect to visit Guelph himself and look carefully into the present requirements and a little to the future, so that we might not be called upon to again make any additions. He found that the lowest estimate he could make would come to something over $21,000. I found that to make a temporary addition would not give the public satisfaction and that we should soon be called upon to make further improvements, so that the report of the chief architect was adopted. It will cost us this amount to complete the work. This expenditure is very well warranted from the revenues received from the government at that city.

Now, my hon. friend sends the chief architect to the city of Guelph to look over the place, and he comes back and reports to the minister that the addition will cost $21,000. The minister adopted the chief architect's report, made the statement to the House that $21,000 would complete the work, and now he comes and says the total cost will be $30,900. So I do not think the minister can say that he is living up to his promise that the estimate would not be exceeded. This is a very glaring case.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman's statement is strictly correct. The estimate made by the chief architect was that the cost would be $21,000, and when the plans were prepared and tenders advertised for, the lowest tender was $30,595. My hon. friend will admit that there was really no intention of misleading parliament into a large expenditure. It was a mistake in the estimated cost, and it is much more difficult to estimate the cost of improving or extending an old building than the cost of the new one.

Mr. CLANCY. Surely the hon. gentleman ought to be able to rely upon reports of his own officers. But he has to come before the House and make the rather humiliating acknowledgment that his own architect made an estimate and that the actual cost now turns out to be half as much more. Under these circumstances, the House might reasonably have expected the hon. gentleman to have come back and asked for a new vote under the new conditions that had arisen. I do not know a greater evil in a great spending department, where the temptation to over-expend is very great. I am not accusing the hon. gentleman of having entered into a corrupt bargain ; but there is a deplorable looseness about the whole business which is enough to destroy any great spending department. I think the hon. gentleman should be held strictly to the pledge he makes to the House when he obtains money for a public work, and if he is not able to carry out his pledge he should come back and ask the House for a new vote of money. I think the hon. gentleman should let the item stand until we get a report from the architect. If the officer made a mistake in regard to the cost of the work, is it not possible that he may have made a mistake about the size of the ground ? I think it would be well, before we proceed any further, for the hon. gentleman to give us fuller information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. There was no intention to deceive the House at all.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not say that.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Any business man will admit that when a contract for a work comes to be let there may be a very considerable difference in the amount of it from the estimate made by the architect. I do not want to defend the officials of my department from the consequences of any wrong-doing; but I am prepared to say, in the hearing of this country, that it is the experience of almost every corporation and business man that it is very difficult, especially in the improvement of old buildings, to keep the cost near to the estimate. In this case there was no deception intended on the part of the officials of the department or myself; but in view of the fact that the House was given full information as to what improvements were intended and as to the estimated cost, as near as it could be ascertained, there can be no reason for fault-finding at all. My hon. friend knows that in former years we had buildings estimated to cost $300,000, the cost of which ran up to over $1,000,000. Admitting that in this case the architect was mistaken, I am perfectly satisfied that he was honestly mistaken as to the cost of the work, and I do not think we have any reason to find fault.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it is just as well to make it clear that I have made no attack at all upon the hon. gentleman or upon the officers of his department, or suggested that they did not believe what he stated in the House on that occasion. But when the hon. gentleman discovered the mistake later on he did not feel called upon to take any notice of it, but acted on his own motion without warrant from this House for the new expenditure. The hon. gentleman cannot make the excuse that he was honest in this matter. This kind of honesty is being repeated too often. Does the hon. gentleman not think this House, in voting money for public works, should have something to say as to what would be in the public interest? Surely he does not expect to get $2 and spend $3, and then excuse himself by saying that he acted in good faith. I do not think the reply given is a satisfactory one. We would rather have the hon. gentleman admit that he made a mistake, but instead he attempts to justify himself and pleads that he was honest in the estimate he gave. Such a plea would preclude criticism on everything.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I was not speaking of my own honesty, but of the chief architect's.

Mr. CLARKE. The objection taken by my hon. friend from Bothwell is that when these mistakes are discovered, it does not seem to make any difference, and the department goes on with the expenditure. When parliament passes a vote on the ground that a certain amount would not be exceeded and it is found afterwards that the amount is far from being sufficient, no expenditure should be entered upon without having the consent of parliament to the change.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree that we should not deceive the House by entering into a heavy expenditure after obtaining a vote for a smaller expenditure, but where the mistake has been made by the architect in a comparatively small detail, the government will still be warranted in serving the public interest by going on with the undertaking.

Mr. CLARKE. But the mistake was not a trifling one. If I understand the figures, the expenditure instead of being $21,000 will be $42,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The $21,000, only covered the cost of the building, but this includes the additional lighting and heating caused by the addition of another story and the additional fixtures.

Mr. CLARKE. When that first estimate was made, it was known that additional heatings and furnishings would be required, and the estimate was supposed to cover these. I think my hon. friend from Bothwell is quite right in stating that when a work is to cost double the estimate given, it should not be gone on with until parliament gives its consent to the increased cost.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If this discussion will make the department more particular in the estimate it gives, I shall be well satisfied.

Mr. McGOWAN. Will the hon. gentleman have the reports of the architect brought down, showing the actual estimated cost of the work?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I shall furnish that.

Mr. INGRAM. With regard to these estimates, does the chief architect accept the reports of the local architects instead of visiting the works himself?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That was not done in this instance. The chief architect cannot plead that excuse, because he made a personal visit.

Hawkesbury public building, $12,000.

Mr. JAS SUTHERLAND. Nothing has been expended. The plans are under preparation and the site is not yet purchased.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you going to ask the municipality to give the site? That was the course usually followed under the old regime.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In very few instances that has been done, but the site which the council may offer is not always the one best suited for the purpose.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $12,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I find in 'Hansard' of 1903, page 13119, that the estimate given was $5,000, and in giving that estimate the hon. gentleman said:

This is quite a prosperous place. The last census gives its population as over 4,000. We have not been able to lease or rent any accommodation for the post office, and the people have sent in a large petition for a building. We propose to erect one costing $6,000 or $8,000.

Now we are asked to vote $12,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In this particular case the plans were not made, and I desire to be on the safe side and not be caught again.

Mr. SPROULE. I find that last year the vote was $5,000, and there was a re-vote of $2,000, and this year you are asking $12,000. That would make $15,000. Last year it was to cost $6,000 or $8,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend from East Grey will see that that refers to the building.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has made the broad statement that the people have petitioned and that this is a place of importance, so he gave himself what he thought was a good deal of latitude—$6,000 or $8,000. Now, he tells us he has to put it up to $12,000 or $15,000 to be on the safe side.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend heard me say that that would include the site, the heating apparatus, the fixtures and every other expenditure.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman conceal from the House, when he said in general terms that the people required a public building for this place of 4,000 inhabitants, and the whole cost would be $6,000 or $8,000, that there were other expenditures in connection with the work? The hon. gentleman who asked the question could not have intended to ask merely the cost of the building or the site or the fixtures, but what the whole expenditure would be.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to say to the hon. minister that, so far as I am concerned——

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) will excuse me—questions are often asked as to the cost of the buildings. Of course that has nothing to do with the site or the fixtures. If an hon. gentleman asks what will be the total expenditure that is a different thing.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a fortunate thing for the hon. minister that the gentleman who asked the question did not use the word 'total.'

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend is joking. But I am talking seriously.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are we to understand that $15,000 is to be the total cost of site, building, fittings, heating and wiring, or is this the cost of the bare building?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is the total cost.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now we have that on record. May I ask the minister if he intends this post office building to have rooms for the postmaster's residence and to have two doors, one for entrance and one for exit, to give ample accommodation to the people? Is he going to carry out the improved plan he spoke of so highly in the case of Alexandria.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know about the two doors, but the plan provides for every reasonable accommodation.

Mr. COCHRANE. I was on my feet when the minister desired to speak. I understood that the question was asked what it would cost to complete this building, and I wish to tell the hon. minister that, so far as I am concerned, when he tells me the amount required, I take it that that is all that the country will be called upon to provide for the service. It seems to me that he requires us to be a little too precise in our questions before he will give us the essential information we require, which is to know just what we are committing the country to by votes in this committee. And, while I do not wish to reflect on the hon. gentleman's chief architect or any of his officials, I want to say that if any mechanic with whom I desired to arrange for the building of a house were to make as great a mistake as that which the chief architect made in connection with this building, I should feel like kicking. I do not see how the chief architect could inspect a site, and, knowing that he was spending public money, make a mistake of one-third in the cost of the building. If the chief architect makes such mistakes it would be better to let him stay at home and send some other official. I speak earnestly because I realize that we here are voting the people's money and I am responsible to my constituents for every dollar voted here. I would like to go back to my constituents and answer for my conduct if money were voted in this way and I did not enter an emphatic protest. I think that the minister is trying to carry out his promises, but he cannot do it if he is misled, as he tells the committee he has been by his officials.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to say a word, because I think we should have a better understanding with respect to the rights and duties of both sides. When a proposal is made to parliament for the expenditure of a sum of money, the opposition naturally ask what it will cost the country. And when we are told that it will cost so much, I respectfully submit, we are justified in believing that that is the expenditure that the country is committed to. We ask for the purpose of ascertaining this fact, so that we may judge whether, considering the size of the place and its requirements, we are justified in voting such an expenditure for such a work. But we are constantly told, when we find the expenditures greater than we expected, that the amount stated by the minister referred only to the building. But I think that in future the government ought to understand that what we want is to understand what the country is being committed to for any public work that may be under discussion. I say the government ought to understand this and not fall back upon what I cannot but regard as the very flimsy excuse that when the statement is made that the cost will be so and so this means only the cost of the bare building, not including the land or fittings. Both land and fittings have to be paid for, and they have to be paid for out of the consolidated revenue of the country, and our object in asking the question is to know what the charge against that revenue is to be.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman who is leading the House if, on Monday the government will take up any of its work after the business in charge of the private members is finished, and if so, what ?

Mr. FIELDING. If we dispose of private members business at an early stage we will take up the estimates at the point at which we leave them to-night.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 28, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. CHAMPAGNE presented the second report of the Select Committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates of the House, as follows :—

Your committee recommend that the amanuenses to the official reporters, who, in accordance with the resolution adopted by the House last session, were paid at the rate of $3.50 per day, be entitled to receive the same remuneration for their services for this as well as future sessions.

Mr. SPROULE.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—CORRESPONDENCE.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) laid on the table correspondence with regard to the supplementary contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. SPROULE moved :

That the papers now laid on the table in connection with the Transcontinental Railway amended contract be printed forthwith and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

I might suggest at the same time that it would be very desirable if the government would have printed and distributed the old Bill with the new, so that they might be compared together, and have them circulated before the Easter holidays are over.

Motion agreed to.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS BETWEEN THE DOMINION AND ONTARIO AND QUEBEC.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I promised some days ago to bring down a statement arising from a question put by my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) concerning the adjustment of public accounts between the Dominion and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In the Public Accounts as submitted it is set forth that on the operations of the last fiscal year there was a reduction in the public debt of $6,914,126.01. That is a reduction on the operations of the year as to which there is no question. But the Public Accounts also set forth that there are certain book-keeping adjustments between the Dominion and the provinces which have the further effect of making a reduction of $3,305,450.24. It was as respects that sum that I was to bring down a further statement. I wish to delay the presentation of that statement for some time, for this reason. Although the accounts referred to have been made out by the officials of the Finance Department and approved by the Auditor General's office, when I came to examine the details, doubt arose in my mind as to whether the method followed was the correct one, and before bringing down a statement I would like to have the matter again examined by my deputy, Mr. Courtney, who has been familiar with the accounts for many years. I therefore propose not to bring down the statement, and ask the House to consider the matter as in suspense until Mr. Courtney returns, when I will bring down a statement in accordance with my promise.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the hon. gentleman any doubt as to whether there was a reduction in the debt at all in connection with the readjustment ?

Mr. FIELDING. No doubt, apart from the question of the readjustment of accounts, there was a very substantial reduction of the debt. As to what was the actual effect of the readjustment, that is a matter on which I desire to reserve a final opinion, because, although the accountants of the Finance Department have so certified and the Auditor General's office has confirmed their statement, sufficient doubt has arisen in my mind to induce me not to bring down a detailed statement until I have had the whole subject examined by my deputy, who has been fully conversant with these accounts for many years.

In the absence of the Postmaster General (Hon. Sir William Mulock) I would answer the question on behalf of the Post Office Department as follows:

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

1 and 2. Inquiry is being made as to whether the present post office building at Montreal is sufficient for the requirements of the service, and until such inquiry is completed it cannot be determined what action may be necessary.

3. It is intended at all times to maintain a staff of the strength necessary for the efficient performance of the work of the office.

RETURN OF RUSSIAN JEWS FROM UNITED STATES.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Is the government aware or has its attention been called to the announcement made in the newspapers on Wednesday, March 23rd, that fifty Russian Jews have been returned from Fargo, N.D., to Winnipeg, by the United States authorities ?

Hon. CLIFFORD SIFTON (Minister of the Interior). The attention of the Department of the Interior was called to the announcement that fifty Russian Jews had been returned from Fargo, North Dakota, to Winnipeg by the United States authorities. Nothing further is known of the family referred to.

COTTON PLANT GROWING IN CANADA.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario)—by Mr. Calvert—asked :

1. Is the cotton plant grown for commercial purposes in Canada ?
2. Have any experiments ever been made by the government on any of its experimental farms, or at other points in Canada, to determine whether cotton could be profitably grown ? If so, what were the results ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture).

1. No.
2. From 1890 to 1893 some experiments were made in the growing of cotton at the Central Experimental Farm. Seed of some of the earlier varieties was obtained for the purpose and sown in plots. The seed germinated and the plants grew, and before winter set in they also bloomed, but the frost cut them before any cotton formed. These experiments were repeated for several years with the same results. Cotton plants have been grown in the green-house at the Central Experimental Farm and cotton produced, but no success has attended the efforts to raise cotton in the open air. No experiments with cotton have been conducted at any of the other experimental farms, as the average mean temperature for the growing period is higher at Ottawa than it is at any of the branch experimental farms. The department is not aware that experiments in the growing of cotton have been made at any other points in Canada.

Several parties applied for the production of the order, but it was refused on account of the creditors objecting to its publication and wanting to protect the amalgamation. I am not aware that it has been made public.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs) :

1. The jurisdiction of the collector of customs at Guelph, in respect of the collection of customs duties on postal packages from the United States, extends to such villages and places as are nearer to the customs house at Guelph than to any other customs house.
2. The same rule applies to the jurisdiction of the collector of customs at Listowel as to that of the collector at Guelph in respect of the collection of customs duties on postal packages from the United States.
3. Palmerston appears to be nearer by railway to Listowel than to Guelph.
4. Under the regulations of the customs and postal service, dutiable postal packages from the United States destined for Palmerston should be forwarded to the nearest collector of customs, who in this case is the collector at Listowel.
5. The regulations of the postal and customs service in regard to the transportation of dutiable postal packages apply generally throughout Canada, and are to the following effect, viz :

MONTREAL TURNPIKE TRUST—MOTION FOR ABOLITION.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier) moved:

That the Dominion government, having a controlling interest in the Montreal Turnpike Road Trust, should enter into negotiations without delay with the provincial government of Quebec, that has jurisdiction over said trust, with the view of obtaining the abolition of the present system of toll-gates existing on the island of Montreal.

He said : By this motion I desire to call the attention of the government and the House to a reform which is very desirable, and which though it may be local in its scope, interests a very large number of people in the district of Montreal. The toll-gate system in the neighbourhood of Montreal is replete with so many abuses, that it behooves this government as well as the government of the province of Quebec, to address themselves towards remedying the evil which exists. The turnpike toll system in the neighbourhood of Montreal is a system which has become thoroughly obsolete, and which does not obtain, I believe, in other parts of Canada or in the United States. That farmers, and gardeners, and people generally who have dealings with the city of Montreal can only enter the city by paying toll. It is true these tolls are not excessive ; it is true that under the present system of administration they are necessary in order to obtain sufficient funds to keep the roads in a thorough state of repair. Be that as it may, the system is antiquated and the toll-gate has become a worn out institution. So far as I know, the old-fashioned system of toll-gates has been abolished everywhere in the United States, and I think I am safe in saying that they do not exist in the vicinity of Toronto. People who drive around the mountain of Montreal and who come from other parts of the country, are surprised that we have not long ago abolished the toll-gate system. That system, such as we have it in Montreal, has been established a long time. In fact, I think the legislation which governs the present Turnpike Trust dates from before the establishment of responsible government in our province. The subject of reforming that system has very often been discussed at public meetings and in the public press, and is under discussion at the present time throughout the island of Montreal and even beyond. I have taken some interest in this question since I entered parliament, because it interests the county of Jacques Cartier to no inconsiderable extent. Previous to the existence of this parliament

I moved for statements showing how the present system was managed and with what results financially; and during this parliament on the 3rd of April, 1901, I moved for a return which is the basis of my present remarks, because two other returns which have been since moved for, have not yet been brought down. My hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Leonard) on the 27th of February, 1902, moved for a general statement in regard to the administration of the Montreal Turnpike Trust. No return has been made to that order of the House. On the 30th of March last year I also moved for a statement, which has not been brought down. One of the inconveniences of the present system is the great cost of maintaining the toll-gates. These are, I think, ten or twelve in number. The authorities are obliged to keep two men at each toll-gate, one during the day and one at night, and the cost of maintaining the toll-gates, so far as I have been able to discover from the only statement which has been brought down, amounts to some $10,000 a year, which is equal to nearly one-fourth of the whole revenue of the trust. These toll-gates, as I have already indicated, are a great obstacle to free circulation. They oblige the farmers, gardeners and milkmen, a large number of whom repair to Montreal every morning, to incur considerable expense or curtail the number of their trips. There are other objections to the law as it exists to-day. For instance, in executing work on the roads around Montreal, the trust are not obliged to call for tenders. The meetings of the trust are not public. It has been observed to me that the trust are always ready to admit parties who wish to make representations. No doubt that is true; but the principle of public meetings is not consecrated by law, and therefore it is not possible, except by tolerance, for members of the press or parties interested in the discussions that take place in respect of the roads, to be present as of right. There is no regular form of accounting prescribed by the statute. I believe the Dominion government and the government of the province of Quebec could at any time—and no doubt individuals might also, if they wished—because the gentlemen composing the trust are excellent citizens—obtain a statement of the expenditures on any particular point; and I am now discussing the question upon a statement which was obtained by the Minister of Finance in answer to a motion for a return made in 1901. But I believe—and this is the sentiment in the city of Montreal, and amongst all those outside of the city who are interested in good roads—that we should have yearly under the statute something more regular in the way of a public statement of the expenditure of the trust in all its details, and also of the progress made during the year in keeping the roads in order. The result of that incomplete legislation is that there is very little practical interest taken in the roads. For four or five years the roads have been neglected to a certain extent. The amount expended on them is not at all commensurate with the amount paid into the toll-gates, which probably accounts, in some measure at least, for the unsatisfactory condition of some of these roads. I am perfectly sure that if the remedies which I am about to suggest were adopted, there would be more interest taken in the roads in the vicinity of Montreal, there would be more satisfaction on the part of those interested, and there would be a general improvement in every way.

Now, I wish to point out how, under the terms of the motion which I have submitted, the Dominion government has it in its power to advance the solution of this important question. The Montreal Turnpike Trust is governed by legislation of the province. It is of the nature of a municipal institution, and all legislation concerning that trust since confederation has been passed by the province of Quebec. I refer to some amendments which have been made, because the corporation originally dated from before confederation. The Dominion government, however, at a certain time became possessed of a considerable amount of the bonds of the trust. I believe at one time the bonds exceeded some $500,000; but by some arrangement arrived at between the Dominion government and the members of the trust, previous to 1895, to enable the trust to pay interest on the capital, the debts of the trust, which were quite considerable, were reduced, as I am informed, to the sum of $200,000. So that to-day the only large creditor of that institution is the Dominion government, which holds $200,000 of the bonds of the trust. The position, therefore, at this moment is this—and it is one of the lacunes of the present law—that the Quebec government is represented on the trust by two members, and the Dominion government by three members representing the bondholders, this government being the only holder of bonds.

The control of the trust and its affairs is therefore, one may say, under the direction of the Dominion government through its appointees, and there can be no doubt that any serious reforms in the administration of that body, can only be made with the aid of the preponderance which present legislation gives the Dominion government over the actions of the trust. It will be noticed that there is no representative in the trust acting, directly at least, on behalf of the municipalities. There are two county councils, but they have no right of representation on the trust. There are several municipalities, but they are not represented except in so far as they may be indirectly through the appointments made by both the Provincial and the Dominion governments. Now the present condition of the trust and the necessity for a reform, which would not only tend to the abolition of toll-gates, but greatly improve the state of the roads, and enable a keener interest to be taken in the administration of those roads and popular representations to be more easily made effective, make it necessary for me to point out what the financial condition of the corporation is today and why it is necessary for the Dominion and Provincial governments to take some steps in the way of investigating and reorganizing, not destroying, that corporation, and making it a modern institution capable of carrying out the object which all these trusts have in view. I take the return, which is not very complete, but which gives some important data, and which was brought down on the 3rd of April, 1901. It gives us some idea of the financial condition of the trust from 1892 to 1900. It is evident from that return that the revenue from the trust is not increasing, but tends rather to diminish, whereas the expenses tend gradually to increase. While the expenses of administration and maintenance of toll-gates increase, the amount to be devoted to keeping the roads in good order tends to diminish. In 1892 the tolls gave a revenue of $52,042.80. The expenses of the trust, office and other expenses, amounted to $6,659.54. I have allowed in each year $10,000 for the maintenance of toll-gates. A man has to be paid at each toll some $10 or $12 a week, besides a man engaged to attend to the toll at night, the toll houses are either leased or erected by the trust, kept in good order and supplied with fuel and light. There is no precise indication in the return of the amount expended for those purposes, but I do not think it can be less than $10,000 each year. In 1892, $2,216 was paid in interest, so that, before anything could be spent on the roads out of the $52,000 revenue, $18,875.96 had to be paid for administration and interest. This left about $33,000 for the maintenance of the roads. In 1893, the revenue rose to $58,288.39 and the general expenses, including cost of inspector and sub-inspectors, amounted to $7,792.18. $2,800 were paid on account of debentures and $1,472.73 for interest; and adding the $10,000 for the maintenance of the toll-gates and toll-keeper's houses, you have a total expense in 1893, under the heads I have just enumerated, of $22,064.91. This left to be expended on the roads themselves, $36,223.39, out of a total of $58,000 collected. In 1894 the revenue from the tolls began to diminish. We had in that year a total revenue of $54,223.16. The general expenses of the office amounted to $7,726.29, $3,300 was paid on account of debentures, $1,334.60 for interest, and if you add the $10,000, you have a total of $22,260.89 paid out of the $54,000 before anything else was applied to the roads. This left $31,962.27 to be expended in payment for work done upon the roads. In 1895 the revenue from the tolls was again lowered, only $52,197.15. The office expenses amounted to $6,390.68, $19,900 were paid on account of debentures, $551.67 for interest, and adding the $10,000 for maintenance of toll-gates, you have a total of $36,842.35, which was spent before any money could be applied to the roads. Deducting from the $52,000 that amount of $36,800, and you will find that $15,334.80 were left to be spent in actually improving the roads. In 1896 we find the income from the tolls still diminishing. there was collected in that year the sum of $39,997.02 in tolls. The general office expenses amounted to $7,175.62. Then, $10,500 was spent in interest. Adding to this the $10,000 for the maintenance of the toll-gates, we find a total of $27,675.62 taken out of the whole amount collected that year for expenses other than the maintenance of the roads. The roadway was left with $22,321.40. In 1897 a still continuing diminution of revenue appeared. Only $44,441.11 was collected. The general expenses, as they are termed in the return brought down—and in which reference has been made to another statement which has been brought down—amounted to $13,382.20. The amount paid for interest was $7,368.35. If to that we add to the amount which I have allowed for the yearly maintenance of the toll-gates, $10,000, we find a total of $30,757.55 had to be expended out of the amount collected before anything could be applied for the purpose for which this trust was created, that of keeping the roads in order. The deduction of this large amount leaves for road repairing purposes, out of the general revenue, only $13,690.56. I find, in the statement of the year 1897, to which I have just referred, that a loan of $12,000 had to be made—necessary, no doubt, to supplement what was the amount that could be spent from the yearly revenue for the purpose of keeping the roads in order. An item which I find in that year, 1897, and to which I wish to call the attention of the Finance Minister, is that of $6,825, which appears in the receipts, as an asset, whereas, in reality, that sum was due to the Dominion government for accumulated interest upon the bonds held by the government. In 1898, there was a total collection through the toll-gates of $50,491.47. But we find that the figure for general expenses increased considerably, amounting to $9,591.28. There seems to have been paid in that year for interest the sum of $7,386.52, although no interest whatever was paid to the Dominion government upon its bonds. No doubt, this payment for interest was on current loans, which, in the year 1898, must have amounted to a considerable sum. Now, adding to this amount for general expenses the amount spent for interest and the cost of maintaining the toll-gates, we find a total of $26,977.90 to have been spent for general expenses, leaving for expenditure on the roads themselves only $24,513.57. Again, in 1898, in the receipts figures the item of interest due to the Dominion government upon its bonds—not some six thousand dollars as in the previous year, but $13,650. This, as I say, is entered in the receipts. Whether the Dominion government abandoned to the trust the interest due it in that year as in the previous year, I do not know. But, in 1897, 1898 and 1899, the yearly accumulated interest in favour of the Dominion government appears among the assets instead of among the liabilities of the trust. They seem to have repaid a portion of the loan of $12,000 made in previous years, no doubt to meet current expenses. I have just shown that the income for 1898 was about fifty thousand. It fell in 1899 to $42,755.37. The general expense of the office amounted to $8,124.72. In the return brought down there appears an item of $7,017.48 paid on account of interest. Allowing $10,000 for the maintenance of the toll-gates, you have a total of $25,142.10 to be paid out of the total amount collected, leaving only $17,613.27 to be devoted to the repair of the roads. In 1900 the revenue rose about a thousand dollars, being $43,359.19. The general expenses, what I call the office expenses, continued to be abnormally high compared with the total revenue, being $8,531.12. The trust appear to have paid out in that year $7,359.79 on account of interest. Allowing the usual amount of $10,000 for the maintenance of toll-gates you have $25,890.91 paid for administration purposes, out of a little over $43,000 collected, leaving only $17,468.28 for road work. It must strike every one that when the total amount collected is compared with the amount paid for expenses, the amount left for doing the work for which the tolls are paid is very small. It is manifest that some reform is necessary. In 1900, we see by the statement brought down, there was $27,300 of accumulated interest upon the bonds due to the Dominion government. Among the assets or receipts mentioned in the statement furnished by the trust and brought down by the minister is an overdraft upon the Merchants Bank of Halifax of $6,080.73. This is mentioned as being a receipt. I would suppose, from the statements produced, that this is in order to make the accounts balance.

Now, I have analysed these statements and returns from 1892 to 1900 in order to show the Minister of Finance the position of that trust at present. No doubt those who have followed my explanations will see that the revenue tends to diminish rather than to increase. There are several causes for that. There is more railway communication between Montreal and the neighbouring places, trains are more frequent; electric railways have been built and circulate outside of the city of Montreal, and that is also one of the principal causes which have tended to diminish the income from the toll-gates. The roads through Mount Royal Park have been completed, and that place is resorted to as a driveway much more frequently than formerly. The drive through Mount Royal Park takes the place of what was formerly the principal drive for Montrealers, that around the two mountains. These three causes have tended to diminish greatly the revenue of the trust. I think the Minister of Finance must have been struck with the disproportion between the amount which actually goes into the roads and the amount collected. You have between $42,000 and $45,000 collected, and the cost of that collection, the cost of the administration of the office and the payments made for interest on current loans, leave you with a very small proportion of the revenue collected for maintenance of the roadway. That should not be so.

There is also to be noticed—the House must have noticed as I went along the considerable expenditure on the administration of the office itself. In the report brought down I have not the statement of 1892 contained in the pamphlet which has been annexed to the report, mentioning the officers employed by the trust. There is a secretary treasurer, there is an inspector, there is a solicitor, and an auditor. No doubt added to these—because you have no details of the expenses—there is the rent of the offices occupied by the trust. But it is quite evident that the amount expended under the heading of general expenses has been larger than it might be. I do not mean to say that it could be diminished under the present system. I have no ground of complaint against the trustees themselves; but it seems to me that if this expenditure is necessary, it is proper that the parties interested, the Dominion government and the provincial government, should see whether there is any means of diminishing that expenditure, and giving to the roads themselves a larger amount than that which is at present expended upon them. Since 1892 there has been no great improvement in the roads around Montreal. Some of them have deteriorated considerably. No new roads have been opened. We are in want of new roads around the city of Montreal. We are in want, for instance, of a road starting from Notre Dame de Grâce, leading in the direction of St. Laurent. At the present moment farmers coming from the north by the parish of St. Laurent are obliged to ascend a steep hill, to go up on to the mountain in order to get down directly into the heart of the city. The opening of a new road behind the parish of Notre Dame de Grâce would not involve great expense. The parties require it, it is necessary, but it has not been done. Other roads also are necessary and have been asked for. There has been no capital expended in that regard which would justify the present state of indebtedness of the trust, and the extent of its arrears to the Dominion government; because if, as the Minister of Finance stated to me a moment ago in regard to the previous motion upon the order paper, no interest has been paid upon the bonds since 1895, then the indebtedness of the trust to the Dominion government for interest alone amounts I think to nearly $60,000.

There is therefore no improvement in the roads, no progress in opening up new roads. The burden of all this falls heavily upon the farmer. The farmers are obliged to use the roads when they come to town. Gardeners are obliged, in order to dispose of the produce of their gardens, to make frequent trips to Montreal. Milkmen come in every day. I gather from the return brought down that some farmers have to pay very considerable sums in commutation. If they had to pay the regular toll-gate fees, the amount collected at the toll-gates, they would be obliged to contribute a very considerable amount indeed to this revenue. They have the privilege of commuting, and so far as I can gather from the return, their commutation varies from $30 to $190 a year, a very considerable burden upon farmers and those who have business in town frequently. This is also a matter which interests considerably the city of Montreal. Traders coming out from the city of Montreal and going to industrial establishments situated outside the city, at Lachine, St. Laurent or elsewhere, and parties driving for pleasure are also interested. The city of Montreal is greatly interested in the proper administration of these large avenues leading into the city, because all the produce which the city consumes, perishable produce from the neighbouring farms, is brought in over these roads; and the city is interested in the proper maintenance of these roads because there is a very large population on the island of Montreal and in the surrounding counties, and the maintenance and improvement of the roads favour an easy access to the city and bring business into the city. There are reciprocal interests, interests on behalf of the farmers, and interests on behalf of the merchants and people who drive from the city.

Now I have already on previous occasions called the attention of the Minister of Finance to the prospect which the Dominion government may have under the present system of collecting this sum, $200,000, which with the accumulated interest amounts to I suppose about $250,000 to-day. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will admit that the prospect is not very favourable. It is impossible to conceive that the revenue of that trust will enable the corporation to pay the government either the interest or the capital. It is sufficient to look over the return brought down, which, I am sure, would appear much stronger, still if we had the statements since 1900 up to the present date, to see that it is impossible for the trust to keep the roads in order, to incur this disproportionate amount of expense for general administration and to reimburse the federal government. I therefore take it that there is no prospect under the present system of any money coming to the government from that source, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who will no doubt have to consider this question at no very great distant date, will perhaps have to consider also that from the city and island of Montreal, have come very large contributions since confederation to the Dominion treasury. The amount of the taxes paid in by that locality which is more particularly interested in this question, is a very large amount indeed, and I think my hon. friend will come to the conclusion that it is better, perhaps, in view of the impossibility of collecting this debt which has become, from the stress of circumstances, bad, that it would be the duty of the government to avail themselves of the indebtedness in order to bring about a much desired reform, easy to accomplish since we have only to copy what has been done elsewhere and which will be of incalculable benefit to that locality. What I have stated has been stated from a general knowledge derived from the return brought down and from other information which has from time to time been made public. I think it would be necessary for the government to make a thorough investigation of the question which I have just brought to the notice of the House. That it be made by one person named by the government, a commissioner whom the government has power to appoint, or by a commission composed of three persons. It might be necessary to compose that commission of three persons on account of the extent of the investigation to be made and probably also because it would be useful to give representation upon it to the different interests. The city of Montreal might be represented upon that commission, because, as I shall state in a moment, I think the city of Montreal ought to bear a very fair proportion of the burden of keeping these roads in order. Probably the rural districts would claim with justice the right to be represented on that commission and perhaps the government would see fit to employ with these two representatives a man having some technical knowledge of the subject, because, as my hon. friend is aware, not only in the province of Quebec, but in the province of Ontario and in the province of Nova Scotia, in fact, I believe, in all of the provinces during the last three or four years, very great interest has been taken in improvement of roads. Good roads associations have been formed all over the country, and there are, I know, in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, men who are well informed upon that subject, and who have given it far more study and attention than

I have myself. On the trust itself, there are men like Mr. Galibert, the president of the trust, who is well versed in matters of this kind. Mr. Thos. Trenholme, of Montreal West, has given that matter special study and will certainly be competent to propose some solution to the government. Mr. Richard White was, for several years, president of the trust and has much practical knowledge of the subject and there are no doubt other men whose names could be suggested to the government who could without much expense and within a very short space of time lay before the government an improved scheme for the administration of the roads upon the island of Montreal tending to the immediate abolition of toll-gates, and the safeguarding and the giving of more popular character to the interests concerned, giving to the administration a stronger representation and giving general satisfaction throughout the city of Montreal and the counties interested. I have no doubt that could be done by a commission of one or of three appointed upon an understanding between this government and the government of Quebec, and could be done in a short space of time and at very little expense. I might mention for the information of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that several years ago there was a question of the abolution of the toll-gates. The matter was discussed by the turnpike trustees themselves, and I have been informed that at one time the city of Montreal was disposed to pay one-quarter of any sum that would be required to keep the high roads upon the island of Montreal in good order. I think, myself, that the negotiations might very properly be renewed between the trust and the city of Montreal, or at any rate, the possibility of the city sharing an even larger proportion of the expense necessary for the maintenance of these roads might be looked into by the commission of inquiry I have just suggested to my hon. friend, because I believe that it is in the interest of the city of Montreal to pay more than one-quarter of the sum required. I believe that the city of Montreal is more capable of contributing towards that expense, naturally, than all the other municipalities, and I believe it has also more interest in doing so. It is in the interest of the city of Montreal that the roads, the important avenues in the vicinity of the city should be kept in first-class order, should be pleasant and agreeable to drive upon and should be at all times available without any tolls to people coming in from the country as well as to visitors and Montrealers themselves driving into the country. The farmer, the milkman and the gardener, as my hon. friend knows, must recoup themselves for the tolls which they are called upon to pay from their customers, and the carters, who in large numbers drive out from the city of Montreal, do not, as far as my experience goes, pay these tolls to oblige their fares, but they take them out of the people employing them when visiting the suburbs of Montreal. My hon. friend has noticed that the general office expenses amount to $8,000, and more in some years. Why should there be such a considerable expense if an improved system of contribution for the maintenance of the roads could be arrived at agreeable to the city of Montreal to the county councils and to the towns in the neighbourhood of Montreal ?

I have no doubt you could secure the services of a competent accountant and the use of his office for the sittings of the board, for probably $500 or $600 a year. Gentlemen who do a large business like Mr. Durnford, Messrs. Kent and Turcotte, Mr. Riddell and Mr. Alexander Desmarteau, would keep the books of that administrative body and furnish them with the use of a room for their occasional sittings for $500 or $600 a year. I believe that an efficient road inspector could be obtained who would devote his whole time to that work, for $1,200 or $1,500 a year. Therefore, for $2,500 a year, you would get the accounts kept, you would have a room where the administrative body could meet from time to time, you would have an inspector daily upon the roads, and the whole thing complete. It may be asked : who is to supply the money that at present is collected from the tolls ? We have often been told that such a system would throw the expense of the maintenance of the roads upon the municipalities, but let me ask ! who pays these tolls to-day. They are paid by the farmers, the market gardeners, the citizens of the island of Montreal generally, to the tune of about $45,000, and what is the result under the present system. The result is that out of that $45,000 scarcely half is expended on the roads. Under the system which I suggest you would get sufficient revenue, but it would be more justly spread over the whole population, and the people would get something for their money, because the whole sum collected with perhaps the exception of $3,000 for necessary administrative expenses, would be spent upon the roads. In addition to that the people who pay this money would have representation and a voice in the mode of expenditure. At present our representation on the turnpike trust is of a very indirect character. There are three members who represent the Dominion government which is a creditor, and there is a minority of two members representing the provincial government. Why not at least study the system which has been adopted elsewhere of taking the money which is absolutely required for the maintenance of these roads from the city of Montreal in the first place and from the other municipalities interested, giving each contributor representation upon the administration body. Every incorporated town on the island of Montreal and each of the counties interested would be represented in proportion to its contribution ; we would have contracts given by tender and we would have a yearly statement of how the money was expended upon the roads. At the present time not only are the old toll-gates kept up, but in view of the spread of the city, the trust is obliged to maintain check gates at which you have to produce your ticket to show that you paid at another gate and all this entails expense. I would like my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) to hear my complaint, because it greatly interests the farmers and market gardeners of the island of Montreal, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) who is to a certain extent a citizen of Montreal, realizes the importance of the reform to which my remarks point. At the present time the government has it in its power to grant the relief which we ask. There is no doubt that if the federal government conferred with the provincial government, asking them to name a joint commission which would fully investigate this matter, the provincial government would meet that request half-way. At the present time this government is losing several thousand dollars a year, and it gets no credit whatever for its indulgence in not exacting payment. The debt is not possible of collection, and why should not the government avail itself of this opportunity, and have this commission which I suggest, report to it as to the best of the plans which have been adopted elsewhere for the abolition of this antiquated system. Then, the Minister of Finance—and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would approve—could say to the Quebec government: if you will pass this law, we will entirely wipe out the indebtedness of the Turnpike Trust to us. That seems to be demanding a great deal. Perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will bring down his claim to such an amount as may appear to him to be reasonable. As it stands at present, he must see that it is quite impossible for the trust to pay it. It seems to me that a great deal might be done to improve our roads and the condition of our farmers if my suggestions, which are made in good faith, were to be adopted by my hon. friend, in place of the present system, which is altogether obsolete and unsatisfactory.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, I have but a few words to say in reply to the address of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. At the beginning he referred to some papers for which orders had passed the House some time ago but which had not been brought down. If such is the case, I regret it. My attention had not been drawn to it before, and if the information contained in these papers is at all important to my hon. friend, I will see that it is produced. With much that he says I am sure the whole House will heartily sympathize. My own difficulty, however, is in seeing what this House has to do with the greater part of my hon. friend's speech. It is true, whatever concerns the humblest citizen of the Dominion of Canada interests us to a certain extent. Everything that concerns our people, whether in relation to municipal, provincial or Dominion affairs, interests the government and parliament in a general way. But under our constitution, our duties, our responsibilities and privileges are divided; and among those which devolve upon the House of Commons is not the duty of providing public highways for Montreal or for any other part of the Dominion. That is a purely provincial and municipal question, and we have nothing to do with it here. We are all glad to see the growing interest taken in the good roads movement all over the country; but that is a movement which, after all, concerns the provinces and the municipalities in their official capacity. We have only one interest in this matter which my hon. friend has presented to us to-day; that is, I am sorry to say, the cold-blooded interest of the creditor. This Montreal Turnpike Trust happens to owe us some money; but that fact does not cast on us the responsibility of management. What are the facts? For many years, from interests arising out of confederation, this trust owed moneys to the Dominion which, in 1895-96, aggregated a very large sum—my hon. friend says $500,000. I think the amount was less than that, though it was something over $400,000, interest included. This loan bore interest at the rate of 6 per cent. Appeals were made to parliament at that time very much like that which my hon. friend has made to-day, that this trust could not pay the debt, and that some readjustment of it should be made. At that time it was agreed, roughly speaking, that one-half or more of the total indebtedness to the Dominion should be wiped out, and treated as a free gift to the municipalities or the parties interested in the Montreal roads. So that at present the Dominion of Canada, instead of having a claim for upwards of $400,000 against this trust, has a claim for only $200,000; and the bonds, which formerly bore interest at 6 per cent, now bear interest at 3½ per cent. I think it will be admitted that thus far the Dominion government, dealing with the interest of the people as a whole, has treated the locality in question not in an ungenerous way. But my hon. friend wishes us to go further and take the initiative, and asume the right to manage and control these roads. I must again take the point that we have nothing to do with the management or control of the roads of Montreal in any other capacity than as bondholders representing the whole Dominion; and I think my hon. friend has an entire misconception of the proper relation of the government and the parliament of Canada to this transaction. I think he is wrong when he calls on this government to take the initiative in entering into negotiations with the government of the province of Quebec. If the government or the municipalities of the province of Quebec wish to make any arrangement, and come to us with a proposal for that purpose, I think we are bound to give it very serious attention and consideration. I will not hesitate to go further and say that we will give any proposal they make a sympathetic consideration. But I do not agree with my hon. friend that any obligation rests on this government to take the initiative. Our simple position is that the Montreal Turnpike Trust owes us $200,000 of principal and some interest. My hon. friend has made some reflections on the management of the trust. He may possibly have some grounds for criticism in that respect, and may be able to show how, under more careful administration, economies might be effected. I have not sufficient information on the subject—certainly not as much as the hon. gentleman, as a resident of Montreal, has himself—to be able to say whether the trust is economically managed or not. But no change of arrangements, no opening of meetings to the public, or anything of that sort, will meet the situation. I do not hesitate to say that the existence of toll-gates in the neighbourhood of a great city like Montreal is not a condition that should remain. It is an obsolete condition, and some means should be taken to put an end to it. I think we should look forward to the abolition of toll-gates everywhere. In my own province, it was a source of great pride to me to have been instrumental in bringing about the abolition of the last toll-gate. But we did not come to the House of Commons appealing to it to give us free roads. We dealt with the question as a province, making an arrangement with the municipalities whereby private intrests in the toll-gates were bought out and free highways were established. I think that is what should be done in the province of Quebec; and if the province and the municipalities, or other parties interested, should come to the Dominion government with a proposal, not for a readjustment of the affairs of the trust, but for settling the debt due to the Dominion and the abolition of toll-gates, that, and nothing short of that,will meet the situation. I am not prepared to say that this government will throw away its claim and treat it as a bad debt; no Finance Minister would do that. I will remind the House again that the Dominion threw away one-half of the debt. If it becomes necessary to bring about such a readjustment as the only effective means of securing the abolition of tolls and the transfer of the roads to the municipalities, that will be a very fair matter on which the province and the municipalities may make a proposal to this government. What that proposal should be, I will not venture to say. But the point between my hon. friend and myself is that he thinks the Dominion government should take control of this business, while I think it belongs to the province and the municipalities concerned. Therefore, I would not like him to press the motion, which recognizes that obligation upon the Dominion government which arises in his mind, but which I think he will, on reflection, see belongs to the province and the municipalities. I would hope that after the speech of my hon. friend and the large amount of information he has given on the history of this question, he will consider that his purpose is accomplished and will not press his motion. As to the position of the government, if the provincial government and the municipalities concerned will devise some scheme whereby they can put an end to this and make us a fair and reasonable proposal, having regard to what has been already done in relation to the payment of the debt, the government will approach the question sympathetically, and I would hope that something might be accomplished in that way.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It happens, Mr. Speaker, that I know something of this question of the turnpike trust and the roads connected therewith on the island of Montreal. I was mayor of Hochelaga in 1878, when the municipality of Hochalaga had to deal with this question, along with other municipalities where toll-gates had been established under the law. The remedy suggested by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was adopted at the time, and the Turnpipe Trust has been acting ever since under the agreement which then took place, some twenty-five years ago. The proposition laid before the Turnpike Trust at the time was this: Each municipality which wanted the toll-gates abolished should undertake to accept a cession of that portion of the Turnpike Trust roads running through it, on condition that it would keep them in proper condition and pay interest on the bonds to the extent to which its roads were covered by the bonds. This agreement was accepted by the city of Montreal, by the town of Hochelaga, by Maisonneuve, by the municipality of Longue Pointe, the village of Côte St. Louis, the town of St. Louis de Mile End, the town of St. Henri, St. Cunegonde, and by all up-to-date municipalities at that time. The taxpayers of these municipalities consented to pay their share of the interest on the bonds and to keep the roads in good order, and that arrangement has worked splendidly ever since. But there are other municipalities on the island of Montreal which would not consent to this agreement. They did not want to assume the responsibility of keeping the roads in good order and paying the interest, but they wanted and still expect the government to make them a present of the roads and still be free from any obligation to keep them in proper condition or pay the interest. That being the case, it seems to me they come to this parliament with very bad grace. It has been said that the revenue from the toll-gates amounts to $40,000, but I did not hear the hon. member for Jacques Cartier state what amount is collected from the municipalities which have abolished the tolls and are now keeping their own roads in good order and paying the interest. On these roads the Turnpike Trust have not a cent to spend and are collecting interest at four per cent. If the rate were six per cent at the time the arrangement was made, it has been since reduced to four per cent. There is no ground, therefore, for these municipalities complaining so bitterly. They have the remedy in their own hands. If they want to get rid of the tolls, they can do so by assuming the obligation of keeping the roads in good order and paying their share of interest. There is also another aspect of the question. In the county of Jacques Cartier companies have been formed within the last ten or fifteen years to maintain municipal roads and they have established toll-gates quite near the town of Lachine and other places. There are roads which have been made by private companies in my own county, in Côte Visitation, and the farmers are quite satisfied to pay the tolls, because, although these companies do not collect anything out of the farmers in these municipalities to keep the roads in good condition, they collect from those who do not belong to the municipalities and pass through. I admit that this system is obsolete and should not exist, but if the farmers do not wish to do away with it, I do not see why we should force them to adopt another system. My hon. friend's proposition would be quite unfair to those who have for the last twenty-five years been paying interest on the bonds and keeping their roads in good order. Not only in the county of my hon. friend are there private companies with toll-gates, but there are others on the Isle Jesus, and the people seem perfectly satisfied. It is not only on the island of Montreal that these roads exist. They exist on the south shore of the St. Lawrence in different places, where private companies have built roads and maintained tolls. In the district of Quebec there are also toll-gates and an institution something like the Turnpike Trust of Montreal. I would like to have these toll-gates abolished, but, if they are not, it is the fault of those directly interested, who will not apply the remedy they have in their own hands. When I was in the city council of Montreal, we took up the question under the old agreement which I have mentioned, but we were always met by the objections of the municipalities who refused to undertake to keep their roads in good order. They wanted to have their roads for nothing and would not even undertake to keep them in good condition. Under the circumstances, they are certainly not coming with good grace in asking that the government should make them a present of these roads and relieve them of the payment of some $200,000, while they are not prepared to assume any responsibility whatever.

