In my opinion it does not help to shelter behind the jurisidiction of the provinces. If there is a Canadian Council on Animal Care, there ought to be Canada-wide legislation to enforce its standards with regard to animal welfare, animal well-being and the care of research animals. There ought to be, as my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) pointed out, legislation to deal with the licensing of premises used in this connection, the entry of inspectors, and power to enforce regulations in general. No matter how well they may be operating, there is no legislation under which the Canadian Council on Animal Care works. This is the point that the hon. member for Vancouver East was making.

The hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew referred to Bill C-150, which deals basically with pet animals, and said that this legislation has been widened. The hon. member should have referred to another bill, because then I think his comments would have been more penetrating. I refer to Bill C-44, which was introduced this session by one of the hon. member's colleagues on that side of the house, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Groos). The description of that bill is as follows:

An act to provide for the humane treatment of vertebrate animals used in scientific and industrial experiments, tests or training by recipients of grants from the government of Canada, by agencies of the government of Canada and by persons manufacturing pharmaceutical or biochemical products for sale to the government of Canada or to any of its agencies.

That is a strictly federal bill. Unfortunately, because it is a private members' bill and because it was not lucky in the draw, it will not be discussed this session. But I think that bill is very much to the point. Consequently, I am more than ever convinced that we should not rest until this whole matter has been studied by a House of Commons committee. Whether it be the agricultural committee or another committee is not important at this stage. The important thing is to recognize the necessity of undertaking such a study.

The predecessor of the present Prime Minister showed great interest in such a committee being established. When I asked this session that such a committee be established, the only objection raised by the government house leader was that there was not sufficient time to deal with the matter, having in mind other legislation to be considered by the house. But I urge that we take the first opportunity to establish such a committee and thereby really measure up to our responsibility for looking after the welfare of animals in this country. We have expressed our responsibility in this regard, now let us act upon it.

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) for drawing the attention of the house to this very relevant question.

I wish to join briefly in this debate because my riding, that is Berthier, is essentially a rural one and a large number of my constituents are engaged in the breeding and slaughter of animals. As representative of this riding, I must see that the latter activity is carried out in the most humane way possible.

In the Berthier riding, there are fish-breeding stations for purpose of supplying the lakes for fishing and for experimental purposes. There is mink-breeding for commercial purposes and hogs, cattle, chickens, etc. are raised for the market.

Having visited various facilities, I am happy that modern and humane methods are used today which are oddly different from the cruel ones in use previously and which are still too often employed, namely clubs, knives, axes or else the method which we recently deplored during the seal hunting season.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Private members' hour having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN SHIPPING FEDERATION AND LONGSHOREMEN

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the date of March 31 has arrived, can the minister tell us what he intends to do tomorrow with regard to the situation not only in the port of Montreal but along the whole of the St. Lawrence River.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Until I receive the conciliation board report, which I should receive by midnight, I have no way of anticipating what the position will be in the port of Montreal tomorrow. As hon. members know, seven days after receiving the report the unions could conceivably go on strike or management could conceivably lock the unions out. At the present moment, I understand that negotiations with the conciliation board are going on and, I presume, will be going on until ten or eleven o'clock this evening. I can only hope that a satisfactory settlement is reached.

To recapitulate, I must receive the conciliation board report by midnight tonight.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether, without giving a legal opinion, he can advise the house on the status of the injunction obtained about 15 months ago with regard to the port of Montreal.

Mr. Mackasey: Not being a lawyer, I am not sure of the proper terminology. If I recall and this is subject to correction, I believe the injunction was kept in abeyance last year by some legal procedure as part of a settlement.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I cannot tell from this cock-eyed roster whether the minister will be here tomorrow. If he is, will he give a statement in the house with regard to this matter because, so far as Canada is concerned, the situation on the river is scandalous.

Mr. Mackasey: It is a matter of opinion as to who made it scandalous, labour or management.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED USE OF C.B.C. TO PUBLICIZE NEW SITE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

As he stated this afternoon that he had to use the services of a private advertising agency, why did not the minister see fit to use the C.B.C. which after all is a government advertising policy, to announce its policy?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will have to take that question as notice. I do not know whether or not the C.B.C. provides a commercial service. I have forgotten what the exact reason was, but I will be glad to find out.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

I should like to ask the minister if he does not have enough public relations people in his department, why he had—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Rondeau: I wish to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the house why he thought appropriate to call upon the services of a private commercial agency, instead of those of the C.B.C.? Can we expect that in the future government policy will be announced in much the same manner as soap is?

[English]

PREPARATION OF TAPES RESPECTING SITES—CONSIDERATION OF POSITION OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister is the Acting Prime Minister and has the necessary degree of authority, I wonder if he could tell us whether any tapes other than the one with regard to the announcement of the new site, were made in Ottawa or any other place prior to the announcement in the house.

Mr. Hellyer: I am not sure I understand my hon. friend's question. To what other tapes is he referring?

Mr. Woolliams: I can make it very clear for the Acting Prime Minister. Was any other tape made with reference to any other site than the one that was made in relation to the pronouncement in the house?

Mr. Hellyer: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question. I am sure the Acting Prime Minister had all the facts when he said no other tape was made. Did he make any other tape?

Mr. Bell: Not to his knowledge.

Mr. Hellyer: No, I did not, Mr. Speaker. I was hopeful that the cabinet would take the decision that it did which, in my opinion, was the right one. I think it was superior in all respects to the two sites which were favoured by the province of Quebec. I think it was in the best interests of the people, not only in the Montreal region but of all the taxpayers of Canada, that the site that was chosen was chosen. With that in mind and with the hope that the cabinet would agree that the technical consideration should prevail over the political consideration of choosing the site on the South Shore, I felt it was wise to prepare what I had hoped would be useful information.

Mr. Woolliams: I suggest to the Acting Prime Minister, who must know Tennyson, that the cows may come and the cows may go, but the bull goes on forever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister advise us whether he felt that the making of the tape by himself and his colleague could be used for the moral suasion of his colleagues in the cabinet?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister kindly advise the house whether the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development was stating the government position when he indicated that if the province of Quebec had felt strongly enough about this decision and could advance other arguments the cabinet would have given it further consideration and review?

Mr. Hellyer: We were open for discussions all along. We started co-operating with the province of Quebec many months ago, and we gave them access to all the technical information we had. They made information available to us to support the various points of view that they wished to put forward. This spirit of co-operation on our part was manifest right through to the end. As I indicated this afternoon, we would even have been willing to meet with them again in the final days or hours before the cabinet took its decision last Thursday, and if there was any technical information or any fact which had been overlooked, to give it the consideration that it would deserve.

Mr. Woolliams: You gave it ahead of time.

CANADA COUNCIL

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO GIVE GRANTS TO AMATEURS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Can the minister tell us whether or not the Canada Council has recently changed its policy with regard to grants given to amateur talent in Canada, and whether in fact the council has refused to give grants to amateurs in the field of arts in Canada? If so, when did this policy change?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was not informed of any such change of policy, but I shall gladly get in touch with the Canada Council to find out about any initiative on their part that I would not know about.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I understand the minister correctly, it is still the policy of the Canada Council to give grants to those in the field of arts who are still regarded as amateurs rather than professionals.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that is not what I said. I said that to my knowledge, the Canada Council policy has not undergone any substantial change recently. And I do not think that it has ever been the Canada Council's policy to subsidize amateur groups, except to help them acquire a professional status as quickly as possible providing they were already close to such status.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. I am sorry to press the matter but there is some urgency and importance to it as far as many groups are concerned. So that there is no misunderstanding, is it then the policy of the Canada Council to give grants to professional groups only in this country?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have just said the opposite. I am quite willing to get more precise information on that and to read again certain texts, but if I am not mistaken, the Canada Council's aim is to subsidize professional groups or groups likely to become professional in a short time, through the help of such grants.

[English]

TRANSPORT

FREEZE ON MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Transport a question about the freeze on maritime freight rates, a question I have been trying to ask for some time but the minister has been busy with other problems.

In view of the postponement of the legislation and commitments made in the house, and also in view of the great consternation of the maritime shippers about the matter, since the minister will not be here tomorrow can he say before the Easter recess whether there will be any increase in rates, or is there a definite commitment from the railways that the rates will not be increased?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that, on the basis of discussions we had with the railways as soon as the bill was introduceed, as an act of good faith on our part, they agreed not to increase their rates pending passage of the bill.

Mr. Bell: May I just be sure of that, Mr. Speaker, because the minister may have mixed the question up, though of course not intentionally. Until the legislation dealing with this question comes in and is passed, the railways have categorically promised not to increase these rates on which there is presently a freeze?

Mr. Hellyer: That is my understanding. There is no reason for hesitation on my part except that, as my hon. member friend knows, it is impossible to be categorical about all things. But it is my understanding that there will be no increase on the basis that the bill will be passed.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this matter is dealt with in the fifth report of the transport committee and I understand that concurrence in the report will be moved tomorrow, will the minister obtain an assurance from the government house leader that the house will, in fact, concur in this report tomorrow?

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—REFERENCE OF EARLY DISCLOSURE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council, in his capacity as government house leader, arising out of the discussion this afternoon on the question of privilege of the hon. member for Calgary North and some of the answers given this evening. In view of the fact that members of the house are concerned about the early disclosure of the choice of the site of the airport, would the President of the Privy Council give consideration to referring the matter of the early disclosure the way it was done, and the reasons for which it was done, to the standing committee on transport so that committee can study it and make a report to the house on the propriety or advantages, or the impropriety or disadvantages, of what was done?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me abundantly clear that there was no impropriety of any kind, and that no advantage would be gained from continuing this discussion. If the hon. member is seriously interested in the question he should encourage his colleagues on the transport committee, who at the moment are considering the estimates of the department, of transport to discuss the matter further in the committee.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. Surely, the President of the Privy Council is aware that even I knew of that possibility. What I am asking him is whether he agrees to a house order referring the matter to the transport committee so that the transport committee would then discuss it, instead of having an argument about whether or not the committee should do something about it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member knew about that possibility he would not have asked the second question. The estimates of the Department of Transport are before the committee and the building of airports in Montreal is one of the subjects that can be discussed.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POLICY ON PRETAPING OF ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether it is now government policy to pre-tape all government decisions in the manner this decision was?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: Just because government backbenchers yell "order"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member appreciates that this is a rather new assignment for me, but my understanding is that a question of that nature can be asked of the Acting Prime Minister, not of the President of the Privy Council. In any event, though I hesitate to prejudge the matter, it seems to me to be argumentative.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, nothing has made me happier than the direction you have given me, and I think it is proper. May I ask the question of the Acting Prime Minister, because he is well aware of the facts. Is it now government policy that confidential information and information of the kind we have been discussing will now be pre-taped?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any policy, but as I indicated the government took the decision to do it in this case. I am sure that anything as complex and technical as were the factors entering into a decision of this kind would justify the use and preparation of electronic press releases, as was done in this case. I would recommend it to anybody who was dealing with a situation as complex and difficult as this. I would recommend it to my hon. friend sometimes too.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask one further supplementary question. Did the minister's colleagues in the government approve of the decision that he and the other minister took in this regard?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

POTATOES

FLOOR PRICES—ACREAGE PAYMENTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister any announcement to make as a result of a meeting held today between a delegation from Prince Edward Island and the stabilization board regarding the possibility of a floor price for potatoes to take effect in June owing to the very unsatisfactory level of potato prices for the past three years, over and above the diversion program that has already been announced?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful exchange with regard to this problem and the magnitude of the problem. A number of administrative considerations would have to be taken into account in the kind of program suggested by the hon. member. However, I am not prepared to make a statement today. Indeed, I think it will take several days to consider all the matters that must be considered before an announcement can be made.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would indicate, in view of the fact that time is very short for potato growers in Prince Edward Island and other parts of the Atlantic region, whether he or his government is giving consideration to instituting again this season acreage payments somewhat similar to those enacted last season?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker. The information that has come to me during the last few months indicates that, in fact, the potato growers do not like that kind of program.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that whatever steps are taken will be taken in time to give assistance this growing season to the potato producers of Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Olson: What is in time and what is not is, of course, always relative. We want to be as helpful as we can in what we recognize to be a very severe market situation.

AIR CANADA

DORVAL—ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURE ON MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question. On the third of February when answering a question he stated Air Canada was considering further developments at Dorval in addition to the $21,200,000 expenditure referred to. Has the government authorized since then an additional project involving on expenditure of somewhere around $54 million for shops, hangar bases and other matters?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I have to take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and get the airline to prepare a full statement for my hon. friend which will give him all facts in respect of their plans concerning the construction of maintenance bases.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): In view of the fact the minister will be looking into the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, will the minister ask Air Canada whether included in this $54 million is $21,500,000 for new overhaul facilities at Dorval?

Inquiries of the Ministry

My second question, Mr. Speaker, is the new jumbo hangar costing another $21 million included in the special projects budget or is it part of the 1968 budget?

My third question, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Possibly the Minister of Transport would like to incorporate the supplementary questions in his jumbo statement to be made at some future date.

Mr. Hellyer: If I could answer, Mr. Speaker, the statement I have undertaken to obtain will answer the first, second, and possibly even a third question.

An hon. Member: He hasn't asked the third one yet.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that should properly be put to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In his absence, I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Since Devco presented the government with an early retirement plan, can the Acting Prime Minister indicate to the house whether the government has sanctioned the idea of compulsory retirement for miners at the age of 60?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, maybe I could check that. I could refer it to the minister for an answer later.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect I think possibly this question could be answered by the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. This is a very urgent matter. It has been brought to the attention of the government on several different occassions. The plan of compulsory retirement at the age of 60 has been before them for quite some time.

This is not a pension plan, it is an early retirement plan. The company keeps the books and maintains that these employees must remain on the roll subject to recall.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member might be allowed to ask the question.

Mr. MacInnis: With all due respect to you, Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that someone inform the government as to what is going on, especially the backbenchers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Without prejudging that particular point of view—that may be the case but this is not the time to debate it—I invite the hon. member to put his question directly.

Mr. MacInnis: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I had put the question. I put the question a number of times over the past several months and I always get the same answer. Somebody refers it to somebody else. Is there no one on that side of the house who knows what is going on?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not intend to take the time of the house to refer to precedents. This question has been put on a number of occasions to the responsible minister. I hold in my hand a copy of the roster to which ministers are supposed to adhere. The minister responsible for this particular question is not present tonight.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member claims he has a point of privilege. I will hear it. Maybe he can be allowed to state it.

Mr. MacInnis: I don't want to hear these interjections and the calls for order from the other side of the house. It is the responsibility of the Chair to keep them in their place. It may be I can wait them out.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. MacInnis: The bums and idiots have been at it all the time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: I still insist on finishing my question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am prepared to hear the hon. member on a point of privilege. That is what I would like to hear.

Mr. MacInnis: The precedents have been established over the months in respect of this question. I realize when I put an oral question that no minister is compelled to answer, but they have been saying they will take it as notice and the answer will be provided. The miners who are being compulsorily retired in Cape Breton are entitled to some consideration in this situation. The Minister of Labour or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration should be in a position to say something as to whether men should be compulsorily retired at the age of 60.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON VOLUME DRIED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? Has he now completed comparing notes with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Can he now give a more complete report to the house on the amount of grain that has been dried on farms, at country elevators and terminals and what estimated amounts remain to be dried?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it will take me a minute and a half to give this information. It goes forward with the qualifications I gave previously. It is very difficult to get estimates on this kind of operation. We believe there are now approximately 3,468 dryers in the prairie provinces with a total drying capacity of 4,994,000 bushels per day.

Weather conditions during February were not conducive to drying. It is estimated there were approximately 60 million bushels dried on farms up to March 1. It is estimated also there could be as much as 193 million bushels remaining to be dried as of March 1. If 60 per cent of the capacity of these 3,468 grain dryers were used, we estimate it would probably take seven or eight weeks to clean up the balance of the damp grain on the farms.

We have more precise figures respecting the amount that has been dried in the terminals. I gave some of that information earlier today. I could add to that because it is reasonably precise.

Mr. Benjamin: I suggest the minister have leave of the house to table all of these figures so they will appear in Hansard. It would be easier for all of us.

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speeaker, during the visit of the Agricultural Committee to western Canada during the Easter recess, is it the minister's intention to sit in on a number of its meetings so that he could ascertain the real seriousness of the situation, especially following the announcement of the final wheat payment?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is already aware of the seriousness of the situation.

Mr. Benjamin: As a further supplementary question may I ask the minister if the figures he just quoted include any estimate of grain dried at country elevators?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the figure I gave was the amount dried at all positions other than terminals.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—AWARENESS OF C.B.C. RESPECTING DECISION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary question a while ago, but the main question was put 25 minutes ago. I will nevertheless put my question now to the Secretary of State.

Was the C.B.C. aware of the decision taken by the cabinet last Thursday?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am unable to give this information, Mr. Speaker. I will have to inquire about that myself.

[English]

BROADCASTING

DIRECTIVE RESPECTING FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and I suppose it is related to the question that has just been asked. In view of its importance to the broadcasting media, could the Secretary of State indicate whether it is his intention to make tapes available to the media of the statement with respect to the new directive controlling the foreign ownership of broadcasting facilities in Canada, or is he going to be content with the old fashioned type of press release that reached each hon. member today?

[Translation]

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think that the directives have been properly given. They had been announced for a very long time and I must admit I was abroad when they were given all that publicity.

However, should the hon. member for Brandon-Souris find the information lacking in precision, I could certainly let him have the text of the directives or even table it in the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the minister, and I can assure him that we have a copy of the directive on our desks. My question was designed to determine whether the information was going to be disseminated through the mass media, in as much as it concerns the mass media, which seems to be the new policy of the government. With respect to the supplementary does the minister intend to announce similar directives with respect to the control of foreign ownership of newspapers in Canada and, if so, when?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: As far as the press is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must know that the Secretary of State has no authority whatsoever over the press in Canada which, until now, I understand, has remained private property and does not fall within the jurisdiction of any government agency.

EXHIBITIONS

FLORIDA STATE FAIR—ABSENCE OF LITERATURE IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister or whoever is responsible for Canadian exhibits at state fairs in the United States of America. I have information here that at the Florida state fair held in Tampa this year there was no Canadian literature in the English language. I would like to know if this is the practice with all our state exhibits? Is this practical in Florida? Who is responsible for it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would be the responsible minister and I would be glad to refer the hon. gentleman's question to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Possibly I might recgonize two more hon. members before calling orders of the day, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

ALLEGED PARTICIPATION IN DEMONSTRATION AT MCGILL

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could he say whether his department is investigating the alleged activities of the C.Y.C. and the weaponry allegedly used in the messy McGill flare up over the week end?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have inquired from the Company of Young Canadians concerning the allegation that three members of the Company, who were participating in a project at Joliette, had been arrested in connection with the demonstrations that took place the other night.

The Company of Young Canadians headquarters here in Ottawa informed me as follows: of the three persons arrested and designated as volunteers of the Company in the newspapers, none of them have ever been members of the said Company or are members of it at the present time.

As regards the weapons found in a building in Joliette, I am informed that the Company of Young Canadians has an office in the said building and the remaining space is occupied by a union federation. The weapons were found under a staircase which in any case is outside the building, and not nearer the office of the Company of Young Canadians than that of the trade-union and in a place accessible to any passer-by.

Such is the information given me by the Company on the Joliette case.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR ACTION ON URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister in charge of housing. It arises from an answer he gave me on March 25 when I asked him a question with respect to approval for one of the two urban renewal projects in Vancouver. At that time he told me:

> If it can be proven that going ahead with additional renewal projects at this time is the best use of the money available to provide better housing and better conditions for Canadian citizens, then of course it will be considered sympathetically.

I would like to know whether the minister has discussed with Vancouver what forms of proof are necessary to show that this project should be gone ahead with and, if so, with what results?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not specifically in those terms, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated this afternoon, I have now seen two of the major outstanding renewal projects at Hamilton and Kitchener. It is my intention to visit seven or eight more before recommending to the government what policy we should follow in the immediate future in this respect.

I hope to do so very soon. It would be my intention to visit Vancouver and to take a look at that project on the ground again before reaching any conclusion. Last time I was out there I did visit part of a proposed urban renewal area. There was tremendous opposition then on the part of the people who live there. They did not wish to have their houses destroyed; they were proud of their houses and they felt that there were better solutions. I must say that I was inclined to agree with them. However, I would like to visit them again in the context of the present review, and then indicate to the municipalities concerned what we intend to do.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Actually I should point out to hon. members that I allowed the questions of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in addition to the regular question period time, and so I did not think we should pursue supplementaries at this point.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that after I have given you my reasons for this point of order you would perhaps allow me to pursue this matter with just one further supplementary question. I believe that the minister has just made a statement saying he intends to visit some seven, eight or nine more cities. In order that those who would be involved might have some preknowledge of his visits perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would allow me to ask the minister if he would indicate to the house which cities he intends to visit?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If it is the disposition of the house to allow this question, certainly we can proceed with it. But again, I would point out that I have allowed the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to go over the allotted time, and I note that the hon. member for Oxford also wants to ask a question. I am sure there are other hon. members who wish to ask questions. Possibly it is the disposition of the house to allow this one question to be put, but I would like to call orders of the day after that.

Mr. Hellyer: I am not sure I can recall them from memory but included in them would be Vancouver, Calgary, Sault Ste. Marie, Sarnia, Niagara Falls and two or three others.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POLICY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was announced on numerous occasions last week by the Prime Minister that today, Monday, there would be an announcement with regard to Canada's future position in respect of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. We realize the reason the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and some other hon. members are absent today; it is a very sad occasion in the capital of our neighbouring country. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister is not here to make the announcement which had been indicated would be made today, and so that we might hear about it before the house adjourns, perhaps Your Honour would use his good offices to find out whether or not the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in a position to make the announcement.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was about to suggest the statement was more in the way of a representation than a point of order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATION CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS LIMITATIONS OF POWERS, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I move:

That Bill S-5, to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act, as reported (without amendment), from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Kierans moved that the bill be read a third time and passed.

Co-operative Credit Association Act

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the members of the house that I do not intend to delay the passage of this bill. I should like to comment, in passing, that the affairs of the C.O.T.C. have been thoroughly examined both in a committee of this house and of the other place. This is one of the few agencies of government which consistently turns in a profit. It is one of the few organizations which apparently has the taxpayer in mind, and certainly should be commended on its operations.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to slow down the debate; however, I would like to add a few words to what my hon. friend has just said.

As I was on the committee which had an opportunity to hear the officials of that Crown corporation, I might say that not only has the corporation shown a deficit since its inception but this year it gave back to the government $5 million it had requested for capital investment. It will manage the proposed investment without the help of the government; that, in my opinion, shows good management that could be taken as a model by all other crown corporations.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT ASSOCIATIONS ACT

PERMISSION FOR SOCIETY TO BECOME FEDERALLY INCORPORATED—REPORT STAGE

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance): I move:

That Bill S-28, to amend the Co-operative Credit Associations Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Olson moved that the bill be read a third time and passed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief intervention at this stage to draw to the attention of hon. members the proceedings of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Particularly if one examines the testimony of Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance, as it appears at page 1712 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 33, one will see the purpose of this bill. It is very simple and

[Mr. Kierans.]

I shall not repeat what Mr. Humphrys, in a matter of a column or so, put very succinctly before the committee. He set forth the strata in respect of the application of this act. It does not apply to individual credit unions of provincial origin. It applies to the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society, as well as a number of provincial centrals. Mr. Humphrys pointed out that this is purely a matter of housekeeping. It simplifies the procedure for future adherents so that it will not be necessary to come back to parliament every time a central or other appropriate credit union body wishes to come under the Act.

At the time of the hearings, I was particularly concerned about the nature of investments that could be made by the centrals and by the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society since they do act almost as reserve banks, if one could use the simile of reserve banks in respect of credit unions. However, I have been advised by Mr. Humphrys that this is very well covered by the examination he makes of their portfolios, so I think we are all satisfied for the time being at least that these organizations are in good hands. I would commend this bill and hope that we could get on with the passage of it, subject to any observations which any hon. member might make.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL LIBRARY ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION, POWERS OF LIBRARIAN, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I move:

That Bill C-11, respecting the National Library, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Pelletier moved that the bill be read a third time and passed.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to move an amendment in respect of this particular bill but unfortunately, business has been moving so rapidly in recent days due to the fine co-operation from the members of the opposition that I have not had an opportunity under the new rules to move such an amendment. Therefore, the remarks I would have made on the amendment I will now make at the third reading stage. I suppose this is the penalty for having been so long in the house that we have become accustomed to the days when ordinary members of parliament really had some fundamental say in what went on with regard to the day to day business of parliament.

We have unfortunately arrived at a stage in the evolution of parliament at which the position of the private member is being downgraded and the position of the executive in our governmental system is being enhanced to a degree which I feel is not in the best interest of democracy in this country. It is on this point that I wish to speak briefly. Those Members of Parliament who are privileged to be on the committee on Films, Broadcasting and the Arts will know that the question I intend to discuss tonight was discussed in some length in that committee. However, I make no apology for repeating matters tonight because unfortunately our committee system is so bogged down in a mass of de- in terms of giving private members an opportunity to participate adequately in the ongoing process of parliament. The committee system is so bogged down in a mass of details, members are so hard-pressed to spread themselves over the multiplicity of committees, that it is almost impossible to come to grips with the real issues of legislation as it passes through the legislative mill.

I could use this as an occasion on which to make some sort of plea to the government, to the executive arm of parliament, to give the committee system some badly needed assistance. If we want it to function successfully we must provide increased research assistance, a greater opportunity to deal with legislative matters in depth. We must take up the slack which has occurred because of the short-circuiting of what used to be known as the committee of the whole in the House of Commons. There was a time when in order to maintain a close control of the executive one could, on the spur of the moment, arising from an issue which emerged in the course of discussion, bring in an amendment. Nowadays, unfortunately, we do not have such an opportunity.

The particular bill before the house is of some significance in the field of communications in Canada to the extent that it deals with the formal establishment of a national library service. The first bill of this sort was enacted in 1952 and of coure, we were faced at that time with a situation in which we had an act of parliament but no library other than the Parliamentary Library and the services it provided. The bill now before the house is related to the new facilities which have become available to house the national library and the archives, a project which got under way in 1962.

As I compare the old act with the bill now before the house, I contend that the emphasis placed on the function of the minister with respect to the administration of the National Library is considerably greater in the new legislation than in the old. We are all aware that to ensure a healthy democracy adequate communication facilities are essential. They carry the main burden of providing the cement which holds the nation together. Communications facilities provide the educational, cultural and information services which are necessary to an adequate dialogue within the nation with respect to urgent issues of national importance, particularly national unity. We maintain a Post Office Department—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh?

Mr. Dinsdale: —operated directly by the Government of Canada as one of the basic ingredients of this process of communication. It has often been suggested that the Post Office should be separated from government and I think the present Postmaster General is one of the leading exponents of this view as he tries to downgrade, or upgrade, depending on one's viewpoint, the postal service in connection with the changes which have recently taken place.

The government has also become deeply involved in the provision of communications services through the mass media of broadcasting. The Parliament of Canada authorizes substantial sums annually to make it possible for a Crown agency, the C.B.C., reporting to this house through the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) to carry on an adequate system of electronic communication. In all other information operations having to do with the sensitive subject of educational and cultural services the Government of Canada has always done its utmost to create at least the fiction, or the impression, that these facilities as they are operated at federal level are in no way directly connected with the government itself. The C.B.C., for example, is operated by a Crown agency. The National Museums, which are closely related to the kind of services provided by the National Library, have, in accordance with a recent amendment to the National Museums Act, set up a board of trustees, and as I understand it from the interpretation of the Secretary of State himself, this board is free from the direct control of the responsible minister.

I have been pursuing in this house questions with respect to the commissionaire service provided by the National Museums of Canada with particular reference to bilingualism, and the Secretary of State has always taken the attitude that this is the responsibility of the board of trustees. In other words, governments have hesitated to become directly involved in the supervision of, and in the direct control of, communications services which relate to educational and cultural matters.

This house will shortly be debating the establishment of an educational television agency. As I read the approach taken in that legislation the same principle is to be carried out, on the premise that E.T.V. will be providing services in this sensitive area of education and culture.

I now come to the point that I have made in committee. I believe I also made it during the first reading stage when the bill was originally introduced. This is the part of the legislation which I find objectionable in principle. The Canadian Library Association, in its representations on the matter has also hinted broadly that it shares the same suspicions, namely, that the government, through the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), is becoming much too deeply involved in the every day activities of our national library service.

The original brief presented to the government by the Canadian Library Association and its French speaking equivalent recommended that the National Library be operated as a crown corporation, in order to get around this difficulty. They expanded on this thought by indicating that they wanted the National Library to be a truly national service and not the errand-boy for any particular arm of government.

The government has obviously, as we view the bill, not accepted the recommendations of the Canadian Library Association in this respect. We had some discussion in committee on this point and the Secretary of State indicated that the Canadian Library Association had after some persuasion changed its mind in this respect. However, in my continuing discussions with some of the leaders of the library association movement in Canada I find that the same idea still persists, namely, that the National Library is violating this fundamental principle which I have outlined briefly, and which applies to all other areas of government participation in cultural education, by making the Secretary of State directly responsible.

Had there been the opportunity to move an amendment, I would have submitted an amendment which would have called for the deletion of clause 4 of the bill. While this would not deal with the problem in its entirety, it would at least go some way to satisfying members of the opposition, as well as all private members of this house who are concerned with the diminishing role and influence of the backbench member of parliament with regard to government bills. Clause 4 reads as follows:

> The minister shall preside over and has the supervision of the management and direction of the library.

The key words there are "preside over", "supervision of" and "management and direction" of the library. This feature of the new bill is entirely absent from the original National Library bill. We inquired of the law officers of the crown why the offending principle was stated in such explicit terms, because this clause stands by itself. There are no subclauses; it is just a bold and blunt statement under the heading "Administration of Library." It places the Secretary of State in the pre-eminent role in the administration of the affairs of our new National Library. The law officers of the crown explained that this is the new technique, the new way of making legislation tidier and the terminology of bills a little more explicit.

There was a further explanation, that it is a natural evolutionary process. If one were to read some of the further clauses of the bill, the explicit powers of the minister as outlined in clause 4 are implied in the clauses immediately subsequent thereto. For example, clause 5 (1) provides:

> The Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be called the National Librarian.

The subsequent subclauses outline the duties, functions and responsibilities of the National Librarian. This is the form these provisions took in the original act. Perhaps one of the reasons the government has fallen into the error of the violation of the principle of maintaining at least the fiction that it has nothing to do with communication matters is that our parliamentary library has been operating for a number of years in a double capacity. It has been serving not only the members of parliament, but as Canada's national library, the only national library that was available.

It is understandable that with reference to the functions of the parliamentary library, the government would have some close administrative control and responsibility as, of course, would members of this house. We have had a parliamentary committee responsible for the administration of the affairs of the parliamentary library. But we are now moving into a stage of library service and development which completely divorces the functioning of our National Library from the functioning of the parliamentary library. I think this is where the government has fallen into error; it has failed to appreciate that we are now in a new phase of library development in Canada. The National Library has powers and responsibilities, educational and informational functions that are far greater than those ever performed by its predecessor, the parliamentary library.

Perhaps for the sake of the argument I am putting forward I could quote from a book entitled "National Libraries", which is compiled of extracts from the proceedings of the University and Research Section Conference held at Bangor in April, 1963. This was a meeting of representatives of national libraries from most of the democratic countries of the world. On page 11, this book gives details of the functions that are regarded as those that should be carried out by national libraries in democratic countries.

● (9:10 p.m.)

They are as follows:

1. Collecting national literature.
2. Collecting foreign literature.
3. Serving as a book museum.
4. Giving the public access to the collections.
5. Carrying out information service and bibliographical activity.
6. Functioning as a training centre.
7. Participating in national library planning.

I think that list indicates that the functions of a national library are quite intimately concerned with the everyday on-going process of cultural and educational dissemination. Indeed, I would say that a national library service is one of the most effective forces in a grass roots educational program.

While we expend more money on the electronic media as compared with the funds that are available for the national library service, I think it is still agreed by scholars that in the long run the printed word is the essence of the educational system in any country and that libraries are the storehouse of knowledge. It is upon the libraries that we must depend for the on-going process of cultural and educational development. On the basis of the seventh function of a national library service as outlined at the conference held at Bangor, which is the participation in national library planning, the National Library will be co-ordinating with the provincial libraries. They, in turn, will be co-ordinating with the libraries at the level of local communities. It is for this reason that I think clause 4 is completely out of context, as well as on the basis of Canada's past experience in dealing with the dissemination of cultural information through the medium of libraries. It is certainly out of context with the emphasis that is placed by the government in its proposed legislation to establish an educational television agency.

I do not think I need to say anything further to establish the point, and there is no action I can take to test the sense of the house on this matter. However, I thought it was incumbent on me to point out that we are trespassing into an area that has serious implications for all communications media. The feeling is shared by those who are most intimately concerned with provisional library services of the Canadian Library Association and its French speaking equivalent. There was a move in the committee to have more direct representation from the Canadian Library Association on the advisory council that is provided for in the act. Unfortunately, this was negated by the committee, so that even this attempt by librarians to become more closely involved in the functions and services of the library have not been made possible under the act.

One of the arguments that is frequently used in cases of this kind is that under the present government, and under the present minister, there will be no abuse of the extraordinary privileges that are granted under clause 4. Of course, that is not the way we look at the process of legislation in a democratic parliament. The government can certainly lean over backwards to avoid even the semblance of trespassing into one of the most sensitive areas of public policy, and I am sure that as the days and years go by and this house is faced with the consideration of its approach to other means of communication sponsored by the government in Canada, we will have occasion to regret the step we are taking at this time.

As a final word, let me just repeat what this bill calls for. Even though the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) may never use these powers to downgrade the national interest or to exert any particular pressure that a government in power can exert when it has direct control and access to communication media, you will agree that this is hardly in keeping with the principle that has always been followed in Canada. Clause 4 reads:

> The Minister shall preside over and has the supervision of the management and direction of the Library.

I would have been much more content if the general terms that already exist in the act of 1952 had been carried forward, and if we had allowed the national librarian appointed by the Governor in Council to have reasonable freedom of action in administering the library, subject of course to reporting to parliament through the Secretary of State, as is the arrangement with the C.B.C. and as no doubt will be the arrangement with E.T.V.

I think that it would have been a much better solution to the problem if the advisory council had been given greater powers, as is the board of trustees of the National Museum. The mistake has been made; it is the government's mistake, and they will have to live with it.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to extend the debate on this bill but as for the comments of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I just remind hon. members that the Secretary of State moved third reading, and therefore has no right to reply except by leave of the house.

Some hon. Members: By leave.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In any case, I wish to make only brief comments on some things said by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

I shall first say that I am amazed at the complaints which he formulated about the structure of the committees which, according to him, act like a kind of gag on hon. members and prevent them from introducing amendments. This statement bears no relation to reality. The truth is just the opposite. Indeed, hon. members now have the opportunity, every time a bill is studied in committee, to present amendments. Besides, four amendments which were introduced and accepted by the committee are written into the legislation that we are discussing tonight, and the hon. member for Brandon-Souris himself presented an amendment which was defeated by the majority of the members of the committee. But hon. members have a second opportunity to propose amendments to the house at this stage of the proceedings.

I must even tell him that I was quite amazed, because of his opposition to section 4 of the act, that he did not put any notice of amendment on the order paper because he could have done so. In fact, he could have proposed an amendment tonight, provided of course he had respected the very simple rule under which he had to give a 24-hour notice.

The main argument of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris is to the effect that the National Library should be a crown corporation. It is true that this body will have to become part more and more of a certain communication network. However, I would like to indicate to the hon. member that a library does not express an opinion, does not put any product on the market, but provides services.

As for me, I believe that barring an extremely serious reason, as for instance respect of the freedom of speech—which is the case in the broadcasting field—we must not take any field of activity away from the minister's responsibility. In a system such as ours, it is a duty for us to take such responsibilities.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris states that clause 4 gives extraordinary powers to the minister, but I should like nevertheless to point out to him that it does not say that the minister shall administer the Library but rather, and I quote:

> The minister shall preside over ... the management and direction of the Library—

That already provides some leeway and gives the National Librarian a much greater importance than if the law spoke of direct management by the minister.

The hon. member referred to the recommendation made by the Canadian Library Association in a brief presented to the National Librarian and to the Secretary of State, in which it suggested that the National Library should become a crown corporation. But following open and friendly discussions, the Canadian Library Association fell in with the reasons we explained, so much so that when it appeared a few weeks later before the committee, it did not bring up that suggestion again. Therefore, when the hon. member for Brandon-Souris says that the Association made a vague reference to it, I must tell him that it was so vague that I could not even find a trace of it in the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee.

I am also surprised to hear the hon. member say that the government may have erred in wanting to control the National Library, in the field of communications, because it already controls the Library of Parliament. The point of the matter is that the government does not control the Library of Parliament which is not a governmental but a parliamentary institution answerable to the Speakers of both houses who are advised by a joint committee of both houses.

I should like to say one word only about the library associations that are not represented on the advisory board of the Library. This amendment was rejected and the provision dealing with the appointment of representatives of those two associations was not incorporated in the act for a very simple reason. First of all, they are not institutions incorporated by an act of the parliament of Canada and secondly, they are professional associations to which anything can happen. For instance, they can amalgamate or split up. They could even—which would be unfortunate—disappear as other professional associations have in the past, and then the act would contain a section that could no longer be applied.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wished to make with regard to this bill. To my mind, it meets efficiently the pressing need to modernize the National Library and turn it into an even more efficient instrument than it has been until now.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson for third reading of Bill C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my comments on this bill will not be long, in the hope that well before ten o'clock we might have given the bill and the amendments contained therein, the thorough examination they deserve. If we pass this bill we will have disposed of the measures that we feel should be dealt with by the house before we recess.

I have three comments to make in connection with this bill, which contains the amendments introduced in connection with the provision of credit assistance to Indian bands, amendments which had to be introduced because the recommendation of His Excellency was required. This is now the subject of this bill.

On the merits, I will limit myself to saying that I concur completely with what was said by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) at the time we were previously debating the issue. He made some very pertinent and relevant observations with regard to this matter, and I think was quite justified in so doing.

The house should be aware that the general effect of the amendments introduced in connection with the Farm Credit Act will be to establish really two classes of citizens, the Indian people and those who are non-Indian. The basis on which the Indian people will benefit from this legislation, as in the case of the farm credit bill, certainly places them in a far less advantageous position, and at a time when we in this house have been patiently waiting for the government to bring down the amendments to the Indian Act as well as the Indian claims commission legislation.

I would have thought that the paternalistic attitude that is certainly implicit in these amendments was one that the government would have been most hesitant about embracing. What we find here is the provision that Indian bands and Indian people may only with the blessing, sanction and approval of the minister who is responsible for answering to this house for Indian affairs, enter into the agreements described in the bill.

It is not as if this were something new. In the course of another debate today I had occasion to put on the record a recommendation that was made by a joint committee seven and a half years ago. The members of that committee, having sat for a year and a half and most carefully observed the evidence given by the 99 witnesses, I believe it was, who appeared, saw fit to make recommendations, including the provision that the Indian people should be placed in precisely the same position, in so far as land holdings would permit, as other people.

One of the difficulties in the attempts of the Indian people to forge for themselves an opportunity to have the same way of life as other people was that they faced the obstacle of not being able to obtain credit. On Indian reserves, as is well known, there is no fee simple ownership; there is a certificate of occupation only. Of course, they are not able to pledge land. After hearing evidence and studying the matter, the committee specifically recommended that provision be made for legislative changes in order to remove the barriers which now inhibit the Indian people in their attempts to receive credit so that they may farm and engage in agricultural activities along with non-Indian people. That should have been done within two years. Legislative proposals were introduced, but there was an election and the government changed hands. The matter has been marking time ever since.

We are hopefully awaiting changes in the Indian Act which will remove this and many other impediments. While I welcome any legislation which will permit the Indian people to receive some measure of credit, I am sorry to see it in this form. The Indian people have been waiting for a bill of rights. This has been the subject of discussion for some months.

I hope the legislation of the type embraced in the four corners of this amendment and which appears in the amendments to the Farm Credit Act will put the Indian people in precisely the same position as other people.

I deplore the paternalistic attitude found in this amendment. It states that only when the minister responsible for the Indian people under the provisions of the Indian Act permits will this credit be allowed. There must be agreements or arrangements between the corporation and the minister.

I find some of the details are repugnant. My next objection is that it requires authorization by the governor in council. During the course of this session, members of this party repeatedly intimated to government ministers that we are most dissatisfied with the extent to which this government is seeking more power and encroaching on the rights of individuals. I had occasion to say something about that this afternoon.

This phenomena probably accounts to some extent for the acts of student violence and protest seen all over this country. As governments seek more power and make individuals conform to the viewpoints of government expressed through orders in council, there is a rising tide of resentment. I call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that it is only when the governor in council sees fit to enact regulations for the kind of agreements contemplated that any benefits, meagre as they are, flow to the Indian people. This is simply not good enough.

I hope before this debate concludes the minister will indicate that the government intends to introduce the legislation which has been requested. We do not want to see programs and policies which place Indian people under inhibitions of having to depend on what the minister will work out by way of agreement with the corporation, making them wait until the governor in council sees fit to work out agreements. This should become a thing of the past. It is this colonialism and paternalism which marred the record of this country in its dealings with the Indian people.

I urge the minister to move rapidly when the occasion arises. Obviously, the government will not bring down this legislation before the Easter recess, but we on this side will insist that it be introduced before the end of this session. When that happens, the government will see the measure introduced into the Farm Credit Corporation Act. The companion measure in the Farm Credit Coporation Act will be replaced by something acceptable to the Indian people which will give them the opportunity of being in the same position as a non-Indian. They will have available to them credit facilities to engage in the agricultural industry. They will be able to take their place with the other farmers of Canada.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment to the motion makes a start at attempting to do something for people in an area where nothing has been done previously. How well it will be done will depend on the people who administer it, and the people who receive it. Advancing credit to Indians as individuals and groups through the Farm Syndicates Act can be done well or badly.

Of all the various credit acts, the Farm Syndicate Credits Act will fit the need of the reserves best. These people are in the habit of working together to a greater extent than other farmers. At the hearings of the standing committee, I requested that the officials of the Indian Affairs branch appear before the committee. They did so for a full session, answering questions and giving information as to how they thought this credit should be used and the circumstances under which it would be used.

According to the information supplied this is quite an undertaking. They stated that there were about 2 million acres of potential arable acreage on the Indian reserves, which would cost approximately $202 million to develop. They states $80 million could come from farm credit corporations, $40 million from ARDA and grants to the extent of something like $82 million.

When these representatives, Mr. Churchman and Mr. Bergevin, talked to us it seemed to me that they expressed a real wish and desire to move in this direction and make the program work. If I were to express any misgivings, they would be that in the initial stages of preparation for this legislation there had not been enough consultation with the people on the reserves who were going to use it. Our reports indicate that there was a fair amount of consultation between the credit corporation and the Department of Indian Affairs. There was some understanding of the problem and how it might be solved. There had been discussions on the amount of supervision required, and the type of personnel available for setting up this program on the reserves. I would judge that there is a fair understanding by the departments concerned of how they will tackle the problem.

My information is that out of a total male Indian population of 15,548 in the province of Saskatchewan only 407 make their living from farming. To anyone who lives in that province and knows the amount of land occupied by Indians, this indicates that so far as farming is concerned we have barely scratched the surface. From my own limited personal observation I believe the potential for development is there. Having visited reserves, I know there are a number of people who are trying to get going and who have the will to move forward. Under these amendments, if there is co-operation between the two departments concerned, without too much bureaucracy, we may achieve a breakthrough so far as the Canadian government and the Indian people are concerned.

When people on reserves start using credit, essentially they are in the same position as any other Canadian farmers using credit. Their operation must be a viable one. The relationship between their prices and costs has to be such that the operation will pay its way, that a living can be made, that the interest can be paid and the capital retired. This is the area we need to be most concerned about, because with farming in its present state the margin of return and income is so low that if large amounts of capital are injected the operation simply will not carry the load.

With the agricultural task force proposing that 30 per cent of our land be taken out of wheat production, it is a pretty tough outlook for those who are going to borrow money to get into farming. This is the situation with which we are faced, but I do not take as grim a view of it as the James Richardson and Sons newsletter of March 27 which said:

> A meeting of the major exporting countries will be held in Washington early next month to consider recent developments and discuss possible revisions in the agreement—

That is the International Grains Agreement.

> —which, in our opinion, is as dead as yesterday's newspaper, but hope springs eternal and we would be the first to applaud any constructive suggestions.

I do not think we as Canadians should accept that the I.G.A. is as dead as yesterday's newspaper. We have every right to expect that those who co-signed it along with us give it the full support it deserves. We have every right to expect that the United States government, which was the nation in particular that wanted us to enter into the GATT negotiations, would give full support to the I.G.A. But these are the circumstances under which we are operating. These are the circumstances under which the Farm Credit Corporation will be lending funds through the Farm Syndicates Act and other statutes.

We are faced with a possible switch in agricultural production, and in this area we need to be particularly attentive with respect to the Farm Syndicates Act. We should be more selective in the way that we make these moneys available. We should try to assess the market that is available for the areas in which we provide funds for farm production. It is time that we looked at the matter from this aspect. Up to now our basis of selection has largely been based on the individual farmer or on groups of individuals who had sufficient assets to give security. That was the main criterion, but I think we will have to use other criteria in the immediate future.

Another point which the task force made was that we should co-ordinate the various instruments of credit available under the government loaning agencies. Another suggestion was that we should disseminate our method of providing farm loans, that we should distribute it out among the provinces, instead of operating it through a central loaning agency on the federal level. This suggestion certainly does not recommend itself to me. I do not know how well it would work. This is one facet of its recommendations which the task force should be asked to explain in clearer terms. When the report comes in I hope this will be spelled out in a manner which can be accepted by reasonable and rational men.

Finally, I would hope that the government would give careful consideration to providing lower interest rates in areas where it thinks that expansion in farming can safely take place. In other words, the government should be more selective. I think this would be a useful approach, but whether consideration will be given to it or not remains to be seen. It does seem a tragedy that at the very moment when most of our farmers are in a very weak position in respect of their operations, they are faced with higher interest rates. If the forecasts of the task force are anywhere near correct, this is a time when many farmers will have to make a shift in production and borrow funds in order to make that shift. Therefore, it would not seem desirable that the interest rates should increase at this time. These circumstances would certainly deter farmers from making a shift rather than encourage them because higher interest rates would simply add to the costs of their operation. Of course, in these areas we must be careful. With all due respect to the task force, I think it is really a brave group of men who can forecast wheat production and markets over the next ten years. I have seen pretty able people attempt to do this in the past; they were wrong as often as they were right.

I think we must take notice of the circumstances. I believe our credit program should be aimed at the circumstances as we see them now, and as we may be able to see them for four or five years hence, but certainly not for a ten year period. I think our crash program for this period should be tailored in that direction. For that reason, I say one thing we need is lower interest rates in certain areas to enable people to make adjustments which may need to be made. I think this is one of the important things we should do. I disagree altogether with the task force, if I read the report correctly. I would say that our main credit instrument should be in the federal field and not the provincial.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I see there are about five minutes remaining, Mr. Speaker. I have just a few comments I wish to make. First, I am not sure whether the terminology in this amendment in respect of the Indians is clear or whether I am just becoming better able to understand it. However, it does seem to me to be better than the one contained in the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

I am still rather concerned about the practical applications of the amendments as it affects Indians on reserves. I believe that anyone who seeks to borrow money under the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act should have a sophisticated knowledge of farming operations. From the information I have there would not seem to be too many Indians who would have this type of knowledge. I know some of them would like to enlarge their farming operations or move out in a different direction. They need help and encouragement.

I should like to commend the minister for including this in the act, but I suggest that help is needed in other forms so that the Indians will be in a position to use this particular line of credit. Until they are in a more viable position they will not in many cases be able to take advantage of this particular act. The farm credit people in the minister's department should give more leadership and guidance in this area. I am not too impressed that the Indian Affairs Branch is giving proper leadership in this regard. Quite frankly, I think what has been accomplished in this regard is pretty awful. I would hope the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and his officials would be more active in this field in an effort to see that these people learn how to make proper use of credit. I would suggest to him that if there is any failure it will reflect on the agricultural department and, in this case, on the minister. I should not like to see this happen, because it may not be completely his fault. There are two departments involved in this. Frequently, this brings about an awkward situation.

I would suggest that the farm credit field under the Department of Agriculture in latter years has been fairly successful. I should like to see this continue. I hope the minister will consider some of these things because I believe it is important that these people make proper use of credit. This would help the economy in general and help these people in particular. I have not quite used up my five minutes so perhaps the minister might wish to reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GRAIN—ALLOCATION OF BOX CARS—DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WHEAT POOLS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on March 25 I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) a question concerning the allocations of box cars. At that time I alleged discrimination against the Saskatchewan wheat pool in respect of the allocation of box cars and pointed out that so far this year there had been some 5,000 fewer cars loaded than in the same period last year. On several occasions in the past fall and winter we were assured by one or other of the ministers of the Crown that the railways are co-operating and are doing really well in respect of the supplying of cars for grain.

For the information of the house I have the record in respect of cars of wheat and other grains loaded in western Canada for a few periods which I have picked at random. I have gone back to August 7. To August 7 from the beginning of last year, 61,507 fewer cars of wheat and other grains on western lines were loaded than the previous year. On December 31 it became worse. We had loaded 71,221 fewer cars of wheat and other grains on western lines. In the new year, by January 31 and in that one month, we had loaded 8,588 fewer cars of wheat and other grain than in the same month the previous year. From then on it started to improve slightly. As at February 21, there were 7,900 fewer cars and at February 28, there were 6,800 fewer cars. There were still 4,400 fewer cars by March 7, and 2,000 fewer cars of wheat and other grains were loaded as at March 14 this year compared to the same period last year.

As of today there are 915 cars of grain in transit destined for the lakehead which are being shipped to the Saskatchewan wheat pool. This is slightly less than 2 million bushels. As of today, there is space for over 5 million bushels in the Saskatchewan wheat pool terminals at the lakehead. In other words, the Saskatchewan wheat pool requires 2,000 cars now to fill the space at the lakehead terminals and to provide enough cars in transit over the next three weeks to ensure that the terminal space will be used to capacity when ships start loading at the lakehead which will be within the next few days. In recent days or weeks the Canadian Wheat Board has placed restrictions on car loadings at the lakehead. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Wheat Board should be asked to lift the restrictions immediately as they apply to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The facts are that except for one or two very small terminals all the other terminals are full. But the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool terminals are not. Yet restrictions on car loadings have been applied to them. In other years when the Saskatchewan pool terminals were full and terminals of line or private elevator companies were not full, restrictions were applied to the Wheat Pool only and not to the line company terminals.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool normally gets between 54 per cent and 55 per cent of the market. At the moment the figure stands at 52 per cent. In the past winter, it has fallen as low as 48 per cent. It seems strange to me that this drop of 2 per cent of the share of the market by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool should be equivalent to about 2,000 boxcars which is the number now needed to fill the space they have at the Lakehead and to provide sufficient loads in transit to make full use of shipping space.

There has been a principle for which western farmers have been fighting since 1950, and that is the principle of the allocation of boxcars to the elevator of the farmers' choice. In the application of the shipping orders this past winter, this principle has been overlooked. Open shipping Order No. 100 for the loading of tough and damp grain was implemented in such a manner as to discriminate against this principle. Cars supplied for this shipping order were supplied evenly, so that an elevator at a shipping point which normally enjoys 10 per cent of the market would receive as many cars as one which normally held 50 per cent of the market. This, in effect, prevented farmers from using elevators of their choice; they had to haul grain to elevators which they did not wish to use, and the net result was to prevent the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool from maintaining its normal share of the market. I ask the minister and the government to take action immediately to see to the lifting of restrictions on cars for the Lakehead as they apply to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool; that an additional 2,000 boxcars be made available to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool country elevators immediately, and that from here on the application of shipping order be made in such a way that cars are allocated to country elevators in accordance with the normal share of the market of each company and so as to implement the principle of the allotment of cars to the elevators of the farmer's choice.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I should like once again to assure the hon. member that the suggested criticism of the railway companies is misplaced. We have been in touch with the Wheat Board again with regard to this specific matter, as we have with regard to many others. Once again, the Wheat Board itself says that no criticism of the railways with respect to the Lakehead movement is justified. The railways are making a special effort to spot cars in the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool Lakehead terminals in relation to the ability of elevators to unload those cars.

Stocks at the Lakehead have now reached 71 million bushels and we are informed there are sufficient cars on track and in transit to fill the Lakehead terminals by the opening of navigation. As the terminals fill, the rate at which unloading can occur is reduced due to the extra time required to top up bins containing the various grades of wheat. In view of the extraordinarily serious situation which occurred in the movement of wheat this year and considering the condition of the grain and other factors, it is not surprising that dislocation occurred from time to time.

I was interested in the hon. member's figures with regard to the allocation of cars, and the figures he quoted with regard to their allocation to the Wheat Pool in particular. I notice he suggested that at one time during the winter the proportion had fallen as low as 48 per cent compared with last year's 54 per cent. I also noted his indication that at this time the figure has risen to 52 per cent, indicating a fairly significant improvement, and one which I think he should have mentioned as indicating an adjustment as circumstances permitted.

It is rather interesting to observe that as time goes on the problems about which hon. members opposite choose to rail become less and less serious, and their railing becomes less loud. I think the Canadian Wheat Board has done an admirable job in the circumstances of winter in getting grain into position and seeing that grain moves in a fashion appropriate to the demand. I repeat that the Canadian Wheat Board thinks criticism of the railways is not justified.

INDUSTRY—INQUIRY AS TO CONCENTRATION OF OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question on March 27 arose from a report prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as a result of the terms of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, which requires reporting by labour unions and corporations with regard to their financial status. This very large and detailed report indicates a rapid growth of corporate concentration in this country. It shows, for example—I have been able to make only a very cursory study in the short period since I raised my question—that K. C. Irving Ltd. interests in New Brunswick include oil and oil refining companies; they own Canada Veneeers Ltd.; they own an important interest in Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation; they own almost completely the New Brunswick Railway Company; they hold a very important share of Ocean Finance Limited; Ocean Steel and Construction Limited and a number of pulp and paper companies.

An article appeared in, I think the Toronto Telegram, the other day written by a columnist not unknown to members of this house, Dalton Camp. He was discussing a resolution adopted in the other place and proposed by a former national organizer of the Liberal party, Senator Davey. A committee was appointed to look into the single ownership of virtually all English speaking newspaper, radio and television interests in New Brunswick. By whom? By K. C. Irving. It may not be significant, as Mr. Camp points out, that the only time some people became interested in this control by Mr. Irving was when Mr. Irving started to oppose the Liberal party in New Brunswick. I make this comment as an aside to point out the tremendous influence in the maritimes which Mr. Irving has.

One can look at the interests of a well-known Toronto—or is it now Bahamian?—citizen, Mr. E. P. Taylor, who through his corporation controls a very substantial percentage of the breweries of this country, Dominion stores, Hollinger Gold Mines, B.C. Forest Products, Massey-Ferguson, Standard Radio; and I suppose I could go on for the next hour. One could look at another corporation whose name is not unknown to members of this house. I refer to James Richardson and Sons, which controls or has a controlling interest in several companies. They are: North American Elevators, Intercolonial Trading, Pioneer Grain, Valley Investments, and so on. All this has been documented in the book to which I referred, "Intercorporate Ownership", prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The questions which I tried to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) was whether his department was using this information and studying this material to see whether the kind of growth, the kind of gobbling up of companies which is going on by the large corporations of this country is, first of all, in conflict with the anti-combines laws of this country. After all, it was a Liberal government 50 years or more ago which first introduced the anti-combines legislation. It has not been very successful, but are those laws being breached through those corporate mergers, and if they are, is the government proposing new legislation?

Are we, through these corporate mergers, getting more and more administered prices, prices fixed not by supply and demand, not by the cost, but simply on the basis of what the owners, managers and directors of these corporations feel the traffic will bear? Are we paying more for pulp and paper where there has been no competition for some 50 years? Are we paying more for oil and for minerals than we ought to pay? These are the questions which this report poses in much greater detail and in much stronger language than anything which I or any member of the party which I represent has done in the past. It seems to me that the members of this house and of the public are entitled to know in the very near future if not tonight what the government proposes to do in this field.

There is one last point I wish to make. This report, extensive as it is, does not tell the people of Canada who in fact owns these corporations. It only makes clear that many of the holdings are in the names of other people. There are nominee companies, and we do not know who the actual owners are. Are we going to get the kind of law, and when are we going to get it, such as they have in the United States which will require both public and private corporations to state who owns them, what their assets and their worth are, what their profits are and what profits they are making in terms of percentage on investment? These are questions which are of vital importance to the people of Canada and to which we cannot get any answers until the government brings in legislation. I think we are entitled to know when we are going to get that kind of legislation.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The publication of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to which reference has been made consists of data which corporations with revenues above $500,000 or assets above $250,000 are required to file under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. Copies of these corporate returns are always kept on file in the corporations branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and are available for inspection by the public. Thus, the new D.B.S. publication which is based on 1965 data does not reveal any essentially new facts. It provides an analysis and makes the information more readily available to the public.

Officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have made use of this information for purposes of a general merger inquiry and also for a study of concentration of ownership in Canadian manufacturing industries. Both of these studies are described by the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act in his annual report for 1968. The information is also used by departmental officials from time to time in the course of other inquiries under the Combines Investigation Act.

The subject of the concentration of ownership and control of Canadian industry is one of the matters to which the Economic Council of Canada must necessarily be giving attention pursuant to the reference made by the government to the Council, asking for a study of and appropriate recommendations relating to competition policy in Canada.

The report of the Economic Council is expected by the middle of this year. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not intend to introduce any legislation relating to competition policy in general or to concentration of control of industry in Canada in particular, until he has had the benefit of the advice of the Economic Council, and the opportunity to give it careful study.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

Third report of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works—Mr. Hopkins.

INDUSTRY

COPPER—STEPS TO ASSURE SUPPLY FOR CANADIAN USE

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house of a change in the arrangements for control to offshore destinations of copper in refinery shapes. Since November, 1965 copper in all forms has been under control by the authority granted under the Export and Import Permits Act. However, in the case of refinery shapes permits have been issued on a yearly basis valid for multiple destinations.

The change that we contemplate has been brought about by the fact that over the past several months the London Metal Exchange price for copper has continued at a significantly higher level than the North American producer's price. This continuing price differential has intensified interest on the part of some of the copper concentrate producing mines, which have their concentrates smelted and refined in Canada, to sell their resultant copper at the London Metal Exchange price. These mines have traditionally sold a portion of their refined copper in Canada at the North American price.

Current conditions in the industry are such that there is a danger the continuing higher overseas price would attract away from Canada some of the normal and reasonable supplies of copper required by our copper consuming industries. In order to prevent this happening, several meetings have been held with the various sectors of the Canadian copper industry. I continue to hope that the industry will find its own solution to this problem. I consider it desirable however to make clear at this stage the action the government will take should a shortage in the supply of copper, traditionally available in the usual way for our users, develop in Canada.

If a legitimate shortage of copper for the Canadian fabricating industry occurs and is substantiated we will, under the authority of the Export and Import Permits Act, take the following steps:

1. Withdraw or withhold export permits for refinery shapes;

2. Ensure that Canadian fabricators of rod and wire products return all new bare copper scrap generated in their operations through normal trade channels to Canadian refineries for conversion or exchange for primary copper;

3. Ensure that the Canadian brass mills arrange for the return to their own mills of all useable scrap generated in their customers' operations.

These measures would be taken to the extent and degree necessary to ensure the reasonable requirements of Canadian copper users on a competitive basis.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there will be some questions later on arising out of the minister's statement. I would like to make just one point at the moment, and that is that I emphasize the importance of the government taking whatever steps prove to be necessary in due and adequate time to prevent a very substantial copper shortage from developing in this country, impeding the normal operations of our economy and perhaps resulting in very substantial inflationary pressures within the country.

In a minute my hon. friend from Peace River may have something to say about the lumber industry in which there has been a very substantial increase in prices of certain lumber products arising from a very substantial shortage of supply in relation to demand.

While I share the views of the minister and hope that the industry will work this problem out itself, I also hope that the minister will act in adequate time to make sure that the Canadian economy and the Canadian people are protected.

Copper Supply for Canadian Use

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, with this announcement the minister gives an example of the power of the government when it chooses to exercise its power. There is no question that there is more than just a veiled threat contained in his statement. He intends business. He intends that no copper shortage will develop in this country. He is insisting that the industry act in the best interests of Canada, and in this case to ensure that a supply is maintained.

• (2:10 p.m.)

This has not always been the case. There have been instances in which this country, one of the major producers of copper and nickel, has faced severe shortages while the raw material was being exported to the markets of the world. This was an intolerable situation which should not have been allowed to continue.

There are other points which are not answered in this statement. I hope the minister will be frank with us and state what kind of rebuffs he received from the industry. He obviously would not be taking this action unless there had been an indication that the industry was not prepared to co-operate.

We should also know the extent to which representation has been made to the Canadian government by North American users of copper, particularly in the United States. I hope there will be a frank reply from the minister in this regard.

The shortage of copper internationally gives Canadians a lever that we should use. In the past we have been critical of the fact that we have been little more than hewers of wood and drawers of water, to the detriment of our secondary industry. Now that there is a shortage it should be made clear that the top priority for our raw materials should go to manufacturers within Canada.

The minister may have to go beyond some of the things contained in this statement and consider an export marketing board perhaps comparable to our Wheat Board, so that our raw materials will be marketed through a board rather than through private companies in order to ensure that we have the maximum use of our own resources for the future development of secondary industry in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): First of all, I wish to thank the minister who has kindly sent me a copy in French of the statement he has just made in the house.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

He has just announced that due to a serious shortage of copper throughout the world at the present time, prices have risen markedly on the London metal exchange. He has also said that Canadian producers are interested in exporting to that market as they can get better prices there than in North America.

Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, this is the first time that we are faced with a copper shortage in peacetime, and the minister has made three suggestions to deal with the problem.

The first would be to withdraw export permits for refinery shapes.

Mr. Speaker, if war broke out tomorrow morning, I do not think the minister would have to use the first solution. He would rather ask for the discovery and operation of new mines to produce the copper needed.

Instead of withholding or withdrawing export permits, the minister should, in co-operation with his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), promote prospecting if there are not enough mines. In fact, the minister could visit my riding where I could show him many good spots for copper mining. If that metal is really in short supply in the country and in the world, I think a good way to fight present unemployment conditions would be to open new mines and give jobs to the unemployed.

That is why I think that instead of restricting these export permits for mining companies getting a better price somewhere else, some new mines should be developed in order to increase production of this much sought after mineral.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LUMBER AND PLYWOOD—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STABILIZE PRICING

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the government has been following closely recent developments in the building materials market in Canada and has taken particular note of the increasing cost of lumber and plywood. The price of lumber and plywood has responded to increased demand in the domestic and export markets during a period when weather conditions prevented the industry from maintaining an adequate supply of basic materials.

I have examined log exports, which have been under control by the authority granted under the Export and Import Permits Act and have found that roundwood exports are nominal and that Canada was in fact a net importer of logs last year. Recent action initiated by the government of British Columbia in co-operation with British Columbia industry would suggest that the volume of log exports will be still lower in 1969. I am satisfied that effective control is being achieved under the act.

In a situation of strong demand in relation to supply it is important that the longer term interests of the industry in domestic and foreign markets is not prejudiced by short term market considerations. Given the importance of our domestic requirements for housing and other purposes and our long standing export connections, I look to the industry to safeguard the requirements of traditional customers, both domestic and foreign, and resist any tendency to neglect the Canadian market in favour of speculative short term export demand.

Following consultations with certain cabinet colleagues, a number of steps have been taken to ameliorate the situation. Representation has been made to the railways by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) urging that an adequate supply of railway cars be made available for the movement of wood products. The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) is presently discussing with the provincial governments concerned the question of additional supplies of timber to be made available to industry until such time as a more stable supply/demand balance is achieved. I have also been assured by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) that his department will be alert to any threat of anti-competitive developments in the prevailing special market circumstances.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, because of the high regard we all have for the minister and because he has to labour under a tremendously heavy burden, having to answer to this house in connection with the problems of marketing and transportation of wheat, I struggled desperately to try to find something nice to say about the minister's statement and to be neutral, but try as hard as I could I found it impossible to do so.

This is one of the most innocuous statements we have had the pleasure of hearing in this house for some time. What the minister is in fact saying is that the sky is blue, God is in His heaven, the Liberal party will govern the country, wait a little while and everything will be fine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: I do not find much enthusiasm in that patter of applause on the other side. What we have seen is a demonstration of the absolute inability of this government to cope with the serious problems that are facing us.

Some time ago the government set up the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce, and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) indicated in his statements, by implication, and in the legislative orders which were advanced that all of these problems about pricing would be brought within the control of the federal government. The statement made by the minister has been produced in response to a number of questions by various hon. members of the opposition that deal with the price and supply of logs and the price and supply of lumber. These questions were addressed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

This is the answer we have been given to take back to our constituents. It suggests that the whole thing is a façade; that we have nothing at all that will in any way deal with these very serious problems of high prices that affect this country, particularly in relation to housing. I only wonder that the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) did not get into the act and give us his views in the matter.

We on this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, are bitterly disappointed. We feel there has been no adequate answer given, and that despite all the high promises made by all ministers, including the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, this government seems to have no power at all to control the increasing escalation of prices in this country.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I was going to begin my very brief comments by asking why the minister had produced this statement at all. It seems to me that it would have been better had he waited until some of the steps that he says have been taken produced some results about which he could inform the house, instead of making this kind of shadowy statement that really says very little.

We are concerned about two matters referred to in the statement. One of them is the export of logs, which has resulted in unemployment on the west coast. The fact is that there is still some short time in some sawmills in British Columbia. To the extent that unemployment has been reduced it has, of course, been due to changing weather conditions, which have enabled the resumption of logging operations on a much larger scale. This has produced more logs for the mills. But it is still a fact, which I ascertained only a few minutes ago from the people who head the loggers union on the west coast, that a number of mills are reduced to one shift a day and are still working short time. So nothing has in fact been done to meet this part of the problem. When the minister says in his statement, with a naïvety and disingenuousness that really is surprising, that he looks to the industry to safeguard the requirements of traditional customers, he really cannot be very serious in suggesting that an industry which has failed to do these things will suddenly be chastened by a remark made by the minister in a statement to this house.

The second factor with which this house and the country are concerned is the increasing price of timber, affecting directly the cost of housing. It is perfectly clear to anyone who has studied the matter at all—and I do not claim to have studied it more than a little—that the rate of increase in the price is not due to increased costs or any other justifiable reason. The increase is due merely to the fact that the demand is very great and the operators and corporations involved are getting what the traffic will bear. This is something our kind of society ought not to permit, and something our kind of economy cannot afford.

When we look at the last paragraph of the statement we find that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry is presently discussing with the provincial governments concerned the question of additional supplies of timber to be made available to industry. In view of this statement I have a right to ask how it is intended to make this additional timber available. I have a right to ask, at what price, under what conditions, by what arrangements, for what use? This is really almost an insulting kind of statement, namely to tell the house that there is discussion about making more timber available, without any facts surrounding it at all.

I am pleased to hear that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be vigilant with regard to increases in price and anti-competitive developments in this regard. But the fact is that prices have risen without justification and that action should have been taken before now. I congratulate the minister on a statement which is soft in words and even softer in meaning.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for making available to us a French copy of the statement he just made. However, we are still puzzled and we are somewhat embarrassed to comment.

One might wonder if we are not back in Europe or in England, or if there is a war on, because everybody is gone and it is impossible to work. Is there a shortage of lumber or of materials? What are we short of?

I must point out to the minister and to the government that what has been lacking is planning. When we consider that in 1966, 1967 and 1968—and I have figures to prove this—lumber yards in Montreal and all Eastern Canada had great difficulties to sell their lumber, and now we are being told that Canada is importing roundwood and logs.

Has the department responsible for ensuring the mobility of workers given up its task? Is planning related to building materials made in universities or in an ivory tower? One may wonder where that will lead us.

As far as our party is concerned, there are no congratulations to offer to the minister as to the existing planning. In fact, we lack money and several other things. If we have a surplus of raw materials that we cannot exploit how will we be able to make profits?

I would like to draw the minister's attention to that situation for, in my opinion, it should not arise every year. I suggest that a good device to give work to our unemployed people, once and for all, would be to do some planning for more than a year in advance.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF C.N.R. AND AIR CANADA ANNUAL REPORTS —SUGGESTED MOTION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): As has been mentioned several times in the house, there have been discussions about the prospect of referring to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications the most recently tabled annual reports of Air Canada and Canadian National Railways. I believe there might be agreement to accepting an order somewhat along the following terms without debate. With the consent of the house I would move:

That the annual reports for 1967 of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust and the auditors' report to parliament on the accounts of the Canadian National Railways system for 1967, all tabled on September 16, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

That the annual report for 1967 of Air Canada and the report to parliament of the auditors on the accounts of Air Canada for 1967, tabled March 14, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement for the minister to make the motion?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion can be submitted to the house only by unanimous consent. There is not unanimous consent. I regret that the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. It is my understanding of the rules that if an hon. member or hon. members refuse unanimous consent, one may ask that the name or names be divulged.

Mr. Speaker: That is not my understanding of the rules.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

SUGGESTED STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF PREPARATION OF LISTS, ELECTION EXPENSES AND OTHER MATTERS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are several matters relating to the election law that should be dealt with by parliament in this session. I should like to put before the house a suggestion as to how we might proceed.

Under the British North America Act a general election must be held by June 25, 1973. I understand that the Chief Electoral Officer will need upwards of 24 months between the time any extensive changes are made in the act and the time when the writ for an election is issued. This time is needed for the preparation, printing and distribution of the necessary forms and papers and for the instruction of election officers. Assuming that the next election is to take place at the last possible date—and that would be extraordinary—this means that the act should be ready about two years from now. I believe that hon. members in all quarters would want the act to be ready far sooner than that. I mention this point because it bears directly on how we should deal with the matters relating to the election law.

Canada Elections Act

Hon. members will recall that in 1963 the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections made an extensive study of the act, but whether or not, and how, some of the more important changes then considered could be made was found to depend almost entirely on the method to be used in the preparation of the lists of electors. Consequently, to secure adequate information on alternative methods of preparing the lists, a section was included in the Representation Commissioner Act to provide for the preparation of a report on that subject. That report was submitted to the Speaker in April 1968.

Four general elections have taken place since the revision of the Canada Elections Act in 1960. Undoubtedly there are changes which hon. members will wish to propose. Moreover the Chief Electoral Officer probably will have a number of improvements in the details to bring forward for consideration. Then there is the report of the Committee on Election Expenses made to the Secretary of State in 1966.

Finally, there is the statutory requirement that a review of the Representation Commissioner Act be proposed in the first session of parliament after 1968. It is my suggestion that since it was found in 1963 that any fundamental change in the method by which the lists of electors are prepared might require almost an entirely new act, we ask the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to deal first with the question of the method of preparing the lists.

It might be thought that the next step should be an examination of the proposed changes in the law relating to election expenses. However there is the time factor that I have mentioned already. I understand also that it would be possible to make changes in the election expenses provisions of the Canada Elections Act by a separate statute, and that these could be brought into effect without disrupting the time-consuming preparations which must be made by the Chief Electoral Officer. For this reason my suggestion is that after it has dealt with the method by which the lists are to be prepared, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be asked to review the remainder of the act, exclusive of those sections relating to election expenses.

The next step, the third step, will be for the committee to deal with the election expenses proposals. Fourth, and finally, it would be called upon to deal with the review of the Representation Commissioner Act required under section 22 of that Act.

The hon. member for the Yukon has suggested that the Dominion Controverted Elections Act should be considered by the standing committee. I believe that to be a good suggestion and I am prepared to make an appropriate motion. However I should hope that the committee could deal with this act in a way which would not delay its work on the other business referred to it.

I would propose therefore that an appropriate order to this effect be discussed during the recess with the house leaders of the various parties, and that upon our return after the Easter adjournment we should make an order of reference along the lines of the timetable I have indicated, so that the Committee on Privileges and Elections may consider these various matters.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it will be agreed throughout the house that this is a very important subject matter and one upon which action should be taken as early as possible by way of consideration, since it relates of course to the very foundation of our democracy. I certainly accept the suggestion, as I am sure will all hon. members, that the matters referred to should be referred to the committee as soon as possible after we return following the Easter recess. The suggestion which the minister has made with respect to the order of priorities appears to me to be reasonable, with this qualification—I doubt whether these matters can be treated in quite such watertight compartments as he seems to envisage. In other words, I doubt whether the committee can adequately consider these matters in a vacuum.

I would suggest that the possible necessity of considering the inter-relation of these various aspects, of our election procedures ought to be given further consideration before any attempt is made to place before the house a resolution which might unnecessarily tie the hands of the committee in an unfortunate way. I believe this matter should be considered very seriously. There can be no question that the subject matter to be discussed is going to take a lot of time and a lot of consideration. The report of the committee established to deal with election expenses and the reports of provincial committees which have been received or published since the report of the committee appointed by this house will require very careful consideration. These are matters which will occupy the full attention of members of the house.

I hope every effort will be made to permit as full and free a consideration of these matters as possible and, if I may say so without offence, that the government will not attempt to control the thought of the house or the committee in any way by the adoption of preconceived ideas as to what kind of reforms should or should not be undertaken. I certainly agree that the question should be proceeded with promptly, but I do caution the house about assuming too easily that these questions can all be fitted into isolated compartments, as the President of the Privy Council has indicated.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We appreciate the fact that the President of the Privy Council has outlined his thinking with regard to the important matters which relate to our election machinery. I may say to him that we will be quite prepared to participate in discussions during the Easter recess as to any order of reference which might be made when we come back on April 14.

There are however one or two things which I think should be said at this time. I am glad the President of the Privy Council, although he said the new machinery should be ready within two years from now, thought it really ought to be ready before that time. Two years from now could be too late; even majority governments have been known to fall apart. If we are to have the machinery ready for the next election I would say it should be ready by the end of 1970. If this kind of timetable has merit, I suggest too much is being put on the platter of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I should like to propose that the whole question of election expenses, namely a study of a report of the committee on that subject and any legislation to be based thereon, ought to be referred to a separate committee, even to a special committee.

I do not blame the President of the Privy Council for the order of priorities he has outlined, first, election lists; second, other details; third, election expenses and, finally, the Representation Commissioner Act. However, I am afraid that under this kind of timetable any action on the question of election expenses will get lost in the shuffle. We went through all this in the last parliament. We pressed for something to be done on this question and we were assured that something would be done until, finally, we were informed it was too late. I can see something like that happening again.

We agree that the machinery for drawing up the lists and so on is very important, but we feel that the most important aspect of this whole business as far as genuine democracy is concerned is reform of the means by which elections are paid for—there is another word I might have used as well as "paid for", but I will let it go at that today. So I urge that serious consideration be given to referring these matters to two committees, one to take care of the technical considerations, such as new methods of preparing the lists, and other details, and another to which the whole question of election expenses would be assigned so that we might see action on this issue in the present parliament well in advance of the next election.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to comment briefly on the ideas put forward by the previous speakers and related to the proposals of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) to the effect that an agenda should be drawn up and submitted to the committee on privileges and elections, with a view to amending the Canada Elections Act.

The reforms proposed for submission to the committee are overdue. As a matter of fact, the Ralliement Créditiste complained on various occasions about some anomalies they have had to endure at election time. We deplored, for instance, the fact that the electoral machine was under the control of the party in power.

The proposals made today will be looked into by the committee which will then report to the house. Its study will deal with new ways of drawing up lists of electors and setting up election expenditures.

Many changes could be brought about in this last area. Until now, the election epxenditures of the old political parties simply cannot be compared to those of the new parties, which have to compete with electoral machinery pretty well off from a financial standpoint. Technically speaking, the electoral machinery is under the sole control of the party in power. As to the proposals relating to the reduction of election expenditures, they are suggestions which I believe to be worthwhile but which have been made much too late. However, we must accept them and recommend to the house and to the President of the Privy Council to consider, during the Easter recess, an agenda that could be submitted to the committee on privileges and elections in order that new procedures can be adopted and carried out during the next election campaign.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MOTION TO TRANSFER TO GOVERNMENT ORDERS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I rise to make a suggestion with regard to the motion outstanding in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for LaSalle. If called now, the debate would proceed. I suggest a special order be made to have this transferred to government orders and called as the first item under government orders. In this way we can proceed right away with the oral question period. Perhaps this might be agreeable to the house. I move:

That the motion in the name of Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) be transferred to Government Orders and considered as the first order of business this day under Government Orders.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Baldwin: We are agreeable to accepting that. The minister might be prepared to accept the motion and we will not have to debate it.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to?

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST BY NEW BRUNSWICK FOR CONFERENCE ON FINANCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he will tell the house what reply he is making to the request of Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick for an "immediate and urgent" federal-provincial conference on finances?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I was just given notice of this telegram a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker. I have not considered the reply as yet. There was a federal-provincial meeting of ministers of finance in December. I am sure Premier Robichaud would not want a repetition of that meeting. We want to have a meeting with the provinces in which the provincial governments would be willing to co-operate with us to ensure that expenses at all levels of government are kept under control. I believe it might be useful if we had meetings at the official level between representatives of the various provincial governments and our own officials.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree that the Premier of New Brunswick would not like to receive the kind of reply he received from the Minister of Finance at the last conference. Does the Prime Minister not agree it is a matter that must be settled and dealt with at the political level? If it is left to the official level probably many months, if not years, would pass before the matter would come back to the provincial level. Is this the answer that the Prime Minister proposes to give to Premier Robichaud?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree it would take several months or years to reach decisions on this. I believe the Leader of the Opposition is trying to make politics with it. He knows that the provincial governments, especially those east of Ottawa, including the government of the province of which he was once the Prime Minister, are in difficult financial situations.

I believe he realizes this problem cannot be met by asking the federal government to give more money to the provinces, unless they want federal taxes to be increased in consequence.

An hon. Member: What about medicare?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member asks about medicare. I answered in my previous answer. The whole area we want to discuss with the provinces is how expenditures can be held in check in the various areas in which the federal government and the provincial governments are trying to limit them. We want to discuss the whole ambit of expenditures in which we are jointly included. This can only be done by a meeting for that purpose, and not by demanding more money.

NATO—REQUEST FOR POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT BEFORE EASTER RECESS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Prime Minister to inform this house whether it is his intention to announce his government's policy on Canada's role in NATO before the adjournment for the Easter recess.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will do my best to have that announcement ready before the adjournment for the Easter recess. I have always indicated that we consider that the meetings in Washington on April 9 and 10 are a deadline we have to meet. We are doing our best to meet that deadline. If we can meet the deadline of the house adjournment, we shall make a statement in this place.

Mr. Lewis: Can the Prime Minister not be a little more specific? Can he state if the house will be sitting tomorrow, if for no other reason than to listen to this important announcement on policy? Does the Prime Minister think he will be prepared to make such a statement tomorrow?

Mr. Trudeau: I think I will be ready, Mr. Speaker, but I will not guarantee it. We are having further meetings of cabinet committees and of cabinet before tomorrow.

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—COMMITTEE TO FUNCTION DURING BUILDING OPERATIONS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport.

Since the expropriations necessary for the construction of the new international airport would keep the mayor and the aldermen of the community of Sainte-Scholastique from fulfilling their obligations, under the Municipal Code, could the minister tell the house if he intends to establish a special committee to take over the administration of the community until the construction begins?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SUGGESTED LOWERING OF RATES FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I address a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that today is the day when the execution of many of our weekly newspapers across Canada will have been determined, with the decision postponed for a short period, and in view of the representations made by such non-political organizations as the Weekly Newspapers Association, has he decided that there should be an alteration in the new rates already determined upon, to the end that these newspapers so beneficial to the communities and the provinces that they serve shall not be sacrificed?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the weekly newspapers as a class were embarrassed probably the least of all the groups in the publishing industry, and their complaints have been far less than those of other groups. At the present time the people of Canada are paying approximately 86 per cent to 87 per cent of the costs of delivering weekly newspapers. We think that subsidy is too high, but that is what the taxpayers are presently contributing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is of interest that the applause throughout the Liberal benches supports the minister's statement. That should be on the record. I ask the minister whether he is not going to give reconsideration to the strong representations that have been made by the Weekly Newspapers Association, to preserve this necessary element in the village and town life of our country?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated in my answer that the present subsidy has reached a level of 86 per cent. I do not intend to increase that subsidy to 93 per cent or 94 per cent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They don't ask that.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. Can he assure the house that the weekly newspapers will not be financially embarrassed right out of business?

RETENTION OF RURAL POST OFFICES PENDING SUBSTITUTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Can he assure the house that there will be no close down of rural post offices until such time as adequate and satisfactory substitute service is available?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think I can tell you that if we examine 100 post offices approximately 40 of them will remain open, generally speaking for the reason that the hon. member has suggested, that we cannot substitute a better service. In other words the mere fact that we examine 100 or 200 post offices does not mean that 100 or 200 will be closed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EASTER DELIVERY—STEPS TO RELIEVE CONGESTION

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that there will be no mail delivery on Good Friday this week and that post offices are closed on Saturday, does the Postmaster General propose to take any steps to alleviate the congestion of mail, so that we will have reasonable dispatch of the weekend three days mail delivery?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we have been working this out with the unions.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO BILINGUAL BONUS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

On January 17, 1967, as stated on page 11878 of the official debates of the house, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson declared that the 7 per cent bonus for bilingual employees would be retroactive to October 1, 1966.

Could the Prime Minister tell the house when the order in council of October 1966 will be brought into force and if those civil servants can expect a salary adjustment before the bill concerning the official languages is passed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That question comes under the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that it be directed to him.

AIR TRANSPORT

MERGER BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the Government of Canada presently conducting merger discussions regarding Canadian air services overseas with Canadian Pacific Airlines on behalf of Air Canada, or is Air Canada discussing this possibility directly with Canadian Pacific Airlines?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no to both questions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

STE. SCHOLASTIQUE—JET OVERHAUL FACILITIES

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say whether plans for the new airport at St. Scholastique include the construction of jet overhaul base facilities at that new airport for both Air Canada and any other national Canadian carriers?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge there is no plan to build base maintenance facilities at St. Scholastique. There will of course be line maintenance facilities, but according to the last briefing I had there was no plan to build base maintenance facilities.

Mr. Schreyer: Can the minister say whether it is the intention to ferry all aircraft requiring more extensive overhaul from St. Scholastique to Dorval?

Mr. Hellyer: That would be the present intention, Mr. Speaker. However, these plans are always subject to change as the hon. member knows, and therefore it is very difficult to speculate or to make commitments, or at least to give information which is not subject to change some time in the future. But I think that if the question were directed to the management of the companies at this stage it would be their plan to ferry the planes to Dorval for base maintenance.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further supplementary to the minister. In view of the fact that $21 million is being allocated for base extension at Dorval, does not the minister regard the Air Canada position as one of gross deception—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is argumentation and not a question.

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED LEAK

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the judgment made yesterday, and I am not referring to the judgment other than just as a preamble, would the Prime Minister now consider it would be proper to set up a judicial inquiry in reference to the cabinet leak in reference to the new Montreal airport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

PRETAPING OF DECISIONS PRIOR TO PRESENTATION IN HOUSE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it now accepted as government policy that they are prepared to pretape government decisions and cabinet decisions prior to making those decisions, or at least prior to the announcement of those decisions in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be that we will have to look at the whole area of information services to the public, and it may be that such facilities in the future would have to be brought under government control.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct one more supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of his statement made outside the house, does he now consider that the Official Secrets Act does apply to people unsworn in other parts, that are not part of government, such as television and radio stations?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am informed it applies to contractors but I would not presume to give the hon. member a legal opinion.

BROADCASTING

TAPING OF COMMENTS FOR LATER DISTRIBUTION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): As a further supplementary question, did the minister express a legal opinion outside the House of Commons on TV stations in Canada last evening?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I gave my own opinion, Mr. Speaker, based on advice I had received; but I was interested yesterday, and I thought the hon. member and the hon. member for York South sort of pointed up beautifully the importance of the electronic media when they left the chamber before Orders of the Day were concluded—

Mr. Speaker: Order—

Mr. Hellyer: —to tape their comments—

Mr. Speaker: Order—

Mr. Hellyer: —in order to catch the early news last night.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Transport see no distinction between a member of the opposition going out to make a comment on the behavior of a minister in the house, and a minister of the Crown making a recording several days before an official announcement which might have a very prejudicial effect upon the people of this country?

Mr. Hellyer: I believe there is, indeed, a difference but I think absenting oneself from the house without leave is mentioned in the rules. I was surprised my hon. friend did not have the patience to wait—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether I might rise on a question of privilege. I realize this government is becoming more dictatorial every day, but I did not know I had to ask special leave from the Minister of Transport, who has leaked a secret to the nation. If he recognized his responsibility he would realize that he is now in breach of the oath he took as Privy Councillor of this nation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Lewis: Eldon, he does not deserve this attention.

An hon. Member: Who—the hon. member for Greenwood?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

A.B.M. SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I will try to change the subject by directing a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would he be prepared to bring before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence soon after the Easter recess the evidence available to the government on the proposed installation of the anti-ballistic missile system in the United States and any possible Canadian involvement in the system?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there would be any objection on our part to a comprehensive briefing that could be held in camera. I have no objection to that. The member seems to think we have written memoranda or an exchange of printed material, which we do not have. We have at the technical level exchanged views and technical data that we can translate into a briefing for the committee. I think that would be agreeable to me.

Mr. Brewin: I should like to ask the minister whether there is material of an unclassified nature which was made available either in writing or orally to the government and which could properly be put before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I have no objection to trying to sort this out. Certainly part of the material could be made public but if there is to be an extensive briefing there are a number of things which would be considered to be classified. Whichever approach is preferable can be followed.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister is one to which I have been seeking an answer now for some time, including yesterday. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether the government endorses the compulsory retirement at age 60 of employees of Devco, a crown corporation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this question would have to be asked of the minister responsible for Devco.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to draw to the attention of the Prime Minister that this question goes back to early last fall and has been asked several times within the last two weeks. It was asked again yesterday. According to the Prime Minister's roster the minister was supposed to have been here to answer the question yesterday. Devco has taken action to retire crown corporation employees compulsorily at age 60. Surely the Prime Minister as leader of the government should know whether it is government policy to retire employees compulsorily at age 60. Would he give consideration to this question?

Mr. Trudeau: I will give consideration to that question, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacInnis: While the Prime Minister is giving consideration to my question will he give consideration to the uncertainty under which the miners of Cape Breton are living because of the unjust society he is running?

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION OF OLD AGE PENSIONERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the minister has put off until after the Easter recess the bringing in of his bill to amend the Income Tax Act, will he now consider including in that bill, when he does bring it in, provision to make it unnecessary for people who have only their old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement to pay income tax thereon?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of change of exemptions which was not provided for in the resolution I presented to the house. As my friend knows, the whole matter of personal exemptions and tax reform in this country is under consideration. I hope to bring in a white paper in this regard in June.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that we have changed the rule since his earlier resolution was passed and that the bill he will now bring in will be a bill de novo, and that he could alter it to provide for the change I have suggested.

Mr. Benson: I am quite aware I could change the bill.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the minister's use of the word "hope" in respect of what we took to be a commitment that the white paper would be brought in in June, is this no longer assured but purely an expression of hope on the part of the minister?

Mr. Benson: I have learned that in government everything is a hope. My intention is to produce a white paper in June if it is at all possible to do so.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance inform the house, in view of the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not with us today, that the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with regard to the raising of the exemption for those in receipt of pension assistance will come under the details of the review currently being carried on by his department in respect of the matter of welfare and so on?

Mr. Benson: I am sure all provisions surrounding our welfare programs are being considered and studied by the department.

A.B.M. SYSTEM—USE OF CANADAN BASES BY U.S.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Is he now ready to answer the question I put to the Prime Minister last Wednesday, March 26 as to whether Canada is committed or has agreed to allow the American government to use Canadian bases located in the Canadian Far North, in order to establish an emergency airborne system, and has the government pledged itself to supply those bases or to allow the United States to use such bases on our territory?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to look into that.

MEDICAL SERVICE TO DEPENDANTS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Has medical service to dependants on a Canadian forces base been discontinued as of yesterday and, if so, is this related to the introduction of medicare in the province of Manitoba?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to check it, but this would be news to me. I know that we adapt our rates to provincial rates. I think that is the only change that has been contemplated. I will have to check, but I would be very surprised.

[Later:]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have been provided with the answer to the question posed by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and perhaps I might be allowed to give that answer now. In trying to provide extra service to the dependants of our servicemen we undertook, on a three-month trial basis, to provide limited medical care to dependants. This trial was conducted at Shilo, Manitoba, and ended yesterday. We found the costs too high to make any firm undertaking to provide this service at other than isolated bases. This trial was in no way connected with medicare or the entry of Manitoba into the medicare plan.

FREEZE ON MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Following the minister's assurance to the house on Monday that the freight rate freeze in Atlantic Canada will remain in effect pending consideration of Bill C-182, would the minister assure the house at this time that the bill which freezes the rates on maritime transportation will be brought before the house immediately upon the resumption of parliament after the Easter recess?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): It is the government's policy to proceed with the bill soon following our return from the Easter recess.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE OF SHEET METAL WORKERS—EFFECT ON GRAIN DRYING

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In light of reports from the Lakehead that a strike of sheet metal workers at that point has created an emergency in respect of the installation of new grain drying equipment and as a consequence has seriously aggravated the problem of drying wet and damp grain, can the minister indicate when this strike may be settled and whether he is taking action to expedite the settlement?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I may be wrong, Mr. Speaker, but I think the dispute in question is one that comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial minister of labour.

COPPER—MEETING OF CANADIAN REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In respect of the statement the minister made today concerning copper, may I ask him whether he has received assurances from the copper producers in this country that Canadian requirements will be met?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The purpose of the announcement I made was to make sure of that. There is still a discrepancy between what is offered by the producers and what is needed by the Canadian users. The present situation is very complicated: a number of producers who were shipping to Noranda for refining and were selling at the North America price also would like to benefit from the L.M.E. price. We are trying to get the industry, in its best interests, to make the adjustment itself. I hope we will manage.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say whether he has received any representations from American users of copper in regard to this question?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the same subject for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I agree with him that it is a rather complicated matter, but is the minister's statement a threat to the producers that if they do not play ball and go along with the system of controls they will not be allowed to sell outside Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the exercise is to make sure that manufacturers in Canada will get their copper in quantities and at a price that is reasonable, so that they will remain competitive among themselves and also competitive in foreign markets.

Mr. Saltsman: A further supplementary question. Has the minister made any representations to scrap dealers in copper with a view to granting export licences?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, they are covered in part by the statement that I have made today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—INCENTIVE TO PRODUCE HIGHER QUALITY

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the government indicated that the change in hog grading 90 days ago was based on the incentive to improve the breed of hogs rather than the estimated saving of $2 million, would the minister indicate whether his announcement last week, which will result in a further reduction in the payments made to the producers, was made after consultation with producers' organizations or was it a straight economy move on the part of the government?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the principle of concentrating incentive to produce higher quality hogs has been discussed with the producers' organizations many times, and they have agreed with the principle.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REQUEST THAT REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the 1968 Auditor General's report contains a number of matters which are a continuation of the very interesting subjects that are now engaging the attention of the public accounts committee, would the minister confer with his colleague the President of the Privy Council to see whether it would be possible to make an order today or tomorrow to refer to the Public Accounts Committee the 1968 Auditor General's report? I mention this in view of the Easter recess which may provide an opportunity for members, particularly those with a penchant for horror tales, to read the report.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss this matter with the President of the Privy Council.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—DISPUTE BETWEEN SHIPPING FEDERATION AND LONGSHOREMEN

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Last night I asked the minister a series of questions relating to the situation in the port of Montreal. Since the minister is in the house today, is he in a position to give the house a statement as to what he foresees in the next few days in regard to keeping this port open?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, negotiations between the Shipping Federation and the I.L.A. in relation to the ports of Montreal, Trois Rivières and Quebec broke off last night at about eleven o'clock. Owing to the fact that the judge involved, Alan Gold, had been chairing meetings almost continuously for the last 96 hours, both sides agreed that the judge be given an extension of 48 hours in which to prepare a report to be submitted to the Minister of Labour. As the hon. gentleman is aware, upon the receipt of that report both sides will be entitled within seven days either to go on strike or to lock out. In the meantime I have been informed that the port activities are continuing in a very orderly fashion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question. Would the minister inform the house whether on receipt of the report from the conciliator he is legally empowered to refer it back to the conciliator for further consideration or other action?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have already done that on several occasions last year. If I were to predict what will happen I would say, in tribute to Judge Alan Gold who has acted as chairman of the arbitration board and at the same time, as chairman of the conciliation board, for 15 months, that knowing the deep interest he has in the port of Montreal I am confident that when I receive the report I will find it to be a complete one, and therefore there would be no reason to return it.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—RETENTION OF CONSULTANTS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he explain why the major consultant firm that is preparing an estimate on the Prince Edward Island causeway has not been told to discontinue its work?

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—RELEASE OF STANFORD RESEARCH REPORT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise whether the government has acceded to the request of the Premier of Prince Edward Island with reference to the release of the Stanford Research Institute report and the report of Colonel Edward Churchill on the Northumberland causeway, both of which documents the Prince Edward Island legislature wishes to have tabled and examined?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask the Minister of Public Works to provide me with the answer to those questions.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question raised by the hon. member for Hillsborough relates, of course, in part at least to the notice of motion for production of papers which was accepted some weeks if not months ago. At that time an indication was given by the Minister of Transport, and I believe by the government house leader, that the only hold-up was in waiting for the consent of the Prince Edward Island government, which now seems to have been available for some little time. I wonder whether either the Minister of Transport or the Prime Minister would give the house the assurance that before we adjourn for the Easter break tomorrow these documents will be tabled and made available to the house?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated previously I do not think I referred specifically to the Prince Edward Island government; I referred to the provincial governments. My understanding is that as yet consent has not been received. Therefore, in accordance with the practice of the house I cannot give the undertaking requested without the necessary consent.

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not possible to regard a request from the Prince Edward Island government as a de facto indication of consent? They are asking for it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): But I said "provincial governments"—plural.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—LOWER U.S. SALE PRICE
UNDER AGREEMENT

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the idea of the U.S.-Canada car pact was parity of price between cars made in Canada and cars made in the United States, could the minister explain to the house why the new Ford model known as the Maverick will be selling for approximately $380 less in the United States than it will sell for in Canada, even though the car is made in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that the question is in order. The hon. member's question is rather in the form of an argument, and I do not think the time of the house should be devoted to arguments instead of questions at this time.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a related question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the minister been given an explanation by the Ford Motor Company of the difference in price and been advised why a Canadian made automobile sells in the United States for $380 less than its advertised price in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is the same question, Mr. Speaker, but it is not argumentative.

Mr. Speaker: I realize it is not an argument. Since I feel unhappy that the hon. member for Wellington did not receive an answer, perhaps the minister would reply to both questions.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before asking for an explanation from the Ford Motor Company I asked for an explanation from my officials. First of all, if you deduct from the $300 the difference in currency exchange and also the difference in sales tax, this reduces the amount to a little over $100. The average differential in production cost between the two countries has been brought down from 9 per cent in 1964 to 3.8 per cent in 1969. A difference of about $100 is equivalent to about 5 per cent. There is still the difference between 5 per cent and 3.8 per cent. I am meeting Mr. Scott, president of Ford Motors, on April 7, and either before or at that time I will bring this to his attention and ask for an explanation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question to the Minister. The minister has stated there is a difference of approximately $100, taking into consideration the factors he mentioned. I should like to ask him why there is not complete parity.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of the pact is to achieve that.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR TASK FORCE REPORT FOLLOWING CONGRESS MEETING

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the Congress on Agriculture is over, can the minister tell us when we may expect the final report of the task force?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the task force itself indicated at the congress that it hoped to have the report ready by the end of this year. If I may, I would like to advise hon. members that I still have a few of the papers and documents prepared for the congress, and if any hon. member would like them and would send my office a request we would be glad to send him a copy. I think, however, I can wait only a few more days because there are agricultural schools and universities that would like to have the copies that we have left.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate whether there will be tabled in the house or presented to the agricultural committee some form of report from the congress, so we may know the views of the 400 people who conferred on the report of the task force?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, a summary of the discussion at the congress will be prepared and distributed to interested parties and observers, which includes all the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture of this house. If any other member would like to have it and if he would advise my office we will see that he gets it.

FARM MACHINERY

ACTION FOLLOWING FINDINGS OF PRICE DIFFERENTIALS

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, since the commission on farm machinery prices presented a study paper to the Congress on Agriculture, can the minister say whether his department is conducting any discussions with a view to taking follow-up action based on the commission's findings which show price differentials of many hundreds of dollars?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. What is more, Dr. Barber of that commission has indicated to me that he will have a further paper for me within a very few days taking into account the different pricing practices, if I may call them that, in many places in addition to the difference between those practices in England and Canada. In fairness to the commission and to the farming industry, before we proceed I think we should wait the extra time it may take for the submission of the report encompassing all these pricing practices.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON BILL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the house whether the Minister of Justice and other government officials have completed consultations with those premiers and attorneys general of the provinces that have found the official languages bill unacceptable? If so, can the Prime Minister advise when the house may expect to resume debate on the official languages bill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has, I believe, met with the attorney general of each province. He has advised me of the results of those meetings. It appears that certain amendments are desired by some of the provinces if they do not take this bill to the Supreme Court. We are considering these amendments now with the minister and the Secretary of State. Once cabinet has decided whether it will accept these amendments, they will either be brought into the house or we will proceed with the bill as it stands.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister be so bold as to indicate which sections of the present bill the premiers and attorneys general have found unacceptable?

Mr. Trudeau: No, I would not be that bold, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OFFICER TRAINING PAY TO CADETS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. When will the 1968 officer training pay be paid to cadet groups?

[Later:]

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked a question in this house. It may have been considered argumentative, but I felt the Minister of National Defence wanted to answer it.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did want to answer that I did not know.

[Translation]

OIL

U.S. REACTION TO CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he has passed on to the President of the United States and to members of his cabinet the information given to him by the Canadian association of independent oil producers, to the effect that the Northern part of the United States could absorb between 150,000 and 200,000 barrels of Canadian fuel oil per day, and in the affirmative, what was their reaction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this question broadly last week with the President of the United States, and we have agreed to organize meetings of officials, which are to begin effectively tomorrow in Washington. Canadian officials will discuss this problem with United States officials.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a complementary question.

Has the Canadian government adopted the same policy as the United States, particularly in appointing a group called a task force, made up of a committee of ministers whose task would be to follow this question, or is the Canadian government going to appoint only civil servants?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the responsible minister is looking into the matter very closely, and the work that he is having done is being done within the departments.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF BILL C-173

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a brief point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this is the first day of April, does that mean that Bill C-173 has come into effect, and may I ask the Prime Minister whether we should now call certain ministers by their new names or does there have to be some other formality?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the swearing in of ministers in respect of their new titles and functions took place at noon today. They would be honoured to be called by their new names now, especially the Minister of Communications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We have another name for him.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Monday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the house on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood that when the motion was called yesterday Your Honour recognized the hon. member for LaSalle. In view of the fact that the hon. member is the chairman and spokesman of the committee and was, I understand, prepared to take the floor—I also judge this to be so from what I can see from here—to justify and, hopefully, support the recommendation, I ask whether the hon. member is not going to speak in accordance with the fact that he was recognized by Your Honour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's point of order is not well taken. If the hon. member rose and sought the floor I would recognize him. But my understanding is that he did not rise; he bowed to the Chair for the purpose of indicating that he was moving the motion. If the hon. member rises, I recognize that as chairman of the committee he would be given preference. But I would think this might perhaps be wishful thinking on the part of the hon. member for Peace River.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: In making the point of order I am prepared to say that if there is any dispute I would be perfectly prepared to move that the hon. member for LaSalle be now heard.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): As always, one can only be amused by the antics of the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Dinsdale: You should see yourself.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must say that these contributions from the other side are very interesting. They are probably better than we will get for the rest of the debate.

As I have already indicated previously in my remarks on this question, the government has no difficulty in accepting the initial part of the report of the standing committee. In particular we take no exception to the first of the recommendations made, except perhaps to say that we feel that for the benefit of maritime shippers the freeze should not be limited to the period mentioned by the committee but should be extended for the period of a full year. But I make no complaint on this point, and a bill to that effect has now been introduced in the house.

I should like, however, to address my remarks to the second of the two recommendations of the committee, to wit:

—the order of the Canadian Transport Commission, authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 5 1969, be left in abeyance, until your committee tables its complete report in respect to this question.

I should now like to suggest to the house—and this was referred to by Mr. Speaker in his opinion delivered yesterday—that although this report has been found to be in order the house should not concur in it.

An hon. Member: Does Mr. Pickersgill think this?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am flattered the hon. member thinks I have the clarity and the agility of thought of the president of the Canadian Transport Commission.

My contentions are the ones that I mentioned yesterday. The principal one is that the house should not endeavour to do by a resolution what can only be done by a statute. In other words, we should not try by a motion of this kind to set aside an act of parliament. As hon. members know, and as was already pointed out, in previous years parliament has indicated that the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Transport Commission as autonomous organizations should assume the responsibility for decisions with respect to rail line abandonment. I think it is a salutary principle for parliament, having given that authority to those two bodies with respect to the management of this problem, to permit these bodies to carry out their responsibilities until parliament chooses by an appropriate amending statute to change the authority in that regard.

Hon. members opposite appear to be of the opinion that the house should ignore legislation giving the Canadian Transport Commission and the C.N.R. the authority to make decisions on questions of abandonment of rail service. I do not share their view, and I submit to the house that if we are not proposing to change the statute law in this regard—and the position of the government is that we should not change it—we should not give to the two bodies directions of the kind suggested in the proposed report.

For these reasons I move:

That the said report be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with instruction that they have power to amend the same by deleting the fourth paragraph thereof, which reads as follows: "Your committee recommends that the order of the Canadian Transport Commission, authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 5, 1969, be left in abeyance, until your committee tables its complete report in respect to this question."

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement to the amendment?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that the amendment is defective in that it refers to certain words as being in the fourth paragraph of the report. As I read them they are in the fifth paragraph of the report. The other day Your Honour ruled that a motion that did not make sense could not be put by the Chair.

Mr. McGrath: April Fool.

An hon. Member: Why don't you give up now when you are ahead?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I speak on the point of order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should just like to make an observation. It seems to me that it is the fourth paragraph of the report. The first paragraph seems to be what constitutes a preamble.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But it is a paragraph.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not know how seriously the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wants to press this point, but I would suggest that the reference really is to the fourth paragraph of the report, unless there is serious objection to that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday there was a ruling based on a technicality. Surely to goodness if we are going to be technical on one day we should be technical on the next. It is not a case of fitting rulings to the circumstances, and I am not suggesting that there is any such consideration in Your Honour's mind. But surely if there is a reference to stated words in a particular paragraph and unless the paragraphs are numbered, the paragraph referred to, whether it is a preamble, a recital or what have you, is still paragraph 1, and so on down the line. If such is the case, and I will take the word of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that these words are in the fifth paragraph, then no such words appear in the fourth paragraph. If the amendment is defective, it is defective.

Mr. Baldwin: May I suggest that a fairly serious objection has been made, so possibly Your Honour might like to give the matter some consideration and in the meantime we could proceed with the debate. If Your Honour should hold that the amendment is defective, the President of the Privy Council might be prepared to come back and ask for unanimous consent to make another motion. Whether or not unanimous consent will be granted is another thing, but in the meantime the debate might proceed so that we do not lose any time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Rather than belabour the point perhaps I should say again that I did make the observation that the first paragraph constituted a preamble and the following four paragraphs were substantive paragraphs. That point is being questioned. In the interest of expediency, perhaps it might be best to accept the point of order and to say the amendment is defective. Possibly the President of the Privy Council could arrange for someone to move an amendment subsequently.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, before making some other observations on this matter I should like to deal very briefly with two of the more serious arguments just presented by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). First of all, I should like to make clear that according to my understanding of the report of the committee it did not instruct the house as to what it should do; it merely recommended to the house a certain course of action.

This matter was dealt with extensively yesterday when another point of order was being discussed by my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I do not intend to belabour the point now, but I think it is quite clear from the simple definition of the word "recommend" in Webster's Dictionary that there was nothing peremptory in the committee's report so far as the government is concerned. It was merely a recommendation to the government by the committee that a certain course of action be followed. It most certainly did not specify in any way the method by which that course of action should be carried out. That was left entirely to the government because it is the government's prerogative. It merely recommended that certain things be done.

The second objection raised by the President of the Privy Council concerns the fact that we are asking the government to undo something that is within the prerogative of the Canadian Transport Commission. Again, this is not the case. Under the act which brought the Canadian Transport Commission into existence, provision is made for appeals from decisions of the commission. In particular, provision is made for an appeal to the Governor in Council, in other words, to the cabinet.

In this case a committee of this house was, in a sense, providing a form of appeal. That committee was empowered by the house to investigate problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces, a very broad field. Having heard evidence it was, in effect, providing for an appeal from the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission with reference to passenger service in the province of Newfoundland carried out by the Canadian National Railways but abrogated as of a certain date, namely, April 5, following an order of the C.T.C. This is what the report of the committee purported to do. As any group of persons might do it was seeking an appeal from this decision. On these two grounds I submit that both the arguments put forward by the President of the Privy Council are completely invalid.

A word, now, on the subject of the work of committees generally and of the Transport Committee in particular. When the new rules were introduced into this house I believe the public in general and, indeed, most hon. members, had high hopes for the committee system under the new arrangements. Some of us had misgivings as to the way in which these committees might operate, first, because all of them except one had a government member as chairman—the notable exception being the Public Accounts Committee—and, second, because all the committees had a majority of government members sitting on them. For these reasons a number of us felt misgivings about the way in which the committees would perform and whether they would work as effectively as was hoped. It was certainly made clear as far as the study of spending estimates was concerned that the work of the opposition parties in the house would be done by these new committees. The fears to which I have referred, namely, that the committees would not be able to carry out their work properly have now been realized, though, as is often the case in parliament and elsewhere, not in the way which had been expected.

I should like to make a few remarks on the subject of the Transport Committee in particular, in connection with which I have had certain responsibilities. I should also like to make some reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. It is true that the Transport Committee has been faced with certain problems, but I should like to make it clear that as far as I and my hon. friends are concerned we do not put the blame for these difficulties on either of the chairmen who have presided over that committee up to now or, indeed, on any of the government members of the committee. So far as we are concerned the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard) and the hon. member for Manicougan (Mr. Blouin) conducted themselves in the most exemplary manner. I think they did very good work indeed. As for the government members of the committee and, indeed, all members of the committee, they worked very hard and very seriously and did their work objectively as far as I was able to observe. With the exception of one or two occasions which were not the fault of anyone within the committee itself, committee members did their work in a sincere, hardworking manner and with a minimum of partisan politics. I believe I can say this without fear of contradiction.

I believe the Transport Committee would never have experienced some of the problems it encountered on one or two occasions had it not been for outside interference by, it would appear, on one occasion—and certainly it is the case on this occasion—the leader of the house.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Oxford has just uttered a falsehood. He said that on a previous occasion there had been interference on my part. The Committee on Privileges and Elections clearly established that I had nothing to do with the proceedings of the Transport Committee, and this was acknowledged by all the members of that committee, including members of his own party. I hope he will withdraw the insinuation that I attempted to control the committee at that time.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A question of privilege has been raised by the President of the Privy Council and I take it the hon. member for Oxford was about to respond.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was just about to comment, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, no report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections has yet been approved by the house. The subject was dealt with by that committee to some extent, of course, but as far as I know—and I was a member of the committee—the report has not been concurred in unanimously at all.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It was concurred in by the committee.

Mr. Nesbitt: There may have been a committee report but it certainly was not unanimous. I am speaking from memory at the moment. In any event, it seems that the President of the Privy Council is unduly sensitive in this regard.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I just have a regard for the truth.

Mr. Nesbitt: Let the hon. gentleman keep still for a moment. I realize he is having difficulty in containing himself but I would remind him that when he is dealing with members of the opposition he is not dealing with members of his own caucus whom he can shut up at will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: If the President of the Privy Council would pay a little less attention to some of his friends, with whom he seems to be carrying on a conversation, and more attention to what is being said I think he would find I referred to the first instance of difficulty in the Transport Committee as arising from a suspicion of interference. Certainly that suspicion existed. Among other things, it led to the matter being referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. At one time—and this is on record in Hansard—the President of the Privy Council made reference to the committee in this house, saying there was information that certain things had taken place. This, not unreasonably, caused concern among opposition members and the incident was the subject of an inquiry before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. When the committee's report is presented and probably debated, more of these circumstances will perhaps be brought to light and placed in better perspective. This point may be open to question if the President of the Privy Council feels so sensitive about it. That is his view, of course.

But in the second instance there is no doubt there has been interference or attempted interference with this committee by the hon. gentleman. First, as Your Honour is well aware, the President of the Privy Council attempted to do so by means of a point of order which proved to be not a very substantial one. Now he has attempted to do indirectly, by moving an amendment to the motion to adopt the committee's report, what he could not do directly. It seems a great pity to me that he should seek to do so in view of the work which has been done by the Transport Committee in particular as well as by other committees.

The Transport Committee made a rather unprecedented trip in order to gain information for the government and the house. It took a trip recently on instructions from the house to look into transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces. I understand that the Committee on agriculture, the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and other committees are taking similar trips. I think this is very good, Mr. Speaker. These trips involve a great deal of time on the part of members of these committees who are away from their duties and the house. Exclusive concentration of effort is required in this regard. They involve considerable expense to the house.

I think this work and expense are justified, Mr. Speaker. These committees are being given additional work and responsibility. Committees I have been associated with have done their work well, objectively and with a minimum of partisanship. It is a pity that when reports are brought in they are obviously interfered with by the government. In this particular case there was interference by the blunt instrument of the government, the President of the Privy Council. There were suspicions in the Transport Committee that the President of the Privy Council was acting on behalf of others, perhaps members of the Canadian Transport Commission who are former members of this house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nesbitt: It is a shame, I agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that the rules of relevancy restrict the debate at this point to the content of the report. While I appreciate that the hon. member has had a much longer experience in the house than I have, I think it is in the best interests of the procedures of the house that we follow the rules of relevancy and restrict our remarks as much as possible to the content of the report.

Mr. Nesbitt: I quite agree with Your Honour. I think the remarks I made concerning the subject of committees and committee reports have been highly relevant. I will not continue with further remarks along this line if you feel they are out of order. I will continue in a different vein.

It seems a pity that recommendations carefully drawn up by members of the Transport Committee are disregarded. It is a waste of time for committees to work hard and travel round the country if their recommendations are to be tossed aside at the whim of the government. An example is the report of this committee. The government was well aware that this committee was in the Atlantic provinces and would be presenting a report on its return. Before the committee had an opportunity to submit its report, the government made its decision regarding the Prince Edward Island causeway. They did not consider any recommendations the committee would have in that regard.

An hon. Member: They did not have to.

Mr. Nesbitt: An hon. member said they did not have to. Of course not. The government is omnipotent and all-powerful. When the government sends a committee on a trip it does not have the courtesy to wait for the committee to return before making decisions.

An hon. Member: How do you know? You were not there.

Mr. Nesbitt: The hon. member no doubt is trying to make political hay. I happen to be a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and was in Europe at the time.

The substance of the report of the Transport Committee concerns the passenger service of the Newfoundland railway. I do not intend to deal with the substance. Others of my colleagues will do so in more detail and at greater length.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a cheerful prospect.

Mr. Nesbitt: It may be cheerful for some and not so cheerful for others. The government is never obliged to accept the recommendations of any committee. When we are starting out with a new set of rules, powers and authority for committees I feel the government should bend over backwards in trying to accept and follow these reports. If the government had certain views on a matter being studied by the committee it could have made formal representations to members of the committee, which would have avoided all this trouble.

It is quite clear that the lines of communication between the cabinet and the Canadian Transport Commission have somehow got fouled up. If the government had made its views known to members of the committee, some compromise arrangement could have been worked out. I am in no way attaching any blame to the chairman. It is quite obvious he is not to blame. Had the government attempted to transmit its views, this waste of time in the house could have been avoided.

As I mentioned before, very sincere and hard work has been done by the chairman and members of the Transport Committee. The same applies to other committees of which I have knowledge. This new work is being carried out by the committees at a very great cost to the taxpayers. The government should keep itself better informed of what is going on in the committees.

It is quite clear the cat is now out of the bag. It is not a very nice cat. It is a big, scruffy alley cat. The alley cat I refer to is the government's intention to toss aside committee reports without inquiring what the committee is doing. If this is going to continue, members of this house will be perfectly justified in feeling that their work on committees is a waste of time.

The government should not toss aside committee reports without taking the trouble to find out what is going on. Many weeks of hard work have been put into these reports and the taxpayers' money is being spent so that the members of these committees can travel. Most of us could be better employed looking after our correspondence and doing other work in the house. If this kind of thing continues, I see very little hope for the committee system. Government members can take what they wish out of this, but to say that if it continues a great many members may feel it will be a waste of time to go to committee meetings. I hope the government will bear these observations in mind, pull up its socks, and make the committee system work a little better.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I must first refer to the opening remarks of the government house leader when he said that he had not interfered previously in the work of any committee. As has been mentioned by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), he did interfere on a previous occasion in the house when a question was put to him, as recorded at page 3587 of Hansard for December 6, 1968, when he said:

> I have not studied this; I am advised that the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

I have been around long enough in public life at the municipal, provincial and federal levels to know what interference means, and that was interference. In the present case we have interference of the worst kind, and the minister cannot evade that charge.

I am not too sure whether the amendment he has introduced has been accepted, but I will not be surprised if an additional amendment is proposed by a member of the committee. However, the fact remains that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said that the Transport Committee should not have set aside an act of parliament. No one on that committee had any intention of setting aside an act of parliament. The basic fact is that we made a recommendation to the house, and as a recommendation it should not cause any problem for the government house leader.

Committee members had no intention of saying that the Canadian Transport Commission should not be entitled to carry out its obligations. We know what the particular order of that commission said, and we know that it has not really been implemented. If any standing committee is to have a useful function in parliament then surely a recommendation submitted by it should be accepted.

As an example I refer to a recommendation which came to this house from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on December 3 last. The committee said in its report of that date:

> Your committee recommends that its order of reference be enlarged allowing it to consider the following—

That was in the second report of the standing committee, and the next day the chairman of the committee moved that that report be concurred in. That was just a recommendation to the house, and there is absolutely no difference between that type of recommendation and the last report of the committee with which we are now concerned.

The recommendation of the committee at that time was that it be allowed to consider:

> The problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces.

If the house leader was concerned about that recommendation he should have raised the matter at the time the second report of the committee was submitted and should not try to play around now with words in order to gain a particular point he wishes to make.

It is important that we take a close look at the directions given to the committee by the house before the committee went on its trip to the Atlantic provinces, as recorded in Votes and Proceedings for Friday, January 17:

> On motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), seconded by Mr. Hellyer, it was ordered,—That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered to consider and report on the problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces, and that, for the purposes of its inquiry, the Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada and the Clerk and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to accompany the committee.

If it was the intention of the cabinet to exclude rail transportation from the committee's terms of reference then that should have been specified in that motion. I suggest it would be advisable for hon. members opposite to take a look at exactly what the word transportation means. In the Dictionary of Sociology and Related Sciences the definition of transportation is:

> The carriage or removal of persons or things by a conveyance on land, water, or in the air e.g., by beast, human or animal drawn sledge or vehicle, boat, railroad, automotive vehicle, or aircraft. Also, the material instruments involved.

I suggest that is what we went to the Atlantic provinces to study. The second definition of transportation that it gives is:

> A method of punishment originally devised by England for the most hardened criminals. It had a precedent in that country in the practice of outlawry whereby certain persons could escape hanging by abjuring the realm.

I suggest that the government house leader should take to heart that second definition of transportation and leave this house in the light of his actions over the last two days.

When the committee visited the Atlantic provinces the whole concept of transportation had to be taken into consideration. Members of the committee knew at that time that a bill was before the House of Commons dealing with growth areas, and transportation policy must be considered in the context of growth areas. If the government is really concerned about the problems of slow growth areas it must realize the real meaning of the word transportation. It must realize that good transportation can be very helpful to growth areas.

We know that the recommendation made by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was unanimously adopted by that committee. I suggest it is a myth to pretend that the members of the committee who were absent would have voted otherwise. We know that the house leader did not communicate with anyone not to allow this particular motion to be adopted, at least so far as the records are concerned.

In the records of the Transport Committee there is reference to a press release from the Canadian National indicating that the company was going to leave the passenger train in service. In addition, Canadian National filed with the committee a letter under date of March 14, 1969, and I would like to read a portion of that report dealing with Newfoundland passenger train service:

> Throughout the winter we have been keeping a close check on the situation and as the April 15th date approaches, which is the date on which the Commission must make its final disposition of the matter, we are in the process of reassessing the situation. This, basically, was the intended import of the recent statements by Newfoundland Railway officers in response to inquiries. From the recent statistics that I have it will be apparent that there has been a very heavy response to the bus operation by the people of Newfoundland, and in light of this our operating people are examining the position regarding the number of buses that will be required during the coming months. In view of this, we have in contemplation the possibility of having the train services extended for a short period beyond April 15th.

I conclude with these words:

> —it is not our intention that the train services be continued indefinitely.

If Canadian National Railways as a crown corporation can take unto itself the right to decide when that particular passenger train will be discontinued, then I say in all sincerity that if this committee, as a creature of the House of Commons, does not have the same right then every committee of the house might just as well be disbanded.

Let us take a look at Board Order No. R-2673. I shall read only a portion of the fifth part:

> —it may upon notice to the applicants and to all parties who appeared before it in December, 1967, reconvene the hearing to consider whether in the exercise of its general powers under the Railway Act, it should impose further conditions to be met prior to the discontinuance of the passenger train service or direct the adoption of such measures as may be necessary to ensure the adequacy of the bus service.

Surely anyone who is willing to consider the pros and cons of the situation will realize that we have as much right to make recommendations to the House of Commons as anyone else in respect of adopting the recommendation of the Canadian Transport Commission. We are not going beyond our line of authority. We have as much right as Canadian National Railways to make the decision that has been made. I agree with the decision. I believe it is an excellent decision other than the fact that I do not agree with the short-term continuation. I believe this too will have to be taken into consideration by the Canadian Transport Commission at a later date. It would appear that somewhere along the line there must have been some direction given to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I hope the cabinet will not decide, merely on the whim of the house leader, that they will not accept the recommendations we make.

Perhaps the only purpose of the standing committees at this time in the House of Commons is to give the backbenchers of the Liberal party something to do. This was stated by one of their members on a television show. But if the backbenchers of the Liberal party do make a decision that the cabinet is not in favour of, the cabinet will not allow it. If I were a backbencher of that party I would dissociate myself from any committee of the house where such a situation arises. I do not want to serve on committees if every recommendation is to be considered in the way this recommendation has been treated by the house leader. I think he should take a very close look at himself in the mirror this evening to see why he has taken the position he has in respect of this subject.

I assure the minister that there was no intention to have a debate on this matter. It was only through the intervention of the house leader that it became necessary. I should like to refer to a situation which developed two years ago. On January 19, 1968, the seconder of the motion of the house leader today, Mr. Olson, asked this question:

> Has the government received a request that the Governor in Council reverse the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners which allowed the C.P.R. to abandon the passenger service known as the Dominion? If so, will the government grant a hearing to reconsider this decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners?

The answer was:

> The Governor in Council has a duty under the law to hear any appeal from the decision of the Board on matters of fact. There has been notice that there will be an appeal and it is the intention of the government to hear any appeal that may be made as expeditiously as possible.

I believe it is absolutely a must that the members of this house realize what section 53 of the Railway Act says. In this section it is very apparent that the Governor in Council has the right to take action on his own initiative. It is apparent that rather than embarrass themselves by failing to take action the government would rather foist the responsibility on the committee which was set up to look into this transportation problem. I should like to read in part section 53(1) of the Railway Act:

> The Governor in Council may at any time in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the Board—

That is as far as I shall read. It goes on with other language having to do with something not connected with this point. I suggest that the members of the cabinet, if they were sincere about dealing with the transportation problems of the people of Newfoundland, would initiate on their own an appeal to set aside the ruling of the Canadian Transport Commission.

In view of the fact that a committee was set up to go to the Atlantic provinces to look into the transportation situation, I believe the government has done a disservice to the people of Newfoundland on their 20th anniversary, as was mentioned yesterday by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I suggest that surely deep down they should realize that they should do something of their own volition instead of waiting for something else to happen in this regard. They must realize that on the very same day the committee filed its report to which exception is taken, at least in respect of a part of it, the cabinet itself introduced a bill extending the freeze on maritime freight rates. I wonder whether it was a coincidence that both these things appeared on the same day.

At public expense a committee went to the Atlantic provinces to look into their transportation problems, including maritime freight rates, and on the same day it made its report the government introduced a bill. I believe this is beyond mere coincidence. The same thing applies in respect of the causeway. Many briefs were presented to us while we were down there. We all know the feelings of the people there concerning the causeway. Yet the government did not have the grace to await our return before making its announcement in respect of the causeway. This is a black mark against the government which will not be forgotten by the people of the Atlantic provinces.

I should like to conclude by imploring the members of the Committee on Transport and Communications to realize that they have a responsibility to the people who presented briefs to us during our tour of the Atlantic provinces. If we now to fail to make a report of any kind whatsoever, I suggest that every citizen of the country should say that never again do they want a committee to tour their area to find out at first hand what is going on. The people who presented briefs to us were sincere. They had been waiting for a year to do so. Many of them considered that the appeal they made to the committee was logical. Surely no one in Canada should have to be a lawyer to the nth degree, or whatever the legal terminology may be, to explain a situation, nor should we expect a citizen of this country to have to dig into the law books in order to become a part of this country.

I say that the people of this nation are entitled to far more consideration than the house leader has given them by asking the committee at this time to change what we agreed to unanimously, and the point should be made very clear that it was a unanimous decision of the committee. There may have been two members who did not vote but the decision of the committee was unanimous.

I should also like to mention the fact that the last motion with regard to the submission of the report was made by myself, in which the chairman was asked to report our concurrence in that report. The chairman was quite willing to report our concurrence in that report until it was held up by the house leader. I think this is a slam against the chairman and against every committee. I suggest that the Committee on Transport and Communications should be abolished completely if this is the treatment that can be expected from the cabinet.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to deal with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In this regard I should like to introduce an amendment to the motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau):

> That the said report be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with instruction that they delete from the report the paragraph thereof which reads as follows:
> "Your Committee recommends that the Order of the Canadian Transport Commission, authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 5, 1969, be left in abeyance, until your Committee tables its complete report in respect to this question."

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I understand there is already an amendment to the motion before the house. What the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is doing, in effect, is moving an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The position taken by the Chair earlier was that in light of the objections taken by members of the opposition the original amendment was held defective and therefore was disallowed. The hon. member has moved an amendment and I understand that if I put the amendment now I take the floor from him. Since he wishes to continue his remarks I will put the amendment when he has concluded.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in addition to putting forward the amendment to amend the report I also want to make some remarks on the matter itself.

With all due respect to the hon. members for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) and Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), I completely disagree with some of the points they make. When the President of the Privy Council rose to speak this afternoon, he pointed out that we had set up the Canadian Transport Commission in the last parliament to do certain jobs. One of these jobs was to take under advisement applications for the abandonment of rail and rail passenger service.

At that time I was a member of the transport committee and I recall we discussed the bill at great length. When it was voted on it was supported by the Conservative party, the New Democratic party and the Creditiste party. All parties in the house in the last parliament supported the idea of setting up a commission, which was a continuation of the board of transport commissioners, to deal with matters such as this so that we could take them out of the political arena. If we accepted what is being put forward today in this report, we would be accepting the general principle that even although parliament had set up boards to do certain jobs in a non-political way parliament still has the right to give directions and make recommendations to such boards when questions are under consideration.

Let me apply this principle to other boards that parliament has set up to do particular jobs. I refer to the Canada Labour Relations Board, the Tax Appeal Board and many others. They were set up to do certain tasks that parliament did not want to do itself and because parliament thought that the interests of the Canadian people would be better served by them being done in this way.

If members of parliament either in committee or in the house were to make recommendations to a board while a matter was under consideration by that board, indicating which way parliament thought the board should rule on the question, it would be a travesty of parliament's own decision to set up the board in the first place. As the President of the Privy Council said this afternoon, we would be attempting to do by resolution something different from what we had already done by statute. In the last parliament we set up a commission by statute to do this job, and I think we should let it do it.

It has been said that there is an appeal provision in the Railway Act that was amended in the last parliament whereby decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission can be reviewed. It is very significant that no appeal was made by persons or groups in Newfoundland against the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to discontinue the Newfoundland rail passenger service. Yesterday I believe the hon. member for St. John's East said that he and five other Conservative members of the house did make an appeal. If that is so, then theirs was the only appeal.

I should now like to turn to the arguments that were put forward by the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Moose Jaw. First of all, the hon. member for Oxford suggested that in making this report the committee was, in effect, making an appeal. I submit that is nonsense. Nowhere in the report is it suggested that we are making an appeal to the Governor in Council. Nowhere in the debate leading up to the adoption of the report was it suggested we were making an appeal. What the hon. member is trying to do is to rationalize a bad report.

In addition, the hon. member for Moose Jaw said that when people came before the committee in Newfoundland and recommended that the passenger service be continued they thought they were making an appeal. That is incorrect. I was on that committee during the tour and I pointed out to them that there was an appeal in law, that if they wished to make an appeal they had to do so to the Governor in Council.

Mr. Skoberg: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Moose Jaw on a point of order.

Mr. Skoberg: I would question the hon. member's reference to my being incorrect in my observation regarding the trip. The evidence will prove—and we have the transcripts of the evidence—that people were under the impression in many cases that they were making an appeal to our committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: It is true that when some people came to the committee they perhaps thought they were doing enough to initiate an appeal, but it was pointed out to them very quickly that it was not enough. It is also significant that many of the witnesses who came to the committee and suggested that the railway passenger service be continued were representatives of unions affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress who have a whole raft of lawyers and advisers. If they thought that presenting a brief to the Transport Committee was equivalent to appealing under the Railway Act, then they certainly have bad advisers in their unions. It is obvious that they looked at the law, felt that they did not have good grounds for an appeal, and then decided to approach the Transport Committee—

Mr. Carter: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Allmand: —or they should have known that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for St. John's West on a point of order.

Mr. Carter: I think the hon. member is as aware of the facts as I am. The leader of one union in Newfoundland did make an appeal to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). How high do you have to go to appeal?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: During the hearings in Newfoundland it was pointed out that although one union leader had sent a letter to the Prime Minister this was not sufficient to constitute an appeal under the Railway Act. I think that if he had consulted the legal and other advisers to the trade union movement he would have been told that that was the case.

On the point at issue, whether or not parliament or a committee of parliament should make recommendations to a board which is a court of record charged with making certain decisions, it is my belief we should not make such recommendations if we have decided beforehand to set up a board for that very purpose. With respect to the statement that this report represents the consensus of the committee or is a unanimous report and that to send it back to the committee would be wrong, I submit that the report does not represent the feelings of the majority of the committee who visited Newfoundland, because the day the committee made the report, five or six of the committee members had, unfortunately, to be absent on other committee work or to attend to serious business and could not go the committee.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Allmand: I and two other members of the house—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw on a question of privilege.

Mr. Skoberg: I ask whether a majority of the members at any committee meeting would not make a majority report if they all voted unanimously for it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Moose Jaw was speaking I let him make his speech; I let him say everything he wanted to say. Unfortunately, he insists on intervening at this time to raise points that are not really relevant to what I am saying.

Mr. Skoberg: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Allmand: All the members who visited Newfoundland, heard the briefs and studied the question unfortunately were not at the committee meeting and did not consent to the report the day it was adopted. The hon. member for Oxford, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) and myself were away with the External Affairs Committee. I certainly would never have consented to this report, and I have been on the transport committee since 1965.

I was with the committee in Newfoundland and the maritimes, and I do not agree with the recommendations of this report. Therefore to suggest that by sending the report back to the committee we would be doing a disservice to the committee system, or to the committee itself, is ill-founded. If we are to have a report which really represents the knowledge and feelings of those who went to Newfoundland, we must send this report back to the committee. How can hon. members of the opposition say that this report represents the feelings of the committee when so many who went to Newfoundland and studied the question were not in the committee the day the report was adopted? Opposition members are trying to sneak through a report which really does not represent the feelings of the majority of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? I just want to be sure that I understood him. Is he telling me that a unanimous report of a committee does not represent the views of the majority of the committee?

Mr. Allmand: I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that the report, even if it is unanimous, does not represent the opinion of those who went to study the problem in Newfoundland and the maritimes, because unfortunately a large percentage of the members of the committee were not there the day the report was adopted in the committee.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not the committee's fault.

Mr. Allmand: If it is not the committee's fault, do not try to say that the report represents the opinion of those who were in Newfoundland. It does not represent their opinion.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? I know he would not want to mislead the house and leave the wrong impression on the record. However, the hon. member is speaking erroneously as to what took place the night the committee drafted the report. He was not there and consequently he is not in a position to speak authoritatively on what took place. In point of fact, the night the report was prepared nine Liberal members were present and those nine members had accompanied the committee on its tour of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Allmand: I understand that is not so, Mr. Speaker. In any case, I do not think that is the question. The point was made that under our new committee system we give great weight to reports of committees. I agree with that. I think we should give great weight to the reports of committees. But I am concerned with the weight of argument and the facts contained in the report. We expect a good report to come from a committee. When a report comes from a committee, it is for parliament in the final analysis to decide upon those things which the report suggests. Parliament is not obliged to accept any report from a committee. Because there are so many committees we can serve on perhaps only two or three, and there are many important issues with which we cannot deal. As a result we leave it to a committee to study certain things in depth, and when they bring back a report we expect it to be well founded and to contain solid arguments from the committee's point of view.

In this particular case, as one who made the study in Newfoundland I find this report is very poor in its second recommendation because it suggests that we violate the principle of not making recommendations to a board, to a court of record, on matters which it has under its jurisdiction. My observations in Newfoundland lead me to say that from a transportation point of view the majority of the people are better served by the bus service than by the train service. The train service operated only three times a week. The bus service operates not only every day but has two trans-island and several local services every day. This service gives the people of Newfoundland a much wider variety of alternatives and a much better and faster schedule going from one end of Newfoundland to the other.

If this were a country of unlimited resources and could afford to continue the railway service even though very few people were using it, I would be all for it; I would say that we should continue the passenger rail service even though the majority of Newfoundlanders were not using it. But when we went before the people of Newfoundland they told us that their highest priority in transportation was trunk roads. If we are to use our resources in Newfoundland to the best of our ability, we cannot continue to support all modes of transportation when some are not being used by the public and are operating at great loss. We have to concentrate our transportation resources in those areas to which the government of Newfoundland gives highest priority, and it gives highest priority to the road service.

In my opinion, the only people who would be hurt by the discontinuance of the rail passenger service are the men who work on the railway. I suggest that in their case something must be done. We cannot just stop this service and put these men out of work without finding them other employment. The C.N.R. has tried to provide them with alternative work in the bus service, but there are still some who will be laid off work. It is up to the railway and the government to make sure that they have work. But from the transportation point of view I submit that the bus service is providing better service to the people of Newfoundland. They recognize this because they are flocking in greater and greater numbers to the bus service and abandoning even more the rail passenger service.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat the argument made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), that if we are going to set up boards and courts of record to do certain things it is wrong for us, while the board or court of record is making its decision or has under review a certain question, to make recommendations to it as to how it should reach its decision. What we are then doing is interfering politically in a situation which we have said should not be political.

I submit that for these reasons the second part of this report should be sent back to the committee where all those who made the trip to Newfoundland would have the chance to contribute to the report. I am sure we would then come up with a much better report which would receive the acceptance of this house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought I would get the afternoon off so far as speaking is concerned, but with these amendments being moved it is not possible.

The reason the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce moved this amendment was to correct the defect in the amendment moved by the President of the Privy Council. But I notice that he has made another change, and it is with respect to this other change that I raise my point of order. The amendment of the President of the Privy Council had the following words in it:

—with instruction that they have power to amend the same by deleting—

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce changed it to read:

—with instruction that they delete from the report—

I submit there is quite a difference between giving a committee the power to make a change and instructing it to make a specific change.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: It would make their work a lot easier.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It would also spell the death of committees that much faster.

An hon. Member: Do you want to move an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall ignore these voices that come from members in their seats. Citation 323(2) of Beauchesne's fourth edition reads:

A report from a committee cannot be amended by the house, but it must be referred back to the committee.

We were told a number of times in the last couple of days that you cannot do indirectly what you are not permitted to do directly. That is precisely what this amendment does. It amends this report on the floor of the house. It says that this report must come back to us with the final paragraph deleted.

I submit that the amendment as the President of the Privy Council moved it in the first place was to give the committee power to make the proposed change. I am aware of the fact that citation 322 in Beauchesne's fourth edition seems to say that the house can give an instruction to amend the report in any respect. But I think you, sir, have been in this house long enough, and I have been here a little longer, to know that you have to go to the source of just about everything that Beauchesne put in his book. In this case he tells us where to go, to Bourinot's fourth edition at page 480. Actually the paragraph in question starts on page 479. It is a long paragraph and I will only read the pertinent parts, the first of which is as follows:

A report may be referred back to a committee for further consideration, or with instructions giving them power to amend the same in any respect. In this way a committee may regularly reconsider and even reverse a decision it has previously arrived at.

Then if you go through all of the words in that paragraph and come to the end you find the following sentence:

Consequently the correct procedure in all analogous cases is for the house to give the committee instructions which will enable it to consider the whole question again.

I do not favour this amendment at all but I think the government should at least put it in proper form, and I submit that it is not in order for the house to be asked in effect to amend the report. We are not allowed to do that. It is out of order for the house to be asked to tell the committee precisely what it shall do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All that the house has the right to do is to give the committee power to make any change it wishes. It can even spell out what particular power it is giving to it. I submit that the form of the amendment in the first place was correct, but the form of the amendment as submitted by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is out of keeping with the usual way of doing things and violates the basic principle that you cannot amend a committee's report on the floor of the house. I suggest to hon. members opposite that they put their amendment in the correct procedural form.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the point made by the hon. member. As he indicated Beauchesne is quite categorical. I suggest it is a sophistry or quibbling on the part of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The citation is perfectly clear. It reads:

> When the motion to concur is proposed the report may be referred back to the committee for further consideration or with instruction to amend it in any respect.

There is none of this sophistry about the word "power" as opposed to the word "instruction". As Beauchesne indicates, it is a direct instruction.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a misquotation of Bourinot.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is a direct quotation of Beauchesne. Why does the hon. member not open his ears?

Some hon. Members: Temper!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What I said was that Beauchesne is misquoting Bourinot.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I was not misquoting Bourinot, I was directly quoting Beauchesne. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is coming through with great high fidelity today, but that empty sound box of his makes him come through a little more strongly this afternoon.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The point is that there is no limitation, as the hon. member seeks to invent, on the power of the house to give instruction in this regard. The house has full power to instruct the committee to make a deletion of the kind that is referred to in this amendment. I should like to refer to a citation at page 479 of Bourinot's fourth edition, and particularly to footnote (g) on which the citation is founded, part of which reads as follows:

> It was then moved and agreed that the question be referred back, with instructions to present a plan of reporting to the house.

There is an example of specific instructions by the house to a committee. If the house wishes to re-open the whole question and review the entire report it can say so, but it is also in order for the house to instruct the committee to deal with one specific point in the report, the only one on which there is any real question.

Mr. Baldwin: This is a most appropriate day, April 1, to have proceedings of this nature and I only hope, if I can correctly prophesy what will be done, that if the amendment moved by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is ruled out of order the government, even on April 1, might be able to come up with the right form of amendment the third time.

If Your Honour will direct your attention to citation 322, I think the last sentence outlines what the house cannot or should not do, and the second part of the sentence indicates the method which can be adopted when the house wishes to send back to a committee for its consideration part of a report which it feels should be changed, amended or deleted. It reads:

> It is not competent for a committee to reconsider and reverse its own decision—

Consequently the house can direct it to do so.

> —but if the House resolves that such reconsideration is necessary—

Here I ask Your Honour to note carefully the pertinent wording.

> —the correct procedure is for the House to give the committee instructions which will enable it to consider the whole question again.

The word used here is "consider", not "direct". I am reinforced in the view that this is the proper way to proceed because on turning to page 397 of Beauchesne I find form 95, "On Concurrence in a Committee Report", which has apparently been accepted by the learned authority. It reads as follows:

> The question being proposed "That the Final Report of the Select Standing (or Special) Committee on ... be now concurred in,"
> Mr. ... moves in amendment thereto, seconded by Mr. ..., "That the said Report be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the Select Standing (or Special) Committee on ... with instruction that they have power to amend the same so as to recommend that—

This conforms to citation 322 which says that the house may recommit a report to a committee with instructions that they have power to amend the same so as to make recommendations.

Your Honour has either to make that choice or to accept the terms of an amendment which gives mandatory direction to the committee and under which freedom is taken away entirely from the committee. If this is the kind of procedure which the house contemplates when dealing with select or standing committees, their proceedings will be reduced to a travesty. If the government or any of its supporters wish to move the type of amendment which is acceptable to the house, all they have to do is turn to page 397 for a model. Anything which does not resemble this should not be accepted by Your Honour or by the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank hon. members for their contributions to the discussion. I have in fact done some preliminary research in anticipation that this matter might be raised. The arguments put forward by the hon. member for Peace River and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raise points which need to be considered very carefully, but I suggest that there are citations other than those they have chosen which are categorical on this important question.

First, I should like to refer to the decision of Mr. Speaker Rhodes as found in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, at page 690:

> When a motion is made for the adoption of a report of a committee it is competent for the House to adopt it, to reject it, or to refer it back to the committee with or without instructions.

A citation which is probably more relevant and more particular, and one which in this particular case I have to treat as decisive in deciding this question, is Beauchesne's citation 326 as it appears on page 252:

> The report of a Standing Committee should be considered final only when it is adopted by the House, because, until then, the House can refer it back to the committee with instruction to amend it in any particular.

I am therefore obliged to rule that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is in order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has at least scored one point today. I found it difficult to believe my ears when I listened to his speech in this debate. If the leader of the house ever had any doubt about the significance of this day I am sure he was convinced, having heard the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, that this was really April Fool's day.

The hon. member made a number of points to which too much attention should probably not be paid because I am sure the house did not take them seriously. One of the points he made was particularly unfortunate, however, because I am sure he did not wish to leave the wrong impression on the record. He suggested that the committee's report did not reflect the true recommendation of the committee. I can only believe that the hon. member reached this conclusion because he was absent on the night the report was drafted. Otherwise, there is no accounting for the fact that notwithstanding his absence nine of his hon. friends in the Liberal party were present. Those members were very diligent members of the committee during its tour of the Atlantic provinces and, like all other members of the committee, they worked very hard in studying all the transportation needs of the Atlantic provinces as well as on the preparation of the preliminary report which is now being disputed by the leader of the house and the hon. member who are seeking to have it sent back to the committee.

This is not the first occasion on which this matter has been raised in this chamber. We tried earlier, in the course of the preparation of the second report of the standing committee. Concurrence in that report was moved in the house, but it did not contain one resolution which had been approved by the majority of the committee. That resolution, which was adopted by the committee on November 28 prior to the preparation of the second report, was not at all dissimilar from the second recommendation of the fifth report of the standing committee with which the leader of the house quarrels so much. The resolution of November 28 stated:

> That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway services in Newfoundland until such time as the committee travels to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces.

That report was the subject of dispute in the house. It became the substance of a question of privilege on which I moved a motion. Mr. Speaker, in his wisdom, ruled that there was a prima facie case of privilege and referred the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Why? Because the report did not contain the very resolution which is the essence of the second part of the fifth report now before the house, something which has again been challenged by the leader of the house.

The third report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections which dealt with this matter is now before the house. We have asked on a number of occasions that the government bring this matter forward; it is order No. 54 under government orders. We made this request so that we might have the opportunity to debate the matter in the house. The request was denied.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he know that it is being called as the second order of business for today?

Mr. McGrath: I am glad it is being called as the second order of business for today. But if we could resolve the matter before us the debate on the third report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections might become superfluous. The point I am making is that if it had been called earlier there would have been no necessity for the debate in which we are now engaged. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce says that the fifth report of the Transport Committee is a travesty. I say to him that if the house accepts the amendment the consequence will be a travesty of our proceedings and it will make a mockery of the committee system. I say this as one who has the honour to be a member of the Transport Committee, as is the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard), and the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney)—a very diligent and attentive member of the committee, I might say. These are the only members of the committee, I note, who thought it worth their while to be present in the house today for this debate. Apparently the others did not even consider it important enough to come here to defend the very report which they prepared and agreed to unanimously.

I compliment hon. members who have shown interest and attention in the house today. I was impressed with the work of the Transport Committee, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding what the house leader may try to interject, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has had two outstanding chairmen. If the house leader had left the hon. member for Manicougan (Mr. Blouin) alone, he would have been an outstanding chairman. Unfortunately the hon. member for Manicouagan took ill and was in hospital. We are all happy to know he has recovered and is back in the house.

The hon. member's recovery, Mr. Speaker, is a mixed blessing. During his stay in hospital the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard) was appointed the new chairman. He has been an outstanding chairman of committees of the House of Commons. He has been an outstanding member of the house for the past 20 years. It was an affront and an insult to the hon. member for LaSalle not to permit him to stand in his place today to defend his own report. One would think it was the house leader rather than the committee that sponsored the report. I hope before this debate concludes the chairman of the committee will have a chance to defend this report which was adopted unanimously by the committee.

I did some research on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I was rather impressed with the record of the committee. Since last September the committee has sat for 26 days, a total of 85 hours and 15 minutes. Following the reference from parliament of January 17, 1969, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications met for 16 continuous days, a total of 65 hours. Those hours were confined mostly to the committee's study of the transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces which the house leader finds so amusing. I can assure him if he lived in the Atlantic provinces he would not find them at all amusing.

During that tour the committee received 105 briefs and heard 174 witnesses. There was no time for relaxation or entertainment of any kind. The committee had to work morning, noon and night in the four capitals of the Atlantic provinces. The proceedings of the committee during its tour of the Atlantic provinces still have not been printed and yet the committee is expected to prepare a report without having the evidence.

I want to emphasize to the house that this committee has been one of the hardest working committees with one of the most outstanding and hardest working chairmen in the house. The house leader has affronted the chairman and the committee by refusing to allow concurrence in the fifth report and by his despicable action this afternoon in not permitting the hon. member for LaSalle to defend his own report.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, in his haste to put both feet into it, neglected to mention a number of very important facts concerning the recommendation in relation to the Canadian Transport Commission. The Newfoundland House of Assembly on February 28 unanimously passed a motion calling upon the Canadian Transport Commission, the Canadian National Railways and the government of Canada not to implement its decision for at least two years.

This fact seems to have gone by unnoticed. It is strange that the cabinet minister from Newfoundland did not think it worth while to sit in on the debate this afternoon. I refer to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Jamieson). He too has adopted the patronizing attitude toward the Atlantic provinces that symbolizes this government. This is much to his own shame because he is a product of the Atlantic provinces.

I regret that the minister from Newfoundland is not in the house today to state what he said to the Canadian Transport Commission when he was a member of this house in 1967. At that time he felt it incumbent upon himself, in the company of other colleagues who then sat on that side of the house, to appear before the commission and ask them to delay taking off the passenger trains for at least five years. That is what the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo said when he appeared before the commission. I am sorry he is not here to defend the very worth-while stand he took before the Canadian Transport Commission and perhaps to influence his colleagues.

Why did the Newfoundland legislature, which is dominated by the same party that shares the philosophy of the government, feel obliged to pass a resolution to this effect? They did so because they knew this was the wish of all the people of Newfoundland. They knew that to truly represent the people of Newfoundland in their sovereign legislature they had no alternative but to pass such a resolution. The federal government's action was a vindictive political affront to the people of Newfoundland because they did not support the Liberals in the last federal election. That is the only conclusion one can come to.

Mr. Allmand: May I ask the hon. member a qustion?

Mr. McGrath: My time is limited.

Mr. Allmand: Would the hon. member tell the house whether the government or the legislature of Newfoundland lodged an appeal with the Governor in Council in accordance with the Railway Act, in the same manner as was done by several of the western provinces when the old Board of Transport Commissioners allowed the Dominion train to be discontinued in 1966?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the hon. member who is so learned in the law. The parliament of Newfoundland is a sovereign parliament and it does not have to appeal to any court. It passed a resolution; presumably that resolution would be passed on to the Clerk of the House of Commons or the Secretary of the Privy Council, but we have not been able to draw that fact from the government. I might add that the resolution which was passed concerned the jurisdiction of the federal government.

One can only conclude that a resolution passed by the sovereign parliament of Newfoundland would, in the normal course of events and through the normal channels, be passed on to the government of Canada. But just to safeguard the situation the six Newfoundland Members of Parliament sitting on this side of the house drafted an appeal under the provisions of section 53 of the Railway Act and sent it to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on March 27. We did so because there seemed to be some doubt about the sovereignty of the Newfoundland parliament and its ability to pass a resolution recommending something to the government of Canada. There seemed to be some doubt whether or not that constituted an appeal, just as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce questioned an official of the railway union when he produced a letter to the effect that he had appealed the decision by writing to the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce said that that gentleman did not consult with legal counsel as to the proper way to lodge an appeal.

I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, but section 53 of the Railway Act is very clear to me. It contains two subsections, one providing for an appeal to the Governor in Council and the other for an appeal from a decision of the commission to the Supreme Court of Canada on a question of law. Nobody is appealing on a question of law, although I can produce evidence that there can be an appeal on a question of law. Section 53(1) states:

> The Governor in Council may at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application, vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the Commission, whether such order or decision is made inter partes or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application; and any order that the Governor in Council may make with respect thereto is binding up on the Commission and upon all parties.