Mr. MONK. I hardly think that my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) who has just taken his seat has fully understood the object I have in view. No doubt, any municipality in the county could say: We will take the road and keep it in repair, and abolish the toll-gates. But they would have to pay $4,000 a mile for the road—

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If my hon. friend will allow me—they will have to pay $4,000 a mile for the road if they wish to be relieved of paying the interest. But that is not what has happened. The municipalities have assumed that the road has cost $4,000 a mile, and they have assumed to keep it in order and pay the interest at the rate of 4 per cent on $4,000 a mile. That is what they undertook to do twenty-five years ago.

Mr. MONK. I think the hon. gentleman has forgotten that it is stated in the return that 'on the following roads the municipalities paid 6 per cent on the value of the road, say $4,000 a mile and keep up the roads.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. That is exactly what I say.

Mr. MONK. In Hochelaga they pay $262.73. This arrangement may be made in such municipalities as Hochelaga and St. Louis de Mile-End, but where would the money come from to maintain the long roads outside the city?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The municipalities there would do the same thing.

Mr. MONK. But the municipality of St. Laurent would have eight or ten miles of road to keep in order for the people of Montreal but would receive no money from Montreal for the maintenance of the road. My hon. friend sees that that would be eminently unfair.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I wish to put a question to my hon. friend. Does the city of Montreal receive anything from those who pass on the roads, the taxes on which are commuted roads in such municipalities as Ste. Cunegonde, St. Henri, St. Louis de Mile-End and Maisonneuve? They pay nothing.

Mr. MONK. They pay taxes in the city of Montreal. But my hon. friend must see that there is no proportion between a municipality like Montreal with a valuation of $200,000,000 and St. Laurent with a valuation of $800,000. The idea is that, as everybody on the island used the roads, there should be a system of contribution by which everybody would pay.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If my hon. friend will allow me, I think that the municipalities that have acceded to this arrangement have a population of certainly three-quarters of the whole island of Montreal.

Mr. MONK. But the arrangement does not work, for, as my hon. friend knows, it gives rise to a great deal of difficulty. I have received a letter dated 25th of March, from the corporation of Westmount by its secretary, which says, in part :—

There are about two miles in length of the road of the trustees of the Montreal Turnpike Roads situated in Westmount, on which the tolls were commuted some years ago, since which time the trustees have done nothing to maintain the road though they object to sell it to the town alleging want of authority to alienate.

I do not wish to pursue this further ; but my hon. friend will see that, with the system he suggests, the poor people would pay for the rich, and the moment a piece of road is handed over to the municipality the trustees lose control of it. It is well enough in the municipalities in the neighbourhood of Montreal. But when you come to a long piece of road outside the city it is not reasonable to throw the maintenance exclusively on the municipality, as in Lachine and St. Laurent. The people of Montreal use these roads more than the farmers, and if you abolish toll-gates you would have no revenue. The roads would have to be maintained by the municipality without any fund to draw upon for their maintenance. I would like to say one word to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who has asked me to abandon this resolution. He says that the Department of Finance and this government has no control whatever over that body called the Montreal Turnpike Trust. Does he remember that the Dominion names three trustees and that the policy of the body is, therefore, under the absolute control of the Minister of Finance ?

Mr. FIELDING. I did not say we had no control, but I said our interest was only the interest of a creditor.

Mr. MONK. I do not dispute that. But we have the legislation, giving the bondholders absolute control of the corporation—nothing can be done without the consent of the bondholders. If you go to the government of Quebec, they will tell you : we have the minority in that body, and everything we may decide is subject to the higher decision of the Federal government. That is why I think it is in the power of this government to control not only the administration of the body itself, but that change in the direction of the abolition of toll-gates which was the object I had in view in moving this motion. I do not think it is reasonable for my hon. friend to ask me to recede from my motion under the circumstances. It would be admitting that the suggestions I have made are addressed to the wrong parties or that they are not worth urging, and I cannot do that.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. FIELDING. I am sorry my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will not withdraw his motion, for, by this motion, he is calling upon the Dominion to assume a responsibility and an initiative in the matter which does not belong to us. I sympathize to some extent with the object he has in view. But I think he would serve that object quite as well if after the discussion that has taken place, he would withdraw his motion, and I again invite him to do so. This is a municipal and provincial question. We have no interest except as creditors. Those who are concerned are the ones who should formulate the proposals and come to us. It is not our business to chase them around the country and find out what they want to do. They have the responsibility both by the provincial and municipal law, and if they have a proposal in the interest of the people let them come to us with it, relying upon us to meet them sympathetically. But my hon. friend wishes us to take the initiative which we object to do. I hope he will see his way not to press this resolution.

Mr. MONK. It is not the negotiations I am suggesting. I do not see how I can withdraw the motion.

Mr. FIELDING. I had hoped that my hon. friend would withdraw the motion. But if he feels it is his duty to press it, I must ask the House to amend the motion, I move in amendment that all the words after 'government' to the end be left out and the words which I will read be inserted, this would make the resolution read :

That the Dominion government should give careful consideration to any representation that may be made by the provincial government of Quebec or the municipalities concerned with a view to the settlement on fair terms of the claim of the Dominion against the Montreal Turnpike Trust, and, if possible, the abolition of the toll-gates on the roads of the trust, and the transfer of such roads to the municipal authorities.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Minister of Finance to move that motion, having already spoken once or twice ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have spoken on the original motion, but I could not have spoken on the amendment, for it is only now moved.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), spoke twice on the motion.

Mr. FIELDING. We need not trouble you for a decision of the point, Mr. Speaker, some other hon. gentleman can move the amendment.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Inland Revenue). I am sorry my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has not thought fit to withdraw his motion. I should have thought that his purpose would be served by the statement he has made and the discussion that has taken place on the subject of this Turnpike Trust. It seems to me that this is a question to be dealt with by the municipalities and I see that, so far, the municipalities have not thought fit to come before this government and ask whether the government was ready to negotiate with them. The initiatory steps should be taken by the municipalities. We would like to know, for example, whether the county council of the county of Jacques Cartier is anxious to take charge of this road. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier is speaking the minds of his constituents in that respect, and whether they are anxious to take charge of this road. If they are, then I think they should have come to this government and put before us a claim to take possession of that road, and pay some of the interest on the bonds which are now in the hands of the government. This is purely and simply a municipal affair. As has been explained by the Minister of Finance, the government has absolutely no controlling interest in the road, though it is true that this government appoints some men to look after the road and manage it along with the other men appointed by the provincial government. But if the municipalities wish to take charge of the road, I think they should come before the parliament and state that they are ready to do so. For these reasons I move that all the words after the word 'government' in the first line to the end of the question be left out, and the following be substituted therefor :

Should give careful consideration to any representations that may be made by the provincial government of Quebec or the municipalities concerned, with a view to the settlement on fair terms of the claim of the Dominion against the Montreal Turnpike Trust, and, if possible, the abolition of the toll-gates, the roads of the trust and the transfer of such roads to the municipal authorities.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the Minister of Finance how the government became creditor in the first place of this Montreal Turnpike Trust ?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a portion of the assets of Canada standing in the books for many years, in whole or in part, before confederation.

Mr. MONK. I cannot accept that amendment. I would not have dared to make a motion in this sense myself, hoping that the government would give careful consideration to any representations that might be made to it upon this subject by the provincial government of Quebec of the municipalities concerned. I feel perfectly confident that this government will give careful consideration at any time to any representations made by the government of Quebec, or by myself, or any body else. But what I ask by my motion is that the government take the initiative in this great reform. Careful consideration ! I have several times moved in this matter, and although I do not think I made myself quite clearly understood by the Minister of Finance, he has always given me careful consideration. But we want now something more, we want action. We want somebody to take the initiative. I am much surprised that my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, who must be acquainted with the needs of the farmers around Montreal and who must know how badly a reform is needed, should limit his motion merely to stating that this government will give careful consideration. We want him to add 'at once.' This is almost as important as the transcontinental line. My right hon. friend said that he could not wait, that we must act at once. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that every year, for ten years back, the necessity of a change has been admitted. The Quebec government will not take the initiative. The Quebec government says : The road is under the control of the bondholders, but we are ready to do anything. They give an answer similar to that which has been given here this afternoon. They say : try to obtain the consent of the federal government who have three nominees to their two. They say : It is the federal government who controls the board, try and obtain their consent, and we will do anything that is reasonable. By my motion I asked this government to take the initiative. Would it be so very difficult for this government to write to the government of Quebec in regard to this matter ? Everybody admits that a change is necessary. The government of Quebec would be happy to confer with this government in regard to any such change. If my hon. friend does that he will take the initiative in a most important reform. What the Minister of Inland Revenue says by this amendment is merely this : We will listen to you if you have anything to say. But I want more than that, the people interested want more than that. They believe that, as the Dominion government controls every resolution taken by that board, that as the Dominion government can to-morrow obtain an amendment of the law if it wishes, it should take the initiative. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, who I am sure takes an interest in the gardeners and farmers who live in the neighbourhood of Montreal, will himself take the initiative and see if something cannot be done towards modifying a system which everybody admits ought to be changed.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have listened with great attention to the remarks made upon this subject by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) ; but I am sorry to say that after having listened to him once, twice, or three times this afternoon, I still fail to know exactly what he wants, and

I do not think there is any man in the House who knows exactly what he wants. There is this difference between this road and the transcontinental railway, we know what we want and we ask for it, but my hon. friend does not know what he wants.

Mr. COCHRANE. The right hon. gentleman did not know what he wanted, and he has only found out lately.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon friend from Jacques Cartier has pointed out the evils from which he thinks the people on the island of Montreal are suffering. Upon that we are all agreed. He has pointed out that the system which now prevails for obtaining access from the island to the city is obsolete, out of date, antiquated. Upon that we are all agreed also. But, he has not pointed out the remedy which he thinks should be applied. He says : You are the creditors and you ought to do something. But the government tells him : We have no jurisdiction in this matter, we are simply the creditors, we have advanced money and we have not received any interest upon it. We are quite ready to modify the present arrangement if a satisfactory proposal is made. I would ask my hon. friend what he thinks ought to be done. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) has suggested that perhaps a good basis for settlement would be the adoption of the arrangement which was made some twenty years ago when other municipalities similarly situated—the municipalities of Maisonneuve and Hochelaga—made a settlement which was the natural one to adopt ; that is to say the municipalities interested in these roads and which are traversed by them should assume the jurisdiction and care of these roads as all municipalities do.

Mr. MONK. And stand all the expense alone ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is another question. But here is the difficulty which justifies the amendment of my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Brodeur). My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier objects to the municipalities taking over the roads. His reasons may be good or bad, I do not know. I do not examine them at the present time. But it strikes me, and I suppose the friends of my hon. friend would agree with me, that the most natural method by which to achieve a settlement of this question would be that all the municipalities interested and which are crossed by these roads should assume jurisdiction over them and do as municipalities generally do—become responsible for the maintenance of them. But my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier does not want the question to be settled in this way. Then, what is the method by which he wants to have it settled ? He has spoken for about two hours, but he has failed to tell us what he wants. He points out the grievance, but when we ask what is the remedy my hon. friend is silent. He says : I do not want the municipalities to be saddled with these roads. Well, if the municipalities are not to be saddled with these roads, if they are not to have jurisdiction over them, if they are not to maintain them as all municipalities do everywhere, what is the manner in which my hon. friend wants to have the question settled ? He asks the government to take the initiative in this respect. We would expect that before the government takes the initiative he himself should know the manner in which he wants the remedy to be applied. It seems to me that until my hon. friend is ready to tell us what remedy he wants applied, the government are quite within their rights, and certainly they are within their proper functions, when they say : We will not take the iniative until we know in what way it is desired that the matter should be settled. Let me call the attention of my hon. friend to the proposition which he has laid before the House. It is as follows :

> That the Dominion government, having a controlling interest in the Montreal Turnpike Road Trust, should enter into negotiations without delay with the provincial government of Quebec, that has jurisdiction over said trust, with the view of obtaining the abolition of the present system of toll-gates existing on the island of Montreal.

It is easy enough to enter into negotiations, but we have no power to levy tolls upon these roads, and if we abolish the toll-gates, who is to maintain these roads, who is to take charge of them, who is to keep them in repair ? I would have supposed that the municipalities through which these roads pass would be charged with that duty. But my hon. friend says : No, the municipalities should not be asked to undertake it, I do not want the municipalities of Jacques Cartier, the parish of St. Laurent, to take charge of these roads. Then, I put the question, without discussing my hon. friend's reasons any further : If the municipalities are not to take charge of these roads, who is to take charge of them ? They must be vested in somebody. At the present time the Turnpike Trust is looking after them, but the trust, to maintain them, has to keep up toll-gates and charge tolls. To this my hon. friend objects. If the Trust is not to take charge of these roads, I would have supposed that the municipalities should take charge of them, but still to this very natural solution my hon. friend objects. Then, I ask him in all seriousness : What does he want ? He simply wants us to write to the government of Quebec. If this question is to be settled, one would expect that it would be settled for the benefit of the municipalities interested, and one would expect that the municipalities would give us their views as to the basis of settlement, and until this is done I submit that it is not fair to ask us to take the initiative in reference to this proposal. We have no jurisdiction over this matter. It is the province of Quebec which has jurisdiction, and therefore to the province of Quebec application should be made. Moreover, my hon. friend should naturally apply to the legislature; but, at all events, since he says his electors are the parties who suffer from the grievances which he has pointed out, he should be prepared to give us some advice, and state in what way a solution for these grievances can be found. Therefore, I think the House will agree with me that the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend is quite in order and quite proper.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, when you left the chair at six o'clock, I was saying, on behalf of my friend and colleague (Mr. Monk), that I thought he had acted as his duty impelled him, and that I did not agree with the criticism of the Prime Minister who stated, that when a complaint was brought before parliament it was the duty of the member complaining to point out a remedy. It is not the duty of a private member of parliament to provide a remedy for a grievance; it is the duty of a member of this House to bring a grievance to the attention of the government who for the time being are charged with responsibility, and they should find a remedy. It appears to me however, that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has suggested a remedy in the resolution because it says:

That the government should enter into negotiations with the provincial government of Quebec, that has jurisdiction over said trust, with the view of obtaining the abolition of the present system of toll-gates existing on the Island of Montreal.

The Dominion government are bondholders of the Trust, and if it be true as stated, that this property is becoming less valuable every year, then if they desire to do what is best in the interest of the people, they should endeavour to deal with that property so as to get their money out of it. The Dominion government has a majority of the members on the Trust, and it seems to me that having control in this way, they should at the earliest date possible bring that Trust to an end, and endeavour to get back some of the money which they have invested in it.

Hon. CHAS. FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) says, that it is the duty of a member to bring a grievance to the attention of the government. If the grievance exists that is quite true, but as the Minister of Finance has stated, the remedy in this case must be sought from those who have the power to grant it, and so the application should not be made to this House. The facts are, that a Turnpike Trust was created on the island of Montreal by the provincial legislature, and that trust expended a large amount of money for the purpose of building roads on the island. They issued bonds in order to raise the necessary money; the bonds were taken by the government of the day, and they have now passed into the hands of the government of Canada. These bonds amount to something like $400,000, which was money expended in building roads on the island of Montreal for the benefit of these gentlemen who are represented by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, and who pretend that a grievance exists. Not only have we expended the $400,000, but we have been out of interest for a great number of years on these bonds. The Dominion parliament, representing the people of Canada at large, a part of whose assets this money is, have already reduced their capital expenditure by 50 per cent, so that now we have a claim for $200,000, representing the original investment; and moreover, we have reduced the interest on these bonds from 6 per cent to 3½ per cent. That means that we have made a present to the gentlemen of the island of Montreal who used these roads, of over $200,000, and we have reduced the interest on the investment from 6 per cent to 3½ per cent.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that a loss?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I say we have reduced our claim by that amount, and so far as the people of Canada are concerned, they have lost their investment to the extent of 50 per cent. And now we are asked to give away the balance of the investment, because this motion invites us to go to the provincial government with a view of abolishing the toll-gates on the island of Montreal. We are asked to abolish the toll-gates which provide the source of revenue from which the people of Canada may expect some day to be paid, in part at least, for their investment. That is the plain proposition as it is put to us, and it is for this House to say whether or not it will accept it. I have a toll-gate system in my county, and why should I not have the benefit of such a proposition as well as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier? The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Demers) has the toll-gate system in his county, and why should he not have the benefit of it also? Where is this going to lead us to? Are we going to build roads of certain sections of the country and relieve the people from the obligation to which other ratepayers are subject, to maintain their own roads? Where is the equity of this thing? I would point my hon. friend to the fact, that under the law which provides for the creation of these Trusts, the person who owns property fronting on these roads is under the obligation to commute his road tax, and as he is relieved from the obligation of maintaining the road he is obliged to pay an amount equal to the amount he is relieved from as a result of the maintenance of the road by the Turnpike Trust. The law requires that the owner of the frontage on the road should pay this amount. Have these gentlemen ever paid ?

Mr. MONK. I do not know.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not believe they have. They have been relieved of the obligation to maintain the roads all this time, and it seems to me it would be unfair to the people of other parts of the country if these gentlemen were now relieved of the obligation to pay any toll or rent whatever for the money which has gone into the construction of these roads.

But, independent of that, we have absolutely no jurisdiction to deal with this matter. The provincial legislature alone can absolutely and exclusively determine the conditions under which these people are to be relieved. It was decided by the Privy Council in the case of Belleau and the Queen, that the provincial legislature has exclusive jurisdiction in these matters.

Mr. SPROULE. The motion asks you to enter into negotiations with the provincial government.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What are we to ask the provincial government to do ? Are we to ask the province to assume the debt, or are we to say to the provincial government : You take over these roads and we will relieve you of the obligation to pay any portion of the interest? Does my hon. friend from Grey (Mr Sproule) endorse that ?

Mr. SPROULE. I say that we have a mortgage on this property which is depreciating in value year after year, and I say that as the holders of the mortgage we have a right to commence negotiations to try to get what we can out of that property.

Mr. FIELDING. That is not what the motion proposes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is the province which is the mortgagor who owns the property, and there is the party of the second part, the people who live in the district and benefit by the roads, and who are obliged to pay the tolls ? Why do not these parties who are obliged to pay the tolls go to the province, and say : Relieve us of this obligation, and, if the province applies to us to know the terms and conditions of the release we are prepared to negotiate for that purpose. That is a sensible way to go about it, but there is no sense in coming to this parliament in the first instance. It seems to me, that is an elementary principle. The only relief my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) can get here is to have us abandon our claim to these bonds, so as a result his constituents may be relieved of the obligation to pay these tolls.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. MONK. This matter has been disccussed at considerable length, and I would be prepared to abandon my motion, if I could be convinced by what the Finance Minister has said, that it is not proper for the Dominion government to interfere. Nothing which has been said during the discussion has led me to that conviction. On the contrary, we hold a mortgage amounting with capital and interest to over a quarter of a million dollars. Somebody must move in the matter. The Minister of Finance could to-morrow foreclose his mortgage, and, like an ordinary mortgage creditor, have the property sold to satisfy his claim. Surely that is sufficient interest. The fact that the trust is in arrears for ten years is sufficient to justify my hon. friend in adopting the course this motion suggests. I might even, speaking in the interests of the Dominion treasury, go to the length of saying that it is his duty to move in the matter—to do something by investigation or otherwise to see if some relief cannot be afforded to himself as Minister of Finance, as well as to the other parties interested. With regard to what my hon. friend the Minister of Justice has said, I do not know that anything that he has endeavoured to rebut is suggested in this motion. No one wants the province to assume this account or the Trust to obtain from the government a remission of their indebtedness by merely asking for it. The matter calls for an inquiry ; there is a grievance ; and it appertains to the Dominion government as well as to the Provincial government to take the first step. My right hon. friend said I had spoken two hours and had suggested no remedy. My right hon. friend is mistaken. I spoke about an hour in order to make the situation perfectly familiar to the House ; it was my duty to do so ; and I did suggest a remedy, and my right hon. friend heard me, for he listened carefully to my remarks. That remedy is that we should first inquire why it is that we are expending $50,000 a year and are having spent on our roads less than $25,000 ? Surely that is a matter for inquiry. I suggested that a committee should be named, that the Dominion government should communicate with the local government to ascertain if they would join with the mortgage creditors to move in the matter and see if some remedy could be obtained for this grievance. There is nothing unreasonable in that. Under these circumstances, although my motion has been treated very courteously, I cannot recede from the conviction which I have that we can do something. No doubt it is the duty of the municipalities to move. It is the duty of every citizen to move ; it is the duty of the Quebec government ; but it is also our duty, and we have the power to do so, because we control this Trust absolutely, having the majority on the board. As to the amendment, it does not mean anything, except that the government would consider proposals coming from other people. I think we should move first in the matter.

Amendment. (Hon. Mr. Brodeur) agreed to on division.

THE MAIL SERVICE IN BRUCE COUNTY, ONTARIO.

Mr. JAS. DONNELLY (East Bruce) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence since January 1st, 1904, between the Postmaster General and the mayor of the town of Walkerton, relating to the irregularity of the mail service to the town of Walkerton.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in connection with this motion, I wish to call the attention of the House, and especially the attention of the government to the fact that the people of Northwestern Ontario, and more particularly the people of the county of Bruce, have suffered very great inconvenience as well as considerable loss in consequence of the very irregular mail service which they have received during the past three or four months. I am aware that the winter of 1903-4 has been an exceptionally severe one, making certain delays unavoidable ; but I also believe that the very severe weather has been made a cloak for delays which were not necessary. That this House may better understand the situation in that part of the province, I will read some extracts from some of the local papers. First, I will read from the 'Lucknow Sentinel' of March 10, the editor of which is a prominent Liberal.

It is simply outrageous the way our village has been treated by the post office authorities during the past weeks. We do not blame the railway company for keeping the track clear for they have done everything that human power could to do so, but there is no excuse under heaven for the post office inspector, or other officials, whose duty it may be to look after it, for shutting our village out for twelve days without a mail, while Belfast, a little hamlet of a couple of houses and a blacksmith shop, three and a half miles distant from here, received a daily mail via Goderich.

The village of Lucknow has a population of about 1,500, and it does appear to me that it was the duty of the Post Office Department, when they sent a daily mail to Belfast, to make some effort to send one to Lucknow. I will also read a quotation from the Bruce 'Herald' of March 10, showing the condition of affairs at Walkerton :

The people of Walkerton certainly have not much reason to be pleased with their mail service during the snow blockade. The local authorities did everything in their power, but there has been serious evidence of decay at the top. For nearly two weeks the town was without letters or papers, with the exception of one spasmodic effort that brought in a two days lot by team from Palmerston. Why was not this effort kept up ? When passengers found themselves stalled at different points, they began to hire teams and made ordinarily good time in getting home. Some parties drove from Guelph to Walkerton, sixty-nine miles, on Sunday last, and found the roads fairly good. Why could not Sir William Mulock's officials send the mail at the same time ? On Monday a request to that effect from the local authorities, was not even answered. Business has been seriously hampered by the failure of the mail service and the public decidedly have good cause of complaint against the department.

To show that the Grand Trunk officials, to put it mildly, have been careless in carrying out their contract, I may say that on Saturday, the 19th of March, I was a passenger on the mail train going north from Toronto. We arrived at Palmerston about 3.30 in the afternoon. We were then told that a stock train was in difficulty at Mildmay, some 20 miles north of Palmerston. The stock train arrived at Palmerston about five o'clock ; and I believe that with any reasonable effort the railway people could have sent the mail train on. The Southampton branch, north of Palmerston runs through a prosperous and thickly populated country for a distance of about 50 miles ; but the mail on that train as well as the passengers were held at Palmerston till one o'clock on Sunday morning in order to enable a train from Stratford to make connections with it. The result was that the mail that should have been distributed on Saturday afternoon at the various post offices along that route, was carried to Southampton, held there till Monday morning, and carried back and delivered on Monday. That was the case at the station where I got off, and I have no reason to suppose that it was different at other stations. I have a letter from a responsible gentleman of Walkerton, who says :

On the 14th of March there was no mail to Walkerton, although the mail arrived at Palmerston that day. A train came up on the morning of the 15th, arriving at Walkerton at 11 o'clock. It left Palmerston that morning, preceded by an engine with a snow-plough but this train, although we had no mail the day before and it was lying at Palmerston, did not bring it on. Surely there is no excuse for this.

The mayor of the town of Walkerton has brought this question to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General, who I regret is not in his place to-night, and I have here a copy of the letter which the mayor of Walkerton received from the hon. minister. That my hon. friends on the other side of the House may be satisfied that this is a correct copy, I may say that the paper I am reading from is edited by the gentleman who was the Liberal candidate in East Bruce in the recent by-election. Here is the hon. minister's letter :

I regret extremely to learn from your letter of the 4th inst., that the Grand Trunk service to your town has been so unsatisfactory, not only recently because of the snow blockade, but on other occasions. Perhaps the best tribunal for dealing with these grievances would be the railway commission. They would, I presume, expect to have filed with them a statement setting forth the grievances. They would then be in a position to go into the case. There have been many complaints in the western peninsula in late years against the railway service, and perhaps, if these various complaints were grouped together, the commission might hold an inquiry in the district, thus saving the expense in the bringing of witnesses.

One would think, from reading this letter, that the idea of the hon. minister was that the complaint should be sent on to some other person. But why should the mayor of the town of Walkerton or any other private individual be obliged to go to the trouble and expense of laying charges before the Railway Commission? Did not the railway company make a contract with the government for carrying the mails, and is it not the duty of the Post Office Department to see that the company lives up to its contract? It may be said that it is useless to bring this matter up at present, as the winter is almost over, but it is quite possible that similar conditions may arise before this House is again in session, and I would like to know whether the government considers that it is the duty of local municipalities or private individuals, when they find that a railway company is not living up to its contract, to see that the company is made to carry out its obligations. It does appear to me that it is the duty of the Post Office Department to see that railway companies live up to their contracts for carrying the mail.

Hon. JAS. SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). I regret exceedingly that owing to indisposition, my hon. colleague the Postmaster General is not able to be present. There can be no objection to this motion, but I think my hon. friend will find from the correspondence that the department made every effort possible, under the extraordinary circumstances prevailing, to have the mails delivered regularly. I notice that my hon. friend has not suggested that anything more could have been done than was done by the department to have the mails more expeditiously delivered. The storms this winter were worse than any perhaps ever experienced in the past, and I do not think that the section referred to by my hon. friend has suffered much more than many other parts of the country. From my own knowledge, I believe that the officials of the Post Office Department made every effort possible to serve the public interest, and I am confident that my hon. friend will find when the papers are brought down that the department was not in any way to blame for any delays.

Mr. JOHN TOLMIE (West Bruce). As a resident of the county of Bruce for the last thirty-six years, I can say that we never had such weather to contend against in that county as we had this winter. As a representative of that county I think I am in a position to say something about this matter of delay in the delivery of the mails, and I am glad that the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Donnelly) has so much confidence in the administration that he believes the Post Office Department can control the elements. I live in Kincardine town, and for nineteen days we were without a train but not without a mail, for the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Donnelly) should know how to get the mail. Of course, we must make allowances for the hon. member for East Bruce, as he has not as much experience as some of us. But what happened? Whenever I discovered that the mail could not be delivered and that the railway company could not carry the mails, I immediately telegraphed to the Deputy Postmaster General, and what did he do? He started a conveyance from Palmerston and took the mails to Wingham, and then the mails went from Wingham to Kincardine and were delivered every day or every second day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why was not that done for Walkerton?

Mr. TOLMIE. Walkerton is in a different direction.

Mr. DONNELLY. How long were you without a mail?

Mr. TOLMIE. Two days. The Deputy Postmaster General informed me that he had given instructions to all his post office inspectors in every district that, whenever the train service was blocked, the mails should be forwarded by team, and if the people of Walkerton did not have their mails more speedily, it was because their representative was remiss in his duty.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). As one living in a district which was subjected to some inconvenience, I have only to say that the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Sutherland) was not strictly accurate. I understood him to say that the Post Office Department gave instructions at once to have the mails forwarded as rapidly as possible. But on my inquiring at the Post Office Department, after we had been without a mail for four days, I received the reply that the Canadian Pacific Railway had given instructions at Orangeville to forward the mails, and after we had been some four or five days without a mail, we got the mail of two or three days back, but the mail previous to that we did not get, and I do not know whether it has yet reached its destination. It had not up to the time I left. But although the roads were impassable for railway trains, they were sufficiently open for driving, because I know from experience that you could drive around in every direction. I think that the Post Office Department did not do all that it might have done. Certainly there was no reason why the mail which left Orangeville on Friday should only reach Markdale on Sunday, over a distance of only forty-four miles. Surely it does not take two and a half days to drive forty-four miles. Parties at the same time have driven from Markdale to within a few miles of Orangeville in part of one day, but every mail that came was two or three days late. Dundalk is only fifteen miles from Markdale, and passengers on the train drove over to Markdale and got there twenty hours ahead of the mail. You could drive quite easily between the two places, but there was no effort made by the Post Office Department to expedite the mails to the various village post offices.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). The hon. member for West Bruce (Mr. Tolmie) has just given the House to understand that this government is only prepared to support its friends in the way of providing mail accommodation. Because, practically, that is what the hon. gentleman told us. He said he had no difficulty in securing a mail service to the town in which he lived and those nearby, whereas the hon. member for East Bruce, a new member, appealed to secure that service and was told to go to the Railway Commission to get what the Postmaster General very cleverly at once did for the hon. gentleman from West Bruce. Now, I regret that it has come to this, that politics has so far entered into the administration of the different departments, more particularly into the postal department, where there should be no politics at all, that a man is to receive mail from day to day simply because he is a supporter of the government; but if a constituency does not choose to send here a gentleman favourable to the government, the towns of that riding are to be deprived of the ordinary mail service day after day and week after week. Now, the hon. member for West Bruce——

Mr. TOLMIE. May I correct the hon. member (Mr. Henderson)? What I said was that the Postmaster General had given instructions to all his inspectors that, whenever the trains were not able to carry the mail, the mails should be carried by team, if possible, irrespective of the politics of the constituency.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am still further surprised that the officials of the government, when ordered by the Postmaster General, so well knew the policy of the government that they simply gave instructions to have those orders carried out in those ridings which send to this House supporters of the government. It seems to be a fixed policy, so that even the inspectors were made aware of it. But why does not the hon. member for West Bruce secure the service to Lucknow? Lucknow is in the constituency of the hon. gentleman. But there is a reason. The hon. member for West Bruce knows that, in the next elections, Lucknow is to be transferred to East Bruce, and he will have nothing to do with it.

Mr. A. T. THOMPSON. The relief of Lucknow.

Mr. HENDERSON. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tolmie) can say to the people of Lucknow: I have no interest in you, and you can get your mail service any way you like. I am unable to see why the Postmaster General could not furnish mail service to these people when there was no difficulty in the way of the ordinary traveller when the train became stalled, leaving the train and driving even sixty miles over the roads of the country which, we were told by the hon. member, were comparatively good. There is certainly something wrong here, and I hope that the Prime Minister will look after his Postmaster General, and will see to it that the next time that hon. gentleman goes down to Mexico in the middle of winter he shall leave better instructions to his officials than seem to have been given to the inspectors in the western parts of Ontario.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON (North Grey). There was great dissatisfaction in northwestern Ontario with the mail service this winter. Of course, we must admit that the winter has been exceptionally severe. Still, I must say that the town of Owen Sound, from which I come, has a very clear grievance against the postal department. That town has a population of 12,000. Yet, on one occasion it was without a mail for no less than six days. The service was complete as far as Meaford, on the Grand Trunk, eighteen miles from Owen Sound, and there was a stage service twice a day between Owen Sound and Meaford. When it was found that the Canadian Pacific Railway could not get through to Owen Sound, it was clearly the duty of the department to send by way of Meaford. Had this been done we could have had our mail regularly. The Toronto newspapers displayed sufficient enterprise to send by way of Meaford, and we received the papers daily. The mail was even sent by road seventy miles from Shelburne, and we received it two or three days late. Some of our mails came even eighteen days late. It can hardly be wondered at if we say that such a service is not very satisfactory. I am glad the hon. member for East Bruce has brought this matter to the attention of the government, for there is a decided grievance which ought not to be allowed to recur.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT.

On the Order being called:

Resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Lancaster, that Bill (No. 3) an Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, be now read a second time.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick) wishes that to stand ?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice). I expect to introduce certain amendments to the Criminal Code, and one of these, I intend, shall be a clause which will not do what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) wants to do, but will go to some extent in that direction.

Mr. LANCASTER. All right; let this stand in the meantime.

Order allowed to stand.

SUPPLY—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committe of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the House going into Supply on Monday ? That is rather unusual.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Very unusual. But the order paper, so far as private members' business is concerned, has been exhausted, and if my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is not exhausted, we can go on with Supply. If he prefers, I have no objection to adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection, but I never knew the House to go into Supply before without notice. We had no intimation on Friday that government measures would be taken up.

Hon. JAS. SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). I beg my hon. friend's pardon. Perhaps he was not present, but at the closing of the sitting on Friday it was stated that if the order paper were exhausted, Supply would be gone on with. My hon. friend from East Grey——

Mr. SPROULE. Yes. The Minister of Finance said, in reply to a question from this side as to whether any government orders would be taken up, that if the private members' business were exhausted we would go into Supply.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It was in view of that question from the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and what I took to be the arrangement, that I made it a point to be here ready to go on. Had it not been for the hon. member for East Grey suggesting it, I should have expected adjournment to follow, as a matter of course, the exhaustion of the order paper. I would much prefer to see some progress made in Supply if it were convenient to members of the House. It was not without notice to us all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not present at the adjournment on Friday, so I stand corrected as to that. I am as willing to work, and to work as hard as any one in the House, but I want to understand what we are going to do. In the past it has been the custom to adjourn at four or five o'clock in the afternoon on Monday if we had then reached government orders. If instead of that we are to adopt a different system and go into government orders on Mondays and Wednesdays and other days, we want to know it, and have the arrangement understood. I do not think we should change the usual order of things quite so abruptly.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) withdrawn.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We are trying to do better all the time; this is a reform government, and we are progressing. I move that we now adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would be glad to discuss with my right hon. friend this question of proceeding on private members' days with government orders, and perhaps we will be able to come to some understanding. If he would only reform in other ways as rapidly as he is reforming in this matter, I would be very glad. However, I would like to know what business the government intends to take up to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence intends to take up the resolutions on the Militia Bill and complete them to-morrow. Then we will go into Supply on Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 8.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 29, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 21) to incorporate the Pontiac and Interprovincial Railway Company.—Mr. McCool.

Bill (No. 22) respecting the Brantford and Hamilton Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 23) respecting the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. McCreary.

Bill (No. 25) to incorporate the Whitehorse and Alsek Railway Company.—Mr. McPherson.

Bill (No. 26) to incorporate the Edmonton, Athabasca and Mackenzie Railway Company.—Mr. Scott.

Bill (No. 27) respecting the Real Estate Title Guarantee and Trust Company.—Mr. L. P. Demers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved :

That the resolution for the ratification of the agreement between His Majesty the King and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, dated the 8th March, 1904, be the first Order of the Day immediately after the introduction of Bills, on Tuesday, the 5th day of April next, and be so continued from day to day until finally disposed of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems to me that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) should make provision at least for questions to be put by members, and private Bills. The resolution, in the form in which it is proposed, would prevent any questions being asked during the entire discussion upon the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement. That discussion may be very short or it may be very long ; we cannot tell ; but there is surely no reason why it should shut out private members from asking questions in the meantime or put to one side private Bill legislation, which ought to be forwarded as much as possible. It does not seem to me that to amend the resolution so as to allow for the asking of questions and the consideration of private Bills would affect the disposition of the Grand Trunk Pacific resolution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I anticipated that the discussion on the Grand Trunk Pacific resolution would be short, and, therefore, I did not make the provision which my hon. friend thinks ought to be made. But in view of my possibly having been mistaken, and of the possibility that the discussion may be longer than I supposed the subject warranted at this stage, I have no objection to making provision——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is it the same Bill as last year ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, with some slight variations ; but I do not expect the same discussion. So far as private Bills are concerned, that order would not be interfered with by the resolution I propose, except on Mondays, because on Wednesdays and Fridays private Bills come up after recess, as the hon. member (Mr. R. L. Borden) knows. But private Bills, being the first order on Monday, they would be interfered with on that day. I have no objection to amend my resolution so as to provide that the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement may be the first order after private Bills on Monday, and after questions to be put by members on other days. And, if my hon. friend will agree to that, the Clerk can arrange the resolution to carry out the object.

Mr. SPROULE. How will private Bills on Wednesdays and Fridays be provided for ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Under the rules of the House private Bills are the first order after recess on Wednesdays and Fridays. There is no necessity to make special provision in this resolution for that, I am sure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is suggested by my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that possibly the Prime Minister's resolution would supersede the rule under which private Bills come up between eight and nine o'clock. Does the Prime Minister say it would not ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sure it will not.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So long as we have that understanding——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is perfectly clear.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought that the passing of this resolution would suspend all rules that would interfere with the carrying out of the resolution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not at all. This resolution only provides that the ratification of the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement shall be the first order of the day. The rules of the House provide that, whatever may be the standing order, at eight o'clock on Wednesday and on Friday private Bills are taken up. In any case, if you will put the resolution, Mr. Speaker, it can be arranged in accordance with that understanding.

Motion agreed to.

THE MILITIA ACT—PAY OF DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF ORDNANCE.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved that the House do to-morrow go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

Resolved, that the director general of ordinance shall be paid at the rate of $3,200 per annum.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY — GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—INCOMPLETE CORRESPONDENCE.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before that motion is put, I would call the Prime Minister's attention to the portion of the correspondence which has been brought down respecting the proposed alterations in the contract between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. On page 3 of the correspondence, as printed, I find this paragraph with reference to one of the proposed alterations :

The terms upon which the Grand Trunk is to acquire the common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the liability to be incurred by such acquisition to be fully determined and made the subject of agreement.

I presume that some such agreement has been made. Would there be any objection to including it as part of the correspondence ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have to inform my hon. friend that everything relating to this matter has been laid before the House, the letter of the president of the company, Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, making certain requests, and the concessions made by the government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no such agreement, then ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Nothing more than appears in the correspondence.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public works chargeable to income—public buildings—Ontario—Kingston military buildings—stable accommodation for field battery, $5,000.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman promised to bring down certain papers in relation to the erection or improvement of the buildings in the city of Guelph. Perhaps he has them now.

Hon. JAS. SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). I have the plans showing the building and improvements that have been made at Guelph, and I now lay them on the table.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the minister a letter accompanying the plans and explaining them ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The question raised by certain hon. gentlemen opposite was that the plans made by the architect were impossible of execution, and were not being carried out. I have brought down the plans to show that these statements were erroneous, and that the work was being carried on as stated by the department.

Mr. CLARKE. That statement is hardly in accordance with the facts. I think the complaint was that it was impossible to erect that building on a certain street, that it was impossible to carry out the plans where the site had been chosen.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The 'Hansard' shows what was said.

Mr. LENNOX. The explanation required is this : We have the ground plans there—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This question is not now before the committee. In order that it may be brought up it will be necessary to make a motion.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It will come up for consideration later on.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item now before the committee is the Kingston military buildings—stable accommodation for field battery.

Mr. LENNOX. But when the item was up before, the minister promised to make some further explanations.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. According to the wish of the committee the item was allowed to stand. I do not bring the item up now, because I wish to place the plans and information in the hands of the members to be criticised, and that they may have an opportunity of seeing them for themselves.

Mr. LENNOX. There is just this remark to be made, that the plans do not appear to explain themselves. We will require this information at least—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. That item is not under discussion.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The item was allowed to stand, and it will be called again in its proper order. An item that has passed can be brought up again, but this item has not passed.

Mr. LENNOX. With the permission of the chairman I would like to make the point clear that I started to speak on. I have looked at the plan for a moment or two, and I wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that, judging from the ground plans alone, we cannot ascertain what portion of the building is old and what portion is new. Now if the plans are left on the table for the purpose of examination, at a later time we may be able to discuss the matter, but it is necessary for the minister to give us some more information than he has given yet.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. gentleman will say what information he wants I will try and furnish it.

Mr. LENNOX. We want to know what portion of the structure that is now being dealt with is new and what portion is old.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is shown on the plan itself.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the minister give us any information about this Kingston military building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site has been bought for the erection of this building and the plans are being prepared. The suggestion came from the local people that a change might be made. The chief architect thinks that the amount we are asking for this season will nearly complete the building that is required. Mr. Garvin was the owner of the site.

Kingston Royal Military College—addition to building, $5,500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We had previously a vote of $5,000. This is especially to pay for the fittings in the gymnasium.

The total cost is estimated at $7,000, of which it is assumed we will be able to spend out of the vote for the current year, $1,992. The gymnasium is an addition to the Royal Military College building. Some of the fittings were bought in England and some in Canada, from Ketchum & Co.

Mr. CLARKE. Were public bids asked for ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The manufacturers were asked to tender.

Mr. CLARKE. By circular ? How many firms were asked to bid for the supply of those goods ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Two.

Mr. CLARKE. Who were they ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The Narragansett Manufacturing Co., one of the leading firms in the United States, and one of the leading English firms.

Mr. CLARKE. Are there no firms engaged in the manufacture and supply of these goods in Canada ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, these goods are not manufactured in Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. They may not manufacture them but are there any firms in Canada which supply them ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Not as far as we know.

Mr. TAYLOR. I drew the attention of the Minister of Public Works last year to the fact that the barracks in Kingston were in a dilapidated condition. I think I also drew the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to the fact in addition to which I drew the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to it one day when he was passing in his yacht. The forts were unroofed by a windstorm a few years ago and I think the government are neglecting their duty in not having them put in proper condition. They are land marks, whether they are of service now or not from a military point of view, and there ought to be a few hundred dollars spent upon them to protect them from further injury.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I remember very distinctly that the matter was brought up last year.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In reference to what has been said by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) I may say that the matter was discussed in the House last year when I said that I was of the opinion that instead of constructing new barracks at Kingston we should utilize Fort Henry. Since then further inquiry has been made and the general and other officers, including the chief engineer of my department, have reported against doing so and in favour of constructing barracks near the drill hall in the city. We have ground there available, I believe, for that purpose. However, this is scarcely the proper place to discuss this matter. I will be ready when my estimates come up to go into the matter more fully.

Mr. CLARKE. I think there must be a great many houses supplying sporting goods in the leading cities of Canada, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and other places, and it seems to me they should have been given an opportunity for bidding for the supply of these goods.

London drill hall and armoury, $90,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What about that ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The estimate in the department is that this will complete the work now under contract.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the work supposed to cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $186,934.88.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to know what the lot cost, what the building will cost, how many tenders there were for the building, the amount of each tender and whether the lowest tenderer received the contract.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram), or one of his colleagues, asked these same questions last session.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not care whether they were asked fifty sessions ago we are entitled to the information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman says he does not care. I do care because I do not want to give the information over again.

Mr. CLARKE. You had better send for the 'Hansard' and get the information.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no object in stating that some one else asked for this information. I asked for it and it is my right to have it.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The country wants to know whether it is necessary to take up the time of parliament by giving the same information two or three times over. As some of these same questions were asked and answered two or three years ago it could hardly be expected that I should be called upon to give the information again, but still, I am going to give my hon. friend all I possibly can. He has asked me, first, as to the cost of the site. The cost of the site was $25,707. The second question is as to the number of tenders. The information has been brought down. My hon. friend must see that he could not expect me to have that information definitely at this stage, but I do remember that quite a large number of tenders were received for this work. The contract was let to Sullivan & Langdon, of Kingston, and it calls for the completion of the work on the 30th December, 1904.

Mr. CLARKE. How much has been spent to date on the site and building and how much will be required to complete the work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Up to date there has been spent $98,057.80.

Mr. CLARKE. How much will be required to complete the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $90,000.

Mr. CLARKE. The site and armoury will cost $188,000 ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $186,934 are the figures made up by the architect.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister arrives at the conclusion that I was a little hasty in asking these questions and he says that simply because he furnished this information to some other hon. gentleman it ought to be a sufficient answer. We have a right to ask questions session after session for several reasons. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) first took control of the department certain abuses were pointed out to him, and he assured us that he would in no instance undertake any work without securing an estimate of the total cost. But we have had evidence time and again that he has not carried out that programme. The minister shakes his head, but I can tell him that in the case of the Guelph post office, the estimate was exceeded by several thousand dollars, and in Alexandria the minister paid $3,500 for a lot that was dear at $1,500, and we do not know what the cost of the Alexandria building is going to be. We would be negligent in our duty if we did not press for information session after session about buildings, the construction of which has been commenced. I have no doubt that the London armoury is like the rest, and that it will cost more than the original estimate.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not complain that the hon. gentleman asks questions, but I do not think it is parliamentary for a member to ask questions, and then a few minutes afterwards, that another member should put exactly the same questions. I am only too happy to give any information which I possibly can.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister give the information now ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have not the tenders here, but I will be pleased to bring down a list of the tenders, the names, and the amounts.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the London armoury complete now ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, the contract calls for its completion on the 31st of December, 1904.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we not within our rights in asking questions about this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am not disputing your right, but it cannot be expected that a minister can have the entire files of his department here so as to enable him to answer questions about matters which have occurred several years ago.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is much easier for the Minister of Public Works to have his officials supply the information, than it is for us to hunt through 'Hansard' to see what was said some years ago. The trouble with these ministers is that when they are asked a question they lecture us on what we ought to do. If they spent their time giving us the information instead of lecturing us, we would get through much quicker. The fact is, as we say in the country, these gentlemen get swollen heads when they get into the cabinet and they think they should not give the country any information. Let them reflect how they used talk to the Conservative government and then they will understand what the right of the opposition is. If I were a minister of the Crown——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, you make a great deal of noise and assume quite a jocular air, but I am telling you that if I were a minister of the Crown and came down to ask for an appropriation, I would have all the facts and figures before me, and I would not waste time lecturing the members of the opposition ; when they ask for information they should be furnished with.

Mr. BLAIN. How much will the architect be paid in this case?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Two per cent.

Mr. GILMOUR. Have these contractors a contract for the entire completion of the building ready for occupation, or will there be extra for fittings.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The fittings and heating will be separate.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the Minister of Public Works say that he gave this information to the House two years ago ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, I said that the tenders were brought down, but I do not say when.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister now tells us that this building will cost $186,000, and in view of the information we got about two years ago it is no wonder we should ask questions year after year.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I had nothing to do with any statement that was made by the Minister of Public Works two years ago. I remember distinctly that last year I said that the estimated cost would be from $175,000 to $180,000. I took considerable trouble to get an estimate, and now that the work is nearly completed, and considering the amount involved, I think it was a pretty close estimate indeed.

Mr. INGRAM. I will read the answer that was given when the London armoury question was taken up in this House two years ago :

Mr. SPROULE. What is the total cost of that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already stated to the House that I do not intend to spend more than $100,000 at London. Part of the site has been bought, but there are two more little spots I want to buy if I can get them pretty cheap. London is a very important military district, and it is only fair that we should give them a good building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It was not I who made that statement.

Mr. INGRAM. Certainly not. It was the Minister of Public Works at that time. I am not holding the hon. gentleman responsible for what took place previous to his holding office. I am simply pointing out, what is the case in every department, that one statement is made one year and a contrary statement the next year. That is what we on this side find fault with, and that is why we have to go to the records. It strikes me that there is a great big bluff put on us sometimes. Hon. gentlemen opposite want to bluff their estimates through by giving as little information as possible, because they know that if they give us full information, that is put on record, and may be quoted against them afterwards. Until there is more honesty in giving answers to questions, difficulties of this kind will continue to occur.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice in the discussion of last year that the hon. minister stated that the architect was receiving 2½ per cent. Has there been a change of agreement since last year, or is it the policy of the government to employ a local architect where buildings of this kind are being constructed, and is a uniform fee paid to architects in different parts of Canada ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My policy has been to engage a local architect as superintendent wherever that has been possible. The usual commission allowed, where the plans, specifications and details have been prepared by the department, is 2 per cent.

Mr. CLANCY. Are the plans not prepared by the chief architect of the department in every case ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I would not like to say in every case. In some cases the plans are prepared by the local architect, and for that he is paid extra. My hon. friend knows that the rate charged by Ontario architects, for preparing plans and specifications and superintending the work, is 7 per cent. But the general policy which I have adopted and am endeavouring to carry out is to have the plans prepared in the department and to employ a local architect to superintend the work.

Mr. CLARKE. Who prepared the plans in this case ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The architect of the department.

Mr. GILMOUR. Who is the superintendent at London ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Henry has acted as clerk of works. It is certainly a great saving to the country to have the work carried on in this way instead of by the methods adopted in the past.

Mr. BLAIN. Is a local architect employed in every case where a building is put up in a city ? If not, why make a special case of the city of London ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have already stated that wherever I have had to do with the commencement of any work, my policy has been to employ an architect if there is one in the place. In some places where there is no architect, we have to employ a man to act as foreman.

Mr. GILMOUR. Does Mr. Henry get any extra pay as clerk of works ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. GILMOUR. He is a good man.

Mr. BLAIN. Has a local architect been employed in connection with the Chatham armoury ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Not yet, but there probably will be.

Mr. BLAIN. Has one been employed in connection with the Cobourg armoury ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No appointment has been made there either.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why is there no sum in the estimates for a drill shed in the town of Lindsay, which was promised, if I remember rightly, about three years ago ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The reason is that there are no new appropriations in these estimates.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There will be in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There will be some new ones, but I do not know which will be the lucky places.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. We have been very patient. I think the minister last year said that the request would receive very serious consideration. I took that to mean that the item would be put in the estimates. I hope, when the supplementary estimates come down, we shall find a substantial sum for that purpose.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I stated at the opening of the consideration of these items that owing to the lateness at which the House was prorogued last year, very little work had yet been done, and therefore we are practically revoting the appropriations of last session. The important places will all be provided for as soon as the department and the government can see their way clear to recommend them.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister say at what places in the list of votes on this page a local architect is employed ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, Guelph—my hon. friend will hardly expect me to remember them all. I mentioned Halifax the other night. In most of the important places an architect is employed and, as I have stated, that is the general policy which I am endeavouring to carry out.

Mr. BLAIN. At a uniform fee of 2 per cent ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Practically so. In other places it may be smaller or greater. In Halifax I think it is 1½ per cent ; but 2 per cent is about the average.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that the architect in the London case is clerk of the works as well. Does he get extra pay for being clerk of works ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. INGRAM. That is an exceptional case in London. There are several other public buildings where they get extra pay. In British Columbia they get as high as $7 a day and in other parts from $2.50 to $3.50. That is something which ought to be remedied. Engaging clerks of works or superintendents on public works has the effect of prolonging the delay in building these works, because it is to the interest of these men to keep their pay going as long as possible. The clerk of works will not complain because there are not sufficient men on the job to complete it within reasonable time. That is one reason why the construction of our public buildings takes so long. Instead of getting a daily salary, these men should be given so much percentage.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If I understand the hon. gentleman, he approves of the policy I have adopted in this direction.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman has adopted the policy of paying so much per cent and not paying a daily wage to the clerk of works, I approve.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is what I have done and am trying to carry out.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is to be commended for this, and I hope we will not find later that he is not carrying it out.

Mr. WILSON. What is the necessity for having a clerk of works and a local architect as well ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. To what work does the hon. gentleman refer ?

Mr. WILSON. To any work. What is the use of having a clerk of works as well as a local architect on public buildings ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. As there is no clerk of works in this particular case, I cannot give any reason why there should be one.

Mr. WILSON. I understood that there was a clerk of works and a local architect as well, but that they were both the same person, and that it is not unusual to have a clerk of works as well as a local architect. I would ask the hon. minister if in no case where they have a local architect, they have a clerk of works.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. None that I can remember. Certainly not in this case.

Oshawa public building, $18,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How much is this building going to cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My desire is to carry out the policy I have announced, and which has been agreed to as the proper one, and that is to give an estimate as nearly as possible of the total cost of the work. Any reasonable man must admit that there may be variations, sometimes material variations in the cost, but not in such a sense as to in any way deceive the House. The estimates are made up by the chief architect who has to depend to a considerable extent on his subordinates.

Mr. CLARKE. If the chief architect sends a report over his own signature, he does not depend on his subordinates.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, not as a rule, but he may take his figures from his staff, and the minister depends on the staff furnishing correct estimates. The intention in all these works is to give what we believe will be the actual total cost, and in this case the estimate is $25,941.58.

Mr. CLARKE. How much does the site cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $2,900, and the amount of $29,941 includes the site.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has anything been expended on the building as yet ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, but the site has been paid for.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the size of the site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. 82 feet 5 inches frontage by 140 feet deep.

Mr. BLAIN. From whom was the site purchased ? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us a history of the purchase.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have no further history to give than that under authority of an Order in Council, dated 24th of December, 1903, the Minister of Public Works was authorized to purchase from Mr. M. Finnegan, lot No. 3 for $2,900. It is situate on the north side of King street and is a corner lot.

Mr. BLAIN. Was any one sent from the department to find out whether this was a suitable site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister give us the report of the officer sent up to select this site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site was not selected by an officer of the department. I think it was purchased on the recommendation of the member for the riding and mayor of the town.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the plans completed ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. CLARKE. But the hon. gentleman stakes his reputation that the building will not cost more than $25,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, with the reserve I made in the statement I have just given.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that estimate made before the plans were completed ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The plans not being completed, we can only give an estimate, and I did so to carry out the promise I made that an estimate would be given. According to the officers of the department, the work can be done for this figure provided there is no great change in the cost of material or labour.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the policy of the department with respect to purchasing sites of this kind ? Is it usual to purchase sites on the recommendation of the sitting member ? In the case where the sitting member is not a supporter of the government, what would be the policy of the government ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The policy of the department in these matters is much like that of the corporation or individual—we try to do the best we can. As a rule, the public gnerally take an interest in the matter, and municipal bodies interested make representations. In the case of armouries, for instance, the local militia, as a rule make representations as to the site to be chosen. The town council also usually give their opinion. My hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will admit that, if the representative bodies in the vicinity did not make representation they would hardly be doing they duty.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Was any information given to any party in Oshawa or the riding to the effect that the government intended to purchase this particular site ? I am informed that Mr. Finnegan purchased the lot a few months before for a very much less sum than he sold it for to the government.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. So far as my information goes, there is no ground for the suggestion of my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. T. I. Thomson). No information was given by the minister or by the department as to what site would be purchased.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I suppose the purchase was made on the recommendation of the local member ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The local representative did recommend this site, and we received a recommendation from the local municipal council to the same effect. I know that the mayor, and perhaps other members of the council, waited upon me recommending the purchase of this site.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The reason I make the statement, is that I was informed by a very prominent resident of Oshawa that this Mr. Finnegan purchased the property a short time before he sold it to the government and purchased it for very much less than he sold it for. The hon. minister does not say that no information was given, which I take to be an intimation that information was given, that this lot was to be purchased.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My information is that the owner from whom the government purchased had bought the lot a short time before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Well, what about it ?

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. He would not have purchased it had he not had some information that the government intended to secure it.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. From my examination of the case, I am satisfied that the truth is quite the contrary of what is reported to the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Thomson). However, I do not know that it is material. The site, I believe, gives great satisfaction to the people of the town and the price is considered reasonable.

Mr. CLARKE. In the case of Alexandria, there was a recommendation from the chief architect that $3,500 was a reasonable price to pay for the site. Was there any report from the chief architect in this case ?. If not, why not ? In what cases is the chief architect called upon to send in such a letter, and in what case is that pre-requisite not complied with ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know of any case in which it is not complied with.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there a letter of the chief architect in this case ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There must have been a recommendation from some officer of the department. Of course, the chief architect cannot visit all the places in Canada. As a rule, in the case of distant places, we get the report of some district officer. I do not know which officer certified in this case.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. minister remember the tenor of the report of the officer ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not remember. It must have been favourable or I would remember it.

Mr. CLARKE. Was some other site purchased first ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Not to my knowledge. Several sites were considered, though I cannot remember about them now.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) is in his place. Probably he could give us information on the subject. If a public building were put up in my constituency I should be ready to give any information to the committee that I could, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross, Ontario) is so genial always, that I feel sure he would be willing to oblige us.

Mr. BENNETT. Before the hon. member rises, I would like to ask a question. How far is this site from the Western Bank, which, as I remember, is on the corner of the principal street and a side street ?

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (South Ontario). The site selected is one block east of the Western Bank, which is on the main cross streets. There were practically three available sites, one was one block west, one was one block east and the other one block south. This site was chosen as the most desirable, and I still think the choice was a wise one. Of course, there may be differences of opinion about that—people living in the south or in the west may think that a mistake was made. But, I think that, taking it all round, the site was well chosen and, considering the price that lots in that part of the country have been selling for, the price paid was a reasonable one.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Is the post office not to be in the town ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). Yes, one block west of the main cross street.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The hon. gentleman spoke of lots in that part of the country.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member tells us that three sites were talked about. Would he tell us at what time this discussion of sites went on ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I think it was after the estimate was brought down showing that we were to have a public building.

Mr. INGRAM. That is, during last session ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I think so.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us about what time Mr. Finnigan bought the lot that was afterwards sold to the government ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I cannot give that information.

Mr. BENNETT. Is Mr. Finnigan connected with Mayor Fowke in business in any way ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I am not aware of it.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Wm. Ross) is not able to say whether Mr. Finnigan purchased this property during the discussion of these three sites. Will he undertake to say that Mr. Finnigan did not ask him what site the government was likely to select ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I cannot tell what Mr. Finnegan thought or what anybody else thought. I did not tell him—had no communication with him—and he never asked me.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The fact remains that there is a feeling in the town of Oshawa that there is something wrong about the purchase of this property. It is stated practically that there was a job put up on the department. Mr. Finnegan purchased the property ostensibly to sell it to the government, and succeeded in doing it. I would like to know on whose advice he purchased it and on whose recommendation the government purchased it at this figure.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I am satisfied that there is no foundation whatever for the statement made by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. T. I. Thomson). I am satisfied of that from my own knowledge of the transaction.

Mr. BENNETT. I must congratulate the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Ross) in expressing himself so admirably as he has done to-day. After all the trouble there was in that town about the postmastership, it must rather annoy him to see this phantom coming up about the post office. Now if the hon. member would be frank and fair with the House he would tell us that this has been a burning question in the town of Oshawa as to this post office site. The hon. gentleman says he does'nt know whether Fowke and Finnigan are in partnership. Is it not a fact that it is currently reported in Oshawa that Fowke and Finnigan are connected with this lot ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I am not aware of it.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman is pretty guarded. Now this is a burning question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is a burning question ?

Mr. BENNETT. Vegetables, the same nightmare that haunts the hon. gentleman. Now this has been a burning question in the town of Oshawa. A large element of the Liberals there are utterly disgusted with what is known as this job, in dragging the post office down there. May I ask the Minister of Public Works if he is aware that a petition has been sent down here asking for the establishment of a second post office in Oshawa in consequence of the determination of the government to locate this building at the proposed place ? Or has the member for South Ontario heard of it ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, I am not aware of any.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the member for South Ontario if he has heard of it ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I am aware that a petition has been sent to the Postmaster General for opening a post office in the south of Oshawa, but whether it is due to the situation of this public building, I am not aware. I congratulate the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) in bringing this matter up in the nice way he has done. As to this being a burning question among the Liberals of Oshawa, as he says, I do not understand it to be so. It has been a burning question with the 'Vindicator,' the Conservative paper in Oshawa who has tried to make political capital out of it. But so far as my opinion goes, there is absolutely nothing wrong about the purchase of the site ; so far as I know, upon my oath and upon my honour as a member of parliament, I know absolutely of nothing wrong in connection with that matter. I say again as I have said before, that I think the site is an admirable one, and that it satisfies the majority of the people of Oshawa, and I think a majority of the people of Oshawa will say so.

Mr. BENNETT. One thing is certain, that as soon as the government announced that they were going to take up the Finnigan site, a large number of the residents in the south part of the town who heretofore had been quite satisfied with the present post office site, saw it was their duty to petition the government to establish a post office in another part of the town. It goes without saying that it was not until the hon. member's friends had decided to establish the post office at that site that these people decided that it would be disadvantageous to have it there. Now let me read what the 'Vindicator' says. I think the hon. gentleman can scrutinize the Liberal paper in that town and he will not find a word in that paper supporting the proposed site. These are some of the statements of the 'Vindicator.' I know the hon. gentleman has not a very high regard for the 'Vindicator,' but that is due perhaps to some action of the hon. gentleman :

> Now that the post office is to be placed still further out of the way, the people of the south and southwest demand a separate service. They very properly rebel against the treatment they are to receive.
> Had the new post office site been selected as it should have been and where it could have been purchased for half the money, at Coburn's corner, we venture the opinion that this move for a separate service would never have been heard of, but the people of the south have rights, and have taken immediate steps to assert them. They know very well that their interests for all time were sacrificed to enable a small clique of Liberals to squeeze a few hundreds of public money.

It does not say so, but it insinuates that there is more than one interest in the site ; and that is in accordance with the information I have received, that there is more than one interest in this site. I think the statement is true, and that the site was only acquired a little time before the department determined to take it over.

> Everybody is affected by a wretched piece of business like this, and the longer it stands the worse it will look. Should there be a change of government we fully believe not a brick would be laid there. The place should be made a calf pasture, or a bowling green. A thousand times better leave the post office where it is for an age, than to discommode a whole town for ever to suit the grasping purposes of a few party healers.

Now may I ask the member for South Ontario if there is any building on the proposed site ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). Yes, there is. It is now a private dwelling, but it was previously a doctor's residence for 25 or 30 years. Let me say to the hon. gentleman that according to my recollection the lot is not over ten or twelve doors from the present post office. The present place is as valuable as any in Oshawa. Regarding the opening of a new post office in South Oshawa, there are only two blocks between the Cockburn block and the property acquired by the government. All the properties that were considered in connection with the matter were but one block from the absolute centre of the town, and Dr. Cockburn's property was only one block south and this property was but one block east, and then there was a property one block west. These are practically the best available sites.

Mr. BENNETT. I have been in Oshawa and know a little about the town. Now two blocks from that back corner takes you away out of the active business portion of the town. The very fact that three or four different sites have been under discussion, as the minister states, and the fact that this lot was acquired only a little time before it was bought by the vendor, and the fact that it is openly denounced by this newspaper and not commended by the other paper, allow a fair inference that there has been a very strong political pull exerted.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). The hon. gentleman is wrong when he says that it has not been commended by the other paper, because the other paper has commended it. But whatever it may say in connection with the matter, I still maintain that a large majority of the people of Oshawa are in favour of the site which has been purchased by the government. I am sure there is no better site to be found. If you take one of the four corners in the central part of the town it would be much more expensive. There is in my opinion no better site in Oshawa than the one that has been purchased. It is on the corner, 82 feet 5 inches by 140 feet. It is a splendid location for the purpose of a public building. The town is growing in the direction of this site. Down west of the four corners it is only half a mile. The town is extending towards the east, and factories are to-day going up in the eastern, and southern and north easterly portions of the town.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. May I ask the hon. member if the Liberal newspaper commended the present site as strongly as it did the appointment of the present postmaster ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). The hon. gentleman does not want an answer to that, does he ?

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Was the site purchased from a party named Finnigan ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I would ask the member for South Ontario how far this location is from the business street ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). It is on a business street, and it is only one block from the four corners in the central part of the town.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The 'Vindicator' says it is a calf pasture.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). Don't believe all that the 'Vindicator' says.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I should suppose that this paper would represent public opinion to a large extent. This lot has 80 feet frontage, I understand, and over $3,000 was paid for it, and now it is called a calf pasture by one of the papers of the town. In fact no matter how you look at it, it presents an ugly face. The fact remains that Finnigan purchased this property a short time before. He must have had some knowledge that the government intended to purchase that property.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Would the hon. gentleman kindly inform me how much he paid for it.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. If you will let the question stand for a short time, I will get the information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am informed that the gentleman who bought this property paid quite a large sum for it, and he sold the best part of it not a bit over pro rata what he had paid for the whole property. I merely asked for the information for my own use.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. If the hon. minister will allow this matter to stand for 24 hours I will promise to give him the information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is not an important enough matter to justify the hon. gentleman in asking to have it stand.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I suppose it would not make any change but it is as well of the country to know on what conditions property is purchased for government buildings. There is something in connection with this purchase which is disagreeable and it is well to ventilate it. I do not know that the hon. minister is responsible, but if the local member is, his constituents should know it.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am fully responsible for the purchase of this site and if the hon. gentleman knows of anything that has the slightest appearance of wrong it is his duty as a member not to insinuate or to make statements such as those he is now making before the committee, but to submit the proof of what he says. I take the full responsibility for the purchase of this lot. I say that the purchase price is very reasonable and as far as I am able to ascertain the opinion of the people of Oshawa irrespective of politics, it is that of all the sites among those that were offered and those that came within the amount that we were in a position to pay, the most suitable, was the one which we selected. There is nothing in the transaction of which any person has cause to be ashamed. I do not think it is right for any hon. gentleman who has no facts to state, or information to give, to make insinuations against the minister, the officials, or even against the citizens of Oshawa. There is not the slightest foundation for the mere hear-say statements which he has made. This transaction ought to be dealt with on its merits and if there is anything wrong within the knowledge of the hon. gentleman, it is his duty to expose it here and now.

Mr. CLARKE. In this case, was there any official sent to Oshawa to make a report ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. May we have that report ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. How long was the question of the purchase of the site befor' the department before the purchase was made ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. About three months.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Would the hon. minister have any objections to laying the correspondence on the table ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Not the slightest. If the hon. gentleman says he desires it, I will not even ask him to move for a return. I will be pleased to give instructions to have it brought down.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Why did it require three months to make this purchase ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot tell that gentleman why it took three months.

Mr. CLARKE. Twelve days were all that were consumed in completing the Alexandria site purchase.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. The statements I made here to-day, I received from a very prominent citizen of Oshawa and the facts stated are as he gave them to me. I believe him to be a thoroughly reliable man and hence I repeated them here.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Will the hon. gentleman give the name of that man ? I do not know whether the correspondent has made the insinuations that the hon. gentleman has made upon the floor of this House or not, but I think it is only fair, considering the importance of the question, that the hon. gentleman should at least say whether he made these insinuations upon his own responsibility. He says that he makes them on the authority of a respectable citizen. It is only due to the other citizens of Oshawa and to myself that he should give the name of the person who made such statements.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. I make these statements on my own responsibility and I would like to ask the hon. minister to allow this item to stand.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I appeal to the committee to say if there has been any good reason or any reason at all given why this item should stand. If my hon. friend will furnish one reason in connection with this matter I will be only too glad to assent to any such proposition. But, after the insinuations which have been made, I have only to say that if my hon. friend has reason to think that there is any foundation for his statements the postponement of the consideration of the item would not help him because the proper way would be to have an investigation in regard to the statements which he makes.

Mr. CLARKE. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Thomson) made these statements some time ago and he suggested in a most respectful way to the hon. minister to allow the item to stand for 24 hours until he could get more definite, more accurate, or fuller information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Information as to what ?

Mr. CLARKE. Information as to the statements he made. If the hon. member is anxious to have the statements made by my hon. friend from North Grey implemented, why not accept the proposition and allow the item to stand for 24 hours ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There has been no reason given why this item should stand.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister a minute ago charged my hon. friend from North Grey with making statements that cannot be substantiated. My hon. friend has asked for time to bring documentary evidence and to give further proof or fuller information as to the statements he has made. It is not an unreasonable request. If the hon. minister desires to give my hon. friend that opportunity, he should allow the item to stand.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Allowing the item to stand does not give him an opportunity. If he has the slightest information to bear out the statements he has made, I will give him an opportunity in the proper way. I will give him a committee of investigation so that he can place the information before that committee. We cannot satisfactorily discuss the matter on the floor of this House. I will give him an opportunity of availing himself of the constitutional, the proper and the parliamentary method of proving his statements.

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Thomson) stated to the committee that he was informed by a reputable citizen of Oshawa, of certain things. I have no doubt he may have been informed of certain things in regard to this matter, because there is no question that the selection of a site for a public building costing $20,000 or $25,000, in a town will affect certain people in a certain way. One will want it in his direction and another will want it in his direction, but if the government has obtained the property for $2,900, which is just within a block of the front street, 82 feet 5 inches by 140 feet and a corner lot, that property is cheap at the price.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How much did Finnigan pay for it ?

Mr. WM. ROSS (Ontario). I do not know what Finnigan paid for it. There is no question but that some people are disappointed in Oshawa. The 'Vindicator' that has been referred to is disappointed, because, if the building had been placed south of the four corners, it would have been almost next door to the 'Vindicator' office. As the representative of the riding, I have no hesitation in recommending this site to the government for the purpose of a post office. In connection with that newspaper which has been quoted in the House to-day, I would say that I have been slandered and vilified by it and that it has regarded with unrelenting suspicion absolutely everything that has been done in that riding. I have tried to do everything as fairly and squarely as I could. Under the circumstances I cannot see any reason why the item should stand. If any hon. member has anything to bring up about it, I shall be very glad to have it investigated in the public accounts committee, or before a special committee, or in any way that may be desired.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) did not see fit to quote his own newspaper 'The Ontario Reformer' because he could get very little comfort out of that. It pleads that the public should not pay any attention to these attacks on the purchase of the site by saying :

If, as alleged, the site for the post office cost too much, may not the lot have brought too little money ?

That is a most pathetic appeal. It does not attempt to defend the site as being a central position and it makes only a weak hearted plea that the price is not an extravagant one.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister intend to employ a local architect and a clerk of works for this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is not my intention.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the total cost of the building including the heating and internal equipment is to be $25,900 ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. About $26,000; I gave the actual figures.

Mr. CLARKE. You are getting it up a $1,000 already.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Not at all. The exact estimate is $25,941.58 or in round figures $26,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion is to be expended on the building, and what proportion on the interior equipment ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Cost of building in round figures, $18,000 ; site, $2,900 ; heating, $1,000 ; fittings and furniture, $2,200 ; wire and electric light fixtures, $350 ; fences and sidewalks, $400 ; incidentals, $1,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the heating be let by tender ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Ottawa departmental building—new elevator for west block, $6,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is a revote. We have advertised for tenders. There is a small elevator in the west block now, but it is of no use for the purpose of the departments.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the elevator be placed at the entrance facing Wellington street ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I consulted with the ministers and deputy ministers in the building, and the chief architect came to the conclusion that it would be best and most convenient to put the elevator at the Wellington street side.

Mr. CLARKE. Will this be the total cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE What kind of elevator will it be ? Will it be similar to the elevators in this building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and we know the cost from our experience in the past.

Mr. CLARKE. Who supplied the elevator here ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The Fensom Elevator Co.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it intended to procure this elevator from them ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I would like very much as they have given great satisfaction, but I will have to take the lowest tender. I am prejudiced in favour of a Canadian manufacturer.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is the lucky man in this case ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We are only now asking for tenders ?

Mr. CLARKE. The lowest tender will get it ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Ottawa departmental building—steel drawers and rollers, shelves, &c., $10,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Are these purchased by tender ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No. There are only three manufacturers in Canada and we got figures from them. These files are put in on requisition from the departments. The Department of Agriculture ordered from the Canada Cabinet Co, of Gananoque, $10,885 ; the Post Office Department, Militia and Defence, and Railways and Canals ordered from the office Specialty Co. of Toronto, $22,407 worth ; the Department of the Interior, the Auditor General's office and Railway and Canals ordered from the Eclipse Office Furniture Co., Ottawa, $19,625 worth.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is that establishment ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know personally, but I am informed that it is quite a large establishment on Albert street.

Ottawa public buildings—paving in front of parliament building, tar macadam, $6,900.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Last session great complaint was made of the dirt and dust on the walks around the buildings, and on the advice of the architect of the department this work will be done. There is a company in Toronto which has supplied us with specifications, and who make a new kind of material and I have given instructions to give them the contract.

Mr. CLARKE. No tenders were called ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We asked figures from each one.

Mr. CLARKE. Who ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know but we asked figures for tar macadam, and asphalt, and this new material which I do not know the name of. It is a little dearer than some, but not so dear as others, and I am informed that it will give great satisfaction.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the minister bring down a memo. of the firms from whom bids were asked, and also the different prices ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Ottawa public buildings—new coal shed, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The deputy minister informs me that we have not storage enough for this coal, and a shed is needed in which to protect it. The contractors have to deliver the coal without cost.

Mr. CLARKE. You supply the contractors with storage accommodation.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. For our own benefit, yes.

Ottawa Printing Bureau—fire-proof addition for storing standing matter, $3,500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This small addition is being made at the request of the Department of Printing owing to the great danger of loss by fire of a lot of their valuable standing matter.

Mr. CLARKE. The last time I was in the Printing Bureau, some three years ago, there was a crying necessity for additional accommodation for the bindery. The number of employees was altogether too large for the size of the building. I do not know whether that has been considered by the department ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am sorry to say that I am not in a position to state whether any change has been made in that direction or not. I will inquire about it.

Mr. WILSON. If we are to have a Printing Bureau, I think we ought to have an efficient one. Any one who goes down there will see that there is not room enough for all the work that has to be done. The members have not yet received the 'Hansard' of last session. By an extra effort I understand the Bureau had 25 copies prepared for the House, but I do not think that any member has yet received his copy. Of the Auditor General's Report only one copy to each member has yet been issued. I think the Printing Bureau ought to be greatly enlarged, and it ought to do about all the printing required for the government under the direction of a proper officer. I have been trying for days to get an extra copy of the Auditor General's Report, but have not been able to get it. I have even applied to the Auditor General himself, but he has no extra copies.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think the Printing Bureau complain that the Auditor General was slow in sending in his matter, and that after they had printed it, he was very slow in revising the proofs. I believe they disclaim the responsibility for the delay in the issue of that report. That was stated officially by the department. As to the improvements that may be necessary for carrying on the work of the Bureau, I have no doubt that what my hon. friend says is true. There has been a very large increase in the amount of work done. That applies to all the departments. From almost every section of the country applications have come to the Public Works Department either for new works or for enlargements. If the Printing Bureau is in so congested a state as my hon. friend says it is, of course the matter will have to be taken into consideration. In any case, it would not be provided for in the main estimates, but in the new estimates for 1904-5.

Mr. WILSON. I think the trouble is not so much with the Auditor General as it is with the different departments in not furnishing the material early enough. There is another difficulty. I did my best last year to induce the Minister of Finance to allow the Auditor General to send out his report for each department as soon as it could be got ready. Why should not that be done instead of keeping everything back till the whole publication can be issued ? It would be a great advantage to the members to receive at their homes such portions of the Auditor General's Report as could be got ready before the meeting of parliament, so that they could make themselves familiar with the business which they would have to take up when the House met. Would not the Minister of Public Works lend us his assistance to have this done ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think that is a matter for parliament to deal with.

Mr. WILSON. It seems to me it is a matter for the government to deal with.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I will bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to have the opinion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this question, as he is an old parliamentarian.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not think any charge of dilatoriness can be laid at the door of the officials of the Printing Bureau. The cause of delay can be ascertained by inquiry as to the date when the last revised proof was received at the Printing Bureau. I agree with my hon. friend, however, that the officials have not room to do their work as expeditiously as it might be done. With regard to the delay in the issue of last session's 'Hansard,' I think the Debates Committee are now considering a proposition which will probably expedite the composition of the index. As the hon. member for Lennox says, the Printing Bureau performs an important work, and it ought to be provided with the necessary accommodation. When I last visited it, the accommodation in the bindery was nothing short of scandalous. The number of employees was more than double what should be employed in the space provided.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to say a word about the building in which the Supreme Court sits. I will not raise the question of the fitness of that building for the first court in the land; but I will draw the attention of the Solicitor General and the government generally to the fact that there is insufficient room either for the library, the clerks or the lawyers. Some time ago we had room to work in the library; but gradually we have been pushed out of there. At present there are only two tables at which lawyers can work, and I suppose that next year one of these will have to be moved to make room for more books. There used to be a waiting room, but that is now full of books, and it is difficult to turn around in it to get at the books. The lawyers formerly had a robing room, but that is now occupied by one of the clerks of the court. It is all very well to spend $60,000 on steel drawers and rollers, or $6,000 for an elevator to enable our hon. friends to go to their offices easily and comfortably, or $10,000 for new coal sheds; but some due regard, I should think, ought to be paid to the needs of the first court in Canada. The judges, lawyers and litigants who go there should not be put to all the inconveniences to which they are now subject. This is a question which has occupied the attention of the Public Works Department for some time, but for one reason or another the department seems unable to come to any decision about it. My hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General knows that it is an injustice, not only to the bar but the public generally, that such a state of things should continue.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is quite correct in what he has said concerning the inadequacy of the Supreme Court building for the business of that court. It is in fact in a worse condition than some of our court houses in the rural districts. What my hon. friend says about the library is equally true. That library is altogether too small. At times its tables are crowded with lawyers, unable to find suitable places in which to study up their cases. I shall certainly call the attention of the government to this very important matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will take the recommendation of my hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General into his serious consideration. Now that he has been relieved of a considerable part of the anxieties of office by having a large share of his department transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, no doubt he will have a little more time to think about this important question, and will give it his consideration.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend is not more in earnest in his remarks about the Supreme Court than he is in his remarks about the department, it will be difficult to believe that he is serious. It would not be a very difficult matter to build a new Supreme Court. Last session, when the question of public buildings in Ottawa was under consideration, I expressed myself in favour of having better accommodation provided for that court, and if parliament will endorse my views, I shall be pleased to try and have a more suitable building provided and one which would be a credit to the country and suitable for the highest court of the land.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I was perfectly serious in my remarks concerning the two departments. Parliament is entitled to know the true state of affairs—whether the Department of Public Works has had a considerable portion of its work transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That is a question which parliament ought to know something about.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We cannot discuss that now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think we can. My hon. friend brought the question up, and I do not see why I should not follow him. I am sorry that the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not present, as I would like to draw his attention to the fact that 'Le Canada,' which is his organ, announced to the country that a great part of the Public Works Department had been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Is it by 'Le Canada' that parliament is to be informed of such an important change? Is that the way in which this House is to be given the information to which it is entitled? That is a serious question, and let me tell the hon. gentleman that, as far as I am concerned, it will not be many days before I shall insist on having the Order in Council brought down which 'Le Canada' informed the public had been passed, before the estimates will be allowed to pass. Last year a law was adopted authorizing an Order in Council to be passed and sanctioned making a redistribution of the work of the two Departments of Public Works and Marine and Fisheries, and we have been informed by 'Le Canada' that an Order in Council to that effect was passed and signed by His Excellency the Governor General on the 11th of March last. We are entitled to have a copy of this Order in Council, and before we proceed much further with the estimates I shall insist on its being laid on the table. The House should be informed what part of the Department of Public Works has been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend had been present the other day, he would have known that a clear explanation was given by me, and I am not aware of any reason why anything should be kept back. But when the hon. gentleman proceeded to mix up together two things which are in no wise connected with each other, I concluded he was not serious, and doubted whether he would give me his support if I should submit a proposition to provide better accommodation for the Supreme Court. Let me tell my hon. friend that there is an item in the estimates under which properly all the information can be given he is now asking for.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I was not present when this question came up before, but I took the trouble of reading 'Hansard,' and with all deference to my hon. friend, I must say that the explanation he gave the other day was by no means a full one.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In a very short time an item will be submitted under which the whole matter can be discussed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion now going on is wholly out of order, because it has no reference whatever to the item before the House, and as each side has had its say, I must call upon the hon. gentlemen to let the matter drop.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he will bring down a copy of the Order in Council ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If there is an Order in Council, it will certainly be brought down.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is there not one ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am not prepared to say whether there is or is not, but all the papers in connection with the matter will be brought down and all information given.

Mr. CLARKE. When ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. At the very moment when we reach that item.

Mr. CLARKE. What item ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The only item under which this matter could be discussed is the item of 'Harbours and Rivers.'

Peterborough armoury, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The matter stands as it did last session. Plans are being prepared now, in conjunction with the Militia Department, and the intention is to proceed with the work as soon as possible. It will be necessary for me to ask for a further sum in the supplementaries, when full explanation will be given in regard to plans, cost, &c.

Mr. TAYLOR. When this item was called, I had just risen to say that the item with reference to Ottawa public buildings was not carried. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) brought to the attention of the minister the question of repairing or rebuilding or enlarging the Supreme Court. I think it is the duty of the government immediately to take this matter in hand. If the Minister of Public Works is not ready to investigate it himself, seeing that this is a government doing its work by commissions, let a commission be appointed to make a full report on the future wants of the country in reference to public buildings in Ottawa. A proposition is now before the House to acquire a lot at the outskirts of the city to build a geological museum. Why such a building should be placed at the outskirts of the city, I cannot understand. People visiting the capital want to look at the geological museum, and it should be close to the parliament buildings. To-day, nearly half the city of Ottawa is rented by the government for offices. If we look for the militia department, instead of finding it where it ought to be, in the public building ; we find that it has been removed half a mile away to the house of a friend of the government who is paid $12,000 a year as rent. If that amount were capitalized, it would pay for a building almost as good as this one. And, as it is with the Militia Department, so it is in a greater or less degree with almost every other. The government have rented houses all over the city and packed them with civil servants. This kind of thing ought to be stopped, and the Dominion of Canada ought to put up buildings of its own to house its servants. The rentals that are now paid, if capitalized, would provide plenty of accommodation. Take, for instance, the building that was rented for the purpose of the census. No less than $6,000 a year is paid for that building. If that amount were capitalized at three per cent it would put up a building three times as large and three times as good as the one now occupied. And the same is more clearly true of the building rented for the Militia Department.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is it?

Mr. TAYLOR. Down near the canal. It is rented from Mr. Woods. The government pay $12,000 for a small portion of a large building he owns there. It is high time this thing should stop. The government have plenty of land for public buildings, if they desired to use it. They have Major's Hill Park, or, if they like could put up buildings along Mackenzie avenue, in the direction of the printing bureau. It seems, however, that wherever the government have a friend to whom they wish to give a sop, they rent a building from him and put a few civil servants in it. Mr. Woods must be a very good friend when they give him $12,000 a year——

Mr. CLARKE. You mean $1,200 ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I do not; I mean $12,000. And there is $6,000 for the census building which is now empty or ought to be. The government is paying $6,000 for offices for Mr. Blue, Mr. Coté, Mr. Johnson and perhaps a few others. That building was rented for three years and the time is about expired. The census must be completed by this time. And, besides the rent, the government spent thousands of dollars in making improvements in the building to fit it for their requirements. This thing amounts to a scandal. Parliament ought not to vote another dollar for the rental of buildings in Ottawa. The government should put up its own buildings. They have money—well, I suppose they have not very much in spite of all they have taken from the people. But their credit is good, though politically they have much less credit than they had. But they can easily borrow money to put up buildings, and it is high time that this matter should be taken into serious consideration.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I fully agree with the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that we should have improved public buildings. And, so far as I am concerned, I expect to be able to make a recommendation to the House which, I hope will be satisfactory, to put up public buildings to provide accommodation for the civil servants and save the money now paid in rentals.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman, probably we are transgressing in discussing, on this item——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was about to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there had been such a transgression. The item on which to discuss the propriety of renting or constructing buildings in Ottawa would be an item for the renting of buildings here. Therefore I have to rule that the discussion of this matter is out of order on the present item.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. LENNOX. If you will allow me to proceed for a moment, Mr. Chairman, I would challenge this item. I notice that the discussion has gone on for a long time and I wish, as one following the profession of the law, to say something about the subject. But I thought that, perhaps, from what had transpired, I might not be allowed to speak.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am sure that the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) will not insist on speaking on any other question than the Peterborough armoury. I hope he will see that I am only asking for reasonable attention to the rule.