That is very clear, Mr. Speaker. When the chairman of the railway union wrote to the Prime Minister he obviously had read section 53 of the act. Surely the members of the Newfoundland legislature were aware of section 53 of the Railway Act, just as the hon. members who have the responsibility of representing Newfoundland on this side of the house were aware of section 53 of the act. I would recommend to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, if he has time on his travels, that he read section 53 before he starts making any legal or learned dissertations on it in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I hope that some of the hon. members opposite who seem constrained to make unintelligent utterances from their seats will feel the same constraint to get on their feet and make an intelligent contribution to this debate.

The government house leader said that this report contravened a statute of parliament and that it was ultra vires—in fact, I forget all the legal jargon that was used. But, Mr. Speaker, we on this side are aware of the law of the land. We have read the statutes. We have read the preamble to the National Transportation Act which covers such a possibility and which states that Canada's national transportation policy is expressly declared to be subject to legal and constitutional requirements, and further that the National Transportation Act is restricted to subject matters within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada relating to transportation. This declaration is nothing more than an expression of the constitutional and legislative limitations placed upon the parliament of Canada, but it is an important declaration in that it cautions parliament to be at all times aware of these constitutional limitations in regard to legislation.

It may be that because of this awareness there exist certain areas of transport within which parliament cannot trespass. The act provides that one of the vice-presidents of the Canadian Transport Commission must be a barrister or advocate of at least ten years' standing at the bar of any province of Canada—this is referred to in section 7(2)—with very special powers upon any question of law that may arise during proceedings of the commission.

The Newfoundland railway passenger service is a part of what was known as the Newfoundland Railway. It was one of the assets of the government and of the people of Newfoundland which they brought into the union with them. As such the Newfoundland Railway consists of a form of mail, freight and passenger service, and as a consequence I submit that it is clearly outside the jurisdiction of this parliament, and I will tell you why.

The Newfoundland Railway is a specific, identified, and described mode of transport in the constitutional documents that cover the union of Newfoundland with Canada. I present this argument because the only thing we have heard from the house leader who has raised objection to this report is his contention that parliament does not have the authority to deal with the matter, that the matter is sub judice, that it is ultra vires, and everything else.

Even the Canadian Transport Commission, in its order authorizing the railway to withdraw from rail passenger service, referred to the Statutes of Canada containing the terms of union. I wish to quote briefly from the act of union in the 1949 Statutes of Canada as follows:

> At the date of union, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Canada will take over the following services and will as from the date of union relieve the province of Newfoundland of the public costs incurred in respect of each service taken over, namely (a) the Newfoundland Railway—

Just to clinch it, Mr. Speaker, on April 1, 1949, 20 years ago to the day, on April Fool's day, by Order in Council P.C. 1454 the Governor in Council entrusted to Canadian National Railways the operation and management of the Newfoundland Railway, and the operative words of that Order in Council as it relates to this particular matter are as follows:

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport, is pleased to order that, effective April, 1949, the Newfoundland Railway, including rights-of-way, wharves, dry docks and other real property, rolling stock, equipment, ships and other personal property ... the title to which is vested in His Majesty, be and they are hereby entrusted in respect of management and operation thereof to the Company on the terms in the Canadian National Railways Act expressly specified, namely, that such management and operation shall continue during the pleasure of the Governor in Council—

This matter is a constitutional one which cannot be dealt with by any delegated authority of this or any other parliament. It can only be dealt with, in my submission and on the best advice I can get, by an act of parliament of the United Kingdom amending Chapter 22 of the Imperial Acts, 1949, cited as the British North America Act, 1949, by an amendment of the Parliament of Canada act entitled an Act to Approve the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada Statutes of Canada, 1949, and by amendment of the statutes of the province of Newfoundland. These three parliaments and these three only have the authority which the Canadian Transport Commission has now taken upon itself.

Mr. Allmand: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. McGrath: I would rather not at this point because I am making an argument. I will allow the hon. member to ask any question when I take my seat. The union of Canada with Newfoundland was entered into as a legal act and the terms were negotiated by the commission-type government we had prior to 1949. The successor to that commission-type government is the government of Newfoundland which is the Governor in Council and the legislature of New Newfoundland. They were indeed exercising their authority in this matter when they passed their unanimous resolution. It is again emphasized by section 1 of the constitution, the British North America Act, 1949, that these terms prevail as law against any power Canada may have under section 91 or other sections of the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1946.

I have already referred to Term 31 under clause A of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada. The parliament of Canada has no constitutional power to eliminate all or any of the public services provided at the date of union by the Newfoundland railway as a mode of transport. That, in my submission, is clearly spelled out by the terms of union in the statutes of Canada, the statutes of Newfoundland and the statutes of the United Kingdom. So rather than send this matter back to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications where it will die, and I can promise a slow and unnatural death, the government would be better advised to refer it to the Supreme Court of Canada to have this question of law settled. That would be perfectly within their right under subsection 2 of section 53 of the Railway Act.

What will be the effect if the report does go back to the committee? The government house leader will have his way as he is determined to. The distinguished hon. member for LaSalle will resign, because that is all he can do. He must resign. He cannot go back to the committee again. The government has questioned his report and has signified this clearly and without a shadow of doubt by moving to send the report back. The government has voted no confidence in the hon. member for LaSalle as the chairman of the committee and therefore he must resign. So we will have another chairman. I hope the hon. member for LaSalle will remain as a distinguished member of the committee under the new chairman.

An hon. Member: How about the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce?

Mr. McGrath: I hope that when the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce goes back to the committee he will find himself in coventry, and if he does not know what that means it is something akin to purgatory. If the report is sent back it will have a devastating effect on the committees of the house and their future under the new rules. It will render the work of these committees nothing short of window-dressing for the government, nothing short of a method, albeit a surreptitious one, of keeping backbenchers in line and giving them something to do. That will be the effect of it.

Rather than upset the system of committees which is now functioning, rather than now dealing what could be a death blow to the committee system and rather than depriving the people of Newfoundland of this limited means of transportation, the government would be well advised to take cognizance of the very serious deficiencies which exist in respect of transportation in the Atlantic provinces. Surely that is the reason we had this reference from parliament. If there are serious deficiencies in transportation in the Atlantic provinces, they reach critical proportions in the province of Newfoundland.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce said that the Newfoundland government placed high priority on trunk roads. Yes, we need trunk roads but until we have them we should have our railway. This is the whole point of the argument. The government and the people of Newfoundland cannot afford to build the system of trunk roads which is so necessary to provide an over-all transportation grid to serve the people of Newfoundland.

I commend to hon. members that they go to Newfoundland, as did the members of the transport committee, where they would see these deficiencies. All we have is a narrow gauge railway going from east to west paralleled by a narrow gauge trans-Canada highway which is below trans-Canada highway standards because we could not afford to build up to those standards. It is one of the most dangerous highways in Canada. Only yesterday six members of my constituency were killed in a head-on collision on that highway. One of these days there may even be an accident involving a C.N. bus on one of these highways in which the hon. members seem to have so much confidence.

The government of Newfoundland is reasonable notwithstanding the fact that it is a Liberal government. The members of the House of Assembly are reasonable people. All we want is to maintain the rail transportation service in Newfoundland for at least two years. Then the whole hearing would be reopened by the Canadian Transport Commission with a view to examining the situation as it exists at that time. Unless a miracle happens at that time it will become very evident—unless in the next two years we get the $500 million we need to build a trunks system of highways—that the situation is drastic. It will be found that the buses cannot provide the service and it will be found that it will be necessary not only to continue the buses but also the rail passenger service until the province, with the help of rich uncle Ottawa, as the premier of Newfoundland calls it, can afford to pick itself up out of the transportation doldrums and provide a system of transportation such as the people in the rest of Canada take for granted. Only then can we get the true picture.

[Mr. McGrath.]

If this report is sent back to the committee perhaps it will be forced to die there. If the house accepts the amendment of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce it will be very difficult if not impossible for the committee to examine this matter in the course of the preparation of its final report. If this amendment passes and the report does go back to the committee it will be a dark day for parliament and a dark day for the people of Newfoundland.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Allmand: May I put a question to the hon. member. He said he would answer my question when he concluded his remarks. The hon. member referred to the terms of union of Newfoundland and suggested that in those terms of union were provisions that prevented the parliament of Canada and the C.T.C. from discontinuing rail passenger service in Newfoundland. He suggested there is a strong legal argument against what the C.T.C. has done. If that is so, why has there not been an appeal in law to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. McGrath: There is a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker, which opens up a very interesting subject. If hon. gentlemen will restrain themselves for a moment, I will answer the question. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce knows as well as I do, as does the hon. member for LaSalle, that we tried without success on a number of occasions to get the vice-chairman of the transport commission, who is supposed to be learned in the law, to come before the committee and explain this very point of law. Our request was categorically and callously refused by the chairman of the transport commission. I suspect that the real hand behind this whole gambit is the Machiavellian hand of the Czar Pickersgill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like at this point to advise the house that the questions to be raised at the time of the adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin—Air Canada; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Income tax; the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Public buildings.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lessard (LaSalle) that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the house on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in, and the amendment of Mr. Allmand.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I attended only two meetings as a member of the transport committee, serving only to replace one of my colleagues. I am not going to dwell at any length on the merits or demerits of the case of the "Newfie Bullet", but I rise to take part in the debate because of what seems to be happening to this parliament and its standing committees.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) who has moved this subamendment, amendment, or whatever it is, gave as one reason for moving it that he thought it was a bad report. He is fully entitled to that opinion. Colleagues in his own party may disagree with him on that point, and certainly members of the committee from other parties would disagree with him, but he is fully entitled to that opinion.

However, he said during the course of his reasoning in presenting the amendment, and in explaining why he thought it was a bad report, that one or two members of the committee on the government side were unable to be present when the report was prepared, and therefore the report was bad. That does not seem to me a relevant or sufficient reason to warrant the course of action now proposed.

The hon. member advised that he could not be present because he was in Europe with the external affairs committee, and that in itself was perfectly proper. However, it seems to me the hon. member had two choices. He could have been replaced on the transport committee by a colleague, though he may not have felt that a good course to take because his colleague would not have had the benefit of the trip to the maritimes. His other option was to be replaced on the external affairs committee. I realize this matter is extremely important to him, important enough for him to forgo a trip to Europe. In that event, he would have been present and party to all of the discussions that led to the drafting and preparation of this report. It seems to me that the question of who was there and who was not there is not really germane to this debate. The committee met properly with a quorum and unanimously voted for the report. Therefore, I submit that whether one or more members of the committee happened to be absent when the report was prepared is not a relevant point.

The trouble with this amendment now before the house is that if it carries it amends a report that was made outside the house, and in consequence the committee need not meet again. Prior to last June 25 I was one of those so-called younger members—even though I have lost my hair—who had dreams and ideals about what parliament could grow to be. I felt that it could be something better than it was, that even though it had done fairly well in the past it could do somewhat better. I was one of those who waxed loud and long, something I suppose of which I can be accused here. Nevertheless, I was one of the hundreds who ran for office as a member of parliament. Among that number there was the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), many of those who now sit in the back two rows on the government side, and certainly those who sit in the back two rows of the party of which I happen to be a member.

We were told that parliament would be made to function better, more efficiently and more quickly; that committees would be given more responsibilities, made more relevant and important; that committees would have a larger role to play in parliament and thus ordinary members of parliament would have a larger role to play; that backbenchers would be more independent of the civil service, bureaucracy and the treasury benches; that backbenchers would be able in the course of carrying out their duties more properly to represent the views of their constituents, as well as their own views, in the standing committees of this parliament. I readily agree that often it is almost impossible for backbenchers to express their private views in this chamber without causing some embarrassment to members of their own party. However, they are more free to express their own views in the standing committees and in the reports of the standing committees, in the preparation of which they take part.

We then had the debate on the rules changes, and with the exception of the proposed rule 16A, with which we disagreed, all members spoke at length about what they felt parliament should become. Yet after all of this, Mr. Speaker, we are now seeing the emasculation of a Committee report that the government does not like.

Mr. Allmand: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Benjamin: Certainly.

Mr. Allmand: Is the hon. member saying that as a backbencher, as a member of parliament, he automatically accepts any report made by a parliamentary committee and that he would not try to amend such report?

Mr. Benjamin: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to my fellow M.P.'s who are in the backbenches on both sides of the house that they are now being party to destroying the very thing they wanted, the stronger and better functioning of committees, and the stronger and better functioning of members of parliament. We have over 100 new boys, so to speak, in this house. Most of them are on the government side. All of us new boys have to rely on the majority of those on the government side doing the most of the ball carrying with regard to the better functioning of parliament and its committees. May I say to my fellow M.P.'s who sit in the back two rows on the government side that, as a result of the amendment moved today, this is their last chance. They have a few hours in which to proceed behind the curtain, or whatever method they choose to use, to persuade the government house leader and those on the treasury benches not to do this.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: Only the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has been trying to defend them.

Mr. Benjamin: I think even the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) would like to do this. I want him to know that, quite apart from party considerations, he would have the blessing of members of all parties in this house were he to do this, or at least try. I make the same request of other members on the government side who sit in the back two rows.

There is nothing in the recommendations in the committee report which makes the adoption of them by the government mandatory if the report is adopted. There is nothing that says the government is compelled to implement those recommendations. I have never yet heard of a recommendation that automatically carried with it a provision for its implementation. Surely, a recommendation is not mandatory. Surely, because this is so, parliamentary committees are able to act more freely and more vigorously, and sometimes even a little independently, without worrying about causing embarrassment to the government of the day, no matter what its political stripe.

Surely, the adoption or rejection of this report by parliament is perfectly possible, without bringing into the question the kind of amendment we have before us. This amendment is not necessary; it emasculates parliament and prevents happening what all of us want to see happen in this and succeeding parliaments. But the government chooses to take these recommendations as mandatory instructions. Why they choose to do this I cannot for the life of me understand.

Therefore, the government would use its majority to get the kind of report it wants. Then, why bother with committees? The government could do this equally well without them. The government could have task forces, cabinet committees, or even groups of its own backbenchers, meet and bring in reports and reports and reports; it would not be necessary to go through this exercise in standing committees.

I plead with my colleagues on the back two rows of the government side of the house not to let this happen. This is their last chance. I ask them to do all they can in this respect; to at least try and prevent this happening. I ask them to show that they are trying. If they do not succeed, so what! They will be better men for trying. They should at least try, for if they don't try, they go back to becoming supine ciphers whose only role amounts to being and doing as they are told; and when the government house leader says "Jump", the only thing they can ask is "How high?" There is more to this question than just what is contained in the report of the transport committee.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Benjamin: Certainly.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member says that all we, as backbenchers, on this side, do, is jump when the government says "Jump" and vote when they say "Vote". I would like to ask how many times the hon. member has voted against the instructions of his party.

Mr. Lewis: That is a really intelligent question!

Mr. Benjamin: I have not, yet; but I would not be surprised if there will be such occasions during the time I serve as a member of parliament. If the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce will listen carefully, I will repeat what I just said. I said that government members on the back benches have this last chance, and if they do not at least try to prevent what is now happening in this house they can go back to being supine ciphers. I did not say they are that now. I think a large number of them, particularly the new members in the government back benches, are conscientious and have been doing an excellent job in this chamber and in our committees. There are many who want to continue doing so and are capable of doing so. They can try to prevent this happening, or go back to what they used to be. I think this is common knowledge. For too many years back bench members—I will use the phrase again—were supine ciphers whose role was to be and do as they were told. There was the rare exception, and those exceptions are not here any more.

If this amendment is carried, if the new members of parliament in particular in all corners of this house do not raise hell about it in whatever hours remain in this debate, we will all suffer; this parliament will suffer. The tragedy is that our fellow Canadians outside this parliament will say: Those fellows talked a good fight when they were running for office, but were not there very long before they went back to their old ways.

I hope that my colleagues from all parties in the house will rise in their places and state views that, if not in complete agreement with mine will at least be along similar lines. I hope they will cast the same warnings that I have tried to cast in these remarks.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I still think I was not hearing correctly a little earlier this afternoon when the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) stood in his place and made the remarks he did. I still think he was trying to be funny, because I am sure if he were serious he would not have made the statements he did. It is the first time since I have been in parliament, as a neophyte—I admit I am a rookie member of parliament—that I have heard a member in the Liberal ranks stand up and criticize his own members, his own chairman and the mechanism which has been set up by the Liberal government for the conducting of business in this house. I can hardly believe it, and I still think that before the debate is over he will stand up and say he was just trying to be funny and was not serious at all.

Perhaps he was being coached by the house leader. In that sense, of course, he has an excellent coach. Perhaps in that sense he reflected the feelings of the house leader. He voted complete lack of confidence in his committee chairman. I have not known the committee chairman for the 20 years in which he has been an outstanding member of this house, but in the short time I have been here I have grown to respect and like him.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce stood in his place and voted complete lack of confidence in his own member, in his own committee and in the other members who were in attendance that evening. At that time almost a full slate of members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications arrived at a unanimous decision.

The committee, of course, had a very successful trip down east. I should like to say that I have heard many comments from members of the house and, from people in the area as a result of this visit, expressing the hope that the trip would be successful and that good work would result from this visit. However, I am beginning to wonder just how valuable the work was if this is the kind of attitude with which we will have to contend. I wonder now if it would not have been better to have used the money to build a monument to the C.N.R. rather than to continue in the way we are proceeding.

When I came to Ottawa to take my seat here I was under the impression, and I am beginning to wonder now if I was correct, that parliament occupied a supreme position in the hierarchy of Canadian power when it came to decision making. I was under the impression that parliament was omnipotent. I was also under the impression that the Canadian Transport Commission was a creature of parliament; that it had been set up by parliament to do a particular job, and that it was supposed to answer to parliament for the work it did. I was further under the impression that the railway committee of the Canadian Transport Commission had certain powers to make recommendations about railway work, and finally that the C.N.R. was a Crown corporation. But having listened to the debate in the last couple of weeks, and particularly in the last couple of days, I am beginning to wonder if there has not been a reversal in this hierarchy. Apparently, the power of these bodies has changed so that the Canadian Transport Commission is now on top and parliament is second. I do not know where we put C.N.R. but the important fact is that parliament has assumed a second rate position in terms of the decision making process relating to transportation in Canada. This is the only conclusion I can draw, because certainly parliament does not have the supreme power in this situation.

In the two or three minutes I have left, I should like to give a brief résumé of some of the events connected with the situation because I still feel many hon. members are not fully aware of some of the facts surrounding the case. This is, perhaps, the reason for the confusion in the mind of the house leader. As everyone knows, in 1949 Newfoundland became the tenth province of Canada. At that time we entered into terms of union with the Canadian nation. One of these terms of union as described by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) this afternoon in some detail, dealt with the responsibility of the federal government relating to transportation. I am referring to term 31 under which the province was relieved of its responsibility to maintain the rail passenger service, which responsibility was assumed by the federal government.

The government then delegated this responsibility to the C.N.R. which has been operating under that kind of arrangement ever since. About two years ago the Canadian Transport Commission was appointed and was given certain terms of reference and responsibilities with respect to decisions regarding rail passenger service as well as other modes of transportation in Canada. The railway committee of the Canadian Transport Commission then made a recommendation that the rail passenger service in the province of Newfoundland be abandoned. The Canadian Transport Commission accepted this recommendation, subject to certain conditions.

I should now like to make a point which has previously been made, and I hope the house leader will pay some attention because he might learn a thing or two on a subject with which apparently he is not very conversant. The Canadian Transport Commission decided to abandon the rail passenger service in Newfoundland subject to the provision of a bus service of acceptable standards. Only a few minutes ago my friend to my left made reference to the fact that the C.N.R. has already agreed to extend the service beyond the April 15 deadline which was set by the C.T.C. The hon. member for St. John's East pointed out that the provincial legislature reached what was, I believe, a unanimous decision to recommend that the train service be continued. Here we have two bodies, one a provincial legislature and another merely a Crown corporation, both of which made a recommendation to extend the date beyond the April 15 deadline. The committee of the house visited the Atlantic region, and both previous to and since its visit, it has made reports on the state of transportation in the Atlantic region, one of which contained the recommendation now before us.

The committee is asking parliament to use its power, given under the Railway Act, to do exactly what it is empowered to do under this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deachman: It is not six o'clock yet.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

It being six o'clock, the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Lundrigan: Several hon. members had an opportunity this afternoon to review in some detail the principal events leading to the debate in which we are now engaged. I certainly do not wish to take time reiterating what has already been said.

My hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) made a presentation which set the record straight and left no doubt in anybody's mind that this issue should never have been allowed to materialize let alone reach the point where there is a danger of the committee report not being accepted. I am referring to the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which was agreed to unanimously by all members present; the only exceptions were one or two absentees. This report is now before us for concurrence but it is being vetoed by the leader of the house and by several other hon. members who have been browbeaten or induced by some means or other to adopt his way of thinking.

I had intended to speak about the railway question, but perhaps the railway is now a minor issue. This is something very significant. I am suggesting here as a Member of Parliament from Gander-Twillingate in Newfoundland that the railway in question is not really the important issue this evening. I am saying that even though there is a danger of losing the railway in our province, the only passenger service in the whole island, this is not nearly as important as the fact that the future of the committee system in this house is in danger. As things are, the whole structure will, in my opinion, come to nought if the proposal put forward by the leader of the house or by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, whichever is accepted, is allowed to pass.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am one of the members who came here last fall. I almost accepted the philosophical position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during and subsequent to the election when he talked about the democratization of parliament, about participatory democracy or some such animal—a great phrase, but we don't know what it means back in Newfoundland. There was a great statement about involvement, about all hon. members becoming involved in the legislative process, including all those who sit on the Liberal back benches. The could help to shape legislation, so it was said, by attending the committees, bringing in amendments, pressing their points of view, moving motions and then having them brought before the House of Commons. We were all enthralled by this idea of an efficient parliament and a great committee system.

I accepted this point of view to some extent. I thought: I am a new member and this sounds good to me. I almost fell for the arguments which were put forward. Then I had occasion to experience exactly what took place in those committees, events leading to the shame with which we are faced today. Some hon. members may be wondering why I am upset about this. Well, the people of Canada thought that because of the changes made in the rules the committee system would become so effective that even Thomas More would have felt his Utopia left nothing to be achieved in this House of Commons. I took part in the committee system feeling we had a means by which all members regardless of political affiliations would have the opportunity of making a contribution to the legislative process. But this, I learned in a hurry, was a false assumption on my part.

I ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to mention an incident which took place in the Fisheries Committee. We sat on that committee for ten hours on two separate days trying every procedure we knew in an attempt to bring in certain basic amendments. It was a complete waste of time. This was before the television broadcast involving the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). Eventually, I walked out of that committee. I remember saying: gentlemen, this is it, for me. I am walking out. It is a waste of time. The people of Gander-Twillingate did not elect me to come here and waste my time debating hopeless issues.

This action of mine in walking out of the committee was regarded by some members as something not altogether manly; I was not playing the game. A couple of days later the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) was said at least by other members of the house to have disclosed, in the course of a television program, that government members on the various committees had been instructed not to accept any amendments proposed by the opposition but to vote against them en bloc, thereby destroying the whole idea of the committee system.

That is what concerns us tonight. We are not talking only about the Bullet. We are talking about the whole committee system of the House of Commons. The chairman of this particular committee has been in the house for 20 years. He has the great respect of all members of the House of Commons. This chairman, after presiding over a well-informed committee, made a recommendation. Yet the leader of the house says it has no place on the floor of the Commons.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) had many avenues open to him. Here are some of the things he could have done. First, he could have instructed all his back benchers on the various committees to vote against any move which would result in anything being done to cause embarrassment to the government. In other words, he could have instructed his members to play no role in the legislative process of this country. I submit that this has actually been done, or else one of the members of the Liberal party has broken faith with that party.

In the event there were unpopular presentations or amendments made, the second avenue open was to refuse to bring these into the house. At the present time we have before us a prima facie case of privilege which indicates an attempt was made to do this. This question will come up in the very near future.

The third approach to stymie the whole effort of the committee system would be to rely on a point of order in the house in the hope the Speaker would go along with it, thereby preventing the committee from making its report. The government does not allow its members to go along with legislative amendments or to accept the committee report in the house. If the report does get to the house, they hope to prevent its acceptance on a point of order.

The fourth approach, Mr. Speaker, would be to ask the house to return the report to committee for revision. The fifth approach would be to completely nullify the effect of the recommendations. This is what we have today.

The opposition house leader and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), both indicated the effect of this particular amendment proposed by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). The obvious way to have handled it would have been to allow the recommendation of the committee to be placed before the house. This is what should have been done. The house did not have to accept the recommendation, but an opportunity should have been given to present this recommendation and request concurrence in the report. This procedure would allow the house to make its decision.

When looking across the chamber this evening, I am led to wonder how many members would vote in the event they were forced to vote on this issue. There were roughly 20 members of the committee present the evening the report was recommended to parliament. They all voted in favour, with the exception of two, who abstained.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I want to remind the hon. member that he must deal with the amendment before us and not reflect on a vote in committee or on the procedural aspect of the problem settled earlier today.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence to hear what I have to say because, as members of the committee, we are in an awkward position. We have 20 members of our committee present this evening and this house is voting non-confidence in our committee. This is perhaps the most important point.

I was a member of the committee at the time. I am still on the committee. We, on the committee, have no choice but to resign if this house sends back this report suggesting an amendment which would nullify the effect of our report with respect to the particular transportation problem. The house is also asking for a vote of non-confidence in the chairman of the committee. This chairman, who has been a member of this house for 20 years, has been embarrassed to the point where he is ready to resign. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce must be ashamed to sit here this evening after having made the observations he did about his own committee chairman.

Mr. Allmand: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. At no time when I spoke this afternoon did I refer to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will not refer to the hon. member by name. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce threw his boomerang.

We are embarrassed as members of this committee. We feel we have no alternative but to resign. The house leader is asking for a vote of non-confidence. His cohort, whom he coached so well, is asking for a vote of non-confidence in our committee chairman. I hope members opposite will not tolerate this kind of aggression, subjugation, and bally-ragging by the house leader. We are being intimidated because we have made a recommendation. I do not understand the sign language by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, but I can suggest what it means.

We contend, as a committee, we can make a recommendation on anything connected with the government of this country. This is the supreme government of Canada in this chamber. Perhaps only a few members have indicated a lack of confidence in the Committee. I believe the people of Canada are generally correct when electing members of parliament. I hope they have not made too many mistakes.

An hon. Member: They made one we know of!

Mr. Lundrigan: There will be a few tears shed in Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and the constituencies of other hon. members who have made so many observations. I will not say anything more than this. Hon. members can do exactly what they please in governing this country, but I will not tolerate the whole system of government going by the wayside because of the insubordinate, arrogant, bally-ragging attitude of the house leader and some of his cohorts who toe a very doubtful political line.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): In recent weeks I have come to the conclusion that this particular standing committee has, in some strange way, become the proving ground of the decline in the hopes of those who thought the committee system under the new rules would be good and helpful to this parliament. Here, I am unlike my colleague from Oxford.

I did at one time think the development of greater significance and importance in committees would help the efficiency and functions of this parliament. I may say I have grave doubts about my earlier views after listening to what has gone on today and after noting with pained attention what has happened to many of the recommendations and actions of this particular committee in recent weeks.

Time after time there are occurrences which prompt even the most kindly of us to ask disquieting questions. Why has this particular committee come to be regarded as a transgressor? Has it erred grievously in some way that it should be singled out, not for a runaround, but a kickaround? Would it be because through the vigilance, persuasiveness and alertness of Newfoundland members on the committee and the perception and broad-mindedness of committee members from other provinces and other parties that they came out with points of view which were somewhat inimical to certain members of the treasury board? I wonder about that.

I had expected this afternoon that the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard) would lead off the discussion. I, too, know that he is a very able chairman, a sound and reasonable man. I have had the honour and privilege of sitting with him in this house for a good many years. I think highly of his judgment and of his motivations. No, I do not think it is 20 years as the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) mentioned, but it is quite a while. As you approach the 50 year mark, the years seem to be more heavy, but it is quite a while since the hon. member and I were first colleagues together.

I was not a member of the Transport and Communications Committee, but I did see it in action when it visited Charlottetown. I heard the briefs which were presented by many important bodies from the province of Prince Edward Island, and many distinguished and concerned citizens. I heard the views and the discussions on the important and grave transportation problems of that province. I thought that the committee was impressed by the briefs which it had heard and I know, because I know Charlottetown, that the petitioners and others were favourably impressed by the committee, especially by the studious impartiality and the obvious concern of the distinguished chairman.

But what happened? On the very most important question concerning the province of Prince Edward Island, one of the most important in the region, the committee did not get time to get back to Ottawa to sort out all it had heard at Charlottetown, to blend together the contributions of its various distinguished members, before the government announced to Prince Edward Island, to Canada and to this house that that which they had solemnly promised to another government in Canada, namely, the government of Prince Edward Island, would not in fact be delivered. So, the people of Charlottetown although they enjoyed seeing the members of the committee, for all intents and purposes, and for all practical purposes might have saved their breath, their ink, their paper and their time.

Mr. McGrath: The government made a fool of the P.E.I. government.

Mr. Macquarrie: The government put the chop to the Northumberland causeway without bothering to hear what the committee recommended as a result of its on the spot investigation. It was a thorough investigation by some very able men, and I was proud in my native province to claim them as my colleagues, regardless of their party labels.

This, Mr. Speaker, was contemptuous; it was callous; it was degrading. But apart from what happened to the P.E.I. causeway, that is not the issue here, Mr. Speaker. What is even more important is what has happened to the committee system. The committees are an emanation of this house; they are creatures of this house; they are part of this house. They are all of these. Surely, we have not reached the stage where responsible government is merely a chimera of the past. The executive itself rests upon the confidence of parliament, the same body which creates the committees, and let there be no suggestion that the committees are mere objects of executive direction, as we saw attempted to be carried out today.

This, Mr. Speaker, is not a very good day for those who love parliamentary government. We have an item before the house, the report of a committee—an emanation of the house—and the chairman of the committee retains his seat. The house leader on behalf of the executive stands and moves a motion which is nothing but a rebuke to that committee, an emanation of this honourable house. That is an indication of the views of the government on the role of the committee, and indeed on the role of any committee.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), pointed out, the committee very carefully kept within its jurisdiction and recommended a course of action. But in the eyes of the house leader of the government party it was not allowed to do any such thing. Have we reached the stage where a standing committee of this House of Commons would dare not recommend a policy for consideration which accords not with the views of the executive, of the government? Can a committee not bring in a suggestion which is unpleasing to the government?

Do we now tonight vote that a committee be instructed to bring in a recommendation in accordance with the views of the executive? Surely, this is not the situation. Are we going to vote that the committee be instructed to do so and so? Is there to be a directive to them? What a term of reference for a committee; what a role for a committee, for a committee which was going to make parliament so effective, so efficient, to bring in the fresh air of functioning participatory democracy. Do we say to them, "This you must do, this you must recommend and no other."

I ask this question and it is not a rhetorical question: when the committee meets, if it decides not to follow the diktat of the house leader, what then? Surely, a group of men, members of this house, have a right to vote yes or no? Surely they can decide to approve or not approve of the directive given by the house leader?

What will happen if they should say no? And it is conceivable under certain circumstances, of attendance or otherwise, that they might say no. Then, what happens to our system of committees? Could a committee say no under these circumstances?

If the house votes as the house leader in his Mark III edition would have it and direct it, and if this committee cannot, may any committee at any time ever recommend anything which it knows that the executive would dislike? We are treading towards a very dangerous precedent, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps at a later stage the empiric judgment of committee members might be not only that they dare not recommend something that they know that the executive dislikes, but they might demur from recommending anything that they think the executive dislikes. Then how efficacious is the committee system? There is great danger in the suggestion so brazenly put foward tonight.

Someone mentioned the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). I wish he were here because he could tell things that I do not know. I do not go to committees instructed. I don't belong to a monolithic party, and I don't want to. I will never belong to a monolithic party; I will stay in my own party.

This is a most serious situation, Mr. Speaker. I am saddened because, as I said a few minutes ago, I did disagree with some of my colleagues. I thought the committee system would be practical, useful, sensible. Perhaps it was a mistake on my part. Perhaps it represents a triumph of hope over experience. I have been here over a decade and I thought that behind all this there was good will, that there was regard for the parliamentary system. I suppose it only proves, Mr. Speaker, that I am not really as old as I look, and I have been told this many, many times.

I do not want to monopolize too much time because I know many members want to talk about this fundamental issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear,

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Macquarrie: I appreciate the courtesy of that. Some people talk with their seats and some with their hands. Occasionally, some use their minds, but if the letter of the spirit of the diktat—and I use that word again—is carried out tonight, standing committees of this house will be bereft of power, of will, of influence. They will be denigrated; they will become a mere chimera without influence and without value. This I do not want to see. This is not a great day for parliament; it is not a great day for the house leader of the government party. I am sorry he is not here tonight. There will be many things said about that hon. gentleman, but I think he will never be described as a House of Commons man. When I heard the house leader of the government party presume to reflect upon the knowledge of parliamentary procedure possessed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I thought presumption had reached the apogee of distastefulness. If the hon. house leader is here for 40 years, which is highly unlikely, he will never muster a one-thousandth part of the knowledge of house procedure possessed by the venerable member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: I began taking an interest in the activities of the House of Commons in the days of C. D. Howe. I was not a member then; I was in the gallery. Tonight and today I thought that the hon. house leader had a good deal in common with the hon. C. D. Howe. But there is one difference; he has the manner of that great man but not the matter. Without the matter he will not be nearly as successful.

Mr. Allmand: May I ask a question of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie): Was the hon. member suggesting that the House of Commons should accept a committee report without any weighing of the evidence? Does he suggest—

Mr. McGrath: How many speeches do you want to make?

Mr. Allmand: —that the House of Commons should automatically accept any report set down by a committee, or should the House of Commons, as the sovereign body of the Canadian people, have the right to discriminate, accept and reject reports as it deems fit?

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member has foot and mouth disease.

Mr. Macquarrie: I would be pleased to deal with that question. There has been a great deal of talk about the Newfoundland "Bullet". I will say this. The house, I am confident, would have been delighted to deal with the report had the discussion been led off by the chairman of the committee. However, when the report is torpedoed in the initial stages by executive diktat, I say that is not the way to deal with it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Hillsborough would permit another question. Would he indicate whether or not he feels inasmuch as the government house leader has raised the question of one aspect of the report being sub judice, that a good deal of the work of the committees would be in that category following the reasoning of the hon. house leader?

Mr. Macquarrie: I think there is a good deal of logic and knowledge in that observation, as in all the observations of my colleague.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on November 28 last year my colleague the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) presented a motion to the Standing Committee on Transport to the effect that the decision to abandon rail passenger service in Newfoundland not be implemented until the committee on transport was given a chance to visit Newfoundland. The motion was passed by a majority of the members of the committee at that meeting. Of course, under normal circumstances this motion would have formed a part of the report of the committee to the house. It is obvious, however, that the motion was a great embarrassment to the government, so it was arbitrarily omitted from the report of that committee to the house. Next the matter was considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections where it was clearly shown that the omission of the motion from the committee report had been improper, and without any legal or procedural justification.

Finally, we had the report written with the heavy hand of government direction to the effect that the original motion was not properly before the committee. In the meantime, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications visited the Atlantic provinces, including the province of Newfoundland. On the basis of the evidence heard during its visit, it recommended that the order of the Canadian Transport Commission authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 15 be left in abeyance until the committee tabled its complete report in respect of this matter.

Again, it is obvious that this recommendation was an embarrassment to the government and especially to the government house leader. An attempt was made by the house leader and by the government to kill this report. The unfortunate part of this whole thing is that we have one agency of government which has set about deliberately, in collaboration with two other agencies, the Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian National Railways, to kill Newfoundland's rail passenger service.

What is most appalling about the whole thing is that they have now connived—I am referring especially to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald)—to cover up the murder trail. They have in essence killed the "Bullet" and are now trying to cover up the murder trail.

Mr. Alexander: They are trying to kill the opposition.

Mr. Carter: Having been beaten during sittings of a committee, they have created a series of events which I believe have seriously undermined the basis of all the reforms of rules and procedures of this house. The government's argument in bringing in the sweeping reforms was that public business would be more effectively and more efficiently dealt with if more of the work of the house were placed on the shoulders of committees. But this could only hold true so long as every member of this house believed the committees would function fairly and openly, without pressure from the government. Bullying of committee chairmen, hiding the real intent of committee proceedings and regimentation of government members on committees has made a mockery of the committee system.

If this sort of thing continues and if the government can simply tailor the business of every house committee to suit its own whims, what is the use of our committee system? Not only has this government conspired with the Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian National Railways to kill the "Bullet", what is much worse is that it appears to have killed house reform and the committee system as well. It seems obvious to me that this government has become so arrogant that it cannot tolerate even a slight reverse in one meeting of a committee which has been set up according to our committee system. If this is to continue we might just as well pack up, go home and let the government, the government house leader and the Prime Minister rule by decree. This naked exposure of dictatorial power is shocking. It is so completely out of proportion to anything warranted by the circumstances that it makes one wonder how this government would act on major issues. This government's action of twisting facts and doctoring records in this case is like using a sledge hammer to kill a fly.

The story of Newfoundland's rail passenger service and the determination of the people of Newfoundland to retain that service is well known to this house, and indeed to all Canadians. I do not think government members can overlook the fact that, as my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has pointed out, the Newfoundland legislature, speaking as it does for the people of Newfoundland, has adopted a resolution to the effect that the decision to abandon the rail passenger service be deferred for at least two years. That is the wish of the Newfoundland people, the wish of the rail unions in Newfoundland and of pretty well all people in all walks of life. But the government, the Canadian Transport Commission and Canadian National have decided that the wishes of the Newfoundland people in this regard must be ignored.

I might remind hon. members that 20 years ago today 300,000 Newfoundlanders became Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Carter: I hope, as do all the people of Newfoundland, that the rest of Canada and my hon. friends opposite will never regret having joined us in 1949, because we were glad to have them. But it is strange that on this the 20th anniversary of our joining Canada, or of Canada joining us, the six members from Newfoundland should be required to stand in their place in this parliament and fight for that which we feel is our right, namely the continuation of the rail passenger service in our province. This is a shame.

I am wondering what we have to do in this regard. The Newfoundland people are unanimous in their opposition to the plan of Canadian National, and of this government, to abandon our rail passenger service. The Newfoundland legislature is opposed to it. The unions are opposed to it. As I have already said, people in every walk of life have opposed it.

Despite this, the house leader appears to be obsessed with destroying that which we feel is rightfully ours. It is not hard to understand why this obsession exists. I charge the government house leader with being vindictive because his party did not fare too well in Newfoundland on June 25. I suggest that this is his, and his government's way of getting even.

Motions were made in the transport committee that were adopted and approved by the committee. The committee visited Newfoundland to hear evidence from people from all walks of life. The committee came back to Ottawa and pretty well unanimously agreed that the decision to abandon the railway be set aside pending completion of its final report.

Despite this, the government house leader is determined to see that course is not followed. Despite the recommendations of the transport committee, the representations made to this parliament by Newfoundland members, the fact that the Newfoundland legislature opposes this step and the major unions and other bodies in Newfoundland are against this move on the part of Canadian National and the Canadian Transport Commission, the government house leader insists that the motions that were made in the committee were wrong, and that any recommendations made by the committee to set aside the decision should not be accepted.

As a Canadian of 20 years standing and as a new member of this house, this whole exercise has been quite disgusting to me. This power that has been exercised by the house leader—

An hon. Member: Nothing should worry you old colonial boys.

Mr. Carter: This is not a laughing matter. I ask the hon. member to speak from his seat. He might get picked up by Hansard, which is the only chance he will have. If the hon. member wants to say anything let him stand up and speak from his seat, instead of making snide remarks. We are old colonial boys and we are not ashamed of it. We are not ashamed of being colonials. Now we are Canadians and we want to be proud, but you are not making us very proud, and neither is your house leader. I recommend to your house leader—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the motion before the house.

Mr. Carter: If hon. members opposite will confine themselves, sir, I will.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for St. John's West has the floor.

Mr. Carter: I seriously recommend to the house leader that he start wearing a beard and smoking cigars, to take on the image.

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

Mr. Carter: Figure if out if you want to. The matter we are discussing here is a very serious one. What we are fighting for is for Newfoundland to be allowed to have rail passenger service. The committee on transport feels this service is essentially Newfoundland's.

One hon. member opposite referred to the fact that priority has been given to the construction of a road system in Newfoundland. As my hon. friend from St. John's East said, until such time as Newfoundland can afford to spend $500 million on developing an adequate road system we must be allowed to retain our rail passenger service. I urge the government to allow Newfoundland to retain this service because it is essential to the well being and the transportation needs of the Newfoundland people.

I am at a loss to understand why this great effort has been made by the government, especially by the house leader, to deprive Newfoundland of this essential service. As I said before, the committee passed motions and made recommendations. Despite this, the government house leader still insists that, because of some technicality, the motions were improperly presented, that the committee did not decide to include the motion in the report of the committee to the government.

I urge hon. members opposite to give this matter very serious consideration because it means a great deal to Newfoundland. It also means a great deal to the future of the Committee system of this parliament. The committee travelled to Newfoundland as well as to the other Atlantic provinces. It heard some 170 witnesses and received 105 briefs. If all this is to be ignored, I contend that our trip east was not necessary. It has been a complete waste of money.

The matter being discussed tonight is not only a question of whether Newfoundland can retain its rail passenger service; it is a question of whether the committees system and the new rules will work in this parliament. If committees make reports based on their findings and evidence as they travel across the country, and committees are to be bullied and their reports completely ignored by the house leader and the government, I contend that we might as well all pack up and go home because the committees system will not work.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part briefly in this debate because I think it has assumed an importance far beyond anything one might have anticipated at the start. As I see it, the issues now facing us are not just those covered in the substance of the report, namely, matters having to do with transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces; those issues have been surpassed by the simple question whether members of parliament when they serve on committees are free to vote as they wish, or whether they must vote in the one and only way they have been told they must vote.

An hon. Member: That has not yet been decided.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says that has not yet been decided. I hope it will not be decided. But if the amendment moved by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is carried, and if the motion as amended is carried, this house will be saying to its members on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that there is only one way in which those members can vote on a certain issue. I think this is a very serious matter, and I hope the house will think very deeply about it before it votes on the question.

I had something to say yesterday about the committee system. That was when we were debating a point of order. I have long felt that we should upgrade our committees and I am pleased with the changes we have made in our rules looking toward that end. I am pleased also that we, if I may say so, are considering in our Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization other things that we may yet do to upgrade the work of our committees. I believe the day will come when we may even have another building especially for committees, when there may be times that the house does not sit because important committees of parliament are meeting. But we do not move in that direction if the first time a committee brings in a recommendation which the government does not like, that committee is slapped down, not just by a rejection of its recommendation but by an instruction that it must go back into session and vote this way, or else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not know who thought up such an idea, Mr. Speaker. I thought this was a free parliament. I thought we voted as we pleased in this House of Commons and in our committees. But this apparently is not so.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is it the same question the hon. member has asked other members?

Mr. Allmand: No.

Mr. Woolliams: He has changed the wording.

Mr. Allmand: The motion states that a certain paragraph of the report must be deleted If that paragraph is deleted, what is to prevent the committee from bringing in another paragraph on the same problem but with different wording and with a different recommendation? Is the hon. member suggesting that because the committee is instructed to delete this paragraph, it cannot bring in another paragraph on the same subject but in a different tenor?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I really give the hon. member credit for more procedural knowledge than that. If the motion as amended passes and this matter is referred back to the committee, so far as this issue is concerned this is its total term of reference. This is all it can do, namely, redraft the report with the offending paragraph omitted. I submit that on all counts this is nothing other than a case of straight dictation. Some of my hon. friends who have interrupted have said that we have not passed this yet. I hope we will not pass it. I would rather see this matter get into government orders and stay there for the rest of the session, than be passed, because I think it would be a black day for parliament to take this stand of saying to a committee: This is what you must do. You have no other choice. You have been given the word and you must do what you are told.

I thought when my hon. friend rose that he was going to ask the question he has asked several other hon. members, namely: Does every recommendation of a committee have to be accepted? The answer to that question is clearly no. I do not think it follows automatically that because a committee makes a recommendation, it has to be accepted by the house or the government. That is what these various bodies are for, to consider things at their various stages.

Indeed, I think it would have been procedurally correct for the government to have said today: We do not like this report. We ask the house to reject it. That would have been a bit of a slap in the face, but at least it would have been procedurally correct if the government openly and honestly had said: We do not agree with this recommendation and we want the house to turn it down. Then, of course, it would have been up to the house to decide the matter by its vote. Another course the government could have followed, which would have avoided this debate which has proceeded on and off for two or three days, and the great deal of the nastiness we are experiencing, would have been just to accept the report moved by the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard). Has not the house the right to express the view that these things said in the report ought to be considered; ought to be done, if you will? If that had happened, if the report had been concurred in, the government of course could have acted upon it or it could have come back in a few days and said to us: We have considered these things, but we do not think they should be carried through.

That happens over and over again. If you will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, I should like to cite an example, though you will be watching me to see that I do not get too far into the substance of it. I am very conscious of this matter. A committee made a unanimous recommendation to Parliament on May 8, 1967, that the pensions of retired civil servants be increased. The government said it was giving consideration to this recommendation. The government has not yet acted upon it; but at least we know where to put the blame. The government has refused to act on that recommendation, but it still stands as a recommendation of the committee.

But in this case the government is not prepared to let the recommendation stand as a recommendation of the committee. It is not prepared to let the house decide whether it wants to say yes or no to this recommendation. It is asking the house—and it has a majority, no doubt, to go through with it if it wants to do so—to say to the committee not only that we do not like what it did, not only are we not prepared to accept it, but we want the committee to go back and bite the dust. We want the committee to change its report, even though the evidence is that it was a unanimous report when the committee brought it in.

For these reasons, I hope that the government will not press this amendment. It would be a magnanimous gesture which would show deference to the way in which parliament should work if the amendment were withdrawn. But if the government cannot do that, then let the motion go over into government orders and let it die there at the end of the session. There is another motion there to adopt another report, and the same thing would happen to it. If this amendment is carried and the motion as amended is carried, not only will we have had a nasty day in parliament today—and there is no denying that this is what we have had—but we will have something on the record which will not grace the reputation of parliament.

There is no point in multiplying words. I confess I was shocked at what happened today. I said earlier that I had thought I would have the day off so far as speaking was concerned. I know that for anybody to get up and say he did not intend to take part in a debate is usually laughed at, but that was my intention. There were enough people to take part in the debate, especially with respect to the substance of the matter. But I was really shocked over what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) did when his original amendment was ruled out of order because he called paragraph 5 paragraph 4. All that was necessary then was to designate that paragraph properly, but he had the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) change other words in the amendment so that instead of the government asking the house to give the committee power to change its recommendation if it so desired, the amendment was worded so that the committee must make that change and it was given no other choice.

Notwithstanding the interjection of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), may I say that if his motion passes, the only motion which the committee and the chairman—whether it is the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard) or someone else—will be able to accept will be a motion for the deletion of the offending paragraph in the report. As my friend, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) asks, what will happen if by any chance hon. members do not vote for that motion? Will they be in contempt of parliament? Will we have a scene? Will hon. members be brought to the bar of the house, or perhaps committed to the tower because they have not done what parliament has called upon them to do? Let us just contemplate the utterly ridiculous situation in which this parliament is being put by this amendment, and particularly by the rewording effected by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. I would not have liked the original motion as moved by the President of the Privy Council, but in retrospect it was so much better than this one that I wish the words I am now talking about had stayed the way they were.

I have said enough, but I have a subamendment which I would like to move. Hon. members may feel that this subamendment will only complicate matters, but I feel that if we are going to be asked to make this decision, we should be logical. We should carry through and state clearly what follows from the amendment that is now before us in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. So, to make it clear what the house is being asked to do, I move seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That the amendment be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words:

"and that the members of the said standing committee be discharged, since the passing of this motion, as amended, constitutes a vote of non-confidence in the said members".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Chair has some reservations about the amendment and wishes some time to consider it.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, without any doubt whatsoever this has become one of the most overblown issues of this session. It is interesting to observe the actions of some hon. members in the opposition. Very often they contest committee reports, but they happen to agree with this one so they want to blow it up into a vast political issue. Let us consider some of the statements that have been made in this debate. It has been suggested that a loyal group of members of parliament from all parties in this house toured the maritimes and came back earnestly determined to make a report which would be made available to the House of Commons. What are the facts? Many of the key members of that committee were not even present at the committee meeting because they had other responsibilities in the house.

An hon. Member: Some excuse.

Mr. Perrault: What were their names?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) just made a statement that is not in accordance with the facts, and I would ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. Perrault: Sit down and listen, then perhaps you will get some information that is really factual.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the hon. member.

Mr. Perrault: We have had so much maudlin chit-chat—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It is the tradition of this house for hon. members to speak in accordance with the facts. I charge that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour just now made a statement that is not true, and I ask him to either back up that statement or categorically withdraw it.

Mr. Perrault: If the hon. member will remain in his place instead of engaging in these antics—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no question of privilege. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour has the floor.

Mr. Perrault: What about the meeting of March 17? The following are the Liberal members who were absent from the meeting: the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), replaced by: the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens), the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand), and the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard). The members of the Conservative party who were absent were the following: the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) and the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), replaced by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) and the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle). Also the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) was absent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador on a point of order.

Mr. Peddle: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour suggested that a number of key members were absent at the time the decision was taken. I should like to ask of you, Mr.

Speaker, what constitutes a key member of a committee. In my opinion all members are equal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I ask the hon. member who has the floor to restrict his remarks to the amendment before the house.

Mr. Perrault: I intend to restrict my remarks to the facts, and that may be a notable contribution to the debate today. But the suggestion that somehow democracy has been subverted because the committee did not bring in a report which is to the liking of some members of the opposition is pure, unadulterated hogwash, and the agony of these opposition members hopping up and objecting on small and insignificant technical points does not strengthen their case at all.

I am simply saying that of the group which toured the maritimes and saw the conditions firsthand—and I was a member of that group—I would not have voted in favour of this particular report.

Mr. McGrath: Why were you not at the meeting?

Mr. Perrault: At least ten members were absent, all of them important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I ask for the co-operation of members of the house. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour now has the floor.

Mr. Perrault: The way some members descend to vilification indicates the quality of the argument which they have advanced today.

The members of the committee which toured the maritimes showed a dedicated interest in the problems of the maritimes, and that goes for all members of all parties. We have a good group, there. I am suggesting that the committee report of March 17 was not representative of the group of people who investigated those conditions.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order. No hon. member is entitled to challenge the validity of a properly made recommendation and report which has been brought into the house by a committee merely because all the committee members were not present at the time it was made. We are now debating the report of the committee, together with an amendment and a subamendment which have been made in this connection. No hon. member is entitled to go behind the report and say it was not a good report because it was not drawn up when all the committee members were present. If this argument were to be accepted there is scarcely a committee report brought into the house which would not be subject to criticism on these grounds and the suggestion that it should, therefore, not be approved. I do not think the hon. member can put forward that line of argument.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I will again ask the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the amendment and not to discuss the committee meetings.

Mr. Perrault: With all due respect to the learned member of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, I do not think this house needs a lecture on procedure.

Some hon. Members: You do.

Mr. Perrault: I have had something to do with legislative proceedings and I am suggesting that it comes to a situation in which a committee reports back to this house, and the Official Opposition itself freely acknowledges that since there is a government majority the government's majority is acceptable to them, despite any minority objections they may hold. In this case the government states there is a technical and perhaps a philosophical flaw in the report as received. It is entirely in order for the house to refer a section of this report back to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Perrault: There is nothing in the amendment before us to justify the kind of action contemplated in the subamendment moved by the representative of the New Democratic party. This paragraph could be deleted. Another paragraph could be brought back on the same subject in another form. The government, which commands a majority in this house, simply says it is not in order to accept the report in this particular form. If members of the opposition wish to challenge this, they have a right to do so in the course of subsequent committee meetings and a democratic vote will be taken. It should be repeated that members on the government side of the house and in this rump in the corner, happen to hold a majority in this parliament and they are not going to be run by a minority group in this house. Members who are so agitated about the procedure contemplated here should seek to have themselves placed on the committee by their respective party whips so that they can make their views known when the committee meets.

Some of those who are so vocal today should have shown more interest in joining the tour when we went to the maritimes. They all had the right to show up but many were notable by their absence.

Some hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Perrault: In summary, Mr. Speaker, there were six or seven members absent from the vital committee meeting on March 17, members who were on the maritime tour. A number of them would not have supported this report, I am sure. There are other members of Parliament on the government side who would not have supported the report in the form in which it was sent to the house. It is in order to refer this back to the committee. Perhaps a vastly improved report can now be prepared, possibly on the basis of suggestions offered by representatives of minority groups, which would be accepted by the committee if the arguments used were persuasive enough.

The assertion that this is establishing a dangerous precedent and that democracy is being frustrated is a specious one, and everybody knows it.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in connection with something which the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) has said and which I maintain is not in accordance with the facts. He stated that key members of the committee were absent. I maintain that the following government members of the committee were present the night the committee drafted its report: the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), the hon. member for LaSalle (Mr. Lessard), the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), the hon. member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance) and the hon. member for Bourassa (Mr. Trudel). Those are eight of the 11 Liberal members entitled to sit on the committee, and those eight members took part in the tour of the Atlantic provinces and voted unanimously for the report.

Mr. Perrault: I shall not engage in a battle of the lists. I shall allow the Clerk's office to resolve this particular matter. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) was not there.

[Mr. Perrault.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member has finished his speech.

Mr. Mahoney: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I was not there.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In order to get the debate back on the rails after the speech to which we have just listened, it might be as well to summarize the motion and the amendment before us.

We are now considering a motion as set out on the order paper on page three:

> That the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 19, 1969, be concurred in.

The following amendment has been moved by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand):

> That the said report be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with instruction that they delete from the report the paragraph thereof which reads as follows:
> Your Committee recommends that the order of the Canadian Transport Commission, authorizing the Canadian National Railways to suspend rail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 5, 1969, be left in abeyance, until your Committee tables its complete report in respect to this question.

We have heard this evening from the Liberal member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). One thing I can say at the outset is this: He is not known for his modesty. Modesty is not one of his virtues. I have noticed—and I am not making anything of this—that his seat has often been vacant. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once asked: "Who the hell is the member?" No doubt parliament made certain decisions on occasions when he happened to be absent on government business, or constituency business or any other kind of business. Is he asking us to accept that we should therefore review those decisions because he or some other members were absent?

An hon. Member: He is a key member.

Mr. Woolliams: What kind of nonsense is that?

I wish to speak on this particular amendment and on the amendment to the amendment because I am one of those who stood in the house when rule changes were being debated and who did not agree to the type of rules which changed the committee structure. I agree with speakers on this side who have said that committees are the creatures of the house and of parliament. But I do not go along with the idea that they should become the creatures of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: The Prime Minister said: We are the masters of the house. Now he and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) are saying in effect: We are the masters not only of the house but of the committee structure, too. I do not agree with some of my hon. friends in my own party or with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in this regard. Surely, these boys will behave. The whole thing boils down to this. Human nature being what it is, and politicians being subject to a certain kind of human behaviour, the only way in which to keep the government in its place and avoid complete control by the executive is to establish some rules.

• (9:20 p.m.)

New members of the Liberal party have not seen parliament function long enough to realize when the rules were changed they allowed human behaviour to operate in the way it usually does. This government wants to be a dictator. Without rules there is no way to control the cabinet. We must refer this procedure back to the rules committee for changes so that the committee structure can be protected and we will be in a position to debate issues of this nature. This is a wrong against Newfoundland; it is wrong in fact and in law, and wrong as far as parliament is concerned. These rules must be changed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: There is evidence that rules of this kind will not operate with this kind of government or any other kind of government. Human nature being what it is, this government will take every advantage. It is power hungry. This was demonstrated when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and another minister taped information prior to giving it in the House of Commons. Then, they stood in their arrogant way with papers written by their advisers in their hanky-panky fashion.

We know very well, Your Honour, that they are guilty of a breach of the oath they took as privy councillors. I say this government is a dictatorial government. The former Prime Minister, when debating a tax matter, changed the rules and these two ministers are doing it now. This makes it in order to mention these facts. The Prime Minister in 1963 described a Liberal as "say anything, think anything, do anything; forget about your ethics, but put us into power." That is the philosophy of the Liberal government.

An hon. Member: You are right.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad you agree with me; I know I am right. We must change the rules to bring the estimates or a part of the estimates, back to the House of Commons. This is the only power this house has over the government, to control the purse strings of this nation. When this is done, parliament will function with efficiency and freedom will be gained in this institution.

When I spoke previously about rule changes, Mr. Speaker, I predicted what would happen in the committees. It has happened now. Members of the New Democratic party and others in my party predicted certain things would happen under the rule changes. We were tolerant. We said our party stood for reform.

When we sat on the opposite side of the house with a minority government, Pickersgill, Chevrier and Pearson filibustered supplementary estimates on labour for 18 days. They were the masters of filibuster. Certainly, changes were needed, but when the whole of the estimates were taken out of the House of Commons, control of the pursestrings was taken away from parliament. The executive then became all-powerful. The proof of this is what is going on today in connection with this amendment. The executive say there was a committee.

When we examine the committee structure we see there is always a Liberal chairman and we are blessed if we get a fair one. There is always a Liberal majority and we are blessed if that majority exercises the discretion and fairness which is necessary. The rules have been changed in the committees. Members are puppets of the executive; they all want to be in the cabinet or parliamentary secretaries. That is why the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce moved this amendment. He wants to be close to the executive. He wants a laying on of hands. This is the human behaviour to which I have referred.

Members opposite are talking, yelling and heckling me because they realize the rules of the house must be changed. Committees must be creatures of parliament and not creatures of the executive. Then, this hanky-panky nonsense of changing reports by the executive and the government will be stopped. This is the second time this has happened.

I was a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications before becoming a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Deachman: Why didn't you vote against it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Again I ask the co-operation of hon. members to allow the hon. member for Calgary North to finish his remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to answer the member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman). When I was a member of the Committee on Transport and Communications, I attended. The only reason I am not on the committee now is I am on the committee of Justice and Legal Affairs. That can be confirmed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and other members on the committee.

When I was a member of that committee, the chairman was ill one morning. We did not know he was ill because we are not mind readers. Members of the government stated they were going to change the chairman. Fancy throwing out a member when he is sick! Do you know who threw him out? The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney). He wanted to be the chairman of that committee. That is the kind of hanky-panky that was going on. We said, here is a French-Canadian chairman, a member of the Liberal party doing a fair job; he deserves to keep that chairmanship.

Mr. Perrault: Sit down.

Mr. Woolliams: My friend says to sit down. Let me just digress on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member is delivering his speech on the amendment. There is no point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour should not be permitted to make speeches from that part of his posterior that I will not mention because of the niceties of parliament. According to the rules, he must rise in his place. The hon. member has no right, even though he comes from the rustics of the B.C. legislature, to interrupt me without taking his proper seat in the house.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I do not think we are going to get very far with all these points of order. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order. Under the rules of this house the hon. member can only speak from his seat. I say with great respect that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) is not now in his seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Even if hon. gentlemen opposite do not agree with me, I suggest that they sit in silence and listen. In that way we might get on with the job a little quicker. Now, to continue with the narrative.

At the next committee meeting the Liberals rushed on to appoint a new chairman. We in our party never supported that kind of procedure. At that time there was a motion moved, similar to the one with respect to transportation in Newfoundland. Again, it was passed. Twice that motion was passed by the same committee, and twice the executive decided to change the motion. There was a quorum at the committee meeting. As I say, the committee has twice passed that motion. It has been twice before the House of Commons, and twice the executive has tried to run the House of Commons. That is why I say, under the new rules and with this kind of political behavior, it is impossible to operate these committees.

The only way to get fair committees is to have the committees elect their own chairmen, irrespective of political party affiliation. When you get that, you will have true democracy but as long as a committee is set up as a creature of the Liberal government you will not have any fairness so far as the committee work is concerned. That is why the government is now moving to delete from the committee report the question of transportation in Newfoundland.

The amendment to the amendment puts the argument in the proper perspective, because if this motion is passed the executive can change anything having to do with a committee. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour argued that all members did not attend the committee meeting, and said that parliament can change any of these things no matter what committees do. He also said, "We have a majority." What he really said, was, "As long as the executive wants something, then the members of the Liberal party, who are in a majority, will ram it through."

Mr. Perrault: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been engaging in utter distortion of the intent and substance of my remarks. I think hon. members would like to have him speak to the other amendment before the house instead of engaging in this highly partisan dissertation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: In reply to the hon. member I could only say, "Woh wad some power the giftie gie us to see ourselves as others see us."

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I had some doubt about whether I was going to be recognized in time. Now that I have the floor, and assuming the house closes at ten o'clock tonight, I can assure you that I will have the last word on this matter tonight. I am sorry that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is not present. I do not know where he is and I do not care where he is, but I do want to say that I have been thinking a lot about him lately. The more I think about him, the less I think of him. I am beginning to think he is one hon. member who stands for anything he thinks people will fall for.

I am getting a little confused, Mr. Speaker. The initial motion was that the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the house on March 19, be concurred in. Now it has been amended, and the amendments have been amended, and the amendments to the amendments have been amended so often that I am not sure what I am talking about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peddle: Mr. Speaker, since I have been a member of this house may I say that I have never seen any hon. member opposite admit that he did not know what he was talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peddle: The house leader has attempted to keep this report from being adopted on the grounds that the transport committee had no right to make this recommendation to the house. That was his first contention and Mr. Speaker found his argument spurious, or at least invalid, and ruled accordingly. Maybe "spurious" is too strong a word, but the Speaker did rule against the President of the Privy Council.

Now, we have an amendment that the report of the committee be not concurred in and that the committee be instructed to go back like good little boys and do as they have been instructed. The President of the Privy Council comes in swinging, with his pugnacious look, with his shoulders up and his guard up, and he says that one of his little committees in his innocuous, watered-down committee system has dared to recommend something to the government.

The underlying reasoning of hon. gentlemen opposite seems to be, "look, after all this government has a majority. As we have a majority, how dare you recommend something to offend that majority." But, Mr. Speaker, the government also has something like a two to one majority on the committees of this house.

Some time ago, one hon. member opposite sent a circular to his constituents telling them that he had been instructed on exactly how to behave on committees. I doubt very much if an hon. member would print thousands of copies of such a circular and say something like that unless there was some justification for it. In any event, I believe it. I have a copy of the circular.

Mr. McGrath: Identify the hon. member.

Mr. Peddle: I don't know his constituency.

Some hon. Members: The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto).

Mr. Peddle: The hon. member for York East.

When I and other new members first came to this house we were put at ease by the President of the Privy Council when we asked questions as to how we would get our views across. He used words to this effect, "Have no fear. Go into the committees and you will have every opportunity to put your views across. Don't worry about it. This is a new streamlined system; the new society, the just society. We are on the ball. You fellows need have no worry."

But, Mr. Speaker, where are the opportunities when you see the list of committees posted in the elevator and find that four prominent committees are holding sessions at 9.30 on the same morning?

Mr. Perrault: What are you talking about?

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Peddle: I am trying to refer to the transport committee specifically, but I wish to make a general comment on how I feel about all the committees. I feel they dilute the parliament process. They are a deliberate fragmentation of parliament so that not only will the opposition be fragmented and key members of the opposition have to be in four or five different places at one time, but also so that the gentlemen of the press will be fragmented and will have to be in four or five places at one time. By so doing, the government can really promote the just society. But we know what they accomplish by that. Every piece of legislation, no matter how ridiculous, is pushed through with a very minimum of opposition. We know what the reasoning behind it is. We are told that this is a democracy.

Mr. Perrault: Let us not get political.

Mr. Peddle: I do not think democracy is necessarily a political word. We are told this is a democracy; I say it is a sugar-coated dictatorship, with a very thin coating of sugar. I have attended meetings of the transport committee when I was and when I was not a member of the committee. As the hon. member for St. John's East mentioned I tried to ask questions, but it was like trying to catch the proverbial greased pig; you just could not get anywhere. I remember asking questions in respect of the figures the Canadian National Railways used to support their application to abandon the rail passenger service in Newfoundland. I asked Mr. Pickersgill, the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, to please explain them to me. He said it would be a grave impropriety for him to comment on something produced by, I believe he said, a quasi-judicial body, whatever that means. What could I say! I waited until we had the executives of the C.N.R. before the committee. I asked them the same question. They said, "Far be it from us to comment on what takes place in a quasi-judicial body".

So, I began to wonder to whom we could appeal in order to ask these questions. The house leader, in the last day or two in this house, said that it was not proper for the committee, even though it is a creature of this parliament, to question the ruling of a quasi-judicial commission. How in the name of heaven are we to go about questioning the ruling of a quasi-judicial commission!

An hon. Member: What is it?

Mr. Peddle: I don't know; but whatever it is, how does one go about questioning it? Mr. Speaker, there are more lawyers in this house than one could shake a stick at. I remember counting them one time. I think I found there were six dozen, 72 lawyers. I might have a better grasp to how to figure out some of the legal situations if I were one of the six dozen, but unfortunately or fortunately, whichever way one looks at it, I am not. I think, however, that there must be some allowance made for the non-legal members who are here.

I might give an example. Many months ago I asked in this house for certain figures from the C.N.R. The Minister of Transport said, "Nothing doing, not permitted". In any event, by somewhat devious means I obtained the figures. I questioned Mr. Pickersgill, the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, about them and Mr. Pickersgill said, "Nothing doing; we cannot discuss that." I waited and then confronted the top executives of the C.N.R. with them and they said "Nothing doing; we can't talk about those things." So my question is, to whom can we go to direct questions and get answers. Since that time, we have come here and the President of the Privy Council says the samething. In effect he says, "Nothing doing". I am sure that in the laws of this country there must be some spirit of fairness, as there is in all laws. Whether one asks the questions in a legal form or not, there must be a spirit of fairness to our laws. If there is not, then to use the words of the former prime minister, just what kind of a government is this?

This is the very first day of Newfoundland's twenty-first year as a so-called partner in confederation. I do not think I should make any reference to the fact that it is commonly known as the "feast of all fools". I should like to comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). He mentioned that when this particular decision was made certain key members of the committee were absent. At that time I was not a member of the transport committee, but since the matters being considered so vitally affected my province and my constituency I went to St. John's when the committee was sitting in St. John's. In order to allay any fears on the part of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour I might mention that I was just playing around. I went at my own expense. This is more than any member of the committee was doing at that time. I went there because the matters being considered were of great interest to my province—and the people of my constituency. I will go so far as to say that I observed the work of the transport committee while the members of that committee were in St John's. I watched them work as the hon. member of St. John's East said from morning until night.

I watched the members of the committee as they paid very serious attention to the problems that were at hand. I think it was around that time I decided I would very much like to be a member of the Transport Committee, a committee which worked and which really took its obligations seriously. Since that time I did become a member of that committee. We hear talk about appeals, the legal meaning of appeals and what it means to make a legal appeal to the Governor in Council and so on. I should like to point out, however, that regardless of the legal aspect of this thing, since this parliament opened in September past at least six members from the province of Newfoundland have been standing in their places time after time after time making appeals. After all, those six members represent six out of the seven ridings in Newfoundland. That is 86 per cent. I do not know whether it is 86 per cent of the people, but it is 86 per cent of the ridings in any event. Six M.P.'s have been standing here appealing to this government to do something about the decision that this so-called quasi-judicial body took with regard to railway passenger service in Newfoundland. But all that we have received, so far as I can see, has been derision. This is not the type of reception one would expect for Canada's newest province.

This afternoon the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) said that in his opinion this committee was sneaking in a recommendation. I made careful note of the term that he used. I think this is a shameful thing for a member on the government side to say and it is a manifestation of the lack of confidence members on that side have in the committee system. It is a reflection not only on the chairman of the committee but also on his colleagues who served on the committee.

This afternoon this hon. member, who I understand is learned in the law—God forgive—stood up and pontificated. He knew what were the problems of transportation in Newfoundland because he had been to St. John's. Glory be to God, he had been to St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland! There, he had taken a 30 mile trip on the train and a return trip on the bus. Then, he throws out his chest and says: "Hon. members, I know the score in Newfoundland; I am an expert on transportation problems there". I am sorry the hon. member is not here at the moment, but in view of his performance this afternoon I do not blame him for not being here.

I said I was not going to get stirred up about this matter and I am not. As I see the whole situation, the big, heavy, horny, hoary, hands of the government clamp down on anyone that dares to oppose. Sometimes I feel Jack Pickersgill is not too far removed from this chamber.

We talk of the transport commission as being a quasi-judicial arm of this government. I do not like personal reflections, Mr. Speaker, and I hope this is not construed as such. Neither do I like to reflect upon any judicial body, if the transport commission is such. But my experience has been that when this commission did consider the application of Canadian National Railways to abandon its rail passenger service in Newfoundland, it did not act as a quasi-judicial body but as a grandiose group of glorified rubber stamps. They did not know the first thing about the matter on which they were deciding. That has pretty well been proven—

Mr. Perrault: Why did you not file a formal objection then?

Mr. Peddle: One was.

Mr. Perrault: Who by?

Mr. Peddle: One was, Mr. Speaker. I hope this is related to the motion, but in support of the C.N.R.'s application to abandon rail passenger service in Newfoundland a figure was produced that indicated a deficit in 1966 of $918,000. I should like to question that figure and also ascertain in what way this quasi-judicial body understood the figure. The amount of $918,000 averages out to $1.85 for every person in Newfoundland, and if that is what is required to run a provincial transportation system then this is the "big deal" to which everyone is objecting.

With all these fine sounding legal expressions, such as "quasi-judicial" and so on, Mr.

Speaker, I could go on ad infinitum, but I think it is about time I took my seat.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. During the course of my interruption of the speech of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) I quite erroneously stated that the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) and the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) were present during the drafting of the report of the committee. I now find they were not present and I apologize to the two hon. members for having said that they were. However, having said that I say there were still six of the 11 regular Liberal members of the committee present.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government house leader or his deputy what will be the business of this house for tomorrow so we will all be advised.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The three agricultural bills that we were supposed to have dealt with today, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR CANADA—HIRING OF PART-TIME EMPLOYEES

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, during the oral question period, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) whether Air Canada had advised him of its intention to hire 150 part-time employees at its airports in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Air Canada is thinking of hiring soon for part-time employment 50 persons at Montreal, 60 at Toronto and 40 at Vancouver. I am somewhat puzzled by the fact that this Crown corporation should be considering such a thing.

Having looked into the financial report for the year ending December 31, 1968, which was prepared by experienced auditors and submitted to parliament, I am asking myself the following question: How can such an important company contemplate adopting a policy now followed by French fries and ice cream vendors?

How can a company whose services are in great demand, which had to increase substantially its flights, which has paid for the use of federal airports approximately $12,000,000 in 1968, namely an increase of 24 per cent compared to 1967, and whose operation revenue for the same period amounted to $387,628,000, an increase of 12 per cent over 1967, think of hiring part-time employees?

Mr. Speaker, I have always attached the utmost importance to the services of Air Canada, because it insists on a well-trained personnel who must not make any mistake. Since the training of a good Air Canada representative requires a three-year course of instruction, at the rate of eight hours a day, can the company afford giving questionable service by hiring representatives who would be qualified in five or six years? Is it entitled to expose the public to all the disadvantages resulting from the presence of an employee who is not interested in his work and will probably look for a permanent position elsewhere?

As in all small businesses where part-time employees are found, at Air Canada the responsibilities are always left to permanent employees. Is Air Canada considering the possibility of creating within its organization, some easy jobs for part-time employees?

Since surveys made by serious people have proven that part-time labor is more expensive, why put 150 such employees on the payroll? Would it not be more economical to hire 75 full-time employees? Has the company considered the psychological problems that would arise from the integration of part-time workers to the permanent staff? Has it consulted its 16,600 employees in order to get their views on the subject?

When Air Canada signed collective agreements with the unions negotiating in the name of different categories of employees, did it make this plan known?

Since part-time employees cannot become members of unions, does it foresee possible strikes and does it rely on the part-time workers to break them? Or does it actually depend on those future employees to break the B.O.A.C. strike?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, since at the Montreal Airport alone the number of flights is approximately 200 per day, it is obvious that there are no idle periods and that, in that Corporation, there is room only for permanent personnel.

Therefore, I ask the Minister of Transport to remind that Crown Corporation that the benefits which it enjoys are commensurate with the responsibilities it has to discharge.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall give this reply on behalf of the Minister of Transport who pointed out to me that Air Canada informed him of its intention to hire extra salesmen during the busiest periods in the summer. Those employees will be assigned to airport and downtown offices. They will be allotted as follows: 37 in Montreal, 5 to 10 in Toronto and 12 in Vancouver. That was the reply I got, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

INCOME TAX—REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION OF OLD AGE PENSIONERS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the oral question period this afternoon I raised a question which I have asked a number of times, having to do with an unfortunate anomaly that has developed in our income tax structure. I raise the question again tonight in the hope that by continued persuasion we can ensure that action will be taken on this matter at an early date. I am referring to the fact that with the income tax exemption levels still where they were in 1949, and with the amounts paid as old age pension having gone up, we have reached the situation where older people, particularly those between the ages of 65 and 70, who receive the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement but have nothing else on which to live, have to pay income tax on a portion of that meagre income.

I repeat what I have said before, that I am sure this was never intended. It is one of those anomalies that develops because legislation is changed here and there and in other places; but I feel very strongly that it should not be allowed to continue.

I noticed this afternoon when I asked my question that there seemed to be pretty general support in all quarters of the house for the implied suggestion that people who have nothing else but their old age pension and their guaranteed income supplement should not have to pay any income tax at all. One of the occasions when I raised this was on Friday, February 21, 1969, as recorded in Hansard at page 5797 when I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) if he would correct this situation in this session. His reply was:

> Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the very serious representations of my hon. friend.

A few days later, in fact it was on March 5, 1969, as recorded in Hansard at pages 6221 and 6222, we had a discussion of this matter on the late late show and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gray) very graciously replied that there was nothing he could add to what the Minister of Finance had said, namely that he would be glad to consider the serious representations which I had made.

I raised the matter again on Monday, March 17, in a motion that we had set down for an allotted day. It was a motion that had to do generally with old age pensions, the position of veterans on the war veterans allowance, and so on. The motion included a request that certain income tax anomalies be straightened out. One particular anomaly I had in mind, and I so stated, was the unfairness of pensioners who have nothing else but their pension income having to pay tax on it. During the course of that day's debate, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) participated, and at one point he referred to part of my motion. His reference is recorded at page 6703 of Hansard. He made the categorical statement that revisions of our tax laws were receiving a great deal of attention and that one of the purposes of these revisions was to deal with this kind of anomaly. I was pleased to get that statement and responded by saying to the minister that I would hold him to what he had said.

That same day I took the liberty of interrupting the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) when he was speaking and I asked him whether he would support the Minister of National Health and Welfare in trying to persuade the Minister of Finance to correct some of these income tax anomalies. I made reference in particular to war veterans who are called upon to transfer from the war veterans allowance to the guaranteed income supplement, who then find that it is taxable and that they have to pay taxes which they did not previously have to pay. The Minister of Veterans Affairs replied that my assumption was correct.

I am developing a fairly impressive roster. I have the Minister of Finance agreeing to give consideration to my representations. I have the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance assuring me that this consideration will be given by his minister. I have the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Veterans Affairs both adding their support to this proposition.

I say to the parliamentary secretary before he answers me tonight that I know I cannot expect a pre-budget announcement in the course of a late show, but I do emphasize as strongly as I can that this is one of those small but gnawing issues that should not wait over until a complete review or for a white paper, or until next year's budget. The minister has yet to bring in at this session his bill to amend the Income Tax Act. In it will be something that we do not like, that is the 2 per cent social development tax. He could sweeten the bill a bit if he could include in it at least a temporary provision so that old age pensioners who have nothing else but their old age pension are not required to pay income tax.

This could be done by means of a tax credit. It could be done by making the supplement not subject to taxation. It could be done by restoring the $500 exemption to those between 65 and 70, or in some other way. It can be done if the government has the will to do it, and I think I am correct in saying that the government will be responding to the wishes of members in all parts of the house if it takes action along these lines this spring. I hope the parliamentary secretary can assure me tonight that favourable consideration will be given to these representations.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): The point raised by the hon. member this evening has been raised by other hon. members on all sides of the house in the past. I myself raised this question in the house on a previous occasion, prior to the remarks made by the hon. member this evening, so he is not bringing this matter to the attention of the house and of the government for the first time.

This is the type of case which is now under review in connection with the government's work of preparing a white paper in which it will set forth its program of tax reform. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has stated that it is his intention to present this document to the house this coming June. However, I shall be pleased to bring the hon. member's representations to the attention of the minister. I am sure he will add them to the others he has already received on this important matter from other members of this house and will give them, along with these other representations, every appropriate consideration.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—BATH-MILLHAVEN FEDERAL PRISON COMPLEX

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I rise this evening, Mr. Speaker, to pursue a question I asked on March 19 regarding certain n.s.f. cheques written for services in my area by the now bankrupt subcontractor on the Bath-Millhaven federal prison complex, D. Leblanc Inc. of Chomedey, Laval, Quebec. I brought up this matter on February 25 when I interceded on behalf of those who had received n.s.f. cheques for labour on this project.

I am not here tonight to embarass the government. The government is certainly embarrassed enough already, due to the fact that this subcontractor was not bonded. I thank the minister for his response to my plea of February 25 when he assured me and the labouring men of my riding who have been so rudely treated that $30,000 would be withheld from progress payments to Argo, the prime contractor, and applied toward payment of n.s.f. cheques submitted to Argo for labour.

However, there is another side to this serious question and it is this aspect which I am raising tonight. Leblanc, in its capacity as a contractor on this job, arranged for several of its key personnel to obtain lodging, room and board in the vicinity of the prison site. In one case, these services were provided by the Millhaven Inn, a small hostel operated by L. G. Savage of Bath, Ontario. Leblanc agreed to pay for lodging for his men at this establishment, and I have here photostat copies of these n.s.f. cheques given to Mr. Savage for his services. I also have a photostat copy of the total owing to Mr. Savage by Leblanc, namely, $1,099.50.

These cheques were, of course, for services, not directly for labour. Mr. Savage told me in a letter of March 10 that he had contacted the Argo claims representative, a Mr. Caron in Montreal who was handling the Argo-Leblanc affairs and Mr. Caron stated that as far as Argo was concerned Mr. Savage and any other local people holding Leblanc n.s.f. cheques for services had no hope of getting their money because they—meaning Argo, the surviving prime contractor—were interested only in labour, that is, wages.

It is a fine situation, Mr. Speaker, when an unbonded contractor, an unknown in our province, can get a contract from the federal government, come in from Quebec, or any other province, obtain thousands of dollars worth of labour and services, pay for them, supposedly, with worthless cheques and then disappear into his native province while his debts and obligations go unsatisfied. This cannot be allowed, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were here tonight I would say to him that this is a long way from the just society he advocates. In fact, I would make a wager with the Prime Minister or any of his members that no contractor from Ontario would be able to get a federal job in Quebec. There would be some technical point or option whereby this government and the provincial authorities in Québec would make sure a federal government contract in the province of Québec would be awarded to a Québec contractor. I am not saying that is not a good idea, for Quebec, Mr. Speaker. For example, just last week when awarding defence contracts for the new green uniforms for the unified forces Québec received the lion's share of these contracts.

I now cite the case of Napanee Industries who last year lost a $3 million equipment contract for the C.N.R. The successful bidders were Québec firms which were provincially subsidized for their success in getting federal contracts. This, of course, was not a building contract. It was a manufacturing contract for flatcars and railway equipment. This type of business hurt us badly in Napanee because it forced Napanee Industries to lay off many men at the beginning of the winter. It is time that Canadians, region to region and province to province stopped this deception, intrigue and discrimination and became forthright and honest with each other.

The government three weeks ago assumed basic responsibility for all n.s.f. cheques issued by D. Leblanc Inc. at the Bath Millhaven project to the extent of $30,000. They must also assume this responsibility to Mr. Savage for the n.s.f. cheques that Mr. Savage has accepted for services.

I have a copy of Mr. Savage's letter from which I quote:

> As arranged with D. Leblanc, C. Leblanc and C. Pomerleau, owners of the company, all accounts to the Millhaven Inn would be paid by the company and they in turn would deduct, room, board and rent from the employees, thus avoiding any loss to us in the event of layoffs or strikes.
> This arrangement worked well from November 12, 1968 to January 24, 1969.
> I also understand that employees are allowed in the region of $7 per day living allowance when they are away from home and this pays for room and board and becomes part of income for tax purposes. Therefore I submit that wages earned includes living allowance, travel allowance, etc., and that Leblanc n.s.f. cheques for these services should be recognized for restitution the same as labour.

There is plenty of labour connected with providing room and board to labouring men. To continue Mr. Savage's letter:

> An interesting point to me is why from the time I deposited my cheques on the 27th of January did it take 18 days from deposit date for them to return to me n.s.f.
> I took the matter up with my bank manager and he feels that the La Banque Provinciale du Canada in Montreal held them, pending payment by Argo to D. Leblanc, and they, in turn retrieved what D. Leblanc owed them and then sent my cheques and many others back to Ontario n.s.f.
> I heard that $37,000 was credited to their account a few days before bankruptcy.

I have another letter here from Mr. Reginald Harkness of Bath, Ont. who worked for them. He asks the following question:

> 1. How one can collect pay and vacation pay owing.
> 2. How can a company such as Leblanc remove union dues from employees pay and yet these were never received by union.
> 3. How can a company being from Quebec be immune to paying hospitalization.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I believe it is an Ontario law that requires them to pay hospitalization if they have so many employees on the payroll—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to inform the house that certain facts mentioned by the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) are not relevant to the question that was to be debated tonight.

I wish to tell the hon. member that when contracts are awarded by the government, by the Department of Public Works as well as by other departments, they are awarded to the lowest bidder, whether he be a resident of Quebec, Ontario or any other province.

[English]

To come back to the case that interests us tonight, Mr. Speaker, I have previously advised the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) that the government has taken action to protect the payment of wages to personnel who worked on the project he refers to, namely, the maximum security institution at Millhaven, Ontario. The department will also investigate claims for payment for materials used in the construction of this project.

Claims arising from supplementary arrangements made by the subcontractor off the job are normally dealt with under the trustee in bankruptcy, if such is declared. The individual should file his claim for consideration by the department, but a guarantee of payment cannot now be given.

The government recognizes the problem of suppliers of services to subcontractors, and the Treasury Board committees on contract procedures has considered double bonding and other means beyond the provisions of our recent contracts. The protection now offered is more than applies with other contracting agencies. However, whether more responsibility should be accepted has not yet been determined by the government.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

EASTER RECESS

ADJOURNMENT APRIL 2 TO APRIL 14—FAILURE TO MAKE STATEMENT ON NATO—REQUEST FOR HOUSING REPORT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the house adjourns at the conclusion of the sitting on Wednesday, April 2, 1969, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 14, 1969, at 2:00 p.m.,

Provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time, and

That, if Mr. Speaker is unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the motion to adjourn today for the Easter recess is a sensible one, but I rise on behalf of my colleagues and myself to protest as vigorously as I can against the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has not carried out a hope which all of us had, namely that before the house adjourned for the recess he would inform parliament as to the decisions of the government on some aspects of the foreign policy and defence review, particularly with respect to Canada's role in NATO.

The Prime Minister has emphasized on a number of occasions that this decision of the government had to be made and had to be announced at least before if not on the day of the meeting of the Council of NATO in Washington, which I think will be on April 10. Since we have not got any statement today it obviously means that the announcement about the policy will be made during the parliamentary recess. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is another example of the cavalier way in which the Prime Minister and his colleagues are treating the House of Commons and parliament.

This is where so important a matter as an announcement of the decision on the policy of Canada's role in NATO ought to be made, so that representatives of other parties in the house may have an opportunity to express their views about the policy on which the government has decided.

I fully appreciate, and I think every other member of the house does, that it is a matter of great importance and that the cabinet had to have time to consider it. But let me remind you, sir, and other members of the house and the people of Canada that this blessed review of foreign and defence policies has gone on for months and that there have been discussions and conferences and arguments for God knows how long.

Last December 4, as recorded at page 3485 of Hansard, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked some questions on this matter, to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) replied. During one of his replies he said:

After the review is completed the intention is to publish a white paper, which would then of course be open for debate.

We have had no white paper. We have had no indication as to what the government policy is. We are all to recess for Easter without hearing that policy, and that policy will be announced outside parliament by the Prime Minister, in front of the television cameras or elsewhere. Mr. Speaker, I cannot condemn strongly enough this cavalier treatment of parliament. We might as well all be home and listen to the Prime Minister announce his policies over the television screen, if this is the way he and his government are going to act.

We have had not only this review by the government and by agencies of the government but we have had a parliamentary committee which has met for months, which has taken evidence in Canada, which spent two weeks travelling through Europe, and which made a report. It so happens that I do not agree with the majority report, but the committee did make a report to this government. All these reviews inside and outside parliament have taken place and the Prime Minister is not yet ready to make that statement to the house. It may be that the division in the cabinet is so catastrophic that the Prime Minister, with all his intelligence and skill, is unable to solve the problem inside his cabinet. That is his blessed problem. There is no reason this parliament should be treated in this way. If the Prime Minister should make an announcement about the government's NATO policy tomorrow, as may well be the case, or on Friday or Saturday as will certainly be the case, then I say I do not believe the Prime Minister does not know the policy today. I say the only reason he is not making the statement today is that he has no respect for the House of Commons and for parliament and wishes to make the statement outside.

After all these discussions and all these meetings in and outside cabinet, no one can tell me that even this government has been unable to reach a decision on what its policy is, or that even this Prime Minister has been unable to heal the rift in his cabinet about which newspapermen have been writing. I believe that Canada's defence policy is of extreme importance to our country at the present time. Involved in it is not only the attitude of the government toward NATO, but also other areas such as NORAD, our policy in respect of foreign aid and all the other things that are involved in our foreign policy. After these months of promises and negotiations this parliament ought to hear it.

I hesitate, if I may use the expression with your permission, Mr. Speaker, to be a stinker—or let me put it more accurately, to be so much of a stinker that even I would recognize it; but if I were that way I would be very much inclined to ask that the house defeat this motion, except that this is Wednesday and the day after tomorrow is Good Friday. Members of the house have a right to have time to get home to meet their families and the people in their constituencies. After all, I do not believe it would be sensible, fair or reasonable to oppose this motion.

However, I do rise to protest in the strongest possible language the Prime Minister's behaviour in refusing to let us have the government's policy on NATO at least after months and months of promises that this would be done prior to April 10 and if at all possible prior to the adjournment of the House for the Easter recess. There is no reason this should not have been possible, except for his cavalier attitude toward the House of Commons.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I can be very brief. I wish to assure the house and the hon. member who has described himself as a stinker, that my attitude is not one of being cavalier toward the House of Commons. If we had an announcement to make today on NATO policy obviously I would be prepared and delighted to make it today. The discussions we have been having on the NATO issue have been going on in various cabinet meetings. We could not make the decision after the weekend of March 15-16, which was the first date set for the weekend meetings of cabinet to review our whole policy, because the parliamentary committee did not bring in its report until I believe a week ago today. That is the reason the latest input into our study and review had to be taken into account; that is why we could not meet the early deadline we set for ourselves, but which we had not announced publicly.

We had hoped that within a week of our meeting on the 15th and 16th we would be able to announce our policy so as to be in time for the Easter adjournment. At the legitimate demand of the house we postponed these weekend meetings to accommodate the parliamentary committee, in order that we could study its report, which we did over this past weekend. Cabinet is in discussion now and has another meeting tomorrow. I hope after that meeting to be in a position to make an announcement. If the hon. member wants to stay around I will be delighted to have him present when I make the announcement. I have no particular desire to make this announcement exclusively for my friends in the press gallery; I would prefer to make it to the house. If hon. members of the house want to stay around tomorrow, I am sure we could accommodate them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: We will not be rushed, pushed or bullied into making an announcement before we are ready for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Our commitment was to prepare a white paper and to permit the house to debate our foreign policy and defence review. This is still our commitment. The deadline to have this ready by April 10 is not of our making. We should prefer to have this matter considered by the house in a debate on the entire white paper. It is more difficult, and not easier, for us to have to make a decision on NATO before we have made a decision on other aspects of our foreign policy and defence policy. Since we are faced by a deadline, which was set by our international obligations, we have done our best to meet it. We have done so in all due haste, but without undue rush. We will continue our meetings until we are in a position to make the announcement. This may be tomorrow; it may be the day after, or it may be after Easter. We shall have to make some announcement before the 10th and I will be perfectly happy to have the hon. stinker invited to the press conference.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Right Hon. Stinker a question.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask him whether, if the house sat tomorrow, we could have a direct undertaking that he would make a statement on NATO policy tomorrow.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would reply as I replied yesterday to a similar question, that I will do my best to make an announcement tomorrow, but I cannot guarantee it.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to lecture the Prime Minister on his use of language. I do not think the hon. member from the N.D.P. referred to him as a stinker.

Mr. Trudeau: Let him defend himself.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think it will forward our defence policy very much for the Prime Minister to refer to the hon. member in that way. It may be that if disagreements within the cabinet are as deep as they appear to be one could overlook what has been said, as the result of some exasperation which has nothing to do with the hon. member from the N.D.P.

I find it difficult to understand why the government has needed nine months to reach a decision about the appropriate role this country ought to play in NATO.

Mr. Benson: There is also the question of the last twenty years.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think the country can understand why it has taken so long and I do not think this government was justified in keeping our associates in the alliance in doubt for this length of time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister, I think, has no excuse to offer the people of Canada. I am not prepared to say, however, that he is guilty of flouting parliament. I say that, not knowing what difficulties he is having with his cabinet colleagues. It may be that the difficulties—

• (2:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: What about your difficulties?

Mr. Stanfield: I will deal with my own difficulties. We are now discussing the difficulties of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Benson: What is your policy?

Mr. Baldwin: Don't be silly.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that my hon. friends are bothered somewhat by this discussion, but they might sit and listen. I will be through in just a moment.

Mr. Benson: We are amused.

Mr. Stanfield: My hon. friend may be amused by me, but I can tell him that the people of Canada are not amused by the government.

An hon. Member: Sock it to him!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: We are confronted with one of two choices. We have to assume that the Prime Minister is flouting parliament—and I do not assume that easily—or we have to assume that the government is such a vacillating creature that it is unable to make up its mind on this policy after such a long period of time. The government has to make a choice; we have to make a choice—and it is not a very happy choice for us to make.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I think all members of the house would agree that in order that we might have some dignity and decorum in the house, those who used the word "stinker" on either side should agree to having it erased from Hansard, so it will not go out across this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the house is in a position to do what the hon. gentleman suggests might be done. My impression was that the word was used by the Prime Minister and the hon. member for York South more in jest than in seriousness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: It is in this way that I interpreted their use of the epithet, which in other circumstances would certainly be unparliamentary. This would be my ruling.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the right hon. member for Prince Albert rising on a point of order or question of privilege?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was just going to make a suggestion regarding the ruling that you made, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be very helpful. In the Parliament of the United Kingdom, on one occasion the leader of the opposition, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, referred to the government as a "lousy" government. Because there were calls for him to withdraw, he rose and said, "I do not use the word "lousy" in an opprobrious sense. It is merely an anatomical description of a fact". I assume this applies to the use of the word "stinker" which has now found its way into the records of parliament. It is however a most undignified expression for one hon. member to apply to another.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said he was surprised that the right hon. Prime Minister did not make his decision known in a normal way. As far as we are concerned, we do not find it surprising at all because this is the manner in which the right hon. Prime Minister usually conducts public affairs, and this is what happens when a government has the majority.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Ralliement Créditiste greatly deplore that Parliament is told of decisions after everybody else. We are, thus, in a position of inferiority towards the public and other countries.

The decision that will be made public regarding NATO is the responsibility of the Department of External Affairs and I think that as representatives of the people members of Parliament should be the first ones to hear about government decisions. This way, we would be in a better position to discuss government plans. In fact, if things remain as they are, we shall feel that we are useless, or rather that the government has no consideration for us.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this policy will soon be judged by the people. All those things will be made public one day and the people will then be able to decide.

I have been following personally for a few months the proceedings of the parliamentary committee on external affairs and national defence and I have been so far under the impression that the report to be tabled by the committee would not mean much, even after their European trip. It was my impression that the government had already made up its mind.

I shall close my remarks by asking the Prime Minister to assure us, even if his decision regarding NATO is not announced in the house, that it will be made known at least to Washington prior to April 10, so that we may know that the Canadian government's decisions do not come from Washington.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in the discussion of this motion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Brewin: —but I do not propose to vote for this motion without receiving some explanation from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) who is in charge of housing on what has happened to his urgent recommendations in regard to the problem of housing. Some time in January, I think it was January 27 or 28—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not propose to interrupt the hon. member for too long. I realize that he has a contribution to make to the debate, but I have some doubts as to the procedural propriety of hon. members rising on a motion, which is an adjournment motion, to discuss every item of government business.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me it would make the discussion rather irrelevant so far as the motion is concerned. I think the hon. member should limit his contribution to the discussion of the motion which is before the house, in other words relate the subject on which he intends to speak to the motion of adjournment.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I should like to rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, to say that I agree with Your Honour, because if we were to take the time of this house to discuss all the matters with respect to which the government has done nothing, we would be here for the rest of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: For a year.

Mr. Brewin: I propose to be very brief. I want to relate what I am saying to the question of adjournment. I say that this house should not adjourn until it has heard from the Minister of Transport some account of what is to be done with the urgent problem of housing.

The minister has had plenty of warning. As I mentioned before, he has spoken on the subject as long ago as January, and the task force, of which he was chairman, presented a report. On February 4 the minister said that he was making urgent representations in writing to the cabinet. We have then had frequent questions about this matter, and at one stage I think the minister gave a clear undertaking that legislation would be available before the spring building season came about. We all know that spring is upon us at this stage, whether or not we can see it from looking outside.

I think it is perfectly obvious that the Minister of Transport has not been able to persuade his cabinet colleagues to agree to the urgent representations which he said he was making to them. What I suggest is that he should either make a statement to this house or else, because the subject is so urgent and so near to his heart, he should present his resignation to the Prime Minister. At least one of these courses should be taken. I, for one, do not propose to support a motion for adjournment until we have had a statement from the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) agreed to, on division.

FINANCE

TABLING OF PUBLICATION RESPECTING INVESTMENT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and in French of the publication Private and Public Investment in Canada, Outlook for 1969, pursuant to Standing Order 41 (2).

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MOTION TO REFER REPORT OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): There have been certain discussions following the statement I made yesterday with respect to the review of the Canada Elections Act, and if the house is prepared to give consent I will be prepared to move today:

That the Report of the Representation Commissioner on methods of registration of electors and absentee voting, 1968, made pursuant to section nine of the Representation Commissioner Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

If the house would agree to give consent, perhaps I could put that as a motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say that we are prepared to consent to this motion, but in doing so, may I express the hope that during the Easter recess consideration will be given to my suggestion of yesterday that the question of election expenses be referred to some other committee, perhaps even to a special committee?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is because of the hon. member's representation yesterday that we did not put the omnibus order to which I referred.

Motion agreed to.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEK FOLLOWING EASTER RECESS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I think it might be helpful to hon. members if I were to give some indication to the house now of the order of business we propose to call during the week commencing April 14.

The first item will be No. 64 on the order paper, Bill C-184 with respect to the Canadian telecommunication satellite. The second item will be No. 63, Bill C-183 with respect to the Export Development Corporation. The third will be the omnibus Criminal Code bill in connection with which the report was introduced today. I might indicate that it will not be our intention to call this on Monday, so that hon. members might have the opportunity to examine the proceedings and, up until six o'clock on Monday to file any amendments they might wish to put forward on the report stage. Thereafter, time permitting, we would call as the fourth item No. 65 on the order paper, Bill S-23 to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wonder if I might say a word on this, Mr. Speaker. I am not being critical of the order of business, but I would remind the hon. gentleman with reference to the Criminal Code bill that we have not as yet received the full proceedings from the committee. Many amendments were moved by members on all sides of the house. Some were approved by the committee and others were disallowed—I presume the latter will be moved again in the house. Monday does not give us much time in which to prepare those amendments, and I hope the leader of the house will take this into consideration in the light of the new rules under which amendments must be in your hands, Mr. Speaker, or in the hands of the Clerk, by a certain time.

Mr. Hellyer: Prepare them in advance.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps we could have some comment from the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that the evidence will be available in the very near future. The hon. member will have about ten days in which to get ready.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The proceedings are not out.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that the proceedings will be out in time for preparations to be made.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I say a few words, Mr. Speaker? I do not speak particularly for myself because I have already given the Table the amendments we wish to move at the report stage. However it does seem to me that the minister's assurance that the bill will not be called for the report stage on Monday should be underlined, so that members will have an opportunity on that Monday to file notices, and thus meet the 24-hour deadline so that their amendments can be considered on Tuesday. If we have this assurance it seems to me that the number of days between now and April 14 allows plenty of time in which to get amendments ready.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I think the President of the Privy Council is being unreasonable in suggesting that the amendments should be in by the evening of Monday, the day on which the house reconvenes. I do not wish to say anything offensive; we do not run a dictatorship on this side of the house, and the chairman of the committee has taken it upon himself to supply all the amendments which will be put forward on behalf of this side.

Surely, in relation to a bill of such consequence to hon. members and to so many people in the country, a day or two would be more reasonable, and anything less would not be reasonable in connection with the preparation of motions concerning this matter. I would remind the house leader that hon. members are going to be all over the country, even out of the country, some of them. Two or three days following the reconvening of the house would surely be a very reasonable minimum period to be allowed for the preparation of such amendments.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) is not giving much choice or time to the members of the committee, and particularly to those who were not members, to peruse the proceedings of the committee and prepare amendments for Monday evening at the latest. This means that we shall not be able to meet the other members of Ralliement Créditiste in order to study the amendments we might want to move.

In my opinion, the President of the Privy Council, in taking such a stand, will prevent us from giving serious consideration to the report of the committee, from preparing the amendments we might have to suggest. He is not giving us enough time to discuss the amendments which could be made to such an important piece of legislation.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish merely to put in a plea for some consideration for hon. members who live a long way from Ottawa. It is all very well for those who are here to say that the proceedings of the committee will be in the hands of hon. members within the next day or two. Even if they were ready, hon. members like my hon. friend from Calgary North and others who live in distant provinces must rely on the pony express service of the Postmaster General and will not have these reports until, perhaps, the middle of next week. Again I put it to the President of the Privy Council that his decision is predicated upon the periphery of Toronto and not of Vancouver or Halifax. This should have been taken into account. I venture to say that committee reports sent out by members' secretaries will take five or six days to get to Vancouver.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INCOME TAX PAYMENT BY CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Question No. 1,054—Mr. Thomson:

1. Has the Canadian Pacific Railway Company witheld payment of its income tax assessment regarding two of its railroad subsidiaries in 1962, 1963, 1964 and, if so (a) what reasons were given (b) has the government initiated legal proceedings against the CPR Company?

2. Has the Canadian Government settled out of court with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and, if so, for what amount?

3. Was the amount lower than the original assessment and, if so, what are the government's reasons for the acceptance of the lower figure?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Parts 1, 2 and 3. Two subsidiaries of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company appealed to the Exchequer Court of Canada against income tax assessed for 1962, 1963 and 1964. The parties have reached an agreement settling the matters in dispute. Apart from the foregoing, the information requested is confidential and cannot be disclosed.

SPORTS DONATIONS AS INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS

Question No. 1,200—Mr. Paproski:

1. In respect of what branches of amateur athletics are contributions by business and industry deductible for income tax purposes?

2. For what reason or reasons has the government not seen fit to allow for income tax purposes in respect of contributions by business and industry to any or all branches of amateur athletics in Canada?

3. Will the government not give consideration to implementing a policy of allowing the deductibility of contributions to amateur sport as a means of generally improving the level of athletic activity in Canada and internationally?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Contributions by business and industry to any branch of amateur athletics are not deductible as charitable donations for income tax purposes. The only exceptions to this general rule are two national organizations, donations to which have been allowed for many years.

2. Organizations formed for the purpose of furthering or promoting amateur athletics are not considered to be charitable organizations within the legal meaning of that term as used in the Income Tax Act.

3. This is a matter of government policy. If the government proposes any amendment to the Income Tax Act to allow a deduction for contributions to amateur athletics, it will be announced at the appropriate time.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,574—Mr. Rynard:

1. How many positions are being discontinued in the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices across Canada?

2. How many employees are being transferred from their usual positions to one of lower grading?

3. How many positions are being discontinued and how many employees are being transferred to other positions in lower grades at the Barrie Unemployment Insurance Commission office?

Questions

4. How many employees are being offered employment at other locations in the Barrie area?

5. What positions will be affected by (a) job evaluation (b) downgrading in spite of long service?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): In March, 1968, it was determined there were 697 positions that were not required because of the introduction of improved systems and procedures which would be implemented before the end of 1969. The number of employees that could have been affected has been steadily reduced and it is anticipated that by the end of March it will be less than 100.

2. The Unemployment Insurance Commission has not transferred employees to lower grade positions but, in somes instances, employees have voluntarily requested a transfer to a lower level position in order to remain at some particular location.

3. There is one surplus position in the Barrie office and the incumbent has indicated that he wishes to be transferred to a lower level position if one becomes available so that he can remain in Barrie.

4. None.

5. At the present time, none of the positions involved in the changes being made by the introduction of improved methods have been adversely affected by means of job evaluation nor have any employees in these positions been downgraded by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Some positions and employees have been upgraded in the implementation of the changes that have been introduced.

OTTAWA, ONT.—RENTAL RATES

Question No. 1,626—Mr. Schreyer:

What is the lease price on a per square foot basis paid by the Government of Canada for space in the following buildings (a) City Centre Building (b) Sir Guy Carleton Building, 161 Laurier Ave. W. 1. What is the amount of federal income tax payable by a resident of the Province of Quebec as compared to the amount of federal income tax payable by a resident of the Province of Ontario on (a) taxable income of $2,000 (b) taxable income of $5,000 (c) taxable income of $10,000?

2. What is the reason for the different tax abatement in the Province of Quebec from that in the Province of Ontario?

3. What is the basis on which the formula for the Province of Quebec's abatement was decided?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance):

1.	(a) $2,000		(b) $5,000		(c) $10,000
	Ont.	Que.	Ont.	Que.	Ont.	Que.
Basic Federal income tax	250	250	830	830	2170	2170

Less 20% (max. $20) deduction	—20	— 20	— 20	—20	— 20	— 20

Total Federal Tax	281.50	226.50	896.50	713.90	1961.50	1484.10

2. The provisions of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, Statutes of Canada, 1964-65, chap. 54, as amended, and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, 1964, Statutes of Canada, 1964-65, chap. 26.

3. The number of percentage points abated for each program was established at a level which would result in the value of the abatement covering the major part of the federal share of the cost of the program. Under these arrangements the federal government has made special abatements of basic individual income tax in favour of Quebec as follows: (1) for the federal share of welfare programs, mainly Canada Assistance Plan—4 per cent; (2) for the federal share of hospital insurance —14 per cent; (3) for Quebec's share of the federal national health grants—1 per cent; and (4) for youth allowances—3 per cent.

In each of the above cases the compensation received by the province is adjusted, either through cash payments to or recoveries from the province, so that the total value of the compensation is equal to what the federal share of the cost of the program would have been in Quebec had all the payments been made in cash alone on the identical basis as for all other provinces.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. When he said yesterday that he thought it would be useful to have a meeting between officials of the federal government and the provinces to discuss the financial problems of the provinces, would he tell the house whether he was referring to a special meeting or series of meetings of officials of the two levels of government, or was he talking about the reconstitution of the tax structure committee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I was referring to the latter, Mr. Speaker. We feel that this would be the appropriate committee to begin exploring these problems, referring them later on perhaps to some more general federal-provincial structure.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I direct to the Minister of Finance. In view of the obvious urgency of this matter can the Minister of Finance tell me whether the tax structure committee has been reconstituted since the conference and, if so, whether the tax structure committee has held meetings and commenced its work?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the first meeting of the officials committee supporting the tax structure committee is for April 15. At that meeting, the time of a meeting of the ministers will be decided upon and an agenda will be considered by the officials.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that the first meeting of the tax structure committee will apparently take place some three months after it was agreed to reconstitute it, does the Prime Minister not now agree that it is likely to be many months, if not years, before the officials are in a position to reach some understanding?

Mr. Speaker: Order; the question is argumentative.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

REASONS FOR DELAY IN MAKING ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport concerning a subject I have already mentioned today. In view of the fact that on February 4 the minister told the house that urgent recommendations on housing would be presented by himself in a written document to cabinet, without delay, and in time for legislative action to encourage spring building activity, will the minister now tell the house the reason for the long delay in making any announcement on the subject?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The reason is really the extent and the range of the proposals being made. They are numerous, and also quite far reaching in effect. It is a package which would be quite substantial in so far as its amelioration of the housing situation in Canada is concerned. For this reason it requires not only consideration but the working out of a lot of detailed regulations to accompany the legislation. This does take a little time. However I hope the finishing touches will be put to all the proposed legislation, and the necessary regulations in respect thereto, so that the legislation can be introduced in the house not too long after parliament reconvenes following the Easter recess.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the cabinet of which he is a member has apparently not seen fit to pay any attention to these urgent recommendations in connection with a subject of such importance to the Canadian people, does the minister not think it fitting to present his resignation to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Hellyer: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO BILINGUAL FORM

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): As the Secretary of State is here today, I would like to ask him again the question I put yesterday to the Prime Minister but which is more in his field. On January 17, 1967, as is stated on page 11878 of Hansard, the right honourable Lester B. Pearson announced that a 7 per cent bonus would be granted to bilingual officials, including those in the House of Commons, and that that rise would be retroactive to October 1, 1966. Could the Secretary of State tell us when that 7 per cent bonus will be granted to bilingual officials in the House of Commons and whether those officials can expect a readjustment in their salary?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that the hon. member's question is related to officials of the house, it should be put to the Speaker, according to the usual procedure, namely in writing.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, since the question I put yesterday had to do with civil servants, I wonder whether the Secretary of State could give an answer which would apply to parliamentary staff as well?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I read the hon. member's question in the official report. I then inquired of the Civil Service Commission and the Treasury Board, both of which are concerned in the answer I might give to the hon. member. I have had no answer as yet from both those sources, but as soon as I get the required particulars from them, I can pass them on to the hon. member.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister write to the Prime Minister of Quebec after the decision had been made in respect of the airport site near Montreal, advising Mr. Bertrand that the government had concluded that the Northwestern site best meets the objectives as stated, and asking the Prime Minister of Quebec not to indulge in any premature disclosure of the decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I advised Premier Bertrand, after cabinet had made its decision, of the nature of that decision. Because a matter of an hour or two lapsed between the time of cabinet decision and the time when it was announced in the house, I asked him not to make a disclosure until it was announced in the house.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister not admit that the date of the letter to the Prime Minister of Quebec was March 26? In view of that fact, would the Prime Minister like to correct this statement he made to this house on March 28 as it appears at page 7251 of Hansard:

—as the decision was only taken yesterday after the cabinet meeting and that it was announced afterward, it would have been impossible to conclude specific agreements with the provincial authorities—

Would the Prime Minister be agreeable to having the record changed accordingly?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not see what correction it is suggested I make.

Mr. Baldwin: I will repeat it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the letter in question sent to the Prime Minister of Quebec was dated March 26, the day before the Prime Minister said he made the decision, and the Prime Minister of Quebec advised—

Mr. Trudeau: There is no problem, Mr. Speaker. It did call for a little bit of ingenuity. I am prepared to tell the house how we met it.

An hon. Member: You pre-recorded it.

Mr. Trudeau: I pre-recorded it as the hon. member suggests. I had the letter typed on the 26th. I had it brought to Quebec city by one of my officials who waited in Quebec city until I notified him that it was time—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: This is fantastic.

Mr. Trudeau: If the house does not want the explanation—

Mr. Woolliams: I think with the greatest of respect the Prime Minister has missed the point. Both his ministers said the decision was made on March 27. May I just quote—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I could have order, or do you want to yell me down?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to quote from the letter, then I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. I quote:

The government is, therefore, prepared to construct the airport at this site and invites the cooperation and participation of the province in accordance with our respective responsibilities.

This letter is dated March 26, 1969. Was the decision made on the 26th or prior to March 26, 1969? I suggest that this letter—

Mr. Trudeau: If the house will let me speak I will continue the answer I was giving a moment ago. On the 26th of March I wrote a letter addressed to Premier Bertrand informing him of a decision which would be announced to him the next day if cabinet reached that decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Are you listening, fellows?

Mr. Woolliams: Would you like to read it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member said, I pre-recorded the letter. I had it typed the day before. I gave it to one of my officials. I sent him to Quebec city so that Premier Bertrand would be informed of the decision immediately after cabinet had reached that decision. When cabinet reached that decision on the Thursday around 12.30 p.m., I phoned Premier Bertrand and told him he would receive this letter. The official was asked to present it to him, and he presented it to Premier Bertrand.

Premier Bertrand received the letter, I suppose, a few minutes to an hour before it was announced to the house. That is why the final paragraph told him to keep the matter confidential until we had announced it to the house.

At the time the Minister of Transport was making this announcement to the house, I was speaking to Mr. Bertrand on the telephone in the lobby. I told him I now relieved him of the obligation in the last paragraph to keep it silent, because we were announcing it to the house and he could announce it to his house if he wished.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, as a result of that answer I now rise on a question of privilege. I want to bring to Your Honour's attention that at page 7292 of Hansard for March 31, one minister stated this:

Actually, the cabinet's decision was only taken on Thursday, March 27.

The Prime Minister wrote this letter on March 26. How could he say that was the decision before cabinet had made the decision? How could he announce it in advance?

At page 7335 of Hansard for March 31, 1969 the minister again stated that the cabinet never made that decision until March 27. If that is not inconsistent, there has never been an inconsistency in this house. The Prime Minister had better get together with his two ministers, and let us have the truth.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one to the Prime Minister with relation to his intriguing answer in respect of the new personalized postal service for the Prime Minister's office. Did the messenger that went to Quebec have only one letter or did he have four or five letters in respect of all the alternative sites?

Mr. Trudeau: He had only this letter; but there was an explosive device in it which—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Is that what is known as someone going off his rocker?

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN QUEBEC AND FEDERAL MINISTERS TO REVIEW LOCATION DECISION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house whether he or the Prime Minister received a telegram from the government of the province of Quebec suggesting that the Minister of Municipal Affairs of that province is prepared to meet with the minister tomorrow or at a convenient time to discuss and review the question of the location of the new international airport in the province of Quebec? What has been the reaction to it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a telegram was received late last night from Dr. Lussier. I was talking to him on the telephone this morning and I told him it would be extremely inconvenient, if not impossible, for me to meet with him tomorrow because, as is well known, the cabinet will be meeting again tomorrow to discuss many important matters including, as the Prime Minister said, the review of foreign policy. So it would be very difficult for me to meet with him tomorrow.

I suggested that we might meet on April 14 immediately after the Easter recess, as I hope to be able to take a few days off before then. He indicated to me the urgency of expressing their points of view and of taking up certain questions which he would like to have further considered. I told him I would look again at the calendar and telephone him again to let him know if it would be possible to meet his wishes or if the 14th would be the earliest possible date.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Has the minister or the Prime Minister looked at the calendar to see if the minister could be spared from his many duties to deal with this very important and pressing problem, rather than leaving it to some time in the very indefinite future?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and with the greatest respect, I think that my question was direct. Has consideration been given? Has he consulted his calendar—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that whether the minister has consulted his calendar cannot be considered a matter of great urgency.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right, I will leave it alone, but you know what it is all about.

AIR TRANSPORT

MERGER BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is only one here today, the one from Winnipeg. Is the minister in a position today or will he be in a position when we come back on April 14 to make a statement concerning his review of relations between Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines?

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there is no statement to be made at this time on this matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government make it clear that if there is anything to be done in the way of a merger between these two airlines that the government position will be a majority one throughout?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport and others have said many times that the question of a merger is not being actively considered by the government at the present time or by any review of air policy taking place at the present time.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REPRESENTATIONS FROM SASKATCHEWAN AS TO PRICING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce may I ask whether the Prime Minister, prior to March 26, received a telegram from the Premier of Saskatchewan setting out a resolution unanimously passed by the Saskatchewan legislature in favour of a floor price of $1.95½ for wheat and a two-price system, with the price at Fort William fixed at $2.12? What is the reaction of the government and the reply of the Prime Minister to that very reasonable request, having regard to the serious condition on the prairies today amongst wheat farmers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I received such a telegram I probably referred it to the Minister of Agriculture to give me advice on how to answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the absence of all the absentees, Mr. Speaker, could I find out who is acting as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or possibly the Minister of Agriculture, with his all-pervasive knowledge, could answer the question?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, such a telegram was received and it is being considered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether there is any expectation that a decision will be made within the next couple of days, having regard to the approach of spring and the need of the farmers out west for funds, as the minister knows?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman also knows, the two proposals that were contained in the telegram are in fact major new proposals in agricultural policy, and I am sure he would not expect the government to make that decision within two days.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the government has had three weeks now. How much longer does it want to stay asleep concerning the plight of the farmers in the western provinces?

BROADCASTING

PAT BURNS—"HOT LINE" PROGRAM

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

In view of the growing concern regarding the departure of Pat Burns, the announcer of Hot Line, from station CKGM in Montreal, and of allegations made about political intervention, has the Secretary of State made an investigation on that matter? If so, what were the results?

[English]

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had no report because I did not know that Mr. Pat Burns had left the radio station. I do not usually listen to him but I will inquire and be happy to present whatever information the C.R.T.C. may have.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I believe that it was the "Hot Line" program that was discontinued. Would the minister check with the C.R.T.C. to see whether any instructions were issued by the commission to discontinue the "Hot Line" program?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made a representation to the minister.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REVIEW OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS AND DEFENCE POLICY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the rather startling revelation that the Minister of Transport made on Monday of a sort of occult nature, that events that have not happened yet can be discerned on videotape, and in view of the striking similarity of this to ancient knowledge known to Julius Caesar when he used to have experts examine the entrails of a chicken to determine the future in important military matters, can the minister say whether he has any expert on staff who might examine videotapes at the present time to determine what decisions the government will take in the future with regard to its review of foreign affairs and defence policies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

APPOINTMENT OF OMBUDSMAN

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In his absence the other day I asked the Prime Minister whether consideration is being given to the establishment of a federal office of ombudsman and the Prime Minister undertook to check with the Minister of Justice. Can the minister say whether consideration is being given to this matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a direct answer, but I can tell him that the Department of Justice is undertaking a thorough review of administrative law in this country and the rights of appeal of the average citizen against government decisions, and a special committee of the house has been set up, under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, to study the question of delegated legislation. The house should also know, of course, that under the new official languages bill there is provision for an official languages commissioner to act as a language ombudsman, but in general I can tell the hon. member that we are reviewing the whole matter quite thoroughly.

BROADCASTING

ALLEGED DELAY IN AUTHORIZING RENEWAL OF LICENCES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Why was the order in council authorizing renewal of licences of some of the major television and radio stations in Canada delayed until the eleventh hour, creating alarm and uncertainty among the stations and their employees about their ability to continue broadcasting?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the directive given to the C.R.T.C. regarding foreign ownership of broadcasting facilities in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: If I may repeat my question, Mr. Speaker, I inquired why the order in council authorizing the renewal of licences for major stations was delayed until the eleventh hour? Arising from that, perhaps I can address a supplementary question which will explain the urgency. Has the minister received a protest from the president of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters that the delay amounts to intimidation and harassment by the cabinet of the Canadian broadcasting industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I must confess my ignorance. I have no idea of the order-in-council referred to by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I do not know what he means by the eleventh hour and, finally, I am not aware that a protest has been made to the Secretary of State in the form mentioned by the hon. member.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF DRAFT DODGERS AND DESERTERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Some weeks or months ago the minister was asked questions about his or his department's policies with regard to the admission into Canada and the treatment when they are in Canada of draft dodgers and military deserters. The minister on more than one occasion said that the matter was being looked into and reviewed, and that he hoped to make a statement to the house on the results of that inquiry. Is he now prepared to make this statement? If not, how soon would he be prepared to inform the house concerning the result of that inquiry into policies?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not in a position to make any statement today. The matter is at present before my colleagues for consideration. As soon as that consideration is complete I shall be in a position to make a statement.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): At the time the minister makes his statement will he advise whether a clear distinction will be drawn between those who are draft dodgers and those who come here to incite the people?

Mr. MacEachen: As has been stated so often in this house, draft dodgers are admitted to Canada if they qualify under the selection system. Their draft standing has no bearing on their acceptability. Persons who wish to come to Canada to incite violence are in a different category. If a draft dodger were a known violence inciter he would be treated in a different way.

[Later:]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, might I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration? In response to an earlier inquiry concerning the confusion with regard to draft dodgers and military deserters there was some question about the tabling of a document. I wonder whether the minister's colleagues have come to a decision in respect of producing this very important document.

Mr. MacEachen: The normal case is that these documents are privileged. They are interdepartmental and are not normally made public.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Has the minister received representations from many major bodies in this country, including churches, with regard to having this document made available for public scrutiny and information?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there may have been one or two representations on this subject.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BRINGING OF JERRY RUBIN TO CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that one Rubin was denied admission to Canada because he is a fomenter of revolution, has the minister ascertained why the C.B.C. had the effrontery to put this man on the national—

Mr. Jamieson: Network.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, network—you are an expert in the field—and by telephone have him thereby subvert what had been determined by the department? What answer has been received from the C.B.C. and in particular I should like to know why the C.B.C. should be permitted to defy a government order and pay a wrongdoer to place his views before the Canadian people?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, having respect for house rules, I will not reply to the right hon. member's arguments.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Respect for house rules! You are never here.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: However, I will attempt to answer the question.

According to the C.B.C., the four minute interview with the individual concerned was an element of a program where other opinions balanced those which were expressed during those four minutes.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is no explanation. That is just an alibi. I now ask this question. Is this kind of thing going to stop? There can be no justification for the C.B.C. breaking the law in this manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, not being a jurist, I cannot state as lightly as the hon. member that the C.B.C. was guilty of breaking the law.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can he tell us when he is likely to make an announcement regarding the personnel and establishment of the prices commission, which he indicated would be made during the month of March? I ask this question at this time because I would not like my hon. friend to the accused either of deliberately flaunting parliament or of inefficiency.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I hope to make the appointments very shortly, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the great interest of the Leader of the Opposition in this commission and the appointments to it since his initial reaction to it seemed to be rather cool. I am delighted to see he is warming to it.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the minister given any consideration to the suggestion that he should take advantage of the opportunity to establish not only this commission, about which I have expressed views, but also a forecasting service of the type recommended for several years now by the Economic Council of Canada and urged upon the minister by the Private Planning Association of Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Basford: It is my feeling that the prices and incomes commission can do much the same type of research and forecasting as the Economic Council suggested in its thrd annual report.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN 1970 CHAMPIONSHIP CONTEST

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the 1970 world hockey championships will be held in Canada and the further fact that only last weekend was it determined to our relief that our team would be participating in those championships rather than being relegated to the consolation round in Bucharest, Rumania, does the minister propose any action to ensure that Canada will be represented by its best hockey players?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure the question is one of immediate urgency, but since there seems to be interest in it perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker; we are taking that type of action. A Hockey Canada Corporation has been formed with all the leading participants in hockey taking part in it. We have made strong representations to the National Hockey League clubs in Canada and have been assured that they will co-operate to the fullest next year in providing our national team with very capable players. I hope this will be the case.

EDUCATION

ALGONQUIN COLLEGE—SEIZURE OF PARACHUTING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General what the significance is of the seizure by the R.C.M.P. of the parachuting equipment of students of Algonquin College?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much that the question can be answered at this time as a matter of national importance and urgency.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY BOARD

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. First of all, perhaps I might be permitted the liberty of congratulating him on having assumed this new title. In view of the fact that the comprehensive development plan for Prince Edward Island came into being yesterday, has a joint federal-provincial advisory board been established inasmuch as this will, I believe, be very important to the working of this plan?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the first things to be done and I think it will be done very shortly.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—LAND SPECULATION IN EXPROPRIATED AREA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the recent Canadian Press story that land speculation within the area allegedly expropriated for the new Montreal international airport, as well as outside it, appears to have been going on, what measures is the government now taking to stop this speculation and protect the Canadian taxpayer?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, speculation will be prevented by the way the law operates. The land will be paid for at prices which tribunals judge to be fair and the land around the area expropriated by the federal government will be frozen by provincial action.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will he tell the house whether in the present instance he will follow the ancient practice of putting to dealth the bearer of evil tidings?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

A.B.M. SYSTEM—DEVELOPMENT AND CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS IN CANADA

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Was the senior official in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce reflecting government policy when he said yesterday that Canada would attempt to obtain contracts related to the development and construction of the United States A.B.M. system?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; that question is not in order.

HOUSING

C.M.H.C.—CRITERIA APPLICABLE IN PROJECTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as the minister responsible for housing. It arises from answers he gave on Monday and the possible impression he left that before he could fulfil his pledge to the municipalities of Canada to provide them with public housing guidelines he would have to visit eight or ten of the most urgent urban renewal projects. Can the minister now say whether the drafting and presentation of these guidelines are not dependent on any tour?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I said that I am sure I would be accused of having made up my mind before visiting the actual sites. Naturally we are giving consideration to the various alternatives open to us, to the options open to us and to the way each of them would work. But the final decision will have to wait until I have visited some of the centres I have mentioned. I hope to do that in mid-week following Easter. I hope to be in a position to make an announcement very shortly thereafter.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister forget that he advised the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants approximately one week ago that he would have this information within a few days?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

CUCUMBERS AND TOMATOES—ACTION TO STABILIZE PRICES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure the minister is aware that the recently imposed seasonal tariffs on cucumbers and tomatoes are not, according to the industry, providing the relief they were intended to and are lower than the industry advised they ought to be. Could the minister inform the house what emergency measures, if any, the government is implementing to stabilize the present distressed domestic market for Canadian produced cucumbers and tomatoes so that these products can be sold at prices that are at least above the basic cost of production?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the so-called basic cost of production is not an exact calculation but includes a number of items which are matters of opinion. However, we are aware that there is an increased importation of tomatoes and cucumbers at somewhat lower prices than prevailed one year ago. Discussions are going on among my department, the Department of Finance and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to see what can be done to be helpful in resolving this problem.

HOGS—OBJECTIONS TO INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question has nothing to do with tomatoes and cucumbers but has to do with pork. Would the Minister of Agriculture indicate, in view of his announcement yesterday regarding the recent amendment affecting the hog production program, whether he has received representations from producer organizations objecting to his latest move in this field?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall having received any mail, telegram or telex communication on this matter. However, representations were made to me by the leaders in the swine industry at the agricultural congress.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

NATIONAL SECURITY

PUBLICATION OF PORTIONS OF REPORT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Some time ago the Royal Commission on Security issued a report. I understand the Prime Minister said that an effort would be made to segregate parts of the report that were not classified and to publish those parts. Is that still the intention of the government? If so, how soon may we expect to see this partial report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is still the intention. The question of the date has not yet been settled.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—DISPUTE BETWEEN SHIPPING FEDERATION AND LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Before we adjourn for Easter, can he advise the house whether he has a recent report relating to the labour problems on the Montreal waterfront?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received the conciliation board report. As I mentioned the other evening, the judge has been given a few days' extension by both parties since he has worked solidly for almost one week on the commission. I would say, however, that after reviewing the various proposals advanced by the judge there is hope that a collective agreement will be reached. I am optimistic that the matter will be settled amicably.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACTIVITIES OF U.S.S.R. NAVAL UNITS IN NORTH ATLANTIC

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and has to do with a question I asked him last Friday which he said he would take as notice. At that time I asked the minister if he had any reliable information as to the purposes of reportedly large Russian naval movements in the North Atlantic?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since our forces have in the past often come under the surveillance of Russian naval and air elements we have found it courteous to reciprocate the gesture.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. However, I believe the hon. member for Vegreville has a supplementary question concerning tomatoes and cucumbers. Perhaps he might be allowed to ask it.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF C.N.R. AND AIR CANADA ANNUAL REPORTS—SUGGESTED MOTION

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the government house leader would clarify a confusing situation and say whether he intends to proceed with a motion asking for a house order to refer the reports of Air Canada and Canadian National Railways to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I had extensive consultations and it was my understanding that there was agreement on this matter. I discovered yesterday that there was no agreement and I shall have to consult further to see if we can find some way to resolve current difficulties.

Mr. Schreyer: I have a further point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I doubt that the hon. member has a point of order. Perhaps he might discuss the matter with the minister outside the house.

AGRICULTURE

PREVENTION OF INTRODUCTION OR SPREAD OF PLANT PESTS—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-154, to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION FOR CONTAMINATION BY PESTICIDE RESIDUE—NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-155, An Act to provide compensation to farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residue, and to provide for appeals from compensation awards, for the following reason:

The amendment changes the principle of the Bill so that compensation is payable even if the pesticide residue resulted through the fault of a pesticide manufacturer or another person. It makes it a responsibility of the Minister to pay and carry court action against a third party. It would also remove the precise requirement that the Minister may require a farmer to take action to reduce losses before paying compensation, such as washing, trimming, changes in storage etc. If this requirement is removed, it would substantially increase the costs involved in applying the provisions of the legislation. The amendment would also increase the possibility of marginal or frivolous claims.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a minute or two to explain this motion because

I think the reasons contained in it are self-explanatory. We had a discussion of this matter in the Standing Committee on Agriculture of this house, and it is my opinion that we in fact decided in the committee that the requirement that a farmer take all action open to him to reduce his losses was a proper provision in this bill. Furthermore, I question whether the amount of money that would be required to administer this legislation would not be significantly changed if the Senate amendment were accepted. Therefore, on those grounds I am not prepared to accept it.

Of course, the Senate committee did go on to say—at least I am so informed—that the minister would still have the right, before payment of compensation, to require a farmer to reduce his loss, because of the permissive nature of the legislation. Quite frankly, I am not sure that if we accepted the Senate amendment the minister would not be put in the impossible position of taking arbitrary, even illegal, action in requiring or requesting a farmer to reduce his losses through many of the operations that are open to him.

There is much more I could say by way of explanation, but I think this brief explanation, together with what is contained in the motion I have just moved, acquaints hon. members with the reasons why we cannot accept the amendment.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Senate amendment is a vast improvement of the legislation. This point is one upon which I adumbrated at great length and ran into an almost incomprehensible stubbornness on the part of the minister to recognize the impossible burden he was imposing upon a farmer who had a claim under this legislation. Let us consider the provisions of clause 5. I shall do this in detail for the benefit of the minister. He does not seem to understand what the draftsman has provided for him; therefore I shall tell him. I submit that he is placing an impossible burden on a farmer. The minister may shake his head. Let us go through this clause word by word, and we shall see whether I am not correct. Clause 5 (1) provides:

> No payment of compensation shall be made to a farmer pursuant to this act in respect of a loss occasioned to him by reason of pesticide residue in or upon an agricultural product until the farmer has taken any steps that the minister deems necessary—

In other words, the minister says: You have to climb to the moon.

Mr. Olson: But he would not.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is nonsense, Mr. Speaker; the minister says he would not. As I told the minister before, the road to hades is paved with good intentions.

Mr. Perrault: That is an original quotation!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then we find these words:

> —to reduce the loss occasioned to him by reason of such pesticide residue—

The minister has said this requirement is being eliminated by the Senate amendment. He said that the principal reason would be that the farmer had not trimmed, washed or done this, that or the other. Not only does the farmer have to do this—and I think it is reasonable that he should have to do it—but it is not in the disjunctive; it is in the conjunctive because the clause goes on to say: "and to pursue any action that the farmer may have in law".

There are two conditions. They are not disjunctive; they are not alternatives; they are both absolutely binding. The farmer has to cut, wash and do whatever is necessary—I think anyone would agree that this is reasonable—and then it is mandatory that he must "pursue any action that the farmer may have in law against the manufacturer of the pesticide causing the residue in or upon the product or", and so on. This must be done even if the manufacturer is a resident of the United States. Does the minister know how difficult it is for a farmer in Canada to sue a manufacturer in the United States?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister will have plenty of time to reply.

Mr. Olson: I just want to ask a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does the minister appreciate the chances a farmer would have of pursuing such an action, and the cash he would have to put up as security for costs in bringing an action in a foreign jurisdiction? The clause continues:

> (ii) any person whose act or omission resulted in or contributed to the presence of the pesticide residue in or upon the product.

This provision includes a former owner of the land who may be deceased and whose estate may be penniless. It includes the employee or agent of the former owner or of the farmer, who may be penniless, may have absconded or done something which means he is unable to be present.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is a condition absolutely precedent.

Mr. Olson: Has the hon. member taken the time to read subclause 2, which provides as follows:

—as a condition for the payment of any compensation to a farmer under this act, the consent of that farmer for the minister to pursue on his behalf—

The hon. member has apparently not read that subclause.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the minister betrays his ignorance of the interpretation of a legal section. The first part of this clause provides that no payment of compensation shall be made to a farmer in respect of a loss occasioned to him unless something is done. There are no "ifs", "ands" and "buts"; there are no "mays". There is nothing permissive in clause 5(1), which is the only one the Senate eliminated.

The Senate retained subclause 2 and renumbered it 1; they moved forward subclause 3 and renumbered it 2; they have also inserted a third subclause to deal with an excess of recovery. The chances of that may be pretty slim, but they have provided for it. The minister says the Senate felt that he already has sufficient power under the act. He has. I will show him where he has this power. I ask the minister to look at clause 4 on page 3 of the bill. This clause provides:

The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) prescribing the procedures to be followed in claiming compensation;—

The Governor in Council is the minister. The clause continues:

(b) prescribing the methods to be used in determining the eligibility of any farmer for compensation;—

• (3:40 p.m.)

I wonder why the minister does not have the brains to include in those regulations the provision that a farmer cannot make a claim unless he washes off the residue or does whatever is necessary, as stated in clause 5(1) (a) which he complains is being taken out. When I use the word "brains" I mean it to apply to the minister and his officials. I wonder why they do not have the ingenuity to draft such a regulation. The power is right there in the regulations, it is even better than in the statute. But the minister must recognize that clause 5 (1) (a) allows no latitude except to the minister. He can ask that they do anything. He is merely repeating here the powers that are already given to him under clause 4 (b), Clause 5 (1) (a) is merely a restatement of what can be done under clause 4 (b), but it is coupled with a mandatory requirement to pursue any action against another party.

The minister is wrong if he thinks that that is an easy obstacle for a farmer to surmount. I have indicated why I oppose this bill in its present form. It is because I think it is a diabolical piece of legislation in the powers that it grants. It might be hoped that one of these days the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) would have an agricultural inspector move in on his premises under this or any other act. He will then see what recourse he has. I know he has always fought for the rights of the individual, but under this bill the individual has no rights. Even the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) could not keep an agricultural inspector out of his premises.

Mr. Blair: The public have their rights.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I heard the hon. member argue that the public have rights under the Precious Metals Marking Act, but the minister disagreed with him, and I too disagree with him although he is a friend of mine. Surely individuals have rights and should not be subject to the whim of any government inspector. The hon. member might keep all the drugs he wanted in the basement of his house and the authorities would need a search warrant to enter his house, but if he has some pesticides—

Mr. Olson: You are talking about the wrong act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not, Mr. Speaker. The same threat applies throughout Bills C-154, C-155 and C-157. I have pointed out the reasons why I disagree with the minister, and on that basis I cannot accept his persuasions with regard to this bill. He is using the wrong methods to achieve what he wants to do. There are many ways in which he could do this with a great respect for the rights of the individual. As a matter of fact I would say the minister is giving them the possibility of compensation but he is asking them to climb over mountain ranges in order to recover a nickel's worth of compensation at the other end. The minister has destroyed the principal purpose of the bill and made a hollow mockery of what he intends to do.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, when an opposition member has to decide between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Senate he finds himself in an awkward position. In this case I find that I cannot go along with the Senate. Since this is a relatively new field we accept the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture that this point could be considered at another time if there is need for a change. I for one do not have strong feelings one way or the other, at this stage at least. In this case I go along with the suggestion made by the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Motion agreed to.

PEST CONTROL

REGULATION OF PRODUCTS USED IN CONTROL PROCEDURE—NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the amendment to Bill C-157 that the other place has suggested I move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this house disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-157, an act to regulate products used for the control of pests and the organic functions of plants and animals, for the following reasons:

It is difficult to foresee all the ramifications of an appeal procedure provided by cross-reference to another proposed statute that was substantially amended by the house after the amendment to this bill was made by the Senate;

The amendment provides for a review procedure that was considered by the House of Commons and rejected; and

Any manufacturer, under the proposed statute without this amendment, would have not only an opportunity, but an obligation to present in detail all required technical information, and, in addition, a review procedure already is provided for all cases where goods are detained.

I wish to be brief in giving an explanation as to why we disagree with the amendment proposed by the Senate to Bill C-157. As I said, the advice to the House from the Senate was dated March 25, and on March 28, or several days later, this house did in fact amend Bill S-26 by deleting subclauses 3, 4 and 5 of clause 8 and substituting two other subclauses. Therefore it would be difficult for us to foresee all the ramifications of this cross-reference since the other bill has not gone through all the final stages yet, if my information is correct.

However, there was a discussion on this matter in the Standing Committee on Agriculture and a recommendation was made that an appeal procedure be provided. We agreed, and in fact it was amended slightly at that stage to allow for a review in the case of a disagreement and to give manufacturers an opportunity to take their case before officials of the department if any goods are detained. That is important, of course, and in any event it is always done as a matter of courtesy and good administration, but I think they should also have the right that was put in the clause. They have not only an opportunity to do so but an obligation to provide all the technical information required respecting the product to the department in the first instance, before it is registered. The provision is perhaps redundant inasmuch as the House of Commons had a debate on it and in the wisdom of hon. members, having heard from the representatives of the Chemical Association, the amendment which was made was considered to be satisfactory.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Again, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference of opinion between the minister and myself. Personally, I do not like the type of amendment put forward by the hon. Senators. It is a scissors and glue type of operation, importing into one statute provisions from another. Instead of saying precisely what is meant in the statute under consideration, reference is made to another statute. True enough, the hon. Senators were working under some difficulty in trying to fit into an existing bill something which I think was quite correct in principle.

Notwithstanding what the minister said about the manufacturers of a pesticide furnishing all the details as to chemical composition and so on, I point out that nothing in any way deters an inspector from entering. An inspector has full power to move into premises at any time he considers reasonable, to seize products and detain them. Even if there is damage to the products as a result there is no right of compensation against the government or against the actions of the inspector. It is true an action for damages might lie in some other way, but under this legislation nothing of that nature is provided. The minister's officials may be as arbitrary as they like. Their actions may lack a good foundation in knowledge.

Mr. Olson: Very unlikely.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister says "very unlikely". I know the hon. gentleman draws his inspiration from above. He is divinely aspired. But the other people are mere mortals and pigheaded errors do arise. Yet there is no recourse for a manufacturer at all, no recourse for a person on whose premises products deemed at one moment to be injurious may be seized and detained.

Why object to a review? The principle of a review is granted in Bill C-154, if I recall correctly, but not under this legislation. The principle of fairness to all parties has suddenly disappeared. While I do not like the exact nature of the solution put forward by hon. members of the other place, I say that essentially they are right. There must be provision for a review.

I put this on the record: I personally do not accept the minister's motion and I am prepared to vote against it. I urge hon. members to approach this legislation in the same way. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) might want to take a look at this. I know some of the officials in the legislative drafting section of the Department of Justice and I am appalled at some of the work which has come out. It amounts to a denial of justice all the way through, a denial of basic, ordinary justice. Yet because this has a ministerial imprint and we are working under a sort of presidential ukase system we are supposed to accept this bill. I am amazed at the silence of some of the lawyers on the government side. If they were on this side of the house they would be talking for perhaps twice as long as I am about the rights of individuals and the way in which they are being curtailed by some of the legislation put forward at this time.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add to the words of my hon. friend concerning the minister's comments on the Senate amendment to this bill. I am of the considered opinion that although the principles contained in these three bills are good and an honest attempt has been made to help the business of agriculture, the legislation is less than satisfactory because of the fact that the interested parties in their dealings with the government can only act by leave of the government and its representatives. This is borne out by the fact that the hon. Senators recognized that under this bill there is a possibility of arbitrary action. They also recognized that the industry was given no right of appeal and considered that such a right should not be denied to any segment of Canadians.

Like the hon. member for Edmonton-West (Mr. Lambert) I do not altogether approve of the manner in which the amendment has been made, seeking to implement in one bill regulations enacted under another. But in the main I think it was an honest attempt to rectify a major weakness in the legislation.

In my opinion the minister failed to indicate the real feelings of the chemical industry when discussing the proceedings in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. The industry in its representations did not agree with the principle set out in the bill regarding an appeal. This was one of the contentious issues. Industry representatives felt they had no method of appeal against actions which could be arbitrarily taken as a result of the powers granted to the Department of Agriculture. They were fearful of the kind of action which might be taken under this legislation.

We would be derelict in our duty if we were to grant power of this kind to a department in circumstances where it might be used in a manner harmful to the welfare of those whom the legislation was designed to help. It may be unfortunate that the amendment has been drafted in its present form, but we on this side cannot accept these bills. They are bad bills, not because of the principles involved but because of the way in which they are drafted and the arbitrary power placed in the hands of a few who, not subject to appeal, could almost cripple the day to day activities of the industry involved.

I should like to take this opportunity of registering my opposition to the fact that the minister will not accept this avenue of appeal, though in my opinion I agree with my colleague that the avenue of appeal proposed by the Senators is not perhaps the best that could have been advocated. When this bill was before us in its original form many members on this side of the house tried earnestly and sincerely to influence the minister to incorporate in the bill a direct appeal which in my humble opinion would go farther than the amendment presented by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Danforth: On division

Motion agreed to.

EASTER RECESS

ADJOURNMENT APRIL 2 TO APRIL 14

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to move the adjournment of this session—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Of this house. You are not Governor General yet!

Mr. Olson: Yes, of this house. However, before I do so may I be permitted to express to Your Honour and to members on both sides of the house my wish that they will have a very restful, enjoyable and well deserved recess.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of this party we wish to thank the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Olson) for the very kind words he has just spoken. We join in the greetings he has expressed and in particular we would like to wish Your Honour a restful and enjoyable Easter break.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we will say it with flowers.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their kind wishes. Before putting the motion of the minister to the house, may I take advantage of this opportunity to extend my warmest greetings and good wishes to hon. members for a well and richly deserved holiday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—REPORT ON SPRING MINISTERIAL SESSION

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who would normally report to the house on the spring NATO ministerial session, and because there has been a great deal of interest regarding this particular session, I have undertaken on his behalf to make the following report to hon. members of this house.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and French of the communiqué which was issued at the conclusion of the regular spring meeting of ministers which I attended in Washington last Thursday and Friday with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Part of the Washington meeting was devoted to commemorating NATO's twentieth anniversary but the ministers showed little inclination to dwell on the past accomplishments of the alliance. Their attention was focused instead on problems of the future, both immediate and long term.

The immediate issue was to decide how to get on with the resolution of east-west problems. Soviet intervention in Czechoslovakia had set back hopes for improving east-west relations, but there was agreement in Washington that a continuing dialogue between members of NATO and the Warsaw Pact was the only rational course. NATO's 15 member governments therefore agreed on a policy of gradually renewing contacts with the Warsaw Pact countries and of exploring all possibilities for negotiations that might help resolve their outstanding differences with the east.

The ministers discussed at some length the proposal for a European security conference contained in the communiqué issued by the Warsaw Pact in Budapest on March 17. The conclusion was that a European security conference as conceived in the Budapest declaration posed serious difficulties, because the proposed terms of reference called for recognizing the continued division of Germany and existing borders in central Europe. To accept in advance the Communist position on these issues would clearly pre-judge the outcome of the conference. A number of the delegations in Washington, including that of Canada, considered that if the east was now seriously interested in the possibility of holding a European security conference, they might be prepared to accept realistic terms of reference. The NATO ministers agreed steps should be taken to test thoroughly the intentions of the eastern European countries, particularly on issues which might be negotiable. There was general agreement that if a conference were held it should include both the United States and Canada.

[Translation]

At the Washington meeting a significant new dimension was added to the ministers' discussions. It was the question of what the members of the alliance might do collectively to assist in the search for solutions of the social problems facing modern societies and in the attempt to close the gap between the properous developed countries and those of the developing world. It was acknowledged that many aspects of these questions were already being considered in other international bodies but there was a general disposition to see if NATO could help to find new and better ways of sharing views and experiences on them.

The Canadian delegation's principal aim was to ensure that NATO would use to the full its capacity to contribute to the early improvement of east-west relations. The paper on east-west relations which the ministers had before them was based on a Canadian draft and its conclusions were largely reflected in the results of the meeting.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

In the main Canadian statement which was delivered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, emphasis was placed not only on east-west relations generally, but on the importance we attach to the early initiation of talks between the United States and the Soviet Union on the limitation of offensive and defensive strategic nuclear weapons. The Secretary of State for External Affairs also expressed our hope that, once begun, these talks would be pursued, despite any temporary setbacks on other fronts. He joined other spokesmen in welcoming the United States government's willingness to enter into bilateral negotiations with the Soviet Union on a number of world problems, including the limitation of nuclear arms, and the United States pledge to consult its partners as these negotiations progress.

[Translation]

The Secretary of State for External Affairs underlined the importance which Canada attaches to including China in any attempts to settle major world problems. He informed the meeting of the steps taken thus far toward establishing diplomatic relations with the Peking government and that we have now had a response from the Chinese, indicating their willingness to enter into substantive discussions. These will be taking place in Stockholm through the two embassies with our embassy reinforced as necessary by sending officials from Ottawa. The expectation is that these discussions will get underway in about a month's time. There is no indication of how long this will take. We are anxious for them to succeed, but they will be essentially confidential and are not likely to be helped if carried out under the glare of constant publicity.

[English]

The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I used the occasion of the meeting to explain to our allies the outcome of our defence policy review as it will affect our approach to NATO in the future. We confirmed Canada's intention to remain in the alliance and informed the members of the decision to embark on a planned and phased reduction of the size of the Canadian forces now stationed in Europe. We explained that in carrying out this decision, the government intended to consult closely with Canada's allies. The purpose of consultation would be to enable us to take account of the views of our allies as plans are made regarding the nature and the timing of the reduction of our forces in Europe and the extent and location of Canada's continuing military contribution to NATO. The Secretary of State for External Affairs stated that account would also be taken of any international developments which might have a bearing on the balance of security in Europe and elsewhere.

A number of the ministers referred specifically to Canada's recent decision. While they welcomed our intention to remain in the alliance, they expressed the hope that the decision to reduce our forces in Europe would not be carried out in such a way as to jeopardize the security of the alliance or the prospects for east-west negotiations. With these considerations in mind, they welcomed our undertaking to consult them on our plans.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather a pity that this is the first opportunity we have had in parliament to discuss this new policy of the government—whatever it may be—which was announced the day after the house recessed. Quite apart from any personal opinion I might hold in this regard, I think it would be rather difficult for the government to persuade the people of this country that the step taken, as announced on the day after the house recessed, did not demonstrate considerable contempt for this ancient institution.

I really feel for the minister who has just spoken because it must have been rather difficult for him to carry this message to Washington and to attempt to explain to our NATO allies the Prime Minister's policy in respect of defence—whatever that policy might be. We cannot help but feel this way on the twentieth anniversary of the establishment of NATO, a time that reminds us of the part Canada played in the establishment, the foundation and the development of this alliance.

I agree of course that the immediate issue was to decide how to get on with the resolution of east-west problems. I agree with that wholeheartedly. I agree of course that the ministers were wise to explore to the full the possibility of the countries of the east being serious with regard to the détente. The fact that this should be the theme of this meeting of NATO ministers emphasizes to all of us how inappropriate was the decision of the government of Canada to announce on the eve of that meeting its decision to reduce its support of the NATO alliance, and thereby to that extent—which is to a considerable extent—reduce and weaken the position from which the NATO countries would be conducting any such negotiation with the countries of the east.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: This was the theme of the meeting. It simply underlines the inappropriateness of the announcement made by the Prime Minister. I agree with the emphasis the ministers placed upon the role that NATO was always supposed to have played, or at least for some time back, in connection with the resolution of social problems. I agree that this is an area in which NATO has fallen short of expectations. I hope these words were not simply constituting a pious wish, and that NATO will in fact give the emphasis indicated regarding the contribution it might make toward a solution of such social problems.

I would favour any reorganization or reshaping of NATO which would make the alliance more effective in achieving a détente between the west and the east, which was the theme of the meeting. This was certainly an area in which Canada should have been happy to participate, instead of weakening the alliance at the opening of the meeting on such a détente.

The minister referred to the importance the ministers in Washington attached to talks between the Soviet Union and the United States on the limitation of offensive and defensive strategic nuclear weapons. This proposal will carry the support of everyone; everyone will approve of this. But will it increase the chances of success in negotiating such limitation, for conventional weapons to be reduced at the very time there is some hope, perhaps, or certainly some serious intention of discussing this sort of thing? I suggest that, by choosing this time to announce a weakening of its contribution to NATO, the government of Canada has also weakened the possibility of successful negotiations regarding the limitation of nuclear weapons.

The minister says that he and the Secretary of State for External Affairs explained to our allies the outcome of our defence policy review as it will affect our approach to NATO in the future. I am glad the two ministers were able to explain this in Washington, because the Prime Minister was not successful in explaining it here, and the minister was not successful in explaining it in the house today.

The minister has added nothing to what we already knew in this respect. It would be very interesting to speculate on what the ministers said to the representatives of our allies in NATO, and what explanation and precision they were able to give with regard to the announcement made by the Prime Minister shortly before the ministers went to Washington.

I think one has to say that the Prime Minister's statement either meant a great deal or possibly very little. The statements attributed by the Minister of National Defence to his colleague in Washington add nothing to what the Prime Minister has already said. I believe that, in view of the importance that the alliance is attaching to exploring the possibilities of a détente, the government of Canada should retract its decision to withdraw troops from NATO at this time, or announce its intention to do so commencing next year. There are a number of reasons for this; but a sufficient reason for the government of Canada's indicating its intention to continue, for the time being at least, its full support of NATO, would be the contribution that Canada would thereby make to the possibility of the alliance effectively achieving a détente between the east and the west which, after all, is what we all want.