Mr. LENNOX. If you will allow me to address myself to you, Mr. Chairman, I will ask your indulgence to speak upon the subject that has been discussed for some time. I am at a loss to see why, as the matter has been discussed, I should not be allowed to discuss it. If you say I am not to do so I will sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have only one word to say. My highest ambition is to keep the committee to questions that come up so that we make progress. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) spoke on the question of public buildings in Ottawa, but it was confined to himself. But I ask the assistance of the committee to confine the discussion to subjects as they come up, otherwise we are as badly off as if there was no resolution before the Chair. I feel assured that hon. members will help me in this.

Mr. INGRAM. I could suggest a way by which we could confine ourselves to the subject before the Chair, and that is by the members of the government giving information on the items that are actually before us. The difficulty is that information is not given, and, at a later stage, we are obliged to ask questions to get the information. If the hon. minister will come down with all the information with regard to each item as it comes up, we shall avoid referring back as it is now necessary to do.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand that you allow me to mention this matter, Mr. Chairman, and I do not intend to transgress to any great extent. This question of providing accommodation for the Supreme Court is one of very great importance, and it opens up a question even broader in its scope, the question of providing adequate accommodation for the officials in the several departments here at the capital. I do not speak in the way of complaint when I say that I hope that the Minister of Public Works before he commits himself on the question of providing suitable accommodation for the Supreme Court will consider the general question of public buildings in Ottawa. I think it would be a very great pity if, because the providing of accommodation for the Supreme Court is somewhat urgent now, we should take steps which may not be in harmony with the general scheme of providing additional public buildings. Reference has been made many times to the lack of accommodation. It is admitted on all hands that there is not sufficient accommodation for the various departments. What I urge upon the Minister of Public Works and the government generally is that they outline some comprehensive scheme by which the necessary accommodation will be provided, and, before they commit themselves and the country to the large expenditure involved, they will lay that scheme before parliament and let the representatives of the people have some voice in the decision of this very important and far-reaching question.

As a member of this House I have been for some time directing my attention towards this lot of land on the west side of these parliament buildings, the property which is to the north of Wellington Street and immediately west of the Supreme Court building. I take this opportunity of directing the attention of the Minister of Public Works and his colleagues to this very beautiful site which I believe will be available to the government for a reasonable sum of money. If the government should decide to purchase this block west of parliament hill, immediately west of the Supreme Court building, and acquire the land down to the river north of Vittoria street, I think all will agree with me that it would make a most desirable addition to the magnificent property we already possess. At all events, I urge upon the Minister of Public Works and his colleagues, first, that they shall not commit themselves to a scheme, even for the purpose of providing adequate accommodation for the Supreme Court, desirable as that is, until they have outlined a scheme for acquiring all the property that we require for many years to come. They should not, by making a temporary move, prejudice the general scheme; and in the second place I submit the desirability and the propriety, after they have thought the matter over, of bringing it before parliament before the country is in any sense committed to the scheme.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I agree to the fullest extent with the hon. gentleman's remarks, and I shall give his proposals careful consideration.

Mr. CLARKE. I thought the hon. gentleman had some proposition that he was trying to work out to acquire the land and buildings on the south side of Wellington street and westward from the Langevin Block. It seems to me the government ought to procure that block and erect departmental buildings upon it. It is one of the most eligible sites in the city of Ottawa, and ought to be procured forthwith. If it cannot be obtained at a fair price, the government would have the right to expropriate.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman has no doubt travelled a great deal, and his opinion as to what would be a desirable site will receive my consideration.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think the first thing the government should do would be to reduce the civil service. I am sure the chairman will remember when the conduct of the government I supported was challenged because they had too many officials. I venture the assertion that they have got one-third more than we ever had. They have not only filled all the public buildings belonging to the government, but they have rented other buildings throughout the city in order to make places for their political friends. Instead of suggesting another elaborate scheme for spending the people's money to obtain more accommodation for a lot of hangers-on, I would advise you to turn out a lot of these men and women you have now in the public offices and who have nothing to do, and pay a proper salary to those who are left and make them do the work. I was informed by a gentleman in one of the departments that in his office the place was so crowded with officials that he could not do as much work, as he could with a far less number. Now would the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell me that these additional civil servants are necessary because the country is prosperous? It sounds so silly to hear them say that because the country is prosperous, because the farmers are getting a good price for what they have to sell, because the revenue is increasing, therefore it is necessary to increase the number of officials at Ottawa to the extent they have been increased. I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he sanctions that. I remember when he used to condemn the old government for having too many officials, and I thought at one time that he was honest. Now he sits there complacently and laughs when he has got all his family in the civil service getting good salaries, and while he himself occupies an office that he said was a sinecure. I remember when he was told in my presence that the office was not intended to be permanent, that when the controllers became full fledged ministers that office would be abolished. Yet he was a member of the government who, when they made the controllers full fledged ministers, continued the office he now holds and which he said was a sinecure. I am sincere in this matter, I think it is disgraceful that public men should occupy such humiliating positions.

Mr. CLARKE. We want a little more information about this item.

Mr. JAS SUTHERLAND. The matter is practically in the same position as it was when the vote was taken last session. Plans are now being prepared.

St. Catharines drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What position is that in at the present time ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. A site has been procured. Some years ago a site was offered by the city of St. Catharines and the contract was let for building a drill hall. It was found that the site was not at all suitable for such a building and after negotiation with the city a new site, and a very good one I think, has been obtained. The contractor who had the contract before would not carry out the work at the price. Some changes were required by the local military people. After the plans were prepared and the estimates made the total cost was found to be a little over $85,000. I believe the plan is a very fine one and very satisfactory to the militia in every respect. This vote is for the purpose of proceeding with the work.

Mr. LANCASTER. Have new tenders been called for, or is the original contractor to go on with the work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, I am waiting for this vote to be in a position to call for new tenders.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then the work will progress as fast as possible.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it the intention to have it superintended by a local architect ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is my intention.

St. Mary's public building, $10,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What about this ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No action has been taken in this matter.

Mr. CLARKE. No site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No satisfactory site has been secured.

Mr. CLARKE. No plan?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No plan except the general plan. It is not customary to prepare the plan until the site is secured. The plan depends on whether the site is a corner lot or otherwise.

Mr. BLAIN. What is proposed to be expended here ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I should judge $20,000 or $25,000 would be the total cost of this work.

Mr. COCHRANE. Here is another of these cases which I think is something we should not allow. I sympathize with the hon. minister in the rather hard position which he has to occupy, but I do not think that any minister should come down and ask the House to give him a vote of money unless he is able to tell the House and tell me so that I can tell the electors of my riding what the building for which that vote is asked is going to cost. I brought to the attention of the House the other evening cases where innocent appropriations have been taken of a few thousand dollars for works that have cost the country enormous sums of money. I cannot see why the hon. minister should come down and ask me to vote for a building when I do not know what it is going to cost. I think the hon. minister should be prepared to tell the committee and the country what the building is going to cost. I do not think that any business man in this House would attempt to erect a building until he knew what it was going to cost.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCHRANE. I hear the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) say 'hear, hear.' I wonder if the hon. gentleman will say 'hear, hear' when he is brought to book for his conduct in the House on the question of duty on vegetables. The hon. gentleman can say 'hear, hear' and sit there with downcast countenance, and I do not wonder that he is doing it, but I am in earnest in what I am saying. That hon. gentleman is full of deceit and everything that is wicked as far as elections are concerned. I am in earnest in what I say and I do not feel like committing the ratepayers whom I have the honour to represent to an expenditure of money unless the hon. minister tells me how much this building is going to cost. We know that he has come down to this House and asked for a paltry sum of $5,000 for a work which has cost $60,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I said to the committee that a detailed plan had not been prepared but that the total cost would be about $25,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. That word 'about' covers a multitude of sins.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend must give us credit for meaning what we say. That word 'about' means within a few thousand dollars of the amount stated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is very refreshing to hear the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) pleading for economy in this House. I have had a seat in this House for a good many years with him and I have known dozens, yes, hundreds of occasions, when he sat in this House dumb as an oyster while votes similar to this went through and to which he gave his consent. In this case how can you suppose that the hon. minister can tell exactly what the building is going to cost until the site is purchased and he knows whether the building will be erected on a corner lot or not ? The hon. minister says the cost will be from $20,000 to $25,000. Is this not sufficient for the present ? When he comes down with the plan and a further estimate we can then get the full details. It is amusing for me to hear the hon. gentleman preaching economy now.

Mr. COCHRANE. I just want to say in reply to the hon. gentleman that I know that he has had a seat for a good many years in this House and I know that there was no hon. gentleman in this House more wide mouthed in preaching economy than the hon. member for West York.

Mr. CAMPBELL. So I am yet.

Mr. COCHRANE. What I find fault with the hon. gentleman and the party he is supporting is because they condemned us for doing the things that they are now doing themselves and doing more extravagantly than we ever thought of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What are they ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Life is too short to enumerate them. Tongue would fail to express them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Tell us one.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will tell you one. You charged us with doing the very things that you are now doing. The hon. gentleman promised an increased duty on vegetables but he voted against it. The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) stated that it was a shame and a disgrace for any government to ask for $35,000,000 to govern 5,000,000 of people. Did you ever hear that ? Yet, we are called upon to-day to vote more than double that amount. What are you doing with it? Frittering it away on these public buildings the cost of which we have no details of. I sympathize with the hon. Minister of Public Works because he is new in office, but I want to give him a little advice if he will accept it from an old farmer. No farmer would attempt to erect a building unless he knew what it was going to cost. I could put up elaborate buildings and I could buy lots from political friends but I would soon be bankrupt if I had not the Dominion exchequer at my back. The hon. minister should be prepared to come down to this House with plans and specifications and state positively that the building for which he asks an apropriation is going to cost so much. He should not be permitted to come down and ask for an innocent amount which does not appear to be very much, when, as a matter of fact, before the building is completed the cost will be double or quadruple the amount the original appropriation and the country is saddled with an expenditure which the House did not comprehend at the time and which if they had understood they would not have voted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister in what state this projected building or enterprise is ? As my hon. friend says no plan has been made and no site has been chosen. Is this vote only to be taken that some hon. gentleman may be able to say that he obtained it from parliament ? Where is the building, where are the plans, where is the site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Which one does my hon. friend refer to ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. The one we are at now. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has lost track of the vote before the committee.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I know the item under consideration, but judging from the hon. member's language, I thought he was referring to Ottawa.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not at all.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. As to the St. Mary's public building, the site has not been purchased, but it is the intention to purchase it and to go on with the work as soon as possible. There is no intention to humbug anybody.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much will it cost ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. About $25,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The minister cannot even say where the site is going to be. If he cannot give any better explanation than he has given, then I say that this thing is a bungle, and that the item is put in the estimates to satisfy some political partisan, so that the Liberals may go to the constituency, and, notwithstanding their pledges in opposition not to erect buildings in these small towns and villages, they will say : We are going to put up a building in your town. Under the system proposed by the minister we may have a repetition of the Beauharnois business, where the site purchased by the government was made a matter of private speculation ; or we may have another Finnigan racket in St. Mary's, where a man purchased a site and turned it over to the government at double what it cost him. Is that what the minister wants ? It looks like it.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There will be nothing of that kind.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it the intention to erect the building at the corner of Queen and Water streets, where the present post office is, or will it be built at the market square ? Where is the proposed site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There is no proposed site. I will be glad to bring down a list of the sites offered to the department and show it to my hon. friend. I suppose it is within the right of anybody to throw out all sorts of insinuations and to suggest that a person is crooked and guilty of all sorts of jobbery, but there should at least be some slight foundation for such remarks. I do not know any transaction I have ever been connected with that can be looked upon with suspicion, and I hope there never will be. I am not finding any particular fault with these insinuations, because if it suits an hon. gentleman to resort to that sort of a policy, well and good. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) referred to the Finnigan lot, but I know nothing in connection with it that the minister or any one in the department need to be ashamed of. I would be sorry to think that the slightest thing occurred to cast disgrace upon any person, and I do not believe there is any such cause for suspicion. I do hope that, so far as my conduct is concerned, there will be nothing which will bring any disgrace or shame on the minister or on the parliament of Canada. I think that when the papers are brought down the hon. gentleman will see that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am not going to take back a word of what I said, and the foundation for what I have said lies in the lack of information which the minister gives to the committee.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Let me say that I have been most anxious to give information, and that statement that no information is given is not correct. I will give the hon. gentleman all the information in my possession, no matter what cost or work the preparation of it may entail.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then I am sorry that the minister is not able to give information on this item.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. How can I give information that I have not got ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I complain that you have not got the information. The minister cannot tell what site in the town this building will be erected on, and he has not even told us whether this building will accommodate the post office and custom-house.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The building will accommodate the post office, customs and inland revenue. I appeal to the committee whether a minister can tell what a site will cost until it is purchased. It would be silly for a minister to say that he had decided to buy a certain site before he got authority from parliament. I have always endeavoured to buy a site which was best in the public interest and at the lowest possible price, and I have to get the authority of parliament first.

Mr. CASGRAIN. As to what the minister calls the insinuation I threw out, I have not said one-half, or one-quarter, or one-eighth of what the Liberals said about these public buildings when they were in opposition. This House and the Liberal press rang with denunciations of the Conservative party for erecting public buildings in small towns of 5,000 and 10,000 inhabitants. I repeat here what I said, that the minister has given evidence this afternoon that this item was put in the estimates to help to purchase the constituency in which this public building is to be erected.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) that that is not the intention. The intention is to carry out the work immediately and in good faith.

Mr. INGRAM. Whether the intention of the minister be good or not, there is no doubt that the Liberals will use this very item in the town of St. Mary's for party purposes, and they will say: If you support the government candidate you will get a public building, and if you do not support him you will not.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps you will not have an election, and perhaps I will have the building up before there is an election.

Mr. INGRAM. I hope you will have the building erected before that, but I doubt it. The hon. gentleman gave us the absolute assurance in this House that before he undertook any public work he would place before the House an estimate of the cost and all the information that was desired. That is the plan he announced to the House.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is the plan I am carrying out.

Mr. INGRAM. Not at all. You are not doing that in connection with this item.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON. Some two years ago, when the estimates of the Minister of Public Works were under consideration, I set up the contention, which I still hold to, that if we are to keep the minister and his department within bounds in the expenditure of public money, we must insist that when the minister determines on the construction of a public building in any town or village, he must first determine how much money he can afford to spend upon it. I can see no difficulty in the minister arriving at that conclusion. When he comes down with his first estimate, he should say exactly how much he proposes to expend, and we should have an understanding that the estimate would not be exceeded by one dollar. We on this side of the House are responsible for the expenditure of the public money, because hon. gentlemen opposite, especially those behind the treasury benches, do not appear to take any interest in it. As a representative of the people of this country, I contend that I have a right to say what amount should be expended on any public building, and no man who does not represent the people should come in and usurp the function that belongs to me in that regard. Yet that is what has been done for years. It has not been the members of this House who have fixed the amount of the public expenditure; it has practically been the executive officers of the Public Works Department. The architect has ten times more to say as to what the expenditure of the country shall be than any individual member of this House, because he draws the plans and practically determines what a building shall cost. I do not intend to remain silent and allow that course to be pursued. If an architect is incapable of drawing plans for the erection of a building that will come within the amount determined upon by the minister, it is the duty of the minister to retire him and put another man in his place. We cannot in this country tolerate an executive officer who will day after day usurp the functions of parliament by determining what the expenditure shall or shall not be on any public building. I have every respect for the chief architect in the Public Works Department. I do not know the gentleman personally. I have no doubt he is an efficient officer. I understand that he considers that we are criticising his estimates very closely; but if he wants fair criticism, he must be fair to the members of this House. We are not going to permit either him or any other executive officer to dictate what the expenditure of this country shall be without entering a protest, and I intend on every occasion to enter my solemn protest against that kind of procedure. I hope that in future the minister, whenever he brings down a recommendation for the construction of a public building, will make a declaration of an amount which is not to be exceeded in the erection of that building. I do not intend to be unreasonable, for I believe in improving this country by the erection of public buildings, and on all proper occasions he will find me a supporter. But I hope and trust that we shall not be obliged to continue to discuss matters along the line we have had to take this afternoon and on former occasions, but that the minister will agree to what I suggest, and thus make it easier for us on this side of the House to assent to the expenditures which the government may propose.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think the criticisms of the hon. member for Halton are very fair. I have held the same view for a long time myself, and I am endeavouring to put it into practice. My officers will bear me out in the statement that since I have been in the Public Works Department, I have given instructions along that line. In the past it has not perhaps been the practice of governments to have the estimates as fully laid before the House as they should have been. I know—and I am speaking without prejudice, for I believe it has been the custom under both parties—that large expenditures have been subjected to criticism which they might have been spared if full information had been laid before the House. Of course, circumstances may arise to increase or decrease the expenditure; sometimes, as my hon. friend knows, votes are taken which are not all used; but so long as I am in charge of the department, I am perfectly willing to fall in with the policy of stating to the House the total amount to be expended on any work when the first estimate for it is taken. It is only fair to the department to say that all the blame for what has been done in the past is not to be put upon the officers. Sometimes a vote has been taken to start a work or action is taken towards procuring a site and constructing the work, without the officers having had an opportunity of making an estimate. So far as I am concerned, it has been and will be my effort to try to meet what I believe is the wish of both sides of the House, by stating as nearly as possible just what amount of liability is being undertaken when a work is first proposed, as I am now doing in connection with most of the new votes. The criticism of the opposition will then, I suppose, be confined to the way in which the government expends the money.

Mr. CLARKE. There ought to be some model plan in the department for all these buildings, from which a very fair estimate of the cost might be obtained. These buildings in towns of 3,000 or 4,000, do not vary very much in style or cost. All we have in the present instance is the announcement of the minister that the building would cost about $25,000, but no plan is ready or other information. As the hon. member for Glengarry is in his seat, I would like, with the permission of the committee, to ask him whether it is a fact that a lot much larger than the one purchased in Alexandria for a public building at $3,500, was sold in that town for $1,500, with buildings on it? That lot is situated in the same street, on the opposite and more valuable side.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have adopted the suggestion of my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke), and we are preparing estimates of a certain class of building so that we may give the cost in round numbers, where it is impossible to have a detailed statement until the site is procured and we have certain knowledge of the foundations. As to the Alexandria building, that is not pertinent to this item. I gave the committee all the information I had, and I am as much responsible as any one for the decision to purchase the site we did. My chief architect personally visited the place and recommended this lot in preference to any other, and I do not see what good can be done by opening up that question again. Every one knows that it may not be at all a fair comparison to compare property on one side of the street with that on another or to compare property in one block with property in another block, because the values may be altogether different for local reasons.

Mr. SCHELL. Since this matter has been brought up—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must rule any discussion on this question of a public building in Alexandria, as out of order.

Mr. CLARKE. I take the opportunity, when the hon. member for Glengarry is present, to bring up this question as to the price paid in Alexandria.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the committee wishes to consider the question of a public building in Alexandria and the minister agrees, he can make a motion that this question be reconsidered, and I will put the motion to the House, but that matter cannot be discussed on an item which has no connection whatever with it.

Sault Ste. Marie public building, $45,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the work under contract.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is this a final vote ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, this is to complete the work.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How much will the building cost altogether?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $78,921.99.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is it for ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Post office, customs and inland revenue. The reason we erect such an expensive building at the Sault is because of the large amount of customs business done there.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the population of Sault Ste. Marie now ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have not any figures since the last census. It was about 8,000 then.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is a very large amount to spend in a town of 8,000. Had it been proposed in the olden days to put up a public building costing $78,000, in a town of 8,000, the country would have rung with the denunciations of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think that my predecessor in office, when he undertook this building, satisfied the House that there was a great customs trade done in that place, owing to the number of steamers calling there from the United States, and that consequently a large building was needed. The number of employees in connection with the public service engaged there is much larger, on account of the shipping, than in other places with a similar population.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When was the building begun ?

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. On the 23rd of November, 1903.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When will it be finished ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In September, 1905, according to the contract.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice that when this item was up last year, the hon. minister said it would cost $88,000. The hon. gentleman's error is on the right side, but perhaps he will tell us what changes were made in the building to account for this difference in the cost.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. When tenders were advertised for last year, the lowest tender sent in was considered away below the estimate of cost made by the department. The hon. gentleman must admit that, in my estimate of $88,000 last year I was endeavouring to carry out my promise to state to this committee the full amount required for these buildings. In this case there was a difference of $20,000 or $30,000 between the highest and lowest tenders sent in. While discussing that, I may say that such a thing sometimes happens, to the astonishment of the experts both in and out of the department. There is sometimes a difference in tenders of between from twenty-five to fifty per cent, even in comparatively small contracts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is the contractor ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Messrs. McPhail, McCarty & Wright of Sault Ste. Marie.

Stratford armoury, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Has that work been commenced ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, and for the same reasons that I have explained in connection with other votes for armouries. We have not yet received from the Militia Department the new plans to be adopted for this style of armoury. As soon as the plans are ready, I hope to give a complete estimate of the cost of these various buildings. This will be somewhat similar to the armouries in places such as Peterborough, Chatham and Woodstock. It is hoped to give very much better accommodation and at a good deal less cost than under buildings constructed according to previous designs.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand that the minister intends to begin any part of the work with this vote of money ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes. And I hope that before this session is over, I shall be able to bring down an additional vote in the Supplementary Estimates so as to make good progress during the coming season, and when that vote is brought down, to give full information as to the plans and estimates of cost.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the estimated cost of this Stratford armoury ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have explained that the plans have been under consideration in the Militia Department, but they have not yet been sent to us.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Buildings such as this are for battalion armouries I presume. Has the minister any plans for company armouries ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. One of the officers of the militia has promised to give me plans in a short time.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In addition to the very expensive armouries in these larger centres, it is a question worthy of consideration whether it would not be advisable to build less expensive company armouries, to be scattered here and there throughout the country, each equipped with a miniature rifle gallery. When the matter was up last session, I took the liberty of pressing that policy upon the minister, and I expect to do so again. I hope he will have estimates prepared with a view to carrying out that policy.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sam. Hughes) does not need to press it upon me, because that is my view of what should be done. I am pressing it upon the expert officers with the hope that, in a short time, they will be able to submit the plans.

Mr. BENNETT. This is another illustration of the point raised by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) a little while ago. The department begins a work not knowing what the cost is to be. An appropriation of $10,000 or so is asked and given, and so the expense is begun. But we do not know where it is to end. Take, for instance, the case of the London Armoury. 'Hansard' of a couple of years ago shows that it was estimated that that building would cost $80,000. It is now swollen to about $180,000. This Stratford vote, I think, was up last year. The hon. minister was asked as to the cost, and I am told that it was hinted that the cost would be about $25,000. Would it not be better to come frankly to the committee and say that this work is estimated to cost $25,000 or $30,000 or whatever it may be, rather than ask a vote for $10,000 only to find out, after a while that the cost will be $40,000 or more ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) will see that I have spent none of the money voted last year—have not even purchased the site. Speaking subject to correction I did suggest, on the basis of the figures given me by the officials of the department, that this building might be erected for $25,000. That would be a considerable reduction as compared with the cost of buildings for similar purposes in the past. If money can be saved in this way, we may have enough to furnish reasonably good company headquarters at various points. But, there must be some way to authorize the department to take up a policy of that kind. These votes of $10,000 were taken last session in connection with a proposal made by the government to the House to be authorized to carry out such a policy. Now, as I explained, plans are being prepared both for this style of armoury and for the smaller ones. In the past, we have been going in a go-as-you-please sort of way—a small vote taken at first and a very large amount spent before we got through, and that in places where, we think, a great deal less might have been sufficient. If we had some more uniform system for the whole country, all places, both larger and smaller, might be provided with the armouries that are so much required in the best interest of the militia.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that this vote involves a principle which should not be adopted by the committee. In a question of this kind one of two things should be done. Either the minister should come before parliament and explain exactly what the department needs in the shape of these buildings, and give the committee which is committing parliament and the country to the expenditure of money, the estimate of the total expenditure involved, or, if these plans are not forthcoming, if the minister is not able to give the committee this information, he should withhold the vote until he has that information to give us. By the plan now proposed, we are simply committing parliament to a policy of putting up these buildings at a cost which nobody now can estimate. Take this item as an example. By this vote we are committing parliament to the construction of this armoury. Suppose the minister comes next year and asks for a vote of $25,000 and tells us that if the money is not granted he will not be able to go on with the work and that the $10,000 already voted have been spent in acquiring a site or, in acquiring a site and putting up part of the building and will be of no avail.

Therefore the House will be obliged as it were to vote the $25,000 which the minister is asking for. It seems to me the system is wrong, the policy is wrong, it is almost unconstitutional to commit parliament to the expenditure of this money without parliament being perfectly aware of what is going to be done with it, and what policy the government is going to carry out. I cannot understand how it is unless the reason I gave this afternoon is a reason in this instance. Probably the constituency in which some of these buildings are to be erected are close constituencies. The town of Stratford in which this building is to be erected I believe is in a close constituency, and the vote is being held out as a bribe to the electors. They are told in the next election : If you do not vote for the government candidate the next time we sit in the House we will not give you enough to go on with the work. What hon. gentlemen condemned so much in the party which sits on this side of the House now, they are doing themselves, and doing to an extent greater than the Conservative party did it when they were in power. They are again going back upon the pledges and the oft repeated declarations which they made in opposition, and this is simply another instance of their inconsistency.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend, in order to make an argument, has supposed a case which does not exist. The facts are quite opposite to what my hon. friend supposes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me the position is this : The hon. gentleman came before the committee last year with a certain item in the estimates, then he comes to the House this year and says : Well last year I got this voted, but I did not do anything with the money because the plans were not forthcoming. Now he comes before us with the same plea. What is the use of having this item in the estimates at all ? Why does not the hon. gentleman wait until the plans are made and until he knows what he wants to do before putting these items in the estimates ? It is simply wasting the time of the House. Last year the position was the same as it is this year, and next year the position will be the same again, unless we have an election in the meantime.

Mr. CLARKE. In the preparation of these estimates the minister would save the time of the committee if he were to put in parenthesis the estimated cost of each work. Take this item for the Stratford armoury, estimated to cost from $78,000 or $80,000. If this information were put in parenthesis we would have an opportunity of knowing what the work was likely to cost and the time of the committee in asking for information would be saved. I agree with my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) that we should have the policy of the government further developed before they put these votes in the estimates at all. Why should not the government be able to say how much these buildings will cost and have the plans all ready ?

Toronto Dominion public buildings—improvements, renewals, repairs, &c., $8,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. These improvements and repairs are to be made to the examining warehouse, the custom-house, the inland revenue building, the Union station and stations A and B.

Toronto drill hall—additional accommodation for new corps, $20,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What progress has been made during the past twelve months in supplying this additional accommodation ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. During the past few months this matter has been under the consideration of the Militia Department, and the chief architect tells me he has spent some time on it to-day with the officers of the militia, in completing this plan. My hon. friend knows that these improvements could not have been carried on since the vote of last session up to the present time. But no time has been lost.

Mr. CLARKE. Why could not the improvements have been carried on ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. On account of the severe weather in Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any possibility that in the near future these two departments will get together and agree upon a plan for a new building ? I may say to the hon. gentleman that this is an old story. Demands have been made for years for additional accommodation. Last year we voted $20,000, but nothing was done. Has anything been done this year ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend knows that it was brought to my attention last year and I had a vote put in. The engineer of the department was out in the country for some time, but since his return I have been pressing this matter upon the attention of the officers of the department. I do not think there has been any delay.

Mr. CLARKE. The site is there.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, but this work could not be started probably until next month. There has been no delay in as far as I could influence the matter. The plans are under consideration, and I think in a few days they will de decided upon.

Mr. KEMP. In what direction is it proposed to extend the present armoury ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) would allow me I would prefer to give him that information in a few days when I have received the information from the Militia Department.

Mr. KEMP. Will the item stand ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There will be another vote in connection with the matter.

Mr. KEMP. In the supplementary estimates ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, and that will give an opportunity for discussion.

Toronto examining warehouse—addition to, $20,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What about this ?

Mr. KEMP. Has the hon. minister the particulars in regard to this item ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is an addition to the examining warehouse at Toronto, 80 feet by 36 feet 6 inches, with a wing 11 feet by 9 feet, four stories high, new boiler-house 34 feet by 17 feet, total estimated cost, $40,000.

Mr. CLARKE. How much money has been spent on the custom-house during the last twelve months ? There was some work authorized to be done without tenders —underpinning or putting in a new foundation. How much has been expended on that work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think the total expenditure on the custom-house was in round figures, $15,000. That work is practically completed.

Mr. CLARKE. That work was done by Brown & Love ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Are tenders to be asked for this examining warehouse ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, the work will be let by public tender. It is practically an addition.

Toronto military buildings—magazine, $3,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is this ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We have taken four or five votes for magazines in a number of cities and I have been told by the Militia Department that this vote will meet the total cost. They have not furnished me with plans yet, but they will very soon.

Mr. CLARKE. Where is this magazine to be ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There will be one at Toronto.

Mr. KEMP. Whereabouts ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It will be out, I suppose, at the new grounds. I do not know whether it is a military secret or not. I will have the plan before I spend any money.

Toronto post office—additional story over the rear one story part of the building ; furniture, fittings, &c., $10,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you any explanation of that ? Probably the hon. minister could tell us how much has been spent on repairs to the post office during the past twelve months ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The amount spent in connection with the post office for the present year was out of another vote.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the amount ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I will have it looked up. While this is being looked up I would say that owing to a recent communication from the Post Office Department as to some changes that are proposed, the plans prepared by the department for the work for which this vote is being asked will not be carried out. I believe the Post Office Department have come to the conclusion that the changes proposed would not be sufficient.

Mr. KEMP. Is it the intention of the hon. minister to hold this item over ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Either strike it out or pass it.

Mr. KEMP. It seems to me that this is one of the most important items in the estimates. The post office revenue from the city of Toronto is larger than that from the city of Montreal. This is the most important post office in the Dominion, and I venture to say that Toronto has the poorest post office building, comparatively speaking, to be found in the Dominion. It is a disgrace to Toronto, to the province of Ontario, and to the Dominion of Canada. Any one entering the post office to get his letters must be impressed with the inadequacy of the facilities provided for such a centre as Toronto is. The government are proceeding in regard to the Toronto post office in a sort of a patchwork way, adding a story here and making an addition there and having no wise or broad plan upon which to work. I think this item ought to stand and that we ought to have from the Minister of Public Works, or the Postmaster General, something of a definite nature as to what their policy will be in future. I would impress upon the hon. minister that this is the largest revenue producing post office in the Dominion, that the facilities are inadequate and that it is a reflection upon the country to have such a poor building and such inadequate facilities as they have in Toronto.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I can hardly agree with my hon. friend that the building is such a poor looking building or that the facilities so inadequate.

Mr. KEMP. The interior, I mean.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. During the past few years very great efforts have been made by the Post Office Department to improve the postal facilities in Toronto. A great deal of money has been expended upon the establishment of the two new postal stations greatly to the satisfaction of the manufacturing and mercantile community. My hon. friend will not say, I suppose, it was done altogether for the purpose of pleasing the supporters of the government, because, I think he will admit that it was done with a due sense of public duty. However, if my hon. friend insists upon striking this out it will delay a part of the work that we want to proceed with. It is necessary to supply some of the furniture and fittings out of this vote. I may say that I intend to ask that the next item shall be allowed to stand so that the whole matter can be discussed when the large item is under discussion, but if it is agreeable to the committee to allow this small vote to pass we will go on and complete that part of the work having to do with the furnishings and fittings.

Mr. INGRAM. This is the first item that the hon. minister has rather invited the opposition to have struck out.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Before he said a word I explained that owing to a recent communication with the Post Office Department we were asked not to go on with the plan submitted, as they wished to advise us on changes which they considered to be in the interest of the public.

Mr. KEMP. A part of this vote would be used for the temporary work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Changes have been made, and a certain sum is required for furniture and fittings, and you could hardly call that temporary. No money will be spent in connection with the larger scheme until explanations are given to the House.

Mr. CLARKE. A little over a year ago there was a contract let for work in the Toronto post office. Will the minister bring down a statement as to the amount of that contract, as to what has been expended upon it, and as to what is due in regard to it ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There cannot be any amount due or there would be a vote for it. I have not the figures here, but I will have a memorandum prepared showing the amount spent for the past year.

Mr. CLARKE. This item will stand in the meantime ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The next item will stand, and if the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the memorandum, he can discuss it on that item.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not wish to delay the work of the committee, and if we get the information it is all we want.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year $25,000 was voted to establish 'D' postal station in Toronto. Was that money expended ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The money has not been expended.

Mr. KEMP. Why was the work not proceeded with ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am sure that my hon. friend would not advise that the work should be commenced in the winter.

Mr. KEMP. Do I understand that the contract has not been let ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It has not.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the plans for station 'D' ready ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I understand they are similar to those of station 'C.'

Mr. CLARKE. If the plans were ready, what was the trouble in asking for tenders ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No trouble at all so soon as the site is procured. Hon. gentlemen must remember that these items are put in the estimates at the request of the departments interested, and if these expenditures are increased sometimes, the blame is not on the Public Works Department. While my department is responsible for the workmanship it is not responsible for the policy.

Mr. KEMP. In other words, the Postmaster General can explain these items just as well as the Minister of Public Works ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Very much better, and I hope that the Postmaster General will be able to be present in a few days.

Mr. KEMP. Why is there no vote for station 'D' this year ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Because we expect to spend the money before the 30th of June, and if not we will have to ask for a revote in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. CLARKE. We can discuss this item under the item that has been allowed to stand ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Toronto Junction public building, $18,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This will complete the work at Toronto junction. The total cost is $39,887.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that include heating, lighting, wiring and everything else as well as the site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Was the lowest tenderer given the contract ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Wingham public building, $18,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the Deputy Speaker please explain this item ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Carried.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site has been purchased, and the total cost will be $25,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Woodstock armoury, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is in the same position as similar buildings in other places. No money will be expended until the plans are perfected and information given to the House.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose the same set of plans will do for them all ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Practically so, except the difference that may be caused by the conformation of the site. Of course, in some places only infantry will have to be provided for, and in others cavalry and artillery.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When this item was voted last year, I suppose the minister expected that the plans would be ready ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And you have the same expectation this year ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I expect it will be ready within a short time. The chief architect of the Militia Department has returned from the old country, and the matter is receiving the attention of the officials, I have no doubt. I am sorry for the delay, but the work will be proceeded with as quickly as possible. Colonel Cotton told me the other day that he was about to submit some important considerations to the department, and I told him I thought it would be better that he should first discuss the matter with the chief architect.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the government purchased that site, or is the county council giving the site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In some places the sites are the property of the government and in some places they have to be acquired by the government, and some places have offered sites. Any grant from the counties will be applied in a general way to the carrying out of the work.

Mr. BLAIN. That is slightly different from the statement of the minister last year. He then told us that the county council would contribute this site, that there was a first-class regiment of eight companies there, and that statement is reported in 'Hansard.'

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That applies to Woodstock.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the cause of the change ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There is no change ; that will still be contributed by the county council.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the government any policy with respect to this matter. It should be generally understood by the people of Canada either that the government will purchase the site for these armouries, or else that the municipal corporations must contribute them. There should be some uniform general policy.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There has been no general policy followed in this matter. Some have furnished sites, some have contributed towards sites, and in some cases the government have bought the sites.

Mr. BLAIN. Will there be any definite policy in the future in respect to that ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I can hardly say.

Mr. BLAIN. The understanding in this case being that the county council will supply the site free, what will be the total cost of this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot give the cost of any of these buildings until the new plan is brought down. I hope to have it within a few days, and then I will be able to give the information.

Guelph armoury, $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the city of Guelph contributed a site for this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, the city of Guelph contributed a site valued at something like $10,000, towards which we paid $5,000.

Guelph public buildings—addition to, $14,000.

Mr. INGRAM. The other evening I stated that the sidewalk on St. George's Square, Guelph, ran directly in front of the post office, and I could not understand how the building could be extended on that side. For the same reason I said the building could not be extended on Wyndham street. Then, Douglas street runs close to the corner of the building, and I could not see how the capacity of the post office could be increased in that direction. Since then the plans have been submitted to the House, and I find in them an explanation which was not given on that occasion, namely, that the city of Guelph has granted permission to the government to put a small porch on the front of the building, extending nine or ten feet from the front door. That certainly does not increase the capacity of the building or the accommodation of the officials. I have known for some time that the post office officials in Guelph have complained of lack of space, and the other evening the hon. minister justified this expenditure on the ground that it would provide one-third more room. I contradicted that statement, and I still say it cannot be true. A third story may be added to the building ; but that would provide no accommodation for the post office officials, who have to perform their duties on the ground floor. There was a statement made about an addition of some twelve feet to the building. But in the old post office you will see that there was a stairway on Douglas street and there is still a stairway on that street and a sort of tower encircling it. I cannot see how that can give any better accommodation to the officials. It is simply perhaps making the building prettier than it was. As regards the cost, the building was a two story one with an attic before, and it is now a three story building with an attic, and the total cost is something about $42,-

000. In my opinion the cost of this improvement to the Guelph post office is entirely too large.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend has gone over the points that were under discussion last session. In that discussion I was reported to have said that the estimated cost by the chief architect was $21,000, but what I intended to convey was that that was the amount required for the year's expenditure. On looking at the official papers I find that the estimate for the work by the chief architect was in round figures $50,000. We all want to be fair to the officials of the department, and as soon as I found the mistake was mine, I deemed it my duty to give an explanation. The total cost of $42,000, includes the extras for heating and lighting, &c. As regards the increased accommodation, I am told that the increase in space is some 600 square feet, and the new arrangement makes that a very material addition to the building.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman says that the estimate by the chief architect was $30,000 and not $21,000, but he is asking us now for $42,000, which is 40 per cent over the figures given by his chief officer. While I have no objection to voting whatever may be necessary in order that we may have a first-class building, what I object to is that we should be asked to spend $42,000 on an estimated cost of $30,000. It must have been known to the department that if you add one-third to the size of a building, you will require more extensive apparatus for heating and lighting; and that is as much a part of the additional cost as the brickwork and masonry. When we ask for the total cost, we mean not merely the cost of the building, but the cost also of the additional fixtures and electrical appliances. There can be nothing wrong, I hope, in asking for that information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I understood the hon. gentleman to ask the cost of the building, not including the additional apparatus for heating and the new post office boxes, of which there will be about six hundred, and the additional electrical apparatus.

Mr. CLARKE. I think it should be understood that when we ask for the cost of any new building, we want to know the total cost including everything. The heating and lighting apparatus is as much a part of the cost as anything else. If you, Mr. Chairman, would allow me to refer to the item for an armoury at Guelph, which we have passed, I would like to point out to the hon. minister that this item had been allowed to stand at the request of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McGowan) who desired information as to its probable cost. This information we have not yet got, although the item has been passed.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I think that the information which the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McGowan) desired, was what arms of the service were to be stored in that armoury. As regards the cost, I explained that we could not give the information desired until the Militia Department had decided on a general plan for all these buildings.

Mr. McGOWAN. I understood that the hon. minister was to give a rough idea of the cost of the building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot give that until I get plans showing the requirements of the Militia Department, but no money will be expended until I have these plans.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call attention to some figures furnished by the chief architect, in connection with the plans and other papers laid on the table to-day. The figures given with reference to the old building show that the basement floor had an area of 2,247 superficial feet, the ground floor 2,236·6 superficial feet, the first floor 2,236 superficial feet, and the attic 2,236 superficial feet—total 8,956·6 superficial feet. As to the new building he shows that the area is as follows:—Basement floor 2,914·3 superficial feet, ground floor 2,687·9 superficial feet, first floor 2,603 superficial feet, second floor 2,235 superficial feet and attic 2,180 superficial feet—total 12,820 superficial feet. That shows a considerable additional floor space in the basement and on the second floor. But speaking of the post office proper, which is the matter mainly discussed when this question was up before, we find that the accommodation is not very much increased. The minister mentioned that the figures show an increase of about 600 feet. But we find that, on the ground floor, where the post office work is done, the floor area of the old building was 2,236 superficial feet and this will be increased to 2,687 superficial feet in the new building. This is a difference of 451 superficial feet. Or to give a clearer idea, it will be equal to a room about 22 feet square. So, we have this astonishing state of facts—that, in order to give an additional floor space of about 22 feet square for the accommodation of the post office, and so far as the general public are concerned, we are undertaking an expenditure—which will apply to the whole building, of course—of upwards of $30,000. Then, on looking at the ground plan I see there is a much larger space taken up for stairway and hall than in the old building. We have a porch which, I am told by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) will be 12 feet square on the outside. If the walls are made to support a tower they will need to be 3 feet in thickness, so, we shall have an inside measurement in this hall of probably of little more than 6 feet. So, though we have an additional floor space of 451 square feet, there is not that additional accommodation, or anything like it, for the public. I submit that putting it on the most favourable basis for the government, some grave mistake has been made. There was certainly a grave mistake in stating that the cost of this building would be about $20,000 when we find that the chief architect certifies here that the original estimate was $30,000. That is a mistake which misled this committee. And now we have the fact staring us in the face that an enormous expenditure has been made here for very little increased accommodation for the public. It may be, in one sense, that the people of Guelph are more interested and should have more to say about this matter than anybody else. They have certainly had their public building improved in appearance But, for the added accommodation to the public, there is a startlingly large expenditure of public money. It may be that a mistake was made in not taking down the old structure and rebuilding. It is clear that in some way the money has been misapplied.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Perhaps, as I know something of the circumstances I might offer a word or two of explanation. The Guelph post office was erected in 1875 or 1876. It was constructed of white limestone all of which was cut. It was a building that never had a very good appearance being squatty and dumpy. As time went on it proved entirely inadequate for the requirements of the community. It is not only the post office accommodation that was complained of, but the accommodation for the customs department and the inland revenue department as well. In the post office there was room, I believe, for only about 700 boxes, while there was a demand for at least 1,000 or perhaps, 1,100. The alterations now made give accommodation, I believe, for 1,200 boxes. The floor space for use by the public is not quite doubled, but it is increased, I think, about 75 per cent. Formerly there was a small room for the postmaster and the stair case occupying a prominent corner of the building and facing on the main square. In order to get rid of that and still afford room for a stairway it was necessary to build the addition on Douglas street that has been referred to. In this way, the south eastern corner formerly occupied by the stairway was opened for the public. The customs department have been given increased accommodation on the second floor. It occupies the whole of it. The inland revenue department have agreed to occupy the third floor. That necessitated a new course of cut stone—I think 12 feet in height,—all around the building. I am free to say that the tower is probably more for ornament than anything else. In order to obtain the tower the city of Guelph granted a portion of the street 12 feet square.