I have to say that the statement made by the Prime Minister has weakened the possibility of a détente, and the vague statement made by the minister as well as the apparently vague generalizations expressed to the ministers in Washington have changed nothing in that regard.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I understand from the statement of the minister that he and his colleagues explained to the representatives of our allies in Washington precisely what was meant by the proposed planned and phased reduction of the size of our Canadian forces in Europe. I wonder if he left them as much in the dark as we have been left on this subject. I do not believe any member of the opposition at least has the haziest notion of what planned and phased reduction is in process. We do not know whether the words used by the Prime Minister are words of political compromise or whether they cover up a serious intention and plan to change the role of Canada, as we in this party have made clear from time to time we believe it should be changed.

I suggest to the government that it is time not just to talk about a phase two, but to let the country into its confidence as to precisely what it has in mind and to consult parliament about this. The Prime Minister has made a statement which has been heralded as a highly important and deep seated review of a crucial phase of our foreign and external policy. This was done the day after parliament adjourned. Here we are back again today and the Minister of National Defence makes a statement in which he says that he informed our allies, but he did nothing to inform this house about the crucial details. I was pleased, as I am sure other members of the house were, to find that in the consultations at NATO there seems to have been a new emphasis on the manner of organizing a détente. We in this party warmly welcome that because we want to make it perfectly clear that in our view NATO cannot continue to have the loyalty and credibility of its member nations unless it ceases to be merely a bureaucratic military alliance continuing policies that were appropriate in the past and that are no longer appropriate at the present time.

I am inclined to regret that the proposal for a European security conference seems to have been pushed aside, although perhaps that is wrong and it is really to be explored. May I say that we in this party will give our warmest support to anything that this government does while it is a member within NATO to see that NATO is used for the purpose of organizing and arranging a new security system in Europe.

To end these remarks, may I express the hope that the minister's announcement is only a brief prelude to a full discussion both in this house and in the defence committee of the urgent defence and external affairs policies which call for decision at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my remarks concerning the statement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) will be rather brief.

I wish to thank the minister for sending me a little in advance a copy of this statement, but I would like to point out to him, however, that it was drafted only in English. Nevertheless he did take the trouble to give us a few extracts in French and the interpreters did the rest.

I am happy, as everyone is, to find out that following this conference commemorating NATO's twentieth anniversary, steps have been taken to continue or intensify negotiations in order to improve, if possible, through NATO, the security of Europe.

As far as am concerned, I believe that as long as there are negotiations, as long as there is a dialogue, one can hope for improvements in the existing differences. However, I still have a doubt, because if we consider the billions of dollars the existing powers are spending year after year for armaments, we can but ask ourselves whether this is serious. For instance if we look at the statistics for the year 1967, we shall see that in the countries we know approximately $6 billions have been spent on depelopment work and $150 billions on armaments. And when one spends 25 times more on armaments than on development, one must ask oneself if this is logical and what one is after, on the Warsaw Pact side as on the NATO side.

Mr. Speaker, the minister tells us that other matters were discussed, such as the external aid the member countries of NATO can provide.

I believe that we could do a lot more by reducing arms expenditures, by increasing our assistance to the developing countries, and by helping the European countries to pursue their development and to meet their own needs.

And that is why, Mr. Speaker, I agree that Canada should continue her contribution to NATO, but recall her troops home as soon as possible. If necessary, she can, at a given time, contribute to the defence of Europe.

I conclude my remarks by saying, as did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) at the beginning of his observations, that the brief statement made this afternoon is far from completing the one made after the adjournment for Easter. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will get the chance, very soon, to discuss and study in detail our participation to the defence of Europe, to NORAD and to the defence of the free world in general.

NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North) moved that the third report of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, presented to the house on Tuesday, April 1, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—PROTEST AGAINST TIMING OF NATO STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege affecting this chamber. Your Honour will recall that on April 2, the day on which we adjourned for the Easter recess, I rose to protest the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not then present the decision of the government regarding its review of defence policy, a decision that we were told had to be made public by April 10. Within 24 hours of the adjournment the Prime Minister did make such a statement outside the House of Commons.

There is no sense threshing over past affairs, but I rise now to protest just as vigorously the fact that the Prime Minister did not even find it necessary to rise in his place today and table the document which he presented to the press outside this chamber on Thursday, April 3. It seems to me that at least he should have had concern enough for the work of this parliament to want to make a very important document, one perhaps even more important in his mind than in the minds of some of us, part of our parliamentary work, part of Hansard, Votes and Proceedings or what not.

This is another example of—as I called it on April 2—the cavalier treatment of this house by the Prime Minister who, I repeat did not find it necessary at least to do what is demanded of a Prime Minister—that an important document given to the press be placed before this House of Commons with some explanation as to what it meant, so that there could be a minimum of discussion of what the government presented on Thursday, April 3 after parliament adjourned. I can find no words strong enough to condemn that kind of treatment of the House of Commons by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps if it is the wish of the house the Prime Minister may be allowed to reply. But at the same time, in my view, the hon. member for York South has raised a grievance rather than a question of privilege. In any event, his point was not followed by a motion and I do not think the matter should now be the subject of a debate. In view of this I would think it might be inadvisable to have a debate of any nature, even by way of a statement by the Prime Minister.

I hope hon. members will agree with my suggestion that in view of the fact that there is not, in my opinion, a question of privilege here, and particularly since the point raised by the hon. member for York South has not been followed by a motion, there is no question before the house and there should not be a debate at this time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

*LANGUAGE COURSES—FRENCH AND ENGLISH

Question No. 1,102—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Does the government intend to set up a program of English or French courses for employees in federal departments and, if so, when will these courses begin?

2. If not, does the government intend to make a study on the subject?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. The government, in 1963, authorized language training courses in the French and English languages (as second languages) for employees in the Public Service. These courses began early in 1964 and the number of such courses has been systematically increased as teaching resources became available in Ottawa and other major centres across Canada where the need for second language skills has been identified. These courses are operated under the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission and are available to selected employees in all government departments and agencies and in a number of Crown corporations.

2. See 1 above.

THE EXPO EXPRESS

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. What was the cost of the Expo-Express to (a) the City of Montreal (b) the Government of the Province of Quebec (c) the federal government?

2. Has the Expo-Express been sold and, if so, to whom was it sold and for what amount?

3. Were there conditions involved in the sale and, if so, what were these conditions?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition reports that: 1. The Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition, and not the three governments, met the cost of the Expo Express. The cost of any single item purchased by the Corporation has never been allocated among the three governments. The total cost of the equipment, design and installation of the mass transit system (Expo Express) as reported in the fifth annual report, page 48, schedule 5, was $13,418,848.

2. Yes. The Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition sold the Expo Express to the Société Urbaine des Transports Rapides Inc. (SUTRI) for $1,880,000. In turn, Sutri sold the Expo Express to the City of Montreal for their acquisition price i.e. $1,880,000.

FARM PRODUCTS PRICE INDEX

Question No. 1,468—Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia):

1. For what reason is the Dominion Bureau of Statistics still using the 1935-39 base for computing the index for farm product prices, when the base year has been revised more than once for most other price index reports?

2. Is consideration being given to up-dating the farm price index to make it comparable with other price reports?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: 1 and 2. The main reason for the index of farm products still being on the 1935-39 base was the priority assigned to the revision of the index of farm production. The revision of the index of farm product prices is now under way and it is expected that a series based on 1961 = 100 will be published by September of this year.

TRAVEL IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 1,522—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Is the Canadian Government Travel Bureau planning an advertising campaign in the United States designed to promote increased travel to the Atlantic Provinces?

2. If so, what is the name of the Canadian advertising agency entrusted with the responsibility of directing this campaign?

3. What amount has been paid, or is to be paid, to the agency for the purpose of buying television time in the United States?

4. Has said agency sub-contracted to any other advertising agency in the United States or Canada the job of buying such television time?

[Mr. Pepin.]

5. If so, what is the name of such Canadian or American agency, and on what basis was selection for sub-contracting made?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes.

2. Stanfield, Johnson and Hill Limited.

3. To be paid in 1969, $168,000.

4. No. But Stanfield, Johnson and Hill Limited has bought the TV time concerned through a media buying service in New York City (not an advertising agency). No extra costs were involved in using this service, either to Stanfield, Johnson and Hill Limited or to the Canadian Government Travel Bureau. (The media buying service receives its compensation by purchasing block time at preferential rates and selling (portions of it) it for use by advertisers at rates sufficiently higher to realize a profit on operations.)

5. RDR Associates, N.Y. City. The selection was based on advice from Lennen & Newell Inc. (The United States associate of Stanfield, Johnson and Hill Limited.) and as a result of a study by Stanfield, Johnson & Hill Ltd. on methods of buying TV spot time. This study which examined alternative firms and methods, including test comparisons of comparable buys, showed that the most efficient method of buying time required for the campaign was by utilizing a media buying service.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND UNIVERSITY GRANTS

Question No. 1,575—Mr. MacLean:

1. What amount was spent by the federal government for university grants in Prince Edward Island for each of the fiscal years from 1964-65 to 1968-69 inclusive?

2. What amount is estimated to be spent for university grants in Prince Edward Island in the fiscal year 1969-70 and is this amount included in the amounts proposed to be spent under the Comprehensive Development Plan?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Secretary of State and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. and 2. From 1964-65 to 1966-67 federal University Grants were paid on a per capita basis ($2 per capita of provincial population in 1964-65 and 1965-66, and a national average of $5 per capita of population in 1966-67), through the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, to the two eligible institutions in Prince Edward Island.

Payments of University Grants were: 1964-65, $214,000; 1965-66, $216,000; 1966-67, $557,000.

The University Grants program was terminated March 31, 1967. Therefore, since that date there has been no federal program for direct support of universities. However, under Part II of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act 1967, which came into force April 1, 1967, Canada transfers fiscal resources to the provincial governments to assist them in meeting the rising costs of post-secondary (including university) education generally. The extent to which these transferred resources are used by the provinces for the support of universities is, of course, a matter for provincial authorities to decide. The value of these transfers under Part II of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967 (consisting of tax abatements of 4 percent of individual income tax and 1 percent of corporation taxable income, and cash adjustment payments) to the government of the Province of Prince Edward Island is estimated at $1,635,000 for 1967-68 and $2,049,000 for 1968-69. For 1969-70 it is forecast that this figure will further increase to about $2.56 million. These estimated and forecast amounts are, of course, subject to adjustment when final audited data are available on post-secondary education operating costs, and final values of tax abatements are calculated. These amounts are not included under the Comprehension Development Plan.

In April 1952, a new statistical series was instituted and included the above-mentioned exclusions except the Armed Forces. At the same time, the DBS publication "Federal Government Employment" (DBS catalogue number 72-004) included Crown Corporation statistics.

POLLUTION OF LOWER FRASER RIVER

Question No. 1,740—Mr. Goode:

1. Does the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources plan to study pollution conditions on the Lower Fraser River as they relate to (a) the effects of raw sewage on the pollution of the Fraser (b) the upward movement of effluent resulting from incoming tides (c) the effectiveness of primary treatment (d) the percentage of pollution caused by industrial wastes (e) the costs to private industry of eliminating industrial waste from the River?

2. What other research into effects of primary treatment is now being carried out in Canada?

3. Does the federal government now have an anti-pollution pilot project underway in British Columbia and, if so, where?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Water pollution control and abatement is primarily a provincial responsibility. The federal government is directly involved where pollution affects international waters, transport, fisheries or wildlife; and it also undertakes and coordinates essential water quality and pollution abatement research. The Canada Centre for Inland Waters established by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources will be a focal point for such research.

Federal government activity in the study of specific pollution problems normally is in co-operation with the appropriate provincial government. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has no plans at this time for a study of pollution conditions on the lower Fraser River directly related to the five items, (a) to (e), mentioned in the Question. The Department now is operating eight permanent water quality monitoring stations on the Fraser River and its tributaries, and plans to place seven additional stations in operation in 1969; it also will extend its analysis procedures to include pollution parameters representative of sewage waste discharges in the Fraser River system.

2. Virtually all studies of river pollution are directed to some extent to the evaluation of the effects of waste discharges, whether or not they are subject to treatment. Research into various elements of the effects of primary treatment of municipal and/or industrial waste discharges is being carried out by federal and provincial government agencies, universities, industries and consultants.

3. The Department has no specific anti-pollution pilot project under way in British Columbia at present; but negotiations are in progress for a comprehensive federal-provincial study of the water needs of the Okanagan River basin, and this study will include examination of pollution abatement requirements which may well involve pilot projects.

INTEREST RATE TO PRODUCE SUPERANNUATION BENEFITS

Question No. 1,805—Mr. Kaplan:

Regarding all benefits paid out of the Superannuation Account of the Government of Canada either as amounts withheld from the pay of public servants "contributions" or as accretions to such contributions "interest", what is the annual rate of interest required to pay the level of benefits currently provided for under the applicable regulations and what assumptions as to levels of final earnings are made to produce this rate?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): If the required credits to the Superannuation Account in addition to the contributions of public service employees and the statutory matching contribution by the Government were regarded as interest, the annual rate of interest in 1968-69 required would be approximately 8 percent.

If the statutory matching contribution by the Government were also regarded as "interest" the annual rate in 1968-69 would be approximately 10½ percent.

The assumptions as to levels of final earnings are set out in Appendices 1 and 2 of the Report on Actuarial Examination of the Superannuation Account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund as at December 31, 1962.

2. Which air pollutants have been studied in any national program at these stations?

3. What results have been obtained from this program?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Stations to measure air pollutants on a national scale were established on a co-operative federal-provincial basis during the late 1950's. Since then monitoring has been expanded continuously.

2. The initial measurements in Canada were largely restricted to smoke haze or soiling index but during the 1960's other contaminants such as dust-fall, sulphur dioxide and suspended particulates have also been measured routinely in sample cities. At a small number of locations contaminants such as nitrogen oxides, oxidants and carbon monoxide have been measured on a non-routine basis.

3. During recent years more than 10,000 pollution readings per month have been received into the central recording section of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare has carried out water quality studies on the international section of the St. Lawrence River (from Kingston, Ontario, to Cornwall, Ontario), each summer since 1965. These studies were conducted under the aegis of a current reference to the International Joint Commission on Lake Erie, Lake Ontario and the International Section of the St. Lawrence River.

2. As the studies have been limited to the international section of the St. Lawrence River, water quality data collected cannot be interpreted with regard to conditions in the vicinity of (a) Tadoussac (b) Quebec City (c) Trois Rivières (d) Montreal.

In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration, Mr. Speaker shall have regard . . . to the probability of the matter being brought before the house within reasonable time by other means.

After having given the matter some thought I have reached the conclusion that in my view there ought to be and probably will be within the next few days an opportunity for the house to consider the matter proposed to be raised by the hon. member for Malpeque.

It seems to me we have already had this afternoon a debate of a kind during which it was indicated that hon. members wish to have an early opportunity to discuss the matter.

It seems to me the request could be considered more favourably if the minister more directly concerned was in the house. Under those circumstances, I do not feel that it is advisable, under the standing orders, to put the motion proposed by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) before the house.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—TIMING AND EXTENT OF CANADIAN TROOPS WITHDRAWAL—RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN FOREIGN AND DEFENCE POLICIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of his statement that the timing and extent of withdrawal of Canadian troops from Europe will be discussed at the meeting of the Defence Planning Committee of NATO in May, can he say whether he or a responsible minister will announce to the house the proposals of the government with respect to the timing and the extent of withdrawal of Canadian troops, as well as the proposal the government intends to make to this NATO committee before it meets in May, so that this house will have the opportunity to discuss something specific with regard to our foreign policy? I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, realizing of course that any statement the Prime Minister might make to the house as to the intentions of the government would be subject to negotiations with responsible NATO authorities.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the government house leader has been discussing or will be discussing this afternoon with house leaders of the other parties the question of setting aside two days for this subject to be debated as soon as the Secretary of State for External Affairs returns next week. If there is such agreement we will be discussing the declaration of principle we made on the Thursday before Easter. I refer to the decision in principle of remaining within NATO and reducing our forces for the European commitment to NATO in a planned way. The next stage is one we are working on now. We shall be very happy during the forthcoming debate to hear from hon. members of the opposition their views as to the way in which this reduction ought to be carried out.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since when did the government listen to the opposition?

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have already expressed my views on this subject. Am I to take it from the Prime Minister's statement that it is not the intention of the government to tell the house before the May meeting the proposals it intends to lay before the NATO council?

Mr. Trudeau: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister tell the house what role in continental defence it is intended that Canadian troops withdrawn from Europe will take over?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have already declared that we will have a white paper on our foreign policy. When this white paper is ready we will lay it before the house. We feel of necessity that defence policy must flow from foreign policy, and not the contrary. That is why we want to have the white paper on our foreign policy debated by this house and submitted to the country before we make any final commitments with regard to any military or defence policy and before spelling out the exact implications of that foreign policy.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the Prime Minister expect us to debate or discuss this policy if he is not prepared to give us some indication as to the role it is intended Canadian troops will play in continental defence after they are brought home?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked was argumentative.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a related or supplementary question. I ask the Prime Minister to clarify to the house what appears to be, but may not be, a contradiction between his statement of April 3 and a statement he made in his address in Calgary last Saturday night. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I remind the right hon. gentleman of his statement of April 3? He said that the reduction of Canadian forces and the nature of that reduction would be discussed with our allies at the NATO defence meeting in May. In his speech in Calgary the right hon. gentleman stated, as he did today, that foreign policy should precede defence policy and that therefore no decision as to a reduction will be made until the white paper on foreign policy has been represented and debated in parliament.

In view of these apparently contradictory statements may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is the intention of the government to present a white paper on foreign and defence policy or on the foreign policy alone prior to May, or prior to the meeting of the defence ministers of NATO in May?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, what I said in Calgary and what I will repeat to this house is that we feel that in the past several years there has been a tendency for our foreign policy to be swallowed by our defence policy which, in turn, was swallowed by our NATO policy. We are trying to put this pyramid on its base and inform the country first of our foreign policy. This is our first step. After this foreign policy has been established within the new direction we are giving it, we will decide what defence policy ought to flow from that. Having decided what our defence policy will be in future years, we will decide what participation NATO will have in that defence policy. This is our way of proceeding.

There have been certain exaggerated efforts relating to the April meeting and the proposed meeting for May which have had the effect of trying to commit us in a final way to a NATO policy before our foreign policy review has been completed in a white paper and submitted to this house. We are resisting this development and making sure we are not once again committed to a NATO policy before our over-all foreign policy has been established.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That is precisely what I was trying to discover from the right hon. gentleman. I happen to agree with the statement he made in Calgary, and repeated in this house, that foreign policy ought to precede defence policy. Does that mean that the statement of April 3 to the effect that the reduction of Canadian forces will be discussed with and that a plan will be presented to the defence ministers of NATO in May with regard to reduction of forces is not valid, and that that will not happen?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. There are various ways in which we can proceed on the matter. We can submit to our friends in NATO different sets of proposals with regard to the reduction of forces and listen to their reactions to those proposals. We can use this input, if one may call it that, in the final stage of our defence and foreign policy. The final decision as to what will happen after January of next year will only be made when the ministers meet in August. That will give us another few months to review this subject. I hope by then that our foreign policy in the form of a white paper will have been debated in this house.

Mr. Lewis: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the Prime Minister's statement, can the house expect that a white paper on foreign policy will be presented to parliament before the summer recess in sufficient time for parliament to discuss it? Further, would the Prime Minister give a little consideration to the protest I made earlier, and rise tomorrow and table the statement which he made on April 3?

Mr. Trudeau: Regarding the final part, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member of the New Democratic Party raised a point of privilege which he knew perfectly well to be out of order in its form—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Trudeau: —and he was accusing me of disregard for parliament when he himself was raising a point of privilege which he knew was out of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for York South rising on a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order. I do not think it is up to the Prime Minister any more than it is up to any other member of the house to impute motives to another hon. member. I was astonished at the failure of the Prime Minister to table the statement, and I was perfectly in order to raise the point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Abitibi wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): No, Mr. Speaker; it is really a related question.

[English]

Hon. J. A. Maclean (Malpeque): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Arising from the Prime Minister's statement on defence policy, in which he said that the highest priority was the defence of Canadian sovereignty would he explain the difference, if any, between this and the policy stated in the 1964 paper, except that he used the phrase "protection of our sovereignty" rather than "protection of our territory"? Is there any special significance to this slight change in terminology?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand this is the kind of question we will be debating in the house when the days are allotted for debate.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a further quick supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Was the chairman of the committee on External Affairs and Defence revealing the outcome of phase II of the government study when he predicted that Canadian defence forces might be cut by 50 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is not in order.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to get any answers with respect to this Janus faced policy, if it be a policy, but I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the ministers representing the Canadian government in Washington had authority to suggest that in the phasing out only a token force of Canadian infantry would be left in Europe, and in so far as the air corps is concerned it would be restricted to reconnaissance and would have no nuclear attributes?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not believe any such statement was made by the ministers in Washington, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not the question I asked. The Prime Minister seems to have a lot of difficulty understanding a simple question. Did the ministers, or any minister, have the authority to make that statement? That is how simple it is.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the right hon. gentleman rising on a point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, are we in this house to be treated like children by the government on a matter that concerns the survival of the country, with the government playing with the people of Canada, and no answers forthcoming from it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

[Later:]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister with regard to his NATO statement, which amounts to a planned withdrawal of our NATO forces from Europe, presumably to take place at the end of 1969. Is it the Prime Minister's intention to pursue the course followed by France and maintain membership only in the political arm of NATO?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I just want to correct the question. We never talked about a planned withdrawal; we talked about a planned reduction.

Mr. Crouse: Could I now have an answer to my question? I thank the Prime Minister for his correction.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

DIFFICULTIES ARISING FROM REVISED PAYMENT PROCEDURES

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address an important domestic question to the Postmaster General. What action is being taken by his department to correct the situation whereby many employees in Vancouver and other post offices are not receiving their proper cheques, with some reported to be behind in salary payments to the extent of hundreds of dollars? I ask this question in view of the impact of this situation on the morale of our post office employees.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): As is known, Mr. Speaker, the government has recently changed its system of salary payments from twice a month to once every two weeks. This has occasioned some difficulty to some employees of the government, because though now they receive more cheques they find that each individual cheque is somewhat smaller in amount, and there have been some cases, mainly in Vancouver, where the cheques have been delayed. I can assure hon. members however that this is being looked after, and that it is of immediate concern to all of us.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence but, as he has just left the house, I shall wait until he comes back.

[English]

FLOODS

REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE FROM PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In connection with the continuing flood threat in western Canada has the Prime Minister received any requests for assistance from the provincial authorities and, if so, what is the nature of the assistance provided by Ottawa?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know of no such requests, Mr. Speaker, but I will ask my office if any have been made.

OIL

CALGARY, ALTA—DISCUSSIONS ON CONTINENTAL POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the Prime Minister back from sunny Alberta and trust he enjoyed his skiing on the slopes. I would like to put this question to him in reference to petroleum—

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the hon. member that it was on the slopes of Okanagan-Kootenay, on the Bugaboos Mountain.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into an argument with my good friends from British Columbia, but I did understand that the Prime Minister did a little skiing on his way back in those places that count in Alberta, and I would like to put this question to him in reference to the petroleum industry.

Did the Prime Minister in Calgary meet privately with representatives of the petroleum industry to discuss the consequences of his talks with President Nixon or to receive formally the views of the representatives of the petroleum industry about a new national and North American continental oil and natural gas policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did meet privately with some of the representatives of the oil industry of western Canada, and we had general talks about the industry and its future.

Mr. Woolliams: In reference to the dialogue which he had with the President of the United States in reference to Canadian oil markets, when can we expect a statement from the Prime Minister, preferably on motions, on Canada's position and what arrangements were made with the United States for a new policy to continue our markets?

Mr. Trudeau: I can only repeat what I said when I came back from Washington, that the President and I had agreed to have continuing meetings of officials on this subject. These meetings did take place on April 2 and then again on April 8. They have not reached any final decision on which we are in a position to answer. In due course I am sure the minister responsible, the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lang), will be making some statement on this matter.

Mr. Woolliams: As a supplementary question, is the Prime Minister prepared, on motions, to set out the Canadian position? There is nothing secretive about that. The house, the country, the petroleum industry and other industries would like to hear it.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Further to the comments the Prime Minister made in Calgary on Saturday evening, I would like to ask him if the discussions between officials of the Canadian and United States governments in Washington are not restricted to oil and gas policies, but are in fact covering the entire continental energy policy?

Mr. Trudeau: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. There have been other aspects of the energy field discussed at these meetings. Oil and gas were one, but uranium and coal were also discussed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the Prime Minister whether the hon. member for Calgary South was revealing government policy when he said on Saturday that while the oil policy had not been revealed in Calgary it could be expected to be revealed by the Prime Minister when in the Maritimes?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

A.B.M. SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR FULL EXAMINATION BEFORE COMMITMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would he consider repeating the assurance given by the government which preceded his, that Canada would not become involved in participation in the deployment of an anti-ballistic missile system without the fullest opportunity for examination and discussion of the matter being given in this house and its committees?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker. I would expect this question would be discussed in the house when we have our debate on foreign policy.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REQUEST THAT REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL BE REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Could the minister indicate now, in answer to the question I asked on April 2, whether the government would consider referring to the Public Accounts Committee the 1968 report of the Auditor General so that members of that committee could continue their fascinating and engrossing study which they launched recently?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I would be glad to consider this and discuss it later this day.

REPORTS OF AIR CANADA AND C.N.R. TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader whether he intends to proceed by way of notice of motion to refer the reports of Air Canada and Canadian National Railways to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): It was not my intention to do so. As the hon. member will recall, we sought to have them referred by consent of the house but consent was refused. With the legislative timetable we have I do not see how we could set aside a day for that purpose.

CANADIAN CULTURE

TRANSFER OF PROGRAMS TO QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Will he tell the house whether he has agreed to a meeting with the Quebec minister of cultural affairs on April 20 to discuss the transfer of federal cultural programs to the provincial government?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I agreed to meet the Quebec Minister of Cultural Affairs, at his request. Afterwards, he sent me a letter to make it clear which subjects he wanted to discuss and there was not the slightest mention made of the transfer of the funds for the cultural activities of the federal government.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Could the minister tell us what is on the agenda for that meeting with the Quebec minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: As we have not agreed on any agenda, I am only able to reveal the suggestions made to me by the Minister of Cultural Affairs of Quebec, in a letter of a confidential nature. And as we did not have the opportunity to discuss the matter together, I could not reveal its contents.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the critical cash shortage among prairie grain growers, would the minister consider allowing them to pay their income tax with surplus grain?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPLACEMENT OF U.S. BY CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell the house where the United States armed forces are now located which are to be replaced by Canadian armed forces? I refer of course to the Prime Minister's reply to questions by members of the press on April 3 last.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IDENTIFICATION OF CITIZENS FOR PASSPORT PURPOSES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State. Has his attention been drawn to the widespread confusion and discontent over the new regulations concerning proof of Canadian citizenship for passport purposes? If so, is he considering changes in those regulations?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I have received representations during a trip in the West, about the procedures now applicable to the insuance of a passport to a Canadian citizen. However, the issuance of passports is not the responsibility of my department, but rather that of the Department of External Affairs, and it is up to that department to decide the kind of proof of identity it may demand before issuing a passport to a Canadian citizen.

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: Has the Secretary of State not examined the regulations concerning proof of Canadian citizenship, which I believe originated in his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister and his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs could streamline their procedure in order to eliminate the great delay brought about because of the delays in the postal service, which make handling of passports almost impossible? Most members spent their Easter holidays as passport expediters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST BY NEW BRUNSWICK FOR CONFERENCE ON FINANCE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the communication from Premier Robichaud before Easter with regard to the dire financial situation in New Brunswick, and any further communications. Would the Prime Minister state the nature of his reply to any correspondence, telephone inquiries of other communications from the Premier of New Brunswick? Does the Prime Minister realize that by his silence he is destroying whatever credibility there is left in the statement by Premier Robichaud? The Prime Minister is the fourth person to call him a liar by remaining silent.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WOODS REPORT—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the desire on the part of veterans organizations to appear before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to present their views with regard to the Woods report, can the minister say whether the government has yet prepared its white paper on the Woods report, so that the work of this committee may proceed?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, the white paper is not yet completed. I hope it will be completed as soon as possible. The white paper, along with the Woods committee report will be referred to the proper standing committee. I trust that the interested veterans organizations will be invited to appear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May we hope that this can be done during the month of April?

Mr. Dubé: I do not know, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in his capacity as a great fighter against inflation, the following question. I do so because of the recent substantial rise in the cost of living index and in view of the fact that the study group—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. gentleman ask his question?

Mr. Stanfield: Following six months of study I should like to ask when we may expect the appointment of the study group which was forecast in September and promised for the month of March?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Leader of the Opposition recognizes my true place in this government. I also welcome the hon. gentleman's support for the policy I announced in September. I am sure he will agree that I should seek out the best possible men available for appointments to the prices and incomes commission, which is what I am doing. Unfortunately those people, being able, are busy and have difficulty disentangling themselves from present commitments. I expect to make an announcement in this regard very shortly.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a related question. Can the minister in his usual succinct manner report on the federal-provincial conference on consumer affairs last week, and while he is on his feet will he indicate whether or not the subject of a federal securities commission was discussed at that conference?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last part of the question is no; it was not the proper kind of conference at which to discuss that subject. In answer to the first part of the question I should like to report that we had a very successful two day federal-provincial conference at which all provinces were represented. The conference issued a communique. If the hon. member would like me to do so I will table it, though it was distributed to members. At the conference we discussed a number of matters including consumer credit, packaging and labelling, misleading advertising, hazardous products, etc. I think the real significance of the conference is that it was the first conference of consumer affairs ministers or those ministers responsible for this subject. A new degree of co-operation and good will now exists among federal and provincial ministers.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, when may the house expect some federal initiative in respect of a federal securities commission in view of the fact that without such a commission some provinces are left in a rather ambiguous position?

Mr. Basford: I am sorry I did not catch the last part of the question. Let me answer by saying we have been studying this matter very carefully. My officials have been meeting with certain provincial officials and we are in the course of drafting the federal position on this matter. I expect some initiative to be taken very shortly.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He indicated on April 1 that he would consider the matter and give an answer as quickly as possible. I asked him then whether the government endorsed the compulsory retirement at age 60 of Devco employees.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I said at that time that this question should be referred to the appropriate minister.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The question was put to the Prime Minister and as he has indicated he referred it to the appropriate minister. That minister was not here on the previous day, March 31, when he was supposed to be in the house. He was supposed to be here the following day when I asked this question. This plan is supposed to be put into effect on April 25, so the element of time is involved. Surely the Prime Minister as the head of the government must be aware of the attitude and the policy of the government in respect of the early retirement at age 60 of Crown corporation employees. As leader of the government surely he can give an answer without the assistance of the absent minister.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PROVINCIAL USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I intended to address my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, according to the attendance roster, is supposed to be here today. In his absence perhaps I might address it to whoever is acting on his behalf. Is an investigation under way by the department in respect of the use by provinces of federal funds for medicare for general purposes? If so, is it contemplated by the minister or the government that legislation will be introduced to guarantee that federal assistance for medicare will be passed on to the general public through reduced provincial premiums?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and refer it to the minister.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I will have time to accommodate the hon. member, but the question period is almost concluded, there being just four minutes left. There are four or five other hon. members around the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond who want to ask questions. Perhaps the hon. member might refer to this question again tomorrow.

REPLACEMENT DURING ABSENCE OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is in Japan, and I understand will be away for two or three weeks, I should like to ask the Prime Minister who will be the acting minister of that department so we will know which minister will answer our questions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The acting minister is the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

WHITEHORSE—MINISTERIAL STATEMENT ON SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was stating government policy when he said recently in Whitehorse that there was no case at the present time for establishing a greater degree of self-government in the north?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if "at the present time" is interpreted in the strict sense he was stating government policy.

Mr. Simpson: Was the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development stating government policy when he also stated in Whitehorse that the conflict between public and private power should be resolved in Canada in favour of public ownership? On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it has occurred to me that the Prime Minister did not hear the question correctly, as he appeared to want to answer.

Mr. Speaker: That was not my impression.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA AS SITE FOR SUMMIT MEETING

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can indicate that during his discussions with President Nixon he raised the possibility of Canada providing the site for a summit meeting of the two great powers, and whether or not such a possibility was discussed between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and himself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question was not discussed with President Nixon but I will ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take note of it.

TERMINATION OF PROGRAM "DON MESSER'S JUBILEE"

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he will use his good offices to prevent the pending demise of the Don Messer show now enjoyed by millions on national television? As a supplementary, perhaps I might suggest that this matter could be debated at ten o'clock.

WATER RESOURCES

POLLUTION IN ATLANTIC COASTAL REGION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries or his Parliamentary Secretary to indicate the results of a recent investigation in respect of water pollution in the Atlantic coastal region and its adverse effect in the general coastal area, and particularly on Atlantic sealers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member is asking for a very general statement which normally should be made during motions.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I ask whoever the hon. gentleman may be when we may expect a statement in respect of this investigation into a matter which is causing considerable concern?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): As soon as the investigation is completed, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

HOUSING

PROPOSED MINISTERIAL VISIT TO URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can I rely on the roster system and hope that the Minister of Transport, who is responsible for housing, will be here tomorrow? Also, while the Prime Minister is on his feet will he advise the house whether the minister in fact made the junket he was supposed to make in the week after Easter with regard to urban renewal? I ask this question because it would appear that the Minister of Transport is sort of evading the member for Hamilton West.

TELEVISION

EDMONTON—REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO META PROPOSAL

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the minister's statement in Edmonton that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will soon be ready to make a decision on a French language television station in Edmonton, would the minister please indicate when he will make a decision on a more urgent problem, namely, the request by META?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I must say that the words credited to me are not mine. I merely said that I would make every effort to convince the C.B.C. of the urgency of developing its French television services in western Canada.

With regard to the organization mentioned by the hon. member and which is engaged in educational television, it is already having relations and discussions with the task force created within the Secretary of State, and its requests are being carefully considered. Furthermore, I think that the people responsible for META are satisfied with the results up to now.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There are only about 30 seconds left before the end of the question period, so I will recognize the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

FLOODS

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO MEET CONDITIONS IN SOUTHWESTERN SASKATCHEWAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): This is a very urgent question, Mr. Speaker. I do not know who is the Acting Minister of Agriculture, so without that knowledge I direct my question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the very serious floods which have occurred in southwestern Saskatchewan. I see the Prime Minister motioning to one of his cabinet members and therefore I now have the designation. I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who I gather is Acting Minister of Agriculture in view of his designation by the Prime Minister, what action is being taken to meet the very serious flood conditions in southwestern Saskatchewan? According to the old-timers they are the worst in history. Further, are the facilities of P.F.R.A. being made available to municipalities and to the province of Saskatchewan in order to keep to a minimum the damage that would otherwise take place?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in this short-lived moment as Minister of Agriculture I would like to take the question as notice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You were just designated by the Prime Minister.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council as house leader. Now that members of the house have returned from the recess, could he reveal to hon. members what the business of the house will be for the rest of this week so that they can get themselves in a proper state of preparation and of grace also?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The first item for today would be No. 63, the bill to establish the Export Development Corporation. This would be followed, we would hope later today, by item No. 64, the bill to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite. Tomorrow, after those two items have been completed, we would call item No. 66, second reading of Bill S-29, respecting the production and conservation of oil and gas in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. That would be followed by item No. 65, second reading of Bill S-23, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

There will be a meeting of house leaders this afternoon at which time we will discuss the possibility of also dealing tomorrow with item No. 17, the report stage of Bill C-153, to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act. On Wednesday in any event we would call the report stage of Bill C-150, the omnibus Criminal Code bill. It would be our intention to remain on it for the balance of the week until its conclusion.

We will also be discussing with the house leaders the possibility of arranging a special debate, very likely on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs has returned, for the purpose of discussing the statements with regard to NATO. I will be making a further announcement in that regard.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE INSURANCE, GUARANTEES AND LOANS TO DEVELOP TRADE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-183, to establish the Export Development Corporation and to facilitate and develop export trade by the provision of insurance, guarantees, loans and other financial facilities, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today to establish an Export Development Corporation in succession to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, which my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) presented to the house for first reading a few weeks ago, concerns improvement and expansion of certain specialized services to facilitate and encourage export and related international activities of Canadian business.

During the recent debate on the restructuring of the federal administration it was emphasized to hon. members in connection with the proposal to bring together the Department of Industry and the Department of Trade and Commerce that there is an essential relationship between industrial development and export promotion, and that this relationship would be the basic principle of the new, merged department's organization. Establishment of an Export Development Corporation is not directly related to the merger of the trade and industry departments but it is motivated by the same basic objective, namely, to ensure that the government's administrative structures reflect current and anticipated needs and problems. Any self-respecting institution periodically brings itself up to date and infuses new blood into its administration.

As was also brought out in the discussion of the administrative reorganization proposal, the government regards sustained and improved export performance as a basic element in maintaining and developing the sound growth in the Canadian economy which in turn is necessary if we are to have the capacity to develop our social programs, provincial or federal, to upgrade our educational, medical, welfare and cultural standards, to afford the investment required to narrow our regional disparities. Merger of the trade and industry departments and the strengthening and expanding of their combined services are intended to contribute to the attainment of our national goals; so too in the specialized area of export credit and related activity is the establishment of the Export Development Corporation.

In addition to the customary support to our balance of payments and level of economic activity generally, exports are an essential key to our industrial development policies, providing as they do outlets beyond our limited domestic market. This broader market is necessary to permit specialization and economics of scale which in turn are necessary if, under conditions of freer trade, Canadian capital equipment and other manufacturing industries are to be able to compete effectively against imports in the domestic market. Since exports must meet the test of being internationally competitive, the odds are high that industries which are successful in export markets are efficient and have potential for future growth.

In the interest, then, of optimum growth of the economy and of employment opportunities, stimulation of exports, particularly of manufactured goods, should have high priority at this stage of our economic development. Giving a high priority to exports means that adequate and competitive financing facilities should be available and their use encouraged.

Unfortunately, limitations on the availability of financing to back export production and sales and the high cost of such financing have emerged as factors inhibiting the securing of optimum export performance from the Canadian economy.

While these difficulties have had to be viewed against the background of the abnormal credit conditions which have prevailed recently, a study commissioned by the Department of Trade and Commerce revealed clear evidence of an underlying problem and suggested that the facilities available to support the export and other international activities of Canadian companies were less flexible and adequate than those in other countries. Accordingly, in light of the importance of improved export performance to the Canadian economy on the one hand and the increased use of credit in international trade and intensification of foreign competition on the other, we concluded that new and expanded facilities were required to ensure that on as economical a basis as possible, consistent with the over-all needs of the economy and resources available, Canadian firms were backed by adequate and competitive financing facilities.

The Export Development Corporation will be the focal point for the government's interest in the financing of exports and in the insurance of private investments abroad. In succession to the export Credits Insurance Corporation, it will administer new and expanded facilities for export credits, export credits insurance and guarantees, and will encourage and facilitate the provision of private financing for export. It will be charged with responsibility for the insurance of private Canadian investment in developing countries. This entirely new facility is being added in the belief that such investment can make a meaningful contribution to our international development effort and at the same time improve the competitive position of Canadian firms in world markets, and should therefore be facilitated.

Rather than once again amending the Export Credits Insurance Act to provide these new and expanded facilities, it was considered preferable to draft a new statute which would conform to the current legislative practice and provide a valid framework for the future. The name, Export Development Corporation, was chosen as being descriptive of the basic purpose of the new entity and the broad range of functions to be carried out by it. However, the Export Development Corporation will assume E.C.I.C.'s existing functions, assets and liabilities, and the bill before the house retains many features of the Export Credits Insurance Act. Provision is made for operations on a more comprehensive scale geared to anticipated growth of trade, and a number of technical changes will simplify administrative procedures and will make the new corporation more responsive to exporters' needs and to competitive situations.

At the same time, as hon. members well know, the government has many other claims to satisfy in respect of high priority programs, and bearing in mind the inflationary pressures which are of concern to all of us we have had to keep within reasonable limits the actual and contingent liability to the government arising out of the proposed legislation. Accordingly, in establishing legislative ceilings requirements have been projected over a relatively short period and can be reviewed in the years ahead. It is accepted that operation of the new corporation's facilities will be subject to regular budgetary planning and review and will be co-ordinated with other government programs.

Perhaps I might now turn to the bill itself and review briefly its salient features. The bill is in three parts: Establishment and organization, operations, and transitional and repeal. It should be noted that only Part I of the Export Credits Insurance Act is to be repealed. A number of government to government reconstruction loans made in the immediate post-world war II period under part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act remain outstanding. Although the authority to grant such loans was temporary, part II remains in force, and the Export Development Corporation may act as agent for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in connection with outstanding loans.

General direction of the affairs of the corporation is to be vested in a board of directors which, in addition to senior officials, will include representatives of the private export and financial communities. It is considered that the direct infusion in management of business knowledge and experience will greatly enhance co-ordination of effort in export development between the public and private sectors. Delegation of authority and the creation of an executive committee of the board and provision for alternate directors will facilitate the prompt and efficient dispatch of business.

The legal and corporate status of the Export Development Corporation will be similar to that of E.C.I.C. In addition, however, it is proposed that it be empowered to acquire, hold and dispose of real and personal property in connection with credits, insurance and guarantees provided by it or as required in its operations.

It is proposed that the corporation be empowered to employ such officers, employees and agents as may be necessary and to fix the terms and conditions of their employment. Notwithstanding, it will be expected to make full use of the expertise and resources available in other departments and agencies of government, and the bill contains a facilitating clause to that end.

To provide for the anticipated larger volume of business and the assumption of new functions, it is proposed that the authorized capital of the new corporation be established at $25 million, all of it to be subscribed, with an equivalent amount as capital surplus. This compares with $15 million plus capital surplus of $5 million for E.C.I.C., it being understood that the capital would be paid in only as required. The corporation would assume all assets and liabilities of E.C.I.C. The paid-up capital of $5 million and capital surplus of $5 million would become paid-in capital and capital surplus of the new corporation. The corporation will thus begin operations with the same capital as E.C.I.C., but capital could be added as required up to a limit of $50 million.

The corporation will meet most of its requirements for funds by borrowing, and it is proposed that the ceiling for this authority be set at 15 times the aggregate of the subscribed capital and capital surplus of the corporation. Initially, this would provide for borrowing of up to $450 million. The eventual limit, when the authorized and subscribed capital is all paid in and matched by equivalent contributions of capital surplus, would be $750 million. This compares with the E.C.I.C. statutory ceiling on borrowing of five times the aggregate of paid-up capital and surplus, or $100 million. The increased borrowing authority is due largely to the decision to have the corporation assume responsibility as principal for the bulk of long-term export financing now being provided as a direct charge on the consolidated revenue fund.

I should emphasize at this point that we have endeavoured, both in the legislation and in the complementary administrative action proposed to accompany it, to rationalize the whole range of financial relationships between the consolidated revenue fund and the Export Development Corporation. The new procedures will facilitate sound and businesslike financial planning by government and, it is anticipated, will provide administrative savings and improved service to exporters.

Export credits insurance and guarantee powers of the new corporation to facilitate the provision of private financing for export are similar to those of E.C.I.C. but have been broadened and made more flexible, and capacities have been increased to accommodate anticipated expansion in export business.

It is proposed that the limit of outstanding liabilities under contracts of insurance and guarantees for account of the corporation be set at ten times the aggregate of subscribed capital and capital surplus as in section 14 of the Export Credits Insurance Act. Under the capital structure proposed for the new corporation, this ratio would provide for a liability ceiling of $300 million immediately, compared with E.C.I.C.'s limit of $200 million, and ultimately up to $500 million.

In addition, provision would be made, similar to section 21 of the Export Credits Act, for contracts of insurance and guarantees to be entered into at government risk, outside the corporation's liability limit, when these are deemed by the minister responsible to be in the national interest and are approved by the Governor in Council. It is proposed that the limit of outstanding liabilities at government risk be reduced to $500 million from the $600 million specified in the present act since under the new act resources will be to the corporation available to a greater extent enabling it to undertake more business on its own account.

It is proposed that the corporation's powers to enter into contracts of credit insurance and guarantees be made broad and flexible and generally that they provide for coverage of any sound and attractive undertaking which appears to the board of directors or, in the case of operations carried out at government risk, to the Governor in Council to be conducive to the development of trade between Canada and other countries. The generalized authority means in practical terms that eligibility for assistance will be significantly extended under the present act. In particular, coverage of services and other invisible exports, which we expect to be an area of dynamic growth, is much extended. Leasing of goods for use abroad and the sale or licensing of patents, trade marks and copyright will now be eligible. Export transactions involving barter will also now be eligible. The insured need not be a person carrying on business and need not be the exporter so long as he is the one entitled to receive payment. This and related provisions will make insurance cover available for confirming house, factoring or similar business, not yet common in Canada but well developed in some other countries, and other complicated payment situations in addition to direct transactions between exporter and buyer abroad.

[Mr. Lang.]

As under the Export Credits Insurance Act, guarantees will be available to encourage the financing of export credit without recourse to the exporter. However, such guarantees will no longer be restricted by law to transactions on medium term credit and will be available for institutions other than Canadian chartered banks. Guarantees will also be issuable in connection with the financing of uninsured transactions provided such transactions are insurable.

The changes, it is expected, will permit, for example:

1. Extension of lines of credit to foreign borrowers to finance purchase of goods and services in Canada—so-called buyers' credits which are being increasingly used in international trade;

2. Consolidation and rescheduling of debts owed to Canadian exporters as an alternative to the Corporation having to honour claims by exporters when the importers' country is in balance of payments difficulties;

3. Financing of a reasonable portion of local costs of projects where this is necessary to the winning of contracts by Canadian exporters.

It is the intention to place the conduct of the export credits insurance and guarantees functions under extensive and continuing review to ensure that they remain responsive to changing circumstances and the needs of the export community. An active program will be undertaken immediately to simplify administrative procedures and to familiarize exporters and financial institutions with the services and facilities available. In this connection, a systematic and continuing program of liaison and co-operation with Canadian financial institutions is also to be undertaken. My colleagues, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), together with the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the President of E.C.I.C. and other senior officials, have already met with representatives of the chartered banks to discuss the new legislation and the important role of the banks in connection with the whole range of financing and marketing activities associated with export development. We mean this to be a continuing and meaningful dialogue in the interest of achieving the closest possible co-ordination of effort.

To ensure that Canadian exporters of high-priority capital goods and services are not inhibited from pursuing major sales opportunities abroad requiring long term or, exceptionally, medium term financing, provision is made for acceptance of liability under direct loans to foreign buyers of up to $800 million. Such lending has been carried out since 1961 under the authority of Section 21A of the existing act. Signed loan agreements net of repayment presently stand in the neighbourhood of $325 million but outstanding commitments would, if taken up, bring the total current liability to well over $600 million. Of course not all will be taken up. A ceiling of $800 million would, it is anticipated, be sufficient to cover prospective business for some years to come.

Within the over-all ceiling, two authorities are to be established: for lending by the corporation for its own account on approval by the board of directors to a limit on outstanding liabilities to $600 million, and for lending for the account of the government to a limit of $200 million. The carrying out by the corporation of a major portion of new export lending as principal rather than as agent for the government on approval by the Governor in Council as at present will, together with new simplified funding and administrative procedures, facilitate meeting exporters' needs and competitive situations. The latter facility would be for very large export transactions such as the sale of nuclear power plants or to meet other special situations considered by the government to be in the national interest but which are of a term or in an amount excessive for the corporation. Long term and, exceptionally, medium term financing of major export transactions will in future be carried out as far as risk taking is concerned in a similar manner to export credits insurance operations.

In medium and long term financing, the corporation will have extended powers to make loans and to issue guarantees to private lenders in connection with major export transactions. Security requirements for loans are to be made more flexible. The corporation will also be empowered to provide lines of credit to national development banks and similar financial institutions abroad to finance purchase of Canadian goods and services, to cover a proportion of local costs of projects abroad and to finance services supplied from Canada even when these are not directly associated with equipment supply. Financial institutions in Canada and abroad will be encouraged to participate with the corporation in its lending and guarantee operations. Interest and other charges by the corporation will generally reflect the cost of money to it, bearing in mind, however, the need to meet competition in particular cases, and will provide for the operating expenses of the medium and long term financing facility.

Under clause 33 of the bill the corporation would be empowered, when authorized by the Minister of Finance, to buy, sell, and lend on the security of, negotiable export paper. E.C.I.C. had this power in connection with operations under Section 21A when authorized by the Governor in Council. The new authority is broader and applies also to export paper in respect of transactions insured by the corporation. Rediscount of export paper in the hands of the banks is not presently contemplated.

Finally, an entirely new facility is to be established to insure Canadian investments in developing countries against loss due to war, insurrection or revolution, expropriation or confiscation and inability to transfer earnings or capital. These are standard risks covered under investment insurance schemes of other countries. Insolvency or other commercial risk would not be covered. Coverage would be limited to new investments, including reinvested earnings, and would have to hold promise of some specific economic advantage to Canada, such as increased exports, or contribute to the economic development of the host country.

The plan is essentially bilateral; that is, the Canadian government will expect certain assurances from the host country before authorizing the corporation to issue an insurance policy on an investment in that country. We have not ruled out participation by Canada in a multilateral investment scheme such as that which has been discussed periodically under World Bank auspices during talks in which Canada has participated. We have kept open the option to consider integration of a Canadian investment insurance policy with a viable international plan should such a plan be developed.

Total liability under contracts of investment insurance is limited under the bill to $50 million and it will be apparent from this that individual investments covered will likely be relatively modest. We intend to feel our way slowly and prudently into this new field.

Canadian firms by investing abroad may be able to preserve or expand their export markets, as well as to derive a return on their investment in terms of foreign income or capital appreciation. Changes in the terms of access to foreign markets, in patterns of production and consumption, and in tariffs and freight, may change the balance of considerations between serving a market from Canada and establishing a plant in a foreign country. Furthermore, in some cases an equity investment is a pre-condition to the sale of capital goods and related services. More broadly, investment abroad by a firm or industry could have the effect of increasing its competitiveness and by bringing it closer to the market allow it to react more positively to needs and opportunities. In addition, a full development of Canadian ideas and skills may require increased foreign investment by Canadians and greater use of such techniques as management agreements, licensing arrangements and sale of patent rights.

Foreign investment will stimulate the flow of private capital to developing countries. In doing so, it will enhance the effectiveness of the official aid program by providing capital linked to the technical and managerial know-how which are essential conditions to economic progress in developing countries and which cannot always be easily associated with official aid.

Briefly summarized then, the salient features of the program, of which this bill is the central element, are as follows: First, continuity in availability of adequate official support for export financing, consistent with other high priority claims on the government's resources.

Second, incorporation of the Export Development Corporation as successor to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, to be the focal point for the government's interest in export credits, credit insurance and guarantees and in insurance of foreign investments.

Third, co-ordination of export financing with other government programs, including industrial and trade development and assistance to developing countries, and periodic budgetary review.

Fourth, corporate status similar to former E.C.I.C. but administration to be strengthened, capitalization increased and more authority for day to day operations to be delegated to a board of directors and senior management. The board will include directors appointed from outside the public service, facilitating co-operation between public and private sectors in export development.

Fifth, facilities for export credits insurance and guarantees and for direct export financing to be broadened and made more flexible and capacities to be increased to accommodate expansion in export business. Operation of these facilities to be made more responsive to exporters' requirements and to international competitive situations.

Sixth, direct export financing of routine transactions eligible for this form of assistance to be carried out by the Export Development Corporation as principal instead of being for account of the government, requiring cabinet approval in each instance, as in the case of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation.

Seventh, the Export Development Corporation is to be empowered to buy, sell, and make advances on the security of export paper, but rediscount of paper held by banks not contemplated for the present.

Eighth, a systematic and continuing program of liaison and co-operation with Canadian financial institutions to be developed and steps taken to ensure wider familiarity with, and use of, the Export Development Corporation's services and facilities by both financial institutions and the export community.

Ninth, insurance of investments in developing countries to be offered to encourage participation by Canadian companies in business opportunities abroad where this will advance Canada's economic interests, especially, exports, and/or contribute to the recipient country's economic development.

We consider this bill an important step forward in adjusting our administrative structure to changing needs, and I commend it to the house. It is not, of course, the last step. As in the past, so in the future we will continue to have to keep the export environment under surveillance and be able to respond quickly and effectively as circumstances dictate.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of making a few brief remarks before Bill C-183 is referred to committee for study of the provisions setting up an Export Development Corporation. The house appreciates the explanation that the minister has read into the record outlining the proposals in regard to this new corporation. I would have much preferred, as I am sure would other members of the house, if the minister had forgotten many of the flowery phrases and platitudes that he used and got to the nuts and bolts issues by giving the house some concrete examples of how the provisions of this new act are going to operate. For example, the minister could have mentioned the hydro-electric plant for the government of Ceylon, how it was financed, who the exporter was, the date of the contract, the amount of the contract, how the contract operates, what the government does, how the plant is covered in transit by insurance, how it is insured against non-payment and so on. He could have given the house one or two such examples in layman's language that all of us might have been able to follow a little better.

I should like to ask the minister why it was necessary to bring in this bill when the Export Credits Insurance Act has done a remarkably good job. I would not want to see the Export Credits Insurance Corporation passed over without paying tribute to it for the wonderful work it has done in providing export credit insurance and the help it has given many Canadian companies. Its profit and loss statements and its record of performance have been nothing but the best. Therefore I am at a loss to know why we need a new, fancy-named act. Why not amend the Export Credits Insurance Act by making the few changes to which the minister has referred? The changes are so few that I do not see the necessity for introducing a new act to be known as the Export Development Act. It seems to me that this government is prone to change for the sake of change. I do not think the minister has presented any really good argument for not amending the existing act. However, the government has seen fit to scrap the old act and to bring in a new one, and the bill is now before the house for a vote on whether it should be sent to committee for further study.

Since the bill is going to committee my remarks will be brief. Members of the committee will have the opportunity to ask many questions. I hope the minister will be present at all times in the committee or, if not the minister, his assistant, and also the officials of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation so that all questions members may wish to ask in regard to the proposed new Export Development Corporation may be answered fully and completely.

I do not think I need take the time of the house to deal with the necessity for legislation in this field. This subject was dealt with fully when the house set up the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. We all know the great value of exports to our country; indeed, they are vital. There are 21 million people in Canada with the ability to produce four or five times the production we require, whether of primary or secondary products. Therefore it is essential to export and export to the limit of our capabilities. It is good that this insurance has been made available to our exporters. I do not suppose that many hon. members, particularly those representing urban areas, have in their constituencies manufacturers who have not availed themselves of the credit facilities offered by the former corporation. Similar facilities will be made available under the new legislation.

I wish to direct a few questions to the minister in order that the committee may have the benefit of the answers. Before doing so may I say that the answers to these questions will not meet the problems faced by our exporters. One of their greatest problems is the non-tariff barriers, for want of a better term, of other countries. For instance, there is a non-tariff barrier in the United Kingdom with regard to electrical products. They will not allow a Canadian manufacturer of heavy electrical equipment to tender in their market; they do not accept tenders from offshore countries. Canada allows United Kingdom electrical apparatus manufacturers to tender here. Their tenders are accepted from time to time and we purchase equipment from offshore countries that will not accept tenders from our manufacturers. This illustrates one problem facing our exporters which is not covered by the new bill.

Italian manufacturers paying low wages export their products to Canada and our local manufacturers have to compete against those products. The competition is severe, particularly in electrical appliances. The Department of National Revenue imposes corporation and income taxes on our manufacturers, taking up to 50 per cent of their income from them, while Italian manufacturers pay taxes of only 5 per cent or 10 per cent and put the remainder of their money into research and development of their industries.

I mention also in passing the most favoured nation treaties and arrangements. I do so to illustrate the problems facing our exporters which are not covered by this legislation. Recently four or five countries wished to purchase equipment for satellite land stations similar to equipment installed in Nova Scotia. Canadian companies tendered for that equipment. Pakistan, Malaysia and other countries wanted these satellite land stations, but when Canadian manufacturers tendered they found that their tenders were not even accepted.

I now ask some questions about the bill that opposition members wish to hear answered. Will the new corporation, the successor to E.C.I.C., insure Canadian companies exporting to the United States market? I understand that the previous corporation did not look favourably on such insurance although in the last year or two consideration has been given to insuring Canadian companies exporting to the United States. Also, is the government going to branch out into the banking business? Is it entering the banking field and interfering with private enterprise with these new financial arrangements? Are we overstepping our commitments in the Berne union of which Canada, with other exporting countries, is a member? Are we fulfilling other obligations and commitments when we go into banking so deeply? I think these questions ought to be answered.

The bill calls for the setting up of an advisory council. This is always a very ticklish matter. I hope the advisory council will be composed of men best fitted to undertake these duties. I sincerely hope that partisan political considerations will not enter into the selection of council members.

Is the proposed Export Development Corporation to be a non-profit organization? It was intended originally that the Export Credits Insurance Corporation should be a non-profit body. However, owing to its very able administration it was able to show a profit after several years. I have the exact figures in my hand. According to the 1967 annual report and financial statement the excess of operating income over policyholders' claims amounted to $4,540,226. Together with interest on investments the total surplus was over $12 million for the year ended December 31, 1967. I do not know whether it is intended to operate the new Export Development Corporation on a non-profit basis, but I think it ought to be a non-profit organization. It should help our exporters to develop exports, create jobs and be of distinct advantage to Canada. It ought to break even but not make a great profit.

Of course we are all most anxious to see that corporations such as this one are not given too much latitude with respect to salaries and expenses. Clauses 9 and 10 of the bill give wide powers to the corporation, as does clause 16. Hon. members of the opposition are always concerned about wide powers given to corporations when the house has no way of scrutinizing the exercise of those powers. Having read the bill I have not seen any provision that the corporation must table an annual report. The former corporation had to do so and I think this corporation should also be obliged to do so. Perhaps the requisite wording is in the bill. In any event, we ought to make sure that it is necessary for the corporation to table an annual report in the house.

Those are the observations I wish to make at this time. I am sure the committee will study the bill carefully and give it the consideration it deserves. I conclude by repeating what I said at the beginning. I am at a loss to know why a new bill had to be introduced when the Export Credits Insurance Act could have been amended. The changes proposed in this bill could have been brought in by way of amendments to that act and we could have been spared all these details regarding changes in administration, reorganization and all the rest of it. Again I say to the house we would be remiss if we did not give full credit to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for the wonderful work it has done in this field by making it possible for our exporters to export to countries that they had never been able to export to previously.

In closing I point out that the principal commodities insured in 1967 were in the following ratio: iron and products related thereto 27 per cent, wood and wood products 26 per cent, agricultural products 12 per cent, non-ferrous metal and related products 8 per cent, aircraft 7 per cent, chemicals and products related thereto 4 per cent. This shows the very wide scope of manufacturing in which the corporation has extended credit to exporters.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it always strikes me as rather strange how easily a Crown corporation can get approval in this house when it is to assist businessmen and how difficult it is to get a Crown corporation approved by the house when it is to help the consumers or when it is a housing corporation that is proposed. I do not object to this corporation being set up in this form; it is probably the best form in which to do it. But I hope that the members who are supporting this measure and who seem to have considerable enthusiasm for this form of public enterprise will maintain that enthusiasm for other Crown corporation proposals that come before the house from time to time which are for the specific purpose of helping the people of this country who are not manufacturers and who perhaps do not have the same kind of leverage with the government that manufacturers have.

It is hard to assess the purpose of this corporation in comparison with that of its predecessor, and I would like to enter a reservation with regard to its merit. I very much fear that what we are seeing here is an attempt to enter into the 20th century scramble for investment, just as the nations in the 19th century scrambled for colonies, and it seems to me that Canada is now joining the new investment imperialism. I would ask assurance from the government that this is not its intention.

It is significant that the board is to be composed of public servants and businessmen. We can understand why representatives of the public service who are familiar with this operation should be on the board. We can also understand why people directly engaged in export should be on the board to offer their advice and provide valuable information. But there is a need for someone to be on this board who is directly involved in government policy, a government representative, a political representative, to ensure that the board operates in the best interests not only of Canada but of those other nations that it seeks to serve.

I was pleased to see that the intent to preserve the national interest of Canada is written into the bill, and also an expression of concern about the effect of investments upon other countries, but I am not prepared to believe that this kind of political decision can be carried out by people who are not involved in the policy-making process. If there is a lack of clarity in the bill it seems to me that it arises from the government's unwillingness to recognize the political implications of a measure of this type.

For instance, is this corporation going to view any proposition that comes before it only from the viewpoint of the profitability to the private investors? I would hope not, because the bill says that they will consider the national interest and the interest of foreign countries. Are the nominees as outlined by the bill in a position to determine those interests? We are talking about a political decision. Once you get out of the realm of business, out of the realm of private profit-making, and start talking about the national interest and the interest of foreign countries you become involved in a political decision. Who is going to make the political decision? Who is going to oversee the making of that political decision? As the matter now stands it does not look like this board will be able to do that kind of thing.

It is quite obvious that the people of Canada, through the government, are taking all the risk in this venture but do not have much of a voice in regard to the policy of the board. The minister may say that we in this party are asking too much. Why should Canada ask for things that other countries are not asking for? After all, we are bringing in this measure. We are improving opportunities for our manufacturers in line with what other countries are doing. We are stimulating our investors to go into foreign countries. Why should Canada stay out of this race?

I can only reply that we are not in the position to determine the policy of other countries. That is for them to determine, but we can wish for our country something better than what is happening elsewhere. Canadians do not wish to be imperialists. We do not want to join in the scramble for financial colonies. We do not need them. We have no interest in playing that kind of role in international affairs. I look forward to the minister explaining the government's position in this regard and to his assurance that this program will not develop along such lines.

Canadians should be very sensitive about bringing about the kind of difficulties that are created by foreign investment. We have been the major victims of this kind of economic imperialism, and we certainly would not wish to impose on others the kind of problems that have been imposed upon us. We are not in such desperate economic conditions that we have to milk some of the riches of other countries. We are a rich country whose future is not in doubt. If it can be demonstrated that in most cases investment will benefit foreign countries while giving them the freedom they require for their own development we in this party will be in complete agreement with that kind of approach, but only on those terms.

At the moment the government is going through a foreign policy. It is looking for a new role for Canadian foreign policy. Investment is part of a nation's foreign policy. We should be most careful to ensure that the investment policies we encourage are in harmony with the kind of foreign policy this country wants and thinks desirable for its future.

I find it very difficult to understand in what way the sending of investment dollars out of this country is really of any great assistance to Canada as a nation. The old imperialism was seldom of benefit and very often created problems with which a nation had to live for years and years afterwards, and there is a danger in investing outside our boundaries or encouraging investment outside our boundaries particularly when the argument is made that in Canada we are capital hungry. In effect we are suggesting by this bill that Canadians invest in other countries and that the vacuum in our country be filled by foreign investment.

The argument is heard repeatedly in the house that there is not enough investment for our own development. What then is the point in encouraging foreign investment under these circumstances? I have never accepted the argument that we really are capital short or capital hungry, but this is a point which is often made by other hon. members. So we are trading off Canadian capital. On the one hand, we are encouraging the outflow of our capital and, on the other hand, we are suggesting that the gap left be filled by foreign capital. We are already more dominated by foreign capital than any other country in the world.

What kind of sense does the policy this bill seeks to encourage make? I cannot see it. All of us are in favour of using some of our capital to help foreign countries. We can understand that argument. It will hurt Canada a little, but those countries need the investment far more than we need it here. We have an obligation as a part of the family of nations, and as human beings looking at the problems of other human beings, to assist and help. If that is the argument, then let it be stated in those terms and we can accept it in those terms. I find it difficult, however, to accept the argument that the export of capital from this country will in the long run benefit the people of Canada. I think it may very well create far more harm than benefit.

There seems to be a prevailing myth in the minds of the members of the cabinet that we must export and that our life depends on exports. Throughout our history there has been an emphasis on getting rid of our raw materials as rapidly as we can and on getting rid now of our manufactured goods as fast as we can. I believe that exports and imports should flow naturally rather than be artificially stimulated as they frequently have been in this country. The more we export, the more we import. I am not sure what the answer is, but I have some doubt concerning the conventional wisdom which seems to be so sure about the answer. To what extent do we really benefit by putting this tremendous emphasis on export? It creates as many disadvantages as advantages, and it makes us enormously vulnerable to what goes on in other parts of the world.

Because our exports are largely in semi-finished or raw materials we in effect trade off these goods for highly manufactured and highly finished goods which are the largest component in our imports. The minister says the provisions of this bill will increase our productivity. The implication is that if we export more a certain amount of rationalization will take place. There is some truth to this but it is a very small amount of truth. I say to the minister that we must do far more than merely encourage exports if we are to rationalize industry in Canada and make it as productive as it deserves and needs to be. Far more than this small measure is required. I am always worried when measures of this kind are presented to the house as being a panacea for deep-seated problems. I do not suggest that this small measure will not help in a way, but we should not think it is a very large part of the answer when in effect it cannot be that kind of an answer.

Why do people buy from other countries? They do so because those countries have a natural advantage in the production of both goods and services. We know there are distortions in markets, subsidies and various regulations which must be overcome, but by and large goods move back and forth between one nation and another because there is a comparative advantage elsewhere of which people wish to avail themselves. The bonusing of exports is part of the picture, but I suggest our chief concern should be to make Canadian industry efficient and productive. In order to do that we must rationalize our industry and bring about a more effective structure. The difficulty which stands in the way of getting that kind of industrial structure is the pattern of foreign ownership in Canada. The government has consistently refused to tackle this problem. These palliatives are brought in which serve to blot out the real and substantive difficulty in this country.

It is for these reasons among others that I raise these questions concerning the effectiveness of the measure now before us. Looking through the bill one must marvel at some of the naïve assumptions. Perhaps I will be excused if I am not completely accurate when I paraphrase. I can be corrected if I am very wrong. The bill provides that agreements can be signed with other countries which will commit those countries to honour these agreements. I wonder how this can be done in this revolutionary world. Some countries are now run by dictators and oppressive leaders. What will the situation be when the people overthrow those leaders? Are we to hold them to a commitment made by a government which they did not approve and sought to overthrow? Surely this sort of thing cannot be done. One could try to do it but it is too unrealistic to expect that a commitment of that kind would be honoured. A very good example is the situation in Peru in respect of the seizure of some of the oil assets in that country.

We are in some ways sowing for ourselves seeds of difficulty with regard to some of the emerging nations. I would hope the government would make it very clear that as our investments in foreign countries grow, particularly in the underdeveloped nations, we will not develop a gunboat mentality and say that because we have investments we must seek to influence the kind of political system the people in those countries choose for themselves. In respect of investments there is always the danger that this kind of attitude might be taken and pressure exerted on the government to protect in this case not only the investments of private people but the government's contribution as well.

When dealing with foreign countries we should also be prepared to get out when they want us to get out and not raise any fuss about it. I believe Canada should take the position that the sovereignty of nations is more important than any private investment whether domestic or foreign. This should be made very clear, and it does not appear to be clear in the bill as it now stands. We should make sure that we in Canada are not guilty of the same errors regarding extraterritoriality in other countries whereby the laws of another nation have accompanied foreign investment in Canada and have made those investors subject to laws made outside this country. We should ensure and insist that Canadians who invest in other countries will be completely and absolutely subject to the laws of those countries in which they invest so there will be no conflict between private interests and the political sovereignty of the nations in which the investments are made.

We have a chance to show ourselves as sympathetic to the national aspirations of emerging countries. This bill provides a framework in which to do this, but whether it will have this effect will depend to a very large extent on the political direction given to the people in this corporation. It will also depend to a large extent on whether the corporation will simply be turned loose to make as much money as possible or whether we will accept our obligation to see that it acts not only in the best interest of Canada but also in the best interests of those countries which at this time need our help and assistance. It is for that reason that we support the general principle of assistance and urge that the purpose of the corporation be made clearer than was evident from the minister's statement today. We urge the government to accept its moral responsibilities in the establishment of the Export Development Corporation referred to in the bill before us.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should like to advise the house as to the subjects to be dealt with at the time of adjournment. They are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Future of Don Messer t.v. show; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Reference of Woods Report to Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE INSURANCE, GUARANTEES AND LOANS TO DEVELOP TRADE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang (for Mr. Pepin) that Bill C-183, to establish the Export Development Corporation and to facilitate and develop export trade by the provision of insurance, guarantees, loans and other financial facilities, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-183, now under consideration, is to establish a corporation to facilitate and develop export trade by the provision of insurance, guarantees, loans and other financial facilities as indicated in the explanatory notes of the bill. In other words, the government intends, through various financial provisions, loans, insurance and credit, to facilitate and to increase the exportation of goods and services.

In fact, it is for Canada a matter of increasing its exports to countries or nationals who can pay for the products they buy. On the other hand, if they are not in a position to do so, the government, or the corporation it plans to establish, undertakes to protect the Canadian exporters or manufacturers by taking the necessary means to give them a compensation in case of insolvency. Such are, it seems, the purpose of Bill C-183 and the philosophy of the Canadian government. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, several questions come to our mind. Why do we ask the Canadian exporters to increase exports, even though their customers may not be able to pay for the goods or services delivered? Why does the Canadian government feel compelled to guarantee the reimbursement of unpaid bills by foreigners while the Canadian producers and merchants who deliver goods or services to Canadian customers do not enjoy similar benefits if their customers are unable to pay?

In other words, why would not the government give Canadian consumers a guarantee enabling them to buy goods and services without paying for them, since the government would take the responsibility of doing so?

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Such are a few of the questions that come to our minds as we read Bill C-183.

But why all those efforts to increase Canadian exports? It is because foreign countries have a purchasing power which will enable Canadian producers to keep their plants going, to give work to more people that will make more purchasing power available to Canadian consumers and will enable them also to buy Canadian products and services, and come what may, let turn the wheel that brings grist to the mill, that keeps the industry going, that provides profits and returns and enables the government to levy more taxes.

Thus, in order to increase exports, they resort to plans and devices of all kinds, in short they enable foreigners to get our products easily.

Here is what the former Liberal member for Saint-Denis said during a broadcast on the Montreal radio station CKAC, according to the former Liberal newspaper Le Canada, in its edition of August 30, 1947, and I quote:

"In spite of the sayings of demagogues whose insight is more than limited, the Liberals do not give anything to foreigners for Canada produces 40 times more than its people can consume, and without exports and loans, whenever necessary, we would have a production surplus, plants would close and we would be facing starvation, unemployment and utter poverty."

As for exports, there would be a crisis, unemployment and utter poverty. Such was the philosophy of the Liberals in 1948; such is still their philosophy 20 years later. And these people are called progressive and open-minded. They say themselves that they have new ideas, that they bring a new philosophy, so that Canada might be governed according to new formulas.

Let us listen to what the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) said in a speech he made last March 28 at a seminar on economic development, in Chicoutimi. I quote:

Essentially, regional development is aimed at creating new possibilities for employment and promotion in underdeveloped areas and helping people to take advantage of them.

And he added this:

The first imperative of social justice is to provide enough jobs. It is a basic economic problem, but it is also an essential social problem.

The second imperative is to keep the jobs in harmony. The third one is to have people use the services which they need in order to take advantage of the opportunities for decent employment.

Finally, to explain the role of the department which he was going to manage, the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion stated:

> This department aims at increasing the possibilities for productive employment and facilitating access to these jobs.

Such then is the philosophy of the government. To provide work and jobs, as if the objective of the economy was to keep the men busy and to make them work.

Why does this government reason as people did 20 years ago? Why does the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion do likewise? And why does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) reason the same way, though he is an economist?

Because workers can only earn their bread through hard work. Because, in their opinion, man was born to toil, to produce. If he ceases to be a means of production, he loses any right he may enjoy of benefiting from it. That is why the trend is to set up as many jobs as possible. That is why statesmen, politicians, economists and businessmen are hand in glove with each other. Thus they extol full employment to the point of creating useless jobs, if they must, so as to keep the people busy.

Let us remember, Mr. Speaker, some of the winter works programs—

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

> Maintenance of employment is wanted for its own sake and not simply to make a plan for social security work more easily. It is better to employ people on digging holes and filling them up again, than not to employ them at all; those who are taken into useless employment will, by what they earn and spend, give useful employment to others. It is better to employ people, however the money for paying their wages is obtained, than not to employ them at all.

[Translation]

Our good friends to our right will surely have recognized one of the high priests of British socialism, William H. Beveridge, in this excerpt from the book, Full Employment in a Free Society, pages 17 and 147.

Another economist, whom our socialist friends esteem highly and who is also recognized as an authority in Canadian government circles, Lord Keynes, was reported by the Canadian Press to have said at the time of a visit to Ottawa on September 4, 1947, and I quote:

> England needs certain products, but it has neither the money to pay for them nor the goods to pay her imports through exports. Canada and the United States which helped England considerably during the war must now continue to ship their goods to that country to keep their economy moving and provide employment for their workers.

Such reasonings reveal the absurdity of the present system. It is easy to believe that England is happy to accept gratuities coming from Canada. But to claim that Canada should adopt a policy of gratuities to strangers, merely to give work to Canadians, verges on absurdity if not insanity.

In his book entitled Tomorrow's Trade and published in 1945, the American economist Stuart Chase was courageous enough to suggest more reasonable solutions. I quote:

> Americans, he said, lend dollars to foreigners; foreigners use those dollars to pay for their imports from the United States. Those exports give a stimulus to production and employment in the United States; but foreigners benefit from the goods while American taxpayers lose everything.
> If we must intervene to alleviate unemployment, he added, why not distribute directly our goods to those in need of them in our own country, to Americans themselves?

We of the Ralliement Créditiste are opposed to the philosophical concept implied in Bill C-183 and advocated by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

When the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion states that:

> The first imperative of social justice is to provide enough jobs—

—we reply, with Pope Pius IX, that the economic body will be soundly constituted and will achieve its aim only when it will provide all its members and each of them with all the goods and resources of nature and industry as well as the truly social organization that society has the means to provide them with.

As for the philosophy of the government, of the Minister of Industry Trades and Commerce and of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, it tends to make believe that the objective of the economic activities is to provide everybody with work, to multiply the number of jobs. Besides, we of the Ralliement Créditiste, endorse the opinion of Father Georges-Henry Lévesque, whom the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion knows well. I quote:

> The economy must not strive to create wealth for its own sake, but to provide for the requirements of all and to produce goods which actually enrich all the citizens of a country. In economics parlance, we would say that the goal of the economy is the welfare of consumers, of all consumers. The consumer first! Such must be the slogan of any truly social, truly humane economic policy.

Those comments are confirmed in the "First Report of the Christian Doctrine Wealth, Committee of the Congressionnal Union of Scotland" dated May 10, 1962. It is a unanimous report from a group of British politicians, economists and Church leaders with the view of drawing up a Christian doctrine on wealth.

Here is what the report says on page 16, and I quote:

The notion that it is better to hold any position than none at all has made its way just as that other one that the first goal of the economic system is to offer employment—

We can only emphasize again what we said in the first part of this report, that the purpose of production is consumption, and, generally speaking, although man's work is a means whereby to achieve such purpose, it must not be considered only in the light of production. From a Christian point of view, it is wrong to say that a man should do the work that can be done by a machine; it is wrong to say that man should work without any physical or spiritual satisfaction. Those are nevertheless the very features of the society we live in, and this is so because man is forced to find some job or other if he is to meet his legitimate needs.

The report goes on to say:

It has been said that nobody should have anything for nothing. However, notwithstanding this so-called principle, social assistance, free schooling, family allowances, health services, all this is acknowledged the world over because it is realized that the community as a whole draws benefits when each individual shares in the common good.

Unemployment and other social benefits reaffirm the principle that it is a duty for the community to ensure the welfare of those who are unable to earn a living, on account of old age, health conditions or their inability to find a job.

Therefore, we must conclude that society will have an ever-growing obligation to distribute means of living among its members by ways other than paid employment.

Those ways of thinking have spread, Mr. Speaker, and on this side of the Atlantic, those people are not the only supporters of such measures.

On March 22, 1964, 26 economists, union leaders, newspapermen and political leaders, including the economist Robert Theobald, Mr. Gunner Myrdal of the Institute of International Economic Studies, Mr. Ben B. Seligman, director of the Research Section of the Retail Clerks International Association, Mr. Linus Pauling, Nobel peace prize winner as well as other famous American personalities, submitted to President Johnson a brief on the Triple Revolution in progress in the United States at that time: the revolutions in the fields of cybernetics, armaments and human rights.

In connection with the cybernetic revolution, the signers of the brief state that the present economic system cannot provide employment to everyone and that adherence to the relation between income and employment as a basic method to distribute demand efficiently is now acting as a check to the almost unlimited capacity of a production system based on cybernetics.

They add and I quote:

An adequate distribution of the potential abundance of goods and services will only be carried out when we will understand that the main economic problem is not to know how production will be increased but how the abundance will be distributed. There is an urgent need to alter basically the mechanisms used to answer consumers' needs.

As a first step towards a new consensus, concludes the brief to president Johnson, it is essential to recognize that the traditional link between employment and income does not exist anymore. The economy of affluence may bring to every citizen comfort and security, whether they are engaged or not in what is generally called work. The wealth brought about by machines instead of by men always remains wealth. We recommend therefore that society, through appropriate legal and governmental institutions, undertake to supply each individual and each family with an adequate income that would be theirs by right.

The legislation brought before us by the minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce constitutes a residue of puritanism which no longer has its place in a world dominated by cybernetics and characterized by affluence. Solutions of 20 years ago, which the Liberals bring back to try to remedy the economic situation of Canadians, are obsolete cures.

The time, the energy and the money we waste would serve a better end if applied to a study of the solutions offered by hon. members from the Ralliement Créditiste.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I would add that we, from the Ralliement Créditiste, know and believe that we can supply other countries, at least in part, with the goods they may request from our industries.

At the present time, a delegation made up of 4 or 5 of our ministers is in Tokyo with a view to concluding trade agreements.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when entering into such agreements, we ought to be careful so that the conditions now prevailing will not become permanent, that is selling our raw materials to foreign countries even if we have to buy them back, and at a very high cost, once they have been processed.

I think we should endeavour to find ways of processing our raw materials in our own industries, in order to put finished products on the market, according to the physical possibilities of our country.

[English]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member who just preceded me I will not read from a prepared script and I hope I will be comparatively brief. It is not my intention to address my remarks directly to the bill now before us but rather indirectly following the statement by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) who introduced the bill this afternoon. During the course of his remarks he made three rather important statements and it is because of these statements that I am on my feet now. I am certain that I took them down correctly and I would like to cite them now.

The minister said, first, that exports are an essential key to our Canadian economy. On the surface no one could disagree with that. Second, he said that stimulation of exports must have top priority. On the surface no one in this house could disagree with that. Third, he said that the Export Development Corporation would give financial support to expanded export credits. On the surface no one could disagree with that. But I am saying that in making those blunt statements without any explanation of government policy regarding the Canadian economy the minister was unfair because in order to appreciate our economic situation in relation to expanded exports and expanded credits it is necessary for the minister to put the principles he espouses in the context of the Canadian economy and of other government policies.

Let us consider his first statement. The minister said that exports are an essential key to our Canadian economy. Of course that is correct. But this house is entitled to know the relationship of the export sector of our economy to government policy on imports because if we expand our exports, as we must, we must be able to meet a trade and financial imbalance. So I say it is unfair to speak about a measure to increase our exports unless we have some understanding of government policy on how to meet our trade and financial imbalance or unless we increase our imports.

I am not an economist but I think I have studied the subject sufficiently to know that some adjustment must be made somewhere. It would simply be impossible to expand exports greatly unless we also expand imports greatly. I do not know whether my friend has been here long enough to know that every time we increase imports certain manufacturing industries from the east to the west coast come to Ottawa to meet members of the government and to raise hell because they say they are being driven out of business. We know that four ministers are now in Japan. I believe that the purpose of their visit is not so much to expand our exports to Japan as to curtail imports to Canada because of the complaints that the government has been receiving with regard to what Japanese imports are doing to some of the manufacturing industries in this country, whether they be cotton, linen, pottery, or something else. So it is of the utmost importance for the Minister without Portfolio, when he tells us that exports are an essential key to our Canadian economy, which undoubtedly they are, to tell us what is the Canadian policy on imports. Imports must also expand in order to meet the imbalance of trade and the imbalance of payments.

How are we to face the manufacturers of Canada, now having a rough and difficult time, and facing increased competition, if we increase our exports? I hope the government has the answers. I believe that members of the House of Commons, having been asked to support this bill, are entitled to know what policy the government has in mind to meet the problem which is bound to arise in connection with a greater volume of imports because of increased exports. Anyone who says we cannot have greater imports and greater exports does not know anything about world economics, let alone in Canada. I hope we shall be hearing about this.

The minister told us that the stimulation of exports must be given top priority. Here again he left something to be explained. What is the policy of the government with regard to the control of exports or the stimulation of exports if our own economy is in bad shape? I followed closely what the minister said this afternoon. He gave no indication of what might be done to control the Export Development Corporation if its actions were likely to have a serious effect on the situation in Canada.

I draw the attention of the house to the situation at the present time in British Columbia where we have experienced the most difficult winter in recorded history. The result is that thousands are out of work because the sawmills and the processing plants lack the logs which they required. Only two days ago I returned from my home city of Vancouver. Thousands are out of work there because as a result of the severe winter logs are not available to meet the needs of the sawmills and processing plants. Yet ships are today loading unprocessed logs there to be exported to other countries. I admit I do not know whether this is being done on a credit basis, but this is my point: In such a situation, what control will there be over the corporation to ensure that export credits are not extended at times when, because of certain difficulties, our own people in Canada are out of work? I ask that this aspect be explained because it was not mentioned by the minister when he spoke this afternoon.

Of course I am in favour of exports and the expansion of exports. However, to my mind top priority should not be given to the exporting of our raw materials when they are required in our own country. I cannot feel that the Export Development Corporation or any similar institution should be able to assist such exports at a time when there are unemployed in our own country available to undertake secondary manufacturing. This is an aspect which I believe to be of the utmost importance and one which should be explained in great detail before a final vote is taken on this measure.

The third point made by the minister was that the Export Development Corporation would be used to provide financial support to expanded export credits. In the light of the two points which I have tried to put forward as being of importance, may I ask whether any indication can be given that the expanded credit will be limited to the extension of credit in connection with those things which are of advantage to Canada rather than to those which work to the detriment of Canada? Just think about what I said in regard to the log situation in British Columbia. Just reflect on whether or not credit should be granted with respect to commodities which are the key to the Canadian economy. The key to the Canadian economy lies in extending as far as possible credits for the development and utilization of secondary and tertiary industries based on our raw resources, in seeing that we do not extend credit for exports when our own people are out of work because of special circumstances. It lies in seeing that Canadians are employed first before we export raw materials, that our manufacturers are assisted first.

I conclude by returning to my original point because to me it is such an important one. The minister talks about extending exports through expanded credits. Will he please tell us what policy the government has in mind to meet the imbalance of trade, the imbalance of payments, so as not to endanger Canadian manufacturing and Canadian industry? If he can tell me that, I shall be the first to complement him.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in connection with Bill C-183, an act to establish the Export Development Corporation. I for one am more impressed with the contents of Part II of the bill than with Part I. I do not believe that Part I, having to do with the structure of the proposed new corporation, is really of much importance. Like many bills that have come before the house this session, Part I of the measure before us simply with the restructuring of an agency of the government and this, I suggest, is hardly of great importance. The important thing is what the corporation or agency intends to do, the policies it intends to carry forward once it is operational.

I am curious to know in what way the operations of the Export Development Corporation are likely to be substantially different in the next few years from those of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation in the past decade. I feel it is important and worth while for the proposed corporation to enter into arrangements to provide long-term credits to prospective exporters, to offer forms of guarantees and insurance to Canadian business firms which are engaged in the export business in an important way. Some of my colleagues may have expressed surprise that private enterprise oriented firms should want to avail themselves of the benefits of something that is state directed, but I am not surprised at that at all. Some of our largest firms have shown an amazing capacity to forget their ideological prejudices upon finding something of financial advantage to them. But let us leave ideology aside for a moment and look at the operations of the proposed Export Development Corporation.

For one thing I hope the corporation will have some guidance from the government as to making maximum use of its powers to provide and underwrite insurance for the export trade. Here I want to make specific reference to use of the port of Churchill, a matter that I am sure is close to the heart of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) who is sponsoring the bill. One of the reasons there has not been over the course of many years an increasing utilization of the port of Churchill by the export trade, particularly for the export of wheat, is, so we are told, because of difficulty in obtaining marine insurance for the entire length of the shipping season. To put it another way, one of the reasons the shipping season at Churchill is not longer than it has been in past years is not the physical or climatic conditions but rather the fact that a period of 20 to 25 days has consistently been chopped off the potential shipping season at Churchill because of lack of marine insurance.

It would strike me as strange if we did not make use of the powers contained in this bill to underwrite insurance so as to extend the shipping season at Churchill. It would strike me as strange if we failed to exercise the powers available in this bill, which seeks to stimulate exports by all manner of firms engaged in different sectors of the economy, to extend the shipping season at Churchill and thus reduce the price of western wheat to the importers. If this were the case I would not blame the western farmers and those interested in extending the shipping season at Churchill for being dissatisfied, if not embittered.

The fact of the matter is that the savings that would be realized by producers of western wheat and/or by the importers of that product would be approximately 10 to 12 cents a bushel. Everybody knows this. We have all been looking for ways and means of realizing this kind of saving by reducing transportation costs but nothing ever happens. The answer that comes back is that it is a matter of marine insurance. We are told that the shipping firms that operate the bottoms cannot get insurance, and there the matter is left. The buck is passed and somebody else is supposed to deal with the problem. As a result no progress is made. It would seem to me that this new corporation would be in a position to help resolve this problem, and I will be very disappointed with this administration if it does not give the new corporation some guidance and leadership in this respect.

Having listened with interest to the introductory speech of the minister may I say I agree with him and support his sentiments that we must do what we can to increase and stimulate Canadian exports. That is not saying very much. When opportunity presents itself to take concrete action to achieve this end, I hope the minister will not hesitate in providing leadership to every sector of the economy.

I should also like to ask the minister whether he does not feel that the government could help to stimulate export trade, and in particular help our wheat producers, by taking steps to appoint more trade commissioners to eastern Europe. Is it not the fact that the number of trade commissioners in eastern Europe is zero? Export trade promotion for Canada in countries like Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria is done from Vienna, and those who from time to time try to promote exports to Poland work out of Copenhagen. And so the story goes. Something tangible could be done here to stimulate exports. Since 1965, I believe, we have not increased the number of personnel engaged on trade promotion in Europe, certainly in eastern Europe; yet we expect somehow to do better when it comes to selling goods in that part of the world.

The minister may have a good deal of faith in what Bill C-183 will accomplish. We hope that the proposed Export Development Corporation will somehow stimulate exports. Perhaps one way it will do so is through its system of guarantees of investments, which will help businessmen overcome some of their fears. I have no complaint about this part of the bill. But I will complain if this crown corporation fails to assist in extending the shipping season at Churchill; in this regard I think it could have a direct influence. I will also complain if the government, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, fails to increase the number of trade commissioners throughout eastern Europe. I think this is a legitimate complaint inasmuch as the government will be missing an opportunity to do something tangible to try to promote the sale of Canadian products in that part of the world.

Very often it seems to me that this administration is guilty of engaging in blown-up publicity and propaganda campaigns, in setting up agencies and ad hoc committees, all of which look impressive enough on paper, while all the time failing to take advantage of or follow up on opportunities for taking concrete action. I have a long story to tell in this regard in connection with area development, but I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you would call me to order if I tried to develop this point at this time.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I conclude by saying that it is not difficult to support the government's intentions with regard to Bill C-183. Yet obviously there is reason for one to be sceptical as to what the actual effects of the legislation will be. Having established the corporation the onus will still be on the government to provide the primary leadership in stimulating Canadian exports on the world market.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, before the bill goes to committee I wish to refer to one or two of the points raised by hon. members. Some of these matters really have been made clear in my opening remarks. If the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) refers to those remarks again he will see therein enumerated the reasons for introducing a new corporation to take the place of the former Export Credits Insurance Corporation.

The hon. member for Wellington asked whether the Export Development Corporation was to be a non-profit organization. Of course, the intention is the same as for the E.C.I.C., that is, that it should fulfil all its functions and not make a profit. This will not preclude a profit being made as a result of continued good management, although such profit is not required of it.

No advisory council is provided for in the bill. Communication between the corporation and the business world it serves directly will come about through the addition of four members from that area to the board of the corporation. The hon. member for Wellington also asked whether the bill contains a provision requiring the corporation to table an annual report. Although there is no such provision in the bill, such tabling is required under section 85 of the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. members opposite commented about the government's general philosophy with regard to exports and the operation of the Export Development Corporation in that connection. Surely it must be perfectly clear from the bill and from the remarks made in introducing it that the government stands firm on the very sound, long-term liberal policy of promoting the freest, open kind of society possible and the maximum amount of trade. That is the intention behind the bill and we hope the bill will fulfil its purpose. These days, in talking about the bill, there is particular emphasis on exports, and this corporation is concerned with that particular aspect of our trade.

I emphasized before, and I do so again, that the government believes that stimulating exports is of tremendous advantage to our economy. That stimulation encourages maximum productivity in the face of competition we must meet if we are to compete with other producers in the world markets. It also brings about the advantage of an enlarged market. I am surprised that the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) did not pay sufficient heed to the tremendous advantages accruing to this country from that type of rationalization. Of course we are aware that increasing exports will logically lead to the development of increased imports into Canada. But that does not frighten this government, Mr. Speaker. We believe that open trade and exchange of products between countries is of tremendous advantage to those participating in that trade.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) was a little worried about whether we were strong enough to resist the pressures of industrialists who might feel the pinch of these imports. I hope the government will be strong enough to face both the industrialists and the workers involved in any particular trade or branch of industry affected by serious competition. I hope we will be brave enough to face them with long-term plans aimed at making our industry in general increasingly efficient. Our objective in the long term is the establishment of the freest possible trade. We have no doubt that that is the right policy. If hon. members wish to hear our assurance in that regard I will be pleased to give it to them.

The hon. member for Waterloo was worried also about assurances we might obtain from successor governments. May I refer him to a general rule of international law in which we put some faith, to the effect that a successor government is responsible for the debts of its predecessors? The history of good faith on the part of governments around the world is good enough to lead us to believe that this is not really such a high risk endeavor—I refer particularly to the investment insurance program—as it might be thought to be by any particular investor. That is an important part of the philosophy behind this insurance program. The government, taking a slightly longer view of the history of a situation, can take certain risks which an individual, small investor might feel he could not take. If hon. members look at the bill as a whole and particularly at the section dealing with insurance of investments abroad they will see that there is adequate recognition of the political responsibilities that must be involved in the operation of certain aspects of the corporation's work. That responsibility is noted in the bill. It rests on the government and the government takes the responsibility for making certain decisions.

I am pleased with the generally warm reception this bill has received. I know the officials most closely associated with the operation of the Export Credits Insurance Act will be delighted in committee to go into specific detail with hon. members concerning the past very useful operation of the act.

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask a question of the minister? Perhaps he might take it as notice and reply in writing or in some other way. Do the provisions of Bill C-183 preclude the corporation from providing insurance with respect to ocean shipment? I am referring to marine insurance. Would that not help to promote trade?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe that that specific matter is not within the ambit of the bill. However, I will ask for an opinion on the matter and speak to the hon. member about it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

TELESAT CANADA ACT

MEASURE ESTABLISHING CORPORATION FOR TELECOMMUNICATION BY SATELLITE

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-184, to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to move an amendment to the motion changing the standing committee from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. If the house will be good enough to waive the normal notice, we could put the amendment later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My suggestion would be that in future it would be more orderly to move the amendment after debate on the motion. If it is the pleasure of the house I might read the amendment now. It reads:

That the motion for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of Bill C-184, an Act to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite, be amended by substituting for the words "Standing Committee on Transport and Communications" the words, "Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts."

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, couldn't this be a house order that we all agree to without any loss of time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the legislation before the house for its consideration and approval is Bill C-184, an act to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite. This bill, perhaps because it combines two glamorous fields, space and communications, has received a considerable amount of publicity. It was also the subject of many questions by hon. members when the estimates of my department were before the Committee on Broadcasting a month ago, and before the Committee on Transport and Communications last December. Hence hon. members are familiar with many aspects of the project. However, this bill moves a significant and critical step further. It translates theory into practice and refines plans and programs into binding legal terminology. To explain this terminology and practice will, I must warn and apologize to hon. members, require a speech of some length.

In one sense, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-184 is an exceptionally simple item of legislation. The title, which I have just cited, describes the bill in all its essentials. It will establish a Canadian corporation, to be called Telesat Canada, with will develop, own and operate a domestic communications satellite system.

In another sense, however, Bill C-184 is highly complex. The type of corporation proposed is unique in this country. It goes beyond the pecedents set by the Panarctic Corporation in this country and by COMSAT in the United States by combining into a single entity three interests or groups: the government; private industry, which in this instance means the common carriers; and the public at large. I do not know of any parallel anywhere, but for lack of knowledge of what has been done in countries other than on this continent do not claim this tripartite concept is unique. I do, however, believe that the concept contained within this bill, though not the specific details of the satellite corporation, may serve as a pathfinder for future government-public-private industry partnerships.

As I shall describe in greater detail later, such a three cornered partnershp, which must balance the self-interest of each partner against the interest of the operation as a whole, and which must also strike a balance between financial involvement and management responsibility, is a delicate and difficult exercise. But it is, I am certain, an exercise worth undertaking.

The bill is also complex because of the nature of the undertaking itself. It breaks new technical and scientific ground in a field that is undergoing continuous and rapid change. This field, communications, is one with profound political and sociological implications, and these implications have been reflected in the keen interest taken by hon. members in all aspects of communications, whether in those of the message or, as in this case, in those of the medium. I might at this point mention that I am glad that members of the Broadcasting Committee, which at a later stage will be examining this legislation clause by clause, were able to witness the launching of the ISIS-1 satellite and to visit the satellite ground station at Mill Village.

If some members, aside from acquiring background information, found themselves perplexed by the technological complexities of telecommunications projects I can only frankly admit that there are times when I find myself similarly perplexed.

To return to the bill now under study. Before commenting on it in general, I would like to sketch its background, that is, its justification.

Essentially it is a case of supply and demand combining into a project for the national benefit. The supply exists because Canada has acquired a considerable expertise in space matters and in telecommunications. As all hon. members know, Canadians are per capita the greatest telephone users in the world. As all hon. members may not know we have the second-most extensive telecommunications system in the world, with a microwave network of 50,000 miles. In the conquest of space, while our contribution is modest by comparison to those of the United States and the USSR, we nevertheless rank among the pioneers.

Alouette 1, launched in September 1962, made Canada the third nation in the world to have an orbiting satellite, and it has been followed by two other Canadian-designed and built satellites. At the Communications Research Center, at Shirley Bay, we have built up a substantial bank of information on space communications. A good number of Canadian companies, most notably Northern Electric and RCA-Victor, have demonstrated their ability by securing important export contracts in this highly competitive field. In sum we possess the know-how and competence to ensure that in any future projects, in that of a domestic communications satellite system, there will be a substantial Canadian component with an overflow of benefits both industrial and scientific.

Far more important than supply is demand. The abundance of skills and knowledge does not necessarily create a demand for them.

When the need exists, the nation as a whole benefits; when it does not, we are faced with the discouraging problem of brains and talent migrating elsewhere. The need for a domestic satellite system, and hence for the use of our skills, becomes self-evident simply by considering the size of the country. As has been noted many times, Canada is an expression of geography: since we can find in it highly-urbanized concentrations of population, together with a vast, and largely undeveloped hinterland. A domestic communications satellite system alone will provide the necessary means to narrow the gap in the standards as well as in the services inherent to those two Canadian characteristics.

As I said in an earler speech, it amounts to a northern vision for the 1970s. A domestic communications satellite system can fulfill the following needs:

First, provide television coverage in the north and in underdeveloped regions. There is no other economic way this can be done.

Second, provide telephone and message communication service to the north and to underdeveloped regions to bring these areas into the mainstream of Canadian life by high-quality telecommunications.

Third, provide an extension of television service in both languages to all Canadians. This satellite, Mr. Speaker, will broadcast both in French and in English, in short it will speak the languages of Canada.

Fourth, establish a second and supplementary service to the existing east-west microwave network so as to ensure telecommunications from coast to coast.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

This fourfold demand can only be met by a domestic communications satellite system. Because we need such a system, and because we possess the means to build it, this bill will set in motion the construction of the first domestic communication satellite system in the western world. It represents the same kind of confidence in the future which Canada demonstrated shortly after world war II by her decision to develop a nuclear-fuelled power system. As hon. members know, our national scientific and industrial resources are limited. We can succeed only by concentrating our resources in areas where there is a direct national need and a definable prospect of financial and technological return on investment. We can afford neither to bite off more than we can chew, nor, by being too timid, to totally lose our taste for competition. Communication satellites fulfil these qualifications. They represent an opportunity to be grasped and a challenge to be met.

The implications of this convergence of supply and demand have been demonstrated by the interest shown by a number of organizations in the possibility of a domestic communications satellite system. The first such proposal, and the organization deserves credit for its initiative, was made in 1966 by Power Corporation and Niagara Television Corporation. Subsequently, proposals were made by the common carriers, the Trans-Canada Telephone System and Canadian Pacific-Canadian National, and by R.C.A. Victor. The government's own interest was demonstrated by the formation, in 1967, of a special satellite task force headed by Dr. John Chapman who is now an Assistant Deputy Minister in the Department of Communications. The findings of the task force were made public in the government white paper of April, 1968. Its essential recommendation was, and I quote:

> Having carefully considered the relative merits of public and private ownership of satellite communication facilities, the government will propose that a corporation be formed by special statute of parliament to develop, own and operate both the satellites and the earth stations of the system, consistent with relevant international agreements. The government will propose to encourage private participation in the corporation and to this end will initiate discussions with the interested parties. The pattern of ownership needed to maintain effective government control in those matters involving national interest will emerge from these discussions.

This bill incorporates into the law the central recommendation of the white paper. The three groups—government, private industry and the public—will each own a proportion of the system. That proportion of ownership will be reflected in representations on the board of the Satellite Corporation. Without shares there will be no board representation for any party, nor will there be shares without votes nor votes without shares. In other words, there will be no power without financial responsibility and no responsibility without power.

Subsequent to the publication of the white paper, planning for the system has moved ahead, conducted by a special project office with the Department of Communications. During the past nine months continuous and extensive discussions have taken place with all the parties interested: the potential users and participants including the common carriers and C.B.C.; the provinces; other government departments; manufacturing industries. Discussions have also been carried on with authorities in Europe and in the United States and will be carried out with the appropriate international bodies on such matters as frequency allocations. All these discussions have proceeded satisfactorily and I might say that no difficulties have arisen relating to international aspects of the system or to the launching of the satellite. In addition, we have had the benefit of a special financial study conducted by Mr. Robert McIntosh, General Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia and of technical studies by Northern Electric and R.C.A. Victor.

All of these strands have been brought together in this bill. I would like at this point to praise the efforts and the efficiency of the officials of the Communications Department, and in particular those of Gilles Bergeron, formerly head of the satellite project office and now assistant deputy minister in the department. It is thanks to their efforts that the project is not only proceeding on schedule, but at the moment in fact is slightly ahead of schedule. This has happened although the critical paths involved have been taxing in the extreme. The legislation, which as I have said breaks new legal ground, has had to be drafted; simultaneously negotiations of crucial importance to the success of the project have had to be carried on with the principal users and participants; the technical profile of the satellite itself has had to be selected and specifications prepared so that procurement of the spacecraft segment can be initiated next month. The target date for the launching of the satellite is late 1971, with the system due to begin operation early in 1972. This is an exceptionally tight schedule and it permits no slippages. I might add that all of this has been accomplished by the officials of the department at the same time as the Department of Communications itself was in the process of being formed and of acquiring personnel.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, we arrive at the bill itself. The purpose of the bill, and the raison d'être of the corporation it will create, is set out clearly in clause 5 titled "Object of the Company". The preceding and succeeding paragraphs amplify those objectives and provide the means to accomplish them.

Clause 5 reads:

> The objects of the company are to establish satellite telecommunication systems providing, on a commercial basis,—

That is on a profitable basis.

> —telecommunication services between locations in Canada.

This means that the system will be constituted purely on a domestic basis; that it will provide telecommunications services by means of a satellite; and that it does this on a self-sustaining basis—that is what commercial basis means—rather than by government subsidies.

Section 2 of clause 5 reads:

> The company shall utilize, to the extent practicable and consistent with its commercial nature, Canadian research, design and industrial personnel, technology and facilities in research and development, connected with its satellite telecommunication systems and in the design and construction of the systems.

[Translation]

It is therefore our intention, Mr. Speaker, to utilize in this system a Canadian designed and built satellite and associated ground facilities.

The bill gives a detailed description of the structure of the corporation. Our planning has reached the stage where it is possible for me to describe the system in some detail.

From the start we have been faced with a range of alternatives in the type of system we could choose to build. As was said in the House, the cost of the total system—that is of satellite or satellites, launching facilities and ground stations—could range from $65 million to $160 million, depending on whether we built a "compact" or a "Cadillac" system.

Having thoroughly considered these possibilities, we have opted for a "compact" system. Its cost will run from $65 million to $75 million, according to the estimates provided to the department and on the basis of the number and variety of ground stations it is decided to install.

That round sum will be made up of $40 million for the satellite, $6 million for the launcher and about $20 million for the ground segment which comprises a master control station, four regional-type multiple-access transmit-receive stations and some 20 northern television receive stations.

These figures are subject to change. For example, our initial estimate of about 20 northern television stations may be substantially revised upwards, if the current estimates of construction costs are borne out. The space segment of the system consists of a single satellite to be placed on geostationary orbit 23,000 miles above the equator and approximately in line with Winnipeg. The satellite itself will comprise six transponders, each able to transmit either a single broadband television channel or the equivalent of 600 telephone circuits. In the event of failure, either at launch or whilst in orbit, this satellite would be replaced by another of identical dimensions. Depending on the growth of demand, a second six-channel satellite could be launched and placed in orbit alongside the first.

The reason why we have chosen a "compact" system is that it meets all our needs at a price we can afford, both as a nation and as a satellite corporation.

The "Cadillac" system would have involved the construction of three satellites, two in orbit with the third in reserve on the ground. It would have also involved the immediate construction of an extensive terrestrial system, instead of, as we now plan, building up that system over the years to match demand. A "Cadillac" system would have provided high reliability in the event of satellite failure and freedom from noise interference during those times when the satellite is in conjunction with the sun and earth. These are marginal benefits which come at too high a price. In addition the two orbiting satellites would have provided a total of 12 television channels, far in excess of anticipated need.

This same consideration of excess capacity has led us to reject a proposal by Comsat that Canada purchase one of the Intelsat-IV series of satellites. The proposed price was 2 per cent cheaper than for a Canadian-built satellite and launcher. For that sum we would have secured a 12-channel satellite, which could have constituted capacity far in excess of our needs. It was a case of things not coming cheaper by the dozen.

A further consideration in the choice of satellite, Mr. Speaker, is the obvious one that a Canadian-built satellite will add significantly to our scientific and industrial capacity and bring with it, significant opportunities for Canadian firms to secure export orders on similar communications systems being implemented in other countries.

During the clause-by-clause study in committee I will be glad to provide other technical and economic details as required by hon. members.

● (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

The system I have just described will be operated by the satellite corporation to be created by Bill C-184. Once the corporation itself is in full operation, and the scheduled date for this is September, 1969—between the passage of this legislation and the appointment of permanent officers for the corporation there will be a provisional board of directors as set out in clause 4—the corporation itself will develop the system, subject to such policy considerations as those set out in clause 5(2) and by the requirement for government approval of such initiatives as the construction of new ground stations as set out in clauses 8(1) and 8(2). The corporation therefore, once the system is in operation, will make decisions on expansion, whether of the terrestrial system or the space segment. Given the rapid and often unpredictable rate of expansion of the communications industry, it is impossible at this point to precisely predict the date at which the space segment of the domestic communications satellite system might need to expanded by the launching of a second six-channel satellite.

However, current discussions indicate the possibility that all six initial channels will be fully occupied, that is rented, when the first satellite goes into operation in 1972. The users would be the Trans-Canada Telephone System, in CN/CP and the C.B.C. At a minimum, four channels would be rented by this date with the full six occupied by 1975. However, it is possible, and indeed we are most hopeful, that all six channels will be rented by 1972 and this would naturally have a significant effect upon the profitability of the corporation.

Profitability is a determinate of the structure of the corporation. The common carriers have proposed that they alone construct and operate the system. The government, acting on the recommendations of the white paper, has rejected that proposal. The project serves a national purpose. Outer space, carrying with it major considerations of international policy, should not, in the government's judgment, become the preserve of a privately-owned corporation.

The other alternative, at the other end of the spectrum, is a wholly government-owned enterprise. The government could, at the taxpayers' expense, build and operate the system by itself. We have rejected this alternative.

The reason is that the common carriers have acquired an outstanding expertise in the economic development of telecommunications. They claim, and with ample justification, that Canada's telecommunications system ranks as one of the most efficient in the world. It would, in my view, be as unwise as it would be impractical to ignore the contribution which private industry can make to such a system.

A third possibility, which has been proposed, is that barring sole ownership by the common carriers the system should be restricted to a joint partnership of common carriers and government, with the public excluded. This possibility we have also rejected. The public are the final users of the system and will pay for it either directly through rates or indirectly through taxes. Public equity in a corporation initiated by the government fulfils the ideal of public participation in ventures undertaken in the name of the public; it fulfils also the urgent need for a broader selection of Canadian-owned companies available to Canadian investors. Finally, public participation will ensure accountability to the public at large rather than merely to those parties directly interested in the venture.

As hon. members will have noted, the bill does not specify the respective share ownership to be allocated to each of the three groups involved, that is government, common carriers, and public. The reason is that it was not possible, in a legal sense to do so at this time. Discussions with the common carriers are still continuing. Taking the extreme case that the carriers should decide to decline all share ownership, in which event the government and public shares would be proportionately increased, then to have specified in the bill that the share allocated to the carriers must be such and such would render the bill inapplicable.

I can, however, inform hon. members of the principles upon which the proportionate division of ownership will be based. It has been our conclusion throughout that the share ownership of each of the three parties should be approximately equal and that in the case of none of the parties involved should it fall below 30 per cent. Given those determining considerations a logical division might be 33⅓ per cent; 33⅓ per cent and 33⅓ per cent. A tripartite division may differ fractionally from those percentages but will not, I can assure hon. members, vary to any substantial amount.

Further limitations on the distribution of share ownership are set out in Appendix B. Non-residents may not hold more than 20 per cent of the shares allotted to the public sector, that is approximately 7 per cent of the total shares issued by the corporation. No single shareholder in the public sector may hold more than 2½ per cent of the total shares issued by the corporation. This provision is designed to promote the widest possible share ownership while at the same time permitting institutions with a direct interest in the corporation to acquire a measurable share ownership.

An hon. Member: It is six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It has been drawn to the attention of the chair that it is six o'clock. It being six o'clock I now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I have already described the rationale behind the public ownership. The considerations behind ownership by the common carriers deserve a more extended explanation. Aside from their expertise in telecommunications, the common carriers will be the principal users of the system. They will rent its services to retail to their own customers. The corporation will operate as a complement, not as a competitor, to the common carriers. Except in the instances of the C.B.C. and of certain possible purchasers of a complete, undivided television channel on a sustaining basis, the sole customers of the corporation will be the common carriers.

The common carriers who will be eligible for share ownership in the corporation are listed in schedule A of the bill. One change in the list is required. Some hon. members, and most certainly those from the province involved, will have noted the absence of the Island Telephone Company. The reason is that only those eligible common carriers who expressed an interest in ownership were initially listed in schedule A. Subsequent discussions with Island Telephone have clarified this point, and at the appropriate stage in committee I will move the necessary amendment with pleasure. A parallel amendment will be required to accommodate the recent change in name of Saskatchewan Government Telephones to Saskatchewan Telecommunications. A means to ensure any other such needed changes in future is provided by clause 43.

At this point I should mention that I will, in committee, be moving a number of other amendments. For one of them I must apologize to hon. members. In the first line of clause 12(4)(c) there is a mis-translation from the French to the English text which was overlooked in proof-reading. The words "if any", after the phrase "shall fix the number of directors", should be deleted and will be deleted by an appropriate amendment. I will also place before the committee a number of other amendments, making these available to the committee at the start of its hearings. None of these amendments concern matters of substance and none affect any of the remarks I have made in this speech. They involve, however, particular aspects of the corporation's affairs where it appears the existing wording either lacks clarity or is susceptible of an interpretation other than that intended.

Such important but fine legal points can perhaps be most effectively discussed at the committee stage. My purpose here is to convey to hon. members as explicitly as I can the implications and content of the legislation they are being asked to approve. I have discussed ownership by the public and common carriers. I would like now to turn to that of the government. The project, as I have said, is one of national interest and national concern. It also involves important international considerations. All these factors compel a significant government involvement; but that involvement should not, in my judgment, be majority ownership. Such a situation would make impossible significant share ownership by the public at large. The interests of the government, however, and also those of the other "block" partners, the common carriers, are protected by clause 33 which requires a two-thirds majority of the total votes before any changes can be made in the objects of the company. This means that either the government or the common carriers, together with any single owner of a single share, can prevent any change in policy by the corporation detrimental to their interests. Together with this justified protection there is, in clause 33, a means provided for the corporation to take advantage of opportunities for expansion that would be in the best interests of all its shareholders, but only, I repeat, if such opportunities should be in the interests of all partners and subject to the receipt of letters patent by parliament.

Protection of the primary interest of the government is also incorporated into a number of other sections of the bill, such as clause 9 which requires ministerial approval of agreements negotiated with foreign bodies. Although, as set out in clause 34, the satellite corporation will be neither an agent of Her Majesty nor a crown corporation, it will be required to table its annual report in parliament.

A final and vital source of protection of national interests will come about through regulation. If the satellite system were in operation today, it would be subject to the provisions of the Radio Act both with respect to technical matters and to the scope of the system itself as it already applies to the terrestrial microwave system. It is our intention, as I have already informed the house, to study present and future telecommunications needs, and on the basis of these studies to recommend a national telecommunications policy and accompanying legislation for both satellite and terrestrial systems.

As I said earlier, the distribution of membership of the board of directors will reflect the distribution of share ownership. Financial commitment and responsibility will be directly linked. During the interim period the corporation will be managed by a provisional board of directors as set out in clause 4. It is considered appropriate that these provisional directors should to a degree reflect the eventual composition of the permanent board of directors.

Before completing this review of the bill, I would like to describe its financial aspects. The amounts of financing which will be required for the initial system will probably be approximately $60 million. This amount is based on the present estimates of the capital cost of the satellite system facilities. Depending on conditions of the capital markets and related factors, it might be possible to raise a portion of the required financing by means of term debt. While there is provision for the issue of preferred shares, it is not envisaged that these will be issued in the foreseeable future. In the circumstances, I cannot provide you with more specific details on the capitalization of the company nor of the exact timing for the necessary financing. However, my own view is that the management of the company will be in a position to proceed with the financing arrangements by the fall of the current year. I also believe that the three groups will participate concurrently. Bridge financing to sustain operations in the meantime will be provided by the government through the Department of Communications.

It will be noted that it is provided in the legislation that the government's participation will be limited to a maximum of $30 million in the shares of the corporation and a maximum of $40 million in loans. It is, of course, not expected that the initial investment by the government will reach the limits I have indicated. These limits were set high enough, however, to enable the government to ensure success of the system.

At the start of this speech I apologized in advance for its length. Having completed it, I again apologize for having taken up so much time of the house. I will be glad to provide further information and to answer specific questions. The legislation, I recognize, is complex and perhaps difficult. It is designed to create a new and important type of partnership between government, the public and private industry, and to do this in a new and vitally important field of telecommunications. Specific interests that are at times competitive have to be reconciled with the national interest; and national interest has in turn to be balanced against the need to ensure an adequate return on investment by the shareholders of the corporation. This legislation, I am confident, achieves these aims.

Once in operation the domestic communications satellite system will constitute a project of which all Canadians will be proud. We will have blazed a trail both in what we are doing and in the way that we are doing it. Above all, it will be a project that will help to knit together more closely this country and to narrow the gap in the differences in living standards between those Canadians who live amid the rigours of the frontier and those who live amid the comforts of the cities. In essence, the domestic communications satellite system will reflect, and will help to fulfil, the substance of confederation.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by extending my congratulations to the minister in his new robes as Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans). I should like to thank him also for his courtesy in providing me with a copy of his speech which I have followed with great care. My colleague on the right says that the minister did not send it by mail because I got it. That is the kind of unkindness that would never come to my mind.

I want to assure the minister that it is my intention to speak briefly. Perhaps this is so because there are things in the Post Office Department to which he should be giving his attention, and I do not want to delay unduly the passage of this legislation. If I were as nasty as the editors of the Winnipeg Free Press and the Oshawa Times, I might suggest it would be a good thing for the Post Office to involve my friend the minister in communications for a while. But I would not go along with that at all.

I want to congratulate the minister in a general way for bringing forward this measure. He is right; it is very important. He is right also that many of us have been asking him about it for a long time. However, I was not quite sure he was right when, with the natural pride of legislative paternity, he suggested that the corporation was ahead of time. I believe in fact that it is a little behind the times. His colleague, the unofficial minister of science, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), declared in March of 1968 that the expectation was that this bill would be ready last fall. To that extent the present minister is running behind the hopeful forecasts of the President of the Treasury Board.

There is much to which one might react in this very interesting speech. I was moved by the minister's concern for the communication needs of the people who live in the remote areas of our country, and the thought went through my mind that in certain remote areas of the country the same minister is quite capable of closing down post offices, telescoping rural deliveries and, thus on terrestrial levels slowing down the process of communications. I was impressed also when he indicated that the proper way to proceed was as he mentioned at page 5 of his statement. He said that we can afford neither to bite off more than we can chew, nor, by being too timid, to totally lose our taste for competition.

At that moment he sounded like a Progressive Conservative—cautious, yet forward looking. I was deeply moved when he spoke about the opportunities which this corporation gave Canadian citizens for investment. I wondered if the Canada Development Corporation, which has taken a bow but never gone up the aisle these many years, was in fact going to emerge in a new form, and that through this opportunity the dreams of his dear friend, Mr. Walter Gordon, would find expression in this particular way. We will see later on, as we hear several more speeches from the throne, whether or not in fact this is to be the case.

I am impressed by some of the figures which the minister has produced. I never thought that he would go for a compact instead of a Cadillac. I hope that this is not short range economy and long range folly. This is an aspect we will have to look into a bit more fully.

I note certain deviations from that stern certainty which characterizes the minister when he describes the future use and the dates of development of the various channels. With regard to the whole bill, I suffered the kind of pangs which do not usually trouble me, and these were procedural ones. I wondered if in fact we were not dealing with a measure which should not be dealt with in the terms of this particular item. We do not have in this parliament a very long record of hybrid bills. The British have such a long tradition, and in fact the standing orders of Westminster have a place for hybrid bills. It would seem to me that we are dealing with something which would fit all the requirements of a hybrid bill or perhaps, since the minister is moving in scientific circles, I should say which would fit within the parameters of a hybrid bill. This bill combines the private and public sectors and might properly be treated in a somewhat different way from that which is ahead of us if this particular stage of the bill carries.

A hybrid bill is a public bill which affects private interests in such a way that if it were a private bill it would, under proper procedure, require preliminary notice to be served on affected parties. This bill has many of the characteristics of a private bill, since it does affect the interests of specific individuals or corporations as distinct from all individuals or corporations of a similar category. If I were a procedural expert like my colleague in front of me I would get off into quite an orbit on this, to use the appropriate terminology tonight. But I do not want to get above my depth, so to speak. However, I am wondering if the minister might consult his advisers in this field, men learned in procedure like the minister from Nova Scotia who is a very able parliamentarian, and reflect upon the value and virtue of regarding this piece of legislation as a hybrid bill. It is clear that what we are setting up is not a public corporation. It is not owned by the Crown on behalf of the public, and therefore it is not a public corporation but rather a private one.

Therefore, some of the procedures followed with regard to private legislation should be considered and conceivably invoked. If this is declared a hybrid bill, of course, the bill would have to be adequately advertised. Second reading would be followed by referral to a special committee of the house or of both houses, and full opportunities would be given to members of the public, the third sector to appear before a special committee.

I do not intend to press this point because I expect to receive an assurance that in the standing committee every opportunity will be given to allow interested people to present their views on this important and, in many ways, unique piece of legislation. I agree with the minister that this is a very complex bill. It is a lengthy bill. It is confusing, and sometimes it is contradictory. I was brought up to appreciate good English rather than legal English and this always places me in difficulty when I start to read the statutes. I find that schedule B is one of the most massive omnibus sections I have ever encountered. It seems that everything which had not been thought of earlier has been dumped into this omnibus schedule. Many of the things I thought lacking in the statute I later found in B. So, it is extremely important that this bill be given close scrutiny in the committee.

It is clear already that one section of the tripartite group is not as happy about things as the minister's speech would lead us to believe. I refer to the common carriers. They were in Ottawa not long ago and I read in one of the great newspapers in the land, the Globe and Mail, that they expressed certain reservations about this bill. I should like to read some of the comments made in an authoritative article written by Terrence Belford on the day following this meeting.

> Trans-Canada Telephone System is not happy with some parts of the federal government's domestic satellite bill... The working of some clauses in the bill and the implications of others, have prompted the system to act.
> System officials have held discussions with the federal Communications Department and have received verbal assurances that some changes may be made.

I was surprised at the limited nature of the changes to which the minister referred tonight. Many things were brought up. One spokesman pointed out that there is no definition of "common carriers"—just a list. Incidentally, I should like to congratulate the minister upon adding the Island Telephone Company, I myself noticed the omission on the first day.

An hon. Member: No causeway, but telephones.

Mr. Macquarrie: With all his faults, the minister is not always wrong, and that was a good move. The report states:

> Mr. Krupski presented the system's view: "We could not really be part owner and be on the board of a company which is in direct competition with us. This has to be made quite clear and it is not in the bill.
> We feel that interpretations should be reflected in words. There is no disagreement in principle, I am sure, but the bill does not reflect the apparent agreement.

So he believes that something which is apparent should become linguistic, and this is not really an unfair suggestion. He ends by saying:

> I'm sure the government will be very co-operative and consider our questions in this matter, but where we go from there I'm not too certain. It depends on what agreements we can reach with the government.

So all is not sweet harmony even at this stage as far as the common carriers are concerned. I hold no brief for the common carriers although the minister, in his other role as Postmaster General, might well associate with that body and learn something from them. As he says, they have established a fine record. They are improving the service and lowering the cost. Whereas he, as Postmaster General—we all know what he is doing. Service is deteriorating and costs are increasing. So perhaps some cross-pollination with those carriers might not be a bad thing. In any event, if the common carriers, experts in this field with whom the minister has had many discussions, are prepared, having seen this legislation, to say, publicly what they obviously have said to the Globe and Mail, I am wondering about the public with whom no consultations have taken place. For this reason I come back to the importance of broadening the area of testimony and consultation in the committee. Again, I suggest that this should be regarded as a hybrid bill.

The potential shareholders will surely have many inquiries to make. For a long time some of us have been asking about the MacIntosh report. Here is a very competent man, an economist, a scholar and a banker, who has looked into this whole question. We expected to read what Dr. MacIntosh thought. Now we find that his report is not to be made available. But, surely, he will come before the committee, and allow Members of Parliament, the public and potential investors to draw upon his incomparable knowledge and thorough research so that all may better understand this important piece of legislation. This is one thing to which I am looking forward. I am very anxious to hear from Dr. MacIntosh partly, perhaps, because I am not at all statisfied by the reasons given for not revealing his report.

Although I planned to make only a cursory set of comments there are some points which come to mind. First, the bill strikes me as one which gives immense authority and power to the government, to the minister. As I read it over, every so often I ran across something like this: "the company shall not, except under the direction of the minister—" do so and so. And when I finally came to the clause setting up the board of directors there seemed very little left for the board to do.

Mr. Speaker, there are many boards of directors of companies operating with great success in this country which would not countenance for a moment the limitations placed upon the board of directors here. In this case, directors are circumscribed in so many ways that it seems they do not have the ordinary discretionary powers usually given. I wonder, too, just what is to be the role of parliament in reference to this company. What will the place of parliament be when the company, like the satellite, is launched? Will there be even the kind of tenuous association we have with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? I was impressed by the statement that it is not to be a Crown corporation. It is to be something different. It is not to be an agent of Her Majesty or a Crown corporation under the meaning of the Financial Administration Act. It is, then, to be something else—something which we must analyse.

I was interested, also, in the potential role of the provincial governments, if any. This satellite company will be involved in the management of an important educational vehicle, if I may use that word. I do not know whether it is quite so simple as the Ministers of Education think. They seem to believe that a satellite is like a blackboard in the sky; nevertheless, it will have educational opportunities and ramifications. Will the provinces feel that this might be an area of functional federalism? Might it appear, as one looks over schedule A and sees the list of approved telecommunications common carriers noting that some of them are in fact owned by provincial governments, that we will have a situation where some provinces get a voice indirectly, or a piece of the control, which is denied other provinces? Are we building in here a source of future irritation and misunderstanding? I think this question should be reflected upon too.

The minister commented that the proportions to be held by each of the three could not be set forth precisely. While I have the greatest respect for his business success and competence, I find myself not quite persuaded that it would not have been wiser to be more precise and definite. The minister indicates there will be a rough range, and that there will not be much deviation therefrom. It would seem not too difficult to declare that a certain percentage will be held by one group and another percentage by the other two.

Surely, it is not impossible to write such a provision into the legislation. Surely, in the discussions with the common carriers some rough calculations must have been made. And surely from those rough calculations it would not be too difficult a step to set out some precise percentage in the legislation.

I have been reading the projected costs, I sometimes felt endlessly over these many months, and the minister has his figures down pretty compactly. I had read nothing before that led me to believe that his figures, even for a compact satellite, were in actuality likely to be realistic. I notice the minister is not taking up the option of a United States built model at the kind of rate that no Canadian automobile purchaser would ever get, namely a better vehicle at a lower price!

I am not saying that I would argue with the minister about that. I know there are advantages, and I think important advantages, especially in the realm of industrial innovation, in putting up our own satellite. But I am wondering—and I got no inkling from the minister's speech—how far we are going with this technological nationalism. Are we going into the field of doing our own launching? I realize people knowledgeable in this field recently suggested this could indeed be done, and perhaps there are also opportunities for industrial innovation in Canada if we do move into that field. I do not want to oversimplify a field that I do not find simple by any means, but perhaps some of the arguments that apply to the vehicle itself might well apply to taking a look also at the launching process.

I am still wondering what the cost is going to be to the Canadian people. Will it be $30 million, or $70 million? What is the involvement of the government of Canada both in control and in cost? This is an important venture. I heard the minister on one occasion liken it to the building of railways, and when he did that he frightened me a little because I know what happened in this country as past governments became involved, voluntarily or otherwise, in the railway building process. I looked back over Hansards of some years ago to read about figures produced by ministers from the same party as the Minister of Communications indicating the involvement of the Canadian government in the building of railways, and these were very, very minor compared with the actual bills which came in some years later.

After all these months of study and consultation, and despite the too frequent areas of flexibility and uncertainty in the minister's speech, I hope that we do know where we are going in this field. I hope this project will not be another Bonaventure or National Centre for the Performing Arts. To have a Canadian satellite is worth a lot. It is worth a lot to stimulate Canada's scientific and technological initiative, and I think the people of Canada are prepared for that. There is a general feeling in the country that this is a move that we should make. But let us have a reasonable degree of confidence that this time the figures are realistic and that we are not heading down a path that will prove far, far more costly than we thought when we entered upon it. Therefore, I appeal to the minister in this whole process not to devaluate the aspect of cost that is involved.

The minister also mentioned the question of majority shareholding. I read in the Ottawa Citizen this afternoon that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) was going to bring this up. I also read what the minister was going to say. However, there is no indication that I was going to say anything, and if this happens to me again I will cut off my subscription! I am not convinced that 51 per cent would not have been a workable, reasonable, indeed proper figure.

I am interested, too, in some of the things the Governor in Council can do under this bill. Indeed, the common carriers have referred to this aspect. The Governor in Council may delete the name of any corporation from schedule A on the ground that the corporation is no longer an approved telecommunications common carrier. However, I can find nothing in the bill that provides any avenue of appeal against such decision. Can these corporations be ticked off as easily as that? Is there a comeback? Clause 44 (4) provides no appeal, either; there could be some pretty high-handed operations here. These are matters on which I want to hear more elucidation.

One aspect of the legislation that disturbed me was the lack of regulatory authority. The minister did touch on that in the latter portion of his speech when he said that if the satellite were in orbit and operating now, the Radio Act would provide the necessary regulations. I wonder what Mr. Pickersgill will say when he reads that. As our legislation stands now, he might have the lingering thought that he has a role to play there too. I think that here the legislation is not as thorough as that which was passed in the Congress of the United States setting up COMSAT. I know we do not have a body quite like the F.C.C. But, I am impressed with the thought the people to the south have given to this matter. Surely, the regulation of a body such as is to be set up is of the utmost importance. We will watch this aspect as well. The silence in the bill on this regulatory aspect has caused me some anxiety which has been alleviated only in a limited way by what the minister said tonight. I am glad he said what he did on this particular aspect. There is much in the bill which makes it look as if the corporation or company—to use that expression—is a business. It is not a crown corporation and not a government department. It is a business. It strikes me that it is too much like a business run by the cabinet or the minister.

If we opt for public ownership, and I presume the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) might be sympathetic to that point of view—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: —well and good. I am not so narrow minded or blinded by historic facts to say that public ownership is always bad. It is not. On the other hand, sometimes it is atrocious. But it we opt for public ownership and public control in this area, why not go in through the front door instead of through these devious regulatory devices which take us in through the back door? Perhaps this mixed economic marriage is a good idea. I confess that I think it is. I think it would be very foolish not to draw, in any joint participation, on the expertise and knowledge as well as concern for advancement which has been shown by the private sector in this field. Yet, I wonder if it would not have been smarter to draw up the terms of the marriage contract more precisely? Too many things in it are not clear and could, in fact, be dangerous. So, I think as this bill is scrutinized it will be in the interests of the country and of our telecommunications advancement, which means a great deal to all of us, to bring in amendments that are a good deal more far reaching than those mentioned by the minister. That, I think, is why we must scrutinize this bill, carefully in committee.

This is a tremendously important piece of legislation, and the minister is quite right in saying that in many ways it is unique. It is too easy to be excited about the glamour of it all, to be carried away by a sort of sophisticated scientific nationalism and to say that we will get something up there, and that is all there is to it. There are too many technological ramifications that we have not examined. Tremendous problems are associated with this kind of economic entity, if I may call it that, and I think the minister will benefit from the views of people in the field. Already he has run afoul of the common carriers, and those problems must be worked out. There are other problems here. I think if he is able to show some degree of flexibility, if we find in committee that there is no heavy-handed partisanship, if people generally recognize that this is a complex area from which we all may benefit immensely and if there is an agreeable attitude toward improvements no matter from what source these suggestions come, then there may emerge a bill which will be worthy of the things this corporation will be charged with directing for years to come.

I share the minister's enthusiasm for our role in the telecommunications field. I agree with him in what he says about the contributions of Canadian men of science. He has some able and most excellent people in his department; they are people who have built up a reputation across this country and beyond this country. There are people in private industry in this field in Canada whose reputation extends far beyond Canada and I think it is wise to have them all working together. No effort ought to be spared to make that working relationship harmonious and meaningful.

At this stage of the bill I will say no more than to express generally my approval of this advance, to wish it well, and to suggest that no effort ought to be spared to bring the greatest improvements possible to this legislation. In this way we may have the very best type of controlling body presiding over our telecommunications satellite, the launching of which will bring a feeling of pride to all of us. We do not want it launched with any spirit of bitterness or any feeling that certain things could have been done better. I hope we will make a concerted effort to transcend partisanship, to transcend bureaucratic empire-building and to make our very best contribution to this most important project.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, ever since word went out that the government of Canada was thinking of establishing a space communications satellite, I have supported that notion enthusiastically. I supported it for many of the reasons the minister enunciated this afternoon and this evening when he spoke in support of the legislation. The minister has told us why we must go ahead with all determination and with all the benefits of our research and available expertise in the setting up of this communication satellite corporation. It is hardly necessary for me to repeat or emphasize what he said. Certainly, it is evident that by establishing a satellite system we shall enable industry across this country to communicate more efficiently and with more sophistication. The satellite will be a tremendous boon to the remote areas of the country and particularly to the northern frontier of Canada. It will also be of service in providing channels of communication between different parts of the country in both Canadian official languages. For all these reasons we support the notion that we should go ahead with the establishment of a communications satellite corporation.

As I said about a month ago, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me important we should want to assist the Canadian scientific community to develop the expertise connected with space, with communication by satellite, and that we should be taking an important step toward giving our scientific community something concrete to work on, something that will give that community an important place in the world.

It is a sad commentary on human history that in the past, whenever there was a surge forward in the development of new technology, it always seemed to be at a time of war. Man's imagination should not be so limited. His capacity for progress should not be so limited that progress can take place at an impressive rate only at a time of war. Here, today, we have an opportunity to do something concrete in the way of giving our best brains a chance to work on a project that will be of benefit to the country for diverse reasons, all of them important, and at the same time assist in the forward movement of technology.

But having listened to the minister say this afternoon that this bill to establish a Canadian communications satellite corporation has profound political and sociological implications, and I certainly agree it has, and having heard him say some three weeks ago when speaking on his estimates that the communications industry is the central nervous system of our society, one can only be utterly amazed with the kind of bill he has asked us to endorse. Two words characterize this legislation. It is a sell-out of the Canadian public interest.

If the minister is correct that what is involved here has profound political and sociological implications, and if the industry involved is the central nervous system of our society, how can he justify putting this corporation under a form of ownership that is hybrid, that is somehow bastardized so that one does not know whether it is public or private or what strange combination of both it may be? Even the minister is not able to tell us exactly in what ratio the public or the common carriers will be represented in the ownership of this corporation, or to what extent shares will be taken up by subscription.

I had great admiration for the minister's actions when he was a provincial minister in Quebec. At that time he said it was important for a province and its people to develop a firm economic base. He spoke in favour of the idea that the steel industry in that province should be given an impetus by the formation of a publicly owned corporation, Sidbec. I am sure he, himself, will recall other instances where he came out in favour of public ownership. But if ever a case could be made for public ownership it can be made for this sector of our society, the communications sector. However, apparently the minister has had to make one of the many political compromises that are necessary and has agreed to sponsor this bill which will give the Canadian public perhaps 30 per cent of the ownership of this corporation that is to be the central nervous system of our society.

The minister will reply that provision is made for the public to enter into ownership by simply buying up shares. He seems to take pride in saying that no single purchaser will be allowed to buy more than 2½ per cent of the shares of the corporation. Presumably the implication is that this will provide for a wide, diffuse ownership, ownership that will not be concentrated in the hands of a few.

But when one pauses to reflect, it does not take one long to see that perhaps 2 per cent of 3 per cent of the Canadian population is all that is involved, and that this provision is of no practical use to 95 per cent of the population. Sometimes I am not sure whether I am a social democrat or one who favours people's capitalism. If it is the idea of people's capitalism that motivates the minister to write in a provision that ownership of shares shall be restricted to 2½ per cent per individual, that is still far from ensuring that there will be wide, diffuse ownership by the general public.

Without fear of exaggerating one can say that the outcome of this legislation will be that approximately 2 per cent to 3 per cent of the Canadian public will derive financial benefit. This will be growth stock. There is no question about that. It is one of the glamor stocks. The minister himself used the word glamorous in reference to the corporation, and 2 per cent to 3 per cent of the Canadian public will benefit at the expense of the general public. It would be far better if this important corporation were established as a publicly owned institution under the aegis of the Crown.

Two or three weeks ago we advanced the proposition that since a role coming under provincial jurisdiction was involved in the field of communications, and since educational television somehow impinges on this whole matter of communications, then for reasons of constitutionality plus better dominion-provincial relations it would be worthwhile to consider the notion that this corporation be established as a publicly owned Crown corporation. Fifty-one per cent of the shares should be owned by the Crown in the right of the federal government, and the balance allocated proportionately and appropriately to the Crown in right of the several provinces. If the minister likes new ideas, and he is the sort of man who does, I believe he would be doing Canadian unity a great tangible service if he would pause and consider this proposition.

If there are some sound logical reasons that this proposition is not feasible, let us hear them. In my opinion, it is inexcusable to place in a position of increased power and privilege the common carriers, the major privately owned corporations, many of whom have exercised influence and power in this country disproportionately for a long time. Let us not pretend we can somehow rely on the process of governmental regulation to protect the public interest. For years I have been suspicious that government regulation was a highly bureaucratic and expensive way to proceed but that sometimes it was necessary if there was no alternative way to protect the public interest. A few weeks ago I had occasion to speak to a man who for a period of many years was an economist with the F.C.C. of the United States, a man whose experience certainly made him qualified to speak. The distinct impression I got from him backed up my suspicion that regulation is an expensive way to proceed and should be avoided if there is an alternative available to protect the public interest. I suggest there is in a case such as this, and that is public ownership.

The way this government has chosen to proceed will be expensive. The government will be sharing the revenues from this corporation with the common carriers who have a vested interest. Their relationship to this corporation will be in the nature of vertical integration because presumably they will lease or rent services from this satellite system and in turn retail the services to their own customers. If that is not vertical integration, then I do not know the meaning of the term. It is vertical integration. I suggest this is a phenomena which we should choose to discourage rather than encourage. So, we are extending to the common carriers, who as I say for a long time have enjoyed economic power and privilege out of proportion in this country, the right to exercise more of that type of power. They will enjoy the net revenues of this corporation. It will be necessary to regulate their participation. This means it will be necessary to hire quite a number of people to staff the regulatory agency. The public taxpayer, in the end, will be the loser.

It seems to me that we might have benefited at least somewhat from the experience in the United States. A few years ago Congress enacted legislation to establish COMSAT which in turn will be a major shareholder in Telesat. I recall distinctly the minister this afternoon saying that communication, in its international aspect, should be owned and controlled by the national government representing the people. I am sure he said something to that effect or very close to it. The fact is, however, that while in some fields of communication the international organizations are owned and controlled by national governments, in the field of telecommunication by satellite the international organization is owned by a giant privately owned organization. We hope the world trend will be away from that position and somehow the necessary changes will be made so that international telecommunication in the future will be owned and controlled by an agency which in turn is owned and controlled by the representatives of the people.

I believe there is a growing body of opinion in the United States that a mistake was made in the first place when ownership of an industry as important as telecommunication by satellite was allowed to be concentrated in the hands of privately owned giants. I should like to mention something about research and development. Because telecommunication by satellite is a new field, obviously there will be a large program of research and development before there is sufficient expertise and technical competence to go ahead with the actual launching. The minister tried to use this as an argument for private ownership. He says there exists in the common carriers in Canada a pool of expertise upon which the government would be foolish to turn its back. No one suggests for a moment that the government should turn its back on expertise wherever it exists in this country. The government has a pool of expertise as well in organizations such as the Defence Research Board and the National Research Council.

Let us not forget this very important point. All the common carriers and some of the other companies in this country such as R.C.A., Northern Electric and Bell Telephone which have developed expertise in this field of communication by satellite have done so oftentimes with the help of public moneys issued by way of grants through the Department of Industry for the purpose of science research. No one is complaining about that. There is a problem, however, in respect of a company which is a subsidiary of a United States parent. When that company obtains grants from the government of Canada to engage in research and then develops expertise or a new technique, a situation may arise. I am sure the minister will not deny that in the past there have been instances where the fruits of the research which has been financed by public money have been siphoned out of Canada through the process of the parent company deciding it would export a particular product or technique to some foreign market. In such a situation the subsidiary operating here, and which has been doing so with Canadian public money, has been frozen out by a policy decided at the central parent headquarters.

What guarantee do we have that a similar situation might not arise in respect of this corporation? Some of the companies which the minister has invited into partnerships in this corporation are either directly or indirectly in liaison with United States corporations in the communications industry. I would be surprised if the Canadian public is not taken for a bit of a ride in so far as research and development with public funds is concerned. Therefore, it would seem to me that the public interest would be better protected if we were to spend money developing the expertise through the medium of a corporation that is financed, owned and controlled by the people of this country, that is a Crown corporation. I do believe, although I have no way of proving it, that if the minister were able to act on his own judgment he would not have proposed legislation such as is contained in Bill C-184.

There is no point in becoming vindictive about this. The minister is a member of the governing team, the cabinet, and as part of the normal process of political compromise I suppose it must be said that the minister is trying to make the best possible arrangement. Let me say that if this were only a small and unimportant matter one need not become indignant about the fact that it is proposed here to offer to private ownership something that should really, in the public interest, be kept under public ownership. This is not something small or unimportant.

In conclusion, I should like to say that what is at stake here is, in the minister's own words, something vital to present and prospective Canadian unity; something vital to the solution to problems which plague confederation today; something vital to the Canadian north; something vital to the frontiers of our country, and certainly something important and of interest to remote settlements from coast to coast whose industries today, as we all know, are dependent on rapid communication.

I cannot disagree for one second with the minister in his statement that this is indeed our central nervous system and that his department is responsible for administering to the needs of this system. Therefore, it is completely unacceptable that this central nervous system should somehow not be controlled by us. I find that rather strange. For that reason I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

> That Bill No. C-184 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to establishing the proposed Telesat Canada as a Crown corporation, with provision for participation therein by the governments of the provinces as well as by the government of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Chair would like to take this amendment under advisement and will render its decision later.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like first to congratulate the minister. In his statement he provided us with many interesting details. I should like to commend him also for introducing this measure in the house so that we may somewhat appraise the policy of the government in this field of such significance for all Canadian people and which provides us with some indications as to what is in the best interests of Canada and the Canadian people in the field of satellite telecommunications.

Unfortunately, upon reading Bill C-184 as introduced by the government, we are somewhat puzzled as to the intentions of the government and the true policies which it intends to pursue in this field.

With regard to the introduction of this bill, if we go over its background, we realize that private enterprise, especially the sector concerned with communications and satellite communications is greatly interested in the establishment of a telecommunications network which could serve Canada as a whole.

Among those who claim to be the promoters of such a project, mention must be made of the Transcanadian Telephone Network which includes the common carriers mentioned in Schedule A of the bill. To those telephone service carriers engaged at the present time in telecommunications, we should also add the CN-CP telecommunications, a joint concern of both railway networks. The reasons which prompted those carriers to establish a Canadian satellite telecommunications system are set out in a brief which was presented in May 1967. The main reasons for promoting the development of such a network were to improve the ground communications system in Canada, so as to provide more services to all parts of Canada in fields of television, radio, telephone and the transmission of computer data. All those common carriers claim to be most suitable to build, develop and own ground facilities. They are also ready to take upon themselves the responsibility of the "space" aspect of the program. They claim to possess everything that is required in the administrative, financial and technological fields in order to carry out successfully such a project.

In that first brief, the above-mentioned common carriers add the following:

> Just as they have done as regards the other components of the Canadian integrated communications system, the telecommunications common carriers are ready to finance the building of a satellite communication system and to operate it under government administration.

In July 1967, the National Research Council of Canada, taking into account the Special Study No. 1 of the Science secretariat, better known under the name of "Chapman Report", called for the drawing up and the carrying out of an overall space program for all Canada, and the appointment of a board of directors, the members of which would be selected from industry, the universities and the public service of Canada. The Council was advocating in a way the creation of a corporation or a body responsible to a minister appointed by the Crown.

It was in March 1968 that the former Minister of Industry and Commerce (Mr. Drury) announced the government's intentions in the white paper entitled "A domestic satellite communication system for Canada".

The white paper came to the conclusion that it was necessary to create a satellite telecommunication system, since it was the most economical, in order to serve all the Canadian people.

The Canadian government also stated that all things being considered, it was advisable that it should take part in the creation of a corporation that would build, own and operate the satellites as well as the ground facilities of such a system. It also invited private enterprise to participate in the establishment and operation of such a corporation.

Following the presentation of that white paper, the Canadian telephone system and the CN-CP Telecommunications presented new "Considerations and Recommendations". In rather plain language, the brief described their resources and competence and added that such a system would perhaps never be economic.

On the other hand, the brief added that it would be necessary to create an integrated system "without using public funds."

Such are the misgivings and the objections of the telecommunications common carriers. They say on one hand, that the system can never be efficient and, on the other hand, that they are not in favour of committing public funds to the creation and to the operation of this system.

However, the authors of the brief accepted the invitation of the government and finally accepted the government co-operation in a domestic enterprise of satellite telecommunications, in order to protect the public interest and to co-ordinate the international relations concerning such a system. Finally, they say that the corporation for telecommunications by satellite should be jointly owned, according to the member of shares and that the telecommuniction companies should participate fully with the government in the ownership of the Corporation.

It is this last aspect of the question set out at length but not very clearly in Bill C-184 I should like to deal with in the few minutes remaining to me, because it seems to us that this is really an essential question, that is, the ownership of such a system, the role of the government, that of the companies, as well as the role of the approved telecommunications common carriers listed in Schedule A.

Does the Canadian government or the Finance Minister (Mr. Benson) wish to acquire and to hold the majority of the shares of the Corporation? What will be the participation of the agent corporations? What will be the part of the shares which will be developed to the approved telecommunication common carriers? Those are the questions which are unanswered in the bill now under study.

Other important questions are raised as to the membership of the board of directors of the Corporation.

Section 13 provides that:

> —any Canadian citizen ordinarily resident in Canada is qualified to be a director of the company elected by the approved telecommunications common carriers who are holders of common shares of the company—

If he is not an officer or director of an approved telecommunications common carrier.

As for the board of directors, who are the the president and the vice-president or vice-presidents, it is specifically stated that these can be neither a director of the company or a shareholder of an approved telecommunications common carrier.

But to what extent do the shareholders of these approved telecommunications common carriers have the right to hold shares in the proposed telecommunication corporation? How can we be sure that the percentages proposed by the minister will actually be respected with regard to the participation of the federal government, of the approved telecommunications common carriers and of the public?

I ask all those questions for the following reasons: several approved common carriers, the names of which are listed in Schedule A, are owned and controlled by foreign interests. Now, it is possible that by purchasing shares in the Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite, they might finally end up, if not by controlling the system, at least by impeding its activities, as is the case with the International Telephone and Telegraph, in the COMSAT, in the United States.

For instance, the British Columbia Telephone Company is under the control of the Anglo-Canadian Telephone who holds 51.1 per cent of the common shares. On the other hand, the Anglo-Canadian Telephone is controlled by the General Telephone & Electronics, from New York, which owns 82.3 per cent of the shares belonging to the Anglo-Canadian Telephone.

Moreover, the Quebec-Telephone Company is under the control of the Anglo-Canadian Telephone which holds 53.07 per cent of the shares, since July 1966.

I also want to point out that another common carrier, the RCA Victor in Montreal, which has submitted to the government a brief entitled "A Canadian satellite which will meet the needs of Canada in the field of domestic communications", is also a concern entirely controlled by RCA of America.

There are many other questions concerning the technical aspects and the impact of the system. For instance, the minister told us in his statement, that there will be channels for French language stations and other channels for English language stations. Will there be other channels available for educational programs? Did the government think of selecting a channel for the Quebec government for the purpose of educational programs? It should be kept in mind that education is the responsibility of the provinces and that the latter should have on their own territory the required facilities, for educational programs.

We also want to know if the Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite intends to compete with private enterprise in the field of telecommunications, of commercial advertising, for instance, as COMSAT did in the United States.

Other questions remain unanswered with regard to the cost of the facilities to be built, with regard to the satellite itself as well as with the ground facilities. Have consultations been held between the government and the transcanadian telephone network companies with regard to costs and estimates? Is it true that, contrary to what is being claimed with regard to the transmission of television programs between Europe and America, it would be preferable to install a cable instead of launching a satellite?

Here is what one could read in the Congressional Quarterly dated March 15, 1968 in this connection, and I quote:

> Although no telecommunication enterprise is opposed to the construction of a satellite in itself, they claim that it is far more important to maintain a diversity of communications through improved cables and ground communications technology.
> The cable advocates challenge the COMSAT argument to the effect that satellites are less costly than cables. In a letter addressed to the Federal Communications Commission, International Telephone & Telegraph Communications state that the total cost of a cable between the United States and Europe would amount to some $260 million over a period of 25 years, whereas the investments in Intelstat IV, including related ground facilities, would cost $1.2 billions over a period of only 7 years.

In addition, the supporters of cable systems are also of the opinion, based on their experiences, that satellites do not perform as well as cables in the transmission of telephone conversations. For instance, with a satellite located 22,000 miles above the earth, there is a time lapse of 0.6 second between voice emission and reception. Although this is of no consequence in the reception of television programs, it is said that this delay of $\frac{3}{5}$ths of a second in the transmission of telephone conversations overseas is most annoying.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the few observations I wanted to make, and questions on which I should like the government to give us some information when this bill is studied in committee.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding further with the consideration of this bill, I should like to point out that a short while ago an amendment was proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer). The Chair has some doubt whether it is in order. I wonder, therefore, whether at this point some hon. members might enlighten the Chair on whether the amendment should be accepted. I might say that the Chair feels it is not, properly speaking, a reasoned amendment, which is the only guise under which this type of amendment could be moved and accepted. The hon. member for Selkirk might want to indicate to the Chair whether in his view this type of amendment ought to be accepted at this time.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): As Your Honour knows so well by now, I am not an expert on procedural matters. However, this amendment was drafted after considerable consultation. It was felt that it was in the nature of a reasoned amendment in that it was proposing to refer the subject matter of the bill for further consideration. It is my understanding that at this stage of the proceedings on the bill it is not possible to offer amendments on any of the specifics but rather to offer amendments having to do only with the essence of the bill. I submit that this is what we attempted to do, and quite frankly I await Your Honour's ruling with interest.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no further comments on the point, I believe that a ruling should be made at this time. As I indicated a moment ago, I have serious doubts as to the acceptability of this amendment from the procedural standpoint. The hon. member himself has said that this amendment purports to be a reasoned amendment. May's seventeenth edition, at page 527, lists the conditions for a reasoned amendment and, in particular, paragraph (1) refers to the fact that such an amendment would have to be declaratory of a principle in opposition to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the bill. I think that the amendment proposed by the hon. member does not follow this requirement. It appears that the amendment as proposed is not declaratory of a principle but rather proposes an alternative scheme. It is, in my view, in the form of a substantive motion which would have to be moved with the usual notice. In view of the circumstances, I doubt very much that the amendment can be accepted. The hon. member might give the matter some thought. The debate will proceed, and there may be an occasion later on to move another amendment which might perhaps conform a little more to my interpretation of a reasoned amendment.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure, tonight, to make a few remarks, following the introduction by my colleague, the hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans), of a bill establishing a corporation for telecommunication which will be called "Telesat Canada".