Mr. INGRAM. On Douglas street ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. On what we call St. George's Square—it is the main front of the building. That is a great improvement in the building. I remember when the matter was up in the House originally. The hon. member for Centre Wellington was the man who called attention to the fact that the building was squatty and dumpy and should have another story. I think the public will now have ample accommodation in regard to post office, customs and inland revenue. It is true that the expense has been somewhat high, but cut limestone is an expensive material to build with ; and besides, the old fixtures are pretty well worn now having served twenty-five or thirty years. There have been new vaults added which are included in the contract price, vaults for the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments, neither department having had a vault before. Though the amount appears somewhat heavy for an old building, there was no way out of it, having regard to a building of that size on the land at the disposal of the government.

Mr. INGRAM. What space was on the Douglas street side ?

Mr. GUTHRIE. It is an irregular space, I can hardly estimate it. Towards the rear of the building there is a space yet, I should think, about 12 to 15 feet at the broadest point. It is a triangular space, with a base of 12 or 15 feet running to a point on William street. The objection to building upon that was that it would depreciate the value of the property immediately to the rear of it, owned by the gentleman who represented South Wellington before my time.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON. Speaking of this building being constructed of limestone, reminds me that the question was brought up last session as regards using cement blocks in some new building that was being erected in Ottawa. The Minister of Public Works at that time said he would investigate the matter, as he would prefer using it if it was found advisable. I would ask the minister if he has done so, and what is the result ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I had given instructions, and the matter is now under consideration. The vote just passed is for another year. There was a question about using cement blocks for the building of the coal shed at Ottawa, but the chief architect has not yet decided to use them.

Mr. BLAIN. When this item was up for discussion last year the amount asked for was $21,000. The minister made the solemn statement to the House then that if, after the plans were prepared and the tenders were invited, the amount of the tender exceeded the estimate asked for, he would in no case expend the money until he came back to parliament for a further vote and consent on the part of the House. I should think the minister would regard that as a fair promise requiring fulfilment. Perhaps he has overlooked this promise.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend was probably not in the House when I made the explanation some time ago. If I said $21,000 as the probable cost of the building, it is evident that there was some mistake, either on my part or on the part of the reporter, because with the papers before me I could hardly have made that statement. My hon. friend has now before him, I understand, the official papers in which the statements were made, and he says that at that time the estimated cost for the building was $30,000. The contract was $30,000 and a few hundreds over—very close. I gave that explanation some time ago. Having the papers before me it is evident that there was no intention of misleading the committee. As a matter of fact the amount voted was $21,000. There is no doubt there was a mistake, either on my part or on the part of the reporter, in giving that as the total cost of the building. My hon. friend knows that in discussing these items there might be an honest misunderstanding in giving the cost of the building, because in some cases the architect does not always indicate the total cost of the work: in some cases it is not customary in the first vote to estimate for heating, fixtures, lighting, and so forth, until after the building is completed; these items form a separate contract.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to point out that this is not the original item by any means, that is a memo., because it is dated the 28th of March of the present year. We have the record in the 'Hansard' last year which says $21,000, and we have this memo. that was prepared yesterday.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That memo. is made from the original papers.

Mr. INGRAM. We have not seen them.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I will be able to bring down the original estimate of the architect.

Mr. BLAIN. The explanation is that if the minister asked for $21,000, he should have asked for $30,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, the appropriation is all right. We voted what the department estimated would be spent during that fiscal year. If we do not spend the money before the 30th of June in the year for which the vote is taken, it lapses altogether. So we endeavour to take the vote for just such an amount as, in the opinion of the officers of the department, we will be able to spend during that fiscal year, and the $21,000 should have been given as the amount that would be spent during that year, the amount required for that year. I have the original paper connected with that tender, which will show for itself. It was given to me by the chief architect and it says $30,000.

Quebec—Acton Vale public building, $12,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to make provision for erecting a public building in the town of Acton, on Main street. The acquisition of the site was authorized in November. The lot is 125 by 180 feet, and costs $2,500. The citizens have agreed to contribute $600, reducing the cost to $1,900. The total cost, including the site, will be about $15,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the total cost was to be $15,000, why did not the hon. gentleman ask for that amount?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Because we could not have spent the money during the year in which it was voted. My experience has shown that it is in the opposite direction. Occasionally we could have used more money than has been voted, but if my hon. friend will examine the public accounts he will find a large percentage of the votes lapsing at the end of the fiscal year. The amounts spent each year out of votes we take are quite small.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand that the money we are voting now is for the fiscal year beginning on the 1st July, 1904, and ending on 1st July, 1905. How long is it going to take to put up this building? Is it an expensive building and what is it for?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is for a public building. We will do very well if the contract is let and the building is completed by a year from now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is this only for a post office?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. For a post office alone.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand the hon. minister to say that the total expense in this matter will be $15,000. As has been mentioned this vote cannot lapse until the 30th June, 1905, so that we have a good deal more than a year in which to deal with this matter. In an expenditure of $15,000 there cannot be any difficulty in having it disposed of before the 30th of June, 1905, and I submit that in a case of this kind, where the probabilities are vastly in favour of presuming that the money can all be expended within the time the vote will remain at the disposal of the department, the committee should be asked for the whole amount in one vote instead of leaving a little in abeyance with the result that we are misled as to what the total expense is to be. In a case involving an expenditure of only $15,000, there is no good reason why the whole work should not be completed within the time that the vote will remain available.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It seems to me that this is a very large amount for a building in a place like Acton Vale. I am informed that the revenue of the post office is only $900 a year. I do not know the population but I understand it is a small place and it seems to me that this expenditure of $15,000 is an enormous one. I see the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Marcil) and he may give us some explanation.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. After endeavouring to cut down the cost of public buildings in places of this size from $50,000 and $60,000 to $15,000 I should get some credit for it. I could give instances where buildings erected in places of similar size would cost two or three times the amount that is proposed to be expended here. I do not think you could erect a public building suitable for the purposes for which it is required, including the site, heating, fittings and letter-boxes for much less money than is asked for here. I have endeavoured to keep these expenditures down as low as I possibly could.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend claims credit for putting up a public building in this place for $15,000, and he gives us to understand that in similar places buildings were heretofore put up at a cost of from $50,000 to $60,000. But, when this was done he and his associates were loud in their denunciation of that policy.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We are improving.

Mr. CASGRAIN. You are not improving very much, but you were put there presumably to pursue a different policy from that of the party you replaced. I ask the hon. gentleman for Bagot if the population is not under 2,000. I am told that it is only 1,175. Here we are putting up a post office in a place with a revenue of only $900 a year and a population of 1,175 at a cost of $15,000. If there ever was a violation of pledges given to the country by hon. gentlemen opposite this is one of the most glaring instances. If this is going to be the policy of the government I do not see why we should not have these buildings all over the province of Quebec, in every place having a population of 1,200 or so. For instance, I will take one of the parishes in the county so ably represented by my learned and hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick), the parish of Beauport, which has a population of 4,000; in a short time we may see a public building constructed there. If this is the policy which is to be followed I am sure that no one will have any reproaches to make to the hon. Minister of Justice if he asks for a public building costing $20,000 or $30,000 in the parish of Beauport. It seems to me extraordinary that in this village of Acton Vale a public building is going to be put up which will cost $15,000. There are different ways of convincing the people that they should vote for particular candidates and this seems to be a strong election argument in favour of the people in this locality supporting the hon. member for Bagot. He can go to them and say: I have given you a public building which is going to cost $15,000. If such a thing had happened when hon. gentlemen opposite sat on this side of Mr. Speaker it would have been called a great scandal, it would have been described as purchasing in detail the electors of the county, but of course, being done by hon. gentlemen opposite, it is virtuous. I do not look at it in that light.

Mr. J. E. MARCIL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) I may tell him at once that I do not think I require a post office in Acton Vale to enable me to secure the support of the electors of that place. It is not for that consideration that I have endeavoured to obtain a post office for Acton Vale. I do not think, really, if I should be a candidate in the future, that the majority in Acton Vale could be more than it was in the election of 1900, because I had supporting me then most of the electors in that town. Regarding the population of Acton Vale I may say that it has been growing very much since the last census, due to the manufacturing industries that we have built up since that time. At the present time if we had accommodation sufficient for the families of the employees that we have working for the company whose operations were commenced there last year we would need about thirty more houses. I hope that in a short time buildings will be put up and that these families will be living in Acton Vale. The building for which this appropriation is asked is not to be used only for the purposes of a post office. We are now talking of establishing another industry in the town and I hope that within a few days we will be in a position in connection with a new cigar factory to have a branch of the Inland Revenue Department organized there. I have asked the hon. Minister of Public Works to provide space in the new building for the Inland Revenue Department.

We have also in Acton Vale a militia company of sixty-five members, and I have asked the minister to provide accommodation for the accoutrements of these volunteers. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) well knows that the county of Bagot has made very few claims on the public treasury, and the people of that county have in the past, as they will in the future, contributed their share to the construction of public works in other parts of Canada. If my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) should do us the honour of visiting Acton Vale in the near future, perhaps when the general election comes, he will have an opportunity of seeing for himself that the town is not so unimportant as he seems to think it is.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. E. Marcil) has presented no argument for the building of a post office in Acton Vale. He seems to express some doubt that he will be a candidate at the next election. Are we to suppose that he will be raised to a higher sphere ?

Mr. J. E. MARCIL. I may be dead.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I hope not. I rather supposed that the hon. gentleman expected to be elevated to that reward which has been the good luck of so many supporters of the Liberal party who have disappeared from this arena and gone to offices of ease and emolument. The hon. gentleman says the population of Acton Vale is growing, but he is not able to contradict the statement that the present population is 1,175. The reason he gives for the erection of a public building in Acton Vale is that he expects a factory will be established and that about thirty new houses will be required to accommodate the working people. Well, there would be just as much sense in the hon. gentleman asking the Minister of Public Works to build these thirty houses as there is in asking him to put up a public building in this small town. The hon. gentleman also expects a cigar factory in Acton Vale, but surely he is not treating the matter seriously when he makes such a plea as that for a public building. Where are we going to stop anyway, if we are going to erect public buildings in towns of 1,200 population ? If there is so much money lying around, I have no objection to public buildings being erected in the province of Quebec, but even so, there are many places in the province. the importance of which renders them more worthy the consideration of the government than the small town of Acton Vale.

Mr. MORIN. I never could see for what reason the government decides to put up expensive public buildings in these small towns in different parts of the country. I admit that some of our public buildings are necessary, and that the government have not paid too much money for them, but is there any common sense in erecting expensive structures at such places as Acton Vale and Montmagny ? The evil of this policy is growing worse and worse all the time. We hear men who support the government saying : I am all right for election in my constituency, because I got a wharf or a post office, or thirty miles of railway built through my county. Such a state of things should not exist. Neither the rules of the House nor the laws of the country allow me to characterize this policy as bribery, and I will not use the word, but at the same time I have a right to think as I please, and if I were permitted to call it bribery I would do so. If a man wants to be elected, let him be elected on his merits and not at the expense of the public treasury. This whole thing has become a farce. If you are going to erect buildings in all towns that contain a population of 1,200 or 1,500, you might as well commence to employ all the carpenters, bricklayers and masons in Canada. In the county of Beauce alone you have a dozen places just as important, and even more important than Acton Vale. In the town of Montmagny there was another scandal perpetrated. The hon. member who formerly represented that constituency demanded a building, and the government bought a building for $7,000 which fell on their hands, and last year they came again for $4,000, and this year they want $6,000 again for that building. The town of Montmagny has a population of 1,605, and it is in such small places that the government is spending all this money. It is a shame.

Mr. T. I. THOMSON (North Grey). Will the minister state what is the necessity for erecting this public building in so small a village as Acton Vale ? Last year the little village of Arichat received a large appropriation for a public building, as well as Campbellford and several other small places in the maritime provinces. The minister at one time took the position that only in shire towns or county towns could these buildings be erected, but before the estimates were through he abandoned that position. It is very little satisfaction for us in the county of Grey to assist in paying $15,000, for a public building in a little village like Acton Vale, when we have eight or ten larger villages in that county which have no public buildings. The county of Grey, with a population of about 75,000, has not had a dollar of public money spent for public buildings. I would like to know what reason can be given for erecting this public building at this little village, where the revenue is so small?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The policy of erecting public buildings throughout the Dominion has been in force for many years. The reason for choosing Acton Vale for a public building is that it is the principal place in the county. My hon. friend would lead one to suppose that he represents a constituency in which no public money has been spent, and in which the people do not seem to desire to have public money spent. I can hardly agree with him in that. If he looks over the public accounts, he will find that in the last few years not merely $15,000, but half a million of public money has been spent in the hon. gentleman's town. It is true it is a growing prosperous town. At the same time, it has been the policy of the government to erect a public building in the principal town of a county, even where the population may not be so large as that of the hon gentleman's county. That is the only reason I can give for the erection of this building.

Mr. LENNOX. If this policy is adopted generally, there is no telling where it will end. For instance, in my own riding the village which comes nearest to Acton Vale in population is Allandale. There is not 25 difference in the population of the two places; and yet, although Allandale, I venture to say, transacts more business in a week than Acton Vale does in a month, I do not think it would have the hardihood to expect a post office to be erected there. Take Alliston, having a population of 1,256, another thriving place in South Simcoe, yet I venture to say the minister would not be prepared to put a vote in the estimates for a post office for that place, where the revenue is $2,500, as against $900 in Acton Vale. Then, take the village of Stayner, in North Simcoe, a thriving village with a population of 1,225, or the town of Collingwood, with a population of 5,755 or take the town of Aurora, in the riding of the Postmaster General, having a population of 1,590; or take the town of Barrie, which has recently been transferred to South Simcoe, and which until a comparatively recent date, although having a population of over 5,000, had no post office; or take the village of Newmarket, in the riding of North York, having a population of upwards of 2,000 and a revenue of $3,635.56.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Is the hon. gentleman sure there is no public building in the town of Barrie?

Mr. LENNOX. The minister misunderstood me. I stated that the town of Barrie has a post office, but that until a comparatively recent date it had none. The amount of public money that will have to be expended if the principle laid down by the minister is carried out, has almost no limit. The treasury has shown great ability to expand lately in the matter of public expenditure, but if this principle is adopted, there will not be sufficient funds in the treasury to carry it out.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend is very generous to his friends in the House. In 1883, when building was from 15 to 25 per cent cheaper than it is now, a public building was erected at Barrie at a cost of $42,000.

Mr. LENNOX. I beg pardon. There was no public building erected in my riding. I have not represented Barrie as yet. It is in the riding of North Simcoe. It has only recently been transferred to Souh Simcoe.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will perhaps represent Barrie in future. But for his county every session we vote from $100,000 to $200,000 for public improvements; so that I think my hon. friend might be willing to give 1 per cent occassionally for public buildings in some of the other counties. I quite agree that some of these smaller places, if treated on a business basis, are not entitled to public buildings; but certainly it is quite a saving to cut down the expenditure from $40,000 or $50,000 to $15,000 or $20,000.

Mr. LENNOX. The county of Simcoe is a large territory, with a population of about 75,000; but in the riding I represent, there has not probably been a dollar of public expenditure in the last thirty years; and as regards the town of Barrie, it has a post office, but it was not erected by this government.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that when hon. gentlemen sitting on the government benches were on this side of the House, this was their policy, as set out in a motion quoted by the hon. minister himself.

> Be it resolved that in the expenditure of public money the public interest and not favouritism should control, and that in the choice of places for the erection of public buildings for post office, custom-house, and inland revenue purposes, regard should be had to the amount of revenue collected and of public business done.

The hon. minister then made this statement: 'That is a resolution which, in my opinion, is a fair one for the country to adopt.' Might I ask my hon. friend how it comes that he has so changed his opinion?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have not changed, but am still carrying out the same policy.

Mr. BLAIN. I might draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that in that case the town had a considerable population and revenue, and the amount asked to be expended was only $5,000, whereas in the present instance my hon. friend is asking to spend $15,000 in a place where there is only a population of 1,175 and a revenue of less than $1,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Will my hon. friend be kind enough to pass me over the quotation?

Mr. BLAIN. I have much pleasure in doing so.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it is very harsh, Mr. Chairman, that we should harrow your feelings now that you cannot rise to express yourself. If I recollect rightly, the resolution which my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has just quoted was one that was moved by the Minister of Public Works during an all-night discussion concerning what was known as the Laprairie post office outrage. You must remember, Sir, that discussion very well. It lasted all night long, and as the only survivor I see opposite of the old brigade, you must recall how you fought that night. I know that circumstances have prevented you from joining the majority who have left the government benches to become judges or landing waiters or government officials of some description. You, Sir, aspire to something higher, and we all hope you will get it in due time. But I think that in fairness to yourself and your conscience, you should ask some hon. gentleman opposite to take the chair and give you the opportunity to rise, and impress on the country once more your hostility to these outrages on the public treasury. And if among your many friends opposite none will come to your relief, if not one of them will take the chair so as to give you an opportunity to express your indignation and horror, I am sure that some hon. gentleman on this side will be glad to take the chair and give you the occasion you must be craving for.

Mr. MORIN. What is the size of the building which the hon. minister proposes to put up ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am sorry that I have not the dimensions, and cannot give the size.

Mr. MORIN. Have you made up your mind whether you will build the house with stone, bricks or wood ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. With brick.

Mr. MORIN. I should like to see the government put up at Acton Vale a building suitable for the size of the town. One which would cost about $4,000 would be quite adequate for a town of that size. Do not try to walk before you can creep. Wait until the population increases, and it is not by making half a dozen of cigars a day that that town should become so wonderfully big. Look at the town of Lévis, which sixty years ago was a flourishing town, and which now has a population of nearly 8,000. The post office in that town is a disgrace to the government. It is only 12 feet by 14 feet, and divided in two at that. It is no larger than one of the basement rooms in this building, and just as badly kept. I would approve the putting up of a building at Lévis which would cost from $20,000 to $30,000, because if Acton Vale, with a population of 1,175, is to have a post office costing $15,000, surely the town of Lévis, with a population of nearly 8,000, is entitled to a $30,000 post office. I think that the hon. minister should give every place its due.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to protest against the principle adopted by the government in the expenditure of public money. When in opposition those hon. gentlemen were wont to be very severe on the government of that day for spending public money in places which were not sufficiently large to entitle them to a public building, and the principle was again and again enunciated that in no village or town were the government justified in spending money when they could get a suitable building at a moderate rental. The ground taken was that the rental would be much less in any case than the interest on the cost and the expenditure required to have the place cared for and kept in proper order. Look at the present instance. Here is a village with 1,100 inhabitants. The gross revenue of the post office there is $919. The salary allowed the postmaster is $350, besides $40 allowed him for fuel, rent and light. And here we find the government incurring an expenditure of $15,000 to erect a building, which afterwards it will cost them to take care of about $300 or $400 a year in wages to the caretaker alone. All that post office is costing the country to-day is $40 a year, besides the salary of the postmaster of $350. But the interest on $15,000 at 3½ per cent will amount to $450, which will be a permanent charge on the consolidated revenue. Then a caretaker must be employed, who will cost the country from $300 to $400 a year, not to speak of the repairs which will have to be made every year. Take $400 for the caretaker and $450 for interest, and $45 for lighting and heat, and you have an expenditure of $925 a year as compared with $40 to-day. Let the government go out into the country places of Ontario, into those large and thriving villages, with populations of from 1,000 to 2,500, where the people have never yet asked for a new post office, and let the government tell those people that they are making this extravagant expenditure of $15,000, besides the cost of caretaking, light, and fuel, and repairs, in a place of 1,100 inhabitants, and see what verdict they will get. Would they make such an expenditure in a riding represented here by a member of the opposition ? It is not very likely. But one of their own followers finds that some place must be given an expenditure of public money, or some one must be given a cinch on the government, and so this unjustifiable and extravagant expenditure is undertaken. I want the people to understand the matter, for there is not a settled county in the province of Ontario that has not from two or three to a dozen larger places than this that ought to have a public building if there is any justification for this expenditure. Yet, the people in those places have never asked the government to incur such an expense for them, believing that it would be unjustifiable for the government to put up a public building when sufficient accommodation could be had much more cheaply by renting.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) how many counties there are in the province of Ontario where there are no public buildings ?

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the question. But there is not a county in Ontario where there are not half a dozen places larger than Acton Vale without public buildings. In my own county there are eleven towns and villages of that kind, and I do not believe that more than one or two of them have ever even asked for a public building. The people do not believe that such an expenditure would be justifiable, and they certainly do not believe that it is justifiable in the case of this town of Acton Vale.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The spirit of economy to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) says Ontario is remarkable does not appear in the estimates ; because we find that the proposed expenditure for public buildings in Quebec is $254,000 while that for Ontario is $694,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is not a question of Ontario versus Quebec. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) cannot draw a red herring across the trail by any attempt to make it appear that the opposition to this vote is due to the fact that the money is to be expended in the province of Quebec. Nor will the hon. gentleman divert attention from this vote in that way. The question is a simple one. Here is a town of 1,175 people with a postal revenue of about $900 a year, and, notwithstanding the pledges made by hon. gentlemen opposite when in opposition, notwithstanding the declarations they made as to the policy that should be followed by the government in these matters, they propose now to expend $15,000 on a public building and post office for this small place. Let me recall to the Minister of Public Works what he said when in opposition with regard to a proposal which had much more to commend it than this has. There was a vote of $15,000 for the post office, custom-house and inland revenue office in Richmond, Que. It was discussed on June 15th, 1894. The customs revenue for that place was $6,745.22.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. What was the postal revenue ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have not the figures here. But the House will see that, with such a custom revenue, there was some justification for putting up a building. What did the Minister of Public Works say then ? I have found this par hazard. If I were to go through the debates I am sure I could find dozens of declarations equally strong and more eloquent than the one I am going to read. The hon. gentleman said :—

> I am not saying whether it——
>
> The policy of the government——
> ——is settled or not. I know that the hon. minister and members on this side voted that public money should be expended upon these buildings on some principle based upon the revenue at the points where these buildings are being constructed and the population to be served. That was decided by the votes of the members of the House, and I think it is a good principle to be maintained.

And he goes on :—

> Then, the hon. gentleman repudiates the principle that was promulgated by his late leader, Sir John A. Macdonald, and approved by the votes of members of this House with the Speaker in the Chair. I think it would be more satisfactory and businesslike for the hon. minister to stand up to declare that he did not approve of the principle of public money being expended upon merely political consideration. The hon. minister knows well that people of the section of the country I represent have shown the minister and the government the necessity in the public interest for the construction of a public building, and they have shown that they were entitled to it upon every principle upon which it is supposed that public money is granted.

This is a clear condemnation of the construction of buildings in constituencies merely for political considerations. But I would ask the hon. minister if it is not merely upon political considerations that he is putting up this building in the town of Acton Vale—simply because he was asked by a supporter of the government to do so ? He has gone back on what he said when in opposition. He cannot give a solitary good reason why we should vote the money for the building in question. In this matter he will swallow himself, as he and all his colleagues have done so often before.

Grosse Isle quarantine station, $12,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that come under public works ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The quarantine buildings are constructed and kept in repair by the Public Works Department. This amount is in accordance with the estimate furnished by the Department of Agriculture, which includes the following items :—Police quarters, drainage and plumbing, $735 ; hospital fire escapes and plumbers' work, $345 ; painting superintendent's residence, $150; alterations to small-pox hospital, $800 ; completing public works building, $1,000 ; headquarters for sailors, $8,000 ; repairs to medical officers' building, $500 ; plank walks, &c. $200 ; incidentals, $270 ; total $12,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see that $12,000 was voted last year. Is this a revote of that amount ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is in addition to the vote of last year. Of that vote $10,088 was expended.

Mr. LENNOX. This will complete the work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, according to the estimates submitted by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LENNOX. I notice in this case the hon. minister has done what I advocated in reference to another item—he has included the fittings, fixtures, &c., in the vote he has taken to carry him to June 30th.

1905. In this case we expect to spend $12,000 within that period, whereas in the other case we did not expect that we could spend $15,000 in the same period.

Mr. BENNETT. Will this work be let by tender or done by day labour ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend will see that these are a number of comparatively small items, and on the island it would be almost imposible to get the work done by contract, and so we are having it done under the supervision of an officer of the department, by day labour.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the difficulty of getting it done by contract ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It would cost a great deal to people to go backwards and forwards. I am informed by the officers of the department that it is very satisfactory to get the work done by day labour under the supervision of an officer of the department.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This work is done on the requisition of the Department of Agriculture, under whose jurisdiction the quarantine service is. This will complete the work.

Lévis public building, $20,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We have procured a site, but it was not settled on until recently. The total cost of this work to complete is estimated at from $35,000 to $40,000. The site is government property, and did not cost us anything.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is this the site of which we were speaking last year, the one down below the hill ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The building is for all government services in the town of Lévis. It is rather an important place, a station on the Intercolonial, and is the chief town of that county. I think it is necessary we should have a good building there for the public accommodation.

Mr. MORIN. What is the size of the building at Lévis ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The plans are not completed, and I cannot give the exact size.

Mr. MORIN. Of what will the building be constructed, of stone or brick ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The intention of the architect is to recommend brick with stone facings. It will be three stories high.

Mr. MORIN. Is the minister acquainted with the location of the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have been there, and remember well where the location is.

Mr. MORIN. What is the size of the lot the government is giving ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. As near as I can remember, 160 feet by 140 feet.

Mr. MORIN. Is it where the old freight shed stands ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. MORIN. That is a good place. The people deserve this building, and the government has been owing it to them for fifty years.

Mr. BLAIN. I noticed when this item was up before, the minister stated that his department were negotiating with the Minister of Railways in respect to a site for this building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, we had been negotiating.

Longueuil public building, $12,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Has the site been acquired in this instance, how much was paid for it, and from whom was it bought ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The site was procured from Mr. F. St. Mars for the sum of $2,800. It is opposite the church, and has a frontage of 118 feet with 85 feet in depth.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How did you come to pay $2,800 for that site ? Did anybody from the department go and value it ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, I had a report from Mr. Michaud, an officer of the department, on the lot. He is the resident engineer for the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am told that is about $2,000 too high. I would like to know what qualifications Mr. Michaud has for valuing lots in Longueuil. I can understand that a man might be a good engineer but not a good valuator of real estate. If my information is correct, he was greatly mistaken if he reported to the department that this lot was worth $2,800.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Michaud holds an important position in the department. He is a qualified land surveyor, a man of education and experience, and if he is not capable of making a valuation of a lot of land in a small town like that, I do not know who I can depend upon.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not had as much experience as the minister, but I can tell him this, that the more he studies the matter the more he will become convinced that a man going out of Ottawa into a new place and attempting to value a property, will usually be unsuccessful. All these matters are relative. You have to be familiar with the land in the locality, and it is absolutely impossible for an engineer or any one else going from the city of Ottawa in a place where he has no knowledge of the local conditions, to value a property. We have had instances before of architects valuing property. I think if the minister will reflect for a moment he will conclude that a gentleman going into a new place, with which he is not familiar, having no data to go by, cannot successfully value a property. Therefore the committee will see how likely it is that this is an over valuation.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In the first place this officer does not belong to Ottawa, he is a resident engineer of that district. I should have thought that he was well qualified especially after having gone into that town and after having had an opportunity of discussing these matters with all classes of the people. I can hardly believe it possible that any responsible official of the department would be so dishonest as to misrepresent the value of a property of that kind, or that he would sign a certificate upon his honour which was misleading.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to ask the hon. minister what he means by saying that this officer was living in the district ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Montreal is just across the river and his headquarters are in Montreal where he has been for many years.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I happen to know the locality and I know the property in question. I am not astonished at all at the price, because, from what I know personally, I am aware that this was the only site that could be got in the town of Longueuil for the post office at that price. Longueuil is one of the oldest towns on the south shore of the St. Lawrence and in the vicinity of the church the lots are taken and built upon. In this case this was the only available lot at this price in the centre of the town. This post office will serve not only the town of Longueuil but the people of the parish of Longueuil who come to the town to transact their business and who come on Sunday to attend religious service. This property was bought for $2,800 after Mr. Michaud had ascertained the proper valuation of it. This price is $1,000 less than it could have been bought for a month previously, because, during the interval between the visit of Mr. Michaud and the purchase of the property, a fire took place in part of the buildings upon the property which reduced the price to $2,800, thus saving $1,000 which otherwise the government would have been obliged to pay. But for this circumstance it would have cost the government $3,800. Longueuil is my native town and I know exactly all the circumstances accompanying the purchase of this property. There were other properties offered to my knowledge which would have cost a great deal more than this one and which would not have served the purpose as well as this property will. Longueuil is one of the oldest towns on the south side of the St. Lawrence and the need of a public building has been known and felt for a long time.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Is the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries aware that, at a public meeting, including most of the citizens of Longueuil, a protest was entered against the selection of the site and the price paid by the government ? Besides, is the hon. minister aware that the said property is not valued at more than $800 ; that the local member for Chambly is opposed to its selection, and has so expressed himself at this public meeting, adding that the said property was not worth more than $1,000 ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation). I am surprised at the statement made by the hon. member for Laval. I know personally of the property in question, and I may repeat in French what I stated a moment ago in English, namely, that the said piece of land is certainly worth the price paid for it, and that it was the only one available at that place. As to the public meeting to which my hon. friend refers, I am aware that a few dissatisfied people, four or five, have complained because they had not succeeded in selling their own land, I presume, for four or five thousand dollars, while the government have been in a position to purchase for $2,800 a piece of land more suitable in every respect.

Then, again, I may say for the information of the hon. member for Laval, that the local member for Chambly does not at all times fully agree with the federal member, and possibly is not in sympathy with the people who sold that land to the government. He would possibly have been better satisfied if the site had been located somewhere else. However, I may state that this property is worth the price paid for it, and that it was the only site available in that neighbourhood—which is the most suitable and convenient for the people as a whole—without having recourse to expropriation, and thereby running the risk of paying a much higher price. I do not know that it would have been possible to secure a similar lot at this place for a lower price. The location is a central one ; it is the nearest site that it was possible to secure. It is conveniently situated, not only as regards the people of the town of Longueuil proper, but also as regards the country people who come to town either on Sundays or week-days.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Is not that lot situated in the east ward, and not in the centre of the town?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) I fail to see what the hon. member's object is in putting that question. It matters little whether that property is situated in the east or west ward ; and I contend that the property is the most centrally situated that it was possible to secure. I am not familiar with the boundary lines of the various wards of the town of Longueuil ; at any rate, I may say once more that the site is the most conveniently and centrally located for the requirements of the people generally.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) What other lots were offered to the government?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) I could not say exactly. I know that one of my relatives offered a piece of land. He wanted, I understood, five or six thousand dollars for it. True there were no buildings, but I do not blame him for having asked such a price, as the buildings became absolutely useless and the government were left with the bare land. The lot offered by my relative was central enough, being in the vicinity of the one referred to just now.

Another lot was offered in another section of the town, but it was too far away from the business centre. Its purchase for the purpose of constructing on it a public building would have brought forth a protest on behalf of the whole community.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Was the purchase of the land referred to recommended by the hon. minister?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) I did not recommend any.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Has a recommendation been made by some other member?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. (Translation.) I cannot say; you may inquire from them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I quite admit that the case of the town of Longueuil is a much more favourable one than that of Acton Vale. Longueuil is a much more important place and the reason which I call for the erection of a public building are much greater than those to be found at Acton Vale, but what the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) said seems to show to a certain extent that the government is not careful enough in the valuation which it gets of these sites which are purchased for public buildings. My hon. friend says that the municipal valuation of that property is only $800, and that the local member who represents the district in the legislative assembly of Quebec asserts, and has asserted in a public meeting, that the value of this property is only $1,000. Here, we are paying $2,800 for a property which is valued on the municipal roll at $800 and is publicly asserted by an architect, a man who certainly has a reputation as being a valuator in Quebec who knows his business, to be worth $1,000. We are paying $2,800 for that property, which, notwithstanding what my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Préfontaine) has said, does certainly not seem to be worth that money.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I must say that I am very much astonished at the assertion made by the hon. member for Laval that this property is valued on the valuation roll of Longueuil at $800, and unless I see the proof I must decline to believe his assertion, or unless he says he has seen the valuation roll himself. I know something of the town of Longueuil for reasons which I have already stated. I have owned property there —I do not own any at the present time— and I know that property of this kind is not valued at $800 unless there was something extraordinary and this man had a pull with the municipal council which enabled him to have this property valued at such a ridiculously low price. The buildings on the site were insured for over $2,000 and I know that the owner received from the insurance company on account of the fire over $1,000. How could a property with buildings erected on it which were insured for $2,000 be valued by the municipal council at $800 ? The valuation put upon the property by Mr. Michaud is a fair valuation to my knowledge. This is the only site that could be procured without expropriation in the town of Longueuil unless the government had been willing to buy a property for $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000, or to take a property outside of the centre of the town in a location which would have been quite inconvenient. My hon. friend from Montmorency says that an architect has stated that the property was only worth $1,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I was referring to Mr. Perrault the local member who is an architect.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I do not care whether this statement has been made by Mr. Perrault or any one else. There are architects and architects. Some architects will give you an estimate of the cost of a building at $5,000, and before you have that building completed it will cost you $10,000 or $15,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What about the value of his opinion as to land ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Land ! What does he know about it ? If he valued this land at $1,000 he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As to the qualifications of Mr. Michaud for valuing that property, I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) knows that Mr. Michaud is one of the most competent valuators we have in Canada. Mr. Michaud does not reside in Ottawa. He was brought to the department by the hon. ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). His appointment was specially recommended—and this is a fact which will appeal to my hon. friend from Montmorency —Mr. Michaud was specially recommended by his friend, Senator I. P. B. Casgrain, who had acted with him as land valuator for the Canadian Pacific Railway in Montreal. Senator Casgrain is not an architect, but he is a very able man, and as a valuator he has no peer in Montreal. Mr. Michaud was associated with him as valuator for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and surely if he were able to value land in the heart of the city of Montreal, he is competent to value a little bit of proterty in Longueuil. Mr. Michaud occupies the highest possible standing in the community, and I do not believe that his valuation would be questioned by any court of justice or by any concern in Montreal. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) says that the site was criticised by Mr. Perrault, who is an architect, and an able one too, and who is local member for the county of Chambly, but my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) knows that besides having these qualifications, Mr. Maurice Perrault has also another ambition, and it is to become the Liberal candidate in the county of Chambly-Verchères at the next general election. He was a candidate before the convention held lately against the sitting member (Mr. Geoffrion), and my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) knows that these gentlemen are presently at loggerheads.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I did not know that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, it has been ventilated in the press by Mr. Perrault himself. Anyway, it must be admitted that the site has been purchased at a fair price, and that the valuation is a just one and could not be successfully questioned before any court in Montreal.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister stated last year that the price of the site would be very small. Surely the minister will not say that $2,800 is a small price.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In an important place like Longueuil I think it is a small price. The lot is 118 feet by 85 feet, and it is one of the principal lots of the town. I cannot think it possible that the officials and the people they deal with, would be so degraded and dishonest as to certify that the price is fair and reasonable, if such is not the truth. I do not think they would do such a thing for the whole amount paid for the lot.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the government purchase the buildings on the lot ?

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The purchase included the buildings, which will be torn down.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total cost of this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. About $20,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the plan being prepared now ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. LEONARD. Is it being prepared by Mr. Maurice Perrault ?

Mr. BLAIN. How is it that last year the minister stated that the cost of the building would be $10,000. That statement seems to be misleading.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon friend will not find many instances in the 'Hansard' where I made a statement that is not correct.

Mr. BLAIN. There are a good many of them.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of Public Works is falling from grace.

Mr. BLAIN. Last year the minister stated ('Hansard,' page 13070) :

> This is in the county of Chambly ; the population of the town is 2,257 ; the postal revenue is $612.92 ; the building will cost $10,000. The cost of the site would be very small.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I was new in the department, and I gave the figures as they were given to me, but if the hon. gentleman figures it out he will see that the statement is not far astray. Take $10,000 for the building, $2,800 for the lot, $1,000 for the heating and lighting, contracts for fittings, &c., and it will come pretty nearly to $20,000. I have explained over and over again that the chief architect in some cases gave me the cost of the building when it was asked, and not the total cost of the work undertaken. It is perfectly true, as the member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) says, that you must heat and light a building, but there seems to have been a misunderstanding, and in many cases the information given applies to the building proper and not to future contracts that were to be let.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that when we ask for the total cost of a building we have to go into all these little details in order to find it out ? You cannot have a public building complete unless you have all the fittings necessary to carry on the business.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is what I mean. When I was asked what would be the total cost of the work, I answered that. I was at once asked for a separate statement of the estimated cost of the building, and it was quite natural, from the custom of the past, for the chief architect to suppose that the total cost meant the cost of the building.

Mr. INGRAM. Are we to understand that in future, when we ask the total cost, it will be the cost of the bare walls ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, the total cost of the work, and I have given that to-night.

Mr. CLARKE. We had better have a clear understanding of this point. Last session I endeavoured to get some light on the question. On page 13071 of 'Hansard,' I asked :

What is to be the total cost of this building ? Has the site been secured ? Are the plans prepared ? We seem to be going it blind in most of these cases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend must admit that I have given that information already.

What did that mean ? The information given was that which the hon. member for Peel has just read. The minister said: 'It will cost $10,000.' That was in a place with postal receipts of only $600.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is very evident, from what the hon. gentleman has read, that it was the building that was referred to, because it refers to the cost of the site ; and when my hon. friend asked the cost of the building, the officers of the department, from the custom of the past, supposed that he meant the cost of the building alone.

Mr. CLARKE. I used the words 'total cost,' and the minister said that it would cost $10,000. Now we are told that it is going to cost $20,000. It would be fairer and franker for the hon. gentleman to tell us at once what it is going to cost to complete the building, including the heating and lighting, as well as the cost of the walls and partitions. It is because we cannot get that information at the inception of these votes that these discussions take place. We have had innumerable instances of that since these estimates have come up.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have explained to my hon. friend over and over again that if there was any misunderstanding, it was because the architect supposed that the information wanted was the cost of the building. However, if we are to have a better understanding, it will be my duty to give the total cost of the work to the House whether the inquiry is made from hon. gentlemen opposite or not.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there to be a local architect employed in connection with this work ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My policy is to have a local architect as clerk of works if I can obtain one.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he intends to discontinue employing clerks of works unless they were paid on commission and not by the day.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have stated over and over again that my policy is to employ architects where they can be employed, and pay them, as well as others who are not architects as far as possible, on commission.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. INGRAM. This is a new work. Will the architect be paid on commission ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is what I intend.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is now a quarter past 11. We have done a good day's work, and I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot agree with my hon. friend that we have done a good day's work in spending a whole day in passing a few items which have all been discussed before.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would remind the hon. gentleman that in the session of 1892 the House occupied from eight o'clock in the evening till three o'clock in the morning in passing three items. The next item to be reached we want to compare with one of the items on which we spent nearly the whole night on that occasion, and it will take some considerable time.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That kept the party in opposition for a great many years, and the same policy ought to keep any party in opposition.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend took a prominent part in the discussion at that time, and I want to draw his attention to a resolution moved by the late Minister of Justice, the Hon. David Mills.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend voted with us.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was carried unanimously. Here is the resolution :

That in the expenditure of public money the public interest and not party favouritism should control, and in the choice of places for the erection of the public buildings for post office, customs-house and inland revenue purposes regard may be had to the amount of revenue collected and of public business done.

The two items on which we spent the whole night were for Dartmouth post office, which had a revenue amounting to $2,019, and a post office for Lunenburg, which had a revenue of $2,700, whereas the revenue from Montmagny post office was about $600. The hon. minister must surely take cognizance of the resolution which he was a party to passing. I think my hon. friend should ask the committee to rise and read 'Hansard' of that year from page 2715. The Minister of Justice asked how many places in Ontario with a revenue under $1,000 had not public buildings. A list of them was given by the late Senator Landerkin and will be found on page 2753. The whole night was spent in trying to prevent the government passing those three items.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is my duty to endeavour to proceed with the buisness of the House as rapidly as possible.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was agreed that we should adjourn at eleven o'clock.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am not aware of any such agreement. I am anxious to meet the wishes of the opposition, but I thought that probably we could run through those Quebec items, which have been all voted on and discussed before, and allow any particular one to stand to which there was any special objection.

Mr. INGRAM. A good many of us had to attend committees this morning at ten o'clock, and will have to attend committees to-morrow morning at the same hour. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite, who have simply to listen, to wish to proceed, but those on this side, who have to peruse documents from time to time, find the work very trying.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not think that my hon. friend or anybody else has more to attend to than I have, and I am quite willing to remain here in order to expedite business, but if my hon. friends opposite think I am not justified in pressing the business through, I am going to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. If we get through the day's orders and come to government business, we shall proceed with supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 30, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

POULTRY STATIONS.

Mr. PUTTEE asked :

1. How many poultry stations are there operated by the Department of Agriculture, and where are they situated ?

2. What is the net cost of these stations ? Do any of them show receipts to equal expenditure ?

3. Has the Minister of Agriculture received from the Manitoba Poultry Association a resolution favouring the establishment of stations in Manitoba ?

4. Has the department any reports, or have any investigations been made, as to the need of such stations in Manitoba ?

22½

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I must ask the hon. member (Mr. Puttee) and also the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), whose question, No. 3 on the order paper, relates to the same subject, to move for returns covering the information contained in these questions in such a way that I may present it to the House. The answers would be very long and would involve a great deal of work.

APPLES FROM MONTREAL TO EUROPE IN COOL CHAMBERS.

Mr. E. D. SMITH asked :

1. What quantity of apples were carried from Montreal to Europe in cool air chambers of steamers in season of 1903 ?

2. What was the extra charge per barrel for such service ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture) :

1. Eight thousand seven hundred and ninety-six barrels.

2. One shilling and sixpence.

FRESH MEAT TRADE WITH EUROPE.

Mr. McGOWAN asked :

1. Have any of the steamships subsidized by the government, having cold storage chambers, been successful in transporting fresh meat across the Atlantic during the past season ?

2. If so, what were the names of the steamers ; the quantity carried ; and the ports and dates of sailing ?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). We have no records in the department from which we can find anything about any shipments of beef from Montreal in cold storage chambers during last season.

FEES TO McCARTHY, OSLER, HOSKIN & HARCOURT.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Before we pass from the order of 'Questions put by Members,' I would call attention to a question standing on the order paper which has been there for some days. It refers to payments said to have been made to the firm of McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt. In view of the fact that the newspapers are discussing the matter, I would like to have the question put, and I would ask that, in the absence of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), in whose name the question stands, some other gentleman would put the question.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for East Simcoe prefers to put his own question, I think.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) that the Minister of Justice (Mr.

Fitzpatrick) informs me—indeed, I think he told the House—that the statement in the Auditor General's Report is not correct, and that the payments had been made to Mr. Osler.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Solicitor General). I am instructed by the Minister of Justice to answer the question by saying that no payments were made to the firm of McCarthy, Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt by or through the Justice Department.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a return asked for of certain bills of account, &c., relating to the mission of Mr. P. B. Savard. The papers cannot be long, and I would ask that they be brought down as soon as possible.