First of all, I must say that the establishment in Canada of that corporation and of an adequate satellite telecommunication system is extremely important for the development of northern Canada. In recent years, the officials of my department as well as my predecessor, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), have followed such development very closely and have participated in the most efficient way in the achievement of that important project in the field of communications in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we know that as minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I am particularly responsible for those people who live in the northernmost parts of Canada and that the role of telecommunications are of the utmost importance in this regard. In fact, on several occasions, when I was touring the North, I have been able to see how painful the problem of isolation can be for the people of those areas, specially for those technicians who came there from the South these last few years to help develop those areas and the abundant natural resources found there.

In the North, communications are very important for the population, because this telecommunications system will provide the people living in these isolated areas with a better education system. This new communications system will achieve a bringing together of the various communities of the North by giving them the necessary information on what is happening in the Eastern as well as in the Western Arctic regions.

For example, in the Northwest Territories, between the land of Baffin and the northern most tip of the Yukon, the distance is greater than that between the city of Halifax and the European continent. I think that the creation of a telecommunications system will thus be of the utmost importance for the transmission of information to the people of the North.

Another important factor so far as those isolated people are concerned must be taken into consideration: it will give them a new means of recreation. In the South, we have enjoyed the advantage of television for a number of years, but unfortunately this communications system does not exist or is still in is infancy in the North at the present time. The main cities, such as Yellowknife, Whitehorse, and a few others, are close enough to the Alberta or British Columbia borders and can enjoy television occasionally. We are very happy to see that with the putting into orbit of this satellite, this means of recreation will reach not only the white people of the North, but also the Eskimos, the Indians, and the Métis.

There remains an element, Mr. Speaker, which is of great importance for the development of the North: I am thinking of industrial development.

During the last few months, and especially since I have been holding this portfolio, I made eight trips in the North and I realized the difficulties faced by financiers because of communications problems.

For instance, an industry pointed out to me that communications between its mining establishment and Whitehorse were completely inadequate and that it had to spend large sums of money to make up for deficient communications. Moreover, it hoped that a telecommunications system could be established to serve the whole population more adequately.

In some cases, such communications would greatly promote what will be, we think, the most important oil development in Canada.

Hon. members know that a few months ago, an oil-field called Prudhoe Bay was discovered on the northern slope of Alaska, and we have every reason to believe that it is the most important discovery of oil made in America during the last 25 years. The reserves of this geological formation is estimated at about 40 billion barrels of oil, which would be equal to all the known reserves in America at the present time.

As we know that this geological deposit extends to the Northwest Territories, and that there are also very important geological deposits in the Arctic islands, such a communications system will greatly promote the planning of development in the North, because exchanges, discoveries or problems will be known at the same time in the various communities and thus a great deal of money could be saved because telecommunications will make exchanges easy.

Presently, in the Canadian North, the demand is certainly too high in the field of telecommunications to be met by the present system, and I am convinced that the inhabitants of the Northwest Territories will greet with a great deal of satisfaction the establishment of this Corporation, which will contribute to the improvement of living conditions in this area.

The problem of communications in the North has always been a very important one. Over the last few years we have taken a particular interest in technological communications. We have made a great deal of progress in the field of transportation with the use of aircraft and the building of new roads; and for the last few months, there have been indications that great progress will be made in the field of sea transportation with the projects we have launched. I refer specifically to the Alexbow project, which will develop a new technique to break ice in the North, and to the SS Manhattan project, launched by private industry but to which the Canadian government is closely associated.

It will in fact only be possible to make use of those technological communications if there is also a system of electronic communications. As a matter of fact, one of the great advantages, as I said earlier, of this electronic communication system the Minister of Communications is proposing is that it will contribute to a great extent to the development of television and telephone.

This development will also be useful in that it will bind the North together. Over the last few years, we have succeeded in bringing the North together thanks to aviation. However, this is a rather costly method and we have found out that it is generally officials or industrialists who use airplanes. With an electronic communication system, on the other hand, we shall be able to unite the North, not only as far as its economic development is concerned but also as far as its cultural and social development is concerned.

An adequate electronic communications system in the North will enable the people who live there, the Eskimos and the Indians in particular, to take part in the Canadian life. A few years ago, we granted them Canadian citizenship, but to enjoy this privilege, one must obtain the required information, and thus take part in the development of Canadian life.

Therefore, through a new system of telecommunication, Eskimos and Indians will be able to participate in the Canadian way of life and learn about every aspect of the economic, social and cultural life in Canada. I am sure the people, especially the natives in the North, will be most happy to look forward to the possibility of enjoying radio and television at home.

Another very important and concrete aspect of that new telecommunications system is that it will allow the industrious workers who head for the North and the resources to be developed there, to find life a little easier.

Such modern means, I believe, will enable us to attract the required technicians if we cannot find them on the spot, and to build communities with a new sense of purpose. In fact, while working towards the development of the northernmost areas in America, people will not suffer from isolation and will even be in a position to take part in all aspects of Canadian life.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to congratulate my colleague the Minister of Communications for having proceeded quickly in that field. It has tremendous importance for Northern Canada, for its inhabitants, and especially for the Eskimos and the Indians. For the first time in their whole life, once that system is established, those people will really be in a position to communicate with the other Canadian citizens and to take part in all aspects of life available to us in the South.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, even if the new telecommunications system does not concern my department directly, I must say that it will help unite our whole country through an exchange of communications in both official languages.

If we do experience problems in Canada at the present time, the reason is certainly a lack of communication. Many communities have suffered from a lack of communication with the centre of the country. I refer in particular to minority groups outside Quebec whose mother tongue is French and which have always felt isolated because they could not establish communication with most French-speaking Canadians.

For my part, I had an opportunity to meet many of them. In fact, some members of my family lived in Western Canada and, since means of communications were lacking, they were precluded from keeping some values to which they were devoted, for instance, their own cultural identity. This is why I say that this new telecommunications system will enable French-speaking Canadians throught the country to unite and will give them a sense of participation to that entity which is our country. It is worthwhile to build it. But it is also important to set it up on modern bases and I am sure that this new telecommunications system will enable each Canadian region to understand one another better, to know themselves better and to build a society different from that of our Southern neighbours which shall prove to all nations of the world that it is possible to live in unity while being genuinely different.

[English]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): It is very rare, Mr. Speaker, for one minister to wander into the preserve of another, but in the last few minutes the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) has done just that to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans). Since communications are what they are nowadays, that is, telephone and telegraph, not mail, we know the reason. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is trying to wipe away the sins he committed in Whitehorse only a few days ago. It provides an interesting footnote to the story of the north, a region which can apparently survive anything, including this government.

I hope the Minister of Communications will give us some guarantee when he closes the debate on the second reading of this measure; I trust he will not resort to the powers given him under clause 6 (1) (b) of this legislation where it is stated that the minister shall direct "suitable areas for the launching of satellites."

Knowing the luck he has enjoyed with the Post Office, I fear that if he ever pushes the button on a satellite going into space it will make a short curve, swerve back to earth and perhaps get us in trouble with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. On second thoughts, my fears are quelled, because I understand the satellites are not to be launched until 1972 a year in which an important electoral event will take place, and I suspect my hon. friend from Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) will be pushing the button to send those satellites aloft. And, as we all know, the hon. member for Hillsborough is a straight shooter.

Mr. Basford: Dreamer.

Mr. McCleave: We have a unique type of bill before us, one which my hon. friend from Hillsborough referred to as a hybrid bill, that is, a measure somewhere between what we call a public bill and a private bill. It sets up a unique partnership, a partnership between government, the communications industry and the people on a one-third one-third one-third basis, as the minister has said.

I find nothing abhorrent about that proposition. It is fitting that a new approach be taken when dealing with a flexible and fast developing industry such as communications. I should like to point out that the Canadian communications industry is probably the first in the world; at least it is not surpassed by that of any other country, though it may be equalled by that of our neighbour to the south. I hope that no measure we pass in this parliament will hurt an industry which is well established, which has never had to call upon any government for subsidy or subvention as far as I know, which has managed to pay its way and keep well in the forefront of technological change, and which has managed to give good service to the people of Canada while at the same time keeping down charges to its customers. As I say, I hope nothing we do will inhibit the progress of the communications industry in Canada. As a partner that industry should be welcomed into any venture. I hope we can, through government, bring the same abilities to that partnership as they will bring to us.

A few days ago the president of Bell Canada, Robert C. Scrivener, spoke to the Canadian Industrial Management Association, Manitoba division, in Winnipeg, and I should like to put on the record one of the points he made which is well worth noting:

> I would particularly wish to refer to two cases where telecommunications are part of the government postal system—Great Britain and France—as examples of high cost and poor service. I will say that Great Britain has recognized this, and is in the throes of getting its telecommunications completely separated from its post offices. Postal service can't be made better by making telecommunications service worse.
> As for comparative costs, using the average wage paid in manufacturing as the unit of measurement, it takes fewer hours of work to pay for one month's telephone service in Canada than anywhere else. The figure for Canada is two hours, for Great Britain four and one half hours and for France 16 hours. In Canada, telephone users pay long distance tolls on a smaller proportion of the calls they make than is the case in any other major country in the world.

I mention these points because I think it is a matter of welcoming, as a partner, a very successful industry indeed. It is a question of welcoming people who do not need policing in what they set out to do, people who have spent enormous sums of money on the technology that is so much a part of the communications scene. I hope our attitude toward them will not be one of regulation but one of co-operation and helpfulness.

This unique partnership does carry with it some elements that I would particularly like to study in committee. I think some provinces and some communications companies are concerned that entry into this new venture may be the thin end of the wedge as far as some form of federal control over their operations is concerned. I hope this will not be the case and that the evidence we will hear will prove it not to be the case.

Secondly, I am concerned and would like more information from the minister on the proposed method of selling shares in the Telesat Corporation to the public at large. I hope this will be done in such a way that everybody will find it possible to participate in the ownership of this new corporation; that it will not be restricted simply to those people who can plunk down large sums of money. If the experience of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation is borne out in this field—and I think it will be—this should be a money maker for the government, for the communications companies and for the public who are shareholders. I also hope that in committee the minister will tell us how their one third of the shares will be divided amongst the communications companies.

The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), in a very thoughtful speech, made some points that I should like to echo and re-emphasize. The question of the dealings among the three partners, the question of the fine print, statutory regulations and the like, all have to be explored. As I have said, communications is the most rapidly changing factor in our rapidly changing times, so it is important that we consider this legislation and consider it well. I myself can visualize the day when satellites in the sky will make obsolete the land lines that are so much a part of our communications industry today. Satellites of such sophistication will be perfected that they will be able to transmit directly to radio and television receivers, even to telephones, without the need for an earth station to intercept signals and amplify them.

The final point I should like to make is that there is an advantage in the government being in this partnership. I do not share the views of those who would make it either entirely publicly owned or set up a crown corporation. Similarly, I do not agree with those who would swing the other way and make it entirely a matter for the communications companies themselves. I think there is a good place for government here. I can see the advantage, for example, of the government's being able to deal more effectively with the problems of interference with the operation of satellites or being able to deal with the problems of electronic garbage cluttering up signals to and from these satellites perched 23,000 miles above the equator. I was almost going to say perched "horizontally up" from Winnipeg, since if you draw a tangential line from the North Pole above Winnipeg you would probably hit this little satellite spang on its metallic casing. "Horizontally up" is a phrase that has been added to the English language during our deliberations over recent days.

In any event, I share the enthusiasm of our communications people as to what this technology is going to bring about. I also share the enthusiasm of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) about what the satellite will be able to do in the way of removing some of the spartan elements of life in northern Canada, and what it will do to bring the two languages of Canada and our great dual culture to all of our people. For these reasons, I support the motion for second reading and reference to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order; it being ten o'clock, the house will now proceed to the questions on the adjournment motion.

[Mr. McCleave.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TERMINATION OF PROGRAM "DON MESSER'S JUBILEE"

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, out of orbit and now back on earth, may I say that a few days ago the C.B.C. released its fall and winter schedule of television programs. Most of the programs were renewed but Don Messer and his Islanders were not included in that schedule.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McCleave: Having checked with C.B.C. officials in Halifax and other sources I find that the decision, or lack of decision, reposes in the Toronto offices of the C.B.C. What has taken place, sir, for those who are familiar with the inner workings of radio and television, seems very much like the kiss of death for a program that has been good and popular fare for several millions of Canadians over the past decade. I am speaking tonight on this matter because I can sense the flap of the wings of the culture vultures in Toronto and I want to drive them back to their roost before they do in a very fine piece of entertainment. Recently the Toronto group took a perfectly good Saturday program entitled "Comedy Cafe", which I thought excellent, and replaced it with a big brass band from Toronto. Now, I have nothing against big brass bands from Toronto, not even Saturday night; but I thought the Montreal production of "Comedy Cafe" was a great program. I thought particularly that the skit involving an English speaking wife and a French speaking husband showed the problems they encountered in their marriage and was a good way of demonstrating to Canadians the problems that we, in more grandiose but less humorous terms, must deal with when considering matters of national unity.

This appetite on the part of Toronto personages for producing shows in Toronto and not producing them in Montreal, Halifax or Vancouver is voracious and ought to be checked. We cannot doubt the popularity of the Messer group. I recall on July 1, 1967, when the Messer group was touring Canada, it came here and presided in the gallery. The galleries were packed that day and Charlie, Don and other people of the Messer group were up there watching our performance. I was talking to them outside when a very distinguished political personage came to talk to Charlie Chamberlain. An old lady who was outside came to see the line-up and said, "Who is that person talking to Charlie Chamberlain?" I will not reveal the identity of that political personage except to say he was a great ornament of the party opposite.

Sir, there is a remedy to what is happening. If people want to see the Messer show continue they ought to walk to the nearest C.B.C. station or talk to the nearest C.B.C. director or vice president about it. They might get on the telephone to the C.B.C. or, at the worst, mail letters to the C.B.C.

I have known the Messer group for a long time and there is not a swollen head among them. They are a level headed, folksy, good group of people and I say to the plain folk of Canada that if you want the Messer show to continue the thing to do is to show the C.B.C. that you want it to continue. We must show the C.B.C. we want the program to return in the fall and I suggest the campaign for that should start right now.

Mr. Macquarrie: Good for you, Bob.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I suppose all good things must come to an end, even the stirring appeal of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). The C.B.C. advises me that the Don Messer show indeed will go the way of Juliette and will not be renewed next fall. I must say that the plain folk on this side of this house are as shocked by the announcement as is the hon. member. The C.B.C. offers some solace in advising that the replacement for the Messer show will be "Singalong Jubilee" originating in Halifax.

I would like the hon. member to withdraw the suggestion that the villians of this piece in Toronto are trying to take something away from Halifax. On the contrary they seem to be trying to inject new life into Halifax because they advise me that the purpose of this change of programming is to provide that time slot with a somewhat younger look and orientation. They tell me that they recognize the great contribution made by the Don Messer program over the years, and they hope that the new program "Singalong Jubilee" will inspire the same kind of support and approval that the hon. member has expressed for that show, which has drawn so many listeners from so many parts of Canada down through the years.

WOODS REPORT—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the question period this afternoon I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) if the Woods report and the government's white paper thereon might soon be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. His initial answer was that this would be done as soon as possible, but when I asked him if we could hope that it might be done during the month of April I believe his reply was to the effect that he did not know.

I posted this question for tonight's late show because I confess to the minister that I am disappointed that it is taking so long to get the Woods report to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I believe that in expressing my disappointment I am expressing the disappointments of members of all parties in this house, and certainly the disappointment of veterans across this country.

The Woods report was a very important document. It took some two and a half years to prepare. It was finally tabled in the House of Commons on March 26, 1968, over a year ago. The then minister of veterans affairs promised that consideration would be given to it as early as possible, and the present Minister of Veterans Affairs on September 13, 1968, as recorded in Hansard at page 24, said clearly that the Woods report would be referred to the standing committee as soon as possible so that the opinions of that committee might be given to the government. The minister confirmed that position on September 30, 1968, as recorded in Hansard at page 564.

If my research is correct it was not until February 3, 1969, that the minister altered the position and said that no action would be taken to refer the Woods report to the standing committee until a government white paper was also ready so that it too might be referred to that same committee. Several times since then he has confirmed this secondary position that the committee cannot study this matter until it has the government white paper.

This is certainly giving the veterans' organizations and the veterans who are members of those organizations cause for very real concern. They feel that the delay is becoming far too lengthy. I would point out that the National Council of Veterans Associations in Canada had its brief ready under date of November 26, 1968. I also point out that the National Veterans Organizations of Canada, including the Royal Canadian Legion and other bodies, prepared a joint statement, copies of which were sent to all of us in this house on February 21, 1969, and also that the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada submitted their statement to us under date of March 21, 1969.

These various organizations for a long time have been ready and most anxious to appear before the committee. They have all recognized the great importance of the Woods report. They have emphasized that its many recommendations meet with their approval and that they would like to see them implemented. In fact, I think there are only one or two in respect of which there is any doubt at all. Special attention has been called to four important areas. Perhaps I might mention them. There is the question of the Hong Kong veterans and their dependants; the question of pensioners suffering from multiple disabilities; the need to establish an adequate basic pension and the need for the appointment of a pension appeal board.

As the time involved in getting this matter before the committee has dragged on some veterans' organizations have begun to wonder whether they should have accepted the idea of waiting for a white paper. Mr. G. K. Langford, Chairman of the National Council of Veterans Associations of Canada, wrote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 18, 1969, objecting to the fact that the veterans were having to wait for a government white paper. Indeed, that council feels that in so doing a limiting effect is being placed upon the committee itself. I shall not take the time to go into the pros and cons of that part of the contention, but it does seem to me to be most disappointing that this delay is being extended the way it is. One gets the awful feeling that month upon month can run to the end of the session and that there may not be any action taken. This would be a disgrace, but any lists I have seen of legislation to be dealt with at this session do not include the prospect of Woods report recommendations being acted on, for the obvious reason that the whole matter has not yet gone to the committee.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I make an earnest plea to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) to get this matter to the committee soon. Some of us are concerned and disappointed that the Woods report, with all the good that is in it, does not include matters dealing with the War Veterans Allowance Act. We have asked that such matters also be referred. We are afraid that since it takes this long to get something done about the Pension Act, it may take even longer to get something done about the War Veterans Allowance Act. If that is what happens, the veterans across the country will feel they have been forgotten. I know the minister can tell me that on March 17, as recorded at page 6726 of Hansard, he said clearly that the Woods report has not been forgotten. At that time he referred to the time spent on the preparation of the recommendations and the question of the cost. I have no doubt that is the reason for the delay, the old question of cost.

The fact of the matter, however, is that the veterans of this country have a claim on us, and they have the right to expect their case not to be delayed longer. I plead with the minister as urgently as I can to get the question of the Woods report, together with the War Veterans Allowance Act and other matters which concern veterans, before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs as soon as possible. I hope he will yet find it possible to get that done before the month of April is over.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to express my appreciation of the interest of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in veterans affairs in general and with the Woods committee report in particular. I know he is somewhat disappointed but I would ask him not to lose heart. His patience will be rewarded. As he said himself it took two and a half years to make the recommendations. Surely, if it took that long just to prepare the recommendations this is an indication of why it takes some time to bring these recommendations to fruition. My department has been quite busy reviewing the report. A committee formed of officials from the Department of Veterans Affairs and other departments has held over 70 meetings to study the Woods committee report, how much the implementation of the recommendations would cost and what recommendations would be in the best interests of the veterans.

A first draft of the white paper has already been prepared. At the present time that first draft is before a cabinet committee. Once that stage is over it will have to go through the full cabinet. As soon as the white paper is prepared it will be referred to the House of Commons Committee on Veterans Affairs. I know it does take some time.

I myself wish that the democratic system could move faster, but perhaps we had better take a bit longer and do an excellent job. In the meantime, all the members of the Committee on Veterans Affairs have been provided with a copy of the report, and this will give them an opportunity to study it. It is a massive report containing 1,350 pages with 148 recommendations. It is complex and far-reaching. If we want to do an excellent job we must take sufficient time. I know that the committee will use this time to study the report thoroughly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): A motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10:19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FLOODS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is today in a position to answer the questions asked yesterday about the serious flood threat in western Canada, whether he has ascertained through his office that provincial authorities have made requests for assistance and whether he has had an opportunity himself to inquire as to the extent of the flood threat and the availability of assistance from various federal agencies in that area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I received a report from my office on these points. The essence of the report is that there will be no disaster of major proportions that we can foresee, although there has been considerable damage. There have been no requests made by the Saskatchewan government to the federal government in Ottawa; however there have been requests to the prairie region headquarters of the Canadian Forces and a request from the Saskatchewan Emergency Measures Organization to the federal regional E.M.O. office in Regina.

The assistance we have given has taken two forms, one military and one non-military. One hundred and seventy-five troops are in Lumsden providing manpower in the town. One hundred and seventy-five thousand high quality military sandbags have been provided by the forces and delivered to the area. Another 200,000 sandbags of lower commercial quality have been flown in by Hercules aircraft from Winnipeg and Montreal. In addition, all the Canadian forces bases in the prairie region are on a 24 hour standby alert ready to meet any further request. There are also a number of federal departments assisting, Mr. Speaker. I have further details if the opposition would like them.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Prime Minister has had an opportunity to inquire as to whether the flood threat is apt to increase, in view of conditions in the United States? Is it his view that the threat has reached a high now or that the danger is apt to increase?

Mr. Trudeau: I am informed that the flood crest is expected to be reached within the next 24 hours, and that after that it will subside gradually.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, knowing what the army was doing I asked a question yesterday in respect of this situation with particular reference to whether the P.F.R.A. authorities had been made available by the federal government for the purpose of assisting in this matter, in view of the fact they are particularly qualified.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can answer in only a general way. Apart from the military, there is some non-military assistance from the federal government, involving several departments. P.F.R.A. is actively advising with respect to minimizing possible crop damage.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the province of Manitoba, which will feel the impact of the flood conditions within the next few days, has the Prime Minister been contacted by the provincial authorities, and what precautions are being taken in that province?

Mr. Trudeau: As I said, Mr. Speaker, even the government of Saskatchewan has not applied directly to us, and my information is that the province of Manitoba has not, either.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED DETERIORATION IN POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that, in common with a great many other members, I am receiving complaints from across the country about the distressing deterioration in the postal services, and since this seems to coincide with the new regulations, may I ask the Minister whether he is reviewing the regulations and is planning any changes in them with a view to improving the postal service?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we are doing a great many things to improve the organization and the services of the Post Office, but we are not planning any changes in five-day mail service or in single mail processing. As a matter of fact, as the hon. member knows, the adjudication is presently proceeding, and I expect that this will clarify a great many points.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has referred to the five-day delivery service. Is he satisfied with regard to the letter sent to him, a copy of which I have, which indicates that an individual in Montreal received a letter on April 10 which had been mailed in Toronto on April 1?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: A good service!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement that the minister wishes to improve the efficiency of his department and bring closer together the relationship of costs and revenues, would he now advise the house why overtime charges are mounting and service is diminishing? This is an admitted fact.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, that was an erroneous report in the Globe and Mail.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Kierans: Overtime charges were on the increase during the fall and prior to the introduction of the five-day week. Since the middle of February, that is, since the introduction of the five-day week, overtime has been very considerably on the decrease. At the same time I might correct another report I was reputed to have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Perhaps we could straighten out some of the difficulties encountered in the department if the minister would clarify whether the five-day system means a minimum of five days in the delivery of mail.

PROTESTS BY WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS RESPECTING RATE CHANGES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has received any protests from the traditional weekly newspapers which have been operating in western Canada for a number of years, and have gone bankrupt because of the new regulations. Also, many people have had to give up their subscriptions to the daily newspapers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose).

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the minister wanted to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat, please. The minister might want to answer his question, which might be answered at the same time as the one which the hon. member for Fraser Valley West wishes to ask now.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I submit, with the greatest respect, that this seems to be completely out of order. My question is either in order or not, and there is no reason why it should be answered at the same time as another question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

ENGAGEMENT OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is addressed to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that he just reported that the charges for overtime have been diminishing, may I ask him whether this is due to the overwhelming presence of casual employees in the various post offices across Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to rule at this time that the minister should not answer either question.

ALLEGED INCONVENIENCE IN SALE OF STAMPS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. In view of the admitted and obvious embarrassment of postal clerks who are on duty on Saturdays and not able to sell stamps at post offices so that they have to tell people to go to sub post offices miles away to buy stamps, will the Postmaster General reconsider these regulations.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): They do not have to go to sub post offices miles away. The sale of stamps does not take place in regular post offices because if it did they would have to keep a supply of stamps and increase their staff considerably, so that the whole purpose of the exercise would be lost. In fact people can secure stamps from any number of sub post offices in the vicinity.

AIR TRANSPORT

MONTREAL—STUDY OF TRAFFIC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since he has just announced that a study will be made on the control requirements of air traffic in the Montreal area, I should like to ask him if similar studies have been conducted before and if others will be conducted in other urban regions in Canada.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am not certain to which study my hon. friend is referring, but if it is to the one recently announced involving some consultants who have done studies in Paris, London and other places, the answer is, probably, depending on the results of the study being undertaken in Montreal.

HOUSING

SURVEY OF URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I should like to say, first of all, that I am pleased to see him back, with his tan, and I hope that he acquired it during his visit to several urban renewal centres the week after Easter. Accordingly I should like to put to him the following question, which I shall read because I do not want to leave any ambiguity in the minister's mind.

Will the minister tell the house whether he had an opportunity during the Easter recess to examine any of the public housing and urban renewal projects which he indicated he would have to assess—and this was to be during the week after Easter—prior to announcing his new code of standards and or guidelines for municipalities wishing to obtain federal approval for such projects?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I spent a great deal of time thinking about this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Where—at Bugaboo?

Mr. Hellyer: I concluded that it is a very complicated matter, but my hon. friend will be pleased to know that I intend to visit Vancouver and Calgary in the next two days and, hopefully, will then be in a position to issue some guidelines within a matter of a few days.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. If he travels west for the purpose of visiting urban renewal projects, will he visit the Rose Blanchard urban renewal project in Victoria, which apparently has been stalled for some weeks?

Some hon. Members: What else is new?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

C.M.H.C.—CRITERIA APPLICABLE IN PROJECTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister when he will be in a position to lay down the sociological and other guidelines that he announced within a few days before we recessed for Easter would be laid down.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Next week, Mr. Speaker, if not this week.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Would the Minister of Transport take this matter up with the Prime Minister before going to Calgary, so as to learn the technique of ducking overripe tomatoes?

Inquiries of the Ministry

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS FOLLOWING TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Minister of Transport, in his capacity as minister in charge of housing and in view of his hope that legislation would be passed in time to be of use during the spring construction term this year, when parliament may expect the bill he promised embodying some of the recommendations of the task force which he chaired.

Both spring and the construction term have now begun, and it would be interesting to know when we may expect the bill to be presented.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This is the same question as was asked the day before the house rose for the Easter recess, and the answer is the same optimistic one I gave at that time.

Mr. Lewis: It may be the same question, Mr. Speaker, but two weeks have elapsed and I should like to ask the minister now whether his proposed legislation has been drafted—whether it is being considered by cabinet or whether it is still in the process of being drafted.

Mr. Hellyer: There is no change in the answer I gave earlier, Mr. Speaker. We are making excellent progress and I hope the bill will not be long delayed.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW MINISTRY OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to set up a separate ministry of housing and urban development?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

MEETING WITH FARM ORGANIZATION TO CONSIDER EMERGENCY PROGRAM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): May I take this opportunity to ask the Minister without Portfolio whether he met with representatives of the Saskatchewan Farmers Union in Saskatoon last Friday and, if so, what emergency programs does he contemplate to deal with the critical situation facing grain growers on the prairies?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I did attend a meeting of the Saskatchewan Farmers Union in Saskatoon last week. The union presented a brief dealing particularly with feed grain and the quota situation with regard to feed grain. I told them I would be very happy to discuss their representations with my colleagues in the cabinet and that I would do so with a view to seeing whether policy of the Conservative government should now be reversed.

Mr. Dinsdale: While the hon. gentleman is considering programs and policies of the Conservative government, would he also reactivate the aggressive sales program of that government?

COMPENSATION FOR SALES BELOW I.G.A. FLOOR

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Did the Farmers' Union make any representations to him regarding the request that the government should compensate them for any sales below the floor price specified in the International Grains Arrangement and, if so, what reply did he give?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The meeting in question was called specifically to deal with the subject of feed grains and the quota regulations in that regard and discussion was restricted almost exclusively to that subject. References of a broader nature which were made to farm income were made largely by myself.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that representations have been made in writing by the Farmers' Union to the government regarding the loss of income from selling wheat below the agreement price, has the government given any consideration to whether or not the farmers will be compensated?

Mr. Lang: These questions are still under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON BILL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the question I direct to the President of the Privy Council is one that is of tremendous interest to the Canadian people generally and also to the members of the House of Commons. Can the minister tell the house approximately when the official languages bill will be before this chamber? He does not have to fix the actual date, but will it be within the next two weeks, so that members may arrange to be present?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members will have noted, my colleague the Minister of Justice will be bringing before cabinet certain proposed amendments to the official languages bill. I do not expect it to be ready before two weeks time, but I hope it will be ready soon after that for continuation of the second reading debate.

INDUSTRY

PARITY BETWEEN CANADIAN AND U.S. AUTOMOBILE PRICES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address my question to the Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Did the minister meet with the Ford officials as promised, and was he successful in convincing them that the price of their new Maverick car should represent full and omplete parity with the price paid in the United States for the came car produced in Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I believe my colleague was in touch with the Ford officials, as he suggested was his intention, and gained from them a continued assurance that they would work toward better productivity with regard to automobiles in Canada.

Mr. Hales: The minister did not answer the question. May we expect full and complete parity in price?

Mr. Lang: Parity in price is, of course, the objective, or, rather, it would be more correct to say that the lowest reasonable price is the objective, because there are differences in the Canadian and United States markets which might in the long run result in different prices. But certainly it is our hope that prices in Canada will be as low as possible.

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister as leader of the government. Is the Prime Minister as leader of the government now prepared to state whether his government endorses the compulsory retirement of Cape Breton miners at the age of 60?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to that which I might give to the hon. member, who has raised the question on two or three occasions.

Mr. MacInnis: Two or three? You can't count.

Mr. Honey: This question has reference to the pre-retirement leave plan of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Intentions in this regard have been known since November 18 of last year when the minister tabled the over-all plan of Devco in the house. At that time he made it plain that the government had approved the plan of which the pre-retirement leave provisions are an integral part.

To implement the plan Devco recently sent out some 1,300 letters to members of the mining force aged 55 and over. In accordance with the plan those workers aged 60 and over were advised that the pre-retirement plan would take effect for them on April 26. Those between 55 and 60 were given the option of taking advantage of the plan if they so desired.

I might mention that of the 671 members of the mining force aged 55 to 59, more than 500 have informed the Cape Breton Development Corporation that they wish to take advantage of the pre-retirement leave plan as of May 1.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to indicate to the government that despite the fact that a number of miners are accepting, it is nevertheless those individuals who are being forced to retire at the age of 60 whom we must concern ourselves with. Otherwise we are—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member recognizes that that is not a point of order. It is a point of debate rather than a point of order. I do not recognize that there is a point of order there at all.

Mr. MacInnis: Then I will give you a legitimate point of order, Mr. Speaker. Let me see the Prime Minister smirk this one off. In the act setting up the Cape Breton Development Corporation, under section 18 the corporation has—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a legitimate point of order he should quote Standing Orders, not a statute. I cannot recognize that the line he is taking now justifies a point of order. However I will hear him out and reach my decision after.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I will refer once more to section 18, which was referred to in the answer given to me. I call the attention of the house to subsection 3 of section 18, which reads:

No bylaw made under this section has any effect unless it has been approved by the Treasury Board.

As late as yesterday Treasury Board informed me that the government has not approved this plan. Therefore it is illegal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I must tell the hon. member that this is a point of debate, not a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. I have known in this house occasions when questions affecting United States dope peddlers in the Don jail and in Ottawa were discussed. If they were given consideration, then I think Cape Breton miners who are being forced to retire at the age of 60 are also entitled to some consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, that is not in my opinion a question of privilege. The hon. member asked a question and received a reply. He may not be satisfied with the reply he received but I am sure many hon. members are in the same position of not being satisfied with the replies they receive, just as ministers may not be happy with the questions they are asked. This does not mean that there should be a point of order or a question of privilege whenever an hon. member is not satisfied with the answer that is given, or a minister with a question that is asked.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does he support the early retirement plan of Devco?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether that question has been asked of the minister in his ministerial capacity or in his personal capacity, and I should like to know that.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West is rising on a question of privilege and he should have precedence.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, while I am not directly implicated in this question I feel that, as a member of this house, my privileges are being called into question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has on numerous occasions asked a question similar to the one he is now raising. On those occasions when the minister was here he professed ignorance of the point at issue. The hon. member directed a similar question to the Prime Minister yesterday as well as on previous occasions and was fobbed off with the answer, "Ask the question when the minister is here." My point of privilege is this. We have this so-called roster system, which I for one do not accept. Slated for appearance today are 18 ministers. When Your Honour called orders of the day only seven were present. Since then three stragglers have come in. I point out that yesterday when a question arose with regard to a motion for adjournment as was put forward by my colleague for Malpeque, Your Honour said that it would be proper to put the question or the motion when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was present to answer to those problems posed by the motion. With the greatest deference, there is no indication when the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be here. It may be in one week; it may be in ten days—

An hon. Member: He may never get here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Similarly, the Prime Minister indicated yesterday that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion should be asked a particular question. That minister was not then present and is not present today. The problem of my colleague for Cape Breton is imminent, since there is a deadline to meet, April 25. Hon. members of this house have the right to ask any number of questions of the ministry, which is responsible in general to this house. Questions should not necessarily be directed only to one individual.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is the point to which I object. Now facing us are seven or ten ministers out of a ministry of 28 or 29. They do not hold their power from God. They do not hold it from the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: That's news.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They do not hold it from a Prime Minister who may have elevated himself near to that position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are responsible to this house, Mr. Speaker. The rules of this house which govern Your Honour, just as they govern me, provide that hon. members shall have the privilege of questioning the ministry, and not just individual members of the ministry as they take their turns in appearing here. We are quite prepared to allow for the absence of ministers in the regular course of duty. But, Mr. Speaker, I as a member of this house do protest, and claim it is a breach of my privileges as a member of this house to be faced with this contemptuous decision on the part of the ministry that they shall straggle in, a half dozen or ten of them, as they see fit.

They are the people who are responsible to this house and to the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And it is not the responsibility of hon. members on this side of the house, whose attendance is far better than that of hon. members on the other side, and of the ministry in particular, to be always present.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And if we agree, we can compare the attendance on both sides.

Some hon. Members: Ah! Ah!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am closing—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member does not feel that he has now stated his question of privilege?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as long as I am not given satisfaction, I shall insist on the rights of hon. members.

Mr. Langlois: Of course.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I shall also insist on hon. members getting an answer and on the ministers assuming their responsibility before Parliament, not only by means of a television debate but by really doing their duty by us, as members who have been elected by the Canadian people.

However, I know that spring has come and that the crows are appearing again—

[English]

I have refrained for a good, long time from commenting on this performance on the part of the ministry with regard to hon. members of this house. I say that the insistence on this roster system and the flagrant derogation from attendance in this house by ministers is an abuse of privilege. I make this protest not only on my own behalf but on behalf of all hon. members of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if we might allow the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond to put his supplementary question.

Mr. MacInnis: May I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. With deference to your ruling, sir, I understood that it might not be possible to put the question to the minister in his personal capacity. May I indicate that no minister is more deeply involved in this retirement plan.

An hon. Member: Which one are you? —The bum or the idiot?

Mr. Trudeau: Discipline yourself.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if we could have order in the house so that we may proceed with the question of privilege. I know many hon. members are anxious to ask questions and I think the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond should be allowed to ask his supplementary, if it is in order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, no hon. member here is more deeply involved in this particular early retirement plan than is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I ask again, does the minister endorse the compulsory retirement of Cape Breton miners at the age of 60?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to answer, this plan has been approved—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I allow the minister to answer only in his capacity as a minister. I must say at this point that I am not all that sure whether the question asked by the hon. member relates to the minister's—

An hon. Member: It may be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the suggestions made to me and the advice given to me by the hon. member for Edmonton West. In view of his suggestion I will recognize the minister in his ministerial capacity and permit him to answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the over-all plan to which the hon. member refers has been approved by the Government of Canada. Under the terms of the legislation it has also been submitted to the government of Nova Scotia, and to my knowledge there has been no objection from that quarter either.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Once again I must remind the minister that his answer is not in accordance with the facts, and this has not been approved by the Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members might agree with my suggestion of 15 or 20 minutes ago that we were entering into a debate. I gather the hon. member for York South has a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary question is to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and in relation to the answer which he gave, if he still remembers it. I want to ask him whether he has inquired whether the corporation has in fact passed a by-law providing for this early retirement, as required by section 18 of the relevant act? Has that by-law been submitted to the Treasury Board and has it received the approval of the board as provided by subsection 3 of that section?

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, I do not personally have the knowledge to answer the question of my hon. friend. The minister will be in the house tomorrow. He was out of Ottawa yesterday on government business, but he is detailed to be here tomorrow and will deal with it at that time.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): The minister of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been referred to. He is out in the corridor and I was wondering why he did not come into the chamber today. In that connection I point out in this matter that I have kept a record of the ministers' attendance. Out of 49 sitting days, ministers have been away 83 times when they should have been in the house doing their duty.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for York South has a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: I want to pursue the matter raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and ensure that this house receives this information. The act does not provide for approval by the ministry or the cabinet. The act provides that early retirement must be made by a by-law of the corporation and by approval of that by-law by Treasury Board. Will the parliamentary secretary make the necessary inquiries and either he, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion or, God willing, even the President of the Treasury Board, may give us this answer tomorrow?

Mr. Honey: Yes, I will give that undertaking.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Is he now in a position to give us a report on his meeting yesterday with Hon. Jean Lussier, Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs, regarding the site of the future international airport?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we had a meeting yesterday afternoon and reviewed the positions of the two governments. A review of those two positions will now be reviewed by the two governments.

AIR POLLUTION

COMMITTEE STUDY OF AUTOMOBILE EXHAUST SYSTEMS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the increasing air pollution in urban areas caused by faulty motorcar exhaust systems. Would the minister give consideration to consulting his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare as to the possibility of setting up an interdepartmental committee to study this particular on-going problem?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): It is not necessary to set up a committee, this has been under investigation for some time. If my colleague were here, he would tell of the work being done by his department, which is designed to effect proper controls in so far as gas emissions are concerned. He would tell too, that much good work is being done in this area.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

MELTZ-PENZ STUDY—ACCELERATION OF OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the urgent warning in the Meltz-Penz study that Canada must double the amount of graduates of technical training by 1970, what new steps does the government propose to accelerate technical and vocational training opportunities?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that he is asking the minister to make a general statement which I submit should normally be made on motions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR GRADUATING STUDENTS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): May I ask, Mr. Speaker, whether the minister is in a position to announce any positive steps for the employment of students graduating this spring from universities and other post-secondary institutions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I wish to advise my hon. friend that the prospects for employment for graduates of Canadian universities for the immediate future are very strong indeed.

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING FROZEN FISH AND SALT COD

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My question is to the Minister of Supply and Services in his capacity as the Acting Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister held meetings recently with members of the Atlantic Fish Trades Association or a part thereof? If so, what action is being taken to compromise the difference between the trade and a reluctant government?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is correct I met with the Atlantic Fish Trades Association yesterday and also with representatives of the Newfoundland fishermen. The mechanics of the two programs, one to help the fresh frozen fish industry and the other the salt cod industry, were discussed with both groups. Negotiations with them and implementation of the plan are proceeding. I indicated to them the hope that there would be an announcement on both of the subjects within a very short time.

Mr. Lundrigan: Could the minister inform the house when we members of parliament might get some statement on this very important matter, so we, as well, will be informed?

Mr. Jamieson: Just as soon as we are sure, Mr. Speaker, that the mechanics of the plan are such that they will give maximum benefit to the fishermen, and achieve the result I am sure my hon. friend hopes will be achieved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AIRBORNE WARNING CONTROL SYSTEM—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. ABOUT CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister say whether there have been any discussions with the United States government regarding Canadian participation in an airborne warning control system, the AWAC system? Has this been discussed by the Prime Minister with the President of the United States or at any other level between the two countries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not have any discussions on this particular subject with the President of the United States. This is a subject which is a part of the continuing study in reshaping our defence policy.

Inquiries of the Ministry

A.B.M. SYSTEM—POSSIBILITY OF PLACING UNDER NORAD CONTROL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Could the Prime Minister advise the house whether there have been any discussions between the United States and Canada regarding the placing of the so-called Safeguard, the A.B.M. system, under NORAD command?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. There have been no discussions on the latter point, and I do not believe there have been any on the immediately preceding point either.

POLLUTION

FEDERAL DEPARTMENT TO HANDLE VARYING ASPECTS OF PROBLEM

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. It arises from the growing pollution problem in our nation and the fact that these problems are now handled by five different government departments. Would the government consider setting up a federal department under one minister who would be responsible for all pollution problems in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It would be impossible to do that, Mr. Speaker, because many aspects of the pollution problem do not come under federal jurisdiction. For such problems as do come under federal jurisdiction we have mechanics for co-ordinating the works of the various ministers involved.

WATER RESOURCES

STEPS TO PREVENT POLLUTION OF BOW RIVER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I want to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Have any steps been taken by the federal government on their own accord to prevent the pollution of the Bow River which is affecting the cities, and the areas of southern Alberta through which it flows?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement in this respect before the Easter adjournment and the answer it contained is still valid.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TELESAT CANADA ACT

MEASURE ESTABLISHING CORPORATION FOR TELECOMMUNICATION BY SATELLITE

The house resumed, from Monday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Kierans that Bill C-184, to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-184, to establish a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite, is of national and vital importance. This is the reason the government had two technical studies prepared by R.C.A. Victor and Northern Electric and the reason the government commissioned Dr. McIntosh, general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, to make a report recommending a plan for the corporate, financial and management structure of this domestic satellite communication corporation.

The minister has refused to make public the report of Dr. McIntosh because of the confidential discussions referred to therein. I would ask the minister, however, to submit the report stripped of the confidential discussions in which Dr. McIntosh participated and containing his recommendations and his reasons therefor. I would also ask the minister to undertake that Dr. McIntosh will attend before the appropriate standing committee to give evidence with regard to his recommendations and reasons and to subject himself to the questioning of members of the standing committee. I rather suspect that one of Dr. McIntosh's recommendations was extensive participation by the carriers, namely, the trans-Canada telephone system and C.N.-C.P. Telecommunications, and by private Canadian investors along with the government. In fact, before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications Mr. Gotleib, one of the deputy ministers, suggested that probably the corporate structure would be set up on the basis of 30 per cent federal government participation, 30 per cent common carrier participation and 40 per cent public participation. Yesterday in his opening remarks the minister said there would be roughly a one-third participation by each of the different groups.

It is fair to say that this operation is a sure financial winner and, as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) has said, the decision by the minister and the government is a sell-out of the Canadian interest in this money-making venture. We in the New Democratic party have recommended that the satellite corporation should take the form of a Crown corporation with participation by the federal and provincial governments, with the federal government having 51 per cent control and the provincial governments 49 per cent. I say this because of some of the public statements the minister has made. He has said that the main objectives of the satellite communication system are social and political and not economic. He also pointed out that only a satellite communication system would be able to blanket the rural and northern areas of Canada and operate successfully in this field.

Last evening the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) spoke of the great importance this satellite program will have in relation to the Indians, Eskimos and Métis and the industrial development of the north. More important than this will be the contribution the satellite system will make to national unity by the distribution of television programs in French and English to every part of the country. If this is so, then it is important that there be complete public control in order to ensure that the system is devoted to Canadian aims and objectives in a way that is acceptable to the Canadian people having in mind their cultural requirements. The minister has not given economic reasons for the construction of the satellite system. In fact he has given conflicting information regarding an economic or financial comparison between the present terrestrial system and the new satellite communication system.

If we were to adopt the Crown corporation approach as recommended by this party, there would be no problem in respect of foreign ownership and participation and subjugation to government regulatory control. In this area it is worthy of note that both firms which submitted design programs included in their bids participation with foreign firms. For example, the bid by Northern Electric, a Canadian subsidiary of Bell Telephone, includes substantial assistance from Canadair Limited, a subsidiary of Hughes Aircraft Company of California. The bid by R.C.A. Victor, an American subsidiary, includes additional assistance from Spar Arrow Space Products Limited of Toronto, systems group of T.R.W. and Company of California.

The bid by Northern Electric states that its proposal will achieve a 64.5 per cent Canadian content under the program. R.C.A. Victor has declared that its proposal would promote the participation of Canadian companies to the maximum state feasible. This is an indication that both these companies which submitted technical programs will require foreign participation in the operation of their programs. As indicated yesterday by the hon. member for Selkirk, this is nothing more than vertical integration by these companies in this field where the financial success of the project is almost assured.

We have had experience with Canadian regulatory bodies. We know what has happened in regard to the Canadian Transport Commission and the Bell Telephone Company. The Bell Telephone Company has had almost a wide-open field and complete freedom in respect of communications in Canada. The Canadian Transport Commission has played a rather passive instead of an active regulatory role. It does not dig out the facts but relies instead on the opposing parties to present the evidence. The result is that the Bell Telephone Company dominates the field and has more regard for its shareholders than for the users of the telephone services.

If this new body is to come under either the Canadian Transport Commission or the Canadian Radio-Television Commission we have no assurance that either of these bodies will do the type of research that is necessary to protect the Canadian public at large. With a Crown corporation the profits would be shared by the public and not by the private carriers or a very small group of private investors. As the minister has pointed out, any one person will be limited to 2½ per cent control or ownership. It is obvious, however, that no more than 2 per cent or 3 per cent of Canadians will be investing in this successful operation. One is reminded of the successful operation of Polymer and Sysco in Cape Breton as well as other Crown corporations. This should give the minister some encouragement to experiment once again with a Crown corporation.

Telesat Canada Act

I am sure the minister is well aware of the experience in the United States in respect of the satellite communications system there called Comsat. The U.S. government set up a 50-50 capital participation program between the carriers and the public with the government making no capital investment but having a minority number of directors on the board, a mere 3 out of 15. That experience has shown, as I am sure the minister will agree, that it has not been a successful operation and that no telecommunications system is likely to be successful when the control is in the hands of private bodies.

One is rather surprised that the minister, in view of the avant-garde approach he takes in respect of NATO and other current matters, would not have experimented with a Crown corporation in this field. When the hon. gentleman was the minister of revenue in Quebec he advocated full government control and ownership of Sidbec, a newly integrated Quebec steel operation. The minister suggested this would create something which did not exist in Quebec, namely, an integrated steel mill which would give a boost to and have a multiplier effect on the economy. If the minister could support the operation of a Crown corporation like Sidbec in Quebec on the basis of economic reasons justifying public control, surely a better and more convincing case can be made for a Crown corporation in this field where the objective is political and social rather than economic. In this case, underlying that objective is national unity and development across the country.

One may fear there will be little federal participation in this venture. The minister's recommendations will not allow any participation by provincial governments. We believe there should be the fullest federal and provincial participation with 51 per cent control in the hands of the federal government and 49 per cent held by the provincial governments. When one realizes the active steps the provincial government of Quebec has taken in entering into an agreement with France in respect of satellite communications, one would hope that the minister would take some initiative on the part of the federal and provincial governments to develop this important field of communications.

Yesterday the minister mentioned that this new corporation would develop a research program and he quoted from the particular clause in the bill which gives authority for research development. It is obvious that there is no government co-ordination of its scientific and technological programs and policies. Where will the satellite research program fit into the over-all objectives of science in Canada? This raises the question of why the intense neutron generator program was cancelled last fall, why the government expanded its oceanographic research program under the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and why the Queen Elizabeth telescope project in British Columbia was cancelled after millions of dollars had been spent. It is obvious that scientific research under this government is chaotic and that science policy is determined by accident rather than by plan. One would hope that the research program of this new corporation will be integrated with the National Research Council and other research bodies within the government so that we will have a total science policy rather than the haphazard approach taken so far by the government.

Yesterday I felt that the minister in his opening remarks in respect of the satellite communications system showed himself to be a true supporter of private enterprise and that his previous statement in respect of economics was mere words. He seemed to indicate that he had no intention of implementing his ideas. If he had had the spirit and the courage to meet this problem he would have thought seriously about setting up a Crown corporation whereby the federal and provincial governments would be given the right to participate in its development and in research so that all benefits flowing from the project would go to the Canadian people and be available for their use. He has chosen otherwise. He has chosen to give the private carriers and the public the right to invest in this program. With the investment of a mere $60 million the government could have implemented this program for an experimental period to see what it would achieve, in light of the success with regard to Polymer and other government corporations. He has not elected to do so and I am sure he will regret the step he has taken. I hope that when we reach the committee stage he will give us his reasons for electing otherwise and that Dr. McIntosh and other expert witnesses will be called to justify this decision.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should rise on a point of order before my colleague resumes his seat. The reason for doing so will become clear in a moment. Yesterday my colleague the hon. member for Selkirk moved an amendment to the motion for second reading of this bill.

Mr. Speaker had some doubt about the form of the amendment. Since then my colleague and I, along with one or two others, have consulted and redrafted the amendment in a form which the hon. member for Selkirk would be prepared to offer as a substitute for the one proposed yesterday. My point of order is in the form of a question. Will it be acceptable to the Chair if the hon. member for Selkirk offers a substitute amendment? If that is not the case, then the hon. member for Broadview could move the amendment. That is why I rose on a point of order before the hon. member sat down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since the hon. member for Selkirk has already spoken and cannot speak again he might be allowed to move an amendment with the unanimous consent of the house. If that consent is not forthcoming, the hon. member for Broadview might move the amendment. If the first proposal by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is the one being pursued, I will ask the house now whether it gives unanimous consent to the hon. member for Selkirk to move the substitute amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Selkirk at the conclusion of the remarks of the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Gilbert: I have completed my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Chair had some doubt whether the amendment I moved yesterday was declaratory of a substantially different principle from that contained in the bill, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That Bill No. C-184 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the basic principle of the bill should be altered so that there will be full public ownership of the proposed Canada Telesat through a Crown corporation, with provision for participation therein by the governments of the provinces as well as by the government of Canada.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting aspects of the bill before us is that there seems to be general agreement among spokesmen for all parties that we need improvement in our communications systems in Canada. This is an interesting aspect of the debate. There does not seem to be violent opposition to the idea of having a domestic communications satellite. There is a difference of opinion—and I am sure these opinions are sincerely held—about the type of ownership of the domestic communications satellite system. Fears were expressed yesterday about the type of corporation anticipated by the measure. These fears have been expressed once again in the amendment just proposed by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party.

Certainly the concept of a three-way partnership is unique. The minister suggested yesterday that this concept may be unique in the history of the world. I refer to the concept of one single entity involving government, the telecommunications industry and the public at large. In my view the proposed structure need be no cause for alarm. Certainly this measure should advance from second reading into committee so that expert witnesses may be called and testimony given by them. If this measure must be improved, we should have the courage to improve, change and strengthen it.

The placing aloft of a communications satellite of this kind will, without doubt, be an historic action by government in Canada. In my view the proposed arrangement achieves a happy melding of three very important segments of our society, the skills, research talents and the technical expertise of one of the world's outstanding telecommunications industries.

Let us make no mistake about it, the people who make up the telecommunications industry in Canada are primarily Canadians trained in Canadian universities, the sons and daughters of Canadians from coast to coast. We are not talking about some sinister force trying to overthrow Canadian sovereignty. The graduates who are going into electronics in Canada come from the University of British Columbia, Memorial University in Newfoundland and the University of Toronto. Some of us know some of these very talented people. This measure would bring together the resources represented by people of this kind as well as the resources of government, which are not inconsiderable. We would at the same time permit the participation of a broad section of the public in what will be a major venture in the history of this nation. I think the minister is to be commended for his determination to assure that this high level of technical competence will be vested in the project. To do less would be to serve less ably as a minister of the Crown.

There are some who say that this project is ahead of its time. In light of some of the preliminary testimony given before the committee I must admit that I harboured some doubts whether the existing microwave capacity in Canada had been fully and effectively utilized, but I was reassured by the data provided yesterday by the minister. It seemed to lend convincing support to the view that there will be adequate demand for the service to be offered by this new corporation.

Certainly when this satellite achieves orbit in 1971 or 1972—I hope the launch is successful whether it is from Vandenberg Base, Cape Kennedy, or whether the Soviet Union submits the lowest tender for launching—Canada will look to no other nation in the world for leadership in the provision of an effective communications network for a vast land mass. We will be pioneers in the bringing of television, telephone and message communication to all parts of a very large country by this domestic satellite.

It is reassuring to note in the report given to the house yesterday by the minister that the satellite project has sound research support. It is not a pie in the sky or even a satellite in the sky proposal. The 1966 report of the Power Corporation, a respected corporation in this nation, supporting a domestic communications satellite system, and the subsequent task force report made available in April of last year, provide convincing proof that the satellite system is economically feasible and desirable.

Those who are concerned about the ownership aspect of the proposed system—they have a right to question ownership, although the technical aspects of the project have not been disputed—neglect, I think, the assurance provided by the minister that there will be no board representation for any party without shares, nor will there be shares without votes nor votes without shares. There will be no power without financial responsibility and no responsibility without power.

Some have proposed a wholly government-owned enterprise, which is the substance of the amendment to which hon. members are now addressing themselves. Admittedly, there are arguments pro and con in this regard. It can be said that any or all activity in Canada could be operated at the taxpayers' expense, could be fully government owned. Some people subscribe to this economic philosophy. But in this case it seems to me and many other hon. members that a wise course is being followed. The resources of a first-rate telecommunications industry will be involved in the project as well as government resources on behalf of all the Canadian people.

As the minister stated yesterday in his speech, public equity in a corporation initiated by the government fulfils the idea of public participation in ventures undertaken in the name of the public; it fulfils also the urgent need for a broader selection of Canadian-owned companies available to Canadian investors and, finally, it will ensure accountability to the public at large rather than merely to those parties directly interested in the venture.

I express the hope that share ownership in the corporation will be based as broadly as possible. We in this house should take action to make certain that it will be possible for even small investors to put money into what could be a growth proposition for Canadians from coast to coast, so they will be given an opportunity to invest their money on a fair and equitable basis. In this regard the house should feel reassured by the limitations on the distribution of share ownership as set forth in appendix B. When people cry alarm in this house about the ownership, let them remember that non-residents may not hold more than 20 per cent of the shares allotted to the public sector, or approximately 7 per cent of the total shares issued by the corporation. No single shareholder in the public sector may hold more than 2½ per cent of the total shares issued by the corporation. I think this removes some of the sinister aspects of the corporate structure which have been suggested by our friends to my left. They suggest there are dark motives behind this proposal to bring a measure of private enterprise into this great project.

Mr. Schreyer: Only 2 per cent of the population will benefit.

Mr. Perrault: I rather dispute the mathematics of my hon. friend to my left, but perhaps in committee he will explain his economic theories more clearly so we will all understand.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Again, it seems unfortunate that some members of the house appear to be obsessed by the fear that some of the participating companies may include a degree of foreign ownership and control and that presumably Canadian sovereignty will be endangered. This is an example of unfortunate tunnel vision. We would still be in an economic backwater and certainly would not have one of the highest standards of living in the world if we had this tunnel vision and if every time someone from the outside wished to invest money in Canada we questioned his motives and said, "oh, no, you cannot come here unless you are willing to subject yourself to some sort of punitive action". I think it is unfortunate that that kind of talk is still being heard in Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: You do not like Walter Gordon, then.

Mr. Perrault: I am not talking on that subject this afternoon.

The control of this domestic satellite system will be exercised fully and effectively in Canada. This remains the fact. Canadians will benefit whether or not they are direct shareholders in the corporation. Apart from their technical resources which they will be investing in this project, the participating private companies will be the principal users of the system. They will rent its services to retail to their customers. This corporation will complement, not compete with, common carriers.

Certainly this measure should serve to promote the widest possible share ownership. In my view it is consistent with demands from various quarters of the house, including the left side of the opposition, that Canadians be given more opportunities to share in the ownership of Canadian enterprises. But let there be no lingering concern on the part of any of us. It is to be hoped that a detailed committee study of this proposal will be carried out and that expert witnesses will be called for testimony. I also hope, as I said earlier, that appropriate changes will be made to improve this legislation still further.

Undoubtedly the launching of this satellite will be one of the most important actions of this parliament. The basis of the corporation should be sound and the public interest should be protected as effectively as possible. I hope that this measure can be referred to the committee for the detailed study which it deserves. I suggest to the house that the amendment be defeated, that we ge on with the true task before the house, that we give second reading to the bill and refer it to the committee as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I felt it was my duty to take part in this debate on Bill C-184 concerning the establishment of a Canadian corporation for telecommunication by satellite which will be designated under the legal and commercial name of Telesat Canada to stress certain points which seem to have been forgotten since the bill was introduced as well as by the minister himself.

Mr. Speaker, the progress of a country like Canada which geographically extends from sea to sea is closely related to the development of its means of communication. It is almost unanimously recognized that the establishment of a communication system by satellite is an important step in the unification of the various Canadian regions.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the government acknowledged the imperious need for Canada to be provided with a system of communication by satellite which will enhance our Canadian identity.

Besides, Canada's population is made up of various ethnic groups, and especially of two large cultural communities, one French and one English. It is a fact that gathers increasing support that both must be treated on an equal footing wherever there is a minority.

We must, for instance, provide the French-speaking minorities outside Quebec with opportunities for development and for the safeguard of their culture, and we must provide them with information and entertainment in their own language.

The freedom to choose for each private individual and the opportunity for a minority to express itself, that should be the principle behind the philosophy of the new corporation called "Telesat Canada".

I believe that that corporation will meet the two requirements necessary for the development of Canada and for the fulfilment of the basic needs of Canadians, wherever they may be, whatever the language they may speak and whatever the culture they may belong to.

Although we agree on the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat nonplussed at a few particular points with which I shall deal briefly and to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister who introduced this legislation in the house.

Here are the main questions I ask myself on the content of the bill.

First, will the system be bilingual or, in other terms, will there be a particular channel for programs in French, and another for those in English?

Secondly, will some channels be used only for educational programs? Since education is a provincial responsibility, were the provinces and specially Quebec consulted on that matter? In the affirmative, what conclusions were arrived at in talks with the province of Quebec, for example?

Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether the bill meets the requirements of the provinces.

Will Quebec be able to rent or purchase time on a channel for educational programs?

Mr. Speaker, one cannot help but wonder whether the governement of Canada intends to allow Quebec, if it so wishes, to take part and to co-operate in the construction of a telecommunication satellite broadcasting in French and to allow it to use a foreign satellite to transmit its educational programs. For us Quebecers, that is a fundamental question within the framework of the constitution as it now stands, having regard especially to the progress in the fields of technology and electronics, that is foreseable today.

In this connection, I also wonder whether the federal government is ready and willing to let Quebec negotiate, such agreements internationally, or whether it intends to carry out such negotiations itself. In other words, has there been any agreement with Quebec in this regard? If so, what is the nature of such agreement? If not, is such an agreement expected?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister, being a responsible man, will make a note of my questions. I shall ask a messenger to take them to him so that he may answer them when the time comes to close this debate.

Mr. Speaker, we, who are French-speaking, would like to be sure that the minister is aware of these questions that come to our minds and that he intends to supply answers.

I suggest that the minister will wish to answer our questions before the bill is carried and referred back to the committee, because it is possible that in trying to favour national unity, through a communication system of high quality and at very high cost, we may contribute to the division of the country. Then, Mr. Speaker, all would be lost.

A real danger threatens. Indeed, the present bill does not take into account agreements with the provinces, nor, for that matter, the two great cultures of Canada.

In my opinion, that represents a serious anomaly, and if the minister does not throw some light on the situation by answering some of the questions I asked a while ago, we will be led to believe that the federal government wants to control not only the medium but the message of the programs televised by the different channels.

In his first speech, the minister spoke of the very great political and economic implications this bill will have. However, he seems to have forgotten, involuntarily I hope, the enormous social and cultural implications which will also proceed from the bill.

Mr. Speaker, just as we have rich provinces and poor provinces, so also we must recognize today without danger of being mistaken that there are great regional economic inequalities which are now known as "regional disparities". It is so true that a new department has just been established to deal with them.

Just as it is no longer conceivable to have a uniform economic policy for all Canada, so also we cannot set up a uniform communications policy for the whole of Canada.

Indisputable phenomenon: Canada is a mosaic of provinces—great men said so—remarkable for its two great cultures: the French culture and the English culture.

At this stage of the creation of this new Canadian corporation for telecommunication, known as "Telesat Canada", the house has no guarantee at all that the cultural and educational rights of the provinces will be preserved, guaranteed, since the Canadian constitution itself does not provide, and did not provide in 1867, for the possibility that such an evolution in the field of communications would make it necessary to create a new department, the Department of Communications, to meet the needs of a modern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is right there and it is not by playing the ostrich that we shall find an answer.

Everybody must admit that the field of communications, whether it be telecommunication by satellites, educational television or the granting of broadcasting licences, is most important and likely to infringe upon the rights of the provinces which have regional interests to protect including cultural interests and others.

Of course, there are always national interests to safeguard but let us not, for goodness sake, forget the regional interests.

So, in practice, we cannot agree with the idea of establishing a new corporation for telecommunication before settling that matter of infringement and jurisdiction.

We should know, Mr. Speaker, where the federal jurisdiction and the national interest begin, on the one hand, and the provincial interest and jurisdiction on the other. This question was to be discussed at the last constitutional conference but the parties involved did not feel happy about the outcome. Such problems, and others as well, tend to linger in Canada.

That is the core of the matter; that is the answer we need before we embark on a course which could only worsen federal-provincial relations which are quite strained already.

In the course of his speech—and, technically speaking, it is very poor—the minister said, and I quote:

—extension of television service in both languages to all Canadians—

He carried on:

This satellite will broadcast both in French and in English; in short it will speak the languages of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, on March 1st, 1969 Le Droit from Ottawa—a well-known newspaper published an article under the heading: Eric Kierans states the objectives of the new Department of Communications. I quote:

—in rather confused terms, Mr. Kierans declared, Friday, that his new Department of Communications will be unable to dissociate entirely the container and the content of the messages it will transmit.

The minister stated, on second reading of Bill C-173 in committee, and I quote:

The department of Communications will be concerned with the transmission of the message and not the message itself—

But the minister lost no time in adding, and I quote:

—but the two cannot be dissociated from each other.

He says yes, but he says no. He agrees, but he does not.

Mr. Speaker, let us be honest about it and throw light on the situation.

Later, the minister added as follows:

The Department of Communications will not become a two-dimension department, exclusively concerned with the means and neglectful of the end.

What is that end? What are those means the minister intends to take to encourage better communications technically, culturally and socially in Canada? What is the ultimate goal of the minister, his department, and Telesat Canada, since even we seem unable to discover it today?

Mr. Speaker, comparing what the minister said with the contents of this bill and his first speech on the matter, we cannot but be very puzzled about the real intentions of the federal government.

Michel Roy, in an article published in the newspaper Le Devoir on Saturday February 22, 1969 pin-pointed the problem as it exists in the province of Quebec in particular, and I quote:

Therefore, on the one hand, Quebec intends to set up a gigantic and complex telecommunication network which would serve cultural, educational, economic, scientific, administrative and social purposes and whose scope appears bewildering if we consider the as yet unsuspected potential of electronics and its innumerable applications; but, on the other hand, the development of the basic elements of this radio and television complex is singularly hindered by constitutional, political and financial obstacles.

As a matter of fact, concludes Michel Roy, if Radio-Quebec is not successful in getting a broadcasting licence and if, on the other hand, the initiative taken by Quebec in the field of satellites triggers the expected chains of reactions, if furthermore the budget limitations resulting from the state of our finances bring the government to cut down expenditures on educational radio and television, then we shall have the right to ask ourselves how and when might come about "an integrated and total communication network" as considered by the Quebec audio-visual development office, the true brain as far as the telecommunication policy is concerned.

Upon reading this article, Mr. Speaker, I ask myself two questions. Are we gong to have two satellite networks, the Canadian government's and the Quebec government's? According to the Quebec premier, it seems that it will be the case since not one week goes by without the Quebec premier or the federal Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) boasting loudly and making bold statements, each to promote its own satellite network.

We want to know, Mr. Speaker, for how long yet we will keep on paying for both, thus acting irresponsibly.

On the basis of our information it seems that in this field as in others, there will be a duplication of services and costs and taxes will increase since it will cost twice as much for the people of Quebec to have their own service in view of the fact that they are afraid of possible interference on the part of the Ottawa government.

Still because of this everlasting question of provincial autonomy, which costs a lot to the people of Quebec, and because of the stubborness of the Ottawa government in interpreting the constitution in its own way, the Canadian people, who are ignored, are always the ones in the end who foot the bill of such loss of time and of those problems that remain in abeyance instead of being solved.

That brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the following basic point: Why does not this bill provide for participation, financial and otherwise, by the provinces, especially Quebec?

It seems to me a province like Quebec could take advantage of the establishment of those satellites—which would be simply extraordinary—by securing for itself a channel of its own, in order to provide educational programs and others in accordance with its people's ideals, which would enable all French speaking Canadians in this country to keep in touch with the province of Quebec.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Quebec could at least double its influence at the national level, assert itself and reveal its ideals, folklore, language, talents, difficulties and needs to all Canadians.

Has the federal government made proposals to this end to the province of Quebec? I would be pleased to see the minister give a sincere answer to that question. If the government did make proposals, what did Quebec answer, if it did answer? In fact, Mr. Speaker, very often, unfortunately, the Quebec government does not give any answer to the proposals made by the federal government, as it happened in the case of the federal parks.

I wish to conclude my remarks on the social and cultural aspect of this bill in order to deal briefly with another point about which I feel very strongly, namely the principle of the Corporation itself.

We shall create, by passing Bill C-184, a corporation that is not necessarily a crown corporation nor an agency corporation. It is essentially a non agency corporation but, what is more, a joint economy corporation.

Moreover, one finds there the system well known in Europe as the tripartite representation within a state corporation. In this case, the federal government, private enterprise and the people, would be the three governing factors of this new corporation.

Such a tripartite representation, Mr. Speaker, is based—from what I know—on the idea that the bringing together of the various interests involved, particularly those of the personnel and the users, brings automatically about a compromise in the general interest.

As we know, this method of setting up of a government corporation is very popular in France. Such a formula is used to a certain extent in Canada but it should be used increasingly, since the people and private enterprise participate in it more fully than in the case of Crown corporations, known as the "State control solution", which involves the appointment of civil servants subjected to the administrative control of the minister, and consequently such a corporation becomes the economic and cultural instrument of the government.

Mr. Speaker, Telesat Canada, which we are seeking to set up here, will not altogether have a legal status—the minister does not say this but only that it is a complex matter—will not really enjoy a tripartite representation and will constitute a solution by State control. As we know, Mr. Speaker, from a legal point of view, there are three methods of setting up a corporation, the third of which being called the "autonomist solution", and I want to elaborate a little on this.

Telesat Canada will be, as one might say, a mixture of the tripartite representation and the autonomist solutions.

There are two points in that solution. The first is that we must prevent a firm from being managed in a poor capitalistic way and manage it like a private firm. That last solution was adopted in Canada several years ago. It is based on political and legal Anglo-Saxon principles according to which great powers are readily granted, and the results assessed afterwards.

Legally, it is so to speak, and I wanted to come to that, the machinery of the establishment of the trust.

In other words, what is important is the source of capital and not so much the fact, though this is very significant, that the individual elected or appointed director of a public Canadian firm must be a Canadian citizen.

What is important is the source. However, when we read in Schedule A of Bill C-184 the names of the firms concerned—since it is a three party representation—we may conclude that there are some private interests involved. If we take into account which firms are willing to be included in that company, we realize that most of the interests are foreign interests. And if that company is to be established as it is described in the bill, "Telesat Canada" will not be under the control of Canadians but rather of Americans.

And yesterday the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Rodrigue), proved beyond all doubt, thanks to very detailed information, that the interests of companies listed in Schedule A are really foreign interests.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up more of the time of the house but I feel I must ask again the minister to clear up the situation as to the social and cultural repercussions of the bill, particularly as far as Quebec is concerned, which affects us more, even if we are concerned with the rest of Canada.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like him to explain how he can imagine a Canadian control of Telesat Canada, when he knows that the capital comes from outside the country. Tell me who pays you, and I will tell you whom you serve.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Pilon) is no more interested than the others in being controlled by the Americans. Consequently, I would ask him to reflect on that and show real imagination. I endorse the idea of establishing Telesat Canada, but I cannot wholeheartedly, approve of the bill, because of the numerous questions that we ask ourselves, not only as French-speaking Canadians, but as unhyphenated Canadians as well.

[English]

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, everyone in Canada will be very happy if we are able to have a satellite system that will give us all of the wonderful things that a satellite system can bring. Today we are discussing in this house the details of what kind of corporation should run the whole affair. I suggest that we are being a little premature and that this whole question should be examined in much greater detail and with much greater care at the committee level, because there is certainly grave doubt whether or not this project is economically feasible.

We did examine this question briefly in committee and we were not entirely convinced that it is economically feasible. I personally asked that we continue our study of this problem in committee by calling in experts from outside the public service who are not immediately involved in the building up of the organization within the new Department of Communications. Whether or not this is being considered I do not know, but I believe that this is absolutely essential.

Not too many days ago an article appeared in the Globe and Mail expressing the opinion of the president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. He had grave doubts about the economic feasibility of the satellite system. That was the opinion of a man who is highly respected and has no immediate axe to grind in making such a statement. I know that people inside and outside Canada have expressed very grave doubts about the satellite's economic feasibility. I pursued this line of questioning in committee. While I do not mean to point a finger at anyone in the public service I can demonstrate any number of cases where various governments of this country in the past have been pushed into expensive kinds of programs they could not afford. We have built something or been sold something as a result of the promptings of our public servants and the experts they brought with them. Often we have been sold a bill of goods which was too costly for us.

One example of that is the arts centre. Another is the manpower program, one of the finest ideas this government has come up with. Nevertheless, in the hands of certain mandarins it is being ruined. I suggest we are following exactly the same pattern with this telecommunications system. We get hold of a great idea and hand it over to people who are interested in empire building. Then we find ourselves engaged in a program of expenditures that we cannot control.

I do not deny that there are experts in the minister's department who are very reputable individuals. But when we see that ideas they put forward are at variance with the ideas of informed people in the United States, it seems to me we should take a much more careful look at this matter. Why do we not call other witnesses from Washington or from the Canadian Armed Forces, where there are many experts, in order that we may be properly advised? Certainly the little seance we had in committee did not convince the members of that committee that this program is economically feasible. There are certain points about the satellite program that most people, including members of this house, do not understand. I do not understand many of the things involved and I think it is high time that some of them were explained.

Although we are not all technical experts we have a measure of intelligence and can understand the basic points of the system. We talk about shooting up a satellite. In committee I asked questions about space, something people do not generally understand. I asked whether space is available up there because it appears that space is quite limited. The answer I received was that space is definitely limited but that at the present time there should be no difficulty at all for Canada to receive, as a result of going through appropriate international procedures of registration with the I.T.U., a parking space for our satellite. Although the minister took this answer at its face value I do not think the committee ought necessarily to take it as the gospel truth. Certainly we feel that we will be able to obtain space up there for our satellite, but we must admit that at present we do not have a designated space. That state of affairs may have changed but that was the situation when the committee met. It is necessary to have international agreements in order to reserve space for our satellite.

Also to be considered in any international agreements is the question of frequencies for broadcasting, something that Canadians and hon. members may not be aware of. I suggest it is quite possible that those working on the project have been so carried away with the beauty of the idea that they cannot see the forest for the trees. It is time that we studied this matter carefully in committee.

When we were pursuing this subject in committee I suggested that United States Officials felt that a domestic satellite system for the United States was too expensive for them. They think it is too expensive for them but we do not think a satellite is too expensive for us. Usually the United States does not shy away from anything that is costly. Surely it will cost us just as much as it would have cost the United States to instigate this sytem. Furthermore, it is not only a question of putting a satellite into orbit. There is also the question of land stations. Although we have a certain number of land stations it seems that they cannot be used for satellite transmission purposes and that we shall have to build other land stations. Specialists of the minister's department believe that the whole satellite program will only cost between $50 million and $60 million. Frankly I am sceptical about those figures because, from what I have been led to believe by people outside the government, the cost of such a system could be a minimum of $200 million a year. If that is so, although such a system would be very nice, Canada simply cannot afford it.

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

I have raised these questions, Mr. Speaker, because instead of trying to figure out how best to organize the proposed corporation I suggest the entire matter ought to be referred back to the committee immediately so that experts may be called to give their opinions. Neither the minister nor any other hon. member wishes to be sold a bill of goods by people who may be very well meaning but not completely informed. I suggest that it is up to us to scrutinize this entire matter much more carefully than we have done.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the minister of some history, because it seems to me that in this legislation he is repeating the tragic error that was committed when the Conservative government of 1934 introduced the Bank of Canada Act. The government of that day created the Bank of Canada, with shares to be issued to the general public. There was great controversy over that and it was pointed out, just as it has been pointed out to the minister in this debate, that it was most important to the national interest for the nation to have control of its financial institutions. The Liberal government of 1936 decreed that the Bank of Canada should hold 51 per cent of the shares, with the public holding the rest. Actually the government of Canada held the bank shares. In 1938, if my dates are correct, the Bank of Canada became a wholly owned government corporation belonging to the people of this country. There were good reasons for making sure that the bank was an instrument wholly owned by the people of Canada just as there is an excellent reason for saying that the satellite corporation ought to be wholly owned by the people of Canada. The same difficulties which arose with the Bank of Canada will plague an organization with this three-legged stool, as the minister refers to it. It may become to be known as a Triton with horses each going off in a different direction. The minister is setting up an organization which is impossible from any point of view.

My reason for supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) is not that I have a particular grievance with private ownership as against public or mixed ownership. That is not what I am arguing. In this case the reasons for public ownership are so compelling that they should be acknowledged and recognized by the minister. I can think of many cases where I would be in favour of mixed ownership and some cases where private ownership could do an excellent job. In some areas private ownership does an excellent job, but certainly not in the case of a communications system which, in the minister's own words, is of national significance and importance and is vital to the future of this nation.

As in 1934, there are very few in this house who would quarrel with the objective of the corporation. We say yes to a satellite, but the quarrel today is the same as it was then. How shall it be financed, how shall it be run, and to whom shall it be responsible? What are the minister's arguments against having this corporation completely publicly owned? They are identical in some ways with the arguments advanced in 1934 that the expertise for running an organization like the Bank of Canada did not exist outside of the banking fraternity. It was said that if we were going to make the bank work we had to involve the bankers and draw on their vast knowledge and expertise.

This is one of the reasons the minister gives for bringing the common carriers into the corporation. Does the minister really believe this? He is a man who has had vast business experience and is renowned for picking up corporations and putting them on the right path. He knows that if he needs expertise it can be obtained. There are consultants who can be called in by the corporation. People can be hired by the corporation. The corporation could have a management team that could farm out part of the technical work to the people in the technical field in Canada today. I do not see any great problem in terms of expertise. It is a fallacy that we have to give equity ownership in order to get expertise. I find it difficult to believe that the minister would argue that way.

It was interesting to listen to the speech made by the minister yesterday when he talked about this corporation. Parts of his speech were almost lyrical, for instance, when he predicted the future of this corporation and what satellites can do for Canada. You could see the minister looking ahead and you could almost sense the enthusiasm in his voice. His voice was far less convincing when he put forward his arguments about the financing and ownership of the corporation.

The minister knows it will not be long before the corporation will have to become completely publicly owned. Instead of going through this triton arrangement he has put before the house, I had hoped that the minister would have had the courage to bring about complete public ownership now instead of being dragged into it later as must inevitably happen. I say this because of the conflicts of these three horses all pulling different ways. The common carriers obviously have a conflict of interest. Even if they attempt to resolve their interests in the most honest and diligent way, which I think will be the case, it is unavoidable that they should be drawn in two directions. Do they want the satellite to make money or do they want their interests to make money? How will they act? Will they act to increase the profitability of the corporation or will they act to see that they get the lowest possible rates and make their profit elsewhere? The minister is putting them in a most difficult position which he has no right to ask them to accept.

Private investors have the interest that all investors have. They invest their money and will compare the performance of the corporation against other investments available to them. If the corporation does not provide a rate of return comparable with that of other corporations in Canada, they will withdraw their money. The minister is immediately saddling the corporation with the necessity of producing a dividend and a growth rate at least comparable with that of other investments in the market.

How does the minister reconcile this with the national interest? The national interest may mean that many things have to be done in order to bring the joys of communication and technology to the remote areas of Canada. It is going to be costly. It may not be profitable. How will investors like it when the minister says that the corporation will not make any profit for a while because of the urgent need that Eskimos, trappers and people manning outposts in the northern areas receive the benefits of modern technology? They are going to respond with a very large raspberry. The minister has dealt with investors and should be well aware of this difficulty. Investors want a return. It is going to be very difficult to reconcile the national interest and the interest of private investors. You cannot mix the two. In addition, the common carriers' interest may be in complete conflict with the interest of the private investors and the national interest.

The minister is suggesting an impossible arrangement. I find it difficult to see how anyone can support it. What are the arguments for nationalization or public ownership? Sometimes the argument is no more than administrative feasibility. Sometimes it is not a question of whether public ownership is more moral or less so than private ownership. If a project is vital to the national interest of a country, the costs of its operation have to be taken into consideration. We have experience with privately-owned corporations regulated by government where there is virtually a duplication of effort. The private corporation is trying to confuse the picture and the government is trying to clear it up to see what the true picture is. When the situation reaches that position, it is no longer a matter of ideology whether these outfits become public corporations. It is necessity for accounting and efficiency purposes that they go into the public domain. In this way the obvious accounting difficulties are eliminated as well as the need to regulate and for them justify their position as private corporations.

Why, then, has the minister brought in the legislation in this form? Perhaps he will say he brought it in for the reason he gave in his speech yesterday. But I and many other people, I believe, find his speech most unconvincing. If I am wrong I would welcome the intervention of the minister to say that my suspicions are unfounded, but I suspect that he and the government have been put into a box. Perhaps the private interests have said that if the government undertakes this project on its own as a completely public corporation they will not use the satellite but will find other ways to develop their programs rather than participate in the satellite program. It may be that the minister has been forced to take in both the public and the common carriers in order to find enough customers for his satellite to justify its cost.

I say this with some sadness because I do not wish to downgrade the minister's vision and his sense of the future. But if he has got himself into this box it is only because the government has refused to use the power at its disposal. It has refused to say that it has the right to act in the national interest and ask the common carriers and others to go along with the people in the national interest. The minister has backed off. I believe that some day he or his successor will have to stand up in the house and explain as well as possible the reason the legislation before us today no longer serves the purpose a few years from now and must be changed.

The minister has said he does not want to see the satellite become a burden. Perhaps I might use his exact words. He said that the government at the taxpayers' expense could build and operate the system by itself but that they had rejected this alternative. Why? If it is to be profitable enough to entice private investment, why does he reject that method if it would result in a profit for the public of Canada? Is it so difficult to raise the financing for profitable operations? I do not believe that is the case. Others are able to do so, and I am sure the credit of the government of Canada is better than that of most other organizations.

Why has the minister rejected the idea of this being a public operation? It would not be a burden on Canadians to finance it publicly if it is to be profitable. It is difficult to understand what the minister's argument is. On the one hand he talks about the national interest and the need to do things that are necessary for Canada. On the other hand he talks about making a profit. He brings in different groups of people who are in opposition to each other; their purposes are not all the same. He brings this jungle into the house and expects us to accept it at face value. I can only say that the minister will have to do much better than this. He will have to be far more convincing in his arguments against public ownership than he has been up to the present.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the remarks made a few minutes ago by my colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), and I would particularly insist that the minister answer the questions which have been put to him before this bill is deferred to the committee, so that we can know at the outset what will be the scope of the participation of French Canadians or Quebecers to this bill.

It is all very well Mr. Speaker, to say:

—by combining into a single entity three interests or groups: the government, private industry, which in this instance means the common carriers, and the public at large.

In principle, this seems to reflect very well the intent of the government to establish this corporation. However, in practice, when one speaks of "the government", it is to communications that one is referring and therefore to the question of language and of cultural content. This is why one must ask oneself: What is it to be? Which government will participate in this project? The bill is far from being explicit in this regard.

In this particular field, Quebec was the first to innovate. A few years ago, the government of that province began talks with the French government in order to establish a telecommunication system by satellite which would broadcast in French.

I fear that through this bill, the federal government is engaging in a game to the finish with the Quebec government. Whoever has the first satellite wins. Therefore, this point should have been clarified. The language in which the satellite will be broadcasting should really reflect the nature of the country. It is not good enough to repeat the minister's words:

> Third, provide an extension of television service in both languages to all Canadians. This satellite, Mr. Speaker, will broadcast both in French and in English, in short it will speak the languages of Canada.

It seems very nice and I could be asked: "Why then get excited, since the minister specifically stated that the satellite will speak Canadian?" But, Mr. Speaker, this is precisely what has been done for a hundred years. What does "to speak Canadian" mean? We have known for a hundred years that to speak Canadian is to speak almost exclusively English. And we know that while television and radio have been in operation for many years, there are still in the country some locations without any French-speaking broadcasting service, even if the Canadian government, had undertaken to establish such a service.

And when such a bill is introduced and the same administration is entrusted with the task of establishing telecommunication by satellite, we are entitled to ask ourselves if the satellite will still be broadcasting in English only.

We are ready to believe in good faith; we have done it before, but we know about the heroic fights carried on to obtain a minimum of justice.

This is why before introducing such legislation, it would have been better to secure the full co-operation of Quebec and other provinces which have important French-speaking minorities, in order to ensure unequivocally that those satellites will really broadcast in French.

That is why the hon. member for Lotbinière asked the minister to advise us further on that point.

We know for sure that negotiations have been held and are still going on between Quebec and France on that matter. What will happen if those agreements become effective? The episode of the international airport will be re-enacted and that must be avoided. Therefore, first of all, we must avoid undue haste in passing this bill, if it is simply to beat Quebec to it, which seems to have been a major concern of the government. It is perhaps for this reason that upon reading the minister's speech a second time, we realize that he very often emphasizes the need for the satellite to be national, from which we gather that if ever an agreement is concluded between France and Quebec for the launching of a satellite designed for transmission in French, it would be an international undertaking.

So, I wonder to what extent the federal government would accept the co-operation of the provinces. In fact, the minister said, and I quote:

> During the past nine months continuous and extensive discussions have taken place with all the parties interested: the potential users, and participants including the common carriers and C.B.C.; the provinces; other government departments; manufacturing industries.

What kind of negotiations were there with the provinces? They resembled those who took place regarding the international airport; we know that what was said in the house is not to be trusted, because even though the government claims that it did co-operate, it denied what the minister stated to the house.

That is why before the bill is referred to the committee, we would like the minister to tell the house immediately what type of co-operation he received from the provinces and, particularly, from Quebec. What kind of guarantee was given to the provincial government? My colleague mentioned it a while ago. This is about communications and, therefore, about questions that are based on culture and education. There is necessarily a difference between the form and the matter. Even if the minister does not want to make distinctions, there is an enormous difference. He must not again get into meaningless struggles which do not lead anywhere. To my mind, politics must not always be "concentrated" in such a way that they reveal a perpetual conflict between the interests of Quebec in particular and those of Canada.

This game should be stopped and this is why we ask the minister to clarify his position on this subject. He must tell us exactly what negotiations went on with the provinces. How does Quebec feel about this? Let us not, once again, create a situation which will lead to an enormous amount of bickering particularly in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I end my remarks by saying that the minister, who is a former member of the Quebec government, is perhaps better able to understand these things and to give us explanations before this bill is referred to the committee.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the question to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment is as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Post Office Department—Vancouver—permanent employees to replace those having casual status.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATION

MEASURE ESTABLISHING OIL AND GAS COMMITTEE, AND REGULATING POWERS OF GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. Robert K. Andras (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill S-29, respecting the production and conservation of oil and gas in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. I think there might be general agreement in the house to refer this bill after second reading to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development rather than to the standing committee indicated in the motion. If the house is generally agreeable to that suggestion, perhaps an order should be made to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that somebody, either the minister or one of his colleagues, would be making a statement on the bill. I gathered that the Minister without Portfolio would do so.

Mr. Baldwin: There must be someone to apologize for it.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to make a statement in this debate in my capacity as Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We have before us Bill S-29, an act respecting the production and conservation of oil and gas in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. The proposed act may be cited as the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. It was passed by the other house on March 20 of this year.

The basic purpose of this proposed legislation is to provide statutory authority for the control and safety of oil and gas operations, and for the prevention of waste of the oil and gas resources within the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

The presentation of the bill to the house for second reading is especially timely as today more than ever before the eyes of the Canadian petroleum industry, and indeed of the international petroleum industry, are on the latent oil and gas resources of Canada's north.

The vast belt of sedimentary rocks which extends northward from the petroliferous sedimentary basin of the four western provinces, down the 1,000 mile length of the Mackenzie River Valley into the Beaufort Sea, and thence eastward through Canada's Arctic islands and under its marine channels almost to Greenland, has long been regarded as highly prospective for oil and gas. However, the industry's interest in these great prospects has been limited because of their isolation from the markets for crude oil and gas, and the attendant high cost of transportation, as well as by the difficulties to exploration and development posed by a rather harsh northern environment.

In recent years, as the demand for oil and gas has increased, on this continent particularly, the search for reserve supplies has forced the frontier of oil exploration northward from the western provinces deep into the territories north of latitude 60. The frontier was extended in 1968 to the northernmost limits of Canada's land area in the Arctic islands by the operations of Panarctic Oils Limited, a company founded by a consortium of 20 oil and mining corporations in partnership with the government. In this unique far northern venture, the Canadian government holds a 45 per cent equity and working interest.

To date, only one oil pool has been discovered in Canada's north. Oil production from this discovery at Norman Wells about midway along the Mackenzie River has been continuous since the days of world war II. A small refinery was built there during the 1930's to supply petroleum products to the uranium operations at Port Radium.

Numerous small gas pools have been discovered in the Territories in a belt one hundred miles wide bordering the 60th parallel Late in 1967, a large pool was discovered at Pointed Mountain, less than 20 miles north of the tri-corner formed by the conjunction of the borders of the Yukon and Northwest Territories and British Columbia. This large gas reserve is currently being developed and is committed to supply markets in southern British Columbia and the northwest United States commencing probably in 1971.

The announcement of the discovery of probably the largest oil pool in North America at Prudhoe Bay, on the Arctic slope of Alaska, less than 200 miles west from the international border between Alaska and Yukon, has served to trigger the largest rush for oil and gas lands in Canada's history. It has been estimated that the Prudhoe Bay pool contains more oil than the proven reserves of all Canadian oil pools found to date. Petroleum geologists consider the prospects for such elephant-size pools in Arctic Canada are excellent. Consequently, since the discovery of Prudhoe Bay, exploration permits covering over 180 million acres of Canada oil and gas lands in the Yukon and Northwest Territories have been issued—doubling the amount of land previously held under exploration permits.

The optimism for early significant oil discoveries reflected in these many interrelated events has served to escalate the amount spent on oil and gas exploration in Canada's North in 1968 to over $30 million, and exploration is expected to double in the next few years. With exploration at a high pitch, discoveries are almost certain to follow, and the need for legislation to control production, conservation and safety in respect of development of this resource is both immediate and critical.

The need for the proposed legislation before us today was recognized by what is now the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in 1960. Over the last eight years, work on drafting the act has continued. This included research into the nature of the matters included and a study of comparable legislation in the western provinces. Extensive formal discussions were held with representatives of the petroleum industry both individually and through the Canadian Petroleum Association, and consultations have taken place with appropriate senior staff members of the National Energy Board, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and other departments concerned.

The bill as drafted is divided into several parts. Part I treats regulatory powers in respect of production and conservation and defines waste. Part II specifies various production arrangements including pooling and unitization. Part III describes the means of appeal and administration. The forepart of the bill provides for the constitution of an oil and gas committee for the purpose of any inquiry, hearing or appeal, or the making of any order pursuant to the proposed act. The jurisdiction and power of the committee are described, as is the manner of the enforcement of its decisions.

The bill deals with a highly technical subject, one which I suggest could best be reviewed in detail during committee hearings when we we can provide and ask various experts to explain in familiar terms exactly what is being done. However, the bill does express certain policy approaches which I think it would be desirable to point out at this stage.

The underlying concept of the bill, which is common to similar legislation in several provinces, is the prevention of waste and the conservation of the oil and gas resource in the sense that as much as possible must be recovered from the reservoir during the time an oil and gas field is in production. We do not find the same conservation philosophy applying in the case of mining since, in general, it is usually possible to open up a mine again and to take out ore which may previously have been considered uneconomic. In general, this is not possible with an oil and gas field. If we were to allow an oilfield to be produced at its first initial flush rate of production we would soon find that the reservoir energy, which is what pushes the oil into the well bore and often to the surface, would be dissipated very quickly with the consequence that we might recover no more than 5 to 15 per cent of the oil actually in the reservoir. Conservation, therefore, really means getting out of the reservoir as much oil as it is physically possible to do by conserving and even augmenting the reservoir energy.

This is done by first defining what we mean by waste, which is more than the simple idea of just allowing the oil to spill out onto the ground, and then by setting production rates, well spacings and patterns and by ensuring that we find out as much as possible about the reservoir in order to be able to control production from it. All this involves a great deal of highly technical engineering work. The bill provides how this will be done and will authorize the minister and his department to establish producing rates, well spacings, production methods, etc.

Because of the different structure and form of an oil field compared, for instance, to a mine, the engineers very often have to work with indirect information. From time to time there will be differences of professional opinion with respect to the nature of this information and the interpretation of its meaning. Part of the duties of the proposed oil and gas committee will be to look into cases where such differences of opinions arise and to ensure that the interpretation of the information available is as satisfactory and as fair as possible to all concerned.

The bill has been drawn up in order to encourage the employment of the latest techniques in developing oil and gas fields. In particular, it seeks to encourage early unitization on a voluntary basis. Unitization is really the operation of an oil or gas field as if it were owned by only one organization; thus only the minimum number of wells required for efficient production would be drilled and, in theory at least, these wells would be located at the best possible position throughout the field. In addition, early unitization will allow the early introduction of what are known as assisted recovery methods, since it is recognized that rather than wait until the original reservoir energy has been seriously depleted before seeking to replace this energy, the employment of water or gas injection which seeks to maintain the reservoir close to its original energy level is far more efficient and results ultimately in the recovery of more oil.

A further aspect of early unitization and the most important one from the northern viewpoint is that it will help to ensure against over-investment in production facilities. In the early days of the oil industry many more wells were drilled than were actually required to drain a given oil field. Gradually, as more experience has been gained, the number of wells drilled in new fields has been reduced, but in the older fields, of course, all that can be done is to close down some of the wells which still represent an over-investment in production facilities. Oil prices on this continent reflect in part this over-investment and the lack of knowledge at that time.

Northern oil will obviously have to compete in markets a long way from its point of production, and transportation costs will inevitably represent a significant proportion of its total delivered cost. In all probability it will have to compete, in part at least, in overseas markets. To do this it will have to be low cost oil, and we can help to achieve this by encouraging early unitization.

The bill also provides that where the committee considers the lack of unitization is contributing to waste, perhaps by failure to institute at an early stage the assisted recovery methods to which I referred earlier, it may require that the field be unitized within a specific length of time or be closed down. The unitization, however, would still depend upon the parties involved working out between them a suitable plan. Thus, although this might be termed compulsory unitization in a sense, it is not compulsory in the way this is usually understood within the industry concerned. The bill in fact strives to avoid imposing upon industry the detailed methods and, particularly, the way in which the oil and gas reservoirs in a field are to be shared by the private participants concerned. We feel this is best left to the participants.

Provision is also made for semi-compulsory unitization so that where 65 per cent of the owners in a pool have developed a unit plan, the committee may be asked to require the remaining owners to participate. If the committee, after reviewing the proposal, is in agreement, it has the authority to require such participation. The clauses in the bill providing for this can be promulgated at a later date, since we believe industry feels unitization is in its own best interests and that participants in each oil and gas field will willingly get together. However, the provision is in the bill.

As I said earlier, although standard in many of its approaches to oil production and conservation, this bill, as is expected, has been developed to accommodate the special conditions which exist in the far north. One significant omission is the lack of any provision authorizing the pro-rationing of oil among all producers in terms of market control. It is considered that early unitization will protect each owner within a single oil field, but that it would not be appropriate to require that markets necessarily be shared among several fields. We have set as our objective that we must achieve low cost oil in the north. This means that each well that is producing must produce as close to its maximum rate under as sound engineering practices as is possible. High volume per well means quite simply low unit operating cost.

We know that costs are going to be higher in the north than experienced in southern Canada or in other producing countries, and this must be offset wherever possible. One way of doing this is to encourage high production rates per well. Pro-rationing in the market sense tends to encourage over-drilling. It adds to high operating costs and is usually regarded as a vehicle for high price maintenance. Since northern oil must compete in world markets, artificial devices which operate within a continental framework would simply price northern oil out of the highly competitive overseas markets.

In summary, the bill provides fundamental legislation to permit control of oil and gas production in the Yukon and Northwest Territories which from all current indicators in likely to expand even beyond the greatest expectations of a few years ago. The wise and orderly development of this tremendous potential in the interests not only of the people who live in the region but also in the interest of all Canadians is an important responsibility which now rests upon the government, and at this stage upon the members of this house.

In many respects, this can be regarded as a routine piece of legislation which seeks simply to establish orderly rules of conduct for the industry to which it will apply. However, in addition it will, I am sure, be one of the foundation stones on which this industry will be able to grow and bring about not only a significant contribution to the economic development of the north but also a major contribution to the economy and development of Canada. A discovery like Prudhoe Bay, if situated in northern Canada, would, I am sure, result in this country becoming not a net importer but a net exporter of oil.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I join with the minister in extending congratulations to all who have made possible the appearance of Bill S-29 before parliament. When I extend congratulations to all who have made possible this important development in our northern resource program they go back over a considerable period in the history of Canada. While it is true that only in the last 10 or 15 years have governments in Canada realized that we have a vast storehouse of mineral wealth north of the 60th parallel, there have been pioneers who caught the vision of our northern potential long before the rank and file of Canadians did, and certainly long before our politicians were willing to accept this viewpoint.

One pioneer I ought to mention is Stefansson who in the decade following 1910 was probably the first Canadian to really appreciate that in her northland Canada had a heritage in resources that exceeded the wildest flights of fancy. Stefansson at first explored under the auspices of the government of Canada. Unfortunately the government later withdrew its support and, as we know, he wound up south of the border where he continued promoting the message, as one who had done considerable exploration and who had lived in the north and among the northern people of Canada, that the northern part of the North American continent was not an austere, formidable, barren and valueless waste but was in reality, as he described in his writings of those days, the friendly north. I suppose he was the first man to promote the idea that Canada is a northern nation, with a northern heritage and destiny. I could mention many other people but I have singled out Stefansson because he was so exceptional and his vision of northern development at that time was unique.

The legislation before the house today I am sure will find support among all parties in the house. It already has found support in the other place. Before being sent to the House of Commons it was discussed extensively in the other place and in committee. Everyone agrees with the principle of the bill and everyone agrees that the time is long overdue for us to take precise and specific legislative action to deal with the orderly development and conservation of mineral resources which are now recognized as existing in fact and are not a mirage. This is the purpose of the bill as I read it, and that is the emphasis the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) has given in his introductory remarks.

Actually, interest in northern development has only been aroused in recent years. In 1953 the federal government of the day enacted legislation establishing a department of northern affairs which, for the first time in Canada's history, recognized Canadian responsibility in the north. In fact, there are still members in the house who were present when that legislation was first enacted. The development of the late 1950's and early 1960's was received with some scepticism, which is perhaps inevitable since Canadians, as our history demonstrates, have tended to cluster along Canada's southernmost boundary throughout our entire course of development. The Canadian population is concentrated along the Canada-U.S. border. Someone has said that Canadians live as close to the United States border as U.S. immigration laws permit.

That phenomenon having been part of Canada's history, it is understandable that when the government of Canada between the years 1957 and 1963 began promoting in a major way the concept of northern development, the idea was greeted with some scepticism and even derision. That era has now faded into history and we are pleased that the present government is as enthusiastic about northern development as was the former government of 1957.

To indicate how rapidly interest has grown in prospecting for oil, gas and mineral wealth in the north may I cite some figures. In the late 1950's permits for exploration covered only about 50 million acres. Now 250 million acres are covered by permit. About $5 million was spent on exploration in the early period of development compared with exploration expenditures of some $50 million later when the development program got under way. That is almost as much money as is expended in Alberta yearly, which is the great oil and gas producing province in Canada. Expenditures there average about $100 million per annum.

The bill before us is the by-product of considerable experience, both positive and negative, in oil exploration, conservation and development in Canada. It is not necessary to recite some of the unhappy aspects of this period of development. We learned some hard lessons from our early mistakes in the province of Alberta. These were covered in detail by spokesmen in the other place who dealt with the wastage of the Turner Valley field and with policies of past federal and provincial governments which failed to ensure the protection of this rich mineral resource for the benefit of the people of Canada. These are the less happy aspects of the early exploration period of the oil and gas industry of Canada.

May I now mention some of the happier incidents which really are the basis for the legislation before us today. This bill is actually a result of the work of the National Energy Board, now an integral part of Canada's oil and gas policy. It is a by-product of the national oil policy which is administered by the National Energy Board. I presume that involved in the legislation there will be Canadian participation features to ensure that the resources of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will be developed in the best interests of all the people of Canada.

I have paid tribute to the early pioneers. There have also been some recent pioneers who should receive honourable mention for making possible the development which we see today. It was in 1961-62 that a group of hardy pioneers first ventured into the high Arctic in search of what was then regarded by the sceptical people to whom I have already referred as an oil mirage. Unfortunately we hear very little mention of the wildcatting, as I think it can be called, which took a group of small Canadian companies into the most remote part of the Arctic islands to drill for oil and gas resources that they felt on the basis of the best geological information available at that time lay beneath the frozen barrens of the Canadian high Arctic in billions of barrels. Two of the moving spirits behind that venture were Mr. Jack Gallagher of Dome Petroleum and Peter Bowden who sent his drilling equipment. It is a saga that should not be forgotten because it pointed the way to the current exploration effort taking place in the Canadian high Arctic.

Many of the people working on the drilling crews acquired their experience in the winter of 1961-62 on Melville Island at Winter Harbour. I remember how these enthusiastic Canadians found it impossible to get Canadian transportation facilities to venture into the high Arctic. They were successful in hiring the Thora Dan, a Danish vessel, which ventured into the traditional Northwest Passage hoping to make Winter Harbour before the ice closed in. The expedition had to depend on charts that went back into the last century and which I believe had been prepared by Perry's expedition. They were the most recent navigational charts available. This fact alone indicates how sadly we had neglected development in the high Arctic. They were racing against time. They were caught in the ice and the icebreaker, Sir John A. Macdonald, had to go to the Northwest Passage in order that they could finally make their way to Winter Harbour on Melville Island.

This is a saga of Canadian developmental pioneering in the high Arctic that should not be forgotten. It is amazing how little reference there has been to that first pioneering venture at Winter Harbour. It was that venture which gave rise after several years' delay to the broader Panarctic program and exploration. It is interesting to note that the same Mr. Gallagher of Dome Petroleum is still one of the leading figures from the private sector. His enthusiasm, courage and pioneering vision have made possible this further venture into the Canadian northern regions.

I recall hearing prophesies in those days that these men would find another Leduc in the high Arctic. I recall the sceptics firing back with equal enthusiasm that this was just a little too much for the imagination. Now that Prudhoe has come in, it seems entirely reasonable that had these men been infinitely fortunate they might have discovered the northern Leduc and Canada might now be enjoying the boom that has come to Alaska as a result of the tremendous oil finds at Prudhoe Bay. While these pioneering young Canadian businessmen indicated they could find a northern Leduc, they were realistic enough to recall that it took about 100 dry wells before Imperial Oil finally brought in the gusher at Leduc. As a result of these pioneering efforts we now recognize that these men had a realistic approach toward the prospects of the north. It is encouraging to see that their dreams and enterprise are now going to be interpreted in the specific terms of Bill S-29.

The Winter Harbour exploration, as I recall, went down to 11,500 feet. The drillers worked in sub-zero temperatures that went down almost as far as the well itself. They were working in the extreme cold of the high Arctic, 60 degrees below zero and colder. They worked all through the period of the Arctic blackness. Their only contact with the world at that time was air communication and a radio telephone system which they had set up themselves. They proved the geology even though they did not get gas and oil in great abundance. As stated by the experts in the Quirin report which I believe was published in 1962, we now know that the estimates of reserves in that report of 45 billion barrels of oil and 275 trillion cubic feet of gas were conservative.

There is not much purpose in prolonging the discussion further from the standpoint of general comment. I merely wanted to indicate that a lot of blood, sweat and tears in the past had gone into making this event possible. The bill had very careful study, review and amendment in the other place. It is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for further study and discussion following second reading. On the basis of closer examination possibly additional amendments and refinements might be necessary. However, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the members of the official opposition have no hesitancy whatsoever in supporting the principle of this bill. Had we had the good fortune to continue in office beyond 1963 I am sure the bill would have been before the house much sooner than this.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on examining Bill S-29 one is struck by one obvious value that shines through it. I refer to the government's power to regulate, to control pollution and to minimize waste. If one examines the clauses one cannot help but be satisfied that this bill contains the power to ensure that the benefits from our national resources can accrue to the Canadian people. The real question that arises on an examination of this bill is not in respect of the technical competence of the bill to do the job but whether we will have a government whose policy will be in harmony with, the purpose of this bill only then will we avoid a future sell-out of our natural resources such as we have had in the past. No bill can guarantee that a sell-out of this kind does not take place. That depends on government policy and the willingness of government to act in the best interests of the Canadian people.

This could be very good legislation. I have only one caveat to enter. Clause 6 which appears on page 4 of the bill, reads as follows:

No member of the Committee shall have a pecuniary interest of any description, directly or indirectly, in any property in oil or gas to which this Act applies or own shares in any company engaged in any phase of the oil or gas industry in Canada in an amount in excess of five per cent of the issued shares thereof.

It strikes me that 5 per cent of the shares can very frequently amount to a controlling interest and anyone holding that percentage of shares who acted on the committee could have a conflict of interests. I would think that particular limitation should be removed. I do not think there should be any question of a conflict of interest for those who serve on the board. I think they should be divorced from any pecuniary attachment outside their work.

The provisions of this bill strike me as being somewhat better than those contained in provincial statutes of a similar nature. They take into account the tragic waste of capital and resources that has occurred because conditions were not laid down in the early days of oil development in Canada. We are still suffering from the failure of provincial governments to lay down guide lines in this direction. In fairness to the provincial governments it must be pointed out that for a long time the oil industry was able to bargain and say in effect that it would go along with whoever would give the best deal. The provincial governments may have had limited ability to stand up to the international giants in the oil industry. It is obvious that this kind of inability does not apply to the federal government. The federal government cannot be bargained off in the way the provincial governments were. Therefore, the federal government can be expected to take a much firmer stand.

There is one area in which the federal government has been very remiss. It has stood by or has actively encouraged wasteful expenditures in the oil industry. The Carter commission pointed out that the depletion allowances which exist in our present tax structure have encouraged more investment in the industry than market forces or any kind of forces, or indeed any intelligent planning, would have indicated to be desirable. The commission pointed out that the special privileges for the oil industry should be removed for two very good reasons. First, the Canadian people are entitled to obtain a reasonable tax from those who use the natural resources of the country. Secondly, this would discourage some of the wasteful investment that has taken place in the oil industry.

At the moment when we are considering oil, we must think beyond its effect on the northern areas of Canada. The whole situation seems to be up in the air. The question of our exports to the United States seem to be somewhat in doubt. It might be useful to look back on Canada's national oil policy, how it came into being and some of the effects of that national oil policy. One cannot help but feel that this national oil policy was not written by the legislators of Canada but was written largely by the international oil companies themselves to suit their particular purpose. A story is told about the way the concessions were wrung from the international oil companies, even the minor concessions which were obtained from them. The Canadian government wanted greater access from the United States market for its oil. The government threatened to build a pipe line to Montreal. The international oil companies opted in favour of a continental oil policy of a type rather than a Canadian National Policy. They responded to a threat from the government of the day and I suspect from one minister in particular.

At this crucial moment it may be necessary for this government to state in no uncertain terms that it is prepared to exercise such a threat again unless a better arrangement is made for the oil industry of this country. It might be best perhaps for the oil industry, and for the nation as a whole, not to even threaten the building of a pipe line to Montreal but to go ahead and do it anyway simply because it might, in the long run, give us a more stable future than has been the case in the past. We paid quite a price for that deal with the international oil companies. The agreement was that Canadian oil would flow as far as the Ottawa River and that the oil needs east of that point would be served by off-shore oil. Although never officially stated, I believe the understanding was that the off-shore oil displaced in the United States would be taken in at the port of Montreal.

By going along with this agreement Canada, in effect, made itself part and parcel of United States foreign policy and part and parcel of the international oil companies' arrangements with countries that were friendly to the United States. I am not aware that this parliament was ever told this was the deal or that this was the situation. Only in the years subsequent to the development of the national oil policy have some of these facts become more clear.

After all the benefits of this vaunted oil policy have been counted, where do we stand today? First of all, we still have a great imbalance in respect of oil in that we are importing more than we export, despite the fact we are capable of not only supplying all Canadian needs but probably the needs of the United States as well. We have a tremendous capacity in this country. Our exploration costs and our cost of oil recovery are somewhat lower than those in the United States, although perhaps higher than the cost in countries in the Middle East or Venezuela. Our exploration and recovery costs are about $\frac{1}{3}$ lower than those in the United States, yet our prices are among the highest in the world, if not the highest to the consumer.

Someone might say that gasoline costs $1 per gallon in France, but I am referring to the price less tax. We in Canada are paying a higher price for gasoline, less tax, than anyone in any country in the world, and there is no need for this situation. One individual sent me an estimate in which it was suggested that the Canadian consumer was paying approximately $500 million more each year for gasoline than necessary. We have put ourselves in the position of being scared to death about what the United States might do regarding the importation of oil from Canada.

Day after day in this house we have seen concerned members from the West rising to ask the government what is to happen in respect of our exportation of oil to the United States. I can appreciate that western members are concerned about this matter because a great deal of the prosperity and orientation of our western provinces is related to the exportation of oil. It always gripes me to note that these questions are asked with an almost pathetic feeling accompanied by a fear about what we would do if the United States cut off our oil exports. Apparently we should do everything possible to ensure our access to the oil market of the United States.

This situation is a dreadful one for any country and we must find a solution. It is time that we developed a truly Canadian oil policy which made long term sense and put us in a position other than that of a satellite of the United States, subject to the whims and pleasures of lobbying or the changed nature of United States politics.

A number of studies have been conducted in respect of the feasibility of a pipeline to Montreal. Some of these studies were conducted privately and some publicly. Most of them contain arguments that at the present cost of offshore and domestic crude, and the cost of transportation, such a pipeline would not be feasible but would tend to increase the price of gasoline on the Montreal market unless the market were protected.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

These arguments are based on a number of factors. First of all, they assume that the price of crude in Canada at the wellhead is a correct price and that there is no reason to doubt that this price is as low as it might be. These arguments are based on the belief that this price is a realistic one and not related to the United States market. It can be demonstrated that the price of Canadian crude could be substantially lowered, still leaving sufficient profit to those people in the oil industry.

The price of crude oil at Montreal delivered through a pipeline is sometimes based on the cost of transporting oil through privately owned pipelines. The cost of transporting this oil through a publicly owned pipeline has not been calculated. The only figure I have heard as to the difference between the cost of transporting by a privately owned pipeline in comparison with a publicly owned pipeline was the figure given to us at a committee hearing a number of years ago. At that time we asked a member of the energy board whether this would make a difference. He said there would be a considerable reduction in cost as between publicly and privately owned companies. If we are to move crude oil to Montreal it seems we must do so through a publicly owned pipeline.

From all the evidence I have seen, I am convinced that we could probably reduce the cost of crude oil in Canada if we operated publicly owned pipelines rather than the jumble of privately owned pipelines which now exist.

Mr. Woolliams: What about the cost of the arts centre?

Mr. Saltsman: Well, there is a difference.

Mr. Woolliams: Is there a comparison between that cost and the cost of a pipeline?

Mr. Saltsman: I think there is a compelling argument in favour of publicly owned pipelines. This argument may not be acceptable to hon. members in other parties. The hon. gentleman has mentioned the arts centre, but there is a big difference between an arts centre and a pipeline. This is not a fair or a valid comparison. If the hon. member wants to make a fair argument in respect of publicly owned pipelines he should attempt to demonstrate this difference in a more convincing manner.

It is my belief that a publicly owned pipeline can be shown to be more economic than one operated privately, providing there are flow guarantees. Let me read from a report of a commission set up by a privately owned, independent oil producer association in Canada in respect of the outlook for Canadien crude, production and marketing. The consultant was W. S. Levy and Company Incorporated. This report refers to the Montreal market and reads:

> If access to the Montreal market permitted accelerated production of Canadian crude, the producing industry could take a considerable reduction in crude prices without economic loss. For example, with a 200,000 barrel per day increase in production, crude prices could be around 22 cents per barrel lower without any reduction in the present discounted value of future production, even taking a 5 per cent discount factor. And transportation costs to Montreal might be reduced by perhaps 13 cents per barrel, if substantial volumes of Canadian crude were to be moved to Montreal, in addition to the increasing volume into eastern Ontario.

The report concludes:

> The Montreal market is a less economically attractive alternative. But if Canada's expanding productive potential cannot achieve adequate volume in U.S. markets, or if prolonged uncertainty seriously threatens incentives to Canadian oil development the entry of Canadian oil into Montreal could be considered as an alternative. At least to the extent that the preferred alternative of expanding exports proves elusive, the preference for low priced foreign oil in Montreal might also have to be qualified.

The argument is sometimes advanced that if we try to move Canadian crude into Montreal the international corporations which own oil wells in Canada, in Venezuela and the Middle East would cut their prices at the port of Montreal to make sure that it would be uneconomic to transport Canadian oil to that market. They would not be cutting their price, they would be maintaining the price to meet the cost of Canadian crude.

We are not getting any benefit from free entry of oil at Montreal. These companies are adjusting their prices to make sure that the cost of oil at Montreal will enable them to maintain this privileged position. This position is supported by our national oil policy. I think the real question, therefore, as it concerns oil in Canada, is whether this parliament, acting on behalf of the people of our country, will determine the nature and future of the oil industry in the best interests of Canadians, or whether we will permit the international oil companies to do what they think is best in their own interests.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I hold no brief for any particular industry, but I think it is high time somebody from western Canada set out the case for western Canada. We have been talking about the north, and I link what I have to say with the arguments put forward. We have been dealing with exploration in the north and the effect it will have on other oil and petroleum pools and energy resources in Canada, particularly western Canada.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to Calgary to speak about the petroleum industry—perhaps I can say this better than most other members who have knowledge of the subject—he did not speak to the people who have knowledge, experience and financial interest in the industry. I do not refer only to the companies but to the people of Alberta. The industry pours a large amount of money into the treasury because we are the only province without a sales tax. I think that even my own friends to the left would see some economic advantage in this.

The Prime Minister did not speak to the oil industry about their problems with regard to trade. Why was this? The reason is that the Prime Minister went to see the President of the United States—he had with him several briefcases of documents concerning various subjects—and left the impression in Washington that we in Canada were going to pull out of the collective defence of the western world. He met with the President of the United States, the Presidents' advisers and his cabinet members. When the President of the United States was vice-president of that great country he had some sympathy for Canada, but on this occasion he had little sympathy for the Prime Minister's arguments with reference to Canadian trade in petroleum and wheat, because of our attitude in reference to NATO.

I think the President of the United States told the Prime Minister that we were not interested in measuring up to our responsibilities as a nation to work with the western world. One can only negotiate with the other side of the world from a position of strength, not weakness. We are taking the French, de Gaulle, line with reference to defence. During the election campaign the Prime Minister told the United States that we would pull right out of NATO. This is the reason he received such little sympathy for Canada's problems in the petroleum and wheat industries. I use wheat only as an analogy. We are already down 60 per cent in our production. I spoke about this great industry over a year and a half ago and warned the government what would happen to our wheat trade and petroleum trade if they did not immediately come to grips with these problems.

I think this is the message the Prime Minister of Canada got from the President of the United States, because he came back here and said—he was speaking metaphorically, of course—that dealing with the United States was like sleeping with a big elephant. He should have said, in view of the advice he received regarding international policy, that he felt like a mouse caught in the toe of the elephant.

We on this side of the house have for many years been asking questions in order to ascertain where Canada is going as far as the north is concerned. One of the problems is, of course, where is the northern boundary? This problem was not created by this government or parliament. I would be most selfish if I laid responsibility for the problems concerning the boundary of the north on this government. I say this because on July 24, 1964, I asked the following question which can be found at page 5941 of Hansard. The question had been asked before in this House of Commons. I asked:

> Could I ask the minister one question? It may be this is not the proper time to deal with it, and perhaps the hon. gentleman would like to answer it later.
> Could the minister give some indication to the house, because of the stress on the importance of the north—

I emphasize that this was five years ago.

> —whether there is a definite northern border in Canada; and could he tell us how many oceanographers and other scientists are working at the present time in defining a true northern boundary for Canada? It seems to me very important that this should be done, particularly with the type of world in which we are now living.

The Minister said he could not answer the question but would look into it. These matters are very important when we are dealing with a bill which will affect the great, wealthy resources of petroleum that are to be found in the northern islands of Canada. In this respect we have a conflict with the United States. If our border does stretch to the far northern islands, we are only twelve miles from the U.S.S.R.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume the same at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF ANNUAL REPORTS, BUDGETS, ETC.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the consent of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of putting to the house the motion with regard to the reports of the Canadian National Railways and of Air Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It has been suggested that the annual reports for 1967 of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian National Railways securities trust as well as the auditors' report to parliament on the accounts of the Canadian National Railways system for 1967, all tabled on September 16, 1968, and the annual report for 1967 of Air Canada and the report to parliament of the auditors on the accounts of Air Canada for 1967, tabled March 14, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Perhaps, if the house is agreeable, that could be made an order of the house.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we are quite agreeable to that and we are glad that the government has finally decided to do it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am glad the hon. member's colleagues have withdrawn their opposition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION AND CONSERVATION

MEASURE ESTABLISHING OIL AND GAS COMMITTEE, AND REGULATING POWERS OF GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill S-29, respecting the production and conservation of oil and gas in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In the few minutes I had before supper I pointed out that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to the United States for consultations with the United States President and his advisers with a view to obtaining a better deal for the petroleum and oil industry as well as for our wheat trade he ran into some difficulty because, in my personal opinion, Canada had failed to live up to its responsibility, so far as the western world is concerned, for the collective defence of the western world. As I suggested before supper, when the Prime Minister said that dealing with the United States was like sleeping with an elephant he probably felt like a mouse caught in the toe of the elephant because he was being squeezed to death as a result of the prejudice to our foreign policy.

I also mentioned the fact that the question of our northern boundary is not a new one. It has been discussed on many occasions. I myself raised the question on July 24, 1964, when I asked the then minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Laing:

> —could the minister give some indication to the house, because of the stress on the importance of the north, whether there is a definite northern border in Canada; and could he tell us how many oceanographers and other scientists are working at the present time in defining a true northern boundary for Canada?

At that time we were promised an answer, but have not received one yet. This was almost five years ago, and we are still in the same dilemma. We really do not know today where our northern boundary is. This matter is becoming increasingly important in view of the now known and proven reserve of petroleum, our wealthy resources and our mines. I recall my words as they appear at page 5960 of Hansard of July 24, 1964. At that time the committee of the whole was discussing the estimates of the department of northern affairs, and during that debate I said the following:

> Mr. Chairman, before going on with a few suggestions in regard to the parks, I would like to say something with regard to northern affairs. I have here a map of Canada which shows Melville Island, Hubert Island, and so on, away up to Alert Point. I have just been told by the hon. member for Northwest Territories that Alert Point is 2,350 miles north of Winnipeg.

I pointed out that the distance from Calgary to Ottawa is 2,600 miles, so it is almost as far from Winnipeg to Alert Point as it is from Ottawa to Calgary. We appreciate therefore, how vast is the north. I also said:

> I have said that it is 2,400 miles from Alert Point to Winnipeg. This is a vast area of our country. We have heard the hon. member for Yukon on several occasions; we have heard the minister and others talk about the vast resources of the north. Those resources are there. Let us make sure they stay Canadian. To do this we should now take a serious look at the matter of establishing our northern boundary. I put this suggestion forward as a constructive suggestion—

Yet, five years later there are members on this side of the house asking the Prime Minister whether the government is concerned with the delineation of our northern boundary. We wonder whether the islands I have mentioned, which contain a proven reserve of oil and a vast quantity of valuable minerals, are within that boundary.

I also said that a case should be made for the west. It seems to me it is high time that some of us from western Canada spoke up for the west. As I said before the supper hour, we have already lost the wheat market. Our exports are down by 60 per cent, and I predict tonight as I predicted before, that we are now about to lose our oil markets. Every day when we question the government we receive the same answers that the matter is being reviewed, that it is being considered, and that task forces are being set up.

The reason the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did not discuss the subject of petroleum in the City of Calgary is not unrelated with the position he took with regard to NATO and similar areas where he had to deal collectively with the western world. In such matters we can never make a decision ourselves; we can only negotiate from strength. Hence the weakness of the case the Prime Minister presented in Washington. This is what the Gazette had to say about the oil situation as early as October 28, 1968:

> Canadian deliveries of crude oil east of the Rockies for October will run around 275,000 barrels daily or under the U.S. suggested ceiling of 280,000, sources here say.

I wonder what the reaction would be in central Canada, the centre of power, where we find the largest number of parliamentary seats. Canada is an anomaly in the world today. It can currently produce over 200 per cent of its current rate of consumption and yet has a net trade deficit in oil of over $200 million per year. The need for a new oil policy is apparent—that is, a policy which adequately recognizes the new developments which have taken place in recent years and the changes which can be expected to occur in the future.

When anybody talks about petroleum today and the national oil policy created by this party when we were in government, he should realize that the policy then set up is as dead today as Marley's ghost. The only reason there is any trade between the two countries today is because that trade is a bit like Topsy. The United States is dictating to Canada, and proper consultation is not taking place because this government is failing to measure up to its responsibility.

What is the effect of all this? Let us talk about grain for a few moments. It is not only western Canada that is suffering as a result of the difficulties facing that industry. When I spoke in Dresden, Ontario 800 men had just been laid off by the International Harvester plant. I understand how some hon. members think about this subject, but somebody has to present the case for the west. We hear it said: They had it good for a number of years. The fact is we are not dealing exclusively with western Canada but with the economy of Canada as a whole. The same holds true when I speak of the petroleum industry. We only produce in western Canada some 40 or 50 per cent of the amount we are capable of producing, taking into account all the rules and regulations in respect of conservation. If the $200 million presently spent on imports were spent in Canada for Canadian crude oil, the total effect on the Canadian economy through secondary and tertiary industries would be approximately $700 million annually. At present we have a trade deficit because, among other things, we are purchasing $200 million worth of crude petroleum from abroad.

Major Canadian banking institutions have calculated that the multiplier effect of money generated in the national resource sector of our economy is approximately 3.3. Canada loses on every barrel of imported crude oil, not only through the foreign production profits which remain offshore, but because each barrel of Canadian crude oil pays more than one dollar in the form of taxes and other payments to Canadian governments. Therefore, to the extent of Canada's crude oil imports, such revenue is lost. Replacement of such imports by Canadian oil would result in benefits being received directly by the citizens of Canada. In other words, what would the replacement of those imports mean to the Canadian economy; what would the effect be upon the taxes which must be collected from the people of Canada. I note in passing that Alberta is the only province in Canada today where there is no sales tax.

If the west is to have respect for any national party sitting in this house, it must immediately be offered a national policy on petroleum. We have already lost our wheat markets, as I have said. Now, we are on the verge of losing our petroleum markets. All the national newspapers are pointing this out. We need a new national, continental oil policy. Such a policy cannot be developed overnight. Complex pressures in both nations make the gradual approach the only feasible one. We have to work these things out in consultation with the United States. This is the point at which I disagree with the hon. member who spoke for the New Democratic party. It is not possible to work out a new oil policy in isolation; one cannot have an isolationist policy in the field of economics any more than in the field of external affairs. Markets can only be found by working in co-operation with nations which are producers, exporters or consumers and arriving at a basic policy which is fair to all concerned. I shall link this later with the development of the north.

To survive in the west today, any national party must come out with a new policy for the petroleum industry. I say at once that there is no chance as far as the Liberal government is concerned. I say this with some sadness in my heart. Never was the Liberal party hated so intensely as it is in the west today, not only because of its attitude to wheat but because of its neglect of the petroleum industry. Some hon. members may laugh, but let them go out west and see for themselves. There is a vacuum, and unless we come forward now with a dynamic policy as far as grain and petroleum are concerned, once again in western Canada splinter parties will spring up as they have done in the past. I have always spoken out against such parties, believing it is only through a large national party covering the whole spectrum of our national life that provinces or regions can develop, because we are all part of one great nation.

Nevertheless, I predict that unless something is done along the lines I have suggested, this is one of the consequences we shall face. I say this because both grain and oil mean so much to the west, and to Canada as a whole as far as the gross national product and the country's wealth generally is concerned. As I say, we need a new continental oil policy worked out in consultation with the United States, and such a policy can only be negotiated from strength, all the associated problems have to be worked out together, because they are all interrelated.

Oil corporations, international or domestic, tend to accept government guidelines wisely conceived and, in turn, tend to shape policies in the light of their research and experience. I recommend that initiative come at this stage from Canada in a declaration by the government that it endorses the principle of a continental oil policy and is prepared to consult with the United States authorities and the industry to evolve such a policy.

It should state willingness to permit transit over Canadian territory of a major pipeline link between North Alaska and the major inland markets of the United States and transit through Canadian Arctic waters of oil tankers from Alaska. It should set out what it considers to be basic components of a continental policy and its readiness to consult with the United States to establish general guidelines.

We heard this afternoon from an hon. member of the New Democratic party that all those pipelines should be publicly owned. Not so long ago when the C.C.F. formed the government of Saskatchewan we heard that they believed all industry should be taken over by the state. I have only to draw that analogy, as I did this afternoon when I made a remark in connection with the speaker for the New Democratic party, to illustrate what happens when certain functions are taken over by the state. On the other hand, industry is able to build itself up economically and to make certain it performs economically on behalf of the nation.

I did make reference to the National Arts Centre; it is like pouring money down the sink, as is the case with the Bonaventure. The same thing would occur if we had state owned pipe lines. Probably they would be built for political reasons only. When votes cease to be important they will cease to be bought.

As far as I am concerned we need a continental petroleum policy for North America. We must consult with industry and build pipe lines that will be for the advantage not only of this country but of the United States and Mexico. We must build pipe lines that will enable us to develop the petroleum resources that are ours, not only on the prairies but in the far north as well.

We have had in the north the discovery at Prudhoe Bay, developments in Alaska and also in other northern islands. These have shown there is a great pool of crude petroleum in that area. If we do not make a move now to negotiate with the United States on a continental oil policy, the United States in a short time will build a pipe line from Prudhoe Bay to Anchorage. And why shouldn't they, Mr. Speaker? Why wait for Canada? We are not very sympathetic to some of their causes, so why should they be sympathetic to some of our economic problems? Having built a pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to Anchorage, the large freighters that are built today will transport crude petroleum from there to Vancouver and on to Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Mexico. At that stage what little is left of the wreckage of our national oil policy will disappear and the markets for the prairies will have gone.

The United States knows that Canada is a safe place for investment. As a result, it will develop these pools of petroleum knowing full well that the demand and need in the future is such that they can always come back to western Canada where this petroleum has been developed. Now is the time to make a move and take a decision on this policy. It is no time for reviews and for task forces. I do not know—no one in this house knows—what is going on between this Liberal government of Canada and the United States government in the matter of petroleum. We cannot get any answers. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) did say that that great gladiator, this fighter for the west, the Minister from Saskatoon, would be making a statement soon. He has not done much for the grain industry, but I hope he will do a little more for the petroleum industry.

I should just like to summarize what is going on so far as the north is concerned. In recent months an oil field that may prove the largest ever in North America was found at Prudhoe Bay, on Alaska's Arctic coast. It has stimulated a massive exploration program in Alaska and speeded a multi-hundred million acre play in northern Canada.

This development has presented a challenge to the governments and oil industries of the two neighbour nations of North America. That challenge demands a continental oil policy to succeed the informal arrangements—and they are very informal—between Canada and the United States that have grown in the past decade of expanding western Canadian oil potential, declining United States oil security and increasing uncertainties of oil supplies.

Prudhoe, and the expanding Canada oil search, have made a new ball game, and new ground rules are needed. Economic interests of Canada and the United States, continued adequate growth of reserves and security demand that the North American nations and their oilmen gather facts, bargain hard, and evolve new continental guidelines. The faster that is done, the sooner will Arctic resources join others on the continent in creating an economically secure energy supply for the growing hunger of years ahead.

With the reserves not only in Alaska but in the Arctic, in northern Canada and on the plains, the oil market should be prorated so that everybody gets a percentage. In our national oil policy a deal was struck with the United States. My good friend from the New Democratic party said this afternoon that we should not make deals like this, but you cannot live in economic isolation. The deal we made was that we would permit Venezuelan crude petroleum to come into Canada as far as the Ottawa valley, serving the concentrated population areas of eastern Canada, providing the United States would let us have a certain percentage of the northwest market down to Chicago and Toledo.

Why did we make that deal, Mr. Speaker? First of all, it was to secure a fair market for Canada, rewarding those people who had invested their money in this country as well as assisting the growth of the industry. We also made this deal because we knew, as did the United States, that in order to keep both North America and South America free from a Communist revolution we would have to encourage trade. Therefore, this deal was struck to permit Venezuelan crude to come to eastern Canada, thus keeping trade between Venezuela and Canada and Venezuela and the United States in a healthy condition. That is the real reason behind the national oil policy, but as I have said it is now as dead as Marley's ghost.

On top of this we now have this tremendous development in the north, with the serious possibility that in the near future Alberta, Saskatchewan and even Manitoba will be bypassed as far as markets for natural gas and crude petroleum are concerned. We on this side of the house say that it is high time that the government brought in a new oil policy. It is high time the government negotiated with the United States and advised parliament of their decision. But this government never seems to learn. It is a cabinet government that does not know that parliament is the place to seek information, to make suggestions, as I am now doing, suggestions that have been prompted by the serious nature of the events now taking place in western Canada.

I repeat that as far as the west is concerned, having lost our agricultural markets we are now about to lose our petroleum markets. Depressed economic conditions are, sowing the seeds of the formation of a new splinter party, a party now seen to be sprouting in the west,—and let us be realistic and face it—that leans towards separation from this nation. Who has sat in this chamber for a period of time, even for the period that I have sat here, and does not believe that Canada is a great nation that can only be held together when we all appreciate each other's economic problems from the maritimes to Victoria?

The Prudhoe Bay development means that the great trio of North American oil states is becoming a quartet, spread from the Arctic to the Gulf coast. Number one is Texas, with proved petroleum reserves of about 19 billion barrels. Its gulf neighbour, Louisiana, is approaching nine billion, slightly behind Canada's Alberta in the heart of the continent. Prudhoe could give Alaska over the next year or two as much as 10 billion barrels proved. And northern Canada could make up a quintet soon after. In fact, "oil giants" need not stop at five.

Prudhoe came at a time when exploration was already spreading in Canada beyond the Alberta heartland into geologically favourable regions across the nation. Stimulated by Prudhoe, the Canadian play now covers over one billion acres, over 1.5 million square miles, under exploration permit or lease.

We heard this afternoon that we had encouraged too much investment in developing the petroleum industry. Surely we cannot have too much capital to develop this kind of resource. We need all the capital we can get to develop these resources and markets so that we can balance our trade with other countries, increase our gross national product and not have to go to the little wage earner for more taxes. We must increase the industrial growth of this nation, and that is where I part company with the Socialists. I cannot understand their arguments. Fancy having an hon. member say this afternoon that there is too much investment in Canada in the development of oil! If we adopt that kind of thinking, Canada will remain forever in the dark ages.

May I now say a word about natural gas. There has been tremendous development in the last few years in this field and western Canada needs more secondary industry. Natural gas is being piped from western Canada to eastern Canada and the United States. We do not have in our area concentrated centres of population. We ought to develop secondary industry so that western Canada could use, as a raw material the available natural gas. Certainly, our natural gas will enable secondary industry to be established in our area and the entire nation will benefit economically.

My last thoughts are these, Mr. Speaker. I note that not many government supporters are here. I plead with the government, nevertheless, to come forward with some petroleum policy which will answer our needs. If the minister does not think Canada is ready to negotiate a new continental oil policy would it not be more honest for the government to come to the house and tell us the truth, so that our people may know the truth. He should be honest with us instead of hiding the facts and talking about establishing task forces and conducting reviews.

Not only should we be advised of the truth of the situation, as we ought to have been advised by the minister some months ago with respect to the grain industry, but the minister ought to tell us exactly what the government's approach to this problem is. I ask the minister to consider setting up a committee composed of hon. members of this house and of the other place so that we may talk with congressmen in the United States, set before them Canada's position and try to work out a new continental oil policy under which Canada gets a square deal in the North American petroleum market. The taxes that this industry can pay will be enormous and could go towards establishing secondary industries in this nation.

The economic health of central Canada is not good. I expect that the other hon. member for Calgary will make a plea similar to mine. I expect he will advocate that we take a new look at the petroleum industry. I have always said that we westerners must stick together. Our differences in this house stem from the differences in the areas we represent rather than from any political differences. I have always maintained that. It has always been a rule in this house that one stands to talk and sits to listen. For too long has this country taken the idea for granted that everything in western Canada is extravagantly wealthy and that we are living in luxury. Our agricultural industry faces its most severe crisis since the 1930's. In western Canada we are moving toward a recession the like of which has not been seen since the 1930's and the petroleum industry also will soon move into a recession. One is always proud when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) visits one's city, but I say to the government that the reception he received the other night will be as nothing to the one he will receive six months from now if he does not make a very clear and honest effort to improve the situation of the people of western Canada. I say to the government that we are on the move. If we do not get help here we shall get it elsewhere.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could share the feelings of hon. members who congratulated the minister early today for introducing this legislation. They said it was timely legislation. Frankly, I had hoped that by this time we would see tremendous oil discoveries in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and that this legislation would be late in coming. We have been disappointed in this regard, and the legislation is timely.

The first oil and gas conservation legislation in Canada was enacted in the province of Alberta in 1938 and our basic conservation concepts have remained much the same. They are, to effect the conservation of oil and gas resources, to prevent their waste, to secure the observance of sufficient and efficient practices in the location, spacing, drilling, equipping as well as the operating and abandonment of wells. In short, that concept covers all aspects of the production of oil and gas. Another aim of our legislation is to afford the owner of the producing property his just and equitable share of the production of any pool.

As I say, this legislation was pioneered in Alberta. We had the benefit of experience in the United States and we did not have the benefit of any experience in Canada. It is interesting to note some of the similarities and differences in the present legislation and legislation which was pioneered in Alberta. That legislation, incidentally, formed the basis for the Norwegian government's legislation after petroleum had been found under the North Sea adjacent to that country.

In Alberta we have a mixture of freehold and Crown lands. In the Northwest Territories mineral rights are all vested in the Crown. In Alberta, the Oil and Gas Conservation Board is a body corporate and in the proposed legislation it will be a committee serving under the minister. In Alberta, the operations of the Board are financed by the province and by private owners. Under the proposed legislation the operations of the committee will be entirely government financed. In Alberta, the Board controls its own expenditures, has the authority to hire its own staff and determine what facilities it requires. Under the proposed legislation, the committee will be dependent entirely on the minister and on Treasury Board.

All these differences, I take it, stem from the basic fact that in that province we have freehold and Crown land whereas here we are dealing entirely with Crown land; and there can be no objection in principle to these differences. There is one distinction in this proposed legislation which I think is remarkably progressive. The Conservation Boards or members of Conservation Boards of the various provinces are entirely appointed by the Lieutenant Governors in Council. Under this legislation, we are to have a five man committee, and two of those men must be from outside the public service. Furthermore, one of those two outside members must be present at any meeting in order to make a quorum. That is something the petroleum industry has been urging for a long time in the province of Alberta. I am very happy to see that the federal government has taken the initiative and got off on the right foot by implementing this suggestion immediately.

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) was worried in case one of those outside members might have some interest in the petroleum industry. I think he referred to the provisions of clause 6. I take it that clause 6 provides they may have no direct interest in any oil plans over which the committee would have jurisdiction, but they may have an interest in the petroleum industry or a company connected with the petroleum industry in Canada. I feel it would be very difficult in this particular industry to obtain the services of the type of competent person that will be required on this board. Almost any person who is the least bit knowledgeable in the industry has some investment in it. That is one of the nice things about it.

We are not talking about an industry that is looked at remotely as some people who advocate nationalized industries tend to observe them. This is an industry in which almost everyone who is the least bit successful has a very intimate and particular concern with what they are doing. I have dealt at some length with the act and do not want to be any more particular. This is not the time to do that.

I was very interested in the brief survey of the oil discoveries in the area that this will cover which the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) gave. He pointed out that the only oil in that area to date is the Norman Wells discovery which was made in the early years of the war. There are numerous small gas pools and more recently a large gas pool was discovered. Those small gas pools may be small by standards of the Northwest Territories, but the fact is the ones there today would very definitely be commercial reserves were they located closer to markets than they are.

I do not think from what we have in the way of discoveries there can be any doubt in the long run we are going to have a major gas industry in the Northwest Territories. About two weeks ago a $1.4 billion project to pipe gas from the Liard River Valley and from portions of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan was announced. For the first time, gas from the Northwest Territories will be going into the United States midwest market.

While the people at Prudhoe Bay may contemplate building a pipe line across Alaska and sending the oil across the west coast to market, there is no way they can economically move gas that way. The gas that comes out of prudhoe Bay will have to come down the coast of the Arctic Ocean, down the Mackenzie River valley and through the western provinces to the United States.

Gas is something that has been rather neglected by people talking about the oil and petroleum problems of western Canada. In 1957 the United States imported about 60 million cubic feet of Canadian natural gas per day. By 1968 this volume increased to 1,570 million cubic feet per day, approximately 2,500 per cent. This year it is anticipated it will reach approximately 1,800 million cubic feet per day. During the 1957-67 decade, the United States proven gas reserves increased over 20 per cent while its demand for it increased some 50 per cent. The reserves of gas in the continental United States over the ten year period 1957-67 were reduced from 21.4 years to slightly less than 16 years' supply. To maintain the inventory of 16 years' supply by 1980, just 11 years from now, will require the discovery of some 450 trillion cubic feet of new reserves, which is double the discovery rate which has been experienced in the continental United States in recent years.

If only the present discovery rate is maintained, the supply of gas available in the United States by 1980 will be reduced to less than eight years. Incidentally, during this same decade, 1957-1967, Canada's proven gas reserves increased by about 125 per cent to 46 trillion cubic feet, this despite a five-fold increase in production. At the moment we have a life index of gas in Canada of 37½ years. That is over double that of the United States. We are finding new reserves at nearly triple the production rate while the United States is finding new production on the continent at one-fifth of the rate at which their requirements are increasing.

There is no way gas can economically be sent by ship at the present time. An experiment is being conducted sending gas from Algeria to England. This gas lays down in England at a price of approximately $1.28 per 1,000 b.t.u.'s. This is over ten times the economic price of gas delivered in the North American continent. We have a very great bargaining point with the United States. They need our gas. There is no way the new production they have in Alaska can meet their gas demands. The government of Canada must use this bargaining point in dealing with the United States. They need and want our gas and they can take a fair share of our oil with it.

The Canadian government today is in the petroleum business in a very large way. The oil play connected with Canada stretches some 3,500 miles in an east-west direction and 2,200 miles from the 49th parallel to within 600 miles of the North Pole. It includes 400 million acres in the heartland of current production in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and northeastern British Columbia. It includes 310 million acres in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, Beaufort Sea and throughout the Arctic Islands. Some 200 million acres are held offshore north of Labrador, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia and west into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. An additional 100 million acres in the Hudson Bay and 16 million acres off the Pacific coast of British Columbia are presently under exploration.

Over $1.3 billion will be spent this year by the petroleum industry in exploring Canadian land, most of which will be spent in the province of Alberta, but many millions will be spent in the Northwest Territories and other areas. To give a comparative figure, it is estimated that approximately $100 million will be spent this year in Alaska in expanding the Prudhoe Bay find. It looks very much as though the prospects of the Canadian oil industry are not as dark and gloomy as some would have us believe. North America is the world's largest oil consumer. We use approximately 14½ million barrels every day and this figure is being increased each year by half a million barrels a day. Current supplies include over 2½ million barrels daily of net imports from overseas. Even with Prudhoe and other new domestic sources, it does not appear as though the continent can greatly reduce these imports.

By the mid 1970's our requirements will be 3½ million barrels per day greater. By 1980 our requirements will be 7 million barrels per day greater. In other words, we will be using approximately 20 million barrels a day at that time and yet our proven reserves are only about 50 billion barrels. That is a 12 year supply at the present rate of consumption. It would be less than the 10 year supply by 1980. This is taken in a continent where we have regarded a 12 or 15 year supply as being strategically safe. The figures in respect of the world's oil supply might even impress a legislator who is accustomed to dealing with the vast millions of dollars which come up all the time in the estimates. I believe it is important to realize how large this industry is in the world and in Canada. However, I do not think the net result of these figures perhaps gives rise to the panic the previous speaker expressed when speaking of the oil industry. The oil industry has some long range problems. On the other hand, it has never had a better year than this year, 1968. Every annual report of the companies engaged in this industry shows records in all the positive categories. I do not think the people who purport to serve the best interests of the nation or the petroleum industry are in fact doing so when they push the panic button.

The industry has some long range problems but I really do not feel we can regard the oil industry in the way in which one Calgary newspaper did recently when it spoke of it shortly after the Canadian Petroleum Association convention as a beleaguered, industry in its hour of need. That is not to say that the industry does not have problems; it does. One area in which I must confess I agree entirely with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is that when coming here from the west I found when I spoke about oil problems I was greeted as someone who purports to lobby for the two or three dozen oil millionaires who undoubtedly do exist. I am not nearly as concerned about them as the three-quarter million people in western Canada who are directly or indirectly dependent upon the petroleum industry for their support. This is an area in which I find difficulty in getting the message across. Sure, there are millionaires but there are a great many families there also.

Fifty per cent of the new employment in Alberta since the end of world war II is directly attributable to the petroleum industry. Twenty-five per cent of the new employment for the same period in the province of Saskatchewan is attributable to the petroleum industry. This industry is as vital to the prairie provinces as is grain and as is manufacturing to the Niagara peninsula. It seems, however, that when we talk about this industry and its problems people seem to think we are talking about an industry that is supporting not a great many people but a handful of new millionaires. This is an attitude which must be changed in the administration because it is something with which the people in the west simply cannot live.

I was very pleased the other day to be informed in this house by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the officials in Washington are discussing not just a continental oil and gas policy but a continental energy policy. I would have thought that by now the members of the opposition would have solicited the answer to the question remaining in my mind with regard to whether this involves our water resources as well. If it does this would open up some very interesting bargaining points for Canada when dealing with the United States of America.

We know that the interests in the United States have been looking for a share of our water resources for a long, long time. I do not want to impair the negotiations at all but I am hopeful that in taking a look at the overall energy situation on this continent all forms of energy will be included because, if so, we have a great deal to sell the United States which cannot be supplied by Prudhoe Bay or by other parts of the United States.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that Bill S-29 is before us and that the government is taking this step in bringing some order to the petroleum industry, particularly as it affects the new frontier of the north. I do not think the importance of this bill can be over-estimated. However, I do not believe we really understand how important it is. As has been said today by the former minister of northern affairs in the Diefenbaker administration, a great step forward has been made in the north and the vision has caught on. But it has not entirely caught on yet. The people of Canada still do not appreciate the whole purport of what will happen if we do not take immediate steps to grasp the opportunities which exist. In some cases this may be the last opportunity we will have for perhaps 25 years. This great new resource which has been discovered, particularly on the shores of the Arctic, is extremely important. It will have a great effect on the settled areas of the three prairie provinces.

If we are not very careful our great opportunity to take part in this new development will slip through our fingers. Instead of being a great opportunity for Canadians to take advantage of this new development, it may well be a crippling blow to our own petroleum industry for a period up to 25 years. I would suggest that because we have no merchant fleet of any note we should get cracking on a pipe line, not just a pipe line but perhaps many pipe lines. If we supply the facilities first to move this oil rapidly and cheaply to the heart of the north American continent, we will have a great deal to say about the industries which will spring up along those pipe lines. In this way we may be able to compete with the cheap ocean traffic which we know is a great threat to any other form of transportation on this planet. I would like to see us build ships, but I think it is too late now to recall the warnings we had over the past 20 years in respect of Canada's merchant shipping. So, I am limited to the very narrow point of begging that we get cracking on an oil policy for Canada so that we will have the ability to move this oil to the continental markets of the United States.

If we have this ability to move the oil and gas, we will derive the benefit of the employment which will result from the building of the lines. In addition, frontier towns will spring up. We will not only have the benefit of these lines but also of the industry which will grow up along these pipe lines for the next 100 years. If we do not do this, we will lose this industry.

I have seen editorials in newspapers throughout the United States and across this country which indicate that Alaskan authorities are worried about this very thing. These people want to build up a great sea-going complex. They want to build a great Arctic port to handle this oil on behalf of this country. If we build this series of pipe lines which I envisage we can help develop our own reserves.

It is not only Prudhoe Bay that is rich in oil. We have every reason to believe that Prudhoe Bay is only a small part of a much larger field which stretches throughout the Canadian north, the Arctic islands and the ocean beds which are close to Canadian soil. It is expected that these reserves will prove within the next 25 years to be so large as to dwarf the Prudhoe Bay potentiality. It is only through the establishment of pipelines that we can expect to handle this development. This is our opportunity and we must move quickly.

It is my hope that the government will not listen to those on my extreme left who advocate the development of this area on the basis of a government monopoly. People living in high rise apartments in large cities must have a source of income. We must make some claim to cut in the people of Canada on this development. We must work out an ideal situation closely tied with our tax structure to encourage these people, particularly the young, to take advantage of this opportunity to go north during the summer months. These people who are attending university could well spend these few months exploring this area and constructing these pipelines. We should encourage them to do so through tax incentives. Perhaps we should provide a five year tax moratorium in order to develop this area while at the same time helping these young people to finish university. This would amount to an investment in this country. The experience would be an advantage to these young people when they are living in high rise apartments in large cities. These people must have an income greater than what they might receive from relief. This is a new frontier and it needs developing.

This new development represents something greater than the biggest gold rush of our time. I have in mind the oil reserves in the Northwest Territories, the Arctic and those areas adjacent to this country. These areas are also rich in copper deposits and those water resources to which the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) has referred. We must take into account not only the oil reserves and an oil policy but also a transportation policy. We must provide transportation facilities in the north, particularly along the Mackenzie River. Perhaps the best way to do this is by building pipelines.

When I first came to this house 11 years ago, I was aware of the tremendous value of the tar sands in northern Alberta. I am afraid these will not be developed for a number of years but they will still exist after we have taken the oil from the Arctic islands. This resource remains for future development but such development will require vision and encouragement. We must now grasp this vision of northern development, and we must do something about it.

I could not agree more than I do with my confrere, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), when he suggests that we cannot expect the United States to co-operate with us on an economic basis unless we in turn co-operate with the United States both economically and ideologically. I believe that we are much closer in agreement with the ideology of the United States than ideologies held by other countries. Our future depends on the joint security of North America.

Those ideals held by free countries in Europe upon which we relied are no longer reliable. These countries are now vulnerable. If we stand with our friends here in North America we may well find that in the year 2000 this area will be strong and free. We in this country must be prepared, as a part of North America, to defend ourselves. We must co-operate in this regard with the United States. We must not make this country a haven for those individuals who run away from their duties south of the border. We must do something more than criticize. We must prove that we are willing to enter the 21st century on a bargaining basis backed up by more than just rich natural resources, tremendous water power, fresh water resources, natural deposits of copper, uranium, natural gas and petroleum. I do not agree that we should enjoy all the benefits of these things as a result of the United States paying the cost.

I would be ashamed to ask anybody to defend my freedom unless I was willing to defend it myself. I am not being partisan. There are a great many members in this chamber who will agree with me. It is time we all stood in this house and made ourselves abundantly clear. At times members of all parties go along with pacifist ideas. Peace in our time sounds very nice, but we must consider peace in our time in relation to what has taken place in Czechoslovakia. I remember seeing a cartoon in 1937 which in effect asked the question, what does Czechoslovakia mean to the average person? In 1939 I found out what this meant. I spent seven years of my life finding out. More than 20 million people lost their lives finding out what this meant, to say nothing of the untold damage, destruction, pain and hardship experienced by millions. We will have peace in our time only when most people are ready to shed every drop of their blood to build their country and defend it.

We in this country are blessed with large deposits of natural resources. We must be prepared to go to the United States and say we are prepared to defend our northern boundary. Perhaps then, we can justify allowing the United States to defend the coasts of this continent. It is easy to go to Mr. Nixon and ask him for a better deal in respect of U.S. markets for oil and natural gas. I do not hesitate to suggest that I could make such a deal. If no one else is willing to see President Nixon, I will go. I am willing to risk my seat in this regard. I would gladly give up my seat if I could not face Mr. Nixon with this kind of a deal, because I am sure that is the kind of man he is. He is like most of the recent presidents of the United States including Roosevelt, Eisenhower and Kennedy. I still like to think that our Prime Minister could go down to the United States and talk in this fashion with the President. If he did not do so on his latest visit, I suggest he should go back.

I have faith that the President of the United States is the kind of man you can talk to if you put your cards on the table. Let us tell him that Canada is not a soft country; that we have a very tough, strong and honest side. Let us tell the United States that we are willing to pay our way in the world. Let us say we are willing to play ball with our great American neighbours. Let the United States know that we are willing to work; that we are willing to get in there and build the finest set of pipe lines they ever saw.

Let us get our young people involved in this venture. Let us get our people to save money to this end. Let the government of Canada become involved in this project. Let it give tax concessions in order to encourage people to save money, to get back to work and off the relief rolls. In this way the money needed to build adequate housing can be obtained.

Let us get our people to take advantage of the new frontier. I do not believe that only western Canadians feel this way. Many of our young people, particularly those in the maritimes, would like to work in the north and take advantage of this sort of bill. I am quite sure that hundreds of thousands of young people in Quebec would like to go up there for five months in the year and get in on this bonanza. They would like to see what the other part of Canada is like. In this way our young people would find there is a great deal more positive thinking in Canada than there is divisive thinking.

Any time I have been to Quebec I have had a fair deal. Any time people from Quebec come out west they will have a fair deal. If we all go north and develop this country we will make for ourselves and Canada a great deal of money. We do not have to buy Canada back. All we have to do is develop this new Canada. I refer to the area anywhere from 100 miles north of the boundary to the north pole. There are in the north enough resources to give us all the things we talk about. We have not done this. These are the things in which I believe. These are the things I challenge the government to do.

I believe that Bill S-29 is a step in this direction. I am not being negative about it at all. I believe we have to do a great deal more than pass legislation. Let us send the bill to committee and see how it fits in with some of the side issues. The side issues may well be the most important factors in this question.

This bill, in itself, will not be enough unless we provide the vehicle through which these things can be accomplished. It is no good developing resources in Canada if we have not an international market for them. We will not have an international market unless we make those types of spiritual decisions which are important. Unless we find the spiritual strength, we will not be able to make the necessary decisions.

We must come to grips with the things that count. Do we believe in freedom? Do we believe in survival? I know no easy way to achieve these goals than by the same old attributes of thrift, hard work and character. Character does not mean letting Joe do it. Character means consultation. That takes a little humility. Character means hard work; it takes a little "stayability", courage, honesty and co-operation. We must see the other fellow's point of view. I am sure that when we do this we will re-establish amongst the people of Canada a great deal of respect. If we are to believe what some people are saying about us, we do not have this respect at the present time. People worry about us. They wonder whether we ever do anything at all except pull each other apart. Let us show them they are wrong.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up too much of the time of the house. I have listened with interest to the various speakers and am rather surprised at some of the speeches I have heard. We have had a speech on defence policy. I have searched the bill in vain to find a clause dealing with defence policy. However, I presume that quite a bit of latitude is allowed in this type of debate and I accept the speeches in that spirit.

Bill S-29, an act respecting the production and conservation of oil and gas in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, is an important piece of legislation. Having checked through the bill, I find it is divided basically into four sections. I would like to very briefly deal with each section and then ask a few questions regarding the oil and gas policy of the Liberal government. I think I know what their gas policy is; we have had a great deal of that since September. But the Canadian people are entitled to a very clear blueprint of where we are going in the development of this extremely important resource.

The bill we are discussing this evening is an interesting piece of legislation which could have a very decided influence on the production and conservation of oil and gas, particularly in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. This is the main function of the bill, as I understand it. Gas and oil resources are primarily the responsibility of the provincial authorities. That is why this bill applies primarily to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

A close examination of the bill will disclose that most of the regulations for the production and conservation of our oil and gas resources have been left to the Governor in Council. This seems to be one of the long suits of this government, namely, orders in council and regulations which are left to the cabinet. I believe this is one of the major weaknesses in the proposed legislation. You can lay down good guide lines, but those good guide lines can be utterly destroyed by a legislative group which sets up regulations which are not in the interests of the industry or the people of Canada. I, for one, feel that provincially and federally we have had far too much government by order in council and not enough legislation is contained in the bills which we pass.

As I said before, the bill is divided into four main parts. One section sets up the oil and gas committee which will consist of five members, not more than three of whom will be from the public service. I think this is a good section of the bill. The committee will oversee the production and conservation of oil and gas in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. It is provided in the bill that to be a member of the committee one must have specialized or technical knowledge of the oil and gas industry. Again, I think this is an essential ingredient of such a member of the Committee.

Then, the bill defines the exemptions of those who are allowed to sit on the board. The clause reads:

> No member of the Committee shall have a pecuniary interest of any description, directly or indirectly, in any profit in oil or gas to which this Act applies or own shares in any company engaged in any phase of the oil or gas industry in Canada in an amount in excess of five per cent of the issued shares thereof.

Sometimes when I look at this last qualification I am not certain that it is a good one. Many of these companies are closely tied together, and some of them are subsidiaries. This is something about which we must be very careful.

On checking the legislation I find that the committee is all powerful. It can hold inquiries and hear appeals about various matters. It has the power, the rights and privileges of a superior court of record. Its findings on any questions of fact are binding and conclusive. Clause 11 reads:

Any order made by the Committee may, for the purpose of enforcement thereof, be made an order of the Exchequer Court of Canada—

Of course, I must add that at the end of the bill there is a clause dealing with appeals, and this is essential in any legislation. There must be an appeal from bad decisions made by the government, and they make plenty of them. We find that part I of the bill deals with the production and conservation of our gas and oil resources. This is where the regulations come in, and this is where I believe Canadians should be more apprehensive than ever because all the regulating and defining is left in this particular part of the bill.

Members of this house do not know what is to be put in the regulations, and I for one would be very anxious to have the minister give us, if not on second reading at least in the committee stage, far more detail than he gave to the house this afternoon in moving the second reading of the bill. I think we, and the Canadian people, are entitled to this information.

I notice that part II of the bill defines "waste". It empowers the chief conservation officer to prevent it and also allows an appeal from the decision of the chief conservation officer to the committee if a decision is made by him which the company or the individuals concerned do not like.

We find that part II deals with production arrangements. This section of the bill regulates the economic and efficient production of oil and gas from the areas affected. I believe this is good legislation. It is too bad that such legislation containing proper controls was not introduced many years ago by all the provinces. In my opinion, the clauses dealing with pooling arrangements and unitization agreements seem to be in line with sound conservation policies. But again I say this ties in with the regulations which should be set by order in council and of which the house at this time has no knowledge.

Part III of the bill deals with appeals and administration. However, we find again that the Governor in Council may at any time vary or rescind any decision or order of the committee. In my opinion, this does not make for good legislation.

Many hon. members who have taken part in the debate have dealt with the export of Canadian oil and we have had a good discussion on the existing potential in Canada, so I will not go over these points again. There is just one aspect which a number of hon. members did not touch upon, that is the degree of ownership of the oil and gas resources of this country. Over the years I have been very apprehensive on seeing Canadian resources gradually pass from Canadian control into foreign hands. This is where I believe that we as Canadians must re-examine our position with regard to resource ownership.

Last December I asked some questions in the house regarding the percentage of ownership in this industry. I would like to put the figures on record. For petroleum and gas wells the assets held by foreign controlled companies at the end of 1965 amounted to 83.6 per cent of the total, and the assets held by Canadian controlled companies amounted to 16.4 per cent of the total. These figures show that Canadian control has been lost in this sector of the industry.

Then, we come to petroleum refineries. This is another very important sector of this great industry. Here, we find that the assets held by foreign controlled companies at the end of 1965 amounted to 99 per cent of the total in Canada, and 1 per cent was held by Canadian companies.

Next we come to pipe lines, and here the picture is a little brighter. We find that foreign control was 26.8 per cent while Canadian control was 73.2 per cent.

Then, we come to the marketing of petroleum and gas products, and I presume this refers to the little gas stations which we find on the corner of nearly every street. Here again we find that the Canadian control in this instance was 81.5 per cent, while foreign control was 18.5 per cent. However, it is to be noted that the petroleum resources and the refining of petroleum is mainly under the control of those who live outside the boundaries of our nation. I think that this is not good so far as Canadian control of this resource is concerned.

There are a few questions which I should like to put to the minister in connection with our oil policy. I think every speaker this afternoon and this evening stressed the problem of marketing. I think this problem is one of the major factors in the development of our oil and gas resources. This is why I should like to direct a question or two to the minister. We have heard a great deal about Panarctic Oil. Here, a corporation has been set up to go into the northern part of Canada, and the government itself is participating in the venture. The government has put up money and its representatives sit on the board of directors of the corporation. This development is a very interesting aspect of Canadian life and it is time the minister gave us some clear information about it. He could tell us what we are doing and, in general, how many acres are under the control of Canadian companies; how much of this vast potential oil acreage in the north is under the control of companies outside this nation and just what the government intends to do about marketing the products in the north. I have read a great deal about this. In fact, I have volumes of information or speculation by various writers who stress the fantastic cost of oil production in the north and draw attention to the difficulty of getting the product to markets in the south, in the west or in Europe.

We must be given some answers to these questions. Does the government have a plan for the sensible marketing of this product once sufficient pools of oil have been found? Are pipe lines to be built? Is there a plan which hon. members can see? Can the Canadian people be taken into the confidence of the department? This type of information is required by members here and by the Canadian public at large. I do not think we are asking too much when we suggest that a policy of this type be laid down. It might have to be a broad, long term policy at this stage but there is certainly need for a program which we can see and understand.

There is one further aspect of oil development which I should like to see discussed in the house. I am thinking about Canada's continental shelf areas—there is one off the west coast of British Columbia, there is one off the east coast and another in the Arctic region which may prove to be one of the largest oil reserves in the entire world.

We have all heard of the major oil discoveries in Alaska and I believe there is no doubt that these resources extend into the Arctic waters which we in Canada have always claimed as our own. In this respect, I feel it is high time the government made a clear pronouncement as to the jurisdiction which we in Canada expect to exercise in this area, because these reserves could be a terrific asset to our nation in years to come. It is not many years ago that areas in the Arctic were looked upon as nothing more than vast frozen wastes to be ignored by people of all nations. Other countries have since found that there are vast stores of riches in these areas. We in Canada must be mindful of this situation and I am certain the government is aware of the necessity of staking out a real claim, one which cannot be disputed, as far as our Arctic regions are concerned.

To get back to the subject of the continental shelf, I should like to hear from the minister a clear indication of the government's intention with regard to these areas. According to reports I have read there is a great potential on the Atlantic side of Canada. If oil were to be discovered there in substantial amounts, there is no doubt it would go a long way to assisting an area which is greatly in need of assistance; the per capita income of the inhabitants could be greatly increased and a long step taken toward the reduction of regional disparity. Exploration programs could well be undertaken, perhaps with assistance from the federal government working very closely with the provinces concerned, in which case something might well come out of it.

I shall not spend more time on the subject now. I presume there are other hon. members who wish to speak on this bill. When it goes to the committee some amendments may be moved to the various clauses.

Before I sit down, I would again press the minister to give the house some clear cut information as to the government's oil and gas conservation program in much more detail than is outlined in the bill before us. He should give Canadians a much better indication of the course which the government proposes to take. I, personally, would welcome an assurance that all these potential oil resources in the north with which the bill is concerned are to be retained as far as possible by Canadians in the interests of Canada. I leave this thought with the minister, assuring him that this feeling is very widespread in this country. I trust the policies and programs evolved by his department will lead in this direction.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill has been given to us at a most appropriate moment in our history of resource development in the north.

Like many other members in this chamber I returned to my constituency during the past ten days. One of the areas in which I spent a considerable time was the Mackenzie Delta which is under fairly extensive exploration by the oil companies. It is not difficult to sense the enthusiasm, the excitement which exists in this far north western part of our country, an excitement generated by the activities of the companies involved in the search for oil. I hope the companies concerned meet with a great deal of success. At a place called Tatoonik and another called Tuktoyaktuk we happened to fly over oil drilling rigs drilling right on the Arctic coast. We listened to the rumours. We followed accounts from the oil companies which appeared in the newspapers. We see that what is happening at the moment is only, if I may use the term, a drop in the bucket in terms of the kind of activity that will take place in the search for oil in northern Canada during the next 3, 5, 10 or 20 years.

Both this afternoon and this evening we have listened to hon. members of this house talk of the implications, the complications and the ramifications of oil development in northern Canada. I think that all of us as Canadians are anxious to see a resource development in northern Canada that will benefit not only the north but improve the economic wellbeing of us all.

I do not want to repeat the arguments that have been made or the discussion that has taken place, but there are a couple of areas upon which I should like to touch. With regard to some things that may and hopefully will occur in the months and years to come, neither the companies involved in this exploration nor the governments who will be responsible for the production and conservation of oil and gas should forget those people who live in the particular areas concerned.

At the moment some of the major exploration companies across the country are doing a reasonable job in the encouragement of employment among people who were born, raised and educated in northern Canada. Unfortunately, other companies are not doing as well as they should in this regard. I should like to think that about half of the seismic crews, which I am told consist of approximately 28 people, should be recruited from people living in the north, provided there is some consultation with and engagement of the government, particularly the vocational training people in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Canada Manpower Service. If this were the case, then perhaps not this year but in one, two or three years many of our young people in the north—and the older people as well provided they are interested and are properly trained—can truly participate in this exciting venture.

I also think that some of the companies involved in this exploration should examine their wage scales. In terms of gross wages the remuneration is not really that bad; in terms of hourly pay for working in the bush the wage amounts to about $1.50 per hour for perhaps 350 hours a month, not including overtime. To their credit the companies have made no attempt to circumvent the present wage legislation that has been passed by the territorial government.

The second point here at which I believe we, as Canadians and myself as a northerner, have to look is that we do not want to see the north exploited and become a gravel pit for the use of industries south of the 60th parallel. In other words, we in the north want our fair share of the activity. I recognize that it may be difficult to develop industries that require power derived from our oil and gas resources, but I also recognize there are ways and means of ensuring growth beyond the mere taking of products out of the ground, pumping them through a pipe line and shipping them to places in southern Canada and the United States.

I think this is one area that the minister and his department, having taken upon themselves the responsibility of conservation, and combined with their other responsibility for northern development, must look upon as a primary function. I should like to think that in the course of the discussions in the committee the suggestion will be made, preferably by the minister, that there are ways and means of ensuring that some of the potential benefits to be derived from this area will remain in northern Canada. I am not saying that selfishly; I am saying it because I believe that if we are to be a nation of three dimensions we must have economic development and growth not just along the narrow band north of the United States border.

If we are successful in this regard I think we can look to immediate benefits. The growth and construction of gas and oil lines will have an impact upon the community and will open up communications and transportation routes in areas in the north. However, I believe we must look far beyond this.

During the course of speeches made this afternoon and evening members have asked: Tell us now what is happening with Panarctic. Can we get some clear cut information? How many acres are under the control of this company? I think that most of this information has been made public. I believe that the Panarctic venture on the part of government and industry is an exciting one and one in which the government has declared there are two alternatives, either to make an outright grant under present guidelines or to participate.

A great deal of activity is taking place in the Arctic islands in Panarctic's search. Even if this search is not successful, I think it will produce most important and valuable information regarding what does exist in this part of Canada. I think it has also informed Canadians that this is their land. There has been a lot of discussion regarding sovereignty and this area, and I think that once again governmental activity has established Canadian sovereignty over the Arctic islands as a result of the Panarctic oil program.

Again, I should like to impress upon the minister that in the process of developing a policy in regard to the use of oil and gas in northern Canada we should not forget for one moment the Indian, Eskimo, Metis and white people of the north. They, too, must participate, in some real and viable fashion, in what is potentially an opportunity for great economic growth.

I should also like to re-emphasize to the minister that the north must not become a gravel pit. If resources are there to be developed, then as a result of such development some benefit must accrue in terms of growth and economic development to northern Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS DEFINING "AIR CUSHION VEHICLE" AND CLARIFYING OTHER PROVISIONS

Hon. James Richardson (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill S-23, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill S-23 contains a variety of amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which is, as hon. members know, one of the lengthiest of our statutes. Hon. members will recall that only recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) announced plans for a complete revision of the Canada Shipping Act. The amendments now before us are ones that cannot wait for this major revision.

The bill contains our first legislative provisions concerning the new type of conveyance called an air cushion vehicle. This type of vehicle of course is also referred to as a hovercraft. Until now these vehicles have been subject to regulations under the Aeronautics Act; but, as air cushion vehicles are really surface vehicles the Aeronautics Act is not the appropriate act under which to regulate them. Hon. members will recall that an amendment to the Aeronautics Act received royal assent last month. This amendment, when it is proclaimed, will remove air cushion vehicles from the definition of aircraft and they will no longer be subject to the Aeronautics Act.

I should like to make it clear that we do not intend air cushion vehicles to be regarded as ships but only that they shall be subject to some of the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act in the same manner as ships are when they are being operated over the surface of the water. The provisions we are proposing in this regard must be considered as an interim measure only. There seems to be no doubt that ultimately we will need special legislation for air cushion vehicles, but I believe this would be premature at this time. It will be premature until we know much more about these new craft and how they are likely to develop.

There is also provision in Bill S-23 to allow landed immigrants to hold certificates as masters, mates and engineers on ships, a privilege now restricted to British subjects. Provision is also made in this bill to permit regulations to be passed requiring ships of 9 tons gross tonnage and over to be subject to inspection. The present lower limit is 15 tons, gross tonnage.

In order to complement the provisions of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code there is provision for making regulations on the subject of accident prevention aboard ship and a provision respecting the reporting of accidents that occur on ships. Another clause requires the reporting of other accidents, such as collisions or groundings of ships in our waters. Heretofore only accidents to British ships were required to be reported.

There is a provision for regulations to be made on the subject of pollution of our waters by garbage, sewage and other matters from ships and there is a provision that will allow any wrecked vessel to be removed if it is causing pollution or likely to do so. Provision is also made for regulations to be made requiring all vessels in our waters to be fitted with radio installations. This has been found necessary for traffic control purposes.

In order to remove some doubts as to the validity of some of our by-laws and procedures in the administration of pilotage, there is a provision stating that all existing by-laws are valid.

In order that we may give effect to the provisions of the International Convention on Load Lines, 1966, there are amendments to bring the provisions of the act into line with that convention.

Finally, there are a number of miscellaneous items such as the repeal of certain archaic sections relating to seamen and provisions giving some uniformity to the sections relating to offences and penalties. Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act contained in Bill S-23 are desirable and useful changes, and I recommend this bill to the house.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there has been some private discussion as a result of which hon. members who may wish to speak on this matter may do so. I do not think there will be many speakers and I do not think their speeches will be long. This bill ought to go to committee; but I was wondering if some agreement had been reached for us to carry on for a little while. Perhaps we might carry on for 15 or 20 minutes, if there is unanimous consent to that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, would it be possible for Your Honour not to see the clock for a few minutes so that hon. members may express their views on this matter. I do not think there is a great contention about it?

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, as some members of the Ralliement Créditiste want to speak on this bill, may I call it ten o'clock, which would enable my colleagues to go on with the debate tomorrow?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I was informed that there had been some behind the scenes discussion. Unfortunately, we cannot reach agreement about continuing. Since I had the floor originally, may I call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—VANCOUVER—PERMANENT EMPLOYEES TO REPLACE THOSE HAVING CASUAL STATUS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have been rather persistent in bringing up this matter of casual employees in the post office. I regret to keep a busy minister up late so many nights. I realize that the problem of casual employees in the post office is not new. The casuals were employed there long before the minister took over the portfolio. The minister himself has outlined a number of reasons for having casual employees, reasons which are also outlined in the post office personnel manual. There is mention of the Christmas rush, vacations, sick leave and end of month provisions, and I do not think anyone quarrels with those.

I realize also that in the change-over period brought on by implementing the five day week and by introducing other technological, changes about 2,000 people who have been permanently employed in the post office must be placed in new positions. This takes some time. What bothers me, that bothers many postal workers and many other people of this country, is the preponderance of casual employees in the post office at the present time. To me, this looks like a deliberate attempt to lower the total wage cost. The department is attempting to employ casuals on a more or less full time basis and save money. If that is not contrary to the letter of the act, it certainly is contrary to its spirit and contrary to what is contained in the postal service personnel manual.

I checked some figures and as of two weeks ago these are some of the figures relating to the major post offices across Canada. I will give total figures, Mr. Speaker. In Vancouver, British Columbia, there are 105 casual employees. In St. John's, Newfoundland, there are ten; in Saint John, New Brunswick, there are eight; in Montreal 245; in Moncton, 21; and Trois-Rivières, where some casual employees are working a 40 hour week now to fill vacancies, there is a total of nine.

The people at the Regina post office refused to divulge the number of casual employees there, but it is presumed that there are quite a number there. Winnipeg has 90; Hamilton

95; Quebec a total of 65 in various sections, not all on extended sick leave; Halifax 22; Sherbrooke, Quebec, none; North Bay, 14; Edmonton, 58; London, 60; Windsor, I was unable to get the figures except for the total number of hours and Scarborough, 48. The Postmaster in Saskatoon said he did not have authority to divulge such information. In New Westminster, the total is 22 and in Sudbury, 20.

• (10:00 p.m.)

This is quite a number. Many people, especially those employed or attempting to be employed by the Post Office, are extremely concerned about this. I obtained this information as a result of a telegram from the Vancouver postal workers which reads in part:

> There are over one hundred casuals employed and one hundred applicants have successfully qualified for positions.

I previously confirmed the number of casuals employed in Vancouver.

According to information which I have received, 26 full time positions have been promised in the Ottawa post office, but so far none have been confirmed. I believe I am correct in saying that the agreement reached on the five-day week in February contemplated a 60-day freeze on permanent positions so that present employees' jobs might be protected during the reorganization period. It is now three days from the expiry of the deadline and I hope the minister will tell the house what chance there is of relieving this rather discouraging casual picture across Canada which I have outlined before the expiry date.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) on May 17, as recorded at page 6685 of Hansard, the minister said in part:

> This afternoon the officers of the department will be discussing the letter with me, and they will also be discussing with the officers of the Ottawa Post Office Unions the reasons which caused them to send such a letter and the problem concerning the use of casuals.

He later goes on to say:

> However, this is a problem that we are willing to discuss fully with them.

What I would like to learn is whether the minister or his officials have met and discussed this casual situation with the Ottawa Post Office unions. If not, when can we expect him to do so?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has given all the reasons why there was an increase in the number of casuals during the last several months. Because of the changeover to a five day week and because of our assurance that no permanent employees would lose their jobs—they were guaranteed security—after the middle of October we did not engage any new personnel. Obviously, the work of the Post Office has to keep on going. We employed casuals or part-timers while we were keeping these jobs open.

I quarrel with a report in the Globe and Mail which said that the Post Office overtime has been on the rise. The report refers to our use of casuals. The fact is after the conversion to a five-day week overtime has decreased in the Post Office and the number of casuals is going down continuously. We are discussing this with the union. We are as concerned about the problem as they are.

I may say in respect of the Ottawa post office that the union spokesman who made the charge of nepotism against the post office was, let us say, embarrassed by a questioner on a television program who said it was his understanding that the charge of nepotism could be equally divided between those who were officers in the post office in Ottawa and those who were union members. This turned out to be true. Of something like a little over 100 casuals, 35 could be said to have obtained their jobs because of knowing people inside the post office. On the other hand, about half of them attained their positions because they knew a member of the union. We are plagued with this problem in the post office. We are attempting to work it out with the union. We have an abnormally high sick leave which averages three per cent to four per cent above that in the Civil Service as a whole. There really is no reason for it. We are investigating this and I feel we will work out a solution with the unions. It really is a question of morale.

I want to deny emphatically the implied charge that we are using casuals in an attempt to reduce our costs or the average wage paid in the post office. This is completely untrue. We use casuals because of the nature of the work in the post office. The loads occur at different times. We do not use them for any other reason.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 16, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-150—AGREEMENT RESPECTING DEBATE ON CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN NATO

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement about the business of the house for the next several days. As hon. members know, conversations have been taking place about the orderly disposition of the remaining stages of the passage of Bill C-150, that is to say, the omnibus Criminal Code bill, and also the proposed motion relating to Canada's participation in NATO. As a result of this, I have had two special orders prepared which I would like to suggest to the house with a view to their being adopted.

The first would relate to the debate on Canada's participation in NATO, which has been proposed for Wednesday and Thursday of next week. That order would provide for a motion to be moved by a minister. This could be amended in the usual way as provided by the Standing Orders. The vote would take place at 9.45 p.m. on Thursday. The Wednesday would be a government day, that is to say, from government time, and Thursday would be one of the days allotted to the opposition under the supply provisions of the rules. It would be specifically understood that the debate would not reduce the number of no-confidence debates that can be brought under Standing Order 58 of the house in this part of the session. It would also be stipulated in the order that those participating in the debate, other than the first spokesman of each party, would be limited to 15 minutes. This is of course so that the maximum number of hon. members may participate in the debate.

Under the terms of the second of the orders that I am proposing, the house would allot five days for the remaining stages of Bill C-150, four of these to be given to the consideration of the proposed amendments and the fifth day to be for the debate on the third reading stage. Since most of the notices of amendments relate to clauses 14, 15 and 18 of the bill, that is, the clauses dealing with the abortion question, it is proposed that two days be allotted for dealing with those amendments, that is, this sitting day and tomorrow.

There are several notices of amendments to clause 7, that is, the clause concerning the gross indecency provisions of the Criminal Code. The proposal is that a day be allotted for those amendments, that is to say, Friday of this week. The fourth day, that is to say, Monday of next week, would be available for the other amendments, and it would be understood that both private members business and the adjournment proceedings would be suspended during the days this debate would be in progress. The final day, that is to say, next Tuesday, would be for the third reading debate.

My suggestion is that the debate on the amendment will begin today, that all questions relating to clauses 14, 15 and 18 be decided tomorrow evening, and that all other votes at the report stage be deferred until Tuesday afternoon, that is to say the first thing after orders of the day are called. The questions concerning third reading would be put to the house on Tuesday evening.

There is general agreement, I believe, that the house must rely on you, Mr. Speaker, to guide our proceedings so that, within the limits provided by any special order, time is available to the house for the consideration of all the major possibilities suggested by the amendments.

The proposed orders are rather long, but copies have already been circulated to the representatives of each of the parties. If there is agreement in relation to the proposed order on the NATO debate, I would like now to move that particular motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the order on the NATO debate has been adopted. On that basis I wish to move the motion with respect to the allocation of time to Bill C-150.

Business of the House

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want to make sure that there is understanding of the situation. Is the procedure suggested by the President of the Privy Council relating to the NATO debate agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would therefore like to move the motion with regard to the second of the matters, that regarding the allocation of time to bill C-150.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): These discussions have in fact been taking place and the house leaders and the members of the house are faced with the necessity of trying to accommodate a very difficult and complex debate within our existing rules. The suggestion advanced by the government house leader—with certain changes which we think can be made within the framework of the order as it would be made—are acceptable to us. Often we do foolish things in this house—and in this connection I look particularly at the government, although on occasion the epidemic does spread to this side. But I think that if we were to take the number of amendments which have been introduced and which now appear on Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day and tried to arrange a debate, it would be impossible to do so in an orderly way unless the house showed the common sense, which I am sure it possesses from time to time, and worked out an order of this kind. So, as I say, with the exception I have noted, we would be agreeable to this suggestion.

However if it should happen that the house as a whole were not prepared to accept the order, I hope sincerely that at least we can arrange for an orderly division of the subject matter so that it will be possible for the members of the house who feel they have a contribution to make to direct their attention to a specific subject matter. We hope that under the direction of Your Honour all aspects of the problem can be debated and all the questions on each aspect put at one time.

An examination of the amendments indicates that there is a natural division of the subject matter, so I sincerely hope the house will accept the motion. If it does not, then I hope that under the direction of Your Honour, exercised when necessary, and with the exercise of common sense our debates will proceed in an orderly way directed to one matter at a time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, should like to confirm that there have been discussions among the house leaders and that we have worked out proposals which members of my party are prepared to accept.

If I may recapitulate briefly, we think it would be a good idea to limit ourselves to four days debate at the report stage of Bill C-150, and in view of the way in which the amendments presented happen to fall, that two days on abortion, one day on gross indecency and one day on all the other aspects would be a fair apportionment of our time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what I said that I should not have said, but at any rate I am sure the house understands.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Only too well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We also feel that if there are to be a number of recorded votes on the various amendments it would be terribly time consuming to take them one by one as they come along, bearing in mind the amount of time it takes to get members together. We think it would be a good idea to have the votes grouped. Therefore we go along with the proposition that all the votes on abortion be taken tomorrow night, and that all those having to do with the other subjects be taken at the beginning of Tuesday's business. We think this is a good idea, and that it would facilitate dealing with this complex measure, giving an opportunity for full discussion at the report stage of the subjects in which by their amendments hon. members have shown that they are interested.

Like the hon. member for Peace River I should like to go one step further and say that if this proposition is not generally agreed to by the house there is a second line of defence we could adopt. I think there might be some kind of agreement that even if it is desired to carry on the debate on abortion for more than two days we could take two days now and then interrupt the discussion, picking up the abortion clauses for additional debate later on. If this could be agreed on it would be a convenient way of dealing with the question.

Otherwise I should like to draw Your Honour's attention to your authority under standing order 75(10) under which you have power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage. If it is your sense of the wish of the house that we should spend a certain amount of time on one subject and then move to another, I hope Your Honour will be governed accordingly. However I hope the proposals we worked out as house leaders will be acceptable to the house as a whole.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, there have been meetings recently at the level of party leaders, or representatives of every party, and as far as we are concerned, we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, cannot accept the government's offer because it is equivalent to closure, which is unacceptable for members who have been freely elected by their constituents.

On December 20, 1968, if I am not mistaken, the house refused to agree to standing order 16A which was equivalent to a muzzle accepted in advance. Therefore, if we refused this permanent muzzle, so to speak, we will refuse it every time the government will try to force it on us. I want to let the government know that some of my colleagues are wide awake and are determined to resist closure whenever the government will try to impose it.

Mr. Speaker, the government has suggested a limitation of the debate; however, as some amendments may be debated at great length, there may be very little time to consider the other amendments on today's order paper.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel that every amendment, whatever the hon. member or the party that moved it, should be considered thoroughly. In fact, certain clauses of Bill C-150 are too important to be passed speedily.

Moreover, as excessive speed is reproved everywhere, and as it is generally admitted that one cannot do things fast and well at the same time, we must reject the government's order for closure.

• (2:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in light of that I wonder whether the house would entertain the suggestion that was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. That is to say, without agreeing to any limitation of time for debate of any of the items we might plan the subject matter of the debate for the next five days; deal with the proposed amendments with relation to abortion this afternoon and tomorrow, and on Friday devote ourselves to the second of the subject matters that were mentioned. Then on Monday next we might devote ourselves to the amendments dealing with the other aspects of the Criminal Code, and on Monday afternoon or evening review whether it is necessary to return to the subject matter of abortion or any other questions—or possibly arrive at an agreement. I wonder whether there is any disposition to handle the amendments in this fashion.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we do not necessarily accept this motion of the government house leader because it is illogical.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that we review this matter tomorrow. By tomorrow the party to my far left may have been exhausted by abortion and ready to discuss other matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: I would like to inform the hon. member who has just spoken, Mr. Speaker, that it will take more than a Liberal or a Conservative party to exhaust the Social Credit Rally.

An hon. Member: Ha! Ha! So go and see Mr. René Lévesque.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF VOLUMES I, II AND III, AND AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions about the reference of the Public Accounts, volumes I, II and III for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968, and also the report of the Auditor General thereon, to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. If the house would be agreeable, perhaps the house would make an order to that effect so that the committee may continue with its study of these questions.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSING

OTTAWA—CONSTRUCTION OF ROW-HOUSING UNITS FOR LOW INCOME FAMILIES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I should like to make a brief statement regarding a very special measure by the government that should bear a most significant and far-reaching impact on housing for low income families.

I wish to announce that a new approach to providing housing for low income families will be undertaken in the city of Ottawa under a special arrangement. The experiment involves the construction in a single neighbourhood of row housing units; one half of the units will be sold under the condominium concept and the other half will be rented, in both cases to families with low incomes.

Two such projects will be built—one on the Walkley Road and the other on Morrison Drive—on land owned by Assaly Construction Limited. The sites had originally been set aside for large public housing developments but these were judged unacceptable because of the human disadvantages of their size.

When completed, both areas will provide a well integrated mix of home ownership and rental accommodation in a single community occupied exclusively by low income families.

The housing built for rental purposes will be financed under the public housing provisions of the National Housing Act. The units built for home ownership will be financed directly by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with interest on the loans equal to that presently charged for public housing projects.

The Walkley Road project will contain some 125 units of condominium housing and an equal amount of public housing units. The west end project on Morrison Drive will contain some 134 units of condominium housing and an equal number of public housing dwellings.

In the form of row housing, both projects will provide a preponderance of three-bedroom dwellings although two, four and five-bedroom units will also be available. The rents for the public housing units will be based on family income. The units for ownership will be sold at prices that will enable families to move into two-bedroom accommodation with incomes of $4,900 and into three-bedroom accommodation with incomes of $5,600. Down payments will be as low as $750. In either case—whether for rental purposes of purchase—all of the units will be reserved for families whose incomes do not exceed $7,500.

With this new approach we are attempting to restore and to strengthen the dignity of lower income families. We know from the work of the task force on housing and urban development that very definite sociological and psychological disadvantages result from stacking people in massive public housing projects. While we must continue to concern ourselves with the number of housing units we build each year, we must also ensure that the production of such housing is not just in vertical rows. We must provide people with more choice, with projects of acceptable size, location, design and layout, with an address for each tenant, playground space for children and greater privacy for each member of the family.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, although we in this party welcome the announcement the minister has just made may I renew a plea that I, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and others have made in the past for the minister to give us a statement embracing the over-all housing picture in which he will say what he intends to do about the question of public housing and about overcoming what he called sociological and other factors, which have made much of our public housing unacceptable to him in the past. Although we have asked for such a statement the minister has made a specific statement relating to a specific area, and he is moving ahead in a particular field.

While we welcome the help that will be given to low income groups of Ottawa I submit that the minister ought to make the over-all statement I have spoken of in order that other municipalities which may want to move rapidly into the field of public housing may have the benefit of his definitive statement. If he does not make that statement as quickly as possible I suspect those municipalities will be left in the position, as the city of Ottawa was, of having to negotiate each individual project. I do not think that is good planning and it will not help the minister to maintain good relations with municipalities in other parts of Canada.

Someone was kind enough to send me a copy of the statement the minister has just read to the house. In it there is no indication of what faults were found with the city of Ottawa's original submission with regard to his project. We do not know what sociological factors dismayed the minister. In fact we do not know what bothered him. Again I urge the minister to make an over-all statement as quickly as possible so that municipalities of other parts of Canada may move ahead quickly with the filling of an urgent need, and make housing available to low income families of Canada.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, we in the N.D.P. welcome the first step which the minister has taken in this project, but we deplore his piecemeal approach in solving our housing problems. This is only a token performance in solving critical housing shortages in the city of Ottawa. I note that 500 units only are to be built in Ottawa under this program, and that the city has asked for 1,600 units to be built. In Toronto alone about 16,000 people are on the waiting list for low rental housing, and many times that number are awaiting for public housing across the country.

One of the most critical areas in our housing crisis is the shortage of public housing units. When we consider the government's record in building fewer than 40,000 units of public housing across the country, which is less than one per cent of Canada's total housing stock, we can see the extent to which this and former governments have fallen short in their performance.

We are not the least bit happy with this piecemeal approach. The proper approach, Mr. Speaker, is to have a greater mix of public housing, together with the private housing sector. The more important group is the one between $4,000 and $7,500. Again, this is only a token approach to this group. The people of Canada cannot wait for any psychological or sociological studies with regard to this problem. What we need in Canada are houses.

I was rather disappointed yesterday when the Prime Minister said there was no intention on the part of the government to set up a separate ministry of housing and urban development, when this was one of the major recommendations of the task force on housing. If we are to solve this housing problem, we must have leadership by the federal government to co-ordinate the housing plans. I ask the government to take the initiative in setting up this type of ministry and have the minister set forth the proper type of plans to meet the most critical problem in Canada today, the housing shortage.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the opening of the market that has taken place in the field of housing seems at first sight to be an advisable thing. But if we do not give people a purchasing power which could provide them with more independence, we will have to approve those different projects. However, let me quote an excerpt from page 2 of the announcement, which reads as follows:

> The rents for the public housing units will be based on family income. The units for ownership will be sold at prices that will enable families to move into two-bedroom accommodation with incomes of $4,900 and into three-bedroom accommodation with incomes of $5,600.

I think that one most important factor has been overlooked. What is going to be done for a family of 6, 7 or 8 children with a $4,900 income? The size of the family should be taken into account. You cannot put a family of ten in a two bedroom house, and this is very important because very often, the largest families have the lowest incomes. I feel therefore that large families have not been duly considered.

On the other hand, it seems that in introducing this legislation some concern has been given to the social aspect and to the dignity of the family, because it is stated, and I quote:

We know from the work of the task force on housing and urban development that very definite sociological and psychological disadvantages result from stacking people in massive public housing projects.

If, in drawing up this legislation, care has been taken to avoid certain inconveniences likely to affect the dignity of the family, we are only too glad about it.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing which has not been duly considered, and that is to look more after large families, even though their income is too low to entitle them to a two or three bedroom house.

2. Was the car-body transfer at the transfer shed at Port-aux-Basques approved by any department of the federal government?

MATHEMATICS TAUGHT IN YUKON AND N.W.T. SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,450—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What type of mathematics is taught in the schools in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

2. If "new mathematics" is being used, what steps are taken to ensure that those teaching mathematics have been trained to teach the new mathematics?

3. Are students switched from being taught new mathematics to old mathematics from grade to grade depending on the training of teachers and, if so, has any assessment been made of the effect of such changes on the learning ability of the students and by whom has this assessment been made?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The Yukon Territorial Government uses the British Columbia School curriculum which includes teaching the "new mathematics". Mathematics courses in Northwest Territories schools are the same as those used in certain provinces, namely: Mackenzie District: (Alberta); Arctic District: Keewatin Region, (Manitoba); Frobisher Region, (Ontario); Arctic Quebec, (Quebec Protestant). In all cases provisions are made for some work in "new mathematics".

2. Accompanying the introduction of "new mathematics" in the Yukon were special training and in-service workshops for all teachers. These workshops were maintained from four to five years, depending upon their need. As summer school and university training programs reduced the need for in-service training, the program was phased out.

Between 1963 and 1966, a Mathematics specialist on the curriculum staff of the Education Division did extensive work to help Northwest Territories teachers, school administrators, and parents prepare for changes in mathematics curriculum. This took the form of teacher workshops, meetings and class visits; parent meetings; preparation of in-service bulletins and the development of special northern-oriented mathematics readiness materials for beginners.

Since that time, regional superintendents and their teacher consultants together with school principals have been expected to provide necessary on the job supervision. Occasionally resource experts are employed for conferences. At all times professional books and films are available on loan.

ELIGIBLE U.S. ARMY PERSONNEL ADMITTED TO CANADA

Question No. 1,845—Mr. Mazankowski:

How many citizens of the United States of America, of an age making them liable for service in the armed forces of their country, were admitted to Canada in 1966, 1967, 1968 and during the first two months of 1969 (a) how many of them have been granted landed immigrant status (b) on what basis are the remainder continuing to reside in this country?

Citizens and permanent residents of the United States who enter Canada as non-immigrants are not normally documented. Consequently, no data is available to answer part (b) of the question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I rise to point out the delay in answering question 1,748, placed on the order paper on March 13, and having to do with Mr. Roger Duhamel. ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the government has definitely decided to bring forward legislation on housing before the anticipated summer recess?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): That is still the plan, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the minister answered my question. Has the government definitely decided to bring forward such legislation?

Mr. Hellyer: It was decided weeks ago, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: In drawing up the proposed legislative program of the government between now and the end of the session, what priority is being given to housing legislation on the basis of the minister's task force report?

Mr. Hellyer: High priority.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question, in view of the high priority which not only the minister but we on this side of the house and the country give to it, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would discuss with the government house leader the possibility, in fact the certainty of bringing in this legislation within 30 days?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall gladly discuss that with him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister who stated that this matter of legislation was urgent, when he introduced the report of the task force in January, still feels that it has the same measure of urgency as he spoke of then?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is even more urgent now than it was then.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is it still the attitude of the government, as stated by him in this house on February 14 as recorded at page 5525 of Hansard, that until the constitution is amended governments are to a large degree powerless to solve housing and urban problems either alone or in co-operation with other levels of government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the hon. member is asking the Prime Minister to make a statement of policy, which I suggest cannot be done at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has rejected the recommendation concerning the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, and since the Prime Minister has rejected the recommendation that a federal department of housing and urban affairs should be established, there has been any change in the minister's support for these two major recommendations?

Mr. Hellyer: No; my support to the extent that it has been given, Mr. Speaker, remains unchanged. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I was very careful to point out that any reduction in taxation could only be made when there are surpluses of revenues, but at the rate my hon. friend and his colleagues are bringing forward ideas for new expenditures I am not at all sure that this will ever take place.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—DEPLOYMENT OF AIR TRANSPORTABLE UNITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement attributed to him in the press, and confirmed by the statements of General Dare at the External Affairs and National Defence Committee on February 4, that Canada has committed itself to an air transportable brigade group for employment in northern Europe and a battalion group in southern Europe, may I ask the minister when these commitments were made and whether or not they represent any increase in our commitments with respect to reserve air transportable units?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will have to conclude that I am gravely misunderstood, and I will have to refer to Hansard of December 18, 1967, page 5519, at which time I said this:

We also confirmed—

I was reporting on the NATO meeting in December.

—the continued availability from Canada for 1968 of (a) our already earmarked naval forces; (b) two brigades retained in Canada and already earmarked for Europe.

And I also stated this:

In respect of our plans after 1968—

That is for 1969, this year.

—we proposed, as forecast in the white paper of 1964, to substitute one air transportable brigade group based in Canada for the two brigades now earmarked in Canada.

This was very clearly an indication that what we called at the time the balance of the division was being reduced from two brigade groups to one brigade group, and this is exactly what I stated yesterday, that we have that commitment to a European NATO mobile force.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. In view of the Prime Minister's statement that the government was embarking upon a phased reduction of our NATO forces, and in view of the fact that we have a reserve commitment of one air transportable brigade unit and one battalion, does this mean that the government already in its own mind has committed itself to the withdrawal of the brigade now already in Europe?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I do not necessarily see any such implication, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Subject to the misunderstanding of the minister, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask him whether he and the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated at Washington that the proposal of the Government of Canada with regard to NATO forces would be decided before the May meeting of the Defence Council of NATO?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I did not make any statement. I had conversations with our colleagues within the alliance. I think what was indicated, and to my understanding what has been indicated even here in Canada, was that negotiations with our allies would begin in May. There are different stages that we have to go through before we confirm these plans at the December meeting, but this process was going to start, and I think we did indicate that it would start at the May meeting.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that the Secretary of State for External Affairs said definitely in Washington that these decisions would be taken before the May meeting of the Defence Council of NATO?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Then just one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister secure and make available a transcription of the press briefing made in Washington by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: I will ask him to get a copy of the statement for me, Mr. Speaker.

A.B.M. SYSTEM—USE OF CANADIAN BASES BY U.S.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Is he in a position today to reply to the question I asked him on March 26 last, that is whether Canada is committed or has agreed to allow the American government to use the Canadian bases located in the Canadian Far North in order to establish an emergency airborne system and whether the government has pledged itself to supply those bases or to allow the United States to use such bases on our territory?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the responsible officials in the department that no specific agreement has been entered into to supply bases for that particular system.

I must, however, point out that this system is assigned to the air defence forces of North America. Under the NORAD Agreement the American forces will then be able to use with the consent of the Canadian Armed Forces our Canadian bases for supplies and training, according to needs.

On the other hand, permanent use would require negotiations between the two governments. I can assure the hon. member that there were no negotiations conducted at any level whatever to use for such a purpose our bases located in the Far North.

[English]

FUTURE USE OF U.S. BASES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. During the course of these negotiations in Washington was the future of American bases in Newfoundland and Labrador discussed?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): No, sir.

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANT TO STANLEY GRAY—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Was the Secretary of State advised of the Canada Council grant to Stanley Gray before the grant was announced to the public, and if so at what stage of the proceedings was he so advised?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this is the type of question that can be asked at this time. I have the impression that the question should either be placed on the Order Paper or discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, with your permission I may rephrase my question to make it a matter of great urgency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dinsdale: Will the minister determine and report to the house whether officials of the Canada Council dealing with Mr. Gray's application gave any consideration to Mr. Gray's involvement in disruptions at McGill, and will he present to the house a clear statement of the government's position on the question of Canada Council awards to persons known to counsel or encourage violent social disruption and revolution?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was normally informed by the Canada Council after the decision was taken.

The Council itself took into consideration the problems raised, as indicated by the reply which I have here and which states that the academic panel had passed a resolution recommending that a grant be given to Mr. Gray. But in the meantime, due to the publicity given to the part played by Mr. Gray in the events which took place throughout last winter at McGill University, the chairman and other members of the Council advised the academic panel that the final decision in that matter would be taken by the Council itself, since finally it would have to assume the responsibility.

On March 31, the matter was considered at length by the academic committee which is made up of members of the Council who on account of their experience and special interests are especially concerned with the activity of that Council in university circles. That committee has ratified in its turn the recommendation of the selection committee of university affairs.

As for the policy of the Canada Council, this organization is acting in accordance with the legislation governing it and which does not allow it to base its decisions at the academic level on political considerations.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In light of the minister's statement I wonder whether he will investigate and report to the house in respect of Mr. Gray's statement that——I have reason to believe the decision was postponed until now for political reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to make any kind of investigation on that point, because I know it has not been the case.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State take this opportunity to assure the house that it will continue to be the policy of the government not to allow any agency for which it is responsible to base academic awards on political considerations?

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding, as reported in the paper that this confirmed anarchist has rejected this grant. Will the Secretary of State give this grant to the Edmonton Folk Arts Council, which applied for a grant in order to visit Tunisia and France? This group consists of 40 young and intelligent exchange students.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLOTMENT OF AIR TIME TO JERRY RUBIN—TERMINATION OF PROGRAM "DON MESSER'S JUBILEE"

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, after the dissertation by the Secretary of State in respect of freedom for anarchists I should like to ask him whether he is aware that some little or petty Caesar of the C.B.C. has announced that Jerry Rubin will be accorded one night or one hour, whatever the period is—perhaps one hour of one night—on the C.B.C. on either Thursday or Friday of this week to spread and disseminate his seditious and even treasonable utterances?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that I made a dissertation on freedom for anarchists, and I do not see why the right hon. gentleman is insinuating that I did.

As for the facts he mentioned, I could make inquiries, but I am not aware of them.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister cannot talk contemptuously to parliament in that way, I would suggest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Does the right hon. gentleman rise to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. I had to answer the last part of his gratuitous reference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows better than I do that—

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: He sure does.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. gentleman has confirmed that he knows he cannot answer and that he can only ask questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We never get answers, anyhow. I should like to ask the minister whether he will get in touch with the C.B.C. to find out why, whoever this individual is, he defies the government of Canada, which directed that Rubin should not be heard? Will he at the same time find out why a show as popular as the Messer show is being denied to the people of Canada by these individuals who prefer revolutionaries?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXPROPRIATION

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice to tell us when he will be bringing in new legislation in respect of expropriation, to which he referred last October and again in December?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I hope within the next two or three weeks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member going to ask a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Peel South?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether this new expropriation law will apply to the airport north of Montreal and all its ramifications?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me for a legal opinion. I will be glad to consult with him, once he has seen the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: I thought you were going to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would be the last person to ask the Minister of Justice for a legal opinion.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

JUNE CONFERENCE DATE—TELEVISING OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of a statement made by officials of the Ontario government to the effect that the next federal-provincial conference on the constitution would take place from June 11 to 13, is the Prime Minister in a position to tell the house whether or not a decision has been reached in this connection, and, if not, when we may expect one?

The Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to confirm this statement. A decision was taken yesterday. As a matter of fact, we had set other dates, but, as they were unacceptable to two provinces, we made a number of telephone calls as late as yesterday. It seems that the 11th, the 12th and the 13th will suit every province, subject to confirmation in writing, but there appears to be good grounds for that premature announcement.

Mr. Asselin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Prime Minister assure us that the proceedings at that conference will be broadcast on radio and television as has been the case for the other conferences?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, at the request of some premiers, this meeting will include not only premiers and ministers, but also a certain number of officials. This is what has been requested by one premier, and for that reason we do not believe it useful to telecast those joint meetings of ministers and officials.

COMBINES

DRUGS—PRICE FIXING BY B.C. PHARMACISTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he is aware of the present price-fixing manoeuvres of the British Columbia Pharmacists Society in charging all welfare patients an extra dollar per prescription for drugs and, if so, what action he contemplates to deal with this matter?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the action and, as a result of the little knowledge I have about it, I do not approve. I should however advise the hon. member that the practice of pharmacy is within provincial jurisdiction under their provincial licencing authority.

Mrs. MacInnis: Will the minister refer the matter of such apparent price fixing in respect of professional fees to the combines investigation branch?

Mr. Basford: It has been for some time, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

HERRING—CLOSING OF BAYS TO SEINERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Defence Production in his capacity as the acting minister of fisheries. Has the Minister of Fisheries issued instructions closing any large bays on the east coast to Canadian herring seiners, effective April 15, and, if so, was this action taken as a result of a shortage of herring, or what was the reason for this move since it has a great impact on herring reduction plants and Canadian herring fishermen?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that question as notice; it sounds fairly involved. If the hon. member would care to consult with me later, I would be glad to get the information for him.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—DISCUSSION OF FINANCIAL PROBLEMS WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the provincial treasurer of Prince Edward Island in his budget speech yesterday that "nowhere in the hard line taken by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Benson, was there any recognition of those regional disparities to which the federal government stands pledged to give consideration, and which are clamouring for redress", would the Prime Minister, in view of this belief held by the provincial government of Prince Edward Island, say whether it is his intention to discuss these financial problems with the government of Prince Edward Island in the near future, or have the Minister of Finance do so?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, technically speaking I suppose the quotation is correct, in the sense that it is perhaps not the Minister of Finance who should concern himself in the first instance with regional disparities, but we have a Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whose proper concern it is and who effectively signed with the province of Prince Edward Island a month or so ago a FRED plan under which the federal government will be contributing $125 million.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to keep abreast of the affairs going on in the government, I ask the Prime Minister, who is the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development?

Mr. Trudeau: There is none, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister take care to be accurate in the future?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I ask the minister whether he intends to hold conversations in the near future with the government of Prince Edward Island relative to financial problems which are outside of the comprehensive development plan.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, my sole power is that of being able to discuss with the government of Prince Edward Island, within the framework of FRED, under which we have an agreement with that government.

[English]

ARNOLD'S COVE, NFLD.—RESETTLEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Defence Production in his capacity as Acting Minister of Fisheries. Would the minister inform the house whether the government intends to investigate the government's resettlement program in Arnold's Cove, Newfoundland, in view of the very serious questions raised in the C.T.V. program "W-5" of April 6?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation to the minister and has to assume that it will be taken into account.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—CONSIDERATION OF VIEWS EXPRESSED BY P.E.I.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the provincial treasurer of Prince Edward Island that it would be wrong for the federal government to force the provinces to go it alone on medicare in five years, will the Prime Minister say whether the views of the government of Prince Edward Island in this respect will be, or are being, considered by the federal government and whether further intergovernmental discussions are in contemplation at an early date?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not on the medicare act proper, Mr. Speaker.

RUBELLA EPIDEMIC—ACCESSIBILITY TO VACCINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, one of urgent concern to all Canadian women who may become mothers during the next few years.

In view of the medical expectation of an epidemic of rubella during 1970 and 1971, and in view of the possible resultant causation of fetal abnormalities more widespread than those during the thalidomide tragedy, can the minister inform the house what the prospects are for Canadian women to have access to supplies of the Cendehill anti-rubella vaccine, which newspapers say has recently been licensed in Switzerland?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to look into that matter and report to the hon. member in the house.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF BASE TO NORTHWEST INDUSTRIES LTD.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it relates to the transfer of the Air Canada base at Winnipeg to Northwest Industries Ltd. What steps is the government taking to make sure that the employees affected will not be either unemployed or forced to take work at lower wages than they have had under Air Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, every effort has been made to work out an arrangement which will be equitable to everyone involved and which will not mean a loss of employment to the people presently engaged in the industry, and which hopefully, in the longer run at least, will provide additional employment for people in those basic trades which will have to support the growing aircraft industry of the future. If my hon. friend wishes to have details of the negotiations, these I could ask for; I do not have them available at the present time. But every effort has been made to try to do justice to the situation, particularly to the men, and to give them their choice as to whether they wish to remain with Air Canada and exercise their rights under the present agreement, or to go with the new company.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the assurances the minister gave earlier, that there would be no loss of work or reduction in wages, will he at some early opportunity provide the details to which he has referred?

Mr. Hellyer: I will make an effort to do that, Mr. Speaker. It may take a few days. I understand there have been some hitches in the negotiations. But at an early, appropriate occasion I will be glad to do that.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Selkirk): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether, in view of the fact that at the time of the Thompson inquiry into the future of the Air Canada base at Winnipeg officials of Air Canada gave testimony that the Air Canada overhaul base at Dorval was being under-utilized, and in view of the recent order for return in this house showing that over $20 million has now been allocated for the expansion of this so-called under-utilized base, will the minister not agree with the officials of Air Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is presenting an argument. This is debate, not a question.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Honey), in answering a question by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), undertook to answer today a question about the early retirement of Devco miners. I wonder whether he has that answer available.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South asked yesterday whether Devco had passed a by-law providing for pre-retirement leave and whether such by-law had been approved by the Treasury Board.

Of course, Devco has passed a by-law providing for such leave and I believe the Treasury Board wil give its approval tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister a further question because apparently something is wrong with my hearing equipment and the translation is not coming through too well. Can the minister state definitely if and when Treasury Board will give the approval that is required under section 18 of the early retirement plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has just given the reply.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the minister. In view of the fact that the Treasury Board is to approve this legislation tomorrow, will it be possible for Devco to give the miners the required month's notice, since the retirement plan will not be legal until it is approved by Treasury Board?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, since this pre-retirement leave plan has been approved by the cabinet, even if tomorrow the Treasury Board were to decide tomorrow not to approve it, it would still not be too late to cancel the notices sent to the workers.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. May I point out that the minister seemed to be enjoying the fact that I could not understand what he was saying, but the fact is that my translation equipment is not working.

An hon. Member: Try to learn French.

Mr. MacInnis: I have no intention of doing so. I did not understand the minister because, as I indicated, my translation equipment is not working.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN STANLEY GRAY AND FRED ROSE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Can the minister tell the house whether the R.C.M.P. has made any investigation into the rumoured relationship between Mr. Stanley Gray and Mr. Fred Rose, a former member of this house?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it has not been the practice to disclose what investigations the police authorities make in matters of this nature. This has been the practice of all governments in recent times.

TRANSPORT

P.E.I.—NEW BRUNSWICK HOVERCRAFT SERVICE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the forecasted need for at least two additional ferries for the Northumberland Strait crossing over the next five years, and the recent amendments by the minister's colleague to the Canada Shipping Act with regard to air cushioned vehicles, I wonder whether the minister's department is now investigating or researching projects to establish hovercraft service from Prince Edward Island to New Brunswick.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): We have been looking at this question for some time. It was considered as one of the possible alternatives for providing service to the island. If I remember correctly, the latest report that I saw indicates that with the equipment presently available this would not be advisable, from the standpoint of cost and convenience, as compared with other forms of transportation.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I wonder if, in connection with the ferry crossing and the considerable uncertainty which still exist with regard to both the schedule and fare structures, the minister will make an announcement shortly in the house, or have officials of the C.N.R. make such an announcement, before the commencement of greater activity in that operation.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Assuming the commencement of greater activity can be postponed for just a few days, I can undertake to do that.

[Mr. Speaker.]

HOUSING

EXTENSION OF LOAN FORGIVENESS PROVISION ON MUNICIPAL PROJECTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister in charge of housing. Since the housing task force report recommended loans and grants to municipalities in order that they might increase the amount of service land available, does the government contemplate any extension of the N.H.A. 25 per cent loan forgiveness provisions for municipal capital works projects, which are due to expire in March, 1970?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This does not appear to be a matter of great urgency, if the hon. member is alluding to a situation which will not occur for another year.

Mr. Rose: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, regarding the urgency of my question. Projects of this type require a great deal of planning long in advance. I wonder therefore if the minister might answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that if he is satisfied the matter is urgent, it can be debated at the time of adjournment.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the fact that it is impossible for the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to give consideration to making its final recommendations to the house in connection with its study of the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces until the house has disposed of the fifth report, will the minister tell the house, in his capacity as house leader, when he intends to bring forward the motion for concurrence in the fifth report, so that it can be disposed of and so that the transport committee can get down to making its final report on this matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): As I recall it, Mr. Speaker, the house spent a full day debating that matter, without making any progress. In the light of the heavy legislative schedule I do not expect to see it back at an early date.

Mr. McGrath: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer of the minister, would he now consider bringing in a measure to disband the Transport Committee, since it cannot conduct its study?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DRUGS

CANADIAN ACTION IN MARKETING OF ANTIBIOTICS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the United States Food and Drug Administration served notice that it intends to stop the marketing of 78 drug products containing antibiotics on the grounds that they expose the patients to unnecessary risk, I want to ask the minister whether his department is in touch with the United States Food and Drug Administration and if his department intends to take similar action with respect to these drugs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): We are checking the matter and considering what type of action we will take. I am not prepared to say at present what it will be, but I will report on the matter after our investigation is completed. I hope to do so as soon as possible.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether there is a continuing liaison between the minister's department and the United States Food and Drug Administration, so that we may be fully aware of the results of their research and may benefit from it in dealing with some of the drugs, many of which are manufactured in the United States.

Mr. Munro: There is always a very close liaison between the United States Food and Drug Administration and our Food and Drug Directorate.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. For some six months I have been trying to find out when he proposes to table the report of the commission on security. I have asked the question half a dozen times. Can the Prime Minister give us a definite date on which this report will be tabled?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot give a definite date but I hope hon. members will be able to study it during the summer recess, if not before.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, let us be serious. Does the Prime Minister not realize that this type of delay is creating a great deal of suspicion about this report in the public's mind?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the minister in respect of the Devco retirement plan. Can the minister tell us whether negotiations are still continuing with the railway unions affected under this plan?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, before answering the question, I rise on a point of privilege. A moment ago the hon. member indicated that I seemed to enjoy the fact that he didn't understand my answer.

You can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that I would still enjoy it more if he sometimes understood what I am saying.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Here is the answer: the negotiations started with railways employees and miners are completed and the plan applies to all Devco operations.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister said the plan is now official. This is not so because the Treasury Board will not give approval to it until tomorrow. So he is wrong in that regard. Futhermore, the previous misunderstanding arose from the language and not from my lack of understanding of what he was saying. I suggest the minister did not understand the situation because if I had not brought it to his attention he would not have known that the plan will not be official until tomorrow.

Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

FRENCH LANGUAGE NORMAL SCHOOL IN WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State with regard to the possibility of setting up a French language normal school in the four western provinces.

Does the federal government have a policy through which the provinces might be helped to achieve that goal?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member and the minister that it might be interesting to discuss that matter at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Schreyer: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FLOODS

SUPPLYING OF SANDBAGS BY E.M.O.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the statement of the premier of Saskatchewan that he did not know where the community of Lumsden could look for more sandbags after the use of those now being brought in, will the minister confirm that the Emergency Measures Organization has arranged for sufficient sandbags to meet the flood crises in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): First of all, I do not think we have experienced any shortage yet. There was some anxiety about it, but we have located stocks of which use can be made if required.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the discussion which took place among the various leaders of the house I wonder if you would mind advising us what the decision of the Chair might be as far as the amendments are concerned, and in what manner we are to proceed?

Mr. Speaker: Since there is no agreement amongst hon. members, there is no alternative but to consider the amendments seriatim beginning with No. 1. Perhaps the Chair might indicate that, in my view, it would be reasonable not to have individual votes after the consideration of each amendment. My suggestion to hon. members would be that we might go through one series of amendments—I was thinking we might consider all the amendements up to the amendments dealing with abortion—and that the house might then be disposed to vote on all the amendments which have been accepted by the Chair and discussed by the house In other words, we would consider the several subjects concerned with the amendments extended from No. 1 to No. 11. This is my suggestion, and I hope hon. members will be prepared to accept it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, from reading a number of these amendments, that they are of the same nature. I think—indeed, I know it to be a fact—that Your Honour is empowered by the rules to accept, reject, merge or consolidate any amendments put forward. There may be one or two amendments which Your Honour might consider to be altogether out of order. Perhaps the house could be guided by Your Honour's rulings.

Mr. Speaker: If it is the wish of the house, I might indicate to hon. members some of the amendments which at first blush appear to be out of order and on which the Chair would be prepared to hear argument. It might complicate discussion if, for example, we were to consider amendments 1 to 4 while some hon. members who might be interested in amendment No. 5, wait for that amendment to be called only to be told by the Chair that it is out of order and cannot be put to the house.

It might, therefore, be more convenient if hon. members were notified in advance whether or not an amendment, say, between Nos. 1 and 11 would actually be put to the house. If this suggestion is satisfactory to hon. members I would be prepared to indicate some of the amendments which in my view cannot be put to the house because they are not acceptable procedurally.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the debate we objected to the proposal made by the government party because, in our humble opinion, it implied imposing some sort of closure or gag on the house.

Mr. Speaker, we want it known that we consider Bill C-150 of the greatest importance. That is why we should like, in all honesty, as parliamentarians, to participate actively in the debate, without holding up the work of course, but in an attempt to pass a law that meets as much as possible the wishes of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, we therefore feel that it would be very wise for the house to make a logical and detailed study of this bill. It would also be advisable for the house to deal with each amendment on the order paper, according to the normal procedure at the report stage in committee.

We agree with the proposed vote groupings, but we want the house to know that we intend to study each amendment fully, to make sure that the act will correspond to the wishes of the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest respect to other hon. members who have spoken, I would recommend to the house that Your Honour's suggestion seems to constitute the only logical way in which we can proceed in the absence of unanimous consent. As other hon. members have pointed out, there are some amendments which are identical. If we proceed from subject to subject, surely the amendments which are in order could be decided at one time rather than by an individual vote on each of them. I hope the house will accept Your Honour's recommendation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I indicated earlier, we would have liked the house to agree to some orderly plan with regard to these amendments but if there is no consent it would appear that Your Honour has no option but to call the amendments in their numerical order.

However, I should like to support the two suggestions which Your Honour has made. One is that the voting, if there is to be voting, on any of the first 11 amendments might wait until we have finished dealing with those eleven. The other suggestion I wished to support was that Your Honour should tell us now which of the first 11 amendments you have questions about procedurally. Obviously, Your Honour does not wish to rule any amendments out of order before debate has taken place, if debate is desired, but I think it would be helpful if we knew at this point which of the first 11 amendments Your Honour has doubts about procedurally.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate a few points likely to show the importance of studying all these amendments sensibly so as to avoid adopting them without due consideration.

All members, I suppose, have received yesterday a circular letter from the Alliance pour la vie.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like to remind the hon. member that he cannot discuss the substance of the amendments. The point is simply to advise the Chair on the interpretation of the rules. Besides, I can assure the hon. member that I am ready to make my ruling.

Under the rules the Chair has certain powers which I am ready to exercise. However, I am also ready to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and to indicate which amendments are acceptable, from a procedural point of view among those listed from 1 to 11.

[English]

I would therefore suggest that in my view amendment No. 1 is not acceptable. In fact, it is clearly out of order.

[Translation]

In my opinion, the first amendment proposed by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) is out of order. However, if he wants to show me that the amendment should be accepted, from a procedural point of view, I will hear his arguments.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, could you not first give us all the amendments from 1 to 11 about which Your Honour has doubts? After that we might go back to No. 1. I think it would be useful for us to know the whole picture.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The amendments about which the Chair has doubts are No. 1 and No. 2. Nos. 3 and 4 I would be prepared to suggest to

hon. members should be combined. I have serious doubts about No. 5, though I should like to hear argument from hon. members on the point; No. 6, as Nos. 3 and 4, is barely acceptable; Nos. 7 and 8 are acceptable but would have to be combined; Nos. 9 and 10 are also acceptable but would have to be combined and considered at the same time; and No. 11 is quite in order. This is the suggestion I should like to make to hon. members at this time.

Dealing first with amendment No. 1:

[Translation]

I wish to point out to the hon. members that this amendment is not in order because it does not tend to amend a section of the act, as provided in paragraph (5) of standing order 75. It is rather a reasoned amendment which should normally be moved on second reading of the bill.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have moved amendment No. 1 with a view to regrouping the different subject-matters of the committee report under the following headings:

(a) abortion,

(b) homosexuality and indecent assault,

(c) lottery and gaming—

and finally

(d) the remaining clauses of the bill.

We know that Bill C-150 contains certain clauses that are acceptable to some members. On the other hand, others are unacceptable.

Therefore, I moved this amendment not for my personal satisfaction, but at the request of certain public bodies which have expressed their opinions before the committee, during public demonstrations or by submitting petitions.

Among the public bodies which have requested that Bill C-150 be divided, there is the Association of Catholic Parents of Quebec, the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society of Montreal—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not believe the representations the hon. member may have received from public bodies can be taken into account when we have to decide whether an amendment is in order or not under the standing orders of the house. I wish to point out to the hon. member the reasons why an amendment such as this one is, in my opinion, out of order and if he thinks I am mistaken on the strict point of view of the procedure, I should like him to tell me in what way I am wrong.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I recognize the goodwill of the hon. member and the fact that he moved the amendment with good intent. But on the other hand, I point out to him again that this is not the type of amendment that can be moved at this stage of a bill.

The hon. member believes the bill could have been divided. He will recognize that proposal was made before. If it were possible to comply with such a request, it could certainly not be done at this stage of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by saying that my ultimate objective in moving that amendment was to enable every member to vote as freely as possible on every one of the main subjects of Bill C-150.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, several members of the Ralliement créditiste met this morning in order to determine the position to be taken with regard to item 1.

The argument put forward now was discussed this morning and we almost asked you respectfully to delete this item.

However, several of my colleagues pointed out that we were faced with a great number of amendments and that consequently the study might be quite long if we did not take some kind of step to save time, while allowing for a serious and thorough consideration of this bill.

Therefore, we have decided to retain the first proposed amendment in order to combine the subjects, which would make it possible to undertake a quick, orderly and logical study rather than a rambling one.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that my arguments are not of a legal or parliamentary nature. It is mere common sense which led us to believe that if we could combine these amendments or the clauses of the bill, in order to study them in a logical, clear and serious fashion, then I think that your job and ours would be made much easier.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it we are now speaking to the point of order that has been raised.

Mr. Speaker: I am wondering whether it is necessary for the Minister of Justice to enter the fray at this point. I think the point is quite clear. The hon. members themselves recognize and do not seriously propose that the amendment is acceptable from a strictly procedural standpoint. In view of this, I would be prepared to rule on it now or in a few minutes' time. If the minister has arguments to convince me even further, then I will hear him.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I was just wondering whether Your Honour had accepted the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that you hear argument on all clauses together, or whether we would proceed one by one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have accepted the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, (Mr. Knowles) but his suggestion was that we consider each one individually. This is what we are doing at the present time. I have heard argument on amendment No. 1, and I should like to make a ruling now. I am sure that this was the suggestion that was made both by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Translation]

I therefore come to the conclusion that amendment No. 1 is a reasoned amendment, since it provides that the bill will not be read now.

According to our long standing practice, such an amendment can only be moved on second reading of a bill. The amendments which can be moved at the report stage of a bill are governed by the provisions of paragraph (5) of standing order 75 which reads as follows:

> If, not later than twenty-four hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a bill, it shall be printed on a notice paper.

For those reasons, the Chair must regretfully refuse to put to the house the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

The comments which I have just made to the house, I quite humbly point out, also apply to amendment No. 2. However once again, I would be pleased to hear some arguments strictly relating to procedure on the acceptability of the amendment concerned.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, with regard to amendment No. 2, I shall try to proceed as you have suggested.

I have proposed this amendment in order to get the expression "act of gross indecency", as found in section 149 of the Criminal Code, clarified as much as possible.

Mr. Speaker, an amendment to the Criminal Code is introduced regarding acts of gross indecency, but neither the old section of the Code nor the new legislation give a clear definition of "gross indecency".

I think this is a vast subject. It could mean acts committed by two persons of the same sex in the presence of others, or by persons of different sexes who would expose themselves in public, on the street or anywhere.

Many other things could be considered as acts of gross indecency, which can take place between husband and wife. Indeed, some acts, although legal, become acts of gross indecency when committed in public.

Through this amendment to clause 7 of Bill C-150, I wanted to get the meaning of the expression "gross indecency" clarified and that is why I ask: That clause 7 be not read until the words "act of gross indecency", as found in section 149 of the Criminal Code be defined by the committee.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, further to what has just been said by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), I should like to point out that when we want to discuss most objectively and advisedly the clauses of a bill, it is extremely important to know the value and the meaning of the expressions or words used.

This is precisely the purpose of that second amendment moved by the hon. member for Abitibi.

When there are complications with regard to procedure, they are due most often to the fact that the principle of the bill is more or less meaningful. Many difficulties could be eliminated if it were decided to delay consideration of these clauses in order to better study the bill. I should like to point out that not only do we not want to postpone consideration of the bill but that on the contrary we intend to expedite it. If clauses 14, 15 and 18 were immediately eliminated, we would be ready to vote today on the motion for third reading of Bill C-150.

Mr. Speaker: Once more, I must tell the hon. member for Champlain and his colleagues who took part in the debate that I am quite sympathetic to the arguments they have submitted to the chair. Nonetheless, the hon. members will recognize that I must abide by the rules and cannot, through sympathy or understanding, condone any violation. As regards amendment No. 2, the proposal clearly appears to be out of order, as was the case with amendment No. 1.

Amendment No. 2 is faulty in a similar way in that it constitutes a reasoned amendment or subjects to some condition discussion of clause 7 of Bill C-150.

The reasons which justified the inadmissibility of amendment No. 1 also apply to amendment No. 2.

[English]

We will now proceed to amendments numbered 3 and 4 which, in the humble view of the Chair, are acceptable. It is suggested, however, that both might be considered at the same time and if eventually there is a negative vote with respect to amendment No. 3, this would have the effect of being a negative vote with respect to amendment No. 4, which would then not be put to the house.

May we also now turn to amendment No. 5 about which the Chair has some doubts and about which hon. members may wish to advise the Chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the assistance of the hon. member, I might say that the difficulty facing the Chair relates to the fact the amendment appears to go beyond the provisions of the bill. That is why I was anxious to have the views of hon. members before deciding whether the amendment ought to be put to the house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank you, sir, for indicating the area in which you question this amendment. I suspected that was where Your Honour had some doubts but, with respect, I should like to argue that the amendment deals with the same subject matter dealt with in clause 7 of the bill. I do not want to hurt a case we may present later, so I will refrain from identifying exactly what I have in mind. I know that later an amendment will be introduced from this corner of the house seeking to write into this bill legislation about a matter that has not been mentioned in this bill at all. I can see we shall be on thin ice in trying to argue that that is within the four corners of Bill C-150. I merely mention that because that strengthens our case with respect to amendment No. 5. Clause 7 of Bill C-150 deals with various sexual relationships, indecent and otherwise, and makes certain provisions and changes in the law in that area as it now is. The amendment proposed by my colleague from Broadview stays within that area. It redefines the law in one or two instances and makes changes with respect to penalties and the kinds of charges that can be laid. It deals with matters of summary conviction and with indictable offences.

Although your doubts are understandable, Mr. Speaker, I think it is possible to set them aside. In other words, it should be possible to convince Your Honour that the amendment proposed by my friend for Broadview is not foreign to the subject matter of clause 7 of Bill C-150. It is on that basis that I think Your Honour ought to allow it.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I, too, can understand your doubts and wish to encourage them.

Mr. Gilbert: Why?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because I suggest, sir, that the amendment introduced by the hon. member goes beyond the scope of the clause to which it relates. It is, therefore, inadmissible and ought to be struck. The purpose of the amendment introduced as No. 5, Mr. Speaker, is to make offences under section 147 which relates to buggery or bestiality, section 148 which relates to indecent assault on a male and section 149 which relates to acts of gross indecency punishable on indictment or by way of summary conviction. At present these three offences are punishable on indictment only and carry specified penalties. An offence under section 147 carries a maximum penalty of imprisonment of 14 years; an offence under section 148 carries a penalty of maximum imprisonment for 10 years and an offence under section 149 carries maximum imprisonment of 5 years. In other words, what the hon. member is attempting to do is to amend these sections so as to give the Crown an alternative way of proceeding. It may proceed either by way of indictment or by way of summary conviction.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The hon. member's amendment does not go to the substance of the offences. It specifies merely the procedure under which the Crown can proceed with regard to offences mentioned in these three related sections. The clause to which the amendment relates, clause 7, introduces new section 149A. New section 149A provides that two of the original sections, 147 and 149, shall not apply to any act committed in private between a husband or his wife or any two persons each of whom is 21 years or more of age, both of whom consent to the commission. What the clause in the bill strives to do is exempt from the criminal law acts of gross indecency between consenting adults in private. In other words, it changes the substance of one particular offence under the criminal law.

The hon. member's amendment would not, I submit to Your Honour, affect the offence, relate to the conditions to be attached to the offence, relate to the fact that it should be in private or to the age of the persons concerned, nor relate to that factual situation at all. Instead it goes back to the original sections and says, we want the Crown to have an option to proceed—in a procedural way—either by way of indictment or summary proceeding.

I submit that brings into play a traditional rule of the house. It has not been affected by new Standing Order 75(5) or 75(8). They relate to the type of proceeding that can be adopted at the report stage. Subsection (5) reads:

> If, not later than twenty-four hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a bill, it shall be printed on a notice paper.

Subsection (8) reads:

> When the order of the day for the consideration of a report stage is called, any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this order shall be open to debate and amendment.

In other words, we are not told anything about the relevancy or the scope of amendment. We have to assume with these new Standing Orders the traditional rules of admissibility apply. The question is, Your Honour, that under the rules of the house as interpreted by the precedents, no new amendment can be offered which is irrelevant or which goes beyond the scope of the bill or beyond the scope of the particular clause to which it relates. I believe this is made clear in citation 402(2) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads:

> A new clause will not be entertained if it is beyond the scope of a bill, inconsistent with clauses agreed to by the Committee, or substantially the same as a clause previously negatived.

Citation 406 reads in part:

> Amendments are out of order if they are (a) irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope,—

These citations appear to be taken from May's Parliamentary Practice. For instance at page 549 of the seventeenth edition under the heading "Inadmissible Amendments" it is stated:

> An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill, or if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration.

I submit to Your Honour that this amendment does not attack the substance of the clause which it purports to amend. It does not relate to the offence itself. It goes beyond the scope of the clause to the original sections of the Code and suggests that those original sections ought to be opened up by allowing the Crown the option to proceed by way of indictment or summary proceeding. This bill is not a general revision or consolidation of the Criminal Code. It is not a completely new act or code. This omnibus bill relates to specific policy decisions relating to specific offences dealt with or amended in a specific way.

With the greatest respect I submit to Your Honour that the hon. gentleman's amendment goes beyond the scope of the clause which he attempts to affect.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My intervention will be very brief. I suggest the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has missed the point. The amendment as proposed deals with clauses 147 and 149 because 149A as proposed is a delegation of penalties normally imposed under 147 and 149. The proposed amendment by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) does not affect the determination of guilt but will change the form of proceeding to determine guilt and affix punishment. Therefore, there is relevancy. There is no new crime introduced. It is entirely relevant to clauses 147 and 149. I submit there is every reason to accept this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, in our opinion, the amendment moved by the hon. member should be agreed to for certain reasons that I shall try to outline briefly.

We intend to amend sections 147, 148 and 149 of the Criminal Code, which bear on a particular subject.

Those sections, being difficult to enforce, give rise to many complications. It was said in a speech in the house that sections 147 and 149 of the Criminal Code had become inapplicable when acts were being committed in private between husband and wife or any two consenting adults. Now, as the law was inapplicable, the intention was to strike out those provisions of the Criminal Code.

I find, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment proposed here, amendment No. 5, merely re-establishes the facts. I think it is consistent with Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, citation 357, on page 266 which reads as follows, and I quote:

> In the preparation of Bills amending existing enactments the amendments shall not ordinarily be made by clauses which add or leave out words or substitute words for others, but by clauses which re-enact the section, sub-section or other minor division, as it is amended.

And I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is consistent with parliamentary precedents, and that this amendment tends only to make more explicit the matter that is dealt with in clauses 147 and 149.

Mr. Speaker, we admit that the sections included in the Criminal Code were very difficult to apply. But, it is not by shortening them that we will make them more easy to apply. The sponsor of this motion thought there might be other means of making the law applicable and, in moving this motion he does not affect clauses 147 and 149.

Therefore, I think, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new there, it is merely a repetition of what was formerly found in the Criminal Code. We are bringing absolutely nothing new, in terms of going further than clauses 147 and 149; we are simply making them more explicit, thus making them more easy to apply.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore believe that, for the reasons I have indicated, amendment No. 5 is acceptable.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the nub of the argument by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is that the amendment is not one of substance but rather one of procedure. At times it is very difficult to distinguish between substance and procedure. What the government is doing in the proposed new section 149A is to change the gravity of the offence. It is saying that certain circumstances which otherwise would have amounted to the committal of an offence are now changed and will not be considered to amount to an offence. I have attempted to read into this amendment a procedure which bears heavily on the substantive part of the offence. There has been a lessening effect as a result of the proposed new section 149A. My amendment is an attempt to give it a vehicle whereby it can be taken care of, whereby it can be carried out.

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful to hon. members for their comments in connection with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). I think I should assure hon. members that during the last few hours these amendments have been studied very carefully by the Chair with the assistance of the Table Officers and the Parliamentary Counsel. In the light of the consideration I have given to this amendment previous to coming into the house, and of course in the light of the arguments advanced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), which were rather pertinent so far as I am concerned, I doubt very much if it is possible for the Chair to accept the amendment.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others who have spoken in support of their point of view, have put forth an interesting argument as to whether this proposed amendment does go beyond the provisions of the bill, but I must come to the conclusion that it does, and that the citations referred to by the Minister of Justice are applicable.

Clause 7 on page 24 of Bill C-150 will provide certain exceptions to the law as stated in sections 147 and 149 of the Criminal Code. The purport of the amendment is to delete the exceptions provided for in clause 7 of Bill C-150 and to rewrite substantially sections 147, 148 and 149 of the Criminal Code itself. In other words, amendment No. 5 is a new legislative proposal in my very humble view. I hesitate to say this, having heard the strong arguments made by hon. members which perhaps cast a bit of doubt in my mind, but not to the extent that I can change my decision. I do feel that amendment No. 5 is a new legislative proposal and does introduce matters of substance which are not covered in Bill C-150 now before the house.

The minister has referred to citations 402 and 408 of Beauchesne. I think I can also refer hon. members to citation 203(1):

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

Again, citation 406 of the same authority, Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, reads:

> Amendments are out of order if they are > (a) irrelevant to the bill, or beyond its scope—

I should add that in considering these amendments I have made, and will make, an effort to be lenient. My consideration of the amendments will not be made with a view to ruling them out of order but rather to accepting them if, from a procedural standpoint, in the humble opinion of the Chair they can be accepted. But even with all possible leniency, I do not think I can accept this particular amendment, and I suggest with respect and humility to hon. members that it should not be put at this time.

My earlier suggestion was that all other amendments appeared to be in order. I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had some doubts as to whether amendments Nos. 9 and 10 ought to be combined. I would not like to be difficult about this.

In view of what I said a moment ago that I would like to lean in favour of accepting these amendments, and to facilitate the discussion in the house, I would be prepared to recognize that perhaps there should be individual discussion on 9 and 10 and that a negative vote on 9 would not necessarily negative proposed amendment No. 10. I hope this satisfies the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that I do intend to be lenient in considering the proposed amendments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It not only satisfies me, and pleases me, but it saves the house a half hour's speech.

Mr. Speaker: We will therefore return to amendment No. 3 for consideration of the house.

Mr. Woolliams (for Mr. Valade) moved:

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 7.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on this first amendment, I hope I can get your agreement that some of these amendments are vrey closely related. I do not want to make two or three speeches on each individual one. I want to expedite the matter and have the votes taken. For example, before I start my argument on amendment No. 3, I point out that amendment No. 7 is inter-related, and with your consent I might be able to discuss both phases of the matter and therefore not have to make two speeches.

I now wish to deal with the reasons I think clause 7 should be deleted and, if not deleted, why the words "except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast" should be added. I know what the position of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is. He does not think that the proposed new section can be interpreted in that manner, but first I want to read what Professor Mewett said in reference to Section 149 (clause 7) as recorded at page 341 of the minutes of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, volume 10, of March 13:

Mr. Chairman, as far as proposed Section 149A of clause 7 of the act, which appears on page 24, is concerned, I do not think there has been a prosecution in Canada for buggery between consenting adults in private since the revision in 1953.

In that regard, I think the professor is right. What he is really saying is that if we did not have this permission de jure we had it de facto because two consenting adults, or two people who are married, are not going to go out and report what they do in private to the law officers. Professor Mewett continued:

My view is that it is desirable that the Criminal Code conform with actual practice and therefore, generally speaking, I am in favour of clause 7.

Now, I come to grips with the reason I say this clause should be deleted, or at least if not deleted that these words should be added, "except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast."

• (4:10 p.m.)

Let me quote from Crankshaw's Criminal Code of Canada, seventh edition, 1959 at page 208, section 147:

Buggery or Bestiality. Every one who commits buggery or bestiality is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for fourteen years.

The footnote summarizes the cases in this regard. It states that buggery is also called sodomy and is the carnal copulation against nature by human beings with each other or with a beast. In other words, as I said this morning at another meeting, if you are dealing with a beast it might involve an abnormal person having relations with a beast in a normal fashion, or it might involve an abnormal person dealing abnormally with a beast.

Professor Mewett puts it very well. The Minister of Justice suggests we cannot adopt this interpretation, but if there is any doubt about this section it should be clarified. If the Minister of Justice does not want to legalize sexual intercourse in this country between human beings and beasts, I would think with the greatest respect he should clarify the law. Surely, this always involves a matter of opinion. The law is an inexact science and that is why we have so many court decisions. One has only to read the Supreme Court of Canada reports to realize that a decision made on the basis of certain facts on Monday may well be reversed on the following Tuesday or a Tuesday a year later. The second decision may be a reversal of the first, yet based on the same or similar facts as a result of a further distinction or a revision of the interpretation.

Surely, the Minister of Justice does not write off the words of Professor Mewett, who is the head of the Criminal law section of the University of Toronto. The minister graduated from McGill, but I think even those students of McGill have some respect for the University of Toronto. This is what the professor says:

> There is only one point I would like to raise, and it is a legal point. It is factually impossible for two consenting adults to commit bestiality and Clause 7 purports to say that Section 147—that is, everyone who commits bestiality—does not apply to any act committed in private between a husband and wife or any two persons. I am not quite sure what that means but in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it does not mean anything. As it stands I think it would mean that if one person committed a sexual act with his dog he would be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for 14 years. If two people did it they would not be guilty of any offence.

In other words, what the professor says is that if two people were in the room or an atmosphere of privacy and one held the animal while the other committed the act, they would be homefree under Section 149. Why do I say that? Under Section 147, everyone who commits buggery or bestiality is guilty of an indictable offense. Why does the minister suggest in the new Section 149-A that Section 147 does not apply to such an act committed in privacy? Section 147 does not deal with homosexuality between males, gross indecency between males and females or acts between females, it deals with buggery and bestiality.

I read somewhere recently that someone was worried about this situation in that you could not have bestiality between two consenting adults. What we must look at in this section is the fact that the act is not defined. It does not state that this must be an act between adults. This involves an act or pantomime in private. This is what Professor Mewett suggests. I should like to emphasize this point because this whole matter to me is disgusting.

I am not pointing the finger at the minister so far as his philosophy is concerned. I gathered from what he said at the committee he did not want to legalize this practice. He said it was beyond him what the professor was thinking about, and that may be so, but I suggest to him with the greatest respect that the professor might be right. I do not say he is right but he could be right. God help us if the minister is wrong. These laws require clarification.

Surely, this parliament of Canada, which governs a Christian nation, is not going to legalize sexual intercourse between two consenting adults and an animal. Apparently if two people do this they are not guilty of any offence, but if three do it or one does it these individuals would be liable to 14 years imprisonment. Surely, we are entitled to an appropriate amendment clarifying this law. If the minister does not want to legalize this type of thing why does he not say so, particularly in respect of bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast?

Crankshaw was a greater expert than either the minister or myself, and he distinguished between these words. Surely, the minister cannot, in seriousness, want anything but clarification in this regard. Many people in this country have indicated a complete lack of understanding in respect of homosexuality. I have always taken the position that we should not deal with homosexuality in the Criminal Code. This should be dealt with as a sickness or an ailment. It should be treated from a psychological or physical point of view by psychiatrists or doctors, but even they do not agree. Psychiatrists suggest that homosexuality is the result of environment. I have read many books on the subject and I suggest that what we are attempting to do here is legalize acts between two consenting adults over 21 years of age, a man and wife, indecent or homosexual, providing they are carried out in private.

What Professor Mewett suggests is that this measure may legalize the right of two consenting adults over 21 to have sexual relations with an animal in private.

Mr. Flemming: They are making it respectable, that is what they are doing.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I agree with you. Clause 7 of the new bill states that Section 147 does not apply to any act committed in private. If this does not apply to bestiality or buggery, why is there any reference to Section 147? There is nothing in Section 147 that applies to human beings except in respect of buggery. The definition of buggery is the same as that in respect of sodomy, that is carnal copulation against nature by human beings. This refers to buggery or bestiality. The section covers bestiality but this is exempt because it suggests that Section 147 dealing with bestiality does not apply to any act committed between a husband and wife or two individuals of age in private.

During my experience as a trial lawyer I remember a case involving a husband who insisted that his wife have sexual relations with an animal. I have become aware of this kind of environment in this nation. I am aware of cases of bestiality involving one adult and an animal. Section 147 which refers to bestiality will not apply to any act committed by a husband and wife in privacy. It will not apply to acts committed by two adults over 21, providing there is consent.

Let me suggest to the minister that the professor of a leading university in this country would not appear before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to utter complete nonsense. This professor appeared with a background of experience and knowledge. I asked for this witness following some argument as to whether the committee should call witnesses. This witness, with his knowledge of criminal jurisprudence, said clearly and squarely that this clause would legalize sexual relations in some form or another with an animal providing it was committed by two consenting adults over 21. In my opinion that is absolutely wrong.

I ask the minister to reconsider his position in this respect. I know that he has legal advisers in the Department of Justice, but they can be wrong. I say this with no disrespect to the officers of the Department of Justice, because at one time there were more lawyers in the department from the university from which I graduated than from any other university in Canada. Therefore, naturally I have respect for them and their opinions. But the officers of the Department of Justice are not infallible. In how many cases throughout this land have they said one thing and the courts have said they are wrong? They are only giving legal opinions. Just because the Department of Justice has given its opinion, it does not mean that is right. The officers of the department have no divine right to be correct in their interpretation of the law.

I have had confrontations with the Department of Justice. I do not want to deal with those, but as an illustration I will mention one case. In the case to which I refer, the judge happened to agree with me. The Department of Justice laid a charge against the breweries under the Combines Investigation Act. The Department of Justice said they had a case. When they got to court, what kind of case did they have? In this instance, the provinces set the price of beer at 10 cents or 20 cents a glass. The case of the department was laughed right out of court. Mr. Robinette, Q.C. was on that case, as my hon. friend knows.

Therefore, because the Department of Justice tells the minister there is nothing wrong with this clause, I do not stand in awe of their opinion; and multiplicity of the same opinion is still the same opinion. I ask the minister to consider this question in the light of what the professor said and in the light of my argument. I want to summarize what I have said. Section 147 deals with bestiality. Proposed section 149A provides:

> Sections 147 and 149 do not apply to any act committed in private between
> (a) a husband and his wife, or
> (b) any two persons, each of whom is twenty-one years or more of age,
> both of whom consent to the commission of the act.

My hon. friend has forgotten one thing. He thinks that the act we are talking about is a pantomime between the people concerned. The section does not say that. The act could be conducted, not with a third person but with a third ingredient, namely, an animal—two people twenty-one years of age, and an animal. It is very important that the minister understands this. This is my understanding of the act. I think I have made my point, Mr. Speaker and I shall not say any more as far as that matter is concerned.

I hope the minister will take notice of the argument which I have been able to present in the House of Commons and was not able to present in the same fashion in the committee. I have been able to weigh what was said in the committee, because we have a record of the proceedings of the committee. This is why we have committees. It is no new, great thing to have a standing committee study a bill clause by clause; we have been doing this ever since parliament was created after confederation. The only thing we have done away with is clause by clause study of a bill in committee of the whole house.

Therefore, when it is said that the new rules are great and we have reached heaven in this regard, I point out that we have always had this heaven in respect of clause by clause study of bills. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) was the main spokesman of our party in respect of the transportation bill. That was before the new rules came into effect. So, when we study a bill clause by clause we are only doing what traditionally has been done by parliament for a very long time. In view of this, we should not hear any more nonsense about how these great, new rules are working out. The rule with regard to the clause by clause study of amendments may be good. I do not write it off. We must wait and see how it works out.

If the minister stands up after I have finished and says he will not accept my argument because of the beautiful argument put forward by his advisers, I am finished; but under the old rules I could have risen again and spoken. I would have done so, because I do not want to have this kind of debauchery in our nation. I think there is a place for a filibuster. If people tell me to get out on with the job, I will say to them, "Do you want me to legalize sexual intercourse with the animals of Canada?" I am prepared, if I can find any rule which will enable me to do so, to stay here and debate this question for days, because this provision is against my Christian faith and the Christian faith of this nation.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on amendment No. 3, since I have myself presented an amendment bearing No. 4, which is exactly similar to the one the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has just discussed.

I do not have a great deal to add to what he has just said and I am entirely in agreement with what he said regarding clause 7 of Bill C-150.

If I have myself proposed an amendment to delete clause 7, relating to clause 149A of the Criminal Code, it is in order to leave unchanged the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, since the government proposed to amend the Criminal Code regarding acts of gross indecency, we have forgotten to clear up the question of the legislation on homosexuality. There has been much talk, perhaps too much, in the public in that respect. Authorized agencies perhaps have also talked too much.

I have on hand an article dealing with the question. As a matter of fact it brings up this matter and states that too much importance is being given to the act committed between two consenting adults.

In this article, one will find information which is quite remarkable and exact. I wish to put it in the official report so that all those who take the trouble to read it will be aware of that viewpoint.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I am referring to an article published in the magazine L'Equipe, which reads as follows:

> The bill designed to legalize homosexuality will long be talked about. It would be unfortunate if parliament were to pass this piece of legislation in its present form.

I feel that some members have realized its importance as we are now discussing amendments to Bill C-150 with regard to clause 7. The article goes on:

> Because of the publicity given to this matter, a large number of uninformed people are under the impression that homosexuality is a normal thing, while in fact, it is a form of sexual perversion. The bill does not say this; yet, everyone should be aware of the fact. When a similar measure was adopted in England, they had the courage at least to tell the truth about this evil that is homosexuality.
> Here, we heard men and women say on the air that they are in favour of the legislation because they themselves practise that kind of perversion to which they find nothing abnormal; they are sick but unaware of it.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remark that our national broadcasting corporation, the C.B.C., has given much importance to that problem and has allowed sexual perverts to express themselves freely and sometimes in an arrogant manner on the air. Canadians pay taxes to hear too many such programs which they dislike. I go on reading:

> It is universally acknowledged by doctors and psychiatrists that such a perversion is often curable; but if people are led to believe that it is a normal state of life, it is to be feared that far from improving, the situation will get worse. If experts concur in saying that it is a disease or an abnormal psychological state, it is unthinkable that under the pretext of "freedom", such a sexual perversion is allowed to spread, because freedom, when it is well understood, implies the respect of the liberty of others. Human nature being what it is, we see with dismay partisans of that practice leading others astray, because people engaged in such practices are usually indifferent towards those of the other sex, when they do not hate them. And that is what is going to be legalized? Will there be an end to that?

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, one such sexual pervert assaulted boys who objected to such perversions and he killed them. He murdered them to satisfy his lust. Such things occur too often, Mr. Speaker. Such sexual perverts are not satisfied with meeting other perverts; too often they try by every astute means available to pervert boys and sometimes, they kill or pervert. By legalizing homosexuality, such sexual perverts are given full liberty.

And the article goes on:

> Granted, the sick in that category are not all criminals, even if a great number of them should be behind bars because of the scandal they cause; but instead of trying to legalize an abnormal situation, we should adopt legal measures to reduce the number of those sick people through appropriate treatment.

Mr. Speaker, I think that instead of legalizing an existing situation, the duty of the government should be to protect those individuals by treating their sickness like that of any other sick person.

In Canada, we have managed to control tuberculosis. With the appropriate means, we can control homosexuality, since we recognize and admit that it is a sickness.

> The formation of citizens worthy of the name raises enough problems as it is, without adding a new one which will contribute to ruin lives for ever.
> Surely our sex-oriented movies do enough damage as it is.
> Saint Paul's warning in his Epistle to the Romans should make all Christians stop and think; speaking of the pagan's moral conception as regards the creation, Saint Paul writes:
> "For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature; and likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompence of their error which was meet."
> It is high time we tried to give a new value to the role of man, as well as of woman, rather than adopt "legal" measures that tend to degrade it. It would be much more beneficial to educate men so as to make them more manly, and women to make them more feminine; they would be the first to benefit from it and society would be much more healthy. Otherwise, we are going straight towards revolution, if not decay.

Mr. Speaker, this article I wanted to put on record deserves all our attention, because it explains clearly what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the government want to do by proposing to legalize homosexuality.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I want to make concerning subclause 1 of clause 7, to be added to section 149A of the Criminal Code, where it says:

> —between any two persons, each of whom is twenty-one years or more of age,

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the house that if this amendment is accepted as proposed by the government, there will be many difficulties in applying this act, namely in trying to determine the age of persons of about 21.

I am not too familiar with liquor laws in other provinces, but in Quebec people under 21 are not allowed in beverage rooms. We can imagine, Mr. Speaker how difficult it is to apply in the province of Quebec, any law where age is involved in view of the fact that young people have no identification cards. The same problem would be created by this amendment to the Criminal Code, namely to determine the age of young people involved.

Now, why should it be normal or moral for young people of 21 or more to commit such acts whereas those very acts would be immoral for those of 18, 19 or 20, who would not be allowed to commit them? The latter would be entitled to wonder about it. And the younger who are sexually ill or perverted would resort to all sorts of tricks to take advantage of the provisions of the act.

I remember a young boy who had been admonished rather brutally by his father for swearing. Then the child asked his father: When shall I be old enough to have a right to swear like you dad?

The young people might be prompted to ask themselves the same question concerning homosexuality and they might think: when we are 21 we shall be able to do what our elders have now a right to do.

I feel therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the house should reject clause 7 of Bill C-150, even if the sexual problem in Canada must be fully looked into.

[English]

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a very short argument in reply to my friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Certainly, I am no expert in the interpretation of the law as is my friend, the hon. member for Calgary North. However, I think I can argue this without reference to legal terms, strictly on the basis of the English language.

• (4:40 p.m.)

In the section to which the hon. member was referring, 149 (a), the word "between" is used, and in the English language "between" denotes two ingredients, to adopt the word he used, not three or more. If it were a question of three of more, or if there were a question of an animal being involved with two consenting adults, the word "among" would be used. I do not think the hon. member's arguments that this can be considered to legalize two consenting adults committing acts with a beast is one which holds water.

The hon. member for Calgary North is putting forward amendment No. 7. He is also sponsoring the amendment put forth by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade). This indicates to me that he is in favour of either one or the other, or of both, and that should his own amendment fail he would be ready to argue that we should remove clause 7 completely as suggested by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

He told us that when he speaks to his constituents he wants to be able to tell them that he opposed this clause because of his Christian upbringing. I should like to ask him whether he would also oppose such other things as we find in paragraph (a) which speaks about acts committed between a husband and his wife. Would he destroy the whole clause and thereby retain as a crime acts committed between husband and wife which are accepted by sociologists, doctors and the informed public in general as perfectly normal parts of conjugal love between a husband and his wife? I think the hon. member for Calgary North, in putting forth these arguments, does so with tongue in cheek.

I should like to make one comment regarding homosexuality. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) spoke at length against any action which would have the effect of taking homosexuality out of the realm of crime. I must say his arguments are not very convincing. One can hardly compare the habit of blaspheming with homosexual acts.

Homosexuality is considered by some people to be abnormal, but among those who are homosexual it is considered normal for them. If these people wish to carry on certain acts in private without bothering anyone else I do not think it is up to us as legislators to try to keep those acts within the realm of crime, thereby causing all kinds of other problems in the sociological make-up of this country.

[Mr. Stewart (Cochrane).]

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): My remarks, Mr. Speaker, will be very brief.

I should like simply to point out some essential reasons, in my opinion, for striking out, clause 7 of Bill C-150.

We have been wondering, Mr. Speaker, for the past few years in what direction the present government was heading for. In 1965, capital punishment was abolished. And when our friends argue that by trying to have Bill C-150 adopted they are reflecting the views of the Canadian people, since they were elected last June, I suggest they are wrong because the election campaign was not centered on the omnibus bill but rather on "trudeaumania."

Therefore, when Liberal members say they have received a clear, specific mandate from the Canadian people who are entitled to request parliament to adopt Bill C-150, I say they are wrong.

When capital punishment was abolished, it was supposed to be an improvement. But if you look at statistics, Mr. Speaker, you will see that since the abolishment of capital punishment, the number of crimes in the province of Quebec has increased by at least 20 per cent.

There are good things in Bill C-150, but if the minister thinks the passage of clause 7 of this bill will reduce the number of homosexuals, I tell him he is wrong.

The minister says he is not concerned with the morality of certain crimes. May I remind him that the government is responsible for making laws for the people as a whole and not only to protect a small group within society which, unfortunately—it has been said more than once—commits acts which are abnormal. I suggest that by trying to have this bill passed, he is showing a negative approach to the problem and refuses to face up to it.

If such people are abnormal, as the minister and some government members claim, let us find more effective ways and preventive measures to help them.

I practised law for 19 years, Mr. Speaker, and in my office I met some of those people who were suffering from the ailment known as homosexuality. The only thing we do for those people is to forbid them to practise homosexuality.

The government has never taken any preventive or remedial measure to try to help them out of the situation in which they have wallowed for several years.

Yet, alcoholics can be treated, as can the mentally ill.

When I am told that homosexuality is to be legalized because homosexuals are abnormal or ill, I say that the government is remiss in its duty when it opens the door wide without first trying to protect society in general.

The first duty of the government is to protect the citizens. With regard to legalizing homosexuality, I remind the government that when legislating outside of natural laws, one errs most of the time. With his experience, the minister has surely been aware of this for a long time.

We are told that this applies to consenting adults, to majors. It is illogical to refer to persons of 21 years of age or more. And why not to persons of 20 years of age? Or 19 years of age? Or even 17, who are also mature? Why limit it to people of 21 years?

Let us see how illogical this measure is.

The bill says: "Between any two persons, each of whom is 21 years or more of age". What has majority got to do with it? As if persons of 18 or 19 were not as mature, in some cases, as those of 21. I do not understand it. It is said here: "between two consenting adults."

The minister knows quite well that, in general, homosexuals do not wait until they are attracted by persons of age. They are rather interested in youngsters. The minister will tell us that to attack youngsters would be a crime.

The minister knows quite well that those people now considered as criminals under the law if they attack youngsters will not stop there if they are permitted to make love with consenting males of 21.

It is actually said: "Between consenting males of 21". I say that the minister opens the door wide and that it may be dangerous.

Those people will find all sorts of pretexts to be able to pick up, youngsters to try and relieve themselves, and this is exactly what homosexuals are looking for: It is not, then, to make love with persons of age which is important. The minister knows it. This does not interest them much.

I know it by experience also, as a lawyer, because I have not often seen persons of age who like to indulge in homosexual acts. Homosexuals are mostly inclined to pervert youngsters and the minister opens the door even wider.

The minister will say that they will be punished. The police will not be very much interested in chasing homosexuals after the passage of this legislation. They will be left free to do as they please. So the following consequences shall ensue. Instead of voting legislation to help homosexuals cure themselves since they are really sick, the way is cleared for them to act more freely. They are told that what they are doing is legal without any restrictions, except of course where young people are concerned. This will not prevent the 21 year-old homosexuals to covet them.

The government is making a mistake when it claims that it helps these people. It shirks its duty because the first obligation of a government is to legislate in order to protect society as a whole.

If there are people on the borderline, sick human beings, they should be cured and helped. Government must pass legislation, have clinics and make grants to associations which will be able to cure such people. There is no mention of that in the legislation. The minister will say that such a matter falls under the jurisdiction of the provinces. Nothing is said about action to be taken, grants to be made to the provinces so that facilities for treatment may be provided for homosexuals. This legislation is simply negative.

Instead of facing the problem, the minister simply closed his eyes and said: We shall choose the easiest way, we shall legalize the law and we shall not hear anything more about homosexuality.

The same thing will happen as when capital punishment was abolished in 1965. We witness today in the province of Quebec and in the others a large increase in crime.

Even if we talked for days and days, I feel that it would not make much difference. The government has made up its mind and my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté)—who tells me not to get angry—knows quite well that if he were on our side and could vote freely, he would be the first one to vote against the legislation to legalize homosexuality and abortion.

We at least can vote freely on those questions. We can vote freely but the minister and the members of the Liberal party have been instructed to support the bill blindly and at any cost without any regard for their conscience, their philosophy or their background. At least, our leader has allowed us to vote according our conscience and I thank him publicly.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, that I approve the amendment moved by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) and the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise). I think that as the result of our few comments, the minister could with his legal advisers think that the arguments which we have put forward are logical and sensible enough and that perhaps he could this evening or tomorrow tell us that he is withdrawing clause 7 concerning the legalization of homosexuality.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I unreservedly support the comments of my colleague from Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin).

[English]

First of all, I should like to say I find it passing strange that these proposals with regard to sections 147 to 149 are put before this house on the basis that parliament has no business in the bedrooms of the nation; that it has no business entering the private lives of people to this extent. While there is no acceptance of the morality of such acts, presumably society does not have to be protected against them.

As my colleague has just said, the law exists for the protection of society. If you go through the Code from beginning to end, Mr. Speaker, every offence therein enumerated is made punishable for the protection of society. Each of the offences carries with it the connotation of a transgression of morality. Take, for example, the provisions dealing with theft. Is the minister saying that there is less morality involved in cases of theft than in cases of sexual aberration such as provided for in sections 147 to 149?

Why is there no provision in the bill to remove attempted suicide from the list of offences? If a person takes an overdose of sleeping pills or something in private, how does that affect any other person? There is no scandal involved; it is an act done in private. Yet society must be protected against such cases. In other words, this particular airy-fairy conduct is singled out.

Mr. Dinsdale: You have the right word there.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, and we can apply a lot of other terms to it. Both of the practices dealt with here are repugnant to me, yet it seems to me we are giving them approval in that we are removing the sanction of law. I would like to ask the members of this house who are practising lawyers whether they have had any cases of bestiality.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Otto: How does that injure society?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not know why the minister insists that the exceptions here will not affect the act of bestiality. Yet an act of bestiality committed in private is still an offence. Will the pig squeal? Will the dog bark? One may ask, how will the public be scandalized? Yet, the act is deemed criminal. I agree with my colleague for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that the way the exception is created means that two persons can participate in an act of bestiality and get off scotfree if they are over 21 years of age. That is what will happen according to the amendments proposed with regard to section 149 of the act. Frankly, I find it impossible to follow the thinking in this regard. I have searched my mind for any rationale as to why this was put in. If it is right to remove the legal sanction from acts of homosexuality between consenting adults, and I shall have something to say about the artificial division at the age of 21, and from certain acts as between husband and wife, why do we not remove a whole gamut of offences, including attempted suicide and other acts involving an individual only and no other human.

These acts still carry a moral sanction. Will anyone tell me why it is that if two persons aged 20 years and 11 months commit a certain act it shall be a crime but if they commit it one month later it shall not be a crime? To me, that is completely illogical. I ask the minister, since we are concerned with the protection of society, has he ever been involved at the high school level with incipient homosexuality? This is where it starts. This is the functioning of nature. You become aware of a ring of persons engaged in unnatural conduct. It may take place among girls, and I have known of that, or among boys. You tell them that not only is it morally wrong, but it is against the law. Morality is equated with law in the minds of those young people. But now they will come back and say, "Yes, but when we are 21 we can do it and it will no longer be immoral or illegal."

Mr. Woolliams: That's like the liquor laws.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this house is being asked to amend the Criminal Code in this sense. What are we doing, Mr. Speaker? Are we basing our law on certain legislative amendments which have been introduced into the law of the United Kingdom where this subject is treated in a manner suggesting that anybody can carry out any form of conduct? But show me a country that is sicker at heart and sicker at soul than is Britain today. I have known the Britain of many years ago and my heart bleeds at the moves and attitudes of so many people of that country today. If you go back in history you will see that the same line of conduct has brought down nations.

We must accept degrees of morality and adhere to them. We are not entering an area of permissiveness, Mr. Speaker. No, this is licentiousness. This is not merely a permissive morality that is being introduced. This is open licence.

Mr. Woolliams: It is licentiousness.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, licentiousness. I should like to return again to this proposal to set up some sort of age qualification with regard to certain conduct. Do we say we are not concerned about morals and that we are going to remove legal sanctions against immoral conduct? Will anyone tell me that breaking and entering is not immoral or that any number of other acts are not immoral? Yet we are told in this legislation that while certain acts may be immoral they will not be illegal. In this day and age it seems that if you say certain conduct is not illegal, the concept of immorality goes through the window.

In the light of this, can the minister tell me how he can justify retaining the provisions in the Code against attempted suicide—not that I am an advocate of not punishing a person who attempts to commit suicide. I think it is an immoral act. Oh yes, it is immoral for a person who, shall we say, is in charge of his faculties to attempt suicide. I do not think that you, Mr. Speaker, as an individual have the moral right to take your life. You have no right to cast aside your life. You, as a sane and rational individual, may feel you have that right, yet there is a legal sanction against attempted suicide. So, I heartily approve of the amendment which would delete clause 7 of the bill and restore and maintain the law with regard to bestiality and homosexuality.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I must confess I am a little ashamed to talk about that problem in this house, in such dignified surroundings. When I say this, I express the opinion of the great majority of my constituents.

It is almost scandalous to see that the representatives of the people must presently discuss those matters. There is a tremendous difference between the proposed legislation and public opinion, at least as far as Quebec is concerned. The difference is so big, Mr. Speaker, that I even asked myself the following question: How can it be explained? What representations prompted the inclusion of clause 7 in the bill? Who wanted it?

I think our function is to make laws that are justified and justifiable, that the majority of the population really needs, and for which there are numerous representations. It is then the moment to legislate.

We did not legislate about satellites in 1900 because it was out of the question. I believe that at the present time most people are not in favour of legalizing homosexuality. That is why many representations are made to legalize it.

I can prove my point, Mr. Speaker. In question No. 789 that I put on the order paper, I asked—because I am opposed to such things—what prompted such a move. I am personally against it. Most people in my riding agree with me. But elsewhere in Canada, some are perhaps in favour of it. I was wondering about that and I put the following question on the order paper:

1. Are any organizations exerting pressure upon the government to promote adoption of the omnibus bill?

2. If so, what are the names of these organizations?

3. On which of the three points, homosexuality . . . abortion—

What did the minister reply? The reply to the first part of the question was to the effect that no organization was pushing on for the passing of this bill. Then, why such a bill?

I am wondering whether in all the literature we have been receiving since September, homosexuality and abortion were not the targets of most representations. Save for a few exceptions, nobody was in favour of passing this bill. It may also be asked whether such pressure was not exerted behind closed doors.

We have noticed with some pleasure this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Conservative party shared our viewpoint, and I wish to congratulate in particular the two previous speakers. If they were voicing the opinion of the majority in their party, and I think that all Quebec M.P.'s, including those on the government side, are against this clause, like the great majority of the population, I do believe—and I hope so because of my optimistic nature—that the house could vote for this amendment.

I cannot quite see how a member, in particular a Quebec member—I do not know what the situation is in other provinces—could vote against this amendment.

I am optimistic to a certain extent, and I hope that finally the light will dawn and that our role, the role of the house and the role of the government, will not be debased by the sponsoring of pieces of legislation which nobody wants.

Mr. Speaker, many arguments would warrant rejection of this amendment. Several have already been put forward and I shall point out the most interesting ones.

It has been said—and I agree with it myself—that this section will absolutely not check the expansion of that dreadful plague.

Mr. Speaker, if you read the history of certain countries, you realize that those who have accepted such depravity have been brought down, as if by mere coincidence. This is what happened to Ancient Greece and Rome. Let us read those portions again, if need be, and realize how the degradation of morals simply reflects a state of decline.

And it is not because our mother-in-law, England, has passed legislation of that kind that we have to follow the decline of that country, if I may use the expression.

Too often we felt compelled, in this government, to copy the laws enacted by the Parliament of London, and I do not see why we should feel obliged to do so, since I am not afraid to be wrong in saying that a referendum would reveal that 95 per cent of the Canadian citizens would be opposed to the legalization of homosexuality.

When expressing that view, we feel to be in a strong position, because we are sure of what we say, and the minister should also share that view, but he answers categorically: No organization presses for the passage of that bill. There has not been enough research done so far to allow a listing of the various questions pertaining to homosexuality. Should the phenomenon be placed under the heading of crime, of a psychic or sociological distortion, or simply of a disorder which could be cured by the medical science?

We do not know enough on all the aspects of the problem to be in a position to legislate adequately at this time. We are not here simply for the pleasure of passing laws. Besides, it seems to me that there are plenty of other extremely important matters to be dealt with. For example, the increase in the incidence of that plague would be particularly serious in our penal institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like, if I may, refer to an article published in the Tuesday March 4, 1969 issue of the Journal de Montréal, which describes the situation prevailing in American penitentiaries, and I quote:

Young convicts are corrupted by perverts.

The report comes from Washington.

Following an investigation by a Senate committee on homosexuality in penitentiaries, a young Negro aged 25 has been mentioned as a typical case of that scourge of which young prisoners are a victim.

After hearing the testimony of this Negro, referred to as John Doe, a former confirmed morphia addict, attorney Arlen Specter, of the district of Philadelphia stated that, in the penitentiaries, every new prisoner is approached barely a few hours after his arrival and that, if he refuses to take part in some unspeakable acts, he is literally raped and subjected to the roughest treatment.

As for senator Thomas J. Dodd, he deplored public indifference to the "unspeakable conditions existing in the penitentiaries, under which prisoners who at the start could have been rehabilitated become hardened criminals".

Attorney Specter explained that he was compiling very upsetting testimonies on the prevalence of homosexuality in the prisons and that he intended to submit, in support of such testimonies, "live" descriptions of obscene assaults upon young prisoners. "Such descriptions will not be to everyone's taste," added the attorney, "but they are in accordance with the facts." He added that homosexuality was one of the major problems in American penitentiary institutions and that drastic remedial measures were urgently needed.

At a time when our neighbours to the south are greatly alarmed by the very serious problem of homosexuality, we, in this country, acting like smart-alecks, like know-alls, under the guidance of a fifty-year-old young man, are getting ready to adopt measures such as this one. We should, in all decency an in all logic, wait until the results of the investigations to be carried out in the United States are known and then deal with the problem as it exists in our own country.

The absence of psycho-social investigations indicates that we should not adopt this clause now and, consequently, we should vote in favour of the amendment to delete it.

Therefore, the increase of the number of criminal offenders will become a serious problem, as one of my colleagues pointed out it a while ago. This problem was raised a few years ago, and we know how the people reacted. Let us not complicate things, even if such occurrences are infrequent. One or two cases per year enough to raise a scare, and this will not lessen the so-called anarchy that exists throughout the world. It is not by legalizing the offences of sexual deviates that we shall solve our problems resulting from anarchy.

• (5:20 p.m.)

If homosexuality is to be legalized between two consenting twenty-one-year old adults now, Mr. Chairman, shall we be able to tell their age? It is difficult enough in the beverage-rooms of Quebec, for example, where it is forbidden to sell drinks to people under 21. It is a real headache in grills and in the hotels of Quebec. Why? Because the young girls of 15, 16 and 17 are all 21 years old and they can prove it. It is absolutely impossible to verify the age of people.

Besides, the law is so illogical, particularly the section now under study, that I can clearly picture the young lads 20 years 11 months and 30 days old—those who were born on the 28th of February will be real lucky—waiting impatiently under stress the opportunity to celebrate their 21st anniversary by jumping into the five arms of the blue eyed boy of their dreams. I do say five. So, we have here a most ridiculous situation and it is attempted to approve and legalize it. I have the approval of 100 per cent of the people, at least in my riding and in the rest of the province of Quebec. The very fact of having to speak of such a thing is scandalous itself and those who will object and say we are just being scrupulous, that these things are outdated and old-fashioned and that we are back, in Quebec, to the old days when the clergy was all powerful, those who say such things are absolutely wrong, in my opinion.

True morality is for everybody. It is not merely a question of religion but a question of being a human person, of respecting the human person. And even if there were thousands and thousands of such people, it would be unthinkable to legalize such a thing.

Otherwise, we should do the same in every other field. Once you legalize a disease you must legalize all others. That would be, Mr. Speaker, something utterly ridiculous. I therefore believe it is absolutely essential that we now vote for this amendment, that we reject clause 7 of the present bill for which we cannot see any purpose.

I heard a moment ago a member on the far right who said, in order to explain the terms "between married persons," that the government wanted to adopt the bill because, according to the present act, married people might be indicted for, gross indecency.

Mr. Speaker, this is simply ridiculous.

If I went and practiced exhibitionism with my wife, on the steps of a church or in a public place, it is only right that I should be arrested. But in private such things are quite normal. We do not do that in public. Is there anyone in the country who can say he has been arrested because he had marital relations with his wife? Just tell us because as far as I am concerned, it is just sheer madness.

Why are we presented with such an argument? Evasions were used to stick that into the heads of certain people, mainly of those who have been swept away by the wave of "trudeaumania." They were persuaded to adopt that bill after being told that it was ridiculous, that the law does not provide for that, since its present form, it could cause married people to be arrested.

To my mind, this is an absolutely disgraceful way of getting this type of bill passed.

There is no problem. When two consenting adults are alone, when they do not cause any scandal, when there is no witness, is there any problem? Are those people arrested? For them to be arrested, they have to be seen by someone.

I fail to see the reason for article 7. If two young men are in a hotel room in Ottawa, if no one is aware of it, they will not be bothered. If they engage in degrading homosexual practices, and others see them, a complaint will be lodged. There must be some complaint or other, or else, those acts which are contrary to nature must be committed in public.

We will always be against homosexuality. Besides, even if this bill allows homosexuality between persons of 21 years of age, it recognizes the fact that these acts must not be committed in public or cause a scandal.

According to the law as it stands, nothing has changed. Two individuals, alone, who have no witness, can do what they please, and in peace. That is one more reason in favour of the amendment to have this clause deleted. We would then give cause to all Canadian citizens to have a higher opinion of this house which is often called the great hall of the nation. We should avoid its becoming the great fall of the nation.

It is therefore imperative that we try to improve the reputation of this house by adopting the amendment moving the deletion of clause 7.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I should like to reply to some of the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), some of which seem to be logical. His arguments were based on the old idea that morality is tied in with the law. One would presume from his speech that morality is the result of legislation and was devised by legislators and members of the church. One might come to the conclusion that morality is a permanent thing and that it never changes. Let me remind the hon. member of some early history.

Morality was not originally the prerogative of the church, particularly in pre-Christian days. Morality was the prerogative of military forces. At that time cowardice was immoral and illegal. We have come a long way since then. Subsequently, religious leaders undertook to guide, in respect of morality, and control the conduct of the people. Indeed, there was a long struggle, as outlined in English history, when the state attempted to take some of these powers from the church and put them into law.

One cannot say what morality is or suggest, as did the hon. member, that it is closely tied to the law. You may not be able to divide the two but you can recognize the change.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Otto: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member care to offer an opinion as the whether an act of homosexuality or bestiality is immoral?

Mr. Otto: If one examines the early history of civilization he will find that homosexuality was quite common. This did not become immoral until the Christian era. There was an historical purpose for this change. Morality is dictated by religious orders.

An hon. Member: You did not answer the question.

Mr. Otto: Religious organizations now make the laws which control and guide the mores of a nation.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Dinsdale: Obviously we are living in a sick society.

Mr. Otto: Yes, but the fact that this is a degenerated society does not mean that the failure to pass this law will help it. If one examines the history of the Roman empire he will find that after Constantine, Hadrian tried to introduce strong measures to bring back many of the old gods. He tried to bring the Roman empire into line, but he failed and the Roman empire fell apart. If our society is going to fall apart the passage of this measure will not be the cause.

Morality changes. As I said a moment ago, the conduct or the definition of morality or immorality is no longer a prerogative of religion or the church. The church suggests that it is not a sin to be poor, but our society suggests that to be poor is immoral. We know that it is immoral to be old. All these things change. By and large, the defining of morality and immorality is being assumed by technocrats and psychiatrists rather than by the state. Not long ago the Medical Association defined death as that state when the brain stopped functioning. It made no mention of the soul. The Medical Association accepted that without question. It is not those members of the medical profession—psychiatrists and others—who state that homosexuality on the part of individuals over the age of 21 is immoral. Members of the medical profession tell us that homosexuality is a sickness and that with present day knowledge there is no remedy for it.

Mr. Woolliams: That is only one opinion.

Mr. Otto: That is not only one opinion, that is the consensus of many opinions as a result of studies by psychiatrists and others. There is apparently no cure.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps they should see a psychiatrist.

Mr. Otto: The journals of the American Psychiatric Association are in the library. They contain report after report by psychiatrists which indicate that homosexuality is an illness and that it cannot be cured. In any event, this is recognized as an illness. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not believe this, but there is evidence to support the argument that homosexuality is not a criminal matter. These people should not be treated as criminals. This definition has nothing to do with the old concept of morality.

History indicates that morality has been tied closely to legislation. We must recognize the facts as they exist. No one opposite has explained what benefits there might be in continuing to take criminal action against these people who are sick, and no one has denied that they are sick.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member answer another question? Taking his argument to its logical conclusion, does the hon. member think for one minute that this bill will cure anything? The bill refers to consenting adults and married couples committing acts in private. I should like to know what the hon. member thinks about the people who belong to these clubs in various urban centres. Does the hon. member think these acts are being committed in private? Let us get to the meat of this bill.

Mr. Otto: I have discussed this matter with the minister, particularly in respect of age. I do not wish to usurp the minister's position. He will explain his reasons in respect of age and consenting adults. In any event, there is no point in attempting to legislate something that will not be accepted by the Canadian people. We must make every effort to adopt legislation which is acceptable.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have no great speech to make on the measure before the house, but still I should like to make a few remarks as pater-familias.

First of all, I must say I am opposed to homosexuality and I fail to see how this legislation can be justified. I also find it difficult to understand how the government members can fight for this measure with so much enthusiasm.

I am sure the minister himself would rather someone else had to justify his stand with regard to homosexuality and the bill now before the house.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot put forward many arguments, because previous speakers have shown in a very eloquent way that there was no need to legalize homosexuality.

Like the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), when this measure was introduced in the house, I wondered what could justify legalization of homosexuality. We were told time after time that homosexuals were ill. Instead of legalizing homosexuality, why not treat the sick?

I fully support what has been said by the members of Champlain and of Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) who suggest that clinics be established to take care of sick people instead of legalizing homosexuality.

Like the member for Champlain, I often wondered which associations and public bodies had made representations to the minister or to the government, in order to legalize such an illness.

On the contrary, I received many representations from associations in my constituency, asking me to emphasize their point of view in the house of commons by taking a vigorous stand against homosexuality. That is the reason why I am speaking now, in order to let the house know about the opinion of people in my constituency.

Since this measure has been under consideration, I have not received a single representation from any homosexual or other person asking me to exert pressures on the government in order to have homosexuality legalized.

Therefore, I can state without any danger of being wrong, that I express the views of the great majority of the people in my riding when I say that it is not necessary to legalize homosexuality but that it is imperative to cure those afflicted with such a sinful disease.

It is not surprising that young people have doubts about this government when they see us spend our time in the House of Commons discussing subjects such as homosexuality, then they tend to lose confidence in the government. Mr. Speaker, we should not forget that it is not the opposition which is responsible for the time wasted discussing homosexuality but on the contrary this government which introduced the measure now under consideration.

We want to gather all the forces of the opposition in order to prevent the legalization of homosexuality. I do not think that I am wrong when I say that several hon. members opposite would like to be free to do the same.

Mr. Fortin: That is true.

Mr. Ricard: Within our party, Mr. Speaker, we are free to vote according to our own conscience. Our leader has allowed us to vote according to the dictates of our own conscience and I should like to hear the government members tell us the same thing, because we have proof to the contrary.

In fact, the hon. member who spoke before me, just a while ago, wrote in a bulletin which he sent out to his electors some time ago that government members were not supposed to move amendments in committee because they had been given instructions to support the government.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need for me to say any more because I have already stated—and I say it again—that I see no need to legalize homosexuality.

Furthermore, I should like to encourage all those on the other side who still feel free, to join us in order to prevent the passing of such a measure. Therefore I urge them to join our ranks and to object to the inclusion of clause 7 in the legislation and to vote for the amendment now under consideration.

[English]

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply for the purpose of indicating my support for the amendment which will delete this clause from Bill C-150. In my opinion clause 7 is repugnant to the majority of the people of Canada. Hon. members will remember that during the debate on second reading the minister tried to convince the house that he had a case. He did not convince me that he had a case. I fail to understand how he has been persuaded to sponsor this portion of the amendments to the Criminal Code. I fail to understand what pressure was put on him to do so. In my opinion, the minister has not the slightest argument in favour of this section of the bill.

I do not propose to argue this question from a legal point of view. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has dealt with the legal points of this question and has argued beyond any successful contradiction that this provision should not be in the bill. There is no demand for it. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) argued most eloquently this afternoon against the inclusion of this portion of the bill. My hon. friend from Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) has just finished arguing the point and telling the house that he cannot bring himself to support this amendment.

All these arguments lead one to believe that there is no reason whatsoever for retaining this clause in the bill. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) in his argument a few minutes ago made such a poor case that I doubt the wisdom of his even rising to his feet; he did not convince anybody. Nothing he said had the slightest effect on any person who had a clear mind on this subject.

[Mr. Ricard.]

The minister is mistaken if he thinks he has enhanced his reputation by bringing forward this amendment to the Criminal Code with respect to homosexuality, bestiality, buggery, and all the rest of it, and attempting to get these things legalized by the house. He is tearing down his reputation. I say this to the minister because I have an interest in his reputation. We have been friends for a long time. He spends part of his time in my province. But he is making a mistake in allowing himself to be the instrument used to put this bill through the house, because obviously it will be passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: If the members of the government think they are improving their image, they are wrong also. Every member of the government and every member of the house is wrong, too, if he thinks he is enhancing his reputation by allowing this sort of bill to pass. If any member has any respect for the improvement of the general moral tone of the people of this country, he will vote in support of the amendment we are considering to eliminate clause 7. I accept the proposition that this clause will pass.

It does not make me very happy to think that a group of 150 or more people could be persuaded that this measure is good for the people of Canada. It is beyond my comprehension how this could happen, and I do not know how they managed to do it. Neither do I know why they have done it, nor do I know of any reason why they should do it. The minister has never made a speech yet in this house in which he gave any good reason for making respectable and for legalizing the homosexual act. I say that the majority of the people of Canada will be disgusted when this bill is passed by the house in its present form.

I cannot possibly accept this bill. Probably everyone knows that I cannot accept it. However, in case there might be some doubt in someones' mind as to my attitude, I am on my feet at this minute to declare my support for the elimination of the clause which makes respectable and legal something the effect of which would be to destroy, cut down and reduce the morals of our country. This is not a good thing.

I said a minute ago that the minister did not give the house any excuse for bringing in this bill. I do not refer to the bill in its entirety but rather to this particular section.

Our side of the house, through our spokesman, asked that the bill be divided so that members could express their approval of those portions of the bill of which they approve and express their disapproval of those portions which are repugnant to them. That was refused. Will you tell, me, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure if you could, you would say that you cannot—why the government, in their lack of wisdom, did not consent to divide the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: They put aspirins in the candy.

Mr. Flemming: I cannot understand it and never will because I am convinced that there are many fine people supporting the government. How they ever were persuaded not to allow the bill to be split so that amendments of this nature could be voted upon is more than I will ever be able to understand. According to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) the minister did not explain anything on second reading. He made no effort to do so. He would never be appointed a minister of justice in any government of mine, because he did a very poor job. Probably the hon. member who sits next to the curtain across the aisle could do somewhat better.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope we are looking at the right man.

Mr. Flemming: I am looking at the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: I would prefer the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Flemming: That is where we differ, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the Minister of Justice failed to convince anyone that he had a case. He did not answer the question: What is the government going to do about the young people, the 16 year olds. They will make this act legal for consenting adults of 21 years and over. What about those who are twenty and a half years old, and those who are 19 years old? The situation is ridiculous because, according to this bill an 18 year old boy will be liable to 14 years in the penitentiary while the 21 year old will go free.

Homosexuality will be made legal, as the government says, because it is being practised. This would also apply to murder because we have murder, rape, and armed robbery. According to that theory, all these acts should be made legal and respectable by an act of this parliament. I cannot see for the life of me how anyone can justify this bill in its present form. I realize it will be passed or the government would not present it. But I tell you that in my opinion this parliament will be known as the parliament which legalized homosexuality, and the minister will go down in history as the minister who brought in the bill to do it. That is what will appear in the history books. I hear an hon. member saying that they are willing to take the chance. But I am not willing to take the chance, and neither do I propose to do it. They are going to put the stamp of approval on homosexuality, sodomy and bestiality. The minister still has a chance to remove those objectionable features. If he does, no particular harm will be done to the administration of justice in this country, as everyone within sound of my voice knows.

These clauses are in the bill because someone said that the government has to put it through in its present form.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Flemming: I say to you that I will support the amendment to delete this clause because I think that is what the people of my constituency want me to do. Moreover, that is what I think the majority of the people of Canada want this government to do if they will only do it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

AMENDMENT TO B.N.A. ACT TO INCLUDE CITY OF HULL IN AREA

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-188, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (National Capital of Canada).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Isabelle: The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to extend the limits of the capital of Canada so as to include therein the city of Hull, and additional areas as defined from time to time by the parliament of Canada.

[Translation]

In other words, this amendment to the constitution would give statutory authority to parliament to include in the national capital all the districts already included in the national capital area.

[English]

Through this bill we wish to ensure that equal rights are granted for all and special privileges for no one, not even the city of Ottawa which has been privileged for so many years as a member of the national capital region.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? —at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SPECIFIC INTERIM ASSISTANCE MEASURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan in his capacity as Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the urgent representations made to the Agriculture Committee now in Saskatchewan, to the effect that western farmers face a crisis situation and need immediate assistance until programs for long term adjustment can be of benefit, will the minister say whether the government is now giving consideration to specific interim measures as suggested to the committee out west?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): The position of the government's consideration of this matter has been talked about by a number of my colleagues, and I am sure my colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will be very interested in this connection to receive an early report from the Agriculture Committee on the representations which have been made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: I was trying to give the minister an opportunity to be constructive. I should now like to ask him this: In view of the figures published today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showing that Canadian wheat stocks now stand at a record of over 1,024,000,000 bushels, will the minister tell us whether the house can expect an early statement from him or from someone else—preferably from him—indicating concern and outlining immediate specific measures to be taken? Or does the minister agree with the Prime Minister that the sale of wheat is not really the responsibility of the government?

Mr. Lang: The Prime Minister's statement to which the Leader of the Opposition has referred is again quoted in half its form, which is a rather regrettable performance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lang: Since I am asked, however, I will say that what is left out is the continuation to the effect that the Wheat Board is there to look after sales. I would be very happy indeed to let the Leader of the Opposition have some copies of recent speeches of mine to indicate to him that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, those speeches of the hon. gentleman will not be read as they are alibis, not policy. I would ask the hon. gentleman this: What is his view as a member for a Saskatchewan riding—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not blame hon. gentlemen opposite for saying "order". They know the difficulty in which the minister finds himself. I ask him: What is his attitude regarding, first, the question of some assistance such as acreage payments immediately to meet the serious situation in Saskatchewan? None of his speeches deals with that matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman has asked the minister for his view as a member from Saskatchewan, and the question as asked is not in order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, then, I will amplify it. Will he tell us, in the speeches he has delivered, what suggestions he has made. He has asked us to read these valuable additions to Liberal lore. What are the suggestions he has made in connection with benefits to the western farmer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not acceptable as asked.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister make a statement to the house at an early date—not somewhere outside in the country, but here in this house—as to what is intended?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lang: Of course, as soon as the consideration of this question is completed we shall certainly make a full statement on the issue to this house.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Since the problem referred to in these questions has existed in a grave form for several months, can the minister say whether a decision by the government is imminent?

Mr. Lang: Of course it is a certain part of the theory in the west that a great part of this problem has existed for much longer than that, indeed ever since Sir John A. Macdonald's "national policy". But we are fully aware of the seriousness of this issue.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF MECHANICS STRIKE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the possibility that there will be a strike of the employees of Air Canada by midnight Sunday unless some agreement is reached with the corporation. Since the main dispute seems to have to do with the fact that Air Canada mechanics are paid wages considerably below those paid in the United States—indeed, if their requests are met they would still be below the United States figure—and in view of the fact—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —that the President of the Treasury Board has stated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, I wonder whether the hon. member should not ask his question.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My question is very short, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the President of the Treasury Board has indicated that where there is comparable productivity wage parity is reasonable, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government still adheres to the principle laid down by the President of the Treasury Board, and is doing so in its negotiations with the employees of Air Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has been conducting its negotiations as a crown corporation should, independently of the government; but we have had a successive series of reports from Air Canada.

Our view is that the company has made a very generous offer—an extremely generous one—of settlement, but that the unions are demanding wage increases which are completely beyond the capacity of the company to pay. Since there does not seem to be an imminent chance of a meeting of the two sides on this, it is possible that there will be a strike. However, the Department of Labour is of course, very actively following the matter, and if there is anything that the government can do short of promising any additional money, the government will do it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the last offer made by Air Canada will still leave the employees of Air Canada below the parity figure, which seems to be the basis that has been established by the President of the Treasury Board, is the government prepared to reconsider its offer in light of the principle laid down by the government itself?

May I also ask the Prime Minister whether representatives of Air Canada have been instructed, as some of them claim, to adhere to an economical wage guideline set down by the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the latter point, they have not been so instructed. If they had, I doubt whether their offer would be as generous as it is, in fact. On the first point, it has never been and it is not the policy of this government to accept the principle of parity between wages in Canada and wages in the United States. If it were otherwise, it is obvious that one part of the population and one part of the workers would have to pay for the increases paid to others. It is obvious that the standard of living and the productivity of this country is lower than that of the United States; therefore it is impossible for all workers to be placed in a parity position with workers in the United States. Neither do we think it a good principle to let some workers who are in a stronger bargaining position transfer wealth from the poorer workers to the richer workers.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the inconvenience that may be caused to a great many people in Canada, may I ask the Prime Minister whether any arrangements are being made to have the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways handle perishable commodities in the event that this strike does take place?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are not taking the position yet that the strike is inevitable. I can tell the house, however, that a committee of cabinet is embarked on contingency planning of all kinds to make sure that there is the smallest possible disruption of the economy and service to the public, should the strike take place.

Mr. Bell: Where the hell is the Minister of Labour?

SUGGESTED COMMON NEGOTIATING DATE WITH UNIONS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour, in view of the absence of the minister? Has the Department of Labour discussed with Air Canada the possibility of arranging one date for having contract negotiations with unions involved, so that those negotiations may take place at one time and thus avert these perpetual strike threats every few months?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the situation but I will certainly take it into consideration. The Minister of Labour, I believe, will be back shortly.

CANADIAN ECONOMY

REMEDIAL MEASURES CONTEMPLATED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the unemployment rate amounts to 8.4 per cent of the total labor force in Quebec, could the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not his government has any intention of resorting in the near future to a specific means of settling this problem prevailing particularly in the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without acknowledging that the statistical data quoted by the hon. member are accurate and without necessarily saying that the only way out would be a change in government in Quebec, I must say that the federal government does its utmost to correct the situation.

Mr. Fortin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The statistical data which I quoted originate from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and while the unemployment rate stands at 8.4 per cent of the total and that—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Would the hon. member put his question?

Mr. Fortin: Very well, Mr. Speaker. Since according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics the last increase in the cost of living index has been the highest in the last nine months, can the Prime Minister tell us what the government is doing or intends to do to check that rise?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are mainly concerned about standing up against the representations of the opposition, including the party of the hon. member, which is constantly asking the government to increase expenditures in all sectors.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Considering that the unemployment rate and the cost of living are rising out of control, could the Prime Minister tell us what does a majority government control?

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVES MEASURE TO IMPROVE ECONOMY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion? In view of the rate of unemployment in Quebec referred to and the fact that the rate of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces is shown as 10.8 per cent in this morning's release from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, will the minister inform the house when he will be in a position to introduce the industrial incentives bill which we have been promised, and which one hopes would assist him in dealing with the problems of the five eastern provinces of this country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I hope that will be as soon as possible. It will be during the month of May, we hope.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform this house whether he is now negotiating with provinces with which there is not now an agreement with respect to an over-all plan? Are negotiations taking place with those provinces for the setting up of such a plan? If so, would the minister inform this house of the results of these studies and negotiations?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the deputy minister of my department last week was with the governments of the maritime provinces. I think he is to return tomorrow and he will make an early report on that matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Before the Easter recess the right hon. gentleman indicated that the government would be making a statement with regard to Canada's position vis-à-vis various regions of the Arctic. Will he indicate whether this statement will be forthcoming reasonably soon? Will it be in the form of a white paper or a statement on motions, and will there be some opportunity for the house to discuss and consider the government's statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I regret, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position yet to indicate in what form this subject will come before the house. It is a subject we are examining and all ministers involved have been discussing it. When I am in a position to report, I will do so gladly.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—POSSIBILITY OF RENEWING EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Could the minister advise if there has been any change in policy of the government as announced by the minister some time ago in this house that no attempt will be made to renew extradition proceedings against Hal Banks, because to do so would place him in double jeopardy.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): There is no change in policy.

Mr. MacEwan: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising from attempts being made by Senator Paul Fannin of the United States, of which the minister is probably aware, and arising from remarks attributed to Senator Fannin that he is "disappointed that the Prime Minister and Justice minister have shown so little interest in getting Banks back". Will the minister say—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest with respect to the hon. member that the previous question was not accepted, but I understand the hon. member for Calgary North has a supplementary to the original question.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Thank you for giving me that very careful leave, Sir. I ask the Minister of Justice whether if the administration of the United States are in accord with having Banks extradited, the government would then facilitate the extradition of Mr. Banks.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am hard put, Mr. Speaker, to answer hypothetical questions.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member has a supplementary. I am sure however he will agree with me the minister is correct in suggesting the question was hypothetical.

Mr. Woolliams: I will not take up any more time. I realize it embarrasses the government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO BILINGUALISM BONUS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State a question.

Bilingual secretaries of members of parliament have been making representations to the government for a while in order to get the 7 per cent bonus they are entitled to under the law and I would like to know when they will receive it.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no such representations were made to my department.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether in the wake of the letter he received from the representatives of the bilingual secretaries, the matter has been referred to a branch, a department, the Secretary of State or otherwise, and could he also indicate when the bilingual secretaries can expect a reply in connection with that 7 per cent bonus to which they are entitled?

Mr. Trudeau: I will have to check whether such a letter was received by my office, Mr. Speaker, and pursue the matter further if need be.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question either to the Secretary of State or to the Prime Minister in connection with that same problem, but more particularly inasmuch as the protective staff of the House of Commons is concerned.

For a long time that staff has been promised the 7 per cent bonus for bilingualism, and I would like to know if that bonus will be granted to them soon.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. It arises from the one which has just been asked.

Does the payment of that bonus to the bilingual secretaries come under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State Department or under that of another department?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, it does not come under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State Department.

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière has raised a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, in my view the question is of primary importance and, this time, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

Has any action been taken with regard to the claim made by members of the protective staff for the 7 per cent bonus for bilingualism?

Mr. Speaker: Even if the question is important, the hon. member cannot, on a point of order, repeat a question that has already been asked.

[Later:]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister, after having inquired about the 7 per cent bonus which was supposed to be granted to bilingual secretaries, be in a position before long to make a statement in the house, so that we may know whether it has been allowed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as concerns the secretaries of house members, I believe that the matter comes under your own jurisdiction rather than that of the government.

In my opinion, it is not up to the government to have inquiries made about members and their secretaries in order to determine whether they perform enough work in French or in English or in both languages to deserve such a bonus. However, I leave the matter to your discretion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Asselin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

It is not a matter of investigating the members or their secretaries. It is a matter of law enforcement. Is the fact that a bilingual secretary may receive a 7 per cent bonus a matter that comes under the jurisdiction of the Speaker? Is the Prime Minister expecting to meet the Speaker and ask him to make a decision as early as possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the 7 per cent bonus.

Does he intend to recommend to the Speaker to pay this 7 per cent bonus to bilingual employees?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows the rules of the house. It does not rest with the Prime Minister to recommend any action whatever to the Speaker of the house.

Inasmuch as the Chair is responsible for all questions regarding salaries of the employees of the house, hon. members can make direct representations to the Speaker.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, this is what I am doing now.

Mr. Speaker: The rules require that it be done in writing.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF MECHANICS STRIKE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would he refer the question of Canadian Pacific Airlines being temporarily empowered to provide additional service across Canada, and perhaps even in local areas, to the special committee of cabinet which he mentioned a moment ago, should an Air Canada strike take place?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that question has already been referred to the committee.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—SPECULATION IN LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Is he considering the possibility of ordering an investigation of the alleged speculations on the sites suggested for Montreal international airport in Saint-Jean, Saint-Hyacinthe and Drummondville?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this matter comes under my jurisdiction, but I may suggest that the provincial investigation is also concerned with that problem.

SPORTS

TORONTO MAPLE LEAFS—SALE TO U.S. TELEVISION NETWORK

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of today's news reports indicating that negotiations are under way respecting the sale of the Toronto Maple Leafs hockey team to an American broadcasting concern would he look into this situation, which may affect an important element of Canadian culture?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him what steps the government of Canada is taking to deal with the very serious financial crisis facing the provinces of New Brunswick and Newfoundland, and thereby bail out his friends Premiers Robichaud and Smallwood?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my question is an urgent one. It is prompted by the budget that was brought down yesterday in the Newfoundland—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the question is important and urgent the hon. member should ask it in such a way that it will be acceptable to the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I will rephrase my question—

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): And don't be such a smart Aleck.

Mr. McGrath: What's that?

Mr. Trudeau: I say "and don't be such a smart Aleck".

Mr. McGrath: Obviously I hit a very sensitive area. What steps is the government taking to deal with the very serious financial crisis now developing in the provinces of New Brunswick and Newfoundland which is placing a very heavy burden on the peoples of those two provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: As I indicated on a couple of occasions a few weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, officials of all provinces are constantly meeting in Ottawa these days. They met yesterday and today, and I believe they are meeting tomorrow.

An hon. Member: Every room will be full of task forces.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL STAFF IN PASSPORT OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I look at the Treasury Benches and I do not know to whom to direct this question, but since the Prime Minister has referred to hon. members as smart Alecks I will direct it to him in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will extra staff be made available to the passport body, which is very far behind in its work? People all across Canada are finding it difficult to understand the interminable waits that have to be made, even with clear-cut applications?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will refer the representation of the right hon. member to the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of the house. This is the kind of nonsense this house is being subjected to by the government, in adopting the system of selective appearances of ministers in the house. We are entitled to have answers to questions without waiting around until ministers gallivanting all over the world decide to return.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State is perambulating all the time, but I see that he is here today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely the Prime Minister should not try to wipe aside a reasonable question by a facetious observation such as that.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am very impressed by the lecture of the right hon. member. The minister to whom he is referring is at present in Japan with three other ministers on very important business involving trade, external affairs and other aspects of Canadian policy. They had to go to Japan, and certainly it would be improper for the right hon. member to assert that the minister's absence, or the absence of any of them, would prevent the passport office from issuing passports.

I do submit that that office may be subjected to a little extra work issuing passports to members of the opposition travelling abroad, but I am sure that the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs will not prevent the passport office from hearing the representation of the right hon. member and from trying to expedite this matter as much as it can.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister say who is acting as Secretary of State for External Affairs, so that we could communicate with him—because as one looks at these serrated ranks opposite he wonders where all the ministers are.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ENGAGEMENT OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General is looking very relaxed today and in view of that I would like to ask him a question concerning the large number of casual employees in the Post Office, something we have discussed on a number of previous occasions. Can the minister report to the house any recent information he has regarding this subject as it affects the postal service across Canada?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): I can give more exact information, Mr. Speaker. I said that the number of casuals is diminishing at a considerable rate. Between February and March we actually reduced the number of hours of casuals by 110,000, and that is almost 22 per cent or 23 per cent, and the dollar figure reduction was from $916,000 to $710,000. We are quite concerned about the problem.

At this moment in Ottawa the unions are meeting with my officers to discuss the whole problem of casuals right across the country. We have issued instructions to the regional offices that the unions and the administration should get together to discuss the problem.

Mr. Rose: Can the minister tell the house what proportion of these casuals have been taken on as permanent employees of the postal service?

Mr. Kierans: I could give the exact figures, but the hon. member will recall we had 2,000 surplus positions to fill and I would not judge that very many of the casuals have been hired permanently. We had to find jobs for the 2,084 who were rendered surplus because of the five day week.

SERVICE AVAILABLE ON SATURDAYS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. Some time ago the minister said that he would give consideration to keeping open on Saturdays all wickets in the lobbies of post offices, rather than just a few sections. Has he anything further to say in this regard?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): We have not reached a decision on that. It does present a problem. We are giving half service, which is not satisfactory at all. We are considering it.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN STAMP DESIGN REPORT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. It is in reference to the crisp and critical report of the Cunningham task force on stamp design which although tabled today was submitted to the minister in February. Can he advise whether any action is contemplated to implement any of the recommendations for improving what was found to be a pretty unsatisfactory situation.

[Mr. Rose.]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have already expressed my opinion by saying we found the report to be unduly severe and critical. I did not feel, however, that that was any reason for not tabling it in the house. After all, the people have paid for it. A great many of the stamps we have issued have been of a high order, but there is tremendous room for improvement. With regard to the recommendations, we have them in hand and do intend to implement a great many of them.

NATIONAL PARKS

GASPÉ—INQUIRY ABOUT NINETY-NINE YEAR LEASE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could the minister tell the house whether the Quebec government has agreed to a 99-year lease for land to be used for the development of a national park in the Gaspé peninsula?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received a final answer from the Quebec government; however, yesterday, I was in the Gaspé, and several citizens of the Forillon peninsula offered to give us their lands for the development of a national park.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister say whether the national parks policy has been altered in any way to permit the establishment of new national parks on the basis of long term leases of the land, rather than on the basis of an outright grant of the land to the Crown in perpetuity?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. member is not familiar with French law. The "bail emphytéotique" or long lease is a legal term to be found in the Quebec Civil Code, though not in English law, and which allows us to act legally.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

AKAITCHO HALL—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF COMMISSIONER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. You will recall that many weeks ago I raised a question about the regulations then in force in respect of Akaitcho Hall at Yellowknife. The minister said he was asking the commissioner to make an inquiry. I should like to ask when the minister will be able to give this chamber the details of the report which he has received as a result of the commissioner's inquiry, and would he also be good enough to table a copy of the new regulations which have recently been adopted in place of the outdated and severe ones which were objected to earlier.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, at my request, the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories personally conducted an investigation following which students were invited to elect a new council and to draft, in co-operation with the institution, new regulations which were unanimously approved.

I have not yet received a copy of the regulations but when I do I shall be pleased to advise the house accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. With regional disparity and a just society in mind will the Prime Minister consider a low income housing experiment in an area where annual incomes of $4,900 and $5,600 are higher than the average?

Surely the gesture the Prime Minister just made is the type of gesture which Ted Williams was expelled from baseball for.

An hon. Member: You got struck out.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

EUROPEAN FARM WORKERS—EMPLOYMENT OF STUDENTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister reverse the decision of his department which had the effect of cutting in half the number of European farm workers available to work in Canada under the International Agricultural Exchange Association and which thereby would have the effect of depriving more than 100 western farmers of experienced and capable help during the busy spring and summer season?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not hear the first part of my hon. friend's question. If he is referring to the exchange of students for farm work in Canada, I should like to tell him we have reduced to some extent the number of students from other countries that would be coming to Canada this year, because of our desire to employ as many Canadian students as possible. There is still a rough balance between the number of students we take and the number of Canadian students who find employment abroad.

Mr. Mazankowski: Would the minister review the decision in light of the fact that students, particularly high school students, in our own country are at school during the seeding and harvesting seasons and therefore are not available.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation to the minister.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, is the Department of Manpower and Immigration ready and able to provide the same service to farmers, so that Canadian boys can work on our farms for the same seasons, May 1 to November 1, at the same wage?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a capacity within the Canadian agricultural industry to absorb, certainly in the summer months, large numbers of Canadian students who are interested in doing this kind of work at reasonably good wages and under reasonably good conditions.

CANADA COUNCIL

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I should like to ask him whether Mr. Stanley Gray has applied himself for a Canada Council grant, and if he has filled in the requested application form and passed the necessary examinations for obtaining a grant.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is asking a question already asked yesterday, but if he thinks his question is urgent, he could discuss it at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Laprise: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

TORONTO MAPLE LEAFS—SALE TO U.S. TELEVISION NETWORK

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question should normally be directed either to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Minister of National Health and Welfare, both of whom I assume were to be present today but are not. Therefore I shall direct this question to the Prime Minister. It is a follow-up to a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Surrey, which I think is an important question inasmuch as hockey is at least—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the hon. member asked the question, the question period had expired about a minute previously.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put the question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he and his colleagues are investigating the matter and considering appropriate action with regard to the possible buying up of one of our national hockey teams by a United States television network.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member may I say that the entire question of sports is being studied now by a task force of the amateur and professional sports committee of the Department of National Health and Welfare, as well as by the Economic Council of Canada.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the parliamentary secretary in the absence of the minister. I ask whether the house can be assured that appropriate action will be taken before final negotiations are completed with regard to this sale.