Hon. RAYMOND PREFONTAINE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It will take some time before the papers can be copied. They are very voluminous—I think nearly a thousand pages.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If I may be allowed a moment, I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Préfontaine) has not in mind the motion to which I allude. The first motion I made was only for the accounts, and surely they cannot be spread over a thousand pages.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I thought that a question had been asked and answered showing exactly what the amount was.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But the order of the House is for the detail of accounts, and these are what I want.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Of course, as to that, there can be no delay. As to the other, it cannot be finished for some time.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I will give the hon. gentleman reasonable time for that.

DISALLOWANCE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA ACTS.

Mr. H. BOURASSA (Labelle). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the government whether a report which appears in this morning's papers is correct. This report states that two laws of the legislature of British Columbia have been disallowed by the Governor General, one of them relating to Asiatic immigration into the province, and the other to the employment of Chinese labour in the coal mines.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). With regard to the first law mentioned by my hon. friend, I could not give any information, but the law passed by the British Columbia legislature restricting Japanese immigration, has been disallowed.

PRINTING OF THE VOTERS' LISTS.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I would like to ask the leader of the government what progress is being made with the voters' lists. I find that a number of members received their lists several weeks ago, others have not received theirs yet. Will the right hon. gentleman say whether the Bureau is printing those lists now?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am informed that previous to the summoning of parliament the lists were being printed as fast as they came to the Bureau, but they did not come regularly. The summoning of parliament necessitated an interruption of the work for the printing of reports for the session. As soon as this printing is disposed of, the printing of the lists will be carried on as usual, and as fast as can be. Each member will be furnished with the lists.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Public buildings, province of Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. As several members from the province of Quebec are absent, I would suggest to the Minister of Public Works that we allow all the Quebec items to pass with the exception of one, which will stand so that hon. members may have an opportunity later of discussing any of the Quebec items when that one comes up.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works). That is quite agreeable to me. But if any hon. gentleman wishes to ask any question with regard to any of these items now, I shall be willing to give the information.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no doubt that would be very agreeable to the Minister of Public Works, but I am not sure it would be quite so agreeable to the country. As I understand it, these items will never be called again, and probably we will have no opportunity of taking them up one by one. No doubt they will be entirely lost sight of in any future discussion.

Magog public building, $12,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister give us some information about the Magog item?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Total cost is $25,000. No action has been taken yet. The possible sites are under consideration and it is intended to proceed with the work as soon as possible.

Montreal examining warehouse — additions and alterations, including fittings, furniture, &c., $18,000.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think items ought to be carried in this way. I have suggested to the hon. Minister of Public Works over and over again, and it will expedite the passage of his estimates very much if he will adopt the suggestion, that he give an explanation as to these items whether any question is asked or not. The committee is entitled to know something about these works for which it is asked to vote money and I have suggested that the object and necessity of the work should be stated, whether it is under public contract, or whether it is being done by day labour, when the work was commenced, when it is expected to be completed and other details of that kind. I took the trouble to think out very carefully last session some of the details of this kind which, I think, should be supplied to the committee on every occasion, by the hon. Minister of Public Works. It simply invites criticism resulting in the waste of time when he does not give the committee this information in the first instance. I am sure that his estimates would be facilitated if on every occasion he would in the first instance give these details and this information to the committee instead of waiting until the information is dragged out of him by hon. members in different parts of the House who are obliged to ask more or less disconnected questions for the purpose of bringing out that which should be given in the first instance in regard to every one of these items.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But it is not done.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It has been done upon almost every occasion. I did not want to act contrary to what I understood to be the wish of the committee. My hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) was not in when the request was made by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) that another system of procedure should be adopted in regard to these few items.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not suggesting in any way that the procedure suggested by my hon. friend from Montmorency should be departed from. That was in regard to the discussion. What I maintain is that when each of the items is called, even if not one word is said from this side of the House, the hon. minister should give us the information.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think the method proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) is quite reasonable and that it will facilitate the passing of the items unless some question arises which is made the subject of discussion. This vote of $18,000 is asked for the purpose of making provision for additions and alterations, including fittings and furniture required at the Montreal examining warehouse requested by the Customs Department in accordance with the subjoined estimate: six new freight elevators, furniture and fittings for express and other departments, new electric passenger elevator, electric lighting plant, increased height of well for passenger elevator, the total cost of which will be $44,700. Of this there has been expended $24,700 leaving a balance of $20,000.

Mr. GALLERY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if he intends to do anything with the building of the Inland Revenue Department in Montreal. At present I think this building is an eyesore to the city of Montreal and that something should be done to put it in repair or that money should be provided to build a new one.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Gallery) I would say that there are no new appropriations in these estimates, but the suggestion of my hon. friend will be taken into consideration, we will see what is required and if any appropriation is needed further it will be placed in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. GALLERY. As the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Brodeur) is in his place I think he would be better able to explain the condition of the inland revenue building in Montreal than I am, and to state whether it is necessary or not to have a new building.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I must endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Anne's (Mr. Gallery). The inland revenue building in Montreal is old and quite inadequate for the present requirements. I believe that Montreal gets side-tracked in regard to a great many expenditures of this kind. Consideration is not given to the amount of revenue derived from the city of Montreal and I do hope that when the supplementary estimates come down there will be a sufficient amount placed in them to give us a respectable building for the inland revenue department.

Montreal public buildings—improvements, alterations, repairs, &c., $8,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This vote of $8,000 is for carrying out in accordance with the subjoined estimates, the following repairs: Renewal and repair of Dominion public building, painting, custom-house, fitting parcel office in post office for custom-house, three stokers for three boilers and roofing inland revenue building.

Quebec immigrant buildings on Louise embankment and breakwater on King's wharf buildings, $2,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This vote is to provide for renewals, improvements and repairs to immigration building on Louise embankment. There is a detail of the repairs required—plumbing, painting, hardware, lumber, labour and sundry repairs amounting to $2,044.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to have a clear understanding as to what is the meaning of the arrangement which was referred to a little while ago. Does the hon. minister understand that any discussion, which may be proceeded with now in the absence of certain hon. gentlemen from Quebec, should be proceeded with, or does he desire that the entire discussion which may arise from any of the explanations he may give should be reserved for the item which is to stand ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I understood the request from my hon. friend from Montmorency to be that owing to the absence of some hon. members we might go through these items allowing one to stand upon which any hon. member might discuss any of the items included in the vote. I do not wish any restriction to be put upon them. It should be clearly understood that if an hon. member of the House wishes to ask for any information or to engage in any discussion in regard to any of the items he will have an opportunity of doing so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. minister has not quite answered my question yet. Does he desire that if any discussion is to take place on the part of hon. gentlemen who are here now, it shall be proceeded with as the items are reached, or does he desire that the entire discussion shall be reserved for the item which is to stand ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Whichever way my hon. friend thinks would be the more convenient.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The practice usually has been to leave one item over and on that it is understood that the discussion shall range over the whole series.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. If any person wishes to discuss any item I am quite agreeable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The reason I ask is that some hon. gentlemen who had some observations to offer in regard to one or two of these items came and asked me as to what the understanding was, not desiring to engage in any discussion that would be a breach of any understanding.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am quite willing to vary the arrangement as I understood it, if any gentleman wishes to bring up a discussion.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not want to vary it ; I want to know what it was.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That is what it was.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The proper way would be to allow one item to stand, and that would leave the resolution open. If any person wishes to return to a particular item to discuss it, the minister has promised that he will make a motion to reopen it. That would be the regular way.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We had better adhere to the regular way. That is the understanding.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

Quebec—Hospital for treatment of immigrants suffering from trachoma and kindred diseases, $12,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Since these explanations were prepared, the chief commissioner of the Immigration Department, has recommended the purchase of a property which has been reported upon by the medical authorities as very suitable. The cost of that property would be about $14,000. There is considerable land including a building, which with some refitting will answer the purpose admirably. There was great objection raised by the Harbour Commissioners and merchants to this building being erected on the wharf as intended, and a compromise has been arranged which is more satisfactory to all concerned. The money will not be expended as was intended, but this property will be purchased, if the recommendation of the department is carried out, and some improvements made on the building. It will not cost anything near so much as if we had to erect a new building.

Quebec post office, renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $2,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERALND. This $2,000 is for repairing and painting the roof, cleaning and painting office, new hardwood floor, repairs and post office fittings, repairs to heating and plumbing, whitewashing and cleaning basement.

Sherbrooke drill hall, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This drill hall is in exactly the same position as the several others which we discussed last night. No part of the money has been spent and I will bring down full information in regard to it when we discuss the other armouries.

St. Hyacinthe drill hall, $15,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This stands in the same position as the other.

St. Hyacinthe public buildings, addition to, &c. $18,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect informs me that this will complete the contract. The total cost including heating, fixtures, &c., and site was $34,490.

St. John's, examining warehouse, $3,500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to provide for the erection of an addition in rear of the St. John's public building for an examining warehouse. This is estimated to be the total cost of the work.

St. John's public building, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is for the erection of a new public building in St. John's for post office purposes. The plans for this building have not been completed and the chief architect is unable to give me the total cost at the present moment, but I will have it when we come to the item again.

St. Louis de Mile End public building, $20,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to make provision for a public building in St. Louis de Mile End for post office purposes. The site has been purchased for $6,009 ; it is at the corner of the Boulevarde and St. Louis street and is 85 feet 10 inches by 70 feet. The total cost of this building when completed is estimated to be $30,000.

Terrebonne public building, $12,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The minister was authorized to purchase the site 65 feet by 132 feet for $1,500 from N. H. Desjardins.

Thetford Mines public building, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the payment of the contract price. The total cost of the work was a little less than $20,000 while the estimate was $19,728. That includes the heating, fixtures, &c.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the population of Thetford Mines ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not know but I will get the information.

Mr. HAGGART. The population is 1,605.

Manitoba — Dominion public building — renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $6,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is the usual vote for renewals and repairs throughout the province.

Mr. PUTTEE. Has the appointment of a building inspector to succeed Mr. Cyr been made yet ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No.

Winnipeg district, military store building, $10,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The chief architect informs me that he has just received from the Department of Militia and Defence the sketch for this building, and I shall be able to give full information in regard to it on the supplementary estimates.

Winnipeg new immigration building and postal station, $60,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We have just completed the acquisition of a site for this building. It did not cost anything, because we have exchanged a piece of property which was considered unsuitable with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for a more convenient and larger piece of ground. It is estimated that the total cost of the building will be $60,000.

Mr. WILSON. Where is this building to be located, and how many immigrants will it accommodate ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is to be just opposite the other building, towards the river. It is to be built at the request and under the instructions of the Department of the Interior, and is expected to be very much more convenient than the old building.

Mr. WILSON. These expenditures are not to be charged against immigration, I suppose ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, they are charged to a special vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. What material is to be used in the construction of this building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Brick.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very glad that something more substantial than the old building is to be erected. I had occasion a few years ago to examine the building used for immigration purposes, near the Canadian Pacific Railway station, and I am only surprised that there has not been some terrible catastrophe there, resulting in loss of life through fire, as the building is a most dangerous one and the means of escape are very insufficient. After the discussion we had last night, I am pleased to hear the minister state that $60,000 is to be the extreme limit of expenditure for this building ; for he has given us to understand that when he makes a statement of that kind, the amount named is to be adhered to, and the instructions to his chief architect will be to prepare plans and specifications which will bring the cost of the building within the amount prescribed. I hope those of us who may be here another year, if this matter comes up again, will be prepared to hold the minister strictly to the pledge he has given us. We now know what we are doing. We are voting $60,000 for the erection of an immigration building in Winnipeg ; the members of this House are to be responsible for that expenditure ; and the chief architect is not to do as has been done in other cases—usurp the functions of parliament and say that a larger sum of money shall be expended. I desire to impress on the minister that he has pledged himself that $60,000 and no more is to be expended on this building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Before the hon. member spoke I gave instructions that if there was any doubt about this amount being sufficient, not one dollar was to be expended until full information was had; and the intention is to complete the building for the sum stated here.

Mr. WILSON. How many stories will it have?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Four.

Mr. HENDERSON. Are we to understand that $60,000 will complete the building, including the furnishing, heating apparatus and everything connected with it? Because that is what I understand when we are told that the building will cost so much—that $60,000 will complete the whole structure, and do whatever is necessary to put it in shape to receive immigrants and to be taken over by the Interior Department.—

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This includes everything except the furniture.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am afraid there is room enough in that for the minister to do a great deal of electioneering.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not want any such opportunity. When a building is completed, a requisition is made for what furniture is required.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would urge on the hon. minister the necessity of not in any way delaying this work. A vote was taken last year and nothing has since been done. During this month, stormy though it has been, a tremendous lot of immigrants have gone through to the west, and there is suffering and complaints from them that they are not furnished with proper accommodation in the immigration building. As regards the cost, the building should be constructed to meet the requirements of the immigrants, and as they are increasing very vastly, it would not be reasonable to tie down the minister to any limited amount, more especially in view of the increases in cost of construction. On Monday, materials are to be increased again ten per cent in some lines, so that in all probability the estimate made last season will not cover the cost of the building this year.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not think there has been any delay on the part of the department. It is only this week that we received a deed of the property, and the chief architect tells me that he has now received a sketch of the building and will be prepared to advertise for tenders almost at once.

Winnipeg military building—magazine, $3,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The plan is not yet furnished, but the cost will be $3,000.

Winnipeg land and building for new post office, $200,000.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the site been selected?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No. I may say that on the report of the chief architect of the department, we thought that by adding two more stories to the present building it would be sufficient. Protests, however, were made by leading citizens and the council of the board of trade, and some time ago I asked a representative of the Post Office Department and the chief architect of Public Works to visit Winnipeg. They did so, and after consulting with the leading citizens and the board of trade, they reported that the enlargement of the old building would not even meet temporarily the wants of the community. They recommended that a new site be purchased and a new building erected. The board of trade forwarded to me options on a number of sites, and I received quite a number of other suggestions, and the whole matter is now under consideration. The prices of the sites are extremely high, and it is estimated by the chief architect that a building sufficient for the requirements of Winnipeg will not cost less than from $250,000 to $300,000.

Mr. WILSON. What is asked for a site?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. From $75,000 to $150,000.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the government any options at present?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We have half a dozen.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I notice that there is nothing in the estimates for any other public building in Manitoba outside the city of Winnipeg. In glancing over the items, especially for the province of Quebec, I notice that many towns, which have been given public buildings there, are inferior in population and postal revenue to those in Manitoba not similarly located. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) reminded us last night of the policy which the hon. gentleman and his party laid down when in opposition, according to which the government should take the revenue into consideration before deciding to construct any public building. I have just gone over some of those towns in the province of Quebec where money has been voted for public buildings, and where the revenue is much less than in the town where I reside. A reason given by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Marcil) why a public building should be erected in Acton Vale, was that the population was increasing and it was the principal town in his constituency. I can urge that Minnedosa is the principal town in my constituency and has a much larger revenue than many towns, for which we have voted public buildings. I have here a list of a number of these towns, giving their revenue and population and the cost of the public buildings in each :

	Revenue.	Cost.	Population.
Alexandria	$2,973 94	$10,000	1,911
Acton Vale, Que.	919 05	12,000	1,175
Lévis...	2,367 68	20,000	7,783
Montmagny	1,713 92	6,000	1,919
Longueuil..	660 56	12,000	2,835
Magog	2,491 64	10,000	3,516
Terrebonne	1,701 86	12,000	1,822
Thetford Mines.	2,418 09	10,000	1,605

All those towns have a revenue much less than Minnedosa, where the government have two public buildings at present, for which they are paying rent, namely, the land office, for which they are paying $20 a month and the post office. If the hon. gentleman would agree to bring down an estimate for $10,000 for a public building to accommodate the post office and land office in the town of Minnedosa, I would guarantee that he will get a free site on the principal street of the town and one of the best sites. At present the post office there is in a very inconvenient spot. There is a river running through the centre of the town. The north part is largely occupied by railways and railway offices and the post office in on that side of the river.

The business portion of the town is on the south side of the river, and if the post office were just in the centre of the town, south of the river, it would accommodate the major portion of the population much better than it does at the present time. If the hon. gentleman takes the revenue as the principle upon which he should act, I can urge the claims of my town. It is badly in need of a public building, and the erection of one would save the government from the necessity of paying out rent for the land office and for the post office, as they are required to do at the present time. The hon. Minister of Public Works could get his material right in the valley inside of the town limits. There is a native stone which is used in the construction of many of the public buildings and private residences of the town, and it makes a splendid building stone. It can be got very cheaply within a mile of the centre of the town. I think that with the material on hand and with a free site, the hon. gentleman should not hesitate about being a little more liberal in his treatment of the province of Manitoba, and not confine all these expenditures to public buildings in the city of Winnipeg. I do not wish to minimize the importance of the city of Winnipeg, or to deny the absolute necessity of greater accommodation being provided in that city. They are very much in need of it, but why should the government confine all of the votes for public buildings to the city of Winnipeg ? I strongly urge upon the hon. minister that he should direct his attention to my constituency, even although it is represented by an opponent of the government, and accord fair justice to that constituency as far as putting something in the supplementary estimates for a post office and land office in Minnedosa is concerned.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There are no new appropriations in the estimates now under consideration. If there are no votes for Manitoba outside of the city of Winnipeg, it is because the works for which votes have previously been taken will be completed before the 30th June next. The remarks of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) as to the necessities of the town of Minnedosa will be taken into consideration later on.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Mr. Chairman, while my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works is on that question, I would remind him that there are three incorporated towns in the district of Provencher, none of which has a public building. The town of Emerson, where there is a customs office and post office, both under rental, has no public building, and the claims of that town should certainly be taken into consideration. The town council of St. Boniface last year made an application direct to the government for a public building, but I am sorry to say that the application was not entertained, and I hope that this year better consideration will be given to the request. There is also the town of Morris, which is a very central railway point, and that town should also be considered in the most favourable way by the government. I hope that the hon. minister will see his way clear to doing something for the towns in this district.

Mr. McCREARY. I want to endorse the statements made by my two colleagues from the province of Manitoba. That province has not received the justice to which it is entitled considering the revenue which is derived from it, as compared with the revenue received from some other provinces. In the city of Winnipeg, where I reside, the postal receipts for the months of September and October, 1902, from the sales of stamps were $12,000 and $15,000, respectively. For the months of September and October, 1903, the sales had increased from $12,000 and $15,000, respectively, to $18,000 and $21,000, respectively. Certainly there is no place in Canada, except Montreal and Toronto, where the postal revenue exceeds these amounts, and the sales of postage stamps in Winnipeg come well up to those of Toronto. So I say that the city of Winnipeg deserves any vote for extending its postal facilities which may be given. In regard to the other towns mentioned, no doubt they deserve to have public buildings, but I wish especially to mention the oldest town in the province of Manitoba, except St. Boniface—the town of Selkirk, the town which was first laid out to be the city of Winnipeg, at the place where the Canadian Pacific Railway intended to cross the river. It was divided into lots before the city of Winnipeg was laid out. There is a population of about 3,000, and the revenues of the town are very large. The government are paying rent for a post office, customs-house and the offices of the Indian agent, the Indian inspector, the sub-land agent, the timber inspector and the fishery inspector. They have to pay rent for the offices of eight or ten different officials today, and I submit that if a $15,000 or $20,000 building were put up, the rent which is now paid would more than pay the interest on the investment. I would ask the hon. minister to place something in the supplementary estimates for the town of Selkirk. This is a town that deserves consideration although I have never urged it very strongly upon the hon. minister, but I ask for cold justice at least in regard to this particular town.

Mr. PUTTEE. The hon. Minister of Public Works will begin to see that the matter of public buildings in the west is one which is just beginning to be an important question. But, coming back to the item under discussion, the Winnipeg post office item, I would say that it is a very important and rather contentious question as to what should be the site of this post office. Of course, the whole responsibility will rest with the hon. minister of the department, and what I would like to impress upon him is not to be too strongly influenced by the various parties who have sites to sell. It may be that there will be considerable difficulty in getting a suitable site at a fair price, or one that would be acceptable to the majority of the citizens. I believe that the present site of the post office is the one that would be the most acceptable, and if the department would increase its property there and acquire the lots adjoining, it seems to me that would cause the least upset and be the most acceptable arrangement. This was urged upon the government a number of years ago. I myself urged it in 1900, when, I suppose, the adjoining lands could have been secured at a price 50 per cent less than that which would be asked for them now. While these options are before the hon. minister, knowing something of the pressure that is being applied, and knowing also something of the need of keeping the post office in a central position in the city, if it is possible, even moving it more towards the centre than away from it, I would ask that the hon. minister see that all interests and all available sites are considered.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I have given instructions to the officials to take the greatest possible care in regard to the points which my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) has brought up. I fear very much, from the report of the officers, that the land adjoining the present building would not be sufficient for the accommodation required now or in the near future if we could purchase it, but they want $2,000 a foot frontage. It seems to me that for all the increased space that we would have by acquiring the adjoining lot we could not afford to pay $2,000, although I quite agree that we want to get as near the business centre of the city as possible. I think from the fact that we have a large number of properties offered that we will be able to choose from them one in a desirable locality and at a fair price.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, before this item is carried, I desire to say a few words. I notice the amount asked for by the hon. minister is only $200,000. None of us, on this side of the House at any rate, presumes for one moment that this is going to be the entire appropriation for a post office in the city of Winnipeg. The site is costing anywhere from $75,000 to $150,000, and it will certainly require a very considerable sum to erect a post office. Now, I think the hon. minister should take into consideration the fact that the Winnipeg of to-day is only a small town compared with what the Winnipeg of ten years hence will be, and that provision should be made for the future so that this parliament will not be called upon again within the next ten or even twenty years to expend a large sum of money for the purpose of providing a post office for the city of Winnipeg. I think the city is entitled to a structure in keeping with the commercial importance of the place. But, whatever the minister is going to expend in the erection of this post office, I hold that he should now state to the committee what that amount will be. The hon. gentleman has his chief architect, and before placing this item in the estimates, he must have had a calculation made of the cost of a structure that would conform to his idea of a proper post office for the city of Winnipeg. The only matter on which there can be any doubt is the cost of a site. I understand that the government has the power to expropriate any land in Winnipeg that they think necessary for the purposes of the government. So, I would say to the minister that he should not allow himself to be imposed upon in any way by owners of property suitable for a post office site, but that the power of expropriation possessed by the government should be used, if necessary, to secure the best site for the purpose. The minister should invite the aid of the board of trade of Winnipeg and other commercial interests to bring to bear upon the people who are interested in the sale of property, the propriety of dealing fairly and reasonably with the government, so that the government should not be forced to pay an undue price for the land required for a great public improvement of this kind. I am prepared to hear the minister state that a very considerable sum, even a large sum, is necessary for the construction of this building. I suppose he would not name anything less than double the amount he has asked for here—perhaps it might be even more than that. No doubt, the minister has had an estimate made of the cost of the building he intends to construct—he certainly should have such an estimate before he asks this committee to vote any money for the purpose. And, as the only question on which he cannot decide is the question of the site, and as that may be approximately estimated by striking an average between about $75,000 and about $150,000, he should rise in his place and tell us what money is to be expended on the post office in Winnipeg. So far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to limit him, or to say that he should be compelled to erect a building that would not be in keeping with that great commercial city, or that would not meet the requirements of that city for years and years to come. But we must know what the cost of the building is to be, otherwise we cannot give an intelligent vote on this subject. I repeat that Winnipeg is entitled to a first-class building, a building that will be an ornament to the city, and that will meet its post office requirements for years to come. I know that there is very considerable grievance in Winnipeg because of lack of post office accommodation. I do not believe that sufficient land could be had adjacent to the present post office on which to erect a proper building. My recollection may be wrong, but that recollection is that on the main street the property is built right up to the post office. I do not see how the present building is to be utilized in connection with the new structure if a building to afford the accommodation that will be required is to be provided.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Is the minister (Mr. Jas. Sutherland) aware of the nature of the title by which the government holds the site of the present post office? The first post office building in Winnipeg was in the southern part of the city. Later on, the business portion of the city extended to the north, and the business men asked the government to transfer the post office to a more northerly part of the city. I understand that the present site was given to the government with the understanding that the post office should be located on it. If that is the condition of the title, I do not know how the government would be able to move the post office from that place without compensating the original owner. Because the owner had a large property in the neighbourhood, and it was with the idea of enhancing the value of that property that he made, I might say almost a gift to the government of a site for the post office. I fully endorse what the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) says, that it would be possible to enlarge the present building by extending it northward over ground not now occupied by any building of consequence, and available for this purpose. By making this extension and adding a couple of stories, I think sufficient accommodation would be provided for a long time to come. But I draw the special attention of the minister to the condition of the title by which the government holds the present site.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The matter of the title to the site of the post office in Winnipeg was brought to my attention only yesterday. I am having it investigated. I believe there is some condition, but I do not think it is so narrow as that mentioned by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière)—that the site is to be occupied by the post office. I believe that the land was sold on the condition that it was to be used as a site for government offices. As to enlarging the present building, as my hon. friend from Provencher knows, that was the policy of the government. In fact I was authorized by parliament to proceed with these improvements. But a very strong protest was received from the citizens of Winnipeg, and, as I said, I had the chief officer of my department and also one of the inspectors of the Post Office Department visit Winnipeg and remain there for some time. After a full discussion of the whole matter, they came to the conclusion that the improvements that had been suggested would not be adequate, that they would afford accommodation barely sufficient for the present.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If it is only the addition of a couple of stories I would agree to that. The post office requires more ground-floor room. If you take the adjacent lot of 50 feet wide, you can enlarge the building and increase the accommodation very much.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My information was that the lot the hon. gentleman refers to was 30 feet. I must say that my experience, and, I fancy, the experience of others in regard to enlarging a building of this description is that a great deal of the money is wasted. However, they asked $2,000 a foot—or rather they refused $2,000 per foot.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Not per square foot.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Well, no, hardly.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Some people pretended that that price had been asked for square foot.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. My hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) is evidently not so easily startled as I am. I thought the price quite high enough per front foot. The matter was gone into with a great deal of care by the board of trade along with the officers of the two departments. I think the report made to me fully warranted me in stopping the work. None of the money has been spent. We will save money by this plan. In reply to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), I am glad to know he approves of the change that has been made. As I have already explained, it is only two or three weeks since this new policy has been adopted. In a large work like this at Winnipeg it would hardly be possible to have a detailed plan ready so soon. In the opinion of the chief architect a suitable building cannot be put up there for less than $250,000 or $300,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does that include the cost of the site ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. No, exclusive of the site.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then before we take concurrence on this item, perhaps the minister will be able to make a definite statement as to how much money he intends to spend on the Winnipeg post office ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I will try to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would suggest that the minister, in the erection of this post office, should take into consideration the future development of the city of Winnipeg, that he should have regard not only in the erection of the building itself, but also in the selection of the site, to the future of the city. Winnipeg is beyond doubt destined to be a very great city, and it would be injudicious, I think, to select a site which would not allow for extension in the future, or to erect a building now which would not subserve the purposes of a very great city. I understand that no site has yet been selected, although the options have been obtained. I presume before this item passes concurrence, we will be able to get not only the information which has been asked for by my hon. friend from Halton, but also information as to the site which will have been selected, because that might require some discussion.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I hope before this item comes up for concurrence, unless it comes much quicker than I expect, I will have that information. Of course we intend to make a building that will meet the requirements of a large city.

Winnipeg military buildings—quarters for non-commissioned officers, including guard room, &c., $6,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is a revote. No work could be done on account of the weather. The total cost of this work, I understand, will be $12,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it a new building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is an addition to the existing building.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How is the work to be done ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. By contract.

Mr. HENDERSON. We are frequently hearing about the weather interfering with the operations of the government. I am afraid the government is too readily taking refuge behind the weather. We heard the other night that certain towns in western Ontario could not be supplied with postal accommodation on account of the weather, but other towns adjacent were supplied with all the postal facilities that were necessary, notwithstanding the weather. In Winnipeg they have had a very fine winter. I had the pleasure of visiting that city in the month of February, and I found building operations going on without apparently being interfered with at all by the weather. The winter was not extreme, and outdoor work and building operations could be readily carried on. I hope this excuse for delay will not be repeated too frequently, and made use of for the purpose of letting the government out of a little difficulty.

Winnipeg public buildings—addition to, $35,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think in view of the change of policy, we will not require this vote. Some temporary changes have been made, and some improvements for the meantime. Whatever money we will require for that purpose, if we have not enough, I will ask for in another vote. In the meantime I move that this vote be struck out.

Mr. McCREARY. If the old post office building is to be remodelled for other purposes, as well as for the custom-house, inland revenue building, land office and Indian office, it will require a large sum of money for new elevators and other purposes. It seems to me that at least $25,000 should be kept in the estimates for that purpose.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There are no new votes in these estimates. We must decide upon what changes are desirable, and what improvements are to be made in the old building. We will then ask, in the supplementary estimates, what amount we think will be required to do that work.

Mr. PUTTEE. It will be a couple of years before the new post office is available, and this money was taken last year after the improvement of the present office was effected. The minister will have to spend money in remodelling it. During last winter $5,000 was spent in the building. There has been a lot of time and money frittered away. The accommodation was not sufficient last winter, and will not be during the coming summer. Material matters such as increasing the space have not been attended to.

Motion agreed to, and item struck out.

Northwest Territories—Calgary—addition to examining warehouse, changes and additions to post office fittings, &c., $4,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is a re-vote to make provision for constructing an addition 30 by 40 feet, two stories high, to the examining warehouse.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it by contract ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The addition will be let by contract.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion will be for fittings ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The proportion for fittings will be small as it is an examining warehouse.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When do you require completion of the building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The tenders would require completion this season.

Northwest Territories—Court-house, lock-up and police accommodation, $1,500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. We maintain the court-houses in the Territories and this is for the repairs generally.

Northwest Territories — Dominion public buildings — renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $5,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What buildings have we in the Territories ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Besides the court-houses and jails we have Dominion land offices and registry offices, and post offices, and the lieutenant governor's residence, in the different towns in the Territories.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose we have lock-ups.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think they are all in connection with the court-houses.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How much was spent under this item last year ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. $5,530.

Edmonton jail, $35,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What was the total cost of that jail ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract was $50,150. The total cost including the cell doors, fittings, &c., will be $68,846.63.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is an enormous expenditure for a jail. Is it used for any other purpose ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it a jail, or a hotel, or both ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is only for a jail. This is inclusive of the site which cost $8,259. There is a large piece of land there, and I believe it is the intention of the Department of Justice to establish a penitentiary for the Territories.

Mr. LANCASTER. How many prisoners is it supposed to accommodate ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I think I will have to get that information from the Justice Department. I see there are 14 cells.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are they made of gold bricks to cost this enormous sum ? What is the building constructed of ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Brick.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Two years ago the minister stated that this was to accommodate 40 male prisoners and 15 female prisoners, and that he would not ask more than $20,000 or $25,000 for that building.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Who stated that ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. The Minister of Public Works.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The then Minister of Public Works.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. In 1902 the minister stated :

I do not intend to spend more than $20,000 or $25,000 on the jail. My officers tell me that we cannot build a jail for that money exclusive of the site which has cost $8,950. Of course I do not bind myself against the opinion of my chief architect, but it seems to me that for $25,000 we can build the jail.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I find that I made a mistake. There are 14 cells on each of the three floors.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When will it be completed ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract was let on the 5th of June, 1903, and it is to be completed on the 20th of May, 1905.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose building is more expensive in Edmonton than it is in the east, but even so, it is a rather large expenditure for a building of the size indicated.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The best guide to that, I suppose, is that there were quite a number of tenders, and the lowest was very much lower than the highest, and it was accepted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. One would suppose that a building of that kind would not cost, in the east, more than $15,000 or $20,000. Of course we must make some allowance for the greater cost of material and labour, although I am informed that the bricks are made on the spot.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In a building of this kind a large part of the expense is in the iron work; but I can assure my hon. friend that, considering the prices of material and labour and the size of the building, the tender, compared with the other tenders, is quite low.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When will the building be completed ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract calls for its completion in May, 1905.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there a court-house in Edmonton ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The jail must be on a very much more elaborate scale than the court-house.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, very much. I think it is the intention of the Department of Justice to establish a penitentiary there.

Macleod court-house, $1,500.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is to complete the contract. The total cost is $22,875. That includes the building, boilers, fittings and furniture, fences, sidewalks and the total finishing of the work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does it include a jail or lock-up as well ? There is no jail or lock-up in connection with this building, though I understand that there are cells in the basement for temporary use.

Moosejaw public building, $5,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This vote was taken for the purchase of a site, but the town has given a site worth between $5,000 and $6,000, and this vote will be used for going on with the work. I shall be able to submit the plans, specifications and estimates of cost with the supplementary estimates.

Mr. LANCASTER. Can the minister give us an idea of what the total cost will be ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It will be $20,000 or $25,000.

Prince Albert court-house and post office, $15,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The information required to complete the plans and to give the estimates has not been received from the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that in many cases there is altogether insufficient land purchased by the government for these public buildings. I think the government, in view of the growing condition of Manitoba, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia, should secure ample land for public buildings. In the older parts of Canada you often find a public building which has cost $25,000 or $30,000 erected on a very small site ; so that it contributes little or nothing to the appearance of the town for the amount of money expended. In some cases the building covers every foot of the site. Another point, to which the minister might direct his architect's attention, is that in many of these post offices too much floor space is given to the postmaster and his assistants, and entirely too little to the general public. I am not saying that too much space is given for the work to be done inside, but too little is given for the use of the public.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman that in many cases too little land has been purchased. In this case the government own the ground and will see that sufficient space is allowed to meet the expansion of business. Some years ago I found that the difficulty pointed out by my hon. friend existed especially with regard to post offices. There was not sufficient space for the accommodation of the public, and in all new plans we are making provision to guard against any difficulty of that kind in the future.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why are the post office and court-house in one building ? It seems a strange combination.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. In these places, which are growing very fast, it is difficult to rent offices, and it was suggested that in this instance the post office might be put into the court-house building, by adding an extension, without materially increasing the cost.

Red Deer court-house, lock-up, &c., and land office, $10,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where is Red Deer ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is in Alberta district. The total cost of the work, including heating and lighting apparatus, will be $19,393.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Has the contract been let ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract was let to Johnson & Tait, of Red Deer, on the 7th of December, 1903, and calls for completion on the 20th of November, 1904. The building is to be of brick.

Nanaimo public building—addition to, $14,600.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This vote is required to build an annex to the north end of the Nanaimo public building, as requested by the Department of Customs, and to provide new letter-boxes for the post office.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the size of the building now existing, and what will be the total cost of the proposed addition ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The building was put up in 1882. The size is 48 by 42 with a staircase 12 by 24. The walls are of stone. An examining warehouse is in the basement, the post office on the ground floor and the office of inland revenue on first floor. The total cost will be $34,056. The proposed addition will cost $14,600.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the contract been let ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The contract for the addition has not been let, but the advertisements are now out asking for tenders, and tenders will be received on the 10th of April.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the reason for this additional accommodation ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is a customs port and the business has increased very considerably of late years.

Rossland armoury, $21,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is this a new building ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The estimated cost is $26,000. The site was secured from the provincial government. It is 120 feet on First avenue and 90 feet on Monte Cristo avenue. The building will be of brick on stone foundation and 102 feet in length, exclusive of the entrance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the total strength of the militia force to be accommodated there ?

Mr. GALLIHER. There are two companies in that place, but this will be the central meeting point of all the companies in the district. That is why it is larger than any of the others that have been granted in that particular district.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman says this is for the accommodation of two companies. What is the strength of those companies ?

Mr. GALLIHER. They would run from 40 to 60. I do not know the exact number.

Mr. BLAIN. Of what material is this building to be constructed ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Of brick.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been some change in this respect ? The amount is very much more than the hon. gentleman stated last year.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes. I think it was intended last year to build a wooden shed ; this is to be a brick building, and a shooting gallery is to be provided. I think that, considering the character of the men that went from this district to the South African war and the services they rendered, it is due to the district that we should furnish the volunteers there with reasonably good accommodation. Perhaps there is no other district in Canada upon which we could call for soldiers with the certainty of getting so large a number of the very best men.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is very true, of course, and every one is most anxious to give the men of the active militia all over the country the best possible accommodation. But it hardly seems possible for us to erect armouries of this kind everywhere. An armoury costing $26,000 and intended for the accommodation of two companies of from 40 to 60 men each would seem to be rather excessive in its cost. Possibly the dimensions are too large. I must confess that I hardly see how it would be possible for that number of men to use, to any great extent, a building so large as this amount should provide. I am not speaking of Rossland alone, but I have in mind the armouries in a great many other places in the country. I have thought sometimes that we spend a little too much money on armouries and, perhaps, not enough on the force itself. I realize that we must have accommodation for the men engaged in the active militia, but that accommodation should be on a reasonable and moderate scale. It would be impossible to erect a $26,000 armoury for every two companies. I do not know how near to Rossland the other two companies are. If this armoury would answer always, or for any considerable period of years, the wants of other companies, that might put a different aspect on the case. But I do not know how near the headquarters of the other companies are, or to what extent those companies can use this armoury. I think perhaps the Minister of Public Works might give us a little more information on that point. I entirely concur in what he has said as to the class of men who are engaged in the active militia, not only in Rossland, but throughout the west. At the same time that does not justify us in being too lavish in the construction of these armouries, either in the west or in the east. I have not observed the armouries in the west, but I have observed some of those in the east, and, as I say, I have sometimes thought that perhaps we are using a little too much of our funds in that way.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. There is one fact that will explain a great deal in connection with this item, and that is that a building of this character would cost twice as much in the district in which it is to be constructed as it would be in any part of eastern Canada.

Mr. GALLIHER. Further to satisfy the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), as far as possible, I would like to say that, as he well knows, in the western part of the country—in other parts of the west as well as in British Columbia—the conditions are such that we cannot get outside drill. In such towns as Rossland you have to drill winter and summer in the armoury. Practically, this is a drill shed as well as an armoury. At the time when the appropriations were made for the other four companies at four different points—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where ?

Mr. GALLIHER. One at Nelson, one at Kaslo, one at Kamloops and one at Revelstoke. When these appropriations were asked for, a request was made also for a drill hall at Rossland. But the title to the land had not been procured, and so this appropriation was not passed at the same time as the others. I stated in the House at that time that I would bring the matter up at the next session if the title in the meantime had been procured. The idea of building this armoury larger than any of the others was that there would be two companies at Rossland and that, as has been the practice in the past, the different companies might come together once or twice a year from different parts to hold a sort of field day, as it were. Each of the other companies, as I have stated, has its own drill hall, the buildings having been completed and being now occupied. We would like to have other companies there, in fact other places have been applying to be allowed to organize companies, but so far the Militia Department has not seen fit to increase the number of companies in that district. Grand Forks, Greenwood and, I think, Fernie, made the same request. As the minister has said, building there is much more expensive than in eastern Canada, costing at least from 50 to 60 per cent more. To provide accommodation for the two companies and for the purposes of a central meeting point, as I have suggested, it is necessary to have a building of the dimensions proposed in this case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Are they infantry companies ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes ; they have gatling guns also, which would be stored in the armoury with the accoutrements.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the cost of the drill halls in Kaslo and these other places ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Outside of Nelson, I think they will average $6,000 or $7,000. The drill hall in Nelson is a brick structure, and cost about $14,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would seem to me that, as a drill hall, this cannot be of very much service to the other four towns mentioned, because they have their own drill halls, and also because they are situated at considerable distances from Rossland according to my recollection.

Mr. GALLIHER. Only in the way I have stated, for meeting together generally, as they do once a year. There is only one company at each of these other points, Nelson, Kaslo, Revelstoke and Kamloops, and the idea in putting up this large building is to accommodate the two companies at Rossland, which will probably be the headquarters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Where does the commanding officer live ?

Mr. GALLIHER. The district officer commanding is at Victoria.

Mr. GALLIHER.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These two companies at Rossland and the four other companies, do they all belong to the same regiment ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, the Rocky Mountain Rifles.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who is the officer commanding, and where does he live?

Mr. GALLIHER. There is in each place the captain, a lieutenant and so on, there are non-commissioned officers in each of the different places where the companies are. There is also the district officer commanding at Victoria, Col. Holmes.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Is there not also a lieutenant-colonel in connection with the organization ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, Mr. McDonnell, I think.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is, of course, an officer commanding the district ; besides, I suppose, there would be an officer commanding the regiment of which these companies form part, and I would like to know where his headquarters are?

Mr. GALLIHER. At Nelson, I think.

Vancouver public building, $60,000.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. This is for the purpose of erecting a new building for a post office at Vancouver. The total cost, including the fittings, is estimated at $200,000.

Mr. EARLE. Has the site been obtained yet ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, the site has been purchased for $52,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the size of the site, and where is it situated ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. It is 156 by 120 feet, with a lane 20 feet in width. It is one of the best sites in the city of Vancouver, situated on the corner of Grenville and Hastings streets. It was purchased from Mr. D. Robertson. The Order in Council was passed on the 17th of November, 1903, but the sale was not completed until some weeks after.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand land is very valuable in Vancouver, at the same time that seems a fairly high price. It depends of course on whether it is situated in the centre of the city or in the suburbs. Has the hon. gentleman any valuation ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I will give one valuation, for a lot perhaps not as favourably situated as this, the Bank of Commerce paid $45,000 for only 60 feet frontage, while we have 156.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There are 156 feet on Hastings street and 120 on Grenville street. These are the principal business streets.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I took a good deal of trouble personally in getting at the value of this property. I was very anxious to get hold of that lot, and we got a kind of lien on it in the first place, otherwise I do not suppose we would have been able to purchase the site at the price we did. The site bought by the Bank of Commerce is the only illustration of the value of property I have been able to procure in that locality. As a rule, when the Post Office Department want another building, they get us a report. They have an officer who furnishes us with a report as to the necessity of the building and suitability of a site. They also make all the inquiries they can concerning the property. An officer of the department is invariably sent on to examine the property, who makes, I do not say a sworn statement, but a written statement of the result of his investigations into the value of the property.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did my hon. friend obtained any valuation ? Of course a comparison between this and any other lot is not very valuable to any one who is not familiar with the city. To those who understand the relative values of properties in that city it might be useful information, but it does not afford much information to the members of this House. Therefore it would seem to me that with respect to the purchase of a property costing so large a sum as this, it is desirable that we should be furnished with some valuation from persons who are thoroughly familiar with real estate values in the city of Vancouver.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I took considerable pains personally in assuring myself of the value of this property. Valuations were furnished by some of the leading real estate men of the city, and a report was made by a Mr. Henderson, who has been for some years a resident of that city, as to the value of this property. I quite agree that the instance I quoted of the Bank of Commerce is not a very valuable guide to us, still their lot is situated very close to this property, and is on the same street, and having changed hands recently, I thought it would afford us some indication. I am pleased to see that the city appears to be growing very fast, and a valuable building is required.

Mr. MACPHERSON. The government have been very fortunate in acquiring this property. Had anybody else but the government been purchasing it, it would have cost at the least calculation $60,000. The Canadian Pacific Railway owned part of the property adjacent, and were very desirous of seeing public buildings put up there ; for that reason they had an option on the property so that nothing else could be put up there but a public building. It is one of the best situated lots in the city of Vancouver, and is extremely well adapted for the purpose of a custom-house and post office. This government could to-day get $60,000 for that property for which they paid $52,000. The Canadian Bank of Commerce four years ago paid $45,000 for a lot not any better situated than this, and for a considerable less amount of land.

Mr. BLAIN. What other public buildings have the government in Vancouver ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Under the department there is only one public building, I think.

Mr. MACPHERSON. There is the post office and the armouries.