Mr. Haidasz: I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and bring it to the minister's attention as soon as he returns.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 16, consideration of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and the motion of Mr. Woolliams (for Mr. Valade):

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 7.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, like many other members in this chamber I have difficulty with the law that we are now considering and with the amendment that is proposed. I think the present law is, and has been for some time, largely unenforced. I do not know whether it has been unenforceable. The remedy that is proposed, however, seems to go too far in one direction for average Canadians, who after all are entitled to regard the parliamentary attitude toward the Criminal Code as a reflection of what morality should be in Canada. I hope I will be able to flight my way out of my dilemma and make at least a suggestion or two in a brief contribution to this debate.

We have here an attempt to separate the law from personal morality or, as has been stated by the architect of the so-called just society, the state has no place in the nation's bedrooms. That statement has a rather motto-like note ring to it. But I suggest to Your Honour and hon. members that the state does have a place in the nation's bedrooms. It certainly is there in the presence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), with family allowances when unions come to fruition. It is there in the person of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) when he is in a position to issue pleasing housing statistics showing us just how many bedrooms exist. It is there in the presence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) because when two people come together certain financial benefits flow to the person who makes out the income tax return. Then, sir, if the union is productive, even more financial benefits flow to that union.

So this bedroom is getting to be pretty crowded. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport are all there. Even the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is there, because on occasion people straggle into the wrong bedrooms and certain parties have to put their cases before judges of divorce and matrimonial courts appointed by the Minister of Justice. So the Minister of Justice is also in that bedroom.

Then what about the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen)? From time to time ministers of immigration of this country have been indiscreet enough to venture into weighing the merits of persons born in Canada as opposed to the merits of persons born abroad. When the minister of immigration does this on rare occasions and gets his knuckles rapped, as he should, he is surely then in the nation's bedrooms and counting those going in and the number of bodies coming out. Therefore I suggest that the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is a very great oversimplification of what is the actual situation in Canada. I have listed some half dozen ministers who have an interest in the bedrooms of the nation. This number is somewhat more than the number of ministers present this afternoon, for example, under the roster system.

I shall come to the problem in a moment, but first I would like to comment on certain statements made in the debate yesterday by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). He gave an historical sketch of the sources of morality and their development over the ages. First he has to be put aright on an historical fact. It was Julian the Apostate, not Hadrian, who attempted to turn back the clock and revert to the worship of various pagan gods. The hon. member also seems to have forgotten the first half of the great Judaeo-Christian tradition that is part of our heritage. He has forgotten the moral teachings in the Old Testament before the Christian era, where certainly much was said about the goings-on at Sodom and Gomorrah, when the finger was shaken at Noah for incest with his daughters. You can name almost any part of the Old Testament and find that these things have been taught us in our formative years as examples of immoral behaviour. What the hon. member seems—

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McCleave: I would be delighted to accept a question.

Mr. Otto: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that the tribes of Israel composed a civilization at that time?

Mr. McCleave: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I did not catch the question.

Mr. Otto: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that the tribes of Israel could be interpreted as composing a civilization at that time?

Mr. McCleave: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if any other group as small in numbers has been as successful in directing the course of civilization I have not heard of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCleave: For a people living in a very small area and often beset by civilizations ten or even a hundred times their size, I think they showed remarkable perseverance, a persistence to live and an ability to impart to us a great deal of our heritage. I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

Having listened to the hon. member, I gather that he has derived his notions of morality from the later days of the classical civilization of Rome and Greece. I point out to him that certainly in what might be called their Spartan period or their early years of formation, their standards of morality were very high indeed and were directed to the preservation of family and state rather than giving full and unfettered rein to the permissiveness of individual behaviour. This is the point I am making.

What is the whole criminal law about if it is not to enact something that imposes sanctions against what we regard as behaviour that is anti-social or against the interests of our society? There is no point in trying to argue that every individual is free to use his own moral yardstick. He is not free to go forth intoxicated and wander about in a public place without drawing opprobrium or some penal sanction upon himself. He is not free to go forth stealing, even if stealing may be a matter of life or death to him and he takes something literally to preserve life. He is not free to handle any potentially dangerous thing. Any hot-rodder can skip along, with youth on his side and the ability of young people to react more quickly to dangerous situations than older drivers do, but he is not free to drive as he likes down the centre of any main street in Canada. The law imposes sanctions against that sort of behaviour. In short, what I am saying is that personal norms are not our guidelines in drafting the criminal law, and the criminal law deals with a multiplicity of human behaviour.

The dilemma in which I find myself is that I do not like the existing law in this field. We were all shocked by a recent case in which a person who had practised homosexuality was kept in prison for an indefinite period under another section in the code which was upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not think that the facts in that case justified that sort of reprisal against an individual of aberrant habits, otherwise, God knows who really should be in an institution for the rest of their lives.

I reject the present law in this field, but I think that the minister, in taking the course he has followed, is shrugging off the whole problem rather than attempting to cope with it in some manner. I have to agree that remedies are not particularly rampant in this field, but we do have the Kinsey studies and, particularly in the last 15 years, there has been a growth in the science of ethology. Studies in this field have so far been confined to aberrant behaviour in wild geese and animals, but they are nonetheless an indication of how human behaviour might develop under certain environmental conditions. Within a few years these studies will probably give us a much better understanding of how we can cope with sexual perversions and other aberrant behaviour of human beings.

Admittedly my remedy comes late in the day because we have to vote on a particular measure and not discuss a course of action that otherwise could be followed, but I suggest that we have dealt with this subject in a purely legal manner. It has been studied well in the committee—it was a very fine committee—but it was studied as a legal rather than a health problem. Perhaps it would have been better to take up the subject in the health committee where ethologists and other people could have come forward and made suggestions.

May I say as my final point that I have tried to argue as best I could that we cannot allow morality to become the prerogative of every individual. It is not individual morality that we are dealing with but group morality. I have here an article which appeared in the Western Catholic Reporter of February 9, 1969. This is not a periodical to which I, as a Presbyterian, subscribe but this copy was given to me by my friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). It contains one sentence which makes the argument as well as I could in 15 or 20 minutes. It reads as follows:

—the government has an obligation to promote the acknowledged norms of decency.

Unfortunately this is not what is happening in regard to the particular section of the code with which we are dealing.

I do not believe that problems of homosexuality and other aberrant sexual behaviour should be dealt with entirely as a penal matter; I think other courses will be open to be followed as our society becomes more knowledgeable on this subject. However, I would not like to see the field thrown wide open so that any person may think he has a right to do his thing. I do not think, for example, that we help society by making certain sexual aberrations permissible under the code. This might allow any pervert who molests children to think that if his neighbour down the street can be a homosexual and mingle with his kind he himself has the right to follow his own inclination to savage young children. Yet I think that unless we are very careful with what we do with the Criminal Code people will shrug—this seems to be the society of the shrug—at any suggestion that there is good law in the nation.

This is what bothers me most of all. People have to have a sense of what is right and proper in society and they must feel that there is an expression of this in the law. In the normal course of things, if someone goes astray society steps in and says that person is to be punished for going beyond what is regarded as good and proper behaviour. I believe that the intention behind the proposed amendments is good and I do not quarrel with it. But if we pass these amendments we will make our criminal law meaningless to a large segment of the country because people will automatically cast their minds back to the days of decadence of earlier civilizations and they will think that the same thing will happen here. They will feel that we as parliamentarians have not produced the kind of law which will hold this civilization together.

In balancing my regret with regard to both the proposed law and the amendments put forward by the two hon. members I have to come down in favour of the amendments and I propose to vote accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that I am a new member and that I do not know the rules thoroughly as yet, I would like to know whether the minister will put an end to the debate if he speaks now?

Mr. Speaker: I have always been impressed by the hon. member's knowledge of the rules. However, I remind him that the minister does not close the debate by taking the floor now.

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, you have confirmed my understanding that under the new rules, despite the fact that the Speaker is in the chair, the minister does not close the debate when he rises to speak. However, we are limited to one intervention on each particular amendment. Despite this rule, I think it might be appropriate at this time if I were to address myself briefly to the third amendment appearing on the order paper under notices of motions pursuant to Standing Order 75 (5). If I may be allowed the same latitude as was given to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), I should like to digress somewhat to answer his point as found in his amendment, No. 7.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Briefly, it is the rationale of clause 7 that law and morals are two separate disciplines involving two separate philosophical propositions or concepts. It is the feeling of the government that certain private aspects of human life and relationships between individual human beings, despite the fact that in a pluralistic society they might be considered to be by some, in their own private judgment, as immoral, and by others to be less immoral or possibly, amoral, had better, in those areas of private behaviour, of personal conduct not involving public order, be left to private judgment and not be subject to the criminal or penal code. It is within this philosophy, or collective judgment of the government, that we have introduced clause 7 to provide that the sections of the Criminal Code dealing with gross indecency should not apply as between a husband and his wife or between any two persons each of whom is 21 years of age or more, when both consent to the act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In private.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In private. In other words, when acts are committed in private between two consenting adults, those acts, however indecent or repugnant or immoral, should remain a matter for their own private consciences and not be a matter bringing into play the Criminal Code of Canada. The conduct contemplated in this clause, homosexual acts between consenting adults in private, is repugnant to most of us. It is repugnant to the great majority of the people of Canada. I resent very much the argument of some members of the opposition that this legalizes homosexuality.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Of course it does.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It surely does nothing of the kind. The clause does not endorse such acts. It does not promote such acts. It does not advocate such acts. It does not popularize such acts. It does not even legalize this kind of conduct.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It legalizes it. Of course it does.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister permit a question for the sake of elucidation? I understood him to say the attitude of the government was to leave these acts entirely within the realm of private judgment. If this is so, how can such conduct possibly be illegal?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With the greatest respect, I think that is a bit of sophistry. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was not present throughout the debate yesterday, although I presume he read Hansard. The argument put forward by some members of the opposition was that the effect of this clause was to legalize or condone a standard of conduct which to most of us is physically and morally repugnant. It does nothing of the kind. It merely lifts the stigma of the criminal law from a certain type of conduct which we consider to be private conduct which ought not to be within the purview of the criminal law. That is the purpose of the clause.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When something ceases to be illegal it is then legal.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It may well be, and I tend to think so myself, that homosexual acts are a cause for medical attention or psychiatric attention. But when carried out in private, and when they do not affect the morals of a minor or corrupt a minor, they should remain outside the criminal law. The criminal law will not cure them. The causes of this kind of conduct are far more subtle.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about the ages 17 and 18? This is when doctors are necessary, and it is criminal then.

Mr. Valade: May I be allowed to ask a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I should be glad to entertain the hon. member's question when I am finished. I am sure he will be able to retain it in his very sophisticated mind until the end of what I have to say.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are just a pair of consenting adults.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member was a member of the committee and he knows we threshed this subject out fairly thoroughly. I recognize his interest in this subject from the point of view of the criminal law and I shall be glad to entertain his question a little later.

It is our view that it is not the purpose of the criminal law to probe into the private lives of individuals where the public order is not involved. Here I come to another argument, and in this I believe a good many members of the house will support me. A penal law is not a good law unless it is an enforceable law. A law which is not enforceable is not a good law. And it is our judgment that a law against the kind of conduct contemplated in clause 7, acts between consenting adults in private, is unenforceable, indeed, that attempting to police this type of conduct by probing into the private lives of people would bring the whole system of law into contempt and disrepute and thereby contribute to making the law less credible. I believe that public order would be better served by the amendment to the code which we propose.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would you pry into the 20 year-olds?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I know the members of the Ralliement Créditiste and I am sure they were sincere when they quoted from the Old and the New Testament. May I tell them, however, that I have here, to back my opinion a text which says that a law which cannot be enforced is not a good law.

Therefore, may I quote, for their guidance, an excerpt from the Supplement to the Summa Theologica, by Saint Thomas Aquinas. I quote from the answer to the first objection, question 67, article III.

He that is empowered to prohibit (i.e. to make laws) does not sin if he does not expect his prohibition to be a source of redress or improvement, but, on the contrary, deems that this prohibition will give birth to more evil or disorder.

Therefore, I believe that even on the ground of theology, very serious and reliable authorities have backed up the opinion that if you want a law to be complied with it should be officially promulgated.

[English]

I wish to comment briefly on certain remarks made during the debate. I shall not trace them to individual members because I would prefer to deal with the question objectively.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The suggestion was made that taking away the sting of the criminal law from this type of conduct between consenting adults in private would menace the health of society, that it would have a damaging effect on family life. This concerns me very deeply. I want to cite for the consideration of the house some of the conclusions, reached after a good deal of study, by the Wolfenden commission in the United Kingdom which, as the house will recall, was composed of 12 men and three women under the chairmanship of Sir John Wolfenden and reported on similar matters to the House of Commons at Westminster.

After a very thorough investigation and inquiry the commission rejected each of these arguments. The committee found there was——no evidence to support the view that homosexual activity is a cause of the demoralization and decay of civilizations, and that therefore unless we wish to see our nation degenerate and decay such conduct must be stopped by every possible means.

I am using the committee's own words. The report goes on, and I quote again:

—we cannot feel it right to frame the laws which should govern this country in the present age by reference to hypothetical explanations of the history of other peoples in ages distant in time and different in circumstances from our own.

With respect to the second contention that this type of conduct has damaging effects on family life, that homosexual behaviour between males has a damaging effect on family life, the committee found—and I quote:

—this may well be true, and deplored "this damage to what we regard as the basic unit of society".

I deplore it too. However, the committee went on to say:

We have no reasons shown to us which would lead us to believe that homosexual behaviour between males inflicts any greater damage on family life than adultery, fornication or lesbian behaviour. These practices are all reprehensible from the point of view of harm to the family, but it is difficult to see why on this ground male homosexual behaviour alone among them should be a criminal offence.

Here we get down to the relationship between law and morals again. We do not condone adultery, yet it is not a crime. We do not condone fornication, yet it is not a crime. This type of private diversion from what we would consider moral behaviour has remained outside the purview of the criminal law, and I do not believe that the imposition of the criminal law against this type of behaviour would cure it. Neither do I believe that the imposition of the criminal law against the type of behaviour contemplated in this clause, however reprehensible it may be to most people in this house and in this country, would cure the illness or conduct about which we are talking.

I want to deal briefly with the arguments of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). The hon. member used to support his contention an opinion written by Dr. Alan Mewett, a very respected professor from the University of Toronto school of law, whose testimony we had the advantage of hearing before the committee, thanks to the intervention of the hon. member. The hon. member suggested that under the proposed amendment bestiality could be lawful. I should just like to read the clause to Your Honour.

Sections 147 and 149 do not apply to any act committed in private between

(a) a husband and his wife, or

(b) any two persons—

I agree with the hon. member that there is no certainty in the law. I agree with the hon. member that he does not have to take my opinion of the law. As a matter of fact, I am appointed to this post not to interpret the law but to try to administer justice, and I take my views from as wide a selection of legal authority as I can, particularly from the law officers of the Crown.

I suggest to the hon. member that the opinion he advances, supported as he is by Professor Mewett, is not widely shared. As the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) suggested to us yesterday, it really does not take a lawyer to distinguish between the word "person" and the concept of bestiality. Therefore I would say to him, with all the respect that I have for him as a result of our friendship over the years, that new section 149A must be construed as referring to those acts that are mentioned in sections 147 to 149 other than bestiality. To construe clause 7 in any other way would be to reduce the ordinary use of language to an absurdity.

May I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that hon. members opposite have suggested in rather strong terms that law and morality ought, where possible, to be synonymous, public law and strictly private morality. However, I cannot accept that. I suppose that in a perfect society where one would have unanimous opinion as to what is morality and what are standards of good behaviour this might be so. But the problem of trying to render synonymous law and morality is that we then come down to the question: Whose morality? Whose standards of behaviour? Whose sense of morality? Who is to determine the standard? Who is to attribute blame? Who is to say what is moral and what is immoral? Who is to decide when moral responsibility exists in terms of freedom of will, and when it has to be diluted in human terms because of environmental or physical causes?

The nub of the matter is: Who is to decide what moral behaviour or conduct is to be reflected in the code? That is the point. In a pluralistic society there may be different standards, differing attitudes, and the law cannot reflect them all. Public order, in this situation of a pluralistic society, cannot substitute for private conduct.

We believe that morality is a matter for private conscience. Criminal law should reflect the public order only. Despite the fact that most of us in our personal convictions have a complete repugnance to the conduct from which we are lifting the taint of criminal law, this does not to my mind interfere with the validity of the principles that we are trying to submit to the house.

Mr. Woolliams: May I just ask a question for clarification, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday—and I hope I was fair in my argument—the law is subject to interpretation. In this particular argument I have to ask the minister's opinion of the law as he sees it. May I just review section 147 of the code; I read it yesterday and it deals with buggery and bestiality. Section 147 reads:

Every one who commits buggery or bestiality is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment—

Is it possible for two persons over 21 years of age, engaging in this sort of pantomine in private, to be found guilty of bestiality—under proper circumstances, of course, as the minister can appreciate, being a lawyer?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I said, Mr. Speaker, we are unable to agree with the hon. member's contention that the factual situation as he described it would be applicable here.

Mr. Woolliams: My argument is simple. Does the minister mean that if two people are together and they have an animal with them and one of them commits an act of bestiality with that animal, one of them would not be guilty of contravening the Criminal Code? Would not both be found guilty of bestiality?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What you are worried about—I speak through you, Mr. Speaker—does not amount to anything.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I submit the hon. member is concerned about a situation which really tortures the wording of this amendment. The amendment would in no way exempt the type of conduct he describes.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on previous occasions I have asked the minister certain questions. Would he be good enough to reply to them now? The minister stated that homosexuality ought not to be considered from the legal aspect but from the psychological or medical aspect. On what argument does he base that contention? What specialized or expert opinions does he draw on when he says that homosexuality ought to be considered a medical or psychological problem?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That was accessory to my main argument. We believe that this type of conduct cannot be cured by using the criminal law and that it is either a question for private morality or for physical treatment. It must be cured either by emotional or psychiatric treatment and is beyond the purview of the criminal law. That was my argument.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question? I agree with him as to the way this type of conduct ought to be cured. He suggested that the arguments of my leader constituted sophistry and I submit that the minister's arguments are forms of sophistry. Frankly, I cannot follow them. I do not understand his argument when he says that the introduction of clause 7 will not make homosexuality legal. As I understand the law it is that without clause 7 acts of homosexuality would be illegal. By inference, therefore, it is fair to say that the minister is legalizing this conduct. This area of the bill, frankly, is the only one which really bothers me. When the minister tries to suggest that questions raised by hon. members with regard to this clause constitute sophistry, I say that the minister is not being quite fair. Surely with clause 7 homosexual acts in Canada will be legal.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, what the clause purports to do is to render non-criminal homosexual acts between consenting adults in private. That is a far cry from the positive term "legalized". In other words, it is a far cry from saying such conduct is legalized.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of participating in this debate but I must confess that the minister's latest comments have made me more confused than I was before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps he did not mean to suggest that the change he is proposing constitutes approval of this conduct. But when he stands up in the house and says that the effect of the change will not be to legalize such conduct, I am afraid I cannot follow him. If this clause means anything surely it means that it will make legal what was formerly illegal. The minister's latest statements have only served to confuse me and I cannot accept his contention. I can understand him when he says that the criminal law possibly was ineffective in this area. But when he says that this sort of conduct involves purely a matter of private judgment, then I find that difficult to accept. Surely we recognize that the interests of society are involved with respect to what goes on in private and that the criminal law must regulate such conduct.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I take it the hon. member was asking a question and I shall try to reply to it.

Mr. Stanfield: It was a statement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The effect in law of clause 7 is to provide a defence to sections 147 and 149 with respect to those conditions described in the clause. That is the legal effect of it.

Mr. Woolliams: But section 147 deals with bestiality.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended participating in the debate on the amendment to clause 7 of the bill. But as I listened to the minister this afternoon and to the explanations he gave hon. members with respect to the bill I, too, found myself becoming increasingly confused. Frankly, I do not know why the Minister of Justice has followed the course he has in introducing this bill. As the English speaking heir apparent to the Prime Minister's throne which may become vacant more quickly than we realized, he has not done himself justice by promoting this type of measure.

An hon. Member: You are confused.

Mr. Crouse: Yes. As one hon. member has said, I am confused. Considering what is rumoured throughout the country I feel that my statement has some validity. As I listened to the minister I could not help wondering just who was promoting this bill across Canada. Where did the pressure come from that caused the Minister of Justice to initiate this form of change or this type of measure? I fail to understand it. I cannot conceive of the reasons that prompted this measure to be brought before the house.

An hon. Member: Whom are we trying to protect?

Mr. Crouse: I wonder, whom are we trying to protect? When the effect of clause 7, as I understand it, is to make legal acts of homosexuality and buggery between two consenting adults or bestiality involving animals when such acts are carried out in private, how can the minister justify his thinking on this matter? When we pass clause 7 these acts, although they are committed in private, become legal. Would the minister say, for example, that if two adults smoke marijuana in private their actions would be legal?

• (3:40 p.m.)

In view of the controversy in the house on this point I think the Minister's views would be of interest to the house as well as to Canadians generally. I cannot conceive of the measure now before us being passed. I wish to register my strong protest against legalizing homosexuality and I want to indicate my intention to vote against any act that will legalize it in Canada.

Would the minister answer my question with regard to the use of marijuana? Does he believe that the smoking of marijuana by two consenting adults in private should be considered legal?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order please. May I remind hon. members that the Chair will accept such questions provided they are addressed to the minister while he has the floor.

These questions must not be allowed to develop into speeches since some hon. members will probably want later on to take part in the debate on this amendment.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I did not have the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of serving on the justice committee which dealt in depth with this very difficult problem, but I have followed the debate in the house at the various stages, particularly at this stage.

Having listened to the comments of the various members who have spoken and to the statement of the minister a minute ago, it seems to me that legal chicanery has been the main concern involved in discussing a matter which I feel is a very profound and disturbing moral issue. I am not a lawyer and I do not intend to get involved in the legal niceties of the problem, but I would like to present some of the moral concerns that bother me as I contemplate having to make a decision on this matter.

As I have listened to the discussion it has become more and more evident why this bill should not have been considered in omnibus form, but it should have been dealt with in separate parts. I understand this was the desire of the Minister of Justice in order that we could deal with the merits of other parts of the bill which are worth while and should be promoted without having to commit ourselves to a moral act of profound significance. I am in agreement with hon. members who are disturbed with the minister's attempt to deal with the moral aspect. The minister quoted the Wolfenden report. It is not the law of the Medes and Persians in regard to the social impact that a measure of this kind might have. As a matter of fact we now hear of very serious repercussions in the United Kingdom as to the effects that similar amendments made there a few years ago are having on the basic social institution of the family.

The minister referred to previous experience with regard to the moral impact as being history from a bygone era having no significance today as we consider this matter. I concluded from this that the minister has his head in the sand. I believe it was Charles Beard who reached three main conclusions as a result of a lifetime spent on historic research. They were, first, that "the mills of the Gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly fine"; second, "when it is dark you can see the stars". Morally, it is very dark right now in many parts of the world. Possibly there will be a light at the end of the tunnel before very long. The third and most significant is, "He whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad."

I cannot understand why a government charged with the responsibility of leading this house and the nation is bringing in this change at this time when there has been no great public pressure or public clamor. The issue is seriously fraught with moral implications. We are bringing the morals and values of skid row into the salons and drawing rooms of the nation. I used to be a social worker. Certainly these things go on in skid row areas, but now we are bringing them right into the open and discussing them in the high court of public opinion, parliament. This will not resolve anything in terms of the problem itself.

The minister admits there is no positive approach in the legislation to this problem. If it is to be dealt with in a positive way, we must change the emphasis from punitive treatment to therapeutic treatment. There is nothing in any government program that comes to grips with the problem. We are reversing completely values and traditions which have been the foundation stone upon which our western Christian civilization has been established. This is being done without any public pressure. The initiative has come from the government.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

There was a time when it was possible to say that all politicians were against sin and for motherhood. Here we have a reversal of this fundamental principle. Obviously this legislation means that we are formally recognizing this problem and are downgrading the role of motherhood in this nation. Our values are completely reversed, which indicates the degree to which moral decay has saturated our society. Today we hear many people in responsible positions referring to the civilization and culture of North America, the United Kingdom and in fact the whole western world as a sick society.

I am amazed that members on the government back benches have not participated in this debate because we are now reaching the crux. We have to make a decision within the next day or so. I hope some government supporters will weigh this change from the standpoint of not only its legal implications but also its moral implications.

The Prime Minister himself has given support to this legislation. As a matter of fact, he initiated the legislation when he was Minister of Justice. There is a prestige surrounding this high office which is far above the qualities of any particular incumbent. As several spokesmen have already indicated, it is the Prime Minister who in response to the serious criticisms with respect to the moral implications replied with that frivolous phrase, the state has no place in the bedrooms of the nation. Of course that is hardly worthy of the dignity and responsibilities of a man who is charged with the responsibility of leading this nation. Murder your wife in the bedroom and see how quickly the state would move in. Pile garbage in your bedroom and see how quickly the state would move in.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dinsdale: Some of the backbenchers on the government side of the house are shouting. I wish they would get up and make speeches instead of shouting. I am speaking to the amendment.

Mr. Crouse: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is a debate going on and there are interruptions from the other side of the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris has the floor.

Mr. Dinsdale: As I was saying, murder your wife in the bedroom and you will see how fast the state will deal with that problem. But if you become involved in spiritual and psychological degradation of this kind you are actually committing an act that involves spiritual and even sociological death because, as I hope to demonstrate in the short time at my disposal, this is not an act that involves only the individual concerned. It has widespread sociological implications.

I know that a lot of acts are committed today in the name of what is called the new morality. The new morality is merely the old permissiveness that has dragged down men and nations from the dawn of creation as the result of a complete reversal of values, with evil becoming good and good becoming evil. We are concerned here with one of the most intimate and sensitive relationships between man and woman in human society. If we remove love from sex I suggest that we will destroy human personality. I suggest, with great respect, that we are seeing human beings behave at an animalistic level as interpreted in the best seller of a short while ago entitled "The Naked Ape". I would suggest to the minister that notwithstanding the arguments he made this afternoon, sex without love is immoral. People are to be loved and not used, and that applies to both sexes.

What we are embracing is the Playboy philosophy. I remember seeing one of those smart, cynical cartoons depicting a man and woman in a fond embrace and the man saying, "Why think of love at a time like this"? This is just about the level to which the government is taking us in this strange, unnecessary and, from a public standpoint, uncalled for amendment to the Criminal Code.

Playboy says it is all right if it does not hurt anybody. The Judaeo-Christian ethic says nothing is right unless it helps somebody. Actually what we are embracing is the Mohammedan philosophy of hedonism. That is where the phrase, "The state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation", originated. The Arab attitude or the Moslem attitude is that as long as public decency is not debauched everything is all right. That is precisely the philosophy the minister was supporting this afternoon. In other words, what I don't see I should not and need not worry about.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a gross perversion of a very high and noble function which is involved in perpetuating the species. It is socially vicious, Wolfenden notwithstanding—and who is Wolfenden, after all, but one man? I do not know if he embraces the Playboy philosophy. He might, but I think we could get many more important philosophies to support the other viewpoint. It strikes at the heart of our basic social institution, the family, and it is for this reason that so many authorities say today that what we are dealing with is a sick society. It is abnormal social behavior, because homosexuals are predators. Anybody who has been engaged in social work knows that the homosexual is a predator in respect of matters of sex. Homosexuals prey on juveniles. It is something that spreads like a plague, for there is no more destructive drive than the sexual impulse running wild.

The lawyers on this side of the house have already dealt with the strange anomaly that if you are over 21 you are legal and correct and if you are under 21 there is nothing said at all. In fact there is supreme silence on the matter. However, I was recently reminded by the Manitoba Director of Communicable Diseases, Dr. Snell, that one of the reasons for venereal disease running out of control today is the very difficult problem of controlling this sort of thing amongst homosexuals. It is an illness, I agree. It is a psychological and deep-seated spiritual disease which requires therapeutic rather than punitive treatment, but there is nothing in the amendment to the code that deals with the therapeutic aspect of the problem. It is an action that is incomprehensible, that is going to make it impossible for a good many members on this side of the house, indeed I hope on both sides of the house, to vote for other amendments to the Criminal Code which are worthy of support.

To bring these remarks to a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote a few words from Dante. I think the minister will recognize them as having some pertinence so far as our modern 20th century sex-saturated civilization is concerned. In another time of darkness in human affairs in the moral sphere Dante said: "The hottest places in Hell are reserved for those who in a period of moral crisis maintained their neutrality". I hope many hon. members will take a stand on this issue even though it means they will have to vote against the bill as a whole because of the failure of the government to deal with it reasonably and rationally in separate parts rather than in omnibus form.

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am entering this debate for one reason only, because I have become a little bit sick and tired of sitting on this side of the house and listening to some of the speeches from the other side.

The last speaker, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), started out by saying that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) was being very unreasonable in asking that this bill be treated as an entity and not be broken down into three or four parts. Yet at this very moment he has been taking part in a debate on an amendment to the bill which deals with one of the very parts which would have been dealt with had the bill been broken up. Every member of this house, by voting on this amendment, will be in a position to indicate where he stands on the question of homosexuality and the other acts covered by clause 7 of the bill. As later amendments are dealt with every hon. member will have an opportunity to stand up and be counted in connection with the problems involved in the different parts of the bill pertaining to abortion, lotteries and other matters. As I see it there is no hardship for a backbencher in the bill being dealt with in this way. Every member will have an opportunity to let his voice be heard with reference to all these amendments in the way in which he wants to be heard.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris made a great fuss about the phrase, "the state has no place in the bedrooms of the nation". I should like to say that that phrase was uttered long before June 25, 1968, by the minister of justice of that day. This bill was publicized long before June 25, 1968, and the people of Canada knew about that phrase; they knew about the man who used it. They knew it was part of his program. The people of Canada returned a majority of that man's party to this house. That is the reason we are sitting over here and you are sitting over there. The hon. member also—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris on a point of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. That statement was first uttered by Omar Khayyam. It was borrowed by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Murphy: I will accept the correction by my hon. friend.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Lewis: Omar Khayyam was not elected.

Mr. Murphy: In any event the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the then minister of justice, used the phrase. He might be guilty of plagiarism, but he did use that phrase at the time he introduced what I believe was Bill C-195 in the last parliament.

Mr. Dinsdale: Omar Khayyam was a playboy too.

Mr. Murphy: The word "playboy" has come up a number of times. The hon. member mentioned that sex without love is immoral. This is Playboy philosophy. I agree with him. I could not agree more that sex without love is immoral, but that does not make it illegal. It does not make it a crime for which the person should be punished. Sex with love under the present section 149 is illegal as the law now stands.

If the proposed amendment passes, that law will continue to stand and sex with love between a husband and wife and between a fiancée and her husband-to-be committed in private would continue to be a crime. I believe what this government is trying to do is remove the stigma of criminality from these legal acts between a husband and wife and consenting adults when they are committed in private and affect no one else. One hon. member brought up the question of attempted suicide. It was brought up yesterday by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I believe. I must say that I agree wholeheartedly with what the hon. member said yesterday about attempted suicide. I do not think that should be a crime either. In due course, hopefully during the life of this government, I think steps will be taken to recognize that fact and have that offence eliminated from the criminal law as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Murphy: I believe, however, that before making his speech yesterday the hon. member for Edmonton West probably went through the Criminal Code with a fine-tooth comb. The only offence he could find in the Criminal Code pertaining to a private act committed in a private place, apart from the acts which are now being eliminated from the code, was attempted suicide. There is no crime under our criminal law other than attempted suicide in respect of which the person accused of the crime does not in some way infringe upon the rights of society, upon the rights of the state or upon the rights of another individual. Attempted suicide is the only one in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Narcotics.

Mr. Murphy: That question was raised as well. A comparison was drawn with marijuana. I do not know why the hon. member did not go on and mention heroin and some of the other narcotics. The history of their use would indicate that a person addicted to narcotics is more likely to go out and harm or damage other people.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about a homosexual?

Mr. Murphy: A homosexual doing so under this act is guilty of a crime and the amendment does not change that. Anyone who molests youngsters or commits an act in public will continue to be a criminal despite the present amendment. All this amendment would do—and with all due respect to the minister I do not go along with him—would be to legalize I think an act between consenting adults in private and between husband and wife in private. There is no reason that such an act should have been illegal in the first instance.

Mr. Asselin: What about adults 19 years of age?

Mr. Murphy: I did not hear that.

Mr. Asselin: What about adults 18 or 19 years of age?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member is not sitting in his place.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Much has been made of the fact that an age limit has been prescribed here. Surely all members know age limits must be prescribed in much of this type of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Murphy: I will put it this way. If a man has sexual intercourse with a girl who consents there is no crime if she is 16 years of age. If she is 15 years, 11 months and 29 days it is a crime.

Mr. Lewis: Twenty-seven days if the month happens to be February.

Mr. Murphy: I accept that. A person who takes a drink one day short of his 21st birthday is guilty of a crime and on his 21st birthday that same act is not a crime. A person who is one day away from being 21 years of age cannot vote under our present law.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Murphy: The next day he is eligible to vote. The history of our law shows there are a whole series of exemptions. Age limits have been imposed for common-sense reasons. If you want to bring the age limit down to 20 why stop there? Why not make it 16 or 10? There are obvious reasons. I do not think it takes a great deal of thought to figure them out.

I have risen on this occasion to indicate that I am not afraid to stand up, as has been indicated by some members, and to indicate that other backbenchers on this side of the house are not afraid to stand up and enter this debate. I shall oppose the amendment.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I also am opposed to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade), because new section 149A, which is the substance of clause 7, removes from the criminal law sexual acts done in private between two consenting adults over the age of 21. This is the substance of the new provision. This does not mean that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), the government or any person within parliament is giving moral condonation to the act of homosexuality. The minister, like many others, feels that this act is repugnant or distasteful. This is the very reason why I commend the Minister of Justice for his wisdom and courage in bringing forward this amendment to the Criminal Code. I would like to welcome some of the members of the Progressive Conservative party in the 20th century, but I find they have hang-ups arising from their puritanical narrowness and find it difficult to come into this century.

It is obvious that the problem of homosexuality is a very difficult one. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), because of what he said, made me realize that he had not read the Wolfenden report or the speech of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the House of Lords. He has not read too much on the subject, yet he adopts a moralistic tone which makes it rather difficult to accept his arguments.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, If the hon. gentleman will go the library he will find that I have read most extensively, and I do not think he should be the adjudicator of my reading capacity.

Mr. Lewis: What you said in your speech did not show it.

Mr. Gilbert: I would be very happy to give the hon. member a copy of the Wolfenden report and also obtain for him a copy of the speech of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the House of Lords. I am sure that after reading them he would be intellectually and spiritually persuaded. With regard to the wisdom of this change, the problem of homosexuality is a very difficult one. If you read the Wolfenden report you will see that it indicates the difficulties. In that case 12 men and 3 women of extensive backgrounds, with expertise in different fields, studied the problem in depth and as a result brought forth the Wolfenden report. It would be fair to say that the amendment we are now considering, new section 149A, is a result of the study made which resulted in the Wolfenden report. It also brought about the Sexual Offences Act in Great Britain in 1966, which embraces the main recommendations of the Wolfenden report.

If one reads the Wolfenden report one soon learns that there is a difference between homosexual offences such as are contained in sections 147, 148 and 149 of the Criminal Code, concerning buggery, bestiality, indecent assault of a male person and acts of gross indecency, and the definition of homosexuality. The definition of homosexuality as set forth in the Wolfenden report is that it is a sexual propensity for persons of one's own sex. If this is so, homosexuality is a state or condition and as such does not come within the purview of the criminal law.

I have heard a great deal of comment on whether homosexuality is a mental disease. Again, the Wolfenden report went into this problem in depth and said it did not satisfy the definition of mental disease; it did not comply with that definition on the basis of an abnormal symptom caused by a pathological condition, in turn caused by some factor called "the cause", each link in this causal chain being understood as something necessarily antecedent to the next. If homosexuality were a disease of the mind, must we treat these people as criminals?

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Dinsdale: No. Let us have some positive legislation.

Mr. Gilbert: Do we treat people suffering from tuberculosis, cancer or leprosy as such? I agree with the hon. member for Brandon-Souris that psychiatric help is a form of treatment. But if he would read the Wolfenden report he would see that it indicates that many of these people are not anxious to have psychiatric help and that very little success has been obtained through psychotherapy in this field. This indicates that we are still groping in the dark with regard to the medical treatment of this major problem.

The question arises: How many persons are homosexual? I think it is fair to quote Dr. Kinsey, who made an extensive study of this problem in the United States. He said that 4 per cent of adult, white males are exclusively homosexual throughout their lives after becoming adolescent. He also said that 10 per cent of all adult, white males are more or less homosexual for at least three years between the ages of 16 and 65, and that 37 per cent of the total male population have had some overt homosexual experience, to the point of orgasm, between adolescence and old age. It was pointed out that in Sweden 1 per cent are exclusively homosexual and 4 per cent have homosexual and heterosexual impulses. When I heard the hon. member for Brandon-Souris say that we are bringing in the conduct of skid row, it indicated his lack of knowledge on this subject.

Mr. Dinsdale: I said "the values".

Mr. Gilbert: I will accept the interjection of the hon. member. These figures obtained from Sweden and the report of Dr. Kinsey indicate the extent of the problem. With regard to the question of the moral issue—and we have heard a great deal about the moral problem—concerning homosexuality, I note that the opposition is mostly on the basis of repugnance and revulsion rather than on a valid basis for bringing into the criminal law private sexual behaviour of this kind.

We have heard a great deal about how civilization is becoming demoralized and decayed. It is said homosexuality has had a great impact on the health of our society. The minister quoted some of the Wolfenden report to reject that argument. The Wolfenden committee found there was no evidence to substantiate the contention that homosexuality is bringing about the demoralization and decadence of our society. It is fair to say that you cannot refer to other civilizations which are both different in time and in circumstances. With regard to the allegation that homosexuality damages family life, no doubt there have been cases where homosexual conduct has broken up marriages and the family unit; but again, as the Minister of Justice said, so have adultery, fornication and lesbian behaviour.

I think that people who express themselves in a high moral tone should exercise compassion, understanding and patience with regard to the problem and should not want to treat these people as criminals. But it seems there is involved in this question an almost Old Testament-time vengeance that pervades their minds and souls and they invoke the wrath of the old gods.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: We want therapy.

Mr. Gilbert: The next problem is that of age. The age set forth in the bill is 21. The question of age is very difficult. At what age is a man to be regarded as an adult? Is it 16, 18, 21, 25 or possibly 30? Let us look at it. There are certain requirements with regard to determining the age at which a person becomes an adult. First, it is necessary to protect young and immature persons. Is a person at the age of 16 or 18 really able to stand on his own feet, or do we have to wait until he becomes 21? It is a rather difficult question. It differs from person to person, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said. But we all assume that at the age of 16 a person is still quite young and immature.

The second standard is the age at which a man's sexual development can be said to be formed. Medical evidence, according to the Wolfenden report, indicated that there may be a stabilization period at the age of 16 in the sexual development of a person.

The third standard is the definition of an adult as a person responsible for his or her own actions. As we know, we consider a person 21 years of age or over legally able to enter into a binding contract.

The fourth aspect is the consequences which follow the fixing of a particular age. The Minister of Justice, in his wisdom, fixed the age of 21 quite arbitrarily, probably because it is the legal age of contractual responsibility, and this may be the best possible age at which the maturity of a person is established. One would hesitate to say that a person is mature at the age of 16 or 18. There is greater possibility of that at the age of 21. These are the factors that have been taken into account by the minister, and I think he is to be commended for choosing the age of 21.

I could not help but smile when I heard some members of the Progressive Conservative party trying to make a distinction between a person 21 years of age and a person 20 years, 11 months and 30 days of age. A person who is 21 years of age or over commits no offence, while a person under that age commits an offence. The same rule would apply if the age was fixed at 16 or 18. If we fixed the age at 18, a person 18 or over would not be guilty of an offence but a person 17 years, 11 months and 30 days of age would be guilty of an offience. The minister arbitrarily chose the age of 21, I assume, on the basis that it is the age of contractual responsibility and also a likely age at which young people reach a stage of mature judgment.

The function of the law is to safeguard those persons who need protection by reason of their youth or some mental defect. Homosexuals who tamper with young persons under 21 years of age should be considered criminals. It is also a function of the law to preserve public order and decency, and therefore homosexual behaviour which takes place in public should continue to be dealt with by the criminal law. Let us make no mistake about the fact that new section 149A deals with consenting adults over the age of 21 who commit sexual acts in private.

I had hoped that the Minister of Justice would bring forward other procedural amendments concerning prosecution by way of indictment or by summary conviction and would have toned down some of the provisions so that they would be more in keeping with the practice and experience of the courts of the day. But I am satisfied that when we proceed to a total revision of the Criminal Code the minister will take these other factors, as suggested in my amendment which was ruled out of order, into consideration and that at that time he will make the necessary changes.

I hope that we as mature Canadians will be able to develop the idea expressed by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris that these people should have all the psychiatric help which can be provided. We must remember that many of them are very reluctant and sometimes not willing to accept psychotherapy as a treatment for this problem.

May I say in conclusion that I am opposed to the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade). I am very proud that we have a Minister of Justice who is attempting to update the criminal law of this country in light of the experience we have had in the past and that he is doing so in a spirit of reformation and rehabilitation with regard to offenders against that law. I think we are most fortunate to have such a Minister of Justice at this time.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this bill because of my previous experience as a law enforcement officer. I should like to compliment the minister on bringing forward the bill. However, I am a little disappointed in that I believe he should not have brought in any suggestion of partisanship. I compliment the minister on the bill which is entirely concerned with the reform of the Criminal Code. I am sure that every hon. member has just as much interest in it, if not the detailed knowledge and experience in the drafting of laws of the minister and the fine group of civil servants behind him.

I am not an academic. My work involved field experience, and we tried to use common sense. So I am a little worried about the effect on the general public which this amendment may have. We all appear to agree that homosexuality is repugnant to the average Canadian, regardless of what Kinsey says about it or what is done in Sweden or in England or in the House of Lords or in the Arabian army or anywhere else. As far as I can see, the same need does not arise in Canada with its fresh air and wide open spaces. We do not live in crowded quarters, nor do we live in the desert far away from our families. We do not even have problems of great wealth which necessitate love-ins, nor are we jaded. We live a normal, outdoor life. This is why the Canadian people, up to now at least, have found no need to loosen their moral standards.

I do not go into the political pow-wows of the nation any more than I intend the police to go into the bedrooms of the nation to find some deep and dark reasons for dragging forth this subject. As a policeman I never had any need to prosecute consenting adults because of their ideas of what is proper in the sexual act. Therefore this is an academic problem, and I do not think I am making an evil suggestion when I say that probably it has only been included in the Criminal Code as a measure to try to tidy up a loose end along with some other important and necessary changes to the Criminal Code.

This subject makes good copy because it has a bad smell and people want to get into the act. I can assure the house that at this stage of our development in Canada it is not a proper function of the police, nor do I hope it will be in the future. It is not important statistically. I do not think that this amendment or any other change to this part of the Criminal Code will do anything to improve the situation. I am sorry that this sort of thing goes on; I am sorry that human nature has its soft and weak side. However, I hope that if this change is made in the law we will let it go by as quietly as possible.

I hope we shall not in any way, either by calling names in the house or anywhere else, allow anybody in Canada to think that anyone in this chamber condones homosexuality in any of its aspects. I do not know whether we can help the 4 per cent or the 10 per cent or the 30 per cent who have come into contact with it at some point during their adolescence, or by misadventure.

It is up to us, generally speaking, to decide what shall be a criminal act and what shall not. Strictly speaking it is up to us to decide what is a private act and what is a public act, because there is a penumbra, an area where private acts could become dangerous to the public. It is up to us to decide. I do not think we can dispose of the problem merely by saying that what goes on in the bedroom is nobody's business outside the bedroom. Of course it could be.

As a former law enforcement officer I can state that there are certain things which go on which have to be investigated. I do not suggest we should put listening devices in every room. But there are cases in which people with well known aberrations and evil tendencies are allowed a first bite, like a mad dog. In the city of Winnipeg at one time a small boy was murdered in a coal yard. The police had every reason to believe they were looking for a sexual offender. The city police in Winnipeg told me at that time—I was involved in the search—that they had information about 300 known persons who might have been involved. In spite of the fact that it is not desirable to have people prying into the private lives of others, police forces must be alert to such problems. The police must not be so naïve as to believe that everybody is nice, that everybody is lovable, and that nobody would perform indecent acts or commit assaults on those who are young or defenceless or beyond reach of help. The Marquis of Queensbury rules do not apply to these people for many reasons. They may be criminals or mental defectives, or they may be victims of bad habits.

This may sound like the expression of an over-active moral conscience. Well, the police, the Minister of Justice and all those in between must have a moral conscience. They have to talk about a moral conscience and they have to enforce a moral conscience even though they themselves, at times, may be guilty of lapses. As a traffic policeman at one time I had to enforce the traffic laws with regard to speeding—60 miles an hour in certain areas, 30 miles an hour in others, and so on. Traffic policemen, including myself, have been given tickets for these offences from time to time. If they are good policemen they pay them like the rest of the public and try to do better next time.

I think it is our duty when we speak in the House of Commons to suggest that there are moral standards in the nation, and that at times these standards should find their expression in our laws. As far as I know, those standards are the only basis for the criminal law.

I do not altogether understand those who say that because a law is unenforceable it should not be on the statute books. We run into this difficulty in connection with substances like marijuana. Marijuana can be grown virtually everywhere in the temperate zone. It can easily be procured. It is almost impossible to prevent its use. However, so far we have continued to make the use of marijuana illegal because, on the basis of our knowledge, it is not helpful to people to use it. We have concluded that on the balance of probabilities the little trip or lift that users get from it is outweighed by the effect on health, morals and behaviour. That is why some of us here would like to bring about control of this tendency which apparently is creeping into our society.

I do not like the idea of unenforceable laws, but if this is the only way of putting up a stop sign, the only way of telling our young people we do not agree with this kind of thing, then I believe a case can be made for such laws. They are a way of telling young people, when we, hopefully, have developed into grown up males and are beyond temptation ourselves, that certain things are against the law, even though the law may not always be enforced because in some cases it cannot be owing to the difficulty of obtaining evidence. In any case, our opinion about it has been expressed in the law.

As far as I know, in the 20 years I was a policeman no one was victimized as the result of the section of the code we are now discussing. I could be wrong; there may have been one or two occasions when somebody was sent to jail, but not to my knowledge. I would regret it if somebody spent a long time in jail as a consequence of this section. If so, the practice should be reviewed. But I really think that if we still believe this type of behaviour to be wrong some stop sign should be put up to say: we do not agree with this kind of behaviour. In any case we should make it abundantly clear that if this section is removed from the code we do not condone this type of behaviour in any way.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if you will excuse my saying so at this time—I intend to speak only once on this Criminal Code legislation —I feel very much the same way with regard to the proposals concerning abortion. When it comes to saving a woman's life I think the doctor has the right to decide. Any doctor worthy of his practice has the right to decide as between the life of a child and that of the mother. But the practice could get out of hand, and if we ever reach the point at which the sanctity of human life is bandied about we shall have many reasons to regret it. Once a child is on its way it has the right to live, just as you and I.

The cogent argument I use for my own purposes is this: I look at my grandchildren and at my own daughters and ask myself, "Which one of these would I have the right to destroy?" Only one person I know would be competent to make such a decision, the doctor who is responsible for the care of my family. His knowledge is greater than mine and as far as I know he is the only man who should have the right to decide. That is the way I intend to vote. I shall give that right to the man I trust. After all, when I send a member of my family to the operating room I trust in the judgment of the doctor. That is why I engage him and entrust my wife or child to his care.

These standards have been maintained for a long time. Like others in this house, I inherited mine from my parents who in turn received them from their parents. I suppose, as hon. members have suggested, that they go back ultimately to the Judaeo-Christian ethic. That ethic may be out of date today in the minds of a lot of people as far as I am concerned it is still the finest standard by which we ought to set our conduct. I believe it is the pattern for much of our whole Criminal Code in the first place. "Thou shalt not kill" is the basis of our murder law. "Thou shalt not steal" is the basis of our property law. To say that modern society in its enlightenment can throw all this overboard is a grave error. What would be our reference point if we did not rely on the judgment of the past?

• (4:40 p.m.)

I was not a member of the committee and I wish I had been, but if the committee has not produced any historical evidence that immorality corrupts the human spirit, which in turn corrupts the human mind and in turn destroys the human body itself, then I think the committee should sit again. From the short experience I have had I have been convinced that this is the chain of events; that when a man dies in his spirit it is not long before he dies in his body. If the state has the right to protect his body, it has an equal right to protect his spirit, to help maintain those standards of good behaviour and good morals, so far as we can agree on what those morals are, in order to lead him and succeeding generations into the future.

[Translation]

Mr. J. A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief.

I have listened to several speeches and I have read several statements which have been made on the subject. In my opinion, some things need to be put straight because there has been an obvious misrepresentation of facts and, in some cases, there is evidence of self-righteousness. It appears that some people want to make it seem that those who intend as I do to support this bill, approve of immoral practices, which is not in keeping with the facts. Therefore, explanations are required.

For example, an hon. member made this statement earlier in the debate and I quote:

I have the approval of 100 per cent of the people, at least in my riding and in the rest of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the one who said that is the hon. member for the constituency next to mine. I go through his constituency from time to time and I must say that he does not have the support of 100 per cent of those people. I would not dare give the percentage of those who do support him, but I say it is surely smaller.

It has often been said also that the object of this bill is to legalize homosexuality. That is not true. Homosexuality in itself is still unlawful. It is but one aspect of the question.

[Mr. Bigg.]

It was so well explained by others having more authority than I do in this matter that I would not like to stress that point further.

But Mr. Speaker, I should like to narrow the question down to its essentials and also put some order in the minds of those who claim to have all virtues and who delight in making all kinds of innuendoes at those who support the bill, in imputing them all kinds of bad motives and in casting doubts about their respect for morality.

I should like, with your permission, to quote an article that was given to me by my colleague from Madawaska. It deserves, I believe, to be quoted and to be recorded in Hansard, for it shows in a very eloquent way the attitude to be adopted by a legislator whenever he legislates upon matters dealing with moral questions. I am quoting here from L'Eglise de Québec, a publication formerly entitled La Semaine Religieuse de Québec and published by the Quebec diocese. The article was written by a group of theologians from Laval University. Therefore, it should meet with the requirements of conscience, at least in the case of those who, like me, are Catholic.

I quote:

The bill known as omnibus bill, has been introduced in the Canadian parliament. Discussions on certain clauses of the bill, especially those concerning homosexuality and abortion, have sometimes given rise to uncompromising stands that cannot be ascribed to Catholic ethics.

I repeat those words, Mr. Speaker:

—have sometimes given rise to uncompromising stands that cannot be ascribed to Catholic ethics.

And further on:

Therefore, it seems advisable to recall a few elementary facts about the appreciation of a civil law.

1) Civil law is directed towards the political commonweal.

We are not theologians. Those last words are mine, but I now go on with the quotation:

Of course, it must draw its inspiration from the basic imperatives of natural law; but it cannot adapt itself to it to the extent of governing everything that comes under it or of forbidding everything that is against it. In other words, the political commonweal does not demand that every moral fault be considered as an offence under the law.

Those are theologians speaking, Mr. Speaker, and they further state:

Thus, for instance, the State does not consider adultery as a crime, although it is still an injustice besides being a form of lust.

2) It is also necessary to stress that this so-called permissive law may be preferable to a restrictive law if, thanks to it, it is possible to better promote the commonweal while respecting the various religious beliefs, opinions, mentalities and customs. It is self-evident that one could not consider such a law as a moral approval of the behaviours it allows. One can certainly not accuse Saint Augustine of having promoted prostitution. He stated however that in his days, the political rulers would have been unwise to forbid it.

3) The legislator must take into account the pedagogical aspect of the law.

However, that educational role must be adjusted to some extent to the moral level of the people. In this respect, the habits and rules of behaviour of a given civilization must be taken into account. Besides, this principle applies to every form of education.

When legislating for a population of 21 million, divided into ten provinces where various religious persuasions are found, opinions vary of necessity on matters the government itself does not have to settle.

I now resume the quotation:

4) The citizens do not all agree in matters of moral standards. The legislator is not legislating for a specific group but for the political community as a whole. It follows that, on behalf of the Catholic conscience, one can reprove a specific moral behaviour while admitting the merits of the legislation that tolerates it.

And I say again what I have already said in this house: I do not feel it would be right for me to impose my religious beliefs on anyone else in Canada.

To go back to the quotation:

5) Catholics, as much as any other citizens, have the right and the duty to exert pressures that the laws might reflect as much as possible the values they consider fundamental for the protection of the commonweal. But, in so doing, they must not fall prey to sectarianism and intolerance.

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the debate, we have heard all kinds of things concerning sectarianism and intolerance. Open or veiled charges have been brought against those who are not opposed to the bill.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I suggest that some of these charges are absolutely untrue. For instance, it was said that abortion and homosexuality were being legalized. That is not true. Quite special, exceptional and marginal cases are involved, under very specific circumstances.

Mr. Fortin: That is not true.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, some people went even further: during the last electoral campaign, it was intimated that the leader of the government himself could be depraved, because he advocated such a bill. It seems to me that that is in full contradiction with the religious principle, acknowledged by all faiths, namely that charity is the first duty of those who boast of their religious principles.

Mr. Speaker, after reading the evidence prepared by theologians who do not belong to the lesser breeds, and published in an official review of the diocese of Quebec, let them give up that kind of religious demagoguery, shot through and through with the most odious type of intolerance, and inflicted upon us since we started to discuss this bill; we should realize that as legislators, we should neither hear confessions nor judge.

Some day, the Creator will do all that, He who looked into the heart of Man. Our function lies in making laws, according to common sense and to the rules that have just been set by Catholic theologians and theologians from other religions, who as much as say that this bill does not go far enough.

I think it is important that this be put on record.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, this debate is getting too long. Obviously, everything that can be said about this amendment relating to homosexuality has already been said.

We hear hon. members repeating the same arguments over and over, and if all members could co-operate we could perhaps carry on with another amendment.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank my colleague from Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for sponsoring in my absence the amendment I had introduced, because I had to undergo some medical examinations. I want to thank also the hon. members from this side of the house who supported my amendment.

The amendment I am moving is very simple, Mr. Speaker. Its purpose is merely the deletion from the omnibus bill, of section 7 which deals with homosexuality.

I would not want my proposal to be understood by some government members and particularly the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) who has just resumed his seat after presenting so eloquently a religious principle, and after having accused the opposition to take refuge behind religion, he himself—

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Valade: —Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said that we were taking refuge behind—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to make a correction, Mr. Speaker. I quoted the opinion of theologians but I did not express mine. On the opposition side, they quoted opinions of improvised theologians.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I was simply referring to what the hon. member for Trois-Rivières said about an article issued by Catholic theologians. He read it. He was taking refuge behind it. He was accepting the article or rejecting its contents.

As he used it to correct some allegations of the opposition, we can suppose that he sincerely believes that this religious article is well founded and wants to take refuge behind it.

I do not want to take such an uncompromising stand as that which he denounced, and become myself a cause of error, though I have before me theological opinions diametrically opposed to those just expressed by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) in his brilliant and eloquent plea for the bill under consideration.

In my opinion, besides being untimely, Bill C-150 cannot be justified in the present circumstances, because it tends to allow adults to commit an act which, under the Criminal Code, is now considered illegal. The government asks us to pass such a bill with a view to legalizing an act committed in private between two persons of the same sex.

My colleague from Trois-Rivières shakes his head; however, if the hon. member has difficulty in understanding the case, he can refer to the answers that were given a while ago by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in reply to our questions, although his remarks seemed a little foggy.

Mr. Speaker, such an amendment is certainly out of place in a parliament and in a society like ours.

In his remarks, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières has said that the State, when legislating, should take into consideration the customs and the ways of life prevailing among the members of the community.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that in our society the morals or manners of people are showing homosexual tendencies and warrant the proposed amendment.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières spoke about intransigency, sectarism and intolerance. I could retort to him, in front of a minister who is sitting now in the house, that the Liberal party itself has indeed displayed racial sectarism and intolerance towards the leader of the Conservative party in a speech he made in the Quebec Coliseum, during the last election campaign. But I shall come back to this later.

For the time being, I shall rather confine myself to the amendment proposed by the Minister of Justice.

When we agreed on the motion for second reading of the omnibus bill and its referral to the committee on justice and legal affairs it was understood that the hon. members of the opposition and all the members of the committee would be entirely free to air their views, to bring in amendments, to call witnesses in order that every part of the bill and every amendment which would be proposed could be studied thoroughly.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, some arrangements made at the outset of the committee meeting prevented hon. members of the opposition from calling witnesses, together with specialists on the question. We were prevented to present amendments. And when asking hon. members for a free vote on those amendments—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Housing—C.M.H.C.—Criteria applicable in projects; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Housing—extension of loan forgiveness provision on municipal projects; the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis)—Industry—Devco—compulsory retirement of miners.

The time being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we have had some discussion on this matter. Hon. members who are interested in participating in private members' hour do not object, if there is unanimous consent of the house, to proceeding with item No. 1 under private bills, namely, consideration of the report stage and subsequent by third reading, if that should come about, of Bill S-16, to incorporate Transcoastal Life Assurance Company. I do not think we will need more than a few minutes to debate it. After that we could go back to the normal order of business and consider notices of motions for papers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree that we proceed in the order suggested by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

TRANSCOASTAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT STAGE

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved that Bill S-16, to incorporate Transcoastal Life Assurance Company, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maintainant.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blair moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before the formal motion is put to the house may I be permitted to say a few words about this bill. This company is one which, by virtue of the construction of the bill and by virtue of a decision of the company, will become a Canadian owned company within a certain period of time in conformity with the provisions of the insurance act. The position taken by the company is in agreement with the position we in this party have been taking for some time in this house, namely, that companies which seek to become incorporated in Canada to do business in Canada should become Canadian companies in the full sense of the word. In other words, they should be Canadian owned.

• (5:00 p.m.)

To those seeking to have similar companies incorporated during this or subsequent sessions and to those who are sponsoring them, I commend the evidence before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when they considered this bill in detail. There are some declarations in it which are highly commendable. They expressed their feeling about Canada, as did the witnesses who appeared on behalf of the company. If other companies would take a similar course, ease of passage through this house would be almost guaranteed. This is our hope and objective. I am sure that in the theory no one disagrees with this. It is just a matter of trying to put it into practice.

We in this party believe the real mark of good Canadian corporate citizenship for companies wanting to do business and make a profit in Canada is for them to become fully Canadian owned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

MOTIONS (PAPERS)

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C., DEVELOPMENT

On the order:

Mr. Rose—That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, memoranda and other communications received by any member of the administration and prepared by any person in the Public Service of Canada since January 1, 1967, relating to the joint federal-provincial development of the Roberts Bank port in British Columbia, including any railways connected thereto.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have been in discussion with the hon. member for Fraser Valley West and on his behalf I ask consent to withdraw this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): By consent, the motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

[Translation]

JUDGMENTS OF THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a return showing, since the Supreme Court of Canada was instituted (a) the number of judgments rendered by judges whose mother tongue was French and, of those, the number of judgments rendered (i) in French (ii) in English (b) of the judgments rendered in English by judges whose mother tongue is French, the number of judgments respecting Quebec (c) the number of judgments rendered in French by judges whose mother tongue is English.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I respectfully submit that this motion should be declared out of order because by merely reading it, one can see that the hon. member is trying to get statistical data which are already available.

The judgment referred to are available and anyone can compile them. All the information requested by this motion are public documents.

Therefore, a motion of this kind could be made only in the case where a document would not be public, and if it should be made public, a motion would be needed.

For this reason, I submit this motion should be declared out of order because everyone knows that the Supreme Court judgments are published and therefore, public. If the hon. member wants to bring statistics together, he is welcome to do it. In fact, anybody can do it, since this statistical information is official.

I therefore maintain that this motion must be declared out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): As the Chair is not aware of the precedents upon which the hon. parliamentary secretary bases his comments regarding the admissibility of that motion, I should like him to state them in order to enlighten the Chair.

Meanwhile we shall go on with the debate.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

After that long and laborious debate which must lead to the passing of the omnibus bill, I think that hon. members can still use their privilege and ask the government for information.

I am glad I presented that motion to throw light on the Supreme Court, on its relations with the provinces, especially the province of Quebec, and to determine whether the Supreme Court is faithful to the image of Canada, as we would like to see it, that is a bilingual country.

Mr. Speaker, many things occurred since January 15, the date on which that motion was presented. In fact, on that day, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), who is now piloting the omnibus bill, suggested that this notice of motion asking for certain information on the bilingualism or unilingualism of the judges of the Supreme Court was actually a request for statistical data.

Moreover, what the parliamentary secretary has just said shows that I was right.

Mr. Speaker, I humbly believe that the minister as well as the parliamentary secretary are imputing motives to me.

If I wanted some statistics Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Supposing that I was looking for such data—the minister is once again imputing motives to me—I would not do so for the sake of freely disposing of them, because I would then be wasting the time of the house, the minister, his parliamentary secretary and his officials, as well as mine, a precious time in all cases.

That is why I will be careful not to gather useless statistical information. On the contrary, I am most anxious to determine to what extent the Supreme Court, at first sight an untouchable and unassailable institution, is one where bilingualism is honoured or whether its attribute is rather unilingualism.

Therefore, it is not a matter of statistical data, but of an essential principle of today's Canada, respect of bilingualism.

If I had sought statistical information, Mr. Speaker, I would have asked how many judgments have been rendered in French and in English, and how many judges of the Supreme Court spoke English only and how many of them had French for their mother tongue. Then, the minister would have given me the information, and I would have thanked him. What would have been gained? Nothing!

I want to know, Mr. Speaker, what influence the Anglo-Saxon language exerts on the Supreme Court, and Anglo-Saxon laws on the provinces, with regard to bilingualism.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Had I been provided with answers, Mr. Speaker, I would have had statistics enabling me to decide to what extent the English is used as compared with French. Then I could have formed an opinion which, anyhow, would not have accurately affected the practical reality of bilingualism in the Supreme Court. That is why I am asking whether the judgments have been rendered in English or in French and whether the mother tongue of the judges concerned was French or English.

My primary concern, Mr. Speaker is to ascertain whether French and English are on the same footing in the Supreme Court. Secondly, whether the judge whose mother tongue is French must always give precedence to the English language or whether it is the opposite. Thirdly, which is the working language at the Supreme Court? I do say the working language and by that I mean the language used for writing and for every day work.

What I want to know is whether both languages are used at the Supreme Court or is there any discrimination against one or the other? In other words, are both official languages treated alike there? And in order to know that, Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister of Justice by way of this notice of motion for production of papers to tell us to what extent the judges whose mother language is French are free to work in their own language and whether they have sometimes to conform, to the British traditions?

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Justice is well enough aware of it to acknowledge that the distinction I am making now is in keeping with my first purpose which was not just to get figures or statistics, but rather to ascertain whether the Supreme Court is a genuine bilingual organism, which I seriously doubt.

On the eve of passing the bill on the official languages and following the publication of reports of the Royal Commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, it seems to me normal and essential that the house be allowed to know whether bilingualism exists or not in this federal institution, the Supreme Court.

This is an Anglo-Saxon stronghold, Mr. Speaker, and I do think that the reason why the government does not want to supply us with those documents is that they do not want the Canadian people to know that the Supreme Court is an Anglo-Saxon bastion. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons has never inquired (enquérie) in all its history about the status and use of French and English at the Supreme Court.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not "enquérie", but "enquise".

Mr. Fortin: Never in all its history, Mr. Speaker, has this august assembly inquired, never has one single member inquired about what was going on at the Supreme Court in respect of bilingualism. This has been confirmed to me, for the information of the would-be Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, by the House of Commons Distribution Office.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on a point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

When one speaks in defense of the French language, it might perhaps be more suitable to use it properly. It was "enquis" and not "enquéri" that was the right term.

Mr. Fortin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not get what the minister said. Could he repeat his remarks?

Some hon. Members: He gave you a lesson in French.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, everyone concerned recognizes that the Supreme Court of Canada is mostly Anglo-Saxon—I will prove it later—and that the room left to the French language is very small, if not non-existent.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the French-speaking civil servants at the Supreme Court do not work in their mother tongue, but in the other language.

Has there been any one case where the defendant could have had justice done to him in his own language? Is that true or not?

Insofar as the appointment of judges is concerned, does it involve the "language" factor? If so, to what extent?

When someone's services are required at or when he is appointed to the Supreme Court, if he is English-speaking or French-speaking, is it required from him that he be bilingual?

These are all questions related to the motion before us and which I consider essential, particularly in view of the constitutional review expected to take place soon. It is most important, Mr. Speaker, that we know the answers to those questions.

Judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada

And just to prove that what I contend is not unfounded, I will put on record some quotations to illustrate that we do no wish to compile statistics, but to warn the government, or the hon. members of all parties, in order to improve that situation so that these two languages will be treated on an equal footing.

Mr. Jacques-Yvan Morin, professor at the Law Faculty of the University of Montreal, wrote in the September 1967 issue of the Revue du Barreau canadien an article entitled:

"Quebec and Constitutional Arbitration: From Scylla into Charybdis."

I shall now quote a most interesting excerpt from the above:

However, there still exist today cases where minority ethnic groups must, to settle their differences with the majority group, appeal to courts of justice that are established and appointed by that majority. All relationships of political subjection, colonial structures for instance, have given rise to such situations. Many examples could be mentioned of conquered people, more numerous even than the population of the metropolis, seeing their laws and their institutions brought under the control of foreign courts and subjected to their interpretation methods.

Mr. Speaker, I shall mention a concrete case to show how French-speaking people are being treated and what is the working language in the Supreme Court.

Anyone interested in judicial and constitutional matters knows that Mr. Morin is an expert in that field. He stated and I quote:

There is no certainty, for example, that French-Canadian judges appointed by Ottawa since 1875, on the whole, have, to any substantial extent, departed from the lines adopted by their English colleagues. This is in no way an attempt to cast doubts on the intellectual qualities of the ten French-Canadian jurists who have sat on the Supreme Court since that time—

It is worthy of note that the above was written in 1967 and that few French-Canadians have been appointed to the Supreme Court, Mr. Speaker.

—on the Supreme Court since that time and have been most of them excellent law technicians, but it must be noted that they were slaves to the system. We understand their position better as soon as we know that in most decisions on constitutional matters French-speaking judges draft their judgments in English. Mr. Justice H.-E. Taschereau, although a strong opponent of confederation during the 1865 debates, drafted 33 of his decisions out of 35 in English; Mr. Justice P.-B. Mignault, 17 times out of 19; Mr. Justice D. Girouard, all his decisions; Mr. Justice L. Brodeur, 17 times out of 20; Mr. Justice T. Rinfret, 28 times out of 35.

[Mr. Fortin.]

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that I am not simply looking for statistics since at the present time some very conclusive, although incomplete, information is available. I want the Department of Justice to see to it that the Supreme Court which is a fundamental body in a federative system, reflects the image of Canada.

We do not want to impose our views to the English-speaking people nor subject them to discrimination but we simply want them to understand that our linguistic rights are equal to theirs in the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have no grudge against English-speaking judges because they are competent. However, the fact that up to 1967 only ten French-speaking judges had been appointed to the Supreme Court since its establishment, is an example of discrimination because there are certainly more than ten French Canadian judges competent enough to be appointed to the Supreme Court.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, this is the worst kind of discrimination if French Canadian judges on the Supreme Court cannot draft their judgment in their mother tongue but that, as in over 85 per cent of the cases, they should do it in the other official language.

Mr. Speaker, it is important in my opinion not to deal lightly with this matter and the house should give it its undivided attention.

By raising that question, Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to offend anybody. I am not alluding to anyone in particular, even not to the Prime Minister, his assistants or his colleagues who are making efforts at the present time in order to ensure respect for the principle of bilingualism.

We are paying millions now for the drafting of the report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. And when this commission will publish its report on public service, there will not be a single word—I know it from a usually reliable source—about the public service as a whole.

That is why I have to put questions on the order paper in order to know to what extent the French language rights are being respected in the different federal departments and whether French Canadians are adequately represented. Now, Mr. Speaker, we want to obtain the same information with regard to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on a point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Since I was once a member of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism and since I know very well that bilingualism in the public service is one of the subjects that will be dealt with, I wonder what are the grounds of my hon. friend for saying that there will be no reference to it in the commission reports.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the hon. minister is asking me such a question.

My reliable source was precisely the hon. minister himself, and I wanted him to admit that the commission would deal with that subject. I thank the hon. minister and I am very happy Mr. Speaker, to have the assurance that the Royal Commission on bilingualism and biculturalism will deal with it.

I should like to quote the words of Mr. Morin in this regard. They will give us food for thought; we should, as parliamentarians, look fully into the matter.

I quote:

However, any constitutional arbitration system—

the expression and the problem are fashionable these days.

—which would result in systematically subjecting Quebec to the decisions of a court whose members would in the majority be English-Canadians or appointed by the central government could not win the confidence and the support of Quebeckers, as the statements we have mentioned indicate. It is pointless to object that all States, even souvereign States, now accept that their disputes be taken to court for, in that case, the judges or arbitrators almost always represent third parties, whereas in the present Canadian system—

This is fundamental, Mr. Speaker.

—the central power is at one and the same time judge and party. Nor can one claim that this question is of little importance, as the advocates of the status quo sometimes maintain; just imagine what the reaction would be in federal quarters if the provinces appointed all the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, there would be a general outcry. All ministers and hopefuls would say that the provinces have no say in the matter, that this does not fall within their jurisdiction; yet the provinces are judged by the Supreme Court.

I bring my remarks to a close with these words:

Canadian constitutional arbitration, as it exists at the present time—

Mr. Morin's judgment is most severe—

—drags all sorts of remnants of the Victorian era and of British colonialism; it makes Quebec dependent on the central authority which has gradually replaced the imperial power. Any jurisdictional system that would claim to perpetuate such a situation would be a constant source of tension, and even of division, between Quebec and the Canadian federation.

Mr. Speaker, it is not only Mr. Morin who is interested in this question. There is also Mr. Jacques Brossard, a professor at the Institute of Public Law at the University of Montreal. He has also studied the evolution of the Supreme Court and all the cases brought before it. He reaches the following conclusion, published in "Le Québec dans le Canada de demain", a most objective work published in Montreal, at les Editions du jour in 1967. Mr. Brossard said the following, and I quote:

The jurisprudence of the federal Supreme Court has proved, on the contrary, inasmuch as this Court was free to judge according to its own tendencies quite favourable to the federal State.

Its first judgments were centralizing. They remained so inasmuch as the weight of the jurisprudence of the Judicial Committee did not compel it to take into account the balance required by federalism—

• (5:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, only one more minute, with the consent of the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, it is useless to go on quoting Mr. Brossard since he merely bears out Mr. Morin. In my opinion, all members have understood the point.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put forward a proposal to prove that the motion could actually be adopted and that something similar already exists.

Members who practise law are perhaps aware of the existence of the Jackett charter concerning all the judgments rendered by the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker, in that charter, one finds in one column all the judgments and in another, the year in which the case was heard. In another column, appears the name of the judge and in each case, the section of the act concerned.

For the purpose of the present motion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that such a charter should be used, but with the addition of a column indicating the mother language of the judge and another one showing the language in which the judgment was rendered. Then, one could see, Mr. Speaker, that the Supreme Court is really an Anglo-Saxon body. Therefore, the greatest possible number of parliamentarians and citizens should take an interest in the matter so as to improve the situation of bilingualism at the Supreme Court.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude my remarks, I want to say that I would highly appreciate it if the minister or his parliamentary secretary would agree with the government assent to produce these documents.

If the minister is willing to keep a gentleman's agreement, I would be prepared to withdraw this motion. If he says that it is too tedious a task to go right back to 1867, let him do the same research for the last ten years, for instance. This would show us whether bilingualism is complied with or not.

Mr. Speaker, those are the positive suggestions I make to the minister's parliamentary secretary, in the hope that they will receive favourable consideration and that we will know soon if the Supreme Court is a reflection of Canada or if it will remain an Anglo-Saxon preserve.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention to discuss the merits of this debate.

The hon. member for Lotbinière spoke about two things. He spoke about the use of French at the Supreme Court of Canada and then he spoke at length and with relevance, specially in quoting Mr. Morin, about the constitutional status of the Supreme Court, which is a different matter, a very important matter indeed, but which has nothing to do with the motion he himself put on the order paper.

However, we will perhaps have an opportunity to discuss this later. I will only make a few comments on the use of official languages at the Supreme Court.

I think the hon. member is right to be concerned and to enquire about the use of both official languages at the Supreme Court of Canada. In my view, however, his request is not very reasonable and I am not saying that because I am afraid that some startling things might be unveiled.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Speaker, I agree that the language used in 90 per cent or more of cases, in the Supreme Court, is English. I would be surprised if my presumption were not confirmed by facts because it is not a question of concealing anything.

I merely claim that the government is asked to do a useless task when a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism has inquired into all aspects of bilingualism within the public service commission and courts of justice. As soon as we have the results of that inquiry, we will be in a position to take any remedial action that is required.

In my opinion, the motion calls for useless work. If it were acted upon, it would only disclose what everyone already knows. I fully agree with what the hon. member said. That would serve no purpose at all.

With regard to recommendations for improving the situation, I think we can wait for the publication of the report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism; thus, we will be in a better position to correct a situation which I find deplorable.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, by proposing this motion the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is seeking to establish whether the Supreme Court is a bilingual or some other kind of court. I think the hon. member answered that question himself, as did the minister to an extent, when he classified it as an Anglo-Saxon court. I believe we, in Canada, have always considered that the Supreme Court is there for the purpose of dispensing justice, and not for reflecting the language nature of the nation or any part of it. We have always required that appointments to any court be on the basis of the ability of the individual appointed, and not whether he has a certain language as his mother tongue or is able to speak more than one language with any degree of fluency. I believe that ability, and not linguistic origin, should be our concern with regard to the Supreme Court.

We had a parallel situation not too many years ago when a proposition was put forward by a previous administration regarding an inquiry into Indian affairs, and the appointment of Professor Hawthorn from British Columbia as the head of the commission of inquiry. This was partly because Professor Hawthorn had in earlier years undertaken another study of an aspect of Indian affairs. Regretfully, the proposal for that study had to be postponed because there developed within the cabinet a demand, so-called, for bilingualism. As a consequence, we ended up with the Hawthorn-Tremblay commission being appointed, on the basis of one man being of French origin and the other of English origin. I think that was really ridiculous, because either one of those gentlemen would have done a credible job by himself within the terms of the inquiry. But here was a situation in which recognition was given to the demand for the commission to be of a bilingual nature. So far as I am concerned, this did not enhance the position of the commission one bit.

I believe the gentleman concerned was Professor Tremblay. If I have misnamed him, I apologize. He, Professor Hawthorn, or any one of a number of people could have done a job comparable with the job that was done. I think that for us to start involving ourselves in the Supreme Court and our court structures, which are there for the purpose of dispensing Justice, being fair and interpreting laws for us, by attempting to intimate that the selection of the members of the court should be influenced by the factor of bilingualism, would simply be catering further to the exploitation of either language such as has occurred with certain political groups in this nation, not the least of which was Jean Lesage when he was premier of the province of Quebec.

To ask us to support this motion is, I think, simply asking us to give some further support to some concept of divisiveness within our nation over the matter of language and culture, when our purpose should be to think in terms of Canada as one entity and of people in Canada as Canadians regardless of their mother tongue or heritage. I would not support this motion because I think that by so doing, even looking at the imbalanced way in which it is constructed, I would simply be supporting the concepts of bigotry that are strong enough in our country without adding further fuel to them. I do not say this in any unkind way to the sponsor of the motion, but I think it might be just one more addition to those forces which are not out to unify us.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to remind the house that the member has just drawn the conclusions of his own question.

He has made representations and, as he was reminded by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), he is aware of the reforms now under way concerning bilingualism within the public service, and the Supreme Court of Canada.

I tend to believe that the information the hon. member is asking for would not only be useless but also unavailable at the present time and that one cannot expect public funds to be spent to compile statistical data for the sole purposes mentioned by the hon. member.

I will therefore ask him to consider withdrawing his motion since he knows that the Minister of Justice will certainly examine his representation. It would be sensible of him, I believe, to do so since we do not have the required information and therefore cannot provide it.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word about this motion. As hon. members know, my support of the bilingual character of Canada and the need to respect it is pretty strong. I have stated my position on a number of occasions. But I would like to suggest to the hon. member who placed this motion on the order paper that the kind of bilingualism he is talking about distorts the notion of bilingualism in Canada, and by distorting it may well do the whole subject a great deal of harm. Bilingualism in the courts of this country surely means only that people who appear in our courts, either as counsel or as citizens, can carry on their case in either official language. If it means more than that, then there will be a great many problems created in this country. If there is any compulsion that certain judgments, because they cover a certain area of the country must be written in French while others must be written in English, we will really be asking for serious trouble.

What should be available to the citizens of Canada is, in my and any other reasonable person's understanding of bilingualism, the right for counsel appearing before the Supreme Court of Canada to make their arguments in either official language and that members of the court should also be free to give judgment in either official language. I have read judgments of the court on cases which have come before it from Ontario and sometimes from British Columbia written by one of the French speaking judges of the court in his mother tongue.

The fact that a judgment is written in French—and it happens mostly in criminal appeals—and concerns an appeal from some province other than Quebec or New Brunswick makes no difference. The freedom to write the judgment either in English or in French is what bilingualism means, and that relates as well to the freedom to present the case in either language. I hope that all the members of the court will understand either official language. This has been the case, in latter years anyway, in my experience. I have not appeared before the Supreme Court very often but it seems to me that the members of that court have been able to follow an argument delivered in either language, and certainly to read the factums in either language. That is what bilingualism means. To attempt to get information intended to enable someone to force judges to write their judgments in either one or the other language is not bilingualism but a kind of fanaticism that can only do harm to the unity of Canada and to the cause of bilingualism.

My colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is absolutely right, in my judgment, that what should concern us above all about the Supreme Court of Canada or any other court is whether or not the appointee to that court will apply the law in a fair, just and objective manner. In order to achieve bilingualism in the court it has been the practice for a long time—I cannot say whether this has been the practice since confederation—to have English speaking members of that court acquaint themselves with the other official language. This has certainly been the practice since I have had anything to do with the courts.

I once had the privilege of knowing a judge of the court who later became chief justice of Canada and one of the best known jurists in the history of our country. I refer to Sir Lyman Duff. I learned from him that all members of that court found it desirable and necessary to acquaint themselves with the other official language so that the work could be carried out in a fair and civilized manner. The objective of the court can best be carried out by men who can mete out justice in a fair and equitable way, in accordance with the law, and who have the competency and ability to do so. There are men and women in the legal profession who can speak either language and who are fully qualified, whether they are French or English speaking, and who have the integrity and the training to carry out the extremely important task of a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada.

I repeat, however, that to require that only one language be used in certain cases and another language be used in other cases is divisive and harmful and cannot do the cause of bilingualism any good. It can certainly not do the cause of unity in Canada any good, but will create a great deal of division in this country and encourage an unfortunate backlash against the whole concept of bilingualism which has already occurred in the rest of Canada. It is one of the unhappy facts in the present situation in our country that certain events in some parts of the country have created a backlash against what over a year ago appeared to be accepted all across Canada. I say to the hon. member who put this motion on the order paper and to some other members of this house who are constantly harping on this subject in and out of season, when it is relevant and when it is irrelevant, when it is acceptable and when it is obviously not acceptable, that when they are doing this kind of thing they are doing the cause which they are trying to support a great deal of harm in the rest of Canada.

Some perspective has to be maintained toward this subject, and this motion goes way beyond any reasonable perspective that anyone can define. Therefore, I join the parliamentary secretary in pleading with the hon. member who sponsored this motion to withdraw it and not try to force this house to divide itself on this kind of subject. It is unnecessary, undesirable and not beneficial to the cause which he supports.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to take part in this debate to say a few words. While I do not agree with the motion as put by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), I have few words to say in disagreement with what has been said by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and also by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). The hon. member for Skeena said that the judges of the Supreme Court should be picked on the basis of their ability to efficiently render justice or make decisions; in other words on the basis of their ability to be competent judges. This statement was backed up by the hon. member for York South. Let me say that I do not see how a court or a judge can competently render justice if he cannot understand and read the language of at least one third of the people in Canada. I say this as a person who served on a committee of the junior bar association of Montreal. When I was on that committee we prepared a brief which we presented to the royal commision on bilingualism and biculturalism. We studied this very issue and we found some disgraceful situations. We found that many lawyers in the province of Quebec who could barely speak and write in English were forced, when they came before the Supreme Court of Canada, to try to write their briefs in English. They were also forced to get English speaking counsel because they knew that in that court out of nine judges there were only three or four at the most who understood French. They were put to a much greater expense and to more trouble than the English speaking lawyers and litigants. Both the English and French speaking lawyers in the province of Quebec felt this situation was extremely unjust and objected to the fact that one language group in Canada could not go to a court and expect to have justice done to them when they presented their factums, their briefs and their arguments in their own language.

They could, of course, take a chance. They could plead in French and they could present their factums in French. But they could not be sure that these would be listened to and read by all six judges of the court. In order to take no chance of losing a case, they were forced to obtain English-speaking counsel if they themselves could not speak English well enough, and then go through the laborious exercise of having all their factums and arguments translated into English.

Competency in the law is, of course, a most important criterion for the appointment of persons to the Supreme Court, but surely in this day and age it should be possible for us in Canada to pick nine men who are not only good lawyers but who are also bilingual. If we cannot do this, or at least aim toward it, there must be something wrong with this country. I do not expect we could have nine bilingual judges overnight but certainly we could work toward this goal.

There is another problem which faces French-speaking Quebec lawyers who must deal with the Supreme Court. There are many precedents which they must consult in order to prepare their cases. They must read volume after volume and judgment after judgment printed in the English language. Judges should be permitted to give judgments in whichever language they wish, I agree, but I certainly think those judgments should be well translated in order that Quebec lawyers in consulting these many precedents, could read them in the French language. I entered this debate because I believe the purpose of the courts is to dispense justice and serve the people. Part of their competency lies in the effectiveness of their dealings with the people who are being served. And the people of this country are both English and French speaking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate on the motion presented by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) because it is a matter of principle. I have to say certain things.

However, I want to acknowledge the commendable effort of the member for Lotbinière, even if he failed, in the course of this debate, to call the members and the public's attention sufficiently to very real problems. Yet, he will have accomplished a lot by this simple gesture.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cantin) have given worthwhile reasons to induce the member for Lotbinière to withdraw his motion and I agree with them.

However, I would not vote against the motion of the member for Lotbinière for the same reasons or the same motives put forward by the hon. members for Skeena and York South (Messrs. Howard and Lewis).

With due kindness, I certainly do not want to cast reflections on those hon. members nor accuse them, because I know quite well that they, at least, do not have the same background as I have. Indeed, they have not lived in a more bilingual Canada for which, however, they are both longing. I think we are still far from the entente cordiale which we are all seeking as Canadians, and I think that they have just demonstrated, by their remarks, that we have not yet reached that stage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Corbin: I want to talk quite charitably, Mr. Speaker. I repeat that I do not want to cast reflections on those hon. members. Their background is different from mine, but their remarks indicate, however, that there is much progress to be done. They may have misinterpreted the remarks of the member for Lotbinière who tried nevertheless to be rather fair. It is perhaps because of their susceptibility of English-speaking people that they felt they were being singled out and that they thought necessary to retort as they did.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the remarks that I wanted to make.

[English]

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about one of the great agencies of our country, the Supreme Court, which throughout its history has been a remarkably fruitful federal institution.

Like the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) I have had the privilege from time to time of appearing in that court. Anyone who appears there knows that its proceedings are carried on equally in French or English, whether in writing or orally, and contrary to what was said by my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) the reports of the court are published in two languages.

It may be that because of the nature of our country not every judge who sits on that court is thoroughly bilingual, but it is a matter of common knowledge to those of us who live in the City of Ottawa that judges of that court make a very determined and valid effort to become bilingual.

What I am a little afraid of is that we in this debate, have fallen, perhaps unwittingly, into the trap of casting criticism on the court which is the head of the judicial system of this country and I do not think any of us would wish to do so. For this reason, I think this would be a most inappropriate motion upon which to divide the house.

Mr. Bell: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

And the motion of Mr. Woolliams (for Mr. Valade):

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 7.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned this afternoon, I was making some comments on how the committee had proceeded in order to study the various amendments proposed to the omnibus bill.

However, to back up my arguments, I would like to remind you of what the Minister of Justice said when he introduced this omnibus bill in the house for first reading a few months ago.

I am quoting him from memory. According to what he said, this was to be one of the most important legislation in Canadian parliamentary history. If this is the case, Mr. Speaker, we were entitled to expect that the members of the house would have the freedom to discuss all the aspects of the bill, both in the house and in committee.

We also hoped that we could call all the experts and witnesses necessary to collect the information which would enable members of the committee to form an opinion on the subject and to make really useful suggestions to the house.

Unfortunately, right from the first sittings of the committee, I found, to my disappointment, that a truly deplorable attitude was being taken which was creating a precedent with regard to the procedure to be followed.

We were informed that we would have the opportunity to test the efficiency of this new procedure which had been proposed and agreed to by the opposition. With this new procedure, committees would be able to consider the subject matter and the merits of each proposed amendment.

Unfortunately, the committee decided to expedite the matters that were referred to it by the house. Furthermore, we were informed that the time allotted to each committee member would be limited to a maximum of ten minutes, and that each party represented on this committee would be entitled to call upon two experts at the most. That meant that the Liberal party and the Progressive Conservative party, could call two witnesses each, and the New Democratic party as well as the Ralliement créditiste, only one each.

If it was true, as the minister had stated when introducing his bill in the house, that this was one of the most important issues that parliament had ever had to consider, I found it rather strange, Mr. Speaker, that there were such limitations on the number of witnesses that could be called before the committee to give evidence on the various aspects of the bill. I refrained from attending the sittings of the committee in order to draw to the public's attention the manner in which the opposition parties' members were being forced to accept without reservations the instructions that the members of the Liberal party seemed to have received from the government.

In order to support this assertion, I should like, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the remarks made by the Liberal member for York East (Mr. Otto) in a letter addressed to his constituents, and I quote:

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

If I may paraphrase, the hon. member said he was disappointed in the committee system because committee members were told by the government exactly how to vote and had to vote exactly as the government told them to vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, such is the way hon. members on the government side approached the amendments to the omnibus bill that were put forward in the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

I was anxious to make those opening remarks in order to put in its proper context the problem that faced hon. members who had been given the assurance, when they voted on the motion for second reading of the bill, that the question was meant to refer the bill to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, where they would be quite free to examine thoroughly each of its clauses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are back in the house after having repeatedly tried to have the committee approve amendments that were completely sound and acceptable to the government.

For instance, I would like to refer to the amendment I had suggested, and that I intend to move again in the course of the debate, concerning the abortion clause and which is meant to discharge of any responsibility whatsoever a medical practitioner who might refuse to perform an abortion at the request of a female person or one of her relatives.

The Minister of Justice was kind enough to send me the text of another similar amendment which, according to him, was more in accordance with the legal terminology and more agreeable to the committee.

I therefore moved those two amendments, but neither one has been approved by the committee. Government members have voted unanimously against the proposed amendments.

Here again, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cantin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, we are not discussing abortion but a particular amendment that has nothing to do with it. I think the hon. member should stick to the amendment now under discussion.

When the house will deal with the amendment, the hon. member will then be able to refer to what happened in the committee, but that cannot be allowed at this time.

[English]

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member suggested that members of the cabinet or of the government directed members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs as to how they ought to vote in that committee. That is just not so. I was a member of that committee and proposed many resolutions and amendments which were not accepted by the committee. At no time did any member of Her Majesty's Privy Council or of the government tell me how I ought to vote in that committee, and I resent as an affront to my personal privileges any suggestion that members of the committee were directed by anyone at all as to what motions they ought to propose in that committee or how they should vote. Anyone reading the proceedings of that committee will see that on many occasions the members of the committee were in conflict with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in regard to some of the matters that have been proposed in this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the question of privilege raised by my hon. friend whom, besides, I got to know very well during the sittings of the committee and for whom I have much consideration, I must tell him that my previous remarks about the instructions received from the government cannot be ascribed to me but to one of his colleagues, the Liberal member for York East.

I think that the hon. member should raise instead the question of privilege about his colleague, the Liberal member for York East, who made that comment himself in a letter which he is supposed to have sent—

Mr. Corbin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. member on a point of privilege. I may point out that if the matter raised by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) did not constitute a question of privilege then, if the question the hon. member now wishes to raise, is the same, it cannot constitute a question of privilege. Unfortunately, having just come to the Chair I am in no position to pass judgment on the original point of order of the Parliamentary Secretary. I will however, hear the hon. member on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite says that the hon. member for York East is reported to have been instructed to vote as he was told in the committee. He tried afterwards to generalize by stating that all members, at least government members, were complying with those instructions. I deny such a remark, because when I vote in the house or in committee, I do it on my own without following any instruction.

Mr. Valade: I thank the hon. member for telling his colleague that he is wrong. As for me, I only read the letter which the hon. member for York East sent to his electors.

I will now return, Mr. Speaker, to the substance of the amendment which I moved and the purpose of which is to strike out clause 7 of the omnibus bill C-150, as introduced in the house.

Mr. Speaker, the reason for which I presented that motion is that the government bill is inconsistent.

First, the bill provides for the legalization of an act committed in private between two consenting persons of 21 years of age or more. It is added that when more than two persons commit an act of homosexuality, in private, they will come within the provisions of the law.

That is one of the obvious inconsistencies of the bill. The member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) accused us of being intolerant and strict, but the minister of Justice says that two persons who commit an act of homosexuality in private are not subject to the provisions of the law, and are not considered as criminals. However, if four homosexuals, in the same room, indulge in their passion, they will all be considered as criminals. That is where the law is illogical.

If the government really wanted to be consistent, could it not take the time to draw up a much more coherent piece of legislation? Consequently, I ask the hon. member for Trois-Rivières and the Minister of Justice why persons of 21 years of age and more, who commit homosexual acts in private cannot be regarded as criminals, while four persons known as homosexuals, holding membership cards in homosexual clubs, are?

Is that the intolerance we are accused of by the Liberal government? Is the government not hiding behind a law that I find absolutely hypocritical, Mr. Speaker, because, on the one hand, they claim to be liberal, to seek to create a new spirit and to give a new direction to homosexuals in Canada, and on the other, they consider as criminals four homosexuals present in the same room.

• (8:20 p.m.)

If the argument were to be carried to the limit, one should perhaps say—I see the minister smiling—that if one murder is committed it is legal, while if two are committed it is illegal; by the same token, if a young man smokes one marijuana cigarette it is legal, while if he smokes two it is illegal. It is the same kind of logic. That is the basis of the reasoning which the minister offers us.

I think that there is another thing which is still more illogical, inconsistent and utterly ridiculous. In this bill, the minister tells us a sexual act between man and woman, husband and wife in private is not considered a criminal act. Could one call a criminal the act committed in private by husband and wife? Is there anything more absurd, Mr. Speaker, than that list and that definition which the minister proposes in the bill before us?

We are also asked to make the act applicable to persons whose consent is given through fear or under threat. The minister knows very well or should know that when a male person takes advantage of another male in private, proof of threat or fear is very difficult to establish. How could the minister protect persons subjected to assaults by an homosexual pervert or prostitute? The government does not offer any remedies to such situations.

According to the bill, an insane or mentally retarded person is not aware of his actions. The offending person will however be liable to prosecution under the Criminal Code. But how will proof be established that there were only two persons in the room? How will it be possible to prosecute those who violate the provisions of the omnibus bill?

The Minister of Justice has not given any consideration to those aspects of the matter. His only wish is that the question be put as soon as possible. He wants to speed up the passing of this legislation which he considers progressive but which, in my opinion, is truly backward, considering our present society.

The government, Mr. Speaker, goes even further in its lack of logic; in the same bill it asks that be dealt with as a criminal any one who has consumed a certain quantity of alcohol and about whom the police can prove—

Mr. Cantin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is once again straying from the matter under study at the present time, namely, clause 7. This is not the time for debating the matter of the breathalizer test. I believe the hon. member should limit his comments to clause 7.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member want to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Valade: I want to speak on the point of order. I think this is ridiculous. I am making an analogy between the proposed amendment and some other legislation as an example of the illogical situation which will be created by the present bill. This is my purpose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was listening to the hon. member fairly closely. I assumed this was what he was attempting to do. I remind the house that under the Standing Orders we have to restrict the debate to the amendment as strictly and directly as possible. Unfortunately, I must also add that the hon. member's time has expired. Is the house disposed to grant the hon. member extra time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I must say that I have been interrupted several times by points of order and questions of privilege. I am about to conclude my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I still have to say that we have discussed that matter to some extent and that we have been unable to call in experts in this field to enable us to truly form an opinion likely to assist the legislators to come to a decision. I think that we should ask the following question: Is there any advantage in passing now that clause of the bill? Would it not be appropriate to ask ourselves whether the liberalization or the legalization of homosexuality will improve our society or public morals?

If we pass this bill, will that be an example of leadership to give to our young people? What benefit—and I ask this to the Minister of Justice—would Canadian citizens get from this amendment to the Criminal Code? Will it help the homosexual or the lesbian to rehabilitate themselves? In which way does the government intend to deal with those rehabilitation measures in order that they be adopted? And why such haste to have this bill passed?

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I think that there are questions we could raise as to the possible advantages of deferring the consideration of this clause.

Thus we could make an exhaustive study of the problem of homosexuality. It would also be possible to see that tendency in its true perspective; it would be possible to provide adequate means to facilitate rehabilitation. Moreover, it would be possible to take the necessary steps to protect our young people from being corrupted by perverts and prostitutes in this field, and provide the authorities, the police forces with the required means to enforce the law once it is enacted.

Mr. Speaker, when we are discussing such an important bill, as the Minister of Justice said himself, I think it is necessary and important for us to know what is homosexuality. How do you define a homosexual? Is he a sick person or a criminal? If he is ill, should we consider him as a pathologic or a psychiatric case, as a sociological or a psychological evil? Is there any way of rehabilitating him, if he is truly ill? However, Mr. Speaker, we do not have in hand all the data that would enable us to assess this problem fully.

A few years ago, a group of world specialists met at Geneva, including criminologists, sociologists, psychiatrists, physiologists, pathologists, who looked into this matter for five days.

It was concluded, at the end of the five-day meeting, that the information and statistical data available was not sufficient to permit a classification of the various aspects of the problem of homosexuality.

As far as we are concerned, here in Canada, we think we are smarter than they are. We would like to rush through a legislation as yet unwarranted by our ways and customs.

I am much too confident in the future of our country to believe it is necessary today to legalize this evil.

Mr. Speaker, there are many categories of homosexuals and the minister had the opportunity to learn about them at the committee meetings. As far as I am concerned, I read many books on the subject. First of all, there are the perverted who very often become sexual criminals and are very dangerous in our society.

There are male homosexuals who prostitute themselves as women of pleasure do.

That is one of the most difficult problems and unless it is eliminated immediately and looked into thoroughly, it will prevent the government from making the proposed legislation effective.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding I would like to quote a sentence from a booklet I received recently and titled: Hope for Homosexuals, by David Wilker. I quote from page 2:

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

And I quote in English the following paragraph:

> One young homosexual boasted, "Some day we'll outnumber you, and then you 'straight' people will be the abnormal ones and we'll be the normal."

This is the kind of thing toward which we are aiming our Canadian society, and this is the type of thing which must make us think more deeply than we have on this subject.

Mr. Reid: Are you going to look after procreation by yourself, Georges?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If there are to be exchanges, they should be directed through the Chair.

Mr. Valade: I did not hear what the hon. member said, Mr. Speaker. I was much more interested in the major problem that the minister is creating for Canadians, and on some other occasion will answer this type of interjection.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to put on record those words which I have taken from an article written by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and published on page 12 in the number of April 1963 of the review "Cité Libre". I quote:

> On account of realism and efficiency, I was compelled, and may God forgive me, to betray some rebellions of my youth. But I have not yet accepted to trample on democracy. This is why on election day on April 8, I intend to vote for the New Democratic Party.
> I think that it is also the duty of all those who believe that it is urgent to check the rush of the Canadian political philosophy towards stark degradation.

I have just quoted, Mr. Speaker, the author of the omnibus bill brought in by the Minister of Justice and which the house is now called upon to pass.

Mr. Speaker, I say to all conscientious members and I know that there are some on the other side of the house, as in all parties, that this is a really important and serious problem jeopardizing the welfare of our society.

In fact, this is a problem which must be looked into by experts. I therefore invite government members who might also be reluctant to support this omnibus bill—and there are some who may be absent for that reason, because they do not want to reveal their feeling in public—not to consider the political move which they will perhaps be compelled to make but rather to think of their responsibilities towards society which has elected them, in order to honour their mandate.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Since yesterday, Mr. Speaker, several hon. members have taken the floor in order to support Bill C-150. Among the numerous arguments set forth by them, the evolution of morality seems to have had the priority. In my opinion, there is something more to that since we often hear of people wishing to change their sex.

But in this parliament we go beyond all that. While Canadian workers are paying taxes, while the unemployed are wondering about what tomorrow will bring, we are discussing the fate of the third sex.

Can an honest government allow itself to neglect the majority on behalf of a small group of perverts? Why is clause 7 of Bill C-150 now before us? Wherefrom came the representations to that effect?

Mr. Speaker, I have been here for three years and a half. During that period, I met various groups, among which were teamsters, farmers, workmen, even union representatives, which came and exerted pressure on the government and I would like to know which of them requested clause 7 now under study.

Was that clause requested by the electors of the Mount-Royal or the Ottawa-Carleton constituency? To how many persons did the government commit itself? Since minorities normally dispossessed, that is the poor, are being forgotten most of the time, would the request have originated from the minority of millionnaires contributing to the electoral fund?

We recall that bill C-222, that is the bank act, was passed on March 21, 1967. We also remember that the electoral funds of both parties were very well provided for, following the passage of the bill.

Shortly afterwards, in February 1968, that is before the last election, came the passage of bill C-191, amending the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party is not yet through with counting the moneys that were contributed to its election fund by the mining and lumber companies being assisted by the bill, which exempted them from paying the 10 per cent sales tax on the purchase of machinery and trucks.

Still more recently, was not the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) offered a certain amount of money for sponsoring bill S-27 respecting the Quebec Savings Bank? That bill only purported to change the name Quebec Savings Bank into that of People's Bank.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have been listening to the hon. member with some care, and I remind him that the amendment before the house at the moment deals with the deletion of clause 7 of Bill C-150. The debate must be restricted to the amendment itself, and I invite the hon. member to deal specifically with this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I am sorry I lost my temper.

In any case—

Mr. Cantin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. member has made charges against the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme), who is reported as having been offered a certain amount of money. I think not only that he was out of order, but also that he made a false charge, and I want him to take full responsibility for it.

I am sure the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) has not been blackmailed, has received nothing and has performed his duty by sponsoring a bill in the house.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I am taking due note of the remark made by the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Cantin). The hon. member who is a lawyer, has understood very well what I said. I did not say that the hon. member had accepted anything, I said that an offer had been made to him. There is quite a difference.

Mr. Speaker, in any case, they persist in rejecting all amendments to this bill and we are asking ourselves questions as well as everybody across the country, especially with regard to clause 7 which deals with homosexuality.

That this clause should appear in the former bill introduced by the former Minister of Justice, a bachelor, and member for Mont-Royal, that was understandable. The people, who knew the hon. member as a comical character, a great joker, considered this part of the bill with a smile, believing it was a joke.

However, the peoples of Canada who thought it was all a joke, realize now that the clause had actually been presented with the firm intention of having it adopted. Under these circumstances, the peoples of Canada sympathise, as I do, with the present Minister of Justice. In fact, one wonders what advantages the hon. minister of Justice, representing Ottawa-Carleton, who is married and has, if I am correct, four children, could derive from inserting clause 7 in the present Bill C-150.

At all events, I ask those who support this clause, and who mostly are married men, whether their wives are in favour of their consenting adults stepping out. The peoples of Canada are dissatisfied, Mr. Speaker. It is not only in Creditiste ridings that constituents are writing to their M.P. In fact, we have received letters from all over Canada.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I can declare that consciences agree on one point in Canada and even in constituencies whose representatives are Liberals, the reactions are alike.

I have even received a letter from the constituency of Chambly-Rouville. I would like to quote a few excerpts.

Richelieu, March 15, 1969. Mr. Roland Godin, M.P. for Portneuf.

Sir, I wish to write you a few words, first to commend you and your colleagues for the fine job that you are doing in the House of Commons in Ottawa—

The letter goes on in the same vein but, out of modesty, I will spare you part of it.

However, the man who signed the letter tells me:

I wrote to my member of parliament, Bernard Pilon, telling him not to vote like a puppet—

He adds in brackets: $18,000 a year is quite a price to pay for a mere puppet. I continue:

I also wrote to the Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and the Minister of Justice, Mr. Turner, asking them to leave the Liberal members free to vote according to their conscience and their faith, if they have not forgotten it.

Herewith copy of the letter I sent to the hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets, Speaker of the Senate, asking him to assume his responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, not only have the constituents of Chambly-Rouville lost confidence in their member of parliament but they now mistrust the Speaker of the other place, and I give you proof of that by reading the letter in question:

Chambly-Rouville, March 14, 1969

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschâtelets,
Speaker of the Senate
Parliament Buildings
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,

Please allow me to express my opinion, as well as that of the people of our beautiful county of Chambly-Rouville. And as a taxpayer of all kinds of taxes and surtaxes, direct and indirect as the case may be, I make this my duty. Our M.P., who represents us all in Ottawa, appears to have become a nothing, a yes-man, a lunkhead and a fink, since he was elected and sent in Ottawa to defend our interests and get acquainted with the legislation put before the House of Commons, so that those that are passed will be for the best interest of the people of this county who are honest, righteous and worthy of their beliefs. Such laws must also protect morals, the unwritten law and the ten Commandments written on the tables of the Law, made of stone; they will remain there for all time. I do not think that a government, a Member of Parliament or a Minister of Justice should be allowed to pass a law that would abolish the Lord's Commandments.

Mr. Speaker of the Senate, it is beyond understanding that intelligent men like Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who has said, as I read in the papers, that he was baptized and was practicing his religion, would conceive in 1968, when he was Minister of Justice, the notorious omnibus bill, hateful and degrading. And that he would put it in the hands of the present minister, Mr. John Turner, to have it baptized in parliament, where our M.P.'s are the godfathers and godmothers of the people of Canada—

And here again, Mr. Speaker, this man goes on to say that a Gallup poll has shown that 92 per cent of the Canadian people are believers, and then he states that members of the Senate will never forget that poll. And he goes on to say:

To legalize homosexuality between adults means to popularize it wilfully, between adults as well as between adults and young people, as it will not be practical to check it, meaning that policemen have no right to intervene in such cases.

To vote for this hateful and degrading bill out of false principles, is to open the door wide to other legislation contrary to the indefeasible rights of man.

This letter bears the initials of a constituent of Chambly-Rouville.

I apologize for quoting this letter before the Hon. Jean-Paul Deschâtelets sent us a copy.

In short, Mr. Speaker, under clause 7, we are simply being asked to legalize male prostitution. How did the great and noble Liberal party come to be so lenient towards unnatural acts, for it is not by granting all freedom to inverts that the evil will be checked. And to repeat that the State has no business in bedrooms is not very serious, when the crime which is being committed there endangers a whole civilization.

Since we are told again and again that the homosexual is ill, the State should act accordingly. And before accepting the money of the dear boys for the electoral fund, the Liberal party through its Minister of National Health and Welfare should have suggested adequate care.

An intelligent man, the secretary of the province of Quebec, Mr. Yves Gabias, a lawyer, and a citizen of Trois-Rivières gave us his impressions during the fall in 1967, and I quote an article published in L'Action in December 1967:

The provincial secretary, Yves Gabias, who is also the member for Trois-Rivières, has protested, along with many others, against some clauses of Bill C-195—

It will be recalled that, at the time, the measure was known as Bill C-195.

—or the bill amending the Criminal Code, introduced last week in the Commons by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

In Mr. Gabias' opinion, the proposed amendments concerning abortion and homosexuality are inacceptable. Consequently, he wishes that the Canadian people and the public bodies would exert pressures in order to oblige the federal government to take these clauses out of the bill.

"Every time a people has legalized homosexuality, such action has led to pure and simple decay," he commented. In so doing, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières emphasizes the fact that he speaks as a Quebec citizen and as the father of a family.

Therefore, he is taking a logical approach without forgetting that he is a public figure, a politician, a member of a provincial government. But what he seems to be considering in particular, and which is very important, is the fact that a legislator in all matters must act logically as a responsible family head.

From the strict viewpoint of the drafting of the text, the matter of homosexuality, that is clause 7, is unacceptable. At the present time, under the legislation anyone who commits buggery or bestiality is liable to imprisonment for 14 years and anyone who commits an act of gross indecency with another person to a five-year imprisonment. How could two consenting persons over 21 years of age commit these acts and not be liable to criminal charges whereas other persons. Also, over 21 and also consenting could be heavily penalized for having committed similar acts whenever there were more than two persons participating? Does a crime cease to be a crime on the ground it was committed by one or two persons only? Shall we say that homosexuals are sick people who should be cured rather than punished? In that case, are not those who practise this vice in a group also sick persons?

And this is signed by Roger Bruneau who concludes:

In brief we prefer the logic of Mr. Yves Gabias and we agree with him that the Canadian citizens and public institutions should exert on the federal government pressures strong enough to compel it to remove from the bill clauses 7 . . . , dealing with homosexuality.

● (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, let us grant such permission only to 21 year-old adults and tomorrow we shall witness demonstrations organized by the 17 and 18 year-old youth. Holland has recently given proof there is some truth in this.

Dutch homosexuals demonstrate—

This is from a recent issue of a Quebec newspaper.

About a hundred homosexuals and lesbians put up a noisy demonstration yesterday in front of the Dutch parliament to protest against a law of the country making sexual relations between adults of the same sex liable to four years in prison.

According to the demonstrators, this legislation is inhuman, discriminatory, and inconsistent since it allows homosexual relations between adults on the one hand and between minors of 16 years old at least on the other hand while forbidding it between both of these groups. Sexual relations between an adult and a consenting girl of at least sixteen are also permitted.

This implies, claim the homosexuals, that a man of 70 is free to give vent to his passions with a consenting adolescent . . . with the blessing of the government.

And note this, Mr. Speaker,

The supporters of the third sex distributed to the members of Parliament small candy hearts bearing slogans such as: "love", "sweet kisses", etc.

Mr. Speaker, homosexuals are said to be sick people; I feel that those sick people know how to do things very well.

We now ask: how is it that the British parliament has already passed a similar bill? How is it that the Canadian government is about to do the same? The Canadian Intelligence Service gives us an explanation in the Supplement to Bulletin No. 7 dated April 1968, and I quote:

Canadian justice is rebuilding its foundations.

Scientific humanism is replacing the gospel as the foundation of Canadian law.

First reading has just been given in the Commons to an omnibus bill containing various measures intended to "modernize" the Canadian Criminal Code. This bill introduced by Minister of Justice Trudeau contains, among others, two measures the first of which would facilitate abortion by increasing the number of grounds . . . and the second would legalize homosexuality between adults. And, on the other hand, not among future plans but among the achievements——were other plans.

Again in the same article, and I quote:

—Peter Newman, correspondent of the Toronto Star in Ottawa, in his article of April 25, 1967, made this comment about Mr. Trudeau:

"He (Mr. Trudeau) also keeps in mind certain aspects of a creative implementation of the law. He says the Department of Justice should be considered more and more as a body designed to plan the society of tomorrow, and not only as a legal adviser to the government—"

Let us take notice of that idea of a creative law and of a Department of Justice directed more and more towards the planning of the society of tomorrow. We find here the idea that a Department of Justice does not exist above all to enforce law and maintain order but to use the law so as to change and rebuild social order. Thus the law, which was the framework of order, becomes an instrument of revolution.

We find here once again the idea of a new basis for the law, made up of changing sociological theories and a morality determined by public opinion. Such a concept destroys the very basis of western civilization, such basis, which has its roots in the Bible, being that man is related to God, that he is responsible before God for his actions and his life, and that he should be guided not by man-made laws but by God's commandments—

The implications of this new direction to be given to Canadian law cannot be overstressed, because it disregards its roots which were the Holy Scriptures to embrace "humanitarian" views.

Norman St. John-Stevas, in his important book La Vie, la Mort et la Loi has shown that it is in the name of this new morality, of this new god of science, that Christians are asked today to approve the legalization of homosexuality, prostitution, suicide, etc.

All those acts are forbidden by existing Christian laws. That such radical changes could thus be proposed reveal the deep moral revolution which has shaken Anglo-Saxon democracies, brought about mostly by the advocates of the "new morality" and the worshippers of the new god of science, who have succeeded in invading our institutions, universities, public schools, churches, communication media of press, radio and television, without overlooking our political parties.

Any change must at least seem justified. Those so-called reformists contend that God is dead, that there is no moral law of divine origin, and that therefore perversion and crime not only have equal rights with Christian morality, but actually have superior rights; which the reformists explain by claiming that Christian morality violate the right of peoples of the post-Christian era to do as they please.

This new set of morals, based on a humanist prejudice of complete independence in relation to God and His moral law, has been advocated in several documents published recently by modern humanists: the Kinsey report, for instance, which encouraged sexual freedom——the new morality of scientific humanists is about to become the common measure of courts of justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to inform the hon. member that his time is up.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to go on for two more minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member's time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate for only a few minutes. I do so because I regret very deeply the turn it has taken and the kind of perspective that has been put upon clause 7 of Bill C-150. Frankly, I think that perspective is all wrong. One would get the impression, listening to many of the speeches that have been made on clause 7, that what it proposes to do is promote homosexuality and other sexual deviations.

Mr. Woolliams: No, I do not think that is true.

[Mr. Godin.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I say that this is the impression one gets.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe; but I do not think that is true.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend is saying that is not the purpose of the bill?

Mr. Woolliams: I say that is not true as far as the debate is concerned. I do not think that is right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is entitled to his opinion, though it would be better if he expressed it from his own seat.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I agree with that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I express the opinion, as one who has listened to the debate throughout, that this is what it sounds like. I would like to state what I think is the purpose of clause 7. I put it very simply—

Mr. Woolliams: This is pretty naïve.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend may say it is naïve if he wants, but I have a right to state it in all its naïvety. Sections 147, 148 and 149 of the Criminal Code are not being deleted or changed. The law against various kinds of indecency and abnormality will remain. All we are doing by clause 7 is adding another section to the Criminal Code that is of a relieving nature. It will relieve the people who, in the view of the majority of us, are ill from the possibility of being tarred as criminals.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is the kind of approach society ought to take toward homosexuals and people who indulge in some of these sexual variations, particularly when they are over 21 years of age. There seems to be a great deal of concern because there is a line drawn at 21. I am glad the line is drawn. This means we are still doing our best to prevent the spread of sexual irregularities. It means we are still doing our best to avoid the propagation of homosexuality; the force of the law is against this sort of thing. But at the same time we are saying that when people are adults, if they have a form of illness that expresses iteslf in this way, we ought not to attach to them the stigma of being criminals.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to ask the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, how many prosecutions there have been under this particular situation since 1953, when the Code was amended. I can answer right now: there have been none.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank my hon. friend for his question, and since I did not know the answer I thank him for giving it to me. But the point I am trying to make, despite the interruptions of my genial friend, still stands that the perspective that has been created yesterday and today is all wrong and is not in keeping with the real intent of clause 7. It is because of its real intent, namely to provide a relieving clause for people who are ill, that some of us are not only prepared to support it but are glad that it has been brought in.

One of the other things that has bothered me during the course of the debate, and perhaps has provoked me to get to my feet, has been the constant appeal to religion as though some of the interpretations of religion which we have been given are the final answer. It is not often in this house that I make a formal reference to any religious position, but I would like to say just this, that if true religion means anything it means compassion, it means understanding, it means concern for people, especially people who are ill. That is the objective of clause 7. I think this house should support it and reject the amendment that would seek to strike it out.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to address again the hon. members and to tell them that I support the amendment to delete clause 7 of the bill now under consideration.

I should like first to call the attention of the house to an excerpt of a report presented by a commission under the chairmanship of Sir John Wolfenden of the United Kingdom. These 12 men and 3 women were asked to study the law and the customs with regard to offences concerning homosexuality and the treatment of persons convicted by the tribunals of such offences.

I want to point out that the government, according to its press release, relied upon this report to prove that the bill to legalize homosexuality could be valid.

Here is what Sir John Wolfenden wrote and I quote:

> With regard to the fact that a man who engages into homosexual acts with another man might want to do the same with young boys, the Commission reached the following conclusion:
> In short, the evidence we heard suggests that the fear that doing away with the illegality of homosexuality between adults would lead to similar acts with young boys does not give sufficient ground to classify as punishable offences homosexual acts committed between adults, and in private, and the Commission suggests that such a change in the legislation is more likely to protect the young boys rather than expose them to danger.

It is certainly sheer nonsense to pretend that taking away completely from the Criminal Code the offence attached to homosexuality will not lead homosexuals to commit similar acts with boys under 21.

Just like the previous speaker, I feel that homosexuals are sick people and that sometimes they are unable to control their sexual impulse not only towards adults but also towards adolescents.

In my opinion, the passing of that clause would mean that young people would be continually threatened by the unbridled instincts of those sexual perverts.

I repeat that homosexuality is an illness and its legalization will not contribute to the progress of society but to its decadence because it can undermine the family, the cell of our Canadian society.

That same committee adds that homosexuality does not cause more harm to the family than adultery. That may be but, even so, the prevention or cure of such an illness would still be justified.

It is still more ridiculous to see how this government behaves while relying on nothing. I say while relying on nothing because there is not a single minister who can tell us which public or private associations have made representations to have that section included in the bill now before us. If, by chance, homosexuals made such representations, they would have to be ignored for, in my opinion, homosexuality is a psychological illness.

The government presents this bill as a form of progress while, it is a degrading measure.

According to the reports submitted to the committee, the United Kingdom, recently passed an act the provisions of which are the following, and I quote:

> Notwithstanding any provision of the statutes or of the common law, but subject to the provisions of the following section, an act of homosexuality committed in private is not an offence providing that the people concerned consent to it and are at least 21 years of age.
> 2. An act that would be otherwise considered, for the purpose of this act, as committed in private, will not be considered so if it is committed:
>
> (a) When more than two persons share in it or are present while it is being committed; or
> (b) In lavatories where the public is admitted or authorized to enter on paying a charge, or otherwise.
> No proceedings shall be filed, except by the director of public proceedings or with his consent, against any man for a buggery offence with another man or for indecency with another man, for an attempt to commit either of those offences or for having helped, encouraged, advised, prompted or ordered its perpetration when one of those two men was, at the moment of its perpetration, less than 21 years of age. However, this section does not preclude the arrest of a person or the issue of a warrant against that person for such an offence, nor the provisional detention or releasing on bail of a person charged with such an offence.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that homosexuals will purposely put themselves on public display when they wish to have intercourse with each other. This is why I say that the assertion which was made in England is completely and basically wrong. It is then useless for the government to take it into account because he should rather deal exclusively with laws concerning indecent assaults and gross indecencies.

How is it possible to reconcile the seriousness of the government with the rationale of section 7 of the bill, if it ascribes importance to details and ignores the unhappy experience of the nations that have legalized homosexuality?

Homosexuality is an evil and its legalization means contagion among people who are young or not so young. I speak of the people of 18 or 17 and even of those who are younger. Let us not be surprised, if this bill is ever adopted, of the increase of cases like the one of Léopold Dion; four boys were the innocent victims of this sex maniac.

The evil already exists. We must curb it rather than spread it. To do this, the government should create a system of education for adults, so that they can prevent homosexuality by educating the young.

Besides, I advocate the creation of free psychiatric hospitals for homosexuals rather than the adoption of such ridiculous bills.

One does not build a strong country upon degradation as the present government tries to do, but rather on the dignity of and on the respect for human beings.

This afternoon, the hon. minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said he did not agree with the argument of the members who claim that immorality means illegality from the legal point of view.

I think it is immoral to permit homosexuality under certain conditions, as provided by section 7 of the bill. What should remain illegal should even have a penalty attached to it.

For all those reasons, I ask the government to remove this section 7 from bill C-150, and I support the amendment under study.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Members: He has already spoken.

Mr. Fortin: I am glad to be able to participate in this debate even if some government members wonder whether I have already done so. I do hope my hon. colleagues do not dread me that much.

Mr. Speaker I consider it a duty—

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I am not quite sure but I wonder whether the hon. member has not already spoken on the same subject. It is the only question I have to ask him.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, we might perhaps adjourn and try to find out whether I did actually speak or not.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am advised that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has not spoken on this subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I realize you are paying closer attention to the debate than the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Cantin).

Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to participate in the present debate which aims at striking out of the Criminal Code clause 7 which has, so far, caused much ink to flow and given birth to many comments, right or wrong but, anyhow, interesting. Nevertheless, I feel, Mr.

Speaker, that the longer we debate, the more we drift away from the subject.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that so far, in most cases, a basic aspect has been overlooked: that of the Canadian youth. Let us think of it lest we have to deplore tomorrow the steps taken today.

Mr. Speaker, there is in the April issue of The Canadian Family, a magazine edited in Ottawa by the Canadian Family Conference, a good article by Frederick Elgin. I would like, Mr. Speaker, to draw the attention of the house on the subject for it is of the utmost importance. Before passing or rejecting this motion, it is every member's duty, in my opinion, to think of the Canadian youth. Reading this article, Mr. Speaker, is illuminating. We tend too often to forget, for instance, that in 1951 there were 4.9 million young people under 18 years of age in Canada who tomorrow will have become adults and will be responsible for our society.

By 1961, that population had increased. The number of young people had grown to 7,100,000. That is an unbelievable, fantastic increase of 45 per cent.

The Canadian people are growing ever younger. The average age of Canadians is decreasing. Let us now look at 18 to 24 year olds. From 1951 to 1961, the rate of increase of that sector of the population was 13 per cent.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the bill we are about to pass or defeat, depending on the seriousness of our principles and our wish to pass laws that are really useful, will have more bearing on the young people of Canada, students and workers, than on the older people, since more and more, and especially since 1951, the rate of growth of the Canadian population between 18 and 24 years, and under 18, has increased constantly.

That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that to my mind it is criminal to set the minimum age at 21 in clause 7 of the bill now before us.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that our young people are concerned. Several persons, several members, will say, especially on the government side: If we go by the introductory speech of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in the house, this bill will remove from the Criminal Code sections 147, 148 and 149 that deal with homosexuality or sexual relations between two consenting persons of the same sex, and it will have no bearing, directly or indirectly on our young people.

Mr. Speaker, if under the pretext of making the law more humane and adapting the Criminal Code to a pluralistic society, more freedom must be given to the human being, we commit the crime of throwing our young people, our Canadian youth into a society that does not generally respect love, one's fellowman, the human being, and the right of the individual, to fulfill himself according to his own principles.

However, if we prevent those young people from growing up freely according to their skills, abilities and principles—for they have them—instead of making the Criminal Code more human, we will have committed the greatest crime in the century, since we will have abolished all that could make of them the honest and serious leaders of tomorrow.

When the minister states that the bill will have no repercussions on people, I would like to remind him that the present government has already held an inquiry on juvenile delinquency in Canada. I have here a very interesting book which was published under the auspices of the Department of Justice.

One can find a mine of information therein. This is how is defined the expression "juvenile delinquent" from a legal standpoint, and I quote:

> Any child who violates any provision of the Criminal Code or any Dominion or provincial statute, or any by-law or ordinance of any municipality, or is guilty of sexual immorality or any similar form of vice.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this legal definition of the expression "juvenile delinquent" classifies as a vice any sexual deviation or immorality. Youths are condemned, they are put in jail, they are sent to reformatories, they are even prevented from getting a good start in life. They are not given all available opportunities. According to which criteria are they condemned?

It deals with sexual immorality or any similar form of vice. One can find it again on page 8 of that document published in 1965, under the auspices of the Department of Justice.

I hope that the minister read it. Mr. Speaker, some people rationalize their indictment against youths who maybe did not get all required opportunities to find their niche in society. Everything is done to prevent those youths from finding their place in society; people brandish the criteria of sexual immorality or any similar form of vice.

Is there something more illogical, more inhuman and more stupid than that, Mr.

Speaker? However, they want to allow youths 21 and more, to do the same acts that are forbidden in the case of younger ones: They are condemned and their life is wrecked.

I want to rise against this ridiculous situation and say to the minister, that if he deletes from the Criminal Code sections 147, 148 and 149, without passing intelligent legislation giving our young people the chance not to be accused in such situations, I say that he himself is guilty of a crime, and somebody should blow him up with a bomb, and I approve young people fighting with guns, if our society does not enact intelligent laws to promote development of the human being.

I think this is a serious situation. Everybody in this house is against protest, everyone is against young people getting together and holding demonstrations as they did at McGill University. Everybody is afraid, but nobody is taking his responsibility. We are ready to condone sexual acts between young people of the same sex—male or female—as long as it is in private, and for the same acts, young people, our children, are convicted and their life is wrecked. Some hon. members will say that this is not true. I would like them to read the statistics found in this same book. We have been blind ever since this debate started.

Do you know that 15,204 juvenile delinquents were not only accused but convicted in 1957 and 16,903 in 1958? There are more and more every year. In 1960, 18,706; in 1961, 19,659. These statistics are for 1961, the latest available.

At this rate of increase, we can guess what the number is now. The majority of these young people have no jobs. Instead of legislating to help them, we contribute to their delinquency while at the same time we organize our society according to a supposed evolution that makes it necessary to adapt ourselves to a pluralistic society, under the pretext that we must follow the advice of our good mother-in-law, England.

I heard members ask the minister where this bill originated? Can he tell us whether he received representations? In my opinion, the answer is quite simple and I will take the liberty to tell it to the house, by quoting the Prime Minister at the time he was Minister of Justice. I could say the same thing of the present Minister of Justice, because he has the same opinion. He is unable to break new ground, to adapt himself to the Canadian turn of mind. He has to take his ideas from outside, from the United Kingdom. I quote:

[Mr. Fortin.]

> Considerations which led to the introduction of these amendments in parliament are well defined in the following excerpt from the report of the committee set up in the United Kingdom—

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, the opinion of the Canadian people was not sought. Even if the Canadian opinion is against this bill, they don't care a hang. They prefer to follow the opinions of the United Kingdom. I have them here. The Prime Minister said, and I quote:

> —are well defined in the following excerpt of the report of the committee set up in the United Kingdom under the chairmanship of Sir John Wolfenden. They led to the passage of a similar legislation by the United Kingdom parliament last July.

That is all what we can think of in Canada!

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to waste my time any further, but I think that is important. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) goes even farther than his predecessor. The former Minister of Justice decided that if Sir John Wolfenden had studied the question, it made sense. We, in Canada, are backward people; so he thought we should just follow suit.

But the hon. Minister of Justice tells him: It might be very interesting. We are going to investigate further and find out whether this is really desirable. I am quoting his introductory speech which, and you will see that it is really something.

Mr. Speaker, this situation so revolts me that I would willingly give 25c. to the hon. Minister of Justice and ask him to go and play in the traffic. The hon. Minister of Justice said—I am quoting:

> A committee made up of twelve men and three women headed by Sir John Wolfenden, who had been appointed in the United Kingdom to study the law and the practice regarding homosexual offences and the treatment meted out to people found guilty by the courts of such criminal acts—

Let us imagine that committee! Do you want to know how this committee made its study in the United Kingdom, how many Canadians they consulted and how they studied the situation in Canada? The minister tells and I quote:

> The committee took 32 days—

—neither 33, nor 31, nor 32, the minister kept a count—

> —to examine witnesses and it met on 30 other days.

Eventually, they adopted that legislation. Today we, Canadians, are incapable of using our imagination, of inventing or doing anything, without looking at what our neighbour is doing, because we are not controlling anything.

Mr. Speaker, I am now returning to the serious problem of homosexuals of whom, I understand, there are many in Canada. As far as I am concerned, I have not received any request from Canadians to support this legislation, but I have received hundreds of letters asking that we oppose it. Most people are themselves against it. Can the minister sincerely tell us that the Canadian people is in favour of this clause? He is unable to say so, unless he betrays himself. Does he want me to give him some examples of people who are against it? I have here almost 500 letters that I shall send him; they are signed by people from Victoriaville, who may not possess the qualifications to become Prime Minister or Minister of Justice, but who have enough conscience and common sense to think about tomorrow's society, although it may be a pluralist one, and to realize they still must hold on certain principles.

I shall, therefore, send the minister these letters and ask him to read them, because it is of the outmost importance. Perhaps he will be unable to go to sleep tonight, which would be that much gained.

Mr. Speaker, homosexuality is an illness, not a crime nor a vice. It could become so through abuse or habit, but then it would become a chronic illness. Nevertheless, it remains an illness, perhaps more difficult to cure than an ordinary one, but it can be treated. The greatest specialists recognize it.

Although I am not very old, Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity and the chance to militate for 4 years in an organization called l'Association Lacordaire. I have discovered in this organization some fantastic things from a human point of view.

I had always been taught, like everyone else, all kinds of prejudices against alcoholics. Even governments, federal and provincial, were taxing alcoholics of being vicious, degraded, heartless people, who were not taking care of their family. And that went on until experts wondered why those people drank too much. Finally, it was discovered that all alcoholics were not vicious or debased or criminal but were in fact sick, and likely to be rehabilitated, for instance, through the Domrémy clinics, the Alcoholics Anonymous or other channels. Rehabilitation is possible and today anybody will recognize that an alcoholic is not a degraded but a sick person that can be treated.

Mr. Speaker, we have known in the past prohibition laws. Public opinion has envolved, we now live in a pluralistic society and it is agreed that the human being deserves respect.

Instead of broadening the laws, instead of condemning such people, the governments more and more take positive measures to have them treated. Today, it is possible to recuperate the sick people that the alcoholics are, to return the father or the mother to their family, to give a start in life to the young, even if previously they have made an immoderate use of liquor—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order! Order! I must interrupt the hon. member since his time has expired.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would have a few more remarks to make.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order! The hon. member cannot carry on unless he has unanimous consent from the house.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Has the hon. member the unanimous agreement of the house to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleagues for their kindness.

I apologize if I should hurt some of them occasionally, but I find such a situation revolting. I should like also to avoid making too many enemies however, I wish they would consider seriously the position of young people in that respect.

It is not enough to enact laws or to broaden them if tomorrow we have to face a more serious problem. It seems to me that we have so many important laws that we could avoid getting into such a predicament! Why not speak out in a positive way? Why not try and put the Canadian family in its true place? Why not help the Canadian family to bloom instead of destroying it?

Love, Mr. Speaker, has not been created for two men or two women. It has been created for man and woman. It has been so through all times. It is not, as an hon. member said jokingly, because morals were depraved at the time of the Romans that they should be the same today. In that case, Mr. Speaker, we should perhaps go back to the time of the Romans and to their oared boats, which could incite us to set up a Canadian merchant marine. If we were just as logical in all fields!

Mr. Speaker, I would have so many things to say in that connection. In view of such factors as urbanization, industrialization, renewal of our society, problems in large cities, and since there is more and more solidarity among young people, since they want more and more to take their place in this society and seek to reach ideals to carry out their projects, in short, in view of the great willingness shown in Canada, why should we pass legislation which, on the grounds of humanism, is against the human being?

Let us then take the same position we took with regards to alcoholism to promote the self-fulfilment of the human being.

The prime minister himself stated in his speech:

> Except if it is necessary to safeguard public order or the security of the human being.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the prime minister was then opening the door to amendments and inviting us to give our views. Let us be logical and get to the basic issues. Many young members have been elected in this house. I had the pleasure to appreciate the work done by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) to whom I want to pay tribute. He said earlier, in reply to the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) that he was free. He is free because he is young in spirit and keeps away from beaten paths.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to stand together and to follow his example.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Francis: I think that the time allotted to the hon. member has expired, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The house has given unanimous consent earlier to the hon. member.

Mr. Fortin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I think that we would benefit from a serious, human and positive consideration of that matter, and I hope that the minister will take it into consideration.

Just as we worked for the alcoholics' rehabilitation, we must try to rehabilitate the homosexuals since they have a disease, a sexual deviation. We must do something useful.

That is why, in my opinion, the proposal of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) is most worthwhile and should be supported by the greatest possible number of parliamentarians. Let us strike out that provision from the Criminal Code and set up some clinics to look after those sick people.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, the hon. member for Ottawa West on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the time of the hon. member has expired.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa West was not here when the house gave its unanimous consent to the hon. member to carry on his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Francis: I do not consent, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member's objection was not noted originally. The hon. member had unanimous consent. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I promise the honourable member for Ottawa West that I will not misuse the time allotted to him or impose upon his kindness. I thank him for his courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to speak at length.

I wanted to make the views of youth known. I would like the minister to consider what I said about the conviction of young people, on charges of immoral sexual acts or similar kinds of vices, while a legislation is supposed to be passed, in order to legalize such acts committed by older persons.

Mr. Speaker, since the population is getting younger, it is extremely important to consider the matter and think it over seriously.

Before concluding my remarks, I wish to thank the members who had the patience to listen to me and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will be brave enough to take our responsibilities, so as not to fear those who tomorrow will assume them and will be sitting in this house.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Would the hon. member allow just one question?

Mr. Fortin: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I must remind the house that the time of the hon. member has expired and unanimous consent is required to allow the parliamentary secretary to ask his question. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cantin: Does the hon. member finally admit that homosexuals are not criminals? If I am not mistaken, that is what he has just said.

Mr. Fortin: Exactly. They are not criminals, they are ill.

Mr. Cantin: Then, is it not precisely the intent of the proposed amendment that they no longer be regarded as criminals, except when the protection of youth is involved?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I agree with that. I am against taking those provisions out of the Criminal Code if, at the same time, nothing positive is done to help those people. Otherwise, it would be as if I were against red lights and that each time I ran past one, I would say to the person who would stop me: My friend, I am not sick, and I would go on my way.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of abolishing this provision of the Criminal Code. But at the same time, it is important to do something concrete, otherwise it is not possible to agree logically.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The score is now 2-0 for Boston. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi) moved:

That Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting therefrom clause 7.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the remarks of the Speaker at the beginning of the debate yesterday, I think it was agreed that amendments Nos. 3 and 4 would be discussed and voted on at the same time. For those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it would not be appropriate that amendment No. 4 I proposed be read immediately.

An hon. Member: It is the same thing.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I think it was the intention to put the question on the first amendment and if it were negatived, that would dispose of the two amendments. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Was it not understood from the chair that the vote, if called would be deferred?

Mr. Woolliams: I don't think that's right.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to standing order 75(11), the vote on this amendment is deferred.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

It has been proposed that the vote be deferred and I note that there are three further amendments on clause 7.

Then, should it happen that this amendment on which the vote is being deferred were carried, which would mean that clause 7 would be struck off Bill C-150, I think that amendments 6, 7 and 8 would no longer serve any purpose.

I wonder why amendments Nos. 3 and 4 should not be voted on and then we could decide whether amendments Nos. 6, 7 and 8 have to be discussed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I think it was agreed yesterday that votes would be deferred and taken when the study of clauses 1 to 11 is completed.

Should amendment No. 3 be voted down, amendment No. 4 would be dropped by the same token. We shall now proceed with amendment No. 6.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi) moved:

That Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatory Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting in clause 7 paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of the proposed new section 149A.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest of respect, I think the house failed to reach agreement on the procedure yesterday. There would be no objection on this side if a vote were called on these two particular amendments at the moment. I admit that you have a discretion within the rule to defer division under rule 75(11). I think the agreement was not achieved, so it is within your discretion. We, on the government side, of the house would be quite willing to have the vote called on these two particular amendments now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I am informed that the Speaker has deferred the vote, as he has the right and privilege to do, according to rule 75(11).

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order. I would like to ask you for direction. Do I take it the chair is deferring the vote on these 11 amendments until we complete this phase of the bill? I think we should have some direction in this regard. We have to know where we are going.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is the understanding of the chair that the vote will be taken after the completion of the study of amendments 1 to 11. The vote will be taken at the end of the consideration of amendment number 11, as mentioned yesterday by Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: With the greatest of respect I agree that is good practice, but that was not the ruling. Now, it has been made clear and we at least know where we are going.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): We are now considering amendment No. 6.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Lotbinière rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I understand that we will vote tomorrow on amendments Nos. 1 to 11 taken together. Is that correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The Chair does not know at present whether amendments 1 to 11 will be voted on tomorrow. What has been mentioned and agreed upon yesterday is that the question will be put once the house has considered amendments 1 to 11 inclusive. When amendment 11 has been disposed of, the vote will be taken on the amendments.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I agree with what you are saying and I agree that this is what was understood yesterday, but is there not one point that should be made clear, namely, that after we have disposed of amendments Nos. 1 to 11 we will take the votes all right but only on those amendments on which votes have been called by the standing at least five members?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): That is correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we realize to what extent the new standing orders adopted on December 20th last can give rise to complications. Indeed we have found it difficult to know exactly at what stage we are.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat puzzled tonight to move this amendment, which bears No. 11 in the order paper, to the effect that Bill C-150 be amended by deleting in clause 7 of the bill paragraph (b) of subsection (1) in the proposed new section 149A.

Had the house decided tonight to delete clause 7 from Bill C-150, relating to "gross indecency" or more precisely "homosexuality", the amendment which I am proposing now would no longer be needed, as well as the two following ones. However, one does not know where we stand as to the amendment which we have been discussing these last few days.

That is why, I am somewhat embarrassed in presenting this amendment tonight. When I drafted the amendment, my purpose was to amend clause 7 in the event that my amendment would be refused. The government extends the legislation on homosexuality, and as we must accept this, we should make the best of it. That is why amendments are presented, so that the clause may do the least harm possible to our society. Of course, if the clause were deleted, there would be no problem.

In deleting clause 7(1)(b) of the new section 149A, I have attempted to limit the application of the latter to acts, that may be considered indecent or criminal by others, committed between consenting spouses, even in private.

So, Mr. Speaker, section 149A as it appears in clause 7 will no doubt, as has been mentioned in the last two days, have some possible unfortunate consequences. The hon. members who have spoken in favour of the amendment are not the only ones who entertain such fears. From all parts of the country, and not only from Quebec, various organizations have provided us with the conclusions of investigations they have carried out and have told us not only of their opposition to these changes to the Criminal Code but also of the valid grounds on which they base such opposition.

My purpose in presenting this amendment was to limit the unfortunate consequences of this new section 149A that the government intends to insert in the Criminal Code.

I do not intend to repeat what I have said about the previous amendment, nor to go into any detail, nor to repeat what others have said during the last two days, because I believe that the case has been made.

We should not lose sight of the possible consequences of the application of such a section to certain categories of persons.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—C.M.H.C.—CRITERIA APPLICABLE IN PROJECTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak briefly, but I think what I have to say is a matter of some considerable importance to all hon. members of the house, even those unlucky enough to be on the other side. It concerns public housing and urban renewal. Before I proceed, may I first pay tribute to a person who is leaving the ranks of parliament tomorrow, Mr. Walter Tedman, who has been a very faithful member of the staff of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and who now goes on to business enterprise in Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCleave: I hope I can fit him into this debate without getting myself hopelessly out of order, because he has been very diligent in the field of housing. The purpose of the question, and of my appearance here tonight, is with regard to the one field in which I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who reports to the house for C.M.H.C., has a particular failing. I refer to public housing, housing of some sort for the poor or lower income people of Canada.

As far back as March 25 in this session, I asked him about his intentions with regard to bringing in what he called new regulations regarding an amended and improved form of public housing. That question arose out of the fact that in his task force report he had said the criteria we had used in the past were not acceptable to him sociologically, economically or otherwise. On March 25, as recorded at page 7066 of Hansard, the minister said:

• (10:00 p.m.)

I have indicated in discussion with some of the provinces and with some representatives of the municipalities that within a few days I would hope to be in a position to give them, in guideline form, the criteria which will be applied in making judgments in respect of these matters.

Then, I asked the minister:

May I ask the Minister whether this would be in written form, so that every province and municipality could share the wealth.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

The minister replied:

Yes, Mr. Speaker, in both French and English—

That was March 25. The answer was to be given within a few days in written form. On March 31 the questions were resumed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Then again, we raised the matter on April 14. The hon. member for Hamilton West homed in on the subject by asking:

Also, while the Prime Minister is on his feet will he advise the house whether the minister—

That is, the Minister of Transport.

—in fact made the junket he was supposed to make in the week after Easter with regard to urban renewal.

Then again on the next day, April 15, further questions were asked by the hon. member for Hamilton West and myself with regard to the matter. As recorded at page 7519 of Hansard the minister replied:

I intend to visit Vancouver and Calgary in the next two days and, hopefully, will then be in a position to issue some guidelines within a matter of a few days.

Then, as recorded at the bottom of the column, I said:

I should like to ask the minister when he will be in a position to lay down the sociological and other guidelines that he announced within a few days before we recessed for Easter would be laid down.

The minister replied:

Next week, Mr. Speaker, if not this week.

My only purpose in rising to my feet this evening is to say, as I have said before, that I think housing for the very poor in Canada undoubtedly is our most pressing issue in this field. I hope the minister will be able to come in and lay down the guidelines, so that at least they will be known to all the communities. I know he has done work in this regard in the city of Ottawa. However, I believe every community in Canada, whether small or large, should know what the Minister expects to bring forward so that they will know what is in store for the future. Then, too, all of us in this chamber will know that he is not just being guided by his own personal likes or dislikes. I hate to say personal things about a minister, but I believe that is appropriate. I hope he will bring in a statement of policy which will be applicable to every community in Canada and one which will indicate that people who otherwise could not enjoy the advantages of better housing will be able to do so. That is my purpose in asking the question this evening.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hard working Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who this week is making a survey of urban renewal projects in Vancouver and Calgary, I welcome this opportunity to reply to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). I also share the hon. member's concern about public housing and his interest in the recommendations of the federal task force on housing and urban development. I am thinking particularly of the recommendation which states that the federal government should initiate a thorough research program into the economic, social and psychological aspects of public housing and also the other recommendations which the government is studying at the present time.

I should like to assure the hon. member that the minister has promised to give the earliest possible consideration to making an announcement about the special guidelines for the provision of better housing for the underprivileged people in this country. As he promised in one or two answers in the house, he hopes it may be possible for him to announce these guidelines perhaps next week.

HOUSING —EXTENSION OF LOAN FORGIVENESS PROVISION ON MUNICIPAL PROJECTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I am here tonight to argue the urgency of the question which I raised on Wednesday, April 16, as recorded at page 7596 of Hansard. My question was as follows:

My question is directed to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister in charge of housing. Since the housing task force report recommended loans and grants to municipalities in order that they might increase the amount of service land available, does the government contemplate any extension of the N.H.A. 25 per cent loan forgiveness provisions for municipal capital works projects, which are due to expire in March, 1970?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This does not appear to be a matter of great urgency—

It is understandable, I think, that Your Honour, at the mention of an expiry date almost a year hence, might conclude that the topic was not, on the surface, one of pressing urgency. As a former municipal alderman, I know something of the length of time it takes to complete a capital project of even the most modest proportions. Usually the steps following a decision to embark upon a water system, sewer system, public housing, urban renewal or a pollution treatment plant are extremely complex and time-consuming. First of all, a feasibility study has to be made. Then, a by-law often has to be placed before the local ratepayers. In addition, plans have to be drawn, a detailed application must be submitted, and then there is the processing of application, amendments, and finally approval must be granted. Then, tenders for contracts have to be let, and so on, until the contract is completed. I think I have given enough detail to explain why such projects take a year, or even years sometimes, to complete.

This is why there is considerable urgency in my question, and why it is important that municipalities all across Canada know what to expect in terms of desperately needed capital assistance, so they will have confidence to proceed with essential works. The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities thought the matter of such urgency as to present a brief to the government in January of this year, urging an extension of the 25 per cent forgiveness of principal and interest on approved loans to municipalities for certain capital works.

This is why the municipalities I represent, which are members of the Greater Vancouver Sewage and Drainage Board and the Greater Vancouver Water Board have asked that I work for the extension of this very practical form of assistance, or at least attempt to learn what alternatives the government has to offer before the legislation expires in March, 1970, and all significant municipal service projects come to a halt. The government has proclaimed that it is concerned with the problems of urban living. Daily we hear questions underlining problems of pollution, housing and of an insufficient supply of economically priced serviced land for homes. The recent housing task force report recommends at page 43 as follows:

> The federal government should make direct loans to municipalities or regional governments to assist them in assembling and servicing land for urban growth.

The imminent effect of the expiry of the forgiveness provisions of the municipal loan fund, without any word from the government about the specifics of alternative proposals or expanded assistance to accomplish precisely what the task force recommendation envisages, is of concern to many municipal leaders and is, I think, an apparent conflict with the recommendations of the task force.

I should like to quote from a recent Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities press release which will illustrate what I have been saying:

> The Federation, again speaking for the municipalities of Canada, states emphatically that the National Housing Act program which provides for loans, and the forgiveness of a percentage of these loans, for the servicing of land (trunk sewers and sewage treatment plants) must be continued if Canada's minimum housing needs are to be met.

• (10:10 p.m.)

> In addition, the Federation states that this program must be expanded in order to enable the municipalities to assist in achieving a much higher production of housing to substantially reduce the current shortage.
> It should not be forgotten that this shortage is, in itself, a major contributing factor to the high cost of housing and that, in order to be able to properly service the land needed for the new housing stock, the municipalities require this kind of financial assistance.
> The municipalities are gravely concerned that the task force report implies a termination of this program, without any proposal for its substitution by a program of superior value. The Federation cannot agree with any policy that would see this program terminated.

Neither would I, without a suitable alternative. I hope then that the minister is able to provide the house with definite and detailed answers, because if the housing problem is urgent then I submit to you that my question is equally urgent.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): On behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) I would like to say that the information available to me indicates that already more than 1,400 loan approvals totalling approximately $300 million have been granted to about 900 municipalities in all provinces since the scheme referred to by the hon. member was introduced in 1960.

The possibility of continuing the extension of the 25 per cent loan forgiveness provision for municipal capital works projects is currently being examined, and a decision on this is expected at a later date.

INDUSTRY—DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, since October 1 I have been putting questions to the minister in charge of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and objecting to the compulsory part of the pre-retirement leave plan of Devco. It is because of my objections to this portion of the plan, which will compulsorily retire men at the age of 60 from their work in the Cape Breton coal mines, that I have been persistent in bringing this matter to the attention of the minister.

On October 1 Devco submitted their pre-retirement leave plan to the government and on page 3, paragraph 3 of the press release concerning the plan, reference is made to the fact the plan is authorized under section 18 of the act. Section 18 of the act does not authorize anything. This plan cannot be officially sanctioned until the Treasury Board approves it. Confirmation of this fact can be found in the act where approval of the Treasury Board is made absolutely necessary to sanction this plan.

I have continued to object to the compulsory part of this plan, and to certain other developments the most recent one of which is the notice sent out to the employees who would be either compulsorily or voluntarily retiring under the plan to which a question and answer section was attached by Devco. I find a mistaken statement in it according to which the false impression is left that the bill as approved by parliament is now law, and that it supersedes collective agreements. This is a mistake because, to my knowledge, that bill did not become law until today. It is a matter which the minister assured me yesterday the Treasury Board will look after, and I understand this has been the case.

I continue to object to the early and compulsory retirement of miners and Devco employees at the age of 60. I ask that the minister, at his convenience, provide the house with information as to whether Devco will have to give a further notice because, after all, since the legislation became effective only today it follows that another notice will be required. Yesterday the minister indicated this might be the case when he referred to the fact that there was no reason why the notices sent out to the miners and employees involved could not be cancelled.

I do not wish to address my remarks solely to the parliamentary secretary, but also to others who are listening and who can possibly take action on this situation. Devco and the government should withdraw the compulsory element in this early retirement plan for obvious reasons. For one thing, unless it is withdrawn, those concerned are denying the statement made by the minister on January 14.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

This brings me to another matter which makes the communication of October 1 wrong. Since then, on many occasions and as late as January 15, the minister has reported that negotiations were still being carried on with one of the unions affected. Since these negotiations are in progress the announcement by Devco of the pre-retirement plan is not in accord with the facts. The minister indicated on January 15 that this matter was still being dealt with. I refer to page 4327 of Hansard where the minister is reported as saying, in answer to questions about the retirement plan and negotiations with the unions:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, negotiations are still going on. I think the union representatives are attending a meeting this week or next week.

Again, this would indicate that the facts as presented by Devco were not accurate, or not in accord with what the minister was telling us.

Another reason why the compulsory element should be withdrawn, is this. On page 4245 of Hansard of January 14 I am recorded as having asked the minister whether Devco would honour the general agreements which were in effect at the time it took over from Dominion Coal. The minister answered as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not know all the implications of the question. I should look into it and I may answer tomorrow.

Here are the important words in the minister's answer:

> In principle I say that the corporation should keep its word and live up to its agreements.

I would, therefore, ask the government and those people who are well aware of the situation in Cape Breton to reconsider this plan for compulsory retirement at the age of 60 and allow men from 60 to 65 to continue to work if they wish to do so. Otherwise, the government is about to participate in an unheard-of form of discrimination. Hon. gentlemen opposite are supposed to be struggling to do all they can for older workers, yet they are about to launch a program directly against people who wish to continue to work in some categories where they are experiencing their peak earning years. I would respectfully ask the Parliamentary Secretary to report to the minister and ask him to assure the older workers in Cape Breton that his statement of January 14 will be acted upon and that Devco will honour the agreements in effect at the time of the take-over from Dominion Coal.

Time does not permit me to go into some of the other objections I have to what is going on in respect of the early retirement plan but I assure the minister I shall continue to put them before him at every opportunity.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think there may be some confusion. I should like briefly in the time available to me to outline the steps taken with reference to this plan. The hon. member has been fair in expressing his concern, but I also believe he is acquainted with the background situation and the reason for the establishment of Devco Corporation and the steps it has taken.

The plan we are talking about is, of course, well known to the hon. member and to all members of the house. This has been the case since November 18 of last year when it was tabled in the House of Commons. The formal step to implement the plan—in effect, to permit payment of moneys under the plan—was taken today. Section 18, subsection (3), of the legislation provided that this step could be taken only with approval of Treasury Board, and as my hon. friend has mentioned this step was taken today.

My hon. friend referred at some length to what he called the compulsory retirement of miners at age 60 and over. As I mentioned when replying to the question a couple of days ago, it is rather interesting that in the age group 55 to 59, where the workers have an election to remain as employees or to take a pension, 77½ per cent of the employees indicated to Devco that they would like to take the retirement plan. I mention that because I think it is important in light of what my hon. friend has said. I think it would be a fair inference to draw, and I would be prepared to draw it, that if an election were given to those in the age group 60 and over, the percentage would be somewhat higher than the 77½ per cent in the case of those employees in the 55 to 59 age group.

My hon. friend also mentioned the question of notice, and I can assure him on that. The legislation does not provide any requirement for notice to be given. The letters that were sent out to the employees were sent as a matter of courtesy only. The letters were quite explicit that the notice was conditional upon the plan being approved; it was necessary, of course, that the plan be approved by Treasury Board. Therefore, Devco could in fact have implemented the plan without any notice. I think it would have been unfair for them to have done so, but under the law they could have done so. I feel that they have been very fair in giving a month's notice of their intention, because it was not necessary for them to give this notice.

Since my hon. friend has on other occasions raised the question of the legality of the action of the Devco corporation, I should like to tell him I have been assured by the law officers of the crown that every action has been entirely proper and legal. As I have already indicated, the notice that was given was as a matter of courtesy only. To answer my hon. friend's question specifically, there is no requirement for additional notice to be given.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table the statement released by the office of the Prime Minister on April 3, 1969 with regard to Canada's participation in NATO.

Perhaps while doing so I could call the attention of hon. members to the fact that the Notice of Motion on the participation by Canada, in NATO, which will be dealt with on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, is on the notice paper, and since that debate will refer at least in part to this particular release I suggest it might be helpful to hon. members if the text of the statement were made available as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable to hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of press release, see Appendix.]

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—TABLING OF HIGGINS REPORT ON SELECTION OF SITE

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion): Pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table a copy of the Higgins Report regarding the selection of an international airport site in Quebec. I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that a request for this report was contained in Notice of Motion No. 95 by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. This tabling conforms also, of course, with that request.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIR CANADA

STEPS TO PREVENT MECHANICS STRIKE—LEGISLATION TO PROTECT PUBLIC INTEREST

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us about the status of the Air Canada dispute at the moment? What steps, if any, are being taken to persuade the parties to resume negotiations and prevent a strike which would undoubtedly cause serious inconvenience to thousands of Canadians?

I realize that the Minister of Labour may have pressing reasons for being away but I should like to ask whether, in particular, the Minister of Labour has been requested to return and take a hand in the settlement of this dispute before any strike takes place.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Labour has been involved at appropriate stages in attempts to settle the dispute and the Acting Minister of Labour has been assisting in every way he can.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Prime Minister say whether the Minister of Labour himself will be returning to take charge of the dispute? I ask that particularly in view of the fact that the Prime Minister's intervention yesterday seemed to make what was a probable strike almost inevitable. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would make certain that he has the advice of the Minister of Labour with regard to this matter, particularly before making further interventions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition is advising the government that we should have avoided the strike by accepting the demands of the union.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to feel assured that the Minister of Labour would be at hand to take charge of this difficult situation.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on the same subject I should like to ask the Prime Minister the following question. In view of his statement yesterday that Air Canada was an independent crown corporation and that the government should not intervene in the negotiations, would the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether his question today, whether we—namely the government—should accept the union demands, and his statement yesterday coming down straightforwardly on management's side, is intended to assist in the settlement of the dispute, and whether he or some part of his government will try to get the parties together this week end to negotiate freely, as he suggested yesterday they should?

Mr. Trudeau: I suppose, Mr. Speaker, my answer was of the nature of the question by the leader of the New Democratic party. I think neither was intended to assist in solving the dispute. The dispute will be solved, if at all, by the parties negotiating directly.

What was the latter part of the question?

Mr. Lewis: Yesterday the Prime Minister placed himself directly on management's side in this particular dispute by saying that management had been very generous and that the government would not have been as generous. I am asking the Prime Minister whether he thinks that this kind of statement by the government—should accept the union demands, crown corporation can be helpful in settling the dispute; or will the government take the completely neutral position that it ought to be taking and get the parties together to settle this dispute themselves.

Mr. Trudeau: The government is taking a completely neutral position, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Has the government considered bringing in legislation similar to that now being brought in by the Labour government in the British House of Commons which will have the effect of preserving and protecting the public interest against strikes that embarrass and stifle the economy. I am sure if the government does that my hon. friends to the left will support its action, and I make this suggestion in that spirit.

Mr. Trudeau: As the right hon. gentleman knows, the task force has made certain recommendations in the area of strikes and services essential to the public. These recommendations are being examined by the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I direct another question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Because of the detrimental potential of strikes such as these would the Prime Minister consider bringing together in a strictly neutral attitude, which he advised the house today he has, representatives of the corporation and the unions and use the prestige of his office to prevent what would be a serious and catastrophic matter involving the welfare of the entire country?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I have not considered that.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In view of the absence of the Minister of Labour, I ask the minister if he would consider calling upon the services of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Kierans) whose tact and skill in labour negotiations are now receiving national recognition?

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR TASK FORCE REPORT ON PUBLIC INTEREST DISPUTES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should also like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has given consideration to and reached any decision in connection with the recommendation of the task force on labour relations with regard to the establishment of a public interest disputes commission, dealing as it does with this type of problem.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the task force are being considered by the government.

AIR TRANSPORT

EXTENSION TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES FRANCHISE—SERVICE DURING AIR CANADA STRIKE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport, or perhaps I should address it to the Minister without Portfolio who acts in that capacity. Has the government given consideration to extending the franchise of Canadian Pacific Airlines to the Atlantic provinces so that there will be two main line carriers in that area, and the situations that are likely to take place within the next few days will not totally incapacitate the people of that area from getting around?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission has been in touch with the other air lines. If requests are received from the other air lines to provide additional services the commission, whose primary responsibility is to serve the Canadian public, will, I am certain, give its consent to any reasonable requests for additional service to the public.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. That is not exactly what I had in mind. I want to ask the minister whether consideration is being given by the Department of Transport to extending permanently the franchise of Canadian Pacific Airlines to the Atlantic region so that there will be two main carriers in the area and so that in the event of a strike on the part of one airline or the other, service will be maintained to the public.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the commission can only consider applications and, so far as I know, there is no application.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would he advise us what action the cabinet committee he mentioned yesterday has taken on this important matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has established certain contingency plans for eventualities to do with matters such as the transportation of mail or, in urgent circumstances, the transportation of people.

CHARLOTTETOWN-MONTREAL JET SERVICE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Will he assure the house that the planned early commencement of direct jet service from Charlottetown to Montreal will not be jeopardized or delayed by the announcement of policy with regard to regional carriers made the other day by the chairman of the transport commission. Also, could this proposed service be advanced in view the probable impending strike?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed on this subject by the president of the commission, who has advised me that he made no statement which would jeopardize the actual proposal of Nordair and Eastern Provincial Airlines. I think the problem arose from the fact that the president of the Commission would not have been in favour of a merger. But they did not in fact propose a merger and therefore there was no statement that would jeopardize the service that has been referred to.

USE OF PRIVATE CARRIERS TO SERVE SMALLER CENTRES DURING AIR CANADA STRIKE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Minister of Transport. In view of the immediate urgency of the strike situation has the government any plans to have Air Canada drop regional service to smaller centres, particularly those in the Atlantic region, and have private carriers take over that passenger service?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there are no specific plans of that kind.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to alleviate fears that exist in the Atlantic region and in smaller centres of Ontario would the acting minister or the Minister of Transport make a statement to the house to allay fears that we will lose the services of Air Canada in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the routes are determined by the air committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. Applications for routes come forward and are approved or not approved by the Commission. There is no directive by the government and no government policy that will remove Air Canada from the maritimes or from any route at the present time which is now being considered by the commission.

[Later:]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I wish to clarify the minister's statement to the effect that if regional air carriers were desirous of providing additional service, that this would be considered. I wonder if the other side of the case will also be exercised whereby the minister, the department or the Transport Commission will ask regional carriers to operate services particularly in areas of important need? These will include parts of both western and eastern Canada.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): I think the initiative must come from the regional carriers. The commission would not stand in the way of any reasonable request.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to understand that neither the minister, his department or the Transport Commission will be assessing the need independently and make such requests to these air carriers?

Mr. Richardson: As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, the commission has been in touch with the air lines and in consultation with them, but the request will still have to come from the regional air lines for services which they wish to provide. If they do, the commission will want to grant any reasonable requests.

POSSIBLE FATIGUE FACTOR IN JET PILOT OPERATIONS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Transport. Since we have had assurance from the Prime Minister and others that other air lines will do their best where requested to take over during this emergency, will the minister make sure air line pilots, particularly jet pilots, are not required to spend long hours on duty in view of the great safety factor involved? I ask this question because of events that took place earlier this year concerning long hours that jet pilots were required to work on occasion, even on regular runs. There is a high safety factor.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's point is well taken. I am certain the air lines themselves and the commission would want to be certain that the pilots do not work longer hours than they could reasonably undertake having regard to the safety of the travelling public.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

A.B.M. SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT CONCERNING SAFEGUARD SYSTEM

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Prime Minister. Some weeks ago he indicated the government was studying the proposed A.B.M. Safeguard system suggested by President Nixon. The Prime Minister indicated at that time that he was going to see whether the government should condemn the proposal or co-operate. I ask the Prime Minister if he has reached any conclusion with respect to this matter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We have not reached any conclusion yet, Mr. Speaker, but it seems the debate is going on well in the United States without us.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am not concerned about the debate in the United States, Mr. Speaker. I am concerned about Canada's implications. I ask the Prime Minister if there have been any discussions at any level of government regarding the possibility of co-operation with respect to the A.B.M. system and NORAD. Also is Canada seeking any contracts for the construction of material to be used in the A.B.M. system?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know the answer to that, Mr. Speaker. I know there is a question on the order paper along these lines which will be answered in due course.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, when the government will make its statement to the house or issue a white paper on North American defence could the Prime Minister indicate whether there will be a clear statement with respect to Canada's position on the A.B.M. question?

Mr. Trudeau: I hope so, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO BILINGUAL BONUS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that he stated recently that the bill on official languages might be introduced and studied within a few weeks, could the Prime Minister assure the house and federal civil servants that the promised 7 per cent bonus will be granted to bilingual civil servants before the languages bill is discussed in the house.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the bill in question has nothing to do with the 7 per cent bonus. Therefore, I do not see the connection between the two matters as implied by the hon. member.

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

AMHERST, N.S.—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF MARITIMES OPERATION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the department giving consideration to closing out its maritime operations that are located at Amherst, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether this is a question that can be asked at this time. The hon. member may wish to have the matter debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Coates: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is a very urgent matter so far as I am concerned. It is one that involves all three maritime provinces because the operations that are located at Amherst are involved in the plans that have been produced by the federal government to carry out its work in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the argument submitted by the hon. member, but I still feel that it is the type of situation that can best be discussed at the time of adjournment.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—STABILIZATION OF P.E.I. INDUSTRY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Can he assure the house that the government will approve some plan at a very early date to stabilize the potato industry in Prince Edward Island, as requested by a resolution of the legislature of that province?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring this question to the attention of the minister on his return.

INDUSTRY

DEVCO—COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF MINERS—TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion if he can inform the house whether there was a by-law of Devco about compulsory early retirement of employees, and whether that by-law was approved by Treasury Board yesterday, as was suggested by the minister the other day?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. member there was such a by-law enacted in accordance with the statute and that approval was given yesterday by the Treasury Board.

Mr. Lewis: As a supplementary question, if the approval for this plan was given only yesterday would the parliamentary secretary inform the house, if he has the information now, or undertake to obtain it, under what authority the corporation sent notices to the employees some weeks ago telling them that they were subject to this compulsory retirement, when the by-law had not been before the Treasury Board and approved?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that the hon. member is asking for a legal interpretation.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape-Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South is not asking for a legal interpretation. It is just a follow-up to a statement made by the parliamentary secretary last night in respect of information sent to the retiring employees, and I might say, Mr. Speaker, in this respect—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member now seems to be presenting an argument. This is not a point of order. He may have a supplementary question and I have no objection to that.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I will put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will he request the crown company to withdraw the compulsory aspect of its pre-retirement leave plan? Mr. Speaker, I will put a separate question to the Prime Minister. Does he support this form of discrimination?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I worded my question badly. I was not asking for any legal opinion. I was asking the Parliamentary Secretary whether he could tell the house under what authority the corporation sent out the notices, and whether authority had been sought from the minister, the government or the Treasury Board before those notices went out?

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, the notices to which my hon. friend refers were in fact letters to the employees in question advising them of the proposed plans. It was I think evident from reading the letters that this was contingent upon approval of Treasury Board. They were sent as a matter of courtesy only, so that the best possible notice could be given the employees of the intention of Devco. There is no statutory or other requirement that such notice be given; it is entirely a matter of courtesy.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know how the rules will permit me to go about informing the minister, the Prime Minister and the parliamentary secretary that the information they are now giving the house is not in accord with the facts. All they need do is read the letter put out by Devco—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Albert.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding information given to the house by the government about letters concerning employees of the Devco corporation dated March 26 in which the statement is made that the pre-retirement leave question has been approved by the government. This is a complete contradiction to the facts, and I once again ask the Prime Minister to stop this discrimination.

GRAIN

WHEAT—SUPPORT PRICE AND TWO-PRICE SYSTEM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement he made in Saskatoon that farmers need a strong voice to plead their case I should like to know what the voice is of the Acting Minister of Agriculture in connection with the request of the government of Saskatchewan and the legislature for a support price on export wheat and a two-price system. In view of his statement in Saskatoon that it needs a strong man to speak out for western farmers will the minister now let the house know what the situation is.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I assume the minister knows the position in which I find myself now is that my voice is exercised in consultation with my colleagues and when there is government policy to be announced it will be announced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I apologize for accepting his own view, that his was a strong voice.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC AREA

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but in the minister's absence I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. Since the latest D.B.S. figures show that unemployment again increased in the Atlantic area, that the number of employed people decreased during the month of March and that 10.8 per cent of the labour force in the Atlantic area is now unemployed, what steps has the government taken to alleviate this critical situation in the Atlantic area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would seem that the hon. member has restated a question asked in about the same terms yesterday.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rephrase the question. Can the Prime Minister give the house any indication as to when the industrial incentive legislation as announced in Halifax Wednesday night by the Deputy Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will be introduced in the house.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The member might wish to add to his statistics that since last June the unemployment figures have fallen from 5.4 per cent to 4.2 per cent.

Mr. MacEwan: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister aware—

Mr. Forrestall: You don't care about it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the hon. member a supplementary?

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is aware that the unemployment rate in the Atlantic area has risen since—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LUMBER—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICE INCREASE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for either the Prime Minister or the government house leader. In view of the fact that it is utterly impossible to direct any question on the matter of housing before next Tuesday, although the minister is supposed to be here, and perhaps not even next Tuesday—and even then it would only be directed to the half of the minister dealing with housing—will the government give consideration to the question of housing by appointing a whole minister to look after it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is only half in order.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Half a supplementary?

Mrs. MacInnis: If the minister in charge of housing is to be away periodically may I ask whether the government will please designate somebody who is supposed to look after our questions in this regard.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might point out to the hon. member that the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba is prepared to answer questions about that department. If the hon. lady is concerned about a particular question she might give notice of it.

Mrs. MacInnis: I certainly am if I could ask it because I had it ready for today. I shall direct it to the Minister without Portfolio. In view of the sharp rise in the first quarter profits of leading lumber producers in British Columbia, coupled with the sharp increase over the past year in the price of lumber and other building supplies, will the minister urge upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the need for action to roll back the price of such building materials needed to meet the housing shortage.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is rather in the form of a representation. She can assume it has been noted.

Mrs. MacInnis: Will he himself undertake to discuss with these British Columbia lumber firms the need for restraint in the matter of the prices of their products to keep down inflation?

NATIONAL PARKS

SALE OF LANDS BY QUEBEC TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could he tell us whether the Quebec government opposed the sale to the federal government of land owned by the Quebec Seminary?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be put on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment, should the hon. member prefer that.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO NINETY-NINE YEAR LEASE

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In relation to the minister's reply to my question yesterday concerning the leasing of lands by a provincial government for the establishment of national parks, can the minister say whether a 99-year lease of land will be acceptable from any province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the question is one of urgency. The hon. member might place it on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding Your Honour's suggestion that my question should be placed on the order paper. I realize I must accept your suggestion but it seems quite evident that questions which are not very urgent and are placed on the order paper remain there for some time. I am still waiting for an answer to a question I placed on the order paper on January 29.

Mr. Speaker: I might suggest to the hon. member that if he thinks it is taking too long to get the reply to which he is entitled he can always give the Chair notice of his intention to debate the matter at the time of adjournment. This provision is really a protection for hon. members.

TRANSPORT

ACTION ON MEASURE RESPECTING MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Transport. Will the minister make a clear and definite statement with regard to the government's intention in respect of Bill C-182 regarding the Maritime Freight Rates Act to alleviate the fears of truckers and shippers in that area. I ask the question because the Minister of Transport along with six other ministers is away again on a day when he should be here evidently with the approval of the Prime Minister.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): All the departments in question are represented here today.

Mr. Bell: Not very well.

An hon. Member: Half represented.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I intended to direct to the minister who reports on National Capital matters. I do not see him in the house. Perhaps I might be allowed to address this question to the Prime Minister. What consideration is being given to implementation of the policy endorsed by the last parliament which called for the establishment of a parliamentary committee to deal with National Capital matters?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is not a day when this department is to answer questions in the house, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio acting on behalf of the minister in charge of housing. In view of the sudden and astronomical rise in the price of wood used as building material, will the government give consideration to eliminating the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Mr. Speaker.]

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

SEA TRIALS OF HYDROFOIL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is not of earthshaking urgency, but I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence, in light of the very great concern and interest, whether he could indicate briefly to the house the degree of satisfaction there has been from the sea trials of the Canadian hydrofoil, the Bras d'Or?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure the question as asked has really the degree of urgency that would qualify it as a question acceptable at this time.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBILITY OF MECHANICS STRIKE— SHIPMENT OF PERISHABLE COMMODITIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister said that a committee of cabinet is embarked on contingency planning in the event that unfortunately a strike should take place in Air Canada.

In view of the fact that a great many people across Canada are concerned about the shipment of perishable commodities, can the Prime Minister indicate who is the chairman of that committee and to whom representations should be made in the event people run into serious problems in respect of the shipment of those commodities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, representations should not be made to the chairman of the committee, but rather to the Minister of Transport.

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT TAX BEFORE APPROVAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. When does the government intend to bring forward legislation regarding the so-called social development tax? Does the government consider it appropriate to collect this tax indefinitely without parliamentary authorization, or is it considering the abandonment of the tax?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker. I anticipate that the bill will probably be put before the house within the next two or three weeks. There are very elaborate taxation provisions in respect of life insurance companies which require a great deal of effort on the part of draftsmen.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CLOSING OF CUSTOMS OFFICES IN SOUTHWESTERN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question I have asked on two other occasions. I asked the question in French on those occasions and have been trying to get an answer since February. Perhaps I should now ask it in English. How many customs offices in Nova Scotia, particularly in the Southwestern part, are to be closed? I was not able to get an answer earlier. That is the reason I ask this question again.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I was certainly not in the house when those questions were asked in French, because I understand French a little better than English.

[English]

However, I can inform the hon. member that there are supposed to be 69 customs offices closed in Canada. A decision has been made in respect of only 15 of these. Before they are closed we will have discussions with every member of constituencies in which these customs ports exist.

NATIONAL PARKS

ALTERATION OF LAND TENURE PRINCIPLE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, now that the government has decided to alter the land tenure principle of national parks to meet the special circumstances of the Quebec Civil Code, will the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development give the same consideration to the special circumstances regarding western parks, particularly in those areas where alienation took place prior to 1930?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I will consider the question asked by the hon. member. The Code Napoleon applies in the province of Quebec and if Manitoba wants to adopt it, the proposal will be considered.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Defence Production who, I presume, is acting on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries, in his absence. Has the minister met with representatives of the fishing industry to iron out some of the difficulties which have arisen as a result of the implementation of the government's program of aid to the industry, and what was the outcome of these discussions?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there has been a series of meetings. I believe I revealed that there was a meeting on Monday with Newfoundland representatives. There have also been conversations with representatives from the maritime provinces, and representatives from the department have been in the maritime provinces for personal consultations. The mechanics of this scheme have virtually been completed now and we are hopeful that the details can be disclosed some time during the coming week.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALT FISH POLICY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the house whether a date has been set by the government to announce the new salt fish policy and, more particularly, the date for the establishment of the salt fish marketing board as suggested by the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Supply and Services): No, Mr. Speaker; no specific date has been set. Again, as with the fresh fish industry, there are some details of the mechanics which have to be discussed with the fishermen and the trade. These discussions are taking place at maximum speed. The objective is again to make an announcement, hopefully within the next week or so.

Criminal Code

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF BASE TO NORTHWEST INDUSTRIES LTD.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg in his capacity as Acting Minister of Transport. I asked a question of the Minister of Transport two days ago concerning the steps being taken by the government to make sure that the employees affected by the transfer of the Air Canada base at Winnipeg to Northwest Industries will not be either unemployed or forced to accept lower wages than they have been paid by Air Canada. The minister said he hoped to be able to give me that information in a couple of days and I am wondering whether it is now available?

Hon. James A. Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member has pointed out, the question was asked only two days ago. It is unnecessary to point out to the hon. member that Air Canada has had other matters to think of in the last two days. There is no further information relating to his question at this time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-150, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. And the motion of Mr. Laprise:

That Bill C-150, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting in clause 7 paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of the proposed new section 149A.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night, I was explaining why I had introduced amendment No. 6, to delete from clause 7 of Bill C-150 paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of the proposed new section 149A of the Criminal Code.

The amendment to the Criminal Code would thus read as follows:

"149A. (1) Sections 147 and 149 do not apply to any act committed in private between
(a) a husband and his wife.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose is to determine and attempt to prevent the danger that could stem from the amendment to the Criminal Code before us.

Many people in Quebec and across Canada have been and still are wondering what the government is aiming at with such drastic changes in the Criminal Code, particularly on the matter of sexuality.

I have here an editorial written by Roger Bruneau, in the Quebec newspaper L'Action, of December 26, 1967, at the time when our present Prime Minister, then Minister of Justice, introduced the first amendment to the Criminal Code, now before us.

Here is what Roger Bruneau had to say on the subject, and I quote:

Other aspects of the Trudeau bill are shocking public opinion, such as the legalization of homosexuality between consenting adults. On this subject, Mr. Trudeau has stated that the state has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. We could also wonder whether the "present" state has any business in the federal legislative assemblies. The fact is that Ottawa is following closely the example given by Great Britain on legal morality. In London, they have abolished the death penalty, and they have legalized the sale of contraceptives, homosexuality, abortion, etc.

For the sake of the public interest and to protect itself against the excesses of the present government, the Canadian people must react energetically to make Ottawa understand that they will not let anything go by without being first consulted. It is too bad if the Pearson Liberal government finds itself in an embarrassing situation, but public interest has priority over that of the party; either the bill is withdrawn, or members of parliament are allowed to vote freely on that matter, or the opposition parties will have to unite and overthrow the government when a confidence motion is introduced on that bill.

Mr. Speaker, that is the opinion of an editor who speaks for and to his readers.

At this stage of the debate, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the manner in which the house should act when it is time to vote on the amendments relating to clause 7 as well as clause 18 of the bill now before us.

Now, I want to quote what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said in the house on January 23, 1969, as recorded on page 4718 of Hansard. I quote:

Some hon. members have had to struggle with themselves to accept this bill. Some have had to struggle mightily because it deals with fundamental concepts. I understand this, and the Prime Minister and members of the government understand it. I hope nothing I say today or in the later stages of this bill will give any member any impression other than that I deeply respect the consciences and private convictions of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, it means quite simply that the government members are compelled to vote unanimously for any government proposal, especially in the case of Bill C-150.

On the following page, in the first column, the minister made it quite clear, and I quote:

I want to say, too, that the government fully endorses this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this means that the members are compelled to vote as the cabinet says. This is a government bill and the back-benchers know that they must comply with the instructions of the cabinet.

The quotation continues as follows:

It bears the government stamp and will be supported by the government.

This is the third statement in the same paragraph which clearly proves that the government does not give any choice to the members of its party. And the quotation goes on:

We feel bound to the bill as the principal item of social reform in this session of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how clauses 7 or 18 can improve our social legislation.

As my colleagues from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) and Portneuf (Mr. Godin) pointed out yesterday, there are many other bills to be passed and many other reforms to be made to our social system so that our fellow-citizens may have better living conditions thanks to the opportunities Canada can offer them.

Canada is going through a sexual crisis the causes of which should be looked into. In some cases, for instance, young people must live in abnormal conditions due to inadequate housing. Our recreational associations should be improved in a way to insure the intellectual and physical training of the young. Children and teenagers have no other place to play than the street and the bars we find there.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the government should, if necessary, get busy in conjunction with other provincial governments to reform our social laws.

The minister continues and I quote:

It is identified with our Prime Minister and party.

Here is another indication that these members must follow party policy.

Most ironically, he says in the same paragraph:

We believe it has been tested favourably with the people of Canada and has met the approval of the people in a general election.

• (12 noon)

Mr. Speaker, that is the height of irony. Never, as far as I know, during the last election campaign, has the present government or the Liberal party requested a free hand from the Canadian people to legalize homosexuality or abortion.

If the Liberal party had, through a referendum, consulted the Canadian people who in turn had expressed their views on as clear a subject as the bill under consideration, then we could know exactly what the Canadian people think of the government's reform proposals.

Before going too far in that respect, the government should have held a referendum, and in so doing allow the Canadian people to have their say on the matter if it will not permit hon. members on the government side to decide according to their conscience when that bill is voted on.

Mr. Speaker, if such a referendum were held, I think the government would be in a bad situation and would have trouble getting some clauses of Bill C-150 adopted. It is willing to examine everything the English do in Great Britain, and as Mr. Roger Bruneau wrote in an editorial, we try to ape everything they do, perhaps because we think they are more civilized than we are and we hope to improve ourselves by imitating them.

Before concluding, I would like to quote some excerpts from another lead article written by Mr. Raymond Lacoste, a Parisian journalist, at the time homosexuality was legalized in England. Here is what he said:

The debates enlightened us on the seriousness of the evil. 50 to 60 million unnatural acts are committed every year. The number of sexual crimes which amounted to 5,000 a year in 1939, had reached 20,000 in 1964; in the same period, acts of violence increased from 2,900 to 23,470, and the total number of criminal acts, from 303,000 to more than a million a year. But in the case of homosexuals, the legislation was obviously not enforced since only 1,300 actions and less than a hundred convictions were recorded. Judges were rather lenient though policemen did not mind arresting very honourable gentlemen (such as the former leader of the Liberal party caught in a street urinal in Leicester Square, and who had the good idea of dying of apoplexy the day before his trial.)

A Tory member, Sir Cyril Osborne, said: "I have had enough of this democracy which is too lenient with prostitutes, pimps and procurers."

An honest Labour member, Mr. Tommey, added: I protest against the tone of alleged intellectual superiority adopted by the supporters of the bill. What those people are in fact asking us is to allow male prostitution, when a few years ago parliament dealt severely with female prostitution and waged war against call-girls. But, today, by a strange aberration of mind, British legislators are being more indulgent for unnatural acts than for acts which, though they are in a way sinful, are after all natural.

Raymond Lacoste continues in a kind of humorous vein that draws tears rather than smiles:

We were entertained during the debates with "serious" considerations. Needless to say that when the vote was taken, the handsome young men whose eyes were painted with Kohol and who were huddled up in the galleries burst into applause so great was their joy!

The lawyers of the dear boys put up all kinds of arguments ... Mr. Wood seriously asserted that homosexuality does not entail the danger of illegitimate children! And what is the use of sending an uranist to prison? Is it not like sentencing Don Juan to a few years in a harem?

Mr. Speaker, these few remarks clearly show that the amendment to the Criminal Code that we want to bring in involves all kinds of dangers and may lay this government or even Canada open to ridicule, which we would bitterly regret in the next few years.

It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that we should give special consideration to amendment No. 6, since it purports to amend sections 147 and 149 only, which now read as follows:

147. Every one who commits buggery or bestiality is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for fourteen years.

149. Every one who commits and act of gross indecency with another person is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I move would have the effect of deleting paragraph (b) which reads as follows:

(b) any two persons, each of whom is twenty-one years or more of age,

That would mean that section 149A would apply only to husband and wife. The amendment should therefore be considered seriously and I would be glad to hear the comments of hon. members on that matter.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I shall not be here next week when the vote on the bill before the house takes place. I want to make it clear at once that with the inclusion of the homosexual clauses and the free-love abortion clauses I would be voting against the bill despite the fact that there are many of its provisions which deserve my support and would otherwise receive it.

I wish to explain at once that the reason for my absence, and I trust it will be regarded as a reasonable excuse. The legislature of Saskatchewan will on Tuesday be unveiling a bronze sculpture of me. I tried to get into that institution for a period of four years on two occasions. Now I am to become permanently included in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad hon. members agree that my absence is excusable in the circumstances.

I wish to say I have been impressed by the arguments advanced and by the speeches made during the course of the debate. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), and those associated with him have placed their views before us, as have hon. members supporting the government and those speaking for other parties, in a reasonable and responsible manner.

These are subjects which naturally arouse strong emotional opinions. On the one hand there are those who found their case on sociological advance—the new world. It certainly is not a just society that these things will bring about but a hard society. There is no widespread request that these matters should receive attention from parliament. Last year, I believe on December 13, I spoke and pointed out that it was a strange commentary on the attitude of the present administration that with great economic problems facing the nation the government seemed irrevocable in its determination to bring in these two items.

It is interesting to read the arguments advanced yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). He has argued better cases. I doubt that he ever went through a more trying or introspective examination than when he made his speech yesterday. Indeed, as I read it I was reminded of the schoolmen in the middle ages who, incidentally, brought about the first student riots. Students refused to attend lectures and rioted because so much time was devoted to such metaphysical arguments as the number of angels who could occupy the head of a pin. The arguments advanced yesterday by the hon. gentleman bore a strange and peculiar resemblance to some of the arguments that were advanced by the schoolmen.

[Mr. Laprise.]

I do not intend to speak at length today, but as a brother member of the bar of Ontario and as a member of Grays Inn, of which I am honoured to be an honorary bencher, I can only say that it is with deep concern that I view a young member of this house with a distinguished past and, I hope, a distinguished future advancing the arguments he adduced yesterday. It must have been difficult, but after all in the shadows stands the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) keeping watch upon his flock. He insisted on this. We endeavoured to make it possible for a reasonable vote to be taken in the house, making allowances for the differences we naturally have on a matter that has caused concern to theologians and philosophers throughout the years right from the time of Machiavelli who, incidentally, the Prime Minister said some months ago was his favourite politician.

It is of interest that we now see something of what is happening under the new committee system which was going to be the rebirth of parliament. Those of us who have been here for many long years will always recognize that changes must be made. The new committee system received its baptism in the presentation of this bill to a committee of the house. Some amendments were permitted. But when it came to homosexuality and abortion the government's answer, in effect, was: "So far, no farther; don't touch".

Why this solicitude for these matters to be legalized? The minister says that they are not legalized but that from now on they will not be subject to penalty, even though they may still be immoral—if I understood the argument he advanced yesterday. We now know why it was that the government refused to divide the bill. The steamroller was at work. The government said: "We care not what amendments you may make in regard to the other sections but when it comes to homosexuality and abortion the government stands firm."

I wonder what was the argument behind it. I have not yet been able to find out. Canadians have asked for action on other matters that effect the lives of individuals across the nation, but these matters are still in the hands of task forces or snoop groups. We have never had a government in the history of Canada that has sat on so many things, and I say that in the fullest sense of the word. Ministers divide on everything else but not on homosexuality and abortion. Is this not interesting?

On NATO they travel about the country adopting various attitudes. The latest example is a press release by the Department of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), and I had hoped that he would be here today. Recently he was out west, and I hope he comes back, but one more trip out west and there will be no Liberals elected next time. The Secretary of State came out with a classic. I should like to refer to a press release issued by the National Museums of Canada on the subject of aboriginal art. They did not know anything about aboriginal art until they got into the question of abortion—a classic analogy. The press release states that there is going to be a magnificent exhibition of Canadian aboriginal art at the Musée de l'Homme in Paris on March 25, and here is the last paragraph:

> —Canada will be represented by an official party headed by Secretary of State Gérard Pelletier who will open the exhibition. The party will include both Canadian and French cabinet ministers.

What nonsense is this! Is this the new birth of biculturalism in Canada? There is no mistaking what it means. It says that Canada will be represented by an official party, and the party will consist of those I have stated. These ministers can disagree about anything else. They can bring forth the most unusual ebullitions, but their attitude is, "Don't monkey with the government's intention to legalize homosexuality and abortion."

As soon as this matter came before the house the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked for a free vote. There was a free vote in this party. One government member voted against the measure. The government said: "Either you pass this measure, including these two items, or else." This government has lost the confidence of parliament and you know, Mr. Speaker, what will be the consequences of that.

Then the government said: "Wait till you get into committee". When the matter came to the committee I said that you could not incorporate the United States system by superimposing it on the parliamentary system in the British tradition. Under our tradition the government requires the support of a majority in the house or in committee, as the case may be. But I was told that there was going to be a new day, that parliament was going to be made to work. What has the government done for the people of Canada since December 13 last?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Make them all homos.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, that observation indicates that thought has been given. But what has the government done? Every day the government has been imposing illegal taxation. A reasonable time after this imposition a budget was permitted. Nevertheless the government has been extracting money from the people of Canada illegally, by extortion. The matter has not been brought before parliament and it ought to be within the course of the next few days or the next few weeks. No action has been taken on a vital matter affecting the Canadian people. Oh no. We have rising costs, the highest cost of living in history, high interest rates, high taxation and the highest government expenditures ever, but the government says: we will not pay any attention to those things; we want to legalize homosexuality; that is our ideal.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I am sorry I missed the speech the Minister of Justice delivered yesterday, because it must have been an example to all those listening of obvious hair-splitting. What kind of argument was it? Why is there this unearthly haste to bring in this measure? Why is there this unfathomable haste? This is your solution, is it? Is this your elixir for the people of Canada? Do you say that after these things are done happy days will be here again?

When the government said that these matters were to be discussed in the committee they said that members would be free to do as they pleased. The private member was to have new opportunities. I agree that the backbencher does not have fair opportunities, but he was to have them in this committee. I said that I could see how these committees would operate. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) let the cat out of the bag, but he did not deal with the instructions that were received. It was interesting to hear that Liberal members in committee had received instructions from the government. The only one who denied in the house that there had been any such instruction was the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). No one would suggest that the hon. member for York East would manufacture a story. Some may say he manufactured it but, if so, I can only say he was most prescient in doing so. Hon. members over there all stick together. They know where they stand. United we stand, divided we fall. Therefore they stand together.

They said the new rules would bring tremendous advantages. They would give committees of parliament new powers. I am citing only what took place. The view was expressed that because of the complexity of legislation it was impossible to ensure proper and careful study of bills, clause by clause, in the House of Commons. I said what was being done would weaken parliament and the House of Commons. The government gave assurances that every opportunity would be given to private members to express their views in committee and to have those views translated into recommendations for amendment when committees reported back to the house. What a sham! They said that the United States system—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the right hon. gentleman but our Standing Orders provide that debate shall be strictly limited to the amendment before the house. In view of the right hon. gentleman's statement earlier that he would be absent next week, the house may feel disposed to allow him to go beyond the scope of the particular amendment. Perhaps the house feels so disposed, but I feel that we should deal with the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I never transgress. I thought there was general agreement when I began for me to make my remarks. I have always found the house reasonable. I will conclude the latter part of my remarks very shortly.

The committee sat. What did it bring in? Here we have a report from a committee that was unbiased, non-partisan, non-political. This is the report of a committee, some of whose members had a whip held over them. The effectiveness of our committee system under the new rules must be measured in the light of what took place in this instance.

An hon. Member: Not so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Liberal members have cited what happens in the United States, but the United States system is different. No member of Congress, no matter what his political faith, has any responsibility to the President of the United States. Many years ago Woodrow Wilson said in this regard that the rules of the United States Congress are framed in such a way as to put all business under committee management. There is one principle that runs through all their committee proceedings, and which is never abrogated and always observed, that the committees shall rule without let or hindrance. In this instance the committee of the house did not meet without let or hindrance. The members supporting the government went there and did not mind changes in certain clauses, but the clause dealing with the particular matter now before us was untouchable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the right hon. gentleman again but his time has expired. Is there unanimous consent for him to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have always found the house reasonable. I pointed out that the hopes for our committee system under the new rules were false.

An hon. Member: You are away out in left field.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You cannot apply the United States system in Canada. What did the Prime Minister do? After we had gone through the debate on proposed Standing Order 16A what did he say? He said that we have a new set of rules and that the trap had been set. The opposition fell into the trap. I say the government trapped parliament. This committee system will not work.

I was particularly impressed with the remark of a Creditiste member the other day who said there is no longer debate in the house. Except for the participation of the Minister of Justice and a few other members generally speaking debate is down. There is no cross-fire of opinion. A bill comes in, is discussed on second reading and goes to a committee which carries out the will of the government. What preposterous nonsense it is to say that under this new system parliament will be made more effective. The new system has done nothing to meet the problems of Canada since December last. One can only say that the time has come to revise the revision of the rules.

Woodrow Wilson said that committees in the United States are all-powerful. Are our committees all-powerful? One of our committees brought in a recommendation dealing with the railway in Newfoundland and the government ignored it. When the matter was raised in the house the President of the Privy Council, said that the government had no power to implement that recommendation. As anticipated, our committees have become emasculated. Their ineffectiveness in discussing matters of importance has come about exactly as predicted.

By this time, sir, you will have concluded that I am opposed not only to the homosexual but also the abortion clauses. I can understand the difference of opinion on these matters. There was a wide difference of opinion on this side of the house. We had a free vote. If everyone thinks alike, nobody thinks. I wonder how that rule would apply to the government the way they all lined up.

An hon. Member: I wonder how it will apply to you when the vote is taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry this legislation is before us. We live in an age that is becoming more and more permissive. Some say there is no God, that each man should be able to live his own life as he wills as long as he does so in private. I do not find any support for that philosophy in the scriptures. The Judaeo-Christian concept in the Old Testament is the foundation of our religion.

The government is saying to the young people of this country; You are in a new age, you are over 21. A lad asked me how the new law on homosexuality would work and I said, "You will have to consult the government." Instead of giving young Canada an expression of hope and idealism, the government brings in these two matters. What do they expect from young people? I am not here in an endeavour to preach because I could not do so if I tried, but surely what this country needs is a clarion call from the government in favour of the maintenance of family life with a little more emphasis on responsibilities rather than rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Instead, the government is condemning today's young people. They know far more than we ever knew. With the exception of a small hard core comprising not more than one in 20, they have ideals. They want to live a free life. We are saying to them; "We will give you permissive legislation, we will give you freedom to do these things."

The Minister of Justice in his metaphysical discussion yesterday tried to distinguish between doing a thing and being a person who would do that thing. Freedom is not the right to do wrong. Freedom is the right to be wrong. The government is saying it knows this is not proper. Scripture says it is not proper. Yet it is attempting to give a freedom which will do nothing to elevate Canada or Canadians.

I pleaded with the government before and I do so once more; do not have parliament pass a bill that legalizes these two acts. The result can only be that young Canadians will say the parliament of Canada approves of homosexuality and abortion. I know there is no use arguing because the Prime Minister has said: "Line up."

An hon. Member: And be shot.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know whether it is ju-jitsu, but the government has its members under control. It twists them. I have talked to a number of them. I will never at any time repeat their names even by suggestion. Do not think they have not got in their hearts a deep sense of concern over this legislation, but when the government speaks there is only one stand that can be taken by those supporting it. Surely the government of Canada could have done something to give new hope to young Canadians rather than this legislation.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every hon. member of this house and every person in the galleries agrees there is no member of parliament to whom one listens with more pleasure than one does to the right hon. gentleman. I have disagreed with the right hon. gentleman's political ideas, but I have for many years admired him immensely for his concern about civil liberty and individual rights in our society. When he held the high office of Prime Minister of this country, one of the great accomplishments of the right hon. gentleman was to place on the statute books of Canada a Bill of Rights. This has been widely distributed to the children of this country and has done them a great deal of good.

I feel the same respect and admiration which everyone does, but I say to the right hon. gentleman that his remarks today are a complete contradiction and negation of the great work he has done in the field of civil liberty and individual rights. The right hon. gentleman is the most eloquent spokesman for those who hold the views he has expressed to show the basic philosophy behind those views. I say to him with the respect I have already expressed that that philosophy is simply out of date. It simply has no relevance to modern society.

In order to support that antediluvian philosophy one has to misrepresent what the law says. I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that is not the way an exchange of ideas can be fruitful or useful. The right hon. gentleman was simply utterly and completely wrong when he said that the amendments to the Criminal Code on the subject we are discussing will say to the young people of Canada: Parliament says these things are right. Parliament is saying nothing of the sort.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is just what it will say.

Mr. Lewis: It will say nothing of the sort unless the right hon. gentleman with his eloquence persists in misrepresenting what the law in fact says and persuades the young people of Canada otherwise. A great spokesman for civil liberty and honesty such as the right hon. gentleman ought not to indulge in that kind of thing.

The sections which proclaim that homosexuality is an evil act, an undesirable act, remain in the Criminal Code. No one who is really dealing with the subject in the kind of objective, honest way in which we were asked to deal with it can suggest that parliament is saying anything other than that this unfortunate deviation from normal human behaviour is an undesirable thing.

What is being suggested in this amendment, what the minister and the majority in this parliament are saying, is that when two adults who are assumed to have enough judgment to understand situations suffer from this kind of emotional or mental illness, or whatever it may be, and engage in it in private without impinging on the rest of the community, without being in a position to affect, warp and distort the moral attitudes of other people, when two adults who are beyond a certain age and are sick with this particular illness do this undesirable act in private, they will not be brought as criminals before a criminal court. That is all this legislation says, and anyone in this house, be he the most benign person deserving the greatest respect such as the right hon. gentleman or a new member of parliament deserving equal respect but not with his experience, who treats this subject honestly and objectively has no right to say that we are doing anything other than what I have just described. I respect—I hope I do; I know I do—differences of opinion on this kind of moral subject as much as anyone else, but I resent with all my heart and soul the attempt by hon. gentlemen who take the opposite position to beat their breasts in self-righteousness and morality and put all who disagree with them in some kind of immoral corral.

I say to the right hon. gentleman and to other hon. members who are lawyers and know a great deal about jurisprudence and the law, that there are two very important moral concepts in the law. As I have studied jurisprudence and read legal philosophers, there are two moral concepts in the law that are relevant here. One of them is that the prohibitory sections of the law, that part of the law which sets out to interfere with and to stop actions by individuals, ought to be concerned with prohibiting actions that impinge on public order and public decency in society and ought not to be concerned with acts by people which are wholly private and do not impinge on the public order.

That is why there is nothing in the Criminal Code that makes lying a crime, except in certain circumstances. If you lie in a way which slanders to other individuals you will be subject to the law. If you lie in writing about some person in such a way as to do him harm you are subject to the law. But if you simply lie you are not a criminal, even though the Bible and every other moral concept of humanity prohibit lying as being immoral. But as long as a lie uttered by anyone, immoral as it may be, undesirable and repugnant though it may be, does not impinge on anyone else's rights, does not harm any other individual, does not bring him into contempt or ridicule, does not affect his welfare, then one can go on lying, and some do, without end all through one's life, without becoming a victim of the criminal law.

It has been said a dozen times in this house during this debate that adultery is an immoral act. It is prohibited in the Bible and by every other religion. It is prohibited because aside from every other moral question it is an act which affects the integrity of the family and all its members. But it is not a criminal act. The criminal law does not say that anyone who commits adultery is to be charged as being a criminal. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there may well be a moral argument that adultery is a great deal more "criminal", if I may use that word in quotes, than is the private act of homosexuality by two adults who suffer from a certain mental and moral deviation. There may well be an argument that one is much more destructive of society than the other. In fact one can think of a dozen other immoral acts which, when done by individuals, are not made crimes.

Some hon. members, and the right hon. gentleman in particular with his usual eloquence, went after the government for not doing other things which need to be done for Canada. I do not have to tell him or anyone else that I agree with him. I have been one of the most disappointed members of parliament and citizens of Canada watching the Prime Minister and his colleagues engaging more and more in conservative, reactionary policies, including one yesterday and today when the Prime Minister placed himself on the side of management in a labour dispute, with an abandon and lack of care for labour relations such as I have seldom seen in a responsible prime minister of a democratic country. I do not condone the failures of the government in other fields, but surely it is specious argument to say that because the government has failed in other fields therefore this legislation ought not to be here. One does not interfere with the other. The fact that these amendments to the Criminal Code are on the order paper does not prevent the government from doing the thousands of other things it should be doing for the welfare of the people of Canada, and all of us on this side of the house will be needling the government until it does do some of these things.

It is a fact that our criminal law, like the criminal law of many other countries, derived originally from certain concepts which attempted to include in the Criminal Code prohibitions against behavior with which the public law ought not to have anything to do. What is being done in these amendments is to try to bring our Criminal Code a little more up to date. This has been done in Britain and other parts of the democratic world. According to my study of this matter we are one of the few remaining countries in the western democratic world with outdated laws like the ones on homosexuality and abortion in our Criminal Code. All western countries with any progressive pretensions have already amended these provisions in their criminal law. We are just catching up with them.

Some people think and say that we live in a permissive age. I do not think that this is what the young people of Canada and of other countries think. I do not really know what is meant by "permissive" except that some people lay down don'ts and then everybody who does not agree with them is permissive. I do not accept that definition.

We are living in an age, if I may deal with one phase of it very briefly, when the young people of Canada and of the world are rebelling against the restrictions and constrictions which are impinging upon them in a modern, technological, complicated society, where the bigness of government, the bigness of corporations, the bigness of trade unions, the bigness of electronics and all the rest of it are hemming in society and individuals in society. They are protesting against this hemming in; they are looking for more freedom. That is not being permissive. They are looking for a greater voice in their own future at the universities. Some of them take advantage of that legitimate desire and legitimate objective to indulge in excesses which no one can condone. Basically, however, our young people are seeking in a determined way a society where their personality and their dignity are recognized, where they are recognized as human beings capable of making up their own minds and where they can exercise their own judgment and engage in activities in which they are left free to engage for their own development and their own enrichment. Let us not call this permissiveness. It is a legitimate situation.

It is in this sense that the young people are questioning. They are saying that for a long time they have been told that "A" is forbidden and that if they do it it is a crime. They say: "Prove it to us; we are not prepared to accept your mere statement without question that it is a crime; tell us why it is a crime." That is not permissiveness. I suggest that we older people ought to greet with pleasure these questions they are asking. They are saying they are not prepared to accept all the "don'ts" and restrictions that have been laid down over the past centuries. They say: "We will accept them if you will explain the reasons and the moral, social and psychological bases to justify these don'ts and prohibitions but we will not accept them just because you say so." I greet their attitude in this regard.

One of the questions of this nature that they ask is why we prohibit private acts between two adults who have this particular sexual aberration. They say: "We want to know; tell us why." I have not heard a single speech in favour of regarding such an act as a crime which justifies its retention in the code.

The young people of Canada, and not only the young people—I know I am out of order on this point and will not dwell on it for long but it was touched on by the right hon. gentleman—are asking why there should be an absolute or almost absolute prohibition against abortion. They ask why the modern techniques of psychiatry, psychology, medicine and modern ethics in these fields should not be taken into consideration and be given recognition by the law. They are right to ask that question.

If you think of this matter in the context I have tried to describe, I am sure inadequately, if you think of this matter in its true perspective and if you look objectively at the amendment to the Criminal Code which we are now discussing and not with your prejudices but with your eyes and mind, then, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that what is proposed in the amendment to the Criminal Code in this area is merely a sensible, modern version which recognizes the dignity and rights of people even though their acts may be regarded with some disgust. That is all it does. To interpret it in any other way would be to exaggerate and distort its effect in a manner which could do harm which was never intended by the legislation proposed.

In conclusion may I say a few words on another subject. The right hon. gentleman in his very interesting speech repeated again his objection to the fact that the bill was not divided and his objection to the committee system. Let me merely draw the attention of the house to the fact that we are dividing the bill. For voting purposes we are dividing the bill.

Mr. Valade: You are not.

Mr. Lewis: We certainly are. We are now debating and will be voting on each particular part of the bill.

Mr. Valade: On the whole bill.

Mr. Lewis: It is all one, but by the time we have completed it the house will have had every opportunity to declare itself on each clause of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Since the majority of this house will be declaring itself on each clause of the bill at this stage we say, why in heaven's name should we have to do it all over again? So far as the committee is concerned, I was not a member of the committee but I do not think anybody in this house ought to get away with some of the suggestions which have been made. I am informed by those who were members of the committee that at least one of the amendments to one of the clauses, the breathalyzer clause, was passed by the committee against the minister's position and arguments and that the minister accepted some 20 or 30 amendments from members of the committee which originally had not been proposed.

Mr. Valade: That is the only one that was accepted.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the committee system is capable of working. It is not yet working as well as we hope it will, but the fact is the committee system has resulted in changes even in this legislation.

I hope a majority of this house will support this amendment to the Criminal Code and I hope the people of Canada understand and know that those of us who are supporting the amendment in respect of homosexuality are just as repelled as they are by that act. We are just as anxious to make clear that it is an immoral and undesirable act, but we think the time has come to modernize the law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock this sitting stands suspended until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like, at this stage, to make a few remarks in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

While doing so, I wish to refer to some arguments put forward this morning by the spokesman for the New Democratic party, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who, before the lunch recess, brought out, I think, the mentality and philosophy of the New Democratic party.

Since the hon. member for York South is a very famous lawyer, I expected him to try and make a good case for the bill but, on the contrary, he made a great number of remarks in which he especially suggested that the members who supported the government amendment concerning the omnibus bill considered it precisely as the legalization of homosexuality.

I was surprised to hear him question the honesty of the members who oppose this measure. In fact, he even carried his cynicism further because, after having said that he questioned the honesty of members who thought that this amendment proposed the legalization of this act which is against nature—

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The member for York South is raising a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I made none of the remarks which the hon. member ascribes to me. I do not question the honesty or the sincerity of any member. I only stated the philosophy which the hon. member expresses and which other members support.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I accept the correction that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) wished to make, but his words have perhaps gone beyond his thoughts. I have carefully noted the remarks he made this morning when he said, and I quote:

[English]

Anyone in this house who would deal honestly with this subject could not but say that this is legalization, and could not accept the legalization of something wrong. In saying this we must remember that these are perhaps indirect legal terms. If the hon. member wishes to correct me I should like to know his correct wording, because those are the words I heard this morning.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on another point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for York South again on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: What I have said, Mr. Speaker, is this: The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated that if this legislation became the law of the land, the Canadian parliament would tell the young Canadians that we support the act which is now prohibited under the Criminal Code. It is not true; in fact, this is what I object to.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to engage in a legal argumentation on what was said. I will take the word of the hon. member for York South and this gives me the opportunity to state unequivocally that when hon. members, whoever they are and whatever party they belong to, make their views known on one subject or another, and in particular on Bill C-150, they do so honestly and with a full awareness of their responsibilities.

Personally, I have no hesitation in saying that if we vote in favour of Bill C-150, we legalize an unnatural act and we recognize that the Canadian government accepts it by making it a legal act.

I am not a lawyer but I know that when something is right, and legal, the government does not have to step in with a legislation. When the government introduces legislation to amend a bill, it is because it wants to correct an existing situation. Up to now, the Criminal Code prohibited the practice of this third sex, but under the omnibus bill, the government in fact legalizes an act which, up to now, was illegal.

What surprises me most, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the hon. member for York South attempted to convince this house that by moving different amendments, in fact we were dividing the bill and it made it unnecessary for the government itself to move various amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that in so doing, the hon. member for York South simply wants to whitewash too easily this government for the way it acts towards parliament obliging all hon. members to vote for a whole bill which contains certain amendments extremely interesting and quite acceptable.

Unfortunately, by means of tactics which I describe without hesitation as blackmail, the government wants to force hon. members, by sweetening the pill a little with certain amendments they support, to accept the whole bill which contains unacceptable amendments and qualifications concerning public as well as individual ethics. I agree with the hon. member for York South that it is not the responsibility of parliament to legislate on matters of private morality. However, when the government legalizes a situation which is likely to have a bad influence on the environment, I suggest that a certain aspect of public morality is involved. We should then surely reject that part of clause 7 which deals with homosexuality.

The government refuses to split the bill lest it should be defeated when the vote is taken. In fact, it is trying to conceal dishonest tactics which prevent members from freely stating their views on each and every aspect of this bill.

If, as the hon. member for York South said this morning, the members were free in the committee to move and have adopted any amendments they wanted, why would there be now, before parliament, 44 amendments from all sides of the house? Such an unusual number tends to prove that the members are opposed to the bill now under study, otherwise they would have readily accepted it as a whole. We feel unable to do so, however, and the way in which the government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but may I remind him that the remarks he has been making from the start seem to indicate he believes we are now on second reading, whereas we are dealing now with a specific amendment. I therefore ask him to restrict his remarks to this amendment.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, with regard to your warning may I point out that the hon. member for York South had plenty of time for discussion this morning. He tried to justify the government by saying that parliament was actually free to pass the amendments and that, by the same token, we were under no obligation to vote on the whole omnibus bill.

My answer to the hon. member is that once all the amendments are disposed of and the passage of the bill is proposed, we shall have to vote on all its provisions. I suggest that such a procedure is unacceptable because it distorts the role of democracy and deprives every member of the opportunity of expressing his views on the merits of each amendment.

Mr. Speaker, speaking to the amendment of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), the hon. member for York South said this morning, for instance, that it does not behoove the government to intervene in matters of individual moral standards.

Now, if we carry his argument to its ultimate conclusions, we should ask that great defender of individual rights how he reconciles the fact that two persons can commit homosexual acts in private without being considered criminals, while three homosexuals performing the same acts in similar privacy would in point of fact become criminals.

If the hon. member for York South, in the light of his considerable knowledge of the law, can tell us how he explains that we thereby defend the principle of individual freedom, I should like him to explain this anomaly to the house.

This great defender could also perhaps tell me whether, when the government legislates to forbid young people to use marijuana, we are not interfering with individual freedom? As a competent lawyer, he should explain to us how legislators would violate the individual freedom by, on the one hand, trying to forbid homosexual acts performed in private by no more than two persons of over 21 years of age, while on the other hand we may declare the use of marijuana illegal because it is contrary to public order?

This goes against the deterioration of individual morality and, therefore, of public morality.

We could support this argument in the field of narcotics as well as in that of all the excesses an individual may indulge in. The duty of the legislator is to maintain order, for the common good. If, through the proposed legislation, we show to our youth that legislators are unable to assume their responsibilities, that they are afraid of the reaction of a small group of agitators who, under the cover of freedom, are taking advantage of a situation, at the expense of society as a whole, we are giving a bad example to that youth and we are proving once more that the government has yielded to political imperatives instead of promoting the welfare of the Canadian people. The member for York South acknowledged this morning that there were certain moral aspects to the legislation when the common good is at stake.

I would like to ask him to explain what will happen if we pass the bill on homosexuals or sex perverts. What will happen to our society if, through this legislation, we open the door to what is called homosexual prostitution? What shall we do with people who are submitted to blackmail by specimens of this third sex? The member for York South, who has practiced law several years, should know that such things exist. If we accept this omnibus bill as it is presented to us, how will we be able to protect society against abuses in this field?

I am sorry I did not get any answer to the questions I put yesterday to the Minister of Justice. I had thought the hon. member for York South would have answered some of them, because he admitted himself this morning, and I quote:

• (2:20 p.m.)

[English]

"These people"—he was speaking of homosexuals—"affected by emotional trouble, or whatever it is." Et plus loin, il dit: "Those with a particular illness."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would be curious to find out what the hon. member for York South knows on this subject. He talks of people mentally unbalanced. Whatever the problem, he concludes that this is a particular illness. He admits he does not know anything about the basic problem of homosexuality. He supports this bill in a rather partisan fashion and in a particular way when, in my view, the impact of this bill will result only in debasing our society which is going through a conscience crisis. We all recognize the importance of giving our young people, our society, through our directives, the image of persons whose responsibility tends to restore order and respect for the community and the individual.

Mr. Speaker, what surprises me most is the position taken by the members of the New Democratic party.

I might remind them what a Labour member, Mr. Tommey, said in the British parliament his speech is reported in the newspaper Carrefour under the signature of Mr. Raymond Lacoste, a Parisian journalist, and I quote:

> I protest against the tone of alleged intellectual superiority adopted by the supporters of this bill.

He was speaking to the bill on the legalization of homosexuality. I go on reading:

> What these people are in fact asking us is to allow male prostitution, when a few years ago parliament dealt severely with female prostitution and waged war against call-girls.
> But today, by a strange aberration of mind, British legislators are being more indulgent for unnatural acts than for acts which, though they are in a way sinful, are after all natural.

Those are the remarks of a Labour member in England who was against the legislation introduced at that time in the British parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I take part once again in this debate because I think that we are again submitted to irresponsible pressure from the government. We are here as representatives of our ridings. We know the turn of mind, the ideas, the character, the aspirations of those who elected us to represent them here.

I know that no Liberal member of the province of Quebec here can assure me that the majority of the people in his riding is in favour of the bill on homosexuality.

I challenge our colleagues on the opposite side to stand up in their place, to speak out and to put forward arguments supporting that clause 7. I know that the hon. members from Quebec who intend to support the bill do not reflect the opinion nor the aspirations of the people they represent in the house.

Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that every hon. member is not entitled to his own point of view, but the fact that we have been elected to the house to represent the people is undeniable. We must take into account the point of view of our electors and not be unwilling to take position, since this is the most far-reaching bill ever put before the house. As the Minister of Justice has said himself, that legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Has the hon. member the unanimous agreement of the house to conclude his speech?

Some hon. Members: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I see that unanimous consent has not been given.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is my duty to intervene again in that stupid debate—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fortin: —which, in my opinion, means only wasting the time of the nation on a bill which has been introduced by the New Democratic party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully and with amazement to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who put forward arguments of a humanistic nature. After hearing him, I ask myself: What is humanism? To be a humanist, must one suppress human dignity, personal liberty, the natural pleasure of free self-development?

Mr. Speaker, I seriously wonder to what extent he was being honest. The humanistic socialist, if I understood correctly, states positively that God does not exist, that man is descended from the ape. Nevertheless, the hon. member for York South proved to us this morning that the study of certain subjects is a long and drawn-out process.

Mr. Speaker, an attempt is being made to legalize abortion and homosexuality. Everyone realizes that opinions in this house are divided about this bill, which, in my view, is criminal and stupid.

[Mr. Valade.]

This bill is a socialistic piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. Who are the ones who give it their approval?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fortin: I am happy, Mr. Speaker, to see that some members find my words amusing; it shows with what irresponsibility they are considering subjects as important as the ones we are now discussing. But, if we stop and think about what is happening in the socialist countries where similar legislation has been adopted, we realize that it has not been in the best interest of the population.

Again, last night, on the C.B.C., we were given news about Czechoslovakia.

Upon learning that Mr. Dubcek had quit, and in the way the newscast came, we could only wonder if the decision was his own.

We remember, Mr. Speaker, that students revolted against the lack of freedom of the press and a lot of other individual freedoms of which they were deprived. In Canada, with the omnibus bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I realize the comments of the hon. member are most interesting, regarding current international affairs, but I would ask him to limit his comments to the particular amendment before us.

Mr. Fortin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was on the point of closing my remarks about the national network, because to talk about our national stables is no way of raising the level of this debate.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Even here in Canada, Mr. Speaker, our freedoms are gradually being removed, while our individual initiative is weakening, as a result of our accelerated progress towards state socialism supported by the federal Liberal party and the New Democratic party.

One is socialist for practical purposes because it is in office and the other for idealistic reasons because it is not. The tentacles of the State—

Mr. Lewis: Does the hon. member remember that the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. member for York South that if he has some questions to ask me, I will be pleased to answer them.

The tentacles of the State, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: May I put a question to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Would the hon. member for Lotbinière let the hon. member for York South ask him a question?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Capitalists are always open-minded towards socialists.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to know that the hon. member for Lotbinière is a capitalist and I should like to ask him if he recalls that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has also brought in an amendment.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, it is possible. I do not know. If so, it is because he is financed by the same electoral funds.

I continue with my speech. The state tentacles are clutching us more and more.

Our basic rights are limited—because of this bill and others of the same kind—not only by the rights of others, but also and mainly by those assumed by the State which curbs our freedom more stringently than ever.

For our governments, the people at large have become a kind of anonymous body upon which certain things have to be imposed—and I did say imposed; whether it likes it or not, whether it agrees or not, it matters very little. Since socialistic countries advocate certain measures, we imagine we ought to do the same if we feel it is good for the people.

Some of our politicians seem to believe that the common good obviously means the good of the individual. We have come to the point where we exchange our freedom and a portion of our incomes for the so-called socialistic collective manna. Freedom should never be taken for granted; there will always be some person or some group who will try to inflict their views upon us.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we should have to discuss things of that type. Let us try to find out who would like us to adopt this bill and these clauses.

First, I see the Liberal party, a collection of puppets under the leadership of a trio of practical socialists. As the puppets cannot either talk nor object, it is the socialists, those former supporters of the New Democratic Party, who actually are in office. The other members who favour the passing of this bill, on this side of the house, are mainly the members of the New Democratic Party, not practical but idealistic socialists. In view of the fact that they are not in office and that they cannot implement their plans, they have no other alternative but to support the government with both feet, both hands, and on all fours.

I have a great deal of consideration for my colleagues of New Democratic Party because they show a good deal of imagination in many fields but I fail to understand how those great champions of the human person can also crawl in front of this majority government, arrogant and totalitarian.

Those ideas are not shared by the people. Besides, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) is aware of that as I am myself and as the cabinet will soon be also.

Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to inform the house that in a few days, the cabinet—I pray the hon. members to mark my words for this is serious—will receive from the people of Ontario and Quebec at least 100,000 protests against the omnibus bill clauses dealing with homosexuality and abortion, and we hope they will be received before the bill is passed. Can it be said that the people are in favour of this bill? No, Mr. Speaker.

Let us consider what is going on in socialist countries. As we could learn yesterday through the news, no moral principle is respected and that, on the pretence that freedom and the rights of a pluralist community must be safeguarded.

Idealist and practical socialists, as pointed out by the hon. member for York South, claim that young people want a society where their personality can develop on sound bases. But what sound bases?

Mr. Speaker, the young people wish humbly for a reappraisal of the role of the family and the individual in society. They have ideals, they insist on respect for the human being, his sincerity, his honesty and finally his dignity.

Mr. Speaker, there is a basic point that must be stressed, namely respect.

Yet, those same socialists do not recognize the freedom of their own fellow workers, neither in committee nor in the house, for the sole purpose of complying with the principle of cabinet fellowship, as was so brilliantly pointed out by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Those same socialists, as he said, do not hesitate to grant their own colleagues the freedom of objecting, of expressing their views, no matter whether they are for or against a measure.

On the pretence of freedom, they want to impose their views by means of dictatorial methods. Where is freedom then? The principle of the omnibus bill comes from the United Kingdom, by the own admission of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), as I said last evening.

England is run by the Labour party, in other words by a socialist government. We all know where they are now not only as far as their economy is concerned but also from the social and political point of view: they are going downhill. It does not rest with the house to legislate on the standards of morality.

We have no more the right to consider alcoholics as criminals or depraved persons than to say that homosexuals are criminals. It is, however, our duty to take steps likely to ensure the respect due to the dignity of the human being.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot honestly believe that this bill contributes in any way to the respect of the individual. We have the strict obligation in this house to ascertain if the laws we want to pass go against either the common good or the private interest of the individual.

We can only repeat, Mr. Speaker, what I was saying a moment ago: the dignity of the human being should always be a prime concern in our debates. Besides, young people give ample proof of such a quest.

In socialist countries, people question this principle because they have foregone their dignity and are no longer respected.

What is more serious in all this is that the Canadian family has become a problem. Because of urbanization, industrialization and extremely advanced means of communication, the family is no longer in a position to protect itself from solicitation, of publicity and, unfortunately, the government.

The extraneous activities of the family are much more developed than they used to be. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the members of the Canadian family have an important social role to play. The family is no longer that privileged place which used to protect its members against whatever it wanted to reject. Today, the family is compelled to welcome all sorts of publications from outside. The increasing demand for education has built up an intellectual gap between parents and children, even though they all live together and communication between parents and children has become very difficult because of the difference in the education levels of parents and children. As a consequence, parents have lost much of their authority on their children: they do not speak the same language. Children are submitted to all sorts of influence from which it is now impossible to protect them. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the traditional family that we used to know has gradually disappeared.

As I said earlier, we must now consider the basic necessity of upgrading the role of the family in society.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I think this subject is most important, because if we pass this bill legalizing abortion, we are weakening the family and we are endangering the respect for woman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member again, but the amendment now under consideration does not deal with abortion, the subject the hon. member is discussing.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have just said a few words about abortion.

The passing of the omnibus bill on homosexuality will strike another blow, a fatal blow this time, at the Canadian family.

If consenting adults are allowed to commit unnatural acts, and if society finds that normal and does nothing to cure them, we can imagine all the questions the young people will ask themselves concerning the importance of respecting the human being, more particularly the woman.

Mr. Speaker, since we have a society, a nation to build, it seems elementary to me that in this house at least, we ask ourselves whether by passing this bill, we will promote the progress of the Canadian family, or if we will not instead contribute to its disappearance, as was the case in socialist countries.

Mr. Speaker, if, under the pretext of safeguarding freedom, we prevent the Canadian family from growing we shall have committed a criminal act we will regret for the rest of our days.

Mr. Speaker, I had extremely interesting remarks to make at this point. In his introductory speech, the Minister of Justice said this about the committee of the United Kingdom, and I quote:

> —of giving in his report the following arguments as being the strongest arguments in favour of keeping the regulations under which homosexual acts between consenting adults that are committed in private are criminal acts, namely:
> —they threaten the health of society—

The arguments raised against the legalization of homosexuality were the following and I quote:

> —they threaten the health of society—

That was the first. The second was:

—that they have harmful effects on family life—

The third argument raised against its adoption was this one:

—a man who indulges in these practices with another man may want to do it with boys.

Such are then the three fundamental objections which were raised before the committee of Sir John Wolfenden in the United Kingdom. Three arguments that are really interesting, fundamental, important and irrefutable threaten the health of society, family life and can induce those men to commit such acts with boys.

Now, the minister says:

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Does the house consent to extend the time of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent.

Is the house ready for the question?

[English]

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I followed with great interest the speech given this morning by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Above all, I was pleased to see that, in this house, the dean, a former Prime Minister, and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), one of the youngest members in this house, who is 25 years old, both shared the same opinion. They want to protect the dignity of our country and the freedom of the human being.

It is therefore comforting to note that most of those who have spoken to date reflect the opinion of the Canadian people. That is why we insist so much, Mr. Speaker. We feel obliged to defend the dignity of the people.

Yesterday, I heard one of the government members, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), to whom is regularly entrusted the care of passing around the gossip. At times, one would be enclined to call him a "Quebec Père Ovide". The hon. member for Trois-Rivières claimed that I said, and I quote:

I have the approval of 100 per cent of the people, at least in my riding and in the rest of the province of Quebec.

As for him, from time to time he tours my riding. Of course, I saw him throughout the election campaign. He was campaigning for the other candidate Matte, and I know full well that he knows my riding. He occasionally meets some of my electors. To avoid any misunderstanding, I should like to explain what I mean by 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

I do not know which constituents the hon. member for Trois-Rivières meets when he comes to my riding. As for me, when I speak of 100 per cent, here is what I mean: no one has come to me, as member for Champlain, to ask to push this bill. I say again, no one. I could even challenge the hon. member for Trois-Rivières. Let him come to my riding, or me to his, and let him introduce me to people who will ask me to work for this bill.

We will fight strenuously for our point of view. We really have considerable support. If, as someone said a while ago, we are now wasting time discussing this matter, it is not that we want to do so, but that the government forces us to do it. We would not like to be told in our ridings: you were in favour of the omnibus bill; you were in favour of homosexuality and abortion; you accepted that the debate be limited to four days, so that the bill could be passed on the double, so that the debate would not drag on.

You see what our situation would be like. We are therefore forced to hold up the business of the house on matters which doubtless are more important, but unfortunately the government is forcing us to fight for our point of view.

We are in a position to assume our responsibilities and we assume them. Why are we so confident? Because 100 per cent of the people backs us.

Why I am saying 100 per cent? because nobody came as yet to ask me to back the adoption of the bill. The only people who asked us to do so, as the hon. member for Lotbinière has just pointed out, are the legislators, the members of the New Democratic Party, and the few members of the Liberal party who have tried to enforce it.

I already said it, two days ago. Indeed, we never received any document asking us to back the bill.

Thus, after studying the reasons why the government suggested the adoption of the bill, we may conclude that there are only a few individuals, in the house, who are in favour of its adoption.

In my opinion, that does not enhance the revalorization of our parliamentary institutions.

The bill was talked about, for the first time, while the right honourable present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was the Minister of Justice. This is how the capital matters that we are busy discussing seem to have originated.

Mr. Speaker, when we tell the house that our constituents are backing us, it is not just a lot of hot air. We are really echoing the voice of our people.

We say that we do not see anywhere those who set forth the reasons in favour of the bill those who contributed to the discussion of clause 7 of the omnibus bill. Having looked high and low, we reached the conclusion that nobody at all was backing that clause, except the right honourable Prime Minister.

At this stage, I would like to prove that such bills are nothing but the outcome of the lucubrations of a young man of 50.

I have here an excerpt of an article published in Maclean Magazine. Mr. André Langevin refers in it to the present government under the heading. "Three Angelic Doves". In my opinion, that article will explain the origin of the present bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. If the hon. member would indicate the relationship between that article and the amendment now under study, I shall allow him to quote it.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, by means of this article, I want to show that the amendment designed to delete paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of the act, must be passed for the simple reason that those who introduced the bill do not reflect public opinion in the least.

People are not asking for such things. Since we are discussing that amendment, I would like to show the house, by reading that article, how the sponsor of the bill cannot say that he introduced it with the support of the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. We are not at the second reading stage of the bill. We are not discussing the bill but the amendment which is now under study. Then, I shall ask the member to restrict his remarks to the proposed amendment.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, the amendment concerned reads as follows:

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting in clause 7 paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of the proposed new section 149A.

So, I am not wandering from the point. I want the house to accept this amendment to delete from paragraph (b) of subsection 1 the proposal it contains. I also want all members of this house to hear all relevant arguments so that they will be in a better position to judge objectively whether to pass this amendment or not. As I was saying, this is what Maclean's magazine says:

—the three doves who, in Ottawa, administer the first "truly French-Canadian Department in Canada's history" are, according to the Toronto Telegram, heading upwards at a tremendous pace towards the seventh heaven of a just society.

Mr. Speaker, this bill reflects the general purpose suggested by the government at the beginning of this session, namely the establishment of a just society, and the legislation before us is supposed to contribute to the establishment of that just society.

Surely the hideous weight of thankfulness, which never spared the angels of politics, has led them astray sometimes in the lower and so human levels of patronage, just long enough to pay tribute to the defeated candidates and their organizers, in the purest tradition of the rotten parties of long ago;

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. I can see no relation between what the hon. member is saying and the amendment before the house.

The hon. member is surely allowed, as he said a moment ago, to justify the merits of this amendment and his desire to see it passed, but the amendment has nothing to do with the matters referred to by the hon. member. Accordingly, I ask him—and this is why I call him to order—to justify the amendment he is proposing.

Mr. Matte: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but the following paragraph was just bringing us back to the subject matter.

I continue my quotation:

They have lost their bearings—

Meaning the doves.

—they are flying in the blue sky in quiet possession of serenity, so high up that they have to tear through clouds of angelic virtue to be able to communicate with us.

They barely dare speak now about the little problems that stir up the troubled waters of our frog pond. Three wing flaps are enough to take them out of sight, and our face is red because such high vistas are denied us.

Mr. Speaker, we do not see from such high vistas that we cannot see that the government is introducing these measures under the misleading pretext of respecting freedom. But what kind of freedom could that be?

Mr. Speaker, I have a free choice. Of course, there is no accounting for tastes nor can anyone decide for someone else, but the fact remains that there are good and bad tastes, as there is good and bad freedom.

Consequently, they say, under the pretext of protecting freedom, and to take away homosexuality from the Criminal Code, that the first consideration should be that those people are sick, and it should not be a crime to be sick.

On the face of it, this seems logical, but that is exactly what we are asking for. We do not need any legislation to do it; we have only to promote the establishment of hospitals to help rehabilitate the people affected with this sickness, and I have no objection against that. This is a matter for the Department of National Health and Welfare, and not for the Department of Justice. One should just put things back into place.

If homosexuality is a kind of disease and if therefore one cannot sue someone who is conducting in such a way since he is sick, in order to be logical, let us apply the same reasoning to other cases. Let us legalize theft, since kleptomaniacs are the subject of morbid impulses which prompt them to appropriate things which do not belong to them. They are unable to resist these impulses. It is a real mental disease. They cannot help it. They have to do it. So, since there are some people who suffer from kleptomania, which is an innate attraction for robbery, let us make robbery legal.

If homosexuality is no more considered a criminal act, let us legalize the acts of all kleptomaniacs, under the pretence it is a disease. Every kleptomaniac will only have to have his card signed by a psychiatrist, certifying that he is a kleptomaniac, and he will be authorized to do hold-ups when he is 21.

Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous. I see that government members are of the same opinion. If we asked a kleptomaniac to give his opinion, he would say exactly the same. It is absurd. The government wants to legalize homosexuality. As to the kleptomaniac, a product of a sick society, he is rejected by that very society. The effects of his disease, that is thefts, are not legalized.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we are facing a real problem. Even though all comparisons are said to be inadequate, I think this one is rather correct. In both cases, it is a morbid attraction, in one case for theft, in the other for someone of the same sex. These are deviations. If we legalize homosexuality, we should also legalize kleptomania.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Carrying this argument further on, Mr. Speaker, would lead to a most ridiculous situation, under the pretence that some individuals, considered to be criminals, are only sick peoples. One can imagine how far this would lead us.

Suppose that at one or two o'clock in the morning, I feel an urge not to stop on a red light, taking upon myself to drive on. If all the drivers who do not stop on a red light decided to have a legislation passed in order to do away with those damned red lights, the situation would be quite disastrous.

Once more this reasoning is ridiculous but then, as my hon. friend from Lotbinière said, we are discussing something silly. Therefore, we must try and speak about silly things too. We are now dealing with things which as I told earlier while speaking on an amendment, I am ashamed to have to discuss in this most dignified house. I am not overprudish, but I think it is somewhat disgusting to have to discuss such topics when in fact the problem does not exist.

And, Mr. Speaker, this is what surprises us more. It is particularly obvious for those who are new in the house. I am frankly astonished to see that all I have been told about majority governments is right. It is even worst than what I was expecting. I was unpleasantly surprised when I realized that a free vote was being contemplated.

I admit that when I heard that expression before coming to the house of commons, I did not grasp its full meaning. I thought that after all, the members, representatives of the people, were free; but today, I understand better what is meant by a free vote. On the other hand, I do not dare explain it to my constituents, because I find it so silly and so absurd to speak of a free vote. If one admits that, from time to time, a free vote is allowed, it means that usually, it is not so. It is therefore—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please, I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: More, more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house giving unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is not unanimous consent.

Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to standing order 75 (11), the vote on this amendment is deferred.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the amendment now being considered stands deferred.

• (3:10 p.m.)

It is suggested that amendments numbers 10 and 11 be called and considered prior to amendment No. 9. This suggestion is made in light of the fact that amendment No. 9 is much wider in scope than amendments 10 and 11 and a procedural difficulty could arise in the event of an affirmative vote on amendment No. 9. When debate on amendment No. 9 has been concluded the house will revert to amendment No. 3 for the purpose of taking votes on the amendments which have already been considered. It might be stated that amendment No. 9 proposes the deletion of two clauses, namely clauses 12 and 13 of Bill C-150. In this connection it is suggested that in future the clauses should be dealt with separately.

We will now consider amendment No. 10.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have not dealt with amendments 7 and 8.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I apologize to the house. We will now consider amendment No. 7.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (for Mr. Woolliams) moved:

That Bill C-150, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by inserting in clause 7, after the word "age" on line 9, page 24, the following words: "except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had not originally intended to speak at this time in respect of this particular amendment, but I find myself in somewhat the same position as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), except that I am not going to attend any function at which a bust of me will be unveiled. I do, however, find that I am to leave tomorrow on a trip with the Fisheries Committee and for that reason in all probability will not be in this house when the vote is taken on these amendments.

Very briefly, I wish to make abundantly clear that I am opposed to these suggested amendments to the Criminal Code which deal with homosexuality and abortion. If I were privileged to be in the house when the votes on these clauses are taken I would very definitely vote against them. I had the opportunity to speak on these subjects as a member of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It probably is not necessary for me at this time to review the reasons for my opposition because I think I made them abundantly clear in previous speeches I have made on these particular matters.

I definitely cannot accept the argument put forward this morning by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) when he said we have the privilege of voting against these clauses when they are considered and that this constitutes a free vote. I do not agree with that suggestion at all. I would very quickly point out there are clauses in these proposed amendments with which I am in full agreement.

There are excellent amendments suggested here for which I certainly should like to vote but unfortunately I cannot convince myself that, if I should vote against any particular clause during the clause by clause consideration, I should vote in favour of the whole bill at the conclusion of the clause by clause consideration. I submit this is exactly what I would be required to do. If, for instance, I should vote against new section 149A I do not see how, when the whole bill is before us, I could reverse myself and vote in favour of the whole bill which would include section 149A and any other clauses to which I am opposed. This is one reason I suggest the bill should be divided so that we would have an opportunity to vote against those matters with which we do not agree and vote for those matters in which we concur. I say the situation is most unfortunate.

I repeat that there are clauses in this bill with which I am in full agreement and which I think should pass and become the law of the land. For that reason, I would like to be able to vote for certain clauses in this bill. However, I cannot go along with the clause dealing with homosexuality or the clause in respect of legalized abortion. I realize that at the present time the rules of the house will not permit me to put forward my argument against the part of the bill which legalizes abortion. I realize I am confined now to the amendment which is before us.

This clause was discussed very fully before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It has been pointed out this morning that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) did accept some amendments. However, in respect of the clauses dealing with abortion and the one we have before us now, there is absolutely no relenting on the part of the government. Apparently the government will not tolerate any suggested amendments to these clauses. I am at a loss to understand why.

I have not yet seen any great public demand that these particular amendments should be introduced. I do not believe there has been any great demand on the part of the public that the law in respect of homosexuality, for example, should be relaxed. I have not noticed any uproar across this country to have the law broadened in the way it is now suggested it should be. The minister, of course, suggests we are not legalizing homosexuality. I do not entirely go along with his argument because I believe if we pass a law which would make something legal which has been illegal, we would actually be legalizing it. If someone could convince me that this amendment did not legalize homosexuality I might be persuaded to change my mind, but I cannot see anyone could possibly arrive at that conclusion. While I realize the minister is not prepared to see eye to eye with the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) which would add the words "except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast". I think, however, he has suggested he would go along with the idea that there may be some doubt as to the interpretation of this proposed section as expressed by Professor Mewett. He has suggested that even if these words are not added, conduct of this kind between two or more persons or a married couple would not constitute an offence. If there is any doubt in this regard I think these words should be added. This would prevent any possibility of the interpretation suggested by the Professor.

I am sure everyone appreciates the fact that the first reading of a law is not likely to be an accurate or conclusive reading. Laws are subject to many interpretations. A law might be interpreted in one way today and in an entirely different way a year from now. If we can avoid any possibility of misinterpretation by adding these words to the proposed section, I think we ought to add them. The only purpose of this amendment is to avoid any possibility of misinterpretation, and it has been put forward because of Professor Mewett's representations to the committee. All we are asking the house to do is clarify the measure so that the interpretation suggested by Professor Mewett cannot be made. With the exceptions set out in this amendment, only one interpretation will be possible. I do not think there is anything wrong or unreasonable about the amendment. I suggest it is our duty to make the law as clear as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) I should like to make an observation. It is my understanding from reading the statement of Mr. Speaker at page 7600 of Hansard for Wednesday that there was an agreement that the subject matter of amendment No. 8 would be considered concurrently with the subject matter of amendment No. 7. I note that hon. members nod their heads in agreement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I recall the situation, Mr. Speaker, that was the unofficial agreement the house reached at that time. In view of the fact that both amendments refer to the same subject, they should be considered together.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) seems to agree that his amendment No. 8 be considered at the same time as amendment No. 7. Both can be dealt with at the same time—

Mr. Laprise: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I should like to deal briefly with those arguments introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) during the debate on the third amendment introduced under the Standing Order. This matter was also considered thoroughly by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. We heard from Alan Mewett, Professor of Law at the University of Toronto. He advanced reasons supporting the necessity for this amendment.

By way of a preliminary remark, I should like to suggest that it is not accurate to say that no amendment was accepted in committee in respect of this particular clause. Those hon. members who have a copy of the bill as amended and reported by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs will observe the word "force" is added to the new section, paragraph (b) (i). This was done in response to the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) that we should make it clear that if the consent is extorted by threats or fear of bodily harm there would not be consent within the meaning of the measure. With all respect to the hon. member from Prince Edward Island it is not accurate to suggest that the rigidity he attributes to the reaction of the government to committee members applies to this proposed section.

Let me say also that this proposed section does not legalize homosexuality. The legal effect is to exempt from sections 147 and 149 of the Criminal Code the particular conduct described in new article 149A. That is the sole purpose of this measure, as was well set out in the very able speech this morning by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I will now turn to the substance of the amendments introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise). I do not think one must look at this too seriously from a legal point of view, or as one skilled in the law, in order to determine that it would be a rather tortuous use of the English language to contemplate the necessity for such an amendment. What this clause means is that sections 147 and 149 do not apply to an act committed in private between a husband and wife or any two consenting adult persons. I can not understand how this could possibly support the argument that bestiality was also exempted.

It is quite clear that Section 149 A must be construed as referring to those acts mentioned in Sections 147 and 149, other than bestiality. This allows for the most liberal dictionary definition of human being.

Let me suggest that Professor Mewett's opinion is not widely shared. Certainly, there is no other academic support to be found for his opinion. I do not rely merely on the opinions of law officers of the Crown to support the opinion I submit to Your Honour and members of the house. This bill was reviewed on two occasions since its original introduction by the Attorneys-General of the provinces. It has also been considered by the members of the uniformity commission. It has also been thoroughly studied by our own standing committee as well as the legal profession, representatives of the medical profession and Crown prosecutors. These individuals have considered and reviewed this particular clause and its predecessor since December 21, 1967.

Apparently Professor Mewett, with his fertile mind, is the only one able to attach this particular construction to the words, and I have in mind the suggestion adopted by the hon. member for Calgary North. Since we can see no doubt at all about the construction of this measure, we have no choice but to reject the proposed amendment.

Mr. McQuaid: I should like to ask the minister whether he can give this house one reason or indication of the harm done by the insertion of these words? If there is no harm done and the amendment accomplishes a useful purpose, the minister must surely agree that it is useful and competent. But even if there is only one legal opinion, can it possibly do any harm to the section to have these words inserted?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Gilbert: Will it do any good?

Mr. McQuaid: Someone asked if it would do any good. My suggestion is that if it even clears up the slightest possibility of doubt, it is good. It does not do any harm to put these words in, and it does not cost any more to print them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If the principle submitted by the hon. member were accepted, there would be no end to the drafting of this legislation. We suggest that there is no confusion, and that it is beyond the realm of any construction of language to consider that an act between two persons can possibly include bestiality.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, my remarks on amendment No. 7, introduced by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), and amendment No. 8, that I introduced myself, will be brief since I agree with the statements made last Wednesday by the hon. member for Calgary North when he discussed his own amendment.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, my amendment reads as follows, and I quote:

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting in clause 7 the "period" following the word "act" on line 11 on page 24 and substituting therefor a comma and by inserting the following words:

"except where bestiality is committed".

I am moving that amendment in order to prevent any misinterpretation of that legislation. As I said before during my remarks on amendment No. 6, it may happen that clause 7 of bill C-150 is not deleted from the bill according to our wish. Therefore, we are trying by every means possible to prevent as much damage as possible to the government's proposal.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, again, I feel duty bound to take part in the debate and to express my opinion straightforwardly concerning the two amendments proposed: No. 7, moved by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), and No. 8, moved by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Speaker, I believe that both amendments, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said, are quite similar and both propose the adoption of almost the same measures.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are happy to co-operate and do not want to delay the proceedings of the house, so that both amendments may be studied jointly and disposed of as swiftly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, a moment ago, I heard the Minister of Justice refer to a certain professor Mewett, saying that he had a vivid imagination, that his opinions were not shared by all members of the legal profession, that his assertions could create confusion and were not necessarily worthwhile.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that there is some exaggeration in suggesting that professor Mewett is not competent when we know that he teaches law at the University of Toronto. He is able and recognized as such by several universities. Personally, I had an opportunity to hear about Professor Mewett through other professors in other universities, and I feel his reputation is well founded. It appears that the opinions he has expressed are sound.

Mr. Speaker, while comparing the substance of the bill with what professor Mewett had to say, and keeping his qualifications in mind, I am inclined to believe the professor's statements rather than those of the Minister of Justice.

Professor Mewett said, as recorded on page 341 of Proceedings and Evidence No. 10 of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, and I quote:

There is only one point I would like to raise, and it is a legal point. It is factually impossible for two consenting adults to commit bestiality and clause 7 purports to say that section 147—that is, everyone who commits bestiality—does not apply to any act committed in private between a husband and wife or any two persons. I am not quite sure what that means—

Mr. Speaker, that shows how obscure is the legislation now before the house. If experts fail to understand clearly the content of such legislation, how will ordinary citizens be able to make it out?

I go on with the quotation:

I am not quite sure what that means but in my opinion it does not mean anything. As it stands I think it would mean that if one person committed a sexual act with his dog, he would be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for 14 years. If two people did it they would not be guilty of any offence. If three people did it they would be guilty and liable to imprisonment for 14 years. I find that very difficult to follow. I would have thought, if one is concerned with the peculiarity of the act, that it is much more peculiar between two people than between one. I think there has only been two convictions for bestiality in the past 20 years.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), which has the same purpose as amendment No. 7, is most valid.

It would add to clause 7, since it cannot be deleted. However that clause should be more specific and certain restrictions should be imposed. The amendments really bring in a legal restraint and it would only be prudent to incorporate such a restriction in the legislation. I quote:

> Sections 147 and 149 do not apply to any act committed in private between
>
> (a) a husband and his wife, or
> (b) any two persons, each of whom is twenty-one years or more of age
> both of whom consent to the commission of the act.

The proposed amendment would add after the word "more of age", in subparagraph (b) the words:

> —except where bestiality is committed.

Mr. Speaker, that a man, a human being, an individual should have sexual relations with any kind of animal whatever, pigeons or the doves of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), this according to me constitutes an act which in fact is not only against nature but inconceivable. We have here an exceptional case.

Furthermore, professor Mewett himself said that as far as he knew there has been only two convictions for bestiality in the past 20 years. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that with respect to those exceptional cases, we should at least include a provision prohibiting such an act with an animal.

The minister himself acknowledged a while ago that it was obvious that such an act was neither normal nor natural, that it was illogical and indicated that the individual who committed such an act was suffering from some illness or sexual deviation.

If the minister is ready to recognize that such an act done with an animal is neither natural nor normal, then it is surely not normal to do it with another person.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel that this bill and this clause are entirely inconsistent, since one is ready to condemn the individual who commits a sexual act with an animal, but not the one who does the same thing with another individual of the same sex.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder sometimes where we are going? The right hon. member for Prince Albert pointed out that in the Middle Ages, the students were trying to construct theories, to carry on studies and speculate on the number of angels one could put on the head of a pin.

As I am anxious, Mr. Speaker, to dispute that inconsistent method of legislating, I wonder how many hon. members would consider as logical the prohibition of an act done with an animal, while the same act would be allowed with a person of the same sex.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved the hon. member for Abitibi would add the following words:

> —except where bestiality is committed.

It is meant to establish the important basic principle that the act committed with an animal is unacceptable in our society and that it indicates that the person who does it is ill.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Consequently, the Criminal Code should provide for it. Clauses 149, 148 and 147 of the Criminal Code do not clearly define this situation, and if it is dealt with, it is not sufficiently defined to allow the attorney of a defendent, in a particular case, to rely on valid jurisprudence.

The minister himself admits, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed amendment merely clarifies the law. He claims that the clarification is not necessary. As far as we are concerned, we think it is necessary that it be specified in the law so that, in practice, when an act is committed, it will come under the provisions of the law.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the suggestions contained in amendments Nos. 7 and 8, we realize that the government, to use the minister's expression, would like to protect people of the same sex who would have sexual intercourse. According to him, it is not a question of legalizing but of exempting from the provisions of the Criminal Code, acts committed between two persons of the same sex.

Mr. Speaker, section 149A of the Criminal Code, to which an amendment is proposed in clause 7 of the present bill, provides that such an act between husband and wife would not come under the provisions of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem acceptable between husband and wife because it is only natural for a married couple to have sexual intercourse. In my opinion, it is ridiculous to provide for such situations in the law, unless there is no consent.

The same section deals with the commission of a similar act between two persons of 21 or more. Legally speaking, the young people must be at least 21 years old. This is a sine qua non condition. It is not required as a sine qua non condition that people be mentally sane. No. The only condition is that they have completed their twenty-first year. These people are then beyond the reach of the Criminal Code and are permitted to do this as long as they are two to commit the act—

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member whether he has read clause 2 (b) (ii) which reads as follows, and I quote:

(b) a person shall be deemed not to consent to the commission of an act

(ii) if that person is... feeble-minded, insane, or an idiot or imbecile—

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I was about to deal with subsection (b).

I thank the hon. member for having pointed this out to me, and I shall take the opportunity later on to comment on those two subsections.

I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that this clause is intended to spare them the penalties provided for in the Criminal Code, when two persons at least 21 years of age commit a sexual offence, even though they may be of the same sex.

This clause of the bill does not say whether such an act committed with an animal would be legal or illegal. The whole thing is not very specific and is extremely vague.

This is why I willingly support the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Abitibi who has done an excellent job on this omnibus bill. All this amendment does is to add an exception: "except where bestiality is committed", because it is obvious that this is an abnormal and unacceptable deed. Mr. Speaker, we must acknowledge that an act committed with an animal, by a person of sound mind and twenty-one years of age, or more is not natural and that it should be severely punished by the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, this argument is logical and should give some food for thought to the members who sit on the government side.

And I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I am extremely surprised to see my colleagues of this fair and great liberal party afraid to stand up and speak out their minds. I am at a loss to explain that passive behaviour, that puppet reaction.

In committee, we could not move amendments because we were simply boycotted. This is so obvious that at the committee report stage, the hon. members had to move amendments because they were not allowed to do so when the bill was considered in committee. That is why we find ourselves today with 40 amendments, and have to have such foolosh discussions.

Mr. Speaker, I find it unacceptable that the hon. members from the province of Quebec, who know very well that even though our mentality is not different from that of others, it is a distinctive one, and that we have firm basic convictions, do not come together against this legislation. They should know that we need a much more serious legislation. I am shocked by their silence.

Our leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), was quite right when he said that those hon. members were stuck to their seats with six inches of Lepage's glue. I sometimes wonder if the Lepage people do not contribute to the Liberal electoral fund, so that the hon. members stick to their seats.

Why do they not ever stand up to express their views? When we talk in this house, all they can do is laugh. They laugh. Look at those laughting faces, like that of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). Not only is it their attitude, but this is the only thing they can do.

The hon. members of the progressive conservative party stand up and do their best. So I ask my colleagues to pay them this tribute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, government members were telling me when the house met: "Did you notice how the hon. member for Prince Albert is unable to grasp the situation?"

Old-fashioned! That is what is being said about an hon. member who has given proof of his worth and to whom many in Saskatchewan are ready to give praise for his greatness and ability. Kindly note that I am not a progressive conservative, but one must be objective. The only thing that the government members manage to do is to indulge in personalities, instead of dealing with the problems, assuming their responsibility as members of Parliament and representing their districts with dignity and in accordance with their principles.

Must we infer that when joining the liberal party an hon. member has to sacrifice his principles, his opinions and his freedom? What is then this vaunted freedom the Liberals are talking about? What manner of a just society is it, which denies to its members freedom of expression? Would it then be a dictatorship? I ask myself that question, Mr. Speaker.

Since the beginning of the present session, I, as a new member, have been sorely disappointed to find that whenever we ask a question, we are given facetious answers, that are liable to give rise to constitutional disputes.

Private Bills

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Again I should like to remind the hon. member, and other hon. members, that the debate should be restricted as much as possible to the specific amendment before the house. I invite the hon. member for Lotbinière to do just that.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Who is laughing now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We should come back to the matter of the debate.

Mr. Fortin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I quite agree and I apologize if I get carried away, as I said last night.

But I am young and that may be the reason why I sometimes stray further afield. I believe that it is important that we assume our responsibilities and that, without fear, we at least study the amendments.

I ask the government members to have the courage to read these amendments before stating that they are opposed to them.

Whenever we present a motion to the house, Mr. Speaker, there is a general outcry. When the hon. member for Abitibi said, a moment ago, that he was presenting an amendment in order to clarify the act, he was right.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, may I call it four o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there would be any general disposition in the house to suspend private members' hour for this afternoon and continue this debate until five o'clock.

Mr. Baldwin: On one condition, Mr. Speaker; provided that if we complete the study of all those clauses up to the eleventh amendment, the provision as to a recorded vote being taken is such that the vote will not be taken today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Fortin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: We do not agree, if it is a question of doing away with private members' hour because the time set aside for that purpose is already too short.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being four o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

BRITISH NORTHWESTERN INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand that Bill S-9, respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Broadbent. (p. 5240)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill about which, like others, we periodically have to refresh our memories. Perhaps I should read the remarks made by the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), when he introduced it on December 17, as reported at page 4059 of Hansard:

> —since this bill has already been before the house on three occasions I will not take very long to explain it. It was before the house on November 3, 1967, January 23, 1968 and February 29, 1968. On November 3 I made a detailed explanation of the bill, to be found at page 3813 of Hansard for that date.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, this company seeks, first, permission to change its name and, second, to increase its authorized capital. However, as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce indicated in his remarks reported in Hansard, the company would be willing to forgo the request for increased capitalization if it could feel some assurance that the name change would be permitted. This, to an extent, seemed then, and still does now, somewhat strange. Perhaps I do not understand the way insurance companies operate, but I would have thought they would have placed more emphasis on increasing their capitalization than they would have on changing their name.

I say that because the company operates, directly and through subsidiaries, with companies that have names that are completely different from the Eagle Star, or whatever name the company thinks would be appropriate to adopt in Canada. When this Company offers to give up the prospect of increased capitalization, that means to me simply that the company was not sincere in the first place or is not anxious to have that increased capitalization.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Allmand: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that we are now discussing the amendment to my motion. I refer to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on February 6, 1969, to the effect that the bill be not now read a second time but that it be read six months hence. The remarks of the hon. member for Skeena are a repetition of his original remarks when he was speaking on my motion. I think he ought to keep his argument relative to what we are discussing here and not repeat what he said before.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I should like to comment on that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You have the wrong file, Frank.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I thank the hon. member for drawing to my attention that I have made these remarks before. I can only conclude that nothing has changed and that we are still in the position we occupied formerly. I intend to say something about the amendment with respect to the six months hoist. But this point was not really a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I notice you are sitting back comfortably with your arms folded and have no intention of supporting the position of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. That is because you and I know, I am sure, that the hon. member has not raised a point of order and is simply wasting the time of the house when we are trying to assist him in coming to some conclusion as to what should happen to this bill.

The hon. member has not the support of the government, either, because the government house leader asked us to dispense with private members' hour and thus deprive the hon. member of the opportunity of dealing with this bill.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You must be smiling when you say that, Frank.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I would smile if it were not for the fact that on one occasion the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), after the suggestion had been made that private members' hour on that particular occasion might be dispensed with, got up in righteous indignation and said, "Oh no; we as the government, do not agree with that. We think we should continue on all occasions during private members' hour with business sponsored by government members."

As the Minister of Justice said, I might smile if it were not for what the Minister of Agriculture said on one occasion and if it were not for the suggestion that the government house leader made. May I now return to the argument I was pursuing before I was interrupted? I was saying that the company is not sincere.

Mr. Allmand: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have not quite finished speaking on the hon. member's first point of order. Perhaps, he will wait until I have finished my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I ought to declare now that what was raised was not a point of order. We should return to discussing the amendment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, may I have a ruling on my point of order?

An hon. Member: You have just had it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 34 (2) deals with irrelevancies and repetition. The hon. member is repeating what he said before. Not only is he not speaking to the amendment, but he is repeating what he said on the original motion. I should like to have a ruling on my particular point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am quite prepared to give a ruling. The Standing Orders refer to repetition and relevancy, and there is also an interesting analysis of the rule of relevancy in Beauchesne. I invite hon. members to look at it. May I also observe that the question of relevancy is difficult to interpret. I, therefore, think that the hon. member who has the floor ought to direct his remarks to the amendment. I invite him, in support of the observations of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, to limit his remarks as much as possible to the amendment.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I was desperately trying to do that, but it is difficult to do so in view of the commentary coming from hon. members opposite. I am in two minds about the amendment. I do not know whether or not to support it. If I support the amendment for a six month hoist, then hon. members opposite will immediately say that I and members of my group have undertaken six months from now to permit the bill to receive second reading. That would be sometime in October.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Some hon. member opposite says, right. That convinces me that I ought not to support the amendment for a six month hoist, because to vote for the amendment would be tantamount to voting for the principle of permitting the bill to be read a second time six months from now, and that I cannot accept. In any event, we ought to look carefully at what this bill attempts to do.

Really we are attempting to determine how we ought to proceed with respect to this bill. We, therefore, ought to examine it carefully to see exactly what the change of name that is sought will do. I do not think the company was very sincere in asking for an increase in capitalization; otherwise it would not have abandoned so easily its quest for extra capital. Perhaps, on the other hand, there is some commitment from the Liberal party or the government that it will obtain its capital through some other procedure.

Mr. Allmand: I wish it were so.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): One wonders why the company wishes to have the word "Eagle" incorporated in its name when in its world wide operations under the aegis of various subsidiaries, it so seldom uses that word in its name. In that connection it may be interesting to note the names of the company's various subsidiaries. In Britain they are, The Army, Navy and General Assurance Association Ltd., British Crown Assurance Corporation, Ltd; Eagle Insurance Co. Ltd.; Home and Overseas Insurance Co. Ltd.; City of London Insurance Co. Ltd.; Jacksons of Wandsworth Ltd.; Liverpool Reversionary Co. Ltd.; Midland Assurance Ltd.; Navigators and General Insurance Co, Ltd.; Philatelic Insurance Ltd.,; Premier Motor Insurance Co. Ltd.; Removers and General Insurance Co. Ltd.; Shipowners' Security Insurance Co. Ltd.; Theatres Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd.; Threadneedle Insurance Co, Ltd.; Trent Insurance Co. Ltd.; Western Star Insurance Co. Ltd.;

In Australia the subsidiary is called Eagle Star Nominees Ltd.; in the Bahamas it is Sceptre Trust Ltd.; in Barbados it is Barbados Fire Insurance Company; in Canada it is British Northwestern Insurance Co., and Security National Insurance Co.; in Jamaica it is British Caribbean Insurance Co. Ltd.; in Nigeria it is Nigerian Eagle Insurance Limited; in Zambia it is Zambian Eagle Insurance Co., Ltd.; in South Africa there are four subsidiaries, British African Properties Ltd., S.A.F. House Ltd., South African Eagle Insurance Co., Ltd., and Threedneedle Properties (S.A.) Ltd.

It is interesting to note that only in few instances does the word "Eagle" occur in the names of any of these subsidiaries. It is, therefore, difficult to follow the company's reasoning, when it says that the word "Eagle" included in the company's name is in some way valuable to that company.

This company, with its almost innumerable subsidiaries, operates all over the world. It has connections, directly and indirectly, through joint ownership, with other ventures. This raises something we should look at very seriously, Mr. Speaker, in this country, the conglomeration or agglomeration of companies that work one with the other. These companies get involved in all sorts of activities through stock promotion deals, draining off resources of subsidiary companies of which they get control. The purpose of this control is not to provide goods and services properly, but to develop a greater amount of control over larger sections of our economy. We should not give any effect to that purpose, even though in this bill the company simply requests a change of name.

This is a company which is foreign owned, foreign dominated and foreign controlled. I think this company, which has all the traditions of Britain behind, it would be overjoyed to become a Canadian company in the full sense of the word. In fact, the sponsor of the bill gave some recognition to the necessity of companies being Canadian owned. He gave recognition to the value of it being nothing less in a publicity or propaganda sense. He pointed out this company invests in Canada and most of the personnel and directors are Canadian. Why did he say that, apart from the fact that it may be true? I do not think the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), and others who sponsor bills respecting foreign owned companies, make such statements out of recognition of the fact that there is growing in this nation a stronger demand to gain control over our economic affairs and activities. People who say these are Canada Canadian companies, with most of the directors and personnel Canadians, do so in an attempt to cater to the growing feeling of nationalism in relation to the control of our economy. These statements are not really sincere because they are not followed by any sort of action.

I stated yesterday when dealing with the bill respecting the Transcoastal Assurance Company that we should commend the proceedings of the committee which dealt with this bill to all sponsors of private bills relating to insurance, trust, loan or other types of companies involved in monetary or economic activities in the nation. They could read in the committee proceedings what one gentleman voluntarily decided. This gentleman represented a company that wanted to establish itself in Canada. Before the bill was even introduced, this company voluntarily offered to write into the piece of legislation those guarantees which, over a period of years, would ensure that the company would become Canadian owned. Regretfully, there was a section in the insurance act which confined that request and desire, but none the less the desire was there in the first place.

If Eagle Star Insurance Company, British Northwestern Insurance Company or whatever its name is or will be or whoever the parent owners are, will say to the Canadian people the company will become Canadian owned within a period of time considered reasonable to phase out their operations, then it will be accepted by Canadians everywhere. If the company is reluctant or refuses to do that, I must maintain the position I have maintained all along, namely this parliament should not give any endorsement to a company with that sort of structure remaining foreign owned. We should no longer sell ourselves out by endorsing the concept of continuation of foreign ownership. We should start to reverse this trend. I do not expect this proposition will fall on receptive ears within the Liberal Party. We know they have been sell-out artists for years. The situation was not altered even in those years they were out of office.

I wish to read a few words by Mr. Douglas Thornsjo, legal counsel representing the proposed Transcoastal Life Assurance Company. Mr. Thornsjo appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on March 20 of this year. Among a number of other declarations, he said:

> We feel that the growth of the Canadian business, particularly in terms of numbers of people serviced through our group contracts, sir, warrant Canadian participation initially in and, ultimately, ownership of this company. We sense a widespread feeling in Canada that residents and citizens here might prefer to deal with their own companies rather than with foreign companies no matter how good, if you will permit me to say so, the foreign company might be.
> I think we feel that we are going to be able to do a better job in Canada with a part ownership—a partnership, if you will—than we can as an outside company that comes in, being wholly owned outside the nation, and tries to do business with Canadians. It is a matter of judgment and I am not sure our judgment is right.

Would the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who is now reading the paper very carefully, disagree with that contention of Mr. Thornsjo? Would he object to that as being a guide line for corporate activity in this country? I suppose there is no point pursuing the matter any further. The hon. member is deeply engrossed in a newspaper and obviously not interested in the matter of Canadian ownership.

Mr. Allmand: I am interested in Canadian ownership, but not in the nonsense coming from the other side.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Speak up, I did not hear you.

Mr. Allmand: I am interested in Canadian ownership, not the nonsense from the other side which I have already heard 10 or 11 times.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Let me quote Mr. Thornsjo's words to you. He is the legal counsel representing the Transcoastal Life Assurance Company.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I understand the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): With respect, Mr. Speaker, there must have been seven or eight minutes of my time consumed by spurious points of order by the hon. member opposite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I understand a few minutes were taken into account in determining that the hon. member's time had expired. If the house agrees, the hon. member's time can be prolonged beyond the time allotted by the rules of the house. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I think I heard at least one negative response.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-9 is the bill before us at the moment. I was rather disappointed to hear a negative voice from the government side. As a result the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is not permitted to continue the very thorough and intellectual remarks he has been making. He wanted to respond to the remark by the sponsor of the bill who said he had heard nonsense from this side of the house on the question of Canadian ownership. This bill was introduced in the fall of last year. In the month of December, I had the opportunity to speak to it. At that time I set forth our objections with regard to the problem of the name, the problem of foreign ownership and other related matters.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The bill came up for debate again in February of this year and one of my colleagues moved an amendment that it be not read a second time then but that it be read a second time six months hence. We are now directing our remarks to that amendment.

When I hear the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), for whom I have a high respect in so many other matters, say that the members of this party have spoken nonsense on the question of foreign ownership it makes me realize how necessary it was for the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) to present this amendment. The presentation of the amendment permits us to attempt to convince him of the strength and clarity of our position in the hope that he and other hon. members will adopt the approach which the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was putting forth at the time his remarks were interrupted.

The hon. member for Skeena was pointing out that Transcoastal Insurance Company, an American owned company, made an application to conduct insurance business in Canada and gave an opportunity to Canadians to participate in the ownership of that company. We, on this side of the house, welcomed that application. We gave it our blessing. The bill went to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs where it was given a thorough hearing on the question of ownership, and after being returned to the house was given quick passage yesterday on report stage and third reading.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

I would have thought that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce would have wanted to hear the remarks made by counsel for Transcoastal Insurance Company concerning the attitude of that company to the right of Canadians to participate in the ownership of companies doing business in Canada, Canadians from whom premiums are obtained, from whom profits are made, and with whom some of the profits should be shared.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member has referred to the company whose bill received third reading yesterday and said that before the standing committee the officials of that company made some important declarations with respect to ownership of the company. Would the hon. member be willing to let this bill get second reading so that the officials of this company could go before the committee and answer all the questions he might wish to put regarding foreign ownership? Wouldn't he think that would be a good thing?

Mr. Gilbert: If the hon. member had made that suggestion when he introduced this bill I would have endorsed it heartily.

Mr. Allmand: I did make it.

Mr. Gilbert: I am talking about the suggestion that at the time the application was made the company might have considered the right of Canadians to participate in its ownership. Had that been done, had the hon. member committed himself and the company to the proposition that Canadians have the right to participate in the ownership of a company which plans to do business in Canada, we would not be discussing this bill this afternoon.

But the hon. member has not made that commitment. He prefers to have us give second reading to this bill, and he expects us to persuade the officials of the company to change their ways and their philosophy when we deal with them in the standing committee. The hon. member has had sufficient time to contact the petitioners, but in the interim I have heard no response from them concerning this ownership question.

This is really a twofold application. One is to change the name of the company from British Northwestern Insurance Company to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada and in French, Eagle Star Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada. The second application is to increase the capital stock of the company from $2 million divided into 50,000 shares of $40 each to $5 million divided into 125,000 shares of $40 each.

The hon. member for Skeena has pointed out that this company is completely owned by a British Company called Eagle Star, and that Eagle Star has operated in Canada under the British and Canadian Insurance Companies Act using the name British Northwestern Insurance Company.

The hon. member for Skeena also gave a long list of names of companies which the parent company owns, not only in England and in Europe but in other parts of the world. He has pointed out that it is a vertical conglomeration not only with regard to life insurance but, probably with regard to fire insurance and other forms of insurance.

In December last year I questioned the proposed change of name from British Northwestern Insurance Company, which to me has all the flavour of an English name, and has all the strength, meaning tradition and custom that are contained in the word British. Eagle Star to me denotes an eagle, the emblem which represents the United States and which is on its coins and other insignia; and star is part of the Stars and Stripes of the United States flag. I also referred at that time to the Red Star of Russia.

An hon. Member: And there is the Star of Bethlehem.

Mr. Gilbert: And the Star of Bethlehem, which almost gives it a religious flavour. I appreciate that interruption because it indicates that there may be an attempt on the part of this company to tell the Canadian people that it is not an English owned company but an American owned company. I would not like to think of the people in Ontario, in the west, and especially in Quebec being misled with regard to the ownership of this company by a mere change of name from British Northwestern Insurance Company to Eagle Star Insurance. If the petitioners were really serious about the change in name they would carry the idea through to the names of the other companies which they own. As the hon. member for Skeena pointed out, in the long list of companies that he gave there is the Army and Navy Insurance Company.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I notice the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) is with us this afternoon and is listening very attentively to the debate. I am sure if we were considering the Army, Navy and General Insurance Company he would be the first one to oppose any change to Eagle Star because he knows what Army and Navy stands for; it has a tradition. It is a name worthy of remembering. Here, we have a sort of planned attempt by this company to change a name like British Northwestern Insurance Company to a name which has a United States tone, Eagle Star Insurance Company. I, for one, as a member of this house resist the change of name if it is an attempt to fool the Canadian public that it is now to be United States owned rather than British owned. That was the substance of the first remark I made on another occasion.

Then, I went into the question of foreign ownership. I pointed out that great Canadians like Walter Gordon had made the Canadian public aware of the increasing penetration of foreign ownership in Canada. We have had a strong example of this in respect of insurance companies.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to be overly persistent, but as I pointed out with regard to the previous speaker it is my understanding we are now speaking to an amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) on February 6. The member who is now speaking to this bill keeps on referring to what he said during the previous debate. He is repeating himself and not speaking to the amendment. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that he speak to the amendment rather than to the motion to which he has already spoken.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If I might be permitted to speak to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I only do so because from my memory Your Honour was not in the Chair at the time the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) raised this point of order in respect of myself.

An hon. Member: Equally valid.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I understood that the deputy speaker at that time made a ruling to the effect that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce in fact did not have a point of order and referred the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce to some particular citations or documents which he should study in order that he would appreciate more clearly just what is involved in debating a bill of this nature. I think Your Honour would probably come to the same view and substantiate what the deputy speaker said earlier.

Mr. Speaker: In respect of the point of order raised by the hon. member, the Chair feels it is bound by the ruling made earlier this afternoon by the Chair, whatever that ruling was. Hon. members heard it and I am sure would want to abide by the decision of the Chair at that time. Looking at the matter in a particular way, it is not within the rules of the house to repeat the substance of a speech which has been made before. It is certainly not in accordance with proper, traditional and customary parliamentary debate to use an amendment that the bill be not read a second time, but be read six months hence, as an opportunity to repeat a speech which has been made previously. Clearly, the rules do not allow this.

I am not one of those who was fortunate enough to hear the hon. member's earlier speech, so I am in a difficult position to say whether there has been a repetition. The hon. member would have to be guided in this respect by his conscience. I refer, of course, to his parliamentary conscience.

Mr. Gilbert: I was sure you were referring to my parliamentary conscience, Mr. Speaker. I have not had an opportunity to refresh my memory with regard to just what I did say in detail some time in December. I was attempting not only to refresh my memory but to refresh the memory of some of the members who had the delight of hearing me back in December of last year, and more especially the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce because he is a very keen, intellectual type who picks up points very quickly. The only reason I referred to that speech was to refresh his memory. I shall refrain from referring to the speech I made on the last occasion. I shall dwell on this name of Eagle Star Insurance Company and the increase in capitalization.

I had said I am one who would like to resist the change from British Northwestern Insurance to Eagle Star because of the possible attempt by the company to give a United States flavour or name to this company which is wholly owned by British interests. While the hon. member for Skeena was addressing himself to the point of order, I had an opportunity to look again at some of the names of the companies this Eagle Star Insurance Company Limited of London owns. I already referred to the Army and Navy Insurance Company. I notice they own the Midland Insurance Company, which again is an English name. They have the British Caribbean Insurance Company and the Threadneedle Insurance Company. Any person with any knowledge of English history knows the word "Threadneedle" has a special meaning with regard to English history and more especially with regard to English finance. I would think that if this company, Eagle Star Insurance Company Limited, were about to change the names of all its companies, it would do so first with regard to some of these companies which are contained within its own borders rather than come across the seas to Canada and attempt to change a great name like British Northwestern Insurance Company.

If my friend at this time can assure me that this company intends to change all the names of the subsidiaries it owns to the name Eagle Star, and give the full meaning to the name Eagle Star and possibly the connotation that it is United States owned, I might be persuaded that this change of name is one which is made in good faith rather than in an attempt to mislead Canadians concerning ownership.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will give me a few more minutes because of the problems I have encountered from members on the other side concerning points of order. I intend to discuss the more important subject of insurance. I happened to get a book from the library which was on the reading list sent to members of the house. I think we should compliment the staff of the library for sending to members the lists of books that are new and which are in the library. I saw the name of a book called the "Mortality Merchants". My first thought was that maybe these were munitions makers. The summary of the book, written by a man named G. Scott Reynolds, indicates it deals in detail with insurance companies. The book deals with the activities of companies in the field of insurance. I have had an opportunity to read about 50 pages of this most fascinating book.

The author sets forth some of the problems insurance companies and policy holders have in understanding insurance. I should like to tell the members of this house, and recommend to them, that the reading of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt as to whether the hon. member is entirely in order in directing the attention of hon. members of the house to his reading habits, suggesting that they should be adopted by other hon. members. What we are now dealing with is a change of name. Certainly, the hon. member's references to insurance laws generally are entirely irrelevant so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. Gilbert: I appreciate your remarks, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to point out to Your Honour that we are dealing with two things; a change in names, and a change in capitalization. I think Your Honour might be confusing this matter with another application before the house to change only the name of a company. I would think that insurance generally might be discussed in respect of this capitalization aspect.

I might say that I have only read 50 pages of this book, and I am not in a position to emphasize the impact of its content.

An hon. Member: Then sit down and read it.

Mr. Gilbert: I will defer any further remarks in this regard to another occasion.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I should like to speak briefly on the bill now before the house. We are dealing with an amendment that the bill be read six months hence. Let me give my reasons for supporting this motion to hoist the bill for six months. Before doing so, I should like to suggest that the sponsor of this bill made some unwarranted remarks in respect of hon. members in this house. There was no need for this type of action at this time. He suggested that members on this side of the house were talking nonsense when debating the fundamental issues facing this house and the country. If the member thinks we are stating nonsense, I should like to assure him that the members of this party and the public of Canada are continually reaching the conclusion that bills of this kind represent nothing but nonsense.

Mr. Allmand: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Harding: Certainly.

Mr. Allmand: If this bill is as important as the hon. member suggests, will he tell the house whether he was present on other occasions when this bill was debated in the house and talked out by members of his party? Was he present and did he participate in those debates?

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill came up in December. I was certainly here at that time.

Mr. Allmand: You are wrong.

Mr. Harding: Do you mean to say that this bill was not debated in December last year?

Mr. Allmand: And in February.

Mr. Harding: I was in the house when the debates took place.

Mr. Allmand: That's good.

Mr. Harding: This bill may have come to the floor of the house prior to that, but I have no knowledge in that regard because I was not a member. In any event, I suggest it is improper for any member to state that we are talking nonsense. Let me ask you a question. Perhaps you will get up in this House of Commons and tell us and the Canadian people what you are trying to do to the economy of Canada by permitting and sponsoring these insurance bills which cause us to lose control of more of our economy. We have every right to stand in our places in this chamber and protest against the action of individual members of the government party who sponsor these bills. I should like to ask the hon. member a question, and I hope he gets on his feet to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let me remind the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) that he is quite out of order at this time in that he should address his remarks to the chair. I now recognize the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a subject which I think affects the privileges of all hon. members of this house. Hon. members sponsor private bills from time to time. Regardless of the privileges of this chamber, hon. members should not cast aspersions in respect of the motives of other hon. members. Nothing derogatory should be suggested about the reasons behind the sponsorship of bills in this chamber. It is my submission there is a grave reflection in respect of the privileges of all of us in those words uttered by the hon. member.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I should like to say a word or two about this question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps there is an element of value in what I have to say in view of the fact that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton did not move rapidly from his seat. Perhaps he is staying because I correctly identified his constituency, and I must admit that I have made a mistake on other occasions.

Usually an hon. member who sponsors a private bill in this house gets up on his feet to advocate or endorse the measure. Certainly, in respect of this bill which deals with ownership, we are justified as members of parliament in questioning the sponsor or the member endorsing the bill. In view of the attitude adopted by hon. members on the other side of this chamber, we are right in assuming that those members are advocating foreign ownership. As a result of the remarks of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), I assume he endorses this concept of foreign ownership in respect of insurance companies.

For the reasons I have outlined, I do not think we in the opposition can be criticized for taking this position as individual members. Surely, there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The point raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is justified to the extent that personal aspersions should not be cast in respect of hon. members. However, that is not my understanding or interpretation of the objection taken to the words uttered by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I understood that the hon. member was referring only to the parliamentary responsibility of members. I did not understand him to suggest that anything which should not be done by a member was in fact being done. I did not understand that he was casting personal aspersions. For that reason, I do not think the hon. member is justified in his belief that he has been offended by the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assure you and hon. members of this house that there was no personal reflection intended in anything I said. We have every right to criticize parliamentary functions, and I intend to criticize them. I should like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for requesting the members to direct their questions through you. This is the way it is done in this house, so I direct this question through you to the hon. member sponsoring the bill. Is it nonsense for us to stand up and speak out for the retention of Canadian control of our financial institutions? Is it nonsense and un-Canadian to request that Canadians regain control of some of those important sectors of our economy which have passed from our hands?

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Allmand: May I ask the hon. member another question, please?

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

Mr. Harding: Yes, certainly, if Mr. Speaker will permit it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West has the floor. If he allows it, then the hon. member may ask a question, but this is left entirely to the discretion of the hon. member for Kootenay West who is entitled not to be interrupted if he chooses to continue his speech without interruption.

Mr. Harding: I will permit a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member said it is his duty to speak out against the foreign control of our economy. I wonder whether he would speak out as strongly against the foreign control of some of the trade unions in Canada.

Mr. Howard: I sure as hell will.

Mr. Allmand: I am asking the hon. member for Kootenay West if he will speak out as strongly against the foreign control of some of the large trade unions in this country which support his party.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): There is that nastiness again. Nasty, nasty, nasty.

Mr. Harding: The sponsor of this bill is obviously trying to get me to limit the remarks which I wish to make in the five minutes remaining, but I can assure him and the house that I have a number of points that I wish to raise in connection with this bill. I want to put them on the record, so I will continue to speak.

Let us revert to the so-called nonsense about which the hon. member is talking.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): And which he is trying to get out from under.

Mr. Harding: That is right. The former Superintendent of Insurance warned the house in his annual reports over a period of years what was happening and what could happen once we lost control of any of our financial institutions. He classed insurance companies in this very important category. It seems to me that members of this party, and other members of the house on occasion, have requested the sponsors of private bills to do their utmost with the companies involved to see if it would not be possible to bring amendments to the legislation so that we could have more Canadian control of these very institutions.

For the benefit of the house I should like to give what I think are one or two rather interesting events which have already taken place. There have been occasions when insurance companies have decided to bring in amendments on their own initiative which would give to Canadians eventual control over the insurance companies, concerning which bills which have been presented in the House of Commons by private members. I wonder if the sponsor of this bill has made this suggestion to the company. If he has, I do not know what the results were. However, I would like to read one or two brief remarks from a hearing before the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee at which a change in another insurance company was contemplated. This is what we are talking about, this is what we are urging, and this is what we are asking for. The following was said by a representative of the insurance company:

> We feel that the growth of the Canadian business, particularly in terms of numbers of people serviced through our group contracts, sir, warrant Canadian participation initially in and, ultimately, ownership of this company.

There is no objection to eventual ownership or eventual control of the company by Canadians. He went on to say:

> We sense a widespread feeling in Canada that residents and citizens here might prefer to deal with their own companies rather than with foreign companies no matter how good, if you will permit me to say so, the foreign company might be.

That is what the hon. member calls nonsense. He went on to say:

> I think we feel that we are going to be able to do a better job in Canada with a part ownership—a partnership, if you will—than we can as an outside company that comes in, being wholly owned outside the nation, and tries to do business with Canadians. It is a matter of judgment and I am not sure our judgment is right.

Here is someone sponsoring an insurance bill who is willing to make an amendment which would eventually give control of the company to Canadians, and with that control goes a huge portfolio of investment which we desperately need in Canada if we are ever going to develop our industrial potential.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry I have to interrupt the hon. member but I am advised that the hour set aside for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

It being five o'clock, this house stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

NATO—PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

A Canadian defence policy, employing in an effective fashion the highly skilled and professional Canadian Armed Forces, will contribute to the maintenance of world peace. It will also add to our own sense of purpose as a nation and give renewed enthusiasm and a feeling of direction to the members of the armed forces. It will provide the key to the flexible employment of Canadian forces in a way which will permit them to make their best contribution in accordance with Canada's particular needs and requirements.

The government has rejected any suggestion that Canada assume a non-aligned or neutral role in world affairs. Such an option would have meant the withdrawal by Canada from its present alliances and the termination of all co-operative military arrangements with other countries. We have decided in this fashion because we think it necessary and wise to continue to participate in an appropriate way in collective security arrangements with other states in the interests of Canada's national security and in defence of the values we share with our friends.

Canada requires armed forces within Canada in order to carry out a wide range of activities involving the defence of the country, also supplementing the civil authorities and contributing to national development. Properly equipped and deployed, our forces will provide an effective multi-purpose maritime coastal shield and they will carry out operations necessary for the defence of North American airspace in co-operation with the United States. Abroad, our forces will be capable of playing important roles in collective security and in peace-keeping activities.

The structure, equipment and training of our forces must be compatible with these roles and it is the intention of the government that they shall be. Our eventual forces will be highly mobile and will be the best-equipped and best-trained forces of their kind in the world.

The precise military role which we shall endeavour to assume in these collective arrangements will be a matter for discussion and consultation with our Allies and will depend in part on the role assigned to Canadian forces in the surveillance of our own territory and coast lines in the interests of protecting our own sovereignty. As a responsible member of the international community, it is our desire to have forces available for peace-keeping roles as well as for participation in defensive alliances.

Canada is a partner in two collective defence arrangements which, though distinct, are complementary. These are the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the North American Air Defence Command. For twenty years NATO has contributed to the maintenance of world peace through its stabilizing influence in Europe. NATO continues to contribute to peace by reducing the likelihood of a major conflict breaking out in Europe where, because the vital interests of the two major powers are involved, any outbreak of hostilities could easily escalate into a war of world proportions. At the same time it is the declared aim of NATO to foster improvements in East-West relations.

NATO itself is continuously reassessing the role it plays in the light of changing world conditions. Perhaps the major development affecting NATO in Europe since the organization was founded is the magnificent recovery of the economic strength of Western Europe. There has been a very great change in the ability of European countries themselves to provide necessary conventional defence forces and armaments to be deployed by the alliance in Europe.

It was, therefore, in our view entirely appropriate for Canada to review and reexamine the necessity in present circumstances for maintaining Canadian forces in Western Europe. Canadian forces are now committed to NATO until the end of the present year. The Canadian force commitment for deployment with NATO in Europe beyond this period will be discussed with our allies at the meeting of the Defence Planning Committee of NATO in May. The Canadian Government intends, in consultation with Canada's allies, to take early steps to bring about a planned and phased reduction of the size of the Canadian forces in Europe.

We intend as well to continue to co-operate effectively with the United States in the defence of North America. We shall accordingly seek early occasions for detailed discussions with the United States Government of the whole range of problems involved in our mutual co-operation in defence matters in this continent. To the extent that it is feasible we shall endeavour to have those activities within Canada which are essential to North American defence performed by Canadian forces.

In summary, Canada will continue to be a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and to co-operate closely with the United States within NORAD and in other ways in defensive arrangements. We shall maintain appropriate defence forces which will be designed to undertake the following roles:

(a) the surveillance of our own territory and coast lines, i.e., the protection of our sovereignty;

(b) the defence of North America in co-operation with United States forces;

(c) the fulfilment of such NATO commitments as may be agreed upon; and

(d) the performance of such international peacekeeping roles as we may, from time to time, assume.

The kind of forces and armaments most suitable for these roles is now being assessed in greater detail in preparation for discussion with our Allies.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DUMONT—ALLEGED IRREGULARITY IN WINNIPEG MEETING OF AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

During the meeting of the committee on agriculture in Winnipeg, held on April 18 in the Monarch Life Building, the chairman of the committee tried by devious means to stop the opposition from making itself heard.

As I wanted to ask, in the presence of the representatives of the Wheat Pool, the Saskatchewan Wheat Board and the Western Farmers, that the Winnipeg Grain Exchange which is exploiting Canadian farmers be abolished, the chairman of that committee denied me the right to speak.

So I submit that this committee should resume that sitting, in Ottawa, with all the representatives who were in Winnipeg attending, to prevent this time the use of such devious means.

I put forward this proposal in order to know the true exploiters in the grain trade.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON FIFTH CANADA-JAPAN MINISTERIAL MEETING

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the joint communiqué of the fifth meeting of the Canada-Japan ministerial committee and to report very briefly to the house on the very useful meetings which were held in Tokyo last week.

This ministerial committee is not a negotiating body but rather a means whereby ministers from the two countries can from time to time exchange views on the full range of bilateral relations between Canada and Japan, as well as on the international situation. The fact that Japan is Canada's third largest trading partner, now competing for second place, is in itself sufficient reason for periodic and high level discussions between Canadian ministers and their Japanese counterparts.

The need for and the utility of these meetings is enhanced by the increasingly close co-operation between Canada and Japan in political and other fields, both bilaterally and in all the major international organizations to which we both belong. Most of all however the meetings form an important part of Canada's role as a Pacific as well as an Atlantic country, and they also reflect the growing Canadian activities throughout the Pacific area.

I have taken part in three meetings of this committee in different capacities and, in my view, the one just completed is the most useful to date, in large part due to the increasing easiness of discussions over a broad range of subjects. This is not to suggest that we found a complete identity of views with the Japanese. We did not, and, where we differed, we both made clear where our differences lay. On bilateral matters, for example, as you will see from the communiqué, the Canadian ministers spoke with some vigour about certain Japanese trade restrictions which are causing difficulties for some Canadian exports. But one advantage of these meetings is to enable ministers to speak directly with their Japanese opposite numbers on matters which are of great concern to Canada.

In addition to expressing my satisfaction over the quality of the discussions, both formal and informal, which we held with our Japanese colleagues, I should like to express our thanks for the warm and generous hospitality offered by our hosts. We were able to visit certain areas outside the capital and to get some impression of the cultural and industrial aspects of Japan. We visited the site of Expo '70 at Osaka and saw the Canadian pavilion, its outward structure now almost completed, and the pavilions of British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec. The extent of Canadian participation in this world exhibition, and the fact that our visit coincided with a tour of Japan by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra are, I believe, further indications of the broadening and deepening of our relations.

It is of interest that a special newspaper supplement marking the visit was issued on the day our meetings began. The relationship between Canada and Japan is, I am convinced, a relationship which contains great mutual benefits and which in itself makes some contribution to stability and economic development in Asia and the Pacific region.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, sometimes while we are preoccupied with other parts of the world we in Canada forget how important Japan is in the far east. I am sure the minister's visit there was of importance. I am thinking of joint efforts we shall make with the United States and Japan to conserve the north Pacific fishery. There will also, I hope, be an increase, particularly in coal and wheat, in our trade with Japan. If Expo '70 at Osaka is anywhere near as good as Expo '67 at Montreal was, the Japanese will do well.

A strong Japan taking its part in world international affairs is of increasing importance to Canada. I welcome the minister's statement therefore, and welcome his return along with that of his colleagues.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members welcome back our delegation from Japan. I expect most of us have seen some of the television shots of the delegation having tea with the geisha girls. I hope the Prime Minister will arrange for us to have a report of the extracurricular activities of the delegation, which may be more interesting than the report of their official visit.

Mr. Baldwin: And less bland, probably.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Prime Minister is jealous.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other members of the committee are planning at an early date to give the house more information than is contained in the minister's communiqué which has just been tabled. We shall be interested to know something about discussions touching on Viet Nam, in which the Canadian and the Japanese governments expressed the hope of seeing an early peace settlement.

I also hope we shall obtain further information showing whether both governments, the Canadian and Japanese, are prepared to take steps in promoting a peaceful settlement in Viet Nam. We shall be particularly interested in hearing the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us at an early date about Japanese reactions to Canada's intention to recognize the Peking administration. A news release from Tokyo carried last Saturday in the Montreal Gazette says in so many words that the question of opening diplomatic relations with Peking will be discussed separately from the question of Chinese representation at the United Nations. Frankly I do not quite know what that means. Does that mean, and I should welcome hearing an explanation about this, that although the Canadian government contemplates recognizing the Peking régime it will not lend its support to the idea of having mainland China become a member of the United Nations.

The communiqué just tabled says that both governments are in favour of strengthening the International Grains Arrangement. I hope the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) will tell the house whether the Canadian delegation had any success in securing some markets for Canadian wheat. Most members know that, during the time the United States was selling below the International Grains Arrangement price floor, a very large part of the Japanese market went to the United States.

I hope the government can give some assurance that there is a distinct possibility we can regain that market. I also hope the minister will be able to tell us whether he had any success in reaching an agreement with Japan to allow Canadian rapeseed into Japan on the same basis that United States soyabeans are admitted, because we are operating at a great disadvantage in this market.

I trust that by a statement on motions or in some other form we will have a report at an early date from each of the ministers regarding discussions that took place, and the conclusions reached.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to hear from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) that the Canadian mission to Japan has been fruitful.

Having visited Japan myself in January, I noticed that trade agreements, co-operation and goodwill between Canada and Japan could be quite beneficial to our country.

During my trip, I noticed that the Japanese citizen was practising what President Kennedy said and repeated: Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country.

Japan has a population of 100 million inhabitants. It is a populous country but not that much compared with other great countries.

Despite that, it is developing at an incredible speed in every field of economic activity.

The Canadian ministers must have realized that the more relations we have with Japan, the more we will benefit from them. I sincerely believe that we have everything to gain by having more contacts with that country than we may have had with certain European countries in the past, because we have more to learn from Japan than from Europe, from every point of view. I suggest that our commercial and cultural relations with Japan must be improved.

I have also noticed that the ministers discussed just about everything with their Japanese counterparts during their stay in that country. They discussed the wheat trade, for example, and I felt at a certain point, while I was in western Canada, that the five, six or seven ministers sent to Japan could have liquidated the actual wheat surplus in the western provinces and shipped a good part of it to those who need it, particularly to Japan.

Mr. Speaker, we are happy to see that Canada is taking the necessary steps to initiate and maintain closer and more extensive relations with Japan, and I am convinced that our two countries will greatly benefit from it.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE— RESEARCH STAFF

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington) moved that the third report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the house on Thursday, April 17, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion, without qualification, merely to ask whether this does not present parliament, and particularly the Committee on Procedure, which has among its membership the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), the government house leader, with an opportunity to take a careful look at the staff which is being made available to all parliamentary committees.

If I am interpreting things correctly, then obviously the Public Accounts Committee found unsatisfactory the evidence which it was able to obtain from other sources, and has now decided it needs witnesses of its choosing in order to get all the information in a proper way. I think this is true of all committees. My remarks are not directed at any particular minister or any particular side of the house. I rise merely to underline my disappointment as a member of parliament that we have not made a great deal more progress on the idea of providing all parliamentary committees with the research, investigatory and other staff necessary to make the committees much more adequate and productive than they can be under present circumstances.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) I would point out that the Procedure Committee, as his colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will readily admit, agreed to determine its own order of priorities in proceeding with the various references before it, and the committee did not choose to put this question at the head of its agenda.

I believe I can speak on behalf of all members of that committee in saying we will be proceeding with the question of research assistance, among other matters; but it was felt by members of the committee that there was a pressing priority for the question of accommodation, and the reporting and transcription facilities of committees as a first order of priority, and it is with these that the committee has been dealing.

Motion agreed to.

Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—SUGGESTED PHASED REDUCTION IN CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

On the order: Government notices of motion:

April 17—The Prime Minister—The following proposed motion:—That this house supports the government's policy of continued Canadian participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the intention of the government, in consultation with Canada's allies, to take early steps to bring about a planned and phased reduction of the size of Canadian Forces in Europe.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of Standing Order 21 this government notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC SERVICE REJECTIONS FOR LINGUISTIC REASONS

Question No. 1,310—Mr. Coates:

1. How many Canadian citizens have been informed they were not eligible to enter competitions for positions with the Public Service Commission because they were unilingual since April 8, 1963?

2. Of the number disqualified from competitions who submitted applications, because they were unilingual, how many were French speaking and how many were English speaking?

3. Of the number disqualified from entering competitions, how many were employees of the Public Service of Canada and how many were endeavouring to secure employment with the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. The information requested is not available from the records of the Public Service Commission.

2. See 1 above.

3. See 1 above.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT IN N.W.T. AND YUKON SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,443—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is corporal punishment of pupils permitted in the schools in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

2. If so, is the policy formulated by any federal department or is it decided on in each school?

3. What type of corporal punishment is permitted —a strap, ruler, or what other form?

4. Who administers the corporal punishment—the teacher or the principal?

5. Are records kept as to the number of times corporal punishment is administered?

6. Have complaints been received, by the department regarding excessive use of corporal punishment, from parents or teachers and, if so, what action was taken by the department to investigate or correct the situation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. In both the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories, limited corporal punishment is permitted.

2. This department does not formulate corporal punishment policy in the Yukon. Rather, the territorial government, in conjunction with the school administrators, set the policy. In the Northwest Territories policy is formulated in accordance with the N.W.T. School Ordinance and Regulations, in consultation with the school principals.

3. A correction strap is permitted.

4. In the Yukon, corporal punishment may be administered by either the principal or teacher, but only in the presence of the principal and with his permission. In the Northwest Territories, either the principal or the teacher may administer the punishment.

5. There is a laid down policy for recording corporal punishment in the Mackenzie District. Although there is no over-all requirement for records to be kept in either the Arctic district or the Yukon, individual schools do maintain such records.

6. No complaints have been received by the Department with regard to the Yukon. In the Mackenzie District two complaints have been received in the past seven years; both complaints were investigated, and in each case the teacher involved in the incident received a reprimand. In the Arctic District one complaint was received from a teacher regarding another teacher who allegedly struck children in the classroom. This complaint was investigated by the District Superintendent of Schools, the Regional Superintendent of Schools, and by a representative of the Northwest Territories Teachers' Association; however, the allegations were not adequately substantiated.

ORIENTATION COURSE FOR N.W.T. AND YUKON TEACHERS

Question No. 1,447—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is there an orientation course for teachers going to teach in the Yukon or Northwest Territories?

2. If so, how long does this course last?

3. Who were the teachers at last year's orientation course and what were their qualifications and training for the course?

4. What courses were offered at the orientation course?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. A three-day institute for new teachers is held in the Yukon Territory each year prior to school opening. Orientation courses lasting from one to two weeks are also held for teachers newly appointed to schools in the Arctic and Mackenzie Districts of the Northwest Territories.

3. The instructors at last year's Yukon orientation course were: Dr. E. Cutler, Kindergarten and Elementary School Methods Specialist, University of Alberta; Professor A. Renaud, Specialist in Anthropology, University of Saskatchewan; Professor E. Moore, Department of Curriculum and Instruction, Faculty of Education, University of Calgary; Miss M. Morris, Language Arts Specialist, Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development; Dr. S. Morris, Associate Professor, Faculty of Education, University of Calgary; A. E. Johnson, Supervisor of Elementary Instruction, Fernie, B.C.; Mr. K. Clark, Specialist in Elementary Education, Cassiar, B.C.

The following instructors participated in orientation courses held for teachers newly appointed to the Northwest Territories: Professor A. V. Parminter, Assistant Professor, Faculty of Education, University of British Columbia; Professor D. Stevenson, Lecturer in Anthropology and Sociology, University of Victoria; Professor L. Marckworth, Department of General Linguistics, University of Alberta; Dr. W. F. Mackey, Linguistics Specialist, Laval University; Dr. Verdoort, Linguistics Specialist, Laval University.

These groups of lecturers were augmented by school superintendents, teacher consultants, curriculum specialists and other employees of the Territorial and Federal Governments.

4. Courses for Yukon teachers were allocated according to kindergarten, primary, intermediate and secondary sectionals providing instruction on teaching methods. In addition all teachers attended lectures and discussions on understanding the native child and his culture. Courses offered at the Northwest Territories orientation programs included workshops in teaching English as a second language; problems of cross-cultural value orientations; elementary and secondary school teaching methods; the role of the teacher in the north, and cultural inclusion.

CURRICULUM DEPARTMENT IN INDIAN AFFAIRS SCHOOLS DIVISION

Question No. 1,449—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is there a Curriculum Department in the school division of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

2. If so, how many people are employed in the Department, what are their qualifications and how long have they been with the Department?

3. How many books for use in the North have been devised since the Department was established?

4. What liaison is there between the Department and the teachers in the field who are in close touch with the actual learning problems of Indian and Eskimo students?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. There is at present a residual component of the Curriculum Section of the former Northern education service, Ottawa headquarters, which now includes a Head and four specialists.

2. Qualifications and experience of these persons are as follows:

Position	Qualifications	Tenure with Department

SOUTH AFRICAN AND RHODESIAN DEFENCE PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,900—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Are any members of the Canadian Defence Forces citizens of either the Union of South Africa or Rhodesia?

2. If so, where are they stationed now and where were they stationed in June of 1968?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. and 2. Basic enrolment standards for direct entry commissioned officers and men indicate applicant must be a Canadian citizen. However, a citizen of another country with landed immigrant status may be considered for enrolment if in the opinion of CFHQ the national interest would not be prejudiced. To ascertain which, if any, of the members of the Canadian Forces were citizens of either the Union of South Africa or Rhodesia would entail the examination of the files of all members of the Canadian Forces. The necessary staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather this information.

RELEASE OF PILOTS

Question No. 1,921—Mr. Robinson:

1. Of the 2,295 pilots released from the service during the years 1960-68 inclusive, how many were released for (a) medical reasons (b) reduction in establishment (c) normal retirement policy (d) own request?

2. Of those released under 1(a), what was the average number of years service as a pilot?

3. Of those released under 1(d), what was the average number of years service as a pilot and what was the cost of training them?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1, 2 and 3. This information is not readily available and cannot be provided without the identification of each individual involved, the drawing from War Service Records of the confidential personal files and the examination of these files to obtain the information, some of which will require considerable searching and interpretation. The necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather this information.

AIR CREW ALLOWANCE TO PILOTS

Question No. 1,922—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the total amount of air crew allowance paid to pilots in the Canadian Forces?

2. How many members of the Canadian Forces received such allowance and what is the number in each rank receiving this allowance?

3. Do any other members of the Canadian Forces receive special payments or allowances apart from the normal pay allotment and, if so, how are they designated, who are the recipients, how much do they receive and what is the total cost to the federal Government?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Pilots of the Regular Forces receive rates of pay in accordance with QR & O article 204.215. As of December 1, 1968, the total monthly amount paid was $2,967,261.00.

2. As of December 1, 1968:

Rank	Number
Lieutenant	384
Captain	1474
Major	584
Lieutenant-Colonel	208
Colonel	86

3. Yes, attention is directed to Chapters 204 and 205 of QR & O. The amount of work which would be required to provide an accurate answer to this question is excessive, and the necessary expert staff is not available to gather the information.

REFUNDS TO TENANTS AS TAXABLE INCOME

Question No. 1,940—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

Are refunds made by property owners or landlords to tenants in the Province of Ontario, as provided by legislation of that province, regarded as taxable income in the hands of the said tenants, under the Income Tax Act?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): No, except where the tenant is using the leased property for the purpose of earning income.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIR CANADA

STRIKE OF MECHANICS—APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATION OFFICERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. We welcome him back from his well earned holiday and only regret that the apparent inability of his 26 colleagues and various assorted parliamentary secretaries to deal with problems made it necessary for him to return. I should like to ask the minister if he has anything to report on the situation with regard to the Air Canada strike and whether the government or the minister have done anything to bring these parties together. If so, what progress has been made and what steps have been taken to have the service restored and negotiations continued.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I returned home two days early because somebody sent me two box seats to the Montreal Expos baseball game on Sunday. They were very scarce, in view of the great team we have.

On the week end I took advantage of the occasion to contact the negotiating teams of Air Canada and of the International Association of Machinists to see whether any progress might be made should the two negotiating teams resume negotiating. I am pleased to say that at my request they resumed negotiations last night at midnight and were still negotiating at eleven o'clock this morning. At that time they were due to take a coffee break and if they have not resolved their difficulties they will continue to negotiate tonight at ten o'clock, or at the latest tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has given consideration to the desirability of bringing a mediator into the picture at this stage. I appreciate the delicacy of this kind of situation; but in view of the time that has passed, because they have been negotiating since last November, I wonder whether it would be desirable to bring in a really effective mediator now.

Mr. Mackasey: I have done a little better than that. I have brought in two mediators, Mr. Kelly and Mr. Wilson of the Department of Labour conciliation branch. They are with the parties, and have been since last night at midnight.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—STATUS OF GREECE WITHIN ALLIANCE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has his attention been drawn to a statement made in Toronto this week end by Dr. Papandreou, the former Greek minister of state, in which he said there was a direct line of responsibility for the Greek coup in the NATO command and the United States defence department? I should like to ask the minister whether the NATO council of ministers have discussed the question of whether or not the present administration in Greece should be permitted to continue to be a member of NATO in view of the fact that it is violating the commitment contained in the NATO agreement that all member states shall strengthen their democratic institutions.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, each member state of NATO is of course an independent government and runs its own affairs. But as the hon. gentleman has said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization itself places special emphasis on the determination of members to safeguard "the principles of democracy, individual liberty and the rule of law". This is an obligation made upon each of the member countries. There has been no decision, of course, of the members of NATO, to dissolve the treaty in respect of Greece, but it is the desire of all within the NATO alliance, and certainly the desire of Canadians, to see democratic institutions re-established in Greece.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether at the NATO meeting in Washington he or any other member of the Canadian delegation raised the matter of the right of the present military junta in Greece to continue to sit on the council of NATO?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. The representative of the Greek government at the NATO council said that they were proposing to take certain steps in the direction of democracy. There was no other discussion.

NATO—MEETINGS SUGGESTED BY WARSAW PACT TO EFFECT DETENTE

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the NATO council has decided not to accept the objective of the Warsaw Pact to hold direct meetings in an effort to achieve detente in Europe, is the minister in a position to say whether Canada was in general accord with the NATO council's decision to seek alternative means of pursuing detente?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the decision of the NATO powers at the meeting in Washington was not as negative as my hon. friend suggests. It is very forward looking, and we are looking hopefully to the possibility of discussions on the future of Europe that we and others sought. There was some doubt however about the practicality or the effectiveness of holding an immediate conference. That is a quite different matter. On that point Canada agreed that there should be some hesitation, that the main purpose should be to promote detente, and that a conference at this time might not be the best way of achieving that purpose.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the famous Sainte-Scholastique international airport.

Has the Prime Minister received a letter from the premier of Quebec, Mr. Jean-Jacques Bertrand requesting that a meeting be held, with a view to discussing the airport question, which is presently giving raise to a great deal of confusion in the province of Quebec, as the Prime Minister is certainly aware of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, that after a year's—

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: We thought it was ten years.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: —experience, the Liberal caucus has learned that it is better to applaud me before I have answered than after.

In answer to the question proper, I can say there have been exchanges of views between the premier of Quebec, Mr. Bertrand, and myself, but prior to the final announcement concerning the site of the airport. Since then, there has not been, to my knowledge, any request made on his behalf to meet me, although there have been meetings between ministers of the federal and the provincial governments, in order to discuss further the matter of the airport.

The decision taken by the federal government following these meetings has been to confirm the choice already made.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTION OF SABOTAGE IN DERAILMENT NEAR TORONTO

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport but in view of its importance I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. Has he received any report in connection with the derailment of a passenger train near Toronto yesterday, particularly in view of the suggestion there might have been sabotage involved in this accident?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have received no report from the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. The department will be answering questions in the house tomorrow and I am sure that if this question is asked and the minister has an answer he will be willing to give it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

AIR CANADA STRIKE—DELIVERY OF FIRST CLASS MAIL

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General what means have been taken to transport the large volume of first class mail ordinarily carried by Air Canada in view of the strike now taking place?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we are using other airlines—the C.P.R. and chartering other aircraft.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to ask the minister how much delay in the delivery of mail is anticipated as a result of this situation?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, we believe the delivery will be very satisfactory, although not as complete as it was with Air Canada because Air Canada has very many more routes. We intend to hire or charter as many more planes as necessary to fill the gaps.

[Translation]

DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Communications.

At the present time we are using the facilities of other air transport companies for mail conveyance.

Last week, while in western Canada, I found that in two provinces among others, some letters mailed from the parliament buildings on April 2 had been delivered on April 17.

Is the minister aware that the postal service in the west is that unsatisfactory?

[English]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is ready to let me have the covers in question, I shall inquire. However, I can tell him that all those complaints are somewhat exaggerated.

A few days ago, an inquiry conducted in Edmonton by the Chamber of Commerce showed that over 90 per cent of the city's businessmen were quite satisfied with the postal service.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications.

He has just said that 90 per cent of Edmonton businessmen are quite satisfied with the postal service, but is he aware of the fact that this does not even represent 5 per cent of the population of Alberta?

AIR CANADA STRIKE—MAIL SERVICE TO SYDNEY-STEPHENVILLE-GANDER AREA

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Nordair will be overflying intermediate points between Halifax and St. John's Newfoundland, will the minister tell the house of his department's plans to service the Sydney-Stephenville-Gander areas as a result of this strike?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, Nordair left last night with mail for the maritimes.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

MANITOBA—DISCUSSION OF PLANS OF PREMIER

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask what answer the Prime Minister has given to the request of the premier of the province of Manitoba to enter into discussions of the plans for Manitoba's economic development set out by the commission on Manitoba's target for economic development?