Mr. BLAIN. There was an item voted last year of $60,000. May I ask the hon. minister if that was expended last year ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That was for this same site. We are revoting $8,000.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that. This is only for the post office ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. When this matter was up last year the hon. minister made a statement in regard to it and perhaps it would be well if I were to read what he said :

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will probably cost in round figures $100,000. The city is growing very fast and accommodation to about that extent is required. We are now paying very heavy rentals and I think it is a good business proposition to have all our offices in one building in Vancouver.

What is the explanation ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I do not exactly catch the connection. It is perfectly true that we are paying heavy rents in Vancouver. What about the $100,000 ?

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot catch the connection either. When the Vancouver public building item of $60,000 was up last year my hon. friend made the statement.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Read it again.

Mr. BLAIN. I will read it again.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will probably cost in round figures $100,000. The city is growing very fast and accommodation to about that extent is required. We are now paying very heavy rentals and I think it is a good business proposition to have all our offices in one building in Vancouver.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is for my hon. friend to explain that.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, it is rather difficult. I do not understand the statement at all.

Mr. CLANCY. This is not the only one that the hon. gentleman cannot explain.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I am pretty nearly always right in my statements. Very often in the discussion of these items, I cannot hear hon. gentlemen clearly and they cannot hear me, and it may be possible that in discussing these items in a conversational way, the reporters may not catch exactly the statements that are made.

Mr. CLANCY. Oh, oh.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Well, I am speaking in earnest. I am not asking for any favours from the hon. gentleman in regard to this matter. If the statement is there, I cannot explain it. It must have been a misfake ; that is all. My hon. friend must know that there is a liability to errors of this kind. Have I ever shown a disposition to misinform the House in regard to giving it information ? If the quotation is made it is certainly a mistake. I could not have made any such mistake as that and I would not come here and give a figure which I knew would be contrary to what was expected and which would be unreasonable. There may be times when there may be differences in the figures that are given for reasons which are quite understandable, but this statement is quite unreasonable.

Mr. CLANCY. I think that the committee has not at all dealt harshly with the hon. gentleman. People are usually let off on the first offence, sometimes on the second and sometimes on the third, but that does not condone the hon. gentleman's offence in any way. Statements have been made by the hon. gentleman—I am not going to say that he made these statements in an attempt to deceive the House—which have disclosed a looseness, a carelessness, and an utter disregard of exactness and correctness on the part of the hon. gentleman's officers, if they were speaking through him to this committee. This is no doubt a serious state of things, and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman probably spoke at that moment from information which was given him ; but his information was faulty on that occasion and it has been faulty on many other occasions. It has been urged with great reason that the hon. minister in seeking to get his estimates through should give only such estimates as may be carried out and if he is unable to carry out these statements, he should come back and get a new mandate before he expends one dollar of money. The hon. gentleman will surely not show any temper. I do not think he has any good reason to do so, because, over and over again during the sittings of this committee, it has been pointed out that he has made statements, which, without being construed in harsh terms, may be said to have shown him to be acting in bad faith.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. I cannot agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) ; that is all. It is a difference of opinion. It is perfectly true that the statement which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) reads, appears in 'Hansard.' This is the unrevised 'Hansard,' because, with the duties I have to perform, I have not time to revise the 'Hansard.' I probably would not have noticed the error in the figures without having some notes before me anyway. I have never made a statement with the intention of deceiving the committee and the figures which are stated by me are almost invariably given to me by the officers of the department as the hon. gentleman knows. While there has been a very considerable looseness in that regard in the past, it has been my endeavour to have the estimates given much more closely than they have hitherto been given. It is the effort of the department to do so now, and all I would say is that if that statement appears it is certainly a mistake. It is so wide of the mark that I could not have made any such statement last session. It is an error.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Possibly it may be due to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, not being quite so familiar with his brief as he ought to be. I have seen that occur in other tribunals—in the courts. When a man is not very familiar with his brief, he sometimes says things that are not quite warranted, and does it quite unintentionally. Of course, my hon. friend must remember that when his words are taken down by the 'Hansard' reporters, every hon. gentleman in the House goes to the 'Hansard' for the purpose of obtaining information about the cost of these public works. We rely upon them, and when my hon. friend says that he has not time to revise the 'Hansard,' I would think that it should be very desirable that he should revise it, or, at all events, that it should be revised by some officer of his department. It is extremely important that we should have matters of this kind stated accurately to the House. I am not speaking of the revision of the 'Hansard' other than in regard to verifying the accuracy of statements of this kind. It would perhaps not be too much to ask that statements of this character should be gone over by some officer of the department if my hon. friend is liable to make these mistakes in giving information to the House. Of course, it is a perfectly absurd mistake to say that this whole building, including the site, is to cost only $100,000. If my hon. friend is familiar with his brief at the present time, perhaps he would be good enough to tell us what estimate has been made of its cost. That certainly should be furnished to the House after a very expensive site has been purchased and after we are committed to a very considerable expenditure.

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. The estimated cost of this building is $200,000 in round figures, and my instructions are that the plans are to be completed and carried out in accordance with the amount as estimated by the officials as being sufficient to complete the work.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. minister whether that includes simply the cost of the building and the cost of the site, or whether it also includes the cost of fittings, such as lighting, heating, furniture and items of that character ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. That included the heating, lighting, and substantially everything required in the building, but it does not include the site.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does it include the furniture ?

Mr. JAS. SUTHERLAND. Yes, the furniture as well.

Some resolutions reported.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When the order for private Bills was called, the Bills were not printed, but I am informed that they are now printed and distributed, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will consent, we will take up that order, so that they may be advanced a stage.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, a certificate of the election and return of John H. Sinclair, Esq., for the electoral district of Guysboro', province of Nova Scotia.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister), moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to ratify the agreement between His Majesty the King and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, dated the eighth day of March, 1904, transmitted by His Excellency the Governor General to this House by his message of March the eleventh ; and which varies in some respects the provisions of the agreement between His Majesty and Sir Charles Rivers Wilson and others, representing the said company ; a copy of which forms the schedule to the Act 3 Edward VII., chapter 71 ; and to authorize the government to do whatever is necessary to give full effect to the first mentioned agreement.

He said : Mr. Speaker, the transportation question is undoubtedly the most important of all those which have engaged and still continue to engage the attention of parliament and the attention of the Canadian people as well. It is a question at once complex and involved, complex and involved in this, that there are several works of a national character which have to be undertaken and carried out in the course of time, but which cannot be all undertaken at this moment. There is the construction of a second transcontinental railway from tidal water to tidal water, and which more immediately calls for the deliberation of parliament ; there is the improvement and development of the waterways from the great lakes to the Atlantic sea-board ; there is the improvement and development of overland communication between the great lakes and the Atlantic sea-board, either by the construction of new lines or by perfecting lines now existing ; there is also the connection of the great western centres of population with the waters of the Yukon Territory. All these projects deserve attention, they are all meritorious and they have all to be attended to. The question is therefore, where so much is to be done, where we should commence. This was the problem which faced the government and which faced parliament last year; and having given the matter the best consideration we could give it, we do not think that we mistook public opinion nor failed in the proper appreciation of the events and circumstances which have taken place, in having concluded that the first of all those works which requires to be attended to is the construction of a second transcontinental railway.

There are for this conclusion, I say, paramount reasons—reasons at once political and commercial. The population of Canada to-day is probably six million of souls—perhaps a little over six million. Certainly not less than five-sixths of this number of people and more are centred east of Lake Superior. Though the western section is vastly inferior in number to the eastern section, it is a matter of public knowledge, of public notoriety, that the west is increasing with far greater rapidity than the eastern section, and the day is not far distant, indeed I think we can almost see the dawn of the day which will see the western population equal to and perhaps exceeding the population of the eastern section. Between these two sections of population, however, there is a gap of several hundred miles of uninhabited and hardly habitable land. This gap constitutes an interruption of communication that has to be made up and supplemented by the hand of man. This has been done to some extent already by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway—to some extent only, not completely. If we reflect that railway communication has become a primary necessity of civilized life, if we remember the growing importance which railway communication occupies in all the relations of civilized life, no further argument is required to show that a single line of railway between these two groups of the Canadian people is absolutely inadequate and insufficient. Then, when we remember that the western group of our population is geographically connected with another group of population largely akin in language and origin, but alien in allegiance, from which it is separated by no natural obstacles, and with which communication is established by means of several railways running north and south, the necessity is all the more apparent, not certainly that we are in doubt as to the allegiance of these people in the west, not certainly that we believe they can be seduced from their present allegiance in any manner whatever, but it becomes the duty of the Canadian people, and it certainly is the part of statesmanship, to provide, and that immediately, all sections of the Canadian people with proper facilities of communication, at least equal to those which exist amongst our neighbours to the south of us.

Then, when we reflect further that the population of the west is largely composed of foreign elements which have to be assimilated, we will no doubt agree that the best instrument of assimilation is the railway—the railway which annihilates distance, which makes neighbours of men who, previous to its era, would have remained unknown to each other, and would perhaps not even have suspected the existence of one another.

Strong as is the aspect of the question from the political point of view, stronger is it from the commercial point of view. The western population of Canada are largely growers of cereals, chiefly wheat. They can send their products to market at this moment only by rail, then by water, and then either by rail or water. To-day, as soon as the crop has been threshed in the month of November and up to the month of December, when navigation is closed, the products of the people of the west have to be sent by rail to the end of Lake Superior. Then they are sent over Lake Superior, and when they reach the other end of the lake, they are sent to their destination either by rail or water. What is the consequence of the present condition of things? What happens to-day? As soon as the crop has been threshed during the months of September, October and November, and whilst navigation is open, the existing railways have to make a supreme effort in order to collect rolling stock in the western section of the country so as to be able to take as much as possible of the crop to the shore of Lake Superior. They have to starve all the other sections of Canada. Trade is disorganized, and there is discontent in the east, and not much content in the west either. But, as soon as navigation is closed, the commercial life of the west, as far as the transportation of grain is concerned, is stopped. Nothing can take place. If there should be millions of bushels of wheat still stored in the granaries of that western country, if there should be a rise in price, or a sudden demand, the demand could not be supplied from the west, because, though whatever may be said to the contrary, the single line of railway which we have to-day is not adequate to the commercial necessities or to the transportation of cereals. The statement has been made, and it has been repeated on the floor of this House, that if wheat has been carried by the Canadian Pacific Railway by the north shore of Lake Superior, the statistics show that an infinitesimal quantity has been carried. But it is unfortunately beyond doubt that the grades and curvatures of the line around the shore of Lake Superior will not permit the successful commercial carriage of wheat over it. Therefore, these considerations make it necessary that we should have another line of railway to connect the east with the west, so as to supply the wants of the community.

In what I have stated so far, I have had chiefly in view the section of the road which we have in contemplation which is to connect the tidal waters of the St. Lawrence and the Atlantic with the wheat fields of the prairies. In regard to the other section of the road, from the city of Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean, no dispute can arise, and no dissonance of opinion has been heard. There seems to be a general consensus of opinion that that section of the road has to be built, and built immediately. Unfortunately, the same unanimity does not exist in regard to the section of road extending eastward to the tidal waters of the Atlantic. In my estimation, and in the judgment of the government, that section of road is just as necessary at this moment as the other section. But there has been an impression in this country that the section of country which is to be covered by the road from Winnipeg eastwards towards the St. Lawrence is barren and inhospitable. That impression has been carefully cherished and promulgated even on the floor of this House, because, on the floor of this House, we have heard the statement made with some relish with a good deal of satisfaction and with beaming smiles, that that section of the country was a land of muskegs and jack pines. Perhaps the first consideration after all is not so much what is the character of that section of the country. The first consideration is whether or not, whatever may be the character of the country, it is possible to find there a location for a line of railway with such gradients and curvatures as will permit the commercial transportation of freight, of cereals, and the information we have in hand, which is abundant, is to the effect that such a line can be found, and will be found through that section of country. The information we have at this moment is to the effect that for three-fourths of the distance between Quebec and Winnipeg the line will run over a level plateau, over which the construction of a railway will be almost as feasible as over the prairies. But, even as to the general character of the country, we have to-day abundant information that it is possessed of a character in regard to soil and climate which will be a painful disappointment to those gentlemen who have taken a morbid pleasure in maligning it. Once upon a time I made the statement on the floor of this House that we had in regard to the character of this tract of country mountains of information. That statement was received with a great deal of sneering incredulity.

Well, Sir, we cannot expect that these mountains, any more than any other mountains, will come to those wilful and blind victims of self-imposed prejudice. But, if these gentlemen would only take the trouble to go to the mountain themselves, the scales would fall from their eyes and they would find that there is in that section of our country, a good and fair land, quite able to support a large population. These words are not mine. I borrow them from the first explorer of that country, because it is not only yesterday that that country has been explored. More than 200 years ago, when Canada was still under the French regime, the French Government sent an exploratory party to the region between the mountains and Hudson's Bay. That expedition was composed of M. de St. Simon, an officer of the French government, a second man whose name is not known, and Father Albanel, a Jesuit missionary. The party left Tadousac in the month of August, 1671. They ascended the Saguenay river, explored Lake St. John, and traversed the rivers flowing into the Hudson's Bay. They wintered in that section and explored it thoroughly not returning to Tadousac until the month of August of the following year. The report of that exploration is available ; it is to be found in Les Relations des Jesuites, a work which we have in the library. Speaking of the character of the country, Father Albanel used this very expressive language—I quote from the American edition of the Relations des Jesuites which was published a few years ago by Mr. Thwaites (page 181).

> On the 23rd and 24th of June we found a less mountainous region. Its atmosphere is much milder, and its fields are beautiful ; and the soil would bear abundantly and be capable of supporting a large population if it were cultivated.

At page 205 he continues :—

> They are in error.

Perhaps he anticipated with prophetic vision the speeches which we heard last session on the floor of this House—

> They are in error who have held that this region whether by reason of the intense cold and ice and snow, or the lack of wood suitable for building or heating, is uninhabitable. They have not seen these vast and dense forests ; these beautiful plains and these wide prairies, bordering the rivers in various places and covered with every kind of grass suited to the maintenance of cattle. I can assert that on the 15th of June, there were wild roses here, as beautiful and fragrant as those at Quebec. The season seems to be further advanced, the air extremely mild and agreeable. There was no night during my visit ; the twilight had not yet faded from the west when the dawn of day appeared in the east.

This is the character of the country that the new railway will cross. Two hundred years have elasped since these lines were written, but this country is yet unsettled. And what is the reason ? The reason is perhaps, not so much the want of communication, as the impression that has prevailed, and is still prevailing in some quarters, that a country so far north is not fit for the habitation of man. But we have learned in recent years that the question of longitude and latitude has little to do with climatic conditions, and even far to the north we have not only found the precious metals, but we have found that it is possible for vegetables to grow and mature. Why, Sir, it is not more than forty years ago, when some of the highest and ablest men we have in the land—I will not cite their names because they are well-known—predicted, that the fertile plains of Manitoba and the North-west Territories—which are fast becoming the granary not only of the continent but of the whole world—were unfit for agriculture. It was not that the land was not fertile, but it was because they believed that the frost would not permit of grain maturing in a country so far north. We know how these prophecies have been falsified. We know that within the last twenty years or so, settlers have crossed the Laurentian Mountains, and finding good land to the north of the Lake St. John region, they have started a new Quebec there, which proves the truth of the statement made by Father Albanel two hundred years ago.

Having come to the conclusion therefore, that it was in the interest of the country, necessary that a new railway should be built, through that region, we believed it would be sound policy and good business to interest in that enterprise, the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. I need not go over the full details of the contract which we made, and which was fully debated last session on the floor of this parliament. Suffice it to say, that one of the leading features, and perhaps the leading feature of that contract, was that the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada would not only be a party to this enterprise, but that they would have a controlling interest in it, and would practically take the enterprise on their own shoulders. When the moment came for us to discuss with the Grand Trunk Railway Company the terms of the contract which had been submitted to parliament and approved, the Grand Trunk Railway Company made the objection that the conditions imposed upon them were too onerous; that they could not undertake to float, and to organize, and to finance this enterprise unless the government would relax a little some of the more binding features which had been inserted in that contract. They made several requests which are now before parliament, and after a lengthy discussion with their representatives, we agreed upon certain modifications to which we now ask the assent of parliament. The proposition which they made to us, and the concessions which were made by us are now before the House. They are not numerous, and I venture to say that our hon. friends opposite, when they saw the narrow extent of the concessions which we had agreed to, were surprised at the moderation of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the comparatively unimportant modifications which we were called upon to make. Not only were they surprised at the moderation of the concessions which we made, but I believe they were vexed, because it deprived them of a good deal of the thunder which they were prepared to fulminate here. At all events, the proposition is before parliament, and the time has now come to discuss it. I would suspect from the smiles which I see on the faces of my hon. friends opposite, that to-day they are not quite satisfied. I suspect that they will have some fault finding even yet, but I have been so accustomed to that from these hon. gentlemen, that anything which they may say will not surprise me now. I am not after all surprised, nor do I find much fault, if on this, as on every other occasion, it has not been found possible to satisfy the gentlemen on the opposition benches.

Let us see, however, the nature and the extent of the modifications we have made. The first of these modifications relates to the time within which the line is to be built, and the proposition to which we to-day ask the assent of parliament is in these terms:

Sec. 1. Notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, the time for completion of the western division of the railway shall be and the same is hereby extended to the first day of December, 1911, and the tenth paragraph of the said contract is amended accordingly, and by inserting the word 'strikes' after the word 'floods' in the seventh line thereof.

By the terms of section 10 of the contract submitted to parliament last session, it is provided that the western section of the line, the portion from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean, should be built within the period of five years commencing December 10, 1903. The company thought that this limit of time was perhaps a little too short and the only modification which they asked was that in case of failure on their part to comply with this condition of the contract, the deposit of $5,000,000 should not be forfeited. Their application was in these terms:

Time for the completion of the construction of the western division, fixed as December 1, 1908, is considered short. Failure to complete within the time should at least not create a forfeiture of the deposit.

We did not altogether agree to this, but we provided that the time should be extended by three years so that the company will have until December 1, 1911, in which to complete their line.

These are all of the concessions which have been made except that to the legitimate causes for delay, such as floods, disturbances, &c., strikes are added. I am sure that our hon. friends on the other side of the House will have no objection to agree to this modification of the contract.

The next clause is in relation to the deposit. The demand made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company is in these words:

Upon the issue of the guaranteed stock now forming the deposit already made being approved by the shareholders of the Grand Trunk, legislation to be passed confirming its substitution and acceptance in lieu of that called for by the agreement.

2. The company to be entitled to a release of the deposit at least to the extent that it forms security for the construction of the western division upon the expenditure in such construction of $5,000,000 realized from the proceeds of bonds to be guaranteed by the Grand Trunk.

The reason for this demand will be explained in a moment. I may say at once that we did not comply with this request. What was agreed to is to be found in section 2 of the supplementary contract, and is in these words :

Notwithstanding anything contained in the thirteenth and twenty-ninth paragraphs of the said contract, the company shall, when it shall have completed the construction of the said western division in accordance with the terms of the said contract as hereby amended, and shall have supplied rolling stock to the amount of fifteen million dollars ($15,000,000), if the eastern division shall not then have been constructed and completed by the government, be entitled to the return of the deposit made under the twelfth paragraph of the said contract, or any part thereof which may then remain unforfeited in the hands of the government under the terms of the said contract ; and the company shall also be entitled to have the guarantee of the government endorsed upon the said bonds issued in respect of the western division, pursuant to paragraph twenty-nine of the said contract ; and if it is shown to the satisfaction of the government that the western division will be completed and rolling stock to the said amount of fifteen million dollars $15,000,000) supplied before the construction and completion of the eastern division and that the application of the said deposit will enable the company to so complete the western division and supply rolling stock to the said amount and that the same will be so supplied, the said deposit shall be released by the government in such instalments as may from time to time be agreed upon.

Provided, however, that, of the said rolling stock to the amount of fifteen million dollars ($15,000,000), rolling stock to the amount of five million dollars ($5,000,000), to the satisfaction of the government, shall then have been marked in the manner provided by the twenty-second paragraph of the said contract, ready to be assigned to the eastern division under the said paragraph upon its completion and to serve all the purposes in respect of the whole of the said contract intended to be served by the five million dollars ($5,000,000) worth of rolling stock in the said twenty-second paragraph mentioned.

I may explain that by section 20 of the original contract, it was provided that the company would make a deposit of $5,000,000 either in cash or government securities, and that deposit of $5,000,000 was to be a guarantee for the construction of the western division of the road within the time mentioned in the contract. By one of the other provisions of the contract, paragraph 22, it was provided that the company would be bound as part of its contract to equip the road with rolling stock to the extent of $20,000,000. This applied not only to the western section of the road, but to the whole road from Moncton to the Pacific ocean, but it was further stipulated in addition that at least $5,000,000 worth of rolling stock would be marked and set aside for the special use of the eastern section of the road. The company represented to us that the terms in relation to this deposit were too exacting, that it might happen that when the company had completed the western division and would be prepared to equip it with rolling stock and to equip the whole road with rolling stock, the government section would not be completed, and in a condition to receive the rolling stock and that then the deposit might be kept by the government for an indefinite time. The company not unreasonably thought there should be a limit to the time for which the government could retain this deposit. We thought this provision reasonable enough, therefore we have inserted in the amended contract the stipulation which I have just read, if when the company shall have completed the western section, the eastern section shall not have been completed by the government, and shall not be in a position to receive the rolling stock, then the company shall be entitled to the release of its deposit, provided that of the twenty millions of rolling stock, five millions is to be set aside for the eastern section as security that it will be equipped. We hope, and it is our intention that the construction of the eastern section will proceed pari passu with that of the western section. The government, however, would not take any chances on that, and stipulated that if at the moment it had completed its part of the road, the government had not completed the eastern section, then the company should be entitled to a release of the deposit.

This seems to be a very reasonable arrangement, and I do not think that our hon. friends opposite will have much to criticise in it.

We now pass to the third section of the new agreement which is in these terms :

Pending the completion of the eastern division.

The paper as printed says :

Upon the completion of the eastern division.

But that is evidently a misprint and the word 'pending' must be inserted to make the meaning clear.

Pending the completion of the eastern division by the government, the company shall be entitled to lease from the commissioners, to be appointed under the said Act, and to operate such portions of the said eastern division as may from time to time be completed, but upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the company and the said commissioners, which terms are not to be more onerous than those of the lease of the whole division by the said contract provided for, save in so far as may be necessary to give full effect to the paramount right of the said commissioners next hereinafter mentioned, and subject always to the paramount right of the said commissioners to use and operate the same without any payment of tolls or other compensation for such purposes as they may deem necessary or expedient in the execution of their commission.

I may here refer the House to section 20 of the original contract. It is provided in section 20 of the original contract that:

When completed the said eastern division shall be leased to, and operated by, the company for the period of fifty years, at a rental, payable as follows:—For the first seven years of the said term the company shall operate the same, subject only to payment of 'working expenditure' and defined in paragraph fourteen of this agreement; for the next succeeding forty-three years the company shall pay annually to the government, by way of rental, a sum equal to three per centum per annum upon the cost of construction of the said division, ascertained in the manner defined in paragraphs fifteen and sixteen of this agreement, provided that, if, in any one or more of the first three years of the said period of forty-three years, the net earnings of the said division, over and above 'working expenditure,' shall not amount to three per centum of the cost of construction, the difference between the net earnings and the rental shall not be payable by the company, but shall be capitalized and form part of the cost of construction, upon the whole amount of which rental is required to be paid at the rate aforesaid, after the first ten years of the said lease, and during the remainder of the said term.

Regarding this, the company made the following request:

Upon the completion of the construction of the eastern division, the company should have the option of operating under lease the portions constructed upon undertaking to pay working expenses and to hand to the government a portion (to be fixed) of the net earnings.

Rental payable under the lease to be made by the company upon the completion of the eastern division to be made a charge only upon net earnings for the whole term, or at least for a longer period than the three years provided in the agreement (section 20).

In other words, the company proposed simply to pay the net profits and nothing else, but the government would not agree to that. The only amendment made to the contract in this respect is this, that pending the construction of the eastern division, as soon as a section is completed, it can be leased to the company on terms to be agreed upon, but not to be more onerous to the company than those stipulated in the contract. This is the whole departure from the contract under this head, and to this I do not think our friends opposite will have any serious objection.

The next section is of more importance. It relates to the assistance to be given by the government for the construction of the western division. This provision of the new contract is embraced in sections 4 and 5:

4. The 28th paragraph of the said contract is amended by striking thereout all the words following the word 'not' in the eighth line thereof and inserting instead thereof the words 'in respect of the prairie section exceed $13,000 per mile of the mileage thereof, although 75 per cent of the said cost of construction may have exceeded the said sum of $13,000 per mile.

5. Notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, the government may and shall, preserving always the proportions in the said contract, provided as between the prairie and mountain sections of the western division, implement for the purposes and subject otherwise to the provisions of the said contract, its guarantee of the bonds of the said company to be issued for the cost of construction of the said western division, in such manner as may be agreed upon, so as to make the proceeds of the said bonds so as to be guaranteed a sum equal to 75 per centum of the cost of construction of the western division ascertained as provided in the said contract but not exceeding in respect of the prairie section $13,000 per mile.

I have here to call the attention of the House to section 28 of the original contract. That section provided that the government would guarantee the bonds of the company to the extent of 75 per cent on the cost of construction of the western division, but the liability of the government was not to exceed $13,000 per mile in the prairie section or $30,000 per mile in the mountain section. The company made an alternative request which will be found in the correspondence brought down. They requested first that the government should guarantee an issue of bonds sufficient to realize 75 per cent of the whole cost of construction, without any restriction as to liability. Or they made an alternative offer that the government would advance the money.

They proposed that the government should—

Raise the aid proposed to be given by an issue of government securities bearing interest at three per cent and now quoted at or about par, and accept as security for the advances to aid in construction, bonds of the company. * * * Such bonds to form a portion of one issue, 75 per cent of which the government shall be entitled to receive and hold, and the balance to be when guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, used for the purpose of raising the additional 25 per cent required.

The government would not accept either of these propositions, but the proposition which was finally adopted, is embodied in the section I have just read, and is to this effect. First of all the restriction as to the liability of the government guarantee in the mountain section is removed. In the original contract the government guarantee was limited to $30,000 per mile in the mountain section, but now we undertake to guarantee 75 per cent of the cost of construction, whatever it may be, without any restriction. Then we undertake also to implement the proceeds of the sales of the bonds, so as to make the amount actually going into the construction, 75 per cent of the total cost of construction. This is to be done on conditions to be further agreed upon between the government and the company. The reason of this change is obvious, and requires very little explanation. It is to be found in the altered condition of the money market. It is a matter of notoriety that the money market has become very different from what it was six months ago. Then it was easy and affluent. Now it has become stringent and contracted. The credit of Canada has not suffered, but is to-day just as high as ever, and Canadians may be proud of the fact that Canadian government securities are quoted as high as English consols. But even with the endorsation of the bonds by the Canadian government to-day, it is a matter of notoriety that these bonds could not be sold in the market at the price they could have realized six months ago. It is notorious that even with the endorsation of the Canadian government, whose credit is as high as that of any government in the world to-day, these bonds could not be sold except at a heavy discount, and the government therefore has undertaken to implement the difference which may exist between the price realized by the bonds and their face value. How this is to be done we are not prepared to say at the moment. It is to be a matter of agreement between the company and the government, for this reason, that the present condition of things is exceptional and not likely to endure. If the market is to continue as it is, and the bonds have to be sold at a heavy discount, the government will have to advance a little more in order to make up the difference between the face value and the price realized; but if the market should revert to the condition in which it was six months ago, the amount to be further advanced by the government would be infinitesimal. Moreover, the bonds will not be issued in a day. Their issue may take several years, and arrangements will have to be made by mutual understanding between the company and the government, and the government will have to see that these bonds are issued with the approval and sanction of the Governor General in Council. This will be made still more clear by the Bill to be introduced, than it is by the explanation I have given and the contract brought down. This is the most material departure that has been made from the terms of the original contract, and it is of a character, I think, amply to be justified by the new conditions that have arisen. Even though it may involve a little higher outlay on the part of the government, I think it is very reasonable and ought to commend itself to the judgment of the House, and the judgment of the people of Canada at large.

The next question to which I have to call the attention of the House is as to the payment of the interest on the bonds. This is provided for in sections 6 and 7. These paragraphs read as follows:

6. Notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, the government shall not exercise any rights in respect of possession, foreclosure or sale, by reason of non-payment of interest by the company under the thirty-first, thirty-second or thirty-third paragraphs of the said contract, or under all or any of them, unless and until there shall be such default to the extent in the whole of a sum equal to five years of such interest, as the company is not relieved from payment of or permitted to defer or capitalize by the provisions of the said paragraph.

7. In case of such default being made by the company in respect of the interest of the said bonds so guaranteed by the government as would, under the provisions of the said contract as amended hereby, entitle the government to take possession of the said western division or to foreclose or sell the same, the remedy of the government shall, notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, be the taking possession thereof by and through an agent or manager to be appointed as hereinafter provided, whose powers and duties shall be to manage and operate the said western division, to receive all the tolls and revenues thereof, to pay thereout working expenditure as defined by 'the Railway Act, 1903,' including the expenses of such management or agency, and to distribute the surplus tolls and revenue, after payment of such working expenditure, pari passu between the government or other holders of the bonds secured as provided by paragraph 35 (a) of the said contract and guaranteed by the government and the holders of the bonds secured as provided by paragraph 35 (b) of the said contract and guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in the proportion of seventy-five per centum of such surplus tolls or revenues to the holders of the former issue of the bonds and twenty-five per centum to the holders of the latter issue, and the mortgage to be prepared under the said paragraph 35 (a) shall contain appropriate provisions in that behalf. The said manager or agent is to be appointed by the government, with the concurrence of the company, or, if they are unable to agree, by a majority of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Section 31 of the original contract provides that, on the prairie section, the company shall pay the interest on the bonds from the date of their issue, and, in default of payment the coupons shall be taken by the government which shall thereby be subrogated to all the rights of the creditor and be entitled to exercise all the prerogatives of the bondholders The next paragraph provides that, in the mountain section, for seven years the company shall not be required to pay interest, but the interest shall be paid by the government. For the next three years, the company shall pay the net profits of the road, and, if there is a deficiency between the net profits and the amount necessary to pay three per cent, it shall be capitalized and added to the debt of the road. Then, after that—that is, after ten years—the company shall pay the interest, and, in default of payment, the coupons shall be taken by the government, which shall be subrogated to all the rights and powers of creditors. The company represented that this section was altogether too onerous and made the following request :

Interest should only be made a charge upon net earnings of the company, with a proviso that to the extent that such interest is not paid in any year it shall be charged up against the company and carried over, bearing interest, and be payable out of the first surplus of earnings in any year thereafter over and above the amount required to pay the fixed charges accruing due in that year. Failing the company being able to pay the interest as herein contemplated, the whole amount unpaid to be added to the principal of the mortgage and be payable when the same becomes due.

In other words, the company proposed simply that they should not pay the interest stipulated in the agreement which I have read, but that the extent of their obligation should be to pay the net profits of the road and nothing more. The government would not agree to that, but we made certain conditions which were accepted finally by the company, and which are embodied in the agreement which I have read. The first concession was that the government would allow five years of grace in the payment of interest, but, if the company defaulted for full five years, the government would be empowered to exercise, not the rights stipulated in the agreement—that is, to take possession of the road or exercise the right of foreclosure—but that the road should be put in the hands of a manager who would manage it for the benefit of all parties interested, and would distribute the earnings between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the proportion of 75 per cent to the government and 25 per cent to the company. I would like the House to bear in mind that, according to the tenor of the agreement, the road is to be built by the joint guarantee of the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, 75 per cent of the guarantee being furnished by the government and 25 per cent by the company. Now, if we had not agreed to this modification what would be the consequence ? Here is a case, in which the company could say to us—and say very properly I think—that the conditions we had imposed upon them were too exacting and made it impossible, or, if not impossible, very difficult, for them to finance the enterprise. Suppose we had kept to ourselves the right, after the road was built, to take possession of it the moment there was default in the payment of interest, naturally, the second issue of bonds, which has to be guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, would be blemished to an extent far more serious than under the new contract. The party who was asked to advance the money upon the second issue of the bonds would have before him the prospect that, if there was a bad year, through failure of crops or other reason, and it were impossible for the company to pay the interest upon the bonds, the government might step in and take possession of the road. In that case, the bonds would not realize the same price as they will now that we have a different arrangement for the protection of all the creditors. The new arrangement offers an inducement to investors to put money into the enterprise because they know that if there is a failure of crops and the interest cannot be paid, there will be no taking over the road. They know that there must be five years' failure to pay the interest before the government can exercise its rights under the bonds and also that the right of the government will not be to take forcible possession but simply to have the road put in the hands of a receiver who will manage it for the benefit of those who have put money into it, that is to say, the government of Canada and the creditors of the company. Under such circumstances, the bonds must sell for more than they would otherwise, and so the road will be burdened to a less degree than it would be if we had adhered to the original agreement. These reasons seem good, and we agreed to them ; and I think that what we have done will commend itself to the good sense, and also to the patriotic sense of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Now, we come to the last important departure that has been made in the contract. It is with regard to the common stock. Section 27 of the original agreement was in these words :

The company undertakes that the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada shall acquire and take the said common stock to the amount of twenty-five million dollars, except shares held by directors, not exceeding one thousand shares, and shall hold the same during the term of the said lease, and so long as any of the bonds guaranteed by the government under the terms of this agreement shall remain outstanding unpaid.

The new departure that has been made to this arrangement is as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in the 27th paragraph of the said contract contained, the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall not, after the acquisition of the twenty-five million dollars of common stock therein mentioned (less shares held by directors, not exceeding one thousand), be prevented from making any such disposition of such common stock as the said Grand Trunk Railway may deem expedient, provided, however, that the said Grand Trunk Railway Company shall, during the delay mentioned in the said paragraph, continue to hold a majority of the said stock by such title as shall enable the said Grand Trunk Railway Company to control the policy of the company.

I stated at the opening of my remarks that when we determined to undertake this enterprise we thought it would be good policy and sound business to bring into it the Grand Trunk Railway Company ; we thought it would be to the advantage of the country at large, because we would associate with it that powerful organization east and west, and make it contribute to the advantage of the new population of the west and the old population of the maritime provinces. It was part of our agreement that the Grand Trunk Railway Company should go into the enterprise and control it, and we stipulated that for that purpose they should acquire and hold for all time, not only the majority but the whole of the common stock, $20,000,000 thereof. Here again the Grand Trunk Railway Company represented to us that this agreement was altogether too severe and too onerous, that there was no necessity for it. They would not agree to it, and they ask to be released from the obligation imposed upon them of controlling the policy of the company for all time. But, Sir, in order to do so it was not necessary to go so far as we did in the first agreement, it was not necessary to bind them to hold twenty millions of stock for all time, it was sufficient to bind them to hold such an amount of that stock as would be necessary to keep control of the company ; and if this could be done with twelve millions of the stock, or thirteen millions or fourteen millions, or any other quantity of common stock, there was no necessity why such stock should not be treated as the stock of any other company, and made elastic so that the company could deal with it as any other company would do. Under such circumstances we thought the demand was a reasonable one and therefore we agreed to it, we agreed that the company might dispose of all the stock, provided, however, they always kept an amount sufficient to enable them to control the policy of the company, and to control the whole enterprise. This also seems to constitute a very reasonable departure from the terms of the contract as laid down last year.

Sir, it seldom happens that in a matter of this kind, where a contract is made in an enterprise of this magnitude, it is not found afterwards to be susceptible of amendment and improvement. That is what has taken place with regard to this contract. I do not speak of the other two sections because they are of minor importance, but I am sure they will not be criticised. I have laid before the House an explanation of all the changes which we have thought proper to make in the contract of last year. If they are examined, as I hope they will be examined, with care and attention, without any bias, I venture to hope they will commend themselves to the unbiased judgment of the House, even to the judgment of our hon. friends on the other side. The changes are moderate, and they do not constitute any violent departure from the agreement made last year and which parliament sanctioned. I have only to say in conclusion that I lay them with all confidence before the House and ask for their favourable consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the speech of the Prime Minister last year when he introduced this measure, he asked the House to hail it with earnestness and joy. I have observed a little less of earnestness and joy in the speech of my right hon. friend to-day. Let me say that I find very little satisfactory explanation of these amendments in the remarks which he has just addressed to the House. He went over the same ground that he went over last year. He has gone back 240 years for the purpose of showing us that the northern country through which the proposed line is to pass was then thoroughly explored, and of demonstrating to us at the same time that it was much better than the region situated to the south of it. It would naturally occur to every one of us that if that country was thoroughly explored 240 years ago it is a remarkable thing that it has not been developed since. What explanation has the right hon. gentleman for that failure on the part of the people of Canada to grasp the situation which he has described to us? He tells us that there were 'mountains of information' placed on the table of the House last year, or placed before the members. There was what my right hon. friend called a mountain of information, but after further developments took place it was found that the mountain had only brought forth a mouse ; there was very little information in it, and certainly no information which would justifiy us in undertaking to build a railway in that country without further examination and without further survey.

Now there is not much in what the right hon. gentleman has said, but such as it is I shall have to refer to it. He says that the government had thought best to interest the Grand Trunk Railway in this enterprise. We had all supposed, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company themselves had supposed, that they were the first to approach the government with a proposal to build from North Bay into the Northwest of Canada ; and the government of this country finding itself somewhat constrained by political exigencies, insisted in the first place that the line should be built from Quebec to Winnipeg through a country which has not yet been explored, but which may have great possibilities ; but afterwards, constrained by certain further political exigencies, the government insisted upon adding to that the line from Quebec to the city of Moncton. That is a more accurate statement of the circumstances than the one which my right hon. friend has given.

Now let me deal in the first place with one reason which my right hon. friend has put forward for making one at least of these further concessions. He says that the reason of the additional bond guarantee upon the mountain section, and upon the prairie section also, is that the money market is more stringent than it was six months ago. Let me point out that this contract was sanctioned by parliament on the 24th day of October last, and that this supplementary agreement was entered into by the government on the 18th day of February, I think; and during that time I am assured by those who can speak with more authority on the subject than myself, that there was no such change in the money market as could justify the enormous concessions which have been made by this government. What does my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) say to that? What did he say to that during this very session? He was asked by my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler):

Mr. OSLER. I think the proposition of the hon. minister is the only possible way to be adopted just now, in the present state of the money market, but it seems to me rather risky to have left the renewal until within two or three months of the maturity of the loan. That large loan should have been provided for some time ago. It would be very risky for any ordinary corporation to leave such a large amount at the risk of the money market without arranging for its renewal.

In reply to that the Minister of Finance said:

I may say to my hon. friend that we have not been neglecting this matter, but that it has been engaging very carefully the attention of the department for quite a number of months past. I sent Mr. Courtney to London long before the loan matured in order to make preparatory arrangements, but my hon. friend is aware that, bad as the money market is now, it was worse then. We have been keeping in close touch with the market and seeking the most available moment to have the transaction placed upon it.

Does not my right hon. friend know that Mr. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to whose remarks I will give some further attention in the course of my address, stated that the debenture stock which was deposited by the Grand Trunk Railway Company with the government in December last, was deposited purely for the purpose of convenience and not on account of the slightest difficulty that the Grand Trunk Railway Company had in raising this money? Yet my right hon. friend, in the face of this declaration of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and in the face of the declaration of the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, puts forward to-day the alleged greater stringency of the money market as a reason why these further concessions should be made.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to describe the financial position of this contract in its amended form and in doing so let me say to my right hon. friend that I am going to invoke the opinion of a man who has been certified by the government as perfectly competent to speak, as a man of the highest possible integrity and who, during this session, has been described by my right hon. friend as a man better qualified than any other in Canada to form an opinion in regard to matters of this kind. My right hon. friend described Mr. Blair as follows:

There is not in Canada a better qualified and more competent man to discharge the duties of the office to which we have called him. * * * I recognize him as a man of great ability, as a man of great talent, and I have no hesitation in saying that you cannot find in Canada any one who is better endowed than Mr. Blair to be chairman of the Railway Commission.

Therefore, you must pay some regard to Mr. Blair's opinion of this enterprise, to Mr. Blair's opinion as to the cost of this enterprise, and to his estimate of the obligations which this country is entering into when it undertakes a project of this kind. Mr. Blair said:

You have a total of $139,000,000 representing the direct and indirect liabilities which the government assumes in connection with the enterprise.

I made an estimate last session and in doing so I adopted to a very considerable extent certain figures which had been placed before the House by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. I did that for the purpose of the argument and also in order to remove as between my hon. friend the Minister of Finance and myself any question of controversy as to what the figures should be. I desire now to give an estimate to the House of the position of the country under this amended contract, and in doing so let me say that I depart to some extent, and particularly in regard to the question of interest during construction, from the estimate which my hon. friend made last year, and which I then adopted, because, from looking over his figures again, I see that he has evidently made too low an estimate of the period of time required for the construction of this road. Let us see where we are under this amended contract. My estimate is as follows:

Construction of railway from Moncton to Winnipeg, 1,875 miles, at moderate estimate of $40,000 per mile	$ 75,000,000
	$84,000,000

The above estimate assumes that the money can be borrowed on 3 per cent securities at par—but if securities are placed at 90 (and the Finance Minister has admitted that they will not bring par) the result would be:

To provide $75,000,000 at 90 per cent as cost of 1,875 miles	$ 83,333,334
Four years simple interest during construction, at 3 per cent, $2,500,000 per year for 4 years	10,000,000
	$93,333,334

Assuming the cost of the railway to completion to be..	$ 84,000,000
We must add seven years' interest (not compounded) after completion, during which the Grand Trunk Pacific is to pay no rent..	17,640,000
	$101,640,000
Interest on this sum for three years additional, during which no rent is collectable, unless earnings are sufficient (not compounded).... ..	9,147,600
	$110,787,600
But, as above stated, if the securities are placed at 90, instead of at par, the cost of the railway will be....	$ 93,333,334
Seven years' interest after completion (not compounded)..	19,600,000
	$112,933,334
Interest on this sum for three years additional, during which no rent is collectable (not compounded).... ..	10,164,000
	$123,097,334

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

(Hansard 14526, sec. 6.)

Bonds to be guaranteed by the government, to be issued monthly, as work proceeds, and bridge to be completed 1st December, 1906.. ..	$ 6,678,200
Eighteen months' interest at 3 per cent for half of the period between December 1903 and December 1906, during which the work will be in progress..	300,519
	$ 6,978,719

Thus we have the cost of the eastern division, including the Quebec Bridge, as follows:

If securities bearing three per cent interest are sold at par, then our liabilities in respect of the railway from Moncton to Winnipeg will be..	$110,787,600
Our liabilities in respect of the Quebec bridge will be..	6,978,719
	$117,766,319
If our securities bearing three per cent interest are sold at not more than 90, after payment of commission and charges, then our liabilities on railway from Moncton to Winnipeg will be....	$123,097,334
Quebec bridge..	6,978,719
	$130,076,053

This does not include any interest on the twenty half-yearly payments of interest which the government will be obliged to make during the period of ten years in which the Grand Trunk Pacific will pay no rental.

And it does not include $18,850,000 estimated by Mr. Blair as our loss during forty years in which we shall receive from the Grand Trunk Pacific three per cent, while we shall probably be paying at least three and one-half per cent on the money borrowed for the purpose of constructing the road.

But the engagements of the country do not stop there. To the sum total for the eastern division and the bridge, whether we take the figures at $117,000,000 or $130,000,000, must be added the obligations to which the country is committed for the prairie and mountain sections.

For the 1,000 miles of prairie section, the country will guarantee three per cent to the extent of $13,000 per mile. For 1,000 miles, this would amount to $13,000,000.

For the 500 miles of mountain section, we guarantee three per cent bonds sufficient to provide seventy-five per cent of the whole cost, including interest during construction, and any discount on the sale of the bonds.

The president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company puts the actual cost of the whole at $50,000 per mile.

500 miles at $50,000 per mile.. .. .	$ 25,000,000
Interest at 3 per cent for four years, being on the whole amount for one half the period of construction.. ..	3,000,000
	$28,000,000
Seventy-five per cent of the above to be guaranteed by the government for the construction of mountain section..	$ 21,000,000
	$ 25,410,000
But if bonds sold at 90 per cent, then to provide above $28,000,000 there would be required..	$31,000,000
Seventy-five per cent of above to be guaranteed by the government for the construction of mountain section..	$ 23,250,000
	$ 28,132,500

SUMMARY OF OBLIGATIONS.

	If 3 p.c. bonds are sold at par.	If 3 p.c. bonds are sold at 90 p.c.
Eastern division and Quebec bridge..	$117,750,000 or	$130,000,000
Prairie section..	13,000,000 or	13,000,000
Mountain section	25,000,000 or	28,000,000
	$155,750,000 or	$171,000,000

Thus if three per cent bonds are sold at par, the eastern division and Quebec bridge would cost $117,750,000; the prairie section would cost $13,000,000; the mountain section would cost $25,000,000; total, $155,750,000. If three per cent bonds are sold at 90; the eastern division and Quebec bridge will cost $130,000,000; the prairie section will cost $13,000,000, and the mountain section $28,000,000, making a total of $171,000,000.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a statement of the obligations to which the country has committed itself by the project of last session as amended by the supplementary agreement which my right hon. friend has brought down. Now, if we take Mr. Blair's estimate of $139,000,000, you will find that Mr. Blair in the sum of $139,000,000, which he gave as his estimate, included for the prairie and the mountain section, the sum of $23,250,000 as the amount which the government would be obliged to guarantee. But, if you look at the estimate of the president of the Grand Trunk, who says that the prairie section will cost $20,000 a mile, and the mountain section $50,000 a mile, you will find that the government will be obliged to guarantee bonds to the amount of not merely $23,250,000, but of $34,000,000, the difference between these two amounts being $10,750,000. If you add this to Mr. Blair's estimate of last year, it will make his estimate in the light of subsequent developments, very little less than $150,000,000.

Further than that, there is another consideration. Every hon. gentleman of the House knows, that last year the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—who I regret is not in his place now on account of illness—stated distinctly over and over again, and he spoke as the mouth-piece of the government, that it was absolutely futile to build this railway as a grain carrier from the west to the east, unless you constructed it with grades not exceeding one half of one per cent. I challenged the government, last session, to state the additional cost within $20,000,000, which that would impose upon the country, and not one gentleman on the other side was able to give any estimate founded upon any data which would be regarded as authoritative for a moment by any railway man.

Now, after looking on the obligations of the country, with regard to this enterprise; what do we find, on the other hand, are obligations, which as stated by the president and directors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to their shareholders, rest upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company? What is it that they are to do on their part if we undertake liabilities aggregating $150,000,000, or thereabouts? According to the statement of the president and directors of the Grand Trunk Railway, to their shareholders at a recent meeting, the Grand Trunk Company assume a total obligation of guaranteeing three per cent bonds not exceeding the sum of $15,000,000, or, rather about fourteen and a half million dollars.

It has been stated by the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the correspondence with the government, that this is a partnership. Let me not be accused of misquoting his words; let me read them from the published correspondence which has been brought down, and laid upon the table of the House.

It has always seemed to me that the government of Canada and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, being in point of fact partners in the enterprise.

Being in point of fact, partners in the enterprise. While the Grand Trunk Railway Company last year, as its share of the enterprise had to guarantee bonds not exceeding $18,000,000, certainly not exceeding $20,000,000; this year, through the good nature of my right hon. friend—that same good nature no doubt which led him to appoint Mr. Blair to be Chairman of the Railway Commission—this year the obligations of the Grand Trunk Railway Company are reduced to fourteen and a half million dollars or thereabouts. On the one hand, we have obligations on the country to the extent of about $150,000,000, and on the other hand we have the other partner in the enterprise agreeing to enter into the partnership to the extent of less than $15,000,000.

What were the grounds upon which this vast outlay was asked from parliament last year? The grounds were: first to protect the country from the abrogation of the bonding privilege; secondly, to develop new territory in the north and the west; and third, to provide an all-Canadian route. These, stated in a few words, were the objects of this enterprise which my right hon. friend presented to the House and to the country in the very eloquent speech which he made last year. We have not heard him to-day speak of the bonding privilege. The crisis which a year ago had developed so acutely seems to be in a quiescent condition to-day; there does not seem to be that tremendous danger which called upon us last year to put aside those who would say: to-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow; and those who would say: wait, wait, wait. Instead of that, my right hon. friend to-day is himself saying: wait, wait, wait; to the extent of three years in the construction of this western railway; and so far as the eastern division is concerned, he does not seem to be impelled by the same ardour and anxiety, and apprehension which actuated him last year.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we did not object to legitimate railway development; we did not object last year to developing the resources of the country by railways. We moved several amendments, however, to this resolution, and we proposed an alternative scheme to which I will refer later. We proposed for example, a resolution which would commit the Grand Trunk to moderate rates. It was moved by my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche) and it was voted down by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. We moved an amendment for insuring transportation through Canadian routes. We insisted that this government should impose upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company the same obligations—because they were much more needed—which it was imposing in this contract upon the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and again the government voted us down, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said that we could not have any amendment to the contract, because everything had been agreed upon. But when the contract is opened up, when everything is not agreed upon, when there is a fresh commencement and a new deal, I do not find that any of these amendments which we suggested last year have been put into this contract. We moved an amendment calculated to prevent undue capitalization; to guard against watered stock, to prevent speculation in the stock. Again we were voted down. We were told that nothing could be changed, and it was pointed out to us that the stock could not be speculated in because the Grand Trunk Railway Company was to hold it for fifty years. But all these matters should have been corrected when this contract was again opened up between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and not in any single respect has any concession been made by the company to the country; but in every respect, almost every respect at least, in which any change has been made—it has been made in the shape of a concession by the country to the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

What was the position of affairs last year? Why should there be any change in this contract? Does not my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) know, does not every member of this House know, does not my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in particular know that he and my right hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) declared that this was one of the most splendid railway propositions that was ever placed before any legislature in any country. Was it not declared by the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by many other gentlemen on the other side of the House that this railway project must be an immensely paying one in the very near future? If these declarations are to be taken at their face value why is it that any necessity whatever has arisen for any change in the terms of this agreement? What did the right hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce say? He said, as reported in 'Hansard,' page 9361:

I believe a really good bargain may be one which is to the advantage of both parties. I think that this is notably an instance of this sort.

This then was notably an instance of a good bargain for the Grand Trunk. Why in view of that solemn declaration of a Minister of the Crown, speaking with authority as we know he did, is there any further concession to the Grand Trunk?

What did the hon. the Minister of the Interior say last session? In the first place he pointed out that the net annual profits of the Canadian Pacific were $15,000,000 and then he proceeded to compare this proposition with the Canadian Pacific proposition very much to the advantage of the former. After declaring that the Canadian Pacific Railway ran through a very barren territory, over about the worst route that could have been selected in the west, he said:

(Hansard, 1903, p. 8677.)

But this new line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will run from Winnipeg to the mountain pass, through a territory, every mile of which is fertile and productive. It is hardly conceivable that such should be the case, yet the information in the possession of the government amply justifies the statement I have made. There is no such fertile stretch of country in the world.

And further he said:

(Hansard, pp. 8678 and 8679.)

The Grand Trunk Pacific, on the other hand, will go from the Rocky Mountains Pass to the coast through as rich a timber and agricultural country as there is in Canada—a country rich in timber, mineral and soil. Then we must not forget that when the Canadian Pacific Railway was projected, there was no movement of settlers from the outside; there were no farmers coming to Canada in 1881 from foreign countries. . . . But what is the position now? We had an immigration into the Northwest of 125,000 people last year. If it keeps on at that rate for the next ten years, think what that will mean to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Think of the difference in that company compared with that of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which went travelling on for years and years before there was any appreciable influx of settlers.

One would think this would be a consideration which would induce the government to say to the Grand Trunk: We have here a magnificent railway proposition for your consideration. We are bearing nearly all the cost of the construction of the railway; go on with it and if you do not see fit to go on with it, we have a proposition here which will induce capitalists from almost any part of the world to embark upon that enterprise. We have faith in it, they will have faith in it. There is no need of further inducements and we will not permit you to have one further concession.

But the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) went further. After pointing out that the Canadian Pacific Railway had startd off with no eastern connections and with no lines through Ontario and Quebec he said:

(Hansard, p. 8679.)

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, on the contrary, will start with a magnificent system of connections, ready to open business the very day the road is finished. What does that mean? It is impossible for us to conceive the difference that will make in the volume of business which the railway company will do. Consider these facts. Consider the prospects of the railway, and ask if there is the slightest reason why any sane, reasonable man, should think this company will fail in its obligation to the government.

Yet not satisfied with the proposition stated with such force and such eloquence by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) all the Grand Trunk Company have to do is to go to the government and the government immediately concedes almost everything they ask.

What is the view of the Grand Trunk directors with regard to this ? Let us hear what Lord Welby, one of them, said at a recent meeting :—

> With the rapid settlement of the country, which will follow the establishment of the line within a very few years, it will be a very profitable line.

And yet it is not enough that the country guarantees three-fourths of the cost of the western section, it is not enough that the country builds at its own expense the eastern division and allows these corporations to have the use of it free of cost for ten years. Further concessions must be given. An opportunity must be afforded the company to deal in $12,000,000 of stock, and to deal in bonds which will be sold below par. This is done at the mere request of the Grand Trunk, and yet my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stands up and says that the concessions are very reasonable and moderate and that the country will be surprised to find that they are so very reasonable and moderate. What did Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson say :

> Passing as it will do through the most fertile and most promising belt of country in the whole of the Northwest Territory, there cannot be the slightest doubt that this portion of the road, built, as I have said, under such favourable and economical conditions, will immediately produce excellent results, and will by itself more than justify the adoption of the scheme in its entirety.

If we are to guarantee three-fourths of the cost of that road in the Northwest, which by itself will more than justify the adoption of the scheme in its entirety, why is it that, when the Grand Trunk asks for further concessions of a very important character from the country, the government, without even consulting parliament in the first instance, should make these amendments and allow them to be announced to the country by the Grand Trunk people themselves ?

Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson further said :

> As regards the prairie section, the government, not unfairly, held that it would be self-sustaining from the day of its completion, and in this view we are willing to concur.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Mr. Chas. M. Hays said :

Here is the Grand Trunk, the parent company, standing with a large traffic ready to deliver it west bound. This traffic is now given to a competitor. It does not have to wait five, ten or fifteen years to build up a traffic ; it starts with a traffic right from the beginning, and that is of a most remunerative character. This enterprise which we are advocating to-day, ladies and gentlemen, combines points and advantages that no other transcontinental line in the United States or Canada can have.

Mr. Alfred W. Smithers said :

We believe that by this means, and by no other means, you will get into the Northwest, and . . . . railways getting there will have a great future in Canada.

What does all this mean ? It means that it was absolutely necessary for the Grand Trunk, in its own interest, to get into the west. I do not say that we should oppress the Grand Trunk with unreasonable conditions when it desired to do so. I said last session as I say to-day that I am prepared to give all reasonable aid to the Grand Trunk to get into that country under such reasonable restrictions as shall prevent public aid given by this country from going to build up ports in the United States, but I do not see any justification or cause, under the conditions presented, for making the concessions which have been made by the government without consulting parliament.

My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember another topic of discussion last year. That was as to whether or not the Grand Trunk Railway Company thoroughly understood the conditions upon which it had entered upon this contract. My hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has more than once in replying to myself referred to me as a scrap book orator.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Hants says, hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER. From West York.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to justify my right hon. friend's term, and to say that I do not think he could have used a more appropriate word, and I shall tell him why. He has made that answer to me after I have quoted his solemn and official declarations of policy, given as pledges to the people of this country. When I have quoted these to him, he has referred to me as a scrap book orator. Well, then, what are we to judge of the right hon. gentleman's views ? Are we to conclude that the right hon gentleman views these solemn declarations and pledges to the people as so many scraps added to the heap ? There are a good many scraps of that kind, which we have occasionally to rescue from the scrap heap. Let me remind him of some of them. Does he remember his pledges with regard to free trade, and economy, and decreased taxation, and purity in elections, and preference in the markets of the mother country ? All these have gone to adorn and swell the scrap heap, and my right hon. friend ought not to take it unkindly if occasionally we rescue some of them from the oblivion to which they have been consigned by the other side of the House.

Let us for a moment consider some of these official and carefuly studied pledges of ministers of the Crown, made during the past session, and let us see whether we had or had not at that time any distinct statement by ministers of the Crown that the Grand Trunk Railway Company knew what they were doing when they entered into this enterprise, that every line and syllable of the agreement had been considered by them. What did my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) say ? He said :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 8569.)
Well, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the solidity, strength and power of the Grand Trunk, we have it all in the undertaking we are now submitting to parliament.

Again we have him saying :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 8570.)
We have not been content that they shall stand behind it. We have required and they have readily consented that they shall be in it and of it and form the whole thing.

Again he spoke with equal emphasis :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 8579.)
I believe that the obligation that they have given to us is given in good faith, that they have accepted the national responsibility which this condition involves and that they mean to live up to the contract, and I am satisfied that we can find means, if necessary, to make them live up to it.

But where were those means when the Grand Trunk Railway did not live up to the contract ? What then became of the protection and the safeguards which, according to my hon. friend, the government possessed ? We find my hon. friend further giving us this assurance :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 11852.)
It was fully understood, I think, between the Grand Trunk and the government that our interpretation of the contract and theirs is the same. However without reviving a previous discussion I may say that this is what the Act requires and that they have assured us that they are prepared to do what the Act requires.

What has become of that assurance ? Is not this a business government ?

They have assured us that they are prepared to do what the country requires.

When was that assurance withdrawn ? Why was it not taken in such form as would have placed the government in a position to rely upon it ? Again we find my hon. friend expressing himself with even more emphasis :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 11853.)
If additional obligations on the part of the old Grand Trunk Company are asked as in the amendment of my hon. friend, all we can say is that they are not in the contract, and we have no right to demand them.

The country, it appears, could not demand anything which was not in the contract, but the Grand Trunk Railway could do so and could obtain what it demanded. Again we have my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior thus describing the agreement :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 8635.)
A clear, distinct and unambiguous contract with a responsible company.

Why, then, is it that this session has been called specially, as we are told by the directors of the Grand Trunk Railway, to consider these amendments which they have exacted from the government, after this great measure had been agreed to and adopted ? My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was not behind his colleagues in his appreciation of this wonderful contract. He said :

(Hansard, 1903, p. 9529.)
Sir, we make a clean cut proposition embodied in a contract signed and sealed with a reputable corporation of great resources which is going ahead with the project as rapidly as possible.

Instead of going ahead rapidly, this company has come to parliament to obtain further concessions before one single stroke of work is done in the construction of the road through the west ? And what did my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) say ?

(Hansard, 1903, p. 10292.)
The government's plan is there in black and white, signed by men of repute, signed by the ablest railway men in the world. These men are not mere promoters.

If they are not promoters, how is it we have this demand made on the government, and acceded to by them, that there shall be at least $12,000,000 of this stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific taken over by the Grand Trunk Railway for no consideration, or a mere nominal consideration, and be disposed of by them upon the markets of the world, just at the price they see fit and when they see fit ? What did my right hon. friend himself say ? And I have reserved his remarks to the last, because they are more enlightening perhaps than any of the other quotations I have made. This is perhaps the most significant scrap of the heap :

I do not deny that the Grand Trunk Railway is at the bottom of this enterprise. . . . It cannot default upon the eastern part, because, if it defaults upon the eastern part, it defaults upon the western part. It cannot default upon one part without defaulting upon the whole, and therefore we hold them tight to their bargain and they cannot deviate from it.

In the light of what my hon. friend has said to-day, let me again point out those words :

Therefore we hold them tight to their bargain and they cannot deviate from it.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if then my right hon. friend could hold them so tight, why did he not do so ? Why did he permit them to deviate from their bargain ? If they were bound by the terms of their agreement, why does he make these further concessions ? If the bargain was an excellent one for the Grand Trunk Railway, as the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues declared last session, if it was a bargain made with responsible men, and a bargain so made that the other party could not deviate from it, but could be held tight to it, what is the meaning of this spectacle to-day of a parliament called specially, as we are told, to consider this further proposition ? What is the meaning of it all ? Is there anything behind it ? My right hon. friend has not given us any explanation. Is there any minister of the Crown who will explain to the people all these matters which my right hon. friend put to one side, but which he should have dealt with ? The country is entitled to an explanation of this extraordinary volte face. My right hon. friend has thrown no light on the subject.

Let us go back and consider what took place after last session. Shortly after the session closed rumours arose that the Grand Trunk Railway would not make its deposit. Then we were told that a deposit was made, but made after the time it should have been, and not such a deposit as the contract called for ; but it was declared by the Liberal organs from one end of the country to the other that the stock which was deposited in lieu of cash was just as good as the cash itself—even better, because it could be sold for more in the market. We were assured that the deposit of stock was not due to any difficulty or financial stringency, but merely for the purpose of convenience. Not one word was then vouchsafed to the country concerning any proposition for any amendment to the contract. The Liberal organs everywhere all said that, although technically the deposit was not in accordance with the contract, it was practically so, and all that was required was some merely formal legislation for the purpose of overcoming any technical objection. Well, the government then gave out a statement, which was published in its organ, the Toronto 'Globe,' on the 19th of December, 1903. That statement was as follows :

> The Grand Trunk Railway has deposited £1,000,000 of their guaranteed stock as security for the carrying out of the agreement entered into last session between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company subject to ratification of their shareholders at a general meeting. Inasmuch as the contract requires cash or government securities for the deposit, legislation will be required to confirm the acceptance of the securities which have been deposited, though such securities are worth to-day more than par and their value is unquestionable.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the government had a satisfactory deposit, and one which would meet the conditions of the contract, if the securities deposited were worth more than par, if their value was unquestionable, why did not the government insist on going on with the contract ?

Why was it, if these negotiations were then in progress, that the vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company gave this interview on his return from England ? The dates are a little significant—the letter of the president of the Grand Trunk, Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson to the government is dated 15th December ; the government's official statement was given to the press on the 18th December, and Mr. Hays arrived from England, where he had been attending a meeting of the directors of the Grand Trunk, shortly before the 25th December. And what does Mr. Hays say ? Does he say one word about the proposed amendments which are demanded in the letter of the 15th December ? Mark you, he is speaking ten days afterwards ; and no one can believe that the government did not know something about these proposed amendments when they put out this statement on the 18th December. And certainly they knew all about it when Mr. Hays had his interview on the 25th December. And what did Mr. Hays say ? Did he tell the people of this country that the Grand Trunk would not proceed with the enterprise unless they received further concessions ? Not a word of it. Why ? Well, we can only conjecture as to that. We know that my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Lemieux), who was in the confidence of the government, in that same month of December told the people of this country that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was going to give a New Year's gift to this country in the shape of a general election. And it would not be very judicious, perhaps, to convey to the people at that time, in view of the general election, the news that the Grand Trunk Railway Company was demanding further concessions. It would be very much better, you know, to convey that news to the country after an election. For, it would not be a desirable topic for platform discussion before the people. Too many questions would be asked. And so nothing was said about it. In order that I may do no injustice to the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company let me recall what he has said. I quote from the report of his interview contained in a government organ, the Toronto 'Globe,' of 25th December :

> The Grand Trunk Pacific will certainly be built,' said Mr. Hays. 'The Grand Trunk never had any difficulty in raising the money, and will not have any in carrying out the transcontinental project.

Well, if the Grand Trunk Railway Company would have no difficulty in carrying out this transcontinental railway project, why should this country give to the company the extraordinary concessions that are contained in this supplemental agreement? Mr. Hays continues:

The securities deposited with the government are better than the cash equivalent. They were deposited because of convenience, not because of any failure to raise the money. There was a delay of a few days but the time allowed by the government was rather limited. Neither have we violated any moral obligations to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk or broken faith with the government. The Grand Trunk possessed these securities for the purpose of the company, and they were utilized. As to the building of the road the construction will be begun in the spring.

Not one word as to the amendment being asked, or required, or thought of. The security had been put up—it was better than that which the contract called for—and the road was to proceed in the spring:

Our first object will be to get the east connected with the great lakes for summer traffic and then to give Winnipeg connection with the east. The people of the west want more railway facilities and we intend to give it to them as quickly as possible.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not refer further to what I might call a conspiracy of silence—because that is what it amounts to under the conditions I have stated—but will pass for a moment to the letter of the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the government, bearing the date of 15th December, 1903. There is one very significent passage in Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson's letter to which my right hon. friend has not called attention. He said:

I hope that you will understand that the chief amendments which we will propose will in no way affect the principle of the Act or curtail the rights of the government.

There may be two opinions about that. If the principle of the Act is to safeguard the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway Company altogether and the interests of the country in the least possible degree, I would agree with Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson. He goes on:

Their object is to allay any possible apprehensions of our shareholders.

That is the object. But I am inclined to think, that perhaps, some higher object should be sought in considering concessions of such great importance than merely to allay any possible apprehensions of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. But I would like to say one word further, in passing, with regard to that letter and it is to call attention to Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson's remarks with regard to 'rigid conditions.' The Prime Minister, speaking this year, said:

Representations were made to us by the representatives of the board that they could not finance the enterprise if we adhered to the rigid conditions we had imposed upon them.

Well, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company is absolutely at issue with my right hon. friend so far as that is concerned, because he tells us in the interview to which I have referred, that there would be not the slightest difficulty in raising the money. But taking the expression 'rigid conditions,' let us see what they amount to.

The government undertook obligations to the amount of $150,000,000.

The government gave to the corporations the best part of the road for ever.

The government gave the remainder of the road for nothing for ten years, and thereafter during a further period of forty years for less than the interest on the cost.

The government permitted one of the corporations to deliver to the other $25,000,000 of stock for nothing and thus to subject the people to payment of dividends thereon for ever.

The government received no assurance of cheaper rates, or of transportation from our own ports.

The government had kindly permitted the Grand Trunk to carry to Portland all traffic gathered up on the proposed line.

And these conditions are declared by the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to be 'rigid,' and, apparently, my right hon. friend acquiesces.

Let me say also that the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company goes a little out of his way, in the correspondence that has taken place and also in his remarks at the meeting of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk to reflect upon the opposition.

It has always seemed to me that the government of Canada and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, being in point of fact partners in the enterprise—the former actuated by considerations of national policy, the latter by the necessity for securing its share in the growing prosperity of the Northwest—the burden of financial liability should be shared between the two in as equable proportions as possible.

Well, it is really amusing to read that expression of Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson in view of the conditions which were made in the contract last year, and especially in view of the amendments proposed this year. He continues:

But I venture to think, and this view is strongly held by my board, that too large a portion of the burden has been imposed upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) suggests that that certainly must be humorous. Sir Charles goes on:

I think I am correct in believing that this shifting of the balance was caused by the extreme, I must say, in some respects unfair, opposition which the Bill met with in the House.

All I can say is that this remark displays very remarkable ignorance on the part of the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company with regard to what took place in the House. That contract went through this House exactly in the same way in which it entered this House with the exception of two amendments, I think, which were accepted by the government, and the president of the Grand Trunk Company does not complain of either one of those amendments. Now in view of that, how he ventures to say that the shifting of the balance which throws an undue proportion of responsibility and liability on the Grand Trunk Company has been occasioned by unfair opposition in parliament, passes my comprehension. It went through exactly as it came into this House, with the exception of two amendments accepted by the government, with the full approval, I think, of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and of neither of those amendments does he complain in the correspondence, or ask to have them altered in any way. Therefore it seems to me this gentleman has gone a little out of his way, and I think it would probably have been a little more discreet on his part to ascertain the facts correctly before he saw fit, both in the correspondence and in his remarks at the meeting of the Grand Trunk shareholders, to cast aspersions upon men who in this House represent, I suppose, half the people in Canada. They were doing what they thought was their public duty. I think he will not find in the debate which took place one unkind word. I spoke of the president, of the general manager and of the officials of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in courteous and nearly always in complimentary terms. I referred more than once to the work of development which had been done in the province of Ontario and in the province of Quebec by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I said that we would be glad to see that railway get into the Northwest of Canada, but I wanted it to reach the Northwest under such terms and restrictions as would ensure that public aid should not go to build up commercial centres and ports in the United States. If that was unfair opposition, then I am guilty of unfair opposition. I did not in any way reflect upon Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson nor upon Mr. Hays, nor did any hon. gentleman on this side of the House. We gave them due credit. I further said that I did not blame them for making the very best bargain they could make with the government of the country, but I thought it was the duty of the government on the other hand to conserve in every way possible, to safeguard in every way possible, the interests of this country in respect of the matters I have referred to. So I repeat again that I regret very much that Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson should have found it necessary to make these most unfounded and uncalled for aspersions and reflections upon hon. gentlemen in this House, who, however mistaken they may have been in their views with regard to this contract, were certainly acting in good faith, and were doing only what they thought their public duty demanded of them in the interests of this country.

Now coming back for a moment to the question of a partnership between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, there can be no doubt that that is the view which the directors of the company took. Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson in his speech before the shareholders, said :

> The result, therefore, of the agreement was a combination of these two interests for the construction of the proposed road which would thus be carried out, as I have said, by means of a partnership between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, supported as that company would be, by the influence and connections of the Grand Trunk Company.

Lord Welby said :

> We have driven. I may say, the Canadian government into becoming absolute partners with us in the expenditure on that mountain section.

It would be interesting to know what force the directors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company used for the purpose of driving the government to become partners in the mountain section. Mr. Hays said :

> To my mind it is difficult to conceive that there can be any objection to this scheme which promises so much to the Grand Trunk Railway, and which links its fortunes with those of the government of Canada, in a way that the two must work together ; not only for the benefit of the country at large, but for the joint benefit of the country and the Grand Trunk Railway.

Is it necessary, Mr. Speaker, that Canada should go into a partnership with any corporation in this country, however great? Is it desirable? Especially is it desirable that it should go into a partnership with a corporation which, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance explained last year, has its own interests so largely bound up in a port and in a commercial centre in the United States of America? The terms of the partnership that is to be entered into do not seem to be fair as far as the country is concerned. My right hon. friend, when he was discussing this agreement last year, said :

> When the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway have a line provided for them as is provided by this Bill, I cannot conceive why they should put their money into the building of a rival line.

Mr. Blair, certified by the Prime Minister as a most competent man, said :

> Is there a well grounded fear that the Grand Trunk will not allow us two or three years hence to build and make them a present of this line ?

The Prime Minister and Mr. Blair seemed to agree that we are practically building and giving away the line. Surely no one can dissent from the views which they thus express. Our obligations are well on to $150,000,000, those of the Grand Trunk are less than $15,000,000, about one-tenth of ours. While under the Act of last session our cash outlay and guarantees would be enormous, under the amended agreement we are adding to our guarantee liability $7,500 per mile upon 500 miles, making $3,750,000 additional on the mountain section. Interest thereon for seven years at 3 per cent amounts to $787,500, making a total of $4,537,500. We are also to guarantee not merely 75 per cent of cost of construction as ascertained, but such sum as will realize that amount upon the sale of the bonds, even at a discount. This will create an additional liability, and we may fairly assume that the additional liability imposed upon the country by this amended agreement, will reach to six or seven million dollars.

Now the present Minister of Railways told us some time ago in the maritime provinces, that certain modifications had been asked for in the contract which was for so many months discussed in parliament. He said :

> They are on the whole of a very moderate character indeed. In fact the people of Canada will be both glad and surprised, in view of all they have heard, when they learn of the few and reasonable alterations which are being asked for.

I will discuss those more in detail a little later on. But let me say here that the view which the Minister of Railways and Canals takes is not very much in accord with the view which the directors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company take. I observe that Mr. Alfred Smithers, one of the ablest men upon the board of the Grand Trunk directorate, speaks of the new agreement as contrasted with the former agreement, in this way :

> And I wish to say, with all respect to Mr. Allen, that the statement which he has put forward to-day really relates to the agreement, or what he thought was the agreement, when he left the board, but it does not relate to the agreement which we present to you to-day. That which we present to you to-day is a much more modified and a much more favourable agreement. (Applause).

That is the view of a very able director of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Let me say further that the reference to Mr. Allen is a reference to a gentleman who thought the first agreement was not in the interest of the company, who resigned as a director and whose criticisms presented at a recent meeting, were directed, as Mr. Smithers points out, to the first agreement. What does Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson say in regard to that ? He regards these amendments as absolutely and completely distinguishing the new agreement from the old agreement. Let me quote him :

> The matter treated of in the paper read and the remarks made by Mr. Allen, jr., show me conclusively that Mr. Allen has not studied the second agreement, the modified agreement, but that he has founded his criticisms upon the first agreement which was laid before the board when he was a member of it.

Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson also says further :

> In the meantime a great and unfavourable change has occurred in the financial position throughout the markets of the world, and the directors, in the interests of the shareholders, came to the conclusion that modifications in the agreement were imperative in order to safeguard the credit of the company.

I would ask the government why it is that the government see fit to impose permanently on this country extraordinary obligations because of a temporary financial stringency in the money markets of the world. Does my hon. friend the Minister of Finance deal with other obligations of the government in that way? No, he is postponing at the present time the placing of a permanent loan because he expects better conditions in the money market later on ; yet, because of this temporary condition of the money market, we are to have imposed on this country permanent obligations to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. That does not seem to me to be very wise statesmanship and my right hon. friend has not explained why he considers that a wise and prudent course to follow.

Before taking up the amendments in detail, let me say that there was a great deal of discussion last year on both sides of the House respecting the relative merits of the all-rail route from the west, the part rail part water route, and the entire water route from Thunder Bay ports to Montreal and Quebec. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and many other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House presented very forcibly to the House considerations which led them to believe that this railway, if built upon certain grades, would be able to compete with the water route or the part water and part rail route. This view was combated by a great many hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who argued, at least as far as the 500 miles across Lake Superior was concerned, that the water route must always be the cheaper. That view has been very strongly supported by a railway expert who has been writing a series of articles in the 'Morning Chronicle,' a newspaper published in my own constituency. In an article published in that paper on the 21st March, he says :

> If the canals were so deepened as to permit the lake carriers to reach Montreal or Quebec from Georgian Bay, it is perfectly certain that all railways would be put out of business, so far as the grain trade in summer is concerned. . . . . The grain carried by the Grand Trunk and Canada Atlantic during 1903 was 5,000,000 bushels more than in 1902. Their receipts at the following ports were :—

	Bushels.
Depot Harbour	15,000,000
Midland	14,000,000
Collingwood	1,200,000
Meaford	5,000,000

These remarkable results have been achieved by the cheapness of water carriage from Fort William to Georgian Bay. The lake rate of freight has been at times one-twenty-fifth of that by rail.

Whether that statement is correct or not I do not know. The statement is published in a reputable paper in the province of Nova Scotia, the 'Morning Chronicle,' and that paper declares that these articles are written by a railway expert. I give the figures and the statement for what they are worth to the House. That seems to be the view of Mr. Hays to a great extent. I have carefully read his speech delivered at a recent meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders and the whole trend of his argument is that the Grand Trunk Railway must get access to Lake Superior on both sides. They must bring the grain from the west to Thunder Bay and this will be carried to the east of Lake Superior by water and not by rail. That is the whole of Mr. Hayes' argument. That is as I understand it, that is as it is understood by a well known financial newspaper published in London, the 'Financial News' which, on March 9th, 1904, said :

A glance at the map issued to the shareholders should suffice to point Mr. Hay's moral. Wheat will not be carried all the way east by rail. The Canadian Pacific, the Great Northern, and the Northern Pacific take wheat to Port Arthur or Duluth, and use water carriage on the great lakes. Similarly, the wheat gathered by the Grand Trunk Pacific will be carried to Port Arthur, and if there is to be any land carriage eastward of the lakes the Grand Trunk will have it.

My right hon. friend nods acquiescence in that view of the situation. Does he realize what it means ? Does he realize that it means the disappearance of the myth of safeguarding the bonding privileges and preserving the all-Canadian route ? Does he realize that it means the disappearance of transportation through our own ports ? Does he remember that there is not one stipulation in this contract which prevents the Grand Trunk from taking its freight to Portland as before ? The grain will go to Portland as before, because the Grand Trunk Railway will carry it to Portland as before. We will have incurred a very large part of the liability and expense necessary for creating in the Northwest Territories of Canada a railway for the purpose of enabling the Grand Trunk Railway to do that. That is the only difference between the situation now and what is was before. The government have kindly and generously consented to bear the greater part of the liability necessary to build about 2,000 miles of railway in the Northwest Territories and they have refused during the past session to insert one single stipulation binding the Grand Trunk Railway not to carry the traffic of that railway to Portland. We moved amendments for that purpose, they voted them down and when the agreement was opened up they still saw fit to withhold their hand from imposing on the Grand Trunk Railway Company one single syllable which would make it necessary that they should carry that freight to Canadian ports instead of to Portland. Indeed, I understand that those who are interested in the welfare of Portland are not very much disturbed about the outlook. They have had the Grand Trunk Railway freight before, and they expect to have it again. They have a sublime and earnest confidence that the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway through the Northwest Territories of Canada will in no way interfere with the interests of Portland but that all the traffic there gathered will go to swell the trade of Portland and that the ports of Halifax and St. John will be relegated to the same position that they have occupied in the past. Ministers of the Crown were rather brutally frank about this during the past session when we placed this consideration before the House. We asked them why they did not impose on the Grand Trunk Railway Company some obligation to carry this freight to Canadian ports. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) spoke for the government in that regard. I would commend his language to my hon. friends from the maritime provinces because it is very important and very significant. He said :

Our great competitor in the English market is the United States, and for six months in the year, yes, for seven months in the year, we are depending upon our chief competitor for an outlet to that market for our Canadian products.

No Canadian outlet, mark you, during six or seven months in the year. He continues :

Is that wise or is it prudent ? How can you get out from Montreal in winter except by way of Portland or Boston or New York ?

Mr. BROCK. By way of Halifax.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Halifax competing with Portland ? It is double the distance practically.

Mr. BROCK. What is the use of talking ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What is the use of talking ? Can we shut our eyes to geography ? Can we shut our eyes to facts ? How much of the trade of Montreal has gone to Halifax ? How much grain has gone from Montreal to Halifax or to St. John ? How much of our food products have gone that way ? Invariably they have gone to Portland or to Boston or to New York. As Portland is to the Grand Trunk Railway so Boston is going to be to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

That is the language of a minister of the Crown in dealing with our proposal to impose upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company some obligation to carry this freight to Canadian ports. And the Prime Minister was not far behind him. When I pointed out to the right hon. gentleman that grain having once gone to Quebec, it would be carried by the Grand Trunk to Portland instead of to St. John or to Halifax, the right hon. gentleman said that that would not be so; he said the distance by the new line from Quebec to Portland would be four hundred miles as they estimated it—but I think it would be more—and he said that the distance from Quebec to St. John would be the same as the distance from Quebec to Portland. Here is what occurred, and I quote from 'Hansard,' page 11969:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The distance between Portland and Montreal is 300 miles, and the distance between Quebec and Richmond is 100 miles, so that the distance between Quebec and Portland must be about 400 miles.

The distance between Montreal and Portland is 300 miles, the distance between Quebec and Richmond, where the road joins with the road from Montreal to Portland is 100; so there is a distance between Quebec and Portland of 400 miles.

I pointed out to the right hon. gentleman, that the distance from Quebec to Portland was 317½ miles, and he said he was much obliged to me for my moderation in having corrected him. He said it was unfortunate that the geography was such, but he said we could overcome it by this contract which, however, does not impose one single stipulation on the Grand Trunk for I was surprised to find that the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) took the same view of the situation. I quote from 'Hansard,' page 12189. I asked him whether there was anything in this contract to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway from carrying to Portland. He answered:

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is nothing to prevent them, but they must charge no higher rate for traffic to Canadian ports than they charge for traffic to American ports.

Well, as I pointed out last year, if the Grand Trunk brings grain to Quebec; if it has its own line to Portland and if it can get the same toll for carrying 317 miles to Portland that it can get for carrying a much greater distance to St. John or Halifax—and it will only participate in part of the tolls to the latter cities—will it not be in the undoubted interest of the Grand Trunk to take that grain to Portland instead of St. John. And I asked him therefore: Why should you not impose some stipulation upon the Grand Trunk in that respect. Let me quote further:

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And Portland being so much nearer than St. John or Halifax, they would necessarily carry it to Portland.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They might carry it to Portland if they were perfectly free; but under the present contract they are obliged to give the same rate to St. John or Halifax as to Portland.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They will give the same rate, but it will be to their interest to carry it to Portland.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Undoubtedly they would make more money by carrying it to Portland, but we do not intend to permit them to carry it there.

Where was the obstacle to their carrying it there? Where was the stipulation within the four walls of this contract, which prevented them carrying it there?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is the restriction to prevent them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. By the fact that the Canadian rate is not greater than the American rate, and we will trust to the patriotism of the Canadian shipper, that when the rate to a Canadian port is not greater than to an American port, he will ship by the Canadian port.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh!

Mr. FIELDING. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—And then I said:

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, it is not sections 42 and 43 that the hon. Minister of Finance relies on to prevent them, but the patriotism of the Canadian shipper?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hon. gentlemen on the other side applaud. We are to incur obligations to the extent of $150,000,000 to accomplish a certain object, and then we are to rely in the end on the patriotism of the Canadian shippers. That is the position in which the government finds itself. Would not Canadian patriotism be just as great if we did not incur this obligation to the extent of $150,000,000? How does the expenditure of this money in that way increase the patriotism of Canadians? The patriotism of Canadians is great; no one respects and values it more highly than I do, but these corporations will carry this freight just where they are making the most money out of it; and the Minister of Finance has admitted distinctly in the quotation which I have read, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company will make more money by carrying this freight to Portland. And if they will make more money by carrying that freight to Portland, and if there is no stipulation in the contract to prevent them from carrying it to Portland, where do you think it will be carried? Can there be any two answers to that question in the mind of any hon. gentleman in this House? There being no stipulation to prevent them, and they making more money by carrying it to Portland, then to Portland it will go in the future exactly as it has gone to Portland in the past.

When the Minister of Justice tells us that you cannot carry freight to Halifax and St. John on a profitable basis, I take issue with him. The records of the operations of the Intercolonial Railway within the past six months have demonstrated the contrary, if the truth has been told us in the answer given recently to a certain question by this government. The government has been experimenting—let me say it was when a general election was believed to be imminent—in sending certain cargoes of grain to Halifax, and a question was asked the House with regard to that, and an answer given, and here are the question and the answer :

Mr. KENMP asked :

1. How many bushels of grain have been hauled by the Intercolonial Railway during the six months preceding March 1st, 1904, for delivery at Halifax for export ?
2. What was the proportion delivered in each month ?
3. What lake ports was it shipped from ?
4. What was the rate per bushel from such lake ports to Halifax ?
5. What was the mileage of each railway over which it was hauled ?
6. What were the earnings per bushel of each railway ?
7. What was the estimated cost per bushel for the service the Intercolonial Railway performed ?

Hon. JAMES SUTHERLAND (Minister of Public Works) :

1. The number of bushels of grain hauled by the Intercolonial Railway during the six months preceding March, 1904, for delivery at Halifax for export was : Wheat 87,826½ bushels, corn 59,611 bushels.

2. Proportion delivered each month was :

	Bushels.
November, wheat	47,836
December, wheat	23,990½
January, wheat	16,000
February, corn	59,611

3. All of it was shipped from Depot Harbour.

4. The rates from Depot Harbour to Halifax were:

	Per bushel.
16,000 bushels wheat	5·15
31,836 bushels wheat	4·90
39,990½ bushels wheat	5.40
25,718½ bushels corn	4·94
33,892½ bushels corn	5·00

5. The mileage of each railway over which it was hauled was :

	Miles.
Canada Atlantic Railway	346
Grand Trunk Railway	34
Intercolonial Railway	828

6. The earnings per bushel of each railway were ?

	Cents.
Canada Atlantic Railway on 16,000 bushels wheat	2·27½
Grand Trunk Railway on 16,000 bushels wheat	·60
Intercolonial Railway on 16,000 bushels wheat	2·27½
Canada Atlantic Railway on 31,836 bushels wheat	2·15
Grand Trunk Railway on 31,836 bushels wheat	·60
Intercolonial Railway on 31,836 bushels wheat	2 15
Canada Atlantic Railway on 39,990½ bushels wheat	2 40
Grand Trunk Railway on 39,990½ bushels wheat	·60
Intercolonial Railway on 39,990½ bushels wheat	2·40
Canada Atlantic Railway on 25,718½ bushels corn	2 19
Grand Trunk Railway on 25,718½ bushels corn	·56
Intercolonial Railway on 25,718½ bushels corn	2 19
Canada Atlantic Railway on 33,892½ bushels corn	2·22
Grand Trunk Railway on 33,892½ bushels corn	·56
Intercolonial Railway on 33,892½ bushels corn	2·22

7. The estimated cost per bushel for the service performed by the Intercolonial Railway was 2·27 cents. There was thus a slight loss on the export business, but having regard to the inward cargo and passengers obtained for the Intercolonial, the business was not considered unprofitable.

Now let us see what that amounts to, and let us examine its bearing upon the question of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Georgian Bay :

The Intercolonial received, say, 2·25 cents per bushel for hauling 828 miles.

The other roads received 2·75 cents per bushel for hauling 380 miles.

Taking five cents as average an equal mileage division of rate would have given :

The Intercolonial	3·4 cents.
The other roads	1·6 "

Moreover, if as stated by the government, 2·27 cents per bushel is the cost of carriage for 828 miles, then 3·31 cents per bushel would be the cost of carriage per bushel for the whole 1,208 miles. Therefore, you have this position. According to the statement of the government you can carry grain from a Georgian Bay port to Halifax at a cost of 3·31 cents per bushel, and the average rate obtained for that carriage in these shipments was 5 cents, leaving to the Intercolonial Railway a profit of 1¾ cents if they owned the whole line from Halifax to the Georgian Bay.

How can the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) or any other hon. gentleman opposite say that you could not do a profitable business in carrying grain from Georgian Bay ports to Halifax or St. John if you had the Intercolonial extended to the Georgian Bay. There is no answer to the proposition ; if the statement of the government is correct, and if the Intercolonial Railway were extended to Georgian Bay you could do a splendidly profitable business. The answer which the government have given to this question affords the most cogent reason why the Intercolonial should be extended to the Georgian Bay without any delay, and why the government should at once enter upon the policy of so extending that railway and of giving to the province of Ontario the advantage of a government road which has so long been enjoyed by the province of Quebec and by the maritime provinces.