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the minister did not understand my question.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would allow the hon. member for Lisgar to ask his supplementary question? I will return to the hon. member in a moment.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was about to answer my question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I was, Mr. Speaker, but I yielded to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I gather the point of order will now yield to the Prime Minister's answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the letter to which the hon. member refers but I will look it up. I do know that officials of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion are planning to meet with officials of various provinces to discuss with them problems of economic expansion.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

AIR CANADA STRIKE—MAIL SERVICE TO SYDNEY-STEPHENVILLE-GANDER AREA

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): When I directed my question to the Postmaster General he just said that mail was going to the maritimes. I realized that from the words of the Prime Minister a couple of days ago, and I did not expect the minister to repeat them. I sincerely asked what is going to happen in respect of those intermediate points between Halifax and St. John's, Newfoundland. That is all I asked.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, all I said was that the charter service provided by Nordair for the maritimes began last night. Because it was a Sunday, last night the mail for all the maritime points happened to be comparatively light. But the service commenced anyway, because it has to return with maritimes mail picked up from Halifax and all the other intermediate points.

AIR CANADA

STRIKE OF MECHANICS—DEPARTMENTAL AIRCRAFT TO HANDLE AIR FREIGHT

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious shortage of air freight space on other airlines due to the Air Canada strike I wonder whether the Minister of Communications has now considered using the services of Department of National Defence aircraft or the Department of Transport so as to liberate some of the space on the Canadian Pacific Airlines and other carriers in Canada for commercial people who find it essential to use air freight? I have particularly in mind the flower growers in my area whose entire annual income is derived during a short period of time and depends entirely on air freight.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS IN COMPENSATION FOR LACK OF GRAIN SALES

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the very serious shortage of cash on the western prairies due to the lack of grain sales, has the government any plans to assist our farmers in this regard before the critical spring planting season commences?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the ministers responsible for that area of government have said.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF WOODS REPORT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Have complaints been received from the Quebec War Veterans Association and also from the Association of War Blinded inquiring as to the length of time it has taken to get the Woods committee report before the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs; and if so, what consideration has been given to these complaints?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have received a brief on the matter from the Council of Veterans Associations of Quebec.

The existence of such documents originating with the War Blind Association was not brought to my attention by officers of my department.

However, I explained to the Veterans Affairs Committee, last Thursday, and to the House, during the preceding week, the procedure that the government intends to follow with regard to the Woods report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADDITIONAL PASSPORT ISSUING SERVICE

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I know I am speaking on behalf of all M.P.'s who would like to have some of the pressure taken off them from wires, telegrams and letters we are receiving. In view of the continuing difficulties and the overload of work at the passport office in Ottawa, owing to the new regulations, resulting in a serious backlog in the issuance of passports, can we have an assurance that immediate consideration will be given to the opening of sub-offices in Vancouver and other centres for the issuance of passports? I ask this question because we are getting heartbroken at the wires and telegrams we are receiving on this matter.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I intend, perhaps later in the week, to make a more complete statement on this subject because I understand how serious the matter is. But perhaps it will help to explain the situation if I say that the volume of applications this year is up by 28 per cent over last year.

Mr. Winch: That is the reason we want something done about it.

Hon. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In a very excellent announcement many months ago it was said that sub-offices were to be opened. The question I want to ask is, when will they be opened?

Mr. Sharp: It had been our intention, and was so announced, to open them next year.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would consider changing the advertising in regard to passports, which advises people to apply two weeks in advance, when the passport office is taking six to seven weeks normally to issue a passport.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is taking two years.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the customary time for dealing with applications was about five days. At the present time it is about ten days.

Mr. Winch: It is six weeks.

Mr. MacInnis: What the minister has said is nonsense. He has it all fouled up.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PARTICIPATION BY QUEBEC IN NATIONAL PROGRAM

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering the statement made Friday evening by the Quebec minister of health, Mr. Cloutier, that Quebec had no other choice but to move to complete medical insurance, would the minister advise the house whether he had received any communication from the Quebec minister or his staff indicating that they now wish to join the federal medicare program?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not officially, Mr. Speaker. However, the officials of my department and those of the department of health for the province of Quebec are talking back and forth on a continuing basis. We know that Quebec is interested in the federal proposals and is aware of them, but they have not made any definite decision as to when they are coming in, and if they are coming in.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COUNCIL AND SUBSIDIARY BOARDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has yet appointed the Canada Manpower and Immigration Council.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the hon. gentleman some time ago in an earlier debate, I have been waiting for the nominee of one of the important national organizations, which has not been forthcoming. However, notwithstanding that deficiency, I have proposed the names to my colleagues and we hope that the council will be appointed very shortly.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration also recommending the immediate establishment of subsidiary advisory councils, to which he referred in his speech some months ago?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Just as soon as the major council is appointed we will proceed to nominate the four subsidiary boards.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the minister to seek the advice of this council in an urgent way with regard to the employment of student manpower in the country?

Mr. MacEachen: There will be a number of important policy matters that will go before the council and the boards. I doubt whether it will be possible to receive the advice of the council on this very important matter, which is now immediate and upon us.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC AREA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the very alarming statistics put out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on Friday, that approximately half a million Canadians are unemployed, representing almost 6 per cent of the labour force, what is the government doing about this very serious and alarming rate of unemployment?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that I have taken the liberty of making the suggestion that it is difficult to ask for a general statement at this time. I think the question ought to be more specific than asking for a very general answer. In my humble opinion this kind of statement should be made at the time of motions.

[Later:]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the alarming unemployment statistics for the nation as a whole, and particularly for the Atlantic provinces, which are now undergoing such serious financial circumstances—I understand the figure for the Atlantic provinces, in respect of unemployment, is 10 per cent of the labour force—what is the government doing about this very serious rate of unemployment, especially for the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might point out to the hon. member that, if my recollection is right, the same type of question was asked last week. I would still like to suggest to hon. members that this type of question always produces the same type of answer. Whichever minister is responsible for the matter raised, he will make a long statement as to the accomplishments of the government, and we are not much further ahead having heard—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: —either the question or the answer. This is why I have always suggested to hon. members that there is not much point taking many minutes of the very limited and restricted question period to undertake this kind of exercise.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I agree with Your Honour's ruling, but my question was prompted by the statistics put out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on Friday last; therefore, my question is of an urgent nature.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR STUDENTS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on the specific question of unemployment. In the light of the Canadian Press national survey showing that some quarter of a million students are likely to be without employment this summer, would the minister consider tabling in the near future a statement about what programs his department is going to implement this summer to deal with this situation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will consider tabling such a statement.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Now that it seems the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is taking steps to establish this long delayed council, would the Prime Minister encourage the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to bring forth to the government his recommendations with respect to the prices study group?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister has already consulted with me on certain nominations, and I think that this will be done forthwith.

HEARING AIDS—INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I notice that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is not in his place today, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I can borrow the ear of his Parliamentary Secretary—his good ear, please. In view of the recent hearing aid swindle in connection with which an Ontario judge ordered repayment to six elderly people who had been charged $360 for instruments which cost $45, can the minister say just how soon his own investigation into hearing aids will be considered? I am aware that we get "soon" as an answer to this question, but these people have been waiting a long time to hear the results of this inquiry, and perhaps the news should be forthcoming at a very early date, now.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I assure the hon. member that I shall bring this matter to the attention of the minister as soon as he returns to the house.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONTAMINATION OF FISH IN LAKE HURON

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I should like to know what assurance his department can give that cohoe salmon and other fish taken out of Lake Huron this summer are not dangerously contaminated by high parts per million of d.d.t.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): We are examining this situation. We are satisfied that any parts per million of d.d.t. in cohoe salmon taken from Lake Huron would be well below the level which might be considered detrimental or dangerous. However the investigation is being carried on and I hope to have more information in the next few days.

Mr. Cullen: Will the minister tell me how he knows the levels are not dangerously high if the investigation has not been completed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This could develop into a debate. The minister and the hon. member might get together, if they wish, at ten o'clock.

TRADE

WHEAT—NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPAN TO SELL CANADIAN SURPLUS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Would the minister tell the house whether, during the discussions between Canadian and Japanese officials held last week, any mention was made of the possibility of trading or selling part of our 1968 wheat crop which is still on hand?

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can assure the hon. member that my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was a very ardent advocate on behalf of our wheat producers.

RAPESEED—DISCRIMINATORY JAPANESE TARIFF AGAINST CANADIAN PRODUCT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. During the recent trip to Japan was the question of the discriminatory tariff on rapeseed exports to that country discussed with the representatives of the Japanese government, and if so can the hon. gentleman give us any indication of the response received or the attitude expressed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we had a long and detailed discussion on this subject. We pointed out to the Japanese government that we considered their treatment of rapeseed as against soyabeans to be very discriminatory, and they have promised to take this under consideration.

OSAKA '70

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT OPENING OF WORLD FAIR

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if it has yet been decided who will be representing Canada at the opening of the world fair in Japan next year, in May?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Japanese government has consulted with us as to whom we would like them to invite.

Mr. Bell: Is the minister aware that because of the invitations floating around tc both the Prime Minister and the Governor General some consternation has been caused in other countries concerning the pattern they should follow, and that a decision should therefore be forthcoming as soon as possible?

Mr. Sharp: The Japanese government is looking to us for some guidance.

Mr. Baldwin: God help them.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): In view of the fact that in 1969 there are huge stockpiles of wheat in western Canada while, at the same time, eastern farmers are receiving very low prices for their corn, would the minister make representations to one of his former colleagues and ask her to stop making commercials for the sale of rice?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—U.S. REACTION TO CANADIAN RECOGNITION—STOCKHOLM MEETING

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Has the United States State Department informed the Canadian government that the United States is—and I quote—"very much concerned" about Canada's attempts to negotiate diplomatic relations with Peking?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): When we announced our intention to do so the United States government indicated to us that they did not endorse this action on our part and were concerned about the position of Taiwan. I expected this would be the position, and I was not surprised.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask the minister whether he can tell us to what point the negotiations with Peking have now progressed?

Mr. Sharp: I think I have reported to the house on this, but if not, I do so now. Arrangements have been made with the Canadian ambassador in Stockholm to meet with a representative of the Peking régime in Stockholm some time in May to open the discussion on substantive issues.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Can the minister explain to the house the meaning of the statement attributed to him in Tokyo, that the question of the recognition of Mainland China was to be dealt with separately from the question of the admission of Mainland China to the United Nations. Was the minister suggesting that the one is not necessarily contingent on the other, or that he will support the one and oppose the other?

Mr. Sharp: While in Japan I did make a statement somewhat along the lines of that which has been quoted by the hon. gentleman from a newspaper report. What I said—and this is government policy—was that the two issues of bringing about an exchange of diplomats with Peking and the question of the membership of Mainland China in the United Nations, or the replacement of the Nationalist government by the Peking authorities in the United Nations, are two separate questions which we intend to deal with separately.

I added that our attitude with respect to membership in the United Nations would be consistent with the progress we make in negotiations for the exchange of diplomats.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would not allow the Chair to see other hon. members who are waiting anxiously for an opportunity to ask questions.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Yes, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order, I would be more than pleased to accede to your request though there have been many days on which I have been unable to see you.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the hon. member that I see him every day.

CANADA COUNCIL

SCHOLARSHIP TO STANLEY GRAY

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address my question to the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker. In view of the number of complaints which I, and I am sure many other members of this house, have been receiving concerning the doctoral scholarship in the amount of $5,500 granted to one Stanley Gray, the disruptive activist of the McGill staff, has the minister requested the Canada Council to withdraw this grant?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hales: Is it the intention of the minister to ask the Canada Council to withdraw it?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: That cannot be the intention of the Secretary of State because it is not within his competence and it would be most indecent of him to make suggestions to an agency such as the Canada Council, to give it instructions or to make decisions for it, considering the responsibilities this institution has received from parliament and the law that governs it.

"DON MESSER'S JUBILEE"—DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is directed to the Secretary of State because of his interest in many aspects of culture. Will he be attending the festival outside this building tomorrow at noon in honour of a great Canadian group of entertainers, Don Messer's Jubilee?

CANADIAN CULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT OF JURISDICTION

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State a question.

Could he soon advise the house of the results of his meeting with the Quebec Minister of Cultural Affairs and assure us that the government of Canada will continue to be directly interested in Canadian culture, including Quebec and Quebeckers?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot report anything more than was said in the press release, to the effect that it was an information meeting at which we learned a great deal about the internal intentions of Quebec, within its own jurisdiction, regarding cultural activities.

As to the assurance that the federal government will continue to be interested in intellectual matters, I do not think it is necessary to assert it once again since it is an essential concern of all governments, municipal as well as federal and provincial.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State say whether the government of Quebec has refused or accepted to discuss cultural matters with the federal government?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVES MEASURE TO IMPROVE ECONOMY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. He will no doubt recall that last Thursday, I believe it was, I asked him whether there were any negotiations with provinces with which there is not now a FRED agreement to assist them in their economic development, and the minister replied that his officers were having discussions with such provinces at the time and that he hoped to have a report very shortly. Has the minister received such report from his officers, is any action now contemplated and, if he is not yet in a position to make a statement, when does he expect to be?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I said last week, the deputy minister of my department met with the representatives of the Maritime provinces. He will meet this week or next with the representations of other central and western provinces and it is only after that extensive tour that we will be in a position to announce which policy will be carried out.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether it is the view of himself and his department, as expressed by the deputy minister, that it will take several years before it will be known whether much can be done about regional disparity? Is that the official view of the department?

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I must have misunderstood the minister last Thursday. May I ask him whether these visits by the deputy minister and other officials to the provinces are in order to negotiate a plan, whether they are preliminary discussions, or what is the position? Is this a long-term proposition, or is something likely to be done within the next couple of months?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, those meetings will enable us to discuss the bill referred to last week, in order to obtain the views of the provinces on their approach to development in the fields within their jurisdiction.

They will provide us with a mass of information and views which will be extremely useful when the new regional expansion policy is discussed in the house.

STATEMENT BY TOM KENT RESPECTING DISPARITY IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are another two minutes left. In view of the fact the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys was denied a supplementary question a moment ago, perhaps he might be allowed this one.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is he aware that Tom Kent, his deputy minister, said in Halifax several days ago that it will be several years before the department or the minister will know whether regional disparity can be overcome? May I ask him whether he knows of this statement, and does he agree with it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question cannot be asked in that way. The hon. member knows that ministers cannot be asked to confirm or deny statements made outside the house. The question must be put directly to the minister.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Then may I rephrase it, Mr. Speaker. Is it the minister's opinion that it will be several years before he and his department will know with any great certainty, whether regional disparity can be overcome in the Atlantic provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long it will take but what is important is that we should go to work as soon as possible. I know that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) used to be the premier of a province which falls in the category of underdeveloped provinces. I know also that he worked hard while in office but the province has not yet reached an appropriate level of economic development.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I think that nobody can say at which time the required equilibrium will actually be reached, but what we are going to do is start as soon as possible to correct those regional disparities.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

EXPENDITURES FOR NATIONAL MUSEUMS

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have now gone beyond the time assigned to questions, but the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has been foiled by other questions in his effort to ask a question. Perhaps he might be allowed to ask a question at this point.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Secretary of State and it has some urgency. Arising from the resignation of the Director of the Museum of Natural Sciences on the ground that government austerity has brought the museum to the end of its rope, and in view of recent similar statements by Dr. Taylor of the Museum of Man, and Dr. Boggs of the National Gallery, may I ask the Secretary of State what plans he has to deal with the growing crisis in our national museums?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that his question is of very general nature and is the type that ought to be placed on the order paper. Perhaps it is a matter about which the minister might want to make a statement on motions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADDITIONAL PASSPORT ISSUING SERVICE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not rise during the question period for two reasons. First, I did not want to take the time of questioners and, second, I wanted to illustrate graphically the relation of my point of order to the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who admittedly has been out of the country for some time on government business and in the national interest.

His answer that it takes eight to ten days to get a passport is just about as much out of line as it is for me to stand here at this hour on orders of the day raising a point of order. As he answered the question I was just giving a message to a messenger to pick up four passports for which I have been waiting for over two months. I have made a number of passport applications during recent months. In fact, with respect, I dare say I have made even more than the minister since he has much more national business to attend to. The minimum time period—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: On a question of privilege, then—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a clear abuse of the rules of the house. The hon. member has risen on a point of order, and when the Chair decides there is no point of order for the hon. member to pursue he furthers his grievance by claiming he is rising on a question of privilege. I suggest to him that the point he is making now, which may be an entirely valid one, is not, in my view, either a point of order or a question of privilege. Nevertheless, he may have a question of privilege, and the rules require that I should hear him.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I must say I respect the generality of your comment and the generosity of your thinking, but I rose initially on a point of order so as to point out the disorder in the minister's statement. May I switch to a question of privilege because my point of order has no reflection upon the hard working people in the department; they are just snowed under. My question of privilege is this. With the Air Canada strike, along with the delays that have been referred to in the passport office, there is a very real functional problem even when you do get your passport. The four passports that I as a member of parliament obtained today are for people who hope to fly on Thursday. How do I get these passports to Nova Scotia or the west coast? I only hope—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can only say to the hon. member that he cannot have this done through a question of privilege.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REPORT STAGE

The house resumed, from Friday, April 18, consideration of Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. And the motion of Mr. McQuaid (for Mr. Woolliams):

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by inserting in clause 7, after the word "age" on line 9, page 24, the following words:

"except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast".

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, last Friday we were still dealing with the famous clause 7 of this bill, which we wanted deleted, in view of its ambiguity, and above all—these are the points that were debated at length last week—the fact that it fails to take into account the views from our ridings. In fact, its passing would be opposed to the dignity of the human beeing.

Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why we keep on insisting and we would like to hear others, particularly members of the government, express their views and those of their constituents on this clause now before us.

We spoke about everything and we finally find this section so stupid and ridiculous that we wonder how such views could possibly be submitted in a place as dignified as this house.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), who spoke Friday on this amendment has just explained that because we did not get our way with the first amendments, we will at least make an attempt to improve somewhat this legislation. We want some points to be explained, and that is the purpose of this amendment.

These ridiculous and stupid things are leading the debate into dog houses, cow stables and pig pens, as we are now dealing with bestiality. It is imperative to respect human dignity, in such a way that the law will provide for the most freakish cases, too bestial for human beings. That is the purpose of this amendment.

• (3:10 p.m.)

We want that problem to be examined seriously and hope that we have heard the last of the argument that the clause before us only serves to sanction something which is quite normal, undercover of the right to liberty. Mr. Speaker, we fail to see how individual freedom can be improved by saying that an act which is now considered criminal in itself will be accepted from now on because two persons committing it are 21 years of age. We believe that the passing of such a legislation is useless.

At least we would like the amendment to be made more specific by adding the words

"except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast."

Mr. Speaker, we have now reached the point where we do not know whether we are protecting the animals rather than man through this amendment. Whatever it may be, the discussion requires that we point it out.

Mr. Speaker, it would be really important that the majority of the hon. members express their own opinion freely, because we believe that we should not rely on the vote. Recently, I happened to be explaining that, but my time elapsed before I could finish. I readily understood what was meant by "free vote". To speak of a free vote implies the existence of votes which are not. That struck me as rather odd. However, on seeing how the "voting machine" works, one finally understands what the expression "free vote" means.

If government members cannot have a free vote, they could at least rise and explain their reasons for voting in favour of the bill. If they do not want to do so, if they are not against homosexuality, they should at least have the courage to rise and tell us why they are for it. We have not heard from them yet.

We are aware of the opinions of our good neighbours of the New Democratic party who, under the guise of liberty, are generally in favour of such legislation. At least, they have clearly expressed their opinions. We respect them even though we do not agree with them.

However on the government side—we know it because we are told so behind the scenes and because we know their constituents who, incidentally are preparing to vote for the Ralliement créditiste—they should express the opinion of the population on that matter.

That is what we would like to know. It is the role of this parliament to reflect public opinion through the people's representatives here, and I wonder if it makes sense that some hon. members should remain silent under the pretext that those are minor questions and that an actual and well-established situation must be clarified.

Even if 10, 15 or 20 per cent of the population were suffering of that so-called disease, homosexuality, it should in no way justify its legalization, and I wonder where one can find arguments to justify it? We should like to hear reasonable arguments.

When we are told that such a condition is due to an illness, we are quite in agreement; but if it is something that concerns mental or physical health, we should, I think, be logical and admit the true significance of the figures supplied by the experts.

Less than 1 per cent of homosexuals are truly sick while the rest are nothing more nor less than vicious people.

The younger ones are corrupted and raped by older ones. It is merely the decline of morality that accounts for the higher percentage of cases. If this house intends to legalize such acts when they are committed by persons 21 years of age and over, one must admit that it is legalizing a vice.

Let us see things as they are. As a matter of fact, if we were dealing with a medical problem, we would organize psychiatric clinics in order to cure these sick people, as is being done for alcoholics, the mentally ill and the handicapped. Why not try to cure these people instead of legalizing a loathsome act?

The other day, I mentioned kleptomania, as an example, but I was not taken seriously, I think. So, I will give it another try.

Even though a number of kleptomaniacs are not responsible for their actions because they are prompted to commit them by a morbid impulse, is it a reason for us to legalize theft for persons aged 21 years or over under the pretext that they suffer from kleptomania?

That is exactly what we are doing with respect to homosexuality. We approve of indecent, even criminal acts. It is an indictable offence in that it leads youth astray, relaxes morals, brings about decadence, causes disorders and paves the way to anarchy.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is one of the causes of the type of anarchy now prevailing. When one sees young people with energy to spare looking at their elders with a critical eye, wrangling and protesting and even committing acts of vandalism as a manifestation of their anarchic minds, it is because they do not accept the society that we prepared for them.

Are such bills likely to help us check this anarchictic movement?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Is that the example we set for the young people of the country? Is that the way to encourage our young people to put forth their energy for the common good of all? It certainly is not.

Indeed, what will the public reaction be when this bill is passed? I hope it is not.

The distinctions that are made here, for instance, are not always made elsewhere. The people, generally, do not take time to make the required distinctions and reservations. And so, what happens? In the eyes of the public, those of the young people of Canada, one thing will be legalized: homosexuality. There will always be professional go-betweens who will give 18-year olds cards proving that the bearer is 21. These things are being done.

As identification cards are still not compulsory, it will be difficult to tell who is 21 and who is 20, 11 months and 30 days. The latter will be sent to prison while the former will go free. To say that homosexuality is legal from 21 years of age on is erroneous.

The consequences of this bill must be analyzed. If, as I have said before, we are dealing here with a sickness, then let the Department of Health take care of it and not the Department of Justice.

As for the disastrous consequences of the passage of this clause for all our young people, they should be fully looked into. Indeed we must keep our youth wholesome and set them patterns to follow. We must be their models. Canadian Parliament must not set bad examples to all this youth which expects much more from us.

In fact, young people expect to be given the opportunity to develop their initiative. They wish to make full use of their energies. They are ready to work to attain their ideals, in short, to co-operate towards the development of the entire country. It is not by presenting such platitudes that we will succeed in proposing a really worthwhile ideal to our youth.

That is a major argument which should compel us to reflect more and to act a little more seriously. Even if we live day by day, we must always think a little further than the tip of our nose. We must always foresee what will happen in six months, in a year, in two years and even what will happen to future generations. And what about the generations that will be scandalized by the passage of such bills: it will be a stain on our political history. That is why we insist so much. We have been discussing the problem for three days; in fact, we began the fourth day of discussion today. We want nobody to say that we have not done our duty, as our constituents asked us to do at the last election.

They demanded that we oppose strongly the omnibus bill. They also asked all candidates in Quebec to do likewise. That is why even if we seem to stray from the subject when we ask government members to express their views, we are certain of reflecting the opinion of the majority of the people.

I said the other day, and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) did not seem to believe it, that there is not one person, not one organization that has asked me to support this bill, though it is the subject which has brought forward the greatest volume of mail, and inspired the most discussion. Indeed, we have the support of 100 per cent of the people; mind that: 100 per cent of the people.

Possibly, some may be ready to accept that; but none of them ever urged his member to support such a bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have to consider this situation most seriously. The whole country is watching, wondering about the decision we are going to make while aware that with the majority government, we can be forced to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, many hon. members, and I number myself among them, are at a disadvantage in this debate because to a large degree it is a lawyer's debate concerned with fine points of legal interpretation and the difficulties of applying the law. For those of us not trained in the law this makes things a little more difficult. Those of us who are primarily interested in the social aspects of the proposed changes find great difficulty in discussing them free of the excessively legalistic atmosphere imposed by the technicalities that are involved.

For instance, in regard to the proposed amendment creating a new section 149A I can well see that from a strictly legal point of view this change may be desirable. I have been told that the law as it now stands in this regard is almost impossible to enforce and that it opens the door to unsavoury actions such as blackmail of homosexuals. As it is difficult to enforce and ineffective from a legal point of view, the legal profession and the judiciary quite naturally are of the opinion that if such restrictions are ineffective they should be removed.

This may be all right from a strictly legal point of view, but what about the social implications? If we sanction homosexual practices in any degree, no matter how small, surely we will have great difficulty in maintaining that homosexuality is objectionable in a general or social sense. The defenders of the amendment creating this new section have made a great thing of saying that it in no way implies official sanction of homosexuality. This may be true in a strictly legal sense, but not every young Canadian is a lawyer. There is bound to grow up a general public sense that homosexual practices are all right and tolerable if practised discreetly. In my view this amendment will simply open the door to a gradual acceptance of homosexuality in all its ramifications.

What this amendment says in effect is that homosexual gratification is entirely permissible and quite acceptable in certain circumstances, but in others remains a grave moral and criminal offence. This is a witches' brew. It is only going to produce confusion in the public mind and could very possibly lead to legal problems and entanglements far more complicated than those that the amendment seeks to get rid of.

The trouble is that homosexual practices will no longer be completely forbidden nor completely sanctioned. The amendment is neither fish, fowl nor good red meat. It is a timid half-way measure that will satisfy neither those who hold that homosexuality in any form is an abomination, nor those reformers who regard it as a regrettable human aberration that is more a disease than a crime and something that should be removed from the Criminal Code in its entirety. I believe this amendment to be a weak compromise between rigid rejection by our society of homosexuality in all its manifestations, and the wide open, completely permissive society sought by radical reformers.

It would be interesting to know whether our legal authorities have been able to come up with any figures on the rate of conversion of young people to homosexual practices. I am not aware of any such figures but I believe they are a critical factor in the consideration of this amendment. I believe so because, after all, what we will be saying to our young people from now on, if this legislation carries, is that homosexuality is criminal and abhorrent but only up to the age of 21. There is something particularly absurd in setting an arbitrary age frontier of 21.

I would like to go back for a minute to the conversion rate of young people to homosexuality. It has always been stated that homosexuals are not criminals but are sick. This may or may not be true. But are not kleptomaniacs sick? Are not a great many murderers sick? Are not rapists sick, and a great many other people involved in crimes? But the fact remains that our laws are made to protect law-abiding normal citizens, whether it be from people who are sick or people who are unfortunate in some other way.

The argument has been made that the homosexual must be protected from blackmail. Surely our young people also deserve protection. The urge of these people to convert young persons to their ways is established. Let us not forget this. There are doubts in my mind whether homosexuals are in reality sick to the extent that is often presented in their favour. Homosexual practices are common in prisons where men are without women and vice-versa. They often occur in private schools where groups of men are shut up together for long periods of time. Does this make them sick? Where I come from people have a different terminology for such actions.

The minister needs to bear in mind that not all homosexuals are sick. Some may be sick, but there are a variety of reasons why people are this way. Definitely not all these people are sick, and I maintain that the law should remain as a deterrent, that the law is to protect average citizens, those who believe in the natural processes.

There are other things such as male prostitution to which this amendment will open the door. As long as consenting adults can carry on legally provided they do so in private, this is a very distinct possibility. There are so many ramifications to this whole problem that I believe we should strike out this amendment and go back to an extensive and scientific study of the whole problem in all its aspects. Such a serious and far-reaching social problem should not be tampered with as one small part of a large, omnibus amendment of the Criminal Code. For all I or anyone else in Canada knows, a thorough study of the question might indicate that homosexuality should be removed entirely from the realm of criminal law and treated as a social welfare problem, as are human weaknesses such as tuberculosis, mental illness, etc. As far as I can see all this amendment does is make things easier for some lawyers and judicial officers, without getting at the root of the problem in any comprehensive way. In doing so it will open the door to many possible developments which at this time we can only conjecture.

While I am on the subject of amendments to the Criminal Code, may I say I wonder why more significant amendments were not undertaken when so many subjects were under review. For instance, It would be interesting to hear from the minister whether his departmental officials have studied the legalizing of prostitution. I do not have the report at hand at the moment, but I recall seeing the results of a study carried on in an area of the United States where prostitution was legalized. This action resulted in a dramatic and I might say very welcome drop in crimes such as rape, muggings, sex murders and things of that nature. I would think the minister would be well advised to look into this aspect. It seems to me that the problem of increasing crimes of violence, sex offences and crimes in the streets generally should have a higher priority in terms of legal reform than should minor facets such as homosexuality, abortion and the like.

I do not wish to labour the subject any further, but it does seem to me that with this amendment creating a new section 149A the minister has laboured long and strenuously and brought forth a mouse. At best it does no more than scratch the surface of a tremendous social question. At worst it provides semi-official sanction for a practice which the majority of civilized people still regard with revulsion. It may be quite clear to lawyers that this amendment does not constitute official sanction, but to the majority of Canadians untrained in the law and unable to judge its delicate nuances it will come to mean that the government of Canada no longer regards homosexuality and homosexual practices as offences against our social code. Whatever the legal profession and the judiciary may say, the adoption of this amendment will be taken generally as meaning that this practice has official approval.

Because I believe that any good this amendment will do will be far outweighed by its bad effects I suggest its withdrawal. In making this suggestion I would close by repeating what I said earlier, that the whole subject of homosexuality be taken up by somebody competent to study all its aspects and its position in our modern Canadian society today. To my mind this would be a sounder and more civilized approach to a question that most people admit is a huge and growing social problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the spectacle the House of Commons is presently giving of itself to the country with the discussion of the bill on homosexuality is rather sad judging from reactions which have been coming in from several areas of the country.

We must admit that sometimes humans are even more bestial than animals.

If possible, I would like the people to know through our media of information what we think of homosexuality.

Practically everyone agrees that homosexuality is a disease. Therefore, instead of making it legal, why not bring forward a bill aiming to build hospitals where those sick people could be treated? I suggest we should take this course instead of introducing in the house a bill allowing adults to commit such acts together.

I said a minute ago that human bestiality is more stupid than animal bestiality. As a matter of fact, when has one seen two elks or two bears play together?

There is an animal species, the rabbits, called the hot race. When has anyone seen two adult rabbits practise homosexuality or sexual bestiality? Never, because they know it is not the natural thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, we, who are reasonable people, have initiated in the house a debate to determine whether homosexuality should be legalized, whether we should allow two men or two women twenty-one years of age and over to have fun together, if they fell that way. That is more stupid than animal bestiality.

Mr. Speaker, they want to sanction such bestiality by means of a national act. As my colleague from Champlain (Mr. Matte) said a while ago: the population is against. Who suggested to the Minister of Justice, two years ago, that is so the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who exerted pressures on him to have such a bill introduced in the house?

We see quite clearly that the measure should not only be up-do-date but also act as a sort of preventive medicine.

A while ago, my colleague from Champlain eloquently said that that bill is intended for our 16, 17 or 18 year-olds; but let them wait until they are 21 years old, and then they can give free rein to their instincts.

And to think, Mr. Speaker, that an educational program could so easily be set up right across Canada to correct that situation. There are so many beautiful women and young girls who are looking for husbands as handsome, if possible, as the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) who would be all too glad to settle for a happy wedded life.

But, Mr. Speaker, instead of introducing a bill to educate the young, to encourage them to marry, and to give them the economic context in which they could found a family, the government invites them, through legislation, to prepare for homosexuality when they reach the age of freedom, 21. To think that we should lose such handsome men and beautiful women through the fault of the Department of Justice!

Mr. Speaker, we are not the only members who feel this way for some government members think exactly as we do. Not only are they afraid to speak up, but they have been forbidden to do so because the bill must be passed at any cost. There will be no free vote on this matter, because the existence of the government would be at stake; so the government demands that its "followers" vote for the bill.

I know government members who represent French-Canadian ridings, for instance, in the province of Quebec; they have received hundreds of protests against this bill. But they are too lazy or too cowardly to get up and say so. We are accused, we, of the Ralliement créditiste, of playing politics with this issue. Did we introduce this dreadful bill in the house? No, Mr. Speaker, we did not ask the government to introduce this bill.

Even before discussing the omnibus bill we asked that it be split. The government said no, take it or leave it. Of course, I expect that members will vote as a groups on those clauses. The government has an absolute majority, and it will have its bill adopted. However, let us not fancy that the Canadian people as a whole will accept it.

I have just come back from a tour in Western Canada I have visited Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg, and received several telephone calls following radio and television broacasts from persons who termed the bill as inhuman. I know there are sick people, but in that case, there is only one thing to do, and it is to cure them.

I received a few telephone calls from homosexuals who are in favour of the bill. They did not ask me to meet them, but, they told me it was a problem for them and that if they were now caught in the act, they might lose their job.

Mr. Speaker, there might be an answer to their problem. Let us make them work longer hours and they will have less time to indulge in homosexuality. In my opinion, that would settle the problem. This legislation will not prevent them from practising homosexuality; on the contrary, it will merely sanction it.

That is why the Ralliement Créditiste strongly objects to the passing of this bill.

There are homosexuals in all classes of society. There are some even in colleges and universities. There are some even among the members of religious orders. We all know that; the fact remains that the homosexual act is still against nature, inhuman and, as I said earlier, very stupid. It is a form of "human bestiality" which is more stupid that "animal bestiality". I am convinced of it.

Mr. Speaker, the first thing to do in order to standardize human behaviour is to promote education. Instead of the CBC showing us television programs dealing with homosexuality, hippies, or people who live make a living from that, why not use the mass media such as television and the press to educate the adults?

We would thus be educating the young people who are growing up, our own children, instead of cramming their minds with the notion that at 21 they can engage in homosexual acts in all confidence.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, why not educate our youth? We refuse to spend money for education. We would be very happy to see every day, on the public network, the Minister of Justice educating the people in this respect. If he is not familiar with this field, let the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) undertake this job.

Thanks to television, radio and the press we could make the people understand that homosexuality is a disease, that it is curable and that it is possible to see the light.

We appeal not to the beast but to the reason of the beast. The government does not want to do anything. From time to time on television the Minister of Justice states that his legislation will change nothing, that the situation will not deteriorate further, that from now on homosexuals will not be put in jail and that it will be very well that way.

Let me state that the situation will change because this legislation invites the young people of 15, 16 and 17 years of age to engage in homosexual acts when they reach the age of 21. Why? Because the economic conditions which prevent them from entering into marriage, will oblige them to take their pleasure among men or among women.

Mr. Speaker, are we stupid enough to believe that man has been made for man? The good Lord created woman for man. God created man and woman; that is normal, natural and proper.

An hon. Member: It is good.

Mr. Caouette: A Liberal, Mr. Speaker, tells me it is good. He is right.

Mr. Speaker, here is our point of view: for the last three or four days, my colleagues have been objecting to the passing of this bill. People think we are bores. They say: the Ralliement créditiste delays the work of the house. But it is really quite simple, we would not delay the house if this legislation were amended, so as not to forcibly legalize homosexuality. I repeat that homosexuality is perennial. It will exist fifty years from now, as it existed fifty years ago. But that does not mean that we should legalize it, because we would be transgressing the laws of nature.

Such is my opinion of the bill before us.

Animals do not do such things and we are rational animals. Nobody will convince me that the difference between reason and absence of reason lies in homosexuality.

If that is the difference, we should be ashamed of being rational beings.

Mr. Speaker, this goes against nature. Reason is being devalorized the introduction of such a bill is based upon bestial motive.

The Ralliement créditiste will keep up its opposition to such a bill. No matter whether it lasts one week, two or three weeks or even a month, we shall do everything possible to prevent the passing of this bill. Closure alone would stop our fight against that bill which I call diabolical.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I did not initially anticipate participating in this debate and certainly I will not do so unduly this afternoon. I say this for a reason advanced by members on both sides of the house during the discussion of the principles and generalities involved in this bill.

Those sections of the bill which are contentious, provocative and sensitive, dealing with abortion, lotteries and homosexuality, involve individual consciences and morality. I certainly agree with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), and I do not think there is much disagreement in the house, when he states that law is not morality. Morality depends upon so many things. What you may find moral, Mr. Speaker, with your wisdom, I might find to be of another shade. Morality is an individual thing.

When this bill came before the house and the debate approached, I was bothered about whether I should speak and contribute what little I can to the debate. If it is a matter of individual conscience and a new morality about which we are talking, be it homosexuality, abortion or lotteries, to name the three main ones, I ask: Can we ever have a consensus of conscience? I thought I had seriously decided not to participate verbally in the debate but to cast my vote and explain my action to my constituents at any time they sought an explanation, and in reply to letters I have received on the various sections of the bill but, having listened to the debate in the last three or four days, some of the loose language used on both sides of the house has bothered me very much and I have decided to say a few words on the subject. We talk about conscience. Some may say that this chamber is the conscience of the nation. On the other hand, having listened to many hon. members speak in the debate it is very obvious that in trying to resolve matters as the conscience of the nation and their collective constituents they are substituting their own consciences. This is not a new problem; members of parliament have faced this dilemma many times in the past. A member knows that the stand he takes may cause irritation, conflict and division in the heartland of his support, namely, his constituency.

In trying to resolve this dilemma it occurred to me that while we talk as the conscience of the nation and try to resolve this problem with our individual consciences, we have the unfortunate situation of members on the government side, for reasons of government policy, not being able to express their own views on the various clauses of the bill. I suppose this is really why I am contributing what little I can to the debate on the clause of the bill dealing with homosexuality. In my opinion this is the most bothersome clause in the bill. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) may miss many, if not all, the votes on the bill when they are called. I have another and personal reason in this connection. In my case, not a bust in Saskatchewan but somebody in British Columbia may be the reason for my not being in the chamber.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Some day, perhaps.

Mr. Nowlan: That will be my reason for not being in the chamber when some of the votes are called. Of all the clauses in the bill, the one dealing with homosexuality gives me most concern. Except for an amendment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) on the question of lotteries, which I think has some merit, my predisposition as of now is to vote with the government on all sections of the bill other than that dealing with homosexuality. My mind could change, because it has changed since I began listening to the debate. It started to change when I tried to resolve this dilemma of conscience.

People have been using their individual consciences in this debate. Some of my hon. friends have been attacking amendments and trying to impose their own views on others. This is a matter of individual morality, yet there has been no expression of individual morality by members on the other side even though I know they have very individual views on this matter which is not political in the sense of most normal, political issues. It is unfortunate that in an area where politics means nothing, where party labels go out the window, we have not heard expressions of individual conscience from members on both sides. If we had, we might have a more relevant appreciation of what is the real conscience of the nation on this question.

We have not yet heard a member speak in support of any form of homosexuality or lesbian conduct. Let us not forget that women are involved in this matter. This type of conduct has to be performed between two consenting adults. The only thing the chamber has heard about for the last four days is homosexuality, but let us not forget that there are lesbians in this country. This type of conduct is not normal and no one has approved of it.

Are we the conscience of the nation, representing our respective constituencies? How can we radiate that conscience when the largest block of voters, not the majority of voters, is represented by those members from the great urban areas of Canada who have not been allowed to speak? I appreciate that my hon. friends in the New Democratic party support holus-bolus the amendments in this bill. They have given us an expression of opinion. The Creditistes and many members of the Official Opposition have spoken on this question and the dialogue has been joined. We have heard expressions of opinion sincerely held.

If there was anything that brought me into the debate it was the debate of Friday last when I listened to two speeches on this provocative and emotional issue. Those two speeches will be remembered for some time by this junior member. One was the speech of the right hon. member for Prince Albert, expressed in his particular style, a style that we shall perhaps not see too much of in the house in the future because of the problems of getting elected for some 20 years in this day and age. That type of speech actually may not glorify this place, but it adds lustre to it. The other speech was that of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who has a completely different debating style. But for once in this debate the dialogue was joined and their two views on the question of homosexuality were expressed in vivid, colourful, and in most cases logical language. Therefore, one in a dilemma could perhaps make up his mind.

I give full credit to the hon. member for York South and his ability as one of the real debaters in this chamber. However, unfortunately, in my opinion, he put forward a very specious argument. He castigated those who are against the amendment. He suggested that anyone who questions the amendment must be living in an antediluvian state. He castigated members of the opposition for their self-righteous or sanctimonious approach to the problem. In my opinion it adds nothing to this debate to use such adjectives about sincerely held views. If this amendment is passed, I could say it will introduce another, new Liberal law of licentiousness. But that is specious reasoning and I do not intend to maintain it further.

I do not think the cause of this amendment is helped when, for whatever reason, the minister of Justice refuses to admit that in effect its purport is to legalize homosexuality. The fact is that the amendment takes away a prohibition that at the present time makes this type of conduct illegal. My colleague on this side of the house who spoke before me said he was not a lawyer. I happen to be versed in the law to a degree, although not with the ability and experience of the Minister of Justice. However, I cannot understand why the minister should be specious in respect of what is in my opinion the substance of the bill. The amendment will give legal sanction to this type of conduct, and if it gives legal sanction then, ipso facto, by implication it legalizes this type of sexual act. If I referred earlier to abortion, Mr. Speaker, that was not my intention; I am concerned now only with the aspects of the bill relating to homosexuality.

The hon. member for York South, in talking about the proposal in connection with homosexuality, stated both inside and outside the house that every progressive western country had enacted such a law. But the only two countries I have heard mentioned in this debate are Great Britain and Sweden. I am not saying we should never be among the avant-garde or that we should never lead the way, provided there is a tremendous body of public opinion behind us to show that an advance is necessary. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) told us that he got sanction for this position when he ran in the election last June. I must say I do not recall this issue as being among the election planks upon which the voters were asked to express an opinion.

The hon. member for York South told us, as I mentioned, that every advanced western country had adopted a provision along the lines proposed to this parliament. Yet the only two countries mentioned in this connection, to my knowledge, were Sweden and Britian. Frankly, I am not over-enamoured by either the social or political conduct of those countries. Surely we in Canada can map out our own lines of social conduct. We do not need to lean on those, in my opinion, weak reeds. We were not told that New Zealand, Australia or any of the states of the United States had enacted legislation along the lines now proposed to us.

During this debate many speakers have sought to justify this amendment on the ground that today we are living in a pluralistic society. This is another catch phrase which is being bandied about increasingly. It is said we cannot define standards of morality because we live in a pluralistic society. What does the phrase "pluralistic society" mean? In itself it is meaningless, rather like that other expression, "don't let the state into the bedroom"—good public relations, maybe, but nothing else. The state does enter the bedroom every time we turn on the television set in the bedroom. Programs are under state regulation, even though it may not be the kind of regulation we would like. If a man kills his wife in the bedroom the state will not remain outside.

What does "pluralistic society" mean? What kind of division does it imply? I do not care how pluralistic our society may be, or how many streams enter into it. It does not matter to me how many English-speaking, French-speaking, Greek-speaking or Italian-speaking citizens make up our society. I believe it is one Canada though it has problems, but that the plurality of the different streams contained in it makes no difference to the setting up of a philosophy of law or a concept of morality. Ever since the Judaeo-Christian concept spread through a large part of the world, western nations particularly have developed a concept of morality and a philosophy of law based on this understanding. Yet there are those who would destroy this on the ground that we live in a pluralistic society. Reasoning of this type is specious and only confuses the issue.

The hon. member for York South was quite eloquent and, at one point, almost vicious in his criticism of my right hon. friend from Prince Albert, maintaining that my right hon. friend had destroyed his credibility as a defender of civil liberties in Canada because he held an interpretation of morality different from that held by the hon. member for York South. The hon. member for York South is himself renowned as a defender of civil liberties, yet I found his contribution to this debate to be surprisingly weak.

I would remind hon. members that we shall later be considering a clause concerning the proposed breathalyzer test, something which will come closer to Canadians and involve the civil liberties of more Canadians than all this talk about homesexuality or lesbian conduct. This is an area in which civil liberties are directly involved. Yet it is private conduct. The minister shakes his head. I agree it is not private conduct when a man takes his car and gets into an accident. But we propose going much farther. As I understand the amendment, it is to be an offence if a driver refuses to take a test.

I do not say I am against such a provision. Indeed, I would be prepared to accept it. I agree that statistics have shown a definite connection between liquor and the slaughter on the highways. The law is bound to move into this area, even though it cannot put an end to drinking. But if we are logical, and if we are talking about civil liberties, here is an area of definite concern. Under the new law it will be an offence to refuse to take a test. Yet private conduct is involved, and a driver who has taken the two or three one-ounce drinks, all that are necessary, will produce the reading of .08 which is sufficient to justify further proceedings.

I could be driving my car straight down the highway and straight into my own driveway—and it would be driven straight; I could be stepping out of the car, and a policeman could say: I suspect you came from that party at the Skyline last year during the Liberal convention and there just might have been some alcohol available there so I want to take a reading. I could tell him: I have only two steps to take before reaching my house, officer. I am glad you followed me. I did not exceed the speed limit. I did not wander over the white line. I just want to enter my house, kiss my wife and greet my children. So I shall say goodbye to you. His reply is likely to be: You cannot do that under the new law. You are committing an offence if you do not come to the police station and have a reading taken.

I am prepared to accept this restriction on my civil liberties because statistics show there is a real connection between drinking and driving. While there are no statistics to serve as a guide when we are considering the problem of homosexuality, I remind the house that no one who has spoken in the debate has approved of these practices. They have all expressed repugnance to them. If we can agree to restrict civil liberties in connection with alcohol, why cannot we take the collective opinion expressed by members of this chamber and say that, through we cannot legislate morality, surely we can help define morality and in this way give expression to the repugnance voiced by all hon. members who have spoken so far.

Members of the N.D.P. in particular have talked about justifying these proposals on sociological grounds. Reference was made to blackmail by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey). There is no reason for there to be either more blackmail or less blackmail as a result of the passing of this amendment. I recall one case in my practice of a person who was being blackmailed. But it was not because of anything in the Criminal Code. The man was being blackmailed because of his conduct—conduct which the Minister of Justice himself says is abhorrent, repugnant and immoral. Why cannot we continue to use this provision as a means of defining morality?

I am not saying that this problem should be solved by imposing legal sanction or that there should not be a clause in the bill providing that somebody found guilty of this conduct should be punished. In fact, I should like the minister to tell me whether anybody has ever been charged under this section of the code. If you have two consenting males, who is going to squeal? In any event, I am not saying that legal sanction should be the way to attack this problem. I agree with my hon. friend from Battle River that there are other avenues of approach. Perhaps we should amend the bill to provide that anybody so found guilty should be given psychiatric treatment. Let the problem be investigated so we can ascertain what is involved.

Hon. members have mentioned many aspects of this problem. Unless something is substituted for the removal of the legal sanction, you cannot help but lessen the moral stigma. I have not heard one member say that this conduct is moral. I would vote against this homosexuality clause because it does not go to the root of the problem while at the same time it removes the legal sanction against offences with respect to which there have been no prosecutions. This amendment will make for misinterpretation and, as I said, will certainly lessen the moral stigma.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, we have to study amendments moved by the hon. members for Abitibi and Calgary North (Messrs. Laprise and Woolliams). Those amendments would require no debate if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) had wanted to take the advice given him at the time of the introduction of this omnibus bill, when it was suggested to him to remove the clauses concerning homosexuality and abortion.

If both those clauses had been removed from this shameful bill, we would not have wasted three days protesting.

Do perverted promoters, free thinkers who tolerate homosexuals, think they justify themselves and the government of Canada, by saying that only the government is responsible for intimidating homosexuals by means of corrective justice if the act is committed in private between consenting adults? It is precisely an impure act committed with the mutual consent of participants.

We put the following question: Can the government depart from its moral responsibility to the extent of showing no concern at all for the deterioration and the disintegration of our whole social structure? And can the Canadian Government, by renouncing its responsibilities with regard to these problems, escape the blame of encouraging immorality?

Our society is a fragile, artificial creation, designed as a whole, not by natural permanent forces, but by a man-made code of morality, based on Christian ethics.

Society is strongly opposed to sodomy, as it punishes murder or theft, because it strikes at its roots, namely the family. It is nonsensical to pretend, as our legislators do, that society can do without something which affects its own existence. One might as well argue that murder, as it affects the duration of life, could be left to the individual conscience, if one admits that homosexuality, which also affects life, could also be so classified.

A resurgence of homosexuality and an increasing tolerance of its practices are unseparable from a declining civilization, are the stigmas of a decaying civilization. Being the symptom of immorality and of a serious social ill, it speeds up the disruption of the whole social structure.

In the decaying cultures of Great Britain and Europe, such a state of mind has influenced the arts and recreation, showing itself in utterly aggressive exhibitionism, under the guise of a dazzling revolution.

Literature is poisoning the mind of young Canadians and Americans, where it is making common cause with drug addicts and beatniks.

In spite of the avowed pragmatism of its supporters, the bill designed to legalize homosexuality in Canada is a menace not only to young people, to parents and families, but also to society.

To condone such repugnant and socially bad morals is to deprive this young and virile nation of its most precious heritage.

I had the chance of hearing some of his observations.

I have here a letter from the Thetford Mines chief of police. In it, he writes, and I quote:

Last April 3rd, twenty (20) chiefs of police of the Eastern townships region made a study of it—

He means the bill omnibus.

I therefore send you a list of the amendments we propose, with a view to facilitating the application of that law and to serving better the public we have the duty to protect—

[Mr. Dumont.]

We have the right to propose amendments, because the bill should never have been introduced.

They would have several amendments to propose regarding the bill omnibus, and here is what he has to say about that:

That clause 7, amending sections 147 and 149, be amended by deleting paragraph (b); that is, the words "any two persons, each of whom is twenty-one years or more of age".

• (4:30 p.m.)

We are asked, in the light of the findings of serious studies made by police chiefs, to strike out those words at least, because this bill which, in our opinion, should not be passed, is now at a stage where we can only move amendments. Therefore, I ask the movers of this legislation to seriously consider the findings of those studies.

Moreover, I know that the conscience of several hon. members is being tortured these days. That of the Minister of Justice is, because he must go on defending his bill. He would have preferred to amend it but because of his party's tyranny, he must toe the line.

We have talked with several government members and I wonder why they hesitate so much to express their opinion freely in this house because some of them say that they would like to be allowed to vote according to their conscience.

In expressing such an opinion, they sometimes give the impression that they vote without considering their conscience and they are forced to submit to the guidelines of the party. In the presence of such obstinacy on the part of the government that takes decisions and forces government members to comply with them without a word, we are justified in asking ourselves whether there is not something hidden in that bill that nobody wants.

In fact, I do not see why, if it is so sure of the quality of its legislation, the government would not trust its members. If they consider the bill adequate and consistent with their conscience, they would not object to it and the Minister of Justice would be well advised to clarify things in that matter, if only to ease the conscience of those poor members who are forced to obey without a word.

In the field of homosexuality it must be kept in mind that even today, when two homosexuals want to commit such acts privately, nobody will denounce them and no sentence will be passed on them. It is only when one of them has a grievance that he will be able to lodge a complaint.

And if one of them is not consenting, the omnibus bill will not apply. Therefore, the omnibus bill does not bring anything constructive in the field of homosexuality. At best, it will create a climate of doubt and uncertainty, which will protect the active pervert and guilty homosexual. He will be the only one to lose by it and if there is no consent, I cannot see why we are being led to believe that this bill is going to change anything.

I think we are now at the cross-roads of history. And we, Canadians, should look back on the past, at the way our ancestors lived and ask ourselves whether the latter would not think we have indeed departed from the most sacred principles of our faith, if they could hear us now discussing this bill.

I am sure they are ashamed of us and that if we continue to give in, they will raise from their tombs, to put us back in the path of honour. Let us not put out the torch of faith which they passed on to us, at the cost of so many sacrifices and of so much blood. I believe that a nation which fails to remember is a dying nation, because one never builds the future of a country by disowning its history.

I cannot understand how one could be justified in voting for this bill. We must at least adopt those amendments and I am urging every one of our leaders to express their views since we are responsible for the well-being of our people and are able to do what is necessary in order to preserve moral values while there is still time.

I say: Let us not allow the morality of our people to deteriorate, let us not allow such evil depravity through legislation.

Therefore, I appeal to the Minister of Justice to amend this bill on homosexuality, if he wants Canada to remain the country which has produced so many valuable things.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I also want to express my opinion and support the amendments moved by the hon. members for Abitibi and Calgary North (Messrs. Laprise and Woolliams).

I believe it will be a historical day for Canadians in general, if this bill is passed, because it seems to me that morals in this country will be rather debased.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee on agriculture, I made a trip to the western provinces. Having seen all the work done to raise cattle of the highest quality, through better cross-breeding, we are coming back to parliament most pleased with our trip, only to deal with a matter that is so much against nature as cross-breeding between men and between women, and that leads me to say the next generation will not be worth much. No western farmer will vote for such cross-breeding. Having heard what we were told in the west about the qualifications pertaining to males and females, I believe that our reasonable Canadian race is becoming a race of poor quality.

Mr. Speaker I really feel sorry as I rise to take part in this debate this afternoon, because, along with my colleagues, I strongly opposed that bill on its introduction by the present Prime Minister, and we have kept asking that the whole matter be not put together in the same package so that Canadian Christian Catholics will not be forced to pocket such an affront, because they still believe in morals, even human morals. We have always asked the present Prime Minister to split up the bill, but we were refused.

When the justice portfolio changed hands, we felt happy, for we trusted the present minister more than the former one, since we are aware of his stubbornness. We hoped that the present minister of Justice, who is a father and has moral principles, would simply strike out these two clauses from the omnibus bill; but we realize in great despair that the head of the Department of Justice is actually not the present minister but the Prime Minister, who still exerts dictatorial authority over it. The minister has been unable to change the least thing in that famous bill initiated by the Prime Minister.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to crush the Minister of Justice. In fact, I am sorry for him, and if it were possible to weep for him I think that many hon. members would do it today. It seems to me that because of this party dictatorship which muzzles all cabinet members this clause will pass automatically since this is a majority government.

That is why in campaigning throughout the country the Liberal party said: give us an absolute majority and you will see how we shall govern. They won an absolute majority but I think the people will repent bitterly for the rest of their life.

When such filth is brought before us—and I call that filth without wince—I think that acts so much against nature should not even be discussed by any self-respecting government.

But what can be done? This matter has to be dealt with since it has been brought before the house. They do not want to let it go. Here is a small bundle of rot which they do not want to part with. They want others to taste it.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the first one who is going to try to have me taste it, will be putting his life in danger. Yet other members must have received letters of protest since I have received some myself—over 1,500 of my electors asked me to object and to try to get these two clauses at least deleted.

But the cabinet members will not speak. It looks as if they have not received any letter. However, I have read rather eloquent reports in the newspapers. I shall not speak of letters I have received from my ridings since they will say that I have indoctrinated my electors.

I have collected some letters and statements published in newspapers outside my constituency which anyone can read. One of those articles was entitled: "Letter to the member of parliament" and had been sent by the Association of graduate nurses of Saint-Henri, Lévis constituency. The hon. member for Lévis has certainly received some protests. This is what the article says:

As for homosexuals, it is possible that some of them are suffering from mental illness which the state must detect and cure, but it is not the majority. You know quite well, the more the law will be permissive in that respect, the more corrupters there will be who will endeavour to take our youth along the road to perdition and moral depravity.

If druggists were authorized to sell to anyone, without prescription, heroin, marijuana, etc... would there be fewer or more drug addicts? The answer is clear, is it not? If all obstacles are removed, vices and crimes will spread more than ever.

One must not forget that sodomy was the direct cause of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha and that the decay of morals in ancient Rome led to the fall of the Roman Empire. Every day, one can increasingly note the fast decay of morals in North America, the disintegration of the family, the increasing ease with which one can get a divorce, the surrender of the citizens, parents and even elected representatives before their most essential duties—

I think that this nurse knew that her member of parliament was a Liberal.

The letter goes on:

—we ask ourselves in terror if the hand of God will not weigh heavy on us, as it did on Europe through two horrible wars within fifty years.

In the name of heaven, stand up and unite with all French-Canadian and English-Canadian members of parliament, whether they be Catholic or Christian against those iniquitous laws, because the law of God must prevail over partisan or government solidarity, public and individual interests.

You may rest assured that all the people, particularly in the province of Quebec, will think more highly of you.

It is signed:

R.S.D., registered nurse
Saint-Henri,
Lévis County

I believe in the riding of Lévis there has certainly been some opposition. The letter I read did not come from my constituency or that of Lapointe, but from the riding of Lévis.

Mr. Marceau: No.

Mr. Gauthier: The hon. member for Lapointe says he did not receive any letter. His constituents are intelligent; I find it strange that they have not yet found his address.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we would like to hear government members state their reasons for endorsing the bill. Then, we could show the transcript of their speeches to their electors and tell them: that is what they think. But there is no way of knowing, because they remain silent.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a document prepared by La Ligue des citoyens et propriétaires de Boucherville which takes exception to the bill on homosexuality. The member for Boucherville must have received it even though his electors may not know his address. (Laughter) In case he has not found the time to read it, I am going to do so, and I quote:

Please find herewith copy of a letter sent to Canada's Prime Minister, Mr. L. B. Pearson, and to members of the House of Commons—

Mr. Pearson is mentioned because the present Prime Minister was then Minister of Justice. The letter goes on:

La Ligue des citoyens et propriétaires de Boucherville Inc. has decided, during a regular meeting, to advise the House of Commons that they object to the bill on homosexuality.

It has been resolved that matters of a much more urgent nature were pressing the members of parliament than legislation on sexual offences committed by perverted persons. We feel that it is much more urgent to look after normal citizens which form a majority than to pass legislations for a small, albeit influent group, in order to legalize acts against nature.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that I do not quote this article because the member concerned is here but rather because I came across it by chance. I do not want him to think that I hold any grudge against him because I quote articles that have been published in his constituency. As a matter of fact, I hold him in high esteem and there are many respectable people in his constituency.

We respectfully submit that parliament should deal rather with the housing problem and the homeowners' situation—

I simply wish to advise their M.P. that they categorically object to homosexuality as well as to other provisions of the omnibus bill.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I have before me a very important article —but time will not permit me to read it all— dealing with homosexuality, when it was discussed in England. So, as many like to follow in England's footsteps, I shall quote part of the article.

The lesson taught to the provincial Liberal party will have been useless! This catchall proposal, where the good and the horrible are found side by side (no doubt this is a trick to have the whole package approved) will turn into a second harakiri for the Liberals... Too bad!

To induce and help reflection, other than the one-way consideration given the matter by the three guests on the program "AUJOURD'HUI" on the CBC's French network, on December 27, I would like to summarize two articles; the first, dealing with homosexuality, was written by Raymond Lacoste and published in Carrefour (Paris) when the British Parliament was debating a legislative proposal that has now become law, and the second, dealing with abortion, being a study made by the High Committee on Population and Family of France.

To legalize homosexuality?

On February 11 last, the British Parliament adopted a legislative proposal legalizing homosexuality. Raymond Lacoste, a Parisian journalist, comments—

The debate has brought to light the seriousness of the problem. There are from 50 to 60 million unnatural acts committed each year. The number of sexual crimes which, in 1939, stood at 5,000 per year, reached, in 1964, 20,000; during the same period and later—

Statistics are given—

23,470 while criminal offences reached a total of 303,000 to—

I do not know if an investigation was being carried out in the bedrooms, but apparently, there was some accounting made of all such things!

I continue:

An honest Labour member, Mr. Tommy, went on to say: I protest against the tone of alleged intellectual superiority adopted by the supporters of the bill. What they are asking, in a word, is that we give approval to male prostitution, when, a few years ago, parliament dealt severely with female prostitutes and gave chase to call-girls. Today, through some strange mental aberration, British legislators are showing more indulgence for acts against nature than for acts that, although sinful, are after all normal!

Raymond Lacoste goes on in some grimly humourous way which should make us cry instead of laugh:

"Grave" consideration was the order of the day during the debates. Needless to say that, when the vote was taken, the beautiful young men with mascaraed eyes who filled the galleries broke into applause so great was their joy!

The defenders of the dear boys put forward all sorts of arguments... Very soberly, Mr. Wood stated that homosexuality does not carry with it the risk of illegitimate births! Why send an uranist to prison? Is that not the same as condemning a Don Juan to a few years in a harem? (This argument put forward by Mr. Absi, a member, gave rise to laughter among his colleagues.)

There were strong objections to the bill. Some speakers showed the nonsense of a system which will authorize men of 21 years of age to commit an act while punishing individuals 20 years and 10 months old. But the promoters of the legislation insisted that there was no reason to deal more harshly with homosexuals than with lesbians who have their own club. They are spared by the British law. Many speakers emphasized the nature of complete demoralization caused by the gidian vice and its damage to society.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time is expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

REPORT STAGE

The house resumed consideration of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and the motion of Mr. McQuaid (for Mr. Woolliams):

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by inserting in clause 7, after the word "age" on line 9, page 24, the following words: "except as to bestiality and carnal copulation with a beast."

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in participating in this debate because of its great importance. However many members and some ministers consider it of little importance. This vital question is related to another moral issue which affects the existence of men and the respect they command in society.

Mr. Speaker, if our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) are stupid enough to introduce legislation as bad and as indecent as this one, they should be expelled from parliament. This is no ordinary legislation which we are now considering, but degrading legislation which will lead our nation to suicide.

Knowledgeable people like the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister have the nerve to introduce a piece of legislation as indecent and as degrading as this one. Mr. Speaker, we cannot find words harsh enough to describe there criminal actions which we are about to allow.

Mr. Speaker, this is what we are doing now. Here is patent evidence of irresponsibility on the part of the Liberal members. They will pay dearly for their mistakes. Someone will have to pay for all that. We have no right to impose upon the nation such legislation. It is immoral, unchristian, antisocial, inhuman and against anything you want.

All Liberal members are in favour of that. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as well as a great many opposition members favour the passing of this bill. They consider themselves as saviours of the people. According to them, they promote the establishment of a just society. At the moment we are really degrading society. That is what we are doing. That is what the Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives and the NDP members are doing now. Somebody will pay for all that. Such social injustice cannot last any longer. Somebody will pay because justice will follow its course. This degrading legislation will lead many individuals to destruction. They will lose their freedom, their personal identity, respect for others if they abase themselves so far as to commit such indecent acts. On account of this disreputable legislation, many citizens will lose their moral sense. The permanent stains on people's conscience are caused by the commission of those inhumane acts on account of the passing of those corrupting measures. The passing of such immoral, diabolical, corrupting and rotten measures will turn everything into muck under the nose of those who advocate them and share the opinions of those who are already in such situations and think it smells nice.

We are abusing the confidence of the society we should reform, which gave us the power to administer it, to lead it in the right direction and the necessary authority to provide it with real freedom, so that it may become a just society, a stainless, uncorrupted, pure society. We are not attending to our duty. We are degrading society because we do not want to assume our responsibilities. Some prefer to be led by partisanship.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a letter I would like to read to the house. It was sent by a citizen of my constituency. Some members may say they did not get anything from their fellow-citizens in that regard, because the latter know that those members will not object to the passing of this bill.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, people know I am opposed to it. I have in my office more than 1,000 letters that were sent to me. I am going to read one of them. All the people writing to me beg me to stand against the legalization of such acts of barbarism.

In fact, I should like to table all those letters I received, if I were allowed to do so. The citizens also tell me I can give their names. As a matter of fact, one of them says in his letter he is not afraid of showing his convictions. He is a great man, a great Christian. I quote:

If I had to vote—

—on this bill, I would vote against it, since the Prime Minister does not want to split it up into several parts. However, there are certainly many good things in this bill; but since the wheat has been mixed voluntarily with the tares, when it would be so easy to separate them, in conscience, I would have to vote against it.

Incidentally, by refusing to split up this bill into several parts, the Prime Minister violates—

—the Minister of Justice also.

—the conscience of his members; they have to choose between their conscience and their loyalty to the party.

I fear very much that within the Liberal party especially, the cowardice —of the Liberals...

—in front of a Prime Minister who notoriously abuses his authority by failing to respect the conscience of his members, partisanship, and party loyalty will prevail over the duty of conscience. If several Liberal members were brave enough to say frankly to the Prime Minister: "Split up your bill into several parts and you let the members free to vote according to their conscience, or we shall vote against this bill, even if the government is defeated.

We will rather follow the demands of our conscience than those of party solidarity. I am certain that the Prime Minister would then give in. But I doubt very much that there is now in Ottawa, in the Liberal party, a sufficient number of courageous men to succeed in this.

This is what my constituents write me. The government members do not speak of it because they fear that they would never have the courage to express in the house the thinking of their constituents.

The author of the letter also talks of abortion. I will not speak of it, but I will just continue quoting the letter:

As for homosexuality, the state, in the words of Mr. Trudeau himself, wants by this bill to declare itself—incompetent to go into the bedrooms and judge the acts that are taking place there.

There is nothing to object to that except that the State should not allow bedroom privacy to be brought into the limelight.

That is what the passage of this infamous bill will cause to happen: public misbehaviour. And the minister will assume a heavy responsibility, if he refuses to split up and improve this odious bill. I go on quoting:

In short, if this bill legalizing abortion and homosexuality, is passed, public morality will be further degraded.

Is this man right? I shall not disclose his name, but he is a priest.

Mr. Speaker, all the letters I have received are along the same lines. Are people better in my constituency than in those of government members? If the sectors of the government members or of the Conservative members who are going to pass this bill do not protest, it is perhaps because they are all corrupt also. There is corruption everywhere. Mr. Speaker, except in my constituency, where it is nonexistent, and I have just proved it.

So, through this corrupting measure, this stinking measure, as I called it before, we are degrading even more the society that we should make healthier. We are encouraging it to commit those criminal acts. It is an alarming, a shocking and a dreadful situation when people shun their responsibilities, prefer corruption and to run to seed rather than assume their responsibilities.

We should, on the contrary, fight this corruption, this barbarous and unconceivable degradation of the human person, because there is nothing greater or nobler than the human person.

The State should pass salvation laws, moral laws, and educate moralists. In order to heal this dreadful disease of society instead of keeping on corrupting it.

The legislation before us is an odious measure that will bring to their doom countless men who will become devoid of any conscience and any respect for the law. This loathsome law will lead to the degradation of our people and will have a serious impact on the future generations.

• (5:10 p.m.)

We should do our utmost to prevent this bill from being passed, with a view to making our human society more wholesome, a place where men respect each other mutually. Indeed, they are entitled to wholesome, human and social laws. That is the type of laws we should pass, and not scandalous ones that will plunge our Canadian people into a disastrous situation.

Mr. Speaker, I shall bring my remarks to a close by reminding the Minister of Justice that it is still time to divide the bill; in fact he should substitute to it a more Christian, social and moral law. Then, we could in conscience vote for a human just and moral legislative measure.

I therefore ask the minister to withdraw his bill if he refuses to divide it in order to allow the members to pass such articles as may help society; otherwise, we will have to vote against it. But those who support this bill will bear the responsibility even to their grave.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as expressed by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), I believe we are now dealing with one series of amendments in respect of one subject matter which has probably given me as much concern as any of the others. Unlike that hon. member, I am not going to say I will be only a few minutes. I intend to take my full 20 minutes and anything less than that I consider as a gift to hon. members.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) referred to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and read a letter in which it was suggested that the Prime Minister had committed rape by this bill. I must say that I cannot accept that idea. Let me suggest rather that in the month of June last year there was a seduction of the people of Canada and, unfortunately, most of them relaxed and enjoyed it. However, that is beside the point.

Let me say at once that I will be supporting some of the amendments brought in by hon. members on this side of the house. My reasons for exercising this judgment in support of these amendments are in many cases entirely different from those advanced by other hon. members. That being so, I wish to dissociate myself from many of the statements that have been made, but in doing so I am not placing myself on a different or higher level than those hon. members, many of whom spoke with very deeply held convictions, sincerity and emotion. I approach this matter from an entirely different point of view and will vote for these amendments on a different basis.

I think this approach is entirely immaterial in that I believe the amendments will not pass because, as someone has said, of the strange, uncanny and intuitive thinking that members supporting the government have in arriving at the same conclusion as a result of independent thoughts and positions. I am sure they will support the bill in its entirety and vote against these amendments. This is one of those situations we observe from time to time. So far as I am concerned there are other aspects which must be considered. When we get to third reading I intend to support the bill, and I have no doubt at all that these amendments will not pass.

I supported the bill on second reading with reservations. I did not intend to take the opportunity of speaking now but changed my mind because of certain statements made by those who will probably vote in the same way I intend to vote. This makes it essential for me to distinguish my reasons to at least some extent from theirs. I am sure the bill will pass and will receive third reading. I am now, a priori, guessing what will happen, and I see the Minister of Justice agrees with me.

Before going on I should like to say I am glad to note that my friends on the left in the Ralliement Creditiste have spoken at length with considerable expertise on this subject. I am not disparaging their efforts or or their capacity for debate which I regard very highly. We have known for some time that they have possessed expertise in matters concerning financial reform and the Bank of Canada. I am glad to see that they have now developed a second string to their bow.

I have been disappointed by this debate not as to the quality of speeches but because of the failure on the part of hon. members to advance a line of reasoning which goes to the issue, their failure to bring the searchlight of reason to bear on factual considerations and the apparent inability to grasp the nettle and join issue. This is particularly applicable to the government which, after all, having come here to make a change, have an onus to discharge. Let us never forget this. When the government introduces a measure dealing with an issue so complicated, complex and interwoven with our whole social and moral structure over a thousand years there is a heavy onus and burden upon them. Personally I do not think they have discharged that onus completely, although it is not for that reason I intend to vote as I have indicated. I simply point out to those hon. members that this is a very heavy and responsible onus which they must consider carefully as members of this house.

Let me stress the fact that it is the situation within Canada to which we must give consideration because our writ lies only in Canada. What is done in the United States, the United Kingdom and France is something entirely different. What other countries do or refrain from doing should be considered and analysed carefully, but this does not constitute a binding declaration for us, particularly in the case of the United Kingdom.

I have read with great care the Wolfenden report. I read it a number of years ago when it first came out. I have also followed with great interest the course of proceedings in that country. It is a very powerful report and, indeed, no person could dare neglect it. No person who is a member of a legislative body with competence to consider the issue could avoid a careful study and analysis of this report. It contains compelling and persuasive statements which I for one would not ignore or forget. However, it must be carefully studied and examined within the geographical confines and limitations of a certain country. It is for us to consider but it should not be binding on us.

Let me refer plainly to some of the reasons advanced by the government in support of the bill. The first is the suggestion that any change is good, or that any direction in which the government moves must be the right direction. We hear this idea suggested on many occasions these days. Certainly we must change and press forward with alterations and improvements, but a change merely for the sake of change is not good enough. I suppose I am not making unworthy charges against the government because members of the government are in public life and must look to the public and try to show they are alive. My feeling is that much of the zeal and fervour shown by government members for this measure stems from the fact that it takes a new look at our social problems rather than a clear look and therefore they must be in the forefront in support of change and improvement. I think the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) made such a reference. It is not good enough to suggest that we must change unless the people come to the firm conclusion that the change is essential and for the good of all. The government cannot make such a change on the basis of having a mandate. I suppose that in a very general and vague way the government does have a weak case because this bill was exposed very shortly before the election and it might well be said to have been thrown into the various election issues. But I would like to guarantee that no member of the Liberal party or of any other party nailed a sign to his campaign headquarters saying, "We stand for the legalization of homosexuality to all or some extent". I know that the minister does not like the word "legalization" in this context. However, I would like to undertake that nobody said, "Let us think of this in terms of economics. Let us advertise Canada as being the haven of homosexuals". I would ask any member sitting opposite who campaigned in June of 1968 whether he made his campaign literature sound like that in terms of this area of the Criminal Code. If he did so, I would like him to stand up and disclose that he did. I would be very surprised if he did so, but I doubt very much that this will happen.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Some members on the government side and even in the N.D.P. have lauded the minister. In fact, I heard the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) praise the minister and I was quite astounded; it amounted almost to a canonization.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: As a matter of fact, that day—I think it was Friday—I went outside, gazed at the river and expected to see the minister come walking across the water at any time. Then I suddenly remembered that the government already has one water-walker and only one is allowed in that party at any one time, even though the one they have is not doing very well and has fallen flat on his face in the water on many occasions.

We have had some discussion about the word "legalization". I recall reading the statement the minister made to the committee when he read from the Wolfenden report which used that word. The writer of the report had said that it in fact contained recommendations which would legalize homosexuality. I know that the minister stopped there and took exception. He was very careful to make his point at that time.

When you have a sanction, a prohibition with a penalty attached with regard to a great many of the acts of individual people in a society and you remove that sanction and penalty even to a limited extent, it constitutes legalization; it is the placing of the seal of approval in that limited sense. I think the minister was playing with words when he tried to get away from this.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Even your leader did not go that far.

Mr. Baldwin: We come back to this question: Is our society as we know it, as we apprehend it, as we see it in Canada, ready at this time to accept changes such as are envisaged in this amendment? In this regard let us bear in mind that the change was not such a simple and quick one in the United Kingdom. If I recollect correctly, the Wolfenden commission was established in 1954. It sat for 2½ years and made its report in 1957. It took from 1957 to 1967, a period of ten years, for the legislation which ultimately was enacted and now stands upon the statute books of that country to be brought about. Surprisingly enough, such legislation was introduced throughout by private members. I think the final bill was brought in by Mr. Leonard Abse in 1967 in the House of Commons. I stand to be corrected on that. In 1965 or 1966 Mr. Humphrey Berkley introduced a similar measure, but it was defeated. It took a period of gestation, which is a good word to use in connection with this bill, of some 13 years from the time the commission was originally established until the legislation was finally passed. It was a very well written report and its recommendations finally became the law of that country. Let us remember that it is a country different from ours. It has different mores, different social approaches, a different history and a different population in many respects.

I have no doubt that the officials in the minister's department have been considering this problem for some time, ever since the Wolfenden report and probably even earlier. About a year and a half ago there was a case which received a considerable amount of publicity in Canada. It concerned a person who was declared an habitual criminal because he had committed a third, fourth or fifth offence under the Criminal Code and had been convicted of this type of act. Arising from that the government, without what I consider to be adequate preparation and deep and proper study of the subject, added this amendment to the omnibus changes to the Criminal Code, which was then awaiting legislative approval, and brought the bill forward last year.

We have heard a great deal of talk about a pluralistic society. How pluralistic are we to become? Are we to have a set of rules for every small group? "Pluralistic society" is a silly phrase and means nothing. Of course we must adapt and modify our approach to social and criminal problems on the basis not of 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the population but much smaller divisions. But if we take this pluralistic society attitude and apply the reductio ad absurdum rule we will have a law for every person. What kind of anarchy would we then have?

Phrases such as "pluralistic society", coupled with glib cliches such as we must take the state out of the bedrooms of the nation, that sin is not necessarily a crime, and something may be morally wrong but not legally wrong, are frivolous, kindergarten slogans. They have been picked up to some extent and used by the news media. This drivel has been peddled all over the country.

I do not think a great many people have yet appreciated what is involved in this question. Unfortunately, under our rules today and the way we have approached this problem, I cannot make the kind of amendment I would like to make; the kind of amendment I would like to make is denied me. I would like to place a moratorium on prosecutions under the legislation presently in the code for a limited period of two or three years. We all know that the number of prosecutions and convictions which have taken place in this connection is minimal. I have here a book published within the last few months entitled "Sexual Deviations in the Criminal Law", written by Alex. K. Gigeroff. This book makes worth-while reading for anyone who takes seriously his duties in this regard. The author conducted a study, in conjunction with another professor, of cases of gross indecency in a 12-month period in the city of Toronto. It was found that out of the 60 cases studied, 59 would not have been covered by this legislation. One case was in some doubt.

Mr. Stanfield: They would have been guilty, anyway.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, they would have been guilty, anyway. This is the point I make. It covers a very small change. We are probably saying we shall take what has been the status quo and give it legal effect. I fear that by doing so we shall be setting this whole messy problem to one side and forgetting about it for the next 20 years. Had the rules permitted I should like to have proposed, instead, a moratorium on prosecutions and a thorough study of all the issues involved in order that the public might be given an opportunity to direct its attention to these social difficulties, after which the government could produce a number of suggestions dealing not only with the extent to which prosecutions should be launched but with the wider implications—the sociological aspects, the possibility of clinical study and treatment, and so on.

As a matter of fact, I think these sections should be out of the Criminal Code altogether. These matters might well be dealt with by way of special legislation brought into being, probably, only after the closest consultation with the provinces which, from the viewpoint of health and social implications, must have a great interest in the subject matter. It is only when society as a whole has come to accept that certain actions are repugnant or contrary to the usual mores that they can be made criminal offences or vice versa. If we look back to the period of Cromwell, we find that card playing, dancing on Sundays, being intoxicated and so on were all criminal offences. In due course public opinion changed, and these things were no longer considered to be crimes. In the last year of the first world war, because of the need of the allies for industrial alcohol—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member, his time having expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Baldwin: It is a wonderful thing how quickly 20 minutes passes. I shall be very brief. I shall allow the hon. member who is to follow me time in which to complete his speech by six o'clock.

In 1918, changes were made resulting in complete prohibition. Only in the last few years has public opinion pushed governments into returning to a reasonable and sensible approach. Generally, changes made coincide with current thought.

I do not think the government is doing the right thing now. I do not think the course it proposes will have any real effect or be of lasting benefit. I intend to vote for the amendment which would maintain the law in its present form. Possibly the minister will tell me that careful analysis and study of this problem will not end with the passage of the legislation before us. We should consider the whole problem, not just one aspect of it. Before too long has passed the people as a whole should be given an opportunity to study its implications, reach a determination and decide in their infinite wisdom what should be prohibited and what should not. They can only do so if a fair and reasonable opportunity is afforded for an analysis of this problem, after which they could make their representations. For this reason, I intend to vote for the amendment, though when the bill comes to us again I shall vote for it on third reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I sat on the committee on justice and legal affairs which studied this bill very closely and made some amendments to it.

A few members of the opposition have carefully examined the bill to make some amendments to it and to prepare a report that we will be asked to adopt in a few days.

I should like to congratulate one government member, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth), who did a very serious job within the committee and whose interventions certainly helped clear up some problems. Several hon. members have already made strong statements about those amendments. I agree with them, even if I do not use such drastic terms as theirs, for I must, all the same, make my representations. Homosexuality and gross indecency which are the subjects that we must study now are loathsome to me as they are to most of the members who sit on the committee and to most other hon. members.

Last week, I had the opportunity to get in touch with the English provinces of Canada, where I met several Canadians of various religions. I was surprised to find out that the Catholics in Quebec are not the only ones who object to the omnibus bill. On my return, during a discussion with some people, I read in Le Devoir under the heading "letters to the editor", a letter concerning the omnibus bill and written by a citizen of the town of Richelieu in the constituency of the whip of the Liberal party. In that letter, dated February 22, 1969 and signed by Mr. Hilaire Jeannotte, the author recognizes what I could check, during my trip, that 92 per cent of Canadians are Catholic or Protestant, that 92 per cent believe in God and in the Bible and today hon. members are responsible for the morals of 92 per cent of those Canadians who rely on morality rules. But this same Bible in which 92 per cent of the people of this country believe has condemned what we are trying to legalize today. That is why I find it hard to understand some of my fellow Canadians, my colleagues in this house, even some from the province of Quebec, such as the member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), who has some constituents asking themselves some serious questions as to his moral principles. Is he for a morality where anything goes or a morality in accordance with the principles of his constituents? There is also the member for Lévis (Mr. Guay)—

Mr. J. A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): I rise on a point of privilege Mr. Speaker. I suggest to the hon. member that he has enough problems in his own constituency. I can take care of those in my constituency. On the other hand, the people of Trois-Rivières can think for themselves. The hon. member is talking through his hat about the Trois-Rivières constituency.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, we finally succeeded in getting the hon. member for Trois-Rivières to rise. I wish he could do it more often.

Mr. Mongrain: I rise again on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. member was touring the West last week, I expressed views I got from Catholic theologians from Laval University.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The points raised hardly constitute a question of privilege. I would caution hon. members against raising questions of privilege on every point of grievance. I shall, of course, hear the hon. member, but I wonder how far we should proceed in this way.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker. I admit that there are perhaps no grounds for a question of privilege, but when the hon. member for Trois-Rivières says that he attends to the affairs of his constituency and that he is not interested in the orders, I might remind him that he said last week that he had visited the constituency of Champlain. And so, I think he should be more consistent in his statements.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to attack the hon. member for Trois-Rivières on that point only. I have noticed however that he seldom speaks on anything but the Ralliement creditiste. One wonders if he is short of subjects to speak on or if his constituents elected him solely to speak on the Ralliement creditiste in the house.

I would like to mention another member, the hon. member for Lévis, who is absent today, and whose constituents are beginning to realize that it is no joke to have a representative who never gets up in the house to express his opinion, particularly on an important bill like the one before us which concerns every individual and which will concern them even more in the future.

One can laugh; it is easy. One has only to do what the hon. member for Trois-Rivières does so often: he spreads a smile across his face and stares at the other hon. members. Nothing is so easy as making fun of someone else, for it takes much less intelligence to make fun of something than to try to understand it. The reason why the hon. member for Trois-Rivières has always laughed at the members of the Railliement creditiste, is that it is easier for him to do than to try and understand them.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to come back to the problem before us. I was saying that the same feelings which are found in Quebec are also found in the other provinces. What counts is the population as a whole, the average citizen.

Now the population of Canada as a whole is presently against the legislation before us, which was first conceived and introduced in England. And now, inspired by colonialism, we are wont to copy a law which England has already adopted.

In the letter I referred to a few minutes ago, it was said:

> It is a fact that England has just broaden its legislation concerning abortion and indecent acts. But why imitate the worse things done by this former mother country? Why such a miserable spirit of colonialism?

I come back to the figures I have just mentioned.

> —According to the Gallup poll of January 15, 1969, 92 per cent of Canadians are Catholic or Protestant, that is they believe in God.

—and in the Bible.

> We cannot insult that great majority by passing such a degrading legislation.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) allowed himself to be carried away in denouncing this legislation. I fully agree with him, because we should not open the door to immorality. We are here to pass legislation and enforce the respect of the human being.

When the primary purpose of a legislation is not the respect of the human being, we must not stand for it. We are not here to protect animals and destroy human beings. We are here to protect humanity and human morality.

In this pluralistic society; obscenity, indecency, lewdness saturate our newspapers and our national television with publicity that is not human but rather bestial—

Today, we have come to the point where it seems the Prime Minister has been elected to put into practice a play-boy philosophy, a philosophy of human stupidity, in short a disgraceful and sad philosophy.

Mr. Speaker, some say that homosexuality is a disease. Everybody does not agree yet on that.

Some members must certainly have known pyromaniacs whose tendancy is to set fire. There is nothing wrong with being a pyromaniac as such, but when a pyromaniac commits a criminal act, when he sets fire somewhere, the law provides punishment. Therefore, what is criminal? It is not the fact of being a pyromaniac, but the fact of setting fire.

To be a homosexual is not a crime, but the act of homosexuality which constitutes a danger for public morals is, as yet, I think, a criminal act, because the government, our scholars people and our play-boys have not yet proved to us that it is only an illness.

We are here to pass laws that will protect human beings as well as the future of the nation and of our children.

On page 8 of the brief submitted by the Minister of Justice, there is a press release dated March 15, 1968, which reads in part, and I quote:

In respect of acts of gross indecency, the introduction must not be—

And here, the minister begins to have self-doubts and to question his own legislation. He continues:

The introduction of these amendments must not be interpreted in any way as leniency towards this type of behaviour. Parliament has not, for example, made an offense as such of adultery, fornication or even prostitution, but it would surely be wrong to maintain that in so doing, Parliament approves or condones this type of thing.

Now, the Minister of Justice has expressed a doubt as to whether the changes made to the Criminal Code indicate a sort of tolerance towards homosexuals. He says that they are not dangerous people.

Mr. Speaker, since we shall give free play to immorality in adopting the bill before us, we shall be faced with increasing immorality. Be they sick or vicious people, we shall have more homosexuals from now on, for they will no more have reasons to fear.

Here, I wish to refer to the Prime Minister's statement on which several of us have pondered, that is that the government has no business in bedrooms.

[English]

Should the police be kept out of our bedrooms? Certainly not. If murder is committed in a bedroom should the police not go into that bedroom? Or if any other crime is committed against God and the welfare of the nation, should not the police have access to the bedrooms? Certainly they should. It does not make any difference where a crime is committed. In our bedrooms or on the street the police ought to deal with it. There should be no buildings closed to the police. I have certainly never heard of any policemen interfering with the rights of wedded love in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if the government intends to set as a policy that it has no business in our bedrooms, it should also apply the same principle and recognize that it has also no business there with regard to income tax. And from then on, we could prevent the federal government from becoming pickpockets as far as taxpayers are concerned.

If the federal government has no business in bedrooms for morality purposes, it is no more entitled to go there to collect taxes in our wallets and in our pockets.

If the federal government has no responsibility regarding morality in our bedrooms, it should not have any regarding our wallets.

Mr. Speaker, last week I met a minister of health and welfare who told me that his predecessor had not lodged any action against the fathers of children born out of wedlock. The girls, when pregnant, went to the welfare office to be paid the hospitalization costs as well as a certain sum, so to enable them to lead a normal life for a few weeks.

Now, that minister of health and welfare took his responsibility. He did not go into the bedrooms, because it was too late then, but he instituted proceedings against the fathers of those illegitimate children. That minister of health recovered the sum of $1,250,000 which had been received by unmarried mothers, when the fathers of their children had not taken their responsibilities. He took his responsibilities and from then on the moral conditions changed. Why? Because instead of making morals more permissive in that province, the fathers of those children were compelled by the law to assume their responsibilities, to provide for the needs of the mother and to educate the children.

That proves that when the government extends the limits of morality, there is nobody left to take responsibilities. When the government fulfills its duties, it is possible not only to save money but also to direct society towards the moral principles we have been elected to the house to defend, in which our constituents believe as do those of the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) in front of me, who remains silent and has not yet told the house what the population of his riding thinks about the bill.

An hon. Member: He is voiceless.

Mr. Rondeau: He is unable to speak.

Mr. Speaker, I have here another article of the Montreal Star of December 26, 1968, which deals with law and morals. I quote:

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

In one of its most controversial provisions, for example, the bill removes the present ban against acts of "gross indecency" committed between two adults in private, but it leaves the code without any definition of "gross indecency".

[Translation]

According to that article, it is the intention of the government to take out of the Criminal Code the penalties imposed for gross indecency. But it has not yet been clearly explained what is meant by gross indecency. Neither the Minister of Justice nor the officials of his department nor the legal officers nor the lawyers have been able so far to do so.

And it goes on to say further, and I quote:

[English]

The argument for this approach has been advanced in England by Lord Devlin. No society, he argues, can exist without shared ideas on politics, morals and ethics.

[Translation]

This means that no society can survive without any policies, without any morals and without any code of ethics.

[English]

A fundamental morality, a common agreement as to what is good and what is evil, forms the magnet which prevents the members of society from drifting apart.

[Translation]

He means by that that we must have a definition of what is moral and of what is not, otherwise, we shall surely take the primrose path.

[English]

The bondage is part of the price of society; and mankind, which needs society, must pay its price.

[Translation]

And, further on—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Rondeau: May I continue for a few minutes, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Apparently there is not unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Rondeau: Would hon. members permit me to continue for fifteen minutes?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time being six o'clock, this house will take recess until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I feel duty bound to speak again on this serious matter.

I find it rather surprising that the majority of speeches are delivered by opposition members and I find difficult to understand why serious-minded members, like the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), for instance, do not comment on this matter.

In view of the fact that the hon. member for Laval is an agronomist, he could certainly inform us as to the act of bestiality.

I should also like to hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who, as a former professor, could give us details as to the way the government sees things in the event that the bill should be passed.

Would so-called organizations for the breeding of animals, be set up with schools—

Mr. Pilon: A circus.

Mr. Godin: Thank you very much. This is what I meant to say.

Will the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Langlois) rise also to make known the impressions of the Catholic population of his riding?

I ask myself the same question with regard to the hon. member of Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard).

Has the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean who is a union representative, made representations to the cabinet asking it to support the amendment before us? Since he was busy his afternoon, the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Blouin) has not dared say a word as yet.

The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) has made known his views. Since these are two bordering ridings, are the people of Charlevoix different from those of Manicouagan? Those are the questions we are asking ourselves, Mr. Speaker, and which we would certainly like to have answered.

I am convinced that the co-chairman of the committee (Mr. Béchard) will make his views known towards the end of the debate. Some of my relatives live in that beautiful county and like the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) I know that the people in Bonaventure are not in favour of this bill.

I hope that the hon. member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Cantin) whose riding borders on mine will also be bold enough to make his impressions known and to tell us how he will vote. We would like to know his way of looking at things, of understanding and explaining them and to know what are the advantages he hopes to get from this bill. This would help us to understand many points.

Those are questions and answers in which his electors and the whole area of Quebec are interested.

Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known fact that the constituency of Portneuf which I have the honour to represent has been reconstituted as it were. The last election legalized the new limits proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. In fact, the present constituency of Portneuf is now made up of 2,500 families from the constituency of Langelier, 9,500 families from the riding of Montmorency and 6,000 families from the old constituency of Portneuf.

If we consider that the number of families in the former constituency of Québec-Montmorency exceeds the number of families in the constituencies of Langelier and Portneuf put together, it is not quite true to say that I represent Portneuf, since the greatest part of my constituency is situated in Québec-Montmorency.

And I am still waiting the representations of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme) concerning clause 7 and the amendment. Will the representative of the other part of the former constituency of Québec-Montmorency tell us what he thinks of it?

Do the families of this constituency, reverend father, or Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): That is not bad. Yes, your grace.

Mr. Godin: I made my last sermon in church last Sunday. Is the population of this part of the constituency different from that of the other part?

Mr. Speaker, had the electoral boundaries commission been made aware of the introduction of the omnibus bill? Had the commissioners been ordered to separate the families favouring homosexuality from those who did not?

Since the constituency of Portneuf also got a part of the county of Langelier, which is located in the heart of the city of Quebec, the whole town would like to know the views of the hon. member for Langelier.

Since the archbishopric of Quebec is located in the beautiful county of Langelier, I think the hon. member, should have the opportunity to speak on this legislation. Automatically, he would be caught between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the archbishop of Quebec.

Anyway, I do hope that we will finally hear his words which will weigh heavily in the scales and which could give quite another direction to this debate.

I would like to quote what Father Alphonse Beaulieu wrote in L'Action in December 1967:

> That the legislator should be placed in the puzzling alternative of having to betray his religious beliefs or save his party, is beyond understanding... the freedom of the members of parliament is illogical in our progressive world and indicates the weakness of our parliamentary system. Imagine removing the basic freedom, the freedom of religion, to enact licence!—
> —In the very name of "pluralism" we should respect the beliefs of the member of parliament and not force him to vote like a machine on such a major piece of legislation.

Here is another article by Pierre Lapointe published in December 1969 in L'Action, and I quote:

> Since we are living in a Christian country, our M.P.s should remind the House of Commons of what the Bible says: that the sin of Sodom (homosexuality) brought down the wrath of Heaven . . . that the corruption of the earliest inhabitants of this world was punished by the great flood . . . They should also be reminded that moral corruption was the primary cause of the wars which steeped Europe in blood, the cause of the invasions of the Barbarians who brought the Roman Empire to its doom. We are threatened with a third world war and the yellow peril is at our door.

In those days, people used to say:

If P. E. Trudeau, a bachelor, is too blind or too insensitive to these dangers, he is unworthy of being the Minister of Justice of a Christian country.

Mr. Speaker, the moment of decision has come, I believe: either we accept the immutable values and the ideal coming from God or we stagger down the slope leading to the most cowardly selfishness and to the social anarchy, which brought the downfall of pagan Rome.

Such are the things at stake. I feel that every member should do his utmost to pass only adequate legislation, and if the hon. Minister of Justice, who is piloting this bill, still has a glimmer of decency in his soul he should reverse his stand and support the amendment in question.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has already spoken on this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like, with the permission of the house, to direct a question to the hon. minister or to his parliamentary secretary, in order to elucidate something which, in my opinion, should be clarified.

It has to do with paragraph (2) of section 7, where it is said and I quote:

—an act shall be deemed not to have been committed in private if it is committed in a public place, or if more than two persons take part or are present;

Mr. Speaker, here is my question. Since—

[English]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already spoken, and he cannot speak again.

[Mr. Godin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make a speech but put a question to the minister to clear up a few things.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the hon. member that if the minister were speaking he could pose a question, but as the minister is not speaking he cannot ask a question, unless of course there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimous consent. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said amendment? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The house will now proceed to amendment No. 10.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I rise on a point of order. I see that amendment No. 9 is on the order paper. To my knowledge, it was not defeated. I would therefore like to know what happened.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. On Friday last it was ruled and agreed to that we would deal with amendment No. 9 following the discussion of amendments Nos. 10 and 11.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That Bill C-150, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be amended by deleting from clause 13 thereof paragraph (a) and paragraph (b) of sub-section (1) of the proposed new section 179A of the Criminal Code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the purpose of my amendment is very clear. I also believe that there are many members of the House of Commons who support what I am seeking in this amendment, and when the vote on it takes place I hope that the majority will vote in its favour.

Clause 13 of Bill C-150 is the main part of this bill dealing with the question of lotteries. Its main effect is to liberalize the law of Canada with respect to lotteries, and it does this under several headings. Regardless of any views that some of us may have about lotteries generally, and I do have such views, it is not our purpose to oppose the attempt to widen the law so far as ordinary games of chance and things of that sort are concerned. We agree that if the law is to be widened with respect to office pools, raffles, bingos, games of chance and so on, there should be strict controls, and in that respect we think that the provisions of clause 13 are commendable.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are two things provided in clause 13 that many of us in the House of Commons do not like, and I make the strongest appeal I can to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to reconsider his position. The two things I refer to are the authority that is provided on the one hand for the federal government to conduct lotteries, and the authority provided on the other hand for provincial governments also to conduct lotteries.

Again, if I may multiply a few words to make our position clear, those of us who are speaking on this issue are not asking for any change in the government's position so far as lotteries generally are concerned, but we do ask this house to take a stand against state lotteries. That is the purpose of my amendment which seeks to remove from clause 13 paragraphs (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) of the proposed new section 179A. In taking this stand, Mr. Speaker, we do so not with any blue law approach but because, in the main, we feel that lotteries as a way of raising money for the state or as a way of helping people to win prizes are not good economics.

In our view state lotteries are nothing more than a form of taxation. In fact the one widespread lottery under public auspices being held in this country at this time is called a voluntary tax. The thing that is wrong about lotteries as a form of taxation is that it is the most regressive form that could be imagined. That is saying something in this House of Commons because this government has done very well in dreaming up regressive forms of taxation. I think one of the worst we have ever had is the two per cent social development tax that is still being collected, even though parliament has not approved it. But lotteries are even worse than that. When lotteries are used by governments, federal, provincial or even municipal for that matter, for the purpose of raising taxes there is no relationship whatsoever to the ability of people to pay. In fact, those who are least able to pay are those who are enticed by the possibility of winning a prize. They are the people who can least afford to lose their money in this way and they are the ones who lose the most.

If people wish to take part in lotteries conducted by private organizations, by various charities and others on a voluntary basis, that is their business. But surely, it is something entirely different for the state to use lotteries as a means of raising revenue and for the state to put the stamp of approval on this method. The hope, of course, that the government has in resorting to lotteries is that people will participate because they hope they will win. The fact of the matter is most people lose in any kind of lottery. So does the state. The few examples that there are, are not being placed before us as reasons that we should pass this legislation. Reports from the state of New York indicate that the attempt there to raise money by way of a state lottery has not been successful. We hear many references to the Irish sweepstakes, but we do not hear much said about the great social improvements that have taken place in Ireland on the basis of money raised in the sweepstakes. The reason is clear: there are no such improvements. While we hear about the widows and others who win the lotteries held by the city of Montreal, there is no suggestion that the lotteries being carried on by the city have solved that city's financial problems.

We think that on every count this is the wrong way to go about things. In our view it ought not to be passed by this House of Commons. I recognize the government's position that this legislation is only permissive. The government argues that the passing of clause 13, and the eventual passing of this bill, does not bring federal or provincial lotteries into being. But permissive legislation has a way of being used. In my view there is no doubt that if this legislation is passed it is only a matter of time until provinces, under pressure, will resort to it. It can be only a matter of time until the federal government, under that same kind of pressure, will resort to this retrogressive way of raising money for the state or of helping people put more money into their own pockets. That is the reason we urge very strongly that this house vote for my amendment and delete these two subparagraphs from clause 13 of this bill.

We have had a good deal of correspondence about Bill C-150. I should like to say that I am particularly proud of the kind of letters and submissions that have reached my desk from the churches and church organizations which have written me. I have some of them here on my desk tonight, but I shall refer to only one of them. I am picking one that is typical and also one which I think states the case very well. Normally, one can expect churches to take a careful position on these matters of social concern. It has interested me that the major churches that have been in touch with me—I admit that most of them are churches on the Protestant side but in these ecumenical days that distinction does not matter—have taken a progressive stand on questions such as abortion, homosexuality and so on. But we are not now discussing those subjects. The thing that interests me is the stand that most of the churches have taken on the question of lotteries and I find myself in agreement with them. They admit their general dislike for lotteries in any form. They admit that in their view games of chance as a way of making economic progress for the individual or anybody else are not good. But they are realistic enough to admit that it is just about impossible to legislate against every game of chance there is.

Nevertheless, these churches have come down strongly and said that in the name of all that is decent, sensible, economic and just they cannot agree with the provision in Bill C-150 in respect of state lotteries, either federal or provincial. I said I have a number of letters and that it is my intention to pick up and read only one of them. This happens to be from the Charleswood Mennonite Church, situated in metropolitan Winnipeg. This is a church other than the one I happen to belong to and Charleswood is not in my constituency. I thought this letter was one of the best which came to me and it sums up the position stated in most of the letters from churches and church organizations. It came over the signature of Mr. Rempel, the pastor of the church, and Mr. Keyler, the chairman of the church organization. I was told in this letter, as no doubt was the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Osler) because I believe since this church is in his constituency he would have received the same letter, that the members of this church were anxious to submit their comments on the various matters in respect of the Criminal Code but before they did so their congregation spent five Sunday mornings during December and January discussing the issues of lotteries, abortion and homosexuality.

The members of this congregation went over the matters very carefully with experts and finally decided to submit their comments to various members of parliament. They made it clear that the letter they submitted to us in its final form was approved unanimously by the members of that church congregation. I should like to read what this church said on the question of lotteries. It is brief, to the point, and I think we should pay attention to it:

> We recognize that office pools, raffles, bingos, and other forms of lotteries are widely used. Although these types of "games of chance" appeal basically to people's weaknesses, their discontinuance cannot be effectively legislated. It is our opinion, therefore, that privately operated lotteries should be legalized, but they should be strictly controlled by the Government, as is wisely proposed in Bill C-150.

That is one paragraph. I think it is well stated. I think the Charleswood Mennonite Church is to be commended for its position.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The letter continues with this one short paragraph:

> We are strongly opposed, however, to the federal and provincial governments using lotteries to raise revenue. We feel that this method of fund-raising has been shown to be both inefficient and unjust. It is primarily a tax on the weak and the poor.

I commend this particular congregation on that statement in respect of lotteries. This congregation has dealt with the whole broad question including private and state lotteries, and I think its position in both respects is realistic. I am sure, in fact, that there are many members of this house who take this position, and I hope they will so indicate either in the speeches they make on this amendment or in their votes when the time for voting on this amendment arrives.

In that connection, I hope we will demonstrate at some point during the report stage that this bill is not all cut and dried. I was pleased that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs made a number of changes to Bill C-150. This demonstrates the validity of the committee system we are trying to put into effect. I know that a friend of mine along the front row a bit objected the other day by saying the committee was a failure. I think in his view it was a failure because it did not do what he wanted it to do. Among other things, that committee made changes, some of which were opposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), and that is good.

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, whatever one might say about the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, did a good job on this bill. Now that we are at this report stage, which I think is an innovation that is good but is being put to the test right now, it would be unfortunate if out of the 44 amendments put down by members not one of them was approved when it came to a vote. I hope this is one on which members will vote as they feel they ought to, without regard to what the government or the party may have said, with the result that we will take the position we do not want this regressive form of taxation or the injustice involved in state lotteries.

Having made these several references to taxation, may I go on and put it this way. What on earth is the point of having a Carter Royal Commission go into the whole question of taxation, and what is the point of having the government study that report and put all those people in the Department of Finance to the task of going into the ins and outs of it in order to bring down a white paper to develop a taxation system that is fair, if we then turn around and shoot the thing full of holes by bringing in state lotteries which have no relationship whatsoever to any kind of fair taxation system? That is why I take this stand. There are opinions on the moral and social nature of lotteries. It has been said under other headings that it is pretty hard to get a consensus on most social judgments and moral opinions. Surely, when it comes to cold, hard economics we can get a consensus. I hope there will be sufficient support for this amendment that when the time comes for the vote to be taken it will carry and we will delete paragraphs (a) and (b) from sub-section (1) of the new section 179A of clause 13 of the bill.

If this happens there are one or two consequential things that would have to be done, such as relettering some of the other clauses. I was advised before I put down my amendment that this would be within the prerogative of the law counsel, so we have no problem there. All we need to do is get this house to take the proper position on this issue.

I said earlier I recognized that what the Minister of Justice has in mind is that this is only permissive legislation. When the minister was speaking on second reading, I think he said that what this bill does in this respect is provide for a sort of local option, leaving it to the federal or provincial governments to have lotteries or leave them alone as they may wish. This provision will not work in that way. If you put the stamp of approval on state lotteries by this kind of legislation, it is only a matter of time until we have them.

As a matter of fact, I find it difficult to take that argument from the Minister of Justice, because if he is putting in this clause, and he remains the Minister of Justice, he would be the one to bring in an order for state lotteries. If he does not intend to do that, why is he putting this in the bill now?

It is not my desire or my intent to speak at length on this matter. I hope I have made my point. I do have one other point on this legislation I wish to draw to the attention of the minister. Before doing so may I emphasize that so far as I am concerned, I am not putting this matter on any narrow blue law basis. I am putting it on the basis of what is common sense and good economics. I have cited the position that the churches have taken because I think they are to be commended for the realism of their approach. As I say, the two paragraphs I read from the letter from the Charleswood Mennonite Church on the outskirts of Winnipeg I think represent the essence of the church's opinion and this House of Commons ought to pay attention to it.

I said I had one other piece of evidence. I think the Minister of Justice is acquainted with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). In fact, I believe they are good friends. A year ago during the leadership campaign I think they were on the same team. At any rate, I should like to introduce the Minister of Justice to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who, like others in the government, runs around making speeches. He has some public relations people in his department who give us copies of these speeches.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made a speech on Friday of last week at the annual meeting of the British Columbia division of the Consumers' Association of Canada at the Grosvenor Hotel in Vancouver, British Columbia. We get so many of these that one does not know whether he should take the time to read them all, but one learns to leaf through them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You only read the ones you agree with, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I had to go to the last few pages of this one to find what I wanted, and it came as a surprise to me as I did not expect it. I expected to throw this speech away. In any event, I got to the end of the speech and found that the minister discussed with the members of the British Columbia division of the Consumers' Association of Canada the folly of games of chance and prizes as conducted by the retail trade in the United States and Canada. He expressed a strong belief that this sort of thing should be curtailed.

The minister, in referring to these games and gimmicks in the United States, suggested that the chances of winning prizes vary from game to game but are found to be monetarily low regardless of the game. He said that, as a whole the programmed chances of winning a cash prize per store visit were about 3.4 to 1,000. He referred to a quotation from an article which appeared in the United States.

The minister went on to refer to the fact that once the odds of winning a major prize feel to zero, the advertising implications reached a peak. Once the one major prize was won in a particuliar area the advertisements began to emphasize this fact. The clear implication was that other prizes of the same size were available when in fact they were not. Consumers who believed they were available were being deceived. I could go on with these statements by the hon. minister's friend who stood up before the Consumers' Association of Canada and stated that one of the things we must get rid of was this practice of games, chances, prizes and gimmicks in which stores indulge in an attempt to entice people in simply because of their gambling instinct. Many of these people feel they are going to win, but the minister made it clear that they do not have a chance.

What kind of a situation is this? These ministers are sitting too far apart. We have one minister saying we must get rid of games of chance conducted by the retail trade in this country while another minister sitting at the other end of the cabinet benches, is saying it is time to permit games of chance and lotteries conducted by the government itself. How ridiculous a situation can you get? These two ministers are good friends, and I hope they will get together. I hope the Minister of Justice will take the advice of his friend the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to the effect that there is just no economic sense in trying to make money, trying to raise revenue from the people of this country by means of lotteries. If the people of Canada want to conduct lotteries in a private way, our law for a long time has said it is all right, and the law still says this. But let us not put the stamp of approval on state lotteries run by federal government or by the provinces. This is why I ask for support of this amendment.

I emphasize that this amendment is not a package involving several propositions. There is no confusion here. There is no question of having to vote one way or the other because of all the elements involved. There is one clear, simple issue in this amendment, and that is its opposition to state lotteries, federal or provincial. I hope the house will support me in that opposition.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. In our approach to this matter we still retain the same freedom of action which was referred to by our leader at the time of second reading of the bill. I intend to support the principle put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I can say in very few words why I intend to do so. I accept many of the comments made by the hon. member. I would like to think that the people of Canada have had enough of gambling. They gambled last June 25.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: Hoping for a royal flush, they got a busted straight, and lost.

An hon. Member: They lost badly.

Mr. Baldwin: I have very considerable reservations about the federal government and the provincial governments becoming involved in lotteries. Some years ago I sat on the estimates committee which looked into this issue. We examined the records and figures relating to the lotteries conducted by the Irish Republic. Although we never made a report or any recommendations which came into the house, at that time our conclusion was that the amount of money which found its way into the realm of hospital improvement in the Irish Republic hardly justified the work and problems created by allowing the state to become involved in gambling. I fear that if this were done in Canada, very serious problems could arise with regard to administration.

While I have every intention of supporting the other amendments which the government has introduced I cannot see my way clear to supporting the section with regard to lotteries. Therefore, I intend to support the amendment offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Real Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) concerning lotteries; it seems reasonable to us. Actually, the purpose of clause 13 is to add section 179A of the Criminal Code which reads as follows:

(1) Notwithstanding any of the provisions of this Part relating to gaming and betting, it shall be lawful

(a) for the Government of Canada to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council and for that purpose for any person in accordance with such regulations to do any thing described in any of paragraphs (a) to (f) of subsection (1) or subsection (4) of section 179;

and also to enable the—

(b) For the government of a province either alone or in conjunction with the government of another province—

—thus becoming a sort of co-operative lottery or allowing a group of provinces or two provinces to join together to—

—to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in that province, or in that and such other province, in accordance with any law enacted by —legislation—

Mr. Speaker, it is generally recognized that people like games of chance, they like gambling; it is only natural.

We see for example, people rushing to church bingoes, or social club bingoes.

Lotteries do not improve the economic level of a nation, a province, a municipality, a school board or whatever. Somebody is making a profit, but at the expense of all of those who buy tickets or indulge in gambling.

Mr. Speaker, according to the spirit of this bill, we will eventually have national, provincial or municipal lotteries, and perhaps even school, charity organizations and social club lotteries. All such lotteries will tend to improve the economic situation of some administration in all those fields.

The municipal lottery of Montreal is still going on. Such a lottery was launched in the hope it would solve the financial problems of that city, but it took a few months to realize that the lottery was inadequate. The municipal authorities had to increase the land tax, public transportation tickets and the cost of all municipal activities.

Provincial and federal lotteries would accomplish the same thing with exactly the same results.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada need other things than lotteries. I know people who play bingo. Bingo-playing is a disease, so we play bingo. Not necessarily to support a charitable institution, but in the hope of winning first prize. Sometimes, a week's salary is thus wasted away. As for the salary of the family head, it is spent in one week, playing bingo in the hope of drawing the big prize. Most of the time, one does not draw the big prize; one is poorer than before.

As far as the principle of lottery is concerned, the Ralliement créditiste cannot recognize it. However, there are exceptions to every rule, and we think that our parishes, for instance, or religious organizations—

An hon. Member: So there is an exception.

Mr. Caouette: There are exceptions because the present system makes them necessary.

If our parish priests were assured of being able to meet their obligations in their field, if young people never spoke of bingoes, there would no longer be problems. I hear the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) speak of that exception. We did not create it, it is the system advocated by the Minister of Justice. He is the one who makes it necessary to resort to exceptions.

From the time I was a child, I have seen all kinds of bingos and they were all illegal. The parish priest was always afraid of being arrested. No province could authorize the holding of a bingo, because lotteries or bingos, were dealt with in the Criminal Code, and come under federal jurisdiction.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, why are lotteries resorted to today? I am speaking about those held by religious organizations, social clubs and churches to raise the funds they are unable to obtain through other means in the present situation. In our crazy set-up, we must tolerate that the parish priest ask his flock to play bingo. But the principle does not change. That does not improve the living conditions of the people as a whole. That does not put money into circulation, but further taxes the people in order to enable a few to make some very short-lived gains. That does not last for any length of time. We always get the same results and we know what they are. Mr. Speaker, if we must admit that bingos, because of our present system, may temporarily help charitable organizations, we do not believe that the federal government is a charitable organization. We do not believe that the federal government should organize a national lottery in Canada.

We do not belive that the provincial government should establish a provincial one, nor the municipal governments any local ones. But, with regard to charitable organizations, because of the present situation, they have no other ways of raising money, except lotteries or bingos.

So we shall support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), but we remain convinced that this is not a solution to the problems which affect the whole nation.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a long time since that lotteries project was first suggested to the government. The government is strongly urged to set up a lottery or to amend the Criminal Code and I say again that this would not settle the matter.

However, in view of the financial system we live in, charitable organizations and social clubs are compelled to resort to bingos. Let us enable them to do so without breaking the law as has been the case since bingos are conducted throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but we still maintain that setting up a lottery will not settle anything. This is quite clear in our mind.

This amendment suits us in the circumstances. It will enable charitable organizations to paddle and dabble in a system which the Minister of Justice wishes to maintain at all costs in Canada.

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I should like to clarify very briefly the purpose of these two subsections to which the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) applies.

The new section 179A to be found in clause 13 of the bill provides, as the hon. member suggested, that lotteries shall henceforth be lifted from the Criminal Code and placed within provincial option under a licence of the provincial attorneys-general if their purpose is charitable or religious or if they are run by charitable or religious organizations. That is to be found in paragraph (c) of the first subsection of section 179A. At the same time, a similar local option is given to a provincial attorney general or to a Lieutenant Governor in Council in respect of agricultural fairs or exhibitions or to operators of a concession leased by an agricultural board or an exhibition board to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in the province.

It seemed logical to the government that if the criminal law were to be withdrawn from lotteries managed by private organizations, charitable and religious, or by agricultural fairs, an option should also lie with the provincial government itself or with an agent of a provincial government, and, since this was being done, that the criminal law should be totally withdrawn in its application to the federal government in this area as well.

I wish to deny categorically any suggestion that clause 13, particularly the provisions to which the hon. member's amendment relates, in any way sets up a provincial lottery scheme or a federal lottery scheme. It in no way does this. It merely takes both areas out of the ambit of the criminal law—and I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will agree with the substance of what I am saying.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It will just make it possible.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right. It just makes it possible. It withdraws the application of the criminal law and makes this a question of civil, public policy. It does not establish a new tax because no new lottery scheme is set up. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested correctly, it is, if one wishes to call it so, permissive legislation. It does establish a local option and it now becomes a question of public policy at the federal and provincial levels whether lottery schemes ought to be established. It is not a stamp of approval. Since the hon. gentleman referred to my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), may I say it is not even a trading stamp of approval. In no way does it establish any lottery scheme under public auspices in this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It may not be a trading stamp of approval but it is a poor trade.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let us begin with the provinces. Sub-paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of the new section 179A, which is affected by the amendment, reads:

> Notwithstanding any of the provisions of this part relating to gaming and betting, it shall be lawful
> (a) for the Government of Canada to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in accordance with recommendations made by the Governor in Council and for that purpose for any person in accordance with such regulations to do anything described in any of the paragraphs (a) to (f) of subsection (1) or subsection (4) of section 179.

• (9:00 p.m.)

What does this mean? It means that the criminal law is withdrawn. It means that the government of a province would have to go before its legislature and get the approval of public opinion in the province. It would have to get the approval of the majority of the members, duly elected, of the provincial legislature. Only then, would a provincial lottery be established. All that this withdrawal of this type of lottery scheme from the criminal, the penal law means is that if a province is willing to face public opinion in the province and decides to introduce an enabling provision in the legislature of the province, then the provincial government takes upon itself before its own legislature the introduction of such legislation. Through its criminal law the federal government says: "That is your business. We are withdrawing from the field. We are giving you the option. You decide in terms of the opinion of your own people in the province whether you want a lottery scheme. If you do, the conditions that you attach to such scheme are a provincial matter".

This being the case, it seemed to the government logical that if the application of the criminal law to the establishment of a lottery is to be withdrawn in the provincial area it ought to be withdrawn in the federal field in the same fashion. So that the establishment of a lottery would become no longer a question of criminal law but of public policy, for which the government of the day would be responsible. May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the members of the house, that as far as I know the federal government at present has no intention of establishing a lottery scheme. We wanted the bill to be symmetrical.

The establishment of a lottery by a provincial government would be by provincial statute and would be without the criminal code. In the federal area such establishment would be by order in council, which would have to be proclaimed and would be subject to the usual confidence vote in the House of Commons. In any event, there is no present intention to enter that field.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Would the minister permit a question. Would he explain to the house why members of the legislature would have some voice in determining the terms and conditions under which a provincial lottery would be conducted, whereas members of parliament would have no voice whatever in expressing their opinion with regard to the terms and conditions under which a federal lottery would be conducted?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because at the moment no provincial legislature has had the opportunity in any way of pronouncing itself upon the subject. As I say, an order in council would be subject to all the motions of want of confidence that are available to members of this house, and the government of the day would so govern and so limit.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not think that answers the question. That would give hon. members the opportunity to vote either confidence or lack of confidence in the government but would not express any opinion on the terms and conditions under which a lottery should be conducted. Surely, that is an important item for those who might want to support a lottery, though I am not one. They would want the terms and conditions set out in the statute under which the lottery was to be operated.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I suggest to the hon. member that a want of confidence motion in connection with such an order in council could go to the terms and conditions, as it could to the terms and conditions of any order in council.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has to say, I should like to rise to support the amendment proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I deeply regret that this legislation, which in general is civilized and civilizing, would have incorporated within it this particular feature of permitting federal or provincial lotteries. In my view, this is a blot on what is otherwise an enlightened piece of legislation.

I do not know whether it is too late to appeal to the Minister of Justice to look at this matter again; I suppose it is. I do not know whether it is too late to appeal to the House of Commons here assembled to look at it again, and to reject the present provision in this bill. As I say, I believe in an otherwise enlightened and civilized piece of legislation, this is something that would be deeply regretted if the house saw fit to adopt it. I am not against lotteries because of any puritanical or restrictive points of view. I assume that gambling is a natural instinct, one that cannot be repressed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How otherwise would this government have ever got elected?

Mr. Brewin: That is a good point. But when we come to consider the effect of this legislation as far as lotteries are concerned, I think we have to admit that this provision is permissive of a socially injust, regressive and unfortunate system of taxation; that is the net result of it.

I have here a quotation I should like to read to the house contained in a publication called The Christian Century, though I do not know to which century the reference is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It has not come yet.

Mr. Brewin: I agree with my colleague. The quotation is this:

In the final analysis, revenue must come from productive enterprise. Gambling produces no wealth; it merely redistributes it from the hands of the many into the hands of the few.

The essence of this legislation is that it permits a redistribution of wealth that hits the people who are the poorest and least able to give. It takes from the many and gives to the few. That is the basic effect of legislation of this sort. It dries up the well-springs of genuine and decent charitable giving. It has been tried out on many occasions. The pendulum for and against lotteries has swung first one way and then the other. I believe many important institutions were founded as a result of lotteries. Somebody told me that Harvard University was built from the proceeds of a lottery. There used to be times when the sheriffs of the courts in England went out and sold lottery tickets, which was something like the raising of bond revenue for the government of the country. Similarly, when justices travelled throughout the country they sold lottery tickets. But every time it has been tried it has been found to involve all sorts of undesirable social consequences.

I am surprised at the permissive attitude of the Minister of Justice. He says: "Well, we don't intend to do this or expect to be asked to do this, but we will give the provinces permission to do it". That sort of permissiveness is the very vice that is destroying sound attitudes.

Britain has experienced this same swing of the pendulum. The British have passed legislation giving the opportunity for gambling wider scope. I have in front of me a press clipping, the headline of which is: "Britain's gambling craze saps energy and resources". I suggest that that is the natural tendency of legislation of this sort. A state lottery is bound to result, as the headline says, in a sapping of energy and resources. It is promoting delusions on the part of people who cannot afford to have such delusions.

I do not know why a piece of legislation which makes good sense, which is civilized and civilizing, should include a clause on lotteries when experience shows that lotteries do not work, are not sound, and do not bring intelligent results. I know that there is widespread public opinion favouring lotteries. I would not mind betting that if I consulted some of my constituents they would be in favour of lotteries. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? I submit it is because they have no experience showing how destructive and unjust lotteries can be.

I plead with the minister to look at this clause again. I plead with the house to take a responsible view of this matter and to support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I do not ask that because he is my colleague; I ask it in the name of common sense and good judgment.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am in a curious position. I say that if charitable organizations and municipalities are to be exempt from the provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to lotteries, provincial legislatures ought also to be exempted. Frankly, I question the wisdom of having parliament exempt charitable organizations. How can the government say that if provinces operate lotteries they will be breaking the law? Certain narrow exemptions are included in the bill. I do not think it is correct to say that an analogy can be drawn with respect to what is being legislated for the provinces and what is being permitted under the federal authority. When one considers the matter at all, one sees that the Criminal Code is being changed to permit lotteries to be operated by the federal government. In short, parliament is being asked to allow the government to run lotteries.

Such legislation goes far beyond any legislation that would merely amend the Criminal Code. Frankly, we are being asked to authorize the Governor in Council to establish lotteries. That is absurd. One may ask, why is this government asking parliament for authority to operate lotteries.

An hon. Member: Because Benson's desperate.

Mr. Stanfield: This is absurd.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The arguments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) were so clear, concise, and convincing that it is hardly necessary for me to speak.

This afternoon the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) berrated me for praising the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) for the provisions regarding homosexuality. Probably I went a little too far in praising the minister. I think the amendments concerning homosexuality, abortions, guns, and parole have been brought in because the intention is to bring about an enlightened society—and Lord knows, we will have to wait a long time for a just society.

At present I am speaking about the lottery clause of the bill, and I support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The Minister of Justice may say that the lottery clauses are permissive only; yet I do not think that the introduction of this clause shows that the government has an enlightened view on this matter.

When supporting the idea of lotteries, many Canadians cite as an example the Irish sweepstakes. They say that much money from Canada is flowing out to foreign lotteries and that if we have our own Canadian lottery the outflow of that money will cease. May I point out to hon. members that the Irish sweepstakes are operated, not by any government authority, but by private authority. In the 36 years this private authority has run the sweepstake it has made in profits $1.2 billion and made available to hospitals and other charitable organizations only $140 million. If that Irish private organization were considered in that country an ordinary corporation subject to corporation taxes it would pay much more than $140 million in taxes on profits of $1.2 billion. In other words, the $140 million paid to charities and hospitals is less than any taxes a comparable corporation would have had to pay.

An hon. Member: What about the prizes?

Mr. Gilbert: Someone asks, what about the prizes? To that I can only say that the amount of money given to hospitals and other charitable organizations makes me think that the Irish sweepstakes have been hardly worth promoting. I do not think the state ought to make itself responsible for the provision of gambling facilities. It is undignified. The government of Canada should not enter the gambling business. Many studies into lotteries have been conducted in Britain and Canada. The Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate studied in depth the question of lotteries. That was in 1956, I believe. That committee concluded we should not have lotteries here, and made that recommendation. They said that lotteries will bring little tax revenue. Studies have indicated that lotteries in Quebec will net that province little more than $10 million at the highest, an insignificant figure which will do little in Quebec to help hospitals and charitable organizations.

I do not think we ought to support this new legislation, and we ought to support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The minister ought to know the effects of lotteries in New York city and New Hampshire. Responsible authorities there have said that lotteries, from the point of view of the state, have not been a financial success and have not helped to meet some of the problems they were intended to meet.

I asked the minister when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs who was promoting this new lottery legislation. He said no one in particular was, and therefore the responsibility for introducing this legislation must be laid at the minister's doorstep. Even though the hon.

member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) finds the praise for the minister a little too eloquent, I ask the minister to give second thought to the legislation he is bringing forth and to give close attention and co-operation to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

• (9:20 p.m.)

This amendment makes sense. It means the provincial and federal governments will not be promoting the gambling instinct among Canadians. It is not worthy of any government to promote this type of instinct. I need not underline the fact that the operation of any lottery adds little to employment opportunities. The few people required to operate a lottery will not solve any of the employment problems which we face today. That cannot be used as an argument.

I fear the minister may have to bring forth a song with regard to lotteries. We all know the song, "Don't play bingo tonight mother, stay home with daddy and me". A new national song may have to be brought forth with regard to the operation of lotteries to replace this song. I say, Mr. Speaker, the government should not make itself responsible for gambling facilities. It should not promote the gambling instinct because that is unproductive and unworthy of the government of Canada.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Gilbert: Certainly.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. member be prepared to ask unanimous consent of the house to review the remarks he made in his first speech?

Mr. Gilbert: I have full confidence in the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). He believes in the trustworthy process of democracy. After hearing the eloquent pleas of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), even discounting the remarks which I make, I am sure the minister will be persuaded like Paul on the road to Damascus, to see the light and bring forth the proper legislation.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly on this particular amendment. I have not spoken on some of the other amendments because, on second reading, I had an opportunity to state in a general way my position on the most contentious issues encompassed in the amendments to the Criminal Code. I agree with other hon. members that the particular amendments included in the bill represent an attempt by the minister and members of the house to up-date and bring into conformity the laws of the land as we currently know them. Someone might immediately suggest this is what we are also doing with regard to gambling. A good deal of gambling is carried on in this country under one guise or another. If looked at squarely, much of it is carried on illegally, but government and police officials tend to look the other way when gambling of one kind or another takes place in this country.

Quite frankly, I do not feel the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has gone far enough in this amendment. I did not have the opportunity to hear his remarks. I do not know why he would distinguish between lotteries operated by provincial or federal authorities as opposed to those operated by religious or charitable institutions or agricultural affairs. Gambling is gambling, no matter where it takes place. The issue is surely the same. I believe gambling does little or nothing to encourage people in the correct ethics that motivate and guide the structures of our society and economy. We cannot have a two-sided view, people doing right in one situation and wrong in another.

There have been many experiences with various forms of lotteries. The hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) mentioned the song, "Don't Play Bingo Tonight Mother". During my time as an active minister and pastor I had to deal with a number of individuals who became victims of an addiction to gambling. It is not the purpose of the minister's amendments to encompass all the various problems of morality in our society.

Our lawmakers have a responsibility to lay down at least general guide lines, but when dealing with the matter of lotteries we have gone far astray. The idea of giving permission to institutions, provinces and governments to conduct lotteries is in direct contradiction to everything the government does in the exercise of its authority. I know of no government department or agency that essentially says, you can expect to receive something for nothing. Therefore, I find it extremely surprising and illiberal, if I may describe it that way. It will do no good.

While the government may find people in certain areas strongly in support of lotteries, they will in truth weaken the moral fibre of the country and create a number of other problems. The minister is young and intelligent, and I find it hard to believe he thinks this is a reform measure.

Mr. Woolliams: He is younger than you.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): His concept of reform is vastly different from mine. I do not find very much wrong with some of the other amendments in this bill. In fact, in some cases, there is too little being done. As was mentioned earlier, half a loaf of bread is better than none. I cannot understand why one proposal in this omnibus bill sets back the whole trend of reform. I presume there have been political pressures, perhaps within the government caucus. Perhaps there have been pressures we have not heard about in this chamber which have been brought to bear on the department and its officials. The government has not assessed what is proper reform when drafting in this bill.

I will be happy to support this amendment. As I say, it does not go far enough. Religious institutions should be teaching that we should not expect something for nothing. It is shocking to see that they might be permitted, under this bill, to carry on games of chance. There are the very people who would condemn a man who becomes addicted to gambling, whether at the race track, in a poker game or in whatever form it may appear. Now, of course such a man will be encouraged in a large way to believe this is a good thing. He will even be encouraged, in the advertising that will follow, to believe that in some way he is supporting his country because he buys lottery tickets on a regular basis.

• (9:30 p.m.)

If that is the kind of attitude we are going to generate amongst the people of this country, then God help us all because we have fallen far short of understanding what it is that really makes for an effective society in which people work together, not for one person to gain a great many advantages over another without earning them, but in which each individual makes his own contribution for the mutual benefit of all.

I plead, as other members have done, that the minister give this matter very serious consideration. I would also speak frankly to hon. members on all sides of the house, telling them that in my estimation this is the most illiberal aspect of these amendments to the Criminal Code.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my support for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for reasons that I do not think have yet been expressed this evening but that I believe are in the minds of members in all parties. I support the amendment because it seems to me that government lotteries whether they be federal, provincial or municipal, are essentially an evasion of the principle of responsible government. They are an attempt at the evasion of the consequences of taxation legislated by parliament, legislatures and municipal councils. They are an attempt to finance government by taking advantage of something that might be considered a weakness in all of us. They are an appeal to an instinct or to a state of mind that has been generated through the brainwashing that has taken place for so many years, the brainwashing which says that there is something intrinsically bad about a tax dollar spent, and something intrinsically good about a dollar spent by or for private endeavour.

Government lotteries in my opinion are an attempt to create a myth or an illusion that there is an easy way to finance the cost of governing ourselves. They are not an easy way, Mr. Speaker. Those of us who are in parliaments, legislatures and municipal councils know that the ways of paying for governing ourselves are never easy. All of us, as legislators, accept the responsibility of assessing the costs of governing ourselves, and from time to time should we assess the wrong ways of taxing ourselves we should be prepared to accept any consequences. Lotteries are an attempt to evade such consequences.

Whatever demand there may be in the country for lotteries, be it a majority demand or a minority demand, be it from some provinces or municipalities, even be it in the minds of some of the members of the government, I submit that demand has arisen mainly as a result of the brainwashing that has take place as a result of the unholy amount of editorials and publications that have continually condemned government spending and government taxation. This myth that there is something bad about a tax dollar spent and something good about a private dollar spent needs to be exploded once and for all.

It seems to me that legislators above all should be doing a positive job in stressing the value of tax dollars, in urging citizens to be concerned about those from whom tax dollars are raised and how they are raised and spent, as well as the amount of tax dollars. As I have said, lotteries are an attempt to evade the principle of responsible government.

I hope that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) will change his mind and will agree that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is valid.

I do not know if this will be a sufficient reason for the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), but I submit that when a church, a lodge or a fraternal organization has a raffle, a punch board, or whatever other means they may use to raise funds, in almost all cases the overwhelming majority of those funds are raised from their own members. It is a way of taxing themselves to pay for their own organization. It may also be an admission by an organization that it is unable to do its financing through what could be considered more ethical and moral means. But it is still a way of taxing themselves for their own benefit because they cannot go to property, incomes or corporations for their financing. They rely upon voluntary giving, and they look upon raffles as a form of voluntary giving.

I suppose that all hon. members, after spending a week-end in their constituencies, return here with pockets full of raffle tickets. If one were to add them up they would represent a fair number of dollars over a year and very few, if any of us, have ever won a prize. I know I haven't. I am a born loser in these things. I hope that I am making some reasonable rationalization as between state lotteries and raffles held by fraternal, charitable and religious organizations. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I consistently refuse to buy a raffle ticket from an organization whose aims and purposes I oppose. For example, I would never buy a ticket in a draw sponsored by the Liberal Association in Regina-Lake Centre constituency.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But each time you run as a candidate for the N.D.P. that is the greatest gamble you can take of your life.

Mr. Benjamin: When political parties hold raffles in my constituency most of the proceeds come from their own members and supporters. It is a method of taxing themselves. But surely, it is not logical in a democratic society for a government to attempt to evade responsibility and the consequence of taxation by using lotteries as a mythical, easy way to help finance government. Surely, this is an appeal to base instincts and base motives. Surely, it is an appeal to greed and selfishness of the worst kind. While this may be bad for individuals and small organizations, surely it is doubly bad for governments. I hope that the Minister of Justice will agree that the responsibility for and consequences of tax levying by governments must remain with the field of legislating for taxation rather than in the field of lotteries.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, now before the house is a motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to delete from the omnibus bill, paragraphs (a) and (b) of clause 13 seeking to legalize lottery schemes at the levels of the federal as well as the provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, clause 13 of the omnibus bill reads in part as follows and I quote paragraph (a) of subsection 1:

> (a) for the Government of Canada to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in accordance with regulations made by the Governor in Council—

Moreover it would be legal, and I read paragraph (b):

> (b) for the government of a province, either alone or in conjunction with the government of another province, to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in that province, in accordance with any law enacted by the legislature of that province—

Mr. Speaker, it is then a matter of establishing a national lottery scheme, making it possible for a province to participate. On the other hand, those of us who follow those questions closely, already know about a municipal lottery which, in fact, is nothing but a voluntary tax levied by the City of Montreal.

The City of Sherbrooke has also approved the establishment of a municipal lottery similar to that of Montreal but on a smaller scale.

However, in paragraph (c) of the bill, it is further proposed to legalize any lottery scheme for a charitable or religious organization, under a licence issued by a province, provided the benefits are used for charitable or religious purposes.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, there are consequently many kinds of lotteries. In my opinion, it is important then to distinguish among them, with regard to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that seeks to reject the government proposals.

In order to facilitate that study, Mr. Speaker, we must ask ourselves the following question: Why establish a lottery system? What reason prompts us to set up and operate such a system? What is the purpose of those clauses? When considering the matter a little more thoroughly, Mr. Speaker, we realize that the provinces in general are all in favour of setting up a lottery.

Apparently, the federal government is completely in favour of a lottery system. We note that more and more municipalities also wish to establish their own lottery system.

Why do the various levels of government wish to establish a lottery system, as if it were bones for dogs?

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the answer is simple enough. In the first place, the various governments, when establishing a lottery system, want to solve their financial problems. Some representatives of the federal, municipal or federal governments openly state that they want to support their administration and obtain an additional source of income.

Other representatives who are not so honest, at the municipal as well as at the provincial or federal levels, do not say that it is partly to solve their financial problems, but basically, that is the reason which motivates them.

As for the second reason, I think it is because an original solution was found to the financing, planning and construction of hospitals, homes for the aged, jails, etc.

In my opinion the third motive is the following: The provincial, municipal and federal governments wish to seek a source of revenue other than taxes because the population is overtaxed at the federal, provincial and municipal levels.

And the finest example is that of the city of Montreal where Mayor Drapeau had no other choice than to establish a "voluntary tax", according to his own words in order to enable the city of Montreal to honour its obligations. This also was intended to secure another source of revenue, to channel other income from the general public while not leveying a new tax which would have been badly received by the people.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if we follow up this logical reasoning, each of these levels of government must levy a tax in disguise, a tax which we want to sugarcoat to make it more palatable, a tax which we would like to be voluntary, because less and less people are paying up spontaneously.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to a basic principle which might enlighten us. I think that first of all we must clearly establish that this is a lottery scheme and what we just said shows it is an admission that the monetary system is unable to fulfil its purpose, and to meet community as well as individual requirements.

The wish to establish a lottery or a national, provincial or municipal lottery scheme, is an admission of incapacity, Mr. Speaker, in view of the increasing obligations, the more and more serious financial problems and the greater financial frictions that result from the bigger loans we must make abroad to honour our obligations.

The wish to establish a lottery scheme is, in my humble opinion, an admission of the incapacity of our present monetary system to achieve its purpose, which is to meet the needs of the people.

That is why, at the present time, the governments have no choice—at least, that is what they say—but to establish what many have called a national barbotte, in which any one will flounder, take a chance or bet, knowing that there will be only one big winner, the government, the State, and that always at the expense of the individual. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is fundamental.

The wish to set up a lottery scheme is an admission of imcompetency considering the increased financial requirements of our provincial, municipal and federal administrations.

Secondly, the amendment to the Criminal Code concerning lotteries is a way of evading the basic problem, that of money.

Mr. Speaker, the governments are confronted more and more with financial problems they are unable to cope with, for they are blind and obtuse, and absolutely refuse to examine seriously our proposals. They well know that the Canadian people are unable to pay more taxes, as they are already overtaxed.

At the present time, the federal government is raising illegal taxes which are not authorized by the Parliament of Canada. He needs money, but he does not want to say so to the people. That is why he is in favour of a lottery system.

While he is putting up a gigantic advertising campaign to incite people to buy a ticket for this or that lottery, in short, to take part in this national barbotte, the state, that is the provincial, the federal or the municipal government, collects this money and reduces the buying power of the Canadian people by that amount. It is a disguised tax used by governments who do not take their responsibilities.

But what is even more serious is that the problem always remains there, dormant, inherent to our complex situations, to our financial problems, and nobody has enough courage to try to solve them.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Thirdly, a lottery is, in my humble opinion, merely an essential source of additional income for governments, whether they admit it or not, because they cannot increase their revenues without levying more taxes.

However, I cannot help, but say that governments are blind because they want to.

Mr. Speaker, if the government was willing to consider our solution, that is to resort to the Bank of Canada to finance the building of hospitals and schools, of roads and bridges, etc. it would then really tackle the problem.

On the other hand, the philosophy that has led to the establishment of this national bank was to serve the Canadians. Moreover, this is provided for in the British North America Act.

However, the governments that have succeeded one another since confederation have always been and are more and more in the pay of high finance. In fact, municipal, federal and provincial governments are in the pay of high finance and make annual pilgrimages abroad in order to borrow the amounts necessary to run the country. However, here in Canada, they want to set up a lottery system.

How stupid and illogical is our present fiscal and monetary system since it prompts us to take measures which are not bad in themselves but which compel us to acknowledge that we are powerless and blind in front of a problem whose solution is becoming more and more imperative.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, designed to make illegal the establishment of a lottery administered by the Canadian government or by the provinces. And why, Mr. Speaker? Because this would be to negate the real problem, to lie to the country, in short we would be deluding ourselves, we would be deceiving the population, we would be dodging our basic responsibilities which are primarily to manage public funds.

Mr. Speaker, if we favour a national lottery with a view to allowing people to co-operate in financing the public domain, we have only to abolish all federal taxes and ask those who are willing to participate in the federal government barbotte by sending them their contributions. Then those who do not want to pay taxes will be forced to pay them, and those who are crazy enough to pay taxes will be allowed to do so.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind that is illogical. The government wants to levy new taxes, but there is not a single minister who has the courage to do so. When they do, they put out a book of about 500 pages; they hide the tax in the middle page and make us swallow it as if it were a pill.

Mr. Speaker, whether our taxes are called social progress taxes, social recession taxes, or surtaxes, we go around in circles, because the solution has not been found. The Canadian people are allowed to take part in national barbottes which, at best, reduce the purchasing power of the taxpayers at a time when they need more and more of it.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been made.

CANADA COUNCIL—GRANT TO STANLEY GRAY —REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POLITICAL ACTIVITY.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon Souris): Mr. Speaker, I propose tonight to raise the question in a very formal and deliberate way of the award of a Canada Council grant of $5,500 to one Professor Stanley Gray. I raise this matter quite deliberately and with the full knowledge that the government, the minister, pundits and others may seek to misrepresent what I am saying and accuse me of interference with or opposition to the independent operation of the Canada Council. I am prepared to run the risk of that misrepresentation because I feel very sincerely that this matter involves two vital questions which must be considered in this parliament, as they are being considered in this country. My mail would indicate, as I am sure the mail of other hon. members does, that this question is being very seriously and earnestly considered by a great number of people in Canada. First, there is the legitimate question of the priorities of public funds and whether these limited funds should be spent to assist a person who is dedicated to the encouragement of violence, disruption and intolerance in the country.

It is one thing to say that Canada Council awards should be given without regard to the political views of the recipient. That is a principle which I, along with most hon. members, support to the hilt. We do not punish a man for what he thinks. Freedom of speech prevails in this country. I have sat as a student in many classes in institutions of higher learning and observed the utmost freedom exercised in this regard. This is one of the functions of institutions of higher learning. It is my suggestion that it is not what Mr. Gray thinks that is offensive, but rather that what he does is offensive. This is offensive not only to the maintenance of order, which he seeks consistently to disrupt, but it is offensive also to the principle of fair, free and rational discussion.

By his own actions, Stanley Gray is branded as a man intolerant of the opinions of others and the processes of rational discussion and inquiry. By his own actions, he is identified as a man prepared to use his own so-called rights to limit and abuse the legitimate and accepted rights of others. That is why he is in trouble at McGill. If I had time I could quote the head of McGill University, Dr. Rocke Robertson. These matters have been completely aired in the press and I am sure hon. members are familiar with them. So far as I know, no one disputes Mr. Gray's I.Q. or intellectual capacity. But there are serious questions about his willingness to respect the views of others and his determination to disrupt the tolerant and orderly atmosphere necessary to a good university. These questions are serious enough to the authorities of McGill that they would deny tenure to this intelligent man. They are apparently not serious enough to persuade the Canada Council to invest its limited funds elsewhere, where there is greater priority from the standpoint of the development of Canadian nationhood.

Let me repeat, so there is no misunderstanding; the qualifications of Stanley Gray are not at issue. There have been Marxists even in this chamber. We recall that in one instance a member of parliament was dismissed from this chamber, not because of his Marxist views but because of his treason toward Canada. Stanley Gray's actions are at issue, and surely this parliament has the right to protest the granting of scarce public funds to subsidize the disruption of public order. As we discovered from our deliberations in the Standing Committee on Films, Broadcasting and the Arts, this action has brought about a crisis in the promotion of artistic development in this country.

The second important aspect of the matter concerns the respect Canadians will have for parliament and for the Canada Council if this award should pass unchallenged. It is a sad state of affairs when we have agencies set up by parliament and by the government which protest because we have the audacity to challenge their actions. This is a trend toward bureaucratic madness that must be stopped if we are to maintain the democratic process in this country.

Canadians are seriously disturbed by the disruptive actions and revolutionary ambitions of persons like Stanley Gray. I have a personal interest in this matter because, over the week end, I was called to an emergency meeting of what used to be a quiet campus, the University of Brandon. The president of that university a very distinguished Canadian citizen well known in this city, Dr. John Robbins, tendered his resignation because of the sort of thing being promoted by Stanley Gray. The story is on the front page of the Journal. I was delighted to see that Dr. Robbins, who is an academician beyond challenge, a supporter of the arts, humanities and social sciences in this country from a long time back, was saying that he could no longer endure this sort of authoritarianism on the campus because it repels him. This is not an ordinary citizen; he is a man distinguished in the arts, humanities and social sciences.

A man like Gray can win attention for his views by disrupting the orderly and regular processes of the country. Does the view of the ordinary Canadian not also deserve attention? To suggest that parliament should remain silent on this question is to suggest that the long-suffering, ordinary Canadian should not even be allowed to use the high court of parliament to register his protest. Members of parliament have a right and a duty to protest when such a man receives a subsidy from our government.

The reputation of the Canadian Council is also at stake. I think this is also one of the reasons why the matter should be dealt with. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are rising to tell me my time has expired. I want to make just one final statement. It also seems that in protecting this man we are suggesting the award was made to him because of his revolutionary and disruptive tendencies. If this is so, I can only describe it as the subsidization of subversion.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not posed a question, so I am not able to answer one. I take it from his remarks that he was doing one of two things: either he was attempting to bring to the attention of the Canada Council his view, and the view of many Canadians, that the council has made a mistake in reaching this decision, or he was suggesting there should be an amendment to the Canada Council Act to restrict the council as to the criteria it takes into consideration when making such grants as this.

The hon. member recognizes that the council is independent of the government by reason of the act and he seemed to approve of that independence. I should like to remind the hon. member and the house that during the debate on the Canada Council bill, as reported in Hansard of January 18, 1957, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), speaking of the chairmanship of that body, stated:

> I say that the chairman of this body should be one who in no way will be subject to any suggestion that in the slightest degree the council might be subject to outside influences. Following any other course would in my opinion strike a blow at the validity and prestige of this council even before it became operative.

And after he had become Prime Minister, the right hon. gentleman, answering a question as reported in Hansard of November 27, 1957, spoke approvingly of the action of the former Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent, in emphasizing, while introducing the resolution preceding the Canada Council Act that the council should be made as free as possible of government interference.

Mr. Dinsdale: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanbury: I think the hon. member accepts that principle. If his purpose tonight has been to draw his concern and the concern of some Canadians over this matter to the attention of the Canada Council, I shall be pleased to see that his concern is expressed to that body, as I agreed it should be. If his purpose is to suggest that there should be an amendment to the Canada Council Act, I will be pleased to discuss with my minister any suggestions he may have to make in that regard.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

CANADA COUNCIL—GRANT TO STANLEY GRAY

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I feel there is a certain coincidence in the fact that the matter I wanted to discuss this evening is the same one that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) has just brought up.

Mr. Speaker, that means that the members of this house are very much interested in obtaining information on the grant to Mr. Stanley Gray, a university student.

On April 17 last, I asked the Secretary of State if he could tell us whether Mr. Stanley Gray has applied himself for a Canada Council grant, filled in the requested application form and passed the necessary examinations for obtaining a grant.

Mr. Speaker, considering the attitude of the beneficiary of the grant, and as we know all about his rather subversive activities, we have a right to ponder a few points. What is the purpose of the Canada Council in giving a 5,500 dollar grant to that individual? Apparently it is to enable him to carry on studies in economics at Oxford University; and to achieve a complex study on the electoral and political attitudes in North America and in Western Europe since 1945, with a view to preparing his Ph.D.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, a 5,500 dollar grant for such studies is quite unnecessary; indeed, as far as electoral and political attitudes in North America and more particularly in Canada are concerned, there is a study in two volumes on that subject, that Mr. Gray or anyone else, can get for about 5 dollars.

I imagine that similar studies have been made in the United States. Besides in any European country where elections are still free, at least to some extent, it is possible to get some kind of data on that subject.

I cannot see the point of a study on electoral and political attitudes of any given country since such studies are already available.

This makes me wonder why, out of public funds, we should make such considerable grants for a type of work which would be redundant, whereas there are thousands of young Canadian students who cannot get grants from Canada Council to carry on their studies in the field of arts or various other subjects.

In my view, if the purpose of the Canada Council is to promote culture and to allow Canadians to perfect their knowledge, there are enough gifted applicants anxious to make such studies for the benefit of Canada and not by promoting subversion or by trying to destroy law and order, but rather by contributing to the development of our country.

So, I would like to know if the application was filled in appropriately and in the same way as other Canadians who apply for Canada Council grants.

[English]

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's original question, the Canada Council advises me that Mr. Gray completed an application form on his own initiative and submitted it to the Council according to the normal procedure. His application was studied by five senior political science professors comprising the preliminary selection committee. His application was then forwarded to the steering committee of the Council's academic panel, then to the 15 men panel itself and finally to the full Council. Mr. Gray's application was one of 3,603 submitted. Of this number, 2,165 received doctoral fellowships.

As the hon. member has mentioned, Mr. Gray indicated he would write his doctoral thesis on "Voting and Political Attitudes in North America and Western Europe since 1945". My only comment would be that this hardly justifies the suggestion that the grant would be a subsidization of subversion. However, I will convey the views of the hon. member to the Canada Council, as I will the views of the previous questioner.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

First report of Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization—Mr. Blair.

TERRITORIAL SEA AND FISHING ZONES ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE ALL WATERS ABOVE CONTINENTAL SHELF AS EXCLUSIVE FISHING ZONE

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-189, to amend the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the present Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act which was passed in 1964 has been unsatisfactory in that it requires us to do certain things. It ties fishing zones to base lines drawn along the shore. The purpose of this amendment is to allow all waters above the continental shelf to be declared fishing zones exclusive for Canadian fishermen, without going into the question of territorial seas, headland to headland base lines or other similar problems which are at present confusing the problem of exclusive fishing zones.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—ALLEGED UNFAIR PROHIBITION BY C.B.C. IN TAPING PROGRAM

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as a member of Parliament and as the leader of a recognized federal political party, I wish to protest strongly against the treatment I was given by a Crown corporation, namely the C.B.C., last week in Western Canada.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I was to be interviewed last week on the national telecast called "Les Affaires de l'État", on the French network, and "Nation's Business", on the English network. I wanted to have the program pre-taped in a Vancouver studio of the C.B.C. and the producers asked me to fork out $300 when they had contacted the C.B.C. authorities in Ottawa. The same thing happened in Edmonton at the C.B.C. studios.

Mr. Speaker, as it is only in the house that a member may object to the actions of a corporation whose operations will cost $166 million this year to the Canadian people, and which is unable or unwilling to use the facilities of the Corporation outside Ottawa and Montreal, I want to bring this fact to the attention of the minister responsible and of the house, so that everyone will know that last week we did not appear on the program "Les Affaires de l'État." I suggested to the C.B.C. to invite instead Charlie Chaplin or the president of this Crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may have a grievance, but I doubt that his question of privilege is justified.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PARTICIPATION OF MUNICIPAL UNITS IN INTERGOVERNMENTAL MEETINGS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, whether he has requested the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities to present to the secretariat of the constitutional conference specific proposals for participation in future conferences by official representatives of the municipal governments of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To be more precise, Mr. Speaker, it was Mr. Lawless, who I believe is the research director or permanent secretary of the Council of Mayors and Municipalities, who suggested they would submit to the conference secretariat the type of recommendation the Leader of the Opposition suggests. He mentioned something to the effect that they would be represented in some way at the federal-provincial conference. I said I approved of the method in which they wanted to proceed. If they had any such submissions to make, they should not be made to the federal government directly, but to the secretariat, which is at the disposition of the provincial governments as well as the federal government.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that the Prime Minister contemplates requesting that the terms of reference of the constitutional review be enlarged, as requested by the mayors yesterday? Is the Prime Minister going to consider and eventually define the most appropriate means for the inclusion of municipal representation on intergovernmental bodies which deal with policy of major municipal concern?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. It means that in so far as the constitution now exists and in so far as arrangements for federal-provincial meetings now exist, it is up to the provinces to decide how their representation should be composed.
